MR. JOHNSON: My final question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Can he advise as to what process will be used in finalizing details of the federal infrastructure program? In light of recent federal actions in the agriculture sector will Alberta be included?

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will do our very best to negotiate an amount of the expected dollars that were announced recently by the minister responsible for infrastructure. If it's done on a population basis, it should be at least 10 percent. However, there has been some talk now in circles in Ottawa that they would be looking at block funding for individual provinces and then do some part of the residual amount in a population grant. That would be grossly unfair. This is the province where we see a large increase in wealth, and it's the wealth that's being produced here in the province that's taxed by the federal government and goes back to Ottawa.

So at the end of the day we hope that we see a fair share, at least 10 percent, and as the Minister of Municipal Affairs said, 10 percent of the $100 million in the first year is $10 million. We would hope that all of that goes directly into very hard infrastructure: roads, water projects. No Zambonis this time; we're out of that business.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Private Health Services

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans realize that the Premier and his Minister of Health and Wellness have been less than forthright about their plan to privatize our health care system. [interjections] That's what's happening. Today we had yet another example from one of the government's own reports which contradicts what the minister and the Premier have been trying to tell us. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why should Albertans trust this minister's claim that their private health care scheme will reduce costs and waiting lists when your own report says that "there were no comparative studies of effects on costs per day, cost per case, total hospital costs, quality of care or health outcome"? Where's your evidence for Bill 11?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, they seem to quote selectively from the report. For instance, reading from page 28, since that has evidently been the approach of the opposition, it indicates that the most common result of these studies is that no differences in efficiency were detected between for-profit and not-for-profit hospitals.

Keep in mind, of course, that we're not talking about full service, private hospitals in Bill 11.

This was the case for five of the studies reviewed. Two [other] studies found that for-profit hospitals are more efficient. One study found that not-for-profits performed worse.

So, Mr. Speaker, this is an overall analysis that's been provided, and it does not have the overwhelming, consistent negative message that the opposition across the way is portraying. I think it is quite a balanced report of what does exist in some parts of North America and, for that matter, the world. It does provide useful information, but it doesn't reach the conclusions that are being portrayed by those across the way.

MS LEIBOVICI: Right at the beginning it says that the main finding of this study is that "there is no published study of the efficiency . . .

of the purchase of surgical services from private facilities by public funders."

My second question is again to the minister. This government-funded report states that extra costs will be involved in contracting out to private providers. How can the minister tell Albertans that this is in the best public interest?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be helpful, and we will certainly commend the report to all members of the Assembly to read for themselves, because the report is quite balanced, I think, in the information that they have provided. They indicate quite clearly in the report that they had no particular example to quote where you had a private surgical facility entering into a contract under the types of controls and protections which are imbedded in Bill 11. That is what is quite important with respect to the overall protective features of Bill 11. Built right into the legislation that we're proposing to the Assembly is the set of controls which address and provide for the determination of the various issues and advantages that are referred to in our overall presentation of the bill.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, before you proceed, please. A number of hon. members today have really violated the rule with respect to preambles, so get to your question, please, hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why won't the minister just stop the experiment and pull the bill?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the overall legislation, Bill 11, has a number of very important provisions in it, including the one the member is focusing on, and that is the very extensive section which deals with the criteria that would have to be met through private firms or voluntary firms, nonprofit firms, bidding for and obtaining a contract to provide a select, narrow range of surgical services. There are a number of other features in the bill, which I will not try to go through in question period, such as the prohibition on queue-jumping, the openness of contracts, and so forth that, if their memories are not too short, the members across the way have from time to time indicated they're in favour of.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Health Care System

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Reflecting questions from a number of my Calgary-Fort constituents, I would like to ask our Minister of Health and Wellness: given that our public health care insurance program is the foundation for our much-valued health care system in Alberta, is there any legislation to protect our public health care insurance program in terms of changes in premiums and coverage?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, we do raise about 12 to 13 percent of our overall health budget through the charging of premiums, and the authority for this charge is through the Health Insurance Premiums Act. It is a piece of legislation approved by this Assembly. The rationale for premiums was that there should be an obvious charge to Albertans to support the health care system. It's a very important service, one that Albertans value very highly, and as I've noted, it is a small percentage of the overall health care budget.

As far as the changing of rates in terms of the premiums, Mr. Speaker, they've not been changed in this province since 1995, and they are rapidly going down as a proportion of our overall spending on health care in the province.

MR. CAO: Well, thank you, Mr. Minister. My first supplementary question is also to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How is our health care insurance coverage decided in terms of insured persons and insured services, and are there any insured services covered in Alberta and not covered in other provinces?

MR. JONSON: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, we provide a wider range of coverage of individual health care services than, I think, pretty well any other province in Canada. Some of the areas where we provide total or partial coverage that is not provided in all provinces would be in the whole area of chiropractic treatments, in the whole area of physiotherapy. Those would be two of the key examples. Also, the way that we limit charges that are provided to individuals in long-term care is not uniform across the province. Overall in our coverage we certainly comply totally with and, as I say, far beyond the provisions of the Canada Health Act.

In addition to that, I think it should be pointed out that for low-income seniors we have partial or total forgiveness or no charges for people in that category, also low-income Albertans that are on assistance programs. So it is a charge which is sensitive to the relative ability of Albertans to pay, and it is established on that basis.

MR. CAO: Thank you. My last supplementary question is also to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the revenue from our public health care insurance premium payments in comparison to our total public health care expense?

MR. JONSON: We collect in health care premiums, Mr. Speaker, I believe in the neighbourhood of $650 million, and as I indicated earlier, in terms of a percentage it is in that 15 percent range as far as its proportion of the health care budget.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Private Health Services

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has promised time and time again that Bill 11 would not lead to queue-jumping, so let's put that promise to a little test this afternoon. I have three questions, all for the Minister of Health and Wellness, and each one of the questions is based on the study entitled The Public Purchase of Private Surgical Services: a Systematic Review of the Evidence on Efficiency and Equity. My question first to the minister would be this: how can Albertans trust this government when it promises to prevent queue-jumping when its own report says – and it's right here on page 6 – that complications will arise however where surgeons are permitted to offer 'enhanced medical services' in private hospitals, as is currently the case in Alberta . . . Thus, the package of enhanced medical services includes . . . faster access to care (i.e. queue-jumping) for those willing and able to pay?

MR. JONSON: Well, there are three or four things that need to be said in answer to the question, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the provisions of Bill 11 provide for legislation which will put in law a set of provisions to prevent the whole issue of queue-jumping or being able to get faster service by virtue of your ability to pay, whether it's your ability to pay for getting the service up front, so to speak, or whether it's your ability to pay by purchasing something else that might be attractive or get you advanced in the line. So that is the purpose of the legislation.

The other thing that should be acknowledged here is that the provision of uninsured services is part of our overall health care system. We have the whole area of cosmetic surgery. That is one of the areas of service that is not insured under the Canada Health Act or under our own health care insurance provisions, but it does happen and is paid for in our system.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, since it may be that this Minister of Health and Wellness may be the only person in the province that doesn't understand: enhanced services are enabled by Bill 11, not prohibited.

Mr. Speaker, how can Albertans trust this government when it promises to prevent queue-jumping when its own report says:

The forms of two-tierism that will result from this are, firstly, receipt of different quality services according to ability to pay and, secondly, likely receipt of 'enhanced' services quicker (i.e. queue-jumping)?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think there is something, you know, with the comments across the way and the question, that should be pointed out, and that is that the position of the Liberal Party across the way and their leader is that doctors should be free to opt out of the health care system, operate entirely on their own, and also it would be fine for anybody who could qualify and I guess get the approval of the College of Physicians and Surgeons to set up a hospital and charge Albertans directly. I'm sure that they would charge and would be very appreciative of those that could pay more to get faster service.

In other words, the Liberals are on record, at least their leader is, as having a completely private system in this province outside of the public system with all the difficulties and so on that they seem to be concerned about with respect to queue-jumping and so on which are being addressed in a positive way in Bill 11. That is the Liberal position over there. So I'm really quite amazed that they're concerned about these things since that is their overall policy and position.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the legislation there is provision in the bill, as the member across the way well knows, to deal with the whole issue of limiting the charges with respect to any kind of enhanced service, with respect to preventing queue-jumping for insured services by virtue of a person's ability to pay. Those are provisions in the legislation, and we need that legislation to deal with those types of situations.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta's record when it comes to cataract surgery and MRI treatment speaks for itself, I would ask this minister my final question. How is it that we might expect Albertans to trust this government with respect to Bill 11 when its own commissioned report says, "If patients start requesting such services, they will be offered, and, if surgeons start offering such services, they will be taken up."

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know about Albertans trusting the hon. member across the way, because he forgets to read, of course, all of the relevant sections of a particular report. For instance, when he was talking about queue-jumping and two-tierism, as I think he was referring to, the report goes on to say in the section he was quoting from: this is a form for two-tierism and would, therefore, contravene the Alberta government policy. So it would be useful if they would report the whole.

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before we conclude question period, I would just like to advise all hon. members that a review of Orders of the Day and the scheduled motion – in light of certain bills scheduled to be debated over the next several days, the chair would like to remind all hon. members about Standing Order 23(e), which provides that a member will be called to order by the Speaker if . . . that member . . .

(e) anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day.

The chair has commented numerous times that questions concerning the content of a bill will be out of order if the bill is scheduled to be debated that day. As the chair indicated in its March 3, 1998, ruling on this subject, found on page 649 of Hansard for that day, this Speaker “will give the greatest degree of flexibility to private members when they choose to rise in this . . . Assembly.” Of course, this latitude is tempered by the rules which members themselves have chosen to be governed by. Accordingly, the chair simply wants to remind members about Standing Order 23(e) so that no one is caught off guard in the next few days.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, a few seconds from now we'll call upon the first of seven hon. members to participate in Recognitions, but prior to that will you all join me in congratulating the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on reaching another milestone in his life. Happy birthday.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Provincial Midget B Hockey Championship

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. March 24 to 26 Three Hills and Trochu arenas were the sites of the 1999-2000 provincial midget B hockey championships. I extend congratulations to the towns of Three Hills and Trochu as well as all the sponsors, volunteers, fans, and players for making it such a successful event, drawing packed crowds to enjoy the display of top-notch hockey and sportsmanship provided by young hockey players from Whitecourt, Winfield, Lac La Biche, Sexsmith, Drumheller, Taber, Sedgewick, and the Three Hills area. I extend a special congratulations to the Three Hills Chiefs, who are a young team with only six second-year players and a very young coaching staff, on their outstanding level of play and their success at winning the gold medal for provincial midget B hockey by winning it five games straight with no losses. An outstanding achievement in light of the good competition, and I'm sure the fans got to preview some of the stars of the future.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Val and Flora Matteotti

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the 17th of March the Member for Lethbridge-West and I had a chance to attend the 13th annual management scholarship fund-raising dinner. Each year the Faculty of Management honours businesspeople in our community. This year they chose to honour Val and Flora Matteotti, and I want to congratulate Mr. and Mrs. Matteotti today for the fact that they support our community in such a broad-based way. They have given to numerous causes in our community, but they really favour sports, health, and education because, as they say, these require discipline and dedication to succeed. The sports teams that have been supported in our community have been numerous, and Mrs. Matteotti is quite proud when she says, as she has on a number of occasions, that when she looks out on the community, she has more than 2,500 children.

This family shows what it is to contribute to the community. They've put their money back into our community to make it strong, and everybody in our community thanks them for doing that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc.

Amy Fox

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to rise today to pay tribute to one of my young constituents who has received one of the highest honours a high school student in Canada can receive. Amy Fox, a grade 12 student from Hay Lakes school, a small school of 70 students, has succeeded in winning both the Canadian merit scholarship, valued at $45,000, and the Morehead scholarship, valued at $100,000. The Canadian merit scholarship must be applied to a Canadian university, whereas the J.M. Morehead scholarship must be applied to the University of North Carolina. Both scholarships pay for tuition and living expenses for four years of study.

Amy first heard about these scholarships from her school guidance counselor, Mr. Lyseng. Although she was competing with students from large schools, the competition interviewers were amazed at her capabilities considering she came from such a small school. Amy herself believes that going to a small high school is a great advantage in that she knows the teachers and they know her. She believes she has excellent teachers and appreciates how everything is personalized. Students who receive these scholarships are assessed on values beyond those visible on academic transcripts, though Amy's marks are between 94 and 96 percent. Candidates must show good character, service to the community, and entrepreneurial energy, all of which Amy expresses through interest in 4-H, her school paper, her students' union work, and the 15 hours of dance she takes per week in Wetaskiwin.

I would like to commend Amy Fox for her achievement and wish her the best of luck in the future.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, notwithstanding the merit of the recognition comments, the time allocation is one minute.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

CIAU Hockey Championship

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my very great honour and privilege today to recognize the University of Alberta Golden Bears hockey team. The Bears won their second consecutive CIAU hockey championship last weekend. They defeated the University of New Brunswick Varsity Reds, and CIAU player of the year, Russ Hewson, scored the winning goal eight minutes into the second overtime. This win ties the Bears with the University of Toronto for a record of 10 university cups. This championship also brings the U of A the prestige of winning a total of nine medals in the 1999-2000 season, the most won by the university in a single year. Special recognition goes to coach Rob Daum, U of A defenceman Mike Garrow, and forwards Kevin Marsh and Ryan Wade, who were named to the all-star team. Kevin Marsh also was named tournament MVP. Russ Hewson was named CIAU player of the year, and goaltender Clayton Pool received CIAU rookie of the year honours.

The hardworking and dedicated men who form the Bears hockey team deserve tremendous respect and admiration for their accomplishments and for bringing the CIAU banner home again to the University of Alberta. Congratulations, Bears.

THE SPEAKER: Once again, hon. members, notwithstanding the merits of the statement being in place, the time allocation is one minute.

The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

California School Field Trip Deaths

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Students at two Calgary high schools, William Aberhart and Bowness, returned to their classes this morning. Today, as they have been since March 25, they will be mourning the loss of two fellow students and one parent, Barbara Clement, a 45-year-old mother of two, a wife and active member of the community and lover of the outdoors, fatally swept out to sea by a rogue wave. Brodie McDonald and David Elton lost their lives while trying to save her. Brodie McDonald was described as someone loved by all, a boy with a kind and giving nature. He enjoyed and was excited by the outdoors and saw a future career there. David Elton, like Brodie, was participating in the Lost Coast hike in northern California because of his keen interest in the outdoors and his leadership skills.

There's no explaining why tragedies occur, why bad things sometimes happen to good people. What we do know is that three individuals, Calgarians and Albertans, lost their lives doing something they enjoyed doing. One of them was giving her time and energy to assist a group of young Albertans to better understand and enjoy and appreciate the natural environment. Two of them, young men with bright futures before them, were experiencing their love of the outdoors.

On behalf of all of the Assembly we express our appreciation and sympathy to the families and the community.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Dominion Seniors Legion Curling

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past week Spruce Grove saw some of the finest curling in Canada. The Dominion Seniors Curling Championship took place at the Spruce Grove Arena. This grand event was hosted by the Spruce Grove Legion branch 281, and this event was organized by a strong team of volunteers chaired by Blaine Price. Along with excellent curling there was a spousal program which allowed the hosts to show off the many tourism highlights in our area. Tuesday night the Calmar Legion hosted a banquet and combined it with their mortgage-burning party. Thursday night the team from Newfoundland cooked a caribou for the teams, and Spruce Grove hosted the closing banquet, that recognized the winning team from Ontario.

Our thanks and recognition to the Spruce Grove Legion for their continued commitment to our community.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order Preambles

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, you did reference it earlier during your remarks. I'd like to refer to Standing Order 13(1), "the Speaker shall preserve order and decorum and shall decide questions of order." I kept a very close eye on the progression of the questions through the House today, and I'd like to recap for you what occurred.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition during her first question, first supplemental, tabled a report and gave a rather lengthy preamble. During her second question, first supplemental, she gave another lengthy preamble. During her third question, in both the first supplemental and second supplemental, she again provided us with a lengthy preamble. It was at that point in time I believe I raised a point of order.

I'm happy to say that the leader of the third party actually complied with the rules. We then went to the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, who came awfully close. However, in her second supplemental she also gave us a lengthy preamble. The Member for Lethbridge-East: I'm quite pleased to say that he skillfully crafted his introduction so as not to actually offend the House rules. We then went to Edmonton-Meadowlark; in the first supplemental there was a lengthy preamble and also a response to the minister's response. At that time, Mr. Speaker, you interrupted, prior to the second supplemental being asked, and you indicated that a number of members had actually offended the rules of the House and directed the member to go straight to her question. Notwithstanding that advice, the Member for Calgary-Buffalo provided us with a preamble in the form of an argumentative response with respect to his first supplemental and gave us another preamble as part of his second supplemental.

Mr. Speaker, the House leaders' agreement was executed some years ago, and my simple point of order is to request, when there is any deviation from that House leader agreement, that you please intervene immediately regardless of the side of the House which happens to be offending the House leader agreement. Unfortunately, because these lengthy preambles take up so much of question period, we did not get to as many questions today as I felt we could have.

So again I ask that you enforce the terms of the House leader agreement and in particular, if the House leader agreement is being offended by a member very early in question period, that you intervene at that time. That will hopefully preclude any further such infractions with respect to such agreement.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader on this point.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, you know, sometimes when lawyers plead a weak case, you use what's called a scattergun approach, which is that you absolutely throw everything in front of the judge and hope something sticks. What's curious is that I saw him rise on a point of order, but much of what he has talked about are things that happened subsequent. If he's going to offer us his colour commentary on 50 minutes of question period, one would hope he would have also addressed the numerous breaches that we witnessed on the part of those people responding to questions.

So you intervened, Mr. Speaker. We heard your admonitions, certainly in terms of anticipation, but I think there's been no legitimate point of order raised other than a general lament that that particular minister, that particular government representative didn't like the tone of question period today. But unless we're going to go through and systematically deal with every breach of question period on both sides of the House, I'm not sure where his intervention takes us.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: Thank you, hon. members. Several very interesting things occurred in the last 10 days. One had an opportunity to review Hansard for the last 10, 15, 20 years, and one conclusion that this particular Speaker came to was the conclusion that whenever there have been House leaders in the House who were not trained in the law, there is a corresponding reduction in the number of points of order that are raised in question period. So I find it interesting today that in essence the two distinguished leaders, the Deputy Government House Leader and the Opposition House Leader, both do happen to be, coincidentally, trained in matters of the law and both chose to participate in the point of order today.

Interestingly enough, I suspect if one then says that in a court of law we throw out information and then we ask for adjudication, one would hope, though, that one would provide all of the information rather than just perhaps pertinent points that might be beneficial to one particular cause.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader rose on a point of order that basically – and I quote from the Blues when the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition rose and said:

Mr. Speaker, Albertans know what this government is saying. What they don't trust is what this government is doing in Bill 11.

Then she went on.

Mr. Speaker I quote again from this government-funded review: our review has shown that private facilities generally provide faster access to those who can pay and do offer enhanced services.

Then the question.

How can this minister stand here and tell Albertans that his bill isn't going to do enhanced services, two-tiered health care, and on and on?

So, in essence, there definitely was a supplemental with respect to this third question, and it definitely does violate clause 5(4) of the April 30, 1997, House leaders' agreement. No doubt about that. So from that perspective there absolutely is a point of order.

I note, however, that no one rose on a point of order when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs provided her question, but preceding her question she did say the following, which was clearly a preamble, "I've had more calls on this" issue, meaning crime, "than on health care," and then proceeded to go on to raise her question. It's always of interest to see that again no one rose a point of order with respect to that particular preamble.

I might add that the hon. Member for Calgary-West in her third question was definitely seeking opinions and asking for an opinion with respect to that, yet some leverage was provided to that, she being an honourable hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, in the chair's view, in his third question gave a very long preamble prior to arriving at his third question.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark on the second question gave a very long preamble. There was an interjection following that. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark quickly came to the point.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose was certainly on the edge – on the edge – in seeking opinions with respect to his question.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo did, obviously, give a very long preamble prior to arriving at his second question.

So there's been a bit of give-and-take, but the good point about all of this today was that there were 11 questions, allowing us to arrive at 33 questions in all, which is just slightly above average. However, the chair last week did have an opportunity to go to an adjoining parliament and visit the parliament of British Columbia. In British Columbia their daily question period is 15 minutes – I repeat, underline: 15 minutes – and in the parliament of British Columbia there were in that 15 minutes 12 questions and answers. Twelve questions and answers in 15 minutes. We arrived today with 33 questions and answers. They in British Columbia had 12 questions. I just say that as a bit of a comparative.

The bottom line of this was very correctly provided for us by the Deputy Government House Leader, who did basically say that the conclusion to all of this is that fewer members have a chance to ask a question. In today's question period there were eight hon. members who still did not have an opportunity to ask a question, and when you recognize that there has been a brief adjournment of the House for a few days, one can conclude that those eight hon. members had matters of importance with respect to this.

So thank you very much, Deputy Government House Leader, for raising the point of order. You win. Thank you very much, Official Opposition House Leader, for participating in this. Thank you all very much for the joy of having this daily intervention.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Second Reading

Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2000

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Member for Calgary-Bow I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 16, the Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2000.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow in 1996 sponsored a condominium property amendment act that actually received royal assent but was never proclaimed after stakeholders expressed strong concerns with some of the amendments. Therefore, a working group of condominium owners and developers was formed in August of last year to address these concerns. The amendments that are before you in Bill 16 have been unanimously recommended by a working group of people representing both condominium owners and developers. The members of this group are to be congratulated for finding a common ground to resolve the often opposing views of condominium stakeholders. These amendments will also fine-tune and clarify the legislation and will allow for greater flexibility without eroding the consumer protection that it also affords.

Going through Bill 16, Mr. Speaker, you'll find that the first amendments add some definitions to the act. Section 3 of the 1996 act is then repealed. This section allowed for individuals to discharge blanket mortgages under certain conditions. Mortgagees have shown that this is not a workable practice, and the proposal to delete this section is also supported by the consumer representatives. Section 8 has been clarified following the new definitions.

One of the key amendments, Mr. Speaker, allows condominium developers access to more of the funds that are held in trust pending completion of a condominium development. In fact, instead of requiring 50 percent to be held back, an amount that developers complained was unrealistic and truly is, section 11 now ties the amount to be held back in trust to the amount required to complete the project. This ensures developers have access to funds as they complete their project. It still ensures that there is enough in trust to protect the purchaser.

The next few amendments have been requested by condominium corporations. At present, Mr. Speaker, a corporation may not amend its legal condominium plan once the plan has been registered at the land titles office. Section 14.1 will allow for suitable mechanisms to amend a plan as required. Section 21 clarifies the voting rights of owners and mortgagees at board meetings. The new section 29 allows corporations to go to small claims court to recover damages and sanctions up to the limit in force under the Provincial Court Act. Section 33 allows corporations to charge interest on the balance of any unpaid condominium fees, but the rate will be capped in the regulations.

Mr. Speaker, corporations in the insurance industry told us that the insurance requirements in section 38 were unworkable. As a result, they have been moved to regulation to allow for flexibility as insurance instruments change from time to time.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, Bill 16 brings these amendments and those of the Condominium Property Amendment Act, 1996, into force on September 1, 2000. This will allow time to develop both the regulations required for this legislation and the information and educational materials that condominium stakeholders are asking for. Hopefully, this will bring a close to a long battle over having an amended Condominium Property Act.

I'd also like to say a special thanks on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Bow, Mr. Speaker, to the condominium stakeholder groups and the critics from the side opposite, who have sat down and reviewed this bill and are all in agreement with the process. I know she wanted me to thank you for your co-operation and diligence in being briefed on what the intentions were.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I move second reading on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Bow.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand today to speak to Bill 16, the Condominium Property Amendment Act, which is amendments to the Condominium Property Amendment Act, 1996. Changes to the act are long overdue and are as a result of a legislative review process that has been under way in Alberta for at least 10 years. While Alberta legislation on condominiums was one of the first in the country, it has since lagged behind other jurisdictions and is no longer up to date, considering that we started in 1980 and up to 1996 and so on.

Mr. Speaker, in 1996 Bill 23 was introduced with proposed changes to the Condominium Property Act. Some of the changes included removal of the unanimous resolution, recognition of phased developments, coverage of all condominiums, and mandatory reserve funds. The Condominium Property Amendment Act, 1996, was passed and received royal assent but was never proclaimed because of the strong concern expressed by stakeholders. In 1999 under the present minister thankfully this was carried forward and the working group formed by the government proceeded with this process. The passage of this legislation will allow not only the Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2000, to come into effect but also the amendments of the act in 1996.

It should be noted that the bill is developer driven and caters more to their concerns. What we're noticing in section 11 is the focus that the bill panders more to the developer than was originally intended when they drafted regulations in 1996 in Bill 23.

Many of the changes in section 11 of the Condominium Property Act help to provide better consumer protection. First, it gives a much more extensive and detailed definition of common property. Secondly, it allows for money to be held in trust for those things promised in the purchase agreement. Thirdly, it puts into the act the right of a corporation or interested party to go to court if the developer has not met the requirements. The bill also clarifies the voting right of the insurance coverage.

Passage of this bill will allow the Condominium Property Act, 1996, to be brought into force. What I'm noticing and realizing is that what the group and the organization is looking forward to is September 1 for actually putting it into existence.

When studying the bill, one of the concerns jumping out at us and from some of the stakeholders we have talked to is that it does not touch upon the condo fees. Is it pressure from the banks that condo fees were given such a low priority compared to the mortgages when recovering the fees? Self-regulation is a question we did ask in the meeting when we were briefed. People contacted feel that the lack of enforcement is a severe problem and do not see the act as a self-regulation. We should note that there have been four prosecutions under the condominium act and only one actual conviction. The concern with the enforcement is that it is left up to the consumer, who does not have the resources or the skills to enforce them. It's a major item that was brought back to us from the information that has been e-mailed to us so far.

After perusing Bill 16 and believing that it's a good compromise and may be a workable piece of legislation with some amendments coming forward in the later process, the main thing we want to emphasize in this is that why the bill is a good, workable piece of legislation is that it defines, fine-tunes, and clarifies the existing condominium act, considering that, as mentioned before, we never did enact the 1996 bill and the original bill was in place since 1980 with very few changes in that time period. It brings the Alberta condominium laws up to date.

It improves the amendments first made in the condominium act of 1996 to tie the amount of money held in trust to the costs of completion. Stakeholders are happy to see the many changes in regard to the developer and trust moneys and feel this will definitely protect the public in a more certain manner. This, in fact, was one of the stakeholders' main items that was present from the Alberta Real Estate Association back in '96. It allows condominiums to be built in phases. With this process in this bill, it will protect the rights of the condominium owners while allowing the builders to finance their project more easily.

As we're looking through different items and getting e-mails in from different people, they're talking about this new condominium amendment act, which was tabled and now is in second reading, and the processes to protect the rights of the condominium owners while allowing the builders to finance their projects more easily. Reserve fund requirements are now in the act, and there are now provisions for phasing condominiums with consumer protection built in. I wish it were a little bit stricter and that the holdback was considerably more, but if we are going to have a condominium, the condominium's developer has to be able to proceed with the project.

As the 1996 act stood, the builder had to hold back 50 percent of the sales proceeds until the project was completed. In a typical project the builder would not be able to discharge the project mortgage on the home and give title to the home buyer until the project was completed. By and large, with a phased project this could mean that for three to five years all the money would be set up in trust, and nobody benefits in that period of time. It means that they couldn't give title to the unit until the whole project was built. It also creates a cash flow problem for the whole development.

This is a major concern that, from what I'm understanding in talking to different stakeholders, we have to bring out. I hope that during our discussion we will be talking more and more about the type of builders that are in this game. Are we presenting a better product out there with condominiums than what we did see back in the 1970s and early '80s?

We're looking at what was in the paper this past weekend on the condominium over in Mill Woods, that people were evacuated because of fungus growing and so on. We're also looking at a number of condominium projects in my constituency that were built back 30 years ago. With the condominium boards and the fighting that's going on as they are trying to bring them into shape, they're finding out it's what isn't behind the walls that is the main concern.

The current act also mandates that every corporation must have a reasonable reserve fund and a chunk of money set aside for major nonannual repairs such as reshingling the roofs or fixing collapsed sewers. Under the current legislation there is no requirement that condominium corporations keep a reserve fund.

Other items dealt with in this new act include changes in voting rights of the condominium owners, mortgages that are more than 30 days in arrears, their fees, and clarification with respect to condominium insurance.

As we read some of the concerns that were given to us, insurance is a major, major item. Many owners of condominiums are not properly insured. Maybe there will be some enactments, some different things within this bill and with the regulations coming forward so that people will start to understand what type of insurance they should have. As we read different articles, people honestly don't know. A lot of people are still getting what they call a package that they think is the right one, and then condo owners often don't know what their insurance is and what is covered under this.

Mr. Speaker, this bill I hope will be talked about a lot. I believe that there are a lot of members on our side who would like to speak to this and bring up different concerns that were brought forward to us by the discussion group recommendations that were tabled today.

So as I sit down, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad of the opportunity to enter into the debate in second reading of Bill 16, the Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2000.

As I was going over all the information around this bill and the background on it, I found that sometimes MLAs have to become instant experts when they're debating a bill. I'll admit that I've never been a condo owner, so I've had to do a fair amount of groundwork in understanding this. What I can say is that there are a large number of condominiums in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre. We have had a lot of rental apartments converted into condominiums. We've had warehouses and even office buildings converted into condominium residences. I think in just one section, one district of Edmonton-Centre – and that's the district of Oliver – in 1998 we had more than 12,000 units, and that is climbing every day.

Obviously a lot of people have a great interest in condominium living. I know that for many people it is an economic decision, but for others it's a lifestyle decision. The importance of having comprehensive legislation and I think strong consumer protection is very important. So to the question, "Do we need some legislation on condominium development and ownership?" yes, indeed we do. This bill, Bill 16, the amendment act for 2000 – is this it? I'm going to reserve my opinion on that one. I will be listening very intently to the debate, but I have a number of questions.

I'll note that this seems to have been a struggle for the government. The '96 legislation was amending the 1980 legislation, but it was never proclaimed, and that was a surprise to me as a starting MLA. One of the first calls I had from a constituent was: when is this bill going to be proclaimed? I phoned up and made my way through all the different employees and finally got somebody that said: well, we're having trouble with the regulations; probably six months from now. So I phoned back in six months. "Well, no. They're still working on it. Maybe six months later." I have phoned every six months for the three-plus years I've been elected, and every time I'm told that it might be coming. So I'm glad to see that there's at least an amendment act that I can debate.

One of the things I've noticed is that there do seem to be two distinct interest groups around this bill. One is the developers, the builders, the home warranty people, those folks, and the other is the owners. Even amongst the owners there are some differences, because there seem to be owners who in fact own a condominium but don't live in it and those who both own it and do live in it. That affects the way they make decisions about the condominium association.

I do note that I had received a letter from the Canadian Condominium Institute, which, according to who was listed, seemed to be representing a lot of the builders' side and the builders' interests. They were very keen on the bill and said: "Dear MLA. We've worked with the minister. We got invited into the consultations. We're gung ho on the bill. It's a great bill. Pass it quickly." I said: "Okay. Fine."

Then I also received documentation from a group called the Condominium Advocate Association, and they are representing owners. They're pointing out that they have some reservations and some concerns, and they want some changes. Actually, earlier today during tablings I did table a copy of the document they prepared in which they were suggesting a number of amendments. But they didn't mention that they had had a cozy working relationship with the minister and were invited into meetings. I thought: well, maybe they just didn't mention it in the letter. So I followed up and contacted the group and said: "Well, were you asked to the meetings? Were you invited? Were you included?" They said, "No, we weren't." I thought: oh, dear; that's a concern. I'm sure the minister will be able to talk about why that group wasn't included.

I am very concerned that this be a bill that has balance in it and that is fair and is equitable. There are obviously two different parties, and I think it's absolutely critical that both sides are well represented. If anything, I will probably end up showing a bias in favour of the owners, because I find that those are the people that really end up with everything. The developers are gone, have moved on to other projects, but the owners are still there and are having to deal with whatever is left. So I do hope that if this bill does pass, we're able to craft it into a bill that is equitable for all interested parties.

Now, plain English. I can think of a few other bills in which it's more important, but boy, is it important in this bill. This affects the most intimate part of people's lives: where they live, their home, and how things go on around their home and the control they have over what happens in their home and just outside the door. Plain English is absolutely critical because individual Albertans out there will have to be sitting with this bill and going through it. It is going to guide them as to how they run their life, their home. I don't think many of them are going to be able to have a lawyer sit down with them while they go through it.

I think part of the reason that we need very clear, plain English legislation on this is that we've had a very long history of home ownership, and I think that most people, even if they don't own their home, have got a pretty good idea of what's involved with it. There's a lot of common knowledge about the obligations and responsibilities of home ownership, and by that I mean detached single-family dwellings, just to be clear about it. I think much less is known about the ins and outs of condo ownership, and I started out by saying that indeed I had had to phone a number of people and say, "Okay; tell me how this works," just so that I understood what was going on here.

Now, I have some reservations or concerns. It's actually a puzzlement. I was listening carefully to what the minister was saying as she introduced the bill, and I think my concerns may have been alleviated, but I'll put it on record nonetheless. We're all aware that the Condominium Property Amendment Act, 1996, was indeed passed and received royal assent but was never proclaimed. This 2000 amendment act is amending the 1996 act, which has never been proclaimed. I'm really hoping that in fact the '96 act is going to be proclaimed because otherwise this gets really confusing, where we're amending something that still isn't going to be proclaimed. I see the minister nodding at me, I see others nodding at me, but I'd like to get her on the record with that one because it sure would be a mess if we didn't.

One of the other issues that I have run across while I've been researching this is how quickly this whole area of condo ownership has changed. When I spoke to my mom, she told me she bought her condo in 1980. At that time the whole concept of condominium ownership was so new that she told me that a number of her good friends and advisers were cautioning her about whether she really wanted to get involved in this as yet unproven business, and boy, she really had to question whether she was making a wise move here. That's a mere 20 years ago. This entire idea and everything around it has moved very quickly, and I would like to see something in the legislation that allows for updating on a more regular basis. I noted somewhere that the sponsoring member had suggested a sunset clause with a five-year review in it. Now, I haven't actually run across that in the legislation. If it's not in there and it was going to be amended or put in there, may I suggest that it be a much faster review process, more like two years, just given how quickly everything is changing in this sector.

I think for me it's very important that this condominium act should have very clear consumer protection. In fact, that's what it should be. It should be a bill about consumer protection. If you do buy a single-family, detached home, you know what you're getting into. You know that you are responsible for everything: taxes, improvements, your good relationship with your neighbours. If you fail to maintain your property, well, you lose. You didn't do the right things, and you will pay for it. The value will go down, and you'll get less when you sell your home. But condos are different in that decision-making, for instance, is done by a board of directors. It can in some cases be hard for an individual to know whether all the paperwork is being done, whether the bills are being paid, whether the maintenance is being done properly, whether there's enough money in a reserve fund.

Yet that individual, that condo owner, has to bear the consequences of this decision-making process, which they are not or may not necessarily be involved with. They are bearing these consequences through their home and through their pocketbook, so I think it's very important that full disclosure is built into the clauses of this bill, that all the information is up front, and that there is a system that allows individual owners to be able to scrutinize the work of the board of the association without tying their hands. I'm not recommending miles and miles of red tape here. I think it's important that we be sensible and use common sense for this.

Even in just chatting the last few days and saying that I was going to be debating this bill, I've had people say: "Oh, yeah. This is what happened with us. The board decided to do such and such, and we didn't know about it until afterwards." Well, I'm sure there are just as many complaints on the other side from the board associations going: "Why won't this owner pay their condominium fees, for heaven's sake? What are we supposed to run this thing on?

Buttons?" So it's important that there be as much disclosure and sharing of information as possible so that all parties can make informed decisions.

Under that same category, some people had talked to me about the ability of the owners to have the board of the association call a general meeting. In some cases it's not set down anywhere how often there has to be a meeting. It's just never called, and in many cases they don't have in their bylaws the ability to call the meeting. That's something else that we should be looking at.

There's a large section on special resolutions, and I have a concern about that. I've actually brought the same concern up in context of other legislation. It's saying that special resolutions can be passed by 75 percent of the current owners that are "entitled to exercise the powers of voting." Well, I'm assuming what that means is that it's like saying: by a member in good standing. In other words, your dues have to be paid up. You can't be owing any money. I think in many cases that could be a problem in this situation. We can certainly have scenarios – and I've heard of some of them – where owners are precluded from voting on something that's really critical to the condominium association because they owe money. But in some cases what I've heard is that they owed money because they were assessed thousands of dollars for their share of a reserve fund study. So we have to be really careful about that, because you could have quite a minority of people making decisions that affect everyone. You could have 20 percent of that 75 percent that are making very critical decisions.

This issue that I'm about to discuss is not limited to condominiums by any means, but I'm surprised to see it turn up here as well. It's the issue about the developer setting aside moneys for costs for unsold units where owners are assessed or must contribute, but they're being hit for the whole development, even when they don't own those other parts or if they don't own those other units. I had something similar happen in my home district, where there were only homes on one side of the street. The other side of the street was a city park. Well, they decided to pave the road, and they wanted to assess the entire cost of the road to the people living on one side of it. You know, that wasn't fair at all. There was enough protest, and finally it was done a different way, but I can easily see that happening here, where you have only part of the unit sold and people being assessed for the entire costs of something. So that's another thing to look for here.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

It's acknowledged in the bill – and I think there's still quite a bit of work to do – about the setting up of the condominium association. Now, the builder is responsible to get that going and to convene the first association. They're also responsible for developing the original set of bylaws, but I'm hearing concerns from people that in some cases the developer has put forward bylaws for the association which are very friendly to the developer and which cause the owners severe problems down the road. Long after the developer has ceased any obligations to the association, they're stuck with these bylaws. I think we are in a position to be making sure that that sort of thing isn't happening.

I think my time is close to running out here, but I do want to speak briefly about regulations. I had spoken earlier about the reassurances I kept getting from department staff that the 1996 amendment act was coming, that they were just working on the regulations, which they were struggling with. I think this is a perfect example of a bill that needs to have the regulations go before the all-party legislative Committee on Law and Regulations. A lot of mistakes could be found if we were all putting our heads together on this one.

The government refuses to call that Law and Regulations Committee. It should be, and it particularly should be in this instance. Who knows? There could be thousands of regulations that hold up this legislation, and it is virtually impossible for a person out there, an Albertan, an owner, a potential owner of a condominium to get their hands on the regulations and understand what's really going on.

What we often have with legislation is that the legislation is the what and the regulations are the how. That's where all the specifics of exactly what's supposed to happen are embedded. They're very difficult to get hold of, to even know that they exist, to find any kind of changes that have happened to them. I really urge the government to call that Law and Regulations Committee in this instance on this bill. Then, you see, once they find out that it's a good process, I'm sure they'll be doing it for every other bill, which is what should have happened in the first place.

One thing that I am really pleased to see is the regulations around the reserve fund, because that has been a cause of great heartache for a number of condominium associations. Some are very well managed, and they looked ahead and knew that they had to have a reserve fund and started setting it up, however they did it. One of them that I asked about had their condominium fees that everyone submitted, and at the end of the year if there was a surplus, well, that surplus went into the reserve fund. That's how they built it up. There is a common and joint responsibility to have money set aside to cover those large repairs and large maintenance bills. It has caused great unhappiness to some. I know that in some cases people didn't do it because they weren't required to do it. This legislation does enshrine that requirement, and I think that is a very good thing.

One of the hesitations that I have is that enforcement of any bylaws or rules or regulations is left up to the consumer/owner, and in many cases I think people don't have the personal resources to pursue this. So while there seems to be a raising of the fines that can be given to people for not following the regulations, the way it's set up is that, yes, this is what you're supposed to be doing, but then it's the owner's responsibility to chase this through court. Even then, when they get into court, it looks like the judge can decide on what the final fine is anyway. So I think we might need to look at that and tighten it up or make it a little clearer.

I always have a concern where the actual enforcement of something is left up to the individual, because many, many times people either don't have the wherewithal, the knowledge, or the finances to pursue that through the courts. As a result, people just get away with things, and the entire setup becomes a big joke. Who really loses? Well, Albertans are the ones that really lose there, so I think that's something we need to be careful of.

I notice that my time is gone, and I do look forward to continuing this debate in Committee of the Whole. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege and, quite frankly, it's a duty to speak a certain amount on this bill in that it does affect a great deal of people living in the city of Edmonton and certainly in my constituency. It affects a great deal of who they define themselves to be, where they live, and how they function with their neighbours.

Condominium associations are always difficult to deal with as an owner in that these are people that affect your daily life and are not always people of your choosing. This particular piece of legislation had a great deal of discussion in the early '80s and resulted in a great number of changes in the act. As an alderman at the time, in the early '80s, I heard a great deal of the complaints and had to deal with them. As a matter of fact, a large part of one session dealt with a great number of difficulties as it related to conversions of properties from rental accommodation to condominiums, the lack of reserve funds to properly maintain those structures, and a great many other concerns, many of which were simply the lack of rules for a condominium association to follow to manage their properties and to manage them in a manner which was sustainable, because hitherto it had never been done in legislation.

I would like to acknowledge, too, that there's a great deal of regulation that falls from this act that the condominium associations must follow. In fact, a great deal of the regulations are more suggestive than anything else – and so they should be – to help condominium owners with the management of their collective properties. The difficulty I find myself in here in trying to rationalize agreement with Bill 16 is that the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations of this House simply does not sit. I would think that a great deal of these problems could be ironed out with some public hearings, some interest shown by the population in the law and regulations that relate to this act, and I think perhaps a good working group could be put together and the proper amendments brought to a place where they could be actually studied.

Of course, we know that the tendency of this government is to not hold meetings, particularly meetings that have any kind of representation of opposition members, for, heaven forbid, they might move something that was of value, and then the government would be forced to defeat that just simply because it came from a nongovernment member, which happens, we know, in this House a great deal. It is unfortunate.

Examination of this bill would not be reasonable without looking at the history. It was in a previous session of this Legislature that Bill 23 was passed, given royal assent, but it was never proclaimed. That is a terrible, terrible indictment of a piece of legislation. It goes through all the readings, has all the comments of members elected to represent their part of this great province, passes through all the supposed checks and balances, and is not proclaimed because there are some stakeholder issues. That is the worst possible legislation you could have in this province. It brings expectations up to a level that cannot be fulfilled and then dashes them.

All kinds of lawsuits and interested parties were all left hanging for four years. This is ludicrous. It takes four years for a government to decide it needs a new working group, that it needs some more input? This government should be roundly and soundly ashamed of a piece of legislation that cannot be proclaimed for some interests. It doesn't even identify what those interests are. Well, this member has had some experience at another level of government, where when you passed a piece of legislation, quite frankly it was enacted immediately. If you made a mistake, you were told. If you had to reverse, you had to do it immediately, and you knew why.

This piece of legislation, while well received now, is late, horribly late. This member feels that, hopefully, consultation with the interested parties has taken place to this point and that enough input has been sought so that there are some clear lines and definitions set out so everyone knows what to expect. Yes, perhaps everyone is not satisfied, but at least they had a good airing with someone. It certainly wouldn't be with Law and Regulations and certainly wouldn't be with the opposition members, because in the government's eyes we are oh so unworthy to do so.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of changes that were intended to occur at that time, in the '96 bill. The removal of unanimous resolutions has, in effect, taken place, but I gather it is not in law.

The recognition of phased developments, which is the norm these days for a substantive development. It's not likely that a developer can risk the failure of a development by reason of being unable to market enough properties in a timely fashion, therefore putting a larger burden of finance on a project. So that was supposed to have been done.

Insurance coverage of condominiums. I mean, it would be painfully obvious to anyone that studies anything of tenants' rights and tenants' responsibilities to try and superimpose those on a condominium and leave it at that. The changes in coverage for condominiums, for both common property and for individual property, were sorely needed in regulations. Now, it has not been put in place. I'm told by most of those that are in condominium situations and in ownership of their property that they are very aware of the insurance responsibilities and their individual responsibilities to their own units and to those of their neighbours and co-owners of the property. This regulation may not have the effect that it could have had in earlier years when that kind of knowledge was not prevalent in the ownership of condominiums.

The establishment of a mandatory reserve fund. This member would think that there should be a fairly substantive body of work that has gone into this area, the development of a reserve fund, so as to truly plan for the maintenance and upkeep and the major work that must go on in a condominium, in the physical property, so that a new owner or an existing owner always knows where they stand with regard to the repair and maintenance of their property and therefore can easily discern whether in the next year it will need some major input of cash. This should be a moving target. The fund should be maintained and reviewed on a regular basis so that all those that are selling and buying properties will know what they're getting themselves into.

There's a particular area that did concern me while I was an alderman and still does today, and it's cited by a noted lawyer in Edmonton who deals with the condominium act and the difficulties that are related to holding property under the act. A gentleman by the name of Don Kramer, a lawyer here in town, is concerned that consumer protection is rather limited in the bill as it is drafted. I'd like to hear from the government side to see how they feel that it is in fact protected and to further that debate. It's section 11, and when we get to the portion of debate in committee, I suspect that I'll ask some of these questions and have them answered.

There is some concern about proper consultation. I mentioned earlier that the '96 act was a disastrous failure and that this government should apologize to all of those that hold property under the condominium act in the province of Alberta for that failure. I wonder why the organization called the CAA, the Condominium Advocate Association, was not consulted and given any credence at all for their position. We wonder why. If it is going to be four or 10 years in the making, surely you could ask one more interested party, that does have some expertise in the matter, for their input. This obviously was not done. I would like to know why there would not be any of these members in the working group. I don't understand why these people would not be included.

Another area of some concern to a number of people that participated in the consultations is: will the enforcement of the act be enhanced at all? It's a sad record that in 20 years of history there have been four prosecutions and only one conviction on the matter. Now, I don't know of any industry that has players that are all that honourable and just that would not give rise to a number of prosecutions. Certainly the enforcement provisions appear to have been so, so weak that they would give cause to any claimant to back off for fear of spending a great deal of money chasing, in this case, a developer and coming up empty because of the provisions of the act or because of the major expense to get to a place where you could enforce an action.

Of course, the legislation should be and is, I suspect, under continual review, but every once in a while review has to stop and you say: okay; this is going to be debated. That being done in '96, it showed it to be a failure. Here's hoping that this same situation will not occur with this bill.

There's another section that was tried in '96, and we're not sure whether it's going to be fulfilled in this bill: the user-friendly language. It's most important that this principle be applied as fully as possible to define those responsibilities of each party in contract so that the average soul out there that wants to sit on the condominium association and help manage their own property can understand what the intent of the act is, understand all the provisions, and is not having to run off and seek legal counsel every time something of magnitude has to occur within the association. This member would think that that would be a notable contribution to any act and particularly this act in that it has to be applied by so, so many people.

The provisions under one particular section, amendments, have some interest to me, having been, in a former life, in construction and contracting. The definition of substantial completion will be better defined. That's always a concern in the relationship between the developer and the owners of any property, that it is clear at the outset what that definition is so that when that point arrives, it is not a shock to either party. It defines the amount of holdback, that which is held in reserve for some completions of the project.

We would hope that those provisions are seen to be fair both to the developer, because certainly the developer is not expected to finance a project to the extent that the bottom line of his or her operation would be affected in the negative to the extent that they could not further develop any of these properties, and to the condominium owner/consumer such that the provisions are adequate to protect them should the developer suddenly cease to be in business or pass away or any number of other events that could frustrate any contract and such that another could pick up from where that project left off and continue to completion to the satisfaction of all concerned.

There's some calculation of interest on outstanding accounts that seems to be a bone of contention for a great number of condominium owners in that their fellow condominium owners at times do not contribute in a timely manner their portion of condominium fees. It puts the whole project in jeopardy, of course, and the interest on those funds oftentimes was so low that there was actually an incentive for one not to pay their condominium fees and to just set those funds aside collecting interest in an interest-bearing account and be further ahead in the long run. Well, of course that was most detrimental to the operation of any condominium association, and that is being addressed and repaired.

Hopefully, there will be some regulations that'll prevent the unscrupulous activities of some developers. I know of two such instances – one of them has been rectified, and the other one has yet to be – and that's where a condominium owner has purchased the properties and then, while the developer is still in the process of completing the project, is dealing with the developer to buy another parking stall or buy another piece of property on the site. It's happened twice in my experience that this particular developer sold property that was not severable by title, such that that property was common property, and the developer attempted to sell that property and, in fact, received what would be fair value in the estimation of the purchaser.

When the developer went to register that piece of property – and I'm speaking this time of parking stalls and surface parking pads – the developer found that it could not be registered, not just because the entire package of registration was not ready because the construction hadn't been completed, but a year later they found that they couldn't register it because the property was held in common. In the interim, of course, the developer held the funds all this time and then in one instance said, "Oh, sorry," and returned the money.

In the second instance the older person, plus 82, I believe, just does not want to fight, just does not want to put up with all the consternation it takes to deal with lawyers and the like. It is a sad situation and in fact puts a very, very bad taste in the mouth of those that do not want to have the responsibilities of the individual property, with land and the like. They're older people, and they would just as soon have a condominium that has all of this taken care of, only to find that that is not the case because the regulations are such that it does allow these kinds of unscrupulous activities to go on unchecked and unprosecuted.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank you for your time and consideration of this matter. I look forward to the clause-by-clause review of Bill 16 so as to be able to amend those portions. Thank you, sir.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much. You know, this is actually a pleasant surprise, because I had expected that this was going to be adjourned by the government, as we discussed before. Since arrangements change frequently, it's always a useful idea to pack your bill file with you.

The concerns I've got with respect to Bill 16 are numerous. Let me start off by recognizing that this is a bill that has a number of different audiences, or constituencies, if you will. It has condominium unit owners, who have a very obvious interest. *Calgary-*Buffalo, I suspect, has probably the largest concentration of condominiums certainly in the city of Calgary and, I suspect, because Edmonton's downtown is more dispersed, maybe anywhere in the province. So I've got lots of constituents who own condominium units who have been keenly interested in what has been happening with this legislation.

The second group is developers. One thing about condominium developers: they have been working hard to ensure that their interests are front and centre in any sort of legislation that's going to affect condominium developments. We expect that; we understand it. They have a clear interest.

The third group is a group that sometimes isn't thought of so readily. These are the people who manage condominium developments. What's interesting is that each of these three groups – unit owners, developers, and condominium managers – has a different set of problems, issues, challenges, and so on to deal with.

Now, I know that after I sit down, assuming there are no government members that are going to participate, I'll have at least some other colleagues that will also want to participate in the debate on Bill 16, but in the time that I've got, I want to say that there has been a great deal of frustration in the community. You know, the process of overhauling our condominium property legislation has taken a decade, a full decade, ten years, to try and fine-tune legislation that has been shown to be deficient in a host of different ways. We thought government was finally going to be able to address some of those things. In 1996 many of us were in this Chamber and looked forward to that debate, participated in that debate, got feedback and so on. You may remember, members who were here in 1996, that the assurance we all received was: "Let's pass the bill, the Condominium Property Amendment Act, Bill 23. Then we'll have some regulations that will look after the remaining outstanding items."

Well, Mr. Speaker, what did we find? The Legislature passed Bill 23 in 1996, and then we saw one of those processes that many of us in the House marvel can happen in a province with as many smart people as Alberta. Something happened between royal assent to Bill 23 and proclamation. What we discovered was that when government sat down to make the regulations, as they're wont to do, with their selected group of stakeholders, what they found was that there were major, substantial disagreements between some of those three communities that I've identified. Condominium property managers had some issues that were different from condominium property developers, and unit owners in some respects had yet a third perspective.

Many of the people who live in *Calgary-*Buffalo, who now we've got to know on a first-name basis, are tired of phoning my constituency office saying: "Dickson, when are the rules going to change? When is this new law going into force?" Mr. Speaker, I don't like making apologies for the government of the province of Alberta. I really don't like having to make apologies for the government that I pay taxes to. I want to be able to tell people that this government really gets it right most of the time. I'd like to be able to tell my constituents that the regulations really are just the minutia to make a well-thought-out piece of legislation effective.

Mr. Speaker, I can't do that because we see with this shades of – what was it? – the mobile home tenancies act. Now, this is an act that was never proclaimed. My recollection is that it was passed about six years ago, and because the regulation-making process was a closed rather than a very inclusive, expansive one, what happened is that there were problems that had been sloughed over, glossed over in debate in this Assembly. Then when it came time to do the regulations, we found that there was not clear consensus, that people in fact were still battling key issues that should have been addressed in the debate in the Legislative Assembly.

We've seen some other legislation like that. We're in such a darn rush to take that bill and tie the ribbon around it and package it up, gift wrap it, if you will, and send it out. We've got that $8 million budget in the Public Affairs Bureau just salivating at the prospect of telling Albertans how great this government is. Maybe if we spent a little less time worrying about how we're going to gussy up the package, how we're going to decorate the package, and a little more time worrying about what's in it, regulations would be done more expeditiously. We'd have the major debate where it belongs, in this Assembly.

What's happened around the Condominium Property Amendment Act of 1996 is that there have been some substantial protracted disagreements, debate, if you will, around what should happen with the bill, but it doesn't happen here, Mr. Speaker. It doesn't happen where there's a Hansard record, and it doesn't happen where members of the public can come in and view. Where is it happening? It's happening in backrooms of governments. It's happening in the smoke-filled rooms where developers and government bureaucrats sit down and decide what the law is going to be. Does nobody else see something wrong with this picture? Is it just perhaps this misguided member that thinks there's something wrong with this process? In any event, I have some real concerns with the process that's evident here, and I can only hope that we do a better job in terms of the process of dealing with legislation.

Now, I've got a number of concerns I'm going to share with the new Provincial Treasurer when we move to the next stage of this bill, but right now we're talking in principle about the bill, and I wanted to highlight a couple of thoughts. The first one is that in Alberta what we've got is a process or a regime which is largely self-regulating. Really what that means is that if you're a unit owner or you're on the board of a condominium corporation and there's a problem, what your government says is: go down and hire a lawyer, pay the retainer, and go to the Court of Queen's Bench, because that's where you have to go to get your remedy.

Now, a lot of those constituents that I represent and many of the people living in condominiums are seniors. They're not all $2 million condominiums, like you find in the Eau Claire community. Some of them are very modestly priced. People have little left by the time they've finished putting down the down payment and then making mortgage payments on their condominium. To tell these people, "If there's a problem, you're on your own," to say to a condo corporation board in a small project, "If you don't like what's happening here, you go down and hire a lawyer to do it," does not seem very satisfactory. For some reason we've got a government that doesn't seem to see that they have a legitimate role and a valid role in terms of enforcement to make sure that the safeguards and the protection in their legislation in fact are going to be properly regulated.

In fact, I saw an interesting statistic. I don't have it in front of me, Mr. Speaker, but if you'd recognize that this is just going from memory. I think in the entire history of the Condominium Property Act there have been four prosecutions. I stand open to correction. If there's any member that has more current information, more current statistics, please signal and let me know. Of the four prosecutions I think only one actually resulted in a conviction. If you're going to suggest to me that there have never been any illegal acts, improper acts around condominiums in this province other than four, I think that just wouldn't be credible. I know you wouldn't try and tell me that, but there might be others that would try and suggest that.

So I think one of the things that's worth while asking is whether there is not a role for government in appropriate cases to do some of the enforcement, to do some of the compliance monitoring. You know, Adam Smith I'm sure was a wonderful guy in his time, and the laissez-faire economists of the time would see nothing wrong with this kind of approach, but in a complex society such as we have in the year 2000, condominium legislation is very complex. Large condominium developers are a pretty formidable opponent. I think we at least ought to be talking about: is there not a more efficacious way of trying to ensure that provisions in condominium purchase offers are adhered to or complied with? Is there not a more efficacious way of ensuring that some of the representations made by developers are in fact realized?

Mr. Speaker, we talked about the process that has been used with Bill 16, and we note again that if you look at section 11 of Bill 16, we have extensive, extensive provision for regulation. We go through and we look at three pages of matters that are going to be dealt with by regulation. In fact, my count is off; it's actually four and a half pages of material. We can start at page 15 and go all the way through to page 18 dealing with matters that are going to be dealt with by way of regulation.

Need I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that we are, I think, the only jurisdiction in all of North America where regulations are not reviewed, vetted by some kind of an all-party committee, some kind of a process. I daresay that if we had the moribund Standing Committee on Law and Regulations activated, we wouldn't have seen such long delays in terms of trying to resolve regulation. [interjection] Mr. Speaker, I'm getting some great advice from the new Provincial Treasurer, who I think is so darn excited with his new position that he just cannot sit in his seat any longer. He's been ignored for the better of 50 minutes in question period. He's sat here for another couple of hours, and he is chafing – we can almost feel that member's pain of wanting to get up and just be able to talk, as he does so well.

Anyway, getting back to Bill 16. I am concerned that there are issues with the bill that have not been adequately answered to this stage. I'm just looking for some of the notes I made of some of the amendments that I'm hoping we'll see to this. I think I noted one concern – and I think you've heard this from other members – that the question of condo fees is not dealt with in Bill 16, and that's a huge concern.

I have a relative who right now is looking to move into a new condominium under construction in the lovely subdivision of Tuscany in northwest Calgary. One of the first things she asked was: what are the condominium fees going to be? What you find is that there is a very substantial disparity in terms of condominium fees. This is a woman that had lived in a condominium in Victoria. They have some very different legislation out there, and she was quite surprised to find in Tuscany, I think in the constituency of Calgary-North West, that the Alberta legislation doesn't have a lot to say, doesn't have a lot to say to her, doesn't have a lot to say on that issue. I'm confident that my MLA for Calgary-North West is going to want to participate in this debate, because I know that he's got lots of constituents like my relative that want to hear what concerns he may have with this bill and what constructive proposals he has to put forward to address some of those concerns.

So what's going to happen with condominium fees? There is a concern that when a project doesn't proceed or there are problems down the road, the mortgagee is in a terrific position. The mortgagee is in a wonderful, preferred position as a preferred creditor, a secured creditor, but when it comes to condo fees, that's a very low priority, indeed.

I think that the bill in many respects – and I pay a compliment to the draftspeople and the people involved in putting the bill together – is not an unfair compromise. I think it has tried to address a number of difficult issues, and it seems to me that it may in fact be a significant improvement over what we had before. I think it's a workable piece of legislation. I do think, however, that government has had much more acute hearing when listening to the concerns of developers than property managers or unit owners.

There had been a huge concern in the last bill about windows and doors, Mr. Speaker. Who would have responsibility for repairs to windows and doors? As I understand Bill 16, the compromise that has been achieved is one where we allow more flexibility to the condominium corporation. You have what we might call a default formula, as the condo corporation is entitled to elect to deal with windows and doors in a different way, and I think that flexibility is positive. If government had afforded us a more ample opportunity to debate the bill the last time we dealt with this, in 1996, we might have been able to avoid all the years of indecision and address some of these things at an earlier stage.

Now, I think the clarification in terms of voting rights seems to be appropriate. There was an issue before in terms of whether votes were by individuals or number of units owned, and I think some resolution there, some clarity has been helpful.

I think the money to be held in trust and tying that in with the cost of completion on new projects is advantageous.

Mr. Speaker, I suspect I'm getting very close to the end of my time, and I just want to give notice to the Member for Calgary-Bow, actually a member for whom I always have considerable respect, that I'm going to be suggesting to her a number of amendments. I know she'll be looking at those amendments and dealing with them in good faith, going back to people in the department and seeing what can be done with those. I'm hopeful that we can pass a bill that will become a statute, a bill that will become an act and become enacted in time to be able to have some impact on the large number of constituents living in those kinds of dwellings.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we now adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 18 Alberta Personal Income Tax Act

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo did indicate that I wanted to get right up here and start speaking. What better bill to start on than moving second reading of Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, 2000.

Because of some of the statements that have been made by the opposition over the last year – I could read them, and sometime I will in here – I know that they support this bill because they support the lowering of taxes for Albertans in a balanced approach, and I'm sure they're going to stand up and acknowledge that to Albertans in this session.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has led the country in tax reform, and we have introduced a new, single-rate provincial income tax, scheduled to take effect January 1, 2001. This bill will officially introduce our new, single-rate tax plan to the people of this province, making a bold step towards meaningful tax reform. The people of this province deserve to keep more of the money they work so hard for, and we're going to continue to review taxes in the province to make sure that this happens. This bill will set the framework in place for the tax system that will truly benefit all Albertans.

Now, let me take a moment, Mr. Speaker, to outline the basic components of this plan. The province will unhook from the federal system by levying provincial income tax on taxable income. This is an important component of this plan because it means Alberta, not the federal government, determines how we cut our taxes now and in the future. I'd also like to point out, as we unhook from the federal tax system, that if we did not, we would not be able to address the fairness issues such as the differences in taxes paid by single- and two-income families.

We should also keep in mind that simply passing through the changes announced in the past federal budget would not have taken 132,000 low-income Albertans off the tax rolls. Under our plan minimum wage earners won't pay any Alberta income tax, but they'll pay federal income tax. This is possible, Mr. Speaker, precisely because we are able to unhook from the federal system.

This new legislation will also see the introduction of our single rate of 11 percent, which will apply on taxable income. The basic spousal exemption will also be increased to $11,620. The remaining nonrefundable credits will still apply, and the credits will be fully indexed to offset inflation.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of debate about the effect that the federal tax changes will have on this plan. It is true that given the tax cuts announced in the federal budget, some Alberta taxpayers would save more under our current personal income tax system. However, we've said that we're committed to ensuring that federal savings are passed on to Albertans. The rate and/or the exemption level will be adjusted, following the first quarter, to pass the federal savings on to Alberta taxpayers. Details of these changes will be provided following the release of the first-quarter report.

Now, I realize the argument across the way will be: why would we pass this legislation only to change it? Well, Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is really quite simple. We need to put the structure in place so that we can provide lower taxes to the people of this province. Of course, there will always be influencing factors which may change things, but with the foundations in place we can make adjustments to ensure we get the results that the people of this province desire, and that's lower taxes.

Mr. Speaker, we need to pass Bill 18 to be ready for the launch of our new tax system on January 1. The early release of the bill allows companies and accountants time to develop the software needed to calculate provincial taxes under the single-rate tax and to make the required source deductions starting January 1, 2001. Once a clear understanding of the structure is in place, it is not hard to make these simple adjustments.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have the right to keep more money in their pockets, and we've done a lot of work to get our fiscal house in order so that we can pass those benefits on to Albertans. I trust that all members of this House will support this bill, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, 2000. Let's get on with lowering taxes.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Welcome to the debate, Acting Provincial Treasurer. It's nice to have some fresh thinking on this issue. The problem, of course, is that somehow into your notebook you seemed to slip the notes from the former Provincial Treasurer. It's too bad you were saddled with those notes, because the fresh thinking that I was hoping for I think would've seen a more robust defence of passing along sustainable tax reform that all Albertans would benefit from instead of just a select few and then only at the political desire of the government of the day. I know this, members, because I've reviewed his Hansard record over the past few years. I know that he's committed to this notion of lower taxes, but I must say that I was a little bit confused just now with the comments about ensuring that a foundation be in place first.

Now, if this member has carefully read the arguments of the Official Opposition regarding the need for sustainable, comprehensive tax reform that's fair and equitable, then he would understand, of course, that Alberta Liberals have been talking about the need for a firm foundation for a long time. It was this same hon. member who just talked about the need to put in place a foundation first and then worry about the details who of course, when he was on some of his earlier privatization escapades, it was: full speed ahead and damn the torpedoes; we don't need the legislative framework; we'll just go ahead and privatize things like registries and liquor stores because we can't wait for the legislation. So it's a little curious.

As the member knows, I used to work for an organization whose credo in part was that people can and will change. Of course, it's encouraging to me that perhaps this member has seen the light of day and understands the importance of putting in place a foundation, a firm foundation, a predictable one and a legislated one, so that governments can't play quick and dirty with the facts or with the rules. Maybe this member has proven the credo that people can and do change. Maybe it's a new corner that he's turned, and I'm happy to see that.

Now, the problem that I have with Bill 18 is that it is in fact more of this incremental, politically driven tax reform. The government would have us believe that they have to delink from the tax-on-tax system to pass along true tax savings, but as the facts come out in this debate on Bill 18, what we will quickly discover is that all Albertans would receive a greater and fairer share of tax relief if we simply lowered the existing rate. The government would also argue that we had to move to a flat tax to get rid of bracket creep.

Now, this government has collected untold millions of dollars through bracket creep over all of these years when they simply could have indexed the provincial rate and eliminated the provincial portion of bracket creep, but they chose not to do that. They chose to sort of backhand collect these taxes and then somehow try to blame it on the federal government.

Now, it's the federal government over these last couple of years that has passed along the only meaningful, real, and sustainable tax relief not just to Albertans but to all Canadians. It was only the federal government that figured out a way to deindex and then eliminate bracket creep without selectively picking some Canadians who would benefit and others that wouldn't.

So when I hear this government defend its own ideologically driven bills to the exclusion of the facts, it makes me wonder exactly whose interests they're serving. Of course, with Bill 18 we know the answer to that question. They are serving the interests of a select few very wealthy taxpayers. [interjection] I hear the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations talking about the GST. I'm so glad she mentioned the GST, that great Conservative legacy brought in by that Conservative government. You know, when it comes to tax policy, Canadians know full well whom to blame when it comes to things like the GST and raising taxes.

Mr. Speaker, you may be interested to know that this government has increased taxes by billions of dollars since 1993. In fact, over 12 percent of the fiscal dividend, over 12 percent of the more than $9 billion worth of budget surpluses have come about exactly as a result of tax increases. For a government that prides itself on saying that the only way the taxes are going is down, of course the facts tell an entirely different story. So I would hope that the government will quickly rethink its position on this flat tax and will come to the conclusion that it's not fair, that it's an unequal distribution of benefits, and it destroys some of the parts of Canadian tax policy which have made this country one of the most desirable places in the world to live and this province one of the most prosperous places in the world to live and do business. I think this government at its peril will dismantle this kind of progressive tax regime.

We want to make sure that any tax changes maintain the values of equity. This is something that this government seems to have lost. We also want to make sure that in any change we don't lose the benefits of progressivity, and of course we want to make sure that it does not create new tax burdens on some Albertans.

The bill that's proposed by the government will unhook us from the federal system. It will impose a single rate, and it will raise some exemptions. It will also deindex. I can go along with deindexing, and I can certainly support raising personal exemptions and getting low-income Albertans off the tax rolls. Of course, both of these could happen without delinking or without imposing a single rate. In fact, both of them have been parts of Alberta Liberal policy for some time. So again it's nice to see the current government giving the government-in-waiting a little bit of credit by taking some of our better ideas and incorporating them into their own provincial policy.

As is usually the case with this government, you know, Mr. Speaker, they mix in the good with the bad, so we have some of this good, sustainable, reasonable tax policy mixed in with this notion of a flat tax, which punishes the middle class and rewards the very wealthy. The government has said that maybe what they'll do is tinker around a little bit with the rates, but we've heard promises and musing from this government so many times when it comes to tax policy.

Let me refresh our collective memories here for just a moment about this government's musing about tax policy and their propensity for making up tax policy on the fly. Now, it's obvious that this government has not done its homework by assessing the distributive effects of the 11 percent single rate on various income classes and family types. To get the majority of the benefit from the federal tax reforms, this government would have to totally rework not just its exemption levels but also the single rate. But they didn't do that homework, and they didn't anticipate even though, clearly, the federal government telegraphed what its intentions were.

Now, we only need to look at the record of this government over, let's say, the past six to eight months to see how this government has been veering from one side of the road to the other on tax policy and has been making suggestions on the fly, everything from giving people hundred dollar rebate cheques to eliminating personal income taxes. We've had the Premier saying one thing and the former Treasurer saying something else, and who knows what the current Acting Treasurer is going to say and whether or not he's going to be around to be accountable for it.

We had the Premier back in the middle of July of 1999 musing about accelerating Alberta's single tax rate scheme in 1999 and 2000 by increasing the personal and spousal exemptions to $11,621 as a means of providing tax relief to low- and middle-income Albertans. What he didn't realize, of course, is that under the existing tax collection agreements the province cannot adjust federally defined amounts of nonrefundable tax credits while remaining linked to the tax-on-tax system. So that was just an oops, I guess, Mr. Speaker, and they had to rethink that.

Then we had later on in the year, in November of 1999, the Premier saying that the government, to provide Albertans some fiscal benefit from its surpluses, may lower the 9 cents per litre gasoline tax. But that didn't seem to be a workable solution, because it was just two days later, November 25 of '99, that the Premier out loud said: I know; we should have a gasoline tax rebate. But that didn't seem to fly either, because a month later, in that quiet period between Christmas and New Year's, on December 29 of 1999, we had the Premier musing again about providing Albertans with a hundred dollar tax rebate cheque in the mail.

So we've gone from a reduction of the amount collected at the pump to maybe a tax rebate overall to now a cheque that would be sent to every Albertan, we think, but it didn't happen. Of course, this government loves to talk about tax relief and do very little other than the talking.

Right after the beginning of the year, seven days into the new millennium, we had the Treasurer now saying that the government is considering a personal income tax cut in the year 2000. This wasn't anything that was announced in the budget. It wasn't part of the government's tax plan. It was just the Treasurer, we suspect, freelancing maybe to get a headline. Ten days later, on January 17, the Treasurer again said: I know; it won't be a tax reduction; maybe we'll reduce health care premiums. Another headline, another day.

The very next day, on the 18th of January, that very same ex-Treasurer said: "Well, you know what? We should use the surplus to pay down the debt rather than being used to provide tax cuts."

Now, I'll stop at this point in the history, Mr. Speaker, because in fact it's interesting to know that the Treasurer might have just kept his word on this point. If you take a look at the record of the federal government and their fiscal surplus, their dividend, and the provincial government and how it's used its fiscal surplus, what you note is that the federal government has been able to commit a full 42 percent of its surplus to tax relief, while this government has provided 12 percent. So, obviously, the Treasurer and his colleagues in cabinet made the decision that they would much rather pay down the debt even though we were years and years and years ahead of the debt-servicing plan and would deny Albertans the tax relief that they had been demanding, because it is the ordinary working Albertans, the taxpayers of this province, that have enabled this government to see the prosperity that it reaps the rewards of.

I think it has done a disservice to those taxpaying men and women that this government, in spite of some clear direction to the contrary and some promises to the contrary, would once again choose to accelerate that debt repayment plan rather than provide some balance, as the federal government was able to do in balancing debt repayment and tax relief, to say nothing, Mr. Speaker, of course, of the absence of meaningful investment in sustainable, comprehensive, and high-quality social programs.

Mr. Speaker, the history goes on. About 10 days later, January 26 to be exact, the government offered an 18 cent reduction in the mill rate for the education property tax applicable to the next fiscal year. Now, this will amount to about $22 or $23 in tax cuts to the average homeowner, and this was after all these months of speculation of meaningful and sustainable tax cuts. What homeowners got was about $22 a month.

On February 24 the Treasurer, for the eighth time since it was originally announced – this has got to be a new personal best for the ex-Treasurer – announced the 11 percent flat tax scheme one more time as though it was newsworthy once again. Of course, this was on the heels of other jurisdictions who have explored flat taxes and other politicians in other jurisdictions exploring flat taxes saying: well, we're not going to proceed with this because it's inherently unfair.

On February 27, prior to the federal budget, the ex-Provincial Treasurer, the one who's left us now, called on the federal government to cut taxes. I quote. He said: what we're saying to Mr. Martin is try it; you'll like it. End quote. Well, of course, we learned very soon thereafter that Mr. Martin not only liked it, but he did it much better than the ex-Provincial Treasurer would have.

On February 28, when the ex-Treasurer commented on the federal budget, he did say that federal tax cuts didn't go as far as Alberta's, but they were better than tax increases. Well, then the reality sunk in, that of course as a result of the federal initiative in leadership, Albertans in most income classes were going to be paying much more under the flat tax scheme than they would have if we had left it on the tax-on-tax formula.

Now, this was brought to light by Brad Severin, who is the senior tax manager at BDO Dunwoody, when he crunched some numbers and disclosed that Alberta's 11 percent flat tax will cost middle-income earners more than staying under the current tax-on-tax system based on the tax reduction measures announced in the year 2000 federal budget.

Even with that information in hand, on March 3, the next day, that former Provincial Treasurer – and maybe we understand now why he was anxious to go – said, and I'm quoting: well, 10 months from now our entire tax reduction kicks in; we're not going to wait for the federal government to incrementally bump things downward, end quote.

Well, the problem is that he seemed to ignore what Mr. Severin and others had so clearly indicated, and that is that at several tax levels Albertans were going to be paying much more under the 11 percent rate. For example, for an income earner at the taxable income level of $30,000, they were going to be paying at least $60 more under the Alberta rate, and these are supposed to be some of the low-income earners that this government is promising to bring relief to, meaningful relief. All they're going to get from this provincial government if Bill 18 becomes law is a tax increase.

Now, on March 12 further calculations prepared by Brad Severin showed that middle-income earners in Alberta are better off within the existing tax-on-tax system than under the 11 percent rate. The former Treasurer said that maybe Mr. Severin's figures were wrong, but that argument only lasted a mere 24 hours, because on March 13 the Treasurer said: oops, maybe. In fact he was wrong, and he said: we'll have to cut the proposed flat tax to keep up with the federal reductions.

Then, most interestingly of all, Mr. Speaker, on March 14, the day after all of this to-and-froing on the part of the former Provincial Treasurer about the 11 percent flat rate, we had the Premier declare in one of his uncharacteristic outbursts that he would bring in a law to ensure that Albertans will always have the lowest personal income tax rates in Canada. He made this statement with the suggestion that as a result of federal tax initiatives, he wanted to make sure that Albertans were never going to be shortchanged.

Well, two things that the Premier seemed to have forgotten. Number one is that he's not going to have anywhere near the tax room in this province that any Prime Minister of the country would have, but most importantly he seemed to have forgotten that a key part of his tax policy was delinking from the federal government, and in that outburst he relinked. What he said was: we are going to make sure that we always have the lowest tax based on what the federal government does. So, in fact, he's once again contradicted his policy and his Treasurer, and if I heard the Acting Treasurer correctly when he said, "You know, one of the joys of Bill 18 is that tax policy for Albertans will no longer be made in Ottawa," if I understood his point correctly, he'd better sit down with the Premier one of these days and see which one of them is really speaking for the government when it comes to delinking or relinking with the federal government. Of course, the Official Opposition wants to ensure that Alberta taxpayers receive the full benefits of federal government tax reductions, but we wonder whether the Premier and his government have considered all of the implications of this latest thinking out loud or thinking on the run by the Premier.

Most interestingly, if you do follow through the numbers, Mr. Speaker, the provincial government has not set aside enough money in the current budget to fully flow through the benefits of the federal tax reductions at the predicted rates of growth, so we have some serious concerns regarding this government's intention to follow through on that pledge even if they could.

Now, the other part of the difficulty I have with the Premier's comments in light of Bill 18 is that provincial program spending commitments, particularly in health care and education, are growing at a faster rate than federal program spending commitments. In fact, if you review the numbers – and more of this might come up when we're dealing with Bill 19 – I think just to help the House follow through with the argument, the former Provincial Treasurer's, not this Acting Provincial Treasurer, spending has actually gone up at a higher rate than I think any of his predecessors, and with that rate of spending increase it would be very hard to know where this provincial government would find the revenue to back up the Premier's boast about always maintaining in law this lowest tax regime. Of course, then you have to wonder whether or not the lowest tax regime on the single measure of income tax is the most sound fiscal policy if you simply isolate that as the one objective and you don't put it together with other tax policies and fiscal policies for government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thrilled to be able to stand and speak a few moments on Bill 18, Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, as introduced for second reading today by the hon. Minister of Resource Development. You know, I'd like to mention that it's nice to hear the support from the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, that he wants to see that we move maybe even faster to reduce income taxes. I'm thrilled to hear that he's put that on the record, that he would like Albertans to continue to see that we push for more progress for more and faster tax reduction. I'm glad to hear that on record.

It's nice to say that by the time this act is introduced in 2001, taxes would have been reduced by over $852 million from 1999. It's nice to say, "Well, let's do more," but let's put it in perspective. How much more? Then from that aspect, how is it that you're actually going to then also finance all of the expenditure plans that we will hear also pronounced from the Member for Edmonton-Glenora and from the opposition? They want us to drive all of the taxes down faster but also want to increase the spending significantly. So it's nice to be able to say both, but it's nice to also have their issues on record.

On the topic of fairness one of the greatest distortions I would say about fairness that's been sold to the public is that it's fair to have complex, multiple levels of rates of tax. It would be interesting, if we would survey even the members here, how many would know the three federal rates and at what levels of income they kick in. That's just one simple part of the Income Tax Act.

When you start adding on the complexity of that Income Tax Act, you've now had to ask the public to go to accountants and lawyers and give all of their money to plan. They're going to have to assess how do I divide the income between that of my spouse or a child or amongst their employees so that you start looking towards how you maximize tax and spend all that time and effort and all that money to professionals who specialize in this area. That very productive work could be better put towards everybody being able to understand a very simple, fair basis of taxation. What could be better than everybody looking towards how do I contribute towards the services I receive, that all Albertans would know and understand. In fact, for the first time in talking to people, they understand: yes, 11 percent. It doesn't matter if it's after the personal exemption level of $11,620, but after those rates I'm only going to pay 11 percent. I'm now not going to be penalized for working harder, being industrious, and trying to save.

We talk about being fair. In fact, all the multiple levels of tax do is penalize the middle income from being able to save and accumulate their wealth. As soon as they start accumulating sufficient wealth, it gets taxed at higher rates. They can't break through that threshold of being beyond the middle income. We keep them down at that level. If we don't take away that incentive from them, from being able to save and to earn higher levels of income and to save those moneys, then we will keep the middle income literally in that class. The wealthy already have the ability and will always have the ability to arrange their affairs, be it corporately, be it through income-splitting techniques, through investments, and through all kinds of deductions that are available in various income tax acts to be able to avoid and/or delay the tax that they would pay. This makes it very visible, it makes it understandable, it makes it simple for everybody to understand, and it certainly probably makes the fairest basis of taxation. Why is it that everybody shouldn't contribute in the same fashion to making this country a very prosperous one?

This tax did provide, by unhooking from the federal system, some major advantages. If we don't unhook, we don't have the same latitude of assessing where it is that income tax policy should benefit and to what extent Albertans should benefit and in which areas. We wouldn't have had the ability to pass the federal changes through to 132,000 lower income Albertans on the tax roll. The minimum wage earners wouldn't have had the ability to no longer have to pay tax, those at the very low end of the scale. It's by having significantly changed and improved the exemption level for personal and/or spouse or for the married equivalent that those will help reduce. Those that are at the lowest levels now will no longer have to pay tax; 132,000 lower income Albertans will no longer have to pay provincial income taxes.

Now, I don't know if you talk about fair, but after you start earning any level of income beyond the very low amounts, everyone is now able to understand what it is that they will pay for tax.

I would like to also make mention that part of the challenge we do face is that we can't look at Alberta or even Canada in isolation from the world. When we look at tax policy, you have to be looking at a fashion or a way of how you attract and maintain the brightest and the best and those that would attract the capital and allow the capital to freely flow into Alberta. How is it that we create an environment that says, "This is a place to come and set up our businesses and earn our income"? Already this single issue of a flat tax is attracting many. Alberta is a place where they want to come and start their businesses. It is a place where there will be an opportunity for their children to find jobs in the future. It is an ability to then drive the policy to see that that income will stay here versus being put into other countries and other nations, to just shelter the tax so that they will leave it in Alberta. We're finding many already will come to Alberta and find reasons why their residence should be here on December 31 rather than maybe somewhere else in the rest of Canada so that they can already take advantage of the low taxes.

We do have in this income tax act some significant changes with respect to the flat rate taxes I've just discussed, but because of the complexity of the federal tax many of these things still have to stay on their own. All the nonrefundable tax credits will be left in place so that no one will be penalized. The charitable donations, all the medical expenses, the tax credits: those will all be left in place so that we will not be penalizing anyone. All Albertans truly do benefit by seeing this new income tax act being put into place as of January of 2001.

I have not specialized in income tax, but I certainly have had that opportunity of working with income tax. I can tell you that one of the greatest problems that people come looking for advice on their income tax is just the plain ability to understand it, for them to be able to predict with some certainty what it will mean for them for the future and that they won't be left to the interpretation of tax courts and tax accountants and tax lawyers as to how to invest their money, how to save it, and how to earn it.

The best thing that we could do is to simplify taxation for all Albertans. This tax act will start in that measure for it. This is only one piece of income tax in relation to all the forms of taxes that are collected in Alberta. There is the whole question of mix. Albertans already have the lowest tax load of all provinces in the country. It's going to be harder for us to have the same percentage decreases in our tax rates versus the other provinces as we're already substantively lower. When we start comparing hypothetical situations of what could have existed if we'd remained under the old roll, one can always make an argument for their particular case that maybe it was advantaged or not. Overall this system will be much fairer, simpler, and more understandable for all Albertans and will probably help drive this province for the next century, for the next millennium to be the place to live in Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure this afternoon to get up and speak to Bill 18. It was interesting. As the Acting Treasurer sat down from moving second reading on this, he closed by saying: let's get on with lowering taxes. That's a paraphrase of his exact quote, but it was kind of that. When I look at Bill 18, Bill 18 deals with the structure of taxation much more than it deals with the level of taxation. What we want to do then is look at Bill 18 in terms of how it determines how we're going to tax, because each of the parameters within this bill can be adjusted at any particular time by an amendment to the act which will then allow for a particular level of taxation. So the real issue then becomes one of: are we going to deal with a different structure of taxation?

Mr. Speaker, when we look at the four major parts of the bill and how it's going to change the structure, what we're going to look at first, I guess, is the one that a lot of people are talking about and that forms the basis for this whole bill, and that is the unhooking from the federal process. From my perspective and I think from a lot of people's perspective this is a good idea. This gives us the independence at the province to deal with our taxation. We are then directly accountable to the people of Alberta on the basis that we tax them, the level that we tax them, and how that tax gets measured. It's not clouded over or masked by changes at the federal level, because we're dealing with a measure of income and then we're dealing with a tax on that income as opposed to a second level calculation from that income. So I think that all Albertans should feel very positive and very encouraged as we move from a tax-on-tax system to a tax-on-income system.

The other one that we're talking about is the relationship of income tax to income earners. The historic approach that we've had in our income tax system has been that the person who achieves that income is the one who is responsible for basically paying the income tax.

We've gradually started to create exemptions. You get exemptions for your children, and you get exemptions for your spouse. What we're seeing here now is basically a separation and an attempt within the structure of our taxation to develop some degree of equity for families that have one or two income earners so that the tax payable by that family is more equitable or more even than it was under a system where each individual was individually responsible for their income and their income taxation. So what we're seeing then is basically a change now to more of a family income tax situation rather than an individual income tax situation.

The other thing that comes up and is very, I guess, straight in terms of how this is applied is the recognition that within the federal and provincial systems there were a number of tax credits that were offered at the federal level that will be honoured and dealt with within the context of this new tax structure in Alberta. So those three, basically, I think most Albertans would see as being reasonable, would see as actually improving our taxation system.

The one that's left out of that, then, is the move to the 11 percent single provincial tax rate, and I think that is where we have to really look to see whether this new structure is going to be reasonable or whether or not it's going to be reflective of some of the things that we've heard in the lead-up to this debate. Also, we heard from the Member for Calgary-North West as he talked about the equity that was going to be created for people as they increased their incomes. I guess the thing we have to look at here is that if we're going to have a single rate of taxation and if we want to deal with equity, we have to look at how we measure the income that that single rate gets multiplied by.

Within the structure of incomes of individuals in any of the western economies what we're basically seeing now is that as you earn more income, you in essence develop and achieve options to delay the reporting and measurement of incomes in the context of an income tax form. I know, Mr. Speaker, that I do it on a regular basis when I sit down and I talk about: "Well, I've got money in some investments. Do I put those into an income-earning investment where I can get interest on it?" If I do that, then at the end of the year, whether or not that interest is actually transferred to my bank account, I get a little statement from the financial institution which then gets added to my taxable income, and I pay income tax on that income. But if I put it into an equity fund, that income or the growth in the value of that asset is measured in the context of equity, and this effectively is a capital gain, which is not taxed for taxation purposes, is not measured as income for taxation purposes until I actually liquidate that asset.

So what we're seeing, then, is that this kind of a structure discriminates against people as they get older, because almost all of our financial planning institutions tell us that as we move through the aging process, Mr. Speaker, we're supposed to transfer more and more of our money from the equity base, where there's a high degree of risk and a high degree of speculation, into a more capital-secure investment style.

Well, generally those are income-earning investments rather than equity-earning investments, so what we're in essence seeing is that if we have a middle-income earner, where they have to start thinking about someday having that investment to spend as part of their income after retirement, they're going to have to start and make sure that they protect that capital base. Any financial adviser will tell them, as they age, to put more and more of it into that income-earning format rather than the equity-earning format. So what we're seeing is that these individuals are going to be paying income tax on that and the person who is either younger or whose investment is not critical to their financial management will be tax exempt. They will be exempt.

Well, the whole idea behind a progressive taxation system, where you have steps, is effectively saying that as I put more and more of my money as a middle-aged person into equity, then some degree of fairness in that taxation system needs to be applied. So, in essence, by having a slightly higher tax rate, it compensates for the income that I earn which is not being reported as taxable income on my tax form. I think we have to look at this.

Mr. Speaker, I'll be the first to admit, and I think a lot of Albertans would, that our tax rate differences were probably much too broad. But the idea of having a progressive tax system needs to be looked at in terms of: is it an equitable tax system when we have this option to hide incomes or to divert incomes so that you don't have to report it on your income tax form? That's the kind of question that we have to be looking at as we go to this 11 percent.

Now, for a young person going through their very rapid increase of income with new employment advancement, the gaining of experience, probably a flat tax is very reasonable for them, because what you're going to see is that by the time they're paying off their student loan, they're buying their home, they're doing all these other things, they effectively are spending their total income. They don't get into the decisions – at least, Mr. Speaker, I never had enough money to start saving until the kids were all gone, the mortgages were paid. Then I could put my money away in terms of looking at: how can I prepare for my future?

Well, you know, those individuals may find a flat tax very attractive, and we may find the spin-off that comes from that very supportive to our economy in terms of multiplier effects. But I think that if we're going to look at this in the context of the entire spectrum of incomes and tax possibilities, we have to very seriously look at whether or not the 11 percent flat tax is the kind of tax system that we want as a structure in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we see all kinds of things that talk about, you know, who pays less, who pays more. Well, when we're talking about a change in structure, there always will be winners and losers, even if it's degree of winning or degree of losing. It's not necessarily this thing that everybody has to come out a winner. Once we change anything in our tax system, any structure in our tax system, any rate in our tax system, unless we sit down and calculate it – and I would suggest that maybe our computer capacity isn't enough to sit down and calculate the proper adjustments so that everybody is treated equally. Any time we change taxes, there is an inequity created. The debate here has to be as to whether or not this new structure is going to give us a more equitable, a more fair tax system than what we had before.

Mr. Speaker, as I've said, three parts of it I like, I think would be very attractive, but the movement to the flat tax I have to question, because I don't really think that this is going to give us the fairer taxation that we see in Alberta. I can give you some examples of that. I've talked to a number of individuals in my constituency who are what I would consider middle income, the rising income level person. What they've talked about is: well, you know, it's going to be nice to know that if I get a $5,000 raise, I don't have to jump to a new bracket. Well, when you start talking about how they are going to spend that $5,000, a lot of them are saying: we're going to buy some investments; we're going to start saving some money. You say: well, how are you going to save that money? You start explaining it to them, and pretty soon they say: okay; maybe it isn't quite fair when all I do is pay the flat rate. From this year forward the 11 percent attaches to all of your income, but when you take some of that and put it into a saving, then how you save that determines your income for the next tax year and tax years subsequent to that until you convert that saving pool back into an income stream.

What you end up with then is a real discrepancy, and most Albertans realize that they can effectively defer taxation by choosing how they invest their dollars. They then are putting themselves, based on their risk aversion, their willingness to accept risk, in a different category from someone either who is not quite as much of a risk-taker or someone who is older who has to have the higher degree of certainty associated with their actual capital accumulated stock, the stock of capital that's in that saving program.

Basically, what they're realizing is that, yes, within the context of a flat tax rate there are some advantages, but also then you end up in a situation at some time when there is no real equity created by a flat tax. So what I would do is encourage the Acting Treasurer to look at that and determine whether or not that inequity can be addressed in the context of how we're going to deal with this. Using the federal taxable income form as the base for our flat tax will not allow this to occur.

Mr. Speaker, what we may have to do is go to some kind of a net worth taxation so that you get the tax from all sources of income treated equally, no matter how you deal with risk or how you deal with your investments. I don't think that in itself is reasonable. The administrative load, the degree of reporting, the ability to not quite report all of your assets would be a temptation, I think, that we don't want to have to enter into in the context of trying to have Albertans approach a fair taxation system. That means we have to go back to looking at how we can deal with adjustments in the issue of the measurement or the rate of taxation as opposed to the base of taxation.

With that, we need to make sure that we look at the possibility of putting into account the ideas of a progressive tax. I think all of us that work in this room effectively report to the Ethics Commissioner every year an asset base, effectively a net worth statement, and I don't think that we should be expected to have to deal with putting that into the tax domain and in the context of trying to look at what proportion of those investments that are reported in our disclosure statements are income-earning as opposed to equity-earning sources or investments. So it really creates a dilemma for us in terms of trying to make sure that our taxation system is really fair.

Mr. Speaker, as I kind of close and summarize, what we have to do in terms of looking at Bill 18 is look at it basically in the context of who pays the taxes in Alberta. At what level do those individuals who are paying the tax have to pay? Anytime we can move to reduce taxes, we can do that in any kind of a structure. As I said to start, Bill 18 is an approach that will take us to a new structure, not necessarily any particular level of taxation, because the taxation level will be determined later as we adjust whether or not 11 percent is right, whether we adjust the consumer price indexing of the categories, the exemptions, or the credits. We have to look at that from the perspective of what it is that we want in the context of an equitable tax system for Albertans.

The option that we've got in here that is going to continue to look at and honour the nonrefundable tax credits at the federal level I think is quite easy. What it does, then, is create a consistency between how a lot of the activities that we undertake with charitable organizations, the contributions we make – as long as we're going to keep some kind of a consistency between the provincial and federal government levels in taxation, what we'll be able to say is: okay; these are the benefits that you get for making a charitable contribution. If we were to break ourselves off on that area, what we'll end up with is people starting to make decisions about where they will make their charitable contributions based on where the tax credits or tax deductions are. Then what we end up with is a fight between the two levels of taxation to decide who's going to get people to put the money into the charitable organization that they want to give the credit for as opposed to the other one. So the idea that we're going to keep that tied together, keep it uniform, and keep it linked I think is a good process that we're looking at.

So, Mr. Speaker, with those kinds of comments on the base level and the principle of what Bill 18 stands for, I'd just like to conclude by saying that if we could deal with this bill from the perspective of the three sections, I think it would be worth voting yes for. When we look at how it impacts on the equity and the potential equity and the perceived equity, because this bill is being sold as being a fair representation of taxation, I think maybe with proper looking at the data, we might be able to determine that maybe it is fairer than what we already have, but it is not fair in the sense that it provides for a lot of options and a lot of income shifts. I can tell you that when you deal with this now, you're going to look at what the impact would be in terms of how you make investments, how you defer income. I haven't even gotten into the whole area of what happens to the issue of stock options, what value they get taken at for the executive-level people in the province who participate in share ownership.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude my comments. Thank you very much.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, it's interesting to listen to the debate on Bill 18. It's very difficult to argue with lower taxes. However, there have been some comments from both sides on methodology, and I think that's a very helpful and useful debate. I think Albertans are proud of the fact that their province in fact has led the nation in the importance of reduction of taxes to strong economies, to chances for advancement for our businesses, for our corporations, and for our young people.

Mr. Speaker, with those comments I would now adjourn debate on Bill 18.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to start the debate on Bill 19, the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000.

This bill is a milestone as we have got rid of the net debt in the province of Alberta, and now we're getting rid of the 8 percent deficit elimination surtax that was put in place at the time. This tax was imposed in 1987 as a temporary deficit elimination tax on Albertans with incomes greater than $44,000, and if you refer that to today, it has the equivalency to about $47,000. This was essentially put in place to combat government waste and overspending, and it was intended to deal with the mismanagement of taxpayers' dollars by increasing the amount of money we took from taxpayers. I just don't understand that, Mr. Speaker.

We have taken the trend of mounting debt and reversed that, and we've put our financial house in order to this date. It's a model for the rest of the country that we've done this, and it's a source of pride. So taking this surtax out is definitely that milestone I talked about.

Now that that net debt is gone, we are going to get rid of this tax completely. We've gone a step further though. While we got rid of the debt and we're going to remove this tax, we've also put in place legislation that says that deficits are illegal in this province.

In addition to this, Mr. Speaker, our good financial position and strong Alberta economy mean that we are able to accelerate the elimination of the surtax 18 months ahead of the schedule that we had set back when we passed that law. This legislation also does some cleanup, and it will continue for seven to 10 years. For example, the legislation removes terminated credit programs and reference to corporations which are now dealt with in corporate-specific legislation. Ultimately, the bill will leave more money in the pockets of the people of this province and finally lay to rest one of the last reminders of deficit spending in the province of Alberta.

We should also note that while this particular tax is directed towards Albertans who originally had tax imposed on them, it is not the only recent tax break that has come into Alberta. In fact, in 1997

we introduced the Alberta family employment tax credit, which gives tax breaks of up to a $1,000 to lower income and middle-income families. In 1998 we cut the tax rate from 45 and a half percent to 44 percent, which benefited all Albertans. The combined impact of those moves meant a 65 percent cut for a single-income family with two children earning $30,000 a year. I repeat: a 65 percent cut for single-income families with two children earning $30,000 per year.

Personal income tax will be paid under the new Alberta Personal Income Tax Act beginning in 2001. However, the Alberta Income Tax Act will continue to remain in effect for seven to 10 years for administrative purposes. The government will use this opportunity to make some technical amendments that will delete obsolete passages.

Also, in 1999 we have matched the federal increases in basic and spousal exemptions.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that we have total support for this and that this marks an end to an era of overspending in government and puts back in place some sensible taxation processes. I can remember a day when I sat around the table when the deficits were mounting, when the total debt was mounting at a massive rate, and a group of four or five taxes would be brought in for discussion by government. When asked which one they'd like, the government of the day would say: we're going to have to have all of them to try to stem the flow. They were done on almost an ad hoc basis.

I can remember a day, too, when we started the arduous task in '92-93 of removing the massive deficit, the 3 and a half billion dollars, to get rid of the net debt as well as deal with the massive true mortgage in this province. When we came to debate removing taxes, there was long, long debate, not that ad hoc approach. It was hard to get rid of taxes that we'd put in place. Governments like taxes. They like to feed on taxes. It's easy to put in a percent here, an 8 percent surtax on certain brackets, but it's very hard to remove them once the animal starts to feed on them. That's a good reason never to bring in a sales tax in this province until all the other taxes are gone or lowered.

Mr. Speaker, I would continue this debate at a further time and bring up examples of how taxes have been misused by government, even this government and other governments in Canada, but at this time I would like to adjourn debate. We'll certainly have ample time during committee to bring out the historical nature of tax.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we now call it 5:30 p.m. and that when we reconvene at 8 p.m., we do so in Committee of the Whole.

THE SPEAKER: On the motion put forward by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, would all hon. members in favour please say aye?

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE SPEAKER: Opposed, please say no. The motion is carried. The House is adjourned until 8 o'clock tonight, when it reconvenes in committee.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:15 p.m.]

Title: Monday, April 3, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/04/03

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the committee to order, please.

Bill 2

First Nations Sacred Ceremonial Objects Repatriation Act

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. minister, do you wish to . . .

MS CALAHASEN: Keep going. We were just listening to them.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thanks, Madam Chairman. There were so many people standing in the House I thought everybody wanted to speak right away on this, but I see that's not happening.

Madam Chairman, I'd recently addressed a couple of issues about this bill. One was the whole issue of the ministerial responsibility and how that seemed to be a pretty powerful section. That's section 2(2), and I guess I had some concerns about that.

Also, on behalf of some of the other stakeholders who brought up some issues, what is the definition of First Nations? Who will define what First Nations sacred ceremonies or artifacts are? That's not clear. That should be outlined in the text of the legislation, not left to regulation. There should be some sort of common notion as to what that is.

Where is the appeal process for aboriginal groups that don't agree with the minister's decision? Section 2(2) says, "The Minister must agree to the repatriation of a sacred ceremonial object unless, in the Minister's opinion, repatriation would not be appropriate." There's no appeal process. There's no mechanism for the First Nations community to go elsewhere. It's the minister who has the ultimate say, and if that minister of the day isn't familiar with the traditions of a particular First Nations community, it could cause some problems. So I'd like to see an appeal process set out. I'd rather see that set out in the legislation, not in the regs, so I'm hoping that the minister will be able to address that tonight.

I guess it goes back to the whole notion that the bill is vague, and the powers of the LG or the minister and the regulations are a little bit too broad and need to be defined. I think it's important they are defined in the legislation so that the aboriginal community sees this.

In fact, I've spoken to a number of people and have spoken to a couple of chiefs in the aboriginal community who didn't know that this bill existed, so I'm a little concerned. [interjection] Absolutely, Madam Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs. There are First Nations communities – and I can tell you right now that I have sent this bill out to their legal counsel. Those communities are in the south, and I'm sure they'll be contacting the ministers. Those particular communities don't know that this bill exists.

I'm wondering if the ministers can put on the table for us a list of stakeholder consultations that they have undertaken to assure this member and all the other members in this House that this consultation was broader than the two or three First Nations that are outlined here, and that's the Blood tribe, Peigan nation, and Siksika.

I'm hopeful that the minister can help us out here. Please reassure us. Probably the best way to do that is to table a list of the stakeholders in the House. I've taken the word of the hon. ministers that they've done their homework, and it seems to me that after running into a couple of people – and that was just by chance – speaking to a couple of chiefs, they're not aware of this. So please inform us as to the consultation process.

Also the feedback of the museums. I'm interested in what their comments were in relation to this. I know that they're somewhat supportive, but they have some issues as well. How were those addressed? What sort of compromise or consensus did the ministers come to in dealing with the stakeholders?

I think what happened is that this bill was tabled and it was a feel-good bill for a very good reason: we were going to repatriate artifacts to the aboriginal community. However, I'm hoping that along with the feel-good this bill puts forth, the work was done and that it's not just smoke and mirrors for the aboriginal community and creating difficulties for both the aboriginal community and the museum community. So I hope we can hear something today that will help us feel a little more comfortable about where we're at with this bill.

Before I conclude my comments, I'd like to put forward a couple of amendments. Madam Chairman, I think you have the amendments. Okay. The first amendment that I'd like to put forward is: I move that Bill 2 be amended in section 2 by striking out subsection (2). So really what we're doing, Madam Chairman, is taking out the section that says "The Minister must agree to the repatriation of a sacred ceremonial object unless, in the Minister's opinion, repatriation would not be appropriate." We haven't had defined for us "appropriate." We don't know what this really means. "In the Minister's opinion" based on what? What is "appropriate"? This just can't be some pie-in-the-sky decision. This affects lots of communities and their particular sacred ceremonial objects.

Although, Madam Chairman, I have spoken to one of the hon. ministers in relation to this who assures me that the elders would be involved in this decision, I think it's very patronizing and very paternalistic to have section 2(2) included in this bill. If we're really talking about wanting the aboriginal community to be self-sustaining, if we want to talk about the aboriginal communities as entities that can look after themselves – and that's what they want; they want to be able to take control of their lives and not have so much government interference – this, quite frankly, is a very obscene clause. I believe that this particular section needs to come out of here to ensure that the right – you know, like I said, it's fine for the Premier to sit in the House in a traditional headdress, but it can't be just photo ops and feel-goods. There has to be some substance to this.

So I'm hoping that the House can support this amendment. We can see some other form of control if that's what the minister needs to have, but I think this is just far too paternalistic for the aboriginal community. I think that if they went out, Madam Chairman, that if the consultation was broad enough, then this particular section would've been struck.

I'm aware that this is A1, Madam Chairman. [interjections] Yes. Thank you. My colleagues are helping me out here. With that, Madam Chairman, I'll let my colleagues speak to this. I think it's very important.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Yes, the chair would thank you. We will deem this amendment A1.

With that I would recognize Edmonton-Calder, who wishes to introduce guests. I have to ask for unanimous consent of the committee to revert to Introduction of Guests. Could I have unanimous consent?

head: Introduction of Guests

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Madam Chairman. It's a pleasure today to introduce two guests we have in the public gallery. They've come along to see what transpires here. Interestingly enough, one has a very famous name. The young man is Trevor Strome. Everyone here will recognize the name. Whether it's connected, we're not sure. It is a nod. It's an affirmative. We have a guest from Winnipeg, Karen Serfas. I'd like to welcome them to the Assembly. If they'd please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

First Nations Sacred Ceremonial
Objects Repatriation Act

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Edmonton-Centre and then the minister.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I am rising to speak in favour of amendment A1, put forward by my colleague from Edmonton-Norwood. I know that she has been very involved with this bill and very concerned about the correctness of what's being done here, and I appreciate her taking the time to put forward this thoughtful amendment.

I do agree with the sentiment that is embodied in this amendment in that we are recommending that section 2(2) be struck. It is a patronizing, sort of Father Knows Best clause in the bill, and without knowing too much of what's being intended here, the legislation is not elucidating at all for me as an individual. We have no idea of what is appropriate or not appropriate. The minister is making a lot of decisions here, either giving or withholding permission on something without any idea of why that might be the case.

There is no avenue of appeal that's incorporated in it. Generally, if you're going to have a decision made at that level or a decision made by a quasi-judicial body, there is an avenue of appeal that's incorporated into the legislation, and that is not the case here. So if I could envision any concerns arising about the passage of this bill, that's where it's going to come, because people will not understand why something has either been granted or denied, and there's no avenue of appeal to follow up and say: well, please explain why this has happened.

I'm concerned generally about the amount of information that is inferred will be put forward through the regulations, and as usual I have difficulty with that. The government is very fond of putting forward shell bills in which they empower themselves to do whatever they wish in the future without that ever having to come before either this Legislature or the people to allow any scrutiny or understanding, which is also an important part of the process.

I think this is important. This is a good bill. It's much needed. If anything, I would say that it is long overdue. But there are a few suggestions on how to make it a better bill, and this is one of them. Especially when you're dealing between two sovereign nations, there needs to be a clear process outlined as to how decisions are reached and how discussions can take place about that and how there can be further discussions if there is a disagreement about the decision that's been reached. That just isn't in this bill, and I think it sets up what should be a good thing for a great deal of acrimony in the future, and I don't think that was intended when the bill was put forward; quite the opposite, I imagine. But they've certainly set themselves up for a fall with this.

So I would ask that the hon. members in the Assembly do support this amendment. I'm not sure if anyone else wishes to speak to it, but I will not drag this out, and I'll take my seat at this point.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The Minister of Community Development.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I'm a little bit dismayed at this particular amendment. I think it should be made clear that this legislation didn't just drop out of the sky. There was a lot of thought given to it. Just for the record, before it was introduced, every native band, every treaty band in the province was given a letter to the effect that it was coming and what was to be expected in it, and I would be glad to share that list with you at some point if you wish.

With respect to the amendment specifically, I think that there's a lot of needless fear mongering going on from across the way. We have to understand, quite frankly, that there has to be at some point a final authority with respect to when repatriation will proceed. Now, the clause is quite specific. It says that the minister "must," unless the minister deems it's inappropriate. Well, what could trigger such a situation? We are a provincial entity within a sovereign nation called Canada dealing with First Nations folks and having to do with objects that belong to them within this country. If for some reason it was deemed that there was going to be a movement of the said sacred ceremonial objects outside of Canada without the proper processes, if you will, taking place, then that would be a reason for it to be deemed inappropriate.

In addition, this bill is set up in such a way that upon the request of the First Nations groups, we will sit and deal with each First Nation in their own parameters, within their own guidelines, because they are different, as we well appreciate, and there are different levels of desire to have these objects returned. Certainly, obviously, there would be and would have to be an appeal, if you will, all along the way, even in the identification of what a sacred ceremonial object is. That's all virtually impossible to define. That has to be gone through with the people who lay claim to it, and we're quite prepared to follow that on each basis.

As a test run, if you will, the Blackfoot agreement identified some 250 objects. These were done in consultation with the people. As a matter of fact, the First Nations folks there are the ones who removed from the list ones that they felt were better to stay with the province. So I think that if you look at the intent of this bill, you understand that it is triggered by the request from groups to have their objects come back. We're dealing with First Nations people. We may be dealing with chiefs and councils. We will definitely be dealing with elders – there's no question of that – and there are various societies within these bands who use these. So it's not just a simple idea of coming in and cataloguing an item and giving it back to someone.

The other side of this equation is that these objects belong to the people to which they're being returned, and at the same time they must be looked after for longevity and continued use by these same people that own them. If we were to draft regulations here and now in the bill to cover every possible variation, if you will, then we'd have a bill that you couldn't get through.

It's quite clear. It's a request of the First Nations folks. The term "First Nations" can be variable. That's a very recent term. Before that, they were called tribes. Some groups like to be called tribes even today: the Blood tribe down south. Consequently, if there is some more direct action with them, they would be referred to as the Blood tribe, but for the purposes of this legislation it's defined in the regulation in consultation with what they want to be called.

I feel that the bill is very good. This amendment, quite frankly, although I do have a degree of understanding, is totally redundant and would take away from the spirit of the bill, and I would ask us to turn it down.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Madam Chairman. Just a couple of points. Firstly, you know, it looks like we haven't advanced very far. We might as well still have the company of adventurers trading into the Hudson's Bay. We could have the factor of the old fur-trading post of the North West Company and the Hudson's Bay Company exercising what they thought was best judgment in terms of the aboriginal peoples who lived in this country. I think that the reason for this amendment has been ably described by my two colleagues, and the minister has been absolutely, completely unresponsive to the concerns expressed in the amendment.

You know, what section 2(2) provides is that a minister – and it may not be this minister. It could be any minister. If you look at section 1(c), it's any minister designated under section 16 of the Government Organization Act. So this minister is having discussions over here in the left corner. In the meantime there's some other minister charged with responsibility under the act. What we have is a minister under section 2(2) who can act recklessly, capriciously, inconsistently, unilaterally. There are absolutely no bounds on the unfettered discretion provided in section 2(2). What strikes me is that one week the minister, whoever that minister may be under section 16 of the Government Organization Act, may exercise his or her discretion in one way and then the following week may exercise his or her discretion in exactly the opposite way on virtually identical fact situations. There's nothing fair, just, or certain about that.

Legislation, Madam Chairman, is designed to import a degree of certainty, to provide a degree of finality, subject to perhaps appropriate appeal, subordinate lawmaking through regulation, but to have a provision in here that's as wide open as this one, as I say, suggests that this government is no more committed to respecting the sovereignty of First Nations people than we might have expected from the governor of the Hudson's Bay Company a couple of hundred years ago.

The concern, I think, would be this. Regulations in this province are scary enough, and all members no doubt will soon be treated to a novel argument around the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. But while they're waiting for that novel argument on a favourite amendment that members know and love and always look forward to on bills, we can consider that this is a case where the government is not even comfortable with the hammerlock they have on the regulation process. They control it completely. They control it absolutely, completely, and they can change the regulation from week to week if the minister so chooses. Yet here that's not enough. On top of everything else, they want the minister to be able to make an assessment: he has to agree.

You know, it's a fundamental principle of administrative law that if there is discretion to be exercised, it is for us as legislators to identify the criteria that should be applied when the discretion is exercised. The fact that no criteria have been enumerated in Bill 2 suggests that this government doesn't really know where they're going. I mean, that's one reasonable inference, Madam Chairman, from section 2(2). The government has absolutely no idea of how they're going to manage these kinds of cases in the future. Once we do sort of the one-off thing that plays well to camera and gets great media attention, the reality is that once we get past that, we find that the government has virtually no plan at all in terms of dealing with this in the future. There's not even a stipulation that the exercise of the discretion has to be in the best interests of the province. It doesn't have to be in the best interests of the First Nations people.

Madam Chairman, I've seen a number of curious provisions and statutes in the eight years I've been in this Chamber. This is clearly one of the most curious. I don't ever remember a minister having the temerity to come into the House and suggest that he wants absolute, unfettered discretion. All ministers aspire to this. There's not a member in this front row that wouldn't love to have a provision like this in a bill. Once we give it to this minister, the Minister of Community Development, can we not expect that his colleagues are going to say: "Hey, I like this unfettered discretion thing too. Sign me up. Mark me down. Where's the government leg. review committee? I'd like a few provisions like that."

I understand it's tough work being a minister. It's darn tough work having to meet standards and meet tests, but just as I told my daughter going into the elementary school track meet, Madam Chairman, there's no point in trying to win if there isn't a significant challenge to overcome. There's no challenge here because what the minister, what the government purports to give with one hand, they are reeling back in virtually simultaneously with the other. I think the excuse we've heard proffered from the minister is more alarming than perhaps silence would be, because it tells us that this bill, for all the grandstanding, for all the fancy wrapping, is not about much of anything. That's disappointing, because I think the minister would agree in his heart of hearts that this is too important an issue to be treated as cavalierly as Bill 2 would treat it.

So, Madam Chairman, always hoping that maybe I'm more persuasive on this amendment than I routinely am on amendments, I'd suggest that this is an amendment we could embrace. It means that the minister is going to have to work a little harder in crafting regulations that give him the kind of flexibility he needs, and he'd be able to do that in regulations. I wouldn't be perfectly happy with that, but it would be less offensive than section 2(2) in the bill in its current form.

I'd make this challenge to the minister through you, Madam Chairman. Will the minister stand in his place and enumerate the criteria that he will apply and he will warrant on behalf of the government of the province of Alberta? In saying yes or no, what criteria will be applied by other ministers who have the power under section 16 of the Government Organization Act? What are the criteria? If he tells me with precision and with exactitude what those criteria are going to be, I will sit down happy in knowing that the amendment may not carry but that at least we've been able to put some flesh on this bare skeleton, and I think that's really what's required here.

I challenge the minister. He's had weeks to think about this, first before drafting the bill and then when it came in for first reading and received second reading. The issues we've raised have been raised before. Will that minister stand in his place tonight at 8:30 and for all members and Albertans and anybody who accesses Hansard on the Internet and the guests that are bravely here tonight particularize the criteria that will be employed in making that decision under section 2(2)?

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. minister.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. First of all, I want to address a few issues that have come to the forefront on this bill, because it's very important from the perspective of the First Nations and the elders.

First of all, this is the only bill in the country which allows repatriation of sacred ceremonial objects – the only bill, Madam

Chairman – and it is the only bill that's going to be able to allow the First Nations people and aboriginal people to be able to take back what was taken away from them. In many cases they might have lost them along the way.

One of the areas that I want to talk about is exactly the questions that have been coming out. In order for us to do this, we had to do proper protocol. What do we mean by proper protocol? First of all, we had to go to the elders, and I think many people do not understand what proper protocol in Indian country is, despite the fact that they may feel they do and pretend they do. I'm just really frustrated with the fact that I think we get people who don't have a clue what the heck they're talking about discussing something of this nature.

I really feel strongly, Madam Chairman, that when you're talking in consultation with First Nations, it doesn't mean that we go after the fact, after we build the bill. It means that we have a legislation that's enabling, to allow First Nations to be involved. I'm tired of the business of going to the First Nations after the fact and saying that we consulted with them. That's something that I really want to bring to a halt here, because these are the kinds of things that I'm hearing from the opposition, and I think it's time to shut up or put out.

Number two, we also have to look at: the elders committee has to be established. That is what the elders indicated, and that to me is the primary consultation that has to happen because they are the only ones who can determine what happens. I don't think it's up to us, whether you're white or whether I'm Metis or whether there's a First Nation in here, to determine that process. We let the First Nations determine that process in consultation with the minister and myself. I think that is the proper protocol and something that we need to be very aware of despite the fact that we may think this is something that we want to put little fences around.

I don't agree with that. I feel that's really losing out on the intent of what we're trying to do. Regulations cannot be built by anybody. They have to be built working with the First Nations people, and that is an important facet that the Minister of Community Development and I have talked about to the elders and some of the chiefs that have wanted to become involved.

I have a question for the Member for Edmonton-Norwood. I would like to know who the First Nations chiefs are that did not know about this bill? Every single one of the chiefs in this province received an invitation to come to this as well as to know what was happening. I think that's a very important protocol when we're talking about dealing with First Nations.

When we're talking about the fancy wrapping that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo just discussed and talking about cavalierly dealing with this bill, well, I think what is happening – if we're talking about criteria that have to be applied, the criteria have to come from the First Nations and those elders. It's not up to you. It's not up to anybody on the opposition side. It's not up to us to do that. We have to do it in consultation with those First Nations. That is something that has to happen with those First Nations. Whether we like it or not, it's about time we started talking about working in cooperation with them.

Madam Speaker, I also want to talk about some of the concerns. I'm really disturbed by the Member for Edmonton-Norwood. I always thought she was quite sensitive to aboriginal people. She calls this a feel-good bill. She says that it shouldn't be smoke and mirrors, and she indicated that it's fine for the Premier to sit in the House with his headdress. In my books and in aboriginal country that's blasphemy. When you talk about the headdress, when you talk about the designation that the Premier got from those First Nations as honorary chief, it was not cavalierly done. It was done with feeling. It was done with meaning, and they love him in giving that designation. I am very, very appalled that we would even begin to think that that's something that we should just toss off as if it meant nothing. To us it means lots. It means lots.

That's important when you're talking about involvement in the consultation processes with the people who are going to get these objects, the people whom they rightfully belong to. That's something the elders told me. When I went initially to talk to them about this, when I took my offerings and did the offerings that needed to be done, when I had to go and talk about what we needed to do, they were the ones who outlined what had to happen. It wasn't I. It wasn't the minister. It was they who outlined what kind of process we had to use. I for one want to see this bill passed, because it is an important bill for aboriginal people. Finally the whole issue of patronizing the aboriginal community is starting to disappear. We are working with them, not against them and not according to what we want. It's according to what they have identified to us.

These objects are very important. It doesn't mean that these objects can be just taken and given away any old time. They want to see a process identified that would involve them, and they want to see that process put forward in a format that's going to be good for them, for those people who will be accepting them. These are powerful objects in aboriginal country. These are objects that mean a lot to them, and these are objects that they are finally going to pull together at all their sacred ceremonies to start understanding and to be able to know what they have to do to get better. That's the healing process of aboriginal people, who want to see this bill passed. This is the reason I support it and the Premier supports it.

I was totally honoured that the Premier asked me to bring this bill forward, because we had to carry it out with the proper protocol, in the way that the elders, chiefs, and Metis people were able to carry it out. I for one would not want to say no to those aboriginal communities to what they have put forward in terms of what needed to be done.

So that amendment, Madam Chairman, I think is just something that somebody else wants and throws at the table without really proper dialogue with the elders who are part of this process as well as some of the Metis and the aboriginal community. So in that sense I believe that whatever happens, however the bill comes in, is written, that's exactly the way we have to pass it. I don't think I would want to go back to those elders and those chiefs that have supported this a hundred percent and say: oh, the Liberals wanted it changed; they wanted to see some things done because they don't believe that you as an aboriginal community can be involved in the decision-making along with government. Not arbitrarily made for them but rather with them.

So I cannot support the amendment as outlined, because it's a process that we've gone in, it's a process we've dialogued with, and it's a process that I want to carry through to make sure that whatever we do is going to be for the betterment of the First Nations and the Metis people in this province.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The Chairman did not see who was up first, so I'll let you decide.

Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you. Well, I'd like to thank the minister for her eloquent speech. However, my concern is this. Nobody's talking about not consulting with the aboriginal community. In fact, Madam Minister, what you're talking about isn't identified in this particular bill, if you really want to know about it. What you're identifying is not supported by this bill. What you're asking for is not in this bill, because section 2(2) doesn't allow that to happen. That's what we're talking about. That's why I'm saying that this section needs to go. It is as paternalistic, Madam Minister, as it can possibly be. This is allowing any minister on this front bench without any degree of knowledge or consideration, if they so choose, in their opinion, to just say: no, this is not a ceremonial object. That's what that's all about.

This isn't about whether the Liberals believe that something else should be changed. It's not about that at all. What it's about is erasing and getting rid of the paternalistic behaviour that is imparted on the aboriginal community time and time again. You talked about that. Then do something about it by supporting, Madam Minister, this particular amendment to remove that power. You talk about the elders. The elders have no say under this bill as it is. They have no say because it's not outlined in the bill. So one day somebody in this government sitting over in his bench could say: who cares about the elders? That's what this bill can do, because it's not outlined in it. So if you believe that, then put it in the bill. I think you've missed the point. This is not fear mongering. The reality is that the history of this government shows what happens when this kind of section is added into a bill. We've seen it time and time and time again.

You can go on and you can talk all you want, Madam Minister, about what this member might or might not feel, but I believe that this particular amendment is supporting exactly what the aboriginal community wants. They don't want any more paternalism. That's what they don't want.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the minister.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Madam Chairman. I've been inspired to rise again on this amendment. What's interesting about this is that I think everyone in this Assembly wants this bill to pass. I haven't heard anyone say that they don't want it to pass. As a matter of fact, I've read the Hansard. I think every single person that stood has said: good idea; we want this bill to pass. So let's be clear about that and not be sort of throwing about accusations that somebody's trying to sabotage a bill.

As a legislator in this Assembly it's important to me, wherever it's in my power to craft stronger legislation, legislation that will stand, legislation that will be true to its original source, legislation that can't be used further down the line for something that wasn't anticipated in the original drafting of it, then I think it's incumbent upon us to do whatever we can to strengthen that legislation. We can't assume that people years from now or even months from now will somehow be able to cast backwards through some sort of reverse telepathy and understand what was in our minds at the time. It has to be written in the legislation.

Now, this government has a habit of writing it into the regulations, which are even further afield and more difficult for people to access and find out what's going on. I think it's important that we do the best job we can, when we identify something that could be strengthened in a bill, to do it. You know, I'm excited that this bill was brought forward. I think it's very appropriate that these moves are made, and I said when I rose earlier that I wish it would have happened earlier.

I have to say that I don't appreciate a member opposite getting up and somehow attempting to insult me in my attempts to uphold this bill. That's not what it's about. It's about creating good and lasting legislation that will be clearly understood by everyone now and in the future.

I listened with great interest to the Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs, who spoke very passionately about the need for the criteria to be generated from the community, and I am certainly not going to disagree with her there. I do agree. I think it's important that those who are most affected by a process are deeply involved, intimately involved in establishing the process, or it's not going to work for them. Especially when you are dealing with different cultures, it's absolutely critical that those people are represented at the table and are able to establish their own criteria.

My concern on behalf of the member is that the criteria are not in this bill. What I heard her say was so important to her and important to the people that she represents is not in this bill, and I worry for the future if the member thinks it is in the bill and finds out later it isn't. She spoke so passionately about it. I don't understand why, having identified what's important to her, she wouldn't be making sure that it was specifically drawn out in the bill.

There's nothing in that bill that talks about that process. There is nothing in this bill that talks about those criteria. Nothing. There's not even any reference to it. All it says is that the minister will decide, unless he decides not to. That's what it says. It doesn't say in here that the elders will be consulted. Nowhere in here does it say that. It doesn't say that a process that's respectful of that will be incorporated or will be used or will be sought or followed in any way. It's not written in the bill.

Hon. member, you know, I'm concerned, in being able to follow what you've identified as being so important to you, that it's not in here. If you do want it in here, then I would advise that you support the amendment that is before us. Work with us. I mean, everybody's trying to get the same thing happening here. Why are we arguing about it?

Thanks very much, and I'll give way here. Thank you.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Madam Chairman, I just want to speak very briefly to the amendment and to urge members not to support it. I think that if one reads the whole bill, there is a better understanding of what is meant. You cannot take one section by itself. You have to look at section 2(1), then (2), then (3).

You have to also understand that there has to be for the objects that have been in the care of the province a process for repatriation. You have to ensure ownership. Many of these objects have been out of the hands of First Nations for many, many years. They have been, as the hon. minister indicated, sometimes sold, sometimes gifted. Sometimes it's very difficult to trace. So it is important to have a process in this bill that will deal with it.

The important thing that the associate minister emphasized is that this bill was developed with the Minister of Community Development, the Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations responsible for aboriginal affairs, in consultation with first the elders and the chiefs and the Metis people, as the regulations will be developed and the criteria will be developed with those same people. It is incredibly important to the First Nations that their elders be consulted, and that process is enabled in this bill.

I sat in this Assembly the day this bill was introduced and the Premier wore his headdress, which, as the associate minister said, is not gifted lightly. It is a very great honour to have that. When the associate minister, my colleague, stood in her ceremonial dress and presented this bill, I looked up at the gallery and I saw all of the representatives from the different nations sitting there and the elders, agreeing with this bill being presented – it was a part of their making – and how moved I felt when I heard them talk, and I'll paraphrase, of this being an opportunity to have the pages of their Bibles returned to them.

I believe this House has a responsibility to our First Nations people to pass this bill. They have been waiting a long time for the repatriation of some of these sacred objects. It is incredibly important also that the minister who has the authority and the responsibility for many of these objects today have a role in deciding whether repatriation is appropriate, for the reasons I outlined. It is difficult in some of these cases to trace the origins, to trace which tribe perhaps used these objects. Some of these are a hundred years old and more. So you have to have a process.

If you take this section out, you almost render this bill useless, and I think you have to think about that when you ask to have section 2 removed. Maybe it would've helped if you had an opportunity to be a part of the years of discussions, first all of the discussions with the Glenbow Institute – the minister had an opportunity to be involved in that discussion, as I did earlier and as the associate minister did – and to understand how we came to this wonderful, I think, historic moment in our Legislature, another very proud moment in Alberta's history, where we could present a bill that will in an orderly and fair fashion repatriate these very important sacred objects to the First Nations.

As the associate minister indicated, the consultation must occur with the elders. If the hon. members opposite would stand and outline to me which chiefs, which elders, which persons from the First Nations or the Metis communities have asked them to have this bill amended, then I would listen very carefully and very seriously, as I did anyway, as is my practice. I would have considered support, but I did not hear that from any member opposite that spoke on this bill. I do know that the minister whose department brought forward this bill and the associate minister who presented this bill in the Assembly did have those consultations, did have those requests from the First Nations, and I am going to have to support the First Nations' support for this bill, not some ideas of interest that we might have here. As I said, there's a lot of consultation. A lot of work has gone into this.

I would encourage any member opposite to give me that information. Tell me which First Nations have asked for these amendments, which elders wrote or phoned or spoke to them on the street and asked for these amendments. Then I might consider supporting it, but I frankly wouldn't risk supporting an amendment to a bill this important that I have absolutely no indication that the aboriginal community has asked for.

Thank you, Madam Chairman.

MR. DICKSON: I was just thinking, Madam Chairman, that this would be an appropriate time to consider a further amendment. You know, I just feel mischievous enough tonight that I'd like to be able to pull out of my pocket a different amendment than the old Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, but then I realized I've given myself away. We had the amendment distributed earlier, and in any event I'm not moving it. But if I were to move it, I think what I would want to identify . . . [interjection] If it has not been, I'd be hoping that the table could assist us in distributing the second amendment to this bill. I thought it had been distributed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: It is distributed.

MR. DICKSON: I'm not moving that amendment. I just wanted to make sure it had been distributed, and I understand it has now. I expect my colleague for Edmonton-Norwood is probably ready to move that amendment momentarily, but I just wanted to make the point that it's clear that the two government members that have spoken most recently to this really don't appreciate the reason, the rationale, the motivation for putting forward the last amendment. One would hope that they will at least understand the value in having the regulations vetted in some kind of a process that's not internal.

You know, we heard impassioned speeches from the government side about respecting what the First Nations people want, and it seems to me that that is precisely what my caucus colleagues are alive to. That is precisely why we say: why would we give all of that power to the minister? We should be empowering the First Nations people. They're the ones who stand to benefit from this. [interjections] Madam Chairman, I think that when I'm reincarnated, I want to be able to come back in some fashion that is more persuasive than my current version. Anyway, I'm straying a little bit.

The point I wanted to make was simply this. These regulations are important for all of the reasons that the government members who have spoken to it have mentioned. It's too important to be treated as something a single minister with some kind of a selective consultationalist – can't we do this in a way so that every First Nations person in this province can see what's going on, that everybody knows that this is not a closed consultation but rather should be an open one.

I think that if there were an amendment such as I anticipate may come and may become A2, what that would do would be to open up that process. It doesn't hurt anything. I say to the government members that have spoken against the last amendment: you know, there's a sense we're creating some kind of a false contest here. There's nobody on the opposition side that wants to disempower First Nations people. Rather, what we're all about tonight is respecting their ability to know what the rules are going to be and to have input in those rules. The most straightforward way of doing that is to open up the regulation-making process. In fact, the government has nothing to lose by opening up the regulation process, because what they clearly have now with section 2(2) unamended is that it means the minister can do whatever he or she darn well pleases in any event.

So, Madam Chairman, I hope that someone will come forward with an amendment to open up the regulation process, and I'm going to be holding my breath waiting for that announcement.

Thank you very much.

MS OLSEN: You know, Madam Chairman, my colleague took all the anticipation out of this. It's called the Dickson amendment, I want you to know, and I think it should be framed, and everybody should get a copy signed by my hon. colleague. But you know what? It's the best amendment – it's the best amendment – that comes to the floor of this Legislature and for all of the same reasons that we've discussed in the past.

I'd like to move amendment A2, Madam Chairman. The amendment states that Bill 2 be amended by adding the following after section 5:

- 5.1 (1) In this section, "Standing Committee" means the Standing Committee of the Legislative Assembly on Law and Regulations.
- (2) Where the Lieutenant Governor in Council proposes to make a regulation pursuant to section 5, the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall cause to be forwarded to the Standing Committee a copy of the proposed regulation.
- (3) On receipt by the Standing Committee of a copy of a proposed regulation pursuant to subsection (2), the Standing Committee shall examine the proposed regulation to ensure that
 - (a) it is consistent with the delegated authority provided in this Act,
 - (b) it is necessarily incidental to the purpose of this Act, and

- (c) it is reasonable in terms of efficiently achieving the objective of this Act.
- (4) When the proposed regulation has been examined as required under subsection (3), the Standing Committee shall advise the Lieutenant Governor in Council that the proposed regulation has been so examined and shall indicate any matter referred to in subsection 3(a), (b) or (c) to which, in the opinion of the Standing Committee, the attention of the Lieutenant Governor in Council should be drawn.

Now, Madam Chairman, at some point somebody will see the significance of this amendment. You know, there's a particular bill that's going to be before the House tomorrow that this amendment should apply to, but this also should apply to this. You see, we have this committee called the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. I am a member of it. I know that the chair of that committee would dearly love to be able to chair the committee and be involved.

In fact, a reporter was just telling me the other day that one of the things that the opposition members in the House of Commons like best is their committee work, and they do have these committees. They review this process, and that cuts the time that they spend in Parliament debating these kinds of bills, because there's some agreement in the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations on the laws and the regulations.

We have so many of the members in this House saying, "We should never be here," and "We're wasting our time," and "Our job is in our constituency." Well, that's the government side. We on this side, we the Liberals, believe that we have a job to do, but we could be far more efficient if this government would just let us, if this government would just pass this type of amendment and put into their particular legislation this amendment so that we could go forward, Madam Chairman, and bring this kind of legislation to some sort of agreement before it hits the floor of the Legislature, and that's really what those committees do.

In fact, I would say that the hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs gave a great speech in support of my last amendment. Her speech actually supported my amendment, so I sort of anticipate that she would probably want to support this one because she gave such a great speech in support of the last one.

I really feel, Madam Chairman, in all seriousness, that there is a better process and that we ought to be using that process. We ought to be sitting down as legislators like we do in other committees and talk about the legislation that comes forward. I would bet that had that happened with Bill 26, the sexual sterilization bill, the outcry on that would never have happened. It would never have surfaced because we would have dealt with it from the outset.

Bill 25, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act that was brought in a couple of years ago, required 20 pages of amendments, some astronomical number of amendments. We would have had that refined before it even got to the floor of the Legislature.

Bill 11 that's coming to the floor of the Legislature. You know, if we were able to go through a process in committee that dealt with these kinds of things, then we might be able to see the light of day and at least come to some agreement, even if in that bill it's to agree to disagree.

I would suggest, Madam Chairman, there are bills that come to the floor of this Legislature that we could agree on, and we do agree on, and this bill we agree on. It's part of the process that we're not agreeing on. We're not going to not support the bill, but I think there are some issues that could have been dealt with in a committee prior to bringing it to the floor of this Legislature. That wasn't done. There's no opportunity to do it. The hon. Member for Banff-

Cochrane never gets to chair the committee she's chair of, you know.

I think it should be incumbent upon this government, if they want to be more efficient and use this Legislature and this Legislative Assembly in a more efficient manner, that they should pass this amendment.

Thank you.

MS CALAHASEN: Madam Chairman, first of all, I know that the hon. members on the opposition side do want to see this bill passed. I know that, because they have indicated that they support the bill and are trying to make sure it gets passed. I know that they have some really good intentions, but I think that's all they've got, because if you look at what it is they're trying to do, it really makes me question what it is that they're trying to bring forward.

First of all, when you look at the amendments that have been brought forward and when you look at this latest amendment by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Norwood, you're talking about the standing committee making the regulations, things of that nature. When you think about what it is that she would like to see on this bill, it makes me question who's patronizing now. If you think there should be a group that determines who makes the regulations, well, that's a different story, isn't it, when you begin to look at what it's all about. Because all of a sudden somebody else will be making the decisions, not necessarily in the consultative way that we have identified with the First Nations and the elders.

The elders have often said: "We're not just one homogeneous group; we are diverse. There are so many of us out there that have different ways of being able to deal with different sacred objects, and we need to be able to bring that in." That's where we have to find a process that will just enable them to establish what needs to be done, because that's one of the problems they've always had. So they're saying: "Let us make that decision. Don't let him make the final decision, because ultimately it is still Community Development who has the legal right. However, it's going to be ours once we determine that process."

It's really interesting that all of a sudden we see the First Nations Sacred Ceremonial Objects Repatriation Act – something that was so sacred, something that's so good, something that was wonderful because we had the First Nations and the elders and everybody who felt very good about this – being used to try to do a number of things, in my view. One, I see it as trying to do a job that would create more work for people or change legislative processes. Well, aboriginal people are not stupid. They do not want anybody to be using them to be able to advance their own causes. They want to see what can be done, and they want to be involved.

I for one do not support the idea of sending it to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. I mean, how patronizing can one get? Even though the Member for Banff-Cochrane is probably one of the most wonderful people – she has many, many people in her constituency. She spoke on this bill when we were coming through it. She was very supportive. She did all those things, but, you know, Mr. Chairman, she was very good because she said: we can't make those decisions; let the First Nations make those decisions; we have to enable them to be able to do that and not have our own white biases in this whole process. So now we see that whole change, and I for one have supported her a hundred percent in what she was saying because I agree with her. The elders told me that. The First Nations chiefs we met with told us that. They are saying: let us make those decisions.

Mr. Chairman, it's like one of my colleagues said: you can't suck and blow at the same time. I don't know if the member across the street knows how to do that, but I think she has a skill that I still haven't found.

MR. WICKMAN: Just very, very briefly, Mr. Chairman. I respect the views of the member speaking on this particular bill. She, of course, with her cultural background is in the position to probably understand these types of issues more so than other members in this Legislative Assembly, sort of like issues that relate to persons with disabilities mean a great deal to me because certainly I can identify from a firsthand point of view. So I give the minister full credit from that point of view.

However, I don't understand, Mr. Chairman, why there would be hesitation with the amendment. When we look at the amendment where we talk in terms of the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, there is no arguing that the agenda of that particular committee is overcrowded or that that committee is so busy meeting that it doesn't have time to take this particular one on, because we know that's not the case.

That particular committee was struck for a reason, and in the 11 years I've been here, I don't ever recall that particular committee meeting. Why would there be hesitation when there's an opportunity to say, "Let's activate that particular committee and let's support this amendment so we do have a provision that ensures that before regulation change occurs, it would go to that committee."? Then possibly other ministers would follow suit with their particular pieces of legislation.

I don't see, Mr. Chairman, that the elders would hesitate at this type of amendment or this type of procedure in that it allows members from the opposition party or parties to also participate in the decision-making process. So rather than the elders being restricted in terms of their lobbying or their decision-making channel to the governing party, they have the opportunity to feed in a meaningful fashion to the opposition party as well.

With all respect to the minister and what the minister is saying, what that member is saying, I have no problems myself supporting the amendment and feeling it is a good amendment, and it's not being done for political purposes. It's being done because it enhances Bill 2, which is a very, very great bill. It's a great bill. It's a bill that should have been presented in this Assembly a long time ago. In fact, I guess if you look at history, it should have never been done in such a way that there is a need for this bill, because the items that are affected by this bill should have never left the hands of the native people to begin with.

So, Mr. Chairman, just to conclude, I certainly will support the amendment.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is interesting. I listened very carefully to what the member opposite was saying, and I would have to comment at this point that I wish she would extend the same courtesy to what's being said by other members in this Assembly, because very clearly what we are suggesting with this . . .

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, excuse me. There seems to be a meeting going on here on the right. You know, if there's a need to have a meeting, could you go and have it in the Confederation Room, please, because I can't understand a word the Member for Edmonton-Centre is saying.

Go ahead, hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you for that courtesy, Mr. Chairman.

No one has said that there is any attempt, understanding, indication to make regulations here. This is about asking that a standing committee that was established by this Assembly long before this government was in – it's an all-party committee – that that all-party committee, with all the good intentions and all the good resources it has, be used in being of assistance to this legislation. So I don't understand why the member would be saying that someone is trying to make regulations here. I think if she checks the Hansard and listens carefully, what's being suggested is that any regulations that are forthcoming be referred to that committee, and I think that's been quite clear.

There are three reasons why I think this is a good amendment and why it's helpful. It always clarifies any regulations. It brings into the open regulations that are being brought forward in support of a bill, and certainly we've already had a discussion in this Assembly as we tried to understand what are the criteria. The Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs has said: well, there are criteria to be followed that have been agreed upon; it's in the regulations. Well, good. Then this helps to bring those regulations into the open and allows us to make a better bill.

There's quite a bit in this bill that is decided by regulations: the definition of First Nations, the process and procedures to be followed in repatriating a sacred ceremonial object, regulations about who is to represent a First Nation for any purpose relating to the repatriation of a sacred ceremonial object, regulations about the consultations with a First Nation that must be completed for the purpose of section 2(3), and regulations respecting the process by which input may be obtained by the minister from persons, other than a First Nation, that apply for repatriation under section 2 before a decision is made by the minister. All of that we've all supported and decided in this Assembly are important regulations, and certainly bringing them before the all-party standing committee on regulations should be very helpful to that.

Secondly, I have spoken a number of times about this amendment in the context of other bills, of the need for this government to be more open and transparent. It's very difficult for members of the public or members of interested groups to get access to the regulations of any given piece of legislation. Having regulations referred to the Law and Regulations Committee, to have that debated, Hansard taken of it, the Hansard available, would really help people to be able to understand what the process is, exactly what's intended, exactly what's behind everything, and in fact what the regulations are, because it is darn difficult to get what the regulations are for any piece of legislation the government has.

My colleague from Edmonton-Norwood has already spoken about how in other jurisdictions having committees on law and regulations meet makes the work of the Assembly itself more efficient because a lot of the questions and misunderstandings and clarifications have already been worked out in the committee. Indeed, I agree with that. A lot of times I wouldn't have to be standing up here asking questions if in fact it had gone to an all-party committee.

So once again I'm confused about why the member would believe that referring regulations that are coming under this bill to a legislative all-party committee is somehow changing the legislative process. You know, we're all appointed to these committees. It's a well-known and accepted practice of this Legislature. I'm not understanding why the member would believe that this is somehow changing a legislative process, exactly the opposite actually, since everything is in place.

MS CALAHASEN: We don't need it.

MS BLAKEMAN: Ah, well, the member doesn't think we need any of these processes. We should just trust her or something. I'm not sure what she is meaning by those comments.

AN HON. MEMBER: You guys are just wasting time.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, yes, you see, now we get comments from the other side about wasting time. I find that most unfortunate, because I think that when we meet in here we are meeting to make legislation better and to bring forward . . .

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member. Hon. members, you're making it absolutely impossible for me to hear anything that is being said, so let's get back to the amendment, please.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes, it's interesting, because the interruptions and the sort of heckling from the members opposite always do seem to extend the debate longer. So I don't think the accusation could be thrown on members on this side for extending the debate but rather on the other.

MS BLAKEMAN: I had wanted to speak in favour of amendment A2, and for all the good intentions, for all the legislative protocol that is involved in the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, I hope there would be support for that and upholding this process that is available to this Legislative Assembly in Alberta.

With those words I will take my seat. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you. I just want to close the debate, my debate anyway, Mr. Chairman. You know, from a parliamentary process and from looking at this legislation in the big picture, the big scheme of things, which is sometimes very difficult for some of the members on the other side – it is really important that we look at the broad picture, and when I see something in a bill that gives the minister an override like that, which quite frankly I think is unnecessary, shouldn't exist, I view it as a paternalistic section of this bill. I would have that perspective on any other bill.

For the Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs to suggest that we're trying to use the community for our amendments – it's unfortunate she thinks that, because it's not what's happening at all. Also, it's unfortunate that the hon. member, whom I've worked with very closely, decided that she had to take a few low blows for whatever reason. You know, it's not very gracious, and it doesn't often get us very far in the Legislature. So I'm sorry that this particular debate went that far.

I know that the hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs will come along. You know, we do work together and I would hate that to stop. Nobody on this side of the House is saying that we shouldn't pass this bill. We want to make the best legislation possible. We want to ensure that everybody is looked out for.

Quite frankly, we're in a partisan province. We each hear from different sectors of the community. We each hear different things from different sectors of the community. That's the nature of politics in this province. It doesn't make one person right and the other person wrong. What it does mean is that that's why we're here, to debate the merits of it. Quite frankly, we're in support of this. We've brought our issues and concerns to the table. I just hope that what I feel could happen down the road doesn't happen, because I don't want to have to tell the minister I told you so.

So thank you, and with that I'll take my seat.

MS CALAHASEN: I feel I have speak on this, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I want to say thank you for allowing the bill to go through. I know there's interest from the opposition to see this bill go, and I know the interest is there to make sure it's the best it can be, and I appreciate that.

However, I get very excited when I think that my own people are being used, and I don't like that. No matter who it is, it's always a difficult one, because I take it personally. I know that's exactly what the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has indicated on the disability side. So when you think about that, it really affects me when things are belittled, and I don't like that, so it's a very important part.

I want to thank the members for the comments they've brought forward and the support. As you know, the legislation has the support of the elders and in many instances as many of the chiefs as possible, but I want to be able to identify that it is a government commitment. When you have the political will and you have a Premier who is also an honorary chief and got his name through a ceremony, you begin to wonder that if he says something is going to go, it does go. He really is a strong supporter of making sure that the people get what is rightfully theirs. We have to ensure that whatever happens, it is going to be something that will be good and that it's good for the people.

I thank the members for their comments, and we'll certainly see if we can move this along so it is the best bill that can possibly come out.

[The clauses of Bill 2 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 4 Surveys Amendment Act, 2000

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the Minister of Environment, I'd like to table a response for members opposite which was raised during second reading regarding Bill 4.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, did you want a copy of those responses?

MR. WHITE: Yes, sir. I would like to respond to those.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: All right. We'll get a copy for you immediately, but go ahead and start.

MR. WHITE: Well, Mr. Chairman, it's rather difficult to respond, because those items are precisely what I was looking for. On the 13th of March of this year the minister indicated that he'd be happy to review all the comments made by members of the Assembly and respond accordingly. Well, we have the response now, which is a time when you'd normally put some amendments to the bill. Those questions and answers coming forth immediately prior to speaking make them rather difficult to respond to. So I'll have to go through the questions again to make sure they're clearly on the record.

This bill does what's required so that a private contractor is able to respond to the public and able to file some maps. These particular maps are filed electronically a great deal of the time, and they're called cadastral maps. They basically outline subdivisions and the specific location of evidence in law and in survey law.

The questions we had were surrounding the firm Spatial Data Warehouse, how it was formed, where it was funded, the object of the exercise, how one searches the net proceeds, although it's a not-for-profit organization. It would be nice if we had all those answers before us. Quite frankly, it is a private firm, and it's a single source private firm, as I said, albeit not for profit, but certainly there will be excess of cost over income or income over cost. They certainly won't match. We'd like to know where those funds go and how they're carried forward and to what purpose they're put.

It's well known in the private sector that any firm can be non-profit, by definition or by practice. Quite frankly, this member and other members would like to know what the operating procedures of this particular firm are and how it's been laid out and what protection the public has not to be gouged at any point. We have not had those answers until they were just put in this member's hands. Unfortunately, this member will not have time to review those while standing and speaking.

It is a simple procedural matter to file these, Mr. Minister, when you clearly know that one has to respond to them. It really is not in the best parliamentary tradition of this House, so I would ask that the sponsoring member in fact consider an adjournment of this bill, albeit it's a little out of the ordinary and I'd not normally ask that that be done. With the process being a little tardy, it would be nice and it would be only reasonable to expect that a bill might be postponed even for an hour in order to enable this member to read the data and understand what is transpiring here.

So with your permission, sir, I'd like to move that debate be adjourned on Bill 4.

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to call the question on the bill and ask for the support of all the members of this Assembly.

[The clauses of Bill 4 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are we agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Land Titles Amendment Act, 2000

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

MR. JACQUES: Thank you. Madam Chairman, when we concluded second reading on March 13, I believe it was, the Member for Calgary-Buffalo had asked some questions with regard to the consulting process beyond that of the Law Society and the federal government. At this time I'd like to table three copies of a letter dated March 14, and I did provide the Member for Calgary-Buffalo with a copy earlier this evening.

I don't want to go through the entire letter, but it is from a Mr. Mirth, QC, who is chairman of the Legislative Review Committee of the joint Canadian Bar Association/Law Society of Alberta. Rather than trying to interpret what had been concluded by them during their deliberations going back to last fall, including consultations and discussions with the department, we thought it best that they put in their own words their findings. That is included in the letter. Needless to say, basically they have been involved in the development of Bill 5 and at this point in time have no objections to it.

So with that, Madam Chairman, I would call for the question.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I'm pleased to stand to speak to Bill 5, the Land Titles Amendment Act, 2000. Even if it didn't take much time for the presenter to put forward, I think it needs some points put on the table. I've seen the letter the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti talked about for about the last 10 minutes. I see that there are no concerns, as per what they're saying there, and I see that they haven't had any complaints through the bar society, but we have some questions from people we have talked to.

Virtually what's happening on this particular bill, Madam Chairman, is that this bill will establish the use of only one seal for land titles, make reference to the general registry, and deal with other housekeeping manners. Just to put on record what I talked to some lawyers about, where is the one office going to be, in what city, if it is going to be Edmonton or if it's going to be Calgary? I want to reflect on the fact that in the early part of this province there was a war between Edmonton on this side of the river and Strathcona on the other side about where there was going to be a registry office. So what's going to be actually happening here has never come out very clearly.

I've been told that this is something the Law Society has been asking for for a very long time, and it's general revenue. The question we'd like to have some clarity on is section 122(9). Is this by a civil action, when a person being filed against can't borrow money or is registered from buying property because of the lien? Is there any compensation for wrong against someone?

Section 33 of the Land Titles Act is repealed, and a substitute is inserted. This section currently allows the deputy or acting deputy of the minister in charge of the National Parks Act of Canada to clarify and copy certificate originals for registry. The new section would extend this power to the chief executive officer under the Parks Canada Agency Act of Canada. Issue might be taken with the continued extension of decision-making power and further development of the bureaucracy. This person is equivalent to administration in this province. Where is the pressure coming from to extend this position? Is it from the federal level? Why is this position introduced? Is it that the deputy of administration can't handle it himself? Who has the decision-making? Is this just further diluting the present position?

The largest portion of the bill deals with the repeal of sections 17.1 and 17.2 of the Land Titles Act. These will be replaced by new sections which include most of the original text in sections 17.1 and 17.2. The first deviation is the removal of the provision allowing for the creation of a "general register" in which is kept "a record of all copies of writs of enforcement and other registrable instruments" and "set out in alphabetical order the names of the persons whose land is affected by writs of enforcement and other instruments." There is no replacement made for the general register. Question to the presenter. Maybe we can get some of these answers over the next period of time.

The other key deviation between sections 17.1 and 17.2 is the new section condensing the two terms "writs of enforcement" and "other registrable instruments" in the single term "instrument." This seems to be a simple housekeeping change as the definitions of the original terms are made in the opening of the proposed new section. What may be questioned, however, is why such an extensive change needs to be made when the result of these is essentially the same as the original.

Now, under instruments. Why are these terms to be changed to the word "instrument"? This seems to be implying that instead of the north and south registers there would only be one.

Under the general register, the main amendment of this particular one: in the wake of the removal of the general register, is there any sinister motive in the movement to Edmonton or Calgary? I understand there might be, and this is one item that I would like to come out maybe over the next questions.

Now, we have contacted the Canadian Bar Association in Edmonton and the Canadian Bar Association in Calgary. The Canadian Bar Association has not had any major concerns with this. We also contacted a law professor at the University of Alberta specializing in real estate. He has brought out a few concerns, but there haven't been major items.

Some of the questions I'd like to have on record. Another issue is the extension under section 33 of the powers of the CEO under the Parks Canada Agency Act to certify copies of the duplicates of originals. Is there a good reason for this? If so, what is it?

The bill repeals sections 17.1 and 17.2 and replaces them with almost identical wording but omits the term "general register." What does that do to the registry system? The second change is the combining of the terms "writ of enforcement" and "other registrable instruments" into the single term "instrument." I can't see anything wrong with this. But why is it necessary?

Another question. There are some specific areas of the new bill that I'm trying to find out what the effect is to be. First of all, is it consolidation of the land registries districts into one? The main concern I see is the inability of Albertans in the area far from the location of the new office to access its services. For example, the new offices in Edmonton: what does that mean to residents in southern Alberta?

So, Madam Chairman, I do believe I've brought a few things out here, and maybe over the next few weeks while this bill is going through the steps, we can get some answers from the presenter. In the meantime, hopefully we'll have some more questions back from stakeholders.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. It is a pleasure this evening to rise and speak briefly to Bill 5, the Land Titles Amendment Act, 2000. I would like to congratulate the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti for sponsoring this bill and bringing it forward.

There are a couple of highlights here that I think we have to look at. Bill 5 effectively creates a single land titles office with one registrar as opposed to a registrar for each land titles office in the province. Hopefully this will lead to more efficiency in the whole process here in the province. As well, what this bill will do is create one seal for land titles here in the province.

Now, as I understand it, there are a number of reasons why this has taken place. Of course, one of those is that it will place certain land title practices in legislation and ensure that the Land Titles Act is in sync with certain federal legislation. Of course, this is of primary importance here in the province where we do have a number of federal national parks.

In repealing section 122 of the Land Titles Act, it removes the section splitting Alberta into north and south land registration districts, effectively creating one. I think this is a very good step. I think – and time will bear this out – that in the public good, with technology as we have it today, it certainly will give us better centralized control in the storage, retrieval, and transmission of this type of information throughout the province. I would just hope that in doing this, access to this information will not be hindered by people in other parts of the province. Again, this has to deal with where that single office is going to be located.

Now then, what I hope this will do as well is that through technology we will be able to give a timely service to all those people involved in any transactions where we do require the services of land titles. Can one register work effectively? I think that with the passing of this bill we will in fact find out if we do have to alter this bill in order to have more than one office here in the province.

Another minor amendment, as I mentioned earlier, was that now we will be able to use one seal. With only one district, one land titles office, and one registrar, there certainly isn't any need for more than one seal. Of course, what this legislation will do is accommodate the recent amendments to the Parks Canada Agency Act by the federal government.

With those few comments, Madam Chairman, I would like to close my section here. In doing so, I just want to mention that I am happy to see that there were a number of stakeholders consulted in the development of this bill. They were the Canadian Bar Association, the Edmonton office, the Calgary office, and also Registrations Are Us Limited.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Securities Amendment Act, 2000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Madam Chairman, thank you. I do have a couple of typographical corrections to be made through two small amendments, so if we could get those handed out, that would be great. In the meantime, I'll just speak to a few of the concerns that were brought up during second reading.

The Member for Edmonton-Glenora had a couple of concerns in regards to attracting capital, and Alberta still has a little bit of that problem. Some of the pieces are being filled in by the Canadian Venture Exchange. There are still some gaps in the early venture capital, and I think they'll be addressing those issues.

There were also some concerns by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora about two businessmen who felt they were being overregulated and because of lots of red tape weren't able to get money from the marketplace. We weren't able to get specifics on that complaint, so it was very hard for us to do any checking on that. We don't really know if there was a true complaint there or not, Madam Chairman.

Bill 10 also leaves a number of issues for discussion in committee, and that's why we're here today, particularly the breadth of scope of section 196, the need for disclosure, openness, and transparency in relation to the regulations.

The Member for Calgary-Buffalo noted that subordinate legislation under the Securities Act can be made either as a regulation or as a rule under the heads of power enumerated in section 196 of the act. The commission was given rule-making powers in June of '95, and most of the then existing regulations were deemed to be rules by the commission. The act provides that rules made by the commission have the same force and effect as the rules through the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

The only real change we've had since that power has come into effect is that we had an amendment to the fee schedule, Madam Chairman, which was a reduction in fees in 1997 made at the request of the commission following consultation with industry participants.

I think those were some of the main concerns that were brought up during second reading, and what I will do now is go to the amendments. I'm very close to getting all of those handed out. I think they're almost there. You've got them? Great.

Okay. The two amendments were just for typographical errors in printing. The first amendment was going from "a exchange" to making it "an exchange," and the second amendment was to add "or" in section 13. I would like to see if we can get some approval on that, Madam Chairman.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, Madam Chairman. In regards to the amendments put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, these are certainly housekeeping, to say the least. I am glad to stand briefly and support them. Meanwhile, I am anxious. I have some questions concerning this bill, but in regards to the amendments here, they're simply a correction of grammar, and I support them.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Madam Chairman. It's the first opportunity I've had to speak on this bill. I think it will be recognized perhaps 10 years in the future as one of the first steps in a significant change in the economy of not only Calgary but also the entire province, because I, too, share the concerns of my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora regarding the raising of venture capital in this province.

Specifically on the bill, I have some questions for the House and specifically hopefully for the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, and that is on section 35, the regulations and rule-making. Section 196 sets out the regulation-making powers of the cabinet, from which the commission derives its rule-making authority. Now, the amendment to section 196 is intended, as I understand it – and if the hon. member could clarify this – to clarify that the cabinet and the commission have the authority to implement a permanent registration system by way of regulation.

Now, also under the same section, in section 196(j), amendments, the cabinet and the commission will have the authority to make regulations or rules in respect of securities in which there is the category of registrant, and I understand that this is the category of registrant that may or may not trade. Does this include mutual-fund dealers or, for instance, scholarship plan dealers?

Section 196(k) now is being amended here in Bill 10 to clarify that the cabinet and the commission have the authority to deem a particular form or type of disclosure document to be or not to be an offering memorandum for purposes of offerings of exempt securities.

Now, on the next section of 196 that is being added, the hon. member can correct me. Is this to clarify that the cabinet and the commission have the authority to deem any type of trade in securities to be a particular form or type of disclosure document, to be a distribution? As I understand it, there is no current provision prescribing the circumstances in which an exemption from the prospectus requirements of the act, the regulations, or the commission are deemed to be a distribution.

As I understand it also, Madam Chairman, under the proposed resale national instrument, the resale of securities by a purchaser in an open jurisdiction without resale restrictions backed into a closed jurisdiction will be deemed a distribution. This will ensure that an issuer does not sell into an open jurisdiction under a private placement in order to avoid applicable resale when those securities are sold back into the issuer's home jurisdiction or another closed jurisdiction.

Now, if the hon. member can also in due time explain to the House the amendment to section 196(n). Is it correct that it is going to clarify that the cabinet and the commission have the authority to establish a system to integrate prospectuses and continue its disclosure?

With those remarks and those questions, Madam Chairman, at this time I would like to adjourn debate on Bill 10 in committee.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I move that the committee do now rise and report.

[Motion to report progress on Bill 10 carried]

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

MR. SHARIFF: The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following:

Bill 2, Bill 4, and Bill 5. The committee reports progress on the following: Bill 10. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly. I would also like to table copies of the documents tabled during the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur with this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to thank the opposition for their co-operation this evening. I think we had a very productive evening.

[At 9:59 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Title: Tuesday, April 4, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/04/04

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, we thank You for Your abundant blessings for our province and ourselves. We ask You to ensure to us Your guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, we have a long list of hon. members who have advised me today that they would like to participate in this point in the Routine, as we have long lists for other aspects of the Routine. So let us be patient as we move forward.

The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to present a petition signed by 7,500 people. The petition reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to . . . introduce legislation requiring a minimum of two people on shifts from dark to daylight. Employers must be responsible for their employees' safety! We are asking the Legislature of Alberta to pass a "Tara McDonald Law" to protect employees' lives.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition here from a number of young people in St. Albert and area who are in support of Bill 11.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition today signed by 100 Albertans from Leduc to High Prairie and a great many in north-central Edmonton. They do petition and "urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private healthcare and undermining public healthcare," sir.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These petitions just keep rolling in regardless of the damage control the Premier tries to do. I have more than a hundred here signed by people throughout Edmonton, St. Albert, Leduc, and Spruce Grove who are urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table a petition signed by 247 Albertans from Edson, Robb, Carrot Creek, Grande Cache, Wildwood, Hinton, St. Paul, and Smoky Lake. This petition is urging "the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition signed by 369 people from the Edmonton, Stony Plain, Carvel, Sangudo, Spruce Grove, Seba Beach, Evansburg, Wabamun, and Sherwood Park areas, and they are petitioning "the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions to present this afternoon. The first is a petition signed from citizens in Calgary and Edson urging the Government to increase funding of children in public and separate schools to a level that covers increased costs due to contract settlements, curriculum changes, technology, and aging schools.

The second is a petition signed by 352 citizens from Edmonton, Leduc, Ardrossan, and Sherwood Park urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining [the] public health care [system]."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I have two petitions to present today. The first is signed by 185 people from Edmonton, Grande Prairie, St. Paul, Calgary, and Devon. This is on the issue of mature and aging women and asks that the government take an enlightened, preventative approach and add medications and therapies to the Alberta drug list.

The second petition is signed by 125 people from a variety of locations in northern and central Alberta. They are asking that the government "stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table petitions signed by citizens from Edmonton, Sherwood Park, St. Albert, Beaumont, Legal, Carvel, Fort Saskatchewan, and Alberta Beach asking "the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining [our] public health care [system]." At the end of today's tablings we will have tabled 5,033 names, bringing the total to date to 38,426 concerned Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to also table a petition. It is signed by 495 Albertans who reside in Edmonton, Gibbons, Redwater, Ardrossan, Sherwood Park, and St. Albert. They are asking the Legislative Assembly "to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining [our] public health care [system]."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling petitions with 155 names of Albertans from Edson, Robb, Carrot Creek, Wildwood, Gainford, Boyle, Smoky Lake, Lamont, and Bonnyville urging "the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining [the] public health care [system]."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to be able to present a petition to the Assembly. This is signed by 291 Calgaryans, including those living in a number of the southwest Calgary constituencies like Calgary-Glenmore. They are petitioning this Assembly to "urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present to the Assembly a petition signed by 215 Albertans. They reside in Edmonton, Sherwood Park, Morinville, Vegreville, and Fort Saskatchewan, and the petition to which they've added their names reads as follows:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition supporting public health care in Alberta, urging "the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care" in the province. This is signed by 332 Albertans from Red Deer, Sylvan Lake, Ponoka, Stettler, Vermilion, Smoky Lake, St. Paul, New Dayton, Warspite, Cold Lake, Vilna, and especially Edson.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions to present today. The first one is signed by 265 Albertans from Peace River, St. Isidore, Fairview, Grimshaw, Grande Prairie, McLennan, La Crete, Nampa, and Falher. Their petition states:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

The second petition that I have today, Mr. Speaker, states:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to stop promoting private healthcare and undermining public healthcare.

It is signed by 154 citizens of this province from Edmonton, Millet, Stony Plain, Gibbons, and Sherwood Park.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present to the Assembly. It's signed by 439 Albertans from Red Deer, Lacombe, Edmonton, Sherwood Park, Cold Lake, Rimbey, Bluffton, Ponoka, Smoky Lake, Leduc, Spruce Grove, Eckville, Rimbey, Wetaskiwin, Stettler, Mulhurst, St. Albert, Grande Prairie, Fort Saskatchewan, Lethbridge, Raymond, and Cardston. These citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly "to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table a petition signed by 1,055 Albertans from Grande Prairie, Beaverlodge, Wembley, Sexsmith, Calgary, Rimbey, Marwayne, Morinville, Canmore, Banff, Blackfalds, Medicine Hat, Fort Saskatchewan,

Leduc, Stettler, Valleyview, Red Deer, Bashaw, Bluffton, Winfield, Edmonton, Darwell, Lethbridge, Fox Creek, Carvel, Barrhead, and Fallis. This brings the total number signing this petition to 9,464. The petitioners request the Assembly "to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that tomorrow I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 7, 8, and 10.

I'm also giving oral notice today that tomorrow I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 13, 14, 15, 16, and 24.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table five copies of a letter I sent to the Prime Minister confirming the discussions that took place in Calgary on March 23. This letter alludes to the Prime Minister and myself agreeing that there would be a review of all legislation across the country by various provincial jurisdictions as it pertains to contracting out medical services.

It alludes to an agreement between the Prime Minister and myself that we would uphold the five principles of the Canada Health Act, that these principles are paramount, and we agreed to work together to defend those principles. We agreed that "Canada should not allow a two-tier, for-profit health system to develop." The letter states that we agreed that "the status quo in health care is not working and we agreed to work together in developing a new system that is economically sustainable" but still operates within the parameters of the Canada Health Act. It points out to the Prime Minister that the Prime Minister "raised no objection to the passage of Bill Eleven."

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table responses to written questions 218, 219, 220, 226, and 227.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to file with the Assembly today a news release entitled No NAFTA Implications for Bill 11. Accompanying this is a legal review by Shawna Vogel, an international business lawyer with an Edmonton firm, Cruickshank Karvellas.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to table five copies of a document entitled Restoring Federal Funding Support for Alberta's Health System.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and table a statement in recognition of Building Safety Week, being held April 2 through to the 8th. In recognition of this week I invite all members of this Assembly to join me in recognizing the importance of building safety, construction, and building codes and the dedicated building officials who administer these codes.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table five copies of a letter I signed today in response to the letter dated March 21, 2000, from the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I would like to quote two sentences in my letter. If she would like a thorough debate on Bill 11 with full record and in an environment representative and open to all Albertans, there is no better place than the Legislature. If this challenge is just a cheap political ploy to attract attention, please don't waste my time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table several letters from concerned Albertans from Fort McMurray, Calgary, and Edmonton who are opposed to Bill 11.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings this afternoon. Let's start off with a letter from Michael Dobbin, a very prominent Calgarian, expressing his opposition to Bill 11.

Next, a commentary which appeared in the April/May 2000 issue of LawNow by the editor, an analysis of Bill 11 and where it takes us.

The next one is a program from the groundbreaking for the Calgary Centre of Hope, a wonderful new facility by the Salvation Army in that city.

Next, a report on homelessness. Now, this is a summary of federal government initiatives dealing with homelessness dated January 21, 2000.

The next one is a summary of national activities prepared by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities providing a perspective on housing with a bigger focus on how we provide safe, affordable housing to every citizen.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the most voluminous document I've got is a report from the government of Canada and the Hon. Claudette Bradshaw, Minister of Labour and minister responsible for homelessness, that inventories, catalogues some of the programs that deal with homelessness across the country, including this province.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Yes, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings this afternoon as well. The first tabling that I have is a letter from Mrs. Anderson from Edmonton, who has asked that a copy of this be tabled in the Assembly. She has herself faxed a copy of her correspondence to every Member of the Legislative Assembly, and it is imploring the government to scrap Bill 11.

The second tabling I have is from Monica Hughes, a constituent of Edmonton-Glenora, who writes the Premier and suggests that Bill 11 should not be passed and that there is no justification for supporting this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I also have five copies of the cover page of several copies of the government's householder that are being sent back to the Premier, including statements saying: "I am absolutely opposed to this Bill"; the Premier and "his band of 'truth squad' bandits"; just say no; and say no to Bill 11.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table five copies of an Alberta Liberal caucus news release dated April 4, 2000. I'm taking the unusual stand of tabling a news release in the Assembly because of the importance of the issue. The news release says that despite the Acting Provincial Treasurer, the Alberta Liberals will oppose the imposition of a sales tax in the province of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a number of tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter from Dr. David Bond, who is president of the Alberta Medical Association, wherein he outlines his understanding of the meeting that was held between himself and the Premier. He indicates that he anticipates the proposed amendments to Bill 11 by mid-April, whereby they will be assessed each on its own merit and that this may not necessarily translate into support from the AMA for the legislation.

The second is a letter from Darlene Konduc from Sherwood Park, wherein she indicates that there is a place for free enterprise and business for profit in our society, but as a tax payer, a voter, and a businessperson she does not want any of her tax dollars to support health care for profit.

The third is a paper that has been put forward by Dr. Laura Shanner. She is with the J. Dossetor Health Ethics Centre and department of public health sciences at the University of Alberta, and she indicates that Bill 11 should be removed entirely and a new approach to actual reform of health care undertaken. Increasing surgical facilities will do extremely little to reduce costs and improve health care for Albertans. The paper is entitled Ethical Concerns about Bill 11.

The other tabling that I have is from Dr. Kathrine Peters, who is associate professor of the Faculty of Nursing at the University of Alberta. She indicates that the Premier appears "to have no regard to the constituents" that he serves, and it appears that he has "been starving the public health care system to prepare the way for a private system."

My last tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a copy of a speech entitled The Immorality of Bill 11 given by Reverend Dr. Bruce Miller that indicates:

Besides being dishonest and deceptive, with the name "Health Care Protection Act," Bill 11 undermines the moral foundation of our health care system, and puts in jeopardy the very values which we treasure, such as compassion, universality and accessibility.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a response from the Alberta Partnership for Health in regards to Bill 11.

MS LEIBOVICI: Not endorsing it.

MR. WICKMAN: Not endorsing it by any means. No, no, no, no, no.

MS LEIBOVICI: Sixty-eight associations.

MR. WICKMAN: Oh, yes, all 68.

My second one, Mr. Speaker, is from a constituent, Mr. Don Dickson from Edmonton-Rutherford, who wishes it known that he is strongly opposed to Bill 11.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today, the first of which is from a very prominent Edmontonian, a gentleman and long-term educator in the province of Alberta, a fantastic soccer coach and football coach. He is now a councillor in the city of Edmonton. His name is Bryan Anderson. He has written a letter to the Hon. Halvar Jonson decrying the discrepancies between the cataract surgery at the Royal Alex hospital and that which is in Lamont at the Archer memorial hospital. He decries the difference between the service there and the service here and that the foldable single lenses are provided free of charge there, where they're $250 here, sir.

The second tabling is from a resident of Banff, Alberta, Yvonne May. She's writing the Premier with regards to the Genesis Land Development Corp., the heli-skiing operation, and four-seasons resort plan for the Spray Valley. She asks that the Premier immediately halt this development.

The third is also of the same subject matter, sir, and will not be repeated, save and except the person that wrote this letter to the Premier is Bruce Bembridge from Exshaw, Alberta.

The fourth is the same sort of letter to the Hon. Ralph Klein, again that the Genesis Land Development Corp. stop the development immediately and is from Pascal Beaurais from Canmore, Alberta, sir.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two tablings. The first tabling is a letter to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board signed by 22 people who live just northeast of Edmonton who are opposed to the drilling activity in the vicinity in which they live for a variety of reasons which are outlined in the letter.

The second set of tablings I have is three letters, one from Lisa Hauser of Calgary, Laura Downing of Calgary, and Lisa Downing of Canmore. These three people have written in opposition to the Genesis Land Development proposed development of the Kananaskis Valley, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies signed by six different Albertans. They are Annie Larrivee, Philippe Gauthier, Phil Villeneuve, Terry Burstrom, Darrell Skinner, and Carrie Skinner. These letters are all opposed to the Genesis Land Development Corp. proposal to develop a heli-skiing operation and four-seasons resort in the Spray Valley.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've just brought a small sample of some of the correspondence that have come to my office from Cathryn Furtak, Geoff Collinge, Carl Scullion, R.L. Sylvester, Karl Kolm, and Patricia Henderson, all expressing grave concerns about Bill 11.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of a letter from Jennifer Chipman, a very thoughtful letter urging all MLAs to support the integration of the midwifery services evaluation project and, further, to support the funding of midwifery services under Alberta health care.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to table the appropriate copies of two separate letters from constituents of Edmonton-Manning, Abe Fehr and Marie Fehr, and they're CC'd to just about everybody. The gist of the letter starting off is:

The Alberta Government, under Premier Ralph Klein is once again proving that they are totally irresponsible to the people of Alberta by attempting to privatize our hospitals.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to table a report. In fact, it's a study prepared by Dr. Donna Wilson, professor of nursing at the University of Alberta. This very valid and reliable study talks about the shift away from hospital use by terminally ill and dying patients.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling this afternoon on behalf of a constituent, Rita Talen. She is on the board of directors of the Rehoboth Christian ministries, a nonprofit organization serving Albertans who are mentally challenged.

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how to handle this, but obviously there are some games being played here relative to tablings. I have just in the past few days received maybe 300, 400 letters in support of Bill 11. I could read every one today and table them, but we'd be here until 6 or 7 o'clock this evening. I'm just serving warning. I'm just going to table a couple today.

The first one is addressed to the Leader of the Official Opposition. It says, "Dear Madam: I am totally disappointed listening to you and your socialist followers trying to scare me and my family into believing Bill 11 is all wrong." Another letter here says:

Congratulations! Bill 11 is a masterpiece. In my view the bill:

1. is a victory for democracy; we citizens have been consulted prior to the legislation. That is a first.

Mr. Speaker, I'll just file one more.

Last week I spent an afternoon with a cup of tea and Bill 11. I had heard so much about Alberta's Health Care Protection Act in the media that I wanted to read the document to gain a better understanding of the contents and what it means to Albertans.

I expected to read a much more radical bill than the one put forward. This legislation is a common-sense approach to help solve our health care problems. You and your government should be congratulated, not condemned, for your initiative in this bill.

And it goes on and on and on.

Mr. Speaker, I'm serving notice today that if this nonsense by the opposition on the other side continues, I will make sure that we pull out every single letter in support. It will take us until midnight each and every day to table all of the letters that we have, if they want to continue.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Forestry.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies in response to a letter that was tabled by the Member for Edmonton-Norwood. This letter, of course, is in response to debate. I've asked in writing for the member to identify what some of the policies are of their government in rural Alberta, and I'll just read one little part of it. The last policy we heard was in '91, of course, when the Liberal leader at the time said: what it means is that instead of building hospitals in every rinky-dink town in Alberta, we start saying no. That is why I'd like to know what their policies are.

It also goes on to say . . . [interjections] This is very short. For the amount of time you take, this is short. The leader also goes on to say: what it means is that instead of building curling rinks in every town, we say no. He also indicated that they would say no to recreation centres, shelters, and roads: all important issues to rural Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to see their response in writing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a constituent of mine in Edmonton-Whitemud, Mrs. Armelle Bridgeman. She's seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that she please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour for me today to introduce to you and to members of this Assembly some 19 grade 12 students from St. Matthew high school in Rocky Mountain House. They're accompanied by their teacher, Darren Brick, and parent Mrs. Darlene Levitt. I believe they're seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they now rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

MR. THURBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Legislature 16 distinguished visitors, and 13 of those are very progressive, dedicated students from Mimiw Sakahikan at Pigeon Lake. It's really a pleasure to have them here today. They're accompanied by Richard Espinoza, Michael Toohey, and Elizabeth Rowan. I would ask that they now rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you 29 bright, enthusiastic grade 6 students from Clive school in Clive, Alberta, accompanied today by their teacher, Mr. Rob MacKinnon, who is one of my favourite teachers; parent-helpers Mrs. Gloria Friesen, Mrs. Wanda Grose, Mr. Verle Lang, Mrs. Bev Northcott, Mr. Neil Ronald, Mrs. Margaret Ronald, Mr. Allan Rowley, Mrs. Wanda Wagner, Mrs. Margaret Westergreen, Mr. Mark Westling; and bus driver Mr. Jerome Wildeman.

They're seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 11 students that are here in the public gallery. They are with NorQuest College. NorQuest College is very good about having tours through the Legislative Assembly. This group today is accompanied by their group leader, Mr. Cap Tiege. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a great group of students to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly. I've been in their grade 10 classroom, and they had great questions to ask. There are 18 of them here. They are here with their teacher, Miss Dunn. They're from Sturgeon composite, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this point this afternoon I'm delighted to be able to introduce to you and through you to all of our colleagues in the Legislative Assembly five individuals who have been very effective and very strong advocates for a strong public health care system. I spot them in the public gallery opposite: Dr. Harold Swanson, Verna Milligan, Dr. Malcolm McPhee, Jane Walker, and Wilma Kassian. I'd invite each of our guests to stand and receive the customary warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with a great deal of pride and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a distinguished Canadian who is accompanied by a very, very special Albertan and Edmontonian. The distinguished Canadian is none other than Shirley Douglas, a woman of remarkable talent, dedication, and principle. She is currently the spokesperson for the Canadian Health Coalition and a noted actress. For several years now Ms Douglas has been speaking out across the country about the problems facing the universal public health care system, and as my colleagues have perhaps already guessed, she is the daughter of Tommy Douglas, the former CCF/NDP Premier of Saskatchewan and the man who pioneered medicare in that province. The very special Albertan is none other than my wife, Swinder Pannu. Both of these guests, Mr. Speaker, are seated in your gallery. I will now request them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you a constituent of Edmonton-Glengarry, Bev Dockrill. She is seated in the public gallery, and with your permission I'd ask that she now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I've received notices from 21 hon. members who indicated to me that they wish to raise a question in question period today. I've never had such length of a list. There are 21, so I ask for brevity in questions and brevity in answers today so all hon. members will have an opportunity.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. First main question.

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 8 in this Legislative Assembly the Premier said the following about his private hospitals policy: "If we had something to hide, if we had something to be afraid of, we would have kept this from the public." Yesterday the Official Opposition released a secret report funded by this government, by the Department of Health and Wellness. The government has held on to this rather damaging report and thus chosen to hide it from Albertans, I guess because it told the truth, not the misinformation being spread by the government's million dollar propaganda campaign. My questions are to the Premier. Why was this report kept hidden from Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I am going to have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness supplement, but since the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition has alluded to hiding things, I would like to table a letter dated December 16, 1994, and it says:

Dear Nancy:

We have recently been approached by the Department of Health with respect to your records as the former Minister responsible for that department. They would like to transfer the material to the Provincial Archives of Alberta. We would like to accept the material.

As ministerial records are currently considered the private property of the respective ministers, your approval will be required to effect the deposit.

According to my information, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has not replied to this particular memo, and I understand that there are some 155 boxes of records that were compiled when she was Minister of Health that she now refuses to release to the public.

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader, please. As the hon. Government House Leader has already risen on a point of order that will be dealt with at the conclusion of question period, I can only anticipate that the point of order that the hon. Government House Leader would probably want to raise with the House would have to do with pertinence, relevancy, anticipation of a debate that would go on tonight. I want to make it very clear that yesterday the chair did rise with respect to this matter and did indicate that questions dealing with Bill 11 would not be dealt with today as there is a scheduled debate tonight and it's on the Order Paper. However, that does not preclude questions respecting policy of the government on various matters. So my only plea to anyone who's raising questions today is: be very skillful in the words of your questions so the chair will not have to intervene again.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier has talked over the last few months about the importance of debate, about providing Albertans with all of the information about his health care policy, about the importance of being open and accountable, how can he justify hiding from Albertans one of the few Alberta-specific reports that are available on private health care policy?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the report to which the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition alludes was prepared autonomously by the University of Alberta, yes, I understand, at the request of the Department of Health and Wellness, and I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. JONSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Leader of the Official Opposition's portrayal of the status of this report is false. The study by the Institute of Health Economics, which is an independent and very reputable agency at the University of Alberta – and, yes, it is funded by an unconditional grant of $250,000 a year, and there are at least a dozen other agencies or companies or institutions that provide funding to that institute as well.

Mr. Speaker, the document that was alluded to in this Assembly yesterday is an early draft of the report. It still has to undergo further work and also, as is traditional with the institute, peer review. This document is not a final document. It is independent of government, and the funding that we provide to the institute is on an ongoing basis with no strings attached in terms of the whole assistance that we're providing.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that yesterday his minister said that there's very little, if any, evidence in Alberta dealing with private health care, is the Premier keeping his study hidden because it contradicts his private hospital policy and his minister of health?

MR. KLEIN: It's not my study, Mr. Speaker, but since she referred to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, I'll have him respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, we look forward to the final report. As I said, the institute has been of considerable assistance to Alberta Health and Wellness and to the health care system in general in terms of providing independent and learned reviews of a number of issues and policy matters as far as the health care system is concerned. I would suspect that the final report, which the hon. member should have enough courtesy to recognize and acknowledge is what anybody should be quoting from, I'm sure will be fair and balanced and constructive as far as the health care system is concerned.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why did the Premier tell Albertans on March 14 that there was evidence to support his private hospitals policy when his own report, hidden until yesterday, says that there is no evidence to show that the public health care system is not efficient? Why would he misinform Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this government has never, not now, will never, have a private hospital policy, so when the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition alludes to a private hospital policy, she asks a question that is absolutely totally irrelevant.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, why did the Premier tell Albertans on December 10 of 1999 that private hospitals are more cost-effective when his own report, hidden until yesterday, says that there is no proof of this claim? Why would he misinform Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I've never alluded to private hospitals.

It is not in the language of this caucus. There is nothing being considered by this government that includes private hospitals. As a matter of fact, the opposite, the absolute opposite is true.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, in fact, it talks about private hospitals in this funded study from the government of Alberta.

Why did the Premier tell Albertans on March 14 that under his private hospitals policy there would be no queue-jumping when his own report, hidden until yesterday, says that enhanced services and faster access to care will be available for those able to pay, at least according to this government-funded report?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that's what a University of Alberta report might or might not say. I understand that it's only in draft stage and has not been subjected to a peer review.

Relative to the report itself I'll again have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I would like to first of all indicate and repeat that this study is being done by the Institute of Health Economics, which is a respected independent agency of the University of Alberta. That is the first misstatement that has been made across the way.

Secondly, it is my opinion that the hon. member is misquoting or selectively quoting from this particular report. Some might call it paraphrasing, but they have a curious way of paraphrasing. However, Mr. Speaker, I think the important thing here is that the report is in the development stages. I would think that any responsible person across the way would want to wait until the final report is completed before quoting it as a set of final findings.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, if this report is an interim report, then why wouldn't the government pull its private hospitals policy statements and discussions and await the final report before proceeding further with their policy, which has caused so much concern amongst Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is no private hospital policy statement; therefore the question is irrelevant.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, why did the Premier tell Albertans on November 16, 1999, that under his private hospital policy there would be no two-tier medicine in Alberta when his own report, which has been hidden from Albertans until yesterday, says that his private hospital policy could lead to two-tiered health care. Why would he misinform Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again there is nothing to allude to a so-called private hospital policy, so that question is irrelevant. It's quite clear that any policy being developed by this government does not allow a two-tier, for-profit health system to develop, unlike the policy of the Liberal Party, where the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition said: if there is a place for private hospitals in the system, let them operate. She is the only person who has alluded to private hospitals.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that the issue is in fact extremely relevant to the people of this province, why did the Premier tell Albertans on March 10 that there was evidence that contracting out surgeries was more cost-effective when his own report, hidden until yesterday, says that no comparative studies to back up the Premier's claim exist. Why would he misinform the people of this province on such an important debate on public policy?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the only person misinforming the people of this province is the leader of the Liberal opposition and her devoted group of loyal followers; namely, the Liberals, who have been on a very intensified campaign of spreading vicious and malicious misinformation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Public opposition to the government scheme to legalize private, for-profit hospitals under a slightly different name has been growing steadily since last November. All of the government's expensive PR spin-doctoring has only deepened and solidified public opposition. My questions are to the Premier. Why does the Premier persist in shoving down the throats of Albertans something that they clearly – clearly – do not want?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not so sure that that is the case. I can allude to the policy of the NDs, obviously not the bill. The policy is quite clear and is against what virtually every doctor, even the AMA, has told us. The policy of the NDs is to eliminate all surgical clinics whatsoever, including therapeutic abortion clinics, including cataract clinics. The policy of the NDs – and this hon. member can clarify it – is to immediately close all surgical clinics that are contracted to regional health authorities. In other words, the policy is no contracting out whatsoever. Everything must be done within the confines of the bricks and mortar of a full-scale hospital. That is their policy.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Premier for explaining my party's policy to Albertans. He should leave it to me to do it. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I'd like to proceed.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. member, I gave you my permission, and you proceeded to give a statement and a preamble. When you throw it out in this House, you've got to expect to get it back.

If you have a question, I'll recognize you. Proceed.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier again: why won't the Premier admit that his expensive PR spin-doctoring has failed for the simple reason that Albertans don't support his privatization scheme no matter how it is packaged?

MR. KLEIN: No spin-doctoring here. No privatization here, Mr. Speaker. The only people who have been guilty of spin-doctoring: well, certainly the Canadian Union of Public Employees, who have probably spent millions on this campaign; the Liberals in particular, who won't tell us how much they've spent on their campaign; and the Friends of Medicare, backed by the Alberta Federation of Labour. That's been the only spin-doctoring.

Mr. Speaker, all we have sent out is a copy of a bill that purports to become law, and as I've said, nothing can be more truthful than the law.

DR. PANNU: I hope he listens to the AMA, if not to the AFL.

Mr. Speaker, my last question to the Premier: why doesn't the Premier understand that when Albertans say no, they mean no when it comes to the privatization of health care?

MR. KLEIN: I find it so very, very strange that this member in particular would be asking those kinds of questions: the great defender of medicare. Yet he fails to question in any way, shape, or form the legislation that was passed in Saskatchewan, the birthplace of medicare. The daughter of the late hon. Tommy Douglas is here in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. That piece of legislation, passed in 1996, is an act respecting health facilities. Our act is very, very similar to that act passed in Saskatchewan by the NDs, only our act is much stronger. It even puts more fences around contracted-out surgical facilities.

Relative to a comment that was made by the leader of the third party, I'm not trying to explain ND policy on this particular issue, but if he would stand up in this House and explain the policy, I'm sure Albertans would be most appreciative.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Hospital Construction

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Lakeland health authority announced that the Fort Saskatchewan health centre will undergo major fire code upgrades and improvement to the surgical suites. I'd like to ask the Minister of Infrastructure to speak to the reasons the upgrades are needed and what they are expected to accomplish.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The recently announced project in the Fort Saskatchewan hospital deals with upgrading much of the fire and the electrical requirements but also adding some additional space for the much-needed surgery that's taking place. Many of the staff are working in small space, especially medical records. We're also concerned with some of the fire regulations, and we'll be looking at some window upgrades and improving the total envelope of that part of the hospital.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the Fort health centre is a busy facility and does a great many surgeries and they've been using temporary facilities, temporary additions for several years, I'd like to ask the minister how a future new facility would fit into the ministry's long-range plans.

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, what happens now in the province of Alberta is that individual regional health authorities will be prioritizing projects based on need and also on space requirements and program delivery. That particular list will then come to Alberta Infrastructure, and with the co-operation of the minister of health our department will review those space requirements and prioritize them on a provincewide basis and then make the necessary announcements as per the budget dollars available in that particular year.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Further to that question, would the future construction of a new Fort Saskatchewan hospital or any other health facility be impacted by health authorities leasing facilities in their community?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, from about '92-93 to '99 the government invested close to a billion dollars in not only new hospitals but renovations, repairs, and upgrading and in bringing in new technology. Over the next three years we'll be rolling out a business plan with a $324 million investment, again not only preservation of facilities but new facilities and some upgrades. The regional health authorities will look at what strategy gives them the best value for the tax dollar, but we're committed to spend at least $324 million over the next three years.

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of discrepancies between what the Premier has been telling Albertans about private health care policy in this province and what is in reports that the government has commissioned and received. I'm wondering for the record this afternoon if the Premier could define for Albertans the difference between a private hospital and an overnight private surgical facility. What is the difference, Mr. Premier?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's in the policy statement that, of course, led to the bill, which will be introduced for second reading later today. If the hon. member is confused as to what a hospital is, I would reiterate the challenge that I made and ask her to go and visit the Royal Alex or University hospital or Misericordia or Grey Nuns. If she wants to know what a surgical clinic is, whether it's a day clinic – first of all, there are no overnight clinics that I know of in the province other than, I think, HRG, which contracts to WCB and British Columbia for some services. I know of no overnight surgical clinics, but I would suspect that an overnight surgical clinic would be an extension of the kind of clinics that now operate on a day basis. There are 140 of them operating in Alberta as I speak.

So if the hon. member wants to first of all go to a hospital, like the Royal Alex or the Grey Nuns or Misericordia or University hospital, if she doesn't know what a hospital looks like, then I would invite her to go down and have a look at one of those. If she wants to know what a surgical clinic looks like, then I would invite her to go down and have a look at one of the local therapeutic abortion clinics or cataract surgery clinics.

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, all hon. members have been circulated the document called Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, if you'd like the chair to assist, Definitions, section 29 in the act, defines what a designated surgical facility is. There are also sections in here about what public hospital means.

We indicated yesterday that as the debate has been established and scheduled to start tonight on second reading, there'll be ample opportunity for it, and the question period should not be used in terms of talking about things that are clearly before all members of the House. Now, there have been great liberties taken with some of the questions already this afternoon. I would like to refer all members to Beauchesne 409(11), dealing with government policy.

Hon. member, would you continue, please, but remember what the chair has said.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also to the Premier. Why did the Premier tell Albertans on November 24, '99, that under his private hospital policy no one would get faster service because they have a credit card or cheque book when his own government report, hidden until yesterday, says that there could be receipt of different enhanced services for Albertans according to the ability to pay? Were you not concerned this would mislead Albertans, Mr. Premier?

MR. KLEIN: Before answering the question, I stand to be corrected, Mr. Speaker. I talked about 140 clinics. I mean there are 140 procedures being done in 52 clinics, and I'm sure that some of those clinics exist here in Edmonton. I reiterate that if the hon. member wants to see the difference between a surgical clinic and a hospital, go down and see for herself.

Mr. Speaker, I'll answer the question. Since this government has never alluded to private hospitals – only the Liberals have alluded to private hospitals – since the government has never alluded to a private hospitals policy, I consider the question to be irrelevant.

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, why did the Premier tell Albertans on November 16, 1999, that there would be no two-tiered, American style health care in Alberta when the government's report, hidden until yesterday, says that sources of revenue other than that from RHAs may be needed for private hospitals to survive financially? Were you not concerned that this would mislead Albertans, Mr. Premier?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to the question of two-tier, for-profit, again, this government has never alluded to allowing a two-tier, for-profit health care system to develop. As a matter of fact, I will reiterate the agreement made between the Prime Minister and myself where we agreed that Canada should not ever allow a two-tier, for-profit health system to develop. It's as simple as that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Organized Crime

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure you my questions this afternoon have absolutely nothing to do with health policy or Bill 11. My questions this afternoon are to the hon. Minister of Justice and the hon. Minister of Infrastructure. Albertans are encouraged that the government has committed itself to combating organized and gang crime, but many are concerned with recent media reports of a new courtroom under construction in Edmonton. My first question is to the Minister of Justice. Apart from spending 1 and a half million dollars on a new courthouse in Edmonton, what exactly has the minister done to stem the increase in gang-related activities in this province?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Organized crime is a very serious concern of this government and indeed of all governments across the country. That's why when I attended a meeting with attorneys general in December – December 5, I believe it was – in Vancouver, we spent a good half day hearing from RCMP and other police forces across the country about the nature and extent of organized crime, the nature and extent of gangs in the country, what is happening with respect to them, what we need to do, and speaking as well about how we can co-ordinate our processes and our information to best combat organized crime.

Mr. Speaker, organized crime does not respect boundaries, so the fact that we police on a municipal basis or on a provincial basis is a bit of an inhibitor in the war against organized crime, and therefore it's absolutely essential that justice departments across the country, attorneys general across the country, work together to make sure that there's a good sharing of information and good co-operation between our police services. For example, I would point out that there was a conference, organized not by the Attorney General's office but by police forces themselves, in Banff this last weekend talking about gangs and particularly focusing on aboriginal gangs.

So there's been a lot of effort. I've referenced in the House before the $8 million which we allocated in November of 1998 to the sharing of information and the Criminal Intelligence Service of Alberta, which again co-ordinates and helps the police forces across this province co-ordinate their efforts on organized crime. One significant result of that was the very significant bust last September where some 30 individuals were arrested and charged with gang-related activities.

Of course, that brings us to the need for a courtroom, not a new courthouse but a courtroom which is of the size and magnitude to allow us to prosecute large groups as may come before us with these arrests on organized crime issues.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister please explain just exactly why a special courtroom is required to try gang members? Can't they use the same courtrooms as everyone else?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is essential, as part of our battle against organized crime, that we have in place the resources necessary to deal with the second stage. The police of course have the obligation to investigate and to arrest and to bring to justice the people who are involved in organized crime and gangs, but we then have to provide the infrastructure necessary to deal with those charges in court. When you have gang-related charges, it's necessary to have all of those who are charged on an associated basis in court at the same time, thus the need for a large courtroom.

But I would indicate again that we're not building a specialized courthouse as has been done in other provinces. Rather, we're renovating some space in the basement of the existing courthouse in Edmonton to provide for a larger courtroom which will be used for prosecution of gang type offences like this and for many other uses within the province.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Given that the minister is responsible for constructing this courtroom, can he advise if other alternatives were considered prior to this costly construction?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, our department, in co-operation with the Department of Justice, looked at a number of alternative locations. One was the base at Namao. However, logistics and some of the security provisions would have been considerable. So we again looked at the courthouse in the city of Edmonton, knowing quite well that the level we're looking at, the basement level, hasn't been renovated since 1980. There are some much-needed code upgrades as well. We also consulted with the three levels of court that had assured us they will be using these court facilities in the future. As a result, we decided to get the best value for the taxpayer dollar and do the renovations, knowing quite well that these courtrooms will be used in the future as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Alberta Liberals released a government-funded report that this government suppressed. The report confirmed that this government's push for private hospitals will lead to higher costs to taxpayers, longer waiting lists in the public health care system, two-tiered medicine, and queue jumping. My questions are to the minister of health.

Albertans would like to know, Mr. Minister, which branch of the government commissioned this study and when. Was it Health and Wellness? The Premier's office? Public Affairs Bureau? Which one was it?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the funding, as I indicated I think at least twice this afternoon in answer to other inquiries, is provided to the Institute of Health Economics by Alberta Health and Wellness. I also previously in the Assembly during question period named the amount, $250,000 annually, and that relationship or agreement has been in place since 1995. The institute has an oversight board which is made up of very well qualified people, both in the area of policy development and academia. The institute reviews issues with Alberta Health and Wellness and with others in the health care sector each year and decides on what their agenda as far as studies and policy development and recommendations will be. They operate quite independently. They are a very credible group, and I think they are a group that we get value from in terms of the studies and the recommendations and the findings they provide for the overall direction and management of the health care system.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing that has to be emphasized here is that once again the status of this report is being very much misstated. The members across the way know very well that it is in one of its earlier drafts. There still has to be work done. There still has to be the standard procedure of a peer review of the report done before it is released and before anybody is going to be expected to consider its recommendations.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that this is an interim report. It's not a draft report. It's an interim report, so it's valid as it stands. It's not a draft. Mr. Minister, my question to you is: did your department specifically request this report? Did you, your department, commission this report?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as I just indicated in my previous answer, the Department of Health and Wellness, other institutions such as our universities, and other parts of the health care sector discuss with the administration and the board of the institute topics that could be well investigated as far as their agenda is concerned as an institute. However, we did not commission that particular study. You know, if she wants to check with the institute as to how they go about their business and how much money we pay them – if they don't believe that we pay them $250,000, well, fine, because it is the case. It's not anything unusual or out of the way.

I think we have received over the years good value from this particular institute or agency, Mr. Speaker. It is valuable because they do independent work, and we look forward to their final report. If the hon. member had any courtesy or reasonableness at all, they would want the final and complete report, with the peer review, before they comment or reach conclusions that are not valid.

MS OLSEN: Well, I find it difficult to understand why reputable professors at an institution would release this without standing behind it, and it was released to your office, Mr. Minister. So now that you've read it, can you tell us if you agree with the summary of findings in it?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've not read the report or received it, of course.

THE SPEAKER: And seeking opinions is totally inappropriate for the question period.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, I'm counting on you.

Turner's Syndrome

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two separate families in my constituency have children who've been diagnosed with Turner's syndrome. It's a growth disorder that affects one in 2,500 female births. In both those situations the drug Humatrope has been prescribed at a cost of approximately $1,000 a month, even though it is not approved for funding by Alberta Health and Wellness for the treatment of Turner's syndrome because, as I understand it, Alberta Health and Wellness deems it to be ineffective for the treatment of Turner's syndrome. My question to the Minister of Health and Wellness: how does the policy of Alberta Health and Wellness compare to other jurisdictions in Canada regarding the approval of payment for Humatrope in the treatment of Turner's syndrome?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to clarify that the pharmaceutical product referred to, Humatrope, has been approved on a limited basis in Alberta for an area of treatment where our expert drug committee deems it to be effective according to scientific evidence, and that is with respect to adults which are at a certain stage in this disease or condition.

Mr. Speaker, the only province in Canada that I am aware of that covers Humatrope at this time is Manitoba. There may have been some more recent developments in other provinces, but that is the best information I have at the present time.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the Minister of Health and Wellness tell me what the professional qualifications of the Alberta Expert Committee on Drug Quality and Therapeutics is? That's the body that decides which drugs are covered by Alberta Health.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the expert committee is, I think one would agree, a very prestigious committee in terms of their qualifications. It is made up of physicians, pharmacists, people who are very knowledgeable in the whole area of drugs themselves. There are socioeconomic experts with respect to the effectiveness and the long-term efficacy of having certain drugs approved. I think the list of individuals that are part of that committee is an indication of a very well qualified group of people, both in terms of practical experience and also in terms of scientific knowledge and its application.

MR. MARZ: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary to the same minister: would the minister inquire into why Alberta doctors would be prescribing medications that are not considered to be effective treatment?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, the process in Canada is that once a pharmaceutical product, a drug, is approved by Health Canada's approval agency, then it is legal for a physician to prescribe that particular drug for treatment. However, across Canada each of the provinces has a process of reviewing the scientific evidence, the value of treatment, and the effectiveness of treatment in terms of what should and should not be covered under their respective drug payment programs. Therefore, it is not uncommon for a physician to prescribe a particular pharmaceutical product to an individual case without there being coverage by the province's drug program.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are serious issues and questions raised regarding the Alberta experience with private provisions of a publicly funded service, issues and questions which should be investigated by a government considering further extensions of private provisions of insured services. Not my words, but words primarily from the report of the Institute of Health Economics paid for by this government. My questions are to the minister of health. Will the government continue to support a policy of further health care privatization when this report claims there is trouble with what we already have?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I will reiterate that in another circumstance the hon. member across the way would be criticizing anyone who was quoting from a report that is not finished. It has some distance to go in terms of finalizing its findings, but it is convenient and it is in keeping with their pattern across the way to quote from partially completed documents and those that may change in the future and so forth.

With respect to the draft document that the hon. member is referring to, I will take the view that when that report is complete, it is certainly something that Alberta Health and Wellness will review very carefully and consider in terms of its findings. But the point here, as the Premier has well stated many times today and previously, is that we are not contemplating a bill that has a provision which deals with establishing a two-tier health care system in this province. We are not contemplating at all establishing private full-service hospitals. No, Mr. Speaker. Those decisions are already made, from the government standpoint, in terms of what should be in the legislation. It is in the legislation. It is in Bill 11. So to keep bringing forward what I regard as irrelevant comment is inappropriate.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. Did the minister investigate current privatization efforts before moving ahead with his private health care policy?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do not have any private health care policy. We have brought forward and reported many factors relevant to why we are establishing a very protective piece of legislation. We're moving forward with that, and that is because we want to protect the public health care system and adhere to the principles of the Canada Health Act. No one has been able to indicate any way that we are not adhering to the principles of the Canada Health Act, so this innuendo and implication and false assertions are not relevant or constructive with respect to the matters before the Assembly.

DR. MASSEY: Mr. Speaker, my third question is to the same minister. What are those other private provisions that the government is considering that are mentioned in the report?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure what he's alluding to in terms of private provisions. We are not, in Bill 11, developing a private hospital system or a private health care system. We are developing a public health care system, one which is for the public, one where they will not have to worry about queue jumping, one where they will not have to worry about being charged extra for insured services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Child Health Benefit

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government has taken many good steps and developed programs to encourage the families who rely on social services alone to become more self-reliant and proud working families, my question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. What do those programs entail?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, in this government we try to provide assistance to those people who need our assistance. Many of them, of course, are not able to work, but there are people amongst our citizens that, while they are working, still do need some assistance. So we have programs that can top up earnings, but I think the more important one would be identified as the national child benefit, and in this particular case we've been able to use funding in partnership with the federal government to provide for some medical benefits. To list them, it provides coverage for prescription drugs, for dental and optical services, for emergency ambulance service, and for essential diabetic supplies, again, for children in low-income working families. It's my understanding that this year the child health benefit program will be helping more than 50,000 children.

MR. CAO: Mr. Speaker, my second supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that postsecondary education costs are rising and postsecondary students have made a commitment to learning and have the skills and knowledge to become productive workers in the future, why doesn't the government provide health care benefits to their children? Some of them are married students.

MR. DUNFORD: When we were initially investigating this matter, Mr. Speaker, representatives of student groups said, "No, we don't want to be in that program; we want to make the decision ourselves," so we went ahead. What has happened since that time is that we have heard from students within the system, so now we have changed our policy to cover them, and we expect that 6,500 children will be covered by that benefit now.

MR. CAO: My last supplemental question is also to the same minister. How will the students get coverage for their children?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, it's a matter of applying for the coverage, Mr. Speaker. I can read into Hansard a phone number they can call here in Edmonton, 427-6848, or certainly from anywhere in Alberta they can dial 310-0000 and of course ask to be referred. We can provide them, then, with the information they will need.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I will call on the one member who will participate in Members' Statements today.

Calgary Centre of Hope

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether this means I get six minutes instead of two.

On April 1, 2000, I had the opportunity to attend a wonderful event in downtown Calgary. This was the groundbreaking for the Calgary Centre of Hope. The Centre of Hope is a new facility being built by the Salvation Army in the city I'm from. It's going to provide 119 transitional housing beds plus 116 emergency beds for men. There's going to be a new separate program with 32 beds for a women's emergency residence. The addictions rehab unit will be increased to serve 46 clients. Significantly, because some 30 percent of the homeless people in downtown Calgary present with a range of mental health issues, there will be a mental health diversion crisis stabilization unit with 30 beds.

Mr. Speaker, what's so significant about this is that we've seen a recent report which estimates that in the city of Calgary on any given evening we may have as many as 5,000 men, women, and children who are in some form or another of housing crisis. There may be somewhere in the order of another 10,000 or 12,000 Calgarians who are one slim paycheque away from the street.

I think what we've seen in the city of Calgary is a leadership not by any level of government but by the community. We see an amazing leadership not just from the Salvation Army but from churches. The in-from-the-cold program developed by the city of Calgary is a wonderful example, and we've seen support from a range of nonprofit organizations, the work done by CUPS and organizations like that.

In connection with that, on March 24 and 25 I attended a homeless in Calgary Future Search conference. The Member for Calgary-Bow attended that session as well, and you saw the energy of people in the Calgary community coming together to identify what progress has been made since the last Future Search conference two years ago and what more has to be done.

I just want to salute all of the men and women working hard in terms of this process to solve the homelessness problem in Calgary. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the hon. Government House Leader has advised of two points of order. Hon. Official Opposition House Leader, did you advise of a point of order? I heard you say something.

MR. DICKSON: No, I did not, sir. No. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Government House Leader, on your first point of order.

Point of Order Preambles

MR. HANCOCK: Actually, Mr. Speaker, there were three points of order, but the first two related to the preamble in the hon. Leader of the Opposition's questions, so perhaps I could deal with both of those as one.

Under Standing Order 23(e), anticipation, and 23(j) as well as 409 and virtually every other rule in Beauchesne, the hon. Leader of the Opposition started off the proceedings today firstly by breaching your admonition yesterday not to raise questions which clearly dealt with a matter which is on the Order Paper. You, I think, dealt with that earlier during question period.

As well, we've seen a continuation of a practice which has become unfortunate in this House, of the Leader of the Opposition and her minions raising in preamble matters which use "abusive and insulting language . . . likely to create disorder," encouraging debate. I refer specifically to the reference to private hospital bills and private hospital policies when it's clear that there is no such thing and we have before the House Bill 11, which is not called the private hospital act. It is in fact labeled the Health Care Protection Act. So it is argumentative and it is abusive language and it is encouraging debate to continue to use question period to misinform Albertans about the nature of the policy and the nature of the bill.

The rest of her preamble and many of the other preambles, I might say, were argumentative in that they referred to a study for which the minister of health has quite clearly indicated the source of that preliminary report and who paid for it. Ignoring those clearly stated answers as to the source and the preparation of that report, they continued to refer to that report as a government-commissioned report, as a government paid for study, as your report, all of which were argumentative and in the nature of debate rather than appropriate questions, which, if I can go back to 409, “must be a question, not an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation, nor debate.”

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I’d make this observation. I would have expected the Government House Leader to be more specific in terms of the concern and more precise in his use of language.

Sir, I’d refer the Government House Leader to November 7, 1994, when actually this very issue of anticipation was dealt with if not exhaustively then most thoroughly by your predecessor. In fact, we have virtually an entire column on the page of Hansard – for the Government House Leader’s reference, it’s page 2854 – and if I could just go to a quote that the then Speaker made. I think it was Speaker Schumacher, and he was referring to previous rulings of the House. He was referring to a ruling on June 15, 1989, which he quoted with approval. That was the Reverend David Carter, and I might quote this.

Questions can be developed and not ruled out of order if a Bill has been introduced in the Assembly. Once the Bills reach second reading stage, then they’re going to be ruled out of order in terms of question period. Questions developed after a Bill’s introduction should not be detailed and should relate to the general policy rather than a clause-by-clause examination of the Bill.

Now, I listened as carefully as I could and had the benefit, in fact, of seeing some text before the questions were asked, and each one of the questions specifically talked about the policy of the government of the province of Alberta. You, sir, will recall that the government, with much hullabaloo and fanfare, produced a policy statement in November, and that dealt with a range of facilities. It is very clear that there was a policy statement, and I’d say, with respect, that we are entitled in this House to ask questions about that policy statement, what the government means by it, and to explore the nuances and the vagueness and the gaps in that policy statement.

Never at any time was reference made in any one of the questions to Bill 11 because we are mindful, sir, not only of your admonition yesterday but the direction of the House since at least Dr. Carter’s comments on June 15, 1989. If the Government House Leader is suggesting that that eliminates any question about policy of the government of the day, then that’s completely, absolutely at variance with all of the precedent of this Assembly.

Now, he goes on to raise a second matter. He’s concerned that we persist in talking about private hospitals and private facilities when he professes innocence and says that the government is doing no such thing. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the evidence has been very clear. Most recently an interim published report, not a draft report, said that the accredited private surgical facility that this government is talking about would, in the minds of 10 out of 10 Albertans, be a private hospital. I think Albertans are smart enough to understand that this government can under their policy create a facility as big and as sophisticated as the Foothills hospital in Calgary, and as long as it does not do emergency services, that would not be a private hospital. In the minds of the government perhaps, but in the minds of Albertans without question that is a private hospital.

So we’re perhaps parsing and mincing words in terms of nuances and definition. [interjection] I received some good advice, as I always do, from our friend from Calgary-Varsity. I don’t want to spend most of my energy this afternoon when we’ll get a chance to debate the bill at length tonight, but I just did want to make that observation that an interim report is something that in fact has been published. It’s entitled to be talked about and discussed, and it is clear that the government has funded the report. Now, did they do it by a direct requisition? Did they do it by indirectly paying the institute that has done it? I read the report, and it says that it was commissioned by the Department of Health and Wellness. To me the linkage is clear and irrefutable.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, there were certain interjections this afternoon by the chair with respect to this matter, and the chair did make a statement in the House yesterday with respect to anticipation. The hon. Opposition House Leader is absolutely correct about the rulings that were given by previous Speakers with respect to this and the traditions of parliaments with respect to this whole matter.

If I listened, though, very carefully to the Government House Leader, he was as much concerned about the tone of words and the usage of words as he was about the type of direction with respect to the question. It’s on that point that I’ll make these brief comments. I do quote from the Blues. It says:

Mrs. MacBeth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 8 in this Legislative Assembly the Premier said the following about his private hospitals policy: “If we had something to hide, if we had something to be afraid of, we would have kept this from the public.” Yesterday the Official Opposition released a secret report funded by this government and funded by the Department of Health and Wellness. The government has held on to this rather damaging report and thus chosen to hide it from Albertans, I guess because it told the truth, not the misinformation being spread by the government’s million dollar propaganda campaign. My questions, Mr. Speaker, are to the Premier. Why was this report kept hidden from Albertans?

It certainly makes rather pointed allegations with respect to a member, and while there’s no doubt at all that the chair and, I do believe, a great number of other members would feel that the tone of the question might be rather aggressive and might be rather harsh and could be deplored, I suppose, by some as horrendously unparliamentary to a certain degree, the chair would have to really reach, though, to see if it violates any provisions of sections of Standing Order 23, because it has to be taken within the context of the whole thing.

However, that having been said, the chair is confused. I know that the chair is not supposed to be getting involved in any of the debate in this Assembly, but the Leader of the Official Opposition said, “Yesterday the Official Opposition released a secret report funded by this government.” Then the chair heard – and he’s positive about this – the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood say that an institute released such a report. There has to be consistency with respect to the whole thing. If one hon. member stands up and says, “Well, we have a report,” and another hon. member stands up and says, “Well, no, it’s not a report; it’s an interim report, and it’s not funded directly by the government,” there is a point in time where you’re going to have two absolutely conflicting views of the whole thing. Presumably, that has to do with a further debate that should really not be taking place in question period.

Again and again and again I want to remind all hon. members of what the purpose of question period is. The bottom line today was that after indicating there were 21 members who were on the list, I do believe we arrived at no greater than eight members having an opportunity.

Now, hon. Government House Leader, a second point.

Point of Order Decorum

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I won't pursue it in any great detail, because it's sum and substance the same point of order as the last one. I simply want to make the point again for the House and to ask for your more active control of the House under section 13(1) of Standing Orders in that we do have members in this House who seek to ask questions for information. Unfortunately, most of the members of the opposition seem to want to ask questions for the purposes of allowing lengthy, argumentative preambles which twist the realities that we know to be existent in Alberta. It's those irrelevant, irresponsible, unnecessary, and under our rules illegal preambles which create the responses that come, which are necessary to set the record straight.

As a result, we don't have in this House a question period, as is the great parliamentary tradition, where private members of this House get to examine members of Executive Council, members of the government, on the policy and direction of the government. Rather, we have positioning by members of the opposition with totally inappropriate preambles, and we see again and again and again in this House posturing for the cameras. We want to have Albertans see what's happening in this Legislature.

It would be my fondest personal dream that we would broadcast all the proceedings of this House someday. We can't do that, I don't believe, if the result is going to be the animal acts that we see during question period, with a great twisting of the truth that comes in these obnoxious preambles. I think, Mr. Speaker, it's time to start ruling them out of order and asking members of the opposition and members on the government side, if necessary, to make their preambles relevant to the question, to make them short, succinct, and in accordance with the rules.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, another one of these free-flowing points of order. The only thing that's clear to me is the frustration of the Government House Leader, but need I remind him and you, sir, that there's an opposition and there's a government. Each of us has different roles to play. Each of us has different perspectives on many of the issues of the day. The Government House Leader can talk all he wishes about pointed questions that he thinks are argumentative. I can point out to the same extent responses that are not forthright, are not candid, that avoid being provocative and argumentative.

So where are we left? If the Government House Leader wishes to use Westminster as the standard and to suggest that the questions in some fashion fall short, let me retort that if he watches question period in the House of Commons in Westminster, he will find that responses are at a much higher level and set a very different standard than anything we see day after day in this Assembly.

So the Government House Leader is frustrated. Well, let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that members of the opposition are equally frustrated, if not more so, with a government that refuses to accept responsibility for things they do. We will continue to try and hold the government accountable. If the Government House Leader chooses not to like the tone of the questions, then he should work with his colleagues to be more forthcoming and provide us with snappy, pithy, direct, responsive responses instead of the nonsense we hear day after day from the front bench of this government.

THE SPEAKER: I honestly do believe we enjoy this. I honestly believe that at the conclusion of the question period every day this little exchange is better than a coffee break for a lot of people. I really, truly believe that. It just gets us going.

Okay. Well, the hon. Government House Leader has referred to section 13(1), "The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum and shall decide questions of order." Yes, that's very correct, and the Speaker would love to make sure that we would preserve the order and the decorum according to everybody's interpretation of what order and decorum is all about. But as there are 82 individuals in this House in addition to the chair, we all have our own subjective decision and interpretation of what decorum really means. So I guess I'll have to explain what mine is again, just so that everybody really understands.

We have two groups of players in this Assembly. We have one group called the government, and we have another group called the opposition, but part of the government is also private members. The purpose of the question period is to basically allow all private members in the Assembly to bring the government to account, which means that they have great latitude and a wide-ranging opportunity to raise questions of members of Executive Council. Now, we've tended over time to basically say that it is only to members of Executive Council. We've also said that the questions should be brief and should be to the point and that the answers should also be brief.

We also have other rules that talk about argumentative things and opinion and representative and undebatable things, and we all know that on almost a daily basis these things are all being violated by virtually everyone, because we tend to evolve in terms of what these words mean and how things are.

We also know that we have something called television, and somehow people believe that this is a good thing. Today not too much got on television, because I do believe that we didn't really start the question period until about 2:17, and by that time most people have already walked away and gone to do their grocery shopping or are out doing their yards or what have you. So that caused a little problem with some other things in terms of decorum.

The chair today was actually going to stand up and start really, really being quite aggressive with tablings, and the first person who tabled was the leader of the government, who then proceeded to read from a letter, which sort of shot that little argument out of the way because if it was good for one, it had to be good for everyone else. So 25 minutes later we're into this. Maybe one of these days all members will recall that the Speaker several weeks ago indicated in a letter to them that one day he actually foresees – I'm sure it will come to pass – that we will be here at 5:30 and will still be into tablings. There will be no question period that day, and that sort of thing will happen.

Preambles and relevancy are really important. I'll appeal to you once again. The hon. Opposition House Leader referred to Westminster, and he basically then said that questions are a certain type and answers are a certain type. But the hon. Opposition House Leader basically forgot to give to the House by way of information that it has been to a great degree a long-standing tradition in Westminster that those who want to raise questions actually send the question to the minister in advance. The minister can anticipate, knows what the question is, and then when he comes to stand up, he does provide an answer. If the hon. Opposition House Leader is basically saying that we want to establish that tradition in the parliament of Alberta, that's something the House leaders might want to rediscover for themselves in advance. If we want to start tomorrow, then henceforth by 11 o'clock in the morning the questions should be sent to the members of Executive Council, who would know what the questions are. I'm sure they'll have a chance to stand up and respond, and I'm sure we'll have brevity.

You know, these tete-a-tetes on a regular basis basically do cause some problems for hon. private members. Now, the chair is going to end this, and we're going to proceed.

head: Third Reading

Bill 205
Emblems of Alberta (Alberta Dress Tartan)
Amendment Act, 2000

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the opportunity to speak for a moment, I would like to thank all who have participated, including the Calgarians who had this idea.

At this time I would like to move third reading of Bill 205 and call for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a third time]

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Advisory Council on Women's Health

505. Mrs. Fritz moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to establish an advisory council on women's health to support education and research promoting women's health and to address issues relating to the prevention and treatment of diseases including osteoporosis, eating disorders, heart disease, and breast cancer as well as diseases which women are becoming increasingly susceptible to such as lung cancer and autoimmune diseases.

[Debate adjourned March 21: Mrs. Soetaert speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe I had just started to speak on this motion, which I am pleased to be able to support.

Some people may not remember back a few years ago to when a women's advisory council ended before its time. It was mandated to go for another year, yet it was shut down by this government. I remember voting against that at the time and in fact asked questions about it in the Legislature.

It was a pity that that was ended, because you know what? Those women on that council did some very good work from across this province. You know what else? That was a neat aspect of that advisory council, because there were women from right across this province. We talk about the differences and we celebrate those differences, but certainly women in isolated rural communities have different needs than women in cities, to some respect. Some are all the same; some are different.

Now, the motion on this women's health council. Women's health is the same across this province, with the same issues: the fact that we have women in their childbearing years, that we have women with breast cancer, osteoporosis, AIDS, endometritis, all kinds of things that affect women regardless of where they live. So I think this council is a good idea. I am hoping, though, that we will have women from across the province on this council. I've been to some farm women's conferences, some women's wellness conferences across the province.

In fact, I will be speaking at another wellness conference. I'm glad nobody over there is questioning, but they'd be welcome to come and feel well for an hour. Just imagine how well this Assembly must feel sometimes when I'm done speaking. In fact, stress is a factor that many women and men deal with, and that, I'm sure, will be covered. We all deal with things differently.

Certainly on the issue of women's health, as I was mentioning before, rural women have issues of isolation that often we don't understand. They don't have the same ability to access health care that others do that live in bigger cities. The real issue, too, is that if you have to come to the city for treatments, you don't just plan two hours of child care. You may plan two days or may have the expense of a hotel room or hope that you find a relative that lives in the city that will help you out. So those realities for women in rural Alberta and their health and wellness I hope will be addressed by this council. That is one of the things that I would really like to see on this council: people from across the province.

I would also love to see a native woman on this council. The chief at Alexander First Nation in my riding is Victoria Arcand. She's a remarkable woman, and she has also worked with health care within her own reserve and with others across the province. They have issues, too, that are different, that relate to their community differently. I would love to see a representative from that community, because I truly respect the work they have done and the balance they could bring to that council.

I would hope that one of the focuses of this council is, of course, preventative medicine for women. One of the things that I know is supported by this government and that I hope will not be changed is the whole fetal alcohol syndrome program, which of course affects women. A totally preventable disease yet totally incurable. I have a nephew who has fetal alcohol syndrome, and the heartache that his family has gone through and that he has gone through – if only people could know what drinking when you're pregnant does to you. I think there's a lot of work to be done in preventative medicine, and certainly this advisory council could have a powerful, powerful role in that and could put very positive resolutions through to this Assembly that, with commitment, could be acted upon. That is my hope for this council.

So I will be supporting the motion. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the remaining time I have left, I want to rise today in this Assembly and lend my support for Motion 505.

Before I continue, I want to congratulate the Member for Calgary-Cross for her well-respected expertise in this Assembly. We are very fortunate to have the member in this Assembly. She often stands on relevant issues and legislation to do with health care, and I thank her for her previous professional status and her professional opinion that she brings to this Assembly often. We've indeed been very lucky to have her, and I can say on the public record that I do believe she would have been an excellent nurse, a very caring caregiver, as she certainly in the Assembly brings forward timely health issues and legislation.

Mr. Speaker, there's so much that can be said for this particular motion. I think everyone in this House would agree that it is something that needs to be done and put in place.

Something I think was interesting. I do know that in British Columbia, for instance – I don't know whether they're still utilizing it, but they used to – they would equip vans and buses with all the necessary equipment to allow women to come to the van or bus for mammograms. They took this specially equipped vehicle out so that the mammograms went to the people instead of the people coming to them. I thought this was a very innovative approach, and I know that often in downtown Vancouver you could see a van or a bus parked there on a Saturday allowing women, as they did their grocery shopping or other shopping, to come in and have this very worthwhile test.

I don't have a lot of time to expand upon this, but I think we can see certain things in the health care field that we could look at to be innovative and work towards early prevention and early diagnosis and early treatment to do with women and women's health issues.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, but under Standing Order 8(4) I must put all questions to conclude debate on the motion under consideration.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 505 carried unanimously]

Support for Stay-at-home Parents

506. Mr. MacDonald moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to demonstrate its recognition of the contribution made by parents who stay at home to care for their children by providing support equal to that received by parents choosing other child care options.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to bring this motion before the Assembly. There was a similar motion, by the hon. Member for Wainwright, dealt with earlier in this 24th Legislature, and we have, I believe, seen progress with this issue since that motion was first discussed in this Assembly. As the discussion on this motion progresses, I look forward to the comments from other members of the Assembly.

Well, we look at this motion and have to recognize that the most important job in society is raising the next generation. A motion such as this gives parents simply one more choice or one more option in raising their families. Now, this motion comes before the Assembly at a time when one of the most well-recognized public figures perhaps in the western world, the Prime Minister of Britain, and his wife are expecting their fourth child. This is a debate that goes beyond the province, because of course how are the Prime Minister and his family in England going to deal with this? It's going to be interesting to see how that unfolds, and it could also be in a small way some direction for us.

Now, when I first talked about this motion with many people across the province, I have to give credit to many people who brought this issue forward before. They would be the Kids First Parent Association, and I've read also information from the Alberta Federation of Women United for Families, the Alberta/Northwest Territories Network of Immigrant Women Association, the Calgary home educators, or CHEERS, the Catholic Women's League from Calgary, and the National Foundation for Family Research and Education. All of these groups have developed ideas and policies regarding this issue.

In 1998 a Calgarian, Beverley Smith, a former schoolteacher, decided to raise her four children in her home. Mr. Speaker, you would almost have to withdraw the phrase "stay-at-home parent" and say: a parent who works in the home. Certainly it is work, and it is hard work. It is work that I think should be recognized by all hon. members of the Assembly. Beverley Smith brought this issue into the national spotlight by challenging our federal government to treat families in which one parent chooses to stay at home or to work at home to care for the children the same as families in which both parents are working outside the home. Beverley Smith believes that stay-at-home mothers or fathers, but mothers in particular, are discriminated against both socially and by our current tax system. She went so far as to make a formal complaint to the United Nations about our federal government's treatment of stay-at-home parents.

Now, hon. members are correct in asking: well, what's he talking about with the federal government? An idea has to start somewhere. Earlier, when the hon. Member for Wainwright brought this issue forward – and I will get to that in my remarks in a minute – there were some positive things that came about, and I think with this motion there can again be positive results, Mr. Speaker.

I spoke earlier about the Kids First Parent Association of Canada, but they have gone national with their concerns and their ideas on this issue. We should look carefully at what they have to say, and I assure all hon. members that later on in my remarks we will. I would appreciate it if everyone in the Assembly, all hon. members, would have a look at this motion and consider supporting it, because we must value equally parents who want to stay in their home and work and raise their families that way. We must respect that choice.

The volunteer care sector of the economy is made up of many of these individuals, and their work cannot be taken for granted. We all know that it makes a large economic contribution to society, whether it's in the service clubs, whether it's in the schools. These are the volunteers who help out teachers. Many of our teachers are overworked. There are a lot of students in each classroom. I'm not going to get into that, Mr. Speaker. These individuals – and it doesn't matter whether it's a mother or father – are picking up a lot of the slack, whether it be with Boy Scouts, whether it be with church groups, or whether it be with schools, all service organizations. It is a factor that we have to consider in this debate.

Now, this government's flat tax proposal will not completely fix the problem, even though it does remove the inequity between single- and dual-income families. That was an issue in our tax policy that I believe was long overdue for correction, and I would commend the hon. members from across the way for incorporating that into the provincial tax regime. But I think the spousal tax exemption must be increased further to achieve equality.

Whenever I talk about spousal tax exemption, I am not just referring to the stay-at-home mother. Mr. Speaker, in the last 40 years women have been entering the workforce in larger numbers. In some couples it would be the woman who would have the greatest earning power. If a couple wants to make that choice of staying in the home and working in the home and raising their own children, if this decision is going to be based on who can make the most amount of money in the workforce, in some cases it would be the father that would remain in the home, not the mother. I don't want all hon. members of this Assembly to get confused about that issue, because in some circumstances it could be the father that's staying home.

Now, we all know that parents who work in the home take a financial hit. They are giving up an income in order to raise their children themselves. It is not only working parents who incur more expenses to raise their children, and this is an issue that I would also remind hon. colleagues about. I said before that the term "stay-at-home parent" is very misleading. These parents are not simply staying at home. They are working in their homes raising the next generation, and in many cases they are putting in longer workdays than employed people and spending much of their time outside the home going to appointments, whether it's to the doctor or to the dentist, wherever, or they're simply running errands. Sometimes these errands are on behalf of the schools.

I think at this time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to incorporate into my remarks some of the remarks and some of the concerns that were brought forward by the Kids First Parent Association of Canada, which is based in Airdrie. They have studied and written extensively on this issue. Here's what the Kids First Parent Association of Canada has to say regarding current tax policy. It is their view that tax policy has changed significantly in the past 50 years.

We have moved away from a system that held true to the traditional principle of ability to pay - one which recognised that taxation should reflect not only the level of income but the number of people dependent upon it - to one that sees children as just another individual expenditure. As a consequence, the parental caring of children is seen as a waste of an adult's time and talent and, for women, a significant barrier to equality and fulfillment.

This devaluation of parental care through tax policy . . . occurs at the same time as an ever expanding body of research is confirming what common sense has always told us - parents are critical to a child's optimal well-being. It is parents who have the greatest potential and ability, the intrinsic motivation due to their immense love and instinctual bond, to . . . meet the needs of their children.

What children need to thrive and develop positively is massive quantities of time with their parents.

Children themselves call this quality time with dad or mom.

Yet families today are deprived of the vital time they need together to bond and to nurture with "unhurried patience". The logical solution would be to remove the disincentives and barriers to parental care, to give families the opportunity and flexibility to decide what is best to meet their individual family's needs.

This is the choice that I believe Motion 506 would provide to all Alberta families.

Family life is not static but dynamic. The combination of work and family varies significantly . . . depending on each family's circumstances. A family may have a parent at home full-time during the preschool years, with that parent gradually re-entering the paid labourforce once children are in school. Circumstances such as illness or disability, job promotion or loss, separation or divorce and relocation may mean a change in work and family patterns. Policies [of all governments] must recognize the dynamics of family life and support families, not frustrate them, in moving through transitions.

The intense care demands of young children [move forward all the time.] A family of two or three children, spaced two or three years apart, means full-time parenthood for ten or twelve years at the most. It should surely be possible to plan for this short-segment of the lifecycle, which represents less time than most able-bodied people spend in retirement, for which increasingly lavish provision is made. Some of the thought, planning and finance that now goes into the construction of pension schemes and student loans needs to go towards the re-creation of tax policies that will support parents at the most heavily loaded point in the lifecycle.

Those are the comments by the Kids First Parent Association of Canada regarding our current tax policies in this country.

What about the issue of making the decision to work in the home or being given that choice, whether it be the father or the mother?

One of the biggest myths surrounding the issue of at-home parenting is that families need two incomes to make ends meet, while single income families can afford the choice to have a parent at home. This inaccurate perception is what fuels current discriminatory policy that rewards dual earner families and penalises those with a parent [working] at home.

Statistically, low family income is more common among single-earner families, especially young families. The average income of one earner families is $26,000 less than that of dual-earner families. In the majority of families, the decision to have two wage earners is not based solely on economics but takes into account factors of lifestyle and values. If two incomes are really necessary to "make ends meet", we would expect to find a much higher proportion of working spouses (full- and part-time) in families whose head had a lower income. In fact, the percentages of double income families is virtually equal . . .

And this is quite interesting.

This fact was acknowledged in the Sub-Committee on Tax Equity for Canadian Families with Dependent Children's report [called] For the Benefit of Our Children: Improving Tax Fairness. The report found that the decisions on how to combine work and family "are largely independent of the financial position of the families . . . no matter what the income level of families, roughly the same proportion of families have both parents working full-time all year. Looked at in a different way, the probability that a mother would choose to work full-time in the labour force is, for the most part, independent of the income of the father. This point was confirmed by Status of Women Canada when they stated that "Fathers' income does not have a large effect on mothers' employment status."

The temptation might be, therefore, to argue that since economics are obviously not the dominant factor in how families combine work and family the current tax system, despite inequities, is not influencing a family's decision . . . Since factors of lifestyle and values are more influential in terms of affecting decisions, it could appear that the status quo is fine. This, however [I believe] is misguided. Although economics is not the prime factor in a family's decision regarding whether to have two parents in the paid labour force or a parent at home, the tax system has a powerful impact on shaping social attitudes with respect to how it values certain choices. Modern society places much emphasis on money; value is equated with monetary gain or the amount of wealth generated. This combined with rampant consumerism and materialism feeds the social pressures that families experience, heavily influencing both parents to continue participating in the paid labour force regardless of the negative impact it may have on their own and their families' physical and emotional health. Money is viewed as more important to a child's well-being than parental time, material possessions are given priority over family time. Despite the research to the contrary, these attitudes continue. While tax reform can't address the whole problem it can, by eliminating tax inequity, send a powerful message to parents that their presence and time is important and that parental care is a valuable contribution to society.

That is the view that the Kids First Parent Association presented regarding the decisions and choice to the Standing Committee on Finance.

Now, I find that very, very interesting, and it is an accurate reflection of our entire province as far as our ability to have the choice of whether we want to stay at home with our children or whether we want to see them placed in day care and continue in the workforce. Any changes and all changes must treat all families and all parents fairly and equitably.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I shall sit down and anxiously await the comments of my hon. colleagues.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to enter into the debate on Motion 506, sponsored by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. The family unit and its well-being are extremely important to me as I feel that no other bond ties the society of this country together more than strong, vibrant families. The family is an important institution to all Albertans. I believe that we as politicians have a responsibility to ensure that we do everything possible to foster environments in which to raise loved, secure, healthy children and strengthen the family. A healthy family means strong communities and a strong country.

While I respect the intent of the hon. member's motion, I am unable to support it for reasons which I will explain. The Canadian family is undergoing a transition, as it has been increasingly for decades. I believe we have come to a point where we need to revisit the role of the state and the development of the family unit. Our government has been committed to the family throughout its mandate and has focused on ensuring its strength in a world that increasingly poses challenges to the nature and the role of the family.

One of the ways in which families have faced an uphill battle is with respect to the financial penalties suffered by one-income families in which one parent stays at home to care for children relative to two-income families where both parents work. For example, a one-earner family with two children currently pays approximately $4,394 in personal income taxes. However, a dual-earner family earning the same gross wage would pay $3,332, or almost $1,000 less. Obviously, this type of differential tax scheme has a clear financial effect on one-earner families as they put less money in their pockets at the end of the year.

It also has a negative psychological effect, essentially telling one-earner families that we do not value the role of the stay-at-home parent as much as the wage-earning parent. The lower dependent spouse exemption rate particularly sends this message. We have been implicitly influencing the choice for many families instead of leveling the playing field so that they are free to weigh all the factors and make this decision for themselves.

I appreciate that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar shares this concern and wishes to ensure that one-income families are not penalized financially for making the sacrifice to one's career or to that of a new car or to a greater vacation in order to focus on the health and well-being of the children in that family. Indeed, I think we would all appreciate that the workday of the stay-at-home parent is from 8 a.m. one day to 8 a.m. the next day.

The financial penalization of single-income families is a problem that has long concerned this government and has been addressed in a clear and significant manner with the introduction of the new flat tax regime, which will come into effect next year. Starting next January 1, the tax system will be leveled for one-income and two-income families where incomes are equal. First and most importantly, the personal and spousal exemption rates will increase substantially and will also be equalized. In other words, a two-income family earning $50,000 a year will pay the same amount of provincial income tax as a single-earner family earning $50,000.

In 1998 the Alberta Tax Review Committee was established to review personal income taxes in our province. The committee listened to the views of Albertans through a consultation process and a number of background papers. The committee heard arguments on both sides of the issue of differential tax treatment between single- and dual-earner families. Two positions essentially emerged from this debate. One view expressed was that the differential between dual- and single-income families earning the same gross wage was too large, placing an unfair burden on single-income families. This camp also argued that incentives for child care services encouraged nonparental rather than parental child care. This position made up the majority of views heard by the Tax Review Committee.

However, I must cover the other side of the debate. They had less of a problem with this taxation differential, arguing that this differential is more than offset by the increased costs of child care expenses when both parents work as well as the increased transportation, wardrobe, and other costs that come with the dual-earner lifestyle. Their position is essentially that there is value in dual-income families, including the increased independence of each spouse should anything happen to the family unit and the ability to contribute to pension plans and, further, that society should not discourage highly skilled spouses from entering the workforce.

Eventually the committee recommended that Alberta move to a new flat tax system, wherein individual and spousal exemptions would now be the same. This goes a great way to leveling the playing field for single- and dual-income families.

Another significant benefit of the new tax plan is that it leaves more money in the hands of families and individuals to make their own choices and handle their money as they see fit. Albertans will see their taxes drop by $852 million per year by 2001, a benefit which all Albertans will experience regardless of their levels of income.

Another exciting aspect of the new tax system is the benefit which low-income Albertans and their families will experience. In effect, about 132,000 low-income Albertans will be exempt from paying any provincial income tax, and the rest will see their taxes reduced. A two-parent family, whether single- or dual-income, earning less than $31,000 per year will pay no provincial income tax at all.

I will be extremely pleased to see Bill 18, which will enshrine the initiatives I've just described into law, pass in this House and come into force in time for the new year.

We also need to remember that in terms of support, such as subsidies or deductions for child care, stay-at-home parents do not incur such costs and thus don't need to be compensated for child care.

A proposal to essentially pay parents to remain at home, though, is not the answer. First, who is to pay such a wage, Mr. Speaker? It seems that it would be robbing Peter to pay Paul, as inevitably such a scheme would penalize Albertans who work outside the home at the expense of those who work within the home. To compensate stay-at-home parents with an amount that would be fair is extremely difficult as well. Who can value the cost of a parent's love and nurturing? I also question whether there would be any net benefit from this or whether it would be a purely symbolic move, which would simply add much bureaucracy without much else, as the old family allowance plan used to do.

In 1997 the Provincial Treasurer introduced the Alberta family employment tax credit, the result of extensive public consultation and consideration. The end result of that: $35 million were put back in the pockets of Albertans who need it most, working families with children. This program has two objectives: to support children in low-income and middle-income families and to provide an incentive for the parents of these children to work. The Alberta family employment tax credit supports families both financially and through encouraging healthy values and stability. It provides tax credits to approximately 130,000 Alberta families annually. Under the program a family may receive $250 per child up to a maximum of $500. In order to qualify for the program, the family's working income must exceed $6,500.

We need to establish a level playing field, Mr. Speaker, and ensure that the choices are open to parents, regardless of whether one parent chooses to stay home to look after the children or both are involved in the workforce full-time. I think the family employment tax credit is a great initiative that helps families, an initiative that does not discriminate between single-earner families and dual-earner families. A family with a net income of less than $26,000 can receive all the service I mentioned absolutely free for as many as four children.

Mr. Speaker, the government offers another program to low-income families. The Alberta children's health benefit is a premium-free health benefit plan that provides dental, optical, emergency ambulance, essential diabetic supplies, and prescription drug coverage for children living in families who have low incomes.

It is important to note these things as we debate this motion, because it's so easy to get caught up in the negativity. Like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar we all want more for our children. On that point I'm sure we are all in agreement, and I guess here I would like to include the word grandchildren.

It's important to note some of the positive initiatives that have been happening in this province for years and that essentially make this motion redundant. We must recognize that our government has taken significant steps towards helping single-earner families in this province. Budget 2000 is a tremendous milestone for the province and a great benefit to the working poor. That's why I can't support this motion. I imagine that when the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was considering this motion idea, Budget 2000 still hadn't been tabled. Given the flat tax proposal included in this latest budget and some of the initiatives this government currently has in place, Motion 506 seems particularly unnecessary.

I appreciate the opportunity to rise today in this House to speak to Motion 506. I think the intent of the motion is well meaning, and certainly this is a situation that needed to be looked at. However, I truly believe that our government has made some significant steps toward addressing this situation and helping those working families that need it most.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to add that the new tax regime is very timely. This economy is moving at a great pace, and Albertans are benefitting. The economy is more diverse now than it ever has been in our history. The plan outlined in Budget 2000 provides a platform from which Albertans can maximize their benefit from this new Alberta economy. We need all hands on deck in order to ensure we keep moving in the right direction. Tax laws that keep people at home against their better judgment should be done away with. Likewise, tax laws that keep people working against their better judgment should be eliminated. We need to foster an environment of choice in Alberta, an atmosphere that attracts the best and brightest from other provinces and countries, and we want them to bring their children.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, while I commend the spirit behind the motion from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I am unable to support Motion 506 for the reasons I have stated. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to be able to take the opportunity to speak for a minute or two about Motion 506. I'd like to read the motion so that people get it clear exactly what the intent is.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to demonstrate its recognition of the contribution made by parents who stay at home to care for their children by providing support equal to that received by parents choosing other child care options.

Now, that is not asking for a wage for stay-at-home parents. I see it as asking to have tax exemptions and tax considerations based on fairness. I like to look at all issues on the issue of fairness.

You know, it's interesting. As a woman who had young kids in the early – of course, they're still young, and so am I. [interjections] I knew I'd wake some of them up. I had preschool children in the late '70s, early '80s. It was interesting what people would say to you. You know, they would say, "Are you just at home?" "No. I'm raising my children at home." For a while there I was working full-time.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: I wouldn't want to be at home with you.

MRS. SOETAERT: Who doesn't want to be at home with me? Ah, the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky. He's afraid to be at home with me, but I serve a mean cup of coffee. Come on over, and we'll have a little discussion about policy.

AN HON. MEMBER: Serious mistake.

MRS. SOETAERT: A serious mistake on his part.

On the motion, through the chair, as always, Mr. Speaker. Where was I?

You know, when you're an at-home mom, people come up to you and say, "Oh, you're just at home," belittling that role. Then for a while I was working full-time with preschoolers. "Oh, you're working full-time?" Now you're a neglectful mother. Then you try working part-time. "Oh, trying to be everything for everybody; are you?" You know, for a while there a woman couldn't win. It didn't matter if you were at home, if you were part-time, if you were full-time. You were criticized by society, not by all society but certainly by some, by many.

I would like to think, now that we're in the new millennium, that people are more accepting. [interjections] I can hardly wait to hear their debate.

MS BLAKEMAN: Why is it that it's all the men that are heckling?

MRS. SOETAERT: It's all the men that are heckling me, which is rather interesting in itself; isn't it? Where was I? It's so seldom I lose my train of thought. I was inviting people over for coffee. Cancel that. I'm too busy this week but maybe once session is out.

Society I think, I hope, is being more accepting of all the roles that women play. Parenting, being a mother and being a father, everyone in here agrees, those of us who have children, that that's the most important thing in our lives. Nothing comes before that. But the reality of the world is that some choose to stay home, some have the ability to stay home, some don't have the choice, some choose to work. That is the reality of our world. I'd like to think that it's more accepted now that those are choices that we give not just men but women in our society.

In fact, you know, when I go to talk to some of the school groups, we talk about the number of women in the Legislature. [interjection] Well, half of our caucus is women but generally in the whole Assembly it certainly isn't equal numbers of women.

I say: why aren't more women in politics? I'm not going to give you some of their answers because that would start a debate in itself. It's always lively. One of the things I ask too: do you think the role of men as parents, as child care providers, as nurturers is changing? I think it is. If you ask those students, "How many of your dads cook," you know, lots of them put up their hands. If you say, "How many of them clean," there are a few less that put up their hands, but nonetheless there's a good portion. Now, here's the cruncher though. Here's the real test: how many of your dads do laundry? Oh, the hands go down. Regretfully, the hands go down considerably. It's fine for the men. I guess maybe it's good for the dry cleaners down the road. I don't know.

MS CARLSON: Peter does laundry.

MRS. SOETAERT: I'm glad the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne does laundry. That's why he has two different coloured socks on, I guess, sometimes. I'm almost short of wind over here, Mr. Speaker.

Back to the motion. The point I was trying to make is that I think this new generation of dads is far more nurturing and far more involved in their families than my dad was. [interjection] Oh, we see; Calgary-Montrose is hoping to be a father. Maybe there's news that could be announced in the Assembly someday. I don't know. We're hoping for you. We'll make him a little Liberal.

MS CARLSON: Now he's changed his mind.

MRS. SOETAERT: Now he doesn't want children. Oh, dear.

This is a serious motion that, believe it or not, I'm trying to support despite the banter from the floor. I do believe I've raised some good issues in the reality that many men are doing much more of the nurturing. Many men are choosing to stay home. So this is a motion about families, and those that have the ability or have chosen to stay home just want fairness when it comes to tax exemptions.

I think it is a motion, too, about families, whether you're at home or whether you're working full-time or whether there are two incomes or one income. I know all of us value family and any definition therein of it. We have many single-parent families. We have grandparents raising children. Within all of that we make time for our families, and I think that's key. Time with families is very precious. I know many people in here might not make Sunday commitments in their constituencies because Sunday is a very important family day. I know I try to do that because that's the one time when even my extended family gathers. So the whole concept of time when you're raising children is very important.

I guess I'll end my comments, but I hope I've expressed that this is about fairness, about those who are stay-at-home parents deserving the same tax exemptions as people who aren't at home, whether that be by choice or whether it be out of necessity. People are making lifestyle choices, and it's just an issue of fairness for everyone. I also recognize that society is becoming more accepting of all the lifestyle choices that we choose: the way we choose to raise our families, whether people work part-time, full-time, dual income, one income. I think we all accept that what works for each family works for them. It may not work for me, but it may work for you, and I think we've learned to respect that. I think we've made great strides from when I had preschool children, and I'm glad to see that.

I will be supporting this motion, Mr. Speaker, and I'm hoping that other members will as well. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to enter the debate on Motion 506, introduced by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I believe the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's intention is fair in moving to equalize the tax bill of single- and double-income families, but I believe the hon. member has failed to recognize the innovative and groundbreaking initiative undertaken in the recent provincial budget.

On February 24, 2000, the hon. Provincial Treasurer announced a new and groundbreaking tax system that will become effective on January 1, 2001, a system that will unlink the province of Alberta from the old federal/provincial income tax system. The personal income tax system is where the tax inequity between single- and dual-income families exists. This new system that will be put in place will all but eliminate any tax discrimination that exists between single- and double-income families. This new tax regime will make Alberta the most people-friendly province in the country.

Under the new system both types of families will see their taxes go down, but the single-income family, which includes single parents, will see their taxes go down even more. Mr. Speaker, this initiative lightened the load of all Albertans. The indirect benefactors in all of these changes are the people whom we all here hold dear, and that is the children of Alberta. This initiative may well provide another child care option for many Alberta families, an option that many may not have been able to consider before, and this is good news for Albertans.

Many of us had the benefit of being raised at least in our early years by one parent who stayed at home. I don't want to date myself, but that's the way it was for many of us here. Many of us in this Assembly may believe that it is the best way to bring a child into the world. There are statistics and studies that indicate that there may be truth to this hypothesis. Parent advocacy groups across North America have been very active in promoting early childhood involvement by both parents, particularly since dual-income households have increased in prominence. Their position is supported by many commonly accepted beliefs that children whose parents take an active role in their early development are more socially adjusted.

Even further arguments have been made regarding the need for fathers to be as active in early parenting as mothers. Among others, Dr. Paul Amato of the University of Nebraska demonstrated a direct relationship between children's behaviour and the amount of time and support provided by not just mothers but fathers as well. In fact, Mr. Speaker, there are volumes of social science research that address the issues of early childhood development and the effect of a young child's environment on how that child will function in society as he or she grows up. The findings of these studies are consistent, indicating that the quality of care vis-a-vis a child's development psychologically, emotionally, and intellectually is consistently better when that care is from a parent as opposed to a paid caregiver. No matter what the facility there is no equal for parental care in the child's formative years.

The president of the Canadian Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, Dr. Elliott Barker, has argued that nothing is more important in the world today than the nurturing that children receive in the first three years of life, for it is in these earliest years that the capacity for trust, empathy, and affection originate, and if the emotional needs of the child are not met during these years, permanent emotional damage can occur.

So what is the role of the government of Alberta in all of this? I'm sure that those of us who are parents wish we could spend more time with our children to teach them what we know. Unfortunately, this is a luxury few can afford. Therefore, we must be very careful. The economy of today is dramatically different than it was 30 or more years ago. Dual-income families have arrived in a big way.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not a child care specialist, but I do know that it is important to spend as much time as allowed with my children, but I have to provide for them as well, just like every parent in Alberta should be trying to do, just as many Alberta parents do day to day, and that is part of our Alberta advantage. I think we need to be very clear that those parents choosing to work outside the home or having to work outside the home are recognized for their contribution to the economy. Alberta benefits through everyone who participates in the workforce. We have to ensure that parents know that. Regardless of being single- or double-income families, they are a valuable asset to this province, and of equal importance as employees, small businesspeople, and professionals is a stay-at-home child caregiver.

Mr. Speaker, in 1992 it was the Premier who began building the policy framework for a caring yet unintrusive government. This framework has led to unlimited opportunities for Albertans. It has also allowed our present status as one of the most vibrant jurisdictions in the world. Albertans pride themselves on that. They also pride themselves on being a fair province.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has now concluded.

Bill 7
Alberta Science, Research and Technology
Authority Amendment Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate March 14: Mrs. Soetaert]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to put my comments on the record on Bill 7, the Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority Amendment Act, 2000. In general, I think I am in support of this bill as it stands right now, but we do have a few issues and some questions that I would like to speak to as I go through my comments here.

First of all, I just want to ensure that I'm understanding what happens with this amendment act, and I'm hoping that they can be clarified before we get to committee in terms of ensuring that I'm on the right track. What I think happens here, Mr. Speaker – right now we've got the authority that's a provincial agency that ensures that science policy corresponds to the Ministry of Innovation and Science business plans. As a result of the reorganization that happened back in the spring of '99, new agencies were added to that ministry, and they have to report to ASRA. Bill 7, as I see it, ensures that these new groups also report back through the authority.

As I'm understanding what I read in here, the old agencies that now move within the ministry are the Alberta Oil Sands Technology and Research Authority, that is now known as the energy research institute. The mandate of this new institute is wider, dealing not only with oil sands, as it did formerly, but with other energy-related research. The old research fund, the oil sands technology and research fund, is gone, and the assets are transferred to ASRA. Then there are changes made to the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, now to be known just as the agricultural institute, and that was moved from Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. As we understand it, it will continue to compile and assess and distribute information on aspects of the science and engineering and technology side that relate to agriculture. As I see it, the last change is that the Alberta Forest Research Advisory Council becomes the Alberta forestry research institute, and the forest development research trust fund is transferred to ASRA from the environmental protection and enhancement fund.

All generally good moves as we can see it. Particularly what I like about it is that although the members of these institutes will be appointed by the minister, the board chairs will be elected by members of the Legislature. This is a new idea as we see it and quite welcome. I'm hoping that this opens up the process and that we see some interesting and innovative changes come about. Of course, even better would be elected members or some other forum for the members of the institutes to be put in place rather than simply being appointed by the minister. That always has the appearance of political heavy-handedness in it, so that is always a concern to us.

I would ask a question about that process in terms of how the minister intends to make those allocations. Is there going to be some kind of an open process where the minister calls on related industries in the community for names to be put forward and then in some sort of open and transparent process those people will then be appointed? That would be also very welcomed by this side of the House, if we could see that kind of a process implemented, and would set a precedent that would, I think, be important to the people of the province and altogether supported by all of those who are interested in this process. So if the minister then looks for a wider range of names through which to make the appointments, that would be good.

The minister could take a suggestion from us in terms of going to independent consulting or headhunter companies to get the names of experts in addition to a process where industry members and other related interest groups could put forward names. The appearance and the smell of political patronage is in all cases something that we want to avoid in this Legislature, and unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that hasn't always been the case in the past, so we would look firmly for some sort of independence in this review process as we move forward with these revisions to the bill.

We think that bringing the research funding together under one organization could lead to a number of efficiencies and clear direction with respect to accountability. That's particularly important, because we've undergone a phase in this province with the reorganizations that were done last spring that led to a case of a number of inefficiencies and definitely a lack of direction in terms of accountability and authority.

Over the past year we've heard numerous concerns and complaints from people who work within the various departments about them not knowing who they report to, who they are accountable to, who is to give them direction. Some people have two or three ministers that they're reporting to in the reorganization process, and in fact that's still occurring. So in this case that's also a concern, one that starts to be solved by this process, where we see the research funding coming under one organization.

Hopefully the lines of direction will be clear, and the lines of responsibility and authority will be very clear and will assist those people working within these departments. We would like an update on that at some point, Mr. Speaker, to find out how the process is going and what kinds of improvements they still need to make. That update could come in an interim report. It could be incorporated into the budget planning process with the business plans, where we could see consistent monitoring and benchmarking being done and a degree of detail there that would provide the kind of information that those not intimately involved in the organization would be able to evaluate it by. So what I'm speaking about here is a little more detail than we currently get in the business plans. Once again, this would be an excellent place to explore that opportunity and test out some more valuable and in-depth ways of monitoring efficiencies, direction, and accountability.

We also see where doing this, putting all the research funding under one organization, can lead to greater consistency in fulfilling the goals for research and technology as set out in the business plans. It's been a little bumpy ride to this point. Progress is being made, but definitely there are a couple of areas that we need to take a look at. If you can provide a framework for consistency in fulfilling goals in a research environment, then the research environment itself can thrive. It can focus on what their job is, and that's doing research, and they don't have to worry to such a great extent about the kinds of accountability problems or consistency problems that have happened in the past. What we want to do, Mr. Speaker, is ensure that all areas of research and development in this province can focus completely on their goals and not have to worry about management and organizational practices. So we hope that those are the things that will happen with this, and we look forward to watching them and monitoring the progress.

But we do have a few questions about the progress and the process, Mr. Speaker, and I'll speak to them for a little while. We're wondering to what extent ASRA and the institutes complement businesses and to what extent they will be competitive with business. This is an old problem for this government, where they were previously in the business of being in business and were in direct competition with other producers within the province. We saw how flawed that process was, and this province paid a very high price for doing that.

We take a look at the boondoggles of the past. Let's talk about Swan Hills for a minute. There's a great example, that's still existing, where because of government involvement, because of government underwriting that process in terms of putting in capital dollars to develop the plant and the lands around them, they've given that company an unfair competitive advantage as compared to other competitive companies in not just Alberta but in Canada itself. So what happens is that when industry can see that government is interfering in the process, when they are coming into direct competition with the business sector, then they stop the flow of research and development dollars, Mr. Speaker, and what that does is retard the growth in the province and retard future investment and development, and that can be a real problem. We've seen that.

We had an opportunity a few years ago in this province to leap ahead in terms of the environmental research and development that we were doing, something that clearly falls within the framework of this bill, and because of the kinds of interference the government had in the process at that time, corporations just dried up the dollars and they said: "We're not going there. We're not going to risk placing ourselves into a competitive market where our main competitor is the government, who has unlimited access to resource dollars and doesn't always make the best business decisions based on competitive markets." That isn't any kind of hearsay. We've seen that happen in this province, Mr. Speaker, and everyone in here has been a witness to that process.

The problem, then, in a province like ours, that is so heavily dependent on fossil fuels and other primary kinds of development, like trees and oil and gas, is that we don't see a process developing where we see significant value added, and that becomes a problem in a resource-based economy when the market and the prices fall, and we've seen that. We go through these boom-and-bust cycles all the time, Mr. Speaker. You'd think that after 30 to 50 years of having done that, the governments of the day would have learned, but they haven't seemed to.

This is particularly important when you talk about the research and development side. Here we are moving to a stage where we're consolidating these under one ministry and taking some steps in the right direction, but the past history of this government has the very people, the business sector, concerned about it in terms of what the government is going to do tomorrow. Are they going to be in direct competition, or are they going to keep their research and development side quite different and separate from what business is doing? That becomes very important in terms of value added. We see right now that the biggest concern coming to us from industry is: what is this government doing to support value-added products and the building of value-added products when we are in a boom time period? Now is the time that we have the dollars to spend, that we have the time to sit back and in a visionary kind of process take a look at the long-term research and development aspects of value added.

We can support industry at this stage by creating an environment for value-added products to flourish, and this is the time to do it, when we have the money, not two or three or four years down the road when the cycle bottoms out and we once again do not have the kind of cash flow to support basic programming in this province let alone the research and development side. So now the government has a real opportunity, a window of opportunity, to move forward in this regard and ensure that the practices that they're putting in place with the amendments to this bill really take us a step further than we ever have been before in this province.

I know that this opportunity can be exploited to the fullest possible extent, but we haven't seen that happening so far, Mr. Speaker. We see the framework being built, but we don't see the fleshing out of that framework happening. I take this from two conversations I've had in the past month with businesspeople in this province, businesspeople who are self-professed Conservatives who in most regards support this government on all sides, except they see that this government doesn't get it in terms of the necessity to support the building of value-added products at this time.

It isn't good enough to just put the framework in place for the research and development. They have to ensure that they're going to provide an environment where that research and development can really take off. One of the ways that they can do that is by reassuring the business community that they will not be in competition with them. So that's a real problem.

In the past ASRA has definitely been seen as a competitor as they focus more on commercial operations rather than policy. The focus of this organization should be facilitating research and as a funding agency to facilitate research. So once they focus on the commercial operations side rather than policy, we get into trouble. That's a basic policy decision that this government has made in the past that needs to be addressed, and this bill would be an opportunity to address that policy decision and to give some clear direction on where the government intends to go. So I am expecting sometime during this debate that we will have the sponsor of this bill and perhaps some of the ministers who have a direct interest in terms of their portfolios stand up and address that.

The business community needs to know beyond a shadow of a doubt that they will not be competing with this government on commercial operations at any point in time. They need to know beyond a shadow of a doubt that this is a policy-focused institute that facilitates research and provides the funding for that research, nothing more and nothing less, and that they give wholehearted support to funding and facilitating research with a focus on value-added products, which is the basic framework. Well, let's put the meat on the bones here and put some confidence into the business community so that they will come up with matching dollars and support projects and know that in the coming years they can operate in a free market environment without any interference.

That, I think, is a critical issue that needs to be addressed, and I'm hoping that we will see some responses to that soon. Certainly if we haven't seen any responses to this by the time we get to committee, I will be coming back on this topic and will be discussing it, because it's critical to the long-term growth of this province and to us being global competitors. If we don't spend more time facilitating research and industry and helping fund research, we will not be globally competitive, and in fact I think in a number of industries we are already losing the competitive edge that we formerly had. So I hope those questions can be addressed.

Next, I would like to talk about the needs of agricultural research. Are they being met, and will they be met with the amendments under this bill? We know that there's a lot of concern right now that the new institute may be less sensitive to the different regional requirements, and with agriculture it's very important to retain links with the community.

MRS. SOETAERT: Agriculture, that really concerns me too.

MS CARLSON: Well, I'm sure that it really concerns you. It should concern all of us. Agriculture is part of the backbone of the economy in this province, and we have a history of supporting agriculture and agriculture-based families. We need to ensure that they will have the kind of support that they need.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: It's our future, not our past.

MS CARLSON: Well, that's a very good comment, and I'm glad that the minister made it. It's only our future if we help to facilitate research and development in that sector; right?

MR. PASZKOWSKI: I agree with that.

MS CARLSON: He agrees with me. That's great. Mr. Speaker, that doesn't happen too often, but I'm glad to see that we have a meeting of the minds on agriculture from both sides of the House.

Agriculture is a great part of our future, and we need to support it, and we need to ensure that research is supported here in terms of facilitating that and these organizations being funding agencies. So in terms of that, I'm sure that this minister will help address my concern, which is that the new institute may be less sensitive to different regional requirements.

We know the kinds of problems that happen, the sensitivities that there are in those north/south, east/west splits and the sensitivities there are in terms of different agricultural sectors. We need to know and the agricultural community needs to know that they are not going to have any kind of influence by the government that treats different sectors or different regions differently. We want to ensure that fair treatment is available for everybody.

When I travel in northern Alberta, I know that they have a great number of concerns that they may not always get the same kind of focus as sectors in southern Alberta. We see that happening all the time in tourism. Those people from that sector have a very valid concern, so I'm hoping that the same thing doesn't happen in agriculture.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really pleased to have the opportunity to rise and speak at second reading to Bill 7, the Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority Amendment Act, 2000. I have read this bill and was listening to my colleague speak about it. It's an interesting bill. On the surface of it it's actually about something pretty straightforward in that the three agencies that operated under separate umbrellas are now being brought together; that is, the Alberta Oil Sands Technology and Research Authority, the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute – now, that one gets a new name out of this too, becoming the agricultural institute – and the Alberta forest research council, which becomes the Alberta forestry research institute, are all being brought under this Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority Amendment Act.

I take it that this is to help co-ordinate the government's policy and assistance to these research sectors of agriculture, forestry, and energy but also to revamp the reporting structures. Yes, these agencies are given direction by the minister, but the reporting for it will also come back through it. That I always find really interesting.

As some of the members know, I sit on the Public Accounts Committee. While I wish that we weren't examining public accounts that were quite so far behind us, nonetheless it's a very interesting experience. One of the issues that the Auditor General has repeatedly raised is the reporting of agencies, boards and commissions, and delegated administrative organizations. In a lot of cases the government has made choices to download responsibilities onto, particularly, delegated administrative organizations, and then there seems to be a bit of a problem in the accountability factor coming back. Some of that criticism can also be placed on the agencies, boards, and committees. I'm not sure how these institutes would be classified, either as a DAO or one of the agencies, I suppose. But the point is that if there's taxpayer money going into an entity, there should be strong governance that is set up, responsible governance, and there should be a very clear direction of policy, what they're following, a good evaluation process.

There needs to be accountability that is brought right back through to the Legislature and therefore to the people of Alberta on how the money is spent and what it's being used for and that this is good value for money for Albertans. I know that this has been a struggle for the government, to create a good system that works, and I hope that what's being proposed through this legislation will assist in that and that we will have strong accountability, because there can be a lot of money in research, particularly around information technology. It seems to be a growing field.

A couple of other things that I had a few questions about as I went through it. It's sort of done in three parts that are all more or less the same: one for the agricultural institute, one for forestry, and one for energy. In each case "the Minister must designate a member who is a member of the Legislative Assembly" as the chairperson of the institute. Then someone else from the board becomes the vice-chair. I think this is worth noting. I guess the questions that I'm asking to the minister responsible for the act are: then I take it that this person is also paid an additional sum of money as the chairperson of this committee, and will the money for the payment of that salary be coming out of the institute's budget? I know that a number of members chair committees and I think are paid – it's set out in the Standing Orders – an additional $15,000 or something a year, and I'm wondering if that's what's happening here.

Second to that, the minister is appointing no fewer than three and no more than 11 members to these institutes. I'd like to hear back from the minister whether the PAO directive that was established and in fact brought forward by the Premier in 1992 is being followed in the recruitment, selection, and training of members of the public or of related industry being appointed to this board. I think it's really important that there is good representation and that we have the most qualified people available that we're able to recruit as essentially volunteers.

There is a designation in the bill that institute members would be reimbursed for travel expenses and I think a per diem. Yeah, they're paid remuneration and receive reasonable traveling expenses, but for many of these people the per diem is not equivalent to what they'd be earning in their real lives or in their professional lives. So in some ways I suppose we could consider them volunteers, but I think it's important that we do get those that are most highly qualified. I for one would not want to see the government in a position where they were being accused of using these as patronage posts. I dearly hope that wouldn't happen here, seeing as we're sort of starting over with the designations about how the minister appoints people to the boards, and we do have the PAO directive that is available. I'm hoping that's going to be followed, and perhaps the sponsor of the bill could speak to that.

I did have one question in that I note – and I'm sure there's a very simple explanation for this – that in each case it's mentioning that the Regulations Act does not apply to the bylaws that are put together for the individual institutes, and I'm wondering what the reason is behind that. I would just appreciate the minister explaining that one.

I've talked about the fact that these three agencies are coming together, in some cases getting reconfigured a bit, to sit under the Alberta science, research, and technology department. I'm also wondering about the limitations or the restrictions or perhaps the criteria of the research that's being done. It's quite clear in the bill that each of these institutes is responsible for – oh, there's a bunch of typical language here, and I don't want to get specific about it because we are in second reading of the bill – assessing and compiling information on science, engineering, or technology specific to energy or forestry or agriculture, those being the three institutes under this bill now.

I'm wondering. When you talk technology, is there an anticipation or a vision that that includes technology or – what's the other word that's being used right now? Intellectual knowledge I think it's called.

MRS. SOETAERT: Property.

MS BLAKEMAN: Property. Thank you.

As an Albertan I appreciate and I really value research, and I'm glad to see that there is a very strong proponent for research and technology on the bench opposite. I think we're way past time where we needed to be putting some real money into these areas, because it is the future for us. But I'm also a little worried that we are driving down a road that says for development of gizmos only. It's a very narrow focus. The expectation is that these institutes would come up with research or would invent very specific little products. I guess that's part of what's meant by value added these days. My concern is: where is the balance for this? Was the minister anticipating in the wording of putting these institutes together that research in the social sciences or humanities or even the fine arts would be incorporated as part of these? In the language that I'm reading, it doesn't seem to be the case. I'm just looking for clarification on that, because if it is that narrowly focused, I have a concern.

You know, there's been a very good argument put forward by those in our academic institutions – and that's what they're to do after all – that we need to value our general arts and our social science academics and the research and the thinking, the new thinking that they bring forward. Certainly I think most of us are familiar with the arguments that, you know, everyone had to have a very specific kind of MBA. Everybody had to have an MBA, and that's the only way that you were ever going to be successful in the business world. In fact, what we know now is that large companies and even small ones are coming back into the universities looking for someone that has a better mix, that they have perhaps a general arts degree and some management training as well or perhaps even accounting because that wider training, that wider realization of what's out there in the world brings you a better product in the end.

So I guess I am looking for that definition of how narrowly focused each of these institutes is, and if it is to be that narrowly focused, then I am urging the minister to broaden their horizons and think a little bigger. I think it's of more benefit to us in Alberta to bring in all the possibilities, and that does include the thinking and research and exploration that's happened in the humanities and social sciences, for example. Certainly those are the areas where we've had the most leaps forward in understanding institutional change, and that's also part of what we're grappling with here. How do we redesign these groups or agencies, the style of management, the way we've done research for so long? It's not working for us anymore. So how do we redesign it to take us forward? I think it's important to pull from those areas that do specialize in that sort of organizational thinking to bring their expertise into it.

Part of that is also language. If we're looking at a global economy – yes, English is very widely used, but it is not the only language in the world – and if we are really trying to compete in a global marketplace, then language becomes very important. I'm wondering, in all of this thinking and reconfiguring of these institutes, where that sort of component could be found or where the encouragement of that would be found.

So I've talked about my concerns around the appointments process to the different institutes. I don't know if I have a concern that the chairperson is always going to be a Member of the Legislative Assembly. I suppose that could be a very reasonable thing, but it certainly does narrow us if we're looking for leadership in a particular field. Otherwise, it just sounds like we're going to appoint whichever MLA has sought or found favour with the minister to head up these institutes and without any particular background or interest or ability that they're bringing to that very specific institute. So I have some hesitations around that. As well, I was asking about the budget to pay for that person. Will there be the typical $15,000 plus change taken out of the budgets to pay for the top-up to the MLA's salary on that?

Those are the questions that I really wanted to bring forward to have answered. I think overall I'm very supportive of the direction that the government is taking with research. I have made the points that I think research needs to be more widely defined and certainly should not be leaving humanities and social sciences and fine arts out in the cold. I don't think that's going to serve any of us very well. So if the minister is not going to pursue that, I'd be interested in hearing whether there are any initiatives on the government side to be upholding and strengthening research and development in those areas, either in partnership with universities and colleges or outside of those.

So with those comments and observations and questions, I thank you for the opportunity to speak to the bill. At this point I believe that I'm going to be supporting it, and I certainly do commend the Minister of Innovation and Science and technology for his enthusiasm in helping this government come into the 21st century.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, sir. This is one of those bills that I really do like. There are not many that come through this House that would jar me to my feet to support the government on this particular matter. I have to again compliment the minister for his energy which he has put into this ministry and for his newfound ways of spending some of the government's money very wisely.

We will remember that in this House in 1993 that particular member, a private member at the time, sat in the back. I don't think they called them the Nix Six, but they might well have been because they were not overly complimentary about anybody's performance in the Legislature. That particular member was most adamant that the government should not spend any money on virtually anything. He has found a place where investment is warranted, and he has done it well.

This particular bill, with the amalgamation and bringing under one roof the direct research in some fundamental areas of science in the province of Alberta, is more than welcome. I suspect it will give some better focus to some research in the areas that are outlined in the bill and will provide, hopefully, a co-ordination of those overlapping areas. They're all engineering and science related obviously, but sometimes they slide from one area of technology into another, and the co-ordination there is most rewarding when it is done in a fashion that fosters all the growth in the areas.

Now, there are some concerns in the pure scientific community that this agency may – I wouldn't expect that it would, but it may – focus so much upon the commercialization, on that end of technology, that it loses sight of the fundamental research. In my particular area of expertise in engineering there has been a great deal of research recently in the nature of materials. That has to be done in test labs and at universities and is in fact done in the universities, but there is the application of the science that goes from that to a commercialization. This agency or the agencies under this particular act will hopefully facilitate a lot of that.

Now we turn to some of the areas that seem to be and hopefully will be managed rather well. I've noted that there's a gentleman by the name of Darwin Park, I believe. I don't want to insult the man, but I can't recall the name of the firm that he's with. He is a principal in the firm, and his job is to interview and to find throughout the province of Alberta and perhaps beyond – I'm not sure what the mandate is – board members. He has written to all members to search for those. I've responded with some suggestions, and I'm sure he will find those Albertans that are interested in this area and have a great deal of expertise in the area, having grown in their business through this province and through the wealth of this province and in the hinterland, on the edge of new technologies all the time. We recognize that the science of oil sands was entirely invented right here in Alberta.

You'll note that a great deal of the innovations in downhole drilling are grown right here. You'll note that today there is still the higher end technology of oil recovery shipped all over the world from points just south of here. Nisku is a noted example of shipping that kind of technology everywhere. Well, that kind of technology is fostered, yes, by economic activity but often needs a bit of a catalyst at times to explore the areas and push that envelope of knowledge just that much further, and there is some risk. There's no question about risk, that oftentimes a channel of thought or a potential innovation just simply doesn't work. But if you don't take that step to find that, then you're forever held back at a level that is status quo. Certainly that hasn't been the history of Alberta, and it certainly hasn't been the history of those that are involved in science and technology in this province.

This province has one of the stronger engineering societies, and they're always looking for innovation and trying to foster that growth within their membership. They do a great deal of work in the foundations trying to get young people interested in the sciences, and through I think it's Mr. Gray from Calgary, that started an institute that does precisely that, they disseminate that interest in the sciences at the grade 8, grade 9 levels, where students are starting to look beyond just that which is being taught in their curriculum and to find out what areas they do have a little more interest in than others and a little better knowledge. They start pushing that, pushing their teachers, and finding that actually they are not that far away from research capabilities, and that of course goes through high school. Then, of course, we get to universities, in which we have an abundance of really good talent in this province.

I don't want to digress much from the research, but one of the problems I've always had with the funding of universities in this province is that element of research. It was not and is not in the criteria for funding. It was, yes, included, but a small element, and in order to qualify for the grants programs and for the additional moneys to continue these programs, it was publish, publish, publish. Well, having spent a little time in the field myself, I find that publishing, while it may be a gauge for some, certainly is not in the hard sciences, where you're dealing with basic research, where you're dealing with the nature of matter and trying to build from the microelement into an action and reaction on a much larger scale.

Well, if that elementary/basic research is not done, then the building blocks are simply not there for different end research that is being more applied. You'll note that the geophysics and geology in this province have led the world in deep hole exploration and drilling. That all comes from two universities that have very, very qualified staff in these areas, not only in teaching, but they do a lot of research too. That's where the fundamental science comes in. Having a testing ground close at hand and having co-ordination bodies through industry certainly makes the discovery in these areas of science much, much easier.

The transition between the base research at the university and the application of the research has always been a bit difficult in this province. The ARC, Alberta Research Council, has been in that business for a long time, but they have a limited resource. When they strike out to advance in an area, it takes a great deal of time to build that area. Once built, it's logical to continue that. Well, those areas have to be limited.

AOSTRA was a great vehicle for furthering knowledge in oil sands, but it didn't do and hasn't done a lot of that transition work from the fundamental science to application science in other areas of energy, notably natural gas discovery and separation and natural gas measurement. You'll recognize that one of the big difficulties with shipping natural gas is to measure it, because it's all measured in cfm, or cubic metres. That's a measurement difficulty, to measure the quantities of solution gas and higher level gas. That's been a recent innovation right here in Alberta using fundamental science, using some venturi principles and some other higher end gauging. Well, those are the kinds of things that would not and could not be marketed throughout the world if there wasn't a vehicle to fund these areas. That appears to be what the intent of this bill is, and that's in fact what the minister is saying it is.

Agriculture research. Being a city fellow, I guess there are a number of things I don't know about that area, but I do know some. I do know that durum wheat basically built the whole of western Canada by extending the growth in a shorter period of time and by producing that very, very hard wheat that is marketable and is some of if not the best in the entire world for both nutrition and for working in the hammer mill.

The advances in oilseeds are second to none in the world. Between Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta you find the best of science in those areas, and it has changed a great deal of the production in the province of Alberta. I know there are a number of experts in this House that know a great deal about the production of oilseed, because they have in fact been in the business at different times.

The forestry industry has had a major boom since about 1980. The research there, particularly boreal forest research, is most necessary and should be ongoing. The innovations in pulping have expanded the extent of the potential harvest in this province far beyond what anyone would have expected in the '60s and '70s or even the early '80s. It has been a boon to a lot of good industry in this province.

There are, of course, some areas that I'm a little concerned with. There's a portion of the bill that speaks of ownership, that all of the ownership of the discoveries in whatever form – patent, copyright, technology, and the like – will and shall be owned by the Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority.

There's another portion, too, that talks about an agreement between those that are doing the inventing, if you will, and the authority. Well, that has some difficulties, because a great deal of the work has to be contracted, of course, and if there is no agreement in place to share the proceeds, as it were, then the incentive for the science agency that is putting out this work – it would be darn difficult to attract them. Hopefully the government is not in the business of being in this business except to foster growth, so that there is, yes, a reasonable royalty on some discovery of science that can in fact be marketed, but here's hoping that the authority will not hamper the growth of science simply by looking to have the hand out to have some kind of payback.

This member believes that this piece of legislation is a good investment. There's painfully little that is returned in the way of royalties or patent rights or the like. That would be just fine with this member and would allow the industry to fully take hold of the possibilities allowed in this bill and really work with it.

Mr. Speaker, one of the concerns that the oil sands operators had with the research funds being shared with the entire energy sector was that they would be shortchanged. Well, I don't believe that to be the case. Quite frankly, they are all substantive operators. There are a number of them in the business now. It's not like the early days of the Great Canadian Oil Sands and those that had a tough time scratching out a dollar or two. Recently they have been doing exceptionally fine, being able to produce a barrel for in the order of $14 to $15 and get it to market at that rate, and with plus 20 dollar a barrel oil they are doing really, really quite well.

The innovation in oil sands is heavy field work, because in fact it is all cost-related. It does not have a lot to do with innovation and science. It has more to do with the economics of production and not with the oil sands. So I have a little difficulty with their arguments, particularly in the energy sector, from wind to solar right through all the oils and all the gases and through the further production. That's where research is required. That's where there has to be innovation.

In summary, I'd like to again say that this piece of legislation, if enacted properly and instituted as it seems it shall be under the guidance of the minister and the energy of the minister, can be an exceptionally fine example of how government can be a catalyst for long-term growth in this province. Quite frankly, I'm quite happy to speak to it and speak in favour of it.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to adjourn debate on the matter at present.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:24 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 4, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/04/04

[The Speaker in the chair]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness it is my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 11, the Alberta Health Care Protection Act.

I would like to begin by thanking you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing this debate to be televised and for facilitating the broadcast. This evening, Mr. Speaker, I address not only you and Members of the Legislative Assembly but also thousands of Alberta families who are watching at home. Televising this debate will give many Albertans a chance to see their Legislature at work. It reminds them and us here as well that the Legislature is both the seat and symbol of representative democracy in this great province of ours. From Acme to Zama, from Olds to Youngstown, from Brownvale to Red Deer, Albertans in every community of this province elect men and women to come to this Chamber and speak for them.

It was in this tradition of democracy that hundreds of men and women have been elected in the 95 proud years of Alberta's history. It was in this tradition that Albertans sent William Aberhart from Okotoks-High River. It was in this tradition that Albertans sent W.W. Cross from Hand Hills and Peter Lougheed from Calgary and Grant Notley from Spirit River and Helen Hunley from Rocky Mountain House and Laurence Decore from Edmonton. It is in this tradition that we gather to debate the business of today and, Mr. Speaker, that business is Bill 11.

I think it most appropriate that here under the eyes of Albertans is where this bill will be debated, among the 82 of us privileged to serve. Normally, as you know, Mr. Speaker, there would be 83, but as Albertans know, the Assembly currently has one vacancy due to the resignation of Pam Barrett, the former Member for Edmonton-Highlands. I would like to take this opportunity to express my thanks to Pam for her years of effective service to this Assembly and to her constituents.

As I said at the outset, this is the best place to debate Bill 11, and I quote the Leader of the Official Opposition, who said in a news release in November that she wanted the debate to be held right here on the floor of the Legislature. Well, Mr. Speaker, tonight that debate begins. Tonight in the time allotted to me, I want to explain why the Alberta Health Care Protection Act is needed, what it will achieve, and how it protects the publicly funded health system. I will also answer head-on the most common criticisms of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks and months many Albertans have asked: why do we need Bill 11? What is Bill 11 all about? There are those who say that Bill 11 will destroy the public health care system as we know it today. They say that it is the first step on the slippery slope to a two-tiered system, where the rich can buy better and faster service than the rest of us, but there is no reason, there is no motive, no rationale under the sun that could explain why my colleagues and I would set out to destroy the Alberta health care system. We all need it. Why would we make it our mission to destroy something that we, our families, our friends, our constituents all need and rely upon? We need the public system to be there for us too.

Mr. Speaker, although some have tried hard to assign sinister motives to this bill, there are two simple purposes to Bill 11, a bill that in fact is being brought forward as the result of requests by the Alberta College of Physicians and Surgeons and by the federal Minister of Health asking for legislation to regulate the activity of surgical facilities in this province. The two purposes of the bill are straightforward. Bill 11 will protect the public health care system and give us one more tool to use in our efforts to drive down waiting lists and waiting times that only prolong pain and suffering. Both those goals are what motivated this government to draft this bill. There are no other motives.

Tonight I want to speak to both of those purposes, starting with the second one. Mr. Speaker, we have to try and find new ways to reduce waiting lists. All Premiers, all health ministers in all provinces including the federal Health minister have said that the status quo is not an option. Too many Albertans have to wait months or even a year or more for surgery, and that is unacceptable in a province that devotes one of every three dollars in its budget to health care. Albertans deserve more for their health dollar. The money is there, and unlike the federal government, our government has restored every penny cut from health in the mid-1990s. In fact, we've restored almost three pennies for every penny cut, three dollars for every dollar.

There are people who simply say: spend more on health care. In fact, we are now spending a billion dollars a year more on health care than we were five years ago, and we are further increasing health spending by another 20 percent over the next three years. That will be over $15 million a day, $15 million a day being spent on health care.

So the money is there, and our regional health authorities are already working hard with that money to reduce waiting lists in a variety of ways. They are trying to reduce demand on hospitals by providing other less expensive alternatives to hospital care such as home care and long-term care. They are trying to reduce pressure on emergency wards with community-based primary care clinics like the Crowfoot Village family practice in Calgary and the Northeast health centre in Edmonton. Health authorities are recruiting more doctors, nurses, technicians, and other frontline workers. They are opening existing wards and beds so that more surgeries can be done, and they're opening new hospital facilities such as the new pediatric intensive care unit at Edmonton's Royal Alexandra hospital, which incidentally will open next month.

But more money alone is not the answer. Even Allan Rock says that more money is not the answer. It would help, but it's not the total answer. We also need to give our regional health authorities more choice and flexibility under the Canada Health Act. Bill 11 will allow health authorities one more tool to use in their effort to improve access to health care for all Albertans. The option is contracting out of minor – and I stress “minor” – surgical services.

Why should we allow this option? Mr. Speaker, medical advances are making it possible to do an increasing array of procedures safely and conveniently outside the full-service hospital. The fact is that today people don't require hospital admission for many minor surgeries that only a few years ago might have required hospitalization. Contracting out is nothing new. There are now 52 surgical facilities in Alberta performing more than 20,000 procedures a year within a range of 156 different procedures. Those procedures range from therapeutic abortions to cataract removal to varicose vein stripping, all services that used to be done only in hospitals.

Alberta is not alone in this. There are surgery centres doing minor procedures within the public health system in British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec, and perhaps other jurisdictions as well. Contracting out minor surgeries has relieved pressures on hospitals by freeing up operating rooms and beds for more complex surgeries. For example, by contracting out cataract surgeries, the Calgary regional health authority has freed up thousands of hours of operating room time for other procedures every year. Approximately 6,000 cataract surgeries are done in Calgary in clinics. As the authority itself reports, every hour of surgery that's contracted out is an hour available in the hospital to meet demand. Over 90 percent of clinic patients report being satisfied or very satisfied with the service they received.

In Edmonton, for example, renowned dermatologist Dr. Don Groot performs removals of the common birthmark known as port-wine stains. Dr. Groot performs about 500 of these surgeries each year in his own clinic under contract to the Capital regional health authority and at no cost to the patients. If Dr. Groot were forced to perform his work in public hospitals, he would be taking up operating room space in hospitals that would otherwise be used for other procedures. It would also mean that his patients would lose the convenience of a specialized community-based facility and instead would have to go through all the complicated steps required for hospital admission.

We can look outside Alberta for other success stories as well. A Vancouver area health region decided last year to follow the Calgary example and contract out cataract surgeries to surgical clinics. According to the North Shore health region, in the first six months of the contracts the move has resulted in a 13 percent drop in surgical waiting times at the region's Lion's Gate hospital. It's reduced the waiting list for cataract surgery by 29 percent, and it's freed up 28 surgical hours per week at regional hospitals.

Contracting out also lets health authorities direct more dollars to patient services instead of capital purchases. It eliminates the need to postpone elective surgery because of more urgent cases, as often happens in hospitals, and believe me, Mr. Speaker, I receive a lot of mail from a lot of people in anguish who have to wait months and, as I said, even a year or more for very serious surgery.

Let's not forget quality of care. Patient surveys show a high level of satisfaction with surgical facilities. Otherwise healthy patients like being able to go to a community-based small facility for minor procedures instead of to a big hospital. Further, surgeons at these facilities are able to become experts in their fields because of their focus on a narrow range of procedures. For example, ophthalmologists in Calgary have developed centres of excellence for cataract removal. In Manitoba surgeons at the Pan Am Sports Medicine Centre in Winnipeg are helping to relieve pressure on that city's hospitals with their expertise in orthoscopic and plastic surgery. Surgeons at the Shouldice hospital in Thornhill, Ontario, are regarded as the best in the world at their craft and have managed to cut in half the time and cost of hernia repair thanks to their expertise.

The Shouldice is but one example of what my colleagues and I have in mind for Alberta: a few surgical facilities focused on a few specialized procedures, working completely within the publicly funded system and available to all Albertans without paying extra and, I would point out, Mr. Speaker, without jumping the queue.

An issue that has arisen with the bill is the matter of overnight stays in surgical facilities. Some people argue that stays of longer than 12 hours at clinics are going too far, that it could create an unsafe situation for patients if something goes wrong during a procedure. Well, Bill 11 makes it clear that no clinic can offer overnight stays unless and until the College of Physicians and Surgeons says it is the safe thing to do.

The bill makes it clear that no clinic may operate without first meeting the high standards of care prescribed by the college.

Appropriately trained physicians and staff must be the only ones providing care. Systems must be in place to deal with emergencies, just as systems are in place when, on rare occasions, something goes wrong in an existing clinic or a dentist's office or a long-term care centre. It's quite simple. The backup systems are there, starting first with an ambulance.

The precedent of overnight stays has been set and very positively, I might add. Again I refer to the Shouldice hospital. At the Shouldice hospital, at that clinic, patients typically stay for two to three days following surgery, but under the supervision of trained and accredited staff. I don't think we should close the door on such clinics operating totally within the publicly funded system and performing only minor surgery, but given the growing scope of opportunity posed by freestanding facilities, we need clear rules in place to govern contracting out. Mr. Speaker, those rules simply do not exist now. Many other provinces already have similar legislation. Bill 11 is our response to that need. It does not force health authorities to do anything. It simply says that if a regional health authority wants to contract out surgery, then here are the rules they must obey.

The rules are as follows. I think this is most important. One, health authorities must abide, without question, by the Canada Health Act. Two, only minor surgeries may be contracted out, meaning that all major surgery must continue to be done only in a hospital. There will be no private hospitals in Alberta. In fact, part 1, section 1 of Bill 11 says, "No person shall operate a private hospital." Three, the patient cannot be charged extra for insured services. Four, queue-jumping is not allowed under Bill 11. No one will be able to buy their way to the front of the line. Five, patients cannot be pressured into buying enhanced services. Six, there must be a need for the service and a benefit to the public. That must be demonstrated beyond a doubt. Seven, facilities must be accredited by the Alberta College of Physicians and Surgeons and approved by the minister. Eight, all contracts must be open and transparent and public.

Most importantly, Mr. Speaker, health authorities will also be expected to make the best possible use of existing hospital facilities before choosing to contract out.

Mr. Speaker, earlier I said that Bill 11 has two purposes. I have talked about one of those purposes: to give health authorities one more tool to use to reduce waiting lists. Now I would like to address the other equally important purpose for which the bill is named, and that is protection of the public health system in Alberta. That's what the bill is all about.

Bill 11 contains five key elements to guarantee protection of the public health care system. Those elements are a commitment to the principles of medicare and the Canada Health Act. Nothing could be clearer. That is the preamble. That is the foundation for the act. Nothing could be clearer: a commitment to a single-tier, publicly funded system in which access is based on medical need and not personal wealth; a commitment to banning private, for-profit hospitals; a commitment to banning private hospitals – that's clear in the bill – a commitment that all facilities providing insured services operate under the umbrella of the public system regardless of who owns them; a commitment to search for new and better ways of doing things, including the establishment of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, chaired by former Deputy Prime Minister Don Mazankowski.

Mr. Speaker, again, the only card that Albertans will need is their health care card. That card is the only card Albertans need to obtain insured services. The only card they will need is their Alberta health care card, not, as the Liberals say, a credit card or a Diners Club card. Their health care card. Nothing more, nothing less. That, sir, will be the law in this province once Bill 11 is passed and proclaimed.

Section 3 of Bill 11 reads:

No person shall give or accept any money or other valuable consideration for the purpose of giving any person priority for the receipt of an insured surgical service.

That's very simple, Mr. Speaker. It means no facility fees, no queue-jumping, no paying out of your own pocket to get an insured health service. Anyone who tells Albertans any different either misunderstands the bill or has chosen to deliberately misrepresent it.

Under Bill 11 this protection of the single-tiered system will be the law in Alberta, a law not subject to the whim or trustworthiness of me or of the Minister of Health and Wellness or of any member of the Legislative Assembly. Quite simply, the law provides fines of up to $10,000 each and every time this law is violated. I don't know how we could pass stronger legislation to prevent queue-jumping or a two-tiered system. I don't think any physician is going to risk $1,000 or $10,000 a shot to break the law.

Mr. Speaker, we'll hear a lot tonight about tax dollars being used to subsidize private clinics and about studies of completely different health systems in completely different countries, and I suspect we'll also hear about lawyers and legal opinions and about academics and their journals and reports and all kinds of other things. However, there are no studies on what we are talking about in this bill, which is surgical facilities that specialize in a handful of procedures. The studies are in what has happened in the past with the surgical facilities that are already operating and operating successfully in this province. Those are the studies.

Indeed there is evidence from one end of Canada to the other that these facilities help reduce pressures on the system. I alluded to the situation in Calgary: 6,000 cataract surgeries that used to be done in hospitals, that would have had to be done in hospitals, that are now being done in surgical clinics. I cited statistics from the North Shore health region near Vancouver showing that waiting lists have shrunk significantly following contracting out of cataract surgery. In that same province the Cambie Surgery Centre reports that it performs orthopedic surgeries for 60 percent of the cost of the same procedures in public hospitals. These kinds of statistics point to cost efficiencies but, more importantly perhaps, to relief for patients waiting for minor surgeries.

Ultimately Bill 11 recognizes that no one study or opinion is likely to be true in all cases. The bill, therefore, requires that all contracts demonstrate a measurable benefit to the health system before those contracts are approved. If a particular clinic service doesn't have a net benefit to the system, it won't be approved. Why would it be? It's in no one's interest to waste health dollars, Mr. Speaker.

We will also hear tonight about the North American free trade agreement, or NAFTA. On this matter, too, Albertans can be satisfied that Bill 11 will not require us to open our doors to so-called big American health firms under NAFTA. As long as health care is delivered for the public good, then the system is protected under NAFTA. The proof is in the pudding. There have been private facilities delivering publicly funded insured services throughout Canada for a decade or more, and there has never been one challenge – never been one challenge – under NAFTA to allow American firms into the system.

Above all, none of those academic issues speaks to the central issue that rests at the heart of Bill 11; that is, leaving the door open, open but well guarded, to new options for reducing waiting lists as long as those options are safe and completely respect and adhere to the Canada Health Act.

Mr. Speaker, last month I met with the Prime Minister of Canada on the subject of Bill 11. He did not raise any objections to the bill, nor did he suggest that we withdraw it. In fact, after I reviewed with him the many examples of contracting out and overnight stays currently occurring across Canada, he acknowledged that what Alberta is proposing is similar to what is already happening in other provinces. To that end we agreed that after Bill 11 passes, we will ask the ministers of health from across Canada, including Allan Rock, to review and compare legislation and practices in Canada and report back to the first ministers when they meet this summer or fall.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that a national review of Bill 11 and similar laws in other provinces will be an important step on the road to real, meaningful health care reform in this country, and I would urge every member of this Assembly to take advantage of the opportunity to participate in what has become now a national process. Let each of us work as hard as we can to ensure that Bill 11 is the best possible piece of legislation it can be. Let us work hard to ensure that the letter of Bill 11 is true to its purpose, which is to protect our public health care system while at the same time allowing one more tool for reducing waiting lists.

Before I close, I would like to address some questions to the Leader of the Official Opposition. The Liberals have told Albertans that Bill 11 will lead to a two-tiered, American style health system. They've said that in interviews and advertisements and in this Assembly. They've said that to Albertans, Mr. Speaker, and that is wrong, one hundred percent wrong. But what is the Liberal position? Do the Liberals want existing clinics to be shut down? Who knows? Do the Liberals want patients to be able to pay out of their pockets for insured health care? Apparently yes, because they support private hospitals as long as they don't receive any public funding. But then again, who can be sure what the Liberals think?

With the New Democrats, at least people know where they stand. They want all clinics banned and all current clinics closed. In other words, they want no contracting out whatsoever. They've been consistent, rigid, and unbending perhaps but at least consistent.

As for the Liberals, in their haste to oppose the bill, they have created confusion amongst Albertans. They have also neglected to say what their own position is on the complex questions the health system faces. Therefore, let me ask the Leader of the Official Opposition these questions. Why does she continue to insist that Bill 11 be withdrawn when the federal government has encouraged us to pass it and then work collaboratively on a national review and comparison of legislation across Canada? If surgical facilities are a threat to medicare, as the Liberals allege, why did their leader allow over 30 of them to operate when she was minister of health, and why did she allow them to charge facility fees? Something that was banned after she left government. If surgery centres are a threat to medicare, why has she not raised concerns with her Liberal counterparts in Ottawa about facilities in other provinces that are doing surgery under contract to the public system? Why has she said that the entire bill should be scrapped, unread by Albertans, when the bill enshrines our commitment to the principles of medicare and the Canada Health Act, bans extra billing, prohibits queue-jumping, bans private hospitals, limits contracting out to minor surgeries only, makes it mandatory for contracts to be made public, and leaves medical decisions to physicians? Is she opposed to all of these?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

8:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and participate in this the second reading on Bill 11. And here we go again. For the third time in the three years since the last election the Alberta government has brought forward legislation that will expand the role of private, for-profit health care. At the moment we are discussing Bill 11, legislation which expands the scope of the proposed surgical facilities to allow overnight stays. In the spring of 1998 it was Bill 37 that was introduced and then held over until the fall. Later on that year Bill 37 was withdrawn amid loud and determined opposition by you, the citizens of Alberta. I estimate that we as a Legislature have spent the equivalent of 40 days in this government's futile attempt to push through a solution that the majority of Albertans do not want. Today the governing party's determination to push their privatization is there as the public outcry grows stronger.

Many Albertans have attended town hall meetings, public forums, written letters to the Premier, to the Leader of the Opposition, and to newspapers. Others have signed petitions, attended debates, phoned in to radio talk shows, and protested on the steps of this great Legislature. We have participated in as many of these events and activities as possible, from Athabasca to Fairview, from Lacombe to Lethbridge, from Hinton to Mundare, in Calgary and in Edmonton. It was remarkable to see a hundred concerned people in a rural community and over 800 in a major city. No issue or cause in living memory has provoked such a large number of people from across our province to get involved in public debate over proposed legislation.

In responding to the letters, the e-mails, answering the questions at forums, listening to the government's responses to Albertans' concerns, there is one question that keeps appearing and reappearing, one question that is most frequently asked, one question that remains unanswered. We have just listened to the Premier's address and the question looms even larger. That question is: why? Why is this government so determined to push this through? After all, this government will face an election within a year or two. Normally, governments close to election time avoid contentious and divisive issues. Certainly, governments always back down with a majority of voters so strongly opposed. At least until now they always have. Is it arrogance, is it stupidity, or is it greed?

Health care has been called the electrified third rail of Canadian politics. The current debate and the passions aroused prove that there is no more explosive issue for Canadians than our universal publicly funded health care system. The government would know this from the focus groups, from the blue-ribbon panel, the health summit, the growth summit, the health roundtables, opinion polls: all of which confirm that this issue is one of the most contentious, where opinions are deeply felt by most voters.

The message is clear. Ensure that our health care system is there for us and our children. Make changes if necessary, but never, never threaten our belief that the system will be there when we need it. To do so is to attack a fundamental Canadian value, a sense of identity that we share as Canadians.

In the face of this, why would this government push forward? Why would it spend at least 1 million taxpayer dollars to try to convince us that they are not wrong about Bill 11, dispatching truth squads across this province? Why would they try three times to impose their direction for health care on a suspicious and an unconvinced electorate?

Sometimes the simplest answers are the right ones. One of the ways to determine why people take the actions they do is to look at the flow of money. Everyone knows that money is a very powerful motivating factor. Certainly money was the reason given by this government when cutting 30 percent from the hospital budget in the mid '90s. According to them, there wasn't enough money to finance all the demands for the hospital system, so the publicly funded institutions were starved of the resources they needed to perform their required tasks.

Today operating rooms and entire floors remain in darkness as a result of the cuts. Doctors specializing in surgeries with lengthy waiting lists are limited to a mere three to four days a month of operating room time. In Calgary two public hospitals were sold at fire sale prices to private operators, and one was demolished in an unforgettable televised display. As a result, the system is straining to meet all of the demands of a growing population.

When the Premier says shortages of beds and doctors, waiting lists, crowded emergency rooms, and streams of wealthy Canadians heading to the U.S. for treatment, he is talking about the situation which he created. While there is no evidence of streams of wealthy Canadians heading to the U.S., concerned citizens are more likely to accept this exaggeration because of a perceived crisis. More and more, however, Albertans are remembering that it was this government that created the crisis in the first place.

Now this government is using the shortage of beds, the lack of operating room time, the insufficient number of doctors and nurses, and the lengthy waiting lists as a justification for inviting the private, for-profit operators to come to the rescue. And, amazingly, the Premier has discovered he has the money to pay for-profit operators that could not be found to open beds and operating rooms in the public system. It is an unbelievable degree of arrogance that would allow a Premier of this province to suggest that taxpayer dollars are better spent subsidizing the creation of a private, for-profit tier than they would be in reopening the surplus capacity in our hospitals.

This is the second question heard everywhere at forums and town hall meetings across Alberta: why not utilize the existing capacity of our health care system to the fullest extent? After all, taxpayers have already paid for those perfectly adequate facilities. Nothing the Premier has said today answers this question. Why would the Premier be so eager to put money into the private, for-profit facilities when he is so unwilling to fund the public system?

At various times it's been alleged that the private operators would not be more expensive. Well, how can this be? These operators would have to earn a return on capital of 15 percent compared to a cost of capital in the public system of 5 to 7 percent. For-profit operators would have to pay taxes on any profits earned, as well as property taxes. Administration costs would be higher. Advertising is necessary to promote the growth demanded by shareholders. Private operators would need to buy insurance. The cost of executive salaries would be much higher in the for-profit world. Inevitably these for-profit operations will be much smaller than the public system, losing the important advantage of the economies of scale in purchasing and administration. Every credible study has shown that private, for-profit operations cost more, but the studies do not examine the model proposed by this government since no jurisdiction has ever attempted this particular experiment before. In fact, the government's own funded study of the academic literature, kept secret until yesterday, shows that there is no evidence to support the government's plan.

The Premier has complained on several occasions that opposition to his bill is organized by the unions. Since one stated cost saving of his plan is to use cheaper labour, maybe there's some truth to this. But would employing nurses in the for-profit sector really save money?

If it were possible to find nurses that would work in for-profit environments for less money – and this is a very big “if” today with the shortage of nurses – the money saved would only be transferred to the owners of the for-profit facility. There is no overall savings to the health care system in such a shift from one group to another. The money saved by paying nurses less would increase the profits of the private hospital. None of this money would return to the taxpayer, who is spending the money in the first place. If the government's view of the future prevailed, where two models of delivery exist, there will be competition for a limited pool of professionals, especially nurses. As a result, higher costs are very likely as the public and the private operators compete for scarce nursing staff.

The biggest factor determining the relative cost of the two systems will be the contract negotiated between the regional health authority, or RHA, and the private operator. The RHA is that government-appointed body that the Premier holds up as the authority that will save us from any negative effects of this legislation. According to the government, the RHA will not proceed if there is any chance of more expensive operations or two-tiered health care creeping in. However, if the Premier is wrong and the RHA is unable or unwilling to negotiate a good deal for the taxpayers, the advantages will accrue to the facility owners.

It is unbelievable to all who hear it for the first time that some of the people negotiating on behalf of taxpayers, the officials of the RHA, are also owners of the facilities proposing to gain these contracts. Let me repeat, Mr. Speaker, for I know it's hard to believe: the same people with the responsibility to negotiate, to get the best possible terms for the taxpayers, are also owners of private hospitals and private clinics. What kind of a deal would these people get for us? They would be negotiating with themselves.

This government is asking us to write a blank cheque to a small number of owners of private surgical facilities. How can this be anything but bad for the public health care system? Albertans don't believe in subsidies to pulp plants and shopping malls. They don't want subsidies for millionaire hockey players and team owners, and they certainly don't want subsidies for private hospitals. I mean surgical facilities with overnight stays.

As the debate developed over the last few months, the Premier has backed away from his early claim that this plan would be less expensive. He now uses more wishy-washy terms such as efficiency and benefits to the system. Once informed sources refute his claims with solid evidence, he changes the way that he talks.

While the Premier avoids discussing costs, there is substantial evidence that private costs more. Most of the evidence comes from the U.S., which has the most expensive health care system in the world. When physicians are allowed to practise in both the publicly funded and the private sectors at the same time, there is a huge temptation to divert their most straightforward and profitable clients to the for-profit sector while leaving the more complicated and costly cases for the public sector.

This practice might make the private facility appear to be more efficient since it handles only the easy cases. This is called cream-skimming and is a very serious concern in jurisdictions where physicians have an ownership interest in the private facility while working as well in the public sector. The for-profit operator gets the upside, while the public sector takes all of the downside.

Even with the advantages of cream-skimming the private operators are less efficient, in most studies. Perhaps their goals are not so much efficiency as providing the most expensive and profitable service for those who can pay. This may be entirely acceptable in a purely private operation, but where the taxpayer is paying, this is a dangerously open-ended invitation to escalate costs.

This government continues to make the argument, ridiculous as it is, that somehow bricks and mortar costs can be avoided by going to the private sector for help. Does this Premier really believe that these for-profit operators will avoid charging the government for the cost of these buildings? Or does he plan to continue to sell off public buildings at a fraction of their replacement cost and then have the taxpayer pay for them again by renting them back from the private operators?

Through the use of creative accounting techniques one can create the illusion that the public sector is not cheaper. This is due to accounting differences between the public and private systems. In the public system all costs are charged in the same year of spending, so the total cost of a hundred million dollar hospital would hit the government books all at once, at a hundred million dollars. In the private sector that cost might be spread over 20 years, the expected life of the building, so the cost looks as if it's only $5 million in the first year.

The Premier is fond of telling Albertans that all they'll need for his new private hospitals is their Alberta health care card. The pamphlet delivered to households repeats this statement by saying that "these surgeries will still be covered by Alberta Health Care and people will not have to pay for them." He misrepresents the fact that Albertans will pay for these private hospitals through their taxes.

Most Albertans believe that there will be more costs involved. The trend towards deinsuring some services is well established. In Bill 11 these extras, some of which used to be covered, are called enhanced services. For the so-called enhanced services patients will be required to pay again, either with their credit card or by purchasing supplementary insurance. It is obvious to everyone that we will pay more under the government's plan to include private hospitals – that is, surgical facilities with overnight stays – than under a comprehensive, publicly funded plan. How long before the lobbying of the private operators to deinsure some services is successful? We see today how easily swayed this government is by the lobbying of private interests. We wouldn't be having this debate here today if it weren't for that pressure.

The Swan Hills waste treatment plant, a project this Premier was involved in when he was the Minister of Environment, has cost the government at least $400 million in subsidies, and we haven't even begun to talk about the cleanup costs yet. When this Premier won his first general election in 1993, one of his first acts, taken in secret, was to expand the funding by $100 million. At first this plant was only to handle waste from Alberta. Then it was expanded to include waste from the rest of Canada, and recently we heard that waste can be processed from anywhere in the world. With this in mind Albertans are wary of this government's request to approve payments to private-sector operators on a limited basis.

All of this concern created by the government's private health care proposal is unnecessary. We can solve the challenges within the public system. The more economical solution is to use up excess capacity already available in the public system and, second, if necessary, to build new facilities in the public system, where costs are lower.

But the lure of a $75 billion industry in Canada is too strong to resist. This is a golden opportunity for a few who wish to open the system to profit-making opportunities. Are we any closer to understanding why this government would push ahead with this proposal in the face of so much public concern and opposition? I think so. The more closely the government's proposal is examined the clearer it becomes that Dr. Charles Wright is correct when he says, and I quote: current demand to dismantle the system is not coming from a public outcry but rather from a relatively small group of entrepreneurs and specialist physicians who stand to gain personally. Dr. Wright is the vice-president of medicine at Vancouver hospital, as quoted by the British Columbia Minister of Health in 1995. Without question the vast majority of physicians and health care workers would prefer to work in a properly funded and managed public system and have no interest in the promotion and practice of for-profit medicine.

This government has failed to make a case for their proposal. They have failed to produce any evidence to contradict growing concerns that their plan will cost more and create longer waiting lists. They have failed to stem the growing suspicion that their plan is simply an attempt to create an opportunity for a small number of profit-seeking promoters to make large amounts of money off taxpayer subsidies.

This is more than enough to send the bill to a richly deserved oblivion in a democracy, but there are even more problems. One of the potential devastating effects of inviting corporations to bid on health care services is the risk that an exemption for the public service sector from the requirement of free trade legislation would be lost. According to some experts, this exemption would be at risk once a for-profit component is added to the delivery of public health care services. These services have been carved out from the free trade agreement signed by the government of Canada, but the exemption only holds up if Canada keeps the public-sector delivery of these services. Once the services are delivered by the private sector, the trade agreement allows foreign corporations to demand the right to compete for business. If denied, they then have the right to challenge the government legally and seek compensation. Although the potential for this is unclear, the risk is there. Again Albertans are asking: why? What is the upside for Albertans that is worth risking so much for all Canadians? The government gives nothing but vague assertions that there won't be a problem. Well, "Trust me" isn't good enough anymore.

The bill purports to ban queue-jumping, ignoring the fact that some individuals have no choice but to pay for access. This happens when a patient goes to a for-profit diagnostic clinic for an MRI and returns to their specialist, report in hand. This allows the go-ahead for surgery in advance of those waiting still for an MRI in the public system. Bill 11 does nothing to address this unfair situation already happening here in Alberta.

I've covered a lot of material tonight, Mr. Speaker, so far. It's clear to most Albertans that the government's attempts to justify this proposal are weak. The questions are growing. The answer to the most profound question of "why" is nowhere to be found, just as the Premier is nowhere to be found when a public forum or a town hall meeting on this important issue is held. If he's afraid to face the left wing nuts now, he will find it even more difficult to face them later in an election. Voters will have the final say on this proposal, no matter how hard the government tries to avoid it.

Since this government took over in '92, the private component of health care delivery in Alberta has grown by 50 percent. In the previous 30 years the private-sector delivery had remained relatively constant around the 20 percent mark. Today the Alberta government has made it clear that the purpose of Bill 11 is to continue the expansion of the private component of health care in spite of the protests. To the majority of citizens who elected them this government is turning a deaf ear.

As an Official Opposition we are listening to Albertans. When over 50,000 Albertans take the time to sign petitions urging this Assembly to stop promoting private health care, we pay attention and we listen. Our purpose is to set health care on a course towards sustainability and affordability so that our children may enjoy the advantages of what we've been given; that is, the security of knowing the health care system will be there when they need it.

What needs to happen here in Alberta? Well, first of all, Bill 11 must be withdrawn. While we understand the government's reluctance to admit their error and strike out for the third time, the protests will continue until the legislation is pulled. Second, the Legislative Assembly needs to impose a moratorium on any new private facilities in Alberta until the appropriate legislation controlling the existing facilities is passed. Third, any legislation that is passed must ensure that taxpayer dollars are going to the public health care system. The line between what is truly private and what is public needs to be redrawn and clarified, as required under the Canada Health Act. Once the leak in the bucket has been sealed, the job of strengthening our public health care system can start.

What are some of the innovations that can occur? Well, commit to standards of good health by reducing the numbers of needless deaths and injuries caused by preventable accidents. Support healthy children. Children born in poverty, as one in five in Alberta is, don't have a chance to succeed in school, and their health suffers as a result. Build an integrated community health network that complements our hospital system. Bill 11 is about more medical services when we need more community services to take the pressure off our hospitals.

Concentrate our efforts on building a good primary care team model that delivers home care, palliative care, and mental health services outside the institution. Join together with other provinces and the federal government and commit to the sustainability of our public health care system instead of wasting time pointing the finger of blame. Recommit to building and maintaining the world-class health and medical facilities, and recommit to the people who run them: our physicians, our nurses, our administrators, who make Albertans proud of what we have. Activate Best Practices, that are working across Canada. Reduce the stress on our families, many of whom are caring for loved ones in their home with inadequate support, and while we're at it, let's thank them for their efforts.

Base future changes in our health care system on high-quality practical research. Let's involve our health care providers in the discussion stage, in assessing the impact of change, and enlist their support. Together we can build a plan that allows access to the necessary health services, regardless of where we live in this province. Let's accept that it is as important to someone living in Manning, Alberta, as it is to someone living in downtown Calgary to have access to the services that are needed. Let's stop dividing the province into the haves and the have-nots. This is a beginning, a beginning that is built on innovation and a respect for the well-being of Albertans.

In conclusion, this debate can be reduced to a question of values. Unlike this government, the majority of Albertans know that their health care system is too precious, too important to be subjected to an experiment which allows a few people to make an extra dollar from the taxpayer. The debate is about the priority we put on a public system available to all, regardless of their ability to pay. Do we allow our public system to deteriorate while building a for-profit tier with superior service available only to those who can afford it? What happens to the publicly funded system once we start down that road?

There is a uniquely Canadian value that says that we share the risk of ill health and the cost of it as a society, financed primarily by our taxation system. This system recognizes that all of us have a responsibility to each other. We do not discard those who are ill or who cannot afford to pay.

The debate tonight is about trust: trust between doctor and patient; trust in the health care system, that it will be there when we need it; trust between Albertans and their government. In their opposition to Bill 11, demonstrated in recent public opinion polls, letters, town hall meetings, and petitions, Albertans are saying that they have lost confidence in this government when it comes to health care. Albertans are suspicious when the government tells them that Bill 11 will not lead to a two-tiered, American-style health care system.

We are still waiting to hear the answer to the fundamental question: why? Why does this government want to increase taxpayer dollars going to private-hospital operators instead of funding the full utilization of the public system? In the face of this suspicion and mistrust the Premier and his government have only two options: either withdraw Bill 11 or call an election immediately and let you, the voters, decide.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. JONSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today to speak to Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act. This is an important issue for Albertans, and there is an important need here for legislation to protect our public health care system. However, I regret that there are those who have intentionally spread misinformation about the bill to impede the understanding by Albertans as to what this legislation will actually achieve. I think we had an example this evening, very early in the hon. Leader of the Opposition's speech in quoting some statistics about the Alberta budget. Yes, back in the 1993-94 period we did, in our overall beneficial effort for Albertans of balancing the budget, reduce health care spending by 13 percent. Now that has suddenly become 30 percent tonight from across the way.

Indeed, we've just heard from the Leader of the Official Opposition some rather inaccurate claims, that there is some evil intent behind Bill 11 and that it heralds the end of medicare as we know it and we will end up with an American style health care system. Completely not true, Mr. Speaker.

We have heard ominous and unsubstantiated allegations about taxpayer subsidies to private hospitals and inaccurate claims, as I've said, about the reductions in health care spending. You heard references to NAFTA and the spectre of open doors for the U.S. and Mexico, and you've heard references to various other studies arguing against the evils of a two-tiered system. I think, Mr. Speaker, it is important to separate fact from fiction. The fact is that Albertans did not hear any answers from the Leader of the Opposition to those key questions posed by the Premier. So I will repeat them again, and perhaps the opposition leader may want to reflect upon them and reply later.

Why, Mr. Speaker, does the member continue to call to withdraw Bill 11 when her federal colleagues, including the Prime Minister, have said "pass the bill"?

Secondly, if surgical facilities were such a threat to the health system, why did she allow over 30 of them to operate when she was health minister and allow them to charge facility fees to patients?

Thirdly, if surgical facilities are such a threat to the health system, why has she not raised concerns about such facilities in other provinces, Mr. Speaker?

Why suggest that the entire bill be withdrawn when it contains key commitments to the Canada Health Act and prohibitions on facility fees and queue-jumping? Is she not in favour of these measures? How many taxpayers' dollars have the Liberals spent in their overall advertising campaign since that was alluded to as well?

Mr. Speaker, while the opposition party may not be interested in answering certain key questions, let me start by reaffirming what by now almost everyone realizes, that this is Bill 11 and it is consistent with the Canada Health Act. There are no implications under NAFTA. There is no move towards any American style system.

Let me talk this evening about the facts, facts that answer the questions and issues raised by the member across the way and by others. Mr. Speaker, the fact is that Bill 11 is simply a tool and not the solution to every challenge that faces our health care system. We need Bill 11 because today we have no legislated authority to regulate and control private surgical facilities in this province. I'm sure members across the way as well as members on this side remember years past when questions and issues were raised with respect to this in this House. Today if a private hospital were to be accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta, that facility could begin performing surgical procedures and there is absolutely nothing that this government could do about it. In fact, we have limited legislative authority even over private day surgery clinics that exist in the province today.

Certainly the need for legislation in this area has been a concern of this Assembly during question period for the last number of years. I remember questions and debates surrounding the eye clinics, surrounding the Health Resource Group, and we have recognized, Mr. Speaker, that there is a legislative gap. So recognizing that there is this gap, our government has three basic options facing us.

Option one was to do nothing and let private hospitals set up at the will of anyone in the province. Mr. Speaker, I think every member of this Assembly would agree with me that this was clearly not desirable, especially if you want to be able to protect our publicly funded health care system. The federal government also agrees that doing nothing is not an option. The federal Minister of Health has expressed to me his concern about what he called the absence of a legislative framework in our province and urged our government to bring forward legislation to regulate private facilities.

The College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta also called for legislation to be brought forward. The college passed a motion to urge our government to develop legislation to regulate surgical facilities. The government also struck a blue ribbon panel chaired by Alberta Law Reform Institute's Peter Lown. This, too, confirmed the existence of a legislative gap and the need for legislation. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, even our opposition members across the Assembly have agreed that Alberta needs legislation in this area. So for these reasons it was clear that doing nothing was not an option.

Our second option was to go to the other end of the spectrum and totally ban surgical clinics from Alberta. I'm sure the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona would perhaps prefer that, but that would rule out the 52 clinics that are already in operation in the province under contract to the public system. This would mean that we would not have the performance of 156 different insured day surgeries, and I could go on on the services provided by those private clinics. In fact, Mr. Speaker, as has been I think already mentioned in the Assembly, we would not have 20,000 day surgeries a year being provided through surgical clinics in this province. It was clear that a total ban on all clinics was not a reasonable option. Banning something that is working well to the benefit of Albertans just doesn't make sense, and it is not what Albertans want. Indeed, even our opposition members across the Assembly would agree, I think, with that particular position.

Mr. Speaker, to do nothing, as I've said, was not an option, so we have gone to what we think and we know is the third and reasonable option. That was to ban private hospitals outright and to tightly regulate and control our surgical facilities so that they only operate when it is of benefit to Albertans and to the publicly-funded system. That's what we've done in Bill 11.

These surgical facilities would only be allowed to perform minor surgical procedures, and in doing so, public hospital operating rooms could be freed up for more complex surgeries. At the same time,

Mr. Speaker, more minor surgeries would be done. Surgical facilities under contract to our public system also have the potential to plan and provide elective surgery without some of the rescheduling that can occur when emergency surgeries and urgent medical needs are facing us. That is, I think, very important, because we want that full-service hospital. That is something that will remain in the public system, but there is that specialized service where I think there is a good possibility, there is the potential, there is evidence that there will be an advantage to the overall system.

In other words, I think it's important to realize and to acknowledge, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 11 protects our publicly-funded health system from any of the negative impacts of the private-sector involvement by prohibiting private hospitals and strictly regulating surgical clinics. At the same time, it gives health authorities another option to provide surgical services as they look for ways to improve access to publicly-funded services and reduce waiting lists.

However, Bill 11 does not say that health authorities must contract with surgical facilities. This was well emphasized by the Premier, but it needs to be emphasized again. It simply offers them the option to contract with such facilities if the health authorities have evidence that there would be a benefit to patients, as taxpayers, in doing so. There may be opportunities to be realized through partnering with the private sector, but we also acknowledge that such a partnership may not always be the most efficient way to deliver a service. That's why a detailed individual analysis would be done for each and every contract proposed by a regional health authority. This is another basic principle in the bill, Mr. Speaker. Only those contracts that would yield a public benefit by reducing waiting lists in the public system, improving access to publicly-funded services, or increasing the efficiency of the delivery of services would be eligible for approval.

Mr. Speaker, contrary to the allegations of the Leader of the Opposition, there will be no opportunity for surgical facilities to skim off easy, profitable procedures. It will be the health authority that decides what, if any, procedures would be contracted out. If health authorities consider any contract with a surgical facility, they will have to demonstrate that the contract won't harm the publicly-funded health system and will be within the principles of the Canada Health Act.

Bill 11 strongly protects equitable access to publicly-funded health care for all Albertans. Albertans have been very clear in their directions in this regard. They have told us they do not want an American style, two-tiered health system in which the wealthy are able to buy faster or better service, and our government, Mr. Speaker, agrees completely. That's why we've made the government's intention very clear in the preamble to Bill 11. The preamble affirms the commitment of the government of Alberta to the preservation of the principles of universality, accountability, portability, and public administration as described in the Canada Health Act. To make certain of this, we submitted both our policy statement and then Bill 11 itself to the federal Minister of Health for his review. I asked him to tell us if he saw areas of the bill that are inconsistent with the Canada Health Act, because if there are, we will fix them. In response to our discussions with the federal government, the Prime Minister recently told our Premier: go ahead; pass the bill. Go ahead; pass the bill.

As well, as has been indicated, Mr. Speaker, I'll be asking all provincial health ministers to join me in reviewing and comparing legislation across Canada to try to ensure a consistent approach to contracting with private facilities. The bill also commits the government of Alberta to ensuring that no person who is entitled to an insured surgical service can be required to pay for that service or be able to pay to get faster service.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is the Health Care Protection Act. It is very much protective of the principles of the Canada Health Act, of the system that we have grown to value and want to preserve and improve. I would like this evening just to refer to the health care system and the priorities that this government has placed upon our health care system. The Premier has outlined the very, very significant increases in funding for health care. We rank at the top of the list as far as provinces are concerned in per capita funding on a formula or age-adjusted basis. We have committed additional funds to a whole host of priority areas. We have committed additional funds to continuing care in response to the Broda report. There's a very significant increase, therefore, for long-term care and home care in our budget.

In the area of surgeries the volume of high-priority surgeries in this province has never before been higher than it is now. We recognize that there are waiting lists, and we want to address those. We are putting funding into that particular area. We are putting a very significant additional amount of money this year into province-wide services.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we certainly are a government that has shown through Alberta Health and Wellness our commitment to innovation and change with respect to the health care system. In Toronto over the last couple of days, at the end of last week, we had a very thorough discussion among health ministers about what each province was doing in terms of innovation and giving priority to all parts of the health care system and wanting to move it into the future. I can say, I think very, very correctly because it was acknowledged by others around the table, that in the area of primary care we have numerous pilot projects under way: the Northeast health care centre, the Crowfoot project which has been referred to, and also out in the rural area in locations such as Bassano.

Further, we are committed to innovation and change in other areas. I think we could say that we are leaders in this country in terms of telehealth and telepsychiatry in an effort to reach and provide more specialized advice and knowledge to all parts of this province on a more equitable access basis for our Albertans outside of Edmonton and Calgary. We have announced the initial 20-plus recipients that will be receiving funding this year for their projects through our health innovation fund. Mr. Speaker, once again this is an area where the creativity and the dedication and the forward thinking of our health care providers, both in administration and at the front lines, is being recognized in this province. Health care is clearly a priority of this province. We have shown this in our budget, in our business plans, and we demonstrate it over and over again in concrete ways, through actual action, through actual commitment of money. So there should be no doubt – it is well shown, well illustrated, well approved and recognized across this country, I think – that we are leaders in a number of areas of health care reform, and we are committed to continuing to go in that particular direction.

We are proposing in Bill 11 protection of our public health care system, our publicly funded, publicly administered health care system, Mr. Speaker. We want to improve that system. We want to address any of the issues, any of the problems that are facing us. We're up to that challenge. This legislation is necessary – and I think it has been well illustrated and will probably be well illustrated further on tonight – to protect the health care system and, yes, to put a structure in place so that we can take advantage of initiatives in the area of surgery, specialized surgery, minor surgery, which will be officially performed or of an advantage to a health authority and will better Albertans in terms of the overall treatment and delivery of services across the system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The debate around health care is often emotional because health or the lack of it is an issue that affects all of us in our daily lives and is often a matter of life and death. Access to quality health care that can help to make us healthy or at least lessen our pain, be it emotional, physical, or mental, is now considered a right, not a privilege.

Daily, as both the MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark and the Official Opposition health critic, I receive letters, e-mails, faxes, phone calls from people across this province who are desperate, asking why they have to wait for a necessary medical service like an MRI, why they can't have their hip replaced in a timely manner, or why they have to wait months for a cancer treatment or bypass surgery. They're angry because they have to wait months or have had their surgeries canceled. They're told that the hospitals are full and that the doctors can't see them.

This year in Alberta $5.6 billion will be spent on health care. Now, you and I will all agree that that's a lot of our taxpayer dollars spent on maintaining and sustaining our health care system. After indiscriminate slashing year by year, we have seen this government's expenditures on health care continue to increase, yet somehow our services seem to be decreasing. Emergency rooms are full, wait lists are long, and surgeries are postponed, yet Albertans know, as does each and every MLA in this room, that there are hospitals in neighborhoods with empty wards, darkened operating rooms, closed emergencies, and empty laboratories. So right now we have the capacity, and we have the bricks and mortar. There's no need to build more hospitals, only a need to utilize what exists more efficiently.

Now, this isn't just something that I dreamed up tonight to present. The Auditor General in his 1998-1999 report indicated that 40 percent of hospital facilities are not utilized for their original purpose. This is the state of the province's health system today, yet what has this government done?

Well, they have tinkered with our health care system for seven years, and most importantly they've lost control. How have they lost control of the system? Since 1993 this government has followed an agenda to privatize public services. They divested themselves of control over the delivery of health care by creating 19 unelected regional health authorities, RHAs, and provincial boards, which are really 19 mini departments of health. A recent cost-benefit analysis of regional health planning and delivery in Alberta concluded that a fragmented system with considerable duplication and considerable costs has developed through regionalization. In the process, health care boundaries have been established that have made it increasingly difficult for Albertans to move from one RHA to another to obtain services, and health care services offered now vary depending on which region you live in.

In this province we no longer have a seamless, efficient, integrated health care system. Rather than creating a vision of better health care, rather than attempting to regain control, to manage our health care system, this government has practised the politics of deceit, pretending to take one path, while sneaking down another. While we have been told that the government was protecting our public health care system, in reality they have been preparing the foundation for the path of privatization. Under the guise of tackling the debt and deficit, they have closed hospitals and hospital beds, laid off nurses and other health care professionals, restricted access to services like physiotherapy and speech therapy, and encouraged the contracting out of nonmedical services to the private sector.

The only piece of the path that this Premier has been unable to build is to establish private, for-profit hospitals that will be subsidized by taxpayer dollars. Maybe, just maybe the Premier and his government members truly do not know that private, for-profit delivery of health care services is more expensive, less efficient, compromises quality of care, and is not innovative but a throwback to the days before medicare. It is hard to believe that this can be true as the case against privatization is overwhelming and grows daily in this province.

Over the last seven years Alberta's health care has been evolving out of necessity, not because of leadership from this government. There has been an increase in the number of surgeries that are performed on an outpatient basis, not only due to technology and ability to do so but also as a result of decreased capacity in our hospitals because of the cutbacks. This major shift from inpatient to outpatient services has created a market for increased contracting by regional health authorities with private providers who have seized the opportunity to enter the health care marketplace. Former public institutions such as the Grace and Holy Cross were sold for nothing, and institutions and clinics like HRG and Surgical Centres are now established in Alberta.

But this is not enough for this government. Encouraging words from key members like the Premier and former Treasurer Jim Dinning have promoted the privatization of Alberta's health care system, and while the Premier tonight talked about his commitment to the Canada Health Act, we all know that he has also talked about delisting insured services and establishing a list of core services. We also know that as Treasurer and now as CEO of the Calgary regional health authority and one of the biggest promoters of Bill 11, Mr. Dinning has said that the private sector should build, maintain, and administer hospitals.

This talk is costly to Albertans, and the actions speak volumes. This government's drive toward privatization in health care is seen explicitly and implicitly in this government's policy directives and initiatives. Actions codified in the 12 principles and a policy entitled Contracting by Regional Health Authorities establish the basis by which RHAs throughout this province are guided in making their decisions about providing services.

We heard tonight that there were no guidelines for contracting out. There are guidelines. I will just remind you of two of these principles which have conveniently been left out of Bill 11. One:

The following Goals will guide the RHAs in their contracts with private clinics . . .

Maintain a role for the private sector.

Another goal in the 12 principles: ensure a strong role for the private sector both within and outside the publicly funded system. Taking one path while sneaking down the other: that's what we're seeing. The result of these 12 principles is that services formerly provided by the hospitals are now contracted out to large corporations, services such as food and housekeeping, laundry, laboratory, and home care.

To say that our health care system is now 100 percent delivered by the public sector would be a falsehood. However, to say that we have information relative to the cost-effectiveness, benefits, standards, and the quality of services currently provided in this province by private contractors in our health care system would be an out and out lie. The Auditor General indicated that 10 regional health authorities cannot account for 570 million of our taxpayer dollars going to voluntary and private-sector operators.

A government who is in control of our health care would make sure that they knew all the facts before entering the dangerous quicksand of Bill 11, but as we have seen since 1993, the way this government makes decisions continues to be shaped by the motto: it is better to experiment than to plan. Our position is that before we experiment any further, it is necessary to stop and assess where we are. It's time to look at the current contracts that exist before the decision is made to open the doors to any more. It is time for the government to be honest with the public about the path it is taking with Bill 11, for this path is one that will risk the loss of our precious public health care system.

The issue of contracting and regulating insured medical services is not what is at the heart of Bill 11. The main principle of the bill is to enable the establishment of overnight, for-profit surgical facilities, which are really private, for-profit hospitals, to undertake more complicated surgeries, surgeries which will be performed in facilities that do not meet the standards of Alberta's Hospitals Act and surgeries that will be subsidized by public taxpayer dollars.

The bill pretends to lay out rules and regulations that are needed to control private facilities, but those regulations already exist in other acts. The Premier would like us to believe that this bill is required to fill a legislative gap to regulate facilities that are able to do surgeries requiring an overnight stay. Well, let's see if that's true.

As the Premier said, regional health authorities currently contract with private surgical clinics to provide about 140, 150 surgical procedures, procedures like hernias, like finger amputations, wart removals. So the private clinics exist now. But currently private, for-profit facilities are not permitted to perform surgeries that require overnight stays. That's the legislative gap. The reason for that is that facilities that perform those kinds of surgeries in the province are currently known as hospitals and have to meet the standards of Alberta's Hospitals Act. So let's get the facts straight. Other than public hospitals there are no facilities in this province which provide surgery that requires an overnight stay. So contrary to what the Premier has said, there exists no legislative gap, because these facilities do not exist nor can they exist unless this legislation is passed.

Do we not have legislation in this province that controls the types of surgeries that are done? Of course we do. We have the Hospitals Act, the Regional Health Authorities Act, the Medical Profession Act, and of course the Canada Health Act. Interestingly enough there are two acts which give the minister the exact authority he claims he doesn't have: control over facilities that wish to provide overnight stays and control over the current day-surgery facilities.

In Alberta's Hospitals Act section 62(a) states that the minister has the ability to make regulations relative to "contracts with . . . private hospitals," institutions, and such facilities. So, in effect, right now, tonight, this Premier and this minister with his cabinet colleagues can go behind closed doors and pass a regulation which says that there will be no overnight stays at private hospitals or facilities if that's what they want to do.

Currently section 93 of the Medical Profession Act states that the council of the College of Physicians and Surgeons "may make by-laws as to all matters pertaining to the establishment and operation of diagnostic and treatment facilities." Well, I'm sure that all Albertans are relieved to hear that, because up to now what the minister has told us is that there are no regulations governing the standards of those day facilities.

So the government has the power to regulate and to stop private, for-profit hospitals and facilities, and the College of Physicians and Surgeons does set standards to regulate diagnostic and treatment facilities. What is needed is legislation to control existing independent facilities, as exists in many other provinces. Bill 11 doesn't do that. It just opens the door to overnight surgical facilities, which even the College of Physicians and Surgeons has acknowledged as private hospitals.

Now, the bill pretends to support the principles of the Canada Health Act – principles of accessibility, portability, public administration, and comprehensiveness – yet as I indicated earlier, the real guiding principles are the missing principles which eat away at the spirit of the act and promote privatization. Bill 11 pretends to outlaw private hospitals but allows the same thing under a different name: approved surgical facility.

Now, the Premier has tried this trick wording before. When the citizens of the province disagreed with him, the Premier established the blue-ribbon panel on Bill 37. The result of that panel was clear: an approved surgical facility that provides surgeries that require an overnight stay is a private hospital. Yet this Premier insists on trying to distort the English language by claiming that these facilities are not hospitals.

The first section of Bill 11 says that there will be no private hospitals, and in the second section a public hospital and an approved surgical facility are defined. What's interesting is that when we read the definition for private hospital, surgical facility, and facility services, we learn that there's very little that distinguishes a hospital from a surgical facility. In fact, the definition of facility services is almost identical to the services that a hospital provides under the Canada Health Act and under Alberta's own Hospitals Act.

The only private hospital that is banned by Bill 11 is one which provides all of the following: emergency, diagnostic, surgical and medical services and admits patients for medically supervised stays exceeding 12 hours. Any facility in this province lacking, for instance, an emergency room or that contracts out diagnostic services is therefore not a hospital under these definitions but an approved surgical facility.

Now, for all of you who live in rural Alberta and have seen the services in your public hospitals downgraded, you need to be aware that according to this definition, as stated in Bill 11, your hospitals could well be renamed as surgical facilities. In fact, many of you in the Edmonton area will remember the Misericordia and Grey Nuns, which were renamed as community health centres. Did that make them less of a hospital? No, it didn't. No matter what the Premier wants to call these buildings, they are in fact hospitals.

The bill pretends to follow what is legislated in other provinces but opens rather than closes the doors to further privatization. Ontario, British Columbia, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan have all passed legislation with the intention to prohibit private, for-profit hospitals and discourage private, for-profit clinics from opening.

You know, Saskatchewan took three years to develop its regulations, yet Mr. Dinning is ready to contract out as soon as the bill is passed. Well, does he know something that the Premier isn't telling the rest of Alberta?

Tight monitoring, frequent inspections, and control are in other provinces' legislation but nonexistent in Alberta's. This bill in its current form does not prevent but enables privatization.

The bill pretends to outlaw queue-jumping but in fact will expand the opportunities for faster services for those with money. The ban on queue-jumping is only for an insured surgical service. Already we have in this province examples of people who can afford to access an MRI in the private sector and are therefore able to jump ahead of those who can't and therefore have quicker access to an operation. Bill 11 does nothing to address this issue.

Furthermore, as we know, one of the main purposes of the bill is to open the doors to the selling of either enhanced or better goods or services or uninsured goods or services. Once this happens, there is no way of controlling faster access to an insured service while someone is receiving an out-of-pocket uninsured service.

The bill pretends to curtail the selling of enhanced medical services but actually outlines the procedures that must be followed so such selling can occur. The potential for conflict of interest as physicians work both in the public and private systems is not addressed by this legislation even though current examples exist of these conflicts.

Private, for-profit hospitals that can provide both insured enhanced and uninsured services open up the opportunity for doctors or administrators to pressure patients to pay for extras. The doors are open to an entrepreneurial health system where the doctor is no longer the professional but is the businessman looking for the profit margin and watching the bottom line.

The bill pretends to regulate private, for-profit medicine but is silent on the monitoring and compliance of health care providers. What is disturbing is that the bill does not provide full disclosure of the contracts. Information as to the details of the contracts, the shareholders of the private, for-profit hospitals, publication of performance outcomes, annual reviews by the Auditor General, publication of complaints issued, and the resolutions are just a few of the items missing in the legislation.

Now, the Premier and the minister have said that Bill 11 will reduce waiting lists, improve access to publicly funded services, be more cost-efficient and -effective, but every shred of evidence from around the world just says the opposite.

The bill pretends to address the issues of providing better access to health care and indirectly help to improve the health of Albertans yet in reality only deals with a narrow part of health care delivery. Albertans understand that this bill does not do what it's meant to do. The hundreds of phone calls, the thousands of people who have come to the public forums all understand that Bill 11 is not the solution and that this government has lost control of our health care. They have discovered and are not willing to follow the secret path of privatization set out by the Premier. It is this Premier who does not wish to understand, who dismisses as irrelevant the thoughtful input of Albertans and continues to promote the interests of a few against the interests of the many, who continues to tinker with Albertans' health and well-being. Mr. Premier, you have the power to pass the bill, but Albertans have the power not to forget.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party in the House.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the past three years the New Democrats have led the fight inside the Legislature against the Conservative government's repeated attempts to legalize private, for-profit hospitals in Alberta. Working together, Albertans from all walks of life – the frontline health care workers, nurses and doctors, trade unionists, seniors, youths, and tens of thousands of concerned citizens – have twice forced this government to back down. The bill that was twice withdrawn because of fierce public opposition was called Bill 37, yet the Conservative government seems to have learned absolutely nothing. Here we are back again with a new bill to legalize private, for-profit hospitals by way of this bill called Bill 11.

Well, you know what they say in baseball: three strikes and you're out. If Bill 11 is so innocuous, as the Premier claims it is, then why have the people of Alberta unleashed unprecedented public opposition to Bill 11? Why is the government prepared to defy the public will and stake its political future on Bill 11 if it were really no big deal? Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 really is a big deal. The Premier knows it and Albertans know it. That's why people across Canada will be watching the Bill 11 debate as it unfolds in this Legislature.

For the first time since medicare began, a provincial government is going to allow U.S. style for-profit hospitals to not only set up shop in Alberta but to put their hands into the taxpayers' pockets as well. The current government has been warned repeatedly that should Bill 11 become law, the door would be open for U.S. corporations like Columbia/HCA to set up shop not only in Alberta but across Canada. This is not fear mongering; this is reality.

While the government claims that NAFTA does not compel them to open the doors to American health care corporations, you know and I know that these are hollow assurances. We all know that if a company like the Health Resource Group is sold to American interests, the Conservatives would not block the sale, and once this Pandora's box has been opened, it will never be able to be closed again.

The New Democrats have led the fight against Bill 11 because we are a party of medicare. It was the NDP in Saskatchewan under the leadership of Tommy Douglas that pioneered the then radical notion that hospitals and medical care should be equally available to all citizens, regardless of their financial means. In Ottawa it is the NDP who have called the federal Liberals to account for their most recent budget, which offered a paltry 2 cents for health care for every dollar in tax cuts.

This is an important point, Mr. Speaker, because as we debate Bill 11, we must also debate the state of health care in Canada. One cannot discuss the state of our national health care system without considering the federal government, and the point must be made that the federal Liberals are not blameless in the increased privatization of our health care system. It was the federal Liberals that gutted medicare funding, and it is the federal Liberals who refuse to defend public health care as Bill 11 makes it way through the Legislature.

So it is with great pride that I stand this evening as the leader of Alberta New Democrats, as the leader of the party of medicare. As I stand, I will outline for Albertans why the New Democrats are so opposed to Bill 11. I want to assure Albertans that the New Democrats stand fair and square on the side of public health care. New Democrats pioneered medicare and New Democrats will strengthen it and protect it. Medicare has withstood the test of time, Mr. Speaker. The beauty of Canada's universal health care system is that it is not only fair, it is also by far the most cost-effective way to deliver quality health care services.

One of the most persistent myths spread by those opposed to medicare is that health care spending is escalating out of control. Let's look at the facts, Mr. Speaker. When medicare became a national program in 1967, Canada spent about 9 percent of its national wealth, or GDP, on health care. Today in the year 2000, 33 years later, Canada is still spending the same 9 percent of its GDP on health care.

Meanwhile, 30 years ago the United States also spent 9 percent of its GDP on health care, about the same as Canada. Today the United States spends 14 percent of its GDP on health care, and it is rising. The U.S. has by far the most privatized and commercialized health care system among the western developed countries. The U.S., unbelievably, spends 30 percent more per citizen than any other western developed country, yet it ranks at or near the bottom of the heap when it comes to health measures like infant mortality and life expectancy. This shouldn't surprise anyone when you consider that 44 million Americans have no health insurance coverage at all and another hundred million are underinsured. Mr. Speaker, shiny new hospitals with fancy new equipment don't do you much good if you can't afford medical treatment.

Does our public health care system need to innovate and adapt to changing realities of the 21st century? Absolutely. Is Bill 11 the correct prescription for the challenges facing our public health care system? Absolutely not. Bill 11 will take Alberta down the failed road of more health care privatization.

So what's wrong with Bill 11? The first thing wrong with Bill 11 is that it's a dishonest piece of legislation designed to fool Albertans. The first section of the bill leaves the misleading impression that the government is banning private, for-profit hospitals when this is clearly not the case. The government is choosing to relabel them approved surgical facilities instead. Put simply, Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 proposes to ban private, for-profit hospitals in section 1 only to legalize them in section 2 under the name of approved surgical facilities.

I have spoken at numerous public forums over the last several months, Mr. Speaker, and guess what? Albertans were not fooled by this ploy. It appears that the only people who were fooled were the government's own backbenchers. Several government MLAs were busy telling their constituents that no overnight stays would be allowed in so-called approved surgical facilities when clearly that's the very reason for the legislation.

The more Albertans learn about Bill 11, the less they like it. In the Angus Reid poll published just over the weekend, a full 62 percent of Albertans who had read the Bill 11 householder sent out by the government expressed strong opposition to it. Yet the Premier refuses to listen to the people. Why? The question has been posed to me many times. Why is the Premier so adamant about Bill 11 when all of the available evidence concludes that private, for-profit hospitals will cost more and deliver less? It's a reasonable question. Albertans are asking that question over and over again.

Albertans are being asked, on the other hand, to accept on blind faith that the Premier's scheme will work, with no evidence to back this up. The Premier announced this foolish scheme on November 18 last year. That is more than four months ago, and since then the Conservative government has not been able to provide one shred of evidence that this will save money or shorten waiting lists. Meanwhile, the evidence showing that the Premier is wrong is piling up.

First out of the gate in January was a report prepared by the Alberta branch of the Consumers' Association of Canada. This report contained solid evidence that privatization of cataract eye surgery has meant higher costs and longer waits for Albertans. In Calgary, where all cataract surgery is performed in private, for-profit clinics, waiting times are significantly longer than in Edmonton, where 80 percent of cataract surgery is done in public facilities. In February health care expert Kevin Taft and journalist Gillian Steward released a readable little book called Clear Answers: The Economics and Politics of For-Profit Medicine. This book reveals all the evidence on the comparative costs and benefits of for-profit versus nonprofit delivery of health care.

The one-sided nature of the available evidence is summed up in a quote from the August 5, 1999, issue of the prestigious New England Journal of Medicine. I quote: for decades studies have shown that for-profit hospitals are more expensive than nonprofit hospitals; no peer-reviewed study has found that for-profit hospitals are less expensive. End of quote. Many other prominent health economists have also published over the last few months and weeks compelling evidence that the Conservative government's plan will not work.

So if all of the evidence concludes that private, for-profit health care costs more and delivers less, the question remains: why does the Premier keep pushing this agenda? The only conclusion that I can draw is that Bill 11 has nothing to do with saving money and everything to do with bailing out well-connected health care investors who can't turn a profit on their own. These investors include the Health Resource Group in Calgary, who have close connections to the Conservative government. A few weeks ago the New Democrats released a document showing that HRG lost $2.1 million last year. Shortly thereafter we released another document which indicated that HRG directors were aggressively lobbying the Calgary caucus of the government members for permission to do overnight stays and for public funding. The absolute stubbornness of the government to steamroll over public opinion and pass Bill 11 suggests to me that the aggressive lobbying by private health care interests was successful.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier likes to call those opposed to Bill 11 all kinds of names, including left-wing nuts. I'm wearing one of those wing nuts right here. He says we are people who fear change. Nothing could be further from the truth. Bill 11 would take the most cost-effective part of our health care system, our hospital sector, and make it less efficient through costly privatization experiments. The government's cure is worse than the disease.

How do we reduce waiting lists for lifesaving surgery? Albertans know the answer, even if the government doesn't. Open up beds and dust off the mothballed operating rooms in our public hospitals. What should we be doing to improve the public health care system? The Alberta New Democrats have a vision for the future of our universal health care system, Mr. Speaker. Medicare needs to be strengthened, not torn apart or blown up, like the Conservative government proposes to do. The New Democrats propose four concrete and realistic steps to improve public health care, control costs, and reduce waiting lists.

The first step is an outright ban on private, for-profit hospitals. Any medical procedure that requires an overnight stay must be performed in an approved public hospital. Mr. Speaker, I cannot emphasize enough that the New Democrats are the only party in this Legislature proposing an outright ban on private, for-profit hospitals. This is a highly radical notion. The province of Alberta has no for-profit hospitals now. I'm not aware that Alberta has ever had a for-profit hospital. When those generations who came before us established institutions to care for the sick and injured, it did not occur to them to try to make a profit from the misfortune of others. Instead, they looked to churches and governments to establish nonprofit hospitals. Bill 11 marks a radical departure from this proud tradition by allowing private, for-profit hospitals.

The second step of our plan would be to set firm targets for waiting times for all medically necessary services. There's no question that the Conservative government's reckless closing of beds and operating rooms in public hospitals has led to unacceptably long waiting times for procedures like hip surgeries and bypass surgeries. The brutal cuts to the public health care system have caused pain and suffering; no question about that. The Auditor General reported last year that almost 40 percent of the province's hospital beds remain closed. The bricks and mortar are in place, Mr. Speaker, and ready to go. All that is needed is the political will to reopen closed beds and operating rooms in our existing hospitals. However, the Conservative government prefers to put its energies into dangerous misadventures like Bill 11 in health care privatization.

The third step of our plan would be to undertake an independent cost-benefit study of existing day-surgery contracts. This is something the government is obviously afraid to do. Currently there are some 26 contracts with private, for-profit clinics for procedures like cataract eye surgery and ear, nose, and throat surgeries. Before allowing private, for-profit hospitals to contract for complex surgeries requiring overnight stays, the cost and benefits of existing day surgeries must be studied.

I find it remarkable and totally irresponsible, Mr. Speaker, that more than four months after announcing this private, for-profit hospitals scheme, the Conservative government has not been able to provide a shred of evidence that existing day-surgery contracts are either saving money or reducing waiting lists.

The fourth and final step in the New Democrat plan is the most important, Mr. Speaker. We need to renew and reaffirm our vision of Tommy Douglas, the father of medicare. Canada's universal medicare system is an unfinished tapestry. It has been over 50 years since Tommy Douglas brought hospital services inside the medicare umbrella. It has been almost 40 years since medically necessary physician services were brought under the medicare umbrella. Albertans, like other Canadians, want medicare strengthened, not demolished.

The missing pieces of medicare's unfinished tapestry need to be filled in. For example, Alberta should lead the way by developing a public and truly universal pharmacare plan to cover prescription drug costs outside of hospitals. A universal pharmacare plan is needed to control the spiraling costs of prescription drugs. In 1975 10 cents of every health care dollar were spent on drugs. Today drug costs have doubled to 20 cents of every health care dollar. We now spend more on drugs than we do on doctors. All of the available evidence shows that a universal pharmacare plan would put a brake on rising drug costs in the long run. Instead of inventing a scheme to legalize private, for-profit hospitals, if the Premier were serious about protecting and improving medicare, he would champion a universal pharmacare plan for Alberta. Now, that would make Tommy Douglas proud.

We also need to make improvements and innovations in home care services. When you leave the hospital and still need medicare at home to cover the costs, your public health care card should follow you there. It doesn't now. The New Democrats support innovations in primary care, such as establishing community-based, 24-hour, walk-in clinics staffed by health professionals working together as a team, with doctors on salary instead of fee for service. Such an innovation may well take the pressure off hospital emergency wards and operating rooms. There is a fine example of such a facility not far from this Legislature, Mr. Speaker, called the Boyle McCauley health centre.

Alberta does need legislation to control the growth and expansion of private clinics. We need to put a stop to patients being pressured to pay hundreds of dollars for so-called enhanced services at private eye clinics. Albertans are demanding that a stop be put to queue-jumping at private MRI clinics, which is taking place in this province morning, noon, and night. Private MRI clinics are not even covered by Bill 11. I wonder why.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, we need to put a stop to the blatant conflicts of interest in the RHAs, like the CRHA, the Calgary regional health authority, where some doctors pad their own pockets by referring patients to clinics which they own themselves. Again, Bill 11 does nothing to address this serious problem of conflicts of interest.

Bill 11 contains none of the provisions that are needed to effectively regulate private, for-profit health care facilities in Alberta. It only sets up a framework for significant further expansion, yet the Conservative government presses on, even though it has no mandate from Albertans to expand private, for-profit hospital care.

The Premier threatens to use the heavy hand of closure to choke off debate on Bill 11. The Premier says he will enforce party discipline, even if it means that government members will be voting against the clearly expressed wishes of their constituents. Government members are mistaken if they believe that public anger will die down should Bill 11 be forced through this Legislature with the heavy hand of closure, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that the government's spin doctors have been telling government members just that for months. But guess what? Public anger and opposition to Bill 11 has been growing steadily since last November. The bill's passage will not change this. Therefore, I urge the government to respect the wishes of Albertans and withdraw Bill 11.

The government has no mandate to force such dangerous and untested health care policies down the throats of Albertans. If you really believe that Bill 11 is the way to go, have the courage of your convictions. Seek a mandate through an election or by holding a referendum, but please, don't throw the future of medicare in jeopardy in this province and in this country in clear defiance of the wishes of Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise in the House tonight to discuss and debate Bill 11 and the future delivery of publicly funded health care in our province. I am doubly pleased that many fellow Albertans across the province are watching this unprecedented televising of an evening's debate in their Legislature.

As we all know, Mr. Speaker, health care is an issue of great importance to every one of us and to every one of our families. Indeed, it is an issue that truly transcends political boundaries, and it is an issue that is beyond provincial and territorial boundaries, for it is truly a national matter. So let's consider Bill 11 and the future of health care in the national context.

Every health minister in Canada will tell you that in the area of health care there has been an enormous increase in medical information, incredible advancements in health technology and medical procedures, unprecedented improvements to medical equipment, diagnostics, lab services, and so on, and tremendous benefits from new drugs, pharmaceuticals, and other medicines. All of these things are very positive changes, Mr. Speaker.

Every health minister would also tell you that as a result of these significant advancements, particularly during these past 10 years, public expectations have also increased dramatically and that every province's budget has grown enormously to try and meet those expectations. But how can the provinces keep pace with these ballooning budgets? In Alberta today, we are spending more on health care than ever in the history of this province.

In 1982 health care costs constituted about 22 percent of our provincial budget. In 1991 health care costs rose to 26 percent of our total budget. Today our health care costs represent about one-third of our provincial budget. In fact, we are now the third highest spender in Canada on a per capita basis on health care, and if you factor in age and gender, I believe we would rank first. We would rank as the highest spender on health care. Now, I'm not boasting or complaining, Mr. Speaker, but the fact is that I don't want anyone to tell you or anyone else that the Alberta government isn't doing its part to bolster and boost our public health care system, because we certainly are.

To demonstrate this point further, our new budget will add an additional $1 billion to health care over the next three years, and that's on top of the $1.3 billion that we've already added over the past five or six years. This year alone we will spend about $5.6 billion on health care in Alberta. With this huge budget we will hire 90 more doctors immediately this year and 2,400 more nurses will be hired over the next three years.

But while Alberta is dedicating 33 percent of our total budget to health care, the federal government, which claims to be our partner in all of this, are only giving us a contribution of 13 percent. That's a far, far cry from the 28 percent that they were giving us about a decade ago, and it's even a further cry from the 50 percent that they originally provided when medicare first started in this great country. In fact, it may interest you and others to know that today the federal government of Canada only dedicates about 5 percent of its total spending to health care. Five percent, and that's while they are boasting of surpluses in the tens of billions of dollars. Therefore, every province and every territory has asked Ottawa to restore its funding for health care to at least the 1994-95 levels, yet Ottawa remains silent and unresponsive to this request.

While we do need and would appreciate more health care dollars from Ottawa, we also recognize that money alone is not the total answer, and the Premier was very clear during his remarks in that regard. It certainly helps, but we can't sustain the system by constantly just throwing more and more money into it at the current rate. As Premier Tobin of Newfoundland-Labrador said on national television on March 2:

We all recognize that we need to reform the health care system, that we can't continually grow these budgets by ten percent a year, nobody, not federal, not provincial governments can sustain that.

During that same broadcast Premier Romanow of Saskatchewan said:

If we're going to be seeing this kind of reduction in Ottawa's role, our capacity to maintain national standards and [the] publicly funded health care system is very much at risk.

All other provinces and territories have spoken to this issue unanimously and through their ministers of health have indicated in writing to the federal Health minister that we unanimously agree that the federal government has to reaffirm its fiscal support for the Canada Health Act by at least restoring its Canadian health and transfer payments to 1994 levels, along with an escalator provision to help cover the costs of inflation and rising health costs in general.

Mr. Speaker, the facts are that medical advancements, medical innovations, and new pharmaceuticals are wonderful additions and tremendous improvements, but they are expensive. Pharmaceutical costs, for example, are rising by about 15 percent per year. Now, the demand for MRIs is also outpacing availability of dollars at a cost of about $3 million per machine, and that's not including all the costs of installation, the hiring of technicians to operate them, the engagement of doctors to read the results, and so on.

We should also note that we are very fortunate to have a growing and an aging population right across Canada, and that's a good thing, Mr. Speaker. In fact, it's a very good thing. However, so too is the fact that we will all be needing and we will all be using more and more health services in the future. There will be many more of us needing and demanding those services, and we will all be looking for faster intervention, broader intervention, and more effective intervention by the health system as we grow and as we age.

So the question is: how do we sustain and enhance our publicly funded, publicly administered, publicly accountable, universally acceptable, beloved health care system in the future? That's the question. We know that the federal Health minister has asked us to become more creative and more innovative because, in his words, the status quo is not an option, and I think we would agree. Now, the federal government hasn't exactly explained what they mean by this, so the provinces have had several meetings to discuss the matter, but one thing is very clear, and that is that every province has already been innovating. We've been creating, we've been reforming, and we've been adapting for almost 10 years now. All we want is for Ottawa to realize that we don't have a lot of room left to be even more creative and even more innovative unless they show us some examples, which we'd be happy to receive.

However, we do have some options available that are completely within the Canada Health Act, and one of those options exists in Bill 11. In presenting this option, we have looked at the practices of other provinces and at their legislation. We've looked at Ontario, where the Shouldice hospital near Toronto has operated for about 50 years as a private, for-profit surgical facility and now performs about 7,000 hernia operations annually under contract to the Ontario government. We've looked at British Columbia, where the Cambie clinic in Vancouver operates as a private surgical facility in which about 3,000 patients per year stay in about 10 different recovery rooms, and that includes overnight stays. Mr. Speaker, neither of these facilities has been accused of violating the Canada Health Act. Neither of them has harmed or destroyed or brought down medicare, and neither would we.

There are other examples of surgical clinics elsewhere. Mr. Speaker, there are many other examples of surgical clinics operating privately in other provinces. We have surgical clinics in Manitoba, in Atlantic Canada, and in Quebec, and of course we have about 52 or so of these clinics right here in Alberta. The public purse helps support these clinics by contract, and they perform a vital role in the delivery of health care.

I noted with surprise that 37 of these 52 or so clinics in Alberta were operating and/or were ushered in by the leader of the Liberal opposition when she was Alberta's health minister. Those clinics were also charging patients facility fees for insured services under her watchful eye. Bill 11 specifically prohibits those kinds of facility fees and those kinds of charges to patients in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, prohibiting these charges is just one of many patient protection issues in Bill 11. The bill also requires more disclosure of information and requires contracts to be made public. It demands more accountability, and it standardizes and makes uniform various aspects related to enhanced medical services or medical goods. It provides tough enforcement, it requires stricter adherence, and it stipulates hefty penalties for any breaches. Bill 11, then, will be the toughest legislation we have in this regard, and that's one reason why it's called the Health Care Protection Act.

Bill 11 prohibits a two-tier system in this province, and it commits us by law to the single-tier system we already have. It prohibits private, for-profit hospitals, and it commits us by law to a single payer, publicly-funded system like we already have. Bill 11 also places stricter controls on existing clinics, and it protects patients from extra charges being forced upon them. Bill 11 prohibits queue-jumping, and it ensures that Albertans will continue to have universal access to publicly-funded health services, in fact with the specific aim of having increased and improved access to those very same services.

That brings me to some of the realities facing us as we begin this new century, Mr. Speaker. One of the unfortunate realities that we know is lineups and waiting lists for doctors, for specialists, for MRIs, for surgeries, for beds, and so on. Every jurisdiction in this country has these waiting lists. Here in Alberta we're determined to do something about them and to reduce them, and we're going to do that within the confines of the Canada Health Act and within the publicly-funded system.

I'm reminded of what one journalist wrote not long ago. He said that despite our political, religious, or cultural differences, Albertans demand high-quality health care. We all want to be diagnosed quickly and correctly. We all want to be treated efficiently and effectively. In the end, we don't care where we get these services; we just want to be cured of what ails us.

Most importantly, we don't want to pay extra for those services, and we don't want anyone jumping ahead of us in the lineup to receive them. I know many if not most Albertans who are here tonight or who are listening or watching this debate have had the experience, perhaps the frustration, of waiting for access to a medical service. I certainly know I have, Mr. Speaker, just recently in fact.

Once you get in, of course the care is excellent. The service is quite fantastic, but it's the length of time it takes to get you into the system that causes us concern. So we are responding to improve this situation, and health authorities are responding as well.

The Capital health authority in Edmonton, which was voted as the best health care provider in Canada last year by a reputable national magazine, has been doing its part to hire more staff, engage more doctors, and open up more beds. Over the last year, for example, they opened 37 general beds, added about 150 long-term care beds, opened up 74 new temporary flex beds, added 16 new alternative level of care beds, added half a dozen new subacute care beds, and they're in the process of adding another 63 new beds right now, Mr. Speaker. In fact, that will bring them well over the 2,000 mark. As I said, more and more are being added all the time.

Bill 11 will simply provide one more option, one safe, affordable option for our regional health authorities right across the province to consider by allowing them to receive proposals for some narrowly defined, contracted-out minor surgeries which will be paid for by the public purse. If health authorities feel they can perform their services more efficiently and more effectively in public facilities, then so be it; those services will remain in public facilities. But no one – and I repeat, no one – will force a health authority in this province to contract out.

Some say there's no way that a private surgical clinic can perform any service more efficiently and effectively than what's already being done in our public hospitals. If that's true, Mr. Speaker, then I can tell you with confidence that there won't be any contracts approved under this particular legislation. The fact is, however, that dozens of private clinics in Alberta already do provide efficient and effective medical services. Can you imagine if those clinics, those medicentres were to suddenly be shut down, not be allowed to operate? Can you imagine the ramifications on the system? Can you imagine the additions to our lineups, the costs to the budget, and so on? So let's keep that in perspective as we look at Bill 11. In fact, under Bill 11 health authorities would have to look at the optional use of their own facilities first before a contract is considered.

You see, Mr. Speaker, health authorities are given a certain budget. They are funded to provide quality health care for all Albertans. Money for contracts comes out of their own budgets, which is our public health care purse. I am certain that no health authority would pursue a contract outside if it's going to take a bigger chunk from their own budget or if it's not going to reduce waiting times for minor surgical procedures. Under Bill 11 there have to be clear benefits to any contracting out. They have to be clear to the regional health authorities, or they won't pursue them in the first place. They have to be clear and accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and they have to be clear and accountable to the minister of health, or they won't be approved. Most importantly, they have to be clear to Albertans. That is why Bill 11 requires all contracts to be open, and that is why the minister's rationale for the contract is also required to be public information.

What is also required in Bill 11 for contract approval? Well, let me answer that. First and foremost, Mr. Speaker, all contracts have to comply with the Canada Health Act. That means all Albertans will continue to have access to a publicly-funded health care system in this province. No one pays extra out of their pocket for an insured surgery, and no one cuts into the lineup regardless of how deep their pockets might be.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, all health authorities will have to prove that the contracting out of a particular service is a better alternative than continuing to provide that service in a public hospital. What are the benefits? Is it more efficient? Is it more effective? Are their own facilities being used to maximum benefit?

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, our health authorities have to show that the contract won't harm our publicly-funded system in any way. The contract must tell us what results are expected. How many surgeries will be performed, at what cost? How will waiting lists be reduced? How is it more efficient? How is it more effective? I want to emphasize that in order to ensure patient safety under Bill 11, all surgical facilities will have to be accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and our trusted doctors in this province. Those facilities can be investigated, they can be visited, and they can be inspected and reviewed at any time by the minister or his representatives.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 gives Alberta's regional health authorities more flexibility to continue to deliver high quality, publicly-funded health care in a safe, fully accredited setting where Albertans do not have to pay one cent for it. As long as you have your health care card, you'll receive that service at no charge.

Bill 11 requires health authorities to use existing operating rooms and beds for more complex surgeries. Those that require the full support of a public hospital, those particular surgeries that require full diagnostic, emergency, lab, medical, and intensive care services will be done in the proper facilities, the public health care facilities. Specifically, Bill 11 mandates that major surgeries will only be done in full-fledged hospitals. The contentious part of Bill 11 comes down to this: is it okay for an insured, minor surgery that requires an overnight stay to be done in a safe, fully accredited private clinic where you don't have to pay a cent for it?

Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that many Albertans understand, and they understand even better now, what Bill 11 is all about. But we don't want Albertans just to watch and listen to the debate tonight. We've worked hard to engage Albertans in this debate and to gather their feedback. That is why we presented our policy paper and mailed it out to every household in this province. We have asked Albertans for their comments on this bill and how they might want it improved. We have said, and the Premier has committed to acting on what we hear. When the bill moves into committee, as the Premier has said, we will introduce amendments that respond to what Albertans have told us. In the end, I'm confident that we will have a tremendously stronger bill, one that's reflective of Albertans' priorities. That has always been our goal.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to tell all members to act in the best interests of the health system and the patients we're all trying to serve. Look for supporting Bill 11. If there are parts of it you can't agree with, let's fix those parts, but let's get on with the broader agenda of helping to reform the health care system for the benefit of all Albertans and all Canadians.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Those Albertans who are still following this debate electronically have listened to a little more than two hours of speeches. We've heard six different speakers. We heard three in support of Bill 11 and three opposed. Each one of those speakers has argued that this bill either is a wonderful thing, part of a well-intentioned experiment to make our health care system work better, or a very dangerous experiment that will prejudice our public health care system and, ultimately, patient care. Each of those six speakers I think has made a fine speech tonight.

But what have we learned so far? Well, we know this: we know that the bill is vague in a number of key areas. There are lots of things the minister may do and very few things he must do. When the minister is given discretion, like he is in sections 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 18, 22, and 24, that discretion is largely unfettered. The criteria he must follow in making decisions are vague and ambiguous. The government has, by section 23, made it difficult if not impossible for anyone to appeal that minister's decision. Those facts have not been refuted by any one of the government speakers tonight.

Mr. Speaker, many critical decisions will be made by regulation. Section 25 permits decisions in some 20 different areas to be made by regulation. While we're talking about regulations, maybe this is the time to let Albertans in on a little secret. Alberta is the only province in Canada and I believe the only jurisdiction in all of North America where regulations can be hatched in secret. It's the only place where there's no oversight in this Assembly or by this Assembly or by an all-party committee of MLAs. Government decides who it will talk to when they consider regulations, but any consultation is secret. It's not done in a public forum. There's no Hansard, no public record. Most importantly, those discussions about regulations are not accessible to the opposition, they're not accessible to the media, and most importantly, they're not accessible to concerned members of the Alberta public. Those facts, Mr. Speaker, have not been refuted by a single government speaker tonight.

Last week Calgarians were asking me a very simple question: will Bill 11 allow private hospitals? Clearly, the answer is yes. There's been an excellent analysis done by my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark, but this is such an important issue and a question so often asked that I want to offer a comment about it as well. Section 1 in this bill is misleading if not dishonest, Mr. Speaker. The key, of course, is the definition of what is a "private hospital." Now, curiously, the government is not using the dictionary definition of hospital. It's clearly not using the definitions used in the Alberta Hospitals Act or in the Canada Health Act.

For purposes of Bill 11 the government has come up with a completely different and very narrow definition of private hospital. That definition has been neatly tucked away in the back of the bill, the last place anybody would expect to find it. According to section 29 the only thing banned by Bill 11 is a facility that does all of the following:

- (i) provides emergency, diagnostic, surgical and medical services, and
- (ii) admits patients for medically supervised stays exceeding 12 hours.

What does that all mean? It means that a private facility like Health Resource Group in Calgary and their private hospital can do every single thing that the Foothills hospital does as long as it does not offer emergency services. Under Bill 11 and the peculiar definition such a facility would not be a private hospital even though that is exactly what you or I and I think virtually every other Albertan would understand was meant by the word "hospital." Now, that fact has not been refuted by a single government speaker this evening.

Mr. Speaker, in fact this bill can truly be said to be a prescription looking for a diagnosis. It's offering an answer to a question that Albertans aren't asking. There are no answers in Bill 11 to many of the questions that Albertans are asking. It's therefore necessary to consider the government's record in health care to project what this government is likely to do. How are they going to fill in the gray areas, the empty areas, the empty spaces? Can my constituents in downtown Calgary trust this government to promote public health care? That's frankly what it comes down to. We heard the speeches and we can read what's in the bill, but what really counts is whether this government is going to fill in the empty spaces in a way that we can be comfortable with, a way that's going to enhance public health care, a way that's going to advantage each one of my constituents, each one of your constituents, every one of the 3 million men, women, and children that live in this province.

In 1993 the government told us that health care spending was out of control. Health care spending would bankrupt the province if we didn't act immediately to arrest it. Mr. Speaker, that was not true. We see now that health care spending was virtually flat for the three years before the 1993 election. It was clearly not spiking up, as the alarmist message from the government was in 1993. This government lied to my Calgary constituents in 1993. It lied to Albertans. Can it now be trusted to do what it says?

The government took more than $600 million out of the health care budget, and it did so without a plan. It eliminated 10,000 positions of highly skilled, highly trained nurses and health care professionals, and it did that without a plan. Calgarians watched the Grace hospital close, later to reopen as a private hospital. Calgarians watched the Holy Cross hospital in my constituency sold for less than $5 million after $32 million in renovations had been spent on that facility. Like the Grace, the Holy has now been converted to what? A private health care facility. Calgarians watched as the General hospital was blown up, even though at least two of the buildings on that site were as modern as the Foothills hospital.

Albertans understand that while the government likes to boast that we have a few more beds in 2000 than we did in 1993, the government completely ignores the fact that Calgary has grown by 116,000 new citizens since 1993. Albertans intuitively understand that there's no better way to foster demand for private health care than to close hospitals in the public system. The Premier in his comments boasted of the private cataract surgery services in Calgary, and indeed that's the very model he wants to expand and apply to a whole range of services not just in the city of Calgary but across this province.

But you know, Mr. Speaker, health care ultimately is about individual patients; it's about individual citizens. Let me tell you about the senior that called me last Thursday in my office. This is a woman who was going blind with cataracts in both eyes, so she goes to one of those private eye clinics in the city of Calgary in late October. She's advised that she'll have to wait eight to 12 months in Calgary to have a lens installed that will be covered by the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act, or she has another option: she could pay $2,000 in advance for each eye to have a superior, uninsured lens installed, and the wait would only be a week and a half. This woman didn't want to pay more. She didn't want an enhanced lens; she wanted the regular lens, but she was going blind, Mr. Premier, through the Speaker. She was afraid she was losing her sight, and she paid the $2,000 for each lens. To add insult to injury, she discovered that the private clinic was participating in a drug company study, and the clinic got a thousand dollars from the drug company for every patient they were able to sign up to participate. Before she gets the second eye operation, she gets a letter from the foundation of the clinic soliciting a financial donation. That's the model that this government and this Premier want to spread out across this province, and this is a question of abusing the trust of Albertans.

You know, while we're talking about trust and while we're talking about the record of this government, Mr. Speaker, this Premier promised my constituents in March of 1997 that in the following year we would be able to elect the members of regional health authorities. Albertans remember that promise. Less than three months later this Premier trashed that promise. He broke that promise. He said: do you know what? The Calgary and Edmonton regional health authorities want a little more time to implement their plans. What he didn't tell us is that he was just darned nervous of democracy and that the regional health authorities were nervous of democracy and didn't want to see that happen.

Mr. Speaker, government has allowed regional health authorities in this province to operate in a culture of secrecy. The Calgary regional health authority spends more than a billion tax dollars; $250 million of that goes to private facilities. But do you know what, Mr. Speaker? You and I can't get access to the terms of those contracts. We can't judge for ourselves whether we are getting good value or whether there's some kind of fat subsidy in there to private contractors.

Now, section 12 of the bill is not going to strip away that secrecy, and I'll tell you why. It's for two reasons. The first one is it doesn't come into effect for a minimum of six months. One would think, Mr. Speaker, that if there were ever a time that Albertans and Calgarians should be allowed to access those contracts, surely it's now, when we're debating Bill 11, not six months after this bill comes into law.

The second problem is this: much information that Albertans are entitled to and have to see is information that's only available under the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act. But do you know what, Mr. Speaker? By one of those secret regulations, one of those regulations hatched in secret, what the government has done is that they've taken all of that information under the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act and they've moved it out from under our access to information legislation. You can't access it. You're not going to be able to access it. That's shameful that government would try and pull this kind of sleight of hand trick by saying "transparency," while in the detail of the bill what they're doing is pulling the shroud of secrecy back over the private contracting dealings.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier was dismissive of studies, and he said something about academics in a pejorative way that suggested that this government has all the answers. Is it not the ultimate irony that in the year 2000, when physicians practise what's called evidence-based medicine – and that means that they don't prescribe medication and send people for diagnostic tests unless there's some solid basis that it's going to do some good; it's a fundamental policy of evidence-based decision – we have a provincial government that is prepared to go and make major, major changes, with a potential to prejudice our public health care system, and to do all of that with no empirical evidence to back it up, no studies that suggest it's going to significantly advantage individual Albertans and individual Albertans when they go to seek medical treatment?

Mr. Speaker, why wouldn't we consider studies from similar experiments that have been done in South Australia and Western Australia and the state of Victoria and a number of other places that have shown it doesn't work? Are we not smart enough in this province and in this Legislature to be able to look at experiments that have failed, read the writing on the wall, and decide that we invest our energy and our resources in innovation and improvement in the public health care system?

The Premier has threatened to cut off debate. He said he would do that if he thought the opposition was being obstructionist. Now, the threat is disappointing firstly because we only started two and a half hours ago debate on Bill 11 and the Premier is already talking about how much is enough. That's really the question, isn't it? How much time is too much time to spend on a bill that may have major destructive impact on our public health care system? Is it two hours? Is it four hours? Is it tomorrow afternoon? Is it Thursday afternoon? Mr. Speaker, the government has used closure in this province 26 times to cut off debate. The Lougheed government used it but one time in the entire Lougheed term of office, but this government has used it 26 times.

Now, Albertans may be asking: what is closure, and how does it work? Let me give Albertans an example. Let me tell Albertans about what happened last December, Mr. Speaker, when we were debating Bill 40, the Health Information Act. That was a bill that fundamentally changed the way your personal health information can be used, shared, collected. With Bill 40, for the first time the government has now made it possible that your personal health information can be accessed without your knowledge, without your consent. When that bill came forward to be debated, we put forward as an opposition over 50 changes to make the bill work. You know what happened? The government took two of the amendments, they debated eight other Liberal amendments, and then invoked closure. They said: that's enough; we're moving on. We didn't debate the other amendments. We didn't discuss them. We didn't vote on them.

That's the style of governance that Albertans have seen in the past. Is that what we expect on Bill 11? You know, you don't deal with the merits of opposition arguments. You sit there haughtily and dismiss them and say: "This is a waste of time, spurious arguments. We know better. We have all the answers, so we're cutting off debate." Mr. Speaker, that's not good enough for my constituents, and I don't think it's good enough for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, while I'm talking about Bill 40, the Health Information Act, there's something else that Albertans should know. There was a carve-out, and it didn't receive a lot of attention at the time. What Bill 40 said is that we're going to have certain rules for protecting your patient health information, your most personal information. It will apply when you go to a public hospital, when you're in the public system, but the rules don't apply if you go to a private hospital or a private facility unless you're being paid by the Alberta health care insurance plan.

So if you're having an enhanced service in one of those private clinics, the rules don't apply. The rules don't apply. At the time we said: why is it that you would carve out and create special treatment for private hospitals? Well, I think the answer is abundantly clear to all Albertans. Private hospitals, we know from all the evidence, can't be run economically if they have to meet the same standards as the public system, so what you do is lower the threshold. You reduce the rules. You carve out an exemption. You make a sweetheart deal for somebody who wants to run a private facility. That's what Bill 40 did, and that's what Bill 11 is doing in a big way.

Mr. Speaker, while we're talking about closure, this government at some point, at some time has to understand that might is not right, that even big, powerful majority governments make serious mistakes, and let me be clear: Bill 11 is a mistake. The government has talked very little about conflicts of interest. In one of the great gaps in Bill 11, there is no provision for conflicts of interest, even though the government's own commissioned study by the Institute of Health Economics identified potential conflicts of interest as a major problem. This is the government's own study. This isn't something the opposition cooked up. Bill 11 is absolutely silent on this issue in terms of potential conflicts. In the Calgary region three of the most senior people, the people making key administrative decisions in terms of how we spend those one billion tax dollars and how long the waits are appropriate in the health care system in that city, also have interests in private surgical clinics.

Mr. Speaker, there is something about what I call a weak, invisible protocol that the government makes vague reference to from time to time in the Calgary region, but it's nothing that has the confidence of the 800,000 people in the Calgary region. There's no publicly accessible registry people can go to and find out who has a conflict and whether there's some declaration of conflict. There's no independent officer to police those conflicts. What we have is that one billion dollars being spent, and we just simply have to hope somebody in there is doing things to advantage Albertans.

I'm running close to the end of my speaking time, and there is so much more to say. Let me just say this. You know, I had a chance to attend a meeting in Calgary at the Red & White Club a couple of weeks ago. Eight hundred concerned Calgarians came out. Those weren't left-wing nuts. They weren't all Liberals; I can tell you that. Many of them were seniors. They were interested. They were people genuinely concerned. [interjections] I hear people laugh, Mr. Speaker.

They were Calgarians concerned about the direction of this government's private health care initiative. They were concerned about Bill 11. You know what was interesting? The questions went far beyond what's in this little bill. What it talked about was a question of trust. What it talked about was questions about an unelected regional health authority, questions about who chairs the regional health authority. Mr. Speaker, just because you can run the crane, run the wrecking ball, it doesn't mean you can be an architect.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to rise tonight to speak to Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act. We all know that Albertans take enormous pride in our publicly funded health care system, but that same health care that Albertans treasure faces many challenges. One of the challenges, as the Premier and my colleagues in caucus have rightly pointed out, is that a legislative gap currently exists in Alberta, a legislative gap that impairs our ability to control private health facilities.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta needs Bill 11 to provide clear rules for surgical facilities and clear rules for any contracts with these facilities. Alberta needs Bill 11 to ban private hospitals, such as those supported by the Leader of the Opposition, from ever opening their doors in this province. Alberta needs Bill 11 to regulate the surgical facilities that already exist in this province and that could exist in the future as regional health authorities continue to seek new and better ways to reduce waiting lists in response to demand from Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, before I go on, I'd like to clarify the difference as identified in Bill 11 between a private hospital and a surgical clinic, because I believe there has been a great deal of misunderstanding on this point. I believe that once Albertans understand the difference, they'll also gain a better understanding of this government's efforts to improve our publicly funded and publicly administered health system.

First, let me emphasize that there are currently no private hospitals in Alberta, and under Bill 11 there never will be any. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is contrary to the Liberal opposition position. The Liberal opposition believes that a private hospital, one with acute care beds, with operating theatres, with X ray and other diagnostic equipment, with an emergency room, with an intensive care unit, should be able to operate and charge Albertans directly. It would do everything our public hospitals do but with one significant difference: the patient would pay for everything. That is truly what two-tiered health care is all about, and as the opposition leader seems to support, the wealthy could access services faster than other Albertans. That truly is what queue-jumping is all about.

Again, let me make one thing very clear. With Bill 11 the government of Alberta will ensure that such a facility will never exist within the borders of this province. That is because it runs counter to everything our Canadian health system stands for and everything this government stands for. In contrast, Mr. Speaker, surgical clinics as regulated by Bill 11 are not private hospitals. Under Bill 11 surgical clinics will not be allowed to provide all the acute care and diagnostic and ICU and ER services that a full-service hospital offers. They will only provide those minor surgeries that they have been contracted to provide to the public system, and they will only be contracted to provide these minor surgeries if such a contract provides a benefit to the public system.

A health authority must determine that contracting with a facility will help reduce waiting lists or help increase access to medically necessary services before a contract would be approved. The surgical facility will only be allowed to perform these minor surgeries if the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta has determined that those services can be provided safely and effectively outside a public hospital and in that particular facility. They will only be allowed to provide insured services if the Minister of Health and Wellness is satisfied that the contract can pass the whole list of criteria required under Bill 11 that the minister himself shared with us earlier. If a proposed contract cannot fulfill all these requirements, then under Bill 11 it will not be approved. It's as simple as that, Mr. Speaker.

Our government steadfastly believes in the principles of the Canada Health Act, so much so, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 11 commits to those principles in the very preamble of the legislation. We believe that medically necessary hospital and physician services must be available to all Albertans. That's the comprehensive principle of the Canada Health Act. We believe that all Alberta residents must be covered in the health plan of our province. That's the universality principle. We believe that all Albertans must have access to medically necessary hospital and medical services without charge and without extra fees. That's the accessibility principle. We believe that a citizen of one province or territory should be able to receive hospital and medical services in any other province without being charged. That's the portability principle. Finally, we believe that the provincial health care insurance plans must be administered on a nonprofit basis by a public authority. That's the publicly administered principle.

Each one of these principles, Mr. Speaker, is committed to in the preamble of Bill 11 and supported in the detail of the legislation. Each one of these principles will be adhered to in surgical facilities regulated by Bill 11.

Bill 11 protects the rights of Albertans as patients and consumers of the health system. Bill 11 clearly states that no Albertan will pay any fees to receive medically necessary services. That includes facility fees, service fees, physician fees, equipment fees, all fees. All costs for necessary surgeries will be paid by health authorities no matter where that service is performed.

The key point is that a surgical facility would be, from the patient's perspective, just like another ward of a public hospital. It's part of the public health care system. Patients would be eligible for the same insured services paid for in the publicly funded system. A patient's doctor would decide on appropriate treatment and on the necessary timing of that treatment, and queue-jumping would be absolutely prohibited, just like in a public hospital.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, if a patient in either a public hospital or a surgical facility chooses to purchase an enhanced product or service, Bill 11 ensures that providers must disclose both verbally and in writing why such upgrades are being sold. They must clearly outline to the patient the cost of such upgrades and in a way which allows the patient to give proper consideration to the decision. In addition, Bill 11 enables people to cancel an agreement to buy upgrades if they change their mind. What we need to keep in mind, Mr. Speaker, is that these are not medically necessary services. They're the extra services and products Albertans can and do already purchase in our public hospitals.

Perhaps most importantly, Bill 11 gives the Minister of Health and Wellness the authority to limit the amount of charges for enhanced goods and services, whether sold in a public hospital or a contracted surgical facility. This, Mr. Speaker, ensures fairness and equity in pricing for Albertans. In fact, to demonstrate our government's commitment to containing such charges, the Minister of Health and Wellness has already imposed this cap on the public hospitals. Bill 11 will enable the extension of that cap to surgical facilities as well.

If facilities or providers do not adhere to these rules, they could be fined up to $10,000 for the first offence and up to $20,000 for every offence after that. If it is found that someone has been charged a fee to receive a medically necessary service or if it has been found that someone has received payment to allow an Albertan to receive a medically necessary service ahead of others, Bill 11 outlines strict fines for the contravention of the protections provided to Albertans under this act.

Mr. Speaker, as I've discussed the principles of Bill 11 with my constituents and other Albertans, one of the questions they have asked has been: where will we find the health professionals, the doctors and nurses, that will staff surgical clinics? That's a good question, and I'd like to address it tonight. There's a concern that the publicly funded health system will be negatively affected as surgical facilities recruit their staff, but I'd like to assure Albertans watching tonight that through the criteria outlined in section 8 of Bill 11, that concern is clearly addressed.

However, first of all, many Albertans are not aware that the number of physicians practising in Alberta has been steadily increasing over the past few years. For example, over the past two years there was an increase of over 400 doctors practicing in Alberta, and a further increase is expected this year.

Second, people don't seem to be aware that doctors won't have to choose between working in either a surgical clinic or a public hospital. Doctors will be able to provide services in both locations, and they will continue to be paid by the government and at the same rates. In fact, that's a point worth emphasizing, Mr. Speaker. There will not be one fee schedule for surgeries performed by physicians in public hospitals and another for surgeries performed by physicians in surgical facilities. The fee schedule negotiated by the government with the Alberta Medical Association will continue to determine payments to doctors regardless of where they perform a surgery.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, it's important to keep in mind that as well as introducing Bill 11, this government has also put in motion a six-point plan for health that directly addresses increasing the number of doctors and nurses in Alberta. That plan provides funding for even more than 90 physicians this year. In co-operation with the Alberta Medical Association, the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta, Alberta medical schools, and the health authorities, government has completed a comprehensive physician resource plan for Alberta. This plan will further assist in ensuring that Albertans have appropriate access to physician services in the years to come. The six-point plan also provides for the addition of 20 postgraduate residency positions to Alberta's medical schools this year and another 20 positions next year to help train even more doctors in the future.

The six-point plan also increases funding to enable regional health authorities to hire up to 2,400 more nurses and other frontline staff, especially in the areas of emergency wards, long-term care, home care, and acute care over the next three years. That's in addition to the extra funding provided to the health authorities last year to hire almost 1,200 new full-time equivalent positions, including more than 600 nurses. In fact, Mr. Speaker, over the course of several years, this government is providing funding to hire over 3,600 nurses and other staff to help, as does Bill 11, reduce waiting lists and improve access to services. Our government also recognized the need to train additional nurses. In that light, we have announced an additional 195 spaces in the postsecondary institutions to train new nurses in the year 2000-2001.

With these strategies, which are just part of the overall six-point plan for health, this government has clearly demonstrated its commitment to improving our publicly funded and publicly administered health system on several fronts.

All that being said, Mr. Speaker, the bottom line regarding the staffing of surgical facilities as regulated by Bill 11 is this: if a proposed contract was perceived to be a threat to the supply of professional staff in the public system, it would be rejected. It's as simple as that. If there was a threat to a health authority's staff supply, they would not propose a contract, and if the Minister of Health and Wellness identified the risk, the contract would not be approved.

Again, I think it's important to emphasize here that under Bill 11 such contracts are simply an option, a tool for the health authorities to use if they think a contract would benefit the health system. In fact, Mr. Speaker, in the case of day surgeries, contracting with private facilities is already an option that is used throughout our province and has been for many years. As has been mentioned before, we already have 52 privately owned accredited surgical clinics providing over 20,000 surgical procedures each year on behalf of the public system.

Mr. Speaker, that's over 20,000 Albertans receiving necessary surgeries paid for by our health system without taking up essential space in our hospitals. This is a fact that seems to have been missed by those who say that the contracts with surgical facilities as outlined in Bill 11 threaten the public nature of our health system. What they don't understand or refuse to recognize is that the private sector has traditionally played an important role in supporting and complementing Canada's and Alberta's publicly funded health system.

There are currently over 4,500 physicians in Alberta who are, in fact, private-sector health providers and who bill the public health system under the terms of the contract for services provided to the public system. Bill 11 does not change this arrangement. Physicians will continue to be paid as they are now and at the same rates no matter where a surgery is performed.

There are also close to 600 chiropractors, over 230 opticians, over 275 optometrists, and close to 40 podiatrists who are private operators in Alberta yet do work for and in support of the public health system. We have almost 800 pharmacies in the province which are all private-sector health providers yet which play an integral and essential role in our public health system. We have 34 privately owned long-term care facilities in Alberta providing long-term care to our seniors under contract to regional health authorities. Mr. Speaker, thousands of Albertans receive quality care under this arrangement, and these are similar arrangements to those proposed in Bill 11 for minor surgeries.

We have privately owned laboratory companies providing lab services to our publicly funded health system at over 90 different sites. We have 375 private-sector ground ambulances located in 135 communities throughout Alberta. Again, Mr. Speaker, similar to Bill 11, these are services provided by the private-sector yet paid for by the public system.

We have the many walk-in clinics and medicentres at locations near our homes that our families often use when needing nonemergency services in the evenings or on the weekends. Again, these are private, for-profit facilities providing services for Albertans as part of the publicly funded health system with services paid for by the publicly funded system.

What Bill 11 does is ensure that surgical facilities safely support and benefit our health system in the same way, and what Bill 11 does, Mr. Speaker, is ensure that the publicly funded health system is protected from any potential negative impacts from private sector support and involvement. In fact, the principles of Bill 11 are really no different than those supported by the Leader of the Official Opposition when she was minister of health back in 1991.

Some nine years ago or so she brought forward to the government caucus a discussion paper outlining possible legislative options to regulate nonhospital facilities. The paper states, and I quote: each option is designed to be able to regulate the number, type, and location of the facilities; the payment of facility fees for insured services by Alberta Health through a fee for service or global basis would alleviate concerns about possible violation of the Canada Health Act and allegations of two-tier medicine. Mr. Speaker, I don't know about you, but it sounds a great deal like Bill 11 to me. Our opposition leader suggested it and supported it then, so why is she so opposed to Bill 11 now?

If you look at the same discussion paper provided by the Member for Edmonton-McClung, you will see the options considered in that paper were threefold: an independent facilities act to licence private facilities, designating private facilities under the Hospitals Act, or directing contracts between hospitals and ambulatory care facilities. Again, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure about you, but it sounds very much like Bill 11 to me.

So, Mr. Speaker, 10 years ago, when the hon. member was the minister of health, the basic principles incorporated into Bill 11 were just fine for Alberta's health system. Today her position has changed. I'll quote from a recent Liberal news release. Today her position is: ban private, for-profit hospitals from receiving public taxpayer dollars. It's important to note that the release does not call for an outright ban of private hospitals. I take that as meaning that she doesn't support banning them completely as is done in Bill 11. Her view is to let them operate outside the public system and cater to the wealthy and prosperous.

Well, this government does not support two-tiered medicine. Bill 11 rejects private hospitals and prohibits anyone from getting faster service just because they can pay to do so. The bill rejects it because Albertans reject it. Bill 11 rejects any American style, two-tier private health system for this province. Bill 11 puts in place an Alberta solution to some of the challenges we face in protecting and preserving our Canadian style, single-payer, publicly funded health system, because above all else, Mr. Speaker, this government's goal with Bill 11 is to ensure that our publicly funded and publicly administered health system is sustainable now and for our future generations.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, momentarily the special three-hour unedited television and radio coverage of this evening's debate on Bill 11 will end. On behalf of all members of the Alberta Legislative Assembly may I extend thanks to those citizens who chose to visit their Alberta Legislature this evening or who chose to view or listen to these proceedings via Access Television, CHED radio, or QR77 radio. CPAC will also carry this evening's proceedings.

Further debate on Bill 11 is scheduled for tomorrow and Thursday in this Assembly.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure this evening to rise to speak to second reading of Bill 11. I want to take an approach that looks at this from the perspective of a number of the constituents that have approached me.

As you are aware, I travel a lot of rural Alberta, and rural Albertans have raised a lot of issues about how Bill 11 affects them. They're talking about the issues of how it is going to affect their access to health care if they see a lot of these surgical facilities arise in the major areas like Calgary and Edmonton, wherever the volume of service is available to get the mass that's necessary for them to be able to operate. So they want to know what impact this will have in terms of the time that's required for them to get access to health care, what it means in terms of their emergency services, what it means in terms of their ability to get a reasonable level of broad-based health care in their local community.

They also want to know what it means in terms of distance and location. A lot of it there boils down to the issue of how they deal with long-term care. How do they deal with the issue of providing the local community contact that their parent or their family member who's in long-term care has been used to getting? Contact with friends, contact with family? Are they going to be asked to move to a different place, a different geographic location where a private facility has taken the option to set up? This is one of the concerns they're raising. They've seen private facilities start in some communities, and they've seen where their family members or their friends have been asked to move to a different community because that's where capacity exists. They want to know what relationship this kind of bill will have on their impact.

They're also talking about how it's going to affect their priority on the waiting lists. A number of them have seen cases already where, when they need to travel to a centre where a surgery or other medical procedure is provided, they see that these have different impacts. They're also seeing that preference is given to people from the local jurisdiction or the local health authority because the local health authority there has to pay the cost of someone in a waiting queue if they're in a facility, whereas if they're in a different facility, it's not part of the cost to that health authority. So they see that kind of discrepancy come up, and they want to know how they are going to be treated if we end up with a number of these private facilities. They trust the public health care system. They trust the experience they've had in terms of getting fair and equitable access under the public system. They want to know why that can't continue for them.

The other thing they look at also is the whole idea of how you define the concepts of accessibility and universality and how they apply to them. A lot of them now are seeing that, okay, there's no user fee applied to a service that they have to travel to get, but they end up with different costs than someone in an urban area. Historically, a lot of them have assumed that that's just part of the advantage of living in a rural area, but now it's getting to the point where some of these costs are significant.

They have to go to the major centre. They have to get accommodation there while their family member is being cared for. They have to travel back and forth to visit. They have to travel back and forth to see the specialists. They have to travel back and forth to have follow-up medical care. Those costs add up. This is not an equitable health care system. This is not a system that shows universality of equal treatment of every Albertan, and they're wondering how much more it's going to cost them for their health care as they live in rural areas. How will Bill 11 affect that? These costs are going to increase for them.

The other thing they want to look at is: how do they deal with the effect of the definitions of health care facilities in their community. A lot of issues have come up in terms of the change in service in some of our rural health care facilities. If someone is traveling around Alberta now and they go into a community and say, "Well, where's the hospital?" that is going to mean something different to everybody in a different community now because those facilities provide different services, depending upon which community you're in. So there's no consistency. How will people traveling around rural Alberta or living in rural Alberta know what facilities are available in which place by name, because those names will not be consistent. They have to have those kinds of confidences built.

Mr. Speaker, I've had a number of meetings in southern Alberta and, as I said, across rural Alberta. One of the issues that comes up is: how are we going to look at the cost-effectiveness of these private facilities? How are we going to measure this in the context of our public health care system? I've had communications with a number of the regional health authorities, and in fact in almost all of them now I've talked to somebody there in authority, and they all admit that they have excess physical capacity in their region.

What we're looking at then is: how can Albertans feel confident that a reasonable decision is going to be made if they have to look at a facility that's standing there empty? How can a private sector compete with that when it's already there in the public sector? To increase our capacity in that public sector all we have to do is provide a staff complement. This is the level of staffing that's required, all the way from the specialist down to the service personnel. Then we also have to provide a supply complement.

Now, under the regulations of our Health Professions Act those two are going to be reasonably comparable within either system. What we then end up with is: if we're going to contract out, that contract also has to cover the cost of a new or a different facility, of course, unless we're going to rent space to them in our own facilities. The other thing they have to cover is the cost of a return on investment and a return to shareholders for that private operator. Mr. Speaker, while we have excess capacity, how can we justify a contract that can be cost-effective? It can't be done.

We have to look at it also, then, in the context of: what happens as we expand the need for health care and we need to have new facilities? The public sector then has a choice of building a facility or contracting out for this facility fee. If we use proper public accounting processes, where we provide ourselves with an internal rate of return to the public, what that does is transfer that internal rate of return from one pocket in the public to the other. Those dollars are still available for the use of the public sector. We can expand our health care delivery, we can use it for another service, or we can even give a tax cut by it.

Mr. Speaker, if we deal with that kind of internal rate of return and return to shareholder for equity in the private sector, what happens is that those dollars move out of our care, out of our supervision, and away from access to improve our public services. They go off to provide a greater return for the financial institutions, or they go off to provide a return on investment and return to shareholders. Those dollars are no longer available in the public sector. So how can we justify looking at this in the context of the cost-effectiveness of our system?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I heard earlier this evening that each contract was going to be evaluated separately. I would hope that is not the process we use. We have to look at all these contracts in the total context of the business plan of that health authority. It's very easy to deal with a single surgical procedure and say: okay, if we're going to specialize in that one particular service, we can create a very specialized facility and get some kind of cost benefit for it. But what happens if we've got three or four of those and we want to put them all into a public facility?

There should be cost economies in that. Those economies should exist if we look at the whole business plan of that health authority, better still at the whole business plan of Alberta Health all across the province, because a lot of those services are going to be provided to people who are not in that health authority. People from Lethbridge are going to travel to Calgary. People from Medicine Hat are going to travel to Lethbridge. So we have to look at this in the context of the whole mandate of Alberta Health. We can't look at it just in the context of the mandate of one regional health authority for one surgical service or one surgical procedure. We've got to do it in the context of: what is cost-effective for our entire health care system and the taxpayers of this province? It's their dollars we're spending, Mr. Speaker. It's their dollars we're using to provide them with a service.

Mr. Speaker, that gets down to another issue that we heard addressed this evening. When we're talking about, well, Alberta spends more on health care than any other province in Canada or almost as much as any other, when we talk about it in the context of we're spending a third of our budget, which is more than anybody else, that kind of comparison is only relative and only relevant if we're making sure that every other province is providing the same basket of other services to add up to the other two-thirds. We know that in Alberta we are not providing a lot of the public services that are being provided in other provinces, so that kind of comparison is a deception. It's a misrepresentation of data for Albertans. We should never do that.

Mr. Speaker, as we look at this, some of the other questions that come up as I've talked to people in rural Alberta and southern Alberta deal with the context of: how do we deal with queue-jumping, two-tiered health care? You know, all these different issues. I think that after reading the bill, a lot of Albertans now don't necessarily see the concept that you can pay for a covered service in a private facility. They see that kind of concept of two-tiered health care being excluded by this bill. You know, they're trusting.

The thing they want to know, though, is: what about queue-jumping? What about queue-jumping in the context of diagnostic services? We are looking at a system here where if you've got the dollars, you can get your diagnostic service outside the public health care system, take the results of that diagnostic service, move it into the public system, and get in the procedure queue quicker.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a lot of the seniors in this province – and we heard an example of this already tonight – are very concerned about that. They have to decide: "Do I spend money on my health so that I can get in that queue quicker, or do I spend money on the other kinds of things needed for a necessity in life?" They don't have a lot of disposable income. So, in essence, we've got to make sure that when we talk about no queue-jumping, when we talk about a universal system in this province, it means from one end to the other and all the services associated and all the needs associated with the obtaining of that health care service. We can't have diagnostics separated out.

Mr. Speaker, when we came to this Legislature – and I think you and I came about the same time, in the early '90s – what we ended up with was very little discussion at that time with the concept of MRIs. You know, a MRI was something that was very uncommon. Well, now it's expected by a lot of the doctors and it's expected by the patient. Now, a lot of questions can arise as to what the options are when we allow expectations to drive our health care system. That can become a real issue in itself. But still, to get a proper diagnosis – and that's essential now for some of our specialized drugs, for some of our specialized procedures – we have to have an accurate diagnosis. Are we saying that people who can't afford to pay for it on their own can't get the same quality of health care? I think we've got to look at that and make sure this bill deals with that kind of queue-jumping as well as, you know, I'm just going to pay to get in the queue a little faster for an approved surgery. Well, that isn't enough, and Albertans want to see the bill changed.

The other thing we need to look at is that essentially people are asking how they can deal with accountability in this bill. They look at section 23 and, Mr. Speaker, they read it totally different than the little sidebar in that handout. The little sidebar says that the courts can be the judge or be the control over the minister, yet when you read it, it basically says that no decision made by the minister can be challenged or in any way altered by the courts. Well, I'm sorry. They need some explanation on that particular clause. They need to know whether or not, if they don't agree with a decision by the minister, the courts are available to them. When they read section 23, they read it as saying no, yet the little sidebar says yes, and they want to know about that.

This also gets down to the idea of accountability in the context of decision-making by their regional health authority. The minister has the ultimate say, but it's the health authority that prepares the data that then is presented to the minister to back up and justify that kind of decision that the minister is going to make. Well, what if the citizens in a health authority don't agree with the way that health authority board provided the data or developed the data? There's no accountability. They want elected health authorities before Bill 11 becomes part of their health care system. They would rather not have Bill 11. They would rather have a public health care system that was strong, that gave them the kind of health care system they wanted, and that provided them with services they felt comfortable with.

Mr. Speaker, I've had a number of people ask how the public benefit is going to be defined. What are we going to use as the criteria? I don't know. A number of them have said, "Why is it that we never did get the health care charter that was promised by the Premier three or four years ago?" That was going to define what could be the expectation. This kind of died off in a meeting somewhere. I think it was in Red Deer. This is the kind of thing that people want to know. What is it that they can count on the public sector to deliver? What can they count on in terms of their health care through that public sector? If they've got some kind of written document or some kind of base they can use as a judgment in terms of the quality of the delivery, they feel more comfortable.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I just want to talk a little bit about kind of the marketplace, what drives health care. You know, private enterprise only operates when a market exists. We never had to deal with the issue of the private sector's involvement in health care until we started to have a shortage of funds, a lack of service provided by the public system. Once that started, we had to come in and look at how we deal with decisions on the basis of a one-year budget as opposed to a long-term budget at the provincial level.

What we need in this province is a commitment to infrastructure to support our public services of health care and education. That fund then becomes the source against which we take our capital allocations over time. We can give ourselves an internal rate of return, and as I explained before, that goes from one of our public pockets to the other; it doesn't go off into the financial institutions or the private sector. It gives us a greater return on our public dollar. It gives us accountability and a proper use of the public fund.

Mr. Speaker, I've covered a lot of ground, and I see I'm getting down to just about the end. As per our agreement with the House leaders, at this point in time I think I've finally concluded what I wanted to say. I will move adjournment of debate on Bill 11.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've had a wonderful start to the debate on Bill 11, but I think the time has come to move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[At 11:19 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 5, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/04/05

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we enjoy. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Xu Youfang, senior adviser of Alberta's sister province in China, Heilongjiang, along with members of his delegation. He is accompanied today by Mr. Gu Huaming, consul general of the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier had an opportunity to host His Excellency over lunch and conveyed to him the importance of the trip that he led, the Alberta mission to Heilongjiang last year and how impressed he was by the dramatic and very positive changes that he saw in Heilongjiang. We'll celebrate the 20th anniversary of our twinning with Heilongjiang next year. I'm very pleased that His Excellency is in Alberta today to see the exciting growth in our province, and I wish him and his colleagues a very pleasant and a very productive visit.

I would ask that our honoured guests, who are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, please rise and receive the very traditional welcome of this Legislature.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mr. Robert Smolen, undersecretary of state, presidential chancellery from Warsaw, Poland; Mr. Krzysztof Smyk, Polish consul general from Vancouver; Mr. Jarek Nowinka, president of the Canadian Polish Congress of Alberta; Mr. Zygmunt Potocki, vice-president of the Canadian Polish Congress from Calgary; Mr. John Szumlak, the vice-president of the Canadian Polish Congress, Alberta branch; and Mr. Archie Grover, former Deputy Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Smolen is in Alberta to attend some of the exciting events that are being held during Polish Week in Edmonton March 30 to April 8 of this year. Polish Week in Edmonton has been organized by the Polish Culture Society of Edmonton with support from Polish organizations and the University of Alberta.

They're seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I've been advised that we have quite a list today, so let's be patient.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I wish to table today a petition from very wise and fair-minded young Albertans who have signed this petition in support of the intent of Bill 11.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

MR. BOUTILIER: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to present on behalf of residents of Fort McMurray in support of Bill 11. It reads that they urge the Government of Alberta to provide respective Regional Health Authorities with the flexibility necessary to provide the delivery of publicly funded, publicly administered overnight surgical services cost-effectively and efficiently.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I again have the pleasure to rise and file with you a petition signed by 272 Edmontonians and citizens from Spruce Grove, Carvel, Stony Plain, and Sherwood Park. They are all in unanimous support of the resolution that reads: "urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by 318 people from the Lethbridge, Redcliff, Medicine Hat, Raymond, Coaldale, Fort Macleod, Picture Butte, Cardston, Pincher Creek, and Taber areas. In fact, with today's tablings that'll be 1,607, totaling so far 40,033 that we've brought here, wise people from Alberta who believe in democracy and the ability to petition. They are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to "urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining [the] public health care [system]."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to present a petition to the Legislative Assembly from 325 Albertans from Edmonton, Sherwood Park, Spruce Grove, St. Albert, and Jasper. These individual citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to "urge the Government of Alberta to stop promoting private healthcare and undermining public healthcare."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition supporting public health care in Alberta on behalf of 210 Albertans from Fairview, Chauvin, Beaverlodge, Hythe, Fox Creek, and Wembley. This is urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today as well to rise and table a petition signed by 247 citizens of Alberta from Edmonton, Sherwood Park, Spruce Grove, Onoway, and Stony Plain. These citizens implore that the Legislative Assembly "urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to present to the Assembly a petition that's been signed by 209 residents of Calgary and Canmore. Not only don't they like Bill 11; they don't want closure on debate on the bill either. Their petition is:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition signed by 245 Albertans from Edmonton, Lethbridge, Calgary, and Spruce Grove. They are petitioning the Legislative Assembly "to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained." With this submission the number of signatures on the petition is well over 10,000.

Thank you.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the petitions in my name be read back to the Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, request that the petition standing in my name on the Order Paper be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'd like to have now read and received the petition I tabled yesterday, which reads:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE CLERK:

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions to be read back today. They're both in relation to the promotion of private health care and the undermining of public health care and request that it be stopped. The first petition is signed by 265 Albertans, and the second petition is signed by 154 Albertans.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to stop promoting private healthcare and undermining public healthcare.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition from 439 Albertans requesting that the promotion of private health care and the undermining of public health care be stopped that I presented to the House on Tuesday, April 4 be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd request at this time that the petition I presented on April 4 registering opposition to private health care be now read and received, please.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would request that the petition which I presented to this Assembly yesterday expressing the concern of Albertans regarding this government's health care privatization scheme now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, this afternoon I would like to table five copies of an independent legal review of Bill 11 by Chris Levy, professor of law at the University of Calgary. The review concludes that Bill 11 does not violate any of the principles of the Canada Health Act and indeed is in full compliance with the Canada Health Act in its overall scheme.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to table with the Assembly five copies of a letter recently sent to the Leader of the Official Opposition pertaining to the disposition of records from her time as minister of health.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of regional health authorities in the province for the year ended March 31, 1999. I provided the required number of copies for tabling earlier to the Clerk's office.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table with the Assembly today five copies of the Safety Codes Council 1999 annual report.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to file with the Assembly a letter of congratulations to the University of Alberta Bears hockey team. On Sunday, March 6 in Saskatoon the Bears won the second straight CIAU men's hockey championship. The latest win brings the total of crowns in Bears hockey to 10, a remarkable accomplishment that demonstrates the U of A's excellence in sports and, indeed, Alberta's tradition of excellence in sports.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table information from the latest report of the Canadian Institute for Health Information, in which the minister will note the drop in hospital costs and hospital funding in Alberta in the mid-1990s.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings. The first one is a summary of the expenses totaling $17,064.68, which was the cost of all advertising undertaken by the official Liberal opposition in opposition to Bill 11, and we'll be tabling some incidental expenses as we have them.

The next one is for the benefit of the Premier. I'm tabling a checklist that the Premier can simply fill in, listing the expenses that the government has incurred with respect to promoting and proselytizing Bill 11.

The third item I'm tabling is a petition signed by . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, the Premier's speaking so loudly, I can't hear myself speak.

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Documents

THE SPEAKER: Okay. I think we're going to ask for some attention. Everybody who participated in Tabling Returns and Reports today violated the rules of this House. Everyone. Now, under Tabling Returns and Reports you table them with no editorial comment, and if the hon. members want to go outside and continue the debate, they're invited to do so.

Tabling Returns and Reports: table them without any editorial comment. Then there's no need for any debate. There's no need for any chitchatter. Without editorial comment: that's the rule. That's to be enforced by the various House leaders who have violated their enforcement procedures with respect to this matter.

So let's go on with no editorial comment.

MR. DICKSON: Next, I'm tabling the requisite number of copies of a message signed by 606 people in the Vermilion area registering opposition to the privatization of health care.

The final item I'm tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a set of letters from 67 correspondents in the city of Medicine Hat registering their opposition to Bill 11 and the private health care initiative of the government.

Thank you.

1:50

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, I have three tablings today. My first one is an excerpt from the Camsell Mosaic about a public hospital in Alberta with a rich and majestic history of service to the people of Alberta which the government is now proposing to sell for a dollar.

My second tabling. Further to the Premier's suggestion yesterday that I should tour Alberta's health facilities, I am pleased to table today . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, just table it, and let's move on.

MRS. SLOAN: . . . five copies of my graduate and registered nursing diploma, signifying that I have spent more hours in health care facilities . . .

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a letter from a constituent, Joan Leslie, which I will table without comment.

THE SPEAKER: Thank you, hon. member. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a media release from the minister of health in Ontario announcing the closure of two private hospitals in order to protect Ontario's public health care system.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling a number of letters today that are all opposed to the Genesis proposal for Spray Lakes. They are from Maegan Hawkes of Calgary, Chris Fitznar of Banff, Lance Steinke of Canmore, Kevin Milliken of Canmore, and also from Bill Marshall of Canmore.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have for tablings this afternoon, some postdebate feedback for the Premier: copies of the Bill 11 householder marked returned to the Premier, one with a cartoon that says, "We said no damn it!"

Mr. Speaker, my last tabling is from a constituent of mine, Marcel Gibello, who asks that I please table the following letter in the Legislature in regards to Calgary's push for private MRIs.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first one is the strike time line from November 8 until April 5 for the strikers that are having job action with the Calgary Herald.

The second is the Alberta Labour Relations Board decision still pending regarding that unfortunate labour dispute.

The third one is very interesting, Mr. Speaker. This is the complete version of the Conrad Black/Andy Marshall confrontation as well as it can be heard. This is a transcript for all hon. members of the Assembly to have.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. I'm sure there's somebody else who wants to participate in tablings today.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got three tablings today. The first one is a letter to the minister of health from Dr. W.A. Fuller from Athabasca. It's a three-page letter opposing Bill 11 and giving reasons for it.

The second letter is from one of my constituents, E.J. Kowal, again opposing Bill 11, a fairly extensive two-page letter.

The third one is one from David Finch from Calgary, vehemently opposing Bill 11 and asking the Premier to read his letter carefully.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. I have to make a correction to what I said a little earlier. There were actually two members today who did follow the rules with respect to tablings: the Minister of Municipal Affairs, who was absolutely correct, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. All others failed.

head: Introduction of Guests

MR. TANNAS: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of 60 senior high school students from across this province who are visiting the Legislature with the Forum for Young Albertans. The Forum for Young Albertans is a nonpartisan political learning experience which provides the opportunity for close study of provincial and local politics. Joining this group of enthusiastic young Albertans is Mr. Blair Stolz, executive director for the Forum for Young Albertans, and group leaders Tanya, Jeff, Anne Marie, and Richard. They are seated in the public gallery this afternoon. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests visiting from Warrington in Cheshire, England. They are concluding a two month long world tour and depart for the United Kingdom tomorrow. Colonel Bill and Rosie Spiegelberg are in the members' gallery. I would invite them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly students, teachers, and parents from Avondale school in Grande Prairie. The students are accompanied by teachers Paul Waite and Mrs. Joanne Bordeniuk and parents Mr. and Mrs. Don and Brenda Girard, Mrs. Pat Proudfoot, Mrs. Cecilia Littleton, Mrs. Irene Gaw, Mr. Don Sellick, Mr. Kevin Pringnitz, Mr. Paul Plant, and Dorothy Brown. They're scheduled to be seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that if they are here, they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm privileged to have two school groups from the Wainwright constituency today, the first being a group of talented grade 5 students from the Sedgewick Seventh Day Adventist private school. They are accompanied by Debi Anderson and Sherilyn Grovet. I welcome them to the Legislature to watch government in action. They're in the members' gallery. I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second group, Mr. Speaker, is a delightful group of students from the Wainwright high school. They are accompanied by teacher Brent Allen. They are in the members' gallery. They are here to observe the Assembly in action, and I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'm pleased to introduce to this Assembly two former pages of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta who are seated in the members' gallery. Karen Diepeveen served as page from November of 1999 to December of 1999. Karen is currently completing her grade 12 at the Edmonton Christian high school. Also joining us this afternoon is Agnes Mickus, a former Speaker's page from November 1998 to May 1999. Agnes is also completing her grade 12 at Maurice-Lavallee. We are pleased that they are able to view this Assembly from a different perspective this afternoon. I would ask them to please stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Erin Wiley. Erin is a grade 10 student at McNally high school. She's enrolled in the international baccalaureate program there. She is diligent, conscientious, and she's a graduate of Holyrood elementary school and Kenilworth junior high. Erin has been selected to represent Edmonton-Gold Bar in Mr. Speaker's Alberta Youth Parliament. She is present in the public gallery. I would now ask her to please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

2:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a longtime constituent and friend, Mr. John Webster. I had the pleasure today of meeting with Mr. Webster, along with Miss Karen Grose and Mr. Larry Stevens. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to introduce three very special visitors from Calgary today. These prominent individuals are nationally renowned journalists. Today is the 149th day of the Calgary Herald dispute. Today these individuals met with all caucuses represented in this House to draw their attention to Alberta's poor labour laws and seek their support in concluding their first collective agreement. These journalists are also asking the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to show some leadership in the resolution of their first collective agreement.

They are seated in the public gallery. They are Andy Marshall, president of CEP local 115A; Brian Brennan, a renowned journalist; and Murray Lamb, a visitor from British Columbia. I request that the guests now please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you two constituents of mine that I had the pleasure of meeting with today. They are Laura Shutiak and Paul Drohan. I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Expansion of the Swan Hills waste treatment plant, government refinancing of the West Edmonton Mall, and now the Premier's private health care privatization campaign: each boondoggle bears this Premier's hallmarks of misrepresentation, blanked-out pages, hidden documents, and in the end costs taxpayers a bundle. My questions are to the Premier. Given the Premier's tendency to blank out pages and hide taxpayer-funded reports, are the Premier and his minister hiding any documents that examine private hospital policy in other provinces of Canada?

MR. KLEIN: The answer to the question, Mr. Speaker, is no.

You know, we just learned that there are 155 boxes of documents from the former minister of health who is now the Liberal leader. I understand she has consented to release those to the archives, and perhaps she might want to release those to the House, so we can get an idea of where she was coming from. We don't know today where she's coming from. Perhaps those documents that have been kept in locked boxes for something like 10 years could shed some light on where the minister was coming from then.

I know, for instance, that she removed a whole bunch of hospital signs along the highways so that people wouldn't know whether they were going to a hospital or to, as she described it then, a community health centre or a community clinic, Mr. Speaker. You know, we would like to know what her rationale was at that particular time. We would like to have access to those documents.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals are not FOIPable, and for the viewing public, FOIPable means that they are not subject to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. They use it against us all the time, but they will not table their traveling expenses. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo spent more per kilometre than any other MLA in the smallest constituency in the province.

You know, people run that constituency at noon hour. They run the length for their exercise, yet he spent about $45,000 traveling the length, the width, and the breadth of his constituency. And you want to talk about hiding things. You know, hiding things. I don't know. How much did this little odometer that he had on his pocket cost? What does he charge up? Does he charge a penny a stride? They want to talk about hiding things. Mr. Speaker, these are the people who are hiding things.

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition in the preamble made some reference to West Edmonton Mall. I don't know; I'd like to look at the Blues to see what reference was made. This is before the courts at the present time, and I'd have your indulgence in telling the leader that they should watch what they say about this case.

MRS. MacBETH: Getting back to the question that the Premier refuses to answer, Mr. Speaker, why are the Premier and his government misleading Albertans by saying that his policy on private surgical facilities is the same as the other provinces?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this government is not misleading anyone at all. But, yes, when we talk about – and this is Liberal vicious, malicious misinformation. We don't know how much this cost, but I'm going to read from it. It says: Why Bill 11 Is the Wrong Prescription for Alberta. This handout, this publicly paid for piece of trash says that it "legalizes private, for-profit hospitals." That, Mr. Speaker . . . [interjection] Well, no, no. I'm going to address that later. It "creates a two-tier health care system," it "opens the door to extra charges without protecting patients," and it "permits the queue-jumping that is going on today."

Mr. Speaker, I read from Beauchesne. These are the words that we're allowed to use. That's a "barefaced falsehood." That is deception, and it purports to "deceive." It is "dishonest." It is "false." It is "fraudulent." It is "indecent." It is "insincere." It is "malicious." It is "misinforming." It is "misleading." It purportedly "misled." It's "not telling the truth." It is "phony." It is "scandalous." It is "rotten." It is a "smokescreen." It is a "stinker." It is "stupid." It is "untrue" and "untruthful." And, you know, one last phrase I could use: "The pig has nothing left but a squeak."

MRS. MacBETH: Let's get back to the issues that are on the minds of Albertans. Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat the question about the other provinces, that the Premier has misrepresented the laws that are in place in other provinces. Perhaps I can brush up the Premier's memory by tabling a document from his own department of health on the background of private facilities in other provinces and ask: why is he misleading Albertans, saying that his policy is consistent with the provinces when, in fact, his own government document shows that there are huge differences between what other provinces are doing and what this Premier is doing with his private hospital policy?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we tabled some time ago in the Legislature legislation that has been introduced and passed by other provinces: British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario. In my recent meeting with the Prime Minister we agreed that we would sit down and review all of this legislation to make sure that there is indeed some consistency in the legislation. All of that legislation, by the way, refers and alludes to contracting out minor surgeries to private clinics. We want to know: is our legislation consistent with that in British Columbia, in Saskatchewan, in Manitoba, in Ontario?

What we want to do across this country, Mr. Speaker, is really to have an intelligent review of the situation to end the patchwork of legislation that exists across the country where certain things are allowed in one province but for some reason are not allowed in another province. The Prime Minister has agreed to that.

Thank you.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, the document which we tabled today, which of course the government prepared in terms of a survey of the other provinces, says quite a different story than what the Premier might have had in his little discussion with the Prime Minister.

Given that the government's own report says, and I quote: ministry officials in British Columbia consistently indicate that there are no facilities that provide insured or uninsured surgical services that require an extended stay, end quote, why would this Premier continue to mislead Albertans by saying that his Alberta private hospital policy doesn't completely contradict the British Columbia one?

MR. KLEIN: First of all, Mr. Speaker, there is no private hospital policy, and that question is absolutely irrelevant.

Specific to the question, in our research there is nothing in any of the legislation as it pertains to British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, or Ontario that prohibits overnight stays. As a matter of fact, in Ontario, as I understand it, there are about three clinics that do accommodate overnight stays under the publicly funded health care system.

I've read various letters saying that the Saskatchewan legislation prohibits overnight stays, but if you read the legislation very carefully, there is nothing in that legislation, Mr. Speaker, that prohibits overnight stays, nor is there anything in the ND government's legislation from British Columbia that prohibits overnight stays, nor is there any in Manitoba, and certainly there is nothing in Ontario, where in fact the bill, introduced by a Liberal cabinet minister at the time, Elinor Caplan, is entitled the Private Hospitals Act.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that this government's own report says that, and I quote, Saskatchewan Health indicates there is no provision of either insured or uninsured surgical services requiring extended stays, why does the Premier continue to mislead Albertans into thinking that his Alberta hospitals policy isn't completely inconsistent with Saskatchewan's?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, our statement relative to the Saskatchewan legislation is quite true. There is nothing in their legislation that prohibits overnight stays.

I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness elaborate on this issue.

MR. JONSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Saskatchewan government has in effect passed and proclaimed the Health Facilities Licensing Act. As far as overnight stays are concerned, there is nothing in the legislation which prohibits overnight stays. It provides for the licensing of clinics in a very general way without any prohibition with respect to overnight or day clinics.

There are a number of unlicensed facilities operating in Saskatchewan as well. They are approved by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. They are the Horizon eye centre, Regina, Saskatchewan, and the Midwest Laser Centre, Regina, Saskatchewan, which does facial plastic surgery, laser work. There's also the Gimbel Eye Centre in Saskatoon.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's move on to Manitoba. Manitoba says that there are no facilities that are providing extended stay services, yet this government wants to do it in its legislation. Why is the Premier misleading the people of this province by saying that his legislation is consistent with Manitoba when the exact opposite is true?

MR. KLEIN: The exact opposite is not true. As a matter of fact, I was in Winnipeg only two days ago and had a long discussion with Gary Filmon about this particular piece of legislation. It is probably the most comprehensive legislation relative to the regulation and legislation related to surgical facilities, again introduced not by the Conservatives but by the socialist NDs under Howard Pawley in Manitoba. Again, there is no prohibition. No prohibition.

Yes, former Premier Filmon admitted that there are no facilities that offer overnight stays, but there are numerous surgical facilities now operating in Manitoba, the most recent being the Pan Am sports medicine facility, which treats a number of sports injuries through surgery on a day basis. But he admitted quite freely that there is nothing in that legislation that prohibits overnight stays.

Speaker's Ruling Question Period Practices

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I'm going to recognize the Leader of the Official Opposition for a question momentarily, but the tone is not good here. The tone is not good here. In fact, the intent in the questions and some of the responses would lead one to suggest that this is not a parliament, that this is something else. There are words that can be used in a context, and they have certain meanings, and they can convey certain things. The purpose of question period is to ascertain information with respect to government policy and matters of urgent business. And this place is called Alberta. It's not called Saskatchewan or British Columbia or Manitoba or something else.

There's also a time-honoured tradition in this House that if one hon. member says something, we accept the word of the hon. member. Words like some of the ones that have been quoted here, leaning all the way from "misled" to "phony," are not words that basically should be found in the question period.

The purpose of this particular point of our routine is to ask about "matters of sufficient urgency and importance as to require an immediate answer." This is not part of the debate. We started the debate on a certain health bill yesterday, which I think is the background for much of this, and far as I can see in the Orders of the Day, it's scheduled for later today and tomorrow as well.

MR. DICKSON: Policy.

THE SPEAKER: Why don't we listen for a moment. Why don't we listen for a moment, hon. Official Opposition House Leader, to what's being said.

We'll deal with each question as it comes up, but there will be interjections from the chair unless the tone is improved dramatically. We deal with what the whole purpose of the question period is supposed to be. This is not part of the debate.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Since the Premier claims that he's not proposing private hospitals, then why do his focus group documents – remember those focus group documents we talked about about two months ago? Why do those focus group documents with the blanked out pages say that the focus groups were convened for the purpose of discussing the proposed policy statement on the future role of private hospitals in Alberta? Why is that?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, quite simply, the focus group participants were guaranteed anonymity in return for their participation. This is not uncommon. Well, I don't know but I would think that the Liberals would hold focus groups from time to time, convene focus groups, and would respect and guarantee the anonymity of those participants. We would do the same thing.

MRS. MacBETH: So, Mr. Speaker, if Albertans are to trust this Premier, then will he now show Albertans just exactly what's in these 30 hidden pages and the report that he's been hiding from Albertans on his private hospital policy for the last two months? Will he just show them, let it out? He can cover up the names.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, FOIP in terms of legislative law is very, very new, and there are some people who handle FOIP requests properly. I'll commit to this today: to provide without the names, if the hon. House leader will submit, the comments that were offered by the focus groups if I could have an undertaking on the part of the Liberal Party that they will share with us all of the focus group results and so on.

MRS. MacBETH: Absolutely.

MR. KLEIN: Fine. We'll do that. No problem. Okay. Without the names.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite the government's attempts to put the best possible spin on its morally bankrupt private, for-profit hospital scheme, Albertans are not being fooled. Earlier today I delivered thousands of postcards from angry Albertans, many of them Conservative supporters who are breaking ranks with the government on this issue. Much of the opposition comes from the government's own Calgary backyard. My questions are to the Premier. What does the Premier say to R.W. White of Calgary, who writes: I have supported Mr. Klein since he first ran for mayor of Calgary, but this action is the last straw; no more, Mr. Klein?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess the only answer to that question is purely political. I've been in this game now for 20 years, and I get letters like this day in and day out. If I went into my shell and if I buried my head in the sand and if I ran away because every person who wrote me a letter said, "I voted for you as the mayor, I voted for you as the MLA, but I'll never vote for you again," you know what? I wouldn't be standing here today. You fight for what you think is right.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is obviously abandoning his own supporters. What does the Premier say to Thomas Clausen, also of Calgary, who writes: I have been a PC supporter since Peter Lougheed and a strong supporter of Ralph Klein; I suggest a plebiscite on this issue?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there will be a plebiscite on this issue and every other issue facing this province in the challenges of the future. That plebiscite is called an election. There will be an election, and we will fight that election, and I welcome the participation.

We will fight the election not just on Bill 11 but on a government that has done a $30 billion turnaround, a government that is the envy of the world, not only of the country but of the world, Mr. Speaker, a government that cares about health care, a government that cares about education, a government that cares about agriculture, a government that cares about preserving and protecting our energy industry, a government that is concerned about protecting our environment, a government that wants to build sensible and strong infrastructure, a government that wants to have safe and secure streets and good justice. That's what the election is all about.

Mr. Speaker, we are a party of all things to all people. We are not a one-trick pony.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans accept the Premier's challenge so long as he calls the election before he wrecks their medicare system.

My last question to the Premier . . .

MR. KLEIN: Well, with all due respect to the . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I listened very attentively to the questions.

MRS. SOETAERT: It wasn't a question.

THE SPEAKER: You can't have a preamble, so it must have been the question.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the election will be held in due course. I would remind the hon. member and the leader of the third party that we're only entering the third year of our mandate. There are so many challenges for this government as we enter the new millennium. One of them, of course, is Bill 11. You know, when that bill is done and it's passed, believe it or not, people will look out the windows, and they will still see the building standing. People will be going to their workplaces, people will be going to their hockey rinks and their community halls and their golf courses and their workout places, and the world will not have collapsed. As a matter of fact, hopefully they'll be going to their workplaces in their communities and their churches and so on, and they'll say: hey, this is still a very, very good province.

You know, if there's one thing that makes me so proud to be an Albertan, it's people from this province who travel elsewhere, including Liberals, by the way, because I've heard of them boasting about Alberta and the Alberta advantage and how good it is here. It is so good to hear people who travel not only to other parts of Canada but to other parts of the world who come back and say: you know, in Germany, in the Czech Republic, in the Slovak Republic, in Uganda, in South Africa, in Uruguay they know about Alberta, and they know about the success of this province. They come back and say: do I ever feel proud being an Albertan.

The only people who don't feel proud about being Albertans are the Liberals. The NDs do. The hon. leader does. He's consistent, and he feels proud. These people over here don't feel proud at all, but most Albertans feel proud about their province and what we have accomplished, what we have accomplished as a team, a wonderful team. They feel proud. There's a sense of pride.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Gasoline Taxes

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There has been a lot of rhetoric but little action coming out of the federal Liberal government about lowering the price of fuel at the pumps. The federal Finance minister was recently quoted in the media as saying that he was willing to lower the federal taxes – and I stress “taxes,” because the federal government has both an excise tax and the GST applied per litre – if the provinces would lower their fuel tax. My question to the Acting Provincial Treasurer is: what is Alberta's response to the challenge from the federal government?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, a bit of a lead in to that is that the federal government has 10 cents a litre on the price of the fuel, and we have 9 cents as a gasoline tax plus the GST. The other day the hon. Stockwell Day, the Treasurer sent a letter to – he was Treasurer when this letter was written – Mr. Paul Martin recommending that he look at the GST as it was a tax upon a tax and that perhaps they could do something with that. Following that up, Mr. Martin made an offer to the provinces that he would consider looking at movement on the taxes if there were offers coming from the province.

So I sent a letter yesterday to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Paul Martin, and I asked him:

Please advise me of the rate reduction you would consider and the anticipated duration of the reduction. I would . . . like to know the extent of the provincial participation you would expect, including the size of provincial tax cuts and whether other provinces must agree to take part before federal fuel taxes will be reduced.

I asked him to meet with me as soon as possible if he would like to discuss that. In that letter and following that I make the statement: whatever that decision is, it's your move, Mr. Martin.

MR. HLADY: My supplemental to the same minister: what would be the budgetary impact to Alberta if Alberta decided to lower our tax and over what period of time?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, if we lower by 1 cent the 9 cents we have on, it would be approximately $60 million, so if the 9 cents were removed in total that would equate to $540 million. Mr. Martin phoned me yesterday after this took place, and I said to him: you have about $500 million coming out of Alberta in your 10 cents, and we have roughly $540 million; what would you be willing to lower on a matching basis? He said that he wouldn't make that commitment and that he would have to talk to the other provinces but that he would get back to me on it.

What it means budgetwise is that we would – say it was 3 cents over a six-month period; we'd probably be looking at about $90 million.

I make an emphasis here, a very strong emphasis, that this money goes into roads and infrastructure. We're spending this year $1.2 billion on infrastructure. The $540 million we take out of the 9 cents plus about $190 million on licence plates and registrations does not come close to what we're spending. In fact, it's a little over 50 percent of it. So we could not sustain this if the price of oil goes down. It's $25.23. We could not sustain forever taking out the 9 cents, because I don't think the people of Alberta want their roads to deteriorate.

Mr. Martin, on the other hand, could take this out for a period of time and not affect his road budget. You know why? Because out of the $5 billion that they collect across Canada in that excise tax, the gasoline tax, they only return $221 million a year to the 10 provinces and two territories.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's interesting that in other provinces surgical facilities that allow overnight stays are called hospitals, but in Alberta they're called accredited surgical facilities. While other provinces like Ontario are clamping down on these facilities because they know how much they threaten medicare, this government's policy is moving in the opposite direction. On March 3 the Ontario government announced that it's closing two private hospitals "as part of its ongoing efforts to protect Ontario's public health care system." My questions are to the Minister of Health. Why does this government want surgical facilities to provide overnight stays when other provinces have realized how much this threatens medicare and are taking steps to protect the public system?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, the information that I've received, comments from individuals at the recent health ministers' meeting in Ontario, would indicate that in Ontario, as has been accurately reported, they do have an Independent Health Facilities Act, and they also have another piece of legislation that fits with it called the Private Hospitals Act, which regulates insured services in private hospitals. So they have passed that legislation, and as was pointed out earlier, it was done by a Liberal government. As far as I know, there are no plans to repeal that legislation, at least as of approximately a week ago there weren't.

The point that we are making is that for years in Ontario – and I won't go through the list of all the other provinces unless they want to question those too – these hospitals or clinics or centres have been providing surgical services. They are private operations. They've been under contract arrangements with the Ontario government, and at least in the case of the Shouldice clinic they've done a very, very substantial business with uninsured persons, particularly our neighbours to the south, the Americans.

We are first of all apprized that these clinics have provided good service, quality service. It has worked well within the Ontario system. That is the point that we've made all along with respect to our particular policy. It is more protective, more restrictive than these other pieces of legislation, and we have to raise the question as to why there is concern from across the way and why there is some reticence on the part of the federal government, although I would like to emphasize that the Prime Minister has said in conversation with the Premier that we should go ahead and pass Bill 11.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, given that this government knows very well that private hospitals in Ontario are grandfathered from prior to medicare, why don't they just stop misleading Albertans by using Ontario examples to bolster their weak argument? They don't apply, and he knows it.

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, it may be – I would have to verify this – that there is some discussion of some kind going on in Ontario at this particular point in time. This was not just solely a matter of grandfathering. If it was grandfathering, why did the Ontario government – it's a rhetorical question, I know. If this was the case, why did the government of Ontario go to the very extensive effort to pass two pieces of legislation, one called the Independent Health Facilities Act, which provides for the approval of these facilities, and also, fitting with it, the Private Hospitals Act, which regulates insured services in private hospitals? Why would they do that if they didn't feel it was acceptable and worked well for them?

MS BLAKEMAN: Why won't this government just admit that when a person walks into a private hospital in Ontario or an accredited surgical facility in Alberta, they'll be walking into the same kind of place? They're both private hospitals. He knows it. The government knows it. The focus groups knew it. That's why they blanked out the pages; isn't it? Admit it.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I reported the titles that the Ontario government has used for their surgical clinics. I think if you looked at the types of services that these specialized hospitals provide, they may use the other term, but in fact our term "surgical clinic" is much more accurate. For instance, the most famous in Ontario of these private facilities is the Shouldice hospital, which does only one highly specialized procedure, and that is hernia operations. They do it very well. They do it very efficiently.

We're debating over names, Mr. Speaker. If you go to the Cambie clinic in British Columbia, there they refer to it as a surgical clinic, and it covers quite a wide range of specialized services. Again, it is highly regarded in terms of its quality and its provision of services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Apollo Gas Inc.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the hon. Minister of Government Services. Last week we heard that Government Services would not renew Apollo Gas Inc.'s licence to market natural gas to Alberta effective April 1, 2000. I understand that 64,000 Albertans, including a number of St. Albertans, have signed contracts with this company for the provision of natural gas. Can the minister explain why the decision was ultimately made?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have in the province of Alberta a code of conduct that we expect to be followed by companies operating or licensed in this province, and we don't look at that very lightly. We take it quite seriously. We work with companies to make sure that they in fact operate within those parameters, and when we do have difficulties, then we usually work very closely with the company to try and bring them onside and to bring them in line with accepted practices within the province.

In this particular case we've worked for well over a year trying to bring this group into that framework. We were not successful. We had issued some warnings and some suspensions, and quite frankly there's only so long you can go. I relate it to almost a ball game: three strikes and then that's it.

Now, insofar as the 64,000 Albertans who have contracts with this group, we are working with the company to make sure that their service is not interrupted. There are options where their contracts can revert back to the original utility company, but they will be looked after. There is a process in place to help ensure that customers are looked after.

I have to stress that our rules are very tough, but they're very fair, and if you follow them, there's no problem. If you don't, then we have to come down hard on companies that do not work within those parameters that we've laid out.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. While I understand that Apollo Gas may appeal the decision, can the minister explain the status of my constituents' contracts with Apollo Gas today and during the possible appeal process?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, I have received a request for an appeal on this. Under the Fair Trading Act I am obligated as minister to put together within 30 days a review panel that will look at the application for appeal from the company, and they will proceed on with that. Separate and apart and in the meantime, we will ensure that the 64,000 customers are, in fact, dealt with to ensure that there's no interruption in their delivery of service, and that will proceed on.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the Minister of Resource Development. Can we expect the same concerns with the anticipated deregulation of the electrical industry later this year?

DR. WEST: No, Mr. Speaker. The short answer is that the reason for that is because the Minister of Government Services has been working diligently with the Department of Resource Development on this. I'll have her supplement this answer, but I think it's noteworthy to say that the issue around Apollo or any other marketer that has come forward and been in that gray area about marketing contracts has been good for electrical deregulation because now there is a good focus by Albertans on this issue. The Minister of Government Services is taking due diligence in looking at good rules, and I'll have her answer around that.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, just to supplement. We've had the benefit of working in a deregulated environment with natural gas. That has been a good guideline to show us where there are some potential loopholes that are being tightened up right now, and they will be fed into the electrical direct marketing concept and regulations. As I said before, our regulations are tough, but they're fair, and if you operate within the code of conduct within those regulations, we welcome you to Alberta. If you don't, we don't want you here. It's very straightforward. Consumer protection is critically important.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government claims that it conducted this review of the private provision of medical and hospital services in other jurisdictions to see how other provinces protect their health care systems. Now, the document reports that B.C. "prohibits practitioners or facilities from charging fees beyond those in the fee schedule for insured services." My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why won't the Alberta government follow the British Columbia example and have a policy prohibiting fees for enhanced services? After all, if these services are necessary, then they should be covered.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, we do in Alberta exactly what British Columbia does, and that is we negotiate an overall agreement, an overall fee schedule with our physicians in this province: Alberta Health and Wellness on behalf of the government and the people of the province, and the Alberta Medical Association on behalf of physicians. A fee schedule is arrived at. This fee schedule governs the provision of payment to doctors for insured services. That's the way they are reimbursed today, and that is the way they'll be reimbursed under the provisions of Bill 11. That is very much, I think, in keeping with what is being done in British Columbia.

MRS. SOETAERT: My second question. Why does the Alberta government allow wealthy Albertans to jump the queue by paying for diagnostic services like MRIs when in Saskatchewan private health facilities are prohibited from charging for diagnostics so that people cannot jump the queue?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, that particular question is now being posed for the third or fourth time. It was initially raised as a good question by a member of the government caucus. The interpretation under the Canada Health Act of the provision of MRI services is that it is not in the category of being a mandated insured service under the Canada Health Act. There are, I believe, two provinces besides ourselves that have MRI clinics operating in the private sector. I acknowledge that in Saskatchewan, for instance, they have, as far as their government is concerned, declared it an insured service. Certainly that is something to be reviewed. I would acknowledge that.

Mr. Speaker, the other point here, though, I think is very important, and that is the very considerable effort that government is making and will continue to make to expand the capacity in the province for MRI scans. I have alluded to it before, but I think it should be repeated, and that is that just in these past number of months we have approved and expanded the MRI capacity of MRI services in this province paid for by the public health care system to Lethbridge, to Red Deer, soon to Mistahia or to Grande Prairie. Approval has been given as far as Medicine Hat is concerned. So there is recognition of the need for additional MRI capacity in this province which will be paid for out of the public health care system, and we are following up on that.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then to the minister: if MRIs then are needed for all medical diagnoses, will you not put that under the public system, put all MRIs under the public system?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure of the question. As I understand the question, it was: if they are needed for all medical diagnoses. Well, it is a very state-of-the-art diagnostic tool. As I've said, we have dramatically increased the capacity for paid-for MRI services in this province through our health authorities, concentrated, yes, in Edmonton and Calgary but also in the regional hospitals that I've mentioned. We are certainly cognizant of the importance of this particular diagnostic tool, and we want to have the expansion of its availability on a paid-for basis to Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Sarcee Trail Extension

MS GRAHAM: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions this afternoon are to the Minister of Infrastructure. On Monday of this week the council of the city of Calgary voted to sign the memorandum of understanding which would permit negotiations to now begin on the 37th Street extension to Sarcee Trail through the Tsuu T'ina Nation. My constituents in Calgary-Lougheed, which is very traffic congested, are very interested to know what's going to happen next. Can the Minister of Infrastructure tell us what the next steps are in this process?

MR. STELMACH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The city of Calgary has approved the memorandum of understanding with amendments. The city will forward these amendments to the Tsuu T'ina Nation and also to our department for further review. Once we have looked at the amendments, the three parties to the MOU will then meet to discuss the amendments and to decide on the process for signing the memorandum of understanding.

This MOU is an agreement to negotiate, so once the province and the Tsuu T'ina Nation have joined the city of Calgary in signing the MOU, that's when negotiations can begin. We will be negotiating all parts of the project including, as well, who will finance the necessary planning studies. The time lines, though, for this project are part of the negotiation.

MS GRAHAM: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the same minister. Now that the city has ratified the memorandum of understanding, does the minister know of any reason why the province won't sign on to the agreement straightaway?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, we haven't officially received the amendments, but I don't know why we wouldn't sign the memorandum of understanding if we receive agreement from the Tsuu T'ina Nation on the amendments. I'd like to make it clear that we recognize the importance of protecting the environment, the ecological resources, the historical and archeological sites that are in that area, and we have written this into the MOU. We are committed, of course, to a consultative process that includes Calgaryans, the Tsuu T'ina Nation, and of course all Albertans. Four open houses were held in Calgary to discuss the details of the MOU. The process for further consultation will be defined in the next set of negotiations.

Now, signing the MOU will definitely set the principles and values which guide the next set of negotiations. However, I want to be clear that it does not commit us or anyone to the project. The process will be open and transparent. The city once again plans to consult with its residents before any further decisions are made after the signing of the MOU.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question then. It's my understanding that the due date for the finalization of the negotiations is in fact October 31 of this year. Is that going to stand, or will that have to be changed? Does the minister know?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, that's one area that's still open to negotiation. I can't say for sure that if we don't reach an understanding by that certain day, all parties just go back and not proceed further with negotiations, but that is a time line that's there. It's there at the request of the Tsuu T'ina Nation, and we respect that. I think it's a time line where it now gives us a date to work towards, and if we accomplish it, fine. If not, then at that time we'll again look at it and see if we can come to a common agreement on how we can proceed further.

Definitely the hon. member highlights an issue with respect to congested traffic. It's a major road going through the community. The city of Calgary has just issued to us the most recent updated census, and they're projecting a million people in the city of Calgary by the year 2007, so that's a huge, huge growth.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now we'll call upon the first of seven members to participate today.

Hon. members, it's also the birthday of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie today.

Now we'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Douglas and Cherie Gillett

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to recognize Douglas and Cherie Gillett, who are celebrating their 50th wedding anniversary on Thursday, April 6, 2000. Douglas is a native Edmontonian born in Rosedale, and Cherie arrived in Edmonton at the age of six months. They have two children, Ken and Jane, and are the proud grandparents of three grandchildren. Both Doug and Cherie are very active in St. Luke's Church in Strathearn and are involved in the choir. They also operate a group called the Heart and Soul Singers, who perform at lodges and seniors' homes. They are both accomplished artists, and Doug gives art lessons in the community. The Sherard Musical Theatre is another project in which both Doug and Cherie actively participate. I wish them every happiness in their 50th year of marriage.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

100th Anniversary of Cowley Mail Service

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If one goes into any village or hamlet in rural Alberta today and visits their post office, you get a unique opportunity to meet with grassroots Alberta. The village of Cowley celebrated 100 years of postal service to that community and surrounding district on Saturday, April 1, 2000, and that's 100 years to the day. Much is changed from the days when mail carriers would provide rural service by traveling from the main post office, like Cowley, to outlying posts and exchange incoming for outgoing mail. Today families come to the Cowley post office and appreciate and enjoy the traditional one-on-one service. I'd like to thank Marjorie Haugen for the invitation last Saturday to mix and mingle with these families and relive the history of their great community.

I'd also like to recognize former and present postmasters for providing continuous, reliable service to the residents of Cowley. They are: from 1900 to 1907, James E. Davidson; from 1907 to 1912, Donald R. McIvor; from 1912 to '52, Matthew A. Murphy; from '52 to '57, Marjorie Haugen; from '57 to '61, Edith Evans; from '61 to '83, Alice Sepeta; and from '84 to the present, Lucille Martin. Congratulations to them all on reaching this great milestone, on continuing tradition.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Edmonton West Raiders

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure this afternoon to recognize a group of dedicated coaches, parents, and soccer players: the under 13 girls' B division Edmonton West Raiders. On March 18 and 19 they obtained silver in the provincials in Calgary, and this team has a history of winning. Last year they won a bronze in Medicine Hat. These young girls have poured heart and soul into the game of soccer. They practised many hours every week in all types of weather to achieve the excellence they have. The support and dedication of the parents has also been essential to the success of this team. Coach Paul Kuin and assistant coaches Tony Procacinni and Stuart Burritt also need to be recognized for their dedication and hard work.

On behalf of the Members of this Legislative Assembly I would like to extend congratulations to the Edmonton West Raiders. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Daysland Thunderstars

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to give recognition in this Assembly to a true triple crown winner, the Daysland peewee-A Thunderstars in the Wainwright constituency. This talented hockey team was truly magnificent throughout the 1999-2000 season as they first captured and won their zone and then the gold medal at the 2000 Winter Games in Sherwood Park. The second leg of the crown was the winning of the league championship after a hard-fought battle. The third and final leg of the triple crown was captured in Wainwright, March 24 to 26, at the provincial playoffs, where they defeated Beaumont in the second overtime period.

Congratulations to the players, coaches, managers, parents, and fans. They all played an important role in developing this super team of young men. Congratulations to the community of Daysland.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Tommy Douglas

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a remarkable Canadian and a former giant of Canadian politics, the late Tommy Douglas. All of my colleagues in the Assembly know that Tommy Douglas is the father of Canadian medicare. He fought tirelessly for his vision of medicare, and fortunately for us all he succeeded. His dream of universal medicare became reality, and it touches us all. Achieving his dream didn't just simply happen. Tommy Douglas worked ferociously; he never gave up.

Today Canadians and Albertans find his life and work incredibly inspiring. When asked why he stayed with the NDP when he could have done better with a more powerful party, Douglas replied:

I have watched politicians for the last forty years drop their principles in order to get power only to find that those who paid and controlled the party which they joined prevented them from doing all the things they really believed in.

Tommy Douglas believed. Tommy Douglas endured. We are forever indebted to Tommy Douglas, the father of medicare.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

World Figure Skating Championship

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to rise today to bring recognition to the three Alberta figure skaters who participated in the world figure skating championship in Nice, France. Many Albertans held their breath through triple axels, quadruple lutztes, and wonderfully choreographed performances of the young skaters who represented Canada at the 2000 World Figure Skating Championship. Alberta Games alumna Jamie Sale and David Pelletier, her partner, finished fourth in the pairs competition. Although Jamie now trains in Quebec, she still is an Albertan in our heart, and we will be closely watching her rising career. We shared the disappointment of Jamie and David in their fourth place finish after being touted for a medal in Paris. Well, Jamie and David, we are extremely proud of you.

Many will also remember Kristy Sargeant, from Alix, a Canadian champion and an Alberta Games alumna. Her pairs skating experience will continue to take her and her skating partner to new heights.

Mr. Speaker, these skaters demonstrated pride and excellence in their classes at the 2000 World Figure Skating Championship. This is the calibre of athletes that sustain Alberta's reputation for excellence in sports.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Sergeant James Brown

MS PAUL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Her Honour Lois Hole, at a recent investiture of the Royal Life Saving Society presented a rescue commendation to Sergeant James Brown of our Edmonton garrison. Sergeant Brown was one of six individuals awarded the rescue commendation. Sergeant Brown had been involved in search and rescue early in his military career, and over the last two years instructed in first aid.

In August of last year Sergeant Brown was enjoying a day at Allan Beach with his family when his attention was drawn to a woman screaming for help, as her husband had disappeared into the water while sailboarding. Sergeant Brown without hesitation dove into the water and pulled the man from entangling weeds. Upon reaching the shore, he performed CPR for 40 minutes until STARS air ambulance arrived. Unfortunately, the 36-year-old father passed away shortly after midnight that day.

Sergeant Brown credits his St. John Ambulance training to enable him to react in an emergency situation and believes that everyone should have that excellent training.

I would like this Legislature to recognize the brave efforts by Sergeant James Brown.

Televised Second Reading Debate

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, last evening during the special debate that all hon. members agreed to the rules for, there was notification of a number of points of order, but I'm pleased to advise that today I've been notified that in fact there are no points of order arising out of the session last evening, so that's very, very positive.

The chair would also like to recognize and basically thank the vast majority of members yesterday for abiding by the rules that people agreed to. I know that some members sent me personal notes as the evening wore on about how difficult it was. I received these notes from all quarters of the House but for the most part would like to recognize that it basically means there could be a model that could be used.

The chair also recognizes that at a certain point last evening one could almost take out the Sergeant-at-Arms' sword and cut through the tension that was in the air and the desire that various members really had to do more than simply look at one another with a smile. Presumably that sort of attitude basically carried over to the early part of the question period today, and I guess that type of exuberance is all part of the human spirit. Nevertheless, there are two points of order that we have to deal with today. Again, I hope I'm not providing a personal view with respect to it. Perhaps it's an extension of what didn't occur last night, and because it couldn't occur last night, it occurred today in the question period. That's probably the reason we have these two points of order, but once again, I guess I'm not supposed to do that.

First of all, we'll deal with the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, the Official Opposition House Leader.

Point of OrderFactual Accuracy

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This arises from the first set of questions from the Leader of the Opposition to the Premier. The authority would be Beauchesne 408(2), and I'd suggest that that authority was offended in two ways.

The first way was that the Premier said that the Liberals are not FOIPable and went on to complain that the Liberals had in effect concealed information, had not shared information to inform Albertans as to the cost of their campaign. In response to that, Mr. Speaker, if the Premier had been paying close attention, he would in fact have heard the tabling, but mere moments before, of documents establishing that the cost of the Liberal opposition advertising was $17,064.68. He would have heard me undertake that there were some minor consequential costs for a couple of room rentals that I'd be tabling as soon as I had them. So in fact the information had been provided from the Liberal opposition in response to the queries from the Premier both last night and then again this morning.

The second respect in which 408(2) would be offended would be this. When the Premier singles out and suggests that the Liberals are not FOIPable, that's actually an inflammatory exaggeration of the facts. The facts are that it's been the Liberal opposition that has pressed to make amendments to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, most recently in the three-year statutorily mandated review of the FOIP act. It in fact has been government members that have uniformly and consistently resisted all such efforts to allow for fuller disclosure.

So on those two counts I think 408(2) was offended. Thank you.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think there's really much to say on this. I think the hon. member was trying to clarify the fact that he'd made a tabling and perhaps it was missed in the din and hue of the afternoon and wanted to re-emphasize what was in it. That's simply a clarification and nothing more.

As respects the various representations he makes before committees with respect to the FOIP act, they speak for themselves. I don't think we're in a position this afternoon in the House to get into debate on what he's put forward with respect to the FOIP act, but if he's suggesting that we should have FOIP applied to private members and their business in the House and those sorts of things, well, it's not even worth going there. It's a matter of clarification. It's not a point of order.

THE SPEAKER: Two brief comments with respect to this. I do believe that there was some degree of exuberance with respect to this, and the word "inflammatory" was used. In my recollection of the first 20 or 25 minutes of the question period today there was a fair amount of inflammatory activity going on both in responses and in preambles to questions that we all could have done better with. Again, let's be careful with these preambles. They're getting us into a great deal of responses that only lead to the heightening of tension in here and basically violate I think what's the best in us.

Government House Leader, you have a point of order?

Point of OrderPreambles

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You just dealt with it. I was rising with respect to the Leader of the Opposition, specifically with respect to her second supplementary to her first question, when she engaged in what I thought was a rather lengthy, unnecessary, inflammatory, inappropriate, and misrepresenting preamble, which then begged responses which would correct the misapprehension that people might have if they believed the assertions which were being made in the preamble. But you've dealt with that, I think, today and I think should continue to do so.

The only thing I'd add to that, Mr. Speaker, is that in dealing with that type of question earlier on, you indicated that the House leaders should keep their caucuses in order. I would also ask that you intercede on a more regular basis when these unnecessary and inappropriate preambles are being put forward and also would like to indicate that I appreciated the fact that you interceded when such a preamble in the form of a question was put forward by the leader of the third party.

MR. DICKSON: I was almost going to associate myself with the comments of the Government House Leader until he made the last observation. I'm not so sure, Mr. Speaker, that I'd encourage you to participate to a greater extent in question period. I think you've used wisely your discretion to intervene sparingly. I think we're dealing with a hugely important issue, and as you yourself recognized, there's always an emotional component when people feel strongly about an issue important to their constituents. Obviously, we all have to do a better job on both sides of the House in terms of asserting and exerting self-discipline and trying to find a measure of restraint, notwithstanding the passion of our convictions.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Thank you very much, both hon. leaders, for your comments with respect to this. I just want to repeat once again what the philosophy is that I use with respect to this. This is the highest court in the province of Alberta. The honourable people who are here have earned the right to be here. They have earned the right to participate. They have earned the right to represent their constituents. They have earned the right to rise and be recognized. They have earned the right to rise and be recognized and respond to the question as much as the question is given, and they're all honourable people.

This is called question period, and the purpose of question period is to bring everyone accountable on both sides. The last thing in the world that this particular individual wants to do is interject every 30 seconds or every minute. He can do that, and in fact there are Speakers across the country who do that. There was recently one, a very good friend of mine in Ontario, who is no longer the Speaker, not for these reasons. He used to take it upon himself to interject every minute, and he didn't think it was a good day unless he threw out at least six members every day. That was his objective. He was going to throw out six members every day, and that was his quota. It was absolutely chaotic.

Now, that is not the philosophy of this Speaker. This is not his philosophy. He thinks the hon. members are honourable and that the hon. members should have the right to ask questions and also another hon. member respond. On the one hand, if the need is that we should interject every 30 seconds, this will no longer be a question period. It will be simply known as Mr. Speaker's interjection period. That's the way that would be.

So the discipline is on everybody. I have no difficulty doing the interjections, but I think that a little more brevity and clarity with respect to the question and a little more brevity and clarity with respect to the response would help us all.

Thank you very much.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it's my pleasure on behalf of the Deputy Government House Leader to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 7, 8, and 10.

[Motion carried]

Contaminated Sites

Q7. Mr. Sapers moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that the following question be accepted.

What was the total number of contaminated sites recorded by Alberta Environment on December 31, 1999, how many of these were underground petroleum storage sites, how many of the remaining sites were classified as severely, moderately, or lightly contaminated, how many were unclassified, and how many in each category had been visited and reviewed between January 1, 1998, and December 31, 1999?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The motion is very straightforward, and I think it describes what is a perfect subject for a written question. It asks for statistical information, detailed information, very, very specific information, and of course taken in its totality, it would give Albertans a picture of how many contaminated sites there are around the province in several different categories. Any lesser information would not represent disclosure and would not represent, I think, goodwill. So we are hoping that the government will help us communicate with Albertans regarding a number of contaminated sites, particularly on how Alberta Environment has treated these sites and how many of them, as I say, are represented in each category and whether or not they've been reviewed in the last calendar year. I look forward to the government's affirmative response to Written Question 7.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd associate myself with the comments made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, but I would like to suggest some amendments to Question 7, that it be amended by adding the word "approximate" before the expression "total number"; by striking out the expression "how many of the remaining sites were classified as severely, moderately, or lightly contaminated, how many were unclassified"; and finally, by striking out the expression "in each category." Accordingly, the amended question would read as follows:

What was the approximate total number of contaminated sites recorded by Alberta Environment on December 31, 1999, how many of these were underground petroleum storage sites, and how many had been visited and reviewed between January 1, 1998, and December 31, 1999?

Mr. Speaker, my department is developing a database of all contaminated sites, but it is not yet complete. Accordingly, I would only be able to provide an approximate list of these sites.

Finally, the reference to sites as being "severely, moderately, or lightly contaminated" bears no resemblance to the manner in which these sites are classified. Sites are not classified by the degree of contamination but are classified according to the nature of the contaminant. Accordingly, my response would clarify this for the benefit of the member asking the question.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the amendment?

MR. DICKSON: Yes, on the amendment. I was listening carefully, because when I saw the amendment – and I'm not sure why the department is not able to tell us the total number of contaminated sites. If the minister gave an explanation for that, I'm sorry; I didn't hear it. I heard his explanation in terms of the classification system. I would think that notwithstanding all the cutbacks we've seen in staff at Alberta Environment, this would be an important number to track and that the number would be available. As I say, I didn't hear an explanation in terms of why that information isn't available.

On the other part of the amendment, "how many of the remaining sites were classified as severely, moderately, or lightly contaminated." The minister says that they use a different classification system, that this doesn't accurately reflect the departmental way of classifying them, but I note that in the amendment he doesn't propose to provide information that reflects that. It may be that the department has 40 different variables. I mean, I don't know whether it's that complex. I understand him to say that it's a different sort of measuring stick, a different sort of valuation, and that's fair, but I'm not sure we've heard a reason why we wouldn't be able to see that information, to know how many were severely, moderately, or lightly contaminated. This minister in particular is certainly creative enough, I would have thought, to find a way to be able to provide that information.

The purpose clearly is because Albertans value the quality of their environment. I think they want to know and are entitled to know with some specificity the extent of the problem, and that, I think, is the import of the question. To have it come back in the form that's proposed as amended, there's no gradation, no sort of qualitative assessment as to how big the problem is. I mean, to know, whether it's approximate or absolute, "the total number of contaminated sites," I would think is not so much useful information as having some sense of what the range of the problem is. [interjection] It may be that the Acting Treasurer wants to get involved in this too, but as I understand it, we're trying to quantify the extent of and seriousness of the contamination.

Although the minister will certainly give us some information with the amendment, his amendment doesn't address the degree of contamination. I think that is implicit in here. That's a key part of what my colleague is trying to find out. I think it's a key element that Albertans would want to know, and I don't understand why you don't have that information. As I say, maybe it takes a little more work on the part of the minister. Maybe the grading system is just so complex, there'd be no way to do that in a manageable way, but I didn't hear the minister say that. Maybe that's the case, but I didn't hear him make that assertion. So that's the comment with respect to this.

"How many were unclassified" is the other element that would be dropped with this amendment. Once again, you know, the job of opposition is, frankly, to keep government on its toes and keep ministers on their toes. If in fact there would be a significant number of contaminated sites that weren't classified, there are some things that flow from that. We would hope, I guess, that that number of unclassified contaminated sites would be a small number, because that would suggest that there's some work that had not been done and ought to have been done. So I think that would be useful to have.

I don't know how the site visits work. What we're still left with is: how many had been visited and reviewed in that time period? There's an issue of the visit, the review, and presumably that's sort of a necessary precedent to the classification. In the minister's very skeletal, very brief submission we didn't hear those particulars, Mr. Speaker.

So those are the problems that I have with the amendment. This minister, I'd just add, usually distinguishes himself in the House by trying to go the extra mile to accommodate opposition requests for information. I'm assuming that he probably may think he has some good reasons for not providing the other information, but I didn't hear with the kind of fullness and the kind of detail that I'd hoped to hear, Mr. Speaker, why that information wouldn't be proffered to the people of Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning on the amendment.

MR. GIBBONS: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I stand looking at the amendment and talking about it, I've got concerns around "approximate" and "in each category." The main thing is that other contaminated sites around the province are a major issue. We have talked with many people and organizations throughout the province who want to know the status of these. I do understand, by visiting with municipalities throughout the province, that when you have underground areas where you've got ex filling stations and so on and the cleanup and that they want to do something with this, this is something that we have to really look at. There are major contamination problems throughout the province.

What are municipalities supposed to do when the owners have closed their businesses and, with no fault, have moved away or gone into bankruptcy? This is a cost that goes back on them. Now, we've asked these questions on a major issue, asking how many there were, but we're getting the amendment back that actually stresses an approximate number. If you'd actually even change "approximate" to 99 percent of them or something like that, because approximate could be 50 percent out there in the province while the actual fact is there are maybe a thousand sites that we have to look at. Striking out "how many" is the same type of variation.

With a classification of severity, we're talking anywhere from the Bover site down to gas stations and other types of contaminated areas: sloughs, problems with spraying throughout the province.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will sit down.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on the amendment.

MR. SAPERS: Yes. Thanks very much. I won't repeat the observations made by my colleagues. I'll simply add a note of disappointment in that I'm surprised to hear that the minister would not be collecting information that would distinguish between severely versus lightly contaminated sites. Clearly there's a range of sites and remediation for these sites. The amount of concern that nearby residents would have would be affected not only by what has contaminated the site but also by how badly contaminated that site is. At the very least I would have hoped that the minister would give us this alternate scheme for classifying contaminated sites and may take under advisement the suggestion that some scale be applied to the degree of contamination in reporting to Albertans.

The one comment that I don't believe I heard my colleagues make reference to was the use of the word "approximate." Again I'm a little bit concerned. When the minister says that there's this alternate scheme which lists sites by what has contaminated them, it would lead me to conclude that there would be a count, that there'd be a tally at the end of that classification. By using the word "approximate," it suggests that the minister in fact doesn't have that information and that we could get back a response to this amended motion that would say that there may be approximately 100 sites or 200 sites or 1,000 sites, and we wouldn't really know what that meant. We wouldn't have any confidence that we actually would know how many actual sites there were and which sites would pose a health or an environmental concern.

It's not too late for this minister to rethink this amendment, and it's not of course beyond expectation that the House may not accept this amendment. Then we'd be able to revert to the original motion as proposed by my colleague, which would provide a much better quality of information and would provide a higher degree of certainty as to what it is that Albertans are dealing with. So I would ask the minister to rethink the amendment, but in the absence of that sober second thought, I would ask my colleagues in the Assembly to not accept the amendment so that we can proceed to a vote on the motion as it was originally proposed.

[Motion on amendment carried]

3:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to close the debate.

MR. SAPERS: Well, I suppose reasonable argument doesn't always carry the day.

MR. HANCOCK: The vote was unanimous.

MR. SAPERS: Was it a recorded vote, Government House Leader? Okay. We'll debate through the chair, obviously, Mr. Speaker, but I can't account for the lack of hearing on the part of the government. Maybe that also accounts for why they didn't accept my reasonable arguments to defeat the amendment.

In any case, I accept the minister at his word, and I hope that he will provide the highest quality and the most complete information that his department can assemble. If he can give us an actual number instead of an approximate number, I think the Official Opposition and all Albertans would appreciate that. If he can provide us with this alternate classification scheme in his answer, even though the amended motion doesn't require it, I think we would all appreciate that.

Certainly I would appreciate the minister providing a response to my colleague who is the Official Opposition critic for matters regarding the environment as to our suggestion that he begin to classify contaminated sites according to their degree of contamination, particularly with reference to those that are severely, moderately, or lightly contaminated.

While we will get some information, I'm concerned that it won't be the quality of information that was originally sought, but I do hope that the minister will do what he can to still make this a worthwhile process by ensuring that the information that is received is as complete as possible and takes into consideration the nature of the discussion we've had on Written Question 7.

[Written Question 7 as amended carried]

Trade Offices

Q8. Mr. Sapers moved on behalf of Dr. Nicol that the following question be accepted.

What are the estimated costs of operating Alberta's trade offices and engaging trade consultants under contract abroad for the fiscal year 1998-99 broken down by accommodation costs and salary ranges for consultants, clerical staff, commercial officers, and posted staff?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm aware that the department does a review of foreign offices. There is some information that is available, but the information does not satisfy the natural curiosity of taxpayers when it comes to how their money is used supporting these foreign offices.

Keep in mind that it was just a little bit earlier on, actually late in the year 1999, that there was some government speculation that there was going to be an expansion of trade offices and a reopening and restaffing of trade offices. I think Albertans made it very clear that no such activity should be undertaken before there was a good understanding of the outcomes and the benefits of such an initiative. I think Albertans are very cost conscious when it comes to this kind of government program and want to make sure that there is value for each and every dollar spent when it comes to staffing and operating Alberta's trade offices and engaging in trade consultations on a worldwide basis.

Now, the Official Opposition is certainly not saying that Alberta should stop participating in these international activities. We believe very strongly that Alberta's future in part depends on our ability to have our products and services sought after in the global marketplace. We certainly support the joint federal/provincial trade missions and encourage Alberta business to get on board and tell the world about good-news stories that are born right here in Alberta, but what we would like to see as well is the highest level of accountability for tax dollars spent when it comes to promoting Alberta business. There's a fine line to be walked between government policy which supports, promotes, and enhances business opportunities on a worldwide basis and government policy which actually provides a direct subsidy to a select handful of Alberta enterprises.

This is a government that has said that it's out of the business of being in business. This is a government that has said that it no longer wants to pick winners and losers in the marketplace. I think that we'd like to hold them to those commitments, and we can do so by ensuring some transparency in the accounting for how Alberta trade offices and trade consultation initiatives are contracted for and what their cost estimates are and by providing the information on how much money is paid to each and every one of the men and women that are engaged on behalf of the province of Alberta to participate in these trade initiatives.

I hope that the Assembly will find favour with Written Question 8, and I would seek its speedy acceptance.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Economic Development I would move to amend Written Question 8 by striking out the word "estimated" and substituting the word "actual" and by striking out the expression "accommodation costs and salary ranges for consultants, clerical staff, commercial officers, and posted staff" and substituting the expression "posted staffing costs, locally engaged administrative and clerical staffing costs, accommodation and operating costs, and what was the salary range for posted staff?" The written question would then read:

What are the actual costs of operating Alberta's trade offices and engaging trade consultants under contract abroad for the fiscal year 1998-99 broken down by posted staffing costs, locally engaged administrative and clerical staffing costs, accommodation and operating costs, and what was the salary range for posted staff?

Salary ranges for consultants, commercial officers, and locally engaged clerical staff vary based on the type of service, length of term, and the local labour markets. There is no standard range. The actual figures are published in the annual report. This is a more accurate reflection than the estimate requested by the hon. member.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on the amendment.

MR. WICKMAN: Yeah. Just to speak a bit on the amendment. The amendment, of course, does provide a shot at the information that was requested in the original motion. These types of trade consultants and facilities and such have always come under question by the public, and that's why it becomes so important to have all that information disclosed. Even with the information fully disclosed, there is still some question as to whether the benefits of spending those dollars by having those types of facilities and consultants is a worthwhile investment.

Then the question comes into play on the appointment of the trade commissioners, or the expression that's used when they go to places like London, for example. London is a classic example. I can recall a former minister of a Conservative government being posted over in London. Possibly the person was very, very qualified; I don't know. Then, on the other hand, it is a bit of a coincidence that she did happen to be a member of Executive Council, of the government side. Upon my retirement I don't expect that the government is going to be sending me over to Finland to run a trade office over there.

Mr. Speaker, on the federal level we see the same concern being expressed by the public. We have the recent example of a person with probably one of the shortest if not the shortest reigns of any Prime Minister being shipped off to Los Angeles with a surprisingly big budget. I'm not sure exactly what that person does in Los Angeles other than entertain and socialize and such. Those are the types of instances that cause the public to question the costs that are associated with these types of expenditures, these types of facilities, these types of consultants, and as to whether this money could be put to better use.

Another question that is probably in order to be responded to at a later date is a question along the lines of trying to get some tangible indication of return on that expenditure. In other words, if the operation in London is going to cost $1.5 million a year to operate, what economic benefit is it to Canada? Is it increasing the economic benefit by a multiple of 10, in other words tenfold, or is it actually a minus situation?

I commend the minister that he has gone some distance here to make the question acceptable by incorporating his amendment, which I'm speaking to, and on that basis it softens the blow somewhat. I thank the minister for that.

[Motion on amendment carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to close the debate.

MR. SAPERS: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're not talking about small potatoes here when we're talking about Alberta trade and the international community. I think it's worth while reviewing for just a moment the nature of that trade. With the United States of America, that my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford was just speaking of, I believe our local agent is actually posted now in Portland but probably does a high degree of business in California as well. I notice that trade exports to the United States last year from Alberta equaled something in the order of $25 billion, and manufactured exports to the U.S. were about $7.8 billion.

In Japan there is one Albertan locally posted in Tokyo and nine locally engaged representatives maintaining a full-service office.

Total exports to Japan from Alberta are $1.3 billion, and manufactured exports are just shy of $800 million, soon to be a billion dollars.

When it comes to China, there is a newly assigned collocation agreement with the Canadian embassy. We had some representatives from the People's Republic here with us today in the Assembly. It's our fourth largest trading partner actually, totaling about $400 million in exports and $250 million, give or take, in terms of manufactured exports. That's separate, of course, from the business that's done in Hong Kong, which reaches $90 million in exports and $80 million in manufactured goods.

It goes on, Mr. Speaker. Alberta businesses are doing business in South Korea, in Taiwan, in Mexico, throughout the European continent and the European Union. In the U.K. market alone there are exports exceeding $230 million and manufactured exports exceeding $150 million. Clearly we're talking about a sizable business exchange that goes on between Alberta and its global partners and its global business associates. I think that's why we would like to see the highest quality information and the highest level of disclosure when it comes to how the Alberta government is supporting these initiatives, is making sure that money is spent where it needs to be spent and that we're getting value for those tax dollars.

I appreciate the minister's undertaking to provide both some reasonable amendments and also some high-quality information.

[Written Question 8 as amended carried]

Highway Maintenance

Q10. Mr. Wickman moved on behalf of Mrs. Soetaert that the following question be accepted.

How much has the government saved each year from 1996-97 to 1998-99 as a result of contracting out highway maintenance, and on what evidence are the figures based?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Written Question 10 the hon. member is inquiring of the government as to the amount of savings for the years '96-97 and then again '98-99 as a result of the contracting out of highway maintenance and for some evidence as to those particular figures.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

Now, there have been no amendments coming forward, so I'm not sure if the government wants to accept this and provide that information on some restricted basis, with some amendment in place, whatever. The question that has been put forward by the member is a very, very valid question, because when we start getting into the privatization question, the measurement of dollars, the measurement of efficiency in terms of those dollars, and the measurement of output in terms of those dollars become very, very important. I've had lots of Albertans tell me that since the maintenance of highways throughout the province has been privatized or contracted out, the road conditions have deteriorated considerably. I'm not sure if other members have heard that. I'm not sure if other members, as they're driving to wherever home is, feel all those bumps on the road that you didn't have years ago.

Obviously, if the government's concept or perception, which I disagree with incidentally, is that by contracting out you save money and if the level of service being provided is of a lesser level, then there should not only be savings from the contracting out to the private sector but also additional savings because the same degree of performance is not being achieved. In other words, it's lesser quality.

On this question of the benefits of privatization, yeah, in some instances privatization can work very, very well. There's no question about it. But there are other instances where the taxpayer says: "I pay good money for certain things. I pay good money in taxes and such to have roadways that are worthy of the vehicle that I'm driving. I don't want that vehicle of mine breaking down because of roadway conditions, because some private contractor hasn't done the work up to par." It may be saving the government a few bucks and he might save himself $2 in terms of taxes in his wallet, but then he's laying out $800 for a new transmission.

We see that happen, Madam Speaker. We not only see that happen on the highways; we see similar complaints in the municipalities. I can remember that during my days on city council it was a very, very standard, typical argument where somebody would say: so you guys are trying to save a few bucks by only paving this roadway every 10 years instead of every five years. Meanwhile, it's cost him three tires, one transmission, a clutch, and such; in other words, $2,400 worth of repairs so that he can save about 75 cents on his tax bill. So it's a false economy.

Madam Speaker, as I wrap up, I touch on privatization. It is impossible to touch on privatization without at least referring to Bill 11 in passing. That's all I'm going to do, just refer to Bill 11 in passing, because we're not dealing with that bill. We're dealing with the aspect of privatization of roadway maintenance.

Madam Speaker, I'm trying to remember the rules here now. The minister is going to get up and respond and may accept the question, but if he doesn't accept the question, then of course my colleagues will also have the opportunity to speak.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm not sure what games are going on this afternoon. It looks like we're going to be debating written questions and motions for returns all afternoon, perhaps so that the Leader of the Opposition doesn't have to come and promote her bill. Maybe she's decided not to bring forward Bill 207 this afternoon.

MR. SAPERS: Is this relevant?

MR. HANCOCK: It's very relevant to the whole question, because it's normal in the House to ask whether a question will be accepted. Of course I'm more than delighted to indicate on behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure that we'll be prepared to accept this question.

Don't be so sensitive over there, Edmonton-Glenora.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to close debate.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Seeing that the minister was good enough to accept the question, I'm going to be good enough to commend him for it, thank him for it, and say that I have no further comment on it.

[Written Question 10 carried]

head: Motions for Returns

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the Deputy Government House Leader it's my pleasure, proper notice having been given yesterday, to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 13, 14, 15, 16, and 24.

[Motion carried]

Special Waste Treatment Centre

M13. Mr. Gibbons moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the plan that Chem-Security (Alberta) Ltd. and Bovar Inc. were required to draw up under the enforcement order that was announced by Alberta environmental protection on January 15, 1997, showing how they will address all sources of PCBs, dioxins, and furans identified in the inventory required by the enforcement order together with a copy of any design plans that were subsequently drawn up to address any potential adverse impacts on the environment and any evaluation of these plans carried out by or for those companies or Alberta Environment or Alberta environmental protection from that time until February 28, 2000.

MR. MAR: Madam Speaker, I move to reject Motion for a Return 13. In light of the ongoing investigation into this incident, I'm not able to provide the information requested here and must reject the motion accordingly. I am however able to provide the assessment plan required of Chem-Security and Bovar and will undertake to table the same requisite number of copies following the vote.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. The whole legacy with this government and Bovar is an interesting one, and it's been an expensive one. We seem to go a couple of steps forward and then two or three steps backward every time the opposition asks for information. This really is a made-in-Alberta boondoggle, and there are some very serious concerns that persist to this very minute regarding the environmental safety of some of the things that are going on in and around that plant.

This is a very reasonable request. Albertans deserve to know how Alberta Environment will address sources of PCBs, dioxins, and furans identified in the inventory required by the enforcement order that came about as a result of this very significant problem. The minister just said that he's unable to comply, and he didn't really tell us why.

I think Albertans want a little more clarity from this minister on this very important issue. This is not going to go away, and it certainly doesn't make any sense for the government to bury its head collectively in the sand on these environmental problems. We should fess up to them so we can try to correct them the best we can. The more disclosure there is, the greater the understanding will be and the easier it will be to address the issue.

This is a serious concern of mine, because not only are Albertans still paying the tab, but because of the deal that was negotiated, Albertans will have to pick up the cost for any site cleanup and remediation. In the meantime we can't even find out all the details that we could reasonably expect to receive from this government of the adverse impacts on the environment as a result of some problems at that particular site.

This minister, I think, will probably want to be remembered for being a good steward of the environment. I think this minister will probably want to be remembered for always doing the right thing and not just the political thing, and he can certainly begin working on that legacy by reconsidering his rejection of this motion for a return.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning to close debate.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased that we are receiving some of the information. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie thought that this one was going to be accepted and was going to be quite happy that some easy information was going to come forward, but it continues to be an ongoing issue, especially now that the Premier has actually broken his promise to Albertans by allowing hazardous waste to be imported from out of the country. The first delivery from Japan is expected any day now. So it's a major concern. When the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie left here today, she thought this one would be totally accepted and that even with their legal problems there would be some forthcoming information from this department.

So I'm closing debate right now, Madam Speaker. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Consistent with my earlier undertaking to provide the assessment plan required of Chem-Security and Bovar, I'd like to table the requisite number of copies with the House.

Special Waste Treatment Centre

M14. Mr. Gibbons moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a monthly summary of all monitoring results and any individual values that exceed permitted limits from April 1, 1997, to February 28, 2000, collected by Chem-Security (Alberta) Ltd. and Bovar Inc. as required by the approval to operate the Alberta Special Waste Treatment Centre at Swan Hills and by the enforcement order announced by Alberta environmental protection on January 15, 1997.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wish to move that Motion for a Return 14 be amended by striking out the expression "and by the enforcement order announced by Alberta environmental protection on January 15, 1997." Accordingly, the amended motion for a return would read:

... a monthly summary of all monitoring results and any individual values that exceed permitted limits from April 1, 1997, to February 28, 2000, collected by Chem-Security (Alberta) Ltd. and Bovar Inc. as required by the approval to operate the Alberta Special Waste Treatment Centre at Swan Hills.

Madam Speaker, once again, in light of the ongoing investigation into this incident, I'm not able to provide the information requested based on the enforcement order of January 15, 1997. The monitoring results required outside this order are public information and will be provided accordingly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Yes. Thanks very much. The amendment on the face of it appears reasonable. While we're disappointed with the results of the earlier motion for a return, we will take a look at the enforcement order just tabled by the minister. The information from this amended motion will help fill in the picture a little bit. We'll review the information. I know my colleague will get back to the minister, and there'll be some subsequent follow-up questions.

Contrary to what the Government House Leader may have said on the record before in terms of this being a game, this is a sincere attempt on the part of the Official Opposition to obtain information that is of interest to the public and is in keeping with our capacity as the Official Opposition, which is in part to hold the government accountable on behalf of all taxpayers and even, interestingly enough, Madam Speaker, some who maybe even voted for the government.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On the amendment, hon. member.

MR. GIBBONS: Madam Speaker, I rise to close debate and will accept the amendment as given.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, there is no closing of debate on an amendment.

MR. GIBBONS: Okay. We'll let the amendment go.

[Motion on amendment carried]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Now on the motion as amended. Hon. member, you will be closing debate.

MR. GIBBONS: I will. Thank you. I rise to close debate with the amendment and accept the information. Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 14 as amended carried]

Forest Service Contracts

M15. Mr. Wickman moved on behalf of Mr. White that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a list of all contracts issued by the Alberta forest service in the calendar year 1999 indicating the purpose of each contract, the name of the company to which it was awarded, and whether the contract was awarded as a result of a public tendering process.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a legitimate question that's being asked, with no game playing involved. If the minister over there would indicate to me whether it's going to be accepted, I could minimize my comments. [interjection] You have to get up and say that publicly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I need someone to respond, please. The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Madam Speaker, I would move to accept Motion for a Return 15 with these comments. It is a poorly worded question as there is no entity as the Alberta forest service, and there has not been since 1993. I believe the hon. member was referring to the land and forest service, the correct name. I would have thought that the member opposite would have known that by now. However, I do accept this motion in the spirit in which it was asked.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to close debate.

MR. WICKMAN: Well, to close debate, let me remind the minister that Motion for a Return 15 was prepared by the Member for Edmonton-Calder. Even though he's a colleague of mine, I'm not going to take the fall for him on this one. He's on his own, quite frankly.

In any case, I thank the minister for accepting the motion for a return, and I will have no further comment on it.

[Motion for a Return 15 carried]

Government Reorganization Secretariat

M16. Mr. Sapers moved on behalf of Dr. Nicol that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all studies and reports prepared by or for the Government Reorganization Secretariat between May 26, 1999, and February 17, 2000, relating to a review of government agencies, boards, and commissions.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on behalf of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much. Madam Speaker, this is entirely in keeping with the government's commitment to disclose the results of this study. There are several – and the number seems to grow almost daily – government boards, agencies, and commissions doing delegated work on behalf of the government. Often they operate without the same degree of accountability or transparency or openness as other parts of the government, and sometimes we come to the conclusion that the government sets up these delegated organizations simply for the purpose of avoiding public scrutiny.

So we think it would be very worth while if the government would disclose studies or reports prepared by or for the secretariat relating to the review of government agencies, boards, and commissions. I think those reports would be of great interest to anybody who follows the public policy process in this province.

I've had no indication from the government whether this motion is going to be accepted or rejected. I've had no notification of an amendment. I can only hope that this lack of prior notice indicates speedy and willing acceptance.

DR. WEST: Madam Speaker, it's amazing. I've read quite a few motions for returns that have been directed towards this department, and I have to say that a lot of them are almost fishing trips, looking for things that may or may not be. If they would just come forth and ask beforehand, they would save this Assembly a lot of trouble in whether they accept or reject something and give an explanation. If they'd just come and ask. I mean, we are open. The door to my office is open, and if the hon. member has some questions about the reorganization secretariat, I have no problem. This area is the vice-chair's area. The hon. Member for Medicine Hat is doing the work on the boards, agencies, and commissions.

It's work in progress. The work is not finished. I reject this motion on that premise. Certainly we are open for discussion, to come and discuss how it's going and what we're doing. To say that there is a start or end point by some study or by some report – it's work in progress.

The other side of this. I would recommend to the member who is interested in understanding government reorganization and what we're doing that there are several books out termed Shared Services or the Reorganization of Government or Government Administration. They're in the libraries, and there is more on the Internet. If the hon. member would come to either myself as chairman of the reorganization or the vice-chair as it relates, they'd be glad to get references so that they can go to the library and read at night, and then we wouldn't be wasting the time of this Assembly with these redundant types of motions for returns.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. It's perhaps a good thing to see the Acting Treasurer bring his customary feistiness to his new portfolio.

I'd make this observation. In 1993 when we were talking about the need for a genuinely open government, we talked about the need for a freedom of information regime. The calculation then was that something like 72 percent of written questions and motions for returns were spurned, rejected, discounted, dismissed by the government of the day. Now, there's been some progress. I'm happy to report that actually the success rate now in terms of motions for returns and written questions is significantly higher than it was in 1993, but it's not 100 percent. We still have ministers that come forward and in a dismissive way reject legitimate, genuine requests for information, requests as written questions, requests for documents under motions for returns.

You know, to hear the flip response from the Acting Treasurer – let's just think about what he's told us. What he's told us is that we're welcome to go to the Internet and that he's got a couple of books in his library he's prepared to share. I mean, I still expect he's got Gaebler's Reinventing Government. He's probably put a few more on top, but that probably has an honoured spot in his bookcase.

DR. WEST: Never read it. I'm writing a book for him.

MR. DICKSON: I'm sorry. He read Sir Roger Douglas's New Zealand version of Gaebler's book Reinventing Government.

The point, Madam Speaker, is this. This is not like reading the literary review in the Edmonton Journal or the Vermilion Times. What I want to know and what my colleagues want to know are the studies that are undertaken by the government of the province of Alberta, paid for by the taxpayers of the province of Alberta. That's what we're asking for.

The minister insults every single Albertan when he says, in effect: go to the library; go to the Internet. Why should we have to do that? We have a government that you would think somewhere in their $8 million Public Affairs Bureau budget would be able to find a means to be able to make accessible to the people of this province the information that's gathered, that we paid for, about our resources, about our reorganization. [interjections]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. [interjection] Edmonton-Norwood.

MR. DICKSON: Madam Speaker, I guess it's an indication when your colleagues lose faith in the observations being made by their colleague. They're trying to crowd me off the platform so they can make some observations of their own, that I think will be much better.

DR. WEST: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: There's a point of order.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

DR. WEST: Madam Speaker, there was reference made just a minute ago in this House as to my presence or not, and I want that corrected here. That is improper conduct in this House. I either want an apology or a retraction of what they said because I'm still here, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On the point of order.

MR. DICKSON: I'm the one that had the floor. I'm the one that was speaking, and I made no reference to this minister leaving. He's put it on the record now himself. Every time a member of the opposition gets up to walk out in question period, we hear the catcalls and we hear the good-byes and the waves. That happens all the time, Madam Speaker. The point is that I'm the one that was speaking, and I didn't draw anybody's attention to the fact that the minister was fleeing from the Chamber because he didn't like to hear the arguments mounted against him.

Those are the points I wanted to make, Madam Speaker. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: If you'll recall, I interrupted the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo and made reference to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood for exactly what the Acting Treasurer has stood up and made a point of order about. There is no need for people to do that. If I recall, earlier I heard the Speaker of this Assembly talk about decorum. Now, let's get on with the work of the Assembly. I don't think it was necessary to make any kind of comment as to what the Acting Treasurer was doing. He has rejected what you've asked for. I want to hear the debate take place in accordance with that.

Debate Continued

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Is there anyone else that wishes to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Madam Speaker, I just want to make a point. The hon. Treasurer and minister of energy has alluded to reading some periodicals or books in the library, and I'm sure that that academic text is available to all of us, but what we're really looking for are the actual studies.

I have to reflect on what occurred in Public Accounts recently when the hon. Treasurer and minister of energy advised us, when we asked a similar question about presenting studies and tabling those, that studies weren't a big deal when it came to the electrical deregulation because this was ideology and ideology didn't have studies and therefore wasn't important.

Well, quite frankly, when you're making decisions that impact on all Albertans, impact on industry in this province, you have to have something that you're looking at. If this minister is telling us that those things just don't exist, then that's irresponsible government and that's poor management, quite frankly.

I'm hoping that he'll reconsider our request and he'll in fact put the actual studies and reports, the government reports, on the table for all Albertans to see and so we would know what's going on with this shared services reorganization, that he is telling us is going to save us a bunch of money when in fact there are studies out there that show just the opposite.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader and Minister of Justice.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wouldn't normally intercede in a debate of this nature. The hon. Acting Treasurer has indicated that the question is being rejected. He indicated, as I heard him, that it was being rejected because the situation was a work in progress and that it wouldn't be appropriate to provide reports at this time. I'm not sure that there even are reports at this time.

The only reason I'm interceding in the debate is because Calgary-Buffalo tried to put a connotation on those remarks to suggest that the hon. minister of natural resources and Acting Provincial Treasurer, a hardworking, dedicated servant of the people of this province, was somehow hiding something, was somehow being flippant with them. He was being sincere, honest, and open, as is his wont, and that should be on the record.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on behalf of Lethbridge-East to conclude debate.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks very much. This is very entertaining, and it's nice to see some rootin'-tootin' participation here from the provincial minister of both of those portfolios that he's minister of now.

A couple of comments about the rejection. When the minister of natural resources says, "Just call me," I think the people that are going to be reviewing Hansard have to know that this minister who says, "Just call me and I'll give you answers to information," is the very same minister who has sat in this Chamber and ripped up amendments and bills put forward by private members in this Assembly. This is the very same minister who has refused to answer questions during budget estimates and has said on the record that he won't answer questions.

DR. WEST: Point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Go ahead.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

DR. WEST: Under 23(h), (i), and (j). These comments are to disrupt this House and bring me to my feet. He had better bring forth some proof of what he's just been saying. He's making allegations about another member in this House, about habits that they have. He does not know that I rip up amendments or that I don't answer questions. I've been through the budget process, and I've answered all their questions. What is the inference this member is doing here? He is damaging my reputation to function in this House by putting allegations out that could be false. Prove it.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On the point of order.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much. Yeah, I will. Of course, as the Speaker has often said, you have to take all hon. members at their word. I've seen that minister rip up bills. I've seen that minister rip up amendments. You know, Madam Speaker, if he's not going to admit it, then that's his responsibility, but I've certainly seen it happen. If he's a little sensitive about his own behaviour, that's his problem, and he certainly doesn't need me to do anything to damage his reputation.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, I'm a little concerned here. I don't like it when allegations of a personal nature are made against another member. As the Acting Treasurer said when he rose on the point of order, you are making an assumption. I don't like assumptions and I don't like allegations.

I have noted with great interest all afternoon that more and more of this debate in this Assembly is becoming personal, very personal. I want you to know that Albertans who tune in and watch question period and see what goes on in this Assembly are very, very discouraged. We are supposed to set an example. I believe the hon. Acting Treasurer is right in seeking something here. I don't like to hear when someone accuses someone else of something. I have no idea what the hon. Acting Treasurer does with amendments, nor do you really.

MR. SAPERS: I've seen him do it.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, I have no idea what you just tore up now. Does anybody else in this Assembly?

Now we are going to proceed with the work that we are to do this afternoon. I want everyone in this Assembly to stay away from personal remarks. Let us get on with the business at hand, quickly.

MR. SAPERS: As I was saying, of course those activities and those actions make it very difficult to take with any seriousness this minister when he says: just call me.

Now, on the issue of whether or not we're dealing with a work in progress, I would like to draw all members' attention to the motion for a return as it's written, which is: copies "of all studies and reports prepared by or for the government" relating to the review. The motion for a return is not asking for the final report. We recognize that it is a work in progress. In fact, I have correspondence from the Member for Medicine Hat dated February 24, 2000, in response to a letter that I sent him. He said that it would be premature to provide the final report or further information.

So now we've asked the question. We have done what the Acting Treasurer has said. We have simply gone and asked the member for the information. They haven't provided it. We understand that it's a work in progress, but we also know that they've done some preliminary work in advance. So that's what we're asking for, the preliminary work. It's very disingenuous to say, "Just ask me," when in fact we did ask and received the response on February 24 saying: we're not going to give you the information. If the government wants to keep things secret from Albertans, I guess they can do that for the time being, but I think they should at least be up front and say: no; we're just going to keep it secret. They shouldn't try to mislead people by saying: just ask.

Trade Offices and Consultants

M24. Mr. Sapers moved on behalf of Dr. Nicol that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of activity reports prepared by the Department of Economic Development on Alberta trade offices and trade consultants abroad for the fiscal years 1997-98 and 1998-99.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment on behalf of the hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that Motion for a Return 24 be amended by striking out the expression "activity reports" and substituting "monthly report summaries" and also striking out the expression "and trade consultants." Accordingly, the motion would now read:

... copies of monthly report summaries prepared by the Department of Economic Development on Alberta trade offices abroad for the fiscal years 1997-98 and 1998-99.

Madam Speaker, activity reports generated by the trade offices and consultants contain third-party confidential information, the disclosure of which is not appropriate. Beauchesne 446(2)(e) supports this exemption as well as sections 15 and 16 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. The activity reports are summarized into monthly reports for trade offices, which provide information on the activity of trade offices without providing personal information.

Bill 206
School (Students' Code of Conduct)
Amendment Act, 2000

[Debate adjourned March 22: Dr. Nicol speaking]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It gives me pleasure today to rise to speak to Bill 206, the School (Students' Code of Conduct) Amendment Act. I'd like to commend and thank the Member for Livingstone-Macleod for bringing this private member's bill forward.

School violence is an issue that is very important to every Albertan, and solutions are especially valuable in addressing this problem. Events last year in Colorado and even closer to home, in Taber, Alberta, emphasized the necessity for governments to wake up and take notice.

This bill does exactly that. It shows that this government is proactively addressing some of the concerns surrounding this issue and deliberately finding solutions. This bill essentially requires school boards to implement codes of conduct for their students, combating school violence, substance abuse, and on-campus school discipline.

These codes of conduct would be clearly defined written agreements between schools and students in order to lay out acceptable standards of behaviour as well as consequences for infringement. In drafting a code of conduct, the school board would receive input from parents, students, teachers, and principals. This consultation is aimed at creating a community-based, stakeholder-driven code of conduct, reflecting the needs and priorities of a particular school district.

One unique attribute to this legislation is that it would provide a new approach to discipline by moving away from the traditional methods of suspension and expulsion to an approach of seeking rehabilitation. This way the code of conduct would include penalty options which allow students to continue their studies while offering counseling when necessary. Suspensions and expulsions of students would become a last resort.

Madam Speaker, by raising the standards of expectations for our students regarding their conduct, we are ensuring the safety of young people while at school or involved in school functions. Essentially, it will enable school administrators to nip in the bud any signs of deviant or violent behaviour that could pose a threat to other students.

In this way Bill 206 meets one of the fundamental priorities of this government: to provide Albertans with safe and strong communities. Bill 206 is a preventative initiative to reduce the incidence of school violence and youth crime in our province.

Madam Speaker, the untimely death of a young person often becomes a rallying point for a community as people come together expressing their grief and trying desperately to understand how such a tragedy could occur. When death occurs due to the violent actions of a fellow student, the questions and confusion that result are only amplified as the community tries to deal with the crisis they are facing.

This bill, Madam Speaker, seeks to address this problem by preventing violence before it occurs. Given that Alberta schools have experienced an increase in violence in recent years, this bill is in response to that fact and works to address the problem.

Madam Speaker, the province of Ontario in their Ministry of Education business plan for the year 1999-2000 stated that they are committed to introducing a provincewide code of conduct for students. Ontario's code of conduct would set minimum standards of behaviour and consequences for infractions. For example, the code would make expulsion automatic for students who bring weapons to school, provide drugs or alcohol to others, or who commit criminal assault. Suspension would be the minimum penalty for possessing drugs or alcohol, for threatening or swearing at teachers, or for vandalism.

Furthermore, a news release by the Ministry of Education stated that already the results were very positive. Students at a Toronto high school told the Ontario Minister of Education, Janet Ecker, that student life at the school has improved because of the school's code of conduct. In addition, the students said that the learning environment at the school was much better after the school introduced a code of conduct, because students are required to have respect for themselves, for others, and the responsibility of citizenship.

The Ontario government implemented a code of conduct based on input from parents who voiced their concerns that Ontario schools need to provide a safe, secure, and respectful learning environment. The news release also clearly stated the benefits to students, teachers, and schools. When the rules of behaviour are clear to everyone, students can get on with learning and teachers can get on with teaching.

Madam Speaker, I would imagine that with time a code of conduct would become a part of the school culture and would be easily accepted by all students and staff. Furthermore, I believe a student code of conduct would help in fostering an atmosphere of mutual respect in which everyone knows what is expected of them.

School can often become a haven for youth who are faced with violence at home or in their neighbourhood. Students who can use their teacher and other staff as mentors and role models often find their time at school productive and their learning experience enhanced by the input of these individuals. Without mutual respect between staff and students these relationships are harmed and become unproductive. A student code of conduct that raises the standard of behaviour within a school learning environment will only benefit these relationships and may make them more attainable to students who face more challenges in their personal lives.

Simply put, a safe school is a place where students can receive a high-quality education without being threatened. This ultimately builds the level of trust among students and between students and teachers. When the level of trust goes up in any relationship, the potential for growth and learning – intellectually, emotionally, and physically – also increases. Madam Speaker, this is what we want for our students in Alberta: a safe, secure environment in which they can learn and grow.

Some of the most important years in a child's life are the years of growing and changing, and this occurs most predominantly at the preschool age and when a child reaches their preteens and teenage years. These are the important years of growing and developing attitudes and behaviours that can last a lifetime. We want to do our best to develop the right attitudes and behaviours for our young people that will catapult them into a lifetime of success and happiness. Negative attitudes in learning environments will not produce these results, Madam Speaker.

Bill 206 is a step in the right direction to address the concerns surrounding school violence and youth crime. I would urge all members of this Assembly to support Bill 206.

Madam Speaker, after listening to both sides of the Assembly, I think we've heard a lot of good comments. I would also urge the federal government to tighten their Young Offenders Act, because with the implementation of that act we have seen a lot of changes within our own youth that we never saw before, and I think we need to address that issue nationally, not only provincially.

So with that, Madam Speaker, thank you. I hope everybody supports Bill 206.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to speak a bit here on Bill 206, the School (Students' Code of Conduct) Amendment Act. Let's just look for a minute at what a code of conduct is all about. Obviously, there is a formal and an informal code of conduct in this Legislative Assembly, for example, that will permit certain things and not permit other things. Some of it is tradition, wearing a tie and wearing a sports coat, for example.

I'm not sure. If I were to enter this Assembly without a tie on, would I be allowed in? The former Speaker said no. Maybe the current Speaker would. I don't know if there's an actual code of conduct that states, "Thee must wear a tie," or if it's simply a tradition that's been passed on year to year.

I look in the news clippings today where we talk in terms of a code of conduct in the federal Parliament buildings. I know we're dealing with the schools, and I'm getting to the schools. Now, would this activity be allowed in this House, what has been allowed down there? They talk about the New Democrat caucus buying their fashion accessories from Home Depot. It appears that a number of the New Democrat MPs in Ottawa were wearing wing nuts. Why would they wear wing nuts? Well, they said that it was because of some statements made by our esteemed Premier here in the province of Alberta.

When I look at this bill, in the five minutes that I have to speak to it, let's see what it says first. Okay; we go to section 1: the policy regarding the various activities. Let's look at those activities. Physical violence. Yes, none of us want physical violence in the schools. The previous member made reference to Taber. We've seen it happen in schools in Calgary. At the school my niece goes to one of the young fellows that was considered overweight was picked upon. He was knifed. He was knifed to death in the schoolyard. No school condones that type of physical violence. No school is going to condone sexual assault, whether it be a student or a teacher, and we've seen instances of sexual assault occur. Sexual abuse. Vandalism. A teacher or a principal is not going to close their eyes and say that vandalism is fine or, going down, that you can possess a firearm or a dangerous weapon.

I got a call from a constituent the other day. The Edmonton school board took away their child's right to attend that school forever and ever because that child had a penknife in his wallet. The blade was two inches long. I said to the mother: "I'm sorry. I can't go to bat for you on this one. The boy did wrong." In terms of the violence occurring in the schools, the boy did wrong.

After I finished speaking to her, it suddenly dawned on me that I had given my oldest granddaughter, who was 10, this seven-in-one tool. It has a screwdriver, a punch, a pair of scissors. Unfortunately, it also has a knife. I thought: "Oh, my God, did I give her a dangerous weapon? If they find it on her, she can be suspended?" Fortunately, her mother had the good sense to tape that blade down so it couldn't be opened. But those types of things can happen.

That's where the situation has got to in terms of school violence and the precautions that have to be taken. School boards themselves very capably set those policies in place, and they should, because it will differ in various parts of the province.

It's the same with dress. Some schools can actually have a uniform code, that everybody has to dress per uniform. In Edmonton it could work, but in rural Alberta, where some of the students have to go home at lunchtime and do some farming – feed the cattle, milk the cows, or whatever – they can't be going with a real nice uniform on. They don't have time to change and that. Sometimes they rush home after school. They don't even have time to change. They've got to go attend to the chores right now. So to work, discretion has to be given to the individual school boards.

I could see an umbrella saying that we encourage school boards to develop the policies and such, but the school boards I think are very capable. If we go back years ago and we talk in terms of a code of conduct, when I was in grade 1, going to a little rural school, do you know what was acceptable? One of the rich kids – I guess the only rich kid in the school. His father owned a gas station and a rural grocery store. His father came back from Duluth in the States. He brought back a switchblade knife as a present for his son who was in grade 4. You couldn't buy them in Canada then. We all thought it was great. The teacher didn't say anything. Back then it was acceptable, but times have changed.

I can recall a teacher of ours that got rather rambunctious. I was in grade 2, so he appeared to me to be quite mature. He was probably only 18 or 19. At recess time we used to go out and pretend that we were Robin Hood. We'd go in the bush, carve off these pointed sticks and go chasing each other. One kid got a stick right in the windpipe, in the neck, and he lay there gasping for breath. We thought he was going to die. He was rushed to the hospital. Obviously, that teacher was fired.

Back in those days they didn't have a code of conduct in that school board. I don't think any of them did. If there was physical violence in the yard, for example, we would scrap it out as youngsters. We would just scrap it out. The best man wins, and I always lost.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt you, hon. member, but under Standing Order 8(5)(a), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod to close debate on Bill 206.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We really appreciated all the input that we've got from both sides of the House on this particular issue. It's very enlightening to hear different members speak about not only their personal experiences but their own philosophy towards how society should make its own rules and how it should control and govern itself.

We don't often have an opportunity to talk about some of the good things that we can do for today's society, neither do we have much opportunity to set a firm foundation on how society could conduct itself in the future. Each and every one of us, I'm sure, at times has talked about and also examined some of the things that we all need to do, and that's to concentrate on what's important to us and how we conduct ourselves in our personal lives, in our business lives, and in our public lives.

We've even had times in this Assembly within the last week to examine and to question our own conduct here in this Assembly, and within the last 24 hours specifically we've had to refer to a written agreement between all parties of this Assembly and participate in the discipline required to maintain the decorum that we need to see progress in the business that we do here to make for a better Alberta.

We've been debating the principles of Bill 206, the School (Students' Code of Conduct) Amendment Act. In that debate we heard from a number of members why school boards should develop a written code of conduct and how that code of conduct should be developed through the collective involvement of teachers, parents, and students so that a successful code of conduct may be of benefit to the learning environment.

I'm grateful for the testaments and the experiences, some of them very personal, that some hon. members have had in being part of and developing a code of conduct. The fact that much of this was done on a volunteer basis I think is a bonus. It tells me for sure and everyone who is concerned about a safe school that a successful code of conduct properly prepared can work.

We had some questions about why this bill is needed and the fact that some school boards don't have codes of conduct or even policies on rules. Yes, they all have rules, but some boards don't have policies on rules or rule setting or the implementation or the consequences of those rules and the actions of students. Madam Speaker, we are trying to determine the accurate figures on those questions, but generally it is known that about 75 percent of the schools in this province have rules and/or codes of conduct. I'll be pleased to share with the hon. members an update on those figures after our research is done. I'm sure that we'll have an opportunity in Committee of the Whole to talk about actual figures of school boards and schools that do have some set of rules.

But the fact that some have a code of conduct should not prohibit all schools from having a written set of rules. This bill will reaffirm some of the values we wish to preserve for society and pass on to our young people. I just want to make mention of one thing about this bill. I've been receiving some calls, many of them supportive of the bill, but many questions have come forward and say that if a school has a code of conduct and they find that it works and they are happy with it, can they keep it? The answer to that is yes. If they are presently developing one, I'm encouraging parents, I'm encouraging teachers that have called me to keep working on it. This bill will not preclude your hard work.

Just as our own written agreement worked in this Assembly, it can work for our young people too, and we are an example and should be an example to our young people. So, Madam Speaker, in moving second reading of Bill 206, I ask for all members to support this bill.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a second time]

Bill 207
Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing
Calculation Act

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and to present Bill 207, the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Calculation Act.

Madam Speaker, the object of Bill 207 is to provide local governments in Alberta, whether they be for rural or urban municipalities, with access to a portion of provincial personal income tax in order to create a more stable and a more predictable funding framework between the province and local governments and to provide our municipalities across Alberta with an enhanced ability to meet their priorities on a medium- and a long-term basis in accordance with fulfilling their significant roles and responsibilities.

The bill is presented as a positive opportunity to discuss some of the issues that are very much affecting our province today. The bill is put forward as a discussion opportunity, an opportunity to look at some of the messages that have come to us as legislators from provincial associations like the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, where they have clearly outlined the problems they face as municipalities when, in the context of the last decade, municipal grants have been reduced substantially, and along with that has been downloaded responsibility from the provincial government, leaving our municipalities not knowing what the long-term funding framework looks like for them, therefore unable to deal with and deliver the kinds of services that we need in our local communities.

On many occasions when I have been privileged to meet with groups within our municipalities around Alberta, I have talked to them about the reality of our world today, where we have very much global trade, global communications, global access to communication and information. However, when it comes right down to it, we live in our local community, whether that be our town or our neighbourhood or our city. It really doesn't matter the form it might take. What matters is that that is the environment where we raise our families, where our children go to school, where we return to at the end of each day, that local community which is so important. In Alberta that local community is defined by a municipal structure, and we believe that a new partnership needs to be forged between the provincial government and our municipalities, a true partnership because of the level of maturity and growth that our municipalities have reached in this past decade certainly, but it's time for a new arrangement.

This bill suggests one mechanism by which that partnership agreement could be structured, matching both roles and responsibilities for our municipalities with the resources, both fiscal and economic, to build the communities, but we don't for one moment believe this is the only option. This legislation was built on the basis of the legislative framework that exists in the province of Manitoba, but there are certainly other options that could look at this subject of revenue sharing with kind of a 21st century perspective.

I've been around this provincial government long enough to recall a former Deputy Premier and actually the MLA for Barrhead, Dr. Horner, who served this Legislature very, very effectively as the MLA for Barrhead, but he let slip a comment many years ago, in the mid-70s, that in fact the municipalities were the children of the province. In fact, it was probably a very accurate statement, and it was a statement that I think prevails today with the provincial government: this whole notion that the municipalities exist and have given to them their allowance, if you like, in a more parent/child relationship as opposed to what we think our municipalities are capable of, which is a far more mature relationship, reflecting certainly the very sophisticated, corporate in many cases, municipal structures that are now in place. It's time for a new partnership, a time for a new vision, a time to move away from a '70s perspective into a 21st century perspective with our municipalities and become the true partners that we can.

Bill 207 proposes to allocate a percentage of personal income tax revenues to Alberta municipalities on a per capita basis beginning in the fiscal year 2000-2001. This would allow the province to eliminate unstable and unpredictable grant programs and to provide a framework for increased accountability for our municipalities, responsiveness, efficiency, and fairness between the province and local governments.

Bill 207 is just one component of the Official Opposition's initiative to create a new partnership between the province and local governments by developing a system of, number one, predictable funding arrangements with our municipalities; secondly, clarifying this whole issue of the division of powers between the province and the municipalities, the roles and the responsibilities that we expect for our municipalities; and finally, allowing local governments to determine infrastructure priorities required to sustain their economic and human development within their own boundaries.

As I indicated, Madam Speaker, Bill 207 is modeled after the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Act in the province of Manitoba. Unfortunately, because Bill 207 is a private member's bill, it is restricted from having a number of important elements, including a mechanism through which the municipalities would be able to access the income tax base. As all members are aware, private members' bills cannot deal specifically with money issues since nongovernment members are unable to introduce a money bill in the Legislature. Nonetheless, what Bill 207 does do is provide that framework for a discussion. Certainly it's one that's generating a lot of discussion with municipalities around the province and generating discussion with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the AAMD and C and, as well, even most recently with the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, with whom we had the privilege to meet in the last couple of weeks.

So that's the background on the mechanism to actually transfer, if you like, a portion of income tax to the municipalities, which, of course, we can't do because it's a private member's bill. It's not included in the text, but it's certainly part of the overall discussion framework, and I think it's an important focus for the discussion.

Funding arrangements between the province and local governments are an important component in clarifying the roles and responsibilities and establishing clear lines of accountability to citizens. The Official Opposition wants to encourage an informed participatory debate with our citizens and with all members of the Legislature as a means of ensuring and looking ahead to our local governments and giving them some promise of a new relationship that might emerge as a result. We certainly encourage all Members of the Legislative Assembly, as well as all Albertans, to express their views and to continue to express their interest.

We then move to the three elements which we think are important in this debate. The first one, in terms of the policy of which this is part of what we've been building across the province, is this whole issue of stable and predictable funding. I thought I might quote from the Alberta Urban Municipalities' initiatives proposed for the provincial budget which was put out in February of this year, February 2000. This was a statement of offering a new perspective and a solution, if you like, to the Provincial Treasurer as he prepared for his budget. I'd like to quote the AUMA when they say:

The province should include, as part of their business plan, the creation of a legislative framework that would give municipalities access to a stable and long-term source of revenue to ensure self-sufficiency and sustainability. Continued reliance on the province for grants and other programs prevents municipalities from becoming self-sufficient. Access to a stable source of revenue is the best way to ensure municipalities remain sustainable during high growth periods or economic downturns.

Thus, Bill 207 is a product of the initiative of the Official Opposition to forge this new partnership.

Adequate fiscal capacity at the local level is the only way a municipality can control the services that they offer and thus be held accountable for their expenditures. Local governments must be fiscally responsible to their citizens, but in order to be so, they must have access to stable and predictable sources of revenue that will allow them to meet these roles and responsibilities that have been outlined and shared and agreed to between them and the province in an efficient and effective manner.

In the past decade local government responsibilities have exceeded and grown faster than the opportunities to raise revenues from local sources have. This has been exacerbated, especially over the last eight years, by the provincial government's unilateral reductions to provincial grants and the intrusion into the local property tax field through the provincial education property tax. According to Statistics Canada, between 1992 and '98 general and specific grants from the Alberta government to municipalities declined by $402 million, or 48 percent, the second highest level of decline in any province in Canada. When increased responsibilities are given to or downloaded, as we know, onto local government, it is only fair that adequate funding to support these responsibilities should follow, yet Alberta's property tax base has been fragmented by the province's reliance on the education property tax. This creates problems of accountability and uncertainty for our municipalities.

According to Statistics Canada the Alberta government collected nearly 46 percent of the real and general property taxes generated in the province during 1998, the third highest percentage amongst all Canadian provinces. Meanwhile, in addition to that, the provincial education property tax burden on residential properties in Alberta increased by $87 million, or the 13 percent that we have referred to frequently, between 1995 and 1999. That's an increase in the provincial education property tax of 13 percent, or $87 million. Our municipalities are well aware of that increase, as are our local property tax payers.

Provincial revenue sources are growing at a much faster rate than local government revenue sources. We're certainly well aware that our municipalities are not talking about tax cuts in the same way that the provincial government is. Yet if we look between 1992-3 and 1999-2000, Alberta's own share of revenues grew by a cumulative 51 percent, or an average of 7.3 percent growth per year provincially. Between the same period Alberta's personal income tax revenues grew by a cumulated 78 percent, or an average of 11 percent per year.

On the other hand, the wide disparity between the fiscal capacity and responsibility of the Alberta government and local governments is clear. The revenue-sharing mechanisms within Bill 207 would assist in reducing this disparity and ensure that the fiscal capacity more adequately responds with the roles and the responsibilities of our local municipalities.

In the response to the provincial budget the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association said:

An increase in the infrastructure dollars for municipalities is welcome news, however, short term funding is no substitute for long term planning.

This is from our own Urban Municipalities Association. "The Government . . . has not addressed the need for long term financial solutions."

In short, Mr. Speaker, we believe that a predictable funding framework for our municipalities alongside a clear and defined role of whose responsibility is whose between the province and the municipalities is long overdue in this province. It is time to reflect that our municipalities have grown up from the childlike treatment that they get from the provincial government, and it is now time for a new partnership that's reflective of the reality as well as the hope for the future of our municipalities.

In terms of the third component of what we in the Official Opposition have been talking about with our municipalities and our important municipal associations, the issue of stable, predictable, and longer term infrastructure planning dollars is very, very important. While the provincial government certainly opened up, to the credit of the Municipal Affairs minister, some important dollars for infrastructure in the last year, unfortunately that doesn't give the longer term planning framework that must be in place for our municipalities.

We know from a development point of view that municipalities have to plan subdivisions seven to 10 years out, yet if they only have the infrastructure plan for two or three years or even less, there's not a match between the services that they need to be performed and the resources they are given to perform them and to perform and plan them and manage them effectively. Add on top of that the down-loading from the provincial government in terms of increasing the responsibilities of municipalities, and you have the clash of those two things coming together and major concerns about whether the infrastructure planning is coming at an appropriate level and whether in fact we might be wasting taxpayers' dollars.

Let me quote the Auditor General, who has certainly noted this trend in his report and who made the following comments on this issue of infrastructure planning. He said:

Capital expenditures do not occur in isolation – they create a stream of subsequent operating costs that are often not fully recognized at the time of the original investment . . . I believe the quality of the government's capital planning initiative is critical to managing these expenditures in a way that establishes an equilibrium between legitimate program requirements and funding provided. Proper planning will make the difference between a reactive mode, which this government has forced municipalities into and which merely distributes allocated funds, and a predictive mode, which anticipates and justifies funding required.

That's the kind of mature relationship we believe our municipalities deserve, and I urge all members to support Bill 207 and invite all members to participate in the debate, which we will certainly be sharing with the urban and rural municipalities associations and the many, many municipalities including our major cities of Edmonton and Calgary as the debate ensues.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have the opportunity to rise today and speak about government support regarding our municipalities, what we consider the pillar, the foundation of this province. Certainly working with the municipalities is going to be our key to developing a stronger province, and we all very well appreciate it.

First of all, I'm a little surprised at the content of Bill 207 in that to me it certainly appears to be very close to being a money bill, one that indeed is appropriating money fairly directly. It was my understanding that private members were not to be dealing with money bills. Nevertheless, we do have the bill here, so ultimately I'll be very, very pleased to be involved in discussions regarding this particular bill.

I listened intently to the hon. Leader of the Opposition and with great interest, because indeed we are involved in ongoing discussions with municipalities, with our colleagues in the Alberta Urban Municipalities as well as the AAMD and C. The municipalities do face challenges. We acknowledge that. Indeed, listening to the hon. Leader of the Opposition, I was impressed by the identification of her presentation. She was very rich in challenges but very, very short on solutions. The solution that came forward was simply to add more money. That's very similar to the usual solutions that come forward from across the way, so I guess I shouldn't have been too surprised regarding this.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to get into some depth on our workings with the municipal organizations, and I would like to be able to do it all in one presentation, so at this time I'd like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 5, 2000 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 00/04/05
 [Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Please be seated or find your way to that.

head: Government Bills and Orders
 head: Second Reading

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

[Adjourned debate April 4: Dr. Nicol]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to enter into the debate on Bill 11 at second reading. This is obviously a very interesting piece of legislation that people from across the province and in fact from across the country have been talking about for many weeks.

Mr. Speaker, it's not surprising that many people are talking about it. Albertans cherish their health system. They take it very seriously. As a former minister of health I understand how seriously they do take it, and as a former Minister of Community Development I know how important this is to our seniors population. Albertans want good, quality medical care for themselves and their loved ones. I would suggest that every member in this Assembly wants good, quality health care for their loved ones.

That's why it's important that we discuss this bill rationally, logically, and seriously, without resorting to exaggerations and misinformation. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, in many cases that has not happened. In the last months I've heard dozens of inaccurate statements made in this Assembly and outside about Bill 11, and I'd like to address just a few of them tonight.

One such statement is that the goal of this bill is a two-tier health system and private, for-profit hospitals, quoted December 12, 1999, Edmonton-McClung. Wrong. This bill specifically outlaws private hospitals, queue-jumping, and physicians charging patients for insured services.

Under this legislation there will be no so-called second tier of health care designed to cater to those willing to pay out of their own pocket. The legislation bans such a system from developing. I find it interesting that an apparent quote from the Leader of the Opposition actually would put in a second tier if private, for-profit hospitals were allowed to operate in this province outside of the public system, doctors opted out. You would have under that scenario the ability to have a second tier. This bill, Bill 11, clearly outlaws a second tier in health care.

Another hon. member suggested that Albertans would need to purchase private health insurance as a result of this legislation. This was Edmonton-Centre in March of this year. In her speech last night the Leader of the Opposition continued this fear mongering by saying that patients will be required to pay for enhanced services with either a credit card or by purchasing private insurance. This legislation clearly prohibits anyone forcing or coercing patients into paying for enhanced services. It lays out solid guidelines for how enhanced services could be presented to the patient.

There is also no indication that this bill in any way would expand the need for private health insurance. In fact, it affirms the Alberta government's unequivocal commitment to the Canada Health Act, and it prevents physicians from charging patients or making people pay for medically necessary health services. To suggest to our seniors, many of whom are on fixed income, that they should adjust their financial plans because they will need to purchase private health insurance is completely irresponsible.

Equally irresponsible was the suggestion that seniors are being used as a scapegoat for Bill 11. This government has demonstrated clear commitment to our seniors. That's why we have the most extensive seniors' benefits in Canada. That's why seniors are moving to our province in very large numbers. That's why in two years running we had almost 2,000 seniors move into this province. That's not, Mr. Speaker.

However, we can't ignore changing demographics. To ignore changing demographics would be irresponsible. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: There's a bit of confusion this evening. We have two people who want to enter into a dialogue or a debate, and we've only one hon. member who's been officially recognized. So if the others could go outside the Chamber and carry on their debate, we'll be able to hear better the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, to ignore the changing demographics in the province would be irresponsible. We need to prepare for those changing demographics. That's why this government led a study to review the impact of an aging population on our society, so that we could plan in areas of health, in areas of housing, many other support areas for those changing demographics. That's responsible.

I find it interesting that members of the opposition, I understand, are passing out Friends of Medicare brochures, which contain many erroneous statements, grossly inaccurate. For example, it says that under Bill 11 major surgeries will be performed in private hospitals. Bill 11 clearly says that they will not. Private hospitals, first of all, are banned by this legislation. Secondly, the bill clearly says that major surgeries will only be performed in a public institution.

The brochure also says that the government is assuming that private health care delivery is cheaper than publicly delivered health services. That's not the case. Bill 11 simply gives our regional health authorities one more tool to deliver important health services to the people they serve. That's why they have to decide if they will use a private contractor for a service on a cost analysis as well as show that there's a need for the service.

This brochure also stated that cataract surgery waiting times were longer in Calgary than other parts of the province. On a per capita basis – and these are facts; this isn't fantasy. The fact is that on a per capita basis there are more cataract surgeries done in Calgary than there are in Edmonton. The fact is that Albertans living in regions where more surgeries are contracted out do not wait longer than other regions. These are facts, Mr. Speaker, and you know we're willing to back our facts up.

Many other inaccurate statements have been made in this Assembly: for one, that private surgical clinics would be subject to less cost controls, assertions that Bill 11 won't lead to cost savings, suggestions that the Premier has backed away from saying that this legislation would result in cost savings. This is simply wrong. It is very clear in the legislation that no regional health authority will be allowed to establish a contract with a private surgical facility without a clear, demonstrated cost saving. That is fact, Mr. Speaker, not fantasy, not whimsy. It also makes it very clear that through Bill 11 there'll be firm cost controls on private surgical facilities. The accountability is there and so are the savings if indeed this occurs.

Another statement is that Bill 11 would put in motion the privatization of health care in our province and that the government wouldn't be able to control it. Wrong again. In fact, this legislation puts very strong measures in place so that government can regulate and control the role of the private sector in our health system, something that was not done by the Leader of the Opposition when many of these private clinics came into being under her watch when she was health minister. [interjection] Oh, yes, it did happen under me. An hon. member mentions this. [interjections] Yes, I was the health minister when the federal government fined this province, took precious health dollars away from us because that activity had not occurred. We did address the issue, and we did come to an agreement with the federal government that agreed to 12 principles under which they would operate.

This inaccurate statement was made by the Leader of the Official Opposition in the Assembly on February 28 this year, and I'm going to quote it directly because this is a serious inaccuracy, I believe.

This is the government that inherited a cost-controlled health . . . system in this province when they took over in '92, this is the government that rapidly cut . . . close to 20 percent of that health care sector, and this is the same government that now, realizing the error of their ways, is throwing money back at health care, trying to buy back support from the people of this province.

Well, there are several inaccuracies in that one statement. Firstly, the costs that we inherited in 1992, I can tell you, were increasing at an alarming rate: 10 to 12 percent a year, far beyond our population growth and inflation rates. There were over 200 administrative health boards scattered across this province with overlapping borders and responsibility, hardly what you would call inheriting a cost-controlled health system.

Secondly – and this is most important – health budget reductions from 1993 to '95 were never 20 percent, and they certainly weren't 30 percent as the Leader of the Opposition incorrectly stated in her speech last night. The most the health budget was reduced was just under 13 percent, and that funding was quickly restored and grew from there. Restored by this provincial government.

How can you trust . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. [interjections] No, no, no, no. He did; she did. Whatever. Let us just sit here and listen to the speaker that is speaking at the moment. The only one that's recognized is the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. If you have a point of order, rise on the point of order when the opportunity reaches you, but in the meantime let's keep our counsel to ourselves and listen to the speeches. If you feel the need to vent, then go out on the balcony and do so there.

The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I again ask how you can trust an opposition that can't get facts that are so readily accessed right. How can you trust an opposition that would use those figures so inaccurately?

If you want to talk about health funding, maybe the finger should be pointed at the federal government. Federal spending on the Canada health and social transfers has been reduced dramatically in recent years, to the point that federal transfers today pay for 13 percent, 13 cents of every dollar that we spend in this province. Alberta has absorbed these federal reductions. We didn't pass them on to our health authorities and to our citizens, and we've managed to boost our health spending significantly in those years. I wish the opposition in their tabling of letters every day would table the letters they've written to the federal minister, Mr. Rock, requesting him to fully restore the CHST to 1994 levels.

This government is not throwing money at the health system. Our health spending is being done carefully with clear plans to real demands, and we're doing it without the support of the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, there are so many inaccuracies that we're going to have to deal with some of them, to debate this at another time, but I want to talk just briefly about the one where they're talking about Bill 11 amounting to a taxpayer subsidy of the private sector. Wrong again. This shows not only a fundamental misunderstanding of our health system but also of our economy. Every doctor's office in this province is essentially a private clinic. It is a private business, and it is paid on a fee-for-service basis by the Alberta government. This doesn't seem to be considered a taxpayer subsidy by the opposition. It works the same way when government uses the private sector for any services. That's where we get into the little economics lesson. It's tax dollars going to a private business to perform a service, and that's what it would be and is today as private surgical clinics are contracted to perform services.

I wanted to get into the issue of the definition of a hospital and a surgical suite. That has been covered in this Legislature so clearly by our Premier and our health minister over the past days and weeks that I don't want to take the precious time I have, but I would again repeat the invitation that if you don't know what a hospital is, go visit one. If you don't know what a surgical suite is, go visit one. Get informed and then tell Albertans the facts.

There are no code words for private hospitals because there will be no private hospitals under this government's watch. Article 2(2) of Bill 11 quite clearly says that "No person shall provide a major surgical service . . . in Alberta except in a public hospital." Very clear. The first article in the bill says that no person in Alberta shall operate a private, for-profit hospital. What could be clearer?

There is another error or inaccuracy that was in a Liberal news release. I don't usually read them. I don't know what drew me to that one. It stipulated that the bill stipulates that once the provincial government makes a decision, no one can challenge it. Well, I have to suggest that this possibly comes from the privative clause in Bill 11. I don't understand why people who have been in this Legislature this long and have dealt with as many statutes as we have in this Legislature over time don't understand what a privative clause is.

It is a common clause that's used in many, many pieces of legislation, but let me tell you what it does in this legislation, because that's what's important. It ensures that if the minister of health rejects a contract because it might have a negative effect on the public health system, the courts could not force the minister to approve the contract. Are the opposition against that? Do they not understand that recourse to the courts continues to be available if the minister doesn't follow the requirements of the act or makes a decision that's unsupportable? Ministerial discretion can always be reviewed when a minister exceeds their jurisdiction. I understand them not understanding ministerial jurisdiction, and I hope that they never have the opportunity to.

There's been a lot of discussion in the Legislature about Saskatchewan law. Statements have been made comparing their legislation and ours. The one that really caused me to have a lot of concerns for the opposition's ability to understand this legislation was the one that said that Saskatchewan's law protects medicare and Alberta's Bill 11 would undermine it. I believe that statement was made by Edmonton-Glenora, and that shocked me. In fact, the two laws are very similar. Peter Lown, chair of the Alberta Law Reform Institute, did an independent review of both pieces of legislation and found that they did do similar things and that in many ways, many ways, Mr. Speaker, our legislation is even more detailed and more explicit. Our legislation expressly prohibits the operation of private hospitals while the Saskatchewan legislation does not.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Sorry, hon. minister. There are some people on the front benches of both sides who seem to anticipate their opportunity. One has not yet had his opportunity. The other has already spoken. We wish them both now to respect that only one member gets to speak on this at a time, and that member is the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

MRS. McCLELLAN: I could talk about NAFTA and the inability to understand NAFTA, but I tabled a NAFTA review in the Legislature. I want to tell you what this legislation does. I want to talk about what it actually does without rhetoric, without emotion. It does several things. First, it affirms the Alberta government's solid commitment to the principles of the Canada Health Act. These are principles that Albertans hold dear, and we have no intention of violating them.

Secondly, it puts a strong legal framework for us to regulate private health care deliverers, the legislation that has never been in place. It allows the minister to review and approve or deny any private health clinic. The College of Physicians and Surgeons has told us we need that. The federal minister has told us they need that.

Thirdly, this legislation gives our regional health authorities one more tool to use in managing health care delivery in their region. One more tool.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I believe Calgary-McCall is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Questioning a Member

MR. SHARIFF: Under Beauchesne 482 I'm wondering if the hon. member will entertain a question.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member only has to say yes or no and doesn't have to give any reasons in the 10 seconds that may remain in her time.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'll be pleased to answer the hon. member's question immediately after I conclude.

Debate Continued

MRS. McCLELLAN: I want to tell you again how important it is to debate this bill fairly and reasonably. Albertans deserve that, and we who should hold the respect of the people who put us in this Legislature should abide by that.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. [interjections]

The chair has been called upon to stop the interruptions a number of times and would appreciate it if the people who are showing sort of a gamey attitude to try and join in this would restrain themselves until their proper turn.

Right now we have recognized the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you. Twenty-two years ago, Mr. Speaker, I fell in love. From our first introduction I was hooked. The intricacies of this living entity bonded me to her. From the complexity of human anatomy to pharmacology to the simplicity of holding a hand and making a bed I was destined to share a journey with our health care system that has led me to hospitals, health units, cities and communities, and finally to the Legislature of this province.

As a registered nurse and MLA I have seen the system inside and out and know intimately her strengths and weaknesses, complexities and vulnerability. We have shared and witnessed so much together: the ecstasy of birth, the peace and agony of death, the unpredictable power of the human spirit. During my journey with her I have gathered data, written briefs, followed individual cases, acted as an advocate for health care workers and patients alike, and debated the issues of health care around boardroom tables and in the Legislature of our province and country. What this system has taught me cannot be summarized in this short debate.

Recently, as many of you know, a tragedy in our family took me back to the bedside of this great system, and once again I experienced the great compassion and caring of the public health care system. To the staff at the Medicine Hat and Foothills hospitals and the paramedics who cared for our niece Tara and our family in the final days of her life, I want to formally express our gratitude and deepest appreciation. With these reflections on our journey together being made, it is of no surprise that fundamentally I believe the public health care system is as vital and sacred to our society in this province and country as the system of democracy each of us is here entrusted to preserve.

I have also come to believe and learn that sometimes, perhaps most times, Mr. Speaker, the politics of an issue can be a consuming beast, and in this sense I cannot say this evening that I have come to love this system the same way in which I loved the health care system. In health care when we were focused on a problem and were required to stabilize a patient, all members of the team pulled together to find that solution or cause and make the plan work. That is not the case when it comes to dealing with the complexity of issues and problems that face the system as a whole. Even though I'm an experienced health care professional, the barrage of government announcements accompanying the release of Bill 11 have left me feeling overwhelmed by rhetoric. Underneath the polished words of ads and news releases Bill 11 prompts more questions than solutions, more complications than clarity, more politics than sound public policy. Bill 11 if passed will rock the foundations of our public health care system, both Alberta's and Canada's. Of this I am certain.

In my conversations with constituents and citizens at rallies, meetings, town halls, on sidewalks, and in homes across this province I've encountered a great deal of unease in Alberta from many who are waiting for the other shoe to drop, people who have more questions than answers, more trepidation than anticipation. As I contemplate this bill and look ahead to a crucial year for our health care system, I feel this challenge is one I have been preparing for all of my professional life.

Let me make the following general observations about Bill 11. Observation one: there is madness in the method. Access is a critical issue in our current health care debate, but there are no provincial or regional figures available as to how many Albertans are currently waiting for surgery or consults, because the province does not require regions to publish these numbers. Furthermore, there are no published figures on how many public hospital beds are currently closed and could be opened with the funds proposed to flow to the private health facilities. Without this data Albertans are kept in the dark about how accessible our public system truly is or could be.

Over the past year Edmonton-Riverview has fielded many calls from citizens that feel frustrated by the public health care system. Many complain they've been denied access as they wait for many months to see specialists or have surgery. Others feel they are being manipulated at their most vulnerable state, when they are fearful for their own health or the health of their loved ones. An accident victim or cancer patient can wait two weeks for a hospital MRI or pay hundreds of dollars to have one done immediately by a private provider. This is just one example of many. A weakened system is vulnerable for change, and now that the government has destabilized the public health care system and a growing number of Albertans cannot access it, the stage is set for the introduction of a private tier of care. There is madness in the method, Mr. Speaker.

Observation two: things are not as they seem. The government maintains it is committed to the public health care system despite the savage, unplanned cuts it implemented in the system between 1993 and 1996. Thirty percent of the public hospital budget in Alberta was cut during this period according to Dr. Robert Evans, a renowned health researcher with the University of British Columbia. Now what they propose is a private health care policy in accompanying Bill 11 so that we can regulate facilities that are able to do surgeries requiring an overnight stay, as stated in the government's own brochure.

Bill 11 is titled the Health Care Protection Act, but neither the bill nor any of the accompanying government press releases or brochures actually tells Albertans what the mandate or scope of the bill's application will be or how it will achieve true reform of the system, how it will address the critical and growing shortage of qualified health professionals, including registered nurses, registered psychiatric nurses, licensed practical nurses, and physicians. Nothing in this bill or in the materials released conclusively proves how this bill will save money or be more efficient than the public delivery of surgical services.

Commitments that Bill 11 signifies this government's support of the Canada Health Act also ring hollow when you contemplate that the definition of what is medically necessary is being redefined as we speak. Would advancements in medical care in the future only be offered as enhanced services for extra charges? The government determines by an order of the cabinet what services will be deinsured. No public consultation and no debate. Such services could then be offered by a private facility as an enhanced service under Bill 11. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that this government has never had nor do they have today a long-term plan and vision for a sustainable public health care system. Things are not as they seem.

Observation three. It is our system. I am committed to working towards a health care system that will serve all Albertans equally well. Achieving this will take vision, courage, commitment, and dedication from all elected representatives regardless of their party affiliations. Bill 11 does not achieve reform of the system, and Bill 11 is not a comprehensive plan. This government does not have nor have they ever had a comprehensive plan for the preservation and reform of our public health care system. Bill 11 simply offers a narrow option on how to contract surgical services.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I'm sorry to interrupt you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Edmonton-Riverview is able to speak on her own behalf and needs no prompting from any quarter, particularly the quarter it's coming from. Several of the members who are moved to make comments have not yet spoken and will await their turn. Please, you wait your turn. Right now the turn is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview's without interruption.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you. Bill 11 offers a narrow option today on how the contracting of surgical services would occur. Its application and interpretation in the future, particularly given the statutory authority of the minister to decide what to approve and the explicit denial of any legal appeal of his decision, will have much broader implications.

It is our system, and it is in its interest that I would like to work with this government to truly strengthen, sustain, protect, and preserve our public health care system in ways that Bill 11 cannot. It is our system, Mr. Speaker.

Observation four. We need a plan. More than ever before we need a plan to guide our priorities, planning, and budgeting of health care in Alberta. Every day inside the system professionals discuss, debate, and implement comprehensive plans for the patients in their care. Meanwhile, we who are entrusted to care for and be the stewards of the system as a whole focus on an ill-conceived bill that in the end doesn't strengthen the system but only distracts us from addressing what the system really needs. To use an analogy, the government's suggestion that Bill 11 is a solution to the system would be like a doctor suggesting that the splinting of a fracture on a patient who is hemorrhaging from a femoral aneurism will save that patient's life.

Prioritization and planning for the current and future needs of the health care system is what we need to be debating this evening, not Bill 11. We need a plan. To this end let me outline the fundamentals of what such a plan would have to address, fundamentals which Bill 11 does not.

Number one, information. Concise, consistent collection and public release of information relative to Albertans' needs and the utilization of health care: including the number of citizens waiting for consults, diagnostic tests, procedures, and surgery; the geographical distribution of poverty, disabilities, mental health illnesses, and environmental hazards, and the accompanying utilization rates of health care services as a whole; the number of operational beds, both real and potential.

We have had since 1995, when the government cut Alberta health care and dramatically reduced the collection of information, a substantive decrease in the amount of information that can be utilized for decision-making in our system. This must change. Bill 11 does not enable us to have at our access any better information for decision-making. In fact, it restricts us, Mr. Speaker, from the information necessary by making these private clinics not accessible to the public under FOIP.

Number two, Bill 11 does nothing to increase the democratic accountability of governance in the system. What is required is the election of not only governance bodies but the monitoring, investigative evaluation of standard committees governing our public health care system, and the accompanying elimination of a long-standing practice of this government to appoint partisan MLAs to chair committees. Bill 11 does nothing to take us in that direction, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 11 further does nothing to address the need for a comprehensive long-term plan for the health workforce, including five- to 10-year commitments at least for educational seats in the faculties of nursing, medicine, pharmacy, psychology, and psychiatry. Bill 11 does nothing to assist us in developing labour union strategies that would assist the system's negotiation and mediation mechanisms for the successful and timely negotiation of collective agreements and the resolution of labour/management issues. Bill 11 does not provide us with comprehensive commitments or strategies for the prevention of workplace injuries.

Bill 11 does nothing to establish equitable mechanisms that would formalize and facilitate the utilization and accessibility of alternative health practitioners such as chiropractors, massage therapists, herbologists, and acupuncturists. Bill 11 does not provide concrete strategies and mechanisms that would focus on the reduction of illness and the promotion of health at both macro and micro levels, such strategies that could target issues like the high incidence of illness, disabilities, low birth weights among our aboriginal population; the growing incidence of mental illness in our child, adolescent, and adult populations; the environmental hazards that continue to grow in our province, like intensive livestock operations and herbicide use and the accompanying health impacts; and poverty, the addressment of its roots and impacts on health care and other public programs Bill 11 does nothing to address.

Bill 11 does not provide a concrete plan for the construction, demolition, and sale of our public health care facilities.

Bill 11 does not provide concrete strategies that offer tangible evidence on how to strengthen the provision of public health care, home care, palliative care, and the accompanying impact on the utilization of our acute care system. Bill 11 does not provide strategies for the full disclosure and cost containment of pharmaceutical and diagnostic costs, an area that has consistently risen and which the government chooses to do nothing to address.

Bill 11 does not provide for the full disclosure of the government's position and submissions relative to health care at the social union, internal trade, NAFTA, and MAI negotiations. On this point let us be clear. It is not the federal government or the Alberta government's interpretation of NAFTA that is in question. It is the interpretation under NAFTA by the U.S. trade representative's office that must be sought. If the government really wants to reassure Albertans that American companies will not be able to utilize Bill 11 to set up shop, they should get a letter from the U.S. trade representative's office that explicitly relinquishes their right to apply or utilize Bill 11 to expand the American market share in the Canadian and Alberta health care system. That is what is needed.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, there is madness in the method. Things are not as they seem. It is our system. We need a plan. If the government is prepared to scrap Bill 11 and commit itself to establishing a comprehensive plan for the public health care system, which I dearly love, they will have my commitment to work to help them achieve this goal.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity this evening to provide my thoughts at this initial time on this bill.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, since the election of 1997 health care has been the predominant area of calls, letters, and concerns received in my constituency office. I have remarked often to people that health care policy will be the most important policy item for governments for the next 20 to 30 years. I want to say from the outset that there's a lot of reaction and concern that has been expressed to me with respect to Bill 11, and I hope to give some information on those specifics in my comments.

From my perspective, the most positive aspect to come out of the debate on Bill 11 is that it has caused Canadians to think and to talk about where health care is going in our country. Health care issues are not unique to Red Deer or to Alberta but to all of Canada. Health is a very personal issue, because ultimately our health is the most important thing to us as individuals. As governments we dedicate enormous amounts of resources to health care and prevention of illness.

I want to make several points this evening. The first point is obvious, yet we often forget it. The point is that delivery of health care has changed since the inception of medicare some 30 years ago. In 1978 my wife was pregnant, and the doctor suspected twins. At that time we lived in Brandon, Manitoba, and the doctor suggested we should go for an ultrasound two and a half hours away in Winnipeg because it was the only ultrasound in the province. We opted not to go, and yes, we did have twins. Today ultrasound tests are performed routinely in every centre, and in fact parents often want to have pictures of the ultrasound for their albums.

A recent Maclean's article noted that 38 years ago the system did not have to pay for CAT scans, cardiac surgery on people in their 70s, or expensive and complicated chemotherapy treatments for cancer patients. These technologies and abilities just did not exist. Today all these technologies are available. Not only are CAT scans available in every hospital, but we now have magnetic resonance imaging, or MRIs, available as diagnostic tools. Where 10 years ago we made do without MRIs, today we have lineups waiting to use them. Not long ago cataract surgery required several days' stay in the hospital. Today it's over in 20 minutes and you go home.

Not only has delivery changed, our attitudes have changed as well. That same Maclean's article refers to the McDonaldization of medical care. People today demand convenience, 24-hour service, and prompt cures. The second point is that health care delivery is going to continue to change. Not only has it changed over the past 30 years, but also it will continue, and the rate of change will accelerate. For instance, gene therapy is only in its infancy, but with a human genome mapping almost complete, this will lead to therapies that most of us cannot begin to predict.

The main reason I am making these two points is that the way health care will be delivered in the future is going to change. For any government or organization or association to suggest the status quo should be maintained is simply not being realistic. We need to continue to discuss the issues because of the changing dynamics.

As we discuss Bill 11, I think it would be useful to review some legislation and terms. It starts with the Canada Health Act. The Canada Health Act is all about cash contribution to the provinces from the federal government. It sets out the criteria the provinces must meet in order to qualify for a cash contribution from the federal government. These criteria include the five principles often talked about with respect to medicare; namely, public administration, comprehensiveness, universality, portability, and accessibility.

The Canada Health Act also sets out some of the services that are considered medically necessary that the provinces must provide. There is a lot of confusion around the terms "medically necessary" and "insured services." Basically, the provinces must provide medically necessary services and pay for them on behalf of their citizens. The provinces may insure services that are not medically necessary, and in fact Alberta does just that.

Under the Canada Health Act the federal government may withhold money from a province if it deems that the province is not complying with the act. At one time the federal government contributed 50 cents out of every dollar to the provinces for the delivery of health care. In Alberta they now contribute 13 cents out of every dollar. The Alberta government is responsible for delivering health services within Alberta. For this budget year we have allocated $5.6 billion to Health and Wellness. That represents 30 percent of our entire budget. That is more than $15 million per day. Of the $5.6 billion, the regional health authorities and cancer boards get $3 billion. Payments to physicians for their services are an additional $1 billion.

It is important to have an accurate picture of how the money flows. The provincial government through Alberta Health sends the money to the regional health authority to provide the services in their region. They make the determination within parameters provided by Alberta Health as to how that money is spent. Physicians are paid from Alberta Health, not the regional health authority. The David Thompson health region, in Red Deer, which I am from, will receive a total of $166 million this year, an increase of $12 million from the 1999 budget year. This past year they also received approval to replace the Richard Parsons auxiliary hospital, plus capital funding to add an additional 15 continuing care beds in our region.

This background is important because it is often not part of the debate, but it is fundamental to some of the points that are being made, and the context is important in understanding Bill 11. There are many other activities and plans and developments going on that are probably far more important than Bill 11 itself, yet this gets lost in the discussion.

With respect to Bill 11 I am going to refer to the petition which I presented in the Legislature on March 1. It contained more than 5,000 names, mainly from the central Alberta area. I want to read the wording for you. It says:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta reaffirm our support for the five basic principles upon which Medicare was built: accessibility, universality, portability, comprehensiveness and public administration. We urge the Government of Alberta to uphold the letter and spirit of these principles.

We also oppose two-tier health care and urge the government of Alberta to maintain an adequate system of public hospitals and to not permit the development of private hospitals in the province of Alberta.

The petition has three main points. First, the signers reaffirm their support for the five principles of the Canada Health Act. The Alberta government has on many occasions confirmed its support for the principles of the Canada Health Act, and it does so again in the preamble to Bill 11.

The second element in the petition is the opposition to two-tier health care. In section 3 of Bill 11 it reads:

No person shall give or accept any money or other valuable consideration for the purpose of giving any person priority for the receipt of an insured surgical service.

Simply put, the province will pay for all insured and medically necessary surgical services regardless of where that service is delivered. You will not have to pay extra for that service. Where the debate gets confusing is going back to the definition of medically required services and insured services under the Canada Health Act. If you want to receive non medically necessary services such as hair removal or chelation treatment, you will have to pay for those yourself, but again, if it is medically necessary, you will not have to pay other than through your taxes of course.

The third element of the petition encourages the government to not permit the development of private hospitals. Section 1 of the bill reads, "No person shall operate a private hospital in Alberta." From my reading it seems clear that all elements of the petition are complied with. There may be some disagreement on what some of the definitions mean, but it is my opinion that the principles are clear.

So then the question becomes: what is the purpose of the legislation? First and foremost, it provides the government with legislation that will permit us to regulate private surgical facilities. Currently we have no legal way to regulate and control private surgical facilities or private hospitals. We had three options: one, do nothing and let happen what happens; two, totally ban surgical clinics from ever doing anything in Alberta, including those already in operation such as those doing cataract surgery; or three, regulate and control private clinics so that they only operate when it is a benefit to Albertans and to the publicly funded system. We chose the latter option.

By regulating and introducing clear rules for operations, we have given the regional health authorities another option for the delivery of health care services in their region. Do I expect to see this happen in Red Deer in the near future? I don't think so, but as I indicated earlier in my comments, delivery models will change, and we must be prepared to act with these changes. The growth in our population will demand ever more resources, ever more innovation. Bill 11 makes sure they happen within the confines of the Canada Health Act.

I must address one other aspect that is frequently discussed, and that is the consequences under NAFTA. I have read Mr. Hepburn's paper regarding his concern about NAFTA. He points out that the North American free trade agreement contains a reservation for health care as follows:

Canada reserves the right to adopt or maintain any measure with respect to . . . the following services to the extent . . . they are social services established or maintained for a public purpose.

That includes health. The concern arises from whether the operation of a private facility is in fact for a public purpose or if it is for a commercial activity.

This is where my comments about the flow of money are important. Money flows from the Alberta government to the RHAs for the express purpose of providing a public service. Whether this service is contracted to a profit provider or a nonprofit provider, it is still for the public purpose and therefore meets the criteria of the reservation. The services are insured at the same rate, so necessary insurance services are provided at any facility at no cost to the patient. While lawyers seem to be able to challenge anything, we have had contracted services for probably the entire time free trade has been in existence, and we have not yet faced a challenge.

While some will disagree with the direction of Bill 11, I hope I have given some things to think about. I don't stand here with all the answers, nor do I suggest that everything our government has done has always been the best, nor do I think a government should merely ignore changing times and try to retain the status quo, because that is not an option. It may be okay for our generation, but it will not be okay for our kids and grandkids. We must continue to look for innovative ideas that will improve the delivery of health care services within the context of the Canada Health Act.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I was just hoping I could convince a few people to carry their joyous conversations to the lounges out back. Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to have a chance to join the debate at second reading on Bill 11. As is the custom and the procedure of the House, I'll try to confine my remarks to the principles that underline this bill.

I think that no bill we've had before us in this Legislature has generated more interest on the part of constituents of Edmonton-Mill Woods than has Bill 11. I suspect, from the number of e-mails I get that are copied to government members, that the same may be true of them. In Edmonton-Mill Woods we have a group of citizens who are acutely attuned to changes in the health care system. They first sounded the alarm when the Grey Nuns hospital was turned into a community health centre and stripped of its emergency ward and intensive care units. Fortunately, the protests of those citizens and the good sense of the Capital health authority saw the reinstatement of the Grey Nuns as a full-service hospital, although, we have to all admit, at great, great expense. The staff had been disbanded, the equipment had been dispersed, and it was at tremendous expense that that hospital was restored to a full-service facility.

At a number of different points since I was elected in 1993, we have sent short surveys to the constituents in Edmonton-Mill Woods. The first survey asked for their opinions on the recall of members of the Legislature, whether that should be in legislation. Since then we've had surveys about education, the provision of education services, the kinds of cuts that were made to the budget, their opinions on those cuts, the changes to the education system, and with each of those surveys we pretty well know the number of people who will take the time to phone, e-mail, fax, or send us their response.

We recently put out a similar survey on the provisions of Bill 11 and the move to more privatization being made available to patients. Never have we had such an overwhelming response, and on no question have we ever had such agreement from those constituents. Over 97 percent of them indicated that they did not want public dollars spent on private facilities. I don't think anything could be clearer.

I don't pretend, Mr. Speaker, that the surveys would meet the standards of a research faculty. They are distributed to households, and people send them back as they will. I have some confidence, though, that what people in Edmonton-Mill Woods believe is more reflective of the general population when you compare their results with the results of polls by commercial firms such as Angus Reid. I do have some confidence in that survey, that feeling on the part of the people in Edmonton-Mill Woods that they value very much the public health care system and that any tinkering with that system had best be done with their approval, because they're watching.

As you try to examine the goals of the underlying principles in Bill 11, what strikes you immediately is the conflict in the principles in the bill. There's a conflict between the goals that seem to uphold the letter and the spirit of the Canada Health Act by having those provisions of the Canada Health Act in the preamble, yet the provisions in the bill, the principles, seem to support the furtherance of a for-profit health care system.

They list in the preamble the five principles of the Canada Health Act. As I think all of us know, if you ask a number of Albertans to give you the five principles of the Canada Health Act, many of them would be at a loss to do so. I think unless you've been in this Legislature or been concerned with the health care system, many of us would have been in this same position. They may not know the details, but they certainly know the spirit and the intent. That they know very, very well, and that they prize.

So here in this act we seem to have a set of principles that support that spirit of the Canada Health Act and a one-payer, publicly tax supported system. At the same time, while endorsing the act, it further the patient-pay principle by making possible patients paying directly for enhanced services in so-called surgical clinics.

We've been over the problem of the definitions of private hospitals and surgical clinics so often in this Legislature. I took a call before 5 o'clock this afternoon from a constituent who, having watched the debate last night, asked the same question: what's the difference between a private hospital and a surgical clinic? Having watched that debate, he certainly was no clearer.

We know that right now, for instance, you can pay for enhanced services in a public hospital. You can pay for a television set, you can pay for a telephone line to be put in for your stay, but I think there's a huge difference between paying for those kinds of enhancements and paying for a list of medical enhancements in a private, for-profit surgical clinic. It's that tension between the principles underlying those goals that I think plagues Bill 11.

There's a conflict between adhering, again, to the spirit of the Canada Health Act and adhering to the legalistic interpretation of the text of the Canada Health Act. On one hand, Bill 11 lists the provisions, as I've said, of the Health Act, and one might assume that the thrust of Bill 11 would be in support of a publicly funded, one-payer public system. But at the same time, the bill seems to take advantage of the general nature of the Canada Health Act that lacks these kinds of specific articles of prohibition to stop patients paying for services in a for-profit, private, two-tier health care system. We see that tension in the taunting of government officials, taunting federal officials to interfere in Bill 11. If it violates the Canada Health Act, they challenge them. I think it reflects the government's retreat in Bill 11 to the legalism that they're using to further the provision of private health care services in the province and enabling that sector of health care to grow through the provisions of Bill 11.

Most alarmingly, Mr. Speaker, there have been comments about the bill by public officials that would seem to endorse the merits of moving to a pluralistic health care system or growing a pluralistic health care system to a much greater extent than we have in the province at this time. I think the statements by those public officials is at the root of much of the alarm surrounding the bill, because while they are told and they're assured by government and by elected officials that the bill will not in any way compromise public health care, they see former members of this Legislature now occupying positions in the health care system making statements that would seem to make those assertions suspect at least.

The alarm is with foundation. I had an opportunity to look at some of the materials provided in the United States by the Physicians for a National Health Program. Those physicians in that country are arguing very hard and trying to organize to bring to the United States a health care system similar to the one we have been able to create in our country. Those physicians, commenting on privatization, warned that "the winners in the new medical marketplace are determined by financial clout, not medical quality." So the dismissal of concerns about privatization and that we have no business voicing our concerns and that to do so is to fear monger I think is a disservice to Albertans and doesn't allow the full exploration of the issue.

I think there are more conflicts in the so-called altruistic, harmless goals of the bill that support universal health care than those provisions contained in the preamble. You see that seeming support for the public system again in the preamble, yet we get a list of very, very detailed provisions for more privatized services and how those privatized services, those enhanced services must be provided, the rules those providers must follow in approved surgical facilities. There's a list of almost specific regulations in terms of what they must do, and it can't help raising suspicions of why there is need for all that detail and that concern with the provision of those services by private providers if there isn't the intent that that's the direction the government is going to go in the provision of health care services. So that conflict again is another conflict that beleaguers the principles of the bill.

There's underlying conflict with respect to values. The values of community and compassion for others in the Canada Health Act reflect so much about what we are as Canadians and are in conflict with the survival of the fittest and the values of an unfettered free enterprise market in this bill. You see it again in the words that seem to support the Canada Health Act and public health care. You look at the Canada Health Act, and even though those values aren't made explicit, they are certainly implicit. Canadians a long time ago decided that we're better off creating a safety net, that we're better off looking after each other than leaving each to his or her own devices in terms of health care, yet the inclusion of principles that support private, for-profit health care facilities seems to put forward the values of individualism and the survival of the fittest that unfettered free marketers would support.

You see those values in operation south of the border when you look at some of the descriptions of the private operators and their ability to decide who does and who doesn't get service, their ability to exclude doctors, to decide who will practise, their ability to decide what will be included and to really leave patients, to put patients in the role of victims. It's really quite alarming, yet those conflicting values can be found in the provisions of the bill that we have in front of us.

There are other value conflicts. The values of the equity and fairness in take-your-turn philosophy that we have developed and that are characteristic of our public health care system conflict with the preferential treatment and queue-jumping made possible by expanding patient opportunities to buy services privately, and there's no way around it. In the last number of years, whether or not Bill 11 says it can't happen, queue-jumping is now a fact of life in our province. It hasn't been a concern until the last half-dozen years, but the growth of private clinics has changed all that. Clinics like MRI clinics now make queue-jumping possible. Patients buy a diagnosis at a clinic and then return to the public system and are able to get in line ahead of others who are still waiting for MRIs at the public clinics and have their surgery performed.

It happens with cataract surgery. We had an experience with a member of the family who was told by a physician that they would have to wait six weeks in a wait line for cataract surgery, but if they wanted to go to the physician's private clinic and pay a fee, the work would be done immediately. Given the age of the family member, there was no choice at all. So we have queue-jumping already, and the provisions of this bill have the possibilities of expanding that kind of behaviour. The insurance in Bill 11 that queue-jumping won't be allowed with the advent of private surgical clinics rings hollow when citizens are well aware of what happens right now without the bill.

I think there are broader conflicts in the bill, Mr. Speaker, that are disturbing. We've seen the same conflict in much of the legislation put forward by the government. The conflict, at least to an outsider, seems to be the result of ideological tensions that arise when a group in government, as Jeffrey Goldfarb describes them, believes in the fundamental proposition that government is part of the problem, not the solution, that government saps free entrepreneurship and individual initiative. This tension, I think, within government results in bills like Bill 11, a bill which seemingly tries to accommodate both those in government who believe in the more altruistic principles underlying the Canada Health Act and those in government who would reject those values in favour of more self-centred goals. The latter group seems fervently attached to a new right-wing Conservative ideology and, one must conclude, would support more privatization given the nature of Bill 11, this ideology that according to Goldfarb has them behaving outside of reason. I quote: when one thinks ideologically and acts ideologically, opponents become enemies to be vanquished; political compromise becomes a kind of immorality.

We've seen that with Bill 11. Opponents are labeled as left-wing nuts, members of special interest groups and, worse, malicious spreaders of misinformation. Such statements, Mr. Speaker, make me pessimistic that the changes that are needed to make Bill 11 a bill that all Albertans will feel comfortable with are almost impossible. If compromise is considered immoral, then what are the prospects for change?

Thanks very much.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, before I call on Calgary-Montrose, I just want to remind all hon. members that we're not in committee, and therefore the conversations and the interruptions we're hearing should probably be dealt with outside the Chamber.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to join second reading debate of Bill 11 today. This debate is very important for many of my constituents. Most Albertans for the past few months have received many conflicting interpretations of Bill 11. On one side are the Liberals and the NDs, the Friends of Medicare, the union of public employees. They portray Bill 11 as public enemy number one. They claim that this bill will destroy the public health care system we have here in Alberta. They also claim that this bill will open the door for a two-tiered, Americanized health care system.

To counter that negative campaign, the government of Alberta sent out the actual text of the bill with a very modest request. We asked all Albertans to read the bill for themselves and tell us what they thought of the bill. Some of my constituents actually took the time and went through the bill, and they called me and expressed surprise, genuine surprise. They told me that they went through the bill many times, and they couldn't find any section of the bill that could hurt our public health care system. They could not find any section that would allow queue-jumping. They couldn't find any section that forced Albertans to pay for basic medical services.

Mr. Speaker, they are absolutely right. Bill 11 begins by committing Alberta to the principles of the Canada Health Act. It says right in the preamble that the Government of Alberta is committed to the preservation of the principles of universality, comprehensiveness, accessibility, portability and public administration, as described in the Canada Health Act.

That's the foundation of the health system in Alberta.

In part 1, section 1 it clearly spells out that "no person shall operate a private hospital in Alberta." With that section we outlaw private hospitals not only today but forever in Alberta.

This Bill also forbids queue-jumping. It makes it illegal for anybody to make or take payments in order to jump ahead in line for surgery. No individual can be charged a facility fee for insured surgery, and this surgery must be paid for by the health system. Therefore, all Albertans need is their health care card, and all the services that they receive will be paid for by our system, our publicly funded system.

MS LEIBOVICI: Point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark on a point of order.

Point of Order

Questioning a Member

MS LEIBOVICI: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. As the Member for Calgary-Montrose indicated that he would like to debate with me in second reading . . . [interjection]

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Citation.

MS LEIBOVICI: Citation 482.

That was the letter he tabled in the Legislative Assembly just a couple of days ago. Would he be willing to entertain some questions, and we could get into a debate in the next 20 minutes?

MR. PHAM: I'd be more than happy to after I finish my speech, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Go ahead then, please.

MR. PHAM: Mr. Speaker, I already see some excitement on the other side. I think people will begin to jump up and down, because when they hear the truth, sometimes it can hurt.

Mr. Speaker, this bill also gives the authority to the College of Physicians and Surgeons to define which surgical services are major and which are minor. All the major ones must be done in a public hospital. Only the minor ones can be done in accredited surgical facilities, and the bill clearly spells out that all the surgical facilities will have to be accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. Not only that, the facility can only provide the kind of service that they're approved to perform.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, when it is passed, will not force anybody to do anything. It is an enabling piece of legislation. All it does is allow the regional health authorities to have one more option, that they can choose to contract with some private facilities to provide some of the minor surgical services if they see there is a benefit from it. The bill clearly spells out the conditions under which the regional health authorities can enter into a contract with these surgical facilities.

First of all, those contracts have to comply with the Canada Health Act. Second, the health authority will have to demonstrate a need for the service and that a contract is a better alternative than providing the service in a public hospital. Also, the health authority has to show that the contract will not harm the publicly funded health system. Furthermore, the health authority will have to show how the contract will provide a net benefit to Albertans as patients and as taxpayers, and the contract must set out the result the surgical procedure will be expected to achieve.

Mr. Speaker, that is not all. The most important requirement this bill will force the regional health authorities and these private surgical facilities to go through is that the terms of all these contracts have to be made public. Because of that, everyone in Alberta, including the media, including the opposition, can go through these contracts and see for themselves if the regional health authorities have met the conditions that were spelled out in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, that is the reason why many of my constituents were surprisingly happy to find out that this bill is far from what the opposition is trying to portray, and they compliment this government for bringing in this bill because it is truly a mechanism to protect the health care system that we have in Alberta.

They also asked me the question: how come there are so many people willingly spreading misinformation about this bill? And now I would like to focus on some of that misinformation that is out there, because it affects not only the debate on this bill but how our constituents are thinking regarding this issue.

First, I want to focus on the federal government and its involvement with Bill 11 and health care in general. Not long ago funding for the health care system was a cost-shared project between the provincial government and the federal government. This started out as 50-50. The federal government of Canada has chosen to diminish itself from that responsibility, and that ratio has continuously gone down, especially in 1994-95, when the federal Liberal government in Ottawa made a significant reduction to provincial transfer payments. Today the ratio of contribution that the federal government makes to our Alberta health care budget is 13 percent.

That is not only affecting Alberta. It affects every province in Canada. That's why we have the health care crisis in Canada today. For the first time that I can remember in the history of Canada, all 10 ministers of health and all the ministers of health in the territories, too, agreed unanimously that the federal Health minister should restore funding immediately, not two years from now but immediately. The crisis that is being faced today is because of the money the federal government is taking away from sick and old Albertans, and anybody who suggests that that is okay for them to do should be ashamed of themselves. [interjections]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, we were doing quite well for some time there. Maybe we can revert to the normal process during Chamber, please.

MR. PHAM: I can see that some opposition members are trying to defend their cousins in Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, but the numbers are there. Nobody can dispute the fact that the federal government has significantly reduced transfer payments to the province to pay for health care and education in Alberta, and when faced with the challenge of how to cope with the severe cutbacks in funding, the province has to come up with innovative ways to deal with the limited resources we have.

Instead of giving us a hand, the federal Minister of Health decided to immerse himself in a drive-by smear campaign. When we asked him to give a simple answer to whether or not our Bill 11 violates the principles of the Canada Health Act and, if it does, to tell us which sections violate the act, surprisingly, Mr. Speaker, he was deathly silent. All he could come up with was rhetoric. Until today nobody in the federal system could point to any section in this bill that violates the Canada Health Act. Either they should put up or shut up. I think it is very, very clear that our health care protection bill is clearly within the intent of the Canada Health Act.

You know why the Liberal federal government is trying to attack our government on this health initiative? I want to read this reason into the record so that our constituents at home understand it too. Of course, it is a lot easier to shift public attention from the real cause. The real cause of the public health care crisis is a shortage of funding caused by the federal government. They want to pick Alberta as the public enemy. They want to ride high in public opinion polls as the defender of the public system. Mr. Speaker, guess what? Talk is cheap. They should put their money where their mouth is.

Now, I want to focus on the opposition party, on the Liberal Party, the party that has committed to a negative campaign through misinformation and fear mongering to Albertans on this issue. They have slipped so far from telling the truth that now they've become a group of—I hate to use the words—political opportunists. They've become a one-trick pony, as the Premier indicated today.

Take the leader of the opposition party as an example. At the beginning of this session she came into the Legislature with a document with many blank pages which she obtained through the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. She knows and all members of the opposition party know that that is a piece of legislation that we passed in this House with the support of everybody. The information they requested through that act is sent to the department, and the information had to be given according to the terms of that legislation. So there should not be any surprises for them when they receive blank pages, because this information is protected under the legislation. What they're asking us to do is break the law, to give them information they're not authorized to see.

MR. LUND: They've got no respect for the law.

MR. PHAM: They have no respect at all for the law. Thank you, Mr. Minister.

It makes things even worse that without actually seeing the bill, the Leader of the Opposition indicated she was opposed to that bill, no matter what was in there. She is on record as saying that. I think that is very irresponsible, Mr. Speaker. When we are opposed to something, at least we have to have the courtesy to read it in order to decide whether we disagree with it or not. Right?

We could have put in there that we want to eliminate, you know, half the ridings in Edmonton. If the opposition member is saying that she is going to oppose or support that idea, she has to read the bill in order to find out exactly what she's supporting or what she is voting against. [interjections] Again, Mr. Speaker, I begin to hear, you know, some noise from the other side.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: You know, it's interesting that when the debate focuses on the bill, things tend to go reasonably well, but when they start focusing on individuals, then you get what you get. So let's cool it.

MR. PHAM: Mr. Speaker, the last thing I want to do is bring up individuals in this debate, but if you remember, for the past two months this Liberal Party has engaged themselves in a very, very nasty campaign. They call into question the credibility of our Premier. They want to link this issue with the credibility of our Premier, and I just want to point out to my constituents at home the kind of credibility of the people that are bringing those negative campaigns to the Legislature.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, the tactic didn't stop at that. She went on and attacked Mr. Jim Dinning, the chair of the regional health authority, a very, very good friend of hers, and when I use the term good friend, that is the parliamentary language that I'm trying to use here. Anyway, Mr. Dinning could have defended himself, but he was not in the House, and therefore that kind of attack was very cowardly.

Mr. Speaker, last night the Leader of the Opposition stood in this Legislature in front of a TV audience. She claimed that the health care funding cutback in 1994-95 was 30 percent. Thirty percent. That was a lie, because the record speaks for itself.

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We're likely to be on Bill 11 for a long, long time. There are differences of opinion as to what is truth, but we assume that all hon. members are indeed that, honourable members. So I think perhaps you should reconsider those words and withdraw them and then address the rest of your speech without that.

MR. PHAM: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, maybe I should use another word. According to Beauchesne, I should use that is false, that is inaccurate, that is misinforming, that is malicious, that is misrepresentation, and the list can go on, go on, go on.

MR. PHAM: Anyway, the point is very, very simple. You have the public accounts information every year. [interjections]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, what we're talking about is that you speak through the chair. If you want to get angry at the chair, please do so. But speak to the chair.

MR. PHAM: Maybe the opposition member didn't hear it properly so I will repeat it. Instead of using the words "that was a lie," I will now say that it is false, it is inaccurate, and according to Beauchesne, it was misrepresentation, a malicious attack, misinforming, misleading Albertans, and the list goes on, Mr. Speaker.

MS LEBOVICI: A point of order under 23(h), (i), and (j).

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I don't know whether the hon. member is rising on a point of order that may deal with repetition, but the quotation that you're giving is 23(h), (i), and (j).

Point of Order Imputing Motives

MS LEBOVICI: Imputing false motives. [interjection] No, I can't say that unfortunately. The reality is that if he's indicating that the Canadian Institute of Health Economics is false and misleading with regards to their figures as to the drop in hospital expenditures in this province, in actual fact he's saying that Don Mazankowski . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. Once you start elaborating on it, then you're into the debate, hon. member, as opposed to dealing with precisely what we're talking about. The chair interrupted the hon. member a few moments ago about the use of unparliamentary language. That's one thing.

Presumably you're defending the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition on the issue of whether it's 30 percent or 20 percent or whatever. In my admonition to the hon. member the chair reminded him that we have different views of what is truth, and if anybody wants to use statistics to change things, they certainly are able to do so.

I wonder if the hon. member could get on with his speech and not have any further interruptions by those who are eager to speak or by using inflammatory language that's likely to cause other members to get up and raise points of order or to refute your arguments.

MR. PHAM: Mr. Speaker, all I'm trying to do is bring the truth and the true facts to the debate.

MS LEBOVICI: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark on another point of order.

Point of Order
Questioning a Member

MS LEIBOVICI: Briefly. It's 482. Will he entertain a question now?

AN HON. MEMBER: Beauchesne?

MS LEIBOVICI: I'm sure it's Beauchesne 482. Will he entertain a question? Because he . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. We did have an attempt earlier by one hon. member to ask a question of an hon. member. All you have to do is say yes or no. You do not have to give any reasons nor should any reasons be given in terms of your asking the question.

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will give my answer once and for all. I would like to keep my speech uninterrupted from now until the end. I would not want to take any questions until I have finished the speech.

MR. PHAM: All I'm trying to do is bring the truth and the true facts to this debate, Mr. Speaker, because when somebody is claiming that we cut 30 percent out of our health care budget, that is not true, and that fact can be verified very easily. Every year we publish a thing called public accounts; right? How much money we spend every year, from year to year to year, is already recorded. It's public information. All they have to do is take the amount of money we spent in 1993-94 and compare the amount of money we spent in 1994-95, and if they can come up with 30 percent, maybe they should go back and take math 10 or math 9 or whatever. I could not understand that. They spend millions of dollars on research, and last night they stood up in this House trying to mislead Albertans, trying to scare, trying to fear monger my constituents. I find that unacceptable, Mr. Speaker. [interjection]

Now I see the Member for Edmonton-Riverview is joining the debate. Just a few days ago I received this document from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Almost the entire document talks about health care and Bill 11. I was so amazed, so amazed to read this information being presented to her constituents, and I feel sorry for her constituents, Mr. Speaker, because the information stated in here is very bizarre. It says, and I quote: "the recent announcement of $3 billion in health care funding over three years takes us to 2002. Yet the government must call an election by March 2001, at which time earlier funding commitments are no longer binding." [Mr. Pham's speaking time expired]

Mr. Speaker, can I ask for unanimous consent to continue?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member has asked for unanimous consent to let him continue his speech.

[Unanimous consent denied]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I know it's getting late for all. We have a member that wishes to speak, and it's now his turn.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When I left my approved domestic residence this evening and got into my approved personal transportation device to make my way to this approved legislative facility, I was wondering exactly how I might begin my remarks. Then I got here, and I heard nothing but personal attacks from members of the government. I heard the minister of health, from the relative safety of being off mike, call the Leader of the Official Opposition a liar. Then I heard the Member for Calgary-Montrose talk about how the opposition is lying and misleading.

Then I was reminded, of course, of that old adage in law that when the facts are with you, argue the facts, and when the facts are against you, pound the table and yell like hell. That's about all we've heard out of the government tonight, because they have no facts to back up their position. They have no substance to back up Bill 11. All they have to argue, of course, is calling people who are opposing the government left-wing nuts and special interests and liars and malicious. [interjections]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We're trying to hear, hon. members. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, people that are encouraging you are only encouraging others to demonstrate.

Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you. So let's get on to talking about the substance of Bill 11. Let's get on to introducing some fact and truth into this debate. Let's start off, first of all, with the difficulty in understanding the government risking so much on such superficial arguments, with no analysis, no understanding of how the system really works, no understanding of the implications of what it is they're saying, and being willing just to read the bill or, in the case of some members, not even read the bill yet blindly defend it as they would blindly defend the party line. Mr. Speaker, that's just not good enough when it comes to medicare.

Now, in committee I will take some time to do a section-by-section analysis to expose some of the gaps and contradictions in Bill 11. During second reading debate I'll stick to the principle of the bill, but I do want to make comment on one of these gaps or contradictions that the government is exploiting and misrepresenting, and it was most evidenced in the arguments just put forward from Calgary-Montrose when he talked about the fact that all Albertans will be able to see contracts, that it says so in the bill.

Now, I don't have the Blues in front of me, but I listened carefully to that member, and he said that all Albertans will get to see the contracts. Well, that's not what the bill says. The bill uses a very different word. The bill says that agreements will be released. It says "agreement." Let's say for the sake of argument, Mr. Speaker, that the agreement between a regional health authority and one of their private hospitals is that we will keep the contract secret. Then all that Albertans will see is the agreement to keep the contract details secret. So when you talk about misleading and shaving the truth, there is an example, and there is a section of the bill which will not serve the public interest.

Let's take a look at what exactly Bill 11 does. Bill 11 allows doctors to sell enhanced services and products, some of which are now available to Albertans without any extra charge. No other province has a law which provides for so-called up-selling. Not one other province will allow this up-selling to patients who are receiving a medically necessary procedure.

Bill 11 allows for queue-jumping. By excluding diagnostic procedures such as MRI scans from the law, people who have the money can buy a diagnostic image and then get to the front of the surgery line. Bill 11 will reduce capacity in public hospitals. There are a limited number of surgeons in Alberta. We already don't have enough doctors in some specialty areas. Having some doctors work in private clinics splits resources, not adds to them. Not only will this add overhead costs to the system, but it will increase the downtime for doctors, because they're going to have to do more traveling, more marketing, and more accounting. They're going to have to do more paperwork, and they're going to have to spend more time competing for business. Fewer doctors doing work in public hospitals means longer waiting lists, not shorter.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 puts the minister of health above the law. Section 23 makes it impossible to seek a legal remedy if anyone suffers as a result of how this government policy is implemented. This amounts to a provincial notwithstanding clause that limits the legal rights of Albertans, not a surprise from a government that wanted to limit the legal rights of those who were forcibly sterilized.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let's look at some of the definitions. I don't know about you and I don't know about your constituents, but where I come from, if my doctor sends me to a place where I'm going to be put under anesthetic, laid out on a stretcher, have my body cut open, be fed through a tube, be stitched back up, and then be supervised by doctors and nurses around the clock to check on my healing – where I come from that's called a hospital. It's not called anything else. An approved surgical facility is a hospital. The government has been playing games with definitions for quite a while. Remember when our downsized hospitals became health centres?

Governments use words quite on purpose. Words can illuminate or they can obscure. Defining something by what it isn't or by what you don't want people to think it is is misleading and intellectually dishonest. A government shouldn't do that. A government should tell the truth, the whole truth all the time. A government that tells a half-truth is a government that lies. I want my government to tell the truth, Mr. Speaker. Yes, it is my government. I may not be part of it, but I am an Albertan, and I don't want my government to lie to me.

Mr. Speaker, private surgical centres, these approved facilities, these private hospitals that the government would have set up under Bill 11, to be efficient must have profit as their number one goal. Their investors and their bankers wouldn't have it any other way. Private surgical centres will have to pay property taxes, GST, business tax, all kinds of other overhead and infrastructure costs, extra administrative costs, bill collecting, et cetera, and on top of all that they're going to have to provide a profit. Public hospitals don't have any of these expenses. All of the extra costs will be passed along to the taxpayer because they will be included in the contract negotiated with regional health authorities.

Now, we've heard from the Premier on down and every supporter of this bill that all these costs are going to be borne within the public system. What that really means is that all these extra costs, which the health care system does not have to bear today, are going to be paid for with tax dollars, taking money away from the provision of patient care. It is malicious misinformation to claim that Albertans will not have to pay extra for private clinics. They may not have to take a dollar out of their wallets at the clinic, but they will have already contributed their tax dollars to support private enterprise in the form of these private hospitals.

Mr. Speaker, the government will face many extra costs as a result of these contracts. Somebody has to pay the bureaucrats whose job it will be to negotiate and monitor the private contracts. Bill 11 calls for policing and enforcement of violations of contract and other legal conditions. This will require new government spending. There will be increased audit costs for the regional health authorities, and the Auditor General has already raised concerns about sloppy and inadequate bookkeeping for over half a billion dollars worth, that's $500 million, of contracts between the RHAs and private suppliers. If you take a look at the United States, if you take a look at the United Kingdom, if you take a look at Australia, what you see are all kinds of law enforcement and criminal justice costs that have escalated because of prosecutions to do with fraud in private health care. Why would we want to import that experience into Alberta?

All the increased costs incurred by private operators and by the government will be paid for with tax dollars, the sweat-soaked loonies that the former Provincial Treasurer loves to talk about. This means less money being spent on patient care.

While we're talking about less money being spent on patient care, let me just set the record straight. When the Leader of the Official Opposition put on the record the fact that hospital spending decreased by 30 percent by this government, she was quoting a paper that was tabled in this Assembly, that I would have thought the Minister of Health and Wellness would have taken the time to read. It's a paper called Private Highway, One-Way Street: the Deklein and Fall of Canadian Medicare? by Evans, Barer, Lewis, Rachlis and Stoddart. It says, "Alberta cut provincial hospital spending by 30% between 1992 and 1995." So if he wants to call the Leader of the Official Opposition a liar, then he's calling these well-respected academics liars as well, Mr. Speaker.

Not only that. Earlier today in the Assembly the Leader of the Official Opposition tabled statistics compiled by a national recording organization, based on numbers provided by that minister's department, which pegged the same hospital spending cut at 27 percent. So is he now doubting his own staff in his own department who supplied those numbers, Mr. Speaker? I think not. If he has the courage, I will leave my space and he can stand and apologize. But I don't think he'll do that.

While we're talking about misinformation, let's take a look at what this government is saying that is wrong about the federal government role. The federal government contributes $2.4 billion to this province through tax points in the Canada health and social transfer. This province as well as other provinces went to the table and said: give us block funding; remove some of the strings. This Premier praised block funding. What block funding means is that the money comes in a lump sum. They can spend it as they choose. If they choose not to spend it on health care, then they can't say that the federal government isn't carrying its weight. It's a provincial government choice, and they've got to be accountable for it. It's not the federal government that cut hospital spending by 30 percent. It's this provincial government that did it.

It's not the federal government that said: please, take away some tax room. It's this government in 1997 that with other provincial governments went to the federal table and said: please, give us more tax collection room; modify that 50 percent contribution. So how can members of this government now stand up and complain that the federal government did exactly as they asked them to do? It is dishonest to make that kind of argument. The federal government right now contributes far in excess of the 13 cents on the dollar that they claim it does. They know that it's misleading, and they should stop telling those kinds of stories.

Now, the biggest problem with the money argument is that if this is all about money, Mr. Speaker, then why does the government's own Bill 11 information web site say it's not about money? Why does the government's own Bill 11 web site say that private clinics will not cost the system less money and that that's not the purpose of these private contracts? Why would it say that? Why would this government make the argument that it's all about money and it's the federal government's fault and they should give us more money, when they're saying that it's not about money? They can't have it both ways.

Now, let's take a look at this notion about competition and the role of doctors and doctors' offices. Competition works well within a defined market with the characteristics of supply and demand, informed consumers, and minimal regulation. That's the best market model. Let's see if that applies to health care, Mr. Speaker. Health care is characterized by nearly insatiable demand, huge variations in supply, consumer choices most often driven by need and made based upon circumstance, not necessarily careful comparison shopping and not research. Many, many layers of regulation and accountability quite properly exist within health care. Hardly that perfect model of competition.

Now, doctors operate businesses, but they are all paid the same for similar work, receive income from a single government payer, and they do not have to worry about collecting their bad debts. Hardly the model of private enterprise, Mr. Speaker. Scarcity of doctors does not necessarily drive up costs or produce more profit. Doctors earn a living from the practice of medicine, but nondoctors are prohibited from doing so. Private investors cannot control or own medical clinics because the profit motive would conflict with clinical judgment and decision-making. As one observer, Christopher Levant, has said, medicine is about mercy, not money.

Mr. Speaker, now let's take a quick look at some of these arguments, these curious arguments, about other jurisdictions. The Shouldice clinic has come up. The Shouldice clinic in Toronto has been operating since the 1940s. It pioneered one type of surgical procedure to correct hernias. It operates on a private, not-for-profit basis, and it charges the Ontario government a legislated 6 percent surcharge on top of professional fees.

It still only provides one type of surgery, and it cherry-picks its patients. If you are obese, diabetic, have high blood pressure, or present in any way a complicated medical profile, you will not be treated at the Shouldice clinic. The procedure used at the Shouldice clinic is no longer unique, and there is no appreciable waiting list for hernias in the province of Alberta. This is not about the Shouldice clinic, Mr. Speaker.

Now, the Cambie clinic in Vancouver is another example that has been trotted out. The Cambie clinic in Vancouver provides a variety of surgical services, including some which require overnight stays, but none of them medically necessary, according to the clinic. However, it operates entirely outside of the public system. It does not receive one single penny of public money from medicare. Not one. It's outside. The legislation in British Columbia prohibits private insurance coverage for benefits for eligible residents. It also prohibits practitioners or facilities from charging fees beyond those in the fee schedule for insured services. The ministry officials in B.C. consistently indicate that there are no private hospitals in British Columbia, even though this government and this Premier would have us believe that their legislation would allow them.

Now, let's take a look at Saskatchewan. In Saskatchewan facilities that provide insured diagnostic or therapeutic medical procedures other than facilities operated by the minister, a health district, or an affiliate are covered under the Saskatchewan Health Facilities Licencing Act. They are prohibited from charging a facility fee, they are required to follow stringent standards, and they are subject to public inspection at all times. Most importantly, no funding is provided by either Saskatchewan health or the health districts for facility fees. Not a single penny. No facilities have been licensed yet under this act, and the act regulates only the provision of insured services. If the Minister of Health doubts that, maybe he should hire some better researchers in his department or at least some better briefers in his own ministerial department, because these are the facts, Mr. Speaker.

Now, Manitoba. The Manitoba government passed changes to the Health Services Insurance Act to prohibit private clinics and surgical facilities from charging extra fees to their patients. To prohibit, not to allow, Mr. Speaker. In Manitoba the new surgical facilities regulation was created under the Health Services Insurance Act. The regulation declares insured medical and related services provided by any facility that provides endoscopic, ophthalmological, or orthopaedic procedures outside of a hospital. They are only for outpatient services. That means day surgery. That means no overnight stays. A huge difference between what this government is trying to impose on Albertans, a huge difference.

Mr. Speaker, there are some other areas of misinformation that I think need to be cleared up here tonight. Let me talk in my closing couple of minutes here about what this government has done and not done to provide some balance to the debate in health care.

Recently the Member for St. Albert was at a public meeting in St. Albert, and at that public meeting in defending Bill 11 that member used the example of the craniofacial reconstruction program at the Misericordia hospital, called COMPRU, as an example of a private clinic operating within the public system. I cannot tell you just how absurd that assertion is. COMPRU is an outstanding example of public innovation within the public system paid for by public dollars. That's what COMPRU is. It has nothing to do with private care. When the chairman of the board of the Caritas group pulled the member aside and corrected her misapprehension about COMPRU, did she take the opportunity to correct the public record? No, she did not. That's the kind of misinformation that members of the government's so-called truth squads are spreading about health care in the province of Alberta and the role of Bill 11.

Now, I was recently down in Calgary, and I was visiting the constituency of Calgary-Glenmore. I believe the MLA from Glenmore is another one of the captains of the truth squads. As I was driving through the constituency, I came across a portable sign. The sign said: public information meeting on Bill 11; phone to register. Do you know what? I phoned, and I was told, "You know, these meetings are really just for residents of the constituency." I said, "Well, I was under the impression that this member was appointed by the Premier to be on his health information panels, or what he called truth squads, so as a member of just the concerned public shouldn't I be able to go?" "Well, you know, why don't you go back and contact the minister's office?"

Then I happened to get a copy of an e-mail that was sent to a constituent of mine from the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, who is the junior Minister of Health and Wellness. Now, my constituent wanted that member to provide some answers to specific questions about Bill 11 and his role in the government creation of this policy. Do you know what he was told in that e-mail message that he got back? My constituent was informed that even though this truth squad captain, junior minister of health, member of the Executive Council of government, whose job it is to defend public policy, even though that's his role, he was told: sorry; my office is way too busy to answer those questions; please redirect your inquiries back to the senior minister of health or to the Premier's office.

So here we have these members of the truth squad, Mr. Speaker, who don't even want to answer questions.

Speaker's Ruling Reflections on Members

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The chair would express disappointment that some speakers in the last little while have gone to personality attacks and not entirely to the bill itself in their speech, and I think that's unfortunate. If we could get off the personalities of the individuals involved and get into the issues, that would be more helpful.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Mr. Speaker, in light of the hour I would move adjournment of the debate for this evening.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[At 10:03 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 6, 2000 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 00/04/06
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, welcome.

Let us pray. Our divine Father, as we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our thanks and ask that we may continue our work under Your guidance. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Statement by the Speaker

Decorum

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before I call on the first member for a petition, I'm going to appeal to all hon. members again today to try and dig down and exercise the greatest form of decorum that we possibly can in this House.

In reviewing the Hansards of the last several days, I noticed that on Tuesday night, when we sat for some 3 hours and 20 minutes, there was not one interjection required by the chair. In reviewing the Hansard last night, when the House sat beyond 10 o'clock, there were 19 required interjections by the chair.

We know what the rules are. We know what decorum is. We know what the word inflammatory means. We know what the utilization of intent and motive is. Today I'm appealing to all members to exercise the greatest degree of decorum with respect to this. I am, however, prepared to interject as and if required. The last thing in the world that I would want to see is today's question period being referred to as Mr. Speaker's interjection period, so I'm appealing to you for your co-operation.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

head: Presenting Petitions

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to table in the Legislature a petition signed by, again, a number of young Albertans who are in favour of Bill 11.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. LANGEVIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to table a petition from people from the communities of Plamondon and Lac La Biche. They're urging the government "to pass a Bill banning . . . for-profit hospitals in Alberta."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and present a petition signed by residents of Alberta supporting Bill 11.

Thank you, sir.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition supporting public health care in Alberta urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care." This is on behalf of 252 residents.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two hundred and fifty-four people from Edmonton and the surrounding area have put forward a petition urging the government of Alberta "to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care" in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by 408 Albertans from Edmonton, Sherwood Park, Gibbons, St. Albert, Redwater, Leduc, Spruce Grove, and Fort Saskatchewan. They are urging "the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition signed by another 302 Albertans from Beaumont, Bonnyville, Jasper, Edmonton, Provost, and Willingdon. They are requesting the Legislative Assembly of Alberta "to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained." This brings the total number of people signing this petition to close to 11,000.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would ask now that the petition I tabled on the floor of the Legislature be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented regarding the undermining of public health care in this province be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish that the petition I presented to the Assembly on Wednesday, April 5 from 325 Edmonton and area residents requesting that the promotion of private health care and the undermining of public health care be stopped be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to stop promoting private healthcare and undermining public healthcare.

MR. GIBBONS: Mr. Speaker, I'd like the petition with respect to public health care that I presented yesterday to be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to rise and ask that the petition I tabled yesterday in support of public health care be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I request that the petition which I tabled in this Assembly yesterday urging the government to stop undermining our public health care system now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I ask that the petitions that I tabled in the Legislature on Tuesday, April 4 and Wednesday, April 5 be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to provide respective Regional Health Authorities with the flexibility necessary to provide the delivery of publicly funded, publicly administered overnight surgical services cost-effectively and efficiently through the contracting-out of such services if deemed necessary.

We the undersigned residents of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to provide respective Regional Health Authorities with the flexibility necessary to provide the delivery of publicly funded, publicly administered overnight surgical services cost-effectively and efficiently through the contracting-out of such services if deemed necessary.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on a Standing Order 40 application.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you said, pursuant to Standing Order 40 I wish to inform you and my colleagues in the Assembly that today, Thursday, April 6, 2000, I will move to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to deal with the following matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to respect the right of journalists to freely join trade unions and to condemn any infringement of this basic human right.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to table eight copies of the responses of the Ministry of Children's Services to the questions from the designated subcommittee of supply.

Thank you.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would wish to table on behalf of the minister of federal and intergovernmental affairs copies of a letter sent to the Hon. Allan Rock, federal Minister of Health, regarding Bill 11 and its NAFTA implications.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table with the Assembly five copies of a current interprovincial listing of private surgical facilities across Canada.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the answers to the questions from the designated supply subcommittee meeting of March 13, 2000.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

MRS. LAING: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to table with the Assembly five copies of the Declaration of Arbroath, which is in recognition of Tartan Day.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table seven copies of the response to Written Question 10 that was passed yesterday in the House.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a report by Steven Shrybman, an international trade lawyer, entitled Alberta NAFTA Opinion Says a Lot of Nothing.

The second is a letter from Dr. Walley Temple from the University of Calgary, Faculty of Medicine, departments of oncology and surgery, asking that Bill 11 be eliminated.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings today. The first one is the requisite copies of a report in the Edmonton Journal today, April 6, 2000, with the headline Klein Critical of Journalists' Labour Disputes.

The second tabling is a press release and a NAFTA related legal opinion which says: Alberta NAFTA Opinion Says a Lot of . . .

THE SPEAKER: Fine. You've given the title. It's tabled.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. They are from Jeffrey Anthony of Canmore, Dave Sutherland of Lac des Arcs, and also from Jill Briscoe. They are all to the Premier in opposition to the Genesis development in Kananaskis.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would table five copies of Must Be Tough, one of three postcards protesting tuition charges distributed by students from the University of Calgary for forwarding to the Minister of Learning.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of a resolution passed by the Alberta Public Health Association in favour of women's organizations and women's health policy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to table for the benefit of the House a letter on behalf of a constituent, Therese Beaudoin. She has a great deal of concern about Bill 11.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon for the Assembly. The first is an analysis of the government's pension plan prepared by Mr. Ken Smith, which points out a discrepancy between the 2 percent promised return and the 1.4 percent actual return on that pension plan.

The second tabling is actually a package of correspondence. One is an e-mail from a constituent; the other two documents are an exchange of letters between myself and the Minister of Justice regarding the Young Offenders Centre visitation policy. The package clears up a misunderstanding.

The last tabling is a facsimile copy of a letter received by the department of economic development and tourism on May 19, 1994. The correspondence is from Mr. Nader Ghermezian, and it relates to private-sector refinancing of West Edmonton Mall.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling one document. It's a Treasury document that shows a 17.5 percent decrease in health expenditures from '92-93 to '95-96.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter which I wrote to the provincial Ombudsman in January of this year asking him to investigate the inaccessibility of our public health care system.

The second tabling is five copies. It's about an upcoming rally that is scheduled to demonstrate citizens' opposition to Bill 11. The rally is being held both here in Edmonton and in Calgary.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. Hon. member, please sit down.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to rise and talk about my favourite town – I think actually named after a Scottish deer by the name of Red Deer – and to recognize three individuals from that town who were from Joffre. They are actually seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and if you'll notice, the female side looks suspiciously like one of our members, that member being the Member for Calgary-Lougheed. The father, Mr. Don Graham, has had the confidence to be in your gallery and wear a kilt, which I think is an amazing feat. It gives me great pleasure to ask Don Graham, Colleen Graham, and Audrey Graham Thievin to please rise and receive the formal and warm welcome of this Assembly on this important Tartan Day, recognizing that Mr. Graham is adorned in the clan Graham tartan.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a man who sits in the members' gallery. He's a proud father. He is the father of the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod. I'd like to ask Mr. Jim Coutts to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of months ago I had the pleasure to visit with the next group that I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly. It's rather a distinction, I think, that for nine straight years Vauxhall elementary has taken part of their social studies course to come up to visit with us from some distance away. Today there are 34 students, three teachers, and seven parents. I'd like to introduce to each and every one of you here parent helpers Mrs. Glenna Pepneck, Mrs. Paula Olfert, Mrs. Paula Dumonceau, Mrs. Joanne Farnsworth, Mrs. Sue Skidmore, Mr. Dean Egeland, Mr. Richard Pepneck; the 34 students; teachers Mrs. Lori-Jo Plotzki, Mr. Terry Olfert, who's been here nearly every one of the trips, if I'm not mistaken, and last but not least – and he's not from Barrhead – the newest teacher on staff, Mr. Chris Ward, who hails from Scotland, joined the British army, was shot accidentally on manoeuvres in Suffield, was recovering in the Medicine Hat regional hospital when he met his Florence Nightingale who became his wife, Jane. He had a change of careers. Chris studied at the U of L and just recently took on a job at Vauxhall elementary. I would like all my guests to stand up and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 53 bright, energetic H.E. Bourgoin school students from Bonnyville. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Kelly Trepanier, Miss Rhonda Castle, Mrs. Linda Orr, Miss Dara Green, and parent helpers Mr. Lydon Harley, Mr. Phil Kushnir, Mr. Roger Turcotte, Mrs. Carrie Scott, Mrs. Susan Smith, Mrs. Myra Layton, Mr. Daryl Luchynski, Mrs. Shelly Hutchison, Mrs. Patricia Michaud, Mrs. Kim Sydora, Miss Susan McLean, and Mrs. Heather Jankauskas. They are seated in the members' and the public galleries. I ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and to Members of the Legislative Assembly five wonderful people who have come all the way from High Prairie. Four of these go to school at St. Andrew's school and are in grade 10, and they are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Chris Bouyea. The students are Ernest Patenaude, Harlen Patenaude, Jerry Caudron, and Quentin Bellrose. They are seated in the members' gallery. I ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce two individuals in the public gallery. Susan Thompson works in my constituency office and has been there from day one 11 years ago. She's accompanied by a young fellow from Thunder Bay, Ontario, the home of Bobby Curtola, Paul Schaefer, and Myrna Lorrie. If Rob Corbett and Susan Thompson would stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the executive members from the students' union at the University of Calgary, the past year's executive: Rob South, Heather Clitheroe, Nassr Awada, Jared Lorenz, Amanda Affonso. They are accompanied by next year's group: President Toby White, Mark Hoekstra, Duncan Wojtaszek, Alix D'Archangelo, Matt Lauzon. They are either in the gallery or will be in for question period, so I would request that they receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main opposition question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Private Health Insurance

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All of my questions today are to the Acting Premier. On March 15, 1994, the Acting Premier told this Assembly:

There isn't a government operation, a government business, a Crown corporation that is as efficient as the private sector, and indeed they're 20 to 40 percent less efficient.

Given that 159 private insurance companies are now registered with this government to underwrite sickness, or health insurance, is this a signal that his government intends to gradually replace Alberta health insurance with private insurance because of his government's philosophy that the private sector is always more efficient?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. acting leader of the government.

DR. WEST: It's going to be quite an act, Mr. Speaker.

I would say that that was a question that was directed towards health, and I would ask the minister of health to perhaps respond to that.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

MS CARLSON: Once again, Mr. Speaker, to the Acting Premier, who should be able to answer these questions: given that just a few years ago almost no health insurance was offered in Alberta, why is there a sudden proliferation of private insurers advertising that their insurance bridges the gaps in the Alberta health care plan? Isn't it because Alberta health care insurance is no longer adequate for people in this province?

DR. WEST: I will keep referring it to the minister of health. This is a tactic that they always use. They go to our leader when they should be addressing the minister responsible for these areas. I'm sure that the minister of health will answer this one.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think it should be noted and emphasized that Alberta provides coverage for health care services to its population directly through the health budget and through the various other provisions that we have; for instance, for chiropractors and for providing physiotherapy. We provide a very wide range of coverage out of the taxpayers' pool of money that is available to us. We're right there at the top as far other provinces are concerned.

As far as the reference to the taking out of private insurance, this is an individual Albertan's decision. I think it is probably an indication that many Albertans plan to travel. They want to have coverage in other locations, Mr. Speaker. They want to have insurance coverage for a wider and wider range of optional treatments. That is, I think, a sign of the strength of the economy and the vitality of the economy and the travel that takes place in our society.

I would like to repeat that as a government the government of Alberta provides the widest range of coverage for services in this country.

MS CARLSON: My final question is once again to the Acting Premier, who is the person who made the quote. Given that insurers only enter a market when there is a demand for their insurance and an opportunity for profit, will the minister confirm that his government's delisting of medical services creates the demand for private health insurance in this province?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, no, it does not.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, when the Trans Global Insurance Company approached this Assembly through private health lobbyist Gerald Chipeur in 1997, the Official Opposition proposed an amendment to Bill Pr. 3 to ensure that this insurance company would not offer private health insurance. Here we are two years later, and the Alberta Treasury now lists Trans Global Insurance as being listed to offer accident and sickness insurance. To the Acting Premier: given that the government's majority rejected our amendment in 1997, will the Acting Treasurer confirm that it was their intent all along to allow Trans Global to offer sickness insurance?

MR. SMITH: Acting leader, Acting Treasurer. Holy smokes.

DR. WEST: I don't know what I'm doing now, Mr. Speaker.

At any rate, this is another health issue, and the minister of health will answer.

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm assuming that this particular company met the criteria for offering accident insurance and life insurance and so forth. That is a process, as I understand it, that a proposal for a private insurance company can go through to meet the legal requirements to provide that extra type of insurance. It has absolutely nothing to do with Alberta Health and Wellness in terms of the priority that we place on a wide range of quality health care services in this province. I think it is demonstrated in our business plan, our budget, and the comparisons with other provinces that we are leaders in terms of providing coverage to Albertans.

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, given that government members promised that this company would not offer sickness insurance, yet two years later the company is offering exactly that, why should Albertans trust any of this government's promises about health care?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I didn't promise Trans Global or whatever it is anything with respect to their coverage or any relationship with the health care system. It's obviously an insurance company. It obviously went through the regulatory approval process.

Mr. Speaker, what we're interested in in Alberta Health and Wellness and in the government is quality health care services and treatments for Albertans in this province, and our commitment is well demonstrated in our budget documents and in our business plan.

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, will the Acting Premier or acting health care minister confirm that this government's plan will lead in just a few short years to ads like this one in New Zealand that reads, "This is a $12,000 hip replacement operation [and] it's yours from $21.34 [per] month." Isn't that the real agenda that's at work in this province?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the trend that we have in terms of our provision of health care services is that of providing higher quality services, more services than before. We can take, for instance, the whole area of transplant surgery or angioplasty, where we're providing thousands more treatments in those areas than we did years ago. That's where our priority is.

With respect to an activity of a particular insurance company, Mr. Speaker, this is really a stretch in terms of trying to link it to some policy of Health and Wellness.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Private Health Services

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proposed changes to the government's health care policy could open the province to foreign health care providers. Steve Shrybman, an international trade lawyer, says, "The province's [most recent] legal opinion is a house of cards perched on a foundation that's shaky at best." My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that several U.S. investors have already invoked expropriation procedures under NAFTA to challenge Canadian measures, what guarantees can the minister give that the government's proposed private health care policies will not open the door to any further challenges?

Speaker's Ruling Legal Opinions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, please. Beauchesne section 408 says that "such questions should . . . not require an answer involving a legal opinion." If there's a legal opinion requested in here, it does not have to be responded to.

MS LEIBOVICI: Well, I guess the minister isn't prepared to give any guarantees.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please sit down. That is incorrect. The chair ruled the question out of order. The chair ruled on it. Look at the response.

You have the floor, hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Please proceed.

MS LEIBOVICI: As this is not a legal opinion that I'm asking of the minister, what I'd like to know is: as even the lawyers commissioned by the government have indicated that the provision of annex 2 may not necessarily apply to the government's new health care policy, what assurance can the minister give that Alberta will not be forced to allow U.S. and Mexican companies the same access as Canadian providers of health care services? That's not a legal opinion.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, that basic question has been posed several times before in this Assembly during recent weeks. There have been thorough answers given in the Assembly by the Hon. Shirley McClellan, the minister of federal and intergovernmental affairs.

Mr. Speaker, the point here is that we have consulted lawyers. We have contacted the federal government. We have determined that the provisions of Bill 11 are within the rules of NAFTA, and we have the ability to control and protect our health care system.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, in your role as minister can you give Albertans a hundred percent guarantee that foreign health care providers will not be allowed in under NAFTA? Yes or no. Are you willing to do that as minister?

MR. JONSON: We have taken the responsible steps and acted responsibly with respect to this matter. We have consulted the best legal advice. We have – and I think this is very important, Mr. Speaker – contacted the federal government, whose legislation it is, who's in charge of that legislation. They are responsible for its application. We have had no negative ruling there, so I think we've acted very thoroughly and responsibly with respect to this matter.

THE SPEAKER: Before recognizing the leader of the third party, hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, it's totally inappropriate to refer to an hon. member by her real name in this Assembly. It's titles only.

MR. JONSON: My apologies.

THE SPEAKER: The leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I delivered to the Premier's office over 4,000 cards from Albertans opposed to private, for-profit hospitals. These continue to come to my office at the rate of at least a hundred a day. Many of these Albertans are supporters of the government who are ready to abandon the government because of its policy of expanding for-profit health care. Today we learned that the Premier yesterday found it necessary to whip his caucus into line to make sure that the government's scheme to legalize private, for-profit hospitals in Alberta has their support. My questions are to the minister of health. Why is the government refusing to listen to some of his own MLAs whose constituents are overwhelmingly opposed to legalizing private, for-profit hospitals?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the government caucus we meet regularly. The views of MLAs are listened to by caucus and the leader, which is the governing party of this province. We discuss things thoroughly, and we make decisions on behalf of the best interests of Albertans.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is also to the minister of health. Why hasn't the government grasped what individual Albertans, both opposition parties, and some government MLAs seem to understand; that is, that private, for-profit hospitals cost more and deliver less?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, in terms of the government caucus we made that decision some time ago, and it's reflected in Bill 11, and that is that Bill 11 clearly prohibits the establishment of private hospitals.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, my final question to the minister. What aspect of the government's for-profit hospital scheme is causing its own backbenchers to oppose the policy: the fact that it will drive up costs or the fact that it will destroy medicare?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all I reject the contention that is the first part of this question.

As far as the second part of his question, Mr. Speaker, neither.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, we have nine additional members who would like to participate today, so let's go quickly.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Children's Services

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of reports and reviews under way in government. Some of these include the government's response to the Children's Forum, the report of the Task Force on Children at Risk, the child welfare caseload review, and the office of the Children's Advocate. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. How are we going to measure progress in these areas?

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Children's Services provides a co-ordinating function for all the partnering ministries from the Alberta children's initiative, and we do share the common vision that children should be well cared for, safe, successful at learning, and healthy. In terms of our joint accountability we will be responding collectively within the next few weeks on both the children's task force, the Task Force on Children at Risk, as well as on the forum issues, but a report card later, prior to summer, will be released on the state of Alberta's children which will clearly identify the measurements of what we believe are significant for children in Alberta and the status of how they're doing.

Relative to the Children's Advocate review and the caseload review, Mr. Speaker, we intend to follow through with the knowledge we gain on the scope and sequence of the findings and incorporate those into best practices for Alberta so that children are truly well cared for.

MS KRYCZKA: Mr. Speaker, given that the government is not in a position to do it all and has to work in partnership with the private sector and the community, can the same minister tell us what government is doing to ensure that community partners are at the table and participating in a spirit of co-operation?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, we will never forget that the primary partner for the child is the parent, and the primary opportunity for government and other community agencies is to nurture the parent/child relationship wherever possible. Beyond that, through the child and family services authorities partnerships have been enhanced, I believe, with many potential partners. I would use as examples the tutorial with the police in the communities on the FAS/FAE initiative, as well as on family violence and protection, the work that we have been doing with universities and with the university through Dr. Margaret Clarke, particularly through pediatricians in work that will again hopefully improve the results and prevent FAS/FAE.

We have partnerships beyond with other ministries and corporations. Just yesterday, Mr. Speaker, we arranged for a partnership between the University of Alberta and two of the school jurisdictions that have similar interests in early intervention for the care and protection of children.

MS KRYCZKA: Mr. Speaker, my final question is to the same minister as well. Given that one of the most sensitive and critical issues within the Ministry of Children's Services is the number of children who die while in care of government, can the minister tell us how the ministry is going to report this as a measure of its ability to protect children?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, every death of a child is tragic, and it is particularly tragic when a child in the care of the province through some guardian is obviously dead with explanations sometimes difficult to contemplate. In those cases, a special case review process is in order. This year in the annual report we intend to release the figures on the death of children in care and publish them, probably, for the first time.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I want to make something very clear. The Public Manager periodical in an article in the winter of '98-'99 stated:

For government agencies administering to clients . . . who do not have a . . . freedom of choice . . . [performance] measures may distort an understanding of how these agencies are truly performing.

I would contend that the publishing of figures of death of children or particular trauma related to children does not constitute the most appropriate performance measure. Therefore, I would claim and offer that the Ministry of Children's Services will do over this next year a renewed effort to in fact ensure that the performance measures successfully and independently acknowledge those children that should be even freer of abuse and neglect, et cetera.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Redwater.

Private Health Services

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A review on government private health care policy from a member of the Health Ethics Centre at the University of Alberta has stated that the government's policy offers no improvement in services for residents of rural or northern communities. Private, for-profit surgical centres would open only in urban areas with sufficient population to ensure steady patronage and profits.

My questions today are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the minister confirm that the government's private health care policy will result in varying health care between regions to the detriment of rural Alberta?

MR. JONSON: No, Mr. Speaker. I would like to add – and perhaps the hon. member is not aware – that highly specialized procedures with high volumes are now provided mainly in our two major cities and our regional hospitals across the province, although he does allude to the northern part of the province. Certainly there is a regional health authority serving that area in Grande Prairie, also other good hospitals, one with quite a range of services in Peace River. So the government is supporting quality health care in the northern part of this province.

With respect to specialized, high-volume services, Mr. Speaker, I think it is logical that those would in most cases be located in centres of population where you have the efficiencies and the demand.

Certainly across this province, Mr. Speaker, through our air ambulance system, through our overall ambulance system we have a very good transfer capacity, whether it's an emergency or a necessary medical transfer, in terms of reaching northern Alberta and providing good service to it.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you. Given that the Premier said back on December 12, 1993, that health care could vary between regions, why should Albertans believe this minister when he says that his private health care policies will ensure that rural Albertans receive the same level of treatment as in urban areas?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, an overall principle or policy of our approach to health care in this province is that we make the highest quality of health care possible available to every single Albertan. As I said, through our overall transportation system in health as far as emergencies are concerned, in terms of the strategic location of regional hospitals, we provide that service to all Albertans.

There are certain basic practicalities with respect to distance in this province. It's a large and great province with much activity going on from the southern border to the northern border. We place no less priority on the people of High Level getting quality health care service than we do on the people of Edmonton. There are just very practical considerations with respect to travel and the time involved and the concentration of populations that mean that you have to do certain procedures, have certain programs in certain places, Mr. Speaker.

MR. GIBBONS: Is the minister asking Albertans to believe that private facilities that can make more money setting up in Edmonton and Calgary will choose instead to open up in rural Alberta?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, I don't think that anybody could understand that question. I certainly didn't.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Health Ministers' Meeting

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Health ministers from across Canada met in Markham, Ontario, last week to discuss their provincial health concerns. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: in your discussions with other health ministers, what was their reaction to Alberta's Health Care Protection Act, Bill 11?

Speaker's Ruling
Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Whoa. Whoa. We've got an anticipation rule, and this afternoon on the agenda we have a debate on Bill 11. Now, we're not talking about health policy. The hon. member is asking for a direct response with respect to a bill on the agenda of the House this afternoon. So I don't think that's going to fly in this question period.

Do you have a supplementary?

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize for that.

I will ask the health minister: did the health ministers make any progress in their agenda at their meeting with the federal minister, and did the federal minister have any suggestions to ensure the sustainability of the publicly funded health system?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that progress was certainly made on the part of provincial ministers in that we were unanimous in recommending a request that the federal government restore the money that had been cut from the federal contribution through the CHST, the Canadian health and social transfer. That message was very strongly conveyed to the federal minister; that is that at a very minimum we want that funding restored given the financial health of the federal government, the large surplus that they are running.

Mr. Speaker, we also indicated that in addition to the restoration there should be an escalator clause so that it is adjusted for costs into the future. This was done in the context, when you look back, of medicare originally being supported by the federal government on a 50-50 basis with the provinces. I think that without going through all of the very good arguments that we had, we should realize that now the contribution by the federal government is about 15 percent of health care expenditures across the provinces.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, my final question to the same minister: given that media reports have suggested that some provinces are threatening to deinsure some services currently covered by their provincial health care plans, will Alberta be deinsuring any services?

MR. JONSON: No, Mr. Speaker, there are no plans for deinsuring services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Advanced Education Tuition Fees

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is creating an incredibly complicated patchwork quilt of loans, bursaries, and scholarships and remission to deal with the simple problem of high tuition, and further it's time for this government to acknowledge there's a problem with tuition levels in this province and do something about it. Those aren't my words. Those are the words of students at the University of Calgary who gave the minister such a raucous reception when he attended a senate meeting just a couple of months ago. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Does this minister agree with the students I've quoted and two-thirds of those Calgarians who in a recent survey confirmed that they believe tuition fees are too high in this province?

DR. OBERG: No, Mr. Speaker.

MR. DICKSON: Given that students dispute the government claim that no student graduates with more than a $20,000 debt, what specific steps has this minister taken to investigate the student assertions of excessive debt loads?

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. And thank you to the hon. member for asking me that question. As the hon. member is fully aware, in Budget 2000 there were significant steps taken to ensure that the net debt of students was decreased. We increased the student finance awards through bursaries, through loans, through remissions by 22 percent. Over three years that will be increased by a total of 50 percent. Included in that was a $3 million new scholarship that will go to students purely as a scholarship.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing that we have done in conjunction with CAUS, which is the university students' association, is to undertake a study to look at accessibility and see exactly if there is the so-called price shock that is stopping university students from coming into university. We certainly want to have every child, to have every student, to have every person in Alberta have the opportunity of going to university. We feel that that is absolutely essential.

MR. DICKSON: Given the government claims of being open and accessible, why has this minister refused to meet with students at the University of Calgary to specifically address their problems and their issues around tuition?

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, there were a significant number of students at the university senate about two months ago. I have met with the president of the students' union probably about three or four times in the last three months. As a matter of fact, the president of the students' union, Rob South, was actually in my office on budget day as the budget was coming down. He received a prior briefing just before the budget, which obviously was embargoed.

Mr. Speaker, I'll just go through a previous meeting I had with CAUS, which, as I say, is the association that represents all university students. This was on August 13, 1999. What they did was put forward their concerns about student finance.

If I could go through them, the first was credit checks. CAUS was concerned that the federal loan regulations may have an impact on Alberta students. Mr. Speaker, we looked into that. Needs assessment: the maximum allowable amount that students are permitted to earn a year without penalty was increased in this budget. The $1,600 maximum earnings and the $800 scholarship exemption: that was increased; the $800 scholarship exemption was doubled to $1,600.

MRS. SOETAERT: Nothing to do with tuition, Lyle.

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, obviously there is someone over there yelling or yipping or whatever.

The bottom line is that the issue is not tuition; the issue is net debt.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie and then I gather it's the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. BURGNER: Mr. Speaker, building on the previous question, not only are the students from the University of Calgary here today expressing their concerns, but I also represent Mount Royal College in my constituency, so the students' concerns are very important to me. My questions are also to the Minister of Learning. The students are questioning the need to freeze tuitions. Will the minister please respond to that request?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member realizes and knows the whole idea of tuition is a board of governor's decision, and the board of governors at the University of Calgary has decided on a tuition increase. That is certainly within their mandate.

Mr. Speaker, we have mandated that tuitions cannot be more than 30 percent of the expense of the universities. We have also mandated that university tuitions cannot go up more than $243.50 on average per year.

Mr. Speaker, I'll give you a little bit of an anecdote if I may. At the University of Alberta there was recently a discussion about having differential tuition fees. What this would mean is that some university departments would go up higher in tuition fees and some would actually see a decrease. One of those faculties that would see a decrease was the Faculty of Arts. The students of the Faculty of Arts complained, put forward a huge protest saying that they did not want their tuition fees decreased because it would decrease the value of their degree. I found that extremely interesting.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Could the minister please respond to students who say that Alberta students pay higher than the national average for their tuition and university costs?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the answer is reasonably obvious. I think we have excellent universities here. We are probably about the sixth or seventh of the top universities when it comes to tuition. Our average tuition is around $3,500 or $3,600, which is very comparable across Canada. The only ones where there are decreases in tuition is British Columbia, where tuition has been frozen for several years.

Interestingly, though, in British Columbia the net debt of students has been rising at a rate that has been a larger proportion than Alberta. In Alberta the net debt of students has actually decreased by $1,000 over the past year. We see the net debt going down even further in Alberta despite the fact that tuition fees have gone up.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'll reiterate my answer. The whole issue about tuition fees is not tuition; it is net debt.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: given that the government is responding to the issue of tuitions by their remission policy, will the minister please comment on the high cost of transferability for students as they move through the system.

DR. OBERG: Yes, certainly, Mr. Speaker. Transferability is probably one of the main issues that I have to deal with on the postsecondary side. We have colleges that are not accredited by universities. We have universities that have differing degrees of transferability between the universities. Quite frankly, we have issues from high school to college, high school to university, university to college, and indeed college to college. The unfortunate part about all this is that it costs the students. When a student has to take two or three statistics courses just to keep his options open, it is a cost to the student.

When I first became minister, the first thing I did was set up a task force with the presidents of universities, and I told them that I wanted the transferability issue stopped, an end put to this transferability issue by September of 2001. They are moving on this, and we're certainly looking at it. This certainly is a priority for this department.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans, especially citizens with chronic illnesses and seniors, have watched and tried to cope with this government slowly, methodically, systematically delisting medical procedures and health supplies from its Alberta health care and Blue Cross insurance programs. From eye exams to dental work, from vitamins to laxatives, each year the government delists and chips away little by little the public health system in de-insuring services. Each time the province delists these services and products, it increases the demand and creates an even larger market for private health care insurance. My questions are to the minister of health. Before this government goes any further in its privatization policy, will it come clean with Albertans and inform them exactly what procedures and supplies are slated to be deinsured and delisted over the next five years, sir?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, we have absolutely no plans to delist coverage for necessary medical services.

I think that buried in the preamble, Mr. Speaker, might be an issue that can be responded to. Let us take the whole area of coverage for drugs or for pharmaceuticals. Part of the process that is gone through there, of course, is that through our expert drug committee, which reviews new products that are approved to come onto the market, they look at the list of proposed new products, and where they find that there's a new product on the market which is more effective, some type of a pharmaceutical product, a pill that is more effective, then they will recommend to us and we will approve the coverage of that new pharmaceutical product and delist the old one, which is not as effective. That's all that goes on there.

MR. WHITE: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: will the minister confirm or deny that any further delistings are to occur in the next year at least?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we're acting very responsibly, for instance, in the whole area of Aids to Daily Living and the whole area of pharmaceutical products. We want to be focusing our financial resources on paying for the most effective, the most reasonable piece of equipment or pharmaceutical product. So certainly we are going to be approving new products, giving new authorizations to new advanced drugs. When that particular product replaces or is better in most cases than one that was previously used, yes, we would probably be delisting some of those pharmaceutical products as far as coverage is concerned. They're still on the market if people want to purchase them, but our priority and our funding goes to the newer and better product.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In that the Acting Treasurer has the superintendent of insurance reporting directly to his office, why would he not respond to the questions about health insurance from the members for Edmonton-Riverview and Edmonton-Ellerslie?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. members would like to write me a letter with all their concerns, I'll be happy to pass it on to the superintendent of insurance.

MRS. SLOAN: Read the transcript.

DR. WEST: They asked me if I want to read Hansard. Certainly, but I think it's much better if they would personally write it down and put their signature to it so they can be accountable for what they've said.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Calgary Herald Strike

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I met with constituents who are on the staff of the Calgary Herald newspaper. A lot has been said about this government intervening in the dispute at the Calgary Herald to end the strike. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Are there any steps that the government can take to establish the first agreement in this dispute?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that this dispute is really a private matter between the unions and the management of the Calgary Herald. Of course, as the minister responsible I have to be very, very careful that I remain neutral. It's my job to ensure that our legislation protects both the unions and the employers. Part of those rights include the right of a worker to engage themselves in a legal strike, and that in fact is what they're doing.

To answer the question specifically, there are no provisions to force the parties to give up their rights to negotiate, and certainly as minister it won't be me that would be using such a heavy-handed method.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplementary question is also to the same minister. Is Alberta the only jurisdiction that does not have first agreement legislation?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is not alone in this situation. It's my understanding that neither Nova Scotia nor Prince Edward Island would have legislative provisions to impose a first agreement. Most jurisdictions, however – and this would include Alberta – insist that parties bargain in good faith. So any questions that either party might have about the other in terms of their position during the collective bargaining process of course can be handled by the Labour Relations Board.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplementary question is also to the same minister. Are there any provisions in our labour relations legislation that could end this strike?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, yes, the labour relations code does provide that a government could declare an emergency and impose a binding arbitration type of provision, but normally we would only use that heavy-handed method if damage to health or property was likely to be caused, if health services were to be impacted, or if an unreasonable hardship was being caused to others who weren't a party to the dispute. I would use as an example in that case students in the case that there was a teacher's strike. I think clearly, Mr. Speaker, and to all members of the Assembly, we can see that none of these factors exist in the current strike involving the Calgary Herald.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Access to Medical Services

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Partnership for Health, a coalition of 68 health charities and community agencies which provide services to Albertans living with chronic, progressive, and/or disabling conditions and illnesses, recently released a position statement. This position statement referred to current government health policy and how it fails to address and protect the needs of their many clients. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How will this government address the delays in timely access to diagnosis and treatment of diseases as diverse as cancer, mental illness, and arthritis, delays that further impair these individuals and occur in urban and rural areas particularly where the retention of family practitioners is a problem?

MR. JONSON: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the rural areas of the province we have taken a major initiative starting actually over two years ago to make sure that there is an adequate supply of general practitioners in rural areas of this province. We developed the rural physician action plan. In co-operation with the physicians that were part of that committee through the AMA, we worked on an overall recruitment program to bring some rural physicians to this province and to get others to go into rural areas. We were successful in that regard, as I recall, placing some 70-plus people in needed areas of the province.

We also negotiated through the AMA and government the rural on-call program, which helped a great deal to make the workload more attractive in terms of providing on-call in rural areas. So we've certainly worked in that particular area, Mr. Speaker.

In a broader sense across the province we are providing more services than before. I can quote to you a series of measures that are reported via our business plan and our annual report in terms of the expansion in services, both in terms of quality and quantity, which apply to both rural and urban areas of the province, Mr. Speaker. So we're certainly working hard as a government in performing in that area.

MR. SAPERS: Given that the current government plans and programs fail to meet identified need, when will health funding adequately provide for the home care and therapeutic needs of Albertans with long-term, chronic, and degenerative diseases and conditions?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think we have demonstrated our priority and our focus on the whole area of long-term care and home care. We have had a very, very thorough plan developed, the report Healthy Aging, which was chaired by the Member for Redwater, and we're following through on those recommendations. The recent budget reflects a number of initiatives in that area, additional funding specifically for home care, some 50 millions of dollars, as I recall, on top of the overall increase to regional health authority budgets.

In addition, we have taken certain initiatives in the capital construction area in terms of a program for innovative approaches to seniors' housing. Overall, we are demonstrably supporting the whole aging in place philosophy for our seniors population.

There was more to the question, I know, but I will stop at that point. I think I could certainly go on, though, and provide other information that the member should be aware of.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

2:40

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In its policy statement on the delivery of surgical services the government claimed that there will be no two-tier medicine. However, the report prepared by the Institute of Health Economics for this government states that if there is no regulation to prevent the offering of enhanced services in private facilities, two-tierism will be the result. My question is to the minister responsible for Health and Wellness. Why won't the minister simply admit it is the policy of his government not to prevent the offering of enhanced services in private facilities but to encourage it, despite what the report from the Institute of Health Economics says?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I seek your advice here, because I can certainly categorically answer his question, but it requires quoting a section of Bill 11. We have demonstrated very clearly, first of all through the overall policy announcement that was made some days ago with respect to controls on pricing, et cetera, for enhanced services through our regional health authorities and, secondly, in Bill 11 with the specific clauses that put in place the mechanism, the legislative ability to make sure that people do not have to purchase enhanced services needlessly, to make sure that they are informed ahead of time of their availability. That is very clear in the legislation. It's very much demonstrated in the legislation which is before the House. It was demonstrated previously with the policy that we established for regional health authorities, and that is clearly a priority of government.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, I'm going to recognize you for a supplementary, but please note that I did rule out a question from the hon. Member for Redwater in anticipation of something this afternoon, so govern yourself accordingly.

MR. WICKMAN: Dealing with government policy, Mr. Speaker, how much longer can the minister continue to ignore the overwhelming evidence that his private hospital policy will lead to two-tier, American style medicine in Alberta?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, in response to his second question, the legislation that is before the Assembly and under debate currently is, I think, a clear demonstration of the fact that we are not privatizing the health care system. We do not have private hospitals in mind. We are wanting a single tier of quality health care in this province where people have their insured services paid for no matter what their particular income or status in life might be. I could go through the provisions of Bill 11, but I'm sure the hon. member will have a copy, and I would invite him to perhaps read the bill at some point in time.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Speaker, my final question: why doesn't this government simply do the honourable thing and scrap its ill-conceived notion of allowing for-profit hospitals?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the legislation clearly bans for-profit hospitals. In the provisions of the bill, yes, there is provision under a very much controlled contracting process where very strict criteria have to be met. The contemplation of having specialized, narrowly focused surgical service clinics in this province is part of the bill – the hon. member knows it – and this I think is done on a very sound basis.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now we'll call upon the first of three members to participate in Members' Statements.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Tartan Day

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today, April 6, is Tartan Day across Alberta, Canada, and many parts of the world. Tartan Day is celebrated for two reasons. It recognizes the tartan as a symbol of Scottish culture and Scottish clans, and in keeping with that, my family members and I are wearing the tartans of our clan, the clan Graham.

Tartan Day also commemorates the signing of the Declaration of Arbroath, also known as the Scottish Declaration of Independence, on April 6, 1320, at Arbroath, Scotland. It was there that Scottish nobles, including four Grahams amongst them, gathered at the Abbey of Arbroath and pledged to defend Scotland from persecution and foreign domination. This document is now recognized as one of the earliest expressions of the right of humanity to a peaceful and productive life free from oppression. With the assistance of my colleague the Member for Calgary-Bow, I have circulated to all hon. members a copy of this document, which is written in the form of a letter to the Pope in a very poetic and passionate language. I hope you all take the opportunity to read it, as it speaks to important principles of freedom.

Tartan Day also has personal meaning for my family and I as members of the clan Graham. We remember with great affection my grandfather, my father's father, Alexander Christie Graham, who emigrated from the town of Arbroath, where the declaration was signed, to Lacombe, Alberta, in 1920. We visited Arbroath and the abbey as well, and this is in the midst of lands on the east coast of Scotland which are traditionally occupied by the clan Graham. My grandparents and my parents as well have always encouraged a love of Scottish culture and tradition and pride in our clan. History suggests that our clan is known for leadership, particularly in battle.

I ask all members of the Legislature to join me in recognizing Tartan Day for its meaning for Scots and non-Scots alike.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Tartan Day

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the contributions of Albertans and Canadians of Scottish descent are invaluable and monumental. Today across North America parliaments and citizens will celebrate Tartan Day by recognizing the anniversary of the declaration of the independence of Scotland, or Arbroath, and celebrating our Scottish roots. The declaration was signed on April 6, 1320. The connection between Scotland and Canada dates back to the 16th and 17th centuries, with thousands of members of the great clans emigrating to our country and province. Central to life in the early years was the kirk, with both the Presbyterian and United Church of Canada arising as living memories of the Scottish immigrants today. Early Scots dominated the fur, timber, and banking industries, and the first two Prime Ministers of Canada, John A. Macdonald and Alexander Mackenzie, were born in Scotland.

Today Scottish contributions past and present continue to touch every facet of our society. For being leaders in government, economics, science, technology, architecture, medicine, and literature, accompanied by the enriching pastimes of golf, curling, and Highland dancing, we are deeply indebted to our Scottish ancestry. I am proud today to honour our family's Scottish roots by wearing the Morrison tartan. On behalf of all Members of the Legislative Assembly may I wish all Alberta Scots a happy Tartan Day.

THE SPEAKER: The chair would be happy to accept from any Scot an invitation to play 18 holes anytime.

I'm going to just interrupt a bit. We've had an identification from the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed about what tartan she's wearing. May we ask what tartan the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is wearing?

MRS. SLOAN: I am wearing the tartan of the Morrison clan.

CFB Calgary Development

MRS. BURGNER: I should say that I was born in England, and I'll let it go at that.

Mr. Speaker, it's a privilege to rise in the Assembly this afternoon and bring some information about a community initiative in Calgary-Currie. The citizens' advisory roundtable that has been appointed through the community to look at the development of CFB Calgary has brought forward a couple of proposals which I think the community would be quite pleased to participate in. In the first place, they are looking at an affordable housing policy in the city of Calgary with respect to CFB Calgary lands.

Mr. Speaker, the community group recognizes that we have much to be thankful for in our community, and given the huge amount of land that is now available to us through the federal government for the development of housing, the community has asked that a certain portion of that land on the west side of the Crowchild Trail be set aside and be developed in response to the needs of those who find housing a difficult opportunity in our community. In addition to that, they would like to recognize the work that's being done on the east side of Crowchild, where a portion of property has been dedicated in their proposals for this very unique purpose.

Mr. Speaker, it takes leadership in the community to identify that the citizens of Calgary, particularly in our area, are interested in finding solutions to the housing problems that we face. They draw on the work that's been done by the community of Calgary, the report that was written in conjunction with my colleague from Calgary-Bow, and members of city council. This initiative will be watched and supported by myself as the chairman of the intergovernment liaison committee, and I would encourage all colleagues in the Assembly to support this initiative as it moves forward.

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Opposition House Leader, in this case the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you. Under Standing Order 7(5) I would ask the order of government business to be brought forward to the Assembly for next week.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, April 10, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for second reading we anticipate dealing with bills 7, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 11, and as per the Order Paper. In the evening at 8 o'clock under Government Bills and Orders for second reading bills 11, 3, and 13, and as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, April 11, at 4:30 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for second reading and Committee of the Whole, as the case may pertain, bills 20, 22, 23, and 11, and as per the Order Paper. Tuesday evening at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for second reading or Committee of the Whole, as the case may pertain, bills 11, 18, 19, and 20, and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, April 12, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for second reading or Committee of the Whole, as the case may pertain, bills 10 and 11, and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, April 13, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for second reading or Committee of the Whole, as the case may pertain, bills 21 and 11.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order Anticipation

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the relevant section of Beauchesne and under the Standing Orders wherein it's inappropriate to ask a question relating to a matter which is on the Order Paper for discussion. In particular in this case, while I'm delighted and I know my colleagues are delighted to have the Minister of Health and Wellness answer the questions of the opposition relating to Bill 11 at any given time because there needs to be a lot of clarification for the misinformation they have, it is inappropriate under our rules to raise questions when a matter is clearly on the Order Paper.

There's been a certain subterfuge and attempt to get around those rules, and I know, Mr. Speaker, it puts you in a very, very difficult position to exercise your authority in that respect when people purport to ask questions under government policy when they know full well that that policy has been translated into a bill, that the bill is Bill 11, and it's on the Order Paper. So I would ask you to call to order the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford when he raises a question purporting to ask about the policy of the government on surgical facilities, which he clearly knows has been translated into a bill, and when there's a bill before the House on that very same matter. You can't answer that question, as the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness indicated, without dealing specifically with the provisions of Bill 11, which puts the Minister of Health and Wellness in a difficult position in abrogating the rules of the House by responding.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on this point of order.

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Clearly today he is fishing for ideas to rise on a point of order. He would have more appropriately risen on a point of order for his own member, the Member for Redwater, who did ask a specific question on Bill 11.

The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was very clear in terms of the outline of his policy question for the minister of health, and it is appropriate to ask policy questions at this time on all aspects of health policy because they are still, even in light of Bill 11 being on the Order Paper, running hospitals, still making decisions. So it's very appropriate for us on behalf of the people of this province to ask those kinds of questions.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I really do appreciate the cooperation received from hon. members to the plea that the chair made at the beginning of the Routine today. He's been listening very attentively, so I think he's starting to really see through this and really understand what's going on here.

Essentially what's going on is that one hon. member stands up and says: you said that. Then the hon. member on the other side stands up and says: no, that's not what I said. Or one hon. member says, "This is what you're doing," and the other hon. member stands up and says: no, this is not what I'm doing. That essentially is the basic theme for the most part in question period.

So here we now have this scenario. We have been in this session for a period of time. Health seems to have been one of those interesting questions for the question period, and this week on Tuesday we started in on the phase known as second reading of Bill 11. Then after the admonitions that did come from the chair about anticipation, consultation was made with the House leader of the Official Opposition, who advised the chair that basically there would be great clarity and attention to the drafting of the questions that would come from the opposition members with respect to health. They would relate to the official policy of the government as outlined in a policy paper in the latter part of 1999. They have informed me that they've drafted their questions in such a way so it's on the edge. Now, today the House leader of the government has basically said: but now we've translated the policy into a bill. So we're getting right on the edge here with a lot of this stuff.

I would like all hon. members to take the next several days to look at two skill developments. Good work today, by the way. This was good. Just spend a little more time refining the merit of the questions before Monday. For those who are responding, perhaps just spend a little more time refining brevity in terms of the response. This would really be good. Today we had 13 sets of questions, and yes, acting leader of the government, you got through it okay.

The hon. leader of the third party on a Standing Order 40 application.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party on a Standing Order 40 application.

Journalists' Trade Unions

Dr. Pannu:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to respect the right of journalists to freely join trade unions and to condemn any infringement of this basic human right.

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be speaking to the urgent and pressing necessity of the matter. The necessity for debate in this Legislature on the motion arises from some events and statements that happened yesterday. Some of them are reported in today's Edmonton Journal in a report by Dean Bennett of the Canadian Press and in statements made by the Premier in his press availability yesterday afternoon, an availability at which I was present. So this motion addresses in my judgment a highly urgent matter and needs to be debated today in this Assembly.

Yesterday 30 journalists who had been on a legal strike against the Calgary Herald visited the Legislature. They met with me and with members of the Liberal opposition. However, the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, who is responsible for labour relations in the province, refused to meet with the journalists. The journalists were also told that other members of the government caucus were discouraged from meeting with them. Now, I have four reasons, Mr. Speaker, that will lay out considerations which raise . . .

Speaker's Ruling Standing Order 40 Motions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, I want to caution you that under this particular kind of application, this is a nondebatable application. Now, that means that this is not a debate offered, so when the hon. member chooses to invoke other members of this Assembly, they have no opportunity to participate, and they have no opportunity to provide an alternate view of the matter or correct it if they believe that a mistake has been made.

I'm not suggesting here for a moment that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is doing such a thing, but there has to be a great deal of care to deal with the urgency of the Standing Order 40 application. Please remember that no other member can participate unless the Assembly gives unanimous consent to a debate. So, please, let's go with the urgency of the motion.

DR. PANNU: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm in complete and total agreement with your direction, and I respect the very spirit of Standing Order 40, so I would very much respect the understanding that I share with you with respect to what I should say. I certainly am open to your direction at any moment when you think that I may not be so doing.

Speaking to the urgency, Mr. Speaker, I have to draw attention to some facts. The owner of the Calgary Herald, Conrad Black, recently said that he plans to wait for two years and then to decertify the union. Doesn't this fact make it imperative that the minister listen to the concerns of the employees who are legally on strike against an employer who so clearly refused to bargain? Doesn't the minister's inaction, combined with the refusal to even meet with the journalists visiting here yesterday, show that there is a need for this Assembly to urgently debate this matter now that the minister has shown his inability to enter into this?

The second reason, Mr. Speaker, is that the inaction of the minister was compounded by statements made yesterday by the Premier in his media availability. I have referred to the Edmonton Journal article on this, but I heard the Premier clearly say that journalists should not have the right to strike, and in another statement he strongly suggested that the journalists should not even be able to join the trade unions.

Now, does this signal, Mr. Speaker, an immediate change in government policy with respect to labour relations and the labour laws of this province? That's the question I've raised, and it needs the urgent attention of this Assembly.

The next reason, Mr. Speaker, has to do with: does the Premier's statement show a studied disregard for the hard-fought right of all employees to freely decide whether to join trade unions? If the right of journalists to join unions is questioned today, who is next? Teachers or nurses?

When employees democratically decide to join a union, shouldn't the government respect and uphold this decision? The Premier's statements bring into question, serious question, this government's commitment to uphold any basic human rights of working Albertans. This is a matter that only this Assembly can decide, and that's why, given the serious nature of yesterday's events, I urge all members to allow a debate to proceed on a motion which reaffirms the Assembly's commitment to the collective bargaining rights of employees, including journalists.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Unanimous consent denied]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader of the third party, I would invite you to come and visit me – we'll have a cup of coffee one of these days – and we'll talk about Standing Order 40 applications. Okay?

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 21 Appropriation Act, 2000

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move Bill 21 for second reading, the Appropriation Act, 2000.

There has been considerable debate in the Assembly on the budget process. This act, the third appropriation bill to be here this session, is the final bill that brings forth the money for the operating expense and capital investment, as well as the nonbudgetary disbursements, the lottery fund payments. Again, I encourage all members to support this. It is the money that is needed to provide the excellent programs for this province, and it does support this Legislative Assembly, because there's $26,727,215 for the operation of this Assembly. I would encourage all members to vote for this bill on second reading.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to be speaking to second reading of Bill 21, the appropriation bill, and I'm hoping that we will have the opportunity to have a number of speakers speak to it this afternoon. In the event that that doesn't happen, which I understand is a possibility, I have solicited major concerns from a number of my colleagues that I will be discussing.

First of all, I'd like to just talk about the budgetary process a little bit and firstly thank those ministers who responded in a prompt fashion to our questions this year. It's often been the case in budgetary estimates that we don't get answers to our questions for a very long time. Sometimes nearly a year passes before questions get answered. In this case, particularly from the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, we had some responses within 24 hours of those questions being asked in debate.

Secondly, I would like to talk a little bit about the budgetary process. I find it very helpful in the budgetary process when ministers come to the table with their deputy ministers and other support staff from the department to answer questions. That gives us an opportunity to get more than the political answer and more than just the policy answer, Mr. Speaker, but also some accurate and definite and helpful answers from the people who work very hard within those departments. I would like to thank those people who were available to answer questions this year, and I would support the government, in their review of the budgetary process, taking a look at expanding that role.

It is much more helpful, I think, to be able to sit down at a table and ask detailed questions and get detailed answers than it is with just an opportunity here in the Legislature, where we stand up and ask a series of questions and sometimes get answers to them and sometimes not. So in the budgetary process review, which I understand is an ongoing process in this Assembly, I would hope that all of the House leaders would take that under consideration and review it, and I look forward to seeing some movement made in that regard.

With regard to the way the rest of the budget estimates time is devoted, I am very unhappy with that, Mr. Speaker. We have more than one department debated at the same time in this Assembly, sometimes not just two departments but three departments, and that just isn't very helpful. We want, as representatives of the people of the province, to be able to ask all of the questions we have in all of the areas, and often that's an impossibility if two departments are being run concurrently. Also, by squeezing the budget estimates into so few days, we don't have an adequate amount of time to take the budget as presented, to go back to our constituents, to ask them to review the information, to think about it, to then present us with questions that they have and that they would like to see answered in this Assembly, and then also meet the requirements of being at the particular budget day at the particular appropriate time. It doesn't work. It's way too tight a time line.

I think often the government chooses that kind of an option for exactly that reason. So while they tell us that we have approximately 40 days dedicated to budget review in this Assembly, certainly that isn't the case in terms of real days, and we would like to see that process changed. Sometimes there just isn't an opportunity to ask all the questions.

In addition, we would like a review done of the time committed to the budgetary process, because once again there isn't enough time allocated to the different departments. I know that in Environment estimates I myself had many questions that I was not able to ask in person. They had to be submitted in writing, and while that's the second-best choice and the minister does respond to those questions in a reasonable fashion, it certainly can't replace what is going on in terms of asking questions at a point where you can ask a rebuttal question and he can give a rebuttal answer or his staff can provide some support.

When the House leaders get together to review the budgetary process, I would also ask on behalf of all my colleagues that they review the time committed to budget estimates and look at expanding it, particularly for the departments like Community Development, which seem to be catchall departments for a number of different areas of interest to a variety of people in this province. That department is a particular issue for people who have concerns and want those questions asked.

In addition, with the consolidated departments that the government has come up with in their latest reorganization, it also creates concerns for us in terms of the budgetary process because the consolidated departments merit a day of debate themselves on each sector they're representing. For instance, in the Learning department certainly we would like to within the budgetary process be able one evening to talk about advanced education and another evening other areas of education, because they do have quite separate and distinct issues in many areas, Mr. Speaker. I believe the minister knows this, and we would appreciate his support on that kind of a division in budgetary estimates. We would say that the time given for those purposes is not adequate, and certainly we would like to see that reviewed in the future.

Now I will go to some comments that my colleagues had with regards to issues they feel are still outstanding on appropriations in the event that they don't have an opportunity this afternoon to speak to this bill at second reading.

The first is from my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo. He brings a Calgary concern to the floor of the Legislature today, and that is that there are still problems with the arbitrary and inflexible school utilization formula. That means that new schools cannot be built in Calgary. They've grown by over 116,000 new people, but there are no new schools there. Mr. Speaker, we hear this concern every single time we go to Calgary. It doesn't matter whether we're talking to parents, schoolchildren, people within the advanced education system, business sectors, community development sectors, or environmental sectors; they all say that this is one of the top three or four issues facing the residents of Calgary at this time. That utilization formula just doesn't work. No shame in the government saying that, and no shame in them addressing it so that it would better meet the needs of large, growing communities like Calgary is.

We have to remember that education is one of the major keys we have in terms of being globally competitive. If we're forcing our children into overcrowded schools or busing them for long periods of time, then clearly they are not in an environment that provides the kind of stimulation and enrichment so that they can grow and really maximize their potential. This continues to be an issue. We will continue to raise it, Mr. Speaker, because it's something that could have been addressed in this budget and certainly was not.

From my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark. She has concerns, of course, on health care, and she has this point that she would like raised. Though dollars are increasing in health care, there is no real way of tracking the dollars, especially dollars to provide services and to provide information on contracts. When will the contracts be open so that we know where the taxpayer dollars are going? This has been an ongoing issue in question period, it was an ongoing issue during the budget estimates, and we still don't have the answer. Why is it that private contracts are not being open and available to taxpayers when it's taxpayers paying out those dollars? It's a fundamental question that needs to be asked and answered. We will continue to ask that question as time goes on, unless of course before the vote on this bill we get an answer to it.

Private contractors need to be open and available to the same scrutiny as any other government department if they are receiving taxpayer dollars. That's simple common sense. It's what the people of this province want. They want to know that money is being properly spent. We hear all kinds of concerns coming from the RHAs that dollars aren't being tracked in an appropriate fashion in some instances, and we want to know why that is. It isn't just us asking this question, Mr. Speaker. It is the Auditor General as well. We know that when he asks the question, it isn't rooted in any kind of policy debate or partisan politics. It's a legitimate concern that deserves an answer.

Certainly private contractors who are going to make a buck from the people of this province should come under the same scrutiny as any other public dollars that are spent, and those contracts need to be open, they need to be accessible, and they need to be reviewed by representatives of the people. So we say: bring them to the floor of the Legislature; let us take a look at them and ask why they aren't available. We get the rhetorical answers from the minister, but in fact if they're refusing to make them available, then perhaps they have something to hide there, and we want to have the answer to that question. I think that those are legitimate concerns that need to be addressed.

Perhaps the answer to the question of why they are not being open and reviewable is that they are responsible for why health care expenditures are increasing. While our services have been decreasing over the past few years, we have seen costs go up. The government brags all the time about spending in health care reaching dollars similar to what they were prior to the cuts being initiated in 1993. There isn't a person in this Assembly or in this province that doesn't know that service has drastically decreased. We have serious problems out there, and they have everything to do with the wrong kind of funding. [interjections] Well, I'm hearing lots of noes from the other side of the House, Mr. Speaker, but the fact is that I have more concerns about the delivery of services and health care in this province now, in this year when funding is back up at the pre-1993 levels, than I had during the time period of the cuts, and I had a substantial number of concerns at that time.

So we know that it isn't working, that there are some real problems, that this social experiment that this government conducted in health care isn't working and won't work in the manner in which they are conducting it. We want to know if one of those reasons is because private contractors have contracts that would be unacceptable to the public were they available for public scrutiny. Once again we are asking for that information to be made public so that the people of this province know how their money is being spent. I think that's a legitimate request, Mr. Speaker. They just want to know where their money is going. With any other service that you buy, you get a bill and you get a statement of accounting. If you go back to the company, you can get more of an accounting than what they initially gave you, but not from this government, and that is not a fair way to treat the people of this province.

The next concerns I have are from my colleague from Edmonton-Centre. While she has a whole host of questions that remain about the budgetary process, she particularly wants to focus these final comments that we have in this reading on seniors. In this budget there are once again, Mr. Speaker, no increases for seniors. They have not yet restored the 5 percent cut to this group, and that is appalling. This Premier made a promise that he would restore those dollars, and he has not. We want to know why not. We have seen increases in the budget, but they are for volume demand. They are not increases in the thresholds or the benefits.

Here we have the people who have built this very province, who have given us a rich and diversified economy and history, who have done a lot of work to get us where we are, and this Premier is turning his back on them. He made a promise to restore the 5 percent to all groups, and it simply isn't happening. Why is that? That question was not answered during budgetary debates. They talk about relative dollars, but any fool can see through that. It isn't appropriate in this case. They didn't get the 5 percent back. They want to know why. It's a legitimate question, and we want it answered.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

We also see that there have been no increases in the quality-of-life sector. Once again, that's a legitimate question that needs to be answered and wasn't addressed during the budgetary process. This government makes more and more from lotteries, but no more is going to areas like sports, arts, volunteers, parks, and those kinds of areas that are under Community Development. Why is that, Mr.

Speaker? We know, from all of the studies we have seen, that for every dollar in lotteries that you take out of people's pockets, it costs us $3 more to support the resulting problems. Those are quality-of-life issues. Those are social issues. Those are education issues. We do not see those dollars coming back in a proportionate fashion. It is shameful that that happens.

We expect better answers than the ones we've gotten. We expect answers that adequately fund these areas, and certainly we expect the proper dollars, the dollars promised to seniors, to go back into their pockets. Many seniors in this province live on very low incomes, and they should not be penalized for something that was not of their making. Promises made should be promises that are kept. In this case, it isn't the situation.

My next concerns come from my colleague from Edmonton-Norwood. She would like to know about money to build a new aboriginal school in this city. The new high school will be staggered through a number of schools. How can the government be serious about assisting urban aboriginal problems when they do this? The aboriginal community wants the school, and it is, once again, a legitimate request. Mr. Speaker, we know that a great percentage of the aboriginal population in this city is in the north-central region of the city, and there are certainly adequate provisions that could be made to accommodate a high school within that area. To have these programs chopped into a number of miniprograms in a number of schools throughout the city doesn't meet the needs of the people.

It's surprising that the Premier would condone this kind of activity, given what he says is his support of this community. You know, you just can't talk the talk; you've got to walk the walk. An aboriginal school that focuses on the needs of this community would be some measure of getting to where we need to be. We need to take the concerns of the aboriginal community seriously. We need to address them. We have specific schools for other populations who have particular concerns or needs. Why is it that in this particular population we are prepared to ignore them? Well, I tell you, Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House we are not prepared to ignore them, and this is not an issue that's going to go away. It is an issue that we will continue to pursue even though this Premier and this government refuse to do so in this particular budget year.

The next issue is from my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar. He, too, has concerns about schools. Many of the schools in the older neighbourhoods of Edmonton and Calgary are in need of repair, and the current process needs to be speeded up or reviewed, Mr. Speaker. I would say not just in the older areas of the province but even in some of the newer areas. Certainly I have schools in my own riding, in Edmonton-Mill Woods, that are about 20 or 25 years old, which I don't really deem to be old, that need substantive repairs. They have ice-cream buckets in the hallways collecting the drips because the roofs need to be repaired. It's true. They have mousetraps all over the place because rodents are getting inside the school. Those are real problems. The rugs are worn so thin that they've had to put duct tape over some of the holes because kids were catching their heels in the holes and falling on their faces.

These are problems in newer schools. I can't imagine what it's like in older schools. I'm sure that the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne would also like to address this issue, because I'm sure there are schools in his riding that have problems that need to be addressed. He's shaking his head no. [interjection] He says: no mice. But there are other problems certainly. We have seen that happen throughout this province. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to speak through the chair on this issue.

I'm sure that every member in this Assembly has got schools that have problems that need to be addressed, that are really major problems, not minor problems. Something is wrong with the maintenance process that we have, and we would like to see that addressed in a more wholehearted fashion than what we saw addressed in these budgetary years. Certainly I haven't had any calls from principals jumping up and down with glee because they're getting the dollars they need to put in some very necessary maintenance procedures in their school. I look forward to that day, and I'll be one of the first people to congratulate the government if they make the move to do that. Unfortunately, I can't congratulate them because they're not doing it. Perhaps they could put some pressure on their front bench to address this particular concern. That would be a good idea.

My colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry is worried about tourism. He's very disappointed about the funding for tourism promotion, particularly the chronic underfunding in northern Alberta. It's been a problem for a long time, Mr. Speaker. When you take a look at the dollars spent in the different regions of this province, certainly they are not proportionately spent.

I'm out of time. I have lots of questions to go yet. We hope that someone else will have an opportunity.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn debate on Bill 21.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

[Adjourned debate April 5: Mrs. O'Neill]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 is an initiative which is before us in this Chamber in response to two situations. Currently we do not have the legislative capability to prevent the establishment of private hospitals, the establishment of which would clearly and surely establish a parallel, private health care system. In addition to that, we do not have the governing power to regulate existing surgical clinics. Therefore, this proposed legislation is meant to fill a legislative and a regulatory void.

The second situation that Bill 11's initiative addresses is a universally recognized new way or the demand for finding new ways of maintaining and sustaining our publicly funded health care system and for sustaining all those health care services for us now and for future generations. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a response to enshrine in legislation our commitment to the principles of the Canada Health Act by putting them in the preamble. The principles of the Canada Health Act articulate what is the essence and what I consider the core of the medicare system. The medicare system is something we cherish, that is part of our identity as Canadians, and it is something that we as Canadians and as Albertans and as the government of Alberta want to write into the legislation of this province.

Our commitment to those principles of universality, portability, comprehensiveness, public administration, and accessibility, those principles that are the underpinnings of this social contract that we the citizens of Canada have with our governments, the principles of medicare, the principles of the Canada Health Act translated into what we call and I will call the vernacular – these five principles mean that everyone can have access to health services as they need them, in every province and territory of this country. Those services will be provided for all that is deemed medically necessary, and all will be looked after within the jurisdiction and the administration of our public system.

Mr. Speaker, I'm a person who has experienced life without medicare. It is a situation that I wouldn't wish for anyone to ever experience in their families, in their lives, so I say with great conviction that I believe that Bill 11 is necessary. It is necessary for us to enshrine in our legislation our commitment to those principles, but it is also necessary so that we and the rest of the members of our families, the rest of the people of our province and of our country will never experience the economic devastation that can come to a family who has a great need for medical services that they cannot afford. I say that, too, because I believe that this government, this bill does not mess with medicare, and because it doesn't mess with medicare, we have to realize that it is something that we must commit to and that we must work with.

Bill 11 is legislation similar to that which is already in place in other provinces. It is fully consistent with the principles of the Canada Health Act, and at the end of the day, when this enabling piece of legislation passes, Alberta will still have a universal, publicly funded health system where government covers the cost of all medically necessary health services. I say that and I'd like to repeat it, because unfortunately there are a number of citizens in this province who are spreading falsehood and fear. In fact, they are engaged in a feeding frenzy of fear among some who are most vulnerable in our communities and telling them that they are going to have to pay for services in the future and which Bill 11 says that they specifically will not.

I believe that the most explicit part of Bill 11 is part 1, Protection of Publicly Funded Health Care. I would like to emphasize the first sentence of that section, which in its simplicity and in its essence reads, "No person shall operate a private hospital in Alberta." This is an irrefutable statement that what this legislation is all about is protecting against the possible development of a two-tiered system. We need that protection because right now we do not have the regulatory powers over the 52 private clinics that currently exist in this province. We have no legislative capability to regulate and control private surgical facilities to prevent the establishment of private hospitals. We need the legislative protection Bill 11 offers us, protection for the sustainability of Alberta's publicly funded and publicly administered health care system. Bill 11 prohibits private hospitals and tightens the rules around contracting out surgeries, including both day surgeries and those minor surgeries requiring an overnight stay.

The essence of Bill 11 is that it enables and gives the authority to our regional health authorities to consider, should they deem it necessary, the ability to enter into a contract where they could provide more surgical services for more people in a more timely fashion.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Excuse me, hon. Member for St. Albert. We have several members who are so excited about the debate that they seem to wish to enter into it. Hon. member on this side and hon. minister on that side, when the opportunity comes, please stand. [interjection] Okay. It was one of the other persons, an hon. member on each side. The point is that we should only have one person speaking at a time, and this calling back and forth just escalates until we can no longer hear the person. So let's save it for when it's our turn.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This issue, this topic, and this bill are very much at the top in the minds of my constituents, and it is something that I'm taking very seriously. However, my attempt to deal with this is a concern of mine because I feel that there are a number of people who are not taking this seriously, who quite frankly are not concerned about the concerns they are adding to what people already have.

MRS. O'NEILL: I will continue, Mr. Speaker, by saying that because of this legislation of course no parallel, private, for-profit health system will be allowed to develop in Alberta. I might add that if we do not pass this legislation stipulating just that, what will happen is that the worst nightmares of those who are surrounding this bill with their unfounded fears will come true.

This legislation ensures that surgical facilities will only be able to provide services under a contract with the public system when it is in the best interests of the publicly administered, publicly funded health care system. Most important, though, is the fact that the publicly administered system will have regulatory control over our private surgical facilities.

This piece of legislation will protect public health care in this province – make no mistake about it – but it will do more than that. In trying to reach our end, we have inadvertently found that the means are to our advantage. It will also provide regional health authorities with the flexibility to provide the most services to the most people in the most timely fashion.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation doesn't say that health authorities must contract with private surgical facilities. In fact, it simply offers an option to contract with such facilities if the regions have evidence that there will be a benefit in doing so. This is what we call enabling legislation; this is not what we call directive legislation. Surgical facilities are not necessarily more cost-efficient than private hospitals. An individual analysis would have to be done for each and every contract proposed to a regional health authority by a surgical facility. Only those contracts that showed a net benefit to the public and to the public system could be or would be approved.

Let me clarify what a net benefit means: increased access to services, something that my constituents are constantly asking for; improved cost-effectiveness or efficiency, something that my constituents are certainly aware of. These factors would have to be demonstrated in the contract proposal or it would not be approved. My constituents and, I say, all Albertans have been very clear that any movement towards an American style, two-tier health system is intolerable. Well, I want to stand here today and say that it is also intolerable to me. I will not stand for anything that would interfere with the universality, the accessibility, the comprehensiveness, the portability, and the public administration of our social contract called medicare.

Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act, affirms Alberta's commitment to a quality, publicly funded and administered health care system and to preserving those principles that we find and hold so dear to us and that we hold so dear to our Alberta and Canadian identity. It is something that we believe in and we stand in solidarity on with all fellow Canadians across this country. It is in this spirit that we have introduced Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 prohibits queue-jumping by reason of having extra money offered to reach the head of the line. It prevents charging facility fees for medically necessary services, and it prohibits anyone from requiring patients to purchase goods and services that are not medically necessary. This, I believe, is what I call responsible consumer protection. It also sets out clear rules for the sale to patients of goods and services that are not medically necessary. I have great confidence in the citizens of Alberta, as I have great confidence in my own constituents, that they are able to make the decision as to whether they want and are capable of purchasing additional and enhanced services.

It also establishes in legislation the new Premier's Advisory Council on Health to provide strategic advice on the preservation and the continuing sustainability of quality health services for Albertans and on the purposeful direction of the publicly funded and administered health system, including the broad issues to be explored of how we will configure primary health care delivery, how we will deal with the increased use of technology and the great demand for new pharmaceuticals, and how we will explore alternative compensation models for those who deliver health care in our system.

Provincial health funding will continue to flow directly to health authorities, and it will be the health authorities that decide whether to use that funding to open up more operating rooms and beds in their own hospitals and their own facilities.

Mr. Speaker, some aspects of Bill 11 seem to get misunderstood all too often, or maybe they are conveniently ignored, so let me repeat: no Albertan will have to pay for medically necessary surgeries, whether it's performed in a public hospital or in a surgical facility under contract to a health authority. The publicly funded system pays the whole cost, period. No Albertan will be able to pay to get faster service, and no facility operator or physician will be able to receive payment to give faster surgical services to individuals. No major surgeries will be performed outside a public hospital, because under Bill 11 private hospitals are prohibited.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 will not fix all the problems facing Alberta's health system. It was never intended to do that. Bill 11 is two-pronged: in its enabling attempt and in its protective nature. Bill 11 and the rest of the Alberta government's six-point plan will address the key challenges facing health care and make great strides towards a solution. I might add that the six-point plan involves the key directions of improving access to publicly funded services, improving the management of the health system, enhancing the quality of health services, increasing our emphasis on health promotion and on disease and accident prevention, continuing to foster new ideas to improve our health system, and taking the necessary steps to protect the publicly funded system from any potentially negative external factors.

This is the plan, Mr. Speaker. This is the plan that our Minister of Health and Wellness has put before us. This is the plan and the vision and the encompassing direction that we as government are looking at beyond the parameters of the one small step called Bill 11. The details of this plan are clear evidence of this government's commitment to Canada's single-payer, publicly funded style of health care and our commitment to making that system better to meet the challenges of this new century.

The Health Care Protection Act is only one part of this larger, overall plan envisioned for our health system, our plan to continually improve the quality and accessibility of publicly funded health services in this province. The bottom line remains this. When passed, Bill 11 will prohibit private hospitals and will prohibit any surgical facility from offering insured surgical services without a contract with a health authority. This legislation would prohibit the development of a parallel, private health care system in our province.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to conclude by making the following comments. I believe that this Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act, is a very, very enabling piece of legislation. It operates within the confines of the principles of the Canada Health Act, and its purpose is specifically to provide regional health authorities with the choice and the option to find within their budget the ability to provide more surgical services to more people in a more timely fashion.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A poll done by Pollara in March 2000 showed that health care is the most important issue facing Canada today. The same poll also identified health care as the number one priority for Canadians and that Canadians ranked health care as the number one issue to get worse before it gets better. Health care in Alberta is at a crossroad, and this government has chosen to steer this province in a direction that few Albertans support.

Bill 11 has been touted as the answer to the Alberta health care woes. However, a recent Angus Reid poll shows that over 90 percent of Albertans are concerned about the by-products of this bill. They are suspicious of the road this government is traveling, and that equates to a lack of trust. Albertans do not trust that this government will do the right thing with their health care. You see, Mr. Speaker, trust is not a commodity and cannot be bought or sold any more than health care in this province should be bought or sold.

In his book The New Politics of Confidence, Pierre Pettigrew suggests – and I'm paraphrasing, Mr. Speaker – that when globalization presents health and education as mere commodities, we are coming dangerously close to the errors of Marxism. Those errors include reducing human beings to the single role of economic actors. That is essentially what this government has chosen to do with its so-called Health Care Protection Act.

I think it's important to have a short history lesson on medicare to put Bill 11 in perspective and highlight the importance of publicly funded health care for Albertans, to outline the reasons why citizens of this province do not want the Premier to tear apart the single most valued social program in the country in the same way that Mr. Bouchard is tearing apart Canada or would love to tear apart Canada.

In 1919 the federal Liberal Party proposed universal health insurance as an election platform. Nothing was brought forward on this issue again until the Depression. The prairie region was one of the areas hardest hit during the Depression. A great majority of people could not afford to pay for doctor or health care costs. Many voluntary insurance programs emerged, and by late 1961, Mr. Speaker, most Canadians were covered under these programs. In 1961 Prime Minister Diefenbaker appointed Chief Justice Emmett Hall as chair of the Royal Commission on Health Services. In 1962, under severe opposition, the Douglas government in Saskatchewan required physicians to collect their fees solely from the government.

Justice Emmett Hall is considered the true founder of medicare in Canada. Justice Hall's team compiled a report that recommended medicare for all Canadians. In 1966 Prime Minister Pearson's federal Liberal government passed legislation to ensure that all Canadians had a health plan that was comprehensive, universal, publicly administered, portable, and accessible. Mr. Speaker, although not all provinces were enthusiastic about jumping on board, by 1972 all indeed had. All provinces and the territories had joined. In 1980 Justice Hall was again asked to review the health care system. He determined that although there were problems within the system, it was, and I quote: by world standards one of the very best health services today. There's no reason to believe those words don't apply now.

Let's fast forward to the year 2000 and Bill 11. Bill 11 has been presented to Albertans and in fact all Canadians as health care reform. This it is not. What this bill does represent is an attempt to bring back an archaic, expensive health care system. It does not represent new thinking. It will not achieve the goal of reducing waiting lists, nor will it be cost-effective to taxpayers. This bill will take us back to the pre-Pearson era, the days when Alberta citizens paid for every doctor's appointment, every diagnostic test, and every day in the hospital.

At a forum I recently held, one of my constituents, an immigrant from Italy, Mr. Speaker, recited a time in the days of premedicare when the hospital advised him and his wife that they could only take their son home if they paid the $10 outstanding from his hospital stay. That's not something I want to see come back to this province or this country.

The Premier would like Albertans to buy into this bill. It's cleverly worded to appear as though it's harmless, that it will provide protection for citizens who use the existing day-surgery facilities, that it will reduce the waiting lists and ban private hospitals. The Premier is desperately trying to sell this bill as a fix to the system. This government would have Albertans believe that overnight stays in an approved surgical facility are minor adjustments to our existing private surgical facility policy. Well, if I recall, Mr. Speaker, that same rationale was used by then Justice Minister Havelock when he tried to invoke the notwithstanding clause on sexual sterilization victims. It's not a minor adjustment. It's a major departure.

MR. HAVELOCK: Point of order.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: A point of order. The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order
Referring to a Member by Name

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, you are well aware that the hon. member across the way should not refer to other members by name. I'm sure that it was inadvertent, but perhaps she'd like to simply withdraw that. Thank you.

MS OLSEN: I would simply withdraw the minister's name.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Thank you.
Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you. What I find rather curious, Mr. Speaker, is that no other Premier in this country has endorsed Bill 11, not even those who, according to the Premier, have similar legislation. Could it be that the legislation in other provinces has been misrepresented? I would suggest that his own government report titled Background on Private Provision of Medical and Hospital Services in other Jurisdictions would support my assertion. Let's not forget that the Premiers in other provinces are having similar problems with waiting lists and the like, and quite frankly they don't operate government-funded private hospitals.

The Premier, however, would have Albertans believe that the Prime Minister of Canada has endorsed this bill. He would have Albertans believe that Prime Minister Chretien, whose very Liberal roots were entrenched within the Pearson era, has given the go-ahead. The Premier stated on April 4, 2000:

I met with the Prime Minister of Canada on the subject of Bill 11. He did not raise any objections to the bill, nor did he suggest that we withdraw it. In fact, after I reviewed with him the many examples of contracting out and overnight stays currently occurring across Canada, he acknowledged that what Alberta is proposing is similar to what is already happening in other provinces.

Now, I wasn't at the meeting, and only the Premier and the Prime Minister know exactly what was said, but I would suspect, Mr. Speaker, that it was more like this. I would suggest that the Prime Minister stated that he can't pass judgment on a bill that is not passed, that is not law. That's correct. He cannot do that, nor should he. He probably also said something along the lines: I can't interfere, stop a province from passing a law. Well, again, if he did that, this province would be up in arms, and more fed bashing would occur. I also bet he suggested to the Premier that he take the existing laws to the health ministers' conference, where they can be assessed.

Now, I'm not saying that the Premier twisted the remarks of the Prime Minister, but my colleagues and I spoke with the Prime Minister later that evening, and I'm sure that what I heard from the Prime Minister wasn't quite the same thing.

This government has a habit of blaming the federal government when a problem arises that they don't want to take responsibility for. Fed bashing is a hobby for this government. Another recent example is the Premier's whining over Minister Rock's visit to Calgary, accusing him of a drive-by smear and whimpering over apparently not being informed about the minister's visit here. Well, maybe he didn't inform the Premier, but I know he informed his minister, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, this isn't a chorus. You don't need to agree or disagree with each and every statement that's made. You'll get your turn.

Edmonton-Norwood.

MRS. FORSYTH: Your nose is growing.

MS OLSEN: Thank you. I'm glad we've been able to put a personal note to this.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to bring this note forward. You see, the Premier has come to my constituency many times. You know what? He hasn't phoned me. He hasn't told me he's coming. You know what? I'm not whining about it; okay? So, you know, it works both ways.

Minister Rock has stated that the status quo is not acceptable. He's right. Alberta needs to look at true innovation, change that will exist over the long term, change that is sustainable. Bill 11 is a long way from taking that step.

Bill 11 has created a number of major problems. I will focus on overnight stays and enhanced services, but it also fails to address the queue-jumping that already exists and conflicts of interest. The bill allows for overnight stays for surgery. In my view, whether it's major or minor is not the real issue. Most surgeries now, including radical mastectomies, have a stay of less than 72 hours, Mr. Speaker. Very few hospital stays are over three days. The government wants the College of Physicians and Surgeons to determine what type of surgery will be done. I would suggest that this would create a conflict of interest given that doctors will be allowed to operate on a for-profit basis by offering enhanced services to patients.

The government states that contracting out to private hospitals will reduce waiting lists. The Premier is trying to sell this even in the face of research in Alberta that shows that contracting out does not reduce waiting lists. In fact, it shows that the queue will be longer. The study by Dr. Cam Donaldson and Dr. Gillian Currie shows that the provision of private sector beds seems to be associated with longer waits for care in public hospitals, potentially exacerbating problems with two-tier health care.

The issue of enhanced services creates an equally disturbing problem. Enhanced services are a nice way of having patients pay for extras. Fibreglass casts are an example. Now there's a Goretex cast. How about the lens associated with cataract surgery? You can get the Cadillac lens if you have the dough, Mr. Speaker, but without it you get what? An inferior lens? This type of service delivery does not allow many of my constituents choice, a word the Premier has depended upon to try and make his case. Many of my constituents cannot afford the extras. In fact, many of my constituents can't afford the necessities of life. How is a patient supposed to know what he or she really needs? How can a patient have consumer confidence about the entire range of health care products? Should it be a stainless steel hip or a titanium hip? Will they have to rely on Consumer Reports to help them determine the best buy?

Conflict of interest is an important element in this discussion. I find it interesting that it's not addressed. We only have to look at the current executive of the Calgary regional health authority. It was by design that the past Provincial Treasurer and friend of the Premier was appointed as the chair of the Calgary regional health authority and the Premier's friend and past adviser, Rod Love, was appointed to oversee communications and his friend and past deputy minister, Jack Davis, was hired as the CEO of the Calgary health authority. You see, Mr. Dinning is a supporter of private hospitals and has recently stated: it's okay to experiment; we can always go back. Well, ask the sexual sterilization victims how they feel about that rationale, Mr. Speaker.

Let's talk about another issue not covered in Bill 11, the whole notion of private diagnostic centres. These centres allow for those who have enough dough to get a diagnosis at, say, an MRI clinic within a couple of weeks and then take the MRI to their doctor and get put on the waiting list much sooner. Quite frankly, this just recently happened to a friend of mine. Within the time she would have to wait for an MRI, she's done her hip surgery.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is incumbent upon us as legislators to develop a model of health care reform. During Tuesday night's debate the Premier kept asking my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to help him. I would suggest that this is not the path we can help the Premier with, but there is a third option. I will offer some suggestions to the Premier and the government. There is no one cure for the problems that ail the health care system in this province and this country. However, Bill 11 does not contribute to real debate.

Throwing money at this problem will not alone be the answer. Yes, I too would like to see my federal counterparts contribute a bit more money. However, I would also like to see this government not misrepresent the contributions of the federal government. The federal contribution in actual dollars and tax points represents about 25 cents of every dollar spent on health in this province, not 13 cents. Maybe that 25 cents should be increased, and in fact Finance Minister Paul Martin has alluded to more funding, but I challenge this government to come up with a long-term plan that works within the existing publicly funded system before I encourage Mr. Martin to put that money on the table.

The Northeast health centre and the Boyle McCauley health centre are two innovative approaches to health care reform right here in our capital city. In fact, when my son broke his arm in January on a ski hill, I took him to the Northeast health centre, and we were in and out within an hour. Now, I do have friends in policing who state that the backups are still about four hours on some nights, and that's important in different professions, because it takes policemen off the street when they have to wait at the hospital for four hours.

Nonetheless, this centre offers innovative ways of treating patients, from prevention to emergency procedures.

Prevention is a critical part of health care reform. We have made huge strides in the past few years with such things as drug and alcohol and tobacco prevention. Our schools play a huge role in prevention. It is important to ensure emerging health concerns are dealt with in our schools. Nutrition programs, personal hygiene programs, encouraging athletic involvement for children, and even teaching CPR on an ongoing basis will be highly beneficial in reducing health care needs and therefore costs in the future.

Community care and long-term care are two incredibly important concepts. I remember as a police officer I went to a home where a senior had died. The fellow was in a hospital bed in his living room. His wife said to me: don't think badly of me, but I'm glad it's over. She told me she had been looking after her husband for six months. She had received four hours of respite care a week – four hours – and that was it. Her son lived out of town and was not available on a regular basis. The home care nurse came every day at first, but after a couple of months she came only twice a week. This elderly woman had worked very hard to accommodate her husband's needs and felt overwhelmed. He should have been in a home, Mr. Speaker.

Home care will ensure that sick folks are taken care of on a regular basis. Many patients can be at home after surgery but only if adequate services are available at home. Changing roles for the health care professionals is something many doctors, nurses, and, for that matter, citizens are concerned about. I would however encourage the doctors to look at the areas that can be delegated, such as nurse practitioners. Dr. Carolyn Bennett, MP for St. Paul's in Toronto, has undertaken a number of initiatives that have enhanced patient service delivery in her practice.

Mr. Speaker, these are just a few observations that I have in relation to health care reform, and they do not require Bill 11 in order to be achieved. Bill 11 is in fact a Trojan horse. It is not what it seems. It does not provide Albertans with reform. The private hospital debate is not just about whether the Premier is breaking the law or not. It's not just about whether a titanium hip is better than a stainless steel hip. It's about the spirit and the intent of the Canada Health Act, and it's about what's good for all citizens and what Albertans want. They do not want privatized hospitals. They do not want legislation that will support private hospitals. They do not want Bill 11.

It is time this government quit blaming the sick, the poor, the elderly, and other governments for a problem they created. Mr. Speaker, Albertans have said: no means no; we don't want this bill.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today, I believe, during second reading, which provides an opportunity, to further the dialogue and debate on the important issue of health care in this country, in this province, and Bill 11 does exactly that.

Since the legislation was introduced, a number of questions have been raised. The following are some of those questions that I've received from constituents in my constituency of Fort McMurray. Why is the government proposing this legislation? Will patients have to pay extra if publicly funded services are contracted out to surgical clinics? Who does pay if insured medical services are contracted out? Why not just spend more money on the publicly funded system to reopen beds and wards in existing facilities instead of contracting out? Where is the proof that using these facilities will save money? How would surgical facilities make a profit if they are doing the same things done by the public system and are not able to charge the patient extra? How will these contracts be more efficient? Why not just make the publicly funded health system more efficient? How would these contracts be approved? What are the implications on NAFTA and opening the door to American companies under the North American free trade agreement? Won't this legislation lead to pressure by the private sector to deinsure services that are currently paid by the publicly funded system? You know, these are all very good questions, and I'm going to use my time this afternoon in this debate to answer these questions.

Another question was: once the private sector is allowed to get a foothold in Alberta, won't it just be a matter of time before it expands and eventually takes over the publicly funded health system? Another question asked by a citizen was: how will patients be protected from pressures to pay for additional goods and services? One of the final questions asked: isn't this just two-tiered health care under another name? How do we safeguard the public health system if private operators are allowed to take part? How do doctors in these facilities get paid? The final two questions: will physicians be able to work both in a public hospital and in a private facility? Didn't Albertans say no already to this type of proposal in the recent health summit and other forums, and is the government listening?

I think they're very good questions in furthering the debate of health care specifically during second reading. I have taken the time to respond to each and every one of these questions relative to Bill 11. The first question was: why is the government proposing this legislation? Well, at this time Alberta has no legal authority to regulate surgical clinics performing surgeries requiring overnight stays. This is a serious gaff in the law, and without legislation there is a real possibility of a two-tiered system developing. Bill 11 would give government the authority to protect the public health care system by prohibiting, restricting, and controlling surgical clinics in Alberta. It would also enable health authorities to consider all options and tools in determining the best way to deliver publicly funded surgical services so that efficiency and access to care are maximized. Similar provincial legislation, as already mentioned, already exists in the provinces of Manitoba, Ontario, British Columbia, and the home of medicare, Saskatchewan.

The second question was: will patients have to pay extra if publicly funded services are contracted out to these clinics? The answer is simply no. Albertans will not have to pay for medically necessary surgical services, and no person will be allowed to pay directly to obtain faster services. Facility fees charged to individual patients will not be permitted.

Who does pay if insured medical services are contracted out? Quite simply, you'll use your Alberta health care card. Every Albertan will simply use their Alberta health care card.

Why not just spend more money on the publicly funded system to reopen beds? Well, government has increased health spending very significantly in the past few years and will continue to increase spending on the publicly funded health system. Health spending increased by over $1.6 billion, or 40 percent, over the past four years, including an increase of close to 10 percent just last year alone. Spending will further increase by about $1.1 billion, or 21 percent, over the coming three years. Alberta has never spent more on the publicly funded health care system than today. This is more than just about throwing money at an old system. It's about giving health authorities more tools to help patients. This is why it is called the Health Care Protection Act. Healthy patients will be able to go to community-based, small facility clinics for minor procedures instead of full-service hospitals.

Another question asked by citizens: how would surgical facilities make a profit if they are doing the same things done by the public system and not able to charge the patient extra? Surgical facilities would have to be efficient in delivering their services so they could cover costs and salaries on the rates that the public system will be willing to pay. Such cost savings might be possible because the facility would be performing only certain surgeries. The health authority will decide how much it's willing to pay for a contract, based on what is cost-effective for the publicly funded system. If it is not cost-effective for a health authority to contract out, then it will not be contracted out.

The Shouldice clinic in Ontario is perhaps the best example where doctors use their expertise and experience in reducing both the cost, it by half, and the procedural time for hernias, because – you know what? – practice does make perfect. This is another example of a centre for excellence.

How will these contracts be more efficient? This is another question posed by citizens. Well, each proposed contract will be considered on its own merits. Contracts for publicly funded services will only be approved if they demonstrate a net public benefit. If there is no increased cost-effectiveness or -efficiency or improved access to publicly funded insured services, there will be no contract.

Why not just make the publicly funded health system more efficient? I want to say this: the publicly funded health system is always looking for ways to become more efficient. We have, all of us in this Assembly, an attitude that we can do better, be it in health care or education or whatever the particular issue is at hand. Sometimes contracting out to a surgical facility specializing in doing one or two services could be the most efficient way of delivering a service. It could free up expensive operating rooms for more complex surgeries by having services that do not require the support of a full-service hospital in a surgical clinic. It also provides and makes it possible that the prospect of competition could encourage the public system to become even more efficient, and these centres of excellence that I mentioned, such as the Shouldice clinic, are good examples of where practice makes perfect. I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the health care professionals who in fact garner their expertise and build on that expertise in delivering more efficient health care services.

How will the contracts be approved? Well, before any contract between a publicly funded regional health authority and a privately operated facility will be approved by the Minister of Health and Wellness, specific criteria will have to be met, such as the contract must yield a net benefit to the publicly funded system, considering factors such as improved access and reducing a waiting line as well as other important components such as the services to be provided must be required in the region, the contract must comply with all the principles of the Canada Health Act, the private facility must be accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta, not by politicians. I think that's important, that the College of Physicians and Surgeons has come forward and said that we need rules to regulate what is taking place in Alberta. That is the intent and sole purpose of Bill 11.

The regional health authority must be able to afford to fund the proposed services within its budget. As well, the two final components of why and how these contracts will be approved: the contract or agreement must be in the public interest with no negative implications to our existing health care system, and finally, the contract must include acceptable standards about the results and outcomes to be achieved and performance measures.

Another question that has been posed to me by citizens in Fort McMurray is: won't this legislation just open the door to American companies under North American free trade, or, as we use the acronym, NAFTA? The answer to that in responding pertaining to Bill 11 is absolutely not. NAFTA contains a carve-out or reserve clause that allows federal and provincial governments to protect the publicly funded health system. Similar contracts already exist in other provinces where they have similar legislation without any implication to NAFTA. I think it's very important to recognize that in those other four provinces that have existing legislation that we're following no impact has been made. I think it's an important point.

I enjoyed my discussion with some of the union representatives from Fort McMurray where they have posed some very legitimate questions. I thought it very important during second reading to make public in this Assembly those answers to those questions that were asked by citizens.

The next question that was asked by citizens was: won't this legislation lead to pressure by the private sector to deinsure services that are currently paid by the publicly funded system? No. Contracting with surgical facilities to deliver services on behalf of the publicly funded system has nothing to do with deinsuring services. The government has no plan to deinsure services, and all contracting out will be done in accordance with the principles of the Canada Health Act. Ladies and gentlemen and members of this Assembly, the principles of the Canada Health Act will be upheld, as every member of this Assembly agrees. The Alberta government is committed to that principle, and it is to be included in the legislation.

Another question was: once the private sector is allowed to get a foothold in Alberta, won't it just be a matter of time before it expands and eventually takes over the publicly funded health system? That's a good question. The simple answer is that no parallel private, for-profit health system will be allowed to develop in Alberta, perhaps some of the strongest legislation in this country pertaining to that issue. The legislation ensures that surgical facilities will only be able to provide services under a contract or agreement with the public system when it is in the best interests of the publicly administered, publicly funded health system. There will be no charges to patients for insured services, and the publicly administered system will have total – total – control over any private facilities in this province. [interjection] I appreciate those questions being asked.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We just had one of the hon. members apparently wanting to get into the debate, and I wanted to remind her that she was already in the debate earlier in the second reading process.

Continue, Fort McMurray.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another important question asked by citizens in this province and in Fort McMurray: isn't this just two-tiered health care under another name? You know, that's a very good question. Of course, the simple answer is no. There will not be American style, for-profit hospitals allowed to operate in this province. There will be no queue-jumping by anyone wanting to pay cash for faster health care. There will be no private surgical facilities operating outside the public system. It will be within the public system. This is the purpose and sole intent of Bill 11, because there are no rules in place today. What this legislation does under Bill 11 is put rules in place to prevent those things from happening.

Another question was: how do we safeguard the public health care system if private operators are allowed to take part? Well, the legislation under Bill 11 commits Alberta to a publicly funded health care system and to the principles of the Canada Health Act. All proposals for contracts will be scrutinized to ensure that they are a useful addition and pose no threat to the publicly funded and administered health system.

One of the final questions that was asked was: how do the doctors in these facilities get paid? Are they on salary to the facility, or are they paid on the regular fee-for-service basis? What about other staff? Well, physicians will generally be paid for surgical services through the Alberta health care insurance plan, just as they are today, on a fee-for-service basis with a set rate for each procedure. There are opportunities, however, for doctors to be paid through other means; for example, on salary with either a public hospital or a private facility or through a contract with a regional health authority or private facility.

One of the final questions asked by my citizens was: will physicians be able to work both in a public hospital and in a private facility? Won't this be a conflict of interest if they do? Well, certainly a physician will be able to work in both locations. In both instances the physician will be working for the publicly funded system, doing surgery on behalf of the public system and paid by the public system at the same rate for the same procedure in other locations. In either case, the physician, or doctor, is prohibited from charging the patient extra. There is no conflict of interest.

One of the final questions asked was: didn't Albertans say no already to this type of proposal in the recent health summit and other forums that were held, and is the government listening pertaining to this regarding Bill 11? What Albertans told us as legislators during the health summit was that they wanted a strong and vibrant publicly funded and administered health system in Alberta. Bill 11 responds to what Albertans said and affirms the government's commitment to such a publicly funded and administered system. The legislation prohibits private hospitals and prohibits the development of any private, two-tiered system. So we really have more to fear if we stand here and do nothing as opposed to moving forward with the purpose of Bill 11.

This concludes my remarks on this important piece of legislation and the questions that citizens have been asking me. Of course, this legislation, Bill 11, is called the Health Care Protection Act, where Alberta is committed to solution-driven ideas – and I repeat, solution-driven ideas – to protect and sustain our senior citizens, our families, and a health system for all Albertans.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This bill is probably one of the most important bills that I've ever spoken to in this Legislature. I appreciate, actually, that for the first time in my seven years here both sides of the House have participated in a government bill, not just one or two members but several members. That tells me that this is pretty significant and that people have been getting calls to their offices and that people are very, very worried about this, because people speak passionately about this bill.

I have some heartfelt concerns about what the ideology of this bill is really all about. There is no denying that the actual purpose of this bill is to expand private health care in this province. It is not about protecting public health care. It is absolutely about allowing more private health care in this province. You know what? Albertans know that. That's why people are speaking in this Legislature.

You know, I looked at this bill piece by piece by piece, and as I was reading through it, I turned to my husband and I said: "You know what? This is a sneaky bill. It's a pretend bill. It pretends to do something while it actually does something else." It actually does. It's interesting. I think that if people tell themselves often enough that something is the way it is, they start to believe it.

You know, I've heard from every member on the opposite side and I've heard from the Premier and it says in the bill that there will be no queue-jumping. What a bunch of malarkey, Mr. Speaker. You know what? Queue-jumping happens now. Nothing in this bill will prevent that. [interjections]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. Hon. members in all three rows, you do not have to respond to everything that any member says, and that holds true for both sides.

Hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, through the chair.

MRS. SOETAERT: Absolutely. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I was just saying that queue-jumping will not stop because of this bill. If you can afford to buy . . .

DR. TAYLOR: Tell the truth, Colleen.

MR. BONNER: Tell that guy to be quiet.

MRS. SOETAERT: It's okay. I'd rather take my 20 minutes with him interrupting me. I really would, Mr. Speaker, because I have important stuff to say, and he always hassles me.

DR. TAYLOR: And you never interrupt?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The hon. minister will have his chance. Please wait for it.

Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you have the money to pay for an MRI, you jump ahead on the surgical list. Nothing in this bill stops that. So how can you blatantly stand there and say that there will be no queue-jumping when it's not true? I guess if you say it often enough, you start to believe it.

The minister is above the law in this bill, and you know what? You say: no, he isn't. So if you say that often enough, you start to believe it.

Then they say that all contracts will be made public. Not so. The agreements are made public. Will the cost of each? Who are the contracts with? Maybe we'll be there. Will we know who the investors are, who the board members are, which doctors may be in that investment group? Do you see what could happen with conflict of interest there? Nothing in this bill addresses that. So members on the other side will say that all the contracts will be open. Not so. But if you say it often enough, you start to believe it.

This government uses the Shouldice clinic as an example of excellence. Well, you know what? We have to do more homework on that and tell the entire story about Shouldice. Those patients are handpicked. You have to be healthy. You have to be a certain weight. [interjection] Do your homework. Look it up on the Net, Member for St. Albert. Have a look. No complicated surgeries can go there. You have to be extremely healthy. You have to be a good candidate to get to go to the Shouldice clinic. Furthermore, how can it be cheaper when you stay three nights for something that is done usually in day surgery here? And people are paying out of their pocket. So you know what? Before this government uses this as a good example – and you keep saying what a wonderful place it is. Maybe you're starting to believe it, when you haven't done all the homework.

You know what? It's true. Some people say: oh, this could save us money because the contracts will only happen if it's going to save money. Then maybe some of the contracts right now with Gimbel in Calgary should be shut down, because that one is more expensive than the ones done in Lamont. It's easy to say: oh, it saves money and it's more economical. Not so. But if you tell yourself that often enough, you start to believe it. So I guess it's just rhetoric over and over and over again.

How can it possibly be cheaper to go to a private system where our tax dollars are supporting a private business? How can it possibly be cheaper when people must make profits? That's the idea behind a private enterprise.

DR. TAYLOR: Didn't you have your lobotomy in a private clinic?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science keeps trying to speak out of turn. Perhaps he might like to go back to his office and cool down and, when it's his turn, return. Otherwise, please contain himself.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you. I was talking about how it could possibly be cheaper when you're putting taxpayers' dollars in private hands. You know, people resent that, and people understand that. When you use your tax dollars to put it back into a public system, then that public system is supporting you. When you give it to a private enterprise, you are giving it away, because they're making money on you. You get a service, plus you pay them to make a profit. But if you want to believe that oh, no, it doesn't matter – I mean, that's common sense. But somehow government members here can justify giving to a private company.

We've seen what's happened. The reason this province is in debt is because of a consistent pattern of this government giving money to private companies. Well, it is time that it stopped. [interjection] That's right. Any businessperson would know that. I would think the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat would know that.

MS LEIBOVICI: If he were a successful businessman.

MRS. SOETAERT: If he were a successful businessman.

I want to know. I was thinking about this. Mr. Speaker, you know, if I were part of a government that was insisting upon pushing a bill ahead that my constituents did not want, how would I react to that? What would I do? You know what? In my office I've had over 689 letters, e-mails, and faxes in the last two and a half weeks. That is the most I've ever had on anything. Of those, 42 support the bill and the rest are opposed to it, over 90 percent. You know what? Lots are from Stony Plain, St. Albert, Redwater, the whole area around my constituency.

DR. TAYLOR: All Liberals.

MRS. SOETAERT: Yes. You bet they're all Liberals, and next time it'll all go Liberal. You watch it. Some of those seats are pretty vulnerable over there, so I'd be listening to my constituents if I were them.

People phone me and say: "How can we stop this, Colleen? Are they just going to push ahead despite what we say?"

DR. TAYLOR: Yeah.

MRS. SOETAERT: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat says yes. They're not going to listen to us. I don't believe that. I believe in democracy, and I believe it matters that over 52,000 people have signed a petition. That's not counting the other ones that other people in here have tabled. I believe in democracy. If people phone and write and e-mail, I do believe they're listened to, and I'd hate to think the Premier has painted himself in a corner and that now he says: I don't know how to get out, so we're just going to duck and do it anyway. I would hope that is not signed, sealed, and delivered.

If you are truly representing your constituents, what do you do about a bill like this? What do you do? Hide? Follow party line? Follow the Premier? Follow private investors' interests? Or do you represent the people who elected you? What a dilemma for some people. It shouldn't be. It shouldn't be a dilemma. People know how many people have called them. They know that they value public health care. They know, Mr. Speaker. They are not stupid.

Albertans know what this bill will do, and that's why so many letters and faxes and phone calls have been happening. You know what? If those MLAs aren't representing, I do believe they're in trouble. I do believe you sell part of your soul when you actually vote against something you believe in, and I believe there are times when there are things that, hmm, part of it I can live with, part of it I can't. That happens. That's what politics is. Some of the things you know you can live with; some you can't.

But you know what? I would bet you that every MLA in this Assembly has had more calls opposed to this than supporting this. I get copies from them, and if there are a few who don't, fine. But I'll bring in all the stats from my office about it, and they're overwhelmingly opposed to this. So despite what you feel in your heart, despite if you have to sell your soul, do you go ahead and follow something you don't believe in? That's what I see happening with government members.

You know, it was interesting. I've heard very good speeches, and I thought the Member for Edmonton-Riverview's analogy last night was actually a good analogy. I think she's lived very close to this system, as probably a couple of others have in this Assembly. Her love of the public health care system made me realize how very dear it is to all of us, every single one of us. I want it there, and I want to trust that it'll be there. I want to trust what these government members say, that it will still be there.

But you know what, Mr. Speaker? How can I trust a government who was very deceitful about Swan Hills and Bovar? How can I trust them when just after the Premier was elected, another $100 million was sent to Bovar and a promise of no waste from out of province? Then they said: no waste from out of country. Oh, not true. All not true.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am citing Beauchesne 489. The hon. member used the term deceit in her remarks regarding the prior government's position with respect to the Swan Hills waste treatment facility. I'd refer you to 489, where under the debates from March 22 of '77 "deceive" was held to be unparliamentary. The term "deceived" was also held to be unparliamentary. I would therefore suggest that the hon. member retract her statement.

To pre-empt any argument, Mr. Speaker, that the term is also held to be parliamentary, it was held to be parliamentary, but that was in 1970. So it seems that actually the use of the word has been ruled to be unparliamentary most recently.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: On the point of order Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Mr. Speaker, I said “deceitful.” It is also parliamentary language. If the minister is really worried about it, then I’ll retract it, because I want to use the rest of my time wisely. I won’t stoop so low as other people in this Assembly who list them off and use them.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: That’s kind of a qualified withdrawal of the comments.

The chair has had to intervene a number of times, because once you start getting catcalls back and forth, then we start getting more personal and start saying things that really are unparliamentary and unkind and unworthy.

Hon. member, if you are prepared to take both comments back, then we can go on.

MRS. SOETAERT: Sure, Mr. Speaker. I’ll retract.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: All right. Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Debate Continued

MRS. SOETAERT: Good. Thank you very much. I want to talk about trust and the lack of it. I’m safe there. When the government made the promise about Bovar, they broke that trust; right? Now we have waste from all over the world.

Ah, the refinancing of West Edmonton Mall. Could we trust them there? No, we couldn’t.

Oh, we were promised to have elected health authorities. The power we’re giving these health authorities and they’re not elected. They’re handpicked by Conservatives. You know what? I know some very good people on those health authorities, some excellent, excellent people that could run in an election and win because they’re credible people, and that way they could serve with some independence, not under the thumb of this government. Yes, they would work with them much like school board trustees, but they are not under the total thumb of this government.

Now, there are people here who don’t like school boards. That’s not my problem. That is theirs, and there we go with another issue of trust.

I realize I have only a few short minutes left, and I regret that, but I want to speak for a minute. To me this is a debate about what we value. Unlike this government the majority of Albertans know that their health care system is way too precious and too important to be subjected to an experiment which allows a few people to make an extra dollar from the taxpayer.

The debate is about the priority we put on a public system available to all regardless of their ability to pay. Do we allow our public system to deteriorate while building a for-profit tier with superior service available only to those who can afford it? What happens to the publicly funded system once we start down that road? I think that’s an ethical question we all have to ask ourselves. What do we value, and what do we think is ethical for all the people of Alberta?

I think that medicare, public health care, is absolutely a Canadian value. What it says is that we share the risk of ill health. Only by the luck of the draw, by God’s grace, by whatever you want to say, some of us are born very healthy and some of us are not. So here we have a cost that as a society we’ve decided to share and finance primarily by our taxation system, and this system recognizes that all of us have a responsibility for each other, not just for me and my children. If I can pay for it quick, then I’ll get it done quick, because we all feel that way. We would do anything for any member of our family. We would mortgage the house. We would do anything, but that’s not a Canadian value of caring for everyone. That’s why we’re in a public health care system. That’s why we’re in medicare. We believe that everyone – everyone – should have the same opportunity to health care. That’s what this bill is undermining.

The debate I think is also about trust, trust between doctors and patients, between health authorities and the people they serve, between representatives and their people. You know what? It’s about trust, but mainly it’s about trust in the health care system. We trust that it will be there when we need it. We trust that. In all the public opinion polls, the letters, the town hall meetings, and petitions, you know what Albertans are saying? They have lost their trust. They have lost their confidence in this government when it comes to health care. You know what? Albertans are suspicious of this government and Bill 11. They know and they fear rightfully so that it will lead to a two-tiered, American style health care system.

I still want to know the answer to the question: why? We live in the most beautiful province in the world. We have a booming economy. We have great people. We’re just one of the most fortunate places in the world. Why? Why would we go down this path? We don’t need to. So, Mr. Speaker, I don’t know why this government wants to increase taxpayer dollars going to private hospital operators – I don’t know why – instead of fully funding the public system.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science is rising on a point of order?

DR. TAYLOR: No. She’s asked the question: why do we need this bill?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We don’t need an explanation.

DR. TAYLOR: I would like to provide her with the answer.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I don’t know that there’s any provision for that, so it’s not a point of order.

MRS. SOETAERT: Good try. I was hoping he’d ask me another question because I’d go for another 20 on the answer, but anyway you can ask a question if you’d like.

I just want to say finally – and I know I only have a minute or two left, Mr. Speaker – that I want every MLA to really, really think about why they are backing this bill. I know that more than 50 percent of their constituents do not want it. Do not want it. Over 50 percent of Albertans do not want this. But the ideology of this government is such that privatization is above all, above the common good, above health care, and that disappoints me. I would urge each single member in this Assembly to really think twice before they stand in unison and follow this path, this very destructive path. [interjection] I know. I know they say that they’re going to do what they’re told. I wish for once they’d represent their constituents instead of just following like lemmings over a cliff. I would like them to just stand up and vote against this bill. [interjection] You like the lemming idea. [interjections] Let them go, people are saying. Let them go. I know. It’s tempting, but I have faith in this Assembly. I have faith in democracy.

When people stop me just walking down the mall or at IGA or Safeway, they’re all saying: “Colleen, what can we do to stop this? Is he honestly going to push ahead with this?” I am really hoping, because I do believe in democracy, that their concerns are heard. These aren’t just my constituents, Mr. Speaker. These are constituents from Redwater, from St. Albert, from Stony Plain, from Edmonton. You know, those places I shop in, those places I have friends and relatives in, those places I'm in all the time. Maybe I can't speak for Cypress-Medicine Hat with all his contacts down there, but I certainly speak for those constituencies that are right around me, Lac Ste. Anne as well. Absolutely those people are more than 50 percent opposed to this bill, yet their MLAs, I fear, are going to support this, whether they know it is right or not. I think that might be a bit of a moral dilemma for them, or maybe it's not. Maybe they honestly just don't care. But I've got to tell you that I would rethink this if I were them. I would rethink this.

You've got to respect David Kilgour. Years ago he crossed because he was opposed to the GST. Well, that you've got to admire, standing on your own two feet.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act.

Firstly, Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on remarks made by the Member for Edmonton-Norwood prior to my formal remarks. The Member for Edmonton-Norwood is clearly confused in her assertion that Bill 11 returns us to the pre-Pearson days, when patients had to pay out of their pockets for their health care. Bill 11, as anyone can clearly read, protects, upholds, and maintains the publicly funded health system. Bill 11 was written after an extensive review of existing legislation in other provinces. And for the member to suggest that medically necessary services provided to Albertans are inferior is not just plain wrong but an insult to Alberta's first-class doctors.

Contrary to what the Member for Edmonton-Norwood has said, the federal minister and the Prime Minister were provided with copies of the bill and its preceding policy statement, and we are confident that senior staff have read them closely. If there was any concern with the Canada Health Act, they have had plenty of time to say so.

The Member for Edmonton-Norwood spoke of her positive experiences at the Northeast community health centre. We agree with her comments. This is one of the new government initiatives to show innovation and adaptation in responding to the health care needs of Albertans. Likewise, Bill 11, as part of the government's six-point plan for health care, is one more option in addressing those needs.

Mr. Speaker, there has been much discussion about our health proposal over the past several months. While some of it has been based on fact, unfortunately some of it has been based purely on emotions. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Sorry to interrupt you. It seems that Calgary-Fish Creek wants to get in on the debate, and I'd just only ask her to wait her turn and not interrupt an hon. member, even on her own side, when they're speaking.

On the other side I wonder if the two people who have already spoken to the issue could cease adding to the disruption and let us hear each hon. member in their turn without all the extra voices being heard.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Debate Continued

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, some of it has been based purely on emotions and perceptions rather than looking at what the legislation actually says.

Mr. Speaker, I've received calls, letters, e-mails and faxes from Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituents regarding Bill 11. They ask questions like: why does the Alberta government want to pass legislation that would let private facilities do surgeries in the first place? There are, in fact, several reasons why we need this legislation. One is that right now we have no legal way to regulate and control private surgical facilities or private hospitals. Right now if a private surgical facility is accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta, they could set up shop, and there is absolutely nothing the Alberta government could say about it. We need this legislation so that government can protect and ensure the sustainability of Alberta's publicly funded and publicly administered health system.

Government, therefore, had three options: one, do nothing and let it happen; two, totally ban surgical clinics from ever doing anything in Alberta, including those already in operation, such as those doing cataract surgery; three, regulate and control private clinics so that they only operate when it was a benefit to Albertans and to the totally publicly funded system. We could have said an absolute and total no to surgical facilities, but we have introduced this legislation because it provides health authorities with another option as they seek to improve the way they deliver publicly funded and publicly administered surgical services.

I want to make something perfectly clear at this point, Mr. Speaker. The legislation doesn't say that the health authorities must contract to private surgical facilities. In fact, it simply offers an option to contract with such facilities if the regions have evidence that there would be a benefit in doing so. An individual analysis would be done for each and every contract proposed to a regional health authority by a surgical facility. Only those contracts that showed a net benefit to the public system, considering factors such as increased access to services, improved cost-effectiveness or -efficiency would be approved. Because the bottom line is this: the health authorities remain accountable to the Minister of Health and Wellness and to Albertans to maintain a quality publicly funded and publicly administered health system. This means that it's up to them to make sure they spend the public health funding they're provided in the most responsible manner possible. Albertans have been very clear in their directions to us in this regard. They have told us they do not want to go down the slippery slope toward an American style, two-tiered health system in which people with money are able to buy faster or better service.

At this point I want to interject with a point that needs to be kept in mind as we discuss the legislation. Critics claim that the reason health care has problems today is due to budget cuts of the past. In 1992-1993 the health system was spending about $4.1 billion per year in Alberta. From 1980 to 1992 health costs had increased by 215 percent. Even considering population growth in that same period, 17 percent, and inflation at 63 percent, this rate of growth was clearly not sustainable, especially when considering that the province as a whole was spending $3 billion a year more than it was receiving in revenue. Between 1992-93 and 1995-96 health spending was reduced by about $500 million, from $4.1 billion to $3.6 billion, a reduction of about 13 percent. At the same time, administration costs were cut. The more than 200 hospital boards and agencies were reduced to 17 regional health authorities.

Since 1995-96, however, health spending has increased in each of the past four years. Overall annual spending on health has increased by 40 percent in that time so that this year health spending will total about $5.1 billion. This is $1 billion more a year than was spent in '92-93, the year that spending reductions began.

Per capita spending on health in Alberta in 1999-2000 is about $2,013 per Albertan. This is the third highest per capita spending rate of any province in Canada, behind only B.C. and Newfoundland. However, Alberta is also the youngest province in Canada, and when you adjust for the age of each province's population, Alberta has the highest per capita health spending in the country. Today health spending is higher than it ever has been in the history of the health system in our province. In fact, we now spend over $15 million each and every day in Alberta's health system, and we're also providing more services than ever before.

Our government will continue to increase spending on the publicly funded health system. Our annual health spending will increase by over $1 billion, or 21 percent more, over the next three years. That will increase daily health spending to more than $17 million a day by 2002-2003. Spending will be $2 billion a year higher than in 1992-93, an increase of 49 percent over the past 10 years. While this significant new funding will be provided over the next three years, we have to realize that there are limits to the dollars that can be provided. We now spend $1 out of every $3 in the provincial budget for health services.

While our government is committed to addressing priority areas such as health and education, we also remain strongly committed to the principle of fiscal responsibility. We cannot allow our province to enter into the vicious cycle of deficit budgeting again. For that reason, we are committed to working with stakeholders in the health system to use innovation, imagination, and strong management skills to make our health system accessible and sustainable both now and in the future.

In that spirit, we have introduced Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act. It enables the regional health authorities to consider one more way of providing health services while keeping our health system publicly funded and publicly administered. In other words, a publicly funded system will continue to pay for medically necessary services as determined by physicians. To make sure our health system continues to be there in the future when we need it, we need to plan for that future and we need to find new and better ways of delivering health services. In other words, we need to change.

To protect and preserve the valued elements of today's health system, we believe that a program of action is necessary, action that will put in place the barriers that will prevent the slide of our health system down the so-called slippery slope toward two-tier, American style private health care, action that at the same time makes certain that our health system has the flexibility and the adaptability to deal with the challenges of today and of this new century.

From the very beginning of the proposed legislation the government's intention was made clear. The legislation affirms the commitments of the government of Alberta to the preservation of the principles of the Canada Health Act, affirms the commitment of the government of Alberta to continually improve the quality and accessibility of publicly funded health services in the province.

The legislation specifically bans private hospitals in Alberta. It prohibits facility fees for medically necessary surgical or physician services that are covered by Alberta's health care insurance plan. It prohibits queue-jumping and payments by individuals to get faster service. Existing legislation prohibits anyone from requiring patients to purchase goods or services that are not medically necessary as a condition of receiving medically necessary services or faster service. It sets out disclosure rules for the sale to patients of any goods or services that are not medically necessary. It prohibits any private surgical facility from providing insured services unless that facility has a contract with the regional health authority to provide those services on behalf of the health authority and unless the Minister of Health and Wellness has approved that contract.

The legislation prohibits the Minister of Health and Wellness from approving a contract unless he or she is satisfied that it is consistent with the principles of the Canada Health Act; that there is a need for the services to be provided; that the contract would not have an adverse effect on the publicly funded system; that there is a public benefit resulting from the contract, considering factors such as access to publicly funded services, quality of service, flexibility for the health authority, cost-effectiveness, and other economic considerations; that the health authority can afford the contract; that the contract indicates performance expectations and measures; and that the surgical facility is accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta. In short, if the minister determined that a proposed agreement was not in the best interests of Albertans or of our publicly funded and publicly administered health system, he would not approve it. And remember; being able to stand up and say no is not something that he's able to do now.

Highlights of the legislation are: prohibits a private surgical facility from providing uninsured surgical services unless approved by the Minister of Health and Wellness, requires that health authorities make available to the public for inspection any contracts between the health authority and a surgical facility, sets significant fines for any person contravening the provisions of the act, and establishes in legislation the new Premier's Advisory Council on Health to provide strategic advice to the Premier on the preservation and future enhancement of quality health services for Albertans and on the continuing sustainability of the publicly funded and administered health system.

Benefits of the legislation for Albertans as patients. There will be no facility fees and no charges to patients for insured services. Paying to jump the queue will be illegal. Doctors will continue to decide who receives services in which order according to the most urgent medical need. It provides patients with the potential for increased access.

Let me give you an example to demonstrate what I mean by that. In a surgical facility elective surgery can be planned and provided without the rescheduling that occurs when emergency surgeries and urgent medical needs arise that a full-service hospital must handle. As well, performing less complicated procedures in facilities can free up hospital operating rooms for more complex procedures that require all the sophisticated resources of a hospital for diagnosis and intensive care. This could reduce the waiting times for more complex procedures in hospitals. The safety and quality of services provided by surgical facilities would be protected by the College of Physicians and Surgeons' accreditation.

For the benefit of Albertans as taxpayers the proposed legislation would provide the potential to improve access, efficiency, and effectiveness. Because the surgical facilities would focus on providing one or two types of surgical procedures, they could become very good at providing that one service, thereby allowing them to serve a greater number of patients at the same cost. The region would have to demonstrate a benefit in spending taxpayers' money on a contract. All physicians would continue to be paid the same way they are now, through their fee-for-service contract with the publicly funded health system. The regional health authorities would continue to be responsible and accountable to the minister for the way health spending was spent. And it would provide the potential to defer major front-end construction costs.

The bottom line remains this, Mr. Speaker. If passed, Bill 11 would prohibit private hospitals and would prohibit any surgical facility from offering insured surgical services without a contract with a health authority. In other words, this legislation would prevent the development of any parallel private health system in our province, and it would give us a means of sustaining our publicly funded health system by giving health authorities more options to consider when finding new and better ways to meet the challenges facing health care both now and in the future.

The Health Care Protection Act is only one part of a larger overall plan envisaged for our health system. In his televised address to Albertans in January Premier Klein announced government's six-point plan to protect and improve Alberta's publicly funded and publicly administered health system. The details of this six-point plan are clear evidence of our commitment to Canada's single-payer, publicly funded style of health care and our commitment to making that system better able to meet the challenges of this new century.

As the Premier noted in his address, there are six key directions in our plan, including improving access to publicly funded services, improving the management of the health system, enhancing the quality of health services, increasing our emphasis on health promotion and disease and accident prevention, continuing to foster new ideas to improve our health system, and taking the necessary steps to protect the publicly funded system from any potentially negative external factors.

I've already discussed at length that final point, so I'd like to focus now on the remaining five points. In fact, the plan highlights close to 20 initiatives to support those directions. First, our government is going to be increasing our annual health spending by over $1 billion, or 21 percent more, over the next three years. I can also tell you that much of the new money is targeted toward hiring more nurses, recruiting more doctors, increasing the number of cancer, heart, and neurosurgeries that we do, and increasing access to home care and continuing care services.

When speaking of recruiting more doctors and hiring more nurses, I think it's important to recognize that Alberta's nurses and doctors are among the best paid in Canada. We are successful in attracting health professionals to Alberta, and as evidence of that I'd like to point out that in last year's budget we targeted hiring an additional 1,000 nurses and other frontline health professionals in our health authorities. We have already exceeded that target of 1,000. In fact, almost 1,200 new full-time equivalent positions have been staffed, including more than 600 nurses. Over the next three years we'll be hiring up to 2,400 more frontline staff.

In terms of doctors, by the end of September of 1999 we had increased the number of doctors practising in the province by more than 250 from the previous year and close to 400 over two years, and we expect at least 90 more this year. To support that direction, Health and Wellness Minister Halvar Jonson has announced an increase of 40 postgraduate residency places in the province's medical schools and Learning Minister Lyle Oberg has announced close to 200 additional spaces for nurses in our postsecondary . . .

MR. DUCHARME: The Learning minister has announced close to 200 additional spaces for nurses in our postsecondary education system.

As I mentioned, our government is also targeting new funding to areas such as cardiac surgery, cancer surgery, neurosurgery, and kidney dialysis, life-saving procedures where we want to reduce waiting times and ensure timely access to surgery.

At any given time during this year close to 30,000 Albertans will be receiving home care support, and we intend to increase that number next year.

However, as I said earlier, improving the health system is about more than just increased funding, more health professionals, and more procedures. It is also about doing things better, and that is why we are focusing so much time and effort reforming our primary health care system.

Right now we have 26 pilot projects being funded through the health transition fund, and several others which are funded through our alternative payment plan project, which are looking at new and better ways of meeting the primary health care needs of Albertans. Many of these projects are focused on an integrated approach to the delivery of health services through groups of health professionals working as teams, sometimes in a 24-hour-a-day facility, to better meet the health needs of patients.

Our plan also includes strategies to increase the emphasis on promoting wellness and preventing disease and injuries, like a new five-year immunization strategy, screening plans for breast cancer, cervical cancer, and metabolic disorders.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

These are just a few of the initiatives highlighted in our six-point action plan, but they are indicative of the leadership role Alberta is playing among all provinces in protecting, improving, and reforming our publicly funded and administered health system. Through increased access, reformed primary care, new direction in long-term care, increased emphasis on health promotion, protection, and prevention and better use of technology, we are taking the steps necessary to ensure the long-term viability and sustainability of our health system.

Alberta is not the first province to bring in this type of legislation. The provinces of B.C., Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Ontario have similar legislation already in place. Clearly, these laws have not destroyed Canada's health system, as our critics claim Bill 11 will do.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to speak about the private-sector involvement in the public health system. The private sector has traditionally played an important role in supporting and complementing Canada's publicly funded health system. Some examples of private-sector involvement in delivering quality health services to Albertans include that there are currently over 4,400 physicians in Alberta who are, in fact, private-sector health providers and who bill the public health system under the terms of a contract for services provided to the public system.

There are 588 chiropractors, 233 opticians, 278 optometrists, 1,414 dentists, 180 denturists, and 38 podiatrists who are private operators in Alberta with their own private businesses yet do work for and in support of the public health system. We have 375 private-sector ground ambulances located in 135 communities throughout Alberta, and we have 14 private-sector aircraft that are contracted by Alberta Health and Wellness to provide dedicated air ambulance service throughout the province. These are just some examples of the private sector already working in our publicly funded and publicly administered health care system.

I'm proud to rise today in support of Bill 11. Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 is not a fix-all for all Albertans' health care system. I don't believe that anyone in government has promoted the bill as such. However,

Bill 11, combined with other initiatives, can help to stabilize the health system in this province. I'm eager to keep looking at the bill throughout the debate process and trying to come up with ways that will improve it even more. I would be interested in discussing any amendments that might strengthen the bill and address some of the concerns of my constituents without removing the intent of the bill.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, I and my government colleagues are not above health care. Critics of Bill 11 claim that this government is out to destroy the Alberta health system. Why would we make it our mission to destroy something that we and our family and friends and constituents all need and rely on? We need the public system to be there for us too.

I'd like to conclude by saying that the debate has tremendous value to all Albertans. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am looking forward with pleasure to the debate on Bill 11. I know what Bill 11 is not, and it's not the public health care protection act. Now, earlier some hon. members said that this is enabling legislation. Well, I know what's enabling about it. This bill has finally enabled all Albertans to see the mess that's been created by this government in the last seven years in our public health care system.

We already know how this government has deliberately underfunded public health care. They have laid off thousands of health care workers and forced hundreds of doctors and nurses to leave the province. Mr. Speaker, they have closed down, blown up, and sold off public hospitals to create a shortage of beds and waiting lists. They have underfunded the remaining public hospitals so that now they sit with empty beds, darkened corridors, and empty operating theatres.

This government has stopped building and upgrading long-term care facilities and auxiliary hospitals. This has resulted in longer waiting lists and patients being shipped off to facilities far away from their families, their communities, and their places of worship. Everyone knows but the government members in this Assembly what this regime has done to our public health care system.

Now we have truth squads, that tell us that they have a plan to fix the problem. Bill 11 is the problem. This government is the problem. The direction they've taken in health care is a major problem. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a single word that's missing from the title of this bill, and that's "public." Protect our public health care. But, no, they're trying to ram a bill down the throats of Albertans. The reason this word "public" has been left out of this bill is because Bill 11 creates a two-tiered health care system. Bill 11 creates a two-tiered system. It creates private hospitals, but this government doesn't have the political fortitude to call them private hospitals. The reason they don't have the political courage to do this is because the Premier and the cabinet are back in the business of being in business. Now they want to set profit levels for the owners and operators of private hospitals and they want to subsidize these hospitals with taxpayers' money.

I'd like to talk a little bit more about Bill 11, this Health Care Protection Act, Mr. Speaker. I heard one of my constituents describe this bill as the most cynical piece of legislation that he has yet to see, and this gentleman is over 70 years old and has been politically active in this province and has seen a lot come and go.

The first thing that this bill does is pretend to ban private hospitals. It pretends to ban private hospitals, but then in the very next section of the bill it turns around and creates something called approved surgical facilities, that will perform approved surgical services. Just what are surgical services? Just what are overnight stays? There has been confusion not only in the province about this, but there has been confusion in this Assembly because some hon. members have had difficulty comprehending that we have overnight stays in this bill. I find that astonishing, Mr. Speaker.

Now, I have a question. Is the Walter C. Mackenzie Health Sciences Centre at the University of Alberta not a hospital because it's called a science centre? Of course it's a hospital. Is the Mayo Clinic in Minnesota not a hospital because it's called a clinic? Of course it's a hospital. Is HRG in Calgary, with its 37 beds, including four intensive care unit beds, three state-of-the-art operating rooms, X-ray equipment, and lab services a hospital? Of course it is, if Bill 11 goes ahead.

As all hon. members of this Assembly, particularly the government members, fan out across the province this weekend and converse with Albertans, whether it's in their constituency offices or in the local shopping centres or on the main streets of their towns, I certainly hope that they realize that Albertans do not want Bill 11 and that they will do the right thing, come back here and tell members of Executive Council: we've had it; we're either crossing the floor and joining the Liberals or you pull that bill.

Playing games with words, or doublespeak, as George Orwell called it in his novel Nineteen Eighty-Four, is the hallmark of Bill 11. I think this deception and doublespeak in Bill 11 is exactly what Albertans are saying about it. They see this, and this to them is the most cynical piece of legislation that they've ever seen.

Now, it is interesting to discuss health care in this province, and it's interesting to compare all of Canada and all of America. It is very interesting to compare the percentages of gross domestic product spent on health care in Canada and the United States from the 1960s through to the present. What's interesting is that the amounts that the U.S. and Canada spent on health care costs as a percent of gross national product were almost identical until the full implementation of medicare in 1971, but then a strange thing happened. Canadian costs have leveled off at about 9 percent of GDP, while U.S. costs have increased to about 14 percent of GDP and are still climbing.

So Canada brought in medicare, and all of a sudden the percentage of GDP that Canadians spent on health care began to become less and less compared to what the Americans with their private, two-tiered system were spending. In spending an amount equal to 14 percent of their GDP on health care, the Americans are leaving over 40 million men, women, and children without any form of health care. On the other hand, I would like to remind all hon. members of the House that Canada now spends an amount equal to about 9 percent of our GDP, and every single citizen is covered. Why would you want to go backwards with this costly, unfair, U.S. system of private, two-tier health care? Not only that, but Canadians with their medicare system have longer life expectancies and lower infant mortality rates than in the U.S. Moving towards a two-tiered system just doesn't make any sense.

Now, seven months ago the New England Journal of Medicine published an article that compares costs between public and private hospitals. Here's what it said.

For decades, studies have shown that for-profit hospitals are 3 to 11 percent more expensive than not-for-profit hospitals; no peer-reviewed study has found that for-profit hospitals are less expensive. That's one of the most highly respected medical journals in the world talking.

What else did this comprehensive study reveal? Well, for one thing, medicare spending in the U.S. was 13 to 16 percent higher when it was connected to for-profit hospitals instead of not-for-profit hospitals. The study found that spending increased faster in geographic areas served by for-profit hospitals than in areas served by not-for-profit hospitals. Finally, when compared with spending in areas served by not-for-profit hospitals, it found that spending increased more in areas served by a mixture of private and not-for-profit hospitals because the private hospitals pushed up prices in not-for-profit hospitals because they had to compete for doctors and nurses.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the private, for-profit hospital path being pushed by this government and this Bill 11 just doesn't make any sense. The reassurances of the hon. member across the way that they're hiring all these doctors and nurses . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Where can you find them?

MR. MacDONALD: I don't know where they're going to find them, and I wish them well and hope they're successful in their pursuit, but we are setting up in the system two parallel systems.

The Cambie centre in British Columbia pays their registered nurses wage levels or compensation packages that are greater than the collective bargaining agreements that are negotiated. No hon. member in this House can tell me . . .

Bill 21 Appropriation Act, 2000

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but in accordance with Standing Order 61(3) the chair is required to put the question to the House on the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a second time]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, before we return to your speech, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you a very prominent member of the medical society in Alberta. Dr. Grant Gall is the dean of medicine at the University of Calgary. Grant, can you please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

head: Government Bills and Orders

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act (continued)

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, we were talking about the supply of doctors and nurses in this province. It was claimed by the Premier that there were going to be big savings for all these private hospitals, but when we compare it to what is going on currently in British Columbia, it is just not reality.

Now, in 1994 the U.S. public-sector spending alone on health care averaged 600 U.S. dollars per person for a system, I remind all hon. members, in which over 40 million citizens had no health care insurance, and many other people were facing substantial deductibles, fees, and premiums. By contrast, in Canada public-sector spending was about $1,450 per capita. That means their spending was $150 less per person, but we covered every Canadian and without the user fees, deductibles, and premiums.

Now, a highly respected economist by the name of Dr. Bob Evans, at the University of British Columbia, has found that Americans pay more in taxes for health care than Canadians or almost all other people in the developed world despite their massive contributions to the private sector. Why do Americans pay more for less coverage? The primary reason is the Americans' huge administration costs. The biggest advantage of the Canadian over the American system is in administration cost savings. Canada's single-payer insurance plan means more control and lower administration costs. In fact, processing the multitude of private insurance schemes requires four to five times the administrative resources needed than with the universal plans of public systems.

An American professor speaking in Toronto last year gave a very concrete example. He described an American private hospital with 900 beds. The hospital had a staff of 317 in its billing and collections department. By contrast, a Canadian public hospital in Toronto with the same number of beds had a grand total of 16 people administering billings.

Now, where is the administrative cost in Bill 11? Who is going to administer the contracts but the regional health authority officials? This is going to cost them more time and more money. We're already doing this with the Workers' Compensation Board. The Auditor General pointed this out in his last annual report in September of '99. There are billing irregularities. There are problems with that. Fortunately, he was gracious enough and keen enough to point that out, and he should point this out to all government members, because they're going down the same road with Bill 11. You're going to increase administration costs for the regional health authorities. You have no idea what you're doing. Listen to the people.

Not only is the cost to citizens under medicare lower, but the costs to businesses are lower in this country as well. Living next door to the Americans and their big businesses and the huge economies of scale means that Albertan and Canadian businesses must make use of every economic advantage possible to prosper, to compete, and to create jobs. Our current medicare system costs employers far less to insure workers than the American system.

A study published by the Conference Board of Canada in March of last year entitled Corporate Health Care Costs in Canada and the U.S. showed that total health care costs for Canadian firms ranged from a low of a little over 3,000 Canadian dollars to a high of about $13,500 per employee. In the United States that range was from $7,500 to nearly $28,000. Total health care expenditures, private and public, averaged 14 percent of gross payrolls in Canada and 24 percent in the United States. The study found that the health plans cost firms more than 9 percent of the payrolls in the United States. In contrast, health care plans cost Canadian employers between 1.4 and 2 percent of payrolls.

The evidence doesn't stop there, Mr. Speaker. A study by KPMG called The Competitive Alternatives, a comparison of business costs in North America, Europe, and Japan, was also completed last year.

It examined the total annual costs of a typical firm in eight different jurisdictions. It found that labour costs were the key. Labour represents 58 percent of location-sensitive costs while taxes represent just 12 percent. Overall Canada has the lowest cost of all countries in the survey. In attaining the lowest overall cost rating, Canada had its biggest advantage in employer-sponsored benefits, with health care insurance being the largest component.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you might ask yourself the question: where are the statistics, the reports, the studies, the research from the Premier and this government? Where are the studies about how we're going to benefit from the opening up of our public health care system by creating these private hospitals? We have not seen one credible study, not one statistic or one report . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, we have a point of order. The hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Point of Order Relevance

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, under Beauchesne, the sixth edition, 459 on relevance. The hon. member has been going on in his diatribe about private hospitals. Bill 11 prohibits private hospitals in the province of Alberta, so what he is saying is totally irrelevant to the debate?

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, this is ridiculous. There's a definition of private hospitals even in this bill. If the hon. member hasn't read the bill, I will show him where the definition is.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hardly a reply to a point of order.

I would say that at second reading we are allowed a certain amount of width in our debate, and if the hon. member wants to debate that black is white or white is black, then if it's relevant to the debate at hand, he's quite able to make that point. We may disagree with it, or we may agree with him or have yet another opinion of it, but that characterization is allowed. It may not be what we think is right, but it is certainly within the parameter of his right to debate.

Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the convenience of all hon. members on the opposite side of the House, definitions, section 29(m) of the bill: "'private hospital' means an acute care facility." I'm not going to go any further, but there it is for all hon. members.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have not seen one credible study to back up the demands that this government is trying to have. They're demanding that Albertans have this bill as one of our laws. Not only are Albertans suspicious; all Canadians are suspicious of this parliamentary initiative.

Mr. Speaker, the irony that is going on with the debate on Bill 11 is that in Alberta the current provincial government would like to experiment and tinker with the system by adding a private-sector component to our public health care delivery. The only model that looks similar to what is proposed in Bill 11 here is what we currently have in the United States. Our system is an economic advantage not only to all Albertans but to all Canadians. So why would we want to copy a model that so obviously doesn't work, a model that doesn't work as well as the one we already have?

But we have a little bit more evidence closer to home, in Calgary to be specific. One of the Premier's privatization experiments is under way there, in the fine city of Calgary, at the moment. For some time now cataract surgeries have been performed entirely in private clinics outside of the hospital system and partly paid by the government or the taxpayers. The Alberta branch of the Consumers' Association of Canada recently published a study on waiting lists for cataract surgeries, and the experiment that's going on in Calgary is just not making sense. It doesn't make sense for the taxpayers; it doesn't make sense for the patients who are waiting for surgery.

Now, moving to more private hospitals or private surgical facilities – if the hon. members across the way are sensitive to that, then I will have respect for it – they just doesn't make any sense, Mr. Speaker. So if this doesn't make any sense, why is this government, at the risk of losing the confidence of the electorate, pushing ahead? Bill 11 certainly won't make health care cheaper. In fact, it will lead to higher costs for taxpayers. It's not going to make waiting lists shorter. In fact, it will increase waiting lists. It won't reduce costs for businesses. In fact, it will increase costs and kill jobs.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to adjourn debate, please, on Bill 11. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[At 5:27 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 10, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/04/10

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As we begin a new week, help us, O Almighty, to also begin with the principle of You as the giver of all things. Amen.

Hon. members, would you please remain standing as well for the singing of our national anthem. I will ask Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us.

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

Thank you. Please be seated.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to present with your permission a petition signed by 225 Albertans from Edmonton, Sherwood Park, St. Albert, Stony Plain, and Ardrossan. They are urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

DR. MASSEY: Mr. Speaker, with permission I present a petition signed by 320 citizens from Edmonton, Ardrossan, Sherwood Park, and St. Albert urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining [the] public health care [system]."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition signed by 265 people from Edmonton and Spruce Grove. They are urging the "Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glangarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to present a petition to the Legislature signed by 254 Albertans from Edmonton, Wabamun, Beaumont, Leduc, St. Albert, and Stony Plain. They are urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my duty today to present a petition signed by 261 residents of Alberta from Edmonton, Sherwood Park, Devon, Leduc, and Spruce Grove. All of these people are urging the government of Alberta "to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care" in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition supporting public health care in Alberta, urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care" and signed by 251 Albertans from Edmonton, Sherwood Park, Lake Isle, Gibbons, and South Cooking Lake.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition to present to the Legislature that says:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

It is signed by 286 Albertans from Fort Vermilion, High Level, Grande Prairie, and La Crete.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by 1,300 constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar. They are urging the Legislative Assembly and the government "to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care." This group of petitioners brings the total in Edmonton-Gold Bar alone to over 2,500.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition with 323 signatures of Albertans from Edmonton, Sherwood Park, St. Albert, Mundare, Willingdon, and Fort Saskatchewan urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining [the] public health care [system]."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present to the Legislative Assembly urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care." It's been signed by 257 Albertans from Lethbridge, Cochrane, Milk River, Picture Butte, Coutts, Warner, and Brooks.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table petitions signed by 386 Albertans from Edmonton, Stony Plain, Entwistle, Gibbons, Riviere Qui Barre, Fort Saskatchewan, Leduc, and Beaumont. When the Official Opposition has finished tabling our petitions today, we will have totaled 4,894 today, bringing the total so far to date in the Assembly to 45,842 Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of 222 residents from Edson, Fort Saskatchewan, Barrhead, Westlock, Mayerthorpe, Sangudo, Evansburg, Devon, Rocky Mountain House it is my pleasure to present the following petition in the Assembly.

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and fulfill my elected responsibility to the following 269 petitioners from the communities of Fort Saskatchewan, Gibbons, Redwater, Bruderheim, Bon Accord, Willingdon, and Andrew. They are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge this "government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to present a petition signed by 275 Calgarians in constituencies such as Calgary-Fish Creek, Calgary-Glenmore, and Calgary-Nose Creek. The petition urges "the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of 511 Albertans from Camrose, Calgary, and Leduc I'm pleased to table this petition, which reads as follows:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that the petition with respect to support for public health care that I presented last week be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented on the floor of this Legislature last week now be read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would request that the petition I presented last week supporting public health care in this province now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented on April 6, last Thursday, be now read and received.

1:40

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have a number of tablings today. The first tabling includes letters that were sent over the weekend between the Prime Minister and myself relative to health care in Canada, in particular the bill that is now before the House.

I would like to also table an article that appeared in the Calgary Herald, headlined MacBeth Started Billing for Upgrades. [interjections] Well, okay. Mr. Speaker, then I would like to table the order in council signed by then minister Nancy Betkowski putting in place the process whereby health facilities can charge for enhanced services.

I would like to table also a letter that was sent by the Leader of the Official Opposition to the archivist requesting that all ministerial records be transferred to the Provincial Archives "with a restriction on public access for fifteen years."

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to table a letter that I sent to the Prime Minister relative to his most recent appointment to the Canadian Senate. I want to make it clear that Mr. Banks is an outstanding Canadian who has done so much to enhance the cultural mosaic of our country. It is not the qualifications of Mr. Banks that I question; it is the process.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all this afternoon I would like to table five copies of my reply to the letter of April 7 received from the Hon. Allan Rock, Minister of Health for Canada. Also attached to the reply are five copies of a letter from the Hon. Diane Marleau sent on January 6, 1995, having to do with facilities.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Alberta Mental Health Board for the year ended March 31, 1999.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Alberta Cancer Board for the period ended March 31, 1999.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got three letters to table. The first one is from the United Church of Canada, Alberta and Northwest Conference. The letter of the church is requesting that Bill 11 be withdrawn.

The second letter, Mr. Speaker, is from Mr. Boulter from Sherwood Park opposing Bill 11.

The third one is a letter from Professor B.Y. Card, now a resident of Lethbridge, professor emeritus of the University of Alberta, also expressing profound concerns about Bill 11.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all I would like to table a letter that I wrote to the Premier on April 4 reminding the Premier of his promise to make the private hospital blank pages public documents.

I would like to table the answer to a question in this Legislature, which shows that private MRI clinics were not in operation in this province before May of 1993.

I would like to table a document called the Ambulatory Care Services policy developed in February of '91, which of course prohibits overnight stays in private clinics.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I haven't seen the documents the Premier tabled, but they sounded very different. This is a recommendation of the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the hospitalization benefits amendment regulation, which of course speaks to uninsured services being delivered in public hospitals with no incentive to the physician, not the private hospitals that's been proposed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's on behalf of Mr. Brodie, who is a constituent of Edmonton-Mill Creek. This is his "personal response to the MLA's report on the School Council Review." It is interesting that Mr. Brodie's great-grandmother was the first licensed school teacher in Alberta.

Thank you. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Whoa. [interjections] Whoa. Whoa. Whoa.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a report that was conducted by Martin Dooley and Lori Curtis of both McMaster and Dalhousie universities. The title of the report is Child Health and Family Socioeconomic Status in the Canadian National Longitudinal Survey of Children and Youth.

The second tabling is a report titled The Changing Nature of Home Care and Its Impact on Women's Vulnerability to Poverty. This research project was conducted by Morris, Robinson, Simpson, Galey, Kirby, Martin, and Muzychka for the Canadian Research Institute for the Advancement of Women and published in November of 1999.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters to table today with the appropriate number of copies from residents in opposition to Bill 11.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. They are from Laura Weckman and David Biggin-Pound, Aric Storck, and Lisa Young. All three tablings are letters to the Premier voicing their opposition to further development in Kananaskis Country by Genesis Land Development.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a program for a concert, Welcome to the 21st Century, that was held at the Jubilee Auditorium last Thursday evening. It was attended by a number of members from this Assembly. It featured the cadet honour band of the prairie region of cadets.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a copy of a letter to the Minister of Health and Wellness that was also copied to the Premier. It's from the Loowells of Edmonton, and their letter concludes, "I cannot support bill 11, and I will not support a government that does."

Mr. Speaker, the second is the appropriate number of copies of the Health Sciences Association of Alberta newsletter The Challenger, volume 10, March 2000, issue 2 with the headline article If It Walks Like a Duck, and Talks Like a Duck, It's Probably a Duck, where they conclude that approved surgical facility is code for private hospital.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to table today five copies of the 1998-99 Year in Review for the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, which is a review of activities for the council for the year ended March 31, 1999.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have 88 students accompanied by 11 adults from St. Teresa Catholic elementary school in the riding of Edmonton-Rutherford, 88 eager students all wanting to be future leaders and politicians. They are accompanied by teachers and group leaders as follows: Mrs. Camille Hamel; Mrs. Jackie Dahlen; Miss Alexandra Jerrard, a student teacher; Mrs. Yvette Beaudoin; Mr. Charles Stuart; Ms Kathy Kiss; Mrs. Judy Winters, a student aide; and parents and helpers Mr. Gus Baert, Mrs. Karen Hughes, Mrs. Margaret Kufuor-Boakye, Mrs. Mary Gibson, and finally Mrs. Sheryl Schuh. They're seated in both galleries. If they would please stand and receive the warm traditional greeting of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's not often that I get to introduce someone to you and through you to the Assembly, but I have five visitors from my constituency here today, and I would like for them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House. Their names are Bill and Teresa Church and their children Mike, Stephanie, and Maria. They're dedicated home schoolers, and they've brought their children here to observe the Assembly, so I'd ask the Assembly to greet them, please.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 14 students from Sir Alexander Mackenzie school in St. Albert. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Marlene Keanie, and associate teacher, Miss Cheryl Anne Coon. They are in the public gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislative Assembly this afternoon 10 individuals from Concordia University, Gold Bar campus. They are led by Dr. Linda Kerr. She's accompanied by nine students this afternoon. They are here to witness the proceedings in the Legislative Assembly. They're in the public gallery, and I would now ask that they rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 37 grade 10 students from Ponoka composite high school. They are accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Brady Teeling, and Mr. Ron Labrie, and I would welcome them to the Assembly and ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The group I'm going to introduce will be in the Legislature shortly, but for the record I would like to introduce them at this time. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you and to all members of the Assembly 21 students from Mee-Yah-Noh elementary school, which is in Edmonton-Glengarry, and they are participating, very enthusiastically I might add, in the School in the Legislature program this week. They're accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Marjorie Scharfenberger, along with her father, Mr. Wes Rider, who she recruited to help her and who is a retired principal from Edmonton public, as well as parent helper Mr. Leonard Bauder.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly this afternoon 14 political science students from Augustana University College in Camrose. They are visiting the Legislature today. They're accompanied by their instructor, Professor Roger Epp, and driver Brian Spielman. I believe they're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd like them to rise and be recognized by the Assembly at this time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly some very good friends of mine who are also neighbours and strong political supporters. In the members' gallery are my good friends Marilyn Tetz with her daughter Melanie Morgan, her grandsons Dustin and Braidon Morgan, her son Greg Tetz and his friend Leanne Kinsey. They're accompanied today by my lovely wife, Janis. I would ask the Assembly to please give them the traditional warm welcome.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Resource Group Inc.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Dr. Charles Wright, a vice-president of medicine at Vancouver hospital, has said, and I quote: current demand to dismantle the system is not coming from a public outcry but rather from a relatively small group of entrepreneurs and specialist physicians who stand to gain the most personally. My questions are to the Premier. Can the Premier tell Albertans whether his government or his handpicked regional health authorities are hiding any proposals to establish private hospitals in Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: Not that I know of.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, can the Premier, then, indicate his awareness of a document called Developing a Positive Working Relationship with Calgary Regional Health Authority written by Health Resource Group, which basically sets out a proposal to establish private hospitals in Alberta? I'm happy to table it.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if it has crossed my desk, I haven't seen it. Perhaps the hon. minister of health has, and I'll have him answer.

MR. JONSON: No, Mr. Speaker.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, as it indicates in the document that HRC is not accredited to do the surgery that requires an overnight stay for medical reasons, then why does the Premier need to proceed further when he already has the control over overnight stays that exists right now?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the policy alludes to providing some options under very strict conditions to regional health authorities for minor – and I stress “minor” – surgeries such as those that are being done in the Shouldice hospital in Thornhill, Ontario, where they have been very successful. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: The chair allowed the Leader of the Official Opposition to proceed with the question. The chair did not hear any interruptions. The chair then recognized the leader of the government to choose to respond, and then he heard a whole series of interjections.

The hon. leader of the government.

Health Resource Group Inc.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I heard from across the way a comment as it alludes to surgical services requiring an overnight stay. There are none in Alberta, as I understand it, that offer private stays relative to insured services. There is one, I understand, that offers services relative to WCB contracts and, as I understand it, a contract with the British Columbia government. The only other one that I know of offering medical surgical services is the Shouldice clinic in Thornhill, Ontario, which provides overnight stays for those patients who are recovering from hernia operations.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that Albertans have been wondering why this Premier is pushing ahead with his privatization plan for hospitals when his own studies, of course, show that contracting out to private, for-profit hospitals will result in longer waiting lists and higher costs. In terms of the question of why, which is so fundamental to Albertans, we've now got a very clear answer courtesy of the Health Resource Centre, which stands to make quite a substantial profit if the Premier's policy were to go ahead. My question is to the Premier. Given that the Health Resource Group says in this document that we have been given from the Calgary regional health authority that "Health Resource Centre . . . has been designed, built and equipped to meet all acute care hospital standards throughout the O.R., inpatient, and support areas," why wouldn't the Premier just come clean and admit that his government's policy is to make private hospitals operational in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, every policy document that we have released which, of course, purports at some time or another to become legislation specifically bans any person from operating a private hospital in this province.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that the Health Resource Centre has the "complete mechanical, electrical, hospital systems," why doesn't the Premier just come clean and admit that it is government's policy to make private hospitals operational?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I'm bewildered by the question, because obviously the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition has not read the bill and, if she has, does not understand the bill, does not understand the very, very simple phrase that's only six or seven words: "No person shall operate a private hospital."

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, can the Premier indicate what assurances have been given to prompt these people to invest obviously millions of dollars to set up private acute care hospitals? Why would anyone set up a private hospital unless they expected to be able to use it?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness supplement my answer, but HRG was set up to my knowledge some time ago to handle things that are not insured or not covered under Alberta health care, such as WCB contracts and, as I understand it, contracts with other provinces, perhaps as they relate to WCB and perhaps some uninsured services. I just don't know what they offer. I've never been through the hospital. I've never seen the hospital.

The only person I know in this Legislative Assembly who has actually visited the hospital is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I don't know if he did, but I know that his predecessor did, because she shared that information with me. She said it was a fantastic facility, but she couldn't support it, and I appreciate that.

Relative to HRG and its operations and so on, I'm sure the hon. minister knows more than I do.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Assembly, at least on the government benches, is quite aware that the issue of the Health Resource Group applying to the College of Physicians and Surgeons for accreditation to provide overnight stays is a matter of historic record. The College of Physicians and Surgeons at the time, while they were prepared to draft such bylaws, held back and sent a message in writing to the minister of health indicating that we needed to have legislation in this particular area to decide on whether or not such a facility should have accreditation.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind hon. members in the Official Opposition that that is exactly one of the major provisions of Bill 11: to put a strict legislative framework around any possible contracts with surgical facilities.

Speaker's Ruling Questions about Nongovernment Entities

THE SPEAKER: The chair would like to remind hon. members that to his knowledge the College of Physicians and Surgeons is not an agency of the province of Alberta and, further, that HRG is not an institution that's a part of the province of Alberta as well. So, please, let's be careful of what we do here.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, this is actually a very interesting business plan of the Health Resource Centre, and it talks to the political factors that are a difficulty for the centre. Given that it says "the political issues would be real, but could be managed through strategic cooperation," can the Premier describe what "strategic cooperation" is occurring between the Health Resource Centre and the Calgary regional health authority, his handpicked board members?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea whatsoever what strategy, if any, is being developed or devised between the Calgary regional health authority and the Health Resource Group. I have absolutely nothing to do with the Health Resource Group whatsoever, and I do take offence at the question that was shot across very gratuitously by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora asking me if I had any shares in HRG. How rude. How awful. Had that statement been made public, which I've just made public, it would be without question a point of privilege that purports to impugn my reputation.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that this newly received document from the Health Resource Centre says under the Political Factors which are difficult: "shared planning and ongoing coordination of a public and a media communication plan is proposed," can the Premier describe what is the ongoing public and media communications plan between his own handpicked Calgary regional health authority and the Health Resource Centre?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea. Certainly we had a strong desire to appoint Mr. Dinning as chair of the Calgary regional health authority, and I can't understand for the life of me why this hon. member would be opposed to Mr. Dinning. I mean, they were good, good buddies. Mr. Dinning was so involved in her leadership campaign. They were good buddies. I just can't understand why she is making such an issue of the appointment of Mr. Dinning.

Now, if this hon. member is so curious to find out what arrangements, what dealings, what conversations have taken place between HRG and the Calgary regional health authority, what I would advise her to do is what any good-thinking individual would do: pick up the phone and talk to the people at HRG. Is she afraid? Is she afraid to talk to the people at HRG? Is she afraid they will bite her or something like that? I mean, why ask me about third-party conversations? If she doesn't have the ability to pick up the phone and dial the number, I'll do it for her, Mr. Speaker. That's what I'd advise her to do.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I can understand why this Premier would avoid answering the question.

Let's go again to a third political factor identified by the Health Resource Group. It says that "agreements on key message content, timing, spokesperson(s) and methods of internal and external communications would be essential." Can the Premier describe what agreements have been concluded between HRG and the CRHA on the message, on the content, the timing, and the spokespersons for their private hospital?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, no I can't. I am not privy nor should I be privy to discussions between HRG and the Calgary regional health authority. I am not privy to those discussions, but the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition obviously wants to become privy. She wants to know more about those discussions, but she's asking me. She's asking the wrong person. If she wants to know about those discussions and the intent behind those discussions and what HRG hopes to achieve and the role of the Calgary regional health authority, then do the simple thing. I mean, a three year old can pick up the telephone. Surely the Leader of the Opposition can and find out for herself.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Private Health Services

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today the Premier tabled a document. According to this document in 1992 the then health minister amended the hospitalization benefits regulation to allow direct patient charges for so-called enhanced goods and services received in public hospitals. The New Democrats opposed the practice. The decision to provide an upgraded appliance should be based on the needs of the patient, not financial considerations. My questions are to the Premier. Why has the government not rescinded the 1992 regulation that allows direct patient charges for so-called enhanced medical services and goods?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this speaks to the bill and one of the amendments that will be introduced. The hon. leader of the third party does raise a very good point, and that is the order in council that was signed by the then minister of health, Nancy Betkowski, which states in 5.2 – and this applies to a publicly funded, full-scale hospital as we know it today, not a surgical clinic but a full-scale hospital, a person going in and expecting in a publicly funded hospital all of the services of that hospital. Nonetheless, she signed an order in council that was passed that says in section 5.2(1):

If a person requests and receives enhanced goods or services, other than accommodation, from an approved hospital, the board of that hospital shall charge that person the extra cost of providing those enhanced goods or services.

We're going to have to look at that, hon. member. We're really going to have to look at that, especially in public hospitals. To allow that, Mr. Speaker, is a total switch and a total change from her position today.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier again: in calling the Shouldice hospital a model for Alberta, why has the Premier failed to point out that the Shouldice is a premedicare, grandfathered private hospital and that Ontario legislation prohibits the granting of any new licences to private, for-profit hospitals?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, whether the hospital was grandfathered or not I think is a moot point. The fact is that it is operating. It has been an absolute success according to any authority that you talk to. It has established a centre of expertise relative to hernia operations. It has taken pressure off the public system, and it is still funded under the Ontario medical system. The procedures are still publicly funded under Ontario health care.

You know, we went through a situation here where we made the same argument, however unsuccessfully. That was the case of the Gimbel eye clinics, where for years and years – and I'm not sure how many years but at least ten years – the clinic had been charging a facility fee, and Ms Marleau, the federal minister at the time, said: well, I don't care how long they've been charging facility fees; we aren't going to grandfather it in; we're going to say that it's illegal. I guess they could say the same thing in Ontario relative to the Shouldice clinic, but they don't. They don't because the clinic has been a phenomenal success.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier seems to want to go back to the premedicare days. I don't know why.

My last question to the Premier is this. Why is the Premier surprised that the federal Health minister would consider surgical clinics with overnight stays to be private hospitals when the services they provide are identical to those offered by smaller public hospitals?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, in Mr. Rock's letter to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness – this is probably one of the most bizarre statements I have ever heard. You know, the good news is that without spending one single cent of taxpayer dollars, according to Mr. Rock with a stroke of Mr. Rock's pen, we now have 52 hospitals more than we did have. Fifty-two more hospitals than we had. With the stroke of his pen. Mr. Rock said that he considers surgical clinics to be hospitals. There are now 52 operating in this province. I don't know how many more are operating across Canada. The good news is that he's given us 52 new hospitals without spending a cent of taxpayer dollars. The bad news is that we don't whether he wants to close them all.

THE SPEAKER: To the last two hon. members who participated in question period, I'd ask you again to recognize that no preambles are permitted on supplementary questions.

The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Capital Region Governance

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Municipal Affairs publicly released the interim report on the Alberta capital region governance review last week. Prior to the release of the report a number of municipalities had said that they would not participate in the next phase unless the government indicated its acceptance of the recommendations. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Has the government accepted the recommendations contained in the interim report?

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, let me say how pleased I am with the hard work and the co-operative effort that has come forward to this point and the degree of achievement to this point. I also want to point out that this is an interim report. The recommendations to date are of a general nature, and of course there is a great deal of refinement that will have to take place in order to get the more detailed version of this process.

I've indicated that we generally are pleased with the recommendations, generally accept the recommendations and certainly look forward to the ongoing work that will be coming forward as we progress. I encourage the participants to continue to work together and to indeed make this capital region a region that's been designed here at home by the local municipalities, by the local participants.

MRS. O'NEILL: My first supplementary: will the provincial government or the minister start being more active in the review in order to provide specific direction on what the government would like to see accomplished in the next phase?

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Mr. Speaker, the mandate has always been to develop a made-at-home type of solution process, and indeed it's always been the government's intent to have the municipalities work and develop and devise the recommendations and to work out the development of these solutions that will be required.

We would certainly be pleased to have the chairman, Mr. Hyndman, carry on in the chair position. The level of participation will be determined by the participants themselves. Indeed, it will be driven by the local groups providing the information and the discussion partners and the needs that the municipalities find are required and are appropriate.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you. My second supplementary is to the same minister. What's the process that the Alberta capital region governance review will be following in developing the final recommendations?

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Well, as I see it, Mr. Speaker, the process will continue to be a local municipally driven process to develop the solutions that will be required. There are a lot of details to work out. There are a lot of issues and details that'll have to be worked out to bring this to a successful conclusion. The process is one that's been initiated through much of North America. Much of North America was regionalized years in the past, and indeed the original concept, the delivery of services, is working very, very successfully in these other areas.

I'll be awaiting the final report. Indeed, if there is a wish or need for the province to participate and that request comes forward from the local municipalities, we would certainly be very interested in working with the municipalities to develop a solution that will present the capital region in a more competitive mode with the rest of North America.

Health Resource Group Inc.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not only does this government's private health care policy allow for a small group of entrepreneurs and specialist physicians to gain all the upside, but it leaves the taxpayers paying for all the downside. It sounds very much like the Treasury Branch's mall refinancing deal or perhaps one of the Premier's Swan Hills deals. My questions this afternoon are to the Premier, of course. Given that the Health Resource Group in Calgary has clearly expressed their intention to participate in open discussions with the Calgary regional health authority related to joint planning and shared risk, will the Premier, speaking on behalf of his surrogate regional health authority, tell Albertans exactly what risks have been discussed? How much tax money is this Premier prepared to put at risk in those discussions?

MR. KLEIN: I don't know what he's talking about because there is no surrogate regional health authority, Mr. Speaker. If he's alluding to something that I control and I manage on a day-to-day basis, then I would consider the question to be irrelevant.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, given that nobody in Calgary elected Mr. Dinning to spend their one billion tax dollars, and given that HRG has said that they want to negotiate a "shared risk" agreement with the Premier's appointed regional health authority, would the Premier tell us precisely what negotiations have taken place to date and how much taxpayer money has been proposed to backstop agreements between the Health Resource Group and the Calgary regional health authority? It's real simple, Mr. Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Yes, I know it's real simple, Mr. Speaker. The question is a very simple question, but he's asking the wrong person. I have no knowledge of any negotiations that are taking place, have taken place, perhaps will take place between the Calgary regional health authority and HRG. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness can shed some light on the situation.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of what document, if there is a document, they refer to that is current. This, however, sounds suspiciously like a discussion that took place about three or four years ago when HRG first formed and was public at that time.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, that is very much forgotten in the thrust of the question of the member across the way is that the legislation that this Assembly is currently considering is designed to deal with any of the concerns that would arise in such discussions.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, scarier and scarier.

My final question to the Premier would be this: will the Premier admit that his private health care policy, at least as evidenced from what appear to be secret negotiations between HRG and his surrogate regional health authority, is all about getting back into the business of business? Isn't that really what this is about, Mr. Premier?

MR. KLEIN: No, Mr. Speaker. Without getting into any kind of a detailed answer, which I can't do because I have no knowledge of anything going on between the Calgary regional health authority and HRG, I take strong exception to the use of the word "surrogate" board or "surrogate" authority.

DR. TAYLOR: There's a surrogate opposition over there.

MR. KLEIN: Yes. Well, yeah, that is a surrogate opposition over there. Right. They had to find a Conservative to become their 'consurrogate' mother. [interjections] Right. Their surrogate leader. Well, maybe I will from now on talk about the surrogate Liberals, you know, under their surrogate leader, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Rosebud River Fish Kill

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Actually the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills does have the floor.

MR. MARZ: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There were reports of hundreds of dead fish along the stretch of the Rosebud River in my constituency this past Saturday. This is a concern to both my constituents and myself. My question today is to the Minister of Environment. Would the minister please explain what has caused so many fish in this river to die?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, any incident involving a fish kill is taken seriously by the Department of Environment. The department first became aware of this situation on the Rosebud River on Sunday and made arrangements to visit the site the very next day.

At this point we don't know the reason for this particular fish kill. There may be a number of reasons. A wildlife biologist and a conservation officer have visited the scene. This is standard procedure in these types of circumstances. The investigation by those people from the department will be an attempt to determine the cause of death for these fish and whether any further actions by the department are required.

Mr. Speaker, in the spring fish kills in Alberta water bodies are not uncommon, and it's usually the result of natural causes. However, as I indicated, at this point we don't know whether the fish kill in the Rosebud River was as a result of natural causes or if it was as a result of some other activity.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what natural phenomena would cause fish to die in this way?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has many water bodies in it in which fish sometimes find it difficult to survive over the winter, and there can be any one of a number of reasons for this. As an example, in water bodies where there's very little water movement, such as in lakes and in ponds, the decay of vegetation over the winter frequently depletes the level of oxygen that's available in the water. That makes it difficult for the fish to survive over winter, and they often die before spring, at which time they then wash up on the shore as the ice cover melts. Fish kill can also be a problem in slower moving rivers and streams, where oxygen levels are not as high as they are in faster moving rivers.

I want to emphasize again that at this point we do not know if the Rosebud incident was a result of natural phenomena or some other activity. Our investigation will determine what the cause of this incident was.

MR. MARZ: Mr. Speaker, my final question again to the same minister: what can your department do to prevent this occurrence from happening again?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we will complete our investigation to determine the cause of the fish kill in the Rosebud River, and until that time it would be premature for me to indicate what our course of action would be. I can say that if the incident is the result of natural phenomena, there is little that we can do beyond the water monitoring process that we already have in place, and we would continue to do that in the future. That's not just in the Rosebud River but throughout the province. If our investigation determines that there was a cause other than a natural cause, then we would take such action as would be required to ensure that it does not happen again.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Health Resource Group Inc.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's private health care scheme is nothing more than a blank cheque for a small group of entrepreneurs and specialist physicians who are going to gain the most, like the HRG backers. So my first question is to the Premier. Given that HRG says that "there would be no minimum number of surgeries, procedures, patients or beds," will the Premier admit that once in place his private hospitals policy means that there will be absolutely no limits placed on the capacity of private hospitals in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we don't have a private hospitals policy. As a matter of fact, again I allude to the policy, and that is that "no person shall operate a private hospital in Alberta." But we don't know where we stand now, because Mr. Rock, much to the surprise of not only myself, the Minister of Health and Wellness, certainly every other Premier in Canada, every other health minister in Canada, and every clinic operator – we don't know about dentists' offices. We're all very, very surprised to learn that Mr. Rock considers surgical clinics as hospitals. [interjections]

I allude to the letter – I'm getting a lot of yipping and yapping over there – relative to overnight stays. Mr. Rock's letter was quite clear. He said: I consider surgical clinics – he didn't mention overnight stays; he said surgical clinics. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, you know, again they haven't read the letter. They don't read the letter. It said: surgical clinics under the Canada Health Act I consider to be hospitals. That means that we have at least 52 more hospitals in the province.

Speaker's Ruling
Decorum

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, you asked a question. The hon. leader of the government responds to the question, and then you continue to interject. I don't understand this process.

I'm going to recognize you to ask a question, and then would you be quiet.

2:30 Health Resource Group Inc.

MRS. SOETAERT: My second question, with great hopes for an answer: given that HRG says, "Contracts could be defined by any appropriate criteria including: defined services, quota, length of time, or by dollar/budget amounts, outcomes, etc.," will the Premier admit that these are all just code words for being back in the business of business?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, no. I do see the letter here now. [interjection] Well, it was sent over apparently. I guess this is the stuff that was tabled. There are a number of dates. I allude to the one of December 9, 1998. Is that the one? Am I on the right track here? Help me. Is this the one? This is a letter to Dr. John Morgan, who was then chair of the Calgary regional health authority, where HRG was asking for a meeting with the Calgary regional health authority to explain what their operation is all about. It seems to me sort of a one-way communication. HRG is writing to the CRHA saying: here's what we're all about; here's some documentation; come and visit us; sit down; we want a half an hour luncheon meeting, maybe a tour of the facility. Nothing wrong with that.

What is confusing, however, is really the Alberta Liberals, who are always confused, and their federal cousin Allan Rock. It seems that there is a very deliberate campaign here to confuse the issues. I'm getting back to this whole point: what is a hospital, and what is a clinic? The most recent example, Mr. Speaker, is the letter from Diane Marleau. Now, the hon. Leader of the Liberal Opposition remembers Ms Marleau. I'm sure she does. No, no. Actually Marleau came after. Right.

Anyway, in the letter from Diane Marleau to our health minister in 1995, which has been tabled, Ms Marleau says exactly what I've been saying for months now relative to what a hospital is and what a private clinic is. She says:

While the . . . provision of many physician services at one time required an overnight stay in a hospital, advances in medical technology . . . has made it possible to offer a wide range of medical procedures . . . outside of full-service hospitals.

Right. And we know that.

I want to make it clear that my intent is not to preclude the use of clinics to provide medically necessary services. I realize that in many situations they are a cost-effective way to deliver services, often in a technologically advanced manner.

Then she goes on to say that she wants to bring consistency throughout the system and basically to eliminate facility fees. So what Ms Marleau is talking about is clinics being able to do a number of surgical procedures. Now, unbeknownst to all and much to our amazement, much to our astonishment, Mr. Rock comes out and says that they are now all hospitals. Mr. Speaker . . .

THE SPEAKER: Thank you very much. We're moving on here quite a bit.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question: given that HRG says, "Alternative pricing structures would be open for discussion including: fixed sum, price per unit of service, cost plus, gross dollar, etc.," will the government concede that its policy of contracting out isn't about maximizing health and minimizing waiting lists, but it is all about minimizing costs and maximizing profits for entrepreneurs?

MR. KLEIN: What the policy is all about, Mr. Speaker, is upholding the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act. What the policy is all about is protecting the publicly funded system as we know it today. What the policy is all about is putting rules and regulations in place relative to contracting out by RHAs to surgical clinics. There are 52 clinics operating now without regulations, without guidelines. That's what it is all about. It's about putting in place legislation similar to legislation that exists now in at least four other provinces, legislation to protect the publicly funded system, regulation and legislation to uphold the principles of the Canada Health Act, and legislation to make sure that all people who are sick and injured will need to access public health care in this province is their Alberta health care card. Nothing more, nothing less.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

School Attendance

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A constituent of Calgary-Fish Creek has brought to my attention a recent article that appeared in the Fraser Forum. Schools receive operating grants for students enrolled, and as taxpayers we pay whether they attend or not. He believes that attendance is important to success and that truancy leads to dropping out of school and delinquency and places students at higher risk for illegal behaviours. My questions are all to the Minister of Learning. Mr. Minister, do school boards provide attendance records to your ministry?

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for that question. No, individual school boards do not give us attendance records unless a child has been referred to the Attendance Board. What then occurs is that they ask the minister and the Attendance Board to rule on what happens to that child.

I think there are some indirect measures, and probably the best indirect measure is the measure of the number of students who graduate. Quite frankly, if the kids don't go to school, they're not going to graduate. So we do have an indirect measure, but the answer is no, we do not get a day-by-day, blow-by-blow attendance record.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question: Mr. Minister, given that school boards get paid for the number of students registered in the classroom, how do you keep track of who's in and who's out?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, what happens is that on September 30 of the school year, what is called a school count is done. The schools are then funded according to that count. We have looked at variations on that theme, whether or not we have two counts, whether or not we have three counts, and in each case the two and three counts have become very administratively cumbersome. In fact, we would waste dollars that could be put into use in the classroom. We feel that with the September 30 count, albeit some school jurisdictions are going to miss out, others are going to gain, so what we do is we do one count a year and fund the school jurisdictions according to that count.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you. What is the minister doing to retain students and keep them in attendance?

DR. OBERG: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, as I alluded to in my first answer, if kids are going to graduate from school, they do have to attend. School attendance is critical. School graduation is critical. Presently we have roughly 70 percent graduating from grade 12, and 70 percent, albeit a high number and one of the highest in Canada, still is not 100 percent, which is what we have to have.

Mr. Speaker, this morning I met with representatives from the Northland school district, from that general area, and in many locales they have a 5 or 6 percent graduation rate. So this is definitely something that we have to work on, it's something that we have to concentrate on, and I will give the hon. member my undertaking that it is of the highest priority of this department to get as many students as possible to graduate from grade 12.

Health Care Workforce

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, patients continue to suffer at the hands of this government as it constricts and reduces capacity in the public system in order to create a market for private hospitals in this province. Public MRIs sit idle, and whole floors of public hospitals sit empty because this government claims that there are insufficient, qualified professionals to operate those public facilities. My questions are to the Premier. How many doctors and nurses left this province as a result of this government's cuts to the public system?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I take exception to that. I would challenge this hon. member to show me, right after if he wants to, any MRI in a public hospital in this province sitting empty or idle. That is a ridiculous statement.

MR. BONNER: My next question is also to the Premier, Mr. Speaker. Given that HRG says that "agreements are also in place with several contract agencies” and that “HRC is confident they can staff up on short notice,” why isn’t the government utilizing this extra staff?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I’m going to have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness elaborate, but I think this is fundamental to what we’re trying to do not as it relates to HRG but to surgical clinics generally, that there are no rules and regulations surrounding the contracting out of these facilities to regional health authorities. That’s what it’s all about. It’s about that, and it’s about providing under very strict conditions, with the absolute concurrence of the highest of medical standards set down by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the ability to expand some minor procedures perhaps, possibly, if it ever happened, to overnight stays. That’s the only thing that is perhaps different. The bill doesn’t speak to – well, I can’t mention the bill. The policy doesn’t speak to overnight stays. It’s silent, much as the legislation is in other jurisdictions on this issue.

But if anything is to happen, it has to meet the most stringent of conditions. Whether it’s HRG or any clinic that is now existing and wants to have its contract renewed or any other clinic that wants to open up and offer another service, they will have to meet the strictest of conditions.

The way the Liberals would have it is to not have the bill at all and let everything be wide open the way it is today. That’s what they’re advocating, Mr. Speaker.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister of health admit that creating staff shortages in the public system was a deliberate strategy by this government to create a market for private hospitals in Alberta?

MR. JONSON: No, Mr. Speaker. The government has demonstrated its commitment to the funding of the health care system through our current three-year business plan, through our very significant reinvestment of dollars in the health system of this province. I would like to remind members across the way that during this past year the number of doctors practising in the province increased very significantly, something that we are very grateful for and is not characteristic of a number of other provinces.

We have hired an additional 1,200-plus frontline staff, Mr. Speaker, as projected in our last business plan, and we plan to accommodate many more in the coming two years, so that is something we’re certainly giving priority to. Yes, we do have a very competitive job market right now. There are many people vying for the talents of the professionals and support workers in the health care system, but it is very well demonstrated in our overall approach and in our overall plan for health and wellness in this province that we do need and we do value and we do plan to expand our health workforce.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Fish Conservation

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sauder Reservoir, or Rattlesnake Lake as it’s known locally, is a popular water sport and recreational fishing area around the Medicine Hat area. Recently there have been changes made to the regulations regarding sportfishing across Alberta and specifically at Rattlesnake Lake that have a number of my constituents upset. My questions today are to the Minister of Environment. I would like to ask on behalf of my constituents: why is it that the number of fish that can be kept by fishermen has been drastically reduced in the past year or so?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, when you look at the number of lakes that contain fish in the province of Alberta, it would be roughly 1,000 lakes, and we issue roughly 300,000 to 400,000 anglers’ licences each year, so the fishing pressure would be 300 to 400 anglers per lake. Compare that with the province of Saskatchewan, where there are close to 100,000 lakes and the number of anglers per lake is more in the range of about two anglers per lake.

As a consequence, Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal more pressure on the fish populations in the province of Alberta than in other parts of Canada. While many anglers enjoy fishing as a recreation, to get outside with friends and family, and practise catch and release, there are still a number of people who would prefer to keep some of the fish they catch. That’s the reason that we do place a limit on the number of fish that any angler can catch and possess at one time. The current catch limits of three walleye and three pike spread the catch around so that more anglers have the opportunity to catch and keep a few walleye and pike from the reservoir.

MR. RENNER: Mr. Speaker, since the anglers who have talked to me indicate that the larger fish have more eggs and hence reproduce more rapidly than the smaller fish, why is it that the larger fish are the ones that are kept and the smaller fish are the ones that are turned back?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Environment uses a number of techniques to maintain fish populations in the province, but explaining the minimum-size limits requires an examination of the status of our fish populations. As I indicated earlier, there are enormous fishing pressures because of the number of anglers, and as a consequence fish populations have decreased. When this happens, the large fish are the first ones to go because they’re currently in low numbers. That’s why there are minimum-size limits that have been introduced to protect small and medium-sized fish: to build back our fish populations and ensure that the fish have spawned at least twice before reaching the size allowed for harvest by anglers.

Mr. Speaker, the small to medium-sized fish that are protected by the minimum-size limits contribute the majority of the total eggs spawned each year, and that’s why the minimum-size limit of 63 centimetres is used, to protect the majority of the spawning population of fish.

MR. RENNER: Mr. Speaker, my final question is really the crux of the issue and the one that most people ask me about. If there is so much pressure on the fish population in Alberta, then why are we allowing commercial fishing on a small lake like Rattlesnake Lake in Medicine Hat?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a fine question. My department staff have been working with anglers and with lake advisory committees to develop management plans to protect the fishery. In the case of Rattlesnake Lake, commercial fishing for whitefish is heavily regulated and monitored to make sure that there’s a minimal impact on the nontarget species such as walleye and pike. Tolerance limits for these nontarget species have been set, and when the limits are reached in the commercial fishery, then it is shut down regardless of whether the whitefish limit has been reached or not.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now we’ll begin with the first of three recognitions today.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Volunteer Week

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the week to recognize and raise awareness of volunteerism. April 9 to 15 is designated as Volunteer Week in Alberta.

I love volunteering. I have volunteered to support causes I believe in, volunteered to try something new to learn different skills, to help a friend or a family member, and volunteered just to have fun.

I'd like to recognize the efforts of the Edmonton and Calgary volunteer centres for the hands-on, frontline work they do in recruiting, training, and placing volunteers and also for their work in the charitable nonprofit sector to increase awareness of good volunteer management practices. I'd also like to recognize the advocacy and policy roles played by Volunteer Alberta and Volunteer Canada. At the same time, I want to caution this government against assuming that every program and service can be or should be downloaded to the voluntary sector. Volunteers are not free, as I've heard some member say. Individuals may donate their time for no pay, but voluntary-sector agencies and organizations still incur costs in running their organizations.

Once again, I recommend to the government the excellent panel report Building on Strength: Improving Governance and Accountability in Canada's Volunteer Sector. Thank you.

2:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mill Woods Community League President's Council

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize the members and the work of the Mill Woods Community League President's Council. This council is made up of the presidents of the community leagues that serve the 90,000 citizens of Edmonton-Mill Woods, Edmonton-Ellerslie, and Edmonton-Mill Creek. The council meets monthly, along with community service, recreational, and cultural representatives and elected officials, to promote services and to respond to community needs. The president's council is unique. From sponsoring Canada Day celebrations to monitoring pipeline safety and co-ordinating sports events, the council is involved. The members of the council volunteer their time to both their local community and to the efforts of the council.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and myself congratulate the council this week as we recognize volunteers. We congratulate the council on its work. Together they make Mill Woods an even finer place to work and live.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Cadet Honour Band

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to stand today to recognize here the cadet honour band of the prairie region, whose theme for this year was Welcome to the 21st Century. This was a very enjoyable evening at the Jubilee Auditorium, Edmonton. The honoured guest this year was Her Honour Lois Hole, the Lieutenant Governor. After O Canada was sung, all stood to pledge the oath of Canadian citizenship, which was for many in the audience their first time.

The cadets were representative of sea, land, and air. All 10,000 cadets in the prairie region are eligible to audition for the prairie region cadet music concentration, Exercise Honour Band. Video-taped auditions are prepared during September and October and submitted to the regional cadet music adviser by the 15th of November. The tapes are reviewed and initial selections announced by Christmas. During the months of January and February final auditions are conducted in person at preliminary rehearsals. A six-day training period is scheduled for all selected cadets, after which five concerts are performed between April 1 to 6, 2000. The concerts are in Edmonton, Calgary, Saskatoon, Winnipeg, and Thunder Bay.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on a point of order.

Point of Order

Offending the Practices of the Assembly

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My point of order refers to an exchange in question period between my colleague from Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert and the Premier. I will cite Standing Order 23, in particular the subsection regarding making "allegations against another member," which is section (h), and (l), regarding the introduction of "any matter in debate which offends the practices . . . of the Assembly."

During that exchange, Mr. Speaker, I think it typified the way that the Premier has been distorting several facts regarding the position of the federal government and of the Official Opposition. In fact, the way that he was whittling away around the truth, I wonder whether or not we were looking at the same letter. The correspondence he was referring to, dated April 7, 2000, from the Hon. Allan Rock, the federal minister, makes it very clear that his concern is the surgical facilities as defined in Bill 11. The Premier would have Albertans believe that the minister was referring to the 52 existing freestanding clinics, none of which do inpatient services or allow for overnight stays. The Premier keeps on seeming to forget that fact, but the federal minister didn't forget that fact, and he knows that the surgical facilities as defined under Bill 11 would be considered hospitals under the Canada Health Act because they will admit patients overnight.

I would hope that the Premier would (a) withdraw his allegation that members of the Official Opposition were not familiar with the correspondence from the federal minister, and (b) I wish he would stop offending the practices of this Assembly by introducing into debate matters which just simply aren't true and therefore offend the practices of this Assembly, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief. There is no point of order. All the hon. member across the way has done is simply clarified his party's position regarding the particular matter. It's a question of interpretation of the documents in question.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I will say briefly that for much of question period today after the HRC document was tabled, the opposition went to great lengths to misrepresent the contents of that particular document not only in this House but also to ensure that their message was conveyed to those watching on the Access channel.

In any event, nothing's been distorted. It's a question of interpretation, and he's simply used the point of order to clarify his party's position with respect to the matter.

Thank you.

head: Statement by the Speaker

Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, today in the question period 36 and a half minutes of the 50 minutes devoted to the question period related to health-related matters. This is day 25 of this particular session, and over the past weekend I have reviewed all the Hansards starting with day 1 through to day 24. The conclusion basically is that on any given day we're spending approximately 35, 36, 37, 38 minutes out of the 50 minutes with respect to health matters.

Now, that in and of itself is not unremarkable. What is remarkable is that if one takes a look at the Order Paper for day 25, Monday, April 10, 2000, it clearly lists, as was alluded to, that on Monday, April 10, there would be debate on Bill 11 in the afternoon, Bill 11 in the evening. Then if I look at Tuesday, April 11, it says Bill 11 in the afternoon, Bill 11 in the evening. If I look at Wednesday evening, Bill 11. If I look at Thursday, April 13, again it says Bill 11.

These questions are so on the line, so on the line. The thought was as of last Tuesday, when we were going to go to the actual scheduling of second reading of Bill 11, that in essence that would preclude a lot of questions, and then very skillfully the word "policy" got into the whole thing.

There's absolutely no doubt at all in my mind that question period is no longer question period. Question period has now become debate period and a further extension of the whole thing. So if we're going to take another 36 to 37 minutes a day in the question period for debate, those who are taking and garnering up the minutes associated with Bill 11 might take the liberty of saying: well, we've had an additional 36, 37 minutes a day with respect to this.

I presume that the questions with respect to a letter from a federal minister are here simply because there is a bill before the House that basically is looking at a particular policy. Otherwise, we wouldn't normally even be talking about a letter from a particular federal minister. That's the only reason, I would suspect, that it comes at this point in time.

It seems to me that what we just had again here is another further point of clarification arising out of a further point of debate that we continue to deal with. If the questions and the answers are going to be in the area of debate, well, then so be it, but it seems to me the House is missing a grand opportunity to deal with other business that the citizens of the province of Alberta might have. However, that's the choice of hon. members who are recognized, to raise whatever question they want.

Factually and very, very clearly today there were 36 and a half minutes out of 50 minutes on health-related matters, yet the agenda says that this afternoon and this evening and tomorrow and the next day and the next day are devoted to Bill 11. If one goes back and, on the other hand, researches the previous 24 days, you will see the statistics that I quoted today basically following through again.

head: Orders of the Day

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

[Adjourned debate April 6: Mr. MacDonald]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This bill does little to protect individuals or Albertans in general. The government has three choices: scrap the bill, amend it to disallow overnight stays in approved surgical facilities, or ram it through and hope the firestorm dies down. Like the Titanic, charging ahead at full steam through a sea of icebergs, so goes this government, charging ahead with Bill

11. April 14 is the anniversary, only four and a half days away from the sinking of the mighty ship. Is the year 2000 going to be the year of the going down of this provincial government?

Our Premier claimed that he and his government were listening. Of course, he failed to explain who they were listening to. The Premier has resorted to name-calling, which simply underlines the weakness and desperation of his arguments. Concerned Albertans have been insulted by the Premier and recently have been called left-wing nuts. I am not a left-wing nut, maybe a wing nut if that satisfies the Premier's tantrum.

As one of the government MLAs mentioned to me in a conversation, Bill 11 will have same the same effect on the residents of Alberta as did the effects of Bill 40, on which the government invoked closure in December 1999. Their thoughts seem to be: just give it six months after pushing it through and Albertans will forget all about it. What's wrong with this picture? Perhaps Ralph's team is like the crew of the Titanic, being led to the disaster. Why? As many, many Albertans are concerned about the health care system, which should be here to protect our children and our grandchildren, we should always be very vigilant to the statements repeated over and over again by this Premier: trust me; while I am the Premier of this province, there will be no two-tier health system in this province. What happens after he isn't the Premier?

What is wrong is that these politics are not the words of the bill. A feeling is now deeply embedded in many Albertans that Klein's administration has a secret plan to erode public health care. People don't trust this government and their health care. I repeat: Albertans don't trust this government with their health care, nor should they. Premier Klein has been unclear about his intentions. Not long ago he openly questioned why those people with money shouldn't get faster access. This goes totally against the sense of fairness and equality that Albertans have, and they resent it. Is this like creaming from the top?

Bill 11 allows certain services to be contracted out to the private clinic hospitals, but at what cost to the public system? Does privatizing mean cheaper, or does it set up people or companies to profit at our expense? We can only draw one conclusion, which unfortunately cannot be proven. I believe that sometime in the future there will be a personal gain for the Premier and some of his close and party supporters. Let's not forget what the present head of the Calgary regional health authority and former Treasurer of this province said on national television a short while ago: it is better to experiment on our health system than it is to plan. Can you believe this arrogance? How can we trust this government with these thoughts in the back of our minds?

Remember Multi-Corp? Remember Mr. and Mrs. Klein, Mr. and Mrs. Love, and their shares? Is a block of shares still being held by one of these people's brothers? Were they really turned back?

MR. HAVELOCK: A point of order.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order Referring to a Member by Name

MR. HAVELOCK: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is well aware that he should not be using the individual names of the members of this House in the way that he has.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: That's absolutely correct. Does the hon. member want to make a point on this point of order?

MR. GIBBONS: No.

THE SPEAKER: Well, four times the Speaker has written down the use of these names and was waiting for such a point of order to be arrived at. That is clearly not in the tradition of this House, but more importantly the chair has had an opportunity to talk to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning on a number of occasions and does not view that that's his personality. It's not his personality coming through, in the chair's view.

So, hon. member, would you kindly refrain from the activity with which you just conducted yourself on a minimum of four occasions in the last few minutes and proceed with whatever points you want to make in participation.

MR. GIBBONS: Sorry, Mr. Speaker, in that particular case.

MR. GIBBONS: Who would have guessed some of these things that have happened over the past few years? It happened in the federal system in past governments. Again alluding to the Titanic, the arrogance of its owners and navigators led to its destruction. Could this be the final arrogance that will sink this Tory government?

The polls which were published in our papers over the past few weeks confirmed that the rebellion against Bill 11 is not merely an Edmonton issue or that of the wing nuts. In two of the traditionally most Conservative regions of this province, resistance is strong. In central Alberta more people oppose Bill 11 than support it. In southern Alberta opposition is high, as high as it is in Edmonton. No longer can rural Albertans be taken for granted as the unquestioning supporters of anything this government does.

We also read of the slim margin featured in the article from the major newspaper in Calgary. I can only compare this paper, in its coverage and in its articles on this particular case, as being no different than a streetwalker, without saying the direct words.

In the move to oppose this bill, I will state that it's too vague and it's lax in hard facts. To Albertans trying to comprehend this bill, it's not what the bill says; it's what it doesn't say. The surgical facilities referred to in the bill are in reality private hospitals. The bill claims to ban private hospitals, but on closer examination it fails in its promise. For example, the bill could not stop a person from providing hospital services as long as the facility was not a full-service hospital. If emergency services were not provided, for example, the institution would no longer fall within the definition of a private hospital.

It does not prohibit people from privately paying for MRI scans or any other diagnostic tests. People who can buy an MRI can queue-jump ahead of other people who are on the waiting list for diagnostic tests, which will then lead to faster surgery or other treatment. The bill claims to ban queue-jumping, but in reality patients do pay extra money. In order to jump ahead in the line, they pay extra money to get the service they require, and this bill will still allow that. When it states in the bill that it will not allow queue-jumping and will provide large fines for violations, who will be the watchdog on this one? The person who has been allowed to move ahead in the line will not be complaining. How will we know? Are we going to spend more money for some bureaucrats to watch this? For example, could this be the same person who's protecting this government over the West Edmonton Mall financing information?

This government didn't get involved in queue-jumping for the $2,000 per eye cataract operation in Calgary until the nationally televised health documentary about Alberta. To this we only received lip service from the Minister of Health and Wellness.

Whether he actually is doing anything about this issue is the big question.

Nothing in this bill ensures that contracting out services to private facilities will open more beds within the public system. Hospital beds, operating theatres, and other services are already available to open up within the public hospitals but remain closed because of the shortage of funding or professional staff. It is fundamentally incorrect to think that the solution to this problem of scarce resources within the public system is to split the resources between the two systems. Why isn't it better to take the same amount of money that the Premier and his government would hand over to the private hospitals and give it to the public hospitals, which have the capabilities to meet the needs? Where's the evidence that giving the same amount of money to the private hospitals is going to cost less in the long run or provide a better income?

We only have to go over to the University hospital and ask why a previous cataract operating theatre sits empty and is a play/waiting room. This operating theatre, previous to the dismantling and tinkering in our health care system, performed 18 cataract operations per day. If you take this and multiply it by 20 days per month, there were 360 patients receiving operations per month. Multiply that by your 12 months and let's calculate it. Would this not help in clearing the backlog?

The government has given no data to show that this will be of benefit to the health care system. What kind of a department is this minister of wellness running? Perhaps the data is available, but it does not show any information that the government wants us to see. We read that this government admits to the fact that this legislation is based upon a philosophical basis. Mr. Speaker, if they have data, then show us, the severely normal Albertans.

There have been some positives. The government dissolved some 150 health boards and came up with 17. This proved to be smart. Maybe all we need are eight regions in the province. Guess who were chosen to run these regions? Friends of this government. A promise by the Premier to elect two-thirds of this board in the 1998 civic election never came to be, but the Premier now has promised it for the 2001 civic election. How many promises in his political career have been broken like this past one?

The Capital region health board has done a very good job in holding their budget in check while they witness their neighbour to the south in Calgary spend at will and still receive more money in the latest handout.

This government hasn't given proper time to see if the centralization of supply and services and the linen service will work. I believe that this was a matter of cost savings, to buy as one instead of all the separate entities.

Then we hear from this government that this bill has no bearing on the free trade agreement. Well, many experts are not so sure. As I understand it, the clause that could be the problem indicates that the U.S. companies have to be treated the same as Canadian companies. Does that mean that U.S. firms can demand equal opportunities? Once the door is open, it may not be able to be closed. Like the old statement, once the barn door is open, the stallion is already out.

Under the leadership of Premier Klein in 1992, the political spin of the day in this province was the same as in Australia, New Zealand, and England, where cash-strapped governments were looking for ways to react to their overspending. Someone had the brilliant idea to decimate our health care because health care was the root of government overspending. Starting with the spin that by dismantling the health care system the government would save money, a slow creep of privatization began, especially in Calgary. With control over health care, everyone would be happy. The government would save money, a small percentage, but friends of the government, the private operators would make money. The patients would be served.

Mr. Speaker, there's been a void in support in this country for the plan over the last seven years of both the federal and provincial governments in their pretext of reducing their debt. While there's downloading at the federal and provincial levels, the health system has had a tremendous growth in technology. Not only has technology grown; so have improvements and costs of pharmaceutical advancements. Maybe health care is costing more, but what is too much? With the new and advanced technology, remember that there was never a plan.

With 8,200 nurses let go in the province, many leaving the province, nursing schools were shut down. Now we have a tremendous shortage of nurses, and our regions are trying many methods of attracting nurses back into the system. Remember that hospital beds, operating theatres, and other services are already available to open up within the public hospitals. These remain closed because of a shortage of funding or professional staff. This week a notice was given to the OR staff recommending that they ask for pay for overtime instead of banking time when forced to work overtime because of the shortage of OR nurses. Staff would have to submit for overtime. As of July 2000 staff would bank time, and some 20 to 30 days would be paid out. Doesn't this highlight a shortage of staff? It should be noted that our hospital personnel morale has been decimated. Where doctors once walked into an operating room knowing that they had a familiar team of professional staff to back them up, now they may not.

I have had many conversations with health care workers and caregivers. This government has experimented without a plan and with no input from workers who weren't in upper management. People in the field such as my wife, who has been a nurse for 30 years, couldn't be consulted because it would be considered that she had a vested interest. This was told to her by the mayor of Edmonton on a social occasion. Her answer or question back to him: what knowledge could he present to the health system, being a former tire salesman or store owner? Figure that.

What these individually picked Tory friends who sit on the regional health boards fail to realize is that the clinical practitioners and nurses have various capabilities of critical-thinking skills, from expert to novice. Nursing is an art and a science, with applied knowledge from various academic facilities to provide the highest possible level of care to the general public. Nurses are self-governed professionals, not unlike doctors, engineers, and lawyers. They hold full legal and ethical accountability for their actions. We're witnessing that this government has already said, given that they've given money into the system, that these nurses are an asset. Maybe when this country at large recognizes that professional nurses are an investment, not a liability, the future of health care will be secured.

I learned very early in my career that if you want to save time and money, ask people who are the most affected by the proposal. It's the frontline workers who know where the waste is and how to eliminate it. The government did not do this and therefore did little to rectify some work patterns of the past. The peaks and the valleys in health care funding do little to give any stable system to manage health care budgets. Real reform means stable funding, the utilization of multidisciplinary teams working together to meet patients' needs in the most appropriate setting, whether it be acute care, long-term care, or home care, and increased health promotion and health preventions.

The most disturbing aspect when reading the newspaper articles and reading between the lines is trying to understand why this provincial government is pushing ahead with Bill 11. We as Albertans have witnessed the political appointments on the health boards of personal friends and political hangers-on, who in some cases contribute little but manage to remain on the inside track.

Today we realize that when the voting public gives any political party an overwhelming majority such as this Conservative government, we are basically allowing dictatorship. Citizens should be allowed to vote on Bill 11. An election should be called. This bill is so narrow, so ill conceived and detrimental to the future of public health in Alberta that there is no option: no amendments, no tinkering, no Bill 11. Scrap this bill.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce an amendment to Bill 11. I have copies to hand out, and I'll just wait until they're handed out to everybody.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please proceed.

MR. GIBBONS: Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce an amendment at this time reading that

Bill 11, Health Care Protection Act, be not now read a second time but that the order for second reading be discharged, the bill withdrawn, and the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

Mr. Speaker, over the last few weeks since this bill has been introduced, too many Albertans have spoken out with their concerns. They have spoken out to us by petitions, they have spoken out by letters, and they have given their concerns as to why this bill should be pulled. Alberta did have a top health care system. We can be there again, not by tinkering but by building a plan. Competition in health care will not be resolved by having a second system. We have to rebuild. I had mentioned in my speech before that we have operating theatres, that we have floors in hospitals that should be worked on first. The money being put back in the last few months isn't the answer either. We do not have the people. We do not have the staff. The system has been decimated to a point where it has to be looked at in some respect, and we are very, very concerned.

We look at what's happened in other countries, and we read extensively about what's happened in Australia, New Zealand, England. Most Canadians feel very strongly about what has happened in the United States. We do not want to get there. We talk about a two-tier system. We talk about the American system. We as Canadians look, talk, and do everything like Americans, but we have something that we should be proud of. We have a very precious thing: public health care.

In my speech I mentioned about the void that has happened over the last seven years in our governments across Canada, starting at the federal level and down. That void should be worked on. We should be putting pressure on the federal government to draw the provinces in to deal with this. We should not be sitting and trying to point fingers and whatever. I fully back up Albertans saying: let's get the federal government involved in this.

Why the Premier would want to destroy the health system is the biggest question that people are asking me. Well, tinkering with it and experimenting with it is not building anything more than what we're doing. The other item that's been asked of me: is the Premier at least trying to fix the system? With the amendments that were talked about and on which we heard the minister the other day, requiring the RHAs to look at existing resources before contracting out, well, why wasn't this done before?

This bill is legally correct. If you turn the legal beagles loose on it, there's nothing they can be pointing a finger at. Principle 11 of the federal system is probably the only thing there can actually be blame on. Principle 11, Bill 11: is there any coalition there?

We also hear of the strength of the privative clause. Nobody is above the law. We should not even think about that. We should scrap it, relook at the bill, and bring it in another day. We need further studies. The point is that the Minister of Health and Wellness has actually said that the studies haven't been done to date.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the Assembly now has before it a debate on an amendment to Bill 11. Hon. members might want to refer to Beauchesne with respect to this. It has been the tradition of our Assembly that when we do have amendments with respect to bills, the amendment itself is the matter for debate, not the bill. Just so there's absolute clarity in here, we're now debating that

Bill 11, Health Care Protection Act, be not now read a second time but that the order for second reading be discharged, the bill withdrawn, and the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

That is the amendment we are now debating. Not Bill 11 but the amendment.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to speak to this amendment to Bill 11. I think it is critically important that this matter be sent to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations as soon as possible. We do believe that at this time, in the best interests of Albertans, this bill should be discharged at second reading, withdrawn, and referred to that committee. The reason for that becomes readily apparent to anyone who has concerns with this particular bill. If we take a look at the Premier's comments of last Tuesday in his opening speech in the debate, we can look for a level of consistency in his remarks with what's been said inside and outside of the House and with what actually exists within the bill. There are certainly enough examples of what I would consider to be inconsistencies that it is important for this matter to be put before this committee.

When speaking of this committee, I would refer all hon. members to one of the last meetings of the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, which occurred on Tuesday, May 29, 1984. In the minutes of that particular meeting there is a bit of an outline in terms of the expectations of what that committee does and who it works with from the community. I think it's important to spend a few moments reviewing that, Mr. Speaker, because as we well know, this particular committee certainly has never been called since I've been in the Legislature, seven years now, and by the looks of it, in terms of what I could find in the library, it has not been called since Wednesday, January 30, 1985. In fact, the committee performs a very valuable function in this Assembly.

If we refer back to the minutes of 1984, the committee was called, and a member of the board of the Institute of Law Research and Reform was asked to make a presentation at that committee. This fellow, Mr. Hurlburt, goes on to explain why it's important to have this committee and why the Institute of Law Research and Reform is an integral part of that committee and can certainly contribute to legislation in this province. He states in his comments there that he asked for a meeting with the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations as a result of the Attorney General and the institute speaking and deciding "that they wished to establish a good means of communicating with both the government and the legislature."

He went on to explain that the Institute of Law Research and Reform was a self-structured, self-directed body of lawyers whose advisory function was to recommend improvements in the law. These recommendations were primarily directed through the office of the Attorney General but when other Departments of government were involved, the Institute dealt with the Ministers directly concerned.

Those ministers directly concerned in this instance and, in addition to that, all members who are members of the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations are in the Legislature and do have for review before them Bill 11.

He goes on to talk about how the institute or other members "may see something wrong in a particular piece of legislation or the Attorney General may ask the Institute to look into a particular issue." In this case, in this particular bill, Mr. Speaker, we see a number of things that are wrong. We see inconsistencies that are wrong. We see interpretations that we feel need to be clarified because, certainly on this side of the House, we feel that many of the interpretations made by the government members are incorrect.

Mr. Hurlburt goes on in this discussion to talk about how the time the Institute devoted to projects would be wasted if persons in government did not take an interest in what they were doing and they hoped that the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations would take such an interest. The Committee could be empowered to look at their suggestions, form an opinion and get it into the legislative process and in that way, members would see it as coming from a committee representing the whole Legislature with no political overtones.

So this is very relevant to our discussion today, Mr. Speaker. In fact, on a bill of this magnitude, that will have this kind of power over the province of Alberta and how the moneys of the people of Alberta are spent and how health care is delivered in the future in this province, we certainly hope that those decisions are made with no political overtones.

What better way to measure that, Mr. Speaker, than to send this bill and the multitude of concerns involved with it and surrounding it to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, who would have for support Parliamentary Counsel and representatives from the Institute of Law Research and Reform. That would certainly ensure that outcomes from that would not have political overtones, I'm sure. Having the committee empowered to look at the suggestions and to form an opinion and to get it into the legislative process is also a very important aspect of what this committee will do when they can review Bill 11, review all of the information available on it from a variety of sources, and then come back with a recommendation.

As we see, Mr. Speaker, the debate is getting more and more heated as we progress in this Legislature. It is certainly a time for calm heads to reign and to begin the process of making decisions about this legislation that would be done in a completely nonpartisan fashion, that will weigh the merits of all the arguments, will address those as compared to how the legislation reads, make suggestions for improvements at that time to the legislation, and then we can go forward.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, it will do nothing to detract from the bill. Certainly the possibility is that it will do everything possible to enhance the bill, and that's what we're asking for. We're asking for all Members of this Legislative Assembly, regardless of which side of the floor they sit on, to take a look at the significance of this bill in terms of its impact on the history of this province and on the people of this province and to make their decisions based on that impact, not on which political party they belong to, not on any form of partisan politics, but on the merits of the bill, on the potential for improvements, taking into consideration all of the concerns that have been heard from throughout the province at this point in time. We would be happy to support that kind of a move and to point out to the members of the Assembly some of the things that I think could be reviewed by that standing committee.

I'm going to address just a couple of the issues that I had with what the Premier was saying in his address last Tuesday. In his remarks, Mr. Speaker, he talked about shortening waiting lines. Specifically, what he said was that this will "give us one more tool to use in our efforts to drive down waiting lists and waiting times that only prolong pain and suffering." Well, first of all, I have a problem with this because it's the direct actions of this government that have caused those waiting lines to increase and that have directly caused the increased suffering of people in this province.

3:30

The drastic cuts that this government brought in in 1993 were completely unsustainable, and they knew that at the time. We had gone through a period of health care funding in this province where, if you looked at the funding on a total basis, on a gross basis, yes, health care funding was going up year by year, but if you looked at it on a per capita basis, Mr. Speaker, it was flat. It was a level amount of spending that was being spent per person in the province. There were problems in the system. It wasn't a perfect system; that's for sure. Rather than doing what the government did and escalating the problems by drastically introducing cuts, they should have taken a look at the system, evaluated it in terms of assessing what was wrong with the system and what could be improved in it, and then gone about fixing the system.

Well, that wasn't what they wanted to do. They made these drastic cuts. Drastic cuts meant that we lost a number of very valuable staff in this province to hospitals south of the border. We lost doctors, we lost nurses, and we lost other staff. A few of those people have come back, Mr. Speaker, but not the large majority of them. So we are in a state now where we are still understaffed in many of those areas.

The government saw that that didn't work, Mr. Speaker, that drastically cutting health care costs just made people mad and it really hurt the health care system as a whole. So in the last year and a half, when the revenue stream of the government has been more positive than it was in the past, what we've seen is a drastic increase in spending, also unsustainable in the long term if the same number of dollars keeps being added to the system. However, having said that, we are still not back at the per capita funding levels that we were at prior to '93. We see that with all this money dumped back in the system, the system still isn't working. This government doesn't know what to do about that particular situation. What they're going to do, then, to try and solve it is to institute private-funding mechanisms.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

So the question is: will it address the Premier's point of shortening the waiting lines? Of course it won't, Mr. Speaker. If this government could prove that were the case, then we would have seen that information tabled in this Legislature. In fact, we would have seen it shoved down our throats at every possible opportunity. Instead, what do we see tabled in this Legislature with regard to documentation saying that the introduction of private health care in this province will shorten waiting lists? We've seen nothing, not one report, not one study. In fact, the studies that we have seen, some of them commissioned by this very government, indicate only that waiting lists will continue to increase.

Then let's talk about the Premier's other point at the very beginning of his speech, which was that shortening these waiting lines and introducing private health care will lower costs. Once again, that simply hasn't been documented. Every study we've seen, once again including the studies tabled by this government, indicates that costs will only go up. In fact, last week we had the Premier saying that too, so he has contradicted his own statement. He has tried to lead Albertans down the garden path in terms of shortening waiting lists and lowering costs, knowing full well that they aren't accurate statements. But I'll tell you something, Mr. Speaker. Albertans aren't being fooled on this one. They've got it figured out in terms of what they're doing.

In terms of the relevancy of that, referring this to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, there are two particular points that I would like this committee to address in their review of this particular bill: to take a look at what the Premier has said, to take a look at the documentation that is available, and to decide whether or not in fact they are accurate statements as they are reflected in the bill, and can they be enacted in this province? I don't think they can, Mr. Speaker, and I think that we are doing a grave disservice to the people of this province if this bill gets passed under the conditions that the Premier has talked about.

We think it would be better, Mr. Speaker, if they fixed the existing system before we take a look at any other kinds of options. This is a recommendation that could come forward from this committee. They could say that it is premature to bring in a bill on private health care at this particular time in this province. They could say that the problems with the waiting lists at this point in time are more reflective of a Premier who has blown up a hospital and sold another one for a dollar and who continues to refuse to open up existing beds in hospitals in this province than it is a reflection of what private health care will do for this province. So we would like them to take a look at that concept.

We know that this government has made lots of mistakes in health care. They cut the funding drastically. They dumped money back in, and that still didn't work. Well, let's talk about what happened in Mill Woods for a minute. This government was going to shut down the Grey Nuns hospital in Mill Woods, clearly a mistake. They were wrong. Fifteen thousand people marched twice to tell the government that what they needed was an active care hospital that continued to have a fully functioning emergency system, not some sort of prorated kind of community service that this government was proposing. The government listened that time, Mr. Speaker. People made their voices heard. They brought their concerns forward, and the government listened to them.

We need the government to have an independent kind of review that they can listen to once again, because they can't seem to get it right on health care. Private health care is not going to improve the system. It doesn't solve the existing problems they have. I understand that the government doesn't want to listen to the opposition, but let them listen to outside experts who can review this from a legal perspective, who can take a look at this with all of the implications in a nonpartisan fashion, who can bring experts to the table to discuss the merits and the nonmerits of the bill, and make rulings based on that, Mr. Speaker. Take it out of the Legislature at this time and give it a nice independent, nonpartisan review. That's what we're asking for.

This government doesn't seem to get it right, and they just don't seem to know that not fixing the current system is an act of irresponsibility, both from a fiscal and a moral perspective, Mr. Speaker. Fiscally, if you don't fix the system you've got, it's going to cost you more money. Morally, if you don't fix the system you've got, people are not going to be getting the kind of service that they need and want.

You know, this government all the time likes to think that it's operating like businesses do, with the same kind of smart thinking that businesses do, but let me tell you what this model of change in health care would look like in the business world. If a company had a piece of equipment that was crucial to their operations, that was a key component of their operating abilities and wasn't working properly, like if our health care system wasn't working properly, you would think that they would first of all take a look at why it wasn't working properly. In this case, if we take the parallel to the health care system, the piece of equipment wouldn't be working properly because it hadn't been maintained properly, because additions hadn't been made to it to bring it up to state-of-the-art equipment operated in a state-of-the-art function. Both the hard costs, making sure that their equipment is state of the art, and the people costs, making sure of training and the different kinds of perspectives you can bring to make pieces of equipment operate efficiently and effectively, were neglected.

Now we've got this piece of equipment that has been neglected, and the service providers, the operators of it, have been neglected, so it's not working properly. This company that owns this piece of equipment they've neglected knows they have to do something to solve the problem, but they don't know what, Mr. Speaker, because they're not really quick thinkers. What they think they should do is just keep that piece of equipment operating the way it is and buy a brand-new, really expensive piece of equipment and add it to the stream, because they justify to themselves that it will certainly help their business if they do that.

Not only do they have this brand-new, state-of-the-art piece of equipment that's got all of the nifty bells and whistles that they've been sold by the salesman – in this case, read HRG for salesman – but they're still going to have the old system, that old piece of equipment that's clanking and clinking along. They convince themselves that this is going to be even better, that they can increase their capacity, which is exactly what we hear the government talk about here. They delude themselves into thinking that this is a good idea, that they don't have to fix the old piece of equipment. They just buy a new one, bring it onstream, and they can run the old one and the new one together, and isn't it going to be great? But, Mr. Speaker, the shareholders of this company don't agree with them. They know that to operate efficiently, you first have to solve the inefficiencies in the existing system so that the share price of the piece of equipment goes down.

In the case of the province, Mr. Speaker, our share price is the confidence of the people, their confidence in this government that the government can adequately run the systems required within the province, and also global confidence in terms of our ability to maintain any kind of a leading edge. What happens if you bring a brand-new piece of equipment into a company and you refuse to address the existing problems that were in the other piece of equipment? Well, what happens with that piece of equipment is that it doesn't run effectively and eventually breaks down. So now you have this old, mothballed piece of equipment that doesn't work very well, if ever, and this brand-new piece of equipment that takes over all the old business. Well, the relevancy of this to the health care debate is that that is what will ultimately happen when you bring a private system onstream beside a public system when you don't fix the problems in the public system.

Some of the smarter colleagues get this, but some of the other ones don't, Mr. Speaker, and it's too bad, because it's a good parallel in terms of what's happening in this province, I think. It's an example that perhaps the Premier should take a look at. If you don't solve the current problems in the public system, it's very important, in terms of relevancy to this particular amendment, because these are the exact conditions that I am requesting that this committee take a look at when they review this legislation.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to just take a few brief moments to urge the members of this Assembly not to support this amendment. In fact, I'm rather surprised that a group of individuals, a caucus, who have been talking about not enough discussion, not enough debate, not enough information on this whole issue would bring in an amendment to a bill which in fact inhibits debate. Rather than allowing the members of this Assembly to talk to the principles of this bill, they are now confined under second reading to dealing with the amendment.

I encourage the debate for this bill to be held on the floor of this Legislature. There are 83 persons who were elected by citizens of this province to debate legislation. I suggest that this bill is needed. We have had requests from the federal government, from the federal Minister of Health at least, and we have had requests from the College of Physicians and Surgeons asking us to put rules around the operation of private clinics. Clearly it is needed.

Mr. Speaker, nobody on this side of the House has ever suggested that Bill 11 is the answer to all of the problems that might be facing the health system. We have encouraged the federal government to respond to some of the needs in the system by restoring some of the millions and millions and millions of dollars they took out of the system and have yet to return. We feel that that would go a long ways to supporting the system. What we're trying to do with Bill 11 is to give our regional health authorities one more tool to answer and respond to the needs of the people that they serve.

I want to just tell you why I believe we need this bill and why we should be debating it here today rather than putting in an amendment that simply inhibits the debate. One, we need this bill because it confirms and reaffirms our Alberta government's solid commitment to the principles of the Canada Health Act. This side of the House thinks that's important. Secondly, it puts in place a strong legal framework for the government to regulate private health care deliverers in this province. This legislative authority has never been in place. We have been asked to put it in place, and this is the opportunity to do it. Rather than speaking to the principles of that, the opposition are inhibiting the debate now to the amendment.

As I indicated, this gives us one more tool. It gives our regional health authorities one more tool to use in the management of health care delivery in their region. Mr. Speaker, this caucus is not so presumptuous to think that we know all of the answers as to how to deliver health services. However, we do have a great deal of confidence in the College of Physicians and Surgeons being able to identify procedures that could be dealt with outside of a full-scale hospital safely, efficiently, and we would believe that those contracts should be managed in that way. The reason we need this legislation is to ensure that there are clear guidelines that the authorities must use if they want to utilize the option. They have to be cost-effective, they have to have a detailed contract which would be made public, and there are measures of accountability.

A lot has been said about queue-jumping, Mr. Speaker. This bans queue-jumping. It bans the charging of fees for insured services, and it bans private hospitals. As I've indicated before, if the opposition do not understand what a hospital is, we on this side certainly do. Of course, we are as amazed as anyone could be over the federal Minister of Health's rather bizarre statement today, if you take it at face value, that he's going to give us another 52 hospitals just in this province and goodness knows how many across the country.

Mr. Speaker, I have tried to just identify a few of the reasons why I believe we need this bill. We need to debate it on the floor of the Legislature. We need to have the opportunity, which we had until this amendment came into play, to debate the principles of this bill. We had an opportunity to debate it fairly, honestly, and straightforwardly. I believe that this amendment takes away that opportunity from my colleagues on this side of the House who would have wanted to exercise that prerogative.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on the amendment.

MR. SAPERS: It's on the amendment.

The only reason that Alberta or the Alberta government needs this bill is to allow for the legalization of private hospitals which have inpatient or admitting or overnight stay capabilities. That's the only reason why we need this bill. We don't need this bill in this province to deal with regulations, because we have lots of regulations. We have regulations that the minister of health set in providing guidance to regional health authorities for contracting out. We have regulations that were set out in correspondence with the Auditor General on contracts handed out by regional health authorities. We have guidelines set under the Medical Profession Act, through the College of Physicians and Surgeons' bylaws, on what kinds of medical procedures can be done in what kinds of facilities. Of course, we have the Alberta Hospitals Act and the regulations attendant to the Alberta Hospitals Act. All of this creates a rather complex web of authority and regulation dealing with the contracting out of medical services to private facilities.

The one thing that that whole complex web doesn't allow for is contracting out surgeries to private surgical centres when the surgeries are so complicated – and they can call them minor if they want to, Mr. Speaker – that they require inpatient admitting. The reason why that complex web of existing law and regulation doesn't allow for that is because it would violate the Canada Health Act. So it is really not the case that Alberta or Albertans need Bill 11.

A careful reading of the amendment would indicate that the amendment deals with the subject matter of the bill, not the bill itself, being referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, probably the most underworked committee of this Legislature and a committee that the chairman, I'm sure, would love to call to order and exercise his or her authority over. In doing so, by referring it to this committee, this committee would further the debate on the subject matter and engage members of the public. So contrary to the minister's comments that this would somehow shut down or forestall or stifle debate on Bill 11, it would do just the opposite. It would for the first time put the debate into a forum where there could perhaps be public input on the record in Hansard, where all the rules and orders of the committee would apply. I believe we could have a very fine discussion with Albertans, indeed, regarding whether they believe we need this policy.

Of course, I've heard loud and clear from my constituents and from Albertans right across this province not only that they don't need this policy but that they don't want it. They're not being sold, they're not being convinced, and they're quite resentful of a government that is spending millions of dollars trying to sell them something that they don't want to buy. In addition, not only that but of course they're funding the sales campaign with their own tax dollars, which they would much rather see go to frontline services in health care, maybe hiring a few more nurses or running an MRI machine just a few hours longer every week.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the reason I support this amendment from my colleague from Edmonton-Manning is because I think it accomplishes a couple of things. Number one, it does broaden the debate; it does allow for this public input. Number two, I think it also gives the government a rather graceful way out of the dilemma that they find themselves in. When I made my earlier comments at this stage of the bill, I talked about the fact that while I am not part of this government, it is still certainly my government as an Albertan and as a taxpayer, and I would like to assist this government, my government, in terms of finding a way for them to extract themselves from this policy dilemma that they've put themselves into.

The fact is that they know, as every member in this Assembly knows, that Albertans don't want Bill 11 to become law. They know they've made mistakes, because the Premier just today in question period already said: well, we're going to amend the bill. So they already know that it's flawed, and based on that, Mr. Speaker, I'd think that they would seize the opportunity to accept this amendment, recognize the political solution it provides them. You know, we won't even take credit. We'll sit back quietly and go to bed that night thankful and with warm and glowing thoughts that we have saved the taxpayers of Alberta, the people of Alberta. In fact, based on the messages I've received from right across the country, we have saved Canadians from going just too far down this privatization path. So I'm surprised that the government wouldn't seize that opportunity.

You know, when the Premier in question period today admitted for the first time, I believe, on the record in Hansard that the government was going to amend Bill 11, it made me think that this is another reason why we ought to refer it to a standing committee. Obviously, after the more than a million dollars that was spent circulating the Bill 11 propaganda to every household in the province, Bill 11 is really just a work in progress, a fictional work in progress at that. Nowhere in the householder – and I just reviewed a copy of it – does it say “draft.” Nowhere in the householder does it say: this is Bill 11, we think. In fact, it says: “This is your complete copy of Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act,” and this is why we need the legislation.

So the unsuspecting taxpayer bringing this in with their morning newspaper would think that is in fact the true intent of the government, but the Premier today just laid waste to that and said: this isn't the true intention of the government; in fact, our true intention is to amend this bill. So it is a bit of a pig in a poke, and that's another reason why I think it needs to be referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. We'll accept the fact that it's a draft. We'll accept the fact, because we're getting used to it, that the government couldn't get it right, and we'll refer it to the committee and let the committee do its good work. Then, hopefully, Albertans won't have to shout down their government a fourth time. As we know, Bill 11 is really just a shadow of other initiatives that this government has already put on the table and has been forced to withdraw before.

Some other reasons why I believe the Health Care Protection Act, as it is called and, I believe, wrongly titled, should be referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, why the subject matter should be referred to the standing committee and the bill itself be not now read a second time. Similar initiatives in other jurisdictions have led to frauds, criminal charges, prosecutions. In fact, with health care of America in the United States several vice-presidents have been incarcerated as a result of being convicted for health system related criminal activity. I would hate for us in this province to not learn some lessons at the expense of those others and put the brakes on going down a path that has led to disaster in other jurisdictions.

It seems to me that the best thing this government could do if it were really sincere about, you know, protecting the principles of the Canada Health Act – I find it quite amusing, by the way, Mr. Speaker, to see members of this government now wrapping themselves in the Canada Health Act, because I've had the experience in this Assembly since 1993 of trying on two different occasions to convince this government to legislate the principles of the Canada Health Act into Alberta law, to incorporate those same five principles into Alberta law, and on two separate occasions this government shot down that notion, said they wouldn't be led around by the nose by the feds. I just find it so ironic and so amusing now to see them wrap themselves in that particular federal bill, much as you'd see, you know, dead fish wrapped in newspaper, trying to pass themselves off as the great defenders of medicare.

As I say, that's just parenthetical to my argument that there are certainly some areas that need to be explored not just within the legislation itself, but because the motion would refer the subject matter to a committee whose duty would be to also deal with the regulations, we'd be able to look at those many, many, many sections in Bill 11 that are really left open, that call for the executive of this government to make regulations. We could take a look at the fact that there are no regulations from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at this very minute that define what major or minor surgery is. You wouldn't know that from reading the bill. In fact, if you read the bill, what you would be led to conclude is that there are regulations which determine what's major and what's minor.

The difficulty is that the bill that was sent out to every householder makes reference to other acts, like the Canada Health Act, the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act, the Alberta Hospitals Act, the Medical Profession Act, but it doesn't include any of those other bills. So a casual reader would have to go to the Legislature Library or the Internet or somehow get all these other pieces of companion-related legislation and read them all together to understand just what a piece of Swiss cheese this Bill 11 really is, just how full of holes it really is. Another reason why I support this amendment is because this referral to the Committee on Law and Regulations would allow a full examination of the regulatory framework that exists and also the regulatory gaps that are created by Bill 11. Then we'd have a fuller appreciation of why this is such a dangerous, dangerous legislative initiative.

Now, on the question of minor and major surgery it seems to me that the government is trying to have it both ways. They're saying: we've got 52 existing clinics, so therefore this bill must be okay. If they've got 52 existing clinics, why do they need the bill? Of course, then, when they're faced with that particular conundrum, they argue: well, we need this bill to regulate the other stuff. What other stuff? The only other stuff that they can come up with as an example, because of course the Premier was embarrassed to find that he could no longer use hip surgeries, is the Shouldice clinic in Toronto, which does one kind of surgery, that being abdominal hernia surgery. So we're then led to conclude that in this whole bill wherever it reads minor surgery, it must really mean hernia surgery, because that's the only example the government has used.

So that's another reason we perhaps need to refer this bill out, because maybe we need to take a look at the wording, and maybe we need to systematically and methodically go through Bill 11, and in every case where it says the words minor surgery, we need to replace them with the words hernia surgery. Then we can have a debate on whether or not that's the proper prerogative of this Assembly; that is, not for the College of Physicians and Surgeons, whose duty it is now, but for this Assembly to define in law that hernia surgery is a minor surgery and that we need to have a legislative framework around just hernia surgery.

I see the smile coming to your lips, Mr. Speaker. Of course you recognize that I am speaking somewhat tongue in cheek, because that would be an absurdity, but the reality is that that's the only kind of surgery that this government has provided as an example to Albertans for what may be covered by Bill 11 or why we need it.

As I was saying, they can't really have it both ways. They can't talk about the existing clinics because they obviously don't refer to Bill 11, and they can't talk about complicated surgery because the College of Physicians and Surgeons wouldn't permit that. So, really, what are we left with? What we're left with is just really an empty promise that it'll only be this minor surgery and it really won't change things. Of course, if that were the case, we wouldn't be here debating this, because Bill 11 wouldn't be on the floor of the Assembly for debate.

Now, another reason I would speak in favour of this amendment is that the Premier has gone to great lengths to tell Albertans about the chat he had with the Prime Minister of Canada a few short days ago. Apparently in that chat between the Premier of this province and the Prime Minister of this country an agreement was reached that there would be a federal/provincial review of legislation from one end of this country to the other dealing with this matter of surgical services or hospital services or medically necessary services – it's kind of hard to know what the Premier is talking about for certain – that are provided outside of public hospitals. So this legislative review apparently has been agreed to and will be forthcoming. Of course this legislative review, as the Premier said, will be very, very interesting. He was very supportive of this legislative review, and I would like to see this legislative review.

Certainly there's a difference of opinion. I think the law in Saskatchewan outlaws diagnostic services. The Premier of this province tends to have a different representation of that law. I think the law of Ontario came into being to prohibit the growth of private hospitals. The Premier of Alberta tends to represent that as something that was enabling. Obviously there's a difference of opinion, so I'd like to see this legislative review that's going to go from coast to coast, and I would like that review to inform the debate in this Assembly. I would like to have the benefit of that. I think that would be very useful.

Perhaps we should again expect the members of this government who support their Premier, who supports this legislative review, to support this amendment, because obviously the Premier wants this review. You would have to assume that all members of his government want this review. We should have the benefit of that review before we're asked to pass further judgment and proceed further down the debate path on Bill 11. That only makes sense. I mean, surely the Premier wouldn't want to embark on this federal/provincial initiative, which is going to take up the time of civil servants and bureaucrats and eat up tax dollars and occupy so many people, if it were just a PR stunt. I mean, certainly he wouldn't want it to happen and then have the review come in after Bill 11 was disposed of one way or another. That wouldn't make any sense. Far be it for me to accuse the Premier of Alberta of being a PR stuntman.

So I'm convinced, once again, that upon reflection members of the government will want to support my colleague's amendment because it would be supporting the Premier's very own position on this need for a federal/provincial review before we go further down the path of privatizing health care.

Now, I'm also a little curious about the government's response and the one government member who spoke against the amendment, because it talks about referring the subject matter of the bill to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations obviously for the purpose of further study. Again we have a little contradiction. Early on in this whole private health care policy debate we saw the Premier call on the federal government. I always find it curious. You know, we have the Premier so often saying that he won't allow Alberta policy to be dictated from Ottawa, and in fact he's even said on this bill, Bill 11, that he'll let Albertans be in charge, that Albertans will be in the driver's seat. Yet when it's convenient, he says: we're waiting to hear from the federal government; we would like to see a response from the federal Minister of Health. In fact, he's even said that the Prime Minister didn't say that the bill was a bad idea. What the Prime Minister actually said was: I'm not going to give any final comment on this until we see the bill in its final form. Of course, the bill could look like anything when this government is finished amending it.

So there's this irony. We have the government of Alberta on the one hand saying: please, federal government, comment on our policy; please tell us what's right and what's wrong. Then, on the other hand, when they do comment, when the Minister of Health does say that he doesn't like it, that he's concerned about its violations of the Canada Health Act, the Premier takes it personally and starts talking about things like drive-by smearings, those kinds of things. It seems that there's just no pleasing this guy, Mr. Speaker. He seems to be confused in his own position.

I wonder what it is he really wants. Does he want some federal guidance and some adherence to national standards on this whole matter, or does he want to be just in a cocoon here in Alberta and just hold his breath and pout until he gets his own way and take down the medicare system along the way as he's behaving like that? So I am confused. Again, by referring the subject matter of this bill to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, we would be able to pursue that particular irony. We would be able to come to some resolution as to what it is that the Premier really wants and what's really in the best interests of the people of Alberta.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, I'm all in favour of national standards when it comes to health care. I think that's one of the values that most Canadians respect as well, and I just wish the Premier would get it clear when he's talking about those kinds of standards what it is that he means. On the one hand he talks about national standards and wraps himself up in the Canada Health Act, and in the very next breath he talks about: well, maybe I'll amend the Canada Health Act; I don't want Ottawa to tell me what to do. It must be difficult to be that confused about such an important public policy matter.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I feel compelled to rise after almost falling asleep on my backside listening to the previous member's unreasoned debate to a reasoned amendment. In fact, it's to this amendment . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: It's not a reasoned amendment, hon. member.

MR. SMITH: Yeah. Okay. That's correct. It's not. Thank you for, as usual, that good guidance from yourself, sir.

I do feel compelled to comment on a couple of issues. One is that one part of the federal government, which is the top part, the Prime Minister, which I think is a reasonable place to start, has said: bring the bill forward; get the bill through; get the bill into a position where we can analyze it, and we can come back. The Premier has tabled ample correspondence from those individuals who seem to be able to make logical decisions at the federal level, namely the Prime Minister. It would seem to me that any holding back on the passage of this bill and any filibustering by this Liberal opposition is directly contrary to what outcome they would perceive to be important from the federal level. I know that the good-thinking members of that opposition will look towards expediting the passage of this bill such that it can get into the federal domain and such that it can be analyzed, as the federal government has put forward. So, Mr. Speaker, I heartily encourage all members, including the opposition, to reject this amendment, because now I think that clearly it's pointed out that time is of the essence. We need to get this bill in a position where the federal government can comment on it.

After all, the work of the Premier here to put health care on the agenda in Alberta has had some interesting outcomes. In fact, it has exposed a facility fee-charging hospital in Montreal. It has exposed the export of patients in the Maritimes to U.S. facilities. It has exposed an operating specialty hospital in Toronto in Allan Rock's own riding. At one time he was an ardent jogger, when he was looking for Globe and Mail coverage, and he's probably jogged past that hospital on a number of occasions. He might even have had occasion to use it. Also, the Premier has exposed what's being taken on in Manitoba and what's being done at the Cambie hospital in Vancouver. In fact, by having the debate about Bill 11 and the debate about health care in Alberta, it's actually exposed the federal Liberal government for not looking after health care, for not being true to their own word, for not being responsible to the Canada Health Act.

What the Alberta government proposes to do is nothing in conflict with the principles of the Canada Health Act and is in fact occupying regulatory room that is not there. Mr. Speaker, if there were to be unbridled private health care in this province, you'd simply leave the accreditation to the College of Physicians and Surgeons and you'd wake up one day and find out, as we did with the previous health minister, now the Leader of the Opposition, that there are a number of private operating clinics. So this is open. It lays it on the table. We need to be expeditious in our debate on this bill and get it passed and get it in front of the federal level for discussions at that level.

So I know all members will join me in defeating this amendment and urging early passage of the bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to this amendment today. I think it's a very wise and prudent amendment when you consider the fact that the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations is one of a number of committees that is enshrined within our Legislative Assembly rules, including other committees like privileges and elections, Public Accounts, Private Bills, Public Affairs, and the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund, along with Legislative Offices.

Now, we see for almost all of those other committees, Mr. Speaker, a precedent that this Assembly uses those committees for their purpose of upholding public accountability, but in fact the Law and Regulations Committee, I believe – I stand to be corrected – has not met now for some years. It would seem to me that this amendment proposes a healthy opportunity for the engagement of this committee.

I'd like to prod the government this afternoon with a number of opinions and expert reports that in fact specifically talk about the regulatory risk that Bill 11 poses, citing first from the government's own report, which they chose to keep under wraps and hidden from the public, the report titled The Public Purchase of Private Surgical Services: A Systematic Review of the Evidence on Efficiency and Equity, interim report to Alberta Health and Wellness. In this report the authors told the government:

Not only will waiting lists be difficult to control [under the auspices of Bill 11] but the evidence indicates that forms of two-tierism are likely to arise if some regulations are not introduced. If there is no regulation to prevent the offering of 'enhanced' services in private facilities, simple market forces will ensure that such services are offered. If patients start requesting such services, they will be offered, and, if surgeons start offering such services, they will be taken up. The forms of two-tierism that will result from this are, firstly, receipt of different quality services according to ability to pay and, secondly, likely receipt of 'enhanced' services quicker.

The authors go on to say:

The 'missing link' in proving anything conclusive about the association between work in the private sector and waiting lists is data on private sector [availability] of surgeons. It may be that this should be monitored in Alberta.

Something which we have not to date done.

Other possible regulatory measures to avoid two-tierism would be to (a) prevent working in both private and public hospitals . . .

Something which Bill 11 does not now do.

. . . (b) more relevant in Canada, prevent 'enhancement' of services (either by legislating against it or by ensuring that RHAs purchase upgraded as well as basic services).

Two primary examples right from the government's own research, Mr. Speaker, that explicitly suggest that the regulatory examination and contemplation of issues arising from Bill 11 must be considered, and there is no mechanism now in Bill 11 that allows this Legislative Assembly on behalf of its citizens to do that.

Now, further, let me speak to even more global implications relative to the current negotiations undertaken by the World Trade Organization and this government's involvement and preparation of submissions for that table. One of the items on the agenda both past and present has been the agreement on government procurement, which is backed up by an agreement on competition policy, the original policy being proposed by the United States and the European Union.

Citing from this analysis, the authors say that "it is essential for those opposed to the commercialization of health care not to be intimidated by the technicality of these issues." This is one area where the Law and Regulations Committee could in fact increase the public's understanding of the issues contained within Bill 11 and its application to NAFTA and the MAI.

The world's health care budgets are massive, amounting to billions and billions of dollars. From the standpoint of the WTO, why not, then, classify the health sector not only as a service industry, but also as a public procurement? One of the favourite methods used by the WTO to liberalize any sector is to reclassify it under a different category.

Now, speakers with expertise in this particular area – and I'm quoting a statement made by Robert Vastine, president of CSI, who gave a speech relative to the agreement on competition policy. He said: "The WTO members are being asked to consider making reforms to their regulatory regimes." We've never had any reports from the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations that indicate what Alberta has been asked to do in this regard, but here we have an industry president saying that "WTO members are being asked to consider making reforms to their regulatory regimes." "National regulations," he tells us, "should have four central attributes: adequacy, impartiality, least intrusiveness, and transparency." Needless to say, this gentleman is not demanding transparency of corporate practices or nonintrusiveness of transnational corporations. What in effect he means is what the competition policy means, and that is that parliaments, whatever legislation is under consideration, will have to issue regulations that are "adequate" and "impartial" towards business interests.

We have not in this Assembly had any information. Further, Mr. Speaker, we've never had a meeting of Law and Regulations to contemplate the complexity of issues that arises relative to Bill 11, creating a legislative standing, a legislative foot in the door, if you will, for transnational corporations who want to expand their market share in health care. That is why I believe this amendment this afternoon is so timely and in fact resolves so many of the government's dilemmas.

The motion reads that we would in essence not continue to read the bill, "but that the order for second reading be discharged [and] the bill withdrawn," and subsequent to that, "the subject matter [would be] referred to the Standing Committee." What a perfect opportunity, Mr. Speaker, for the government to engage the public in the debate of Bill 11, something that they've been scurrying and skirting away from, engage the public in the debate about privatization of health care services in this province.

Granted they have spent a million dollars sending out material, which some have referred to as propaganda. They have spent thousands, probably hundreds of thousands more on human resources staff across the province and here in this Legislature to spin and articulate the countering messages on a daily basis. Everyday the opposition will get up and bring more reasoned analysis of this bill to the Assembly floor, and what we see is the members on the government side articulating their preauthored, prepared spins on how those analyses projected by the opposition don't apply. So, Mr. Speaker, rather than engaging in this expensive tit-for-tat dialogue, if you will, let's refer the bill to a standing committee of the Legislature, and let's have a real engagement of debate with the public on the proposal to privatize health care.

My third reference in citing this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, comes from A Legal Opinion Concerning NAFTA Investment and Services Disciplines and Bill 11: Proposals by Alberta to Privatize the Delivery of Certain Insured Health Care Services. This analysis is authored by Steven Shrybman, a solicitor in British Columbia. He offers the following analyses relating to regulations. I'm reading excerpts of what he said.

The following offers a summary of our opinion concerning these matters:

In many ways, the trade liberalization objectives of NAFTA are incompatible with policies that seek to exclude market forces in order to achieve other societal goals, such as the provision of universal and accessible publicly funded health care . . .

In negotiating NAFTA Canada failed to insist upon a broad exclusion for health care, relying instead upon the more limited protection of certain "reservations" (listed under NAFTA Annexes I and II) and on exceptions for government procurement and funding.

That would be the Conservative federal government at the time that was responsible for negotiating Canada's position on NAFTA.

Further, the author says:

The risks that privatization poses to the integrity of Canada's public health system have been well documented by more than one federal health minister and many others. The influence of NAFTA's investment and services rules will significantly exacerbate the problems already associated with privatization in three ways: [firstly] the rights accorded foreign investors and service providers under NAFTA limit government policy and regulatory options to a degree that is not true vis-a-vis domestic investors and service providers under Canadian law.

So, in essence, the government becomes the weakest link, Mr. Speaker. They are required, they are forced to dilute and weaken their regulatory and policy frameworks to such a degree that it does not constrain trade. Secondly, the same is true with respect to the proprietary interests of foreign investors, which are accorded much greater protection than is available to Canadians under our statutory or common law, in essence saying that the individual protections are no longer as great or as strong as those protections afforded by our legislation and law to corporate entities. Thirdly, only foreign investors have recourse to the extraordinary and highly coercive enforcement machinery of NAFTA. We have already been able to observe the constraints on public policy that even the threat of investor-state claims can exert.

Now, Mr. Speaker, at this point I'd like to suggest that if somewhere in the bowels of the Legislature there's someone crafting a response to what I'm saying this afternoon, I would like to urge them to get an opinion from the U.S. trade representative's office that in fact the U.S. trade representative's office has absolutely no interest and will sign away its rights and any rights on behalf of any corporate entities to activate or utilize Bill 11 as an entry point into the Canadian health care system. Don't waste your time coming up with any sort of enlightened rhetoric that we haven't already heard in this Assembly. Simply phone down to the U.S. trade representative's office, kindly fax them a copy of Bill 11, and ask them to write back to us and indicate that absolutely in no way, shape, or fashion will Bill 11 be a mechanism that they will seek to utilize for establishment. [interjection] I'd ask the hon. Minister for International and Intergovernmental Relations if she would table that letter from the U.S. trade representative in this Assembly. I would be most appreciative and I'm sure the public of this province would be most appreciative of hearing that response.

I would just like to quote further from the opinion offered by Mr. Shrybman with respect to Bill 11's application to NAFTA and specifically again reference the legal concern that there are mechanisms and manners in which Bill 11 will reduce our regulatory and statutory powers in this province, once it is passed, to prevent the privatization of health care.

In contemplating the question, "Is Bill 11 consistent with NAFTA investment and services disciplines," the opinion responds:

In the event that Chapter 11 and 12 rules apply fully to Alberta's proposals there is a significant risk that the province's experiment would quickly escape whatever bounds it may have intended. Without the protection of Annex I and II reservations the province would lose important regulatory authority necessary to preserve the public, non-for-profit character of Canada's health care systems.

Again a reinforcement of the need for us to seriously contemplate the legislation and engage the standing committee.

Even the government's renowned daily of choice, the Globe and Mail, Mr. Speaker, has been cited as saying that Alberta will be the first province to entrench a large-scale private component in its public health care system. Even the Conservative king, if you will, in our press in this country is acknowledging the reality of Bill 11 and circulating that within its paper to the readership across this country.

This opinion is certainly most available to all members of the Assembly, and I would encourage as well that the hon. minister of health and the minister of international and intergovernmental affairs read the concerns that arise under NATFA investment and services rules. There are a number of them, and I won't take the time of the Assembly this afternoon to go through them in detail.

I would like now to turn to a couple of other reasons, Mr. Speaker, why I think it's important to engage a standing committee and particularly the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. We've all had in this Assembly a variety of correspondence and conversations, circulations, reports, research studies cross our desks, and I can speak for those members at least on this side of the House. We read those correspondence, reports and opinions, research, and there are a number of very sound and esteemed thinkers within our citizens in our province, and they have very strong beliefs and opinions about what Bill 11 will do.

One such group is the Seniors Community Health Council, a completely voluntary association, who took it upon themselves to publish a position paper on issues relating to a privatized health care system. Now, I'm not aware that the government has responded at all to this well-intended group's position statement, nor have they given them any audience or any opportunity to express their concerns about this bill. A representative of the health council was invited to the public debate on Bill 11 that was held in Edmonton-Riverview just a short time ago and did provide some very astute analyses with respect to Bill 11, but I'm not sure that the government has in fact engaged such a group in discussion.

The Seniors Community Health Council paper speaks about their endorsement of the values that were embodied in the federal government's National Forum on Health report Canada Health Action: Building on the Legacy. They talk further and list a number of the common arguments utilized for privatization of the health care system. "People who can afford to pay for health care should not be denied the right to choose private health care." They provide just as an example, Mr. Speaker, a corresponding answer to that question.

If the health care system meets the standards envisioned by the majority of Canadians, such as comprehensiveness, good quality . . . accessibility, people should not need or want to pay privately for health care. This approach violates the first principle of the Canada Health Act, that health care [should be and] shall be universally available. It supports the rights of the individual over consideration for the welfare of [its] citizens. A private health care system would allow some people to "jump the queue", and [others] will suffer as a result.

I'd like to commend the seniors health council on their paper and recognize them this afternoon in this debate.

I'd also like to recognize Bishop Fred Henry, who has also sounded some concern relative to Bill 11 and its application and has written about this subject in Calgary. Mr. Speaker, despite the highly respected and honoured position that Bishop Henry holds in our community in Calgary, he's been subjected to some, what I would say, highly questionable retorts from this government. I regret that I cannot provide the excerpts of his comments this afternoon but perhaps at a later time.

Thank you for permitting me to comment today.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to the notice of amendment before us. I want to speak in favour of this amendment. I want to start by noting that this Bill 11 has received the unprecedented attention of Albertans. In my 40 years in this province I have not seen any other bill that's ever come before this Assembly to have roused such serious concerns among Albertans.

Albertans have expressed their concerns in many, many different ways. We have seen on the steps of the Legislature since the bill was introduced a month and a half ago, more or less, a citizens' vigil on a regular basis. Students, young people, parents with babies in their arms, grandparents, physicians retired and working all have come here regularly to express their concerns to us, called on us to listen to them before proceeding with this bill. Tens of thousands of signatures on petitions have been tabled in this House, and those petitions continue to be tabled day after day after day. I just submitted to the Premier's office last week 4,000 cards sent to me by Albertans and another 4,000 or 5,000 are yet waiting to be delivered to the Premier's office saying no to Bill 11 in its present form. Letters, e-mails, phone calls, visits to our constituency offices – and I know that all of my colleagues in the Assembly have been hearing from their constituents. These concerns have been expressed so frequently and in such large numbers that they can't simply be ignored.

[The Speaker in the chair]

High school students, university students, junior high school students are getting involved in the debate on Bill 11. Last Friday I had the opportunity to attend a high school forum on Bill 11 at Harry Ainlay high school in the city. The Minister of Justice, who represents that area, was also on the panel. What we are hearing from these young people who will be eligible to vote in the next general election is: don't proceed with this bill unless you have answered our questions, unless we have had a chance to substantively participate in shaping and changing the direction in which we might want to go with respect to health care in Alberta and the future of medicare in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans want to participate not only by way of letters and e-mails, which are written in the privacy of one's office or home or kitchen to any one of us, but they also want to get together in some forum where they can share with us their concerns about the changes that Bill 11 proposes to make, and they see those changes as radical changes, not minor changes. Radical changes. They fear those changes because they see them as a radical restructuring of our public health care system. So they want to be able to tell us members of this Assembly and the government of Alberta about their concerns, about what they don't like about the bill, about what they fear most if this bill is rushed through this Assembly, and they also want to share with us their hopes about the future of public health care in this province and in this country.

Eminent physicians at the universities, at some of the best hospitals that we have, physician staff associations, the AMA, nurses' associations and organizations are all calling on us to stop at this point and listen to all of them. Without their understanding of what this bill is trying to do to our health care system, to our hospital system, we simply cannot operate. These are frontline health care workers that we must trust, that we must be able to rely on for their co-operation if we are to deliver these most necessary services to Albertans.

This amendment, Mr. Speaker, I think will provide that opportunity. The amendment proposes that the bill be withdrawn at second reading and the subject matter at hand be referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. I think that's an eminently sensible proposal.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity two years ago as a member of an all-party public hearings committee on justice to go around the province listening to Albertans. We spent several months doing that. We held over a dozen and a half meetings all over the province. Albertans welcomed the opportunity at every stop that we made in a small town or a big city. Albertans who came to these hearings thanked us for giving them the opportunity so they could have an impact on shaping the future of the justice system in our province.

I was deeply impressed and moved by the intense interest that we encountered but also was impressed by the wisdom and the balanced inputs that we received from them. Some of our own misconceptions about what the concerns of Albertans, broadly speaking, might be about justice had to be revised as a result of this. The committee then was able to produce a report that I think certainly won the respect of this Assembly and Albertans. So here's a process that can be used as a model, as a template by this committee for it to have the opportunity to invite Albertans to participate to review with this committee the concerns and the subject matter of Bill 11.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment provides this House with an opportunity that we must not lose. We should give unanimous consent. We need to re-establish a consensus in this province on this most important and vital of issues. Why would we not take this course of action when even the Premier received a letter from Mr. Rock, the Minister of Health, today expressing the need to seek clarifications, to in fact engage in further dialogue with Ottawa on the genuine concerns that may have been expressed by Mr. Rock however belatedly in his latest letter? If the Premier is willing to go out of the province to Ottawa to listen to the federal government, why would we not want to be even more eager to listen to Albertans? Albertans are the ones that are going to be impacted most and the first ones to be impacted by the privatization agenda of this bill. I think it's about time we respected Albertans and their concerns and said to them: we are here to listen to you.

As I've gone around the province, Mr. Speaker, from small towns to Calgary, Lethbridge, Lac La Biche, St. Paul, and other places, people are expressing more than just concerns about the economic aspects of this proposed privatization agenda. They're also expressing important ethical concerns about Bill 11, and I would like to take the next five to 10 minutes to share some of these concerns with my colleagues in the Assembly. Bill 11 raises some fundamental ethical concerns. Let me just share with you a few.

AN HON. MEMBER: Get back to the amendment.

DR. PANNU: The amendment will give the opportunity to this Assembly to listen to these concerns, and that's why these concerns become part of my remarks on speaking on the amendment and speaking in favour of this amendment.

Health care, Mr. Speaker, always involves the core values of a people, of a society, of a community. The reason for that is that health care interactions typically arise in the most poignant moments of human lives: births, deaths, illness, injury, pain, and amid the tension between fear and hope. Further, moderately good health is an essential prerequisite to engage in education, productive work, taking care of others, and other important human undertakings. Everybody thus has an interest in good health and in an effective and accessible health care system, and I know that all of us agree on this. All of us in the Assembly regardless of party lines agree on the significance of health and good health care for all of us.

The Premier's words that he used in his leading speech on the second reading of Bill 11 still ring in my ears. He said: "We all agree that it's important. We all have families. We have children. We have parents. We have community members, all of whom share these concerns with us as human beings. We are vulnerable to illness, to disease, and therefore we need health care." I agree with the Premier on that. If that is the case, then we must take into consideration the very basic values that should form a health care system and the ethical concerns that Albertans are raising, driven by the commitment to those core values.

What are those values, Mr. Speaker? Values that are central to health care include but are not limited to nonmaleficence, the avoidance of harm; beneficence, the promotion of good; justice; respect for persons; respect for autonomy; trust; honesty; care; accountability; protection of the most vulnerable; balancing of individual and common interests; and the avoidance of conflict of interest. Health care reform is so difficult, not merely because it presents a practical challenge – and it does – but because so many of our core human values are called into play. That's why it's so easily understandable why so many Albertans are concerned about the future of health care, given the agenda of privatization that Bill 11 includes.

Let me talk quickly for the couple of minutes remaining about the nonmaleficence issue, the above all do no harm kind of caveat. The Hippocratic oath traditionally taken by physicians and adopted in principle by most other health care professionals requires that great care be taken not to leave the patient worse off than they were before. Why would someone have to stay overnight after surgery rather than go home the same day, Mr. Speaker? The answer is that the surgery was so invasive or difficult that the patient is at risk of serious complications that may require immediate medical attention.

The complications of surgery can affect any part of the body and may include neurological problems from the anesthetic; vascular problems such as embolisms, air bubbles that is, or blood clots that may cause a heart attack, stroke, or other major organ complication; difficulty breathing; pinched nerves from blood clots pressing on nerves; internal bleeding; allergic reactions to anesthetics or other medications; et cetera. It does no good merely to notice that a patient is suffering postsurgical complications. Immediate intervention may be needed to protect the patient's health or even to save his or her life.

Any facility that does surgery complicated enough to require an overnight stay will therefore require a full array of health care specialists to address any complication, and all these caregivers must be available 24 hours, seven days a week. What's needed is a full hospital staff, hardly affordable on the budget of a small, private surgical centre that aims to provide profits to shareholders. A hospital is a hospital. If it isn't a properly staffed and equipped hospital, it shouldn't be doing surgery requiring overnight stays.

Mr. Jim Dinning, chair of the Calgary regional health authority, has suggested that dedicated surgical centres will not require fully equipped operating rooms to deal with all sorts of surgery and thus will save money. This restriction would be reasonable for truly unrelated conditions such as burns or obstetric emergency. However, postoperative complications may take many forms. If facilities are not fully equipped for that wide variety of needs, then that facility is unable to attend to the postsurgical complications that will undoubtedly arise for some patients. Being purposely under-equipped is a danger to the health of patients and thus is ethically unacceptable.

The College of Physicians and Surgeons, Mr. Speaker, has rightly indicated . . .

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE SPEAKER: Excuse me, hon. member. We are on the amendment. It strikes me that the hon. member is doing almost a clause-by-clause review of Bill 11. The debate before the Assembly at this point in time is the amendment.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just about to conclude and wind up in any case, but I certainly was speaking to the amendment, because the amendment, as I suggested, would provide a forum for public hearings at which these issues must be discussed. We cannot simply brush them aside.

Debate Continued

DR. PANNU: So, Mr. Speaker, moving towards the conclusion, the college has indicated that stand-alone surgical centres would likely not be approved to do hip replacement surgeries and others requiring overnight stays. In short, a full-service hospital is needed to provide postoperative care. Many hospitals are insufficient. It would violate the most fundamental principle of health care, do no harm or do not make matters worse, to perform nonemergency surgery that leaves the patient with unattended and potentially life-threatening complications. The objection by the major health care provider unions and associations reflects this commitment to the partners' good.

Let me conclude, then, by saying that I support this amendment, and I certainly would call on my colleagues in the Assembly to give their support to this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Again I want to reiterate that we have an amendment before the Assembly, that "the subject matter [be] referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations," and that basically is the gist of the amendment as far as the chair can understand it.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your wise direction and advice. I am really glad of the opportunity to rise in support of this amendment, which is essentially that Bill 11 . . . be not now read a second time but that the order for second reading be discharged, the bill withdrawn, and the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

I was very interested in listening to my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona talk about the potential, if this amendment is successful and in fact the bill is referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, for public consultation or public input. He used as an example his experiences on the justice committee consultations. To be honest, that hadn't occurred to me, that that would be a possibility under this process, but in fact I think it's a very good one.

For any of us that have been involved in public consultations or open forums or speeches where people have asked us to come out into the community, you do get people who feel very strongly and seem to want to do what is essentially a testimonial, but inside that testimonial, if you listen carefully, is both a fear and a misunderstanding, a seeking of information, and an opinion about Alberta's public health care system. So I'm in favour of this amendment referring the bill to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

I think it would be valuable for all of us, members of this Assembly and Albertans, to take a step back and look at this calmly, to bring together all the information and reports and studies that have been dug up or brought forward and be able to give some real concerted, concentrated study to this bill, because what I see is the public asking for real information. Certainly I've had a number of letters where they're saying: this is rhetoric; it's not answering our questions; we just keep hearing the same thing over and over again. They're looking for an opportunity for some really clear exchange of ideas, such as we could be having from the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. I think that referral to this committee would allow us a more in-depth look at the proposals that are in this bill.

What is it that people don't seem to understand? What is it that we could be sorting out or looking at in a more intimate way in this committee? One of the things that people say is: well, how exactly would the queue-jumping be stopped by this bill? I say: I don't know, because all the bill says is that there will be no queue-jumping but does nothing to address how that would be stopped. There's nothing set out in the bill beyond the commandment thou shalt not queue-jump.

Then they say: well, is there queue-jumping going on now? Yes, of course we know there's queue-jumping going on now, and it's even said now that there is no queue-jumping. But, in fact, we know it's happening, and I'd like to see a referral to the committee so that we could sort out some of these inconsistencies.

What exactly is anticipated aside from the statement that there will be no queue-jumping? What is anticipated to stop the queue-jumping? There has to be some detail in the bill or some consideration from the government on the specifics of how this would be done, and that's not available at this time.

I'd like the committee to look at the bill stating that there will be no sale of enhanced services and then going on to detail how enhanced services can be sold with an agreement and all the rest of that. That's certainly something that's been raised, I'm sure, with every member in the Legislature. Again, how can that be? It says that there's no sale of enhanced services, and then it goes on to detail how that could be done.

I want to support this amendment to refer the bill to the committee to be able to look more clearly and in depth at other examples that are before us in the world. The government often references the Shouldice clinic, but then when you really look at that, it's not applicable here. Shouldice was grandfathered before the Canada Health Act, and they have a very restrictive bill that they operate under.

Saskatchewan has been referenced, but in the Saskatchewan bill it specifically excludes the sale of any extras. I for one would like it clarified in a very thorough manner by the government why they're referencing, for example, those two things, because it doesn't help me to understand how the government believes this is going to solve their problem.

I was on my feet in this Assembly last week showing that Ontario had passed legislation to close two private hospitals and was quoting the minister saying that he was doing it to save public health care. So we're ending up with a lot of statements, a lot of information out there. In some cases they absolutely contradict one another. In others there are gaps in information left, and I'd like to see the bill referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations to be able to work some of this out, and I do like the idea of being able to involve the public in it more.

I notice that the Premier has said that the primary motive in introducing Bill 11 was to cut waiting lists, but inquiring minds still want to know how. There's still no concrete information that shows how this is going to happen or demonstrations of where it's happened in other parts of the world where it's been successful. We've got examples from Australia and New Zealand, where it hasn't been successful. Where are the demonstrations of where it has been successful?

DR. TAYLOR: We're going to be the leaders and do something new.

MS BLAKEMAN: The Member for Cypress . . . I can never remember his name.

THE SPEAKER: Actually, it's the Minister of Innovation and Science, and he's out of order.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was going to say that I agreed with him that we were moving into something new. The way I had it was that it was uncharted territory.

I think many members here have spoken that we recognize that there needs to be some legislation that does in fact regulate private hospitals, that does regulate private clinics, that does regulate the relationship and our concept of public health care when we start mixing it with a profit-motivated entrepreneurial relationship. I would like that explored more if this bill could be referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

I think that's an opportunity for the government to produce any studies that they have. I know there have been a few tablings, but I think some of them were fairly antiquated, written in the '70s or referring to statistics from the '70s, so I'm sure that in the meantime the government will have been able to come up with – I hope they can – newer studies or perhaps even the fulfillment of the interim report that was tabled here earlier. At least the government referred to it as an interim report that they had commissioned through an institute. So the point I'm trying to make in this is that we need the referral to that committee to bring all of this information out and to be able to sort through it, separate the wheat from the chaff, and be able to have a rhetoric-free discussion about it, if that's possible.

I have always been in favour of referrals to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations because it is a public process. As a member who sits on the Public Accounts Committee, I fondly refer to people that attend and sit in the galleries to watch us as fun seekers and sports fans. It's really heartening to see the public coming out to watch the committee work, which is where I think a lot of the real work does get done. It is a more informal setting but also a more intense setting.

AN HON. MEMBER: There are none up there.

MS BLAKEMAN: That's okay. They'll come. I know that if this Bill 11 was referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, they would come. There would be people in both galleries, because they would be so interested, and they would be able to see all of those points brought out and discussed in a give-and-take style of debate.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: They could be here today.

MS BLAKEMAN: They could, and I would encourage anyone that's reading Hansard at www.assembly.ab.ca to please be following all of the debates in Hansard and certainly invite anyone reading it to come down and join us.

So we have a different situation, a different setup in the standing legislative committees, which does allow a different process to be in place that I think would be very helpful to this debate of public and private health care in Alberta. Certainly it's got a lot more of the give-and-take, a question and an answer. If an answer can't be provided on the spot, it can be provided in written form at a later date.

I mentioned some of the studies or issues that have been brought forward that I would like to see incorporated into the process of looking at this bill in the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, but a few of the other ones I'm interested in are the reports by the American Medical Association, the J. Dossetor Health Ethics Centre, the department of Public Health Sciences, Health Law Institute, the Institute of Health Economics, the Consumers' Association of Canada study on the private clinics. There have been a number of papers, I am aware, that have been presented, I think, to the special private committees that the government has that nobody else gets to go to: special standing policy committees. Dr. Donna Wilson presented to some of those. Certainly we've had some very interesting papers brought forward from Professor Richard Plain and also Kevin Taft and Gillian Stewart.

So, very briefly, that is a short list of the long list of information that is now available to us to consider and to be able to look at these things in detail and get away from a rhetoric style of debate: I say this, you say that, and we both disagree.

The other thing I'd be interested in is the regulations. This is the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations that we're talking about, referring this bill for what the amendment is advocating, and it would also allow us to look at regulations for this bill. I'm thinking immediately of the consternation that's been caused over the years with the condominium amendment act. Now, there's an example of where legislation was passed in this Assembly which had a huge body of regulations that were needed to support it, and in fact in the end they were not able to successfully complete the regulations, and that was for the condominium amendment act, 1996. It was never proclaimed.

Now we have another amendment act in front of us, and it will end up, I would hope, going to Law and Regulations to have a look at the regulations to support that bill. When I look at that experience – and that was about a condominium act – the issue of public health care is larger than that, and it makes me afraid for what kind of regulations we would have to effectively put in place to support a bill like Bill 11. So there's an opportunity to be doing that sort of work if we refer to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

Part of what I'm interested in – and the Minister of Innovation and Science did refer to it earlier – is that this is new. This is uncharted territory. I guess I have to agree to disagree with the members opposite, because I would prefer to see more thought go into where we're going with this rather than just leaping in, rather than the Jim Dinning risk-is-better school of management. We do know that there are some other places in the world that have attempted a system not exactly like what the Alberta government is proposing but similar enough. I would like to look at those in the context of this committee to see if there are lessons that can be learned, whether there was anything that could be pulled from it that did work. I've heard it described as disastrous and never go there again, but still there might be lessons we could learn even from the mistakes of the Australian and New Zealand experiences.

There are a number of other areas of issues that I would like to see addressed by this committee if we're able to refer it. What about the issues of private clinics in training? If we move to a system where private clinics are providing 60 percent, 70 percent, 40 percent, whatever, of surgeries in a given field, I'd like to know if there have been any studies or any attempt to look at how that affects the opportunities for residents; that is, doctors who have yet to complete their practicum? How does that affect residents' ability to complete that practicum, to get in the required number of hours or the required number of surgeries for them to get their certification?

My brief look at that tells me that the private clinics are not keen on having residents in, and in fact I can't find an example of where they do. Perhaps that's something that could be worked on if we're able to refer to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations and get some private operators in here to explain whether or not they're interested in upholding that system that we have of practicum placements or residents in hospital settings. You know, time is money in the business sector, and I think there's a real reluctance or perhaps a total negation of the concept of being willing to slow down and allow a resident to watch what is going on enough to learn or perhaps to even slow it down enough to let a resident take a try. We understand that's going to take more time. It does slow down the procedure, and perhaps you can't, you know, do one every 10 minutes. I'd like to hear from the private operators what their attitude towards that is.

I'd also like to hear from the private, for-profit clinics and hospitals or surgical facilities or however we want to talk about these: where does the idea of preventative medicine come in? What we've talked about so far has been essentially acute care. It's been addressing something where there's a real problem, whether it needs to be some sort of surgery in most cases or some sort of direct treatment.

How, then, does prevention work into any of this? Is prevention left totally to the public system? How does the public system cope with that then? It's more difficult on an annual basis to show some sort of performance outcome. I also have to start to question that because it seems to me that it is in the best interests of the private, for-profit operators to have people be sick, because they make money when people are sick. So what is their commitment to prevention or to wellness models? It strikes me that it would be very little. I'm more than willing to listen, but I can't listen to that sort of information in this context. Once again, that's why I'm supporting this amendment put forward by my colleague from Edmonton-Manning to refer this bill to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

I think people have developed very strong feelings, and to a certain extent there's a matter of pride and reputation that's involved in the debate about this now. I've noticed the level of hostility rise, the name-calling, and it has been name-calling on and off the record. I would like to see in this debate everybody take a deep breath, stay calm, and actually start to talk about this. [interjections] And there we go. Indeed I have engaged people to more hostility, but I don't hear the name-calling yet.

I think the point is that I hope we would all be attempting to develop and to move forward into the future with a better health care system. There are real questions about whether Bill 11 is it, and I still want to see that debate happen.

I take it my time is over. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this afternoon and speak to the notice of amendment on Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act. This amendment was moved by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Manning: that the motion for second reading of Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 11, Health Care Protection Act, be not now read a second time but that the order for second reading be discharged, the bill withdrawn, and the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

I want to commend him for proposing this amendment right now. I think Albertans are skeptical about the direction this government not only is going but has pursued over the last number of years. We have heard in this House how drastic cuts in health care occurred without a plan. We have heard of the 90-day fix of our health care system on more than one occasion by the Premier. So I think that by referring this bill and the studies that are currently being done to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, Albertans will get clear and concise information on a bill that beyond a doubt is the most important bill that we have debated in this Legislature for some time. Now, that is not to say that what we do in here is not important. All bills are important, but here we are speaking to an amendment to Bill 11, an amendment that I strongly favour.

We heard earlier how the Member for Calgary-Varsity wanted us to expeditiously pass this bill, but Albertans are telling us that they don't want this passed expeditiously. What they want is information. They want information. Regardless of this million dollar plus promotion that has been put out, this PR exercise by this government, Albertans are not buying in.

So we do require this amendment, Mr. Speaker. We require it for Albertans. They have spoken out against this bill in so many different ways. We know, for example, that we have had on a regular basis many, many demonstrations on the steps of this Legislature. These demonstrations have been by all Albertans. It doesn't matter the age, sex, whatever. They are extremely concerned about Bill 11, and they are seeking information. They come to this place, this building, the symbol of free speech here in the province, to get information, and they want that information. By referring this to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, they will have the opportunity to gather information, to complete and get the final copy of the interim report which was prepared and which outlines so many shortcomings of this particular bill.

Now, as well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are very concerned about this particular bill, and the reason why we need this amendment is because of all the information that has been tabled in this Legislature. There is very little that supports this issue that we must rush headlong into expanding the role of private providers in our health care system. They have indicated that through a number of different ways, not only by demonstrations, but many, many letters have been sent to all of us in this Legislature.

Each morning when I check my e-mails, I have at least 25 e-mails, many from call.com, I believe it is, but I also get a number of e-mails from constituents. I get a number of e-mails that are sent to me from individuals across this province. All of them are having a great amount of difficulty understanding why we need Bill 11. So research certainly would help us get a clear understanding of exactly what is in Bill 11, and it would also help Albertans in making up their minds, because at present they do not support this bill.

Now, then, when we look at referring this for further study, we are hopefully going to provide a piece of legislation which will clearly protect our public health system. We need a lot of assistance in protecting our public health system, because, Mr. Speaker, as this bill currently is, it doesn't do that. The government sees this opportunity to try and push it through, but one thing they did not count on was how dearly Albertans treasure their public health care.

As I mentioned earlier, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity certainly did want this pushed through expeditiously, but we want further study. We want further debate. We want Albertans to have a clear indication of what this bill is about. We are not frightened of further research. We are certainly not worried about any reports that are presented here on the floor of this Legislature from countries that have tried this experiment.

We look, for example, at similar experiments that have happened in the health care systems in the Australian states of Western Australia, South Australia, and Victoria. These were disasters. We have seen how this radical new approach that was taken in New Zealand, where we had it privatized and which was the model for the direction that this government went, has proven to be such a failure, and of course we all know what happened to that particular government and what the people of New Zealand thought about this. So we do require a study, and the place for that study to occur is, of course, the standing committee.

Now, we look at the composition of the standing committee and why it is appropriate that each one on that committee should do a careful study of the issues that have been identified by the Alberta Medical Association. These issues have been identified by the John Dossetor Health Ethics Centre, the department of Public Health Sciences, the Health Law Institute, the Institute of Health Economics at the University of Alberta. This just continues, Mr. Speaker. The impacts of this bill on every facet of the lives of Albertans is critical, so yes, we certainly do support a full study of the effects of this.

I look at one area in particular, the administration of claims, for example. We'll look at these in American dollars. To administer a claim in the United States costs somewhere between $1,200 and $1,300 per capita just in administration costs. Now, if we convert our Canadian dollars into U.S. so that we can compare apples to apples and oranges to oranges, those costs here in our publicly administered health care system are only $250 per capita. So this is quite a difference.

I keep hearing all these references back to when Nancy Betkowski was minister of health, but I never hear what's happened since 1992. All we have heard since 1992 is from Albertans on how a public health care system that was serving their needs so well has been starved. The number of dollars per capita have been decreased immensely, and when we look at statistics, statistics that are very accurate, from 1985 to 1992 the average per capita cost for health care in this province hovered around $1,300. Now, in 1995 these costs were down, I believe, under $1,200 per capita. [interjections] We keep hearing people talking about this amendment. Well, costs per capita, Mr. Speaker, are a very, very important area of study that must be looked at in order that we can present something to Albertans that is meaningful.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Try $1,666 per capita.

MR. BONNER: I look forward to the minister entering debate later, and I certainly hope you do have the opportunity.

The one thing, Mr. Speaker, that Albertans realize is that there is no free lunch here. We have to pay for our health care whether we go to a public or a private system. Albertans realize that if they do put money into a public system, the costs of all medical procedures are shared across that system, and the dollars stay in the system.

MS CARLSON: They don't seem to understand that.

MR. BONNER: Well, right; they don't understand that. They also don't understand that of those dollars that go into the private system, 15 percent are profits. They are removed from the system.

MS CARLSON: At least 15 percent, more if they can increase it.

MR. BONNER: At least 15 percent. Right. They require 15 percent to make a go of it.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, our public health care taxpayer dollars that are put into that private system, once they are removed for profits, are gone. Probably they are gone, some of them, not only out of the public health care system, but they are also gone out of this province, and I'm sure in some cases some of those profits will be gone of this country. So, yes, Albertans are very concerned about how their public taxpayer dollars are being spent, and yes, it is a very important part of this amendment that those things are studied.

MS CARLSON: And not just by MLAs but by the lawyers who will be referencing that particular committee.

MR. BONNER: Right. There are many people that do have to reference this. [interjection] I'd like to tell the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne that, yes, I am planning on coming back to debate this evening.

MS CARLSON: Well, in light of that, you could adjourn now.

MR. BONNER: Yes. In light of that, Mr. Speaker, I could adjourn now, but I will use my time here now, because I think it's so very, very important that we do talk about this.

I know that the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne is totally responsible when it comes to costs here in the province and how our taxpayer dollars are spent. I think he was an excellent choice to be chairman of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee, and he is doing a marvelous job there. I enjoy sitting on that committee with him and listening to his wisdom. I know that he is very, very concerned at this point that my comments are very well thought out and that they will serve the people of Alberta in the same way that he serves this province with his watchful eye on all those billions of dollars.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 10, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/04/10

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

Mr. Gibbons moved that the motion for second reading be amended to read that Bill 11, Health Care Protection Act, be not now read a second time but that the order for second reading be discharged, the bill withdrawn, and the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

[Debate adjourned April 10: Mr. Bonner speaking]

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would like to continue the debate where I adjourned today at 5:30, and I would like to continue to debate on the amendment to Bill 11 and add a few more comments as to why I would like all members of this Assembly to support this amendment.

Now, I think Bill 11 will have as big an impact on this province as $10-per-quarter land had on this province right at the turn of the century. When we go back to that, Madam Speaker, we know that the principles that this province was built on are the same principles that are not covered and not protected in this bill.

What Albertans want at this time is a real debate, a debate that is not stifled but a debate that is enhanced, a debate that is enhanced based on evidence and not opinion. They want a debate that includes public input from all sectors. They want a debate that was only started by the precedent-setting TV debate last Tuesday. They want a debate because to this time their concerns have not been quelled when they look at all the implications of Bill 11.

Albertans want their own homegrown health care professionals and researchers to have input into this particular bill and this particular debate. This is something that they haven't had the opportunity to do so far. Albertans want a debate that will help answer the questions and concerns in the letter from the federal Health minister. These concerns that he raised are very legitimate concerns, and we know the repercussions of what happened the last time this province did not follow the mandate that's set out by the Canada Health Act. We were fined literally millions of dollars.

They want a debate, Madam Speaker, that extends beyond the four walls of this Legislature, beyond the four corners of their TV set. They want this debate to continue in every community in this province, in every church, in every coffee shop. They want the principles . . . [Mr. Bonner's speaking time expired]

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, for this opportunity to add my remarks.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's with interest that I rise this evening to debate this amendment to Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act. I'm very pleased that this amendment has been presented to the Assembly, and I'm proud to say that I support this amendment as brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Earlier today we heard Bill 11 described in this way by the Premier: quote, it is a work in progress, end of quote. If it is a work in progress, then this amendment as proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Manning is timely and very, very appropriate for the government because it will certainly give the government a chance to do the right thing and withdraw this idea of increasing the privatization of our public health care system. We can have as an Assembly a very, very good look at this idea and where it will bring the public health care system in this province.

Now, Madam Speaker, when you look at the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, I realize it's some time since it last met. It's over a decade. It's 15 years, I believe, to be precise. We have to look at the membership of this committee. The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane certainly would do an able job as chairperson, and in the absence of that hon. member, the able Member for Red Deer-South could do an adequate job as chair.

We have members from all over the province, Madam Speaker. We have the hon. Member for Calgary-East. We have the hon. Member for Redwater, who incidently did a long-term care report and who I'm sure would have some valuable insights that would be recognized by the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations regarding how we're going to maintain long-term care within the public health care system without contracting out to for-profit operators. Now, it would be very interesting to hear that hon. member's perspective, and the only way the entire province, I believe, would be able to hear this is through the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

We also have the hon. Member for Fort McMurray. We have the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. We have the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod. I'm sure the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod would be delighted to participate in the committee that would completely review this attempt at contracting out public health care.

Now, we also have the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, and I'm sure he would have a few words to say on Bill 11. I'm quite sure of that. We have the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross. I believe that is the constituency where the Peter Lougheed hospital is located, in the northeast section of Calgary. We have the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. We have the hon. member from the northwest section of Calgary, Calgary-Bow. We have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. She is our current health care critic and is doing a very good job. She would have some very valuable insights into this.

I myself, with a large number of seniors in my constituency, have some very strong views on this whole idea, this idea that we're going to allow an increase in the privatization of health care delivery in this province. We also have the hon. Member for Calgary-North West. The hon. member's insights would also be very welcome as the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations could meet for the first time in perhaps 15 years and talk about this issue. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, I don't think, realized when he brought forward this amendment – that's why I'm urging all government members to support it – that it's a way out of the political firestorm that you created when you introduced this poorly drafted legislation into this Legislative Assembly.

Now, we certainly need further study of this whole legislative concept, and I think we can start by looking at what other provinces have done, are doing, and are planning to do, Madam Speaker. There's no reason why the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations could not be the body that will do this.

We talk about British Columbia, and we talk about the Cambie

Surgery Centre, or hospital, in Vancouver. Perhaps the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations would come back to this Assembly and say: we have discovered that registered nurses that are employed in this facility are compensated more than registered nurses in British Columbia that are working under negotiated collective agreements. Then we could perhaps deduce from that that in order to attract employees, registered nurses and other health care professionals, to the private hospitals to be legislated in Bill 11, we are creating two parallel streams that are going after a workforce that is in great demand. Then the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations would simply say to this Assembly that this is the wrong thing to do because we are driving up wages, we're not working in the best interests not only of health care budgets in this province but of people who are sick, people who are on waiting lists.

I know it's going to be very difficult for the government in this case to listen to the opposition. The government is not listening to the majority of Albertans, but perhaps, Madam Speaker, they would listen to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

Now, the committee could look also at British Columbia and how the Medical Services Commission is operating, how it is administering the medical service plan. It would be interesting how the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations would react to this and how all this fits into the Canada Health Act. It would also be interesting to hear a report from the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations on how the committee would deal with the issue of this proposed bill, that hopefully will no longer be before the Assembly because hopefully all hon. members of this Assembly will support the Member for Edmonton-Manning in his legislative amendment.

We have an interim report that came before the Legislative Assembly last week from the Institute of Health Economics here in Edmonton, from the University of Alberta. This is an interim report, and it was to deal with the issues of accessibility and universality. Interestingly enough, Madam Speaker, the interim report has some concerns about universality and accessibility, particularly for rural Albertans.

As this Bill 11 is set up now, the surgical centres, also known as private hospitals, will probably be located where they're going to be able to at least try to recruit registered nurses and specialists and other health care professionals, and that's in the larger centres. So this whole issue of accessibility has to be addressed, because someone living in rural Alberta, perhaps a two- or three-hour drive from one of these centres, is not going to have the same accessibility as, say for instance, someone from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford's constituency in the south end of Edmonton. There is that issue of accessibility, and this is what's worrying the experts. The Standing Committee on Law and Regulations could look into this. It might take them time, but, Madam Speaker, they could look into this, and they could report back to the hon. minister of health, other members of Executive Council, and all members of the Assembly.

I don't know where the Member for Edmonton-Manning got this idea to come forward with this amendment, but it was an excellent idea. Madam Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has allowed the government of the day to get out of a tight political situation. Now, whether they're going to use it or not is entirely up to them.

The majority of Albertans, close to 60 percent of Albertans, are saying no to this Bill 11. They want to see more study. They want to see some real cost-benefit analysis, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The amendment please, hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: I'm certainly on the amendment.

Now, Madam Speaker, we look at this amendment, and we look at the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. I'm not stating that this Standing Committee on Law and Regulations should travel the length and breadth of this country or into the United States of America, but they certainly could get together, perhaps upstairs in room 512. They could get on the Internet, and they could look at some of the issues that have been discussed by Albertans. They could look at the legislation in Manitoba. The hon. minister of health himself brings forward on the odd occasion the clinics in Manitoba, legislation in Saskatchewan. The thing that would be of most interest to the Committee on Law and Regulations is the comparison of what we're trying to attempt with Bill 11 and the model in other parts of the world. So many areas of the world are admiring what Bill 11 is trying to dismantle.

The amendment, Madam Speaker, would give time for study. It would give time not only for the individuals to complete their study for the Institute of Health Economics, but it would give the government time to perhaps take a good, thorough look and compare it to what's existing in the current form of Bill 11.

Now, I don't think that when we look at the delay this amendment will mean to Bill 11, there's any harm in that, Madam Speaker. The amendment by my colleague from Edmonton-Manning is really a favorable one to all Albertans. While this is being studied, as I said before, there can be a cost-benefit analysis done to see if the contracting out proposed in Bill 11 will have any beneficial characteristics for the taxpayers and the regional health authorities. I have yet to see this, but as a member of the Committee on Law and Regulations perhaps with a team of other hon. members we could find such information. I think we'd be looking pretty hard, but I don't know what could be done until it is tried, because certainly, Madam Speaker, this legislation as it exists now is not in the best interest of Albertans. The amendment will certainly give us the necessary time.

Whenever we talk about the facilities that are the model for this bill, the first one that's mentioned is the Shouldice hospital in Ontario. I'm not suggesting for a minute that the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations visit it, but there is not an urgent need in this province – and anybody on the opposite side can correct me – for a hospital that's going to deal exclusively with hernias. Some hon. members across the way may be carrying a considerable political weight with this bill, and they may need a hernia belt because of the political weight they're carrying back to their constituencies, but there is no need for this sort of private hospital in this province.

Now, I'm wondering, Madam Speaker, if we were to fast-forward a year and the chairperson of the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations were suddenly to go downstairs and hold a news conference or, in the absence of that hon. member, the hon. Member for Red Deer-South, just exactly how excited they would be in discussing this report with the individuals in the media and how excited they would be to come into this Assembly and table a report from the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations before all members of this Assembly and all Albertans. This would simply be a report stating that the government was wrong, that Bill 11 was a mistake, that the Health Care Protection Act, which should have been called the public health care protection act, was going to be withdrawn forever, that the government was going to open up existing hospital beds, that it was going to open up existing operating rooms, that it was going to hire but first it was going to train the health care professionals at the training centres at the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary, and that it was going to build the best public health care delivery system not only in Canada but in the industrialized world.

This is the opportunity we have this evening if we were to say yes to the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. All hon. members of this Legislative Assembly, this is your chance. This is the ideal opportunity to see that Bill 11 was a legislative mistake. This is the opportunity that you're waiting for, and I encourage you to support the . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll stick to the amendment in front of us to the best of my ability, and if, like my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar, I speak too fast because I've got so much to say, please slow me down.

Madam, Speaker, before I start, I want to welcome the guests on both sides of the House here in the gallery who are taking in some of the debate this evening. It's always nice to see interested Albertans watching what's happening in this Legislative Assembly.

Now, let's be very, very specific. The amendment in front of us, moved by the Member for Edmonton-Manning, is an amendment that would ask that second reading of the bill be withdrawn and "the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations." The amendment is made for a reason. When we talk in terms of referring it to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, the amendment means that we feel much further study and consideration has to be given to the bill before any consideration is given to the bill proceeding.

Madam Speaker, I think it goes without saying that Albertans throughout the entire province are concerned about what's happening with Bill 11, are extremely concerned. We see that day after day in the legislative session as petitions are tabled from Albertans that are saying no, no, no: 45,000 now and thousands more waiting to be tabled. Letters, e-mails, telephone calls. Any place I go, it just seems people are stopping me and saying: what's going on with Bill 11? People want to know. People are concerned about the provisions of Bill 11. They're concerned as demonstrated by rallies that have been held such as the public forum in the riding of Edmonton-Gold Bar. They are concerned as taxpayers about the hundreds of thousands of dollars, if not a million, if not more than a million – who knows how much? – on full-page ads in the paper trying to sell Albertans on Bill 11.

Bill 11 has not been given the detailed study by this Legislative Assembly that it deserves, that it would get if it were referred to Law and Regulations. After very careful consideration of the details of the bill and the various provisions, then consideration should be given to the thing being scrapped, to the thing being killed: is there anything there; do we just start all over? But we can't do that in this particular arena.

Let me go one by one through the things in the bill that have to be studied in detail. First of all, the bill talks in terms of enhanced services. I read enhanced services as meaning that at least in the initial stages the basic health needs as defined by the government or whomever would be covered, and then anything over and above that would be considered an enhanced service. Now, where the line is between the two I'm not sure.

I want to give you an example of how enhanced services can get out of control. A number of years ago, in 1988 to be exact, we were heading down to Scottsdale. On the way we stopped for a couple of nights in Las Vegas to sort of relax, and in the hallway of the Desert Inn of all places I had an accident, and it wasn't because of gambling debts. My wife accidentally pushed me forward as we were going down the hallway. I lost my balance and toppled forward. I heard a couple of snaps and such, but being a paraplegic, I didn't realize the extent of the damage. So we went down by the pool for a while, had breakfast, hopped on the plane, and went down to Scottsdale.

By the time we were checked into the facility there, I was feeling feverish. I knew something was wrong. I got a friend down there to drive me to the hospital. I spent one night in the hospital. I ended up with two full-length casts. I came back the next day. One night in the hospital. In the morning the nurse rolls up the foam mattress that they had on top of the regular mattress. It's a foam mattress like you would buy at Canadian Tire for $17, and she says: you might as well take this home with you. I say: why? She says: because it's costing you $100. My bill was four pages long. These so-called enhanced services: a box of kleenex, charge for the meal. That list of enhanced services went on and on.

So when we talk in terms of Bill 11 and when we talk in terms of the need to look in detail at areas like enhanced services, that's why it has got to be studied in detail by Law and Regulations. Who's defining enhanced services? What's to say that the government can't say: well, we're going to deinsure this, this, and this, and they become enhanced services? Pretty soon we're like the U.S.A., where virtually everything is an enhanced service at the expense of the taxpayer. Now, that's one concern, the enhanced services.

We talk in terms then of surgical facilities. This is quite cute, because the government doesn't want to use the term "for-profit hospitals" or "hospitals" period. They like to use the term "surgical facilities." But what is a surgical facility? My understanding of a surgical facility is like the facility that is in Calgary and waiting that has three operating theaters, a number of beds for overnight stays. Whether those stays would be for 72 hours, four days, seven days, whatever, we don't know. There is no regulation we're aware of that defines the length of stay, so we have a so-called surgical facility that allows a person to go in there and have a certain type of operation and then spend time recovering. How much time is needed to recover? Who knows at this particular point? There isn't any suggestion by government that they'll bring forward an amendment saying it be restricted to, say, 72 hours, 48 hours, 24 hours, whatever. Right now as it stands, it's unlimited in terms of time.

Now, during the stay in the so-called surgical facility, what happens if something goes wrong? Some operation is carried out, and there were instances, Madam Speaker, in the past . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, the chair will remind you that we have an amendment before us, and I would ask you to be specific to the amendment.

MR. WICKMAN: And the amendment calls for the bill to go to Law and Regulations so we can look in detail at the very issues I'm bringing up that are in Bill 11. Those are the very issues I'm bringing forth, the issues that have to be looked at by Law and Regulations, and surgical facilities is one of them. It's probably the most contentious issue in the entire bill, and Albertans want us to study that in detail. Albertans are telling us that it's got to be studied in detail, that it's not acceptable in its present form. Albertans are also telling us that there's a need to study what has happened in other parts of the world. In Australia, where they've had experiments with so-called privatization of the health care system, we know where that's led. The fact is, Madam Speaker, that no other province in Canada – and let's not throw that red herring Ontario in here – has a similar bill.

However, if the government is successful by some fashion in getting Bill 11 approved, Premier Harris in Ontario will be following just like that, and he'll probably even outdo what's done here, which will force this government to try and outdo the Ontario government like they do with the taxes. Who's got the lowest taxes? Pretty soon it will be: who provides the most private health care, or who keeps the health care costs lowest by shuffling off to the private sector?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, on the amendment. I don't see anything to do with gasoline prices in this amendment. So on the amendment.

MR. WICKMAN: I didn't talk about gasoline prices. I was using an analysis. [interjections] No. I was talking about taxes. Taxes.

Another area that has to be looked at very carefully by the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations is the question of the Canada Health Act and the threat now by the federal Minister of Health, Allan Rock, that he is not happy with Bill 11. He wants to see amendments to Bill 11. What amendments does he want to see to Bill 11? How can we possibly consider allowing this bill to go through at this particular time without giving it that detailed study that has to be done?

There's also a concern, when we look at the provisions of Bill 11 at the current time, that we have to also look at it from a long-term point of view. Is there a mechanism by regulation, by legislation, whatever, for putting safeguards on any such type of legislation or policy that would prevent the bill from simply becoming a crack in the door? We see that door widen and widen and widen until pretty soon we're going to have the full-fledged facilities, a two-tier system. Doctors, Madam Speaker, through the Alberta Medical Association, with the exception of a handful of those that do tend to support the government, are saying that they have concerns with this bill. They feel there's a need for further study as well, because they're concerned from the point of view of: what's going to happen with the shortage of doctors there is at the present time? How many doctors will give up practice in the public sector to go to the private sector in an attempt to make more dollars? So we have to look at that particular aspect of it as well.

Madam Speaker, in the last few weeks we've seen various groups that have come forward. I've mentioned already the Alberta Medical Association, which we understand had the opportunity to meet with the Premier, probably with the Minister of Health and Wellness as well, to express their concerns, and obviously they had concerns. Obviously they had a great number of concerns. Now, I hear the Premier saying that he thinks they're coming onboard. Well, we haven't had any indication that they're coming onboard. There is no indication to perceive that at all.

Just very recently there was a very detailed document submitted by the Health Ethics Centre from the University of Alberta which detailed numbers of issues that have to be addressed before this bill can advance any further than it has at the present time or the intention of the government, to ensure that they get third reading of this bill before this session is completed.

So we have the Alberta Medical Association. We have the Health Ethics Centre. We have the Friends of Medicare, who are out front every Monday and Thursday demonstrating their concern with Bill 11, their concern that enough study hasn't been given to Bill 11. We have a number of unions – the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, the Canadian Union of Public Employees – having to pay good money to run ads to try and counteract the vast amounts of money the government is spending on trying to advance, trying to brain-wash, trying to put a certain spin on this bill in the hopes the public will buy the bill. But, Madam Speaker, it's obvious that the public is not going to buy the bill. They have said it repeatedly, and as we go on, the opposition to the bill continues to grow.

Now, we can diminish that opposition to a degree by agreeing to refer this bill to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, because then Albertans would feel that at least it's being given consideration in terms of detailed study of the various provisions, with the possibility of the committee concluding that the bill should be thrown out entirely and that the government should go back to square one when it comes to the concept of attempting to so called restructure or re-engineer the health care system in the province of Alberta. We all recognize that there's always a need for some change within any system, and there probably are some very, very valid opportunities for change that would benefit tremendously like, oh, opening up the empty beds that are now closed down in your major facilities in Edmonton in particular.

These groups I talk about, Madam Speaker, I would venture to say would welcome the opportunity to appear in front of a committee such as Law and Regulations to make presentations, to provide their input; in other words, to become partners with government in trying to determine the future of health care in this province. How can we, as representatives elected by these very same people, deny them that opportunity? They're the ones that placed us in this position of trust to do the right thing, but at the same time we want to close the door on them and say: well, despite what your feelings are, we're going to go ahead and ram this bill through.

Madam Speaker, if I could poll each of the government members one by one in a private conversation where they could let their soul kind of hang out, I would suspect there are a number in there who are not particularly happy with Bill 11, who would probably agree with our amendment that it should be referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, because it would take the heat off you in your own ridings, where you're getting tremendous heat. Even in rural Alberta we understand there's tremendous heat, because these petitions that we file every day come from Fort Saskatchewan; they come from all parts of the province. Many ridings alone, many constituencies alone have submitted petitions that go over a thousand names in one particular constituency, so we can see there is this very, very widespread concern.

We've attempted as the Liberal caucus, as the Official Opposition, doing what we feel is the right thing to do on behalf of Albertans who are using us as their voice because they have no other effective mechanism to get their concerns expressed to government because government doesn't appear to be listening to what they're saying. We've tried to provide other opportunities; for example, the challenge by members of this caucus to every government member to have public debates on Bill 11. In that way the public in that particular constituency would have an opportunity to come out to quiz their elected representative in the provincial Legislative Assembly as to his or her feelings on Bill 11, as to whether he or she feels there's a need to provide this bill with further study by referring it to a committee like is being suggested by the Member from Edmonton-Manning or if it means scrapping the bill, whatever.

But up to now when I try and count the number of acceptances of the challenge – I don't know. I understand there was one coming in the Fort Saskatchewan area, but that's not a challenge from a Member of the Legislative Assembly; that's a challenge from a representative of an outside group. So as far as I can understand, other than the debate or the town hall meeting, whatever you want to call it, that took place prior to the written invitation attempting to engage government members in debate that was in Edmonton-Gold Bar where – how many hundred people showed up?

8:40

MR. MacDONALD: Five hundred.

MR. WICKMAN: Five hundred? Five hundred people showed up.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, on the amendment, please.

MR. WICKMAN: Now, on the amendment as I wrap up now, when I go through the amendment – boy, 20 minutes can sure be a long time, eh?

As I wrap up, let's be very careful about the wording of the amendment, that

Bill 11, Health Care Protection Act, be not now read a second time but that the order for second reading be discharged, the bill withdrawn, and the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

When we look at the very wording of that amendment, it tells us a number of things. It tells us that the bill is temporarily withdrawn. That's not to say that the government couldn't bring back the bill with a number of amendments in it that would make it acceptable to the people in Alberta, to the residents of Alberta, the taxpayers of Alberta, but to do the honourable thing while the whole concept of the protection act is being studied, the bill would have to be withdrawn.

I've attempted to outline some of the concerns of the subject matter, such as the enhanced services, the surgical facilities, the experiments that take place in other countries like Australia, the fact that no other province in Canada has similar legislation, the fact that there is a federal threat that it may be in violation of the Canada Health Act. If that's the case, there could be a withdrawal of transfer funds from the federal government which would put an additional financial burden on all Albertans. Also, the possibility of the legislation being a crack in the door for future expansion of the privatization of the entire health care system. The concerns that have been expressed by a number of organizations like the Alberta Medical Association, the Canadian Union of Public Employees, the Friends of Medicare, the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, and others. The concept that we really haven't had the opportunity, whether it be in the legislative chambers – and the Premier likes to refer to this being the place for debate.

Well, the only difficulty is that in terms of a debate we can sit here and debate, but the public has to sit up there and watch or they have to watch the televised debate that was held on – and that really wasn't a debate. That was a number of speakers.

You did a fine job that evening, by the way.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you.

MR. WICKMAN: And the Member for Calgary-Buffalo we were particularly proud of and of course our leader.

Madam Chairman, it's asking very specifically that Bill 11 – the buzzer didn't go, eh? Oh, the buzzer went?

AN HON. MEMBER: No.

MR. WICKMAN: Oh. It's asking very specifically . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Madam Speaker.

MR. WICKMAN: Madam Chairperson, Madam Speaker. Okay; Madam Speaker.

It spells out very carefully that Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act, "be not now read a second time." In other words, the bill has been given first reading, but it wouldn't be read a second time. It would go directly to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations instead of going to committee stage here and then coming forward for third reading further down the road. Meanwhile, the bill would be withdrawn and the subject matter would be studied in detail.

Now, the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations – and I recognize it's a committee that doesn't meet on a very regular basis.

MS LEIBOVICI: Never that I've known.

MR. WICKMAN: Never? This would be a good exercise for that committee to finally get its teeth in something, and it would be interesting to see the outcome of it. Members of the government side, members of the opposition side . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt you, hon. member, but your time has expired.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was just so intrigued by that speech that I thought I couldn't pass up the opportunity to get up and speak against the motion.

You know, it's interesting because . . .

DR. TAYLOR: He had me convinced.

MR. HERARD: Well, now you're going to have to pay attention to this one, and maybe we'll unconvince you.

You know, every morning I wake up and wonder: what kind of new twists and turns is the opposition going to pull today to feed the media feeding frenzy and to promote conflict, confusion, confrontation, and the misunderstanding of some fairly simple underlying policy issues? And today the answer is: well, let's refer this bill to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

Now, I don't know what it is they think they're going to learn by doing that, because it's actually fairly simple. Over the last 10 years improvements in technology and surgical procedures have made it possible for about 50 or 52 private surgical facilities to perform more than 20,000 relatively minor . . .

DR. TAYLOR: How many?

MR. HERARD: Twenty thousand relatively minor surgical procedures that formerly were all done in hospitals.

Now, I remember my own kid, my youngest one, spent about three days in hospital for tonsils. Well, everybody knows you don't need a Committee on Law and Regulations to tell you that you don't do tonsils in hospitals anymore. So in the last decade an increasing volume of procedures done safely every day in clinics frees up thousands and thousands of hours of hospital operating room time.

DR. TAYLOR: How much?

MR. HERARD: Thousands of hours. I mean, if there are 20,000 procedures done a year, that frees up thousands of hours of operating room time. Not only that, but it frees up beds in hospitals that cost between $600 and $1,000. You don't need a committee to tell you that that's happening. That's reality. So why would you want to refer this to a committee?

All that time that's being saved in all these relatively minor surgical procedures every year essentially results in improved access for the more serious cases that continue to be done in our hospitals. In addition to that, cancellations due to emergencies are all but eliminated. You know, you didn't get up at 6 in the morning to get to your appointment at the hospital only to find out that there's been an emergency and your operation's been bumped. So from that perspective, why do we need to refer this to a committee? This is what the committee would find out, because that's the reality of the current system today.

Now, currently there are more than 150 different types of surgical procedures that are done safely every day in existing clinics, but they're subject to a 12-hour rule, which, in essence, prevents the health system from taking advantage of continuous improvements in technology and surgical procedures such as laparoscopic and laser techniques, that continue to be perfected and improve outcomes each and every year. What the committee would tell these people is that that's what's going on in our hospitals today. So why do we need a committee to determine that?

What Bill 11 does is remove the 12-hour barrier and empowers the College of Physicians and Surgeons to define which of these new-age minor procedures can be done safely in a clinic. You know, that's what they would find out if they went to this Law and Regulations Committee, because the health care professionals would tell them: hey, wake up guys; this is what's going on.

I've got a whole lot more that I can say, but I know they're going to give me more opportunities to stand and talk about this because of the games they're playing with respect to the filibuster on this issue. So I'm going to sit down now, but I expect they'll give me more opportunities to get up.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's interesting that when we challenged all the government members to a debate, they said the debate would happen here in the Legislative Assembly. Now when we are actually entering into the debate, every one of the members can actually take the dictionary and see what the meaning of debate is. You will find that it means to discuss within the confines of this Legislative Assembly this particular bill that is at hand. So what we are having now, ladies and gentlemen, is a debate. It is not a game. It is not a filibuster. It is a debate.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, the chair will remind you that we are not in second reading of Bill 11. We are on an amendment.

MS LEIBOVICI: Part of the debate on Bill 11 is the amendments that we have put forward as the Official Opposition. The amendment, just to remind everyone here, moved by the Member for Edmonton-Manning is that

Bill 11, Health Care Protection Act, be not now read a second time but that the order for second reading be discharged, the bill withdrawn, and the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

So I found it interesting that when the Member for Calgary-Egmont entered the debate on the amendment to discuss what the subject matter was, he seems to have misunderstood what exactly the bill is about. What the bill is about is promoting private, for-profit health care in this province. That is the premise of the bill. Whether that is through the use of surgical facilities that provide minor, under 12-hour surgeries or major, over 12-hour surgeries, the premise of the bill is private, for-profit health care, and that is the bottom line.

If in fact the bill were to regulate surgical procedures in surgical facilities, as we have in the province right now, you would not find section 16 in the bill. You would find section 16 in the bill in a manner that would in fact control the amount of procedures that are performed in day, uninsured surgery, and that is not what is happening, Madam Speaker.

What this bill does is open up to overnight stays, it expands on the definition of what is considered minor surgery right now within this province, and it allows for the charging and for the conflict of interest that is inherent with the concept of the enhanced services clause that is in Bill 11.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, on the amendment. You are going through section 16 of the bill. We have an amendment before us. On the amendment, please.

MS LEIBOVICI: The amendment is that "the subject matter [be] referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations," and the subject matter is private, for-profit health care, and that is the premise of Bill 11.

Now, the government members have talked about the sky is falling. They've said and they've pledged that there's no one here to destroy medicare. They have indicated that we are fear mongering. You know, Madam Speaker, in the last seven years I've heard them say the same thing about other objections we have had with the way the health care system has been mismanaged within this province. They have said that the victim of the week did not exist, that in fact nobody was suffering from the health care cuts that they put forward from '93 on. They indicated that the government had a plan, and we can count how many plans this government has had. You know what? Not one of them has obviously been successful, because here we are with another ill-conceived plan that promotes private, for-profit health care this time.

They have indicated that what is needed is to have these facilities because in fact it will help with the waiting lists in the province right now. Well, as the member just indicated, there are 20,000 procedures that are being done in this province on an annual basis by 52 clinics throughout the province. You know what? Those waiting lists haven't been diminished. So where is your proof that in actual fact these surgical facilities are going to have any impact on waiting lists? There is no proof because there isn't the case for it.

The reality is that if this government were in fact interested in doing something about the health care mess they created in this province, they would be looking at other issues. They would not be promoting the subject matter which is being referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations of private, for-profit health care in this province. What they would be looking at are issues of long-term care and putting a real commitment to long-term care. They would be looking at issues of home care. They would be looking at issues of preventative medical care. They would be looking at issues of working with the professionals within the system to ensure that the professionals who are doing the jobs are in the right place when they're required. That is what they would be doing, not this half-baked scheme to allow a few private operators in this province to make a profit on the illness of people.

We have seen over and over again, Madam Speaker, that there needs to be more study on this particular issue. It has been brought to every single member's attention within this Legislative Assembly, and they have the stubbornness and the gall – I wasn't sure if that was parliamentary; that's why I wasn't using it – the gall to sit back and say that they know what is right, that they know better than the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses, than the Canadian Nurses Association, than the Alberta Medical Association, than the Consumers' Association of Alberta, than the many law professors who have written on this subject, and the federal Minister of Health. The list goes on and on and on. In actual fact, what is here in this bill is what they believe it to be as opposed to what every other organization, just about, in unison has said not only in this province but across the country.

If I can just start with one of those issues that there is unanimity on, the fact that the private hospital as defined in this piece of legislation is in actual fact an approved surgical facility.

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, I've allowed a lot of leeway here. I'm listening very carefully, and it sounds to me like this is a speech for second reading, not on the amendment. Let's get back to the amendment that was brought forward by one of your colleagues.

Debate Continued

MS LEIBOVICI: The reason that it's so important for this amendment to pass is just so this issue can be discussed in front of the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. We could have presentations by those groups. We could have presentations by the academics, by the lawyers, by the associations that in fact have sent information to the government members. Who knows where that information has gone? The Standing Committee on Law and Regulations would be able to call people in, would be able to listen to their arguments, would be able to see whether or not those arguments have bearing with regards to the subject matter of the bill, and would be able to bring that report back to this Legislative Assembly.

Is that such a terrible thing? Is that such a terrible thing in a democracy, to have a committee that is actually a standing committee of this Legislative Assembly take a look at what this particular bill implies, what this particular bill is? If the government indeed had the courage of its convictions, it would not sit back and say that this is not needed, that this is not required. In fact, what they would do is welcome this initiative with open arms and indicate that yes, this is a good idea, that yes, this might restore confidence back in the government, because as we know there is starting to be a lack of confidence in what the government is promoting, and would in fact allow for those very things we are talking about in the Legislative Assembly to be taken out of the combative forum we're in and put into another forum where in actual fact there can be some listening and there can be some understanding of what the issues really are when it comes to what is needed in this province with regards to control of the surgical facilities that exist right now and have been allowed to expand by 50 percent under the watch of this government. That is what it's all about, Madam Speaker.

To say that what this is about is what kind of surgeries are going to be provided – and that's what the committee will talk about – is quite frankly misreading and misconstruing what the amendment is and the intent of the amendment. In actual fact we know that there are many, many problems with regards to the definition that has been put forward by the government with regards to the artificial terms minor and major surgeries.

If any of you take the opportunity to visit with your local GP or visit with any specialist that you know, they will in fact tell you that there is no definition of minor and major and that the definition hinges on what the recovery time is that's required for individuals who have undergone a procedure and that the reason there is a 12-hour limit is because anything over that is considered to be dangerous if you don't have the full capacity of a hospital to back it up. So that's why the committee can look at these things, Madam Speaker. The committee in fact can take this information, can then distill the information, and then can provide it back to the Assembly for discussion and decision-making.

But do you know my fear, Madam Speaker? My fear is that the government has already made up its mind, that the government has no intention of listening to either the well-brought-up objections of the Official Opposition, of the third party in this Legislative Assembly, or of the many thousands of Albertans who have in fact indicated that they are against this bill and the subject matter of the bill. In fact, what they have decided is that they're going to push this bill through no matter what in order to ensure that there is private, for-profit health care in this province.

Do we need this amendment? Yes, we do. We need this amendment because without it we will be rushing through a discussion that will have a major impact not only on this province but across Canada. We have already heard what some of the opinions are with regards to NAFTA. We already know that there are opinions that vary. That in and of itself should send a message to each and every one of the government members: if we have two different legal opinions, we know that there is going to be judicial review required and that we may well be on the losing end.

We also know that there have been similar kinds of experiments with regards to private, for-profit health care in other countries around the world, and in fact they have shown that it does not reduce the wait list, that it has no impact on the costs to the public health care system other than pulling away dollars and pulling away professionals from the public health care system, and in fact is more costly to individuals out of pocket.

I can only urge, Madam Speaker, that individuals look carefully at what this amendment is, that individuals look and search and hopefully have had a chance to maybe even talk with their constituents over the break that we've had from 5:30 to 8 o'clock to decide whether or not this is something that they should vote for. This is not a matter of caucus solidarity but is a matter where each member can look at this amendment on its merit and then make a decision that in fact what needs to occur is more discussion and that the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations would afford for that particular discussion to occur.

Without this amendment it will be very difficult to have that kind of openness that's required in order to look at what the NAFTA implications are, to look at what the ethical implications are, to look at what in fact the various associations, as I indicated earlier, have indicated, to look at the different models of health care delivery that are present throughout the world, whether it be in Great Britain, whether it be in Australia, whether it be in New Zealand, whether it be in Japan, whether it be in Sweden, whether it be in South Africa. I, Madam Speaker, have had an opportunity to read about all those countries and the kind of health care they provide and the problems that occur when you have a public system running parallel with a private, for-profit system, and you know, the stories are not good. The stories are actually quite frightening as to what occurs when you have two systems running side by side, which is exactly what this bill will provide for.

The members can believe the spin. They can. The government members can believe the spin. They can believe the junior minister, who says no. They can believe the senior minister, who says no. They can believe their Premier, who says . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, on the amendment.

MS LEIBOVICI: The Standing Committee on Law and Regulations will allow the opportunity for all of the members to in actual fact have those positions put forward to them so that they can make those decisions on their own.

The amount of information that is present right now is overwhelming, quite frankly. Every day there's another report that lands on my desk that indicates that this is ill conceived. A committee that is set up, that is an all-party committee, can look at those reports, can filter through those reports, can see if perhaps there are biases in those reports, either on one side or on the other side, and find what the actual matter is at hand and what the actual truth is.

From what I have seen, Madam Speaker, it is very clear that there is an understanding that this bill promotes private, for-profit health care, that this bill actually sets up private, for-profit hospitals – call them what you may – that this bill provides for and does not control the provision of uninsured services and provides limited controls on the provision of insured services. In actual fact it provides very little other than the opening of the doors to private, for-profit health care, which isn't controllable right now under the legislation that exists, the legislation that exists under the Hospitals Act and the legislation that exists through the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the Medical Profession Act.

We need to look at what this bill is about, Madam Speaker. We need to have a clear understanding that in actual fact the minister has the ability to control what he says he doesn't control. What he doesn't have the ability to do is to control an entity that doesn't exist, and that's an entity that provides overnight services. The easiest way to make that a controllable issue is to shut the door tight on it, and that's not happening. The forum that I was just at indicated – and it was interesting actually. The Member for St. Albert indicated that without this bill HRG would be able to tomorrow come forward and actually set up a private, for-profit facility. Well, Christine Burdett, from the Friends of Medicare, came back and said: with this bill HRG will be at the door with a contract in hand for Mr. Dinning to sign on the bottom line to open a private, for-profit facility.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadow-lark, we are dealing with an amendment. We are not dealing with second reading of the bill. We are dealing with an amendment.

MS LEIBOVICI: I keep going back, Madam Speaker, and I thank you for keeping me on track. The subject matter is private, for-profit health care, and I'm trying to make sure that the members understand why we want this referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. If I go off track, I know you will put me back on, so I appreciate that.

Without that clear understanding of what the elements of the bill are that say that we want that subject matter to be referred, I don't think the members can make an informed decision. I'm trying my best to open up their minds to see that in actual fact this is a very important matter. It needs to go the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. There needs to be open and honest give-and-take discussion on what this is about. This is the least that can be done to protect the public's interest with regards to protecting our public health care system. I don't think that's a whole lot to ask from the Members of this Legislative Assembly. It would be a first, granted, in the seven years that I have been here, to have anything referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. In fact we are the only province across Canada that has not made it a part of its legislative process to refer items to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

This is not a sign of weakness by a government. I think it would be considered a sign of strength for this government to admit that this is a process that could well serve not only the citizens of the province but could also serve to expand the understanding that each and every one of us has with regards to this particular issue.

9:10

So I can only reiterate that I think this is very important, that it needs to occur, that in actual fact there needs to be a referral to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. This is not something that the government members should back off from. This is something that the government members should in actual fact endorse because it is an important initiative that would demonstrate to Albertans that they are open to and willing to listen to what the concerns are. Those concerns, I am sure, have been coming fast and furious to each and every member within this Assembly.

With those comments, Madam Speaker, I would like to again encourage that the members vote for this particular amendment. Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:13 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment lost]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 47(1) I move that this question be now put.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Point of Order Previous Question

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The question cannot now be put. The amendment that we talked to and just had the vote on was a referral amendment, not a hoist amendment. There is quite a bit of validation in both Erskine May and Beauchesne to tell us that we can continue.

In addition to that, I would refer to a note that we got from Mr.

Speaker earlier today confirming that second reading debate would continue should this amendment fail. Definitely that was the ruling of the Speaker earlier this afternoon. I could produce this if you want.

I would refer you to page 475 of the 21st edition of Erskine May on this particular point with reference to such an amendment. The amendment “may seek further information in relation to the bill by committees, commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence.” The purpose of the amendment is to seek more information before proceeding, not necessarily to kill the bill as might be the case with a hoist amendment. So based on that, in terms of Erskine May, the question put by the Government House Leader right now is not relevant or valid.

If we go on, in Beauchesne clauses 673 to 676 clearly deal with the referral of subject matter of a bill to a committee. Section 673 suggests this amendment can be used “where further information is desired in direct relation to the terms of the bill before the House,” just as we had here. It notes that the subject matter, not the bill itself, is what is being referred to committee. So once again the vote he is calling at this point in time is not relevant because we do still have speakers at second reading who wish to put their concerns forward.

Referral of the bill’s subject matter is not a defeat of its merits necessarily, Madam Speaker, but merely a question of the content and subject matter. Our amendment specifically holds the bill in abeyance to be evaluated by the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, who would then report back with their findings. Since the amendment does not actually refer the bill to the standing committee, only the subject matter itself, the bill is not being called into question, only the subject matter. So there is no justification for going to the vote for second reading as there would be with a hoist amendment.

With that, Madam Speaker, I would ask you if you would like me to refer the note to you, the ruling that was made earlier today by Mr. Speaker.

MR. HAVELOCK: Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Just one moment, hon. Deputy Government House Leader. This is a proper question. It can be put to the Assembly. The motion is debatable, and it cannot be amended.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Just so I understand then, Madam Speaker, what this motion allows all members of this House to do now is speak to the bill at second reading one more time. Once that has been concluded, if I’m not mistaken, then the vote must be called. Is that correct? It also precludes any further amendment of the bill at second reading stage.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The motion that you brought forward, hon. member, is debatable under Standing Order 18(1)(c), and it cannot be amended. If carried, the vote is immediately called on the original question. In other words, we then go to second reading of Bill 11, but we are right now dealing with the motion that the question be now put. That is what we’re dealing with, and once all those who wish to speak to this have, then we will vote on that, and then we would move immediately, if that’s passed, to the vote on second reading of Bill 11.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, the chair would like to seek some clarification. It sounded to the chair as though you were wishing to debate further the amendment to the motion that we just previously dealt with under a division, and that was defeated. In fact, we’re now speaking to that this question be now put under Standing Order 47(1).

MS CARLSON: So just as a point of clarification, Madam Speaker, are you telling us that now we are going to revert directly to second reading on Bill 11?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: We must. This motion that the hon. Deputy Government House Leader has brought forward is under Standing Order 18(1)(c). The motion is debatable. It cannot be amended. If carried, the vote is immediately called on the original question. In other words, we would revert to second reading of Bill 11.

MS CARLSON: I’m sorry, Madam Speaker. I need some clarification in terms of the intent of that.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I would ask that you look under Standing Order 18(1)(c).

MS CARLSON: I am there, and I do see that this is a motion which is debatable for the previous question, and as I understand the question, the Deputy Government House Leader is requesting that we now vote on second reading of Bill 11.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The Deputy Government House Leader has brought forward that this question be now put under Standing Order 47(1). If you would look that up, I will read it for you.

The previous question, until it is decided, shall preclude all amendment of the main question. The previous question shall be in the following words: “That this question be now put.” Everything that is before the Assembly is in order.

MS CARLSON: Madam Speaker, just as a point of clarification, my question is: does that then conclude second reading debate?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: If this is carried, the vote is immediately called on the original question, and the original question is second reading of Bill 11.

MS CARLSON: Madam Speaker, no. We would disagree with that.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Right now before the Assembly there is a motion. The hon. Deputy Government House Leader has moved that this question be now put. This is what we’re debating right now.

MS CARLSON: Once again on a point of clarification then, if we debate the motion that the question be now put and the government wins that vote, then that would conclude second reading debate, which we are saying is not a fair and reasonable question to be put at this time because the amendment that we had under discussion is not a hoist amendment. In addition to that, Madam Speaker, we have a note from the Speaker this afternoon, who said that second reading debate would continue this evening on conclusion of the vote on the amendment that we just voted on.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: As I read to you, under Standing Order 47(1) “the previous question, until it is decided, shall preclude all amendment.” The chair is just doing as the Assembly has instructed the chair to do. The motion was made that the question be now put. It is part of our proceedings in the House under Standing Orders.

I must in fact move ahead. I've tried to explain what all is involved here. We are now debating that the question be now put. That is what we are debating within the Assembly at this point.

MS CARLSON: Okay. Well, Madam Speaker, I rise to debate that particular motion then. I find it to be completely out of order in this House, and I find your ruling on that particular motion also not to be in good faith with the nature of this Assembly. In fact, I went through a number of circumstances both in Beauchesne and in Erskine May outlining why we should be able to continue debate on Bill 11 in second reading at the conclusion of that last standing vote, so I would put forward that the Deputy Government House Leader's motion was out of order in this House. I do question how it can be put forward, particularly when we have the word of the Speaker of this Assembly from this afternoon, who stated particularly that second reading would continue.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, what has transpired here is definitely in order. It is within our Standing Orders. This is what we use in this Assembly along, certainly, with other references. Again I would ask you and all members of the Assembly to please pay attention to section 47(1) and take a look at it, because it is in order.

I certainly, hon. member, have a number of people that advise me very well on the procedures of this House, and I would ask that you not keep questioning my decision on this matter. It is in order. I've gone over it when you were seeking earlier clarification. I have spelled out for you what all is involved here. The debate right now will take place on what was brought forward, that this question should be now put. So that is what we're debating. It is debatable.

MS CARLSON: I am supposed to be debating it, Madam Speaker, and I would request that by tomorrow at 1:30 we have a written decision in terms of the Speaker's comments this afternoon that second reading would continue after conclusion of this debate.

I will send that information to you in writing, Madam Speaker, and find out precisely why instructions that we were given earlier this day do not carry forward into this evening. I find that to be quite an appalling state of affairs when we have a number of speakers who still wish to speak to this bill at second reading. They now do not have the ability . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, I am the Speaker this evening, and I have gone over what exactly is involved here, what the procedure is. We are dealing with a motion that is on the floor. We are also dealing with what is within our Standing Orders. You can send me a letter if you wish, but I think we need to move ahead and debate what we have before us right in the motion. That is that it has been moved that this question be now put, so I would ask that you debate that.

Debate Continued

MS CARLSON: And that is what I was debating, Madam Speaker. I don't agree with the motion, and all of the arguments that I'm putting forward are supporting disagreement with that motion. This is closure. This is a closure motion coming in on second reading of this particular bill. You can dress it up any way you want to, but the fact is that it's still closure, and you are stifling debate in this Assembly on one of the most important bills that we will ever see in the history of this province. I do not agree with it, and I will argue for a full 20 minutes on this particular point.

Madam Speaker, we have at least five more speakers who wish to speak to this bill in principle. If this motion is voted on, then they will not have the opportunity to speak in principle on this bill because it will be out of second reading and we will be into committee and we will not have the same kinds of opportunities that we would have had now.

We have a number of points to be made. I myself have not had an opportunity to speak to this bill at second reading, and I have a number of concerns in principle with what many of the government speakers have said, including the Premier, including the health minister, and including the junior health minister. There are many comments they made that in principle I find to be quite appalling and quite out of order with the nature of what we can see as being the interpretation of this particular bill.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Order. Order.

MS CARLSON: Settle down, you guys, because all you're going to do is get me going for a longer time period and every single other person here. I mean, we've got a lot of time to put in tonight if that's what you want to do.

There are a number of issues in principle that have to be resolved with this bill, and I am going to itemize them point by point, Madam Speaker, and use up my 20 minutes.

First of all, we have seen a number of speakers in this House trot out that private clinic in Ontario, the Shouldice private clinic. It is not a discussion relevant to Bill 11, as many of the government members have tried to make it, for a number of reasons. Should I get the opportunity to speak in principle to Bill 11, these are the kinds of comments I would make about that clinic. First of all, it does not apply to the Alberta example because it's a grandfathered clinic. No private clinics since that date, which was in the late '50s, have been allowed to operate in Ontario. They have been specifically outlawed, Madam Speaker, so it's an unusual and unrealistic and quite questionable example for a number of the government members to have used in their debate.

If I had the opportunity to speak to Bill 11 in second reading, I would go on to point out what really does happen at Shouldice hospital, Madam Speaker. It is quite appalling when you think in terms of how they use government funding and how that same principle and that same idea would be applied in this province. If I were allowed to speak in principle to Bill 11, this is what I would say about this particular hospital in Ontario. This particular hospital only takes very, very low-risk surgeries from the most fit clients. I would put it to you that there is hardly an MLA in this Assembly who would fit the criteria of Shouldice hospital, because you cannot have more than 10 percent body fat, you cannot have any extraordinary conditions like diabetes or high blood pressure . . .

DR. TAYLOR: Speak for yourself.

MS CARLSON: Well, I'm looking, boy, and I don't see too many, I've got to tell you.

So any kind of extraordinary complications, medical complications – as commonplace as high blood pressure is, if you had that, you couldn't get into Shouldice clinic. It is discriminatory, Madam Speaker, in the widest possible context, because they only take the very . . .

DR. TAYLOR: On the motion.

MS CARLSON: I am on the motion. I'm talking about what I would speaking in principle on Bill 11 should I get the opportunity to talk to it, and I'm going to be talking about Shouldice.

Hardly anyone in this particular Assembly could get in there, Madam Speaker, because they wouldn't in the first place fit the criteria. Secondly, they only take the least complicated surgeries, so the very simplest hernia operation is all they take. They have a mandatory three-day stay regardless of the fact that simple hernias are day surgery in most jurisdictions. And guess what happens? It's a mandatory three-day stay in Ontario, and they charge the Ontario hospital system for all three days for a day surgery procedure. [interjection] Well, that is appalling.

The government members say that it would be cheaper to have private clinics and that it would reduce the waiting lines, but when you take a look at the facts, which this government is not prepared to do, that does not happen. For a simple day surgery, patients – and they're clients, really; they're not patients – are required to stay for three days, at which time Shouldice charges the government of Ontario for a three-night stay for a simple day surgery.

Then what happens? To get in there, you have to sign a waiver, Madam Speaker. Go figure. In the waiver they set out all the issues that could happen with complications, such things like losing feeling in your body. You have to sign a waiver to say that you will not charge them or go after them in any manner should they miff the operation and you have serious complications. Minor complications or serious complications: it doesn't matter. If you're going to go to Shouldice, you're in there for three days – they charge the Ontario government for three days – and you're signing a waiver effectively giving away all the patient rights you ever had. That doesn't sound like a very fair practice. Once again it sounds quite discriminatory.

Here's what happened in an actual case of a friend of mine, Madam Speaker. He happened to fit the criteria to get into the hospital. My buddy went in, and when they did the first initial discussion and diagnostics with him, it turned out he had a triple hernia, not a simple hernia. Of course, he doesn't fit their criteria. He's kicked off the list and has to go back on another list to get into the public system. Already now we've incurred costs for the government of Ontario in that case, because his initial visit was charged to the Ontario hospital. So we've got a cost there already.

They refused to take him. He asked them at that time what would have happened had they not realized, prior to his being on the operating table, that this would have been a complicated surgery, and this is what they told him, Madam Speaker. They would have taken him into the system. He would have come in that afternoon like all of their patients do, had a nice supper, which is an extra billing charge because that's an added service, gone to sleep that night in the hospital at the cost of the Ontario taxpayers, and then they would have put him on the operating table the next day. They would've opened him up and realized the surgery was more complicated than what they're willing to do. What they would have done at that point is clipped him back up and sent him in an ambulance to the public system.

Now look at the costs that we've incurred in a case like this. They charge for the initial examination. They charge for the first day's overnight stay. They charge for cutting him open, the initial exploratory surgery. They charge for putting him in an ambulance, and he gets sent to the public system, where he's got to have the same procedure done. What does that cost the taxpayers, Madam Speaker? A whole lot more than it does for day surgery, to have it done in the public system in the first place. So all of those things get charged to the system.

What happened to this fellow, then, when he went into the regular public hospital? He was scheduled for day surgery. He goes in at 8 a.m. He's scheduled for a 35-minute surgery. It ended up taking an hour and 45 minutes because it really was very complicated, with extensive concerns that he had there; there was quite a bit of stitching and so on. Madam Speaker, he's out at 7:30 the same evening. He goes in at 8 o'clock in the morning and is out at 7:30, so minimal cost to the taxpayers within the public system. Well taken care of, triple hernia surgery, a very complicated surgery. Everything goes very smoothly. He's able to go home. He's happy to go home, and this is in the public system.

Now, had he been in the Shouldice system, it would have been much more expensive for the taxpayers there. In the public system the charges are for the pre-op exam, the day use of the bed, and the operation itself. Let's remind ourselves what it would cost in the Shouldice system. It's the pre-op exam, the initial exploratory exam, the overnight stay, the ambulance, the surgery in the public system, the day use, and a post-op exam. Even a fool can figure out that it's about three or four times more expensive to go to the Shouldice system in a situation like that. It is more than three times more expensive in any case, because the costs are for three overnight stays plus the operation and the exams themselves as compared to day surgery in the public system.

So, Madam Speaker, were I able to speak in principle on Bill 11, I would be very concerned that the example this government is using in terms of putting forward this particular example as a way for us to go in a private health care system like they are proposing for this province is going to cost us substantively more than what using the current public system does. Substantively more. I request the government to put forward some figures or to table just any kind of information at all, even a very limited amount of information, indicating that this would not be true, because this is not the only example I have. I have several examples of Shouldice clinic particularly being horrendously more expensive than standard procedures would be in the public system. The example the government is using and the way they are using it is, I put to you, misleading in terms of the effect it's having on the people of this province when they are trying to evaluate this bill. That is a major concern for us. In fact, what they have done with those kinds of examples is fed incorrect information even to their own members.

Earlier this evening, Madam Speaker, we heard from Calgary-Egmont, who didn't like some of the comments that we had made and rose to speak to them. If we are not able to continue debate in second reading on this bill, we will not be able to address those kinds of concerns. He talked about things like the results causing improved access. Well, we've just heard from the example of Shouldice that in fact that doesn't happen. Most of these people get bounced back to the public system anyway, so what happens? Now they're in emergency, so they bump to the front of the line. So his comment that cancellations due to emergencies are almost eliminated in a private system is completely unfounded. In fact, the reverse may actually be true. Because of complications occurring in the private system, we may see more cancellations due to emergencies in the public system. That is completely different than what they are trying to tell the people of this province, and it is certainly a situation that we want to address.

Now, how do these clinics make their money? If they're getting the same amount of money for an operation as the public system does, clearly that isn't going to meet their needs. They're going to have to do fancy footwork like Shouldice does, and those are things like keeping people in the hospital for longer stays than what they would get in a public system. They will be doing things like pushing the value-added services that they talk about. The instant you go to a doctor and you go to a clinic or a hospital, be it private or public, and that doctor tells you that an enhanced service would enhance the quality of your life or enhance your performance upon leaving the hospital or just be better than the average one, which may or may not last the amount of time as the enhanced service does, you are playing on people's vulnerabilities, Madam Speaker. That is a horrendous place for us to be going in this province.

People trust their doctors. They believe what they tell them. We as laypeople do not have the technical knowledge or the medical knowledge to be able to do a benefit analysis of services being provided or services being pushed by doctors or by clinics in terms of being enhanced, and we do not have the kind of criteria to evaluate those kinds of determinates in a manner that is realistic. It's unrealistic for this government to be saying that that is going to be a legitimate service provided by private clinics in the future.

There's a good reason why Saskatchewan doesn't allow that to happen, Madam Speaker, and it's because people pay more than they need to. It is no different than people going door to door and ripping off vulnerable people at the door by telling them that they need their roof repaired when they don't really – they've got five or six shingles that need to be repaired – or any of the other kinds of house repair scams we see. This is a health care scam.

Everybody in the province will do everything they can to support family members when they need health care, Madam Speaker, but they will not be able to argue value-added products that are going to be pushed by these clinics so that they can up their profit margins, because they don't have the ability or the technical knowledge to do it. This government then becomes a conspirator in promoting services for people that may not be needed, and that is a very serious situation and will hurt the people of this province, not to mention that it will cause people to spend more money on health care than we would see otherwise happening in a properly funded public system. So that's a real issue.

When we take a look at the private system, the American system particularly, we see that those costs are exorbitantly higher than the public system here. So how can the Premier say in his remarks that a private system is going to be cheaper when we know just the administrative costs go up astronomically when you start to introduce a private system?

We know that's happening in this province right now. The number of health insurance companies that are out flogging their wares at this particular time has more than tripled since the potential for private health care has been introduced into this province. What does that mean? Once again consumers who don't have the kind of detailed background information that they require to make informed choices are being bombarded with advertising. Seniors particularly are being hardest hit with this advertising, and quite frankly, Madam Speaker, the people I've talked to just don't know what to do. They're saying: "Do we need another insurance carrier? Everybody is telling us that Alberta health care does not supply us with adequate coverage at this time. We've got Blue Cross, but, gee, all these new wonder drugs aren't covered under Blue Cross. What am I supposed to do? Under one of these other insurance companies will those drugs be covered? Will I get better coverage? Should I have better coverage? How do I analyze it? How will I know it's better?" What's worse, people have all these questions that can't be answered, and the government, instead of doing their job and helping them out . . .

A HON. MEMBER: Just tell them the truth.

MS CARLSON: Well, we are telling the truth, you know, and that's the point that's being made here. There's a lot of information that needs to be put forward on this bill and analyzed in a comprehensive fashion. People are asking these questions. The health insurance companies know exactly what they're doing. They know that if they're first in, their chances of making a buck are substantial. The first in to get the people signed up to the new health care insurance regime will likely keep those people as contributors for a very long time, and that means substantial profits for those companies. What it means for the health care system is more paperwork. What it means for doctors is more paperwork, and what it also means for doctors is a move to managed care, Madam Speaker.

We know from the American examples what happens under managed care. Patients suffer and the doctors suffer, because they cannot always do the full kinds of services that are required. We have a similar system of managed care in this province right now, Madam Speaker. I would put to you that the WCB runs a managed care system for people who have been hurt in this province in work-related accidents. In fact, many doctors are told what they can and cannot do in terms of providing service for people under WCB. WCB keeps their own roster of doctors that people who have been hurt in work-related accidents are required to go and attend. They can't always go to their own physician. They cannot go to specialists of their choice. They are directed to go to WCB doctors. What's covered and what isn't covered is substantially directed by WCB.

We have in my office at this point five or six different cases where WCB doctors have made a statement one year and then a year or two down the road, when nothing has changed in the patient's condition, have completely reversed what they said before and come up with a new ruling that is more harmful to the patient than the previous one, all based on no substantive evidence, no scientific evidence.

These are concerns, and these are concerns that we will have if we cannot proceed on Bill 11 in second reading.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll be brief, but I think it would be important to put on the record of Hansard what happened this evening. As you've indicated, it's never too late to explain things to the opposition.

The motion that was placed before the House this morning, Madam Speaker, was consistent with the Speaker's ruling this afternoon, and it was consistent from this perspective. After the amendment was defeated, we reverted to second reading, and there's nothing to preclude anyone in this House from moving a Standing Order 47(1) motion during second reading. So we were in second reading, and the Speaker's indication to the opposition members this afternoon was certainly honoured.

Now, as concerns the arguments that we have limited debate, Madam Speaker, this evening the opposition had an opportunity to debate their amendment. Of the 16 members of their caucus only nine availed themselves of that opportunity for some reason which is not clear to me.

Nevertheless, Madam Speaker, we should also look at what the motion which is now before the House now provides. It provides an opportunity for each and every member of the opposition to once again be allocated a full 20 minutes to address the issue, and in fact listening to the hon. member's comments which she just made, it's very clear to me that we have through this motion provided, I think, a very good opportunity for each and every member in this House to actually participate once again. I would also encourage members of government to enter the debate later on, because I think a number of the comments that have been made should not go unchallenged.

So with that, Madam Speaker, I will take my seat, but again I just want to emphasize that what transpired this evening was entirely consistent with our rules. To date at second reading I believe we've had 11 members of the opposition address the issue, another nine addressed the issue through the amendment, and we will now probably hear all 16 members of the Liberal opposition address the issue once again.

Plus what was very interesting today, Madam Speaker – and I think the Speaker was right when he indicated that each and every day we're having additional debate in this House taking place for approximately 30 to 35 minutes during question period. In the time I've been in the Legislature, there's no issue that's been given the opportunity for debate and that actually has been debated as much as this particular matter.

So thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll now turn the floor over to the opposition if they'd like to certainly get involved. Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Previous Question

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Before you do, those that have sent me notes, I would have you refer to Beauchesne 521: "The form of the motion is 'That the question be now put.' Once it is proposed, the debate may continue on the original question." As you just duly noted with the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, I mean, she was speaking on the original question, so the debate will continue as long as those wish to debate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. First of all, you referred to 521. Yes, you are correct from my point of view in your interpretation that once the question is put, every member of the House has the opportunity to speak the amount of time they are able to speak under the normal rules, which means 20 minutes per member. My interpretation would be that the Leader of the Official Opposition would be granted the 90 minutes that she's entitled to, because it reverts, of course, to the original question.

When we talk in terms of the previous question, the previous question is used at the federal level, and it is used at the municipal level. A question put. It's the same thing. It's the terminology that's used. When that happens, it's done when it's deemed that all debate, all possible useful debate has been exhausted, that those opposed to a bill, a motion, whatever, are simply attempting to waste time.

Madam Speaker, when we look at what's happened here and when we look at the amount of debate that has taken place on second reading, the limited number of members that have had the opportunity to speak, it hasn't exhausted fully, by any means, the debate that should be afforded on second reading of the bill. I look at this, and to me this is just a clever way of moving closure without calling it closure. But let me say: it is closure, closure, closure. There is no other way of putting it, because it restricts each of us to speaking once and then the matter is put to a vote, so it's closed at that point. It's closed.

Let me point out to the Deputy Government House Leader that under Beauchesne 525 "a motion for the previous question is not admitted in a Committee of the Whole or in any committee of the House." So the member may think he's getting away with something quite shrewd here. However, he's neglecting to take into consideration that once second reading is concluded and the question is put and we know which way the motion is going to go, we're then in committee stage, and there is nothing to prevent this opposition from making our voice heard by moving 200 amendments if necessary. Let me remind the member that he is not in a position, according to Beauchesne, to move closure during that stage. We're being forced into a situation where we have no alternative but to look at those types of strategies where we have to introduce 200 amendments, whatever, so that we are afforded the opportunity of debating this bill the way the people that elected us, the people that we represent, want us to debate the bill, Madam Speaker.

Let me take a look at the bill itself. First of all, let me talk about some faulty assumptions. The first faulty assumption is that private health care will cost less. Now, the government seems for some reason to be under the opinion that private health care will cost less. I've heard references that what this is going to mean is that there will be no change in the public system per se, that the same number of staff that work in the public system will continue to work there. However, there are going to be further contracts out to the private sector, thereby reducing the lineups.

Now, let's look at that. When we talk in terms of looking at the public system and then we talk in terms of that being supplemented by this privatization of the health care system, that privatization is going to cost money if these people, the private health caregivers, are allowed to bill Alberta health care. That's additional money being spent on top of the dollars that are now being spent by Alberta health care under the billions of dollars that are budgeted for health.

Now, when you talk in terms of private health care costing less, let's look at private health care. First of all, they are going to build in a profit. They are going to build in a return on their original investment, plus they're going to have to develop new facilities and pay costs on that. There's absolutely no indication that when you look at all those factors, they can do it for less than the public system. When we look at the public system – and I wish I had the count of the exact number of beds. I know that in the Misericordia – and I know because I've toured the facility – the top three floors have been converted to office space. Three floors, that once housed beds, have been converted to office space. So if I were to ask the government how many empty beds there are in the Misericordia, the response would be a very small number because it doesn't take into consideration that there are no longer beds on these three floors. The beds have been removed. However, the space is there and can be utilized to accommodate the required beds needed to prevent the so-called arguments of having to contract out because of the huge lineups in the health care system.

So to assume that private health care will cost less is foolhardy. We know it's going to cost more, but we can also figure out fairly clearly that what's going to happen is that under the concept of enhanced services more and more of it is going to be considered a user fee in the sense that in addition to the taxes one pays towards the health care system, the premiums one pays to Alberta health care for health care services, there'll be an additional charge, and that additional charge will be those enhanced services afforded by the private sector.

We've heard some of the instances already of the differences in rates charged by clinics in Calgary versus Edmonton, depending on the demand, because these are businesspeople. They're not there to provide a service to Albertans. They're not there because they feel an obligation that they've got to provide a good health care system to Albertans because that's what they were elected to do. They're in the private sector. They're in business. They're there to make money.

When we have a doctor, a well-known specialist, in the city eyeing up the Charles Camsell at one point to turn it into a private health care facility, or we have the HRG group in Calgary, that have a facility going to some extent, losing a great deal of money, they're not going to invest – what was their loss last year? Something like

$2 million? They're not investing this kind of money out of the goodness of their hearts. They're investing that kind of money because they expect a return. They expect that in the long run it's going to pay them dividends, and they're going to be rewarded handsomely with profits and such. So let's forget this idea that private health care is going to cost less.

Now, we also talk in terms of the other faulty assumption that private health care will shorten waiting lists. Well, it's been pointed out that despite the so-called 52 clinics throughout the province right now, the waiting lists continue to grow. I don't see the waiting lists getting narrower. If I wanted to talk about specific cases of people waiting, I could talk about it. I could parade constituents up here one after another, people that have been waiting for surgery of various forms, people that have had their surgery postponed. There is a limit.

We even hear, Madam Speaker, in the Journal today and in the Sun the other day talk in terms of Camp He-Ho-Ha, which is a recreational facility for something like 700 or 800 persons with disabilities so they can enjoy the outdoors in the summer, something they look forward to year after year. Because there's a requirement that they have two full-time nurses on staff at all times and they haven't been able to recruit two nurses this year for the first time, Camp He-Ho-Ha, which stands for health, hope, and happiness, may not open. They can't find two nurses.

If there is such a shortage of nurses, can you imagine what's going to happen when nurses start to work for the private sector instead of the public system? They're going to be forced to close more beds because the staff isn't there. Government will argue: well, we would like to keep these beds open, but we can't because we can't get the staff. Then what will happen? The government will simply increase the opportunities for the private sector by enhancing the private sector even further. Meanwhile, because the public system becomes much, much more limited in what it's capable of offering because of the difficulty in attracting staff, it's going to have increased waiting lists. The waiting lists will be longer than they are right now because there are many that will not be able to afford enhanced services, the enhanced services that are in the bill right now. I question it.

Another faulty assumption: the argument that the private sector will build the facilities, so the government no longer has to build them. Well, let's say the private sector does build a facility. Let's say they build a facility that's worth $5 million. Say they've got to invest $5 million into that facility. On that $5 million that they've invested you can count on them wanting a return. What's a reasonable return on $5 million? Ten percent, $500,000 a year? What does a businessman require in terms of a return on investment? We know it's not chicken feed. We know that they're going to be accountable to their shareholders, to their partners, and whatever, and they have to try and justify massive profits, profits as large as possible.

When we talk in terms of having to build new facilities, again I go back to my argument. When we have major unused facilities throughout the province, it makes no sense to ask the private sector to build new facilities that are going to create a financial obligation on their part, that are going to force them to go to government and say: look, you've got to bail us out; you've got to extend the degree of privatization that's now allowed in Bill 11.

We'll see amendments come forward, and pretty soon we're going to be in the situation where you're going to have a tough time telling what is private and what is public as the public system diminishes and the private sector picks up. Yes, there are people that because of desperation to get the surgery done may actually put a mortgage on their house, so they can get their surgery done now instead of waiting. You can imagine particularly the seniors, who are more victim to feeling those types of pressure than other people. Can you imagine a senior citizen who has spent their life and worked in Alberta being forced to put a mortgage on their house to get medical attention because they can't afford to wait the period of time to access the public system?

Another faulty assumption: outlaws queue-jumping. How does it outlaw queue-jumping? At the present time, when you're in that position that you can go to a private clinic to have eye surgery, whatever, by paying additional dollars, is Bill 11 saying that that's no longer going to be allowed? In fact, I would suggest that those that have the dollars, who will be able to buy the enhanced services which are going to be promoted by those that go into business, are going to jump the queue because they've got the bucks to jump the queue. The MRIs at the present time. My sister waited six months to have an MRI done at the University hospital. On the other hand, if you've got 750 bucks, whatever the cost is now, a thousand dollars, whatever, you can have it done in a matter of days, I understand. But you've got to lay the money out of your own pocket.

AN HON. MEMBER: Well, look at these hockey players.

MR. WICKMAN: The hockey players are a classic example, and the argument is put forward by the public: how come the hockey players get the special benefit and they don't have to wait? The reason they don't have to wait is because the hockey club on their behalf can afford to pay that charge for the enhanced service, for queue-jumping, and that's going to continue. Are those hockey players going to be told, when Bill 11 passes, that they've got to wait in a lineup like anybody else, even though the Edmonton Oilers may be prepared to pay $800 to allow them to get their medical treatment right off the bat? No. There is going to be queue-jumping.

Let's look, for example, at the question of the concept of private hospitals. Does this legitimize, does this legalize private hospitals? Yes, yes, yes. You can call it a surgical facility; you can call it whatever. What is the expression? If it looks like a duck, walks like a duck, quacks like a duck, it's a duck. If you ever saw a duck, you've got a duck in this particular case.

Again I'll refer to the situation in Calgary where you have a facility that is about as close as you can get to a private hospital just waiting for Bill 11 to pass so they can pounce into action and start reaping the benefit of – call it a handout, call it a reward, whatever, that's going to be afforded by this government.

So let's not fool the public. Let's not fool ourselves. If we pass Bill 11, we're saying that we're going to legitimize, we're going to legalize private hospitals in the province of Alberta, the first province in Canada to legalize private hospitals, possibly not the last, because as I said earlier, the Premier of Ontario, Mike Harris, will jump at the opportunity, I would venture to say. I'm just guessing, speculating.

I did talk to an MPP very recently. Just last weekend he phoned me and wanted to know the status of Bill 11 because he was concerned, saying that he fears that as soon as it's passed here, Premier Mike Harris is going to want to do the same thing. So he was asking me if I thought there was any chance that the bill may be scrapped. I had to be honest with him. I said: "Well, we're going to try. Albertans are trying. There are petitions, there are letters, there are e-mails, but despite every effort being made by Albertans and by this caucus, there is no indication that this government is in fact prepared to withdraw Bill 11." There is no indication that the government is even prepared to refer it to a committee so it can be studied in detail. The government members for some reason have chosen to ignore the outcry of their constituents that are coming to us asking us to file petitions on their behalf, that are e-mailing us, that are writing us, that are phoning us because government members simply are not respecting their wishes. Their wishes are very, very clear. They do not want private hospitals legalized in this province.

Now, let's look at another assumption here: no limits on size and scope of private facilities. That's not an assumption. That's going to happen because there are no limits, really, in Bill 11 as to how many overnight stays there can be and so on and so forth. By simple regulation the government will be able to add medical/surgical techniques, whatever you want to call it, to those that will be presently permitted.

Enhanced services. What are enhanced services? Well, I guess enhanced services are something like when you go into the hospital – and there are some forms of enhanced services right now. The Premier tried earlier the old smoke screen by suggesting that the Leader of the Official Opposition supported payment of enhanced services when she was the minister of health. However, he neglected to differentiate between dollars for enhanced services going to the public system versus payment for enhanced services going to the private sector. There's a great deal of difference. When it stays within the public system, it's spent on the public system. When it goes to the private sector, a portion of it goes into the pockets of the business community.

To give you an example right now of what will occur, my understanding is that if you go in for, say, hip joint surgery, what's covered now is a plastic apparatus. However, you can get, I believe, it's silver – correct me if I'm wrong – but you have to pay extra for that. That's not covered by Alberta health care. You have to pay extra for that. That's an enhanced service. It's like a cast. If you get the plastic cast, my understanding is that that's covered by Alberta health care. However, if you go for that fibreglass cast, then you're charged an additional fee because you've upgraded. Who wants a cast made out of plaster of paris? You can see why enhanced services can become attractive, why government wants to exploit the concept of enhanced services. There are people that are desperate, that need those particular pieces of equipment or surgical procedures and are going to be prepared to pay extra out of desperation. So enhanced services, in my opinion, are going to increase.

Which services can be privatized? Well, technically speaking, if the government has the authority to bring forward Bill 11 and have it passed, what services can be privatized? I guess there's no limitation on what services can be privatized, because all they have to do next year is bring forward amendments to Bill 11 that would enhance the number of services that could be privatized. I venture to say that if I had to draw a scenario, this is the scenario I'd draw. Bill 11 will be rammed through in this legislative session. Come high water, whatever you want to call it, it's going to be rammed through. Whether it's done under the cloak of closure, in a misguided fashion, it is going to be done, and I would expect we're actually going to see closure probably in committee stage. The government may very well do it.

Then what will happen is that the government will say: okay; now it's done. There will probably be an approach used by the government . . . [Mr. Wickman's speaking time expired] And I was just getting started.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Let me begin by just providing some educational background on the mechanism of putting the previous question. I would cite this evening from Beauchesne 521 on moving the previous question: "when the original question is under debate in order to force a direct vote on it, thereby preventing any amendments to the original question to be proposed." You will find that moving the previous question in Beauchesne is under the chapter Closure, the Previous Question, further fuel, Madam Speaker, to my comment that this government is becoming a master of premature closure on democratic debate on legislation in this province, even on legislation that they have proposed.

As previous speakers have indicated, this particular bill has garnered more debate, more inquiries, more consternation within the electorate and citizens of this province than perhaps any other bill in the history of this Legislature. How does this government respond to that? They respond by moving a mechanism of closure to cease debate on the bill at second reading. Now, what do the rules of parliament tell us about second reading? I would cite from Beauchesne 659. It says:

The second reading is the most important stage through which the bill is required to pass; for its whole principle is then at issue and is affirmed or denied by a vote of the House.

Further, Beauchesne 661 says:

While Standing Order 63 precludes amendments to the main question when a motion has been made to refer a bill to a committee, this has never been an impediment to the offering of amendments at the second reading stage . . . The Chair has accepted amendments without question.

Yet here we find, Madam Speaker, a junior House leader who cannot stand to see full democracy in action and has to jump to move a motion that in fact impedes and restricts the full debate of this bill in this Assembly.

Now, just let me finish my references to the stage of debate that we're at for citizens reading Hansard and trying to understand what tactics and antics the government is up to yet again. In Beauchesne 640 second reading is referenced as the stage which is primarily concerned with the principle of a measure. At this stage, debate is not strictly limited to the contents of a bill as other methods of attaining its proposed objective may [also] be considered.

What that in fact says, Madam Speaker, is that not only should we be debating at second reading the principle behind the bill but also other methods that the government might consider to achieve this objective. In fact, there have been some suggestions of other mechanisms and other issues that Bill 11 does not address. The government is not interested in listening to those arguments or those suggestions. They want to, yet again, use their heavy hand to choke off any consideration of well-meaning citizens' concerns on this bill.

Now, we actually look at what we are talking about really here in terms of time. In essence, if we had been allowed as the opposition to utilize all the tools that exist for us in second reading, we perhaps could have had in this Assembly about 640 more minutes of debate at second reading, or perhaps just one more workday, Madam Speaker. But this government, by utilizing the mechanism of putting the previous question, is ratcheting down the debate that will be permitted to less than one working day, despite all the concerns they've received from citizens across this province. Despite how many health professionals have told them that they don't believe this bill will work, who don't understand the government's reasoning for putting it forward, this government thinks it is democratic and fair and right to restrict debate at this time to less than one working day. That speaks volumes. It speaks volumes about where this government is at mentally, where they are at on their arrogance meter when they think that because they've made up their minds and set their agenda, all the concerns that exist out there should somehow be crammed in. That is where this government is at.

Now, just today in the Assembly we got on our desks yet another report, and the report was from the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta. As with many of these types of advisory committees under the leadership of this government, they're chaired by a government MLA. Aside from that being a mechanism the government can use to pay their members more, it's also a mechanism whereby government can sift and filter what these committees actually produce in their annual reports. But to the credit of this committee, Madam Speaker, in the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta's annual report for 1998-1999 they raise a number of very important issues, two of which relate to health care: long-term care and health care services and accessibility.

I'd like to cite from the report. They say:

Accessibility of health care services continued as a major issue for Alberta seniors and their organizations. Alberta seniors have expressed their desire for a holistic, interdependent approach to quality of life and quality of health care. The Council has heard concerns regarding the availability of health care services. Seniors report that there are long waiting lists and administrative delays in accessing services. Seniors also have difficulty finding physicians willing to do home visits for house-bound individuals.

I would interject in my quotation here to ask: are the private, for-profit providers willing to provide home visits in their contracts to the regional health authorities? I somehow doubt it, Madam Speaker.

The report goes on to say:

There continues to be a lack of coordination between health care regions and between health care service providers. Lack of transportation continues to be an important barrier for seniors in accessing health care services in rural Alberta.

Bill 11, Madam Speaker, does not hold any assurances that the concerns that exist amongst seniors and the general population in this province with respect to accessibility of our health care system will be resolved. The questions that have been put countless times already in this Assembly as to how Bill 11 will increase our supply of health care professionals, both in terms of specialists and nursing staff, have not been answered.

When we have asked questions about how these for-profit contracts will in fact reduce waiting lists when there is recent evidence to suggest that waiting lists grow longer under such a plan, again the government provides no concrete response or answers. Yet, Madam Speaker, this is exactly the time in debate when those questions should be answered and those other alternatives explored. Once the government has successfully rammed this motion for the previous question through, we're going to move on to committee, and then we will be occupied with amending sections of the bill and focusing on sections of the bill. This is the time when we should be debating the implications of Bill 11 as a whole, and it's an affront to this Chamber and everything it represents to have a government on such an important and controversial bill use this crafty little mechanism to shorten debate.

Now, another issue that would be appropriate to debate at second reading – and I'm quite confident now, Madam Speaker, that we will not be able to debate it to the extent it should be – is the concerns raised by the federal government, concerns that Bill 11 as proposed will violate the Canada Health Act, concerns that the ability that Bill 11 provides for private, for-profit facilities to sell enhanced services in combination with insured services creates a circumstance that violates the principle of accessibility. We have not heard the Premier, his minister of health, or the esteemed junior House leader respond to those concerns. We have not heard any evidence to suggest that they've taken those types of concerns into account.

Further, the federal government questioned the premise of Bill 11 that private surgical facilities are not hospitals. According to the federal government's interpretation, all private surgical clinics would be considered by the federal government as hospitals under the Canada Health Act. It's hilarious that this government thinks that by some magical spin campaign they will be able to convince Albertans, even those that currently practise in the health care system, that private clinics keeping patients overnight would not be the same as hospitals. Really, Madam Speaker, I'm not sure where they think Albertans are at, but for those of us that have had the privilege of working in the public health care system and continue to work in the public health care system, the differentiation between a fully functioning hospital and a private, for-profit overnight surgical facility – I haven't heard any arguments to differentiate the two. If there have been any made, they're certainly muted.

So this is the time, during this stage of debate, when the government should be getting up and in fine detail explaining to Albertans how a for-profit, overnight surgical facility is different from a public hospital and how that difference will be defined and interpreted under the Canada Health Act. If the Premier or the minister of health has responded to the federal government in this regard, if there is correspondence they can table, then please let them bring that correspondence forward, and let's debate in principle the merits of their response. But we're not going to have the opportunity except now for one last 20-minute period each per member, of which only the opposition will avail themselves, I'm sure, to debate the principle of Bill 11 in this Assembly. That is regrettable and unfortunate, and I'm hoping I'll see a number of the members on the other side jump up to take this opportunity to debate the bill in principle.

The House leader I think quite intentionally in an attempt to engage debate listed the number of opposition members that had spoken to the bill thus far in second reading. I found it somewhat odd that he didn't list the number of his own members that had spoken or had not spoken to second reading. Perhaps he didn't choose to do that because he would have suffered some embarrassment because of the abysmal number of members on the government side that have chosen to represent their constituents and their constituents' concerns and spoken on the record about Bill 11.

We can see through that, Madam Speaker. We can see that by moving the previous question, the hon. member's intent was really to spare his government members the agony of trying to defend a bill that is undefendable. Every argument that you put forward, people increasingly are laughing at. They're a joke, and they have no rational basis in research, in practice, or in principle in this province or in other jurisdictions.

[Mrs. Laing in the chair]

As I said in earlier comments on the bill, that's really unfortunate, because I as much as any one else in this Assembly would like to get on with establishing a plan for our public health care system and ensuring that it's sustainable for the next generation. Bill 11 doesn't take us to that. It doesn't even begin to establish a plan. It's a distractionary bill that serves a completely other agenda and other purpose, Madam Speaker, and it's unfortunate that we find ourselves in the position we're in. It's unfortunate but becoming quite a common occurrence in this Assembly.

I'd like to just conclude by making reference to Bishop Fred Henry's comments. I made reference to these comments earlier in debate, and my time was running out and I wasn't able to do them justice. So I'd like to just utilize Bishop Henry's review of Bill 11 and some of the comments he has made in the conclusion of my remarks today.

Bishop Henry says:

Even in a cynical age, when respect for authority in religion and politics has been eroded by a stream of scandals and revelations . . . the doctor-patient relationship is held sacred by millions of the sick, and those who minister to their bodily and mental ailments.

There is a similar investiture of trust in nurses, physician assistants and social workers who labour alongside physicians, and are just as important to patients, although less well-compensated.

Until recently, money has not been the chief goal for these health care workers, nor for the hospitals where they work.

Although there are a few arguable exceptions, physicians and hospital administrators have been compensated fairly and even generously by society because society values health care for its members as an important goal and a form of social justice.

Most of us are also convinced health care is a fundamental human right; that medicine and nursing must not be diverted from their primary tasks – the relief of suffering, the prevention and treatment of illness and the promotion of health – and that potential financial incentives that reward overcare or undercare, weakening doctor-patient and nurse-patient bonds, should be prohibited, exactly the point Bill 11 proposes to make, Madam Speaker, that there would be incentives for overcare and undercare, thus weakening the doctor/patient and nurse/patient relationship and bond.

Bishop Henry points out as well that our Canadian tradition supports hospitals as non-profit public institutions, meaning any surplus of revenue over expenditure must go back into more health care, another argument of principle, Madam Speaker. In this scenario Bill 11 proposes, we know that excess or surplus revenue is not going to go back into the delivery of more care. It's going to go to the profits of the shareholders of that for-profit company.

Bishop Henry says, "Health care has grown increasingly mechanistic, commercial and soulless." Just contemplate that for a moment, fellow members.

Under the rubric of a need for economy, we have downsized, rationalized, re-engineered and reorganized. But all too frequently, our efforts have simply created anorexic organizations, reciting a "lean and mean" mantra and threatening to fundamentally alter the trust and loyalty that grounds the physician-patient relationship.

Such insight and such a rich perspective on this bill and its intent. How do we see this government, Madam Speaker, responding to that type of expertise? I believe the government has referred to the bishop and his comments as something about it being a twerp. Just an affront.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, your time is up. Thank you.

Next we have Edmonton-Strathcona.

MR. SAPERS: Point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Okay.

Point of Order Clarification

MR. SAPERS: Thank you. I rise under Standing Order 13(2) seeking some clarification from the chair on the matter that's before the Assembly right now.

DR. TAYLOR: We've already gone through that.

MR. SAPERS: I hear members saying that they've already gone through that, so I guess we'll have to sit here and listen to it again.

Madam Speaker, would you please confirm whether or not the motion from the Deputy Government House Leader is a substantive motion?

10:40

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I believe the chair already said that it was.

MR. SAPERS: It is a substantive motion? You're confirming that. Thank you very much.

In that case, then, further under 13(2) I'd like you to explain why the rules have not been applied in regard to notice of motion when it comes to substantive motions?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: All right, hon. member. I've had advice that it's a superceding motion.

MR. SAPERS: Well, is that contrary to your comments just a moment ago that it was in fact a substantive motion?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I said that I've had further advice, and it's a superceding motion. This was already decided, and we've been through this. It's a superceding motion. Therefore, we cannot go back.

MR. SAPERS: I'm just curious, further under 13(2), then, Madam Speaker, is it the Clerk who makes a decision whether it's substantive or superceding or is it the chair? I understood from your comments just a moment ago that it was a substantive motion, so I would like your distinction between a substantive and a superceding motion so we can understand how you're applying the rules.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Well, superceding means that it takes precedence. We've been through this already. We spent quite a bit of time earlier. The decision was made by the chair, so we should get on with it. No point of order.

MR. SAPERS: Under 13(2), then, Madam Speaker, I'd like to know whether or not the House is still following the tradition of precedent by Speakers when it comes to the application of the rules?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I already asked for the next speaker, who is Edmonton-Strathcona. I'd already announced him.

MR. SAPERS: It's normal practice to recognize a member standing on a point of order. It is a legitimate point of order under 13(2). I'm asking under 13(2) if you would explain whether or not the rules of this House are still following precedent of decisions of other Speakers.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Perhaps I could help a little bit. Of course, under 13(1). I'm not going to get into the argument with the hon. member across the way, because this is simply a delaying tactic with respect to the issue, and he's a little hurt, as are all members of their caucus, at being totally unprepared for what happened this evening.

Nevertheless, Madam Speaker, you have explained the ruling. It was explained earlier. I would humbly ask that you apply what you're supposed to under 13(1) – that is, maintaining decorum within the House – and not allow members of the opposition to simply use the Standing Orders to try and delay or detract from the debate which is taking place.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I have ruled that there is no point of order and that the decision was made. So we'll now go on to the next speaker. [interjections] Excuse me. [interjections] Order. We have been through this. I have given you my ruling; it has been settled. There was no point of order, and we're ready to go on to the next speaker. Edmonton-Strathcona. [interjections] Excuse me. [interjections] Order. Order.

MR. SAPERS: Answer my question.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Excuse me. We have settled this matter. [interjections] Excuse me.

MR. SAPERS: You have not addressed my question.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Excuse me. Right now you are challenging the authority of the chair. I have had advice from the officials. I've given you the order that was made, and now we're ready to proceed with the debate. You have not spoken yet to this. You may speak when it's your turn.

Edmonton-Strathcona.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am rising under Standing Order 13(2). I am asking whether or not in this Chamber this evening we are still following the tradition of precedent in applying a Speaker's ruling to the running of the business of this Chamber, a simple question.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, I listened with interest on the speaker phone. I find it rather interesting that some time ago, approximately an hour and a half ago, the chair clarified for the members of the Assembly what we were proceeding to do here with the motion that the hon. Deputy Government House Leader brought in. We went through Standing Orders. We went through Beauchesne. We have followed what is set out. What we utilize in this Assembly is what we follow.

These Standing Orders are reviewed from time to time by various House leaders and determinations are made whether they need to be revamped, revised, changed, added to, deleted from. Everything was fine. Now we have before us points of order seeking more clarification. This chair has ruled. For this evening and several other times during the proceedings of this Assembly I sit in this chair, and I have made the decision in keeping with what is here and in Beauchesne.

I repeatedly have heard for the last several minutes that there isn't enough debate on Bill 11. We have ample opportunity right now to debate Bill 11, because under this provision, "that this question be now put," we are able to revert to the original question. So there is ample time here for everyone in this Assembly who deems that they wish to do so to speak on Bill 11.

Now, we are following what has been moved here as outlined, as I've said. I find it somewhat alarming. One of the people in this House relieved me so I could go and make a phone call, and it has brought up all these different things when this had been ruled on approximately an hour and a half ago.

If you wish to see me tomorrow to discuss this, we can. But what I have done in this House and what my hon. member just proceeded to do is to follow the proceedings of the House as indicated by this Assembly through Standing Orders and as preceded by what is in Beauchesne.

Now, let us get on with the debate at hand. [interjection] Sit down, hon. member. [interjection] Sit down, hon. member. The chair is going to recognize the hon. member that was speaking, and that is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Debate Continued

DR. PANNU: Madam Speaker, it's a matter of concern to me and it should be a matter of concern to all of us that what's happening here tonight is to close debate, is to gag people from speaking on the most important bill in the history of this province, in the history of this Assembly as I know. Albertans tell us that this is the most important bill. They tell us that this is a bill they do not want to be rushed through this Legislature. They tell us that this is a bill they want to be heard about.

10:50

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, we are not in the committee stage of this bill.

MR. SAPERS: Well, I just assumed that since we're throwing away the other rules, I could just . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, would you please get back in your seat. Hon. member, now. [interjection] One moment, hon. member.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE ACTING SPEAKER: May it be duly noted for Hansard exactly what transpired in this House.

The chair will say, before I go on, that the Speaker here often talks about decorum. I take very seriously the job the people of this Assembly voted me to do. It's very obvious that there are some members of this House that are very, very disrespectful, and I find it rather appalling. Several precedents for what has transpired here have happened in this House before, one going back to December 7 of 1998. If people sincerely want to do the business that Albertans want them to do in this Assembly, then these kinds of shenanigans should stop and debate should continue, because what was allowed here was for debate on the original question to be allowed.

Now, I want it duly noted that that hon. member left very disrespectfully, not listening to the chair, and I will be dealing with it tomorrow.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The second reading debate on this bill started with a great deal of fanfare on Tuesday of last week. We have had around three days of debate on the second reading of this bill. Tonight we already are rushing in to close debate, and I want to express my deep concern about this as I use my 20 minutes to say my piece on the motion before us.

I think the motion is unreasonable, I think it's arbitrary, and I think it's regrettable that this matter is being used to impose closure so early in the consideration of this bill. The Premier had indicated to Albertans that there will be full debate, that they will have an opportunity without fear of closure being called this early in the debate so that their views can be expressed through their elected representatives on the floor of this House. That certainly has not happened.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: How much time do you need?

DR. PANNU: There are members of the front bench who talk about how much time you need. I think that what they need to ask and answer is how much time the people of Alberta want this House to have on this bill. This government has become far too frequently used to ignoring and disrespecting the people of Alberta and their concerns. This is not an ordinary bill, Madam Speaker. To see the member of the front bench taunting me by saying, "How much time do you need?" – I have my 20 minutes, but this House needs more time. To cut short the debate in this House by way of this motion is an insult to the people of Alberta. It's a slap in the face of their democratic rights, and that's why I say this motion must be regretted and regretted very deeply and regretted on behalf of my constituents who have been in and through my office perhaps thousands of times over the last month and a half to express their concerns.

Here I am faced with a closure motion three days into the debate on the second reading of the bill. The Premier has been making claims that there's confusion in the minds of the people of Alberta. They want to understand what the bill is about. Then what we hear tonight is the closure of the debate, the very debate demanded by Albertans in order that their questions can be addressed and addressed seriously. What we find here are members of the front bench turning themselves into hecklers rather than respecting their serious positions as members of the cabinet and respecting the decorum of this House and setting an example for the rest of us. We're supposed to look up to them. [interjection] Here I find now the minister of unlearning also stepping into the fray.

There are lots of things to be unlearned by these members sitting around here. One of the things they need to unlearn is this terrible arrogance they have and the terrible disrespect in which they hold Albertans who disagree with them. Now what we find here with respect to Bill 11 is that the vast majority of Albertans disagree with this government, and this government is trying to spit in their faces because it doesn't want to hear people disagree with it. I think that's wrong, Madam Speaker. That is wrong, and it should be recorded in this House that these members sitting on this side of the House are intolerant of those who disagree with them. They're disrespectful of the rules of democracy, and they're behaving like dictators, if I may say that.

I think that to keep them awake, to keep them listening to Albertans, I have to stand here and raise my voice on behalf of my constituents, on behalf of the constituents of these cabinet members who are sitting there. These members are betraying the expectations of their own constituents here tonight.

Madam Speaker, Bill 11 should never have been proceeded with. It's a bill that should be dropped. It should be dropped because this bill is incompatible with the spirit of medicare in Canada. It is an affront to the values that underlie medicare. It's an attempt to bring in privatization through the back door and bring in private, for-profit hospitals in order to strike the final blow that they think will undo the system. They've used the last seven years to Trojan-horse the system bit by bit, to undermine it. After seven years what this government has found is that Albertans still have a strong allegiance to the system that's been under fire in the hands of this government. This government is trying to destroy it. Albertans don't want to destroy it. They want it saved, protected, and enhanced.

So Bill 11 appears on the scene at the end of seven years of attempts to destroy the system, and this bill uses privatization as the only solution to all problems. This government has used, of course, privatization the same way as bloodletting was used in the medieval period by the quacks at that time to fix every malady. So what quacks did by relying on bloodletting to save people from pneumonia, from plague, from everything else, in the same way this government uses privatization as a sledgehammer to, quote, unquote, solve every possible problem. Privatization of health care doesn't work. This government started out by talking about cutting costs by privatization. They couldn't find any evidence. Evidence to the contrary clearly demonstrates that private health care is more expensive, more costly, and delivers less. It has been piling up, so they have now retreated from defending Bill 11 by making references that it will save money for Albertans. Now they know it won't save money. Then they said that it will reduce pain and suffering by reducing waiting lines. There's now enough evidence that privatization, contracting out does not do that, so that argument is abandoned.

They want to bring in choice now, another argument. Choice for what? If you designate certain surgeries to be done only in the so-called designated surgical facilities but you want that surgery to be done in a full-fledged hospital, you won't have that choice. So the bill in fact removes from Albertans the choice to be looked after by a team of experts in a regular, fully equipped hospital. Now they will have to go to a surgical facility as designated by the likes of Mr. Dinning and Mr. Love and others. I think there are some other names being mentioned. I think Albertans know what all this is about. It's about privatizing a system in order that friends of the government can make their millions and billions out of this.

This government has been the enemy of public health care over the last seven years. What they are trying to accomplish by pushing this bill through this Legislature now is to demonstrate to Albertans that this is exactly what they always meant to do, and now they are going to do it regardless of what Albertans are saying.

So the bill before us, Madam Speaker, not only will lead to privatization increasing costs but also to the siphoning away of scarce and precious public dollars into private facilities, where they'll be used not to enhance the health of Albertans but to guarantee the profits of investors who want to run private, for-profit hospitals. That's what this bill is really about.

If doing this, if going this route, if legalizing private, for-profit hospitals under a new name means exposing Alberta's health care system and Canada's health care system to the threats that are inherent in an international agreement such as NAFTA, then so be it. If the Canadian system of medicare, the public health care system in Canada, will be sacrificed in the interest of serving a few private friends, if that means Albertans and Canadians are deprived of the best health care system in Canada that they have been able to build over the last 35 years, then that doesn't matter. That's not a matter of concern to this government.

The Premier has been using all kinds of false examples, falsifying data, using examples that are not relevant at all. For example, Madam Speaker, the Premier said earlier in the second reading debate that Shouldice Hospital was a model for what this government wants to do under Bill 11. Well, now it's very clear that that's a strange model. The Shouldice Hospital, which only does hernia repairs, was established in 1945, 23 years before Canadian medicare was born. In 1973 the Ontario government passed the Private Hospitals Act. Under this legislation, because private hospitals had been seen to be incompatible with medicare, no new private hospitals are allowed to be established. Existing private hospitals are being phased out. They're not allowed to expand. They're not allowed to be sold or even to make a profit. As their owners retire, their licences are revoked. Shouldice is one of only a few such private hospitals left in Ontario. Phasing out the remaining private hospitals has been the policy of Ontario governments of all political stripes, even the current Mike Harris government.

Setting up a scheme to legalize private hospitals for profit, owned on a commercial, for-profit basis, Madam Speaker, is a radical departure from Alberta's traditional community and publicly owned hospitals. Bill 11 also is a radical departure from the policy of other Canadian provinces to phase out any privately owned hospitals in their jurisdiction. There's no question that should Bill 11 become law, there will be political pressures on other provincial governments to allow commercial, for-profit hospitals to establish in these provinces. Clearly the owners of the Shouldice Hospital are not going to want to operate under the onerous restrictions of Ontario's Private Hospitals Act if Alberta's rules are much more permissive. Hospital corporations will no doubt pressure other provincial governments to do the same thing that they are allowed to do in Alberta.

Another observation, Madam Speaker, that's worth noting. This government has pointed to the fact that most physicians' offices are privately owned. A physician's office delivers primary care from which a professional income is earned, mainly through billings to the Alberta health care insurance plan. While the method of remuneration is different for physicians than it may be for other health professionals such as nurses, who earn a salary, in practical terms they are the same. Doctors and nurses are both directly involved in delivering health services, and both derive an income from doing so. A doctor earning an income for delivering medical care is completely different than a hospital corporation contracting for public dollars with regional health authorities. The hospital corporation . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: It's getting very, very noisy in here. We are not in Committee of the Whole. Can we please carry on so that the Speaker at least can hear the member?

DR. PANNU: The hospital corporation, Madam Speaker, has shareholders who expect to make a profit from their investment. As a commercial business, a hospital corporation would need to pay taxes. It would incur marketing and advertising costs to create demand for its services. Health care is a clear-cut case of market failure. The for-profit model does not work well within the context of a public good like health care.

Another argument, Madam Speaker, that the government has advanced in proceeding with Bill 11 is that we already have 52 private clinics doing day surgery. About half of these private clinics contract for public dollars with regional health authorities. The argument goes that since we already allow private businesses to do day surgeries, what's wrong with letting them do more complex surgeries requiring overnight patient stays? This very seductive and wrongheaded argument reminds me of a statement made several years ago by Dr. David Himmelstein of the Harvard Medical School. Dr. Himmelstein was commenting on the ever expanding role of commercial business interests in the American health care system. Himmelstein said, quote, that each step justifies the next step, end of quote. But until that step is achieved, the advocates for commercial medicine deny these steps will logically follow after that.

Applied to the Alberta context, Dr. Himmelstein's analogy works like this. We'll restrict private, for-profit hospitals to doing a limited number of surgeries requiring inpatient hospitalization at the beginning. Then we'll let them gradually expand into more and more complex surgeries. The argument goes like this. Well, the private sector seems to be doing okay in doing contract surgeries, so why not let them do hip replacements? After they do hip replacements for a while, then why not heart bypass surgeries? Expanding the role of the private, for-profit sector in health care has been a preoccupation of the Conservatives in this province for many years. It began many years ago, but it's now picking up speed.

Another good argument, Madam Speaker, that needs to be considered for not allowing Bill 11 to go forward is the uncertainties that are created under international trade rules such as those set out in the North American free trade agreement. The Conservative government has spent considerable time and resources and public moneys countering the claims of those who argue that if Alberta opened the hospital sector to commercial involvement, it would have to do so equally to Canadian and foreign investors alike.

No one questions the fact that NAFTA allows the Alberta government to restrict health care delivery to public entities or to voluntary organizations which operate on a not-for-profit basis. However, if the government through Bill 11 opens the hospital sector to for-profit involvement, all bets are off. This is clear to most knowledgeable people with the exception of the deaf, dumb, and blind provincial Tory government. Unlike sectors such as transportation, telecommunication, and cultural industries there are no special laws requiring Canadian ownership in those sectors of health care open to commercial, for-profit involvement.

The minister of intergovernmental affairs has made much of the fact that . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I'm afraid your time is up, hon. member.

The hon. Minister for Health and Wellness.

MR. JONSON: Madam Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 11, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/04/11

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, guide us so that we may use the privilege given us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Give us the strength to labour diligently and the courage to think and to speak with clarity and conviction and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, today I've been advised that there is quite a list, so let's have some patience with respect to several of the matters on the Routine today.

We'll first of all recognize the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to present a petition I received last Friday at one of my open houses urging the government to withdraw Bill 11.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table a petition signed by 328 Albertans from Edmonton, St. Albert, Sherwood Park, Fort Saskatchewan, Wabamun, Stony Plain, and Fallis. It is urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining our public health care system." I'm pleased to note that by the time the Official Opposition tables the petitions for today, which will be 4,317 additional, it will lead to a total to date of 50,159 Albertans from right across this great province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition signed by 340 residents of Sherwood Park. Their petition reads as follows:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and table petitions signed by 205 Albertans from the communities of Edmonton, Wainwright, and Vegreville. These citizens "petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted this afternoon to present a petition signed by 257 Albertans from the communities of Calgary, Okotoks, and Cochrane who "urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege today to present a petition on behalf of 789 Albertans from Lethbridge, Barons, Coaldale, Raymond, Longview, Cardston, Milk River, Medicine Hat, and Taber asking the Legislative Assembly to institute an after-hours law that would make sure that everybody has someone else working with them when they're working in businesses in Alberta.

As second petition, Mr. Speaker, is from 3,221 Albertans from Calgary, Lethbridge, Okotoks, De Winton, Coalhurst, Fort Macleod, Raymond, Duchess, Vulcan, Taber, Granum, and Pincher Creek. It's in a different form than the other one. This is a petition also requesting that a law be introduced to protect employees' lives when they work after hours.

Mr. Speaker, a third petition again is from 336 Albertans from Lethbridge, Claresholm, Redcliff, Medicine Hat, Coleman, Bellevue, Hillcrest, Blairmore, and Picture Butte. This is petitioning "the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining [the] public health care [system]."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition this afternoon. It's petitioning "the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care." It's signed by 236 Albertans from Edmonton, Spruce Grove, Stony Plain, and St. Albert.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition signed by 126 Albertans from Edmonton, Sherwood Park, St. Albert, and Morinville urging "the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining [the] public health care [system]."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two petitions. The first one is signed by 734 Albertans who come from Priddis, Cold Lake, Vegreville, Spruce Grove, Edmonton, Edson, Onoway, Ardrossan, Leduc, St. Albert, Westlock, Morinville, Redwater, Calgary, Drayton Valley, Wetaskiwin, Westlock, La Crete, Sherwood Park, Rimbey, Gibbons, Tofield, Bon Accord, Whispering Hills, Thorhild, Bruderheim, and Boyle.

The second petition, Mr. Speaker, is signed by 69 Albertans. Both petitions are asking for this Assembly to bring in legislation to ban private, for-profit hospitals.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to present a petition signed by 264 Albertans from Edmonton, Fort Saskatchewan, Sherwood Park, and Ardrossan. They are urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would present a petition signed by 215 citizens from Edmonton, Stony Plain, Carvel, and Sherwood Park urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition signed by 233 people in St. Albert, Spruce Grove, Stony Plain, Alberta Beach, Legal, Riviere Qui Barre, Calahoo, Onoway, Alcomdale, and Leduc. They are petitioning "the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining [the] public health care [system]."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glegarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to present a petition signed by 218 Albertans from Edmonton, Fort Saskatchewan, Spruce Grove, and Sherwood Park. They are urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to present a petition signed by 218 residents of Alberta from Edmonton and Sherwood Park. They are urging "the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased and proud to present to the Legislature today and table with the Assembly a petition from 230 residents of Edmonton, St. Albert, and Sherwood Park. Primarily they are from my constituency and were gathered by two elderly, courageous ladies. The petition is to "urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care," sir.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition supporting public health care from 219 residents from Edmonton, Sherwood Park, and Ardrossan urging "the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition to present to the Legislative Assembly that states:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

It's signed by 239 Albertans in Slave Lake, Widewater, Grande Prairie, Wembley, High Prairie, Fox Creek, and Grouard.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions to present to the Assembly this afternoon. The first petition is from a group of 257 individuals from Edson and Sangudo. They are urging the Assembly and the government of Alberta "to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care." The majority of these signatures were acquired at a public meeting held in Edson on March 21 of this year.

Mr. Speaker, the second petition I have is from another 396 constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar, and my constituents are urging "the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1:40

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Once again, hon. members, there's quite a lengthy list. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to have a petition on behalf of the Member for Lethbridge-East from March 23, 2000, read and received and, secondly, that a petition in my name from April 10 on private health care be read and received.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that tomorrow I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 11, 12, and 13.

I'm also giving notice that tomorrow I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 25, 26, 27, 28, and 30.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table five copies of the response to estimates from the March 13 subcommittee D meeting.

I'd also like to table five copies of the response to Public Accounts held on March 15 for the Department of Resource Development.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of the Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the last session I accepted motions for returns 233 and 234, and today I table the requisite number of copies of my responses to those two motions for returns.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated on March 15 during Committee of Supply, I am able to now table five copies of the responses to questions raised that evening.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Mr. Speaker, I have two tablings today. I'd like to table with the Legislative Assembly five copies of two news releases dated March 22, 2000, and April 7, 2000, concerning bills 207 and 208.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got three tablings today. The first one is a letter from Debra Morris, chairperson, Edmonton presbytery, United Church of Canada, representing 30 churches in Edmonton, Sherwood Park, and St. Albert area, and she's requesting the Premier to withdraw Bill 11.

The second one is from Ms Moira Hogg from Calgary, again requesting that the Premier withdraw the bill.

The third one, Mr. Speaker, is also from Calgary from Harry Chase protesting Bill 11.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table three recent reviews of public opinion with respect to private hospital legislation currently before this Assembly. The first is the Angus Reid worldwide poll that shows that 65 percent of Albertans are very concerned about Bill 11, a poll released today by the Canadian Union of Public Employees showing that 55 percent of Albertans are opposed and 33 percent support Bill 11, and finally an A-Channel Insight Research health care poll showing that 58.5 percent of Albertans would oppose Bill 11, whereas only 21 percent support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Quickly I have six items to table. Firstly, a cost-benefit analysis of trust on Bill 11; secondly, a Liberal news release of even date with respect to the government propaganda campaign on Bill 11; thirdly, the complete package evidencing Liberal costs of $29,290.78; fourthly, an updated checklist for the reference of the Premier when he completes his outline of government costs in its propaganda campaign; fifthly, a summary entitled Government Closure of Second Reading on Bill 11 Limits Debate; and finally, a list of those MLAs not afforded a chance to speak at second reading on Bill 11.

Thank you very much.

Speaker's Ruling Inflammatory Language

THE SPEAKER: You know, hon. members, tabling returns and reports could be such a simple little thing. Oftentimes certain language is used in question period and during debate which may inflame, but there's really no need for such language to be used in tabling returns and reports. Let's be very clinical about this.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters to table this afternoon, one from Con Duemler providing an analysis of Bill 11 and asking that Bill 11 be withdrawn, the other from Dale Levy, who is expressing his opinion of Bill 11.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of tablings today. The first tabling is five copies of a May 2, 1994, letter from the former deputy minister of health suggesting that the Gimbel foundation bill could violate the Canada Health Act.

Along with that letter I'm tabling supporting documentation, Mr. Speaker, that faster care at a price, Klein wants medicare changes . . .

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS OLSEN: I have two tablings.

THE SPEAKER: Well, I'm sorry. I've recognized the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table, both from constituents. The first is a letter from Brenda Gilboe, and with that came the Bill 11 mail-out.

The second was also the Bill 11 mail-out being returned from Ewa Cyganek.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is from the mayor up north in the town of High Prairie, and he's sending a letter to the Minister of Environment about the concerns he and his town have with regard to the importation of foreign toxic waste at Swan Hills.

The second is a letter from Richard Collier of Calgary, and Richard is opposing any further development in Kananaskis, specifically the Genesis land corporation proposal.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings from Delwood school parents, the parent council: a letter signed by 102 parents representing 109 parents and 142 children discussing the many challenges incurred by the school as a direct result of current underfunding for public education.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a report completed by the Calgary Homeless Foundation, Housing Our Homeless, a stakeholder consultation assessing shelter needs in Calgary, dated March of 2000.

The second is a report released by the South Peace Social Planning Council, Working Together to Break the Chains of Poverty, an excellent analysis of the demographics of poverty in Alberta.

The third report I'd like to table this afternoon is titled It's Up to Us: Report of the Progressive Conservative National Caucus Task Force on Poverty, dated January of 2000.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter dated September 1, 1999, that I received from the hon. Minister of Justice, and in this letter we are discussing the Fatality Review Board.

I also have a policy declaration from the Canadian Alliance as my second tabling, Mr. Speaker. This is an initiative to restore democratic accountability by allowing free votes in a Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MS PAUL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. First of all, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a phone survey that has been ongoing in Castle Downs since the introduction of Bill 11 asking for constituents' comments.

The second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of a questionnaire with respect to Bill 11 that I placed in the local Castle News.

head: Introduction of Guests

MR. TANNAS: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of volunteers seated in your gallery. April 9 to 15 is National Volunteer Week. It's a special time set aside to honour people who donate their time and energy to their fellow citizens. It's also meant to raise awareness of the vital contribution volunteers make to our communities.

On your behalf, Mr. Speaker, and on behalf of the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta I'd like to extend our heartfelt appreciation to the following volunteers in the public information branch, visitor services office who are seated in your gallery: Jean Yates for eight years of service, Doreen O'Callaghan six years of service, Myrna Grimm two years of service, Pat Foster two years of service, Jean Sui two years of service, and Rita Alfrey two years of service. I'd also like to recognize Clive Lomax, who was not able to be with us this afternoon, for five years of service. I'd now ask that the group rise and receive the warm, traditional welcome of the Assembly.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, today I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 64 students from Bluffton school. They are accompanied by teachers and supervisors Mr. Dan Eveleigh, Mrs. Sharon Johnston, and Ms Michelle Jean. I'd like to point out that they are seated in both the public and members' gallery, and I would ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce two parents from Delwood school council to the Legislative Assembly. They were responsible for obtaining all the signatures on the letters that I presented today. Mr. David Colburn and Wendy Keiver, if you would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 21 students from Mee-Yah-Noh elementary school. They are currently participating in the School in the Legislature program. They will be here all week. They had a debate this morning on a bill. They are accompanied today by their teacher, Mrs. Marjorie Scharfenberger; her father, Mr. Wes Rider, who is a retired principal from Edmonton public schools; and parent helper Mr. Leonard Bauder. They are seated in the members' gallery today, and with your permission I would ask they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

2:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and to introduce a good friend of mine to you and through you to members of the Assembly. Louise Kidney, a member of our constituency, certainly was a tremendous supporter to myself in our last campaign. She's sitting in the public gallery. I'd ask that she stand now and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

MR. CLEGG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to introduce to you and through you Matthew Holden of Spirit River and his fiancée, Ann Eikeland of Norway. We welcome Ann to Dunvegan and to Alberta and to Canada. Matthew and Ann are to marry on June 24 in Norway, and in August Ann will be moving to Canada to make Spirit River her home with Matthew. I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly and wish them all the best.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 26 students from M.E. LaZerte high school in the Edmonton-Manning constituency. They're in the international baccalaureate program, grade 10 social studies. Their teacher accompanying them is Marie Freiha, and they're in the public gallery. With your permission I'd ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased today to rise and introduce some special guests who will be joining us later in question period. We have with us this afternoon a total of 28 students from the Laurier Heights elementary school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Louise MacGregor, and parent helpers Jean Lundeen and Anne Lalonde. I would like to welcome these students to the Assembly. They have a fantastic French-immersion program at Laurier Heights school in the constituency of Edmonton-Riverview. I would ask all members to welcome them to the House this afternoon.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, likewise, I would wish to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly 37 guests that will arrive from Jean Vanier school today, three teachers and four parent helpers who will join us soon. Accompanying the students are Nadine Gerrie, Darlene Korpany, Mrs. Mairead Michniewski, Teresa Busenius and teachers Vicki Whalley, Bob Dulaba, and Kristen Kowalchuk. I ask the Assembly to welcome them as they will be walking in forthwith.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my very special pleasure today to introduce to you and to all of my colleagues in the Assembly two very special guests, Mr. and Mrs. Koticha, who are very new Canadians. Jitendra Koticha is a civil engineer and a businessman in Edmonton. Neeta Koticha is an accomplished artist. Since her childhood Neeta has been very creative and enjoyed painting on canvas and fabric. Her imagination flows in both ancient and modern art, uniquely blending both culture and time. They are seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to now rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a now frequent visitor to the Assembly. Mr. Con Duemler has joined us again this afternoon. He is a friend to seniors in particular in this province and has recently just prepared an excellent analysis of Bill 11. I hope that all members of the government caucus in particular will read that analysis. I thank Con for that. I welcome him to the Assembly and would ask him to please rise and be welcomed by all members.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Melissa Wheeler. Melissa is participating in Mr. Speaker's Youth Parliament as the MLA for Edmonton-Centre for the Rupertland Municipal Party. Melissa is also a grade 11 student at Victoria school of performing and visual arts. Her favourite class is drama, so she was very well matched with me. I'd also like to thank her grandmother, who encouraged her to come and participate in the youth parliament. Melissa is in the public gallery, and I would ask her to please stand and accept the warm welcome of the Legislature.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Limiting Debate on Bill 11

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not only is public health care on the critical list in this province, so is democracy. The members of this Assembly are elected representatives and are the voices of the people of this province. To stifle these voices is an affront to the people of this province and an act of cowardice. My questions are to the Premier. When dismantling the public health care system in this province, how does the Premier determine how much time he will provide for the views of Albertans to be spoken and which voices will be heard? How much time is enough?

MR. KLEIN: The simple answer is: as much time as is reasonable, Mr. Speaker.

First of all, in response to the preamble we are not dismantling public health care. We're protecting publicly funded health care as we know it today and fulfilling our commitment in law – if they're opposed to it, let them stand up and say so – to the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act. That can hardly be dismantling it.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know to what aspect of democracy the leader of the Liberal opposition alludes. As I understand it, there was an amendment. It was supposed to be a reasoned amendment proposed by the Liberals, which was accepted, but only seven members of their caucus bothered to show up to even vote on their own amendment. Seven members. That is a disgrace to democracy, and the Liberals should be ashamed of themselves.

MR. DICKSON: Point of order.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, does the Premier decide to limit debate when he's afraid of what his own backbenchers might say?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, democracy in action. There were 31 members of the government caucus in the House to vote. There were only seven members – now, this leader of the Liberal opposition will say: well, they were in the back room. Right? They were in the back room, and they were ready to come out. Do they not have speakers in the back room? Do they not have a party whip? Do they not have any discipline over there in the Liberal caucus? You know, they talk about democracy, and when they have a chance to participate in democracy, they don't even show up.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given this Premier's record of invoking closure 26 times to cut off debate when his predecessor invoked it once under Premier Lougheed, does he muzzle debate when he's afraid to hear what Albertans are saying about his legislation?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I noticed with a great deal of interest that at the Liberal policy conference over the weekend the delegates, all 300 of them, voted not to rule out the use of closure as a tool in the legislative process.

Mr. Speaker, you know, I hold out the promise again: if the Liberals promise not to filibuster, we promise not to use closure. Now, I understand and maybe they can correct me if . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. the Premier, you have the floor.

2:10

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we haven't used closure. There's still lots of time to speak on second reading. [interjections] If they care to show up, they will have the opportunity to speak to second reading.

MR. DICKSON: Point of order.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, what I find is an absolute disgrace and an affront to democracy and affront to this Legislature is that they introduced an amendment, and only seven of them showed up. And they talk about democracy. They have made a mockery out of democracy.

THE SPEAKER: That first exchange of questions led to two points of order for me to deal with later. Sometimes one should look at these points of order during the question period, but let's see how we develop further.

Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We must open up the government to more public scrutiny to give us in effect a more human face; I foresee more meaningful participation by private members, free votes in the Legislature: not my words but the words of the current Premier on September 17, 1992, when he announced his candidacy for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party. Albertans vote for their MLAs in the expectation that they will represent their views in the Legislature, but this Premier seems to have a view contrary to the words he used when he launched his leadership in 1992. He sees MLAs as pawns to push his agenda for private hospitals, contrary to his earlier pledge. My question is to the Premier. Why has this Premier broken his promise made in 1992 to Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that more private members' bills have been passed since 1993 than ever in the history of the Legislature, and the largest percentage of those bills were the result of free votes, Mr. Speaker.

Now, as for the leader of the Liberal opposition's assertion that MLAs are being used as pawns, I would only hearken back to those who were private members when the leader of the Liberal opposition was the health minister. The biggest complaint that I received and one of the reasons she lost the leadership is that in fact she was using the MLAs as pawns.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, why won't this Premier let his MLAs represent the wishes of their constituents on his private hospital policy? Why is that?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is no private hospitals policy. Therefore the question is irrelevant.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, will this Premier just change his mind and let the MLAs vote according to the wishes of their constituents?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the bill before us is a government bill, and therefore there is caucus solidarity. I'm sure the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition understands that. When she was minister of health in the Conservative government, she absolutely demanded, as she does, I understand, in her own caucus, absolute solidarity. That's why none of these people ever stray from their script. I'm told by members of the Liberal caucus that they are not allowed to stray from their script. Now, is that being dictatorial or not? I think it is. That's not the way I operate with my caucus, but it's obviously the way she is still operating with her caucus.

THE SPEAKER: Third main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

DR. TAYLOR: Three strikes and you're out, Nancy.

MRS. MacBETH: A government that dictates the way its members vote, a government that cuts off debate . . .

THE SPEAKER: Please. I'm going to let you start over again, but I'm going to ask certain members to my right, who are members of the government caucus, to kindly button it, and that includes the Minister of Innovation and Science.

The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, a government that dictates the way its members vote, a government that cuts off debate, a government that ignores the wishes of the people and forces its members to toe the party line: I am not talking about some dictatorship but rather talking about Alberta. My questions are to the Premier. Will this Premier confirm that part of the reason he has muzzled the voice of Albertans is to save his backbenchers from being forced to toe the party line in direct conflict with the views of the majority of their constituents?

MR. KLEIN: Well, the simple answer to that question, Mr. Speaker, is no, absolutely not. We operate in a much less restrictive fashion than the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition was used to when she was a member of cabinet, a member of Treasury Board, and a member of priorities. I recall as a minister having to set up at least three or four weeks in advance an opportunity to even have a phone call with that minister. That's the way she operated, and that's the way she's still operating today.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I can understand that the Premier doesn't want to answer the questions, but let's try again. What is so important about this government's private health care policy that this Premier is muzzling not only the opposition but his own caucus as well?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, you know, I would ask each and every member of this caucus as they proceed through the debate on Bill 11 or any other bill in the Legislature to stand up and slip in the word that they're being muzzled. I don't know. I look around, and I see this marvelous caucus here. Just nod. Can you shake your heads? Are you being muzzled?

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier has shot down the opposition, has muzzled his own caucus, is ignoring doctors, nurses, the majority of Albertans as represented in the three recent polls that I have tabled, just who is this Premier listening to in this discussion?

MR. KLEIN: We're listening to Albertans, Mr. Speaker, and overall Albertans have a tremendous amount of trust. What we do from time to time might not be the most popular thing to do, but as I've always said, you have to make tough decisions. That's something that the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition failed to do when she was minister of health. She would never go out into the constituencies. Instead, she sent her bureaucrats out to do her dirty work for her. This caucus is willing to stand solidly behind a decision that is made collectively by all members and make the tough decisions to do what is right for this great province of ours. That's what it's all about.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: The citizens of Alberta may not necessarily be aware that the Legislative Assembly of their province sat until nearly midnight last night. One tends to think that there's a correlation between lateness of sitting and exuberance the next day in question period.

The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Why don't we just take the next couple of minutes and everybody just yell back and forth at one another. Okay? Just do it. Hon. leader of the third party, wait for the all the exuberance – let them go back and forth, yell and everything else.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Private Health Services

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Poll after poll, including the one released just this morning by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, shows that the opposition to the private, for-profit hospital scheme is rock solid while what little support the government has is soft, soft, and soft. The government has become so desperate that it's now making medical decisions to try to blunt public opposition. My questions are, of course, to the Premier. Now that your government has made the long overdue decision to do away with direct patient charges for foldable lenses, will it move quickly to get rid of patient charges for other upgraded medical appliances like titanium hips?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know, and I'll have the hon. minister supplement relative to the situation vis-a-vis upgraded services.

There was one interesting outcome from that poll. I'm not discounting the poll. I understand there was a sampling of 700 people. This survey was done by HRGS WorkScans in Ottawa. I don't know the firm, but we have to assume that it was a reputable polling firm.

Question 4 says, understanding that the opinion showed that the majority of people were moderately opposed or strongly opposed to the bill, "For each of the following possible amendments, please let me know whether it may or may not help you change your opinion": "a ban on overnight stays," 21 percent yes, 68 percent no. So obviously the 68 percent were fundamentally, ideologically opposed to the bill. But here's the very interesting one. It says, "A guarantee of no extra billing": 71 percent of those polled said yes, that would have an influence on them changing their mind. Perhaps we can accommodate that if the hon. member would help us.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party. We've been going on to long answers. Brevity. There are many, many members here today.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is very little in that poll for the Premier to seek comfort in.

My second question to the Premier: how many Calgarians had to endure long recovery times and additional suffering simply because the government has until now turned a blind eye to the practice of add-on patient charges for foldable lenses?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond to that.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think it would be accepted across this nation that Calgary through the significant number of very expert doctors has probably had the best, most advanced health care relative to eye care in the country. They have pioneered a number of new techniques, and I think Calgarians are well served.

With respect to the overall issue of foldable versus solid lenses, Mr. Speaker, this is something that we have asked to be assessed by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, because we know that the science is changing. There is continuing evaluation of what is the best type of appliance for eyes. We also have looked at what other provinces do, and generally speaking, they do not cover the foldable lens except for Ontario and Prince Edward Island, as I understand it.

After an overall assessment and noting that, yes, there was inconsistency in the province, generally speaking in terms of the rural parts of the province outside of Edmonton and Calgary providing foldable lenses and the two major cities not doing so, both in terms of patient comfort and in terms of consistency across the province, we made the announcement that has been communicated today.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister still hasn't answered the question on the number of Calgarians who were put in this position.

My last question to the hon. Premier: why is the government choosing to make piecemeal changes, such as the decision on affordable lenses, rather than doing what Albertans really want, which is to scrap its private, for-profit hospital scheme?

MR. KLEIN: There is no private, for-profit scheme, Mr. Speaker. Basically, the bill comes about as the result of a request by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the federal minister to provide some rules and regulations as those rules and regulations affect surgical clinics. The simple fact is that there are 52 surgical clinics now in operation in this province. Many of those clinics were stand-alone facilities, and in recent years, with Alberta's adherence to Minister Marleau's request, with the elimination of facility fees, those clinics are now contracting to hospitals. What we need to have are simply rules and regulations relative to contracting out as it affects surgical clinics that now do 152 different procedures, as I understand it, and perform about 20,000 procedures a year within the publicly funded system. All we want to do is put some fences around them. It's as simple as that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Foldable Intraocular Lenses

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the announcement made earlier this morning about the foldable lenses being paid for by the public system, I'd ask the Minister of Health and Wellness to elaborate on the reasons for the move and if the public health system will also be paying for foldable lenses supplied in the private surgical facilities.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health and Wellness as an integral part of the government overall is fulfilling its responsibility in continually assessing the provision of services under our publicly funded, publicly administered system. I would remind members of the Assembly that periodically we make changes in coverage. A very good example would be the whole area of funding approval for the coverage of certain pharmaceuticals, and the same is the case with respect to appliances.

This issue of foldable versus solid lenses has been a matter of discussion for many months. As all members of the Assembly would know if they were interested in this particular area, there has been a debate on the whole issue of what is medically required: are there advantages in having the foldable lens? Mr. Speaker, after an overall assessment of the situation and looking at also, yes, the need to have consistency across the province, we made the announcement that was conveyed to the public today.

MR. LOUGHEED: Further, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: regarding the benefit of the foldable lens to the patient, would he elaborate on that and why the publicly funded health system did not previously pay for that lens?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it – and I can only speak from a layman's perspective as it is explained to me – as the foldable lens went into use in certain parts of Canada and in this province, there was an ongoing assessment made of the benefits of using the lens. It has been determined over a period of time that it does help in terms of comfort and recovery time following an operation, and that is deemed to be important for patients, albeit both types of lenses do serve basically the same purpose or perform the same way in terms of restoring or improving one's sight.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Further to the same minister: would he comment please on whether the hard lens is an inferior product as compared to the soft lens?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that in terms of the actual restoration or improvement of sight after a certain surgical procedure has been done, the results are very, very, very comparable, but as I've said, in terms of recovery time, in terms of comfort and certain other factors, it has at least for a significant period of time an advantage over the solid lens.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Private Health Services

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Wednesday this Premier made a commitment to us in this Assembly to release the 30 blanked-out pages from his private hospitals policy, including focus group research, if the Official Opposition would release the results of its focus group research. Well, the Official Opposition has not conducted any focus groups on the Premier's private health care scheme. We don't need to do that because we listen to the thousands of Albertans who communicate by faxes, letters, e-mails, public meetings, and telephone calls. My questions are all to the Premier. Let me start by asking the Premier this: given that the Official Opposition has released and in fact tabled today the full costs of its campaign to protect public health care in Alberta, will this Premier now release all of the invoices, the receipts, the copies of the contracts from his taxpayer funded propaganda campaign at least since it was initiated in June of 1999? Will he live up to the commitment he made last Wednesday?

MR. KLEIN: There was no propaganda campaign. I don't know what the hon. member is talking about, Mr. Speaker. The bill that was mailed out purports to be law. There is nothing more honest and straightforward than the law. This hon. member, if I can use that word, is a lawyer. He knows what the law is all about. Or maybe he doesn't. He's sat here in this Legislative Assembly day in and day out making a mockery out of the law and himself.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, my follow-up question to the Premier would be this: will he in fact do what he said he would do last Wednesday? Will he make available the full particulars of those focus groups? We don't need names; we just want the input, Mr. Premier, through the Speaker.

MR. KLEIN: Yes.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question is: will the Premier, then, fill out the checklist that we had provided as a courtesy earlier this afternoon that gives us the full particulars of all of the costs and expenses that this government has incurred in terms of promoting its private health care project?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the public accounts provide that checklist.

I don't have the tablings, and I don't have the checklist. I find it incomprehensible for this leader to stand up and honestly say that they only spent – what was it? – $290. I mean, the radio ads, the television ads, the brochures. How much did it cost to produce this piece of garbage? And how much did it cost to produce this? You know, I've had some experience in media and public relations. You don't produce this kind of garbage propaganda and send it to hundreds of thousands of people for $290. Who is this member trying to kid? What is the cost of this? Are you saying that this cost $290? Mr. Speaker, he sits there and lies. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: The only two teams in the House that followed the decorum of the House in the last few minutes were the team led by the hon. leader of the third party and the team led by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Endangered Species

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents and other Albertans work with conservation groups to protect the natural habitat of animals on their private property. Today they're concerned about the federal government's endangered species legislation that was introduced earlier, and I'm not talking about Liberals. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. What are you doing to ensure that Albertans' rights as landowners are protected, Mr. Minister?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'd like to say that we've worked very co-operatively with landowners, because it is our view that co-operation with landowners is the most critical thing that we can do to ensure that the habitat for these species is protected. As minister responsible for wildlife for the province of Alberta I can assure you that I'm working with my department and with landowners and with nongovernment agencies and others to ensure that we do take steps to protect wildlife and its habitat.

Now, it would come as a surprise to many Canadians, Mr. Speaker, that the last time a mammal was extinct in Canada was back in the 1920s, and the last time a bird was extinct was the passenger pigeon, which also was roughly 85 years ago. Interestingly, I'm advised that the last fish to be made extinct in the province of Alberta was a fish in Banff national park, the longnose dace.

So, Mr. Speaker, that raises an interesting question as to the necessity for the legislation that was tabled today by the federal minister, Mr. Anderson, his Species at Risk Act. First of all, I think we are doing a good job with our legislation, and we do have a number of outstanding examples where we have brought species back from the brink of extinction through programs that we've undertaken.

Mr. Speaker, what this government opposes is the use by the federal government of their criminal power authority to enforce what I believe to be a confrontational and punitive approach to the protection of species. Now, Minister Anderson himself says that 99 percent of Canadians are doing the right thing when it comes to protection of species at risk. I agree with him, and that raises an interesting question. If you have legislation that many landowners will find offensive, will they in fact comply with it? The question then is: will this in fact have the exact opposite effect of what the Minister of the Environment from the federal government is trying to achieve?

Mr. Speaker, I'd simply like to conclude this by saying that we believe co-operation with landowners is the most critical thing that we can do to ensure that there's protection of habitat and species in the province of Alberta.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. Given that the fox will take more burrowing owls than any human, what is Alberta doing to respect landowner rights and respect the protection of endangered species co-operatively?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we are interested in partnerships. We are interested in co-operation. In fact, in 1996 the federal government, with the provinces of Canada, signed an accord, a national accord for the protection of species. That accord, in my opinion, was a good model for co-operation among provinces, territories, the federal government, and stakeholder groups. However, this legislation seems to fly in the face of that very accord.

We've been involved provincially for over 25 years with solid legislation, our Wildlife Act, which protects plants, insects, invertebrates, and fish. Mr. Speaker, we've expanded our traditional coverage of these areas. We've in fact had our legislation reviewed by the Canadian Institute for Environmental Law and Policy, and they indicate that Alberta is in a very good position to meet its obligations, as set out in the accord, for the protection of endangered species.

Mr. Speaker, we are improving our standard conditions and buffers to prevent disturbance or displacement of threatened or endangered species in areas of industrial activity. But I must reiterate that co-operation with landowners is critical, and it's the reason why we've done such a good job of protecting endangered species in this province.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. I do know that the federal government has a group of scientists and specialists that identify and track endangered species in Canada. Would you please let me know what you've done to complement this with common sense in Alberta?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have co-operated with the federal government and others and with COSEWIC, which is the committee that the hon. member is referring to. COSEWIC is the Committee on the Status of Endangered Wildlife in Canada. We have worked with their scientists, and that was pursuant to the accord. The accord, in my opinion, is a model for co-operation that, if lived up to by the provinces and the territories and the federal government, I think would be a continued good model for the protection of species in Canada.

Now, Mr. Speaker, under our own Wildlife Act we do have an Endangered Species Conservation Committee, which is chaired by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. The purpose of that committee is to identify management and recovery of species at risk in the province of Alberta. The input is then provided to the federal committee and outlines the progress and the initiatives that we are taking. We can report great progress on species such as the peregrine falcon, the sage grouse, Sprague's pipit. It's been accomplished by working with our landowners, with our stakeholders, with nongovernment organizations. Albertans through this process have been educated and have worked with us co-operatively, and that has been key.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 27 at the Amethyst Lodge a group of concerned residents in Jasper held a vote on private health care, and all except one were opposed to privatization of the public health care system. The Member for West Yellowhead stated: the people spoke to me here tonight; if all the people of West Yellowhead said no, then I'd have to stand up, but the big thing is, I'm only one voice out of 64. To the Premier: would you let this one member speak out and represent the voices of the Albertans he was elected to represent?

MR. KLEIN: If the hon. member is alluding to the Member for West Yellowhead, well, he can speak out as much as he wants, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, while I'm on my feet, I would like to take this opportunity to apologize sincerely and most profusely to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I did call him a liar. I understood him to say it was $290. I guess the chattering back and forth drowned it out, the $29,290.

I accept the breakdown, Mr. Speaker, of the costs associated with the Liberal's propaganda campaign, and I again apologize to the hon. member because I didn't hear the $29,000 part of his answer. I just heard $290, so I do apologize.

MRS. SOETAERT: My second question, Mr. Speaker. Given that last night in a debate in St. Albert people wanted their MLA to represent their views against this government's privatization, will the government allow the Member for St. Albert to vote the way her constituents want her to?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is no private health care bill on the table. I can understand why members of this caucus would not participate in a debate on private health care, because there is nothing, and that's what I find so offensive about this pamphlet. Whether it's included in the $29,290 or not is beside the point. The pamphlet, no matter how much it cost the taxpayers of this province, is wrong. It is misleading. It is fraudulent, because it says that it legalizes private, for-profit hospitals. That is wrong. It says that it "creates a two-tier health care system." That is wrong. That is fraudulent. That is misleading. That is absolutely wrong. That is false, and they should be held accountable for putting out false advertising. It says, "opens the door to extra charges without patient protection." That is absolutely wrong, as you will see by the amendments to address this particular situation as a result of our correspondence with Mr. Rock and our consultations with the public.

Here is the biggest – what can I say? This is the biggest fabrication, and this is the most flagrant of all the malicious information that the Liberals are putting out, paid for by taxpayers. They say that the bill permits queue-jumping. That is wrong, wrong, wrong. The bill specifically and absolutely prohibits queue-jumping.

Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of vicious, malicious misinformation that the Liberals have been talking about. When this hon. member talks about town hall meetings, it's no wonder there is fear and confusion, and it's no wonder that members of our caucus won't attend those contrived, those phony kinds of meetings when they're discussing this kind of malicious, vicious misinformation.

MRS. SOETAERT: My final question to the Premier: how many more government MLAs are not allowed to represent the wishes of their constituents who are opposed to the privatization of health care? How many more?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, why would any of the hon. members of the governing caucus attend a meeting that is predicated on this kind of malicious and very deliberate misinformation, this kind of misinformation that portrays the face of the leader of the Liberal opposition? You know, I can't for the life of me understand why she would allow her name and her face to be attached to fraudulent misinformation, deceit, and a total misrepresentation of what Bill 11 is all about. Why this hon. member would allow herself to be associated with something that is so false and so misleading and so malicious is beyond me.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

2:50 Brewery Industry Labour Disputes

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are breweries in our Calgary-Fort riding, and there are a number of my high-spirited constituents working in the brewery industry and distribution system. My question today is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. We've heard a lot about the labour dispute affecting the Brewers' Distributor Ltd. in Calgary. Could the minister provide an update on this dispute?

MR. DUNFORD: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that this is a private matter, of course, between the Brewers' Distributor Ltd. and the union that represents the employees. As of this moment in time, it's my understanding that no job action has begun.

Last Friday there was a vote that was supervised on the last offer of the employer, and we received word earlier today that that vote in fact turned down the employer's offer by a very wide margin.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is also to the minister. Can the minister tell us what will happen as a result of the workers rejecting the proposal?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, I don't want to speculate, Mr. Speaker, on what the parties would do next. However, I think it should be clear that the union is in a legal position to strike. If they decided to do that, of course they would present the employer with that particular notice and could then take that legal job action in 72 hours. For their part, the employer of course can conduct a lockout poll and choose to lock out their workers.

Now, this is a situation that has happened in Edmonton. I'm not sure that anyone is particularly happy with that kind of a situation, but once again, Mr. Speaker, we have a democracy in this particular province. We have freedom for employees to bargain collectively. We have freedom for an employer to conduct their business. So what we have in the situation in Calgary, as well as in the dispute that's ongoing currently in the city of Edmonton, is legal entities practising their legal obligations under legal legislation.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is also to the same minister. What steps is the government taking to assist the parties involved?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, we've been involved for a period of time now in the sense of having appointed a mediator. The mediator has worked with the parties and of course is still on standby, and I believe he's meeting today with one or both of the parties.

I guess the point is, hon. member, that we are doing what we can in order to come to grips with this particular situation. So we're there, we'll work as hard as we can on this situation, but again this is a private matter between the employer and employees.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A month ago a dedicated group of Albertans came to this Assembly with a petition from Red Deer and area signed by 5,000 citizens from central Alberta opposing this government's privatization of public health care. The former Treasurer and still hon. Member for Red Deer-North recognized the importance of free votes in a democracy and is quoted in his web site as saying that "where an MP finds that a clear consensus has been reached on an issue, his or her responsibility is to represent that consensus over party or personal views." Just a week ago the hon. Member for Red Deer-South described the concerns of his constituents when he was saying in quoting them, to quote him: with a probability of more opposition than there has been for it. My questions are to the Acting Premier, if there be so on that side. Why is this government ignoring the voices and the wishes of the people of Red Deer?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, this government listens very closely to the voices of people from all over this province, including the people of Red Deer. There is an opportunity for debate in this House. There have been I believe, if I'm not mistaken, some 700 minutes of possible debate on this bill. I believe that during that debate there's been ample opportunity for both sides of the House to reflect the views of their constituents, to reflect the views that people have given them over the period of time. But I will – and it is well documented by standing votes in this House – place this government's record on free votes in the Legislature against any other party in this House, most certainly the opposition party.

MR. WHITE: Mr. Speaker, why won't the Premier and his government whip allow those representatives from Red Deer to truly represent the interests of their people by speaking for their people in a free vote on that particular issue?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the two government MLAs from Red Deer have spoken in this House, and the Member for Red Deer-South most recently in this debate had his opportunity, with the amount of time that was allotted to each and every member in this House to speak on this matter. This caucus has the opportunity to debate this fully, and they will vote on this bill representing what they believe is right and based on the input they've had from talking to people all over this province.

MR. WHITE: Will the government caucus not allow the members to represent those that have voiced their concerns through poll after poll, through all the information you've received in this House, in the Assembly, and outside in a true free vote? Not a caucus controlled vote but a free vote.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I really appreciate and I know every member of this caucus appreciates the concern that the member is showing for this government caucus. However, I think this government caucus has demonstrated and demonstrated in the last election that they're quite capable of taking care of their own concerns. I would just advise the hon. member across the way to look after the needs and the views of the Liberal caucus. I would suspect that they could use his help a little bit more.

3:00

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now we'll call upon the first of three hon. members to participate in Members' Statements.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Leaders of Tomorrow Awards

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to acknowledge the leaders of tomorrow awards that have recently been presented to young people in my constituency in recognition of their hard work and volunteer efforts in their communities. These awards are given to young volunteers in four age categories, between six and 21 years of age, who have demonstrated outstanding dedication and excellence in their community service and work.

In the Camrose area 19 outstanding young people were nominated to receive leaders of tomorrow awards. Thirty-three outstanding young people were nominated from the city and county of Wetaskiwin and the town of Millet. Each nominee is given a certificate and an invitation to a reception in their honour. At the March 22 reception in Camrose, Melissa Knockleby, Cari McIllduff, Savon Meak, Michael Wetsch, and Amy Armstrong were named as the recipients of the year 2000 awards. At the ceremony held at the Reynolds-Alberta Museum last evening in Wetaskiwin, Kristine Huot, Chris Kirwin, Cody Soanes, and Shawn Gist were awarded this recognition. The winners were given an engraved plaque to recognize their efforts and a $100 cheque that they will contribute to a nonprofit organization of their choice.

Congratulations to all award winners and recipients for the contributions you have made to your communities and for the important work you do as volunteers. You are leaders of today, and your service and generosity which is recognized now will make you leaders of tomorrow.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Pine Shake Roofing

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No one would argue that education should be a top priority for government. Parents warn of overcrowded classrooms, overworked teachers, and having to fund-raise for things like textbooks that are essential learning tools. That makes the situation facing two schools in St. Albert even more appalling. L'ecole Marguerite d'Youville and l'ecole Marie Poburan are facing a quarter million dollar bill to replace the rotting pine shakes on their roofs. What a complete waste of taxpayers' money, money that should be going into classrooms to help educate our children. Even worse, these pine shakes were approved and promoted by this very government who is now forcing Alberta's children to pay for their bungling. The Premier was in St. Albert last June and made a promise to set up a task force on the pine shake issue, quote, to see how we can bring about a shared responsibility for this problem, end of quote. I guess we can add this to the growing list of the Premier's promises not kept.

The Premier and the government have continued to dodge this issue by claiming that they do not consider testing for durability as a part of their job when documents show that they did indeed check for durability in 1991 when a roofing contractor warned that untreated pine shakes were a faulty product. Schoolchildren would be sent to the corner for telling such an obvious untruth, but this government just turns a blind eye and continues with business as usual.

While these St. Albert schools see thousands of much-needed dollars paying for a government mistake, the government picks and chooses and decides who to help and when. It has given lottery money to some community groups so they can replace their rotting pine shake roofs. What a double standard. What could be more important than making sure that all money needed for education is going into the classroom to benefit students, not cover government mistakes? The government acted in bad faith by advancing its political agenda at the expense of Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Volunteer Week

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a Member of the Legislative Assembly, as a member of the government, and as a representative of the constituency of St. Albert, I wish to pay tribute to one of the most important segments of our society, the volunteer sector. This week has been proclaimed as Volunteer Week, and the theme of this millennium year is: volunteering, a time-honoured tradition. I believe the volunteer spirit of Albertans is contributing directly to the health and to the well-being of our communities.

I would also like to acknowledge the Wild Rose Foundation, who in collaboration with Volunteer Alberta facilitates the provincial focus on Volunteer Week. This year 112 Alberta communities, which, I might add, is a record number, representing more than 2 million Albertans are participating in this weeklong series of events.

In my own community last Saturday night we recognized the leaders of tomorrow, specifically Shannon Davidson, Alishia Mannix, Stephannie Britton, Gillian Hansen, Kirk Duffee, and the group and members of the St. Albert Youth Council. We also recognized the nominees for the volunteer citizen of the year: Matthew Boiko, Anne Emberly, Nancy Nelson, John Power, and Millie Seitz.

In recognizing past citizens of the year and citizens of the decade, we did recognize the volunteer citizen of the decade from 1990 to the year 2000, the Hon. Lois E. Hole, Lieutenant Governor of Alberta.

I am very proud of all of these citizens who represent our community and who contribute so well to the well-being of St. Albert. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I have three notices for points of order today. As the agenda today involves time for private members, the plea here is for brevity with respect to these points of order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on your first point of order.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

MR. DICKSON: The authority would be Beauchesne 408(2). In the first set of questions from the Leader of the Official Opposition to the Premier, the Premier responded by talking about an event last night in the Assembly and indicated that there were only seven Liberals there to vote. The point is that the Votes and Proceedings are clear. What it also indicates is that there were 31 government members present. There are 64 members of the government caucus. By my limited mathematical skills, that makes 33 members of the government caucus also missing. So it seems to me it does nothing other than flame an argument to attempt to suggest that there's less than full participation from one caucus when the Premier's own caucus was less than 50 percent staffed.

Those were the observations I wanted to make on this point of order. Thank you.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously there's no point of order at all on that point, and it's surprising that it was even raised given that the first questions from the Leader of the Official Opposition today were trying to point out some sort of insinuation that democracy itself had died because of what happened last night. The Premier quite rightly pointed to the Votes and Proceedings of the House, which showed that opposition members couldn't be bothered to show up to vote for their own motion. To make those types of insinuations and direct comments in the preambles to a question was clearly inflammatory, clearly designed to get the type of answer that they got. Then to stand up on a point of order to argue that the answer was not appropriate because it didn't go far enough to detail all the rest of the details of the Votes and Proceedings is really quite strange.

The fact of the matter was that democracy didn't die last night. That the Liberal members opposite didn't come out to support their own motion is their problem. Standing Order 47, the motion that was moved, gives every member of this House an opportunity to participate in debate at second reading once again. In fact, debate at second reading has now proceeded far longer than debate on second reading on any bill this House has seen for a long, long time. The hon. member should know and the hon. Leader of the Opposition in posing her questions this afternoon clearly should know that debate in second reading relates to the principle of the bill. We dealt with the amendment last night, which attempted to negative the principle of the bill, and we go on to continue debate on second reading tonight under Standing Order 47.

Democracy is still alive and well. The fact that the Premier alluded to the Votes and Proceedings, which is the written record of the House that is available for all members to look at and to tell the public about, and that only seven of their members cared to show up to vote for their own amendment is not the fault of the government, nor is it a point of order.

THE SPEAKER: Actually, hon. members might like to read Beauchesne 289, the Canadian House of Commons, which says: "Standing Order 15 states that 'every Member is bound to attend the service of the House unless leave of absence has been given him or her by the House'." The chair has also noted on other occasions that it's the duty of all hon. members to attend this House. There were a lot of folks last night who didn't ask for permission from the chair, in this case the Speaker.

If we look at, again, the oft-quoted statements of the public record, Votes and Proceedings, there is a notification here of so many for the motion, so many against the motion. In the question period today the hon. leader of the government responded in one case by saying that there were several hon. Liberals and in the other case that there were 31 hon. members of the government caucus. Essentially when we refer to absences of this and absences of that, we generally are referring to the absence on identification of an individual member. It is certainly public information and public record that there was a vote last night. It was 31 to 7. So an important point of clarification.

Second point of order. The hon. House leader of the Official Opposition.

Point of Order Clarification

MR. DICKSON: I will try and be brief and hope that my friend across the way does similarly.

The same authority, 408(2). I heard the Premier say that the Liberals can still debate Bill 11 at second reading. Well, Mr. Speaker, once again the rule is abundantly clear on this, that once the motion is made that the previous question be now put, it means that every member of the Assembly is entitled to speak to that. Once that speaking list has been exhausted, the vote is put on that motion, and immediately the vote then takes place on, in this case, the second reading motion.

So for those members that did not have a chance to participate in the second reading debate before the motion was put, they in fact will be denied their opportunity to stand in their places and speak for 20 minutes. The only thing they can speak to is the motion that the previous question be now put. I'm not sure whether it was you or your predecessor, but we've had occasion to deal with this motion before. It is not accurate to say and in fact is inflammatory and inaccurate to say that those Liberal members who did not have the chance of participating in second reading prior now can participate in second reading.

If that's the case, it's wonderful news, but that's certainly a variance in our procedures. My advice to my caucus colleagues is that they are limited to speaking to the motion that's currently in front of us and that once that's finished and voted, there will then immediately be a vote on second reading. That's my understanding, so as much as anything I may be asking for clarification, under 13(2), if in fact my interpretation is inaccurate. Clearly, if the Premier is correct in what he said, then my interpretation is wrong. So I'm hoping for some clarification on that, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader, and it would be helpful to the Assembly if the hon. House leader would clarify this understanding or misunderstanding.

MR. HANCOCK: I would be delighted, and I will be at least as brief as the hon. Opposition House Leader was in making his presentation.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier was absolutely correct in his assertion. It wasn't inflammatory, and in fact the only thing that has been inflammatory in this whole process is the suggestion that debate has been cut off. In fact, many members have spoken at second reading, and by my recollection there were only six Liberal members who hadn't spoken as of yesterday afternoon. One of them took the opportunity to speak and then took the opportunity to move an amendment. It is perfectly in order to do so, although quite out of the norm. We on this side do not complain when people use the rules of the House to put forward their viewpoints, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning did so and did so quite appropriately. He moved an amendment that Bill 11 be withdrawn and that the subject matter be referred to a committee.

At second reading there are three types of amendments which are appropriate: the hoist amendment, which if brought would result in an immediate vote on the bill after it was voted on; a reasoned amendment, which after being voted on would allow us to go back to debate on second reading; and the referral amendment, that the hon. member put forward, which would allow us, after being voted on, to go back to second reading. After the less than vigorous debate that was put forward by the opposition members on their own amendment, we took a vote last night. After that vote took place, we returned to second reading, whereupon as I understand it, according to the Blues or the record that I've been provided of the debate last night, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader under Standing Order 47 moved the previous question in the form that the question be now put. That then puts on the floor of the House the opportunity for every member of the House who desires to be involved to debate the question as to whether they're ready for the vote.

Now, I don't know about you, Mr. Speaker, but I think that when you're debating as to whether or not you're ready for the vote, you have to deal with the question of whether or not you've had the opportunity to put all of your arguments forward and whether everything has been canvassed.

In fact, second reading debate is a debate on the principle of the bill. The amendment that was brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Manning in effect negatives the principle of the bill, and I would certainly argue that whichever choice you use in terms of amending at second reading, all of them amount to the same thing: it's negating the principle. We heard their rather, as I say, less than enthusiastic arguments on that and took a vote. Any further amendment at that stage would be attempting to do exactly the same thing, and I presume that the reason why their sixth-last speaker moved the amendment was because they maybe wanted to have their fifth-last and their fourth-last and their third-last speakers try a reasoned amendment or another referral motion. But I would only be presuming that.

Nonetheless, everybody has the opportunity to speak at second reading. The fact that they cut off five of their speakers by moving the amendment when they did is not the problem of the Government House Leader or any other Member of the Legislative Assembly. In fact, I would be inaccurate and misspoke myself: he didn't cut them off but moved the amendment at that point in time, leaving them open to bring in redundant amendments after that. The only amendment which is appropriate at second reading is to negative the principle of the bill, and the House had already dealt with that subject matter.

So it's entirely appropriate, then, to move a Standing Order 47, which, again, is in the rules of the House and quite appropriate, just as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning's motion was quite appropriate, and allows every member of the House an opportunity to speak yet again to Bill 11 as to whether or not they're ready for the question. Again, Mr. Speaker, I don't know about you, but in speaking to that type of motion, if I wasn't ready for the question, I would be putting forward the reasons why I wasn't ready for the question, and that certainly would be dealing with some of the essence of the bill.

Now, I'm not going to tell members opposite how to raise their debate. Our members are smart enough to figure out how they're going to raise their debate. We certainly can represent our constituents well in this Assembly. There's no cutoff of debate, and apart from the three members, I believe, who spoke to it last night already, every member still has the opportunity to speak to Bill 11 in debate.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the chair certainly respects the views and the positions put forward by the two hon. speakers with respect to this. The bottom line of the whole thing is that debate will continue on Bill 11, and a great deal of flexibility will be provided in terms of the range of the topic for the individuals standing forward. It will not be restricted to one very, very fine line.

One takes it, hon. Government House Leader, that there will not be a series of interjections with respect to relevancy by certain people on the government bench as other members do participate with respect to further continuance.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I would be alarmed if anybody would suggest that any comment about why a person wasn't ready to vote on Bill 11 would be considered irrelevant.

THE SPEAKER: Thank you very much. In keeping with this, hon. members must be aware of Standing Order 29 with respect to this matter as well. Now, that's very helpful.

With respect to that, hon. House leader of the Official Opposition, is there a third point of order, or was that dealt with by the apology?

MR. DICKSON: No. That's been addressed by the Premier, and I'm not doing anything further with respect to that. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. Thank you very much.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 207
Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing
Calculation Act

[Adjourned debate April 5: Mr. Paszkowski]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated last week, I'm very pleased to be involved in the discussions regarding this particular bill, even though it does indeed appear to be very, very close to if not a money bill.

MR. COUTTS: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod on a point of order. Proceed with a citation and go forward.

Point of Order
Money Bills

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in accordance with Standing Order 79(1), which says:

The Assembly shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or Bill for the appropriation

- (a) of any part of the public revenue, or
- (b) of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to the Assembly by Message of the Lieutenant Governor in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or Bill is proposed.

I would further like to cite Beauchesne 980(2), Mr. Speaker. It's a long section, but I want to just highlight the areas that I'm concerned with. In section (2) it says, "the principle that the sanction of the Crown must be given to every grant of money drawn from public revenue." Then it goes on to say a little farther down, "nor can a Member other than a Minister move for the introduction of a bill framed to effect a reduction of duties."

3:20

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to make reference today in this point of order to the Alberta Liberal caucus news release dated March 22, 2000, tabled by the Minister of Municipal Affairs in the Assembly.

Bill 207: the Provincial/Municipal Tax Sharing Act will allow for the allocation of a percentage of provincial personal income tax revenues on a per capita basis to local government.

The release goes on to state that

Bill 207 provides the basis for a new partnership between the province and local governments, emphasizing the principles of respect, fairness, financial stability, accountability, and clear roles and responsibilities.

That was a quote by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

I'd further like to reference another Alberta Liberal caucus news release, dated April 7, 2000, also tabled by the Minister of Municipal Affairs in the Assembly today, which states that "Bill 207 would provide local governments with access to a portion of the provincial personal income tax base." In this same release the Member for Edmonton-Manning is quoted as stating that Bill 207 . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, you have to help me here, please. What the House has before it is the debate on a bill, not a debate on somebody's press release.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be pointing out the difference between what is in the bill and what is in the press releases.

THE SPEAKER: We have a point of order that the hon. member is bringing forward here with respect to the acceptability of a bill or not, within the rules of the House. It's not a debate about what was said outside the House or in some other source.

MR. COUTTS: Might I then, Mr. Speaker, cite the wording in Bill 207 itself. The bill says in section 3(4) that "a percentage figure set by the Provincial Treasurer under subsection (3) shall be debated and voted upon by the Legislative Assembly." This bill not only requires a Provincial Treasurer's report on tax sharing; it further requires the critical component that its content, the income tax percentages to be shared, be determined through a debate and vote in the Legislative Assembly.

Now, the Leader of the Official Opposition was quite, quite clear on what the intent of this bill is, and I refer to page 764 of Hansard of last Wednesday, where the Leader of the Official Opposition said:

Madam Speaker, the object of Bill 207 is to provide local governments in Alberta, whether they be for rural or urban municipalities, with access to a portion of provincial personal income tax.

I also refer to page 765.

Bill 207 proposes to allocate a percentage of personal income tax revenues to Alberta municipalities on a per capita basis beginning in the fiscal year 2000-2001.

Given these statements, Mr. Speaker, and supplemented by the statements in the news releases that I cited earlier, it is clear that Bill 207 contravenes Standing Order 79(1)(a). Further, it is apparent that Bill 207 will contravene Beauchesne 980(2) given that this bill contemplates sharing of the provincial income tax, thereby reducing revenues contained in the general revenue fund for the province of Alberta.

Further, Bill 207 necessitates an annual discussion of income tax rates in the Legislative Assembly for the purpose of preparing a government of Alberta report, in direct contravention of Standing Order 79(2), which specifies that any such bill "shall be introduced by a minister," and 79(2)(a), which requires that "the recommendation of the Lieutenant Governor shall be attached" to any such bill.

I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to rule Bill 207 out of order pursuant to Standing Order 69(3) as it is an infringement on the prerogative of the Crown.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to be brief because this is a private member's bill, and as you've enjoined me from time to time, it's important that we maximize the opportunity for debate.

The point would be this. If one looks at Standing Order 79, the operative word is "appropriation." Appropriation has a defined and a specific meaning. This is not a bill about appropriation, that creates appropriation, that effects appropriation.

Standing Order 2 provides that in all contingencies unprovided for, the question shall be decided by the Speaker and . . . the Speaker shall base any decision on the usages and precedents of the Assembly.

I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to a number of bills which would all in a similar way talk about an allocation and formulas but don't amount to an appropriation. I refer you to 1995, to Bill 205, Debt Retirement Act, sponsored by Dr. Percy. I refer you to 1998, to Bill 222, sponsored by Mr. Zwozdesky. That was the Fiscal Stabilization Fund Calculation Act. Those are both bills that were introduced that created a framework or a scheme as it relates to the distribution of money, which is qualitatively different than an appropriation.

The member clearly is leveraging his argument on the basis of some comments that were made, but your own intervention shows, Mr. Speaker, that you're very much alive to the notion. The issue is: within the four corners of Bill 207, does this bill violate Standing Order 79? It is not an appropriation bill. It is in no sense a bill for appropriation. What the member is doing is talking about comments in debate. Well, we hear flights of hyperbole all the time when people want to make their bill something grander, something different than it really is. The point is that the Leader of the Opposition may want to see a different scheme and in fact a different appropriation, but Bill 207 is not that appropriation.

So those are the observations I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker, on the point of order. I'm just suggesting again that for you to in fact uphold the point of order effectively, you're overturning a number of precedents and past traditions of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The chair brought to the attention of all hon. members some time ago that this was private members' day and asked for some brevity with respect to input. Unfortunately, that has not come about, and we're now about a minute and a half away from the next segment of business for today.

The chair wants to say the following. Private members' day is very unique in this parliament and this Legislature. It is unequaled in virtually any of the 150 parliaments found that follow the British form of government. The changes that were made in this Assembly in 1993 afforded private members, nongovernment members, an opportunity to bring forward an idea and actually have something done about it. The chair believes that in the last six or seven years there have been some 20 examples, including one just a few days ago of a bill brought to this Assembly. So some degree of leverage and some degree of empathy is given by this chairman to the aspirations of private members.

One of the things that the chair hopes is not happening on private members' days is filibustering a bill by way of points of order. So there's an instruction here to the Clerk that the last number of minutes dealing with this particular purported point of order are not to be part of the speaking time allocated for the debate with respect to the particular thing.

The question has been raised by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, and in fact the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, when participating in this debate a few days ago, questioned openly but did not pursue a point of order with respect to this being a money bill or not. This afforded the chair an opportunity since that time to in fact review the matter, review the bill, review the precedents, and review situations that have been dealt with in this House in the past. So he does not come here today unprepared to see such an argument coming forward.

It's very correct that money bills, or bills that require the appropriation of funds, can only be moved by a member of Executive Council and must contain the royal recommendation, as stipulated in Standing Order 79 and in section 54 of the Constitution Act of 1867. The chair has taken the time to review this bill. He's read it clause by clause, and the chair fails to see how Bill 207 would be considered a money bill as it does not require the expenditure of funds. In fact, it appears to the chair that the bill is drafted in such a way so as not to be considered a money bill.

3:30

Section 2 of the bill states that the Provincial Treasurer shall prepare a report on how the financial affairs of the Government would have been affected by sharing income tax revenues with municipalities.

The bill then goes on to outline what conditions would apply to the calculation of the report.

The chair would also like to remind members that it is not the chair's role to rule on how people interpret what is before the Assembly or what is said outside of the Assembly. In deciding whether a bill is a money bill or not, the key is to look at the bill itself. If members wish to further review this matter, they may wish to examine Speaker Schumacher's ruling of April 28, 1994, at pages 249 and 250 of the Journals.

This is not a point of order that we are considering. This bill can proceed through debate in the normal steps of the matter. Hon. members, I make it very, very clear that the time allocation used in dealing with this point of order will not be part of the time allocation provided for the debate on the bill. Those minutes are still there.

Now we've passed the required time of 3:30 on this particular day.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Support for Stay-at-home Parents

506. Mr. MacDonald moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to demonstrate its recognition of the contribution made by parents who stay at home to care for their children by providing support equal to that received by parents choosing other child care options.

[Debate adjourned April 4: Mr. Cao speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to continue speaking on Motion 506.

Albertans pride themselves on being fair and maintaining a province of fairness. By the year 2001 Albertans will see their taxes cut by $852 million a year. Albertans from all walks of life will benefit, and the high exemption will mean significant benefits for lower income families. Low-income Albertans get a real break with the new plan.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

In 2005 families with two children who earn less than $31,000 a year will pay no provincial income tax at all. In fact, for these families the refundable Alberta family employment tax credit exceeds the Alberta tax payable. In addressing fairness, the new system reduces the differences in Alberta taxes paid by single- and two-income families. In the old system the single-income family paid more in personal income taxes than a family at the same income level with two parents working outside the home.

The government's role is clear. Action has been taken to provide for more fairness in the tax regime. This is the fairness that I speak of, a fairness that makes me proud as an Albertan. But I am also proud to leave the decision on what type of child care parents choose up to the parents in Alberta.

Madam Speaker, as a representative of the Calgary-Fort constituency I can say that we believe in the principle and practice that public assistance should be based on need and the level of need. Our existing child care subsidy program is helping large numbers of Alberta families who need assistance.

Talking about child care, as a private member I have already introduced Bill 209, Employment Standards (Parental Leave) Amendment Act, 2000. This bill, on infant child care, aims to allow working parents who are in need a longer parental leave to care for their infant. This bill will be in second reading debate in about a week's time.

Madam Speaker, it is for those reasons that I cannot support Motion 506, brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Thank you.

MS LEIBOVICI: Could I just ask how much time is left on the bill so that I know how to gauge my minutes? Great. In the two minutes that I have, I'd like to speak in favour of this motion.

I believe in and have been a longtime supporter of the Kids First group – I believe that is what they're called – that has fought long and hard to recognize the contribution that stay-at-home parents, be they mothers or fathers, contribute to their children. Their objective is not to have a subsidy in order to be able to stay at home but is to ensure that there is equity between individuals who choose to stay at home to care for their children and individuals who choose or need to go to work in order to support their children and choose other child care options rather than that of staying in the home.

I see no reason for anyone in this Legislative Assembly to not support that principle. If we are indeed in support of allowing choices to parents and ensuring that those choices are based not on financial consideration but are based on what is best for that particular family, this motion allows for that to occur. It has nothing to do with subsidization. It has nothing to do with whether an individual is on welfare or not, if I understood the speaker before me. What it has to do with is allowing parental choice in whether or not there is the ability to stay at home and raise families and that there be no discrimination in the legislation that is put forward either at the provincial level or at the federal level with regards to swaying a parent to make a particular choice.

If we can provide a tax credit for having a stay-at-home nanny, if we can provide tax credits for child care, we can provide those same tax credits and value the work that stay-at-home parents provide to their children in their own home.

Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The time for this item has concluded.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 506 lost]

Long-term and Home Care

507. Ms Leibovici moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to further increase the number of beds and improve standards for long-term care facilities and home care services with regard to staffing ratios and levels of service to adequate levels and ensure that regional health authority boundaries do not become barriers to placement.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It gives me great pleasure this afternoon to move the motion that I have on the Order Paper, Motion 507. This is a motion that I would hope all the Members in this Legislative Assembly could support. It in fact supports and expands upon the long-term care review that has been put forward by the government of Alberta, the Department of Health and Wellness, and which has been a rather extensive process of the policy advisory committee with regards to long-term care, known fondly, I guess, in this Legislative Assembly as the Broda report. What in fact has occurred is that the Broda report made a number of recommendations that are substantiated by the motion that I have put forward. In fact, I believe that if members vote against this particular motion, then they are putting a vote of nonconfidence in the recommendations of the Broda report.

Because this motion is multifaceted, I would like to break it down into its components and address them one at a time. The first component is with regards to increasing the number of beds. Now, we all know that there is a shortage of available long-term care beds throughout this province and that there are a large number of individuals who are on wait lists. Yet what was surprising with regards to the Broda report was that it seemed to indicate that there should be a reduction in spaces over the long term when we look at what the number of spaces are that are available currently within our system and what the projection is for spaces to the year 2016.

At this point in time we have, I believe, 12,844 beds that are available in our health care system. That's mostly where the long-term care beds are. In 2016 we're actually going to a level of 12,685, which is a decrease. As we have heard over and over in this Legislative Assembly, a lot of the decisions that are being driven by this government are based on the fact that we will have an aging and a larger population to deal with. So though I recognize that there are other recommendations in the report that have dealt with the concept of aging in place and providing solutions other than long-term care beds, the reality is that there is, I believe, a need to increase the number of beds, not decrease the number of beds, and that the bed reduction targets as put forward may well not be sustainable in the long term. In the short term there is a real need to increase the number of beds.

Another consideration is with regards to the benchmark that the number of beds is based on, and that may well be one of the reasons that the number of beds being recommended is so low. Age 75 is what is considered to be the benchmark for planning long-term care spaces. In fact, a recent recommendation from the Alberta Medical Association with regards to the final report of the policy advisory committee, the Broda report, indicated on January 31, 2000, that the government should in fact be using projected care levels as opposed to age to plan for the entire spectrum of continuing care. So those numbers that are currently being projected and are currently being assessed as perhaps sufficient to meet the needs of individuals who require long-term care beds are based on a benchmark that may in fact be faulty. It would be interesting to know whether the government has in fact moved to that benchmark of 75 from the current benchmark that was utilized prior to that.

The other concern with regards to the current number of long-term care beds within the system is the fact that the Broda report seems to have relied on using the current acute care beds within our system. Right now we have a proposal in front of us, Bill 11. One of the reasons that that particular bill is being put forward is to alleviate the current shortages within our acute care system, yet conflicting with that particular direction of government is now a recommendation that says: use those acute care beds for long-term care patients. That is not a satisfactory use of those current acute care spaces. In fact, those acute care beds are required for acute care patients. As we know, there are shortages within the system.

As well, in actual fact what the use of those acute care beds may well lead to is a warehousing of elderly patients in acute care facilities. I don't think that anyone wants to see our elderly patients or patients who are in need of long-term care being warehoused in acute care facilities. Those facilities do not provide the kind of stimulation, the kind of physical surroundings, or the kind of care required by patients who are in a long-term care setting.

With regards to the particular part of the motion that requests that the government "further increase the number of beds," what I hope I have set forward to the members is an indication of the needs at the current point in time with regards to the beds and the lack of beds available to the individuals requiring long-term care as well as the future needs. If in fact the thoughts of members are, "Well, we don't want to build more bricks and mortar," that in fact is a logical response, but there are some facilities that have been closed down that could well provide the spaces that are required. Vilna is one such example of a facility that is fully functional and that has been closed down and in fact did house long-term care patients but is now standing empty and not being utilized.

What we are trying to avoid by ensuring that there are enough long-term care spaces in all of the jurisdictions across this province is what I call the phenomenon of divorce by institution, where you see individuals who have lived together for 40, 50 years who no longer can live together because the facilities are not there to accommodate them in their own communities. What they are is separated, and their families are torn between visiting elderly parents – the families themselves are generally elderly – and being able to meet the needs of their parents. So this resolution would urge the government to increase the number of beds to deal with those kinds of situations.

A second part of the resolution is to “improve standards for long-term care facilities and home care services.” One of the common complaints that I hear with regards to the standards for long-term care services with regard to staffing ratios and level of services to adequate levels is the shortage of staff and the qualifications of staff. In fact, one of the recommendations of the Broda report was that additional funding should be targeted to increase the number of qualified front line staff available to address the increasing acuity of people in long term care centres.

I agree with that particular recommendation wholeheartedly.

The issue of staffing is poignantly outlined in the winter of 2000 document Health & Healing: A Review of the Catholic Health Association of Alberta & Affiliates, wherein the writer, Micheline Pare, who’s the founder of the Pare Labrecque Centre, indicates that there are considerable concerns with regards to caregivers’ working conditions. She indicates:

My hope also is to give caregivers better working conditions. Most of them are “casual” full time, with no benefits and obliged to work in 2 or 3 long term care facilities in order to make a living. How can we expect quality of care if we are not concerned with the welfare of our caregivers? Who would be ready to be underpaid, over-worked and experience unfair conditions of employment??? Our loved ones are suffering from it and one day it will be our turn. Do we wish to be treated like this???

She further indicates that she saw dedicated, compassionate caregivers but also caregivers without sufficient knowledge and/or skills, that in order to care for the elderly with respect and dignity, it is important to understand their journey with a compassionate heart. These are very fine observations that indicate what some of our problems are currently within our long-term care centres. The staffing ratios are ones that are questionable as there are, in my understanding, no standards across the province with regards to the number of frontline staff required on each shift and the ratio of RNs, LPNs, PCAs, for instance, on any particular shift.

If I can just refer to an e-mail that I received with regards to a particular long-term care centre in Calgary – and it’s the new Signal Pointe Alzheimer’s long-term care centre – the point is made that “on each shift there is 1 RN and 2 Personal Care Aides per each of the five homes for a total of 11 staff for up to 60 residents.” This e-mail further goes on to indicate that Signal Point is badly understaffed . . . and while only one RN for up to 60 residents per shift may meet legal requirements, I question whether one RN is sufficient for up to 60 residents . . . It would seem very shortsighted to build a fairly expensive facility . . . and then economize on staffing to the point where residents are given, perhaps, inadequate care.

So staffing is a key issue. The issue of ensuring that there are adequate ratios of LPNs to RNs, PCAs to residents is also key.

Another concern that was brought up, I believe, in Broda as well as having been addressed in other areas is to ensure that the use of volunteers is appropriate, and if it is, what kind of training is being provided. So what we need with regards to improving the standards for long-term care facilities and with regards to staffing and levels of service are clear standards, quantifiable standards, and measurable standards, and there needs to be systemwide legislation. What we also need are some surprise inspections. I have often heard from individuals across the province that inspections are made of long-term care facilities, but they are not surprise inspections. So, in fact, if a complaint is provided, what ends up happening is that the facility is then investigated – and I use that term loosely – and all of a sudden the meals provided are just so much better than they normally are in the facility.

I would also like to indicate that the FAIRE group, which is the Families Allied to Influence Responsible Eldercare, has put forward an initiative addressing the needs and rights of Alberta’s nursing home residents. In there they outline a number of recommendations which directly support this particular motion. They indicate – and I’m reading from their document – that there should be:

- Increased Staffing Levels and Proficiency
- Staff/Patient Ratios Comparable To Those In Germany (1:5) – Belgium (1:3) – the Nordic Countries & the Netherlands (1:1)
- Increased Daily Hours of Direct Patient Care, Including Substantially More Hands-on Care by Registered Nurses
- Regulated Entry-Level Certification For All New Personal Support Workers
- Government-Funded Mandatory Training Programs for Current, But Undertrained Personal Support Workers
- Standardized Criteria That Determines the Required Knowledge, Skills and Attitudes of All Care Providers
- Increased Involvement of Physicians and Geriatricians in Direct Patient Care . . .
- Training of Nurse Specialists in Geriatric Care . . .
- External Quality Assurance Audit That Assesses Facility Compliance With Legislated Standards; Staff Competency and Suitability; The Quality, Delivery and Effectiveness of Patient Services; If and How Resident’s Individual Needs and Goals Are Being Met
- A Mechanism For Residents and Their Families to Voice What They Want & Need Within The Facility
- A Mechanism That Holds Regional Health Authorities Accountable For The Job That Is Done

And last but not least – and I’ve left out a few for the sake of time.

- Regional Ombudsman Appointments To Long Term Care.

So we know that there needs to be and there appears to be a consensus that the standards for long-term care facilities need to be standardized and staffing ratios as well.

If I can move to the third part of my motion: we need to improve “home care services with regard to staffing ratios and levels of service to adequate levels.” I know that the Member for Calgary-West was at a conference for Canada’s Association for the Fifty-Plus, which has put a lot of work into home care and home care requirements and services.

There was a national conference held just a little while ago, and the results of that conference as well as their report on home care in Canada in 1999 – so this is a very recent study – indicate that “home care is underfunded, undervalued and over-stressed.” In fact, there seems to be a lack of leadership by governments, which “have extolled the virtues of home care, in part, to deflect criticism of hospital restructuring,” that there’s a “lack of commitment and follow-through to develop home- and community-based care.”

“Human resource issues emerged as the most important concern” in the study they did. Eighty-eight percent of those that were part of this particular study felt it was an issue in their community [and that] people working in the home care environment are over-extended and under considerable stress from difficulties in the workplace such as low wages, recruitment and retention and training.

“Inadequate funding was the second largest issue facing health care” that was considered by this particular report. There were also significant pressures on the voluntary sector, especially with regard to informal caregivers. It was felt that that terminology was insulting to individuals who take on the caregiving burden of their loved ones and are doing this on either a part-time or a full-time basis and in fact become the primary caregivers. What has occurred is that there have been many responsibilities shifted to the caregivers in their particular homes without any support provided to the caregivers that are looking after their loved ones.

There are a number of observations in this report on home care, but they made an observation with regards to the role of the private, for-profit providers in home care and what in fact their profit margins were with regards to their bottom line and how much of that is transferred to individuals who are providing home care services. This is a very, very important point and one that should not be overlooked with regards to the provision of home care services.

They made a number of recommendations, and I would like to know actually – and this is slightly aside from the motion – what the government's position is with regard to the recommendations of CARP.

I look forward to the debate on this particular initiative. Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's certainly my pleasure to rise on Motion 507, sponsored by the MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Although I agree with a lot of the comments made in the motion itself or the content of the motion, I do think that at this time in point the motion is really redundant.

As she has referred to the Broda report, I'd like to bring forward, Madam Speaker, how we arrived at some of the comments in our report itself. When the long-term care report began in November of '97 – and it was also chaired by my colleague for Calgary-West – we had committee members that did not represent any specific organization. We had seniors, physicians, health authority personnel, consumers, and long-term care, home care, and housing-sector individuals. We went to 55 sites throughout the province to gather information from everyday Albertans, to hear from them as to what they saw the need to be in long-term care. Certainly, before we even went out to the communities, we consulted with the regional health authorities, the Mental Health Board, and the Cancer Board. Also, these 55 sites that we attended throughout the province worked via the community health councils, which put those on, and we had community people facilitating that for us. We listened to what Albertans said.

The report itself reflects the high values Albertans place on their health system. It shows that while Alberta is leading the nation in developing and implementing innovative approaches to continued care, we need to carefully plan for the future to ensure that our increasing numbers of seniors get the kind of continuing care they need when they need it.

Madam Speaker, we also had consultants from expert panels. As a matter of fact, we had three expert panels. We also had consultants from not only the province of Alberta but also from across Canada, nationally, and internationally. We heard from these expert panel sessions the changes that are occurring in other areas of the world, not only here in Alberta. We looked to see whether we could adopt some or whether we could not, that maybe it wouldn't work here. So it was important to attend those sessions. We also had Canada Health involved in those three expert panels. They were very interested to know what was happening in Alberta, as we have always been frontrunners in our health system in this province.

Madam Speaker, in reference to Motion 507, as I said, I agree with the comments made in there, but the motion is redundant, seeing that we've already done a report. There have been some very good reports out in the community, as the member opposite has indicated and referred to. Those reports are something very valid, that have to tie together not only the report that I was involved in, but I think there are other reports out there that the government has taken some time to look at. I think it's important to do a good job rather than going into it full tilt, without looking at what is really out there. It's not a matter of spending more money. I think it's a matter of looking at what we have out there in the communities that we can utilize more effectively and more efficiently.

There was reference made by the member opposite that acute care beds are being used. Yes, they are right now, in the interim, till we see something happening. I'm sure the member realizes that new construction doesn't happen overnight. It's not like mushrooms, that grow just when it rains.

MS OLSEN: What do you know about mushrooms? Are those magic mushrooms?

MR. BRODA: Well, they could be magic mushrooms.

It's important that we work to create a culture that supports seniors that are able to stay in their own homes as long as possible. I'll tell you that for any individual that stays at home, it's home to them whether it be a lodge, apartment, or single-family dwelling. I know I feel better when I'm at home. So I think it's important to see a different focus or a different change. What we've seen in the past is that we were more focused on facilities. We're finding that, yes, the facilities have an important role in what we're looking at, but we have to look at a paradigm shift, where we're looking at not only facilities. Maybe we should focus on the home place first and then look at how we can address the issues beyond that.

The final report, which was released in November of '99, which the member alluded to, is a report that describes the visions of aging in the 21st century and guiding principles to help the health system respond to Alberta's aging population. I think this government is showing leadership in giving serious consideration to some 50 recommendations that were made in the report. As we are doing so, we are asking the health authorities, Alberta government departments, health stakeholders, and Albertans for their comments, priorities, and suggestions on how best to implement the recommendations. We have the recommendations there, but we still have to continue working with them. The recommendations and subsequent feedback will serve as a basis for planning continuing care strategies, expectations, and the next three-year health business plan and budget.

The recommendations from the long-term care review committee will join also those from the Health System Funding Review Committee and the health summit to provide a solid foundation for future health policies and services delivered to Albertans. The recommendations build on many successes and strengths in today's health system and describe a very different future for continuing care in Alberta. We encouraged all Albertans to consider our recommendations carefully and to begin now to prepare for a new generation of older people. We received good responses not only from departments and regional authorities but also from individuals. I believe there were somewhere in the neighbourhood of 10,000 reports that were issued, and we're still getting calls for additional reports to be submitted. I can tell you that we've had a lot of interest from B.C. and Saskatchewan.

Going back to the motion, that we should be on, it refers to a lot of things that have already been identified in a report. Madam Speaker, this is why I say that the motion that is presented, although a good motion, is redundant, because what we're talking about has already been discussed in a report, and it has to be put together.

Other long-term recommendations include a conference on the use and effectiveness of drugs for seniors, a continuing care act to ensure consistent standards – and I think it addresses some of the concerns made there – appropriate monitoring and clear responsibilities for organizations involved in continuing care, and increasing the current cost recovery charges in continuing care centres to more accurately reflect both housing costs and people's ability to pay while ensuring appropriate subsidies for those who need them. The committee recommended using additional revenues to improve services in continuing care centres, expanding home care services, and renovating and upgrading existing continuing care facilities.

If the member would have looked – I'm sure she has – the Minister of Health and Wellness did issue a news release back on November 18, '99, indicating that there would be $265.8 million put into long-term care beds and health facility modernization. This total is part of the capital funds to add new long-term care beds and replace and renovate existing health facilities in the province.

The new funding includes $115 million over the next three years to develop 1,090 new continuing care beds including 370 additional beds and the replacement of 720 existing beds in older facilities.

That even goes beyond what our recommendation in the report said. Our report recommended 200 beds per year over the next three years. That equates to 600 beds. I'm pleased to see that the department looked at it. Yes, when we discussed possible shifts in the way we do our long-term care, we looked at a reduction of beds, but I see the additional funding that's been put in place. Not only that, but I think we recognize that the 720 existing beds in older facilities – there are a lot of the four-bed wards that we're saying we want eliminated over the next five years. So there are going to be some changes done.

I understand that regional health authorities have now issued a request for a proposal for some additional beds in both Calgary and Edmonton. My understanding is that the contracts haven't been let yet, but we're going to see a lot of changes in the upcoming years. When we looked at the paradigm shift, we thought that it was important to look at home care, supportive housing, and then look at facility based as the last resort.

I may be repeating myself in a lot of things or even making comments that are maybe not in your Motion 507. However, I felt it was very important that I address those issues so that both sides of the House here have a better understanding of how we arrived at what we did in the report. I do encourage everybody on both sides of the House to take the time to read it. I think it's important that we look at what we did.

Also, I'm very proud to have heard the minister say, as well, in the news release that we think seniors are important, and we looked at drug utilization such as palliative care drugs. They're now provided at home as of February 1999. So elderly people can remain longer at home. The palliative care drug can be provided with home support in the home setting. That is a good one that I think has been well received by the communities, and I think that, yes, there is a place for our facilities, but we've also got to look, as I said earlier, at how we address the whole issue.

I know there have been a lot of recommendations, some on a long-term and some on a short-term basis. A lot of long-term ones are actually being looked at right now. I mentioned the paradigm shift already. I know that the member opposite who is sponsoring this motion has also brought up the importance of keeping people in their own communities, and I think we all agree with that. That's why I mention it. It's not a matter of spending more money. It's how we use the system or even the facilities that we have more effectively.

We can even look at lodges, that really come under housing.

These serve an important part in our senior population, because to some of them that has been home for that last 25, 30 years or even longer. By not providing a little bit of medical component in there, we're forcing people to move to outlying communities, as the member opposite has indicated. That's why we say that we have to look at how we can enhance some of our lodges, provide some services in there, some home care, because no matter whether you're paying for your own house, an apartment, or a lodge, it is your own home. So I think there's a big need.

I know that at the very beginning, when we started our report, there was opposition from everyone, but I think right now we're finding, after the report has been released, that there's been a lot of good buy-in, and people are saying: let's work together. So I think it is happening. Again, I think Motion 507 is a good motion, however being redundant at this point because a lot of the things have been addressed and will be addressed further as the government is going forward.

We also encourage the private and voluntary sectors to expand the range of support of living options available across the province, to expand the support of housing to include light- and medium-care cases, people with mild dementia, and young people with disabilities. When we refer to long-term care, it doesn't mean you have to look at 65 or over. Today 65 is not old age. I think that 65 was a benchmark that we used. I think we're nearing more the 75, 80 range. We're seeing more and more people celebrating 100 years old.

MRS. SOETAERT: It's the care they need, not the age.

MR. BRODA: That's right.

The thing is that when we say having the private sector involved, we've got to look at some examples. Morinville's Aspen house is an example of the private sector going in there, providing the capital funding. The operator is a nonprofit operator. And guess what? Health is in there also providing the services. If you go to that community of Morinville, which is in my constituency – and I'm very proud of it – it's one facility that anybody you talk to on the street is very proud of.

We've had private-sector facility operators for the last 20, 30 years, all publicly funded but privately owned and operated, and – guess what? – they haven't fallen apart. The people are in there, and it's a service that's provided. It doesn't mean, again, like I say, spending more money, whether it be government money or somebody else's money. It's out there. So I think there's a role to be played by everyone. I'm not saying that it has to be totally private, but there are roles to be played by everyone, and we see the private sector out there working very, very well.

I agree with your Motion 507 that we have to take steps to increase the numbers of qualified professionals. That was something that we addressed as number one, because as we toured some of the facilities, there was some understaffing and there was some staff that were not trained. So when we look at increasing the professionals and health care providers to work with older people, to establish designated stand-alone positions for training in geriatric medicine at Alberta's medical schools, I think it's important that we get into the educational sector to increase the number of nurses specializing in geriatrics. Yes, we do have nurses. We hear a lot of times that there is a shortage of nurses. There's a shortage of nurses in specialized areas. There's quite a number of nurses out there, but we need some specialists in there. We need to look at a change. Should a doctor always be the individual assessing the elderly person, or could maybe a nurse do that in consultation with the doctor?

We have to increase the number of trained people available to work in the community and in continuing care centres. Yes, that is very important, and that is addressed in your motion as well. Again I'm saying that we're already looking at it.

We have to expand geriatric education and training for health care professionals, set new standards for skills and competencies for people working in continuing care centres to establish a new network of excellence in seniors' health and geriatric care. I can't overemphasize – and I may be repeating myself – that I think the motion that's there is a good motion but redundant. It's being looked at.

I would urge everyone, Madam Speaker, all of our members on this side and that side, to defeat this motion, not for the fact that it's a nonconfidence motion, a comment made on the opposite side. I don't have the exact words. I don't think it's having to say that it's nonconfidence, what your motion is saying. Why go through a motion to do something that we're already doing? I think it's redundant.

Madam Speaker, I think we have to also look at the things that are happening. I'm pleased also to say that we've had the new drug Arisept, which is on the formulary now for Blue Cross. Now that drug is available for people with dementia and early stages of Alzheimer's. It's certainly not a cure for Alzheimer's, but what we're looking at is that if caught early, it stalls the progress of the Alzheimer's disease. So I'm very pleased that the minister is taking action in that particular aspect of the drug area.

Also, the Minister of Health and Wellness has responded to the short-term recommendations with an immediate increase of $15 million per year to address immediate pressure points in home care, long-term care, and waiting lists for long-term care beds. So those have been addressed, Madam Speaker.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to speak to this motion and disappointed that the Member for Redwater would find it redundant. There's lots I could say around that, but I'll control myself today. The reality is that even though the report is done and the government is looking at all these things, when you urge them to action, it might give them a little boost, and I think they need that when it comes to long-term care beds.

I was listening to my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark, and she had some excellent points. One thing I know she didn't have time to get to in the motion is the very last part of it.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to further increase the number of beds and improve standards for long-term care facilities and home care services with regard to staffing ratios and levels of service to adequate levels and . . .

Here's the last part.

. . . ensure that regional health authority boundaries do not become barriers to placement.

No one in this Assembly is surprised that that's a concern of mine. It should be a concern to people like the Member for Redwater, people from St. Albert, people from Stony Plain, people from Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, because often our constituents are limited by their availability to find beds because of boundaries. I've spoken about that in here. For example, before Aspen house was built – the care given at Aspen is wonderful, and the availability for my constituents to access that facility is a gift that we certainly didn't have until it was opened. In fact, that only opened about a year ago. Prior to that time anybody from Villeneuve or Calahoo or Morinville who needed long-term care could not get it anywhere near their community. They would have to go to Barrhead or Mayerthorpe or Westlock.

Now, that's a pretty sad statement, because people needing long-term care are often in the last stages of their life. They are not necessarily seniors. Many young people who have illnesses that will end their life are forced to go to a long-term care facility and live out the rest of their life far away from family. That's exactly what the boundary issue did. People who lived in Villeneuve or Calahoo or Morinville could not get to the Youville Home in St. Albert, and that was a tragedy.

In fact, I even brought up the issue of an aunt of mine, Bertha Berube, who ended up leaving Calahoo and having to go to Barrhead. The care there was excellent, but the reality was that her family couldn't visit her like they could have had they been in St. Albert. The natural trading route and shopping route and school route is not to Barrhead from Calahoo; it is to St. Albert. So that was a tragedy for that family, that their grandmother in her last stages of life was sent far away from home. It's not like the family didn't try. At one point they had hired with their own money people to stay with their mom and help her. That wasn't to be. Fortunately, the WestView regional health authority and Aspen did a trade at one point, and she at least got closer to home in Stony Plain.

That's the reality of regional health authorities, and that's why I would urge all members to support this motion. The reality of regional health authorities is still an issue. For example, I've had people go to Sturgeon hospital and end up needing a long-term care placement. Now, these might be people from the Villeneuve area. They go into Sturgeon, and then they realize that in order to get a long-term care placement, the only place they can get a bed may be Barrhead, or they can refuse to leave and stay in the acute bed. That has happened. Now, how productive is that? Furthermore, is that the type of care they really need when they're at that placement? We know the long-term care facilities really gear to making that institution a home. They really do try. So that's neither productive for the family nor economical for Alberta Health. So there's another issue of boundaries there.

Another reality with boundaries is now working in reverse in my area. Because Aspen house is open in Morinville, we now have people who originally lived in the Morinville-Villeneuve-Calahoo area who found a lodge available in St. Albert. Then when they need long-term care, they're in the Capital region and they can't get back out to Morinville, where their family is. They now are placed in Capital. It's the reverse of what it used to be. This whole issue of boundaries is not addressed in the Broda report. I don't know why more MLAs, certainly those who live outside of major cities, don't share this concern. Either they do and they don't express it in here or they aren't aware of what's happening.

[The Speaker in the chair]

So I would urge people to support this for even just that reason alone. Certainly the boundary issue has not been addressed in the Broda report, and that is certainly not redundant.

I want to speak for a few minutes about the avenues that we could take in this province when we're innovative. We talk about increased beds, and we need them. That's obvious. As we do increase these beds, I think we also have to look at home care services, which are mentioned in this motion. There are so many exciting and innovative things that we could do with home care. One of the realities, I think, of where we've failed in health care is that when you are on IV therapy in hospital and you come out to receive home care, the IV therapy is not paid for. Now, if you stayed in hospital, it would be paid for. What is the incentive to go home, except that people truly enjoy being in their home more than in hospital? But the reality is that a family cannot afford a hundred bucks a week. That would be the minimum actually at home. So then they choose to stay in the hospital.

I think that within this home care we have to really regard the reality of staffing levels too. If we could increase staffing levels, then we are avoiding the acute care beds. It only makes sense. Two reasons: one, it's economical, and the other is that people far prefer to be in their home and in their community. So if we look at innovative ways of providing home care, maybe incentives such as granny suites, the whole concept of aging in place – I think it's time we looked at that, because with a bit of vision we could avoid people in acute beds and even long-term beds. If we talk about aging in place, examples like the CHOICE program, then our long-term care facilities would not have lineups of hundreds of people, stressed-out families, that reality that it puts on families.

I want to speak for a moment about some recommendations about employment and care levels that came forward in this Putting A Face on Home Care from the CARP national forum. There are some excellent suggestions in here, and if we have the political will to implement them, I know that we will serve people better, which should be our main goal. We can also serve them more cost-effectively, which is also a reality of how we want our tax dollars spent.

It's interesting that one of the recommendations is that people who have left employment to care for family members should receive credit adjustments for employment insurance and CPP, such as is available to women after childbirth. It took a long time for society to recognize that when women had children, it did affect their employment pension plans, retirement plans, ability to move within a place of employment, and it took a while for the world to recognize that that had to be accounted for.

Now, here we have, you might say, the opposite end of life's spectrum, where we should be acknowledging people who give to that. People who volunteer their time and give up their present employment to stay at home with family members or others who need their care I think we should recognize. We would once again serve our community better and be more responsible with tax dollars. So that specific recommendation I think certainly should be followed up on, and that only follows with the motion about "staffing ratios and levels of service to adequate levels."

Also, government should encourage companies to develop caregiver leave programs and flexible working conditions for employees engaged in short- or long-term periods of caregiving. Another recommendation: governments should develop direct payment policies to compensate informal caregivers.

THE SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, but the time limit for consideration of this type of business has now concluded for the day.

4:30

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

Mr. Havelock moved that pursuant to Standing Order 47(1) the question on second reading of Bill 11, Health Care Protection Act, be now put.

[Adjourned debate April 10: Mr. Jonson]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The debate that we are forced into this afternoon sort of saddens me, because I was looking forward to a fairly complete debate at second reading without the intervention of any curtailing motions.

There's been some procedural to-ing and fro-ing in the Chamber. The intent of the government's motion is very clear to me, although subsequent to it being introduced, of course, members supporting the government have said that the real reason to introduce such a motion is to prolong debate, but of course that's absurd, Mr. Speaker. Why else would the government introduce the motion that the question now be put, if in fact they didn't want to hear any more discussion at second reading or any more discussion of potential motions for referral, et cetera, that may come at second reading? The government can't really have it both ways. They can't argue that they're trying to expand debate when in fact it's very clear that their purpose was to cut off debate at this point.

That confuses me, because I've been saying to my constituents who raise this specter, the concern that the Premier would use closure: well, no; I've heard the Premier say that he expects a full debate at second reading. I would have expected all of his caucus to respect that. I suppose that should really come as no surprise, because most of the debate has been, of course, critical of the government's proposed policy initiative and most of the feedback the government is receiving is critical of their initiative. I'm sure the government is tiring of hearing the reasonable and worthwhile arguments put forward by those opposing the legislation, and I'm certain the government is getting tired of being told by their own otherwise supporters that they're barking up the wrong tree when it comes to Bill 11. So, clearly, their fuse is short and their patience is thin, and that's the only way that I could understand this procedural move of theirs to curtail reasonable debate at second reading on the principle of Bill 11.

I also find it very ironic that we've heard even just again today the Premier suggesting that he doesn't have to answer questions about the government's private health care plans because they don't have any private health care plans. But the whole purpose of Bill 11 – and it says so right in their bill – is that they want to expand the authority of regional health authorities to contract with private care providers, which is an expansion of private health care. So, again, I find it difficult to accept the government would have it both ways, that they would say, on the one hand, that what we need Bill 11 for is to give more flexibility to regional health authorities to contract with private providers and on the other hand claim: I don't have to answer any questions on behalf of the government because we don't have any private health care scheme. Only one of those two responses can be the truth. I guess the proof is in the pudding, in the Bill itself, which is the subject of the debate, a bill that's all about private health care, and that's clear, Mr. Speaker.

So I would hope that the Premier and others would stop trying to introduce this diversion into the debate by saying that they don't have a private health care plan, when in fact their own public material, their own public statements, their own web site all talk about private health care.

While I'm on the subject of the web site, that leads me to another concern that I have, the kind of misinformation that is available from the government, which is why I am so opposed to this government initiative to stop debate and why I am so concerned with the government's reasoning for the motion.

If one were to visit the government web site on Bill 11, one would find a number of menu options, including answers to commonly asked questions. Those questions and answers I've been reviewing on an almost daily basis. You have to review them on an almost daily basis, Mr. Speaker, because the government keeps on changing the answers that they post on that web site.

It wasn't that long ago that in response to the question about the cost efficiency of private care providers, the government said: well, cost efficiency isn't really the issue; the issue is that we need the flexibility. The government seemed to acknowledge that these private providers weren't more cost-effective, or at least there was no proof that they had to offer that they were.

Now when you visit the web site and see the answer to that same question – the question is: what evidence is there? – they answer the question without providing any evidence whatsoever. They simply say that there is some evidence that in the existing private facilities there may be some cost savings, but of course they fail to go on to say that this is irrelevant because none of the existing facilities are inpatient-admitting facilities. They only do very low-intensity outpatient services, and of course what Bill 11 is all about is much higher intensity inpatient services. They want to be able to admit people for not just overnight but perhaps several nights. The reason why we know that, of course, is because the Premier keeps on talking about the Shouldice clinic, which sometimes requires stays of three and four days postoperative. Previously, of course, the Premier was talking about hip replacement surgery, which requires postoperative stays of even a longer duration than that.

There is other misinformation that is being circulated by the government. There is a daily summary of the debate that goes on in this House regarding Bill 11, and if you took a look at that daily summary, you would be led to believe that the only people that are speaking are members of the government, because they don't tend to quote those who are opposed to the bill, other than to misrepresent their words.

For example, Mr. Speaker, there has been some discussion regarding the drastic nature of the funding cutbacks in health care since the current government has come to power. The stated initiative of the government was to cut back about 20 percent. As events would unfold, the overall funding, unadjusted for inflation, was about 13 and a half percent across the whole health care sector. Of course, that doesn't account at all for the population growth, so on an adjusted per capita basis it's an entirely different figure.

The other notion is that it's not just the overall health care budget that was being referred to. For example, when the Leader of the Official Opposition made her opening comments in debate on Bill 11 in second reading, she repeated the fact that hospitals funding has been decreased by 30 percent. Now, this got a response from government saying: oh, no, no, no, that's not true. In fact, the government has now posted on their web site, has introduced into debate, and has tried to circulate the misrepresentation of the Official Opposition. They've tried to pretend that what the Leader of the Official Opposition said was that health care funding has been cut by 30 percent, which is not what was said in this House or outside this Chamber. If you take a look at the government's debate summary, they say in the misrepresentation department that the opposition is saying that funding was cut by 30 percent, when in fact it was only 13 percent.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it's really unfortunate the government would put that kind of information under the title misrepresentation. Not only does it bring disrespect to the whole process; it misrepresents the facts, the facts being that if you take a look at the Canadian Institute for Health Information's published reports, you will find that Alberta hospitals funding decreased by 27 percent over the period in question. If you take a look at the report on health care in Alberta that was completed by Dr. Evans et al, you'll note that he makes direct reference to hospitals funding in Alberta being cut by 30 percent, which is the figure that the Leader of the Official Opposition used.

But nowhere in all of the government information will you find an acknowledgment that there are two credible references to support the facts as stated by the Official Opposition. Instead, what you have is the repeating and the repeating and the repeating of the government's message, even though it's clearly wrong. It reminds me, Mr. Speaker, that it doesn't matter how often you repeat a lie; it's still a lie. Just repeating it doesn't make something true. So I wonder what the government's purpose is in repeating and repeating and repeating these things that aren't true to try to justify their position. It would seem to me that the government would have a lot more credibility if they simply acknowledged the facts as they are and then argued the merits of their position, and then of course Albertans can come to their own conclusions.

Now, I have some other concerns as well. On the government's web site on Bill 11 what you see are several opportunities for feedback. I don't understand why the government, if they're getting feedback, as they're claiming, in support of the bill, is not telling us about that feedback. Why don't they publish, release the feedback that they're getting, the responses? I note that after every one of their questions and answers, they say: is this information useful to you? You have a chance to say yes or no, and if you say no, you get a chance to explain why it's not useful. I would be very, very curious to see the government release that information. What are they hearing from Albertans who are visiting their web site?

Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of other issues I want to raise. One is that we haven't heard much about the down-the-road implications of Bill 11 when it comes to the practice of medicine in Alberta and in particular when it comes to the training and teaching of medical practitioners in the province of Alberta. I've had a chance to visit with some physicians who are either adjunct to the University of Alberta medical faculty or in fact are senior practitioners and participate in training through rounds at hospitals in the Capital region. What they raise is very interesting in relation to Bill 11.

They talk about the commitment that the public hospitals make to the training of physicians. They talk about the commitment that they as individual practitioners make to provide free-of-charge participation in the training process by either taking young doctors in training under their wings and taking them on rounds and being in case conferences with them or in fact by participating on committees, by dealing with curriculum development, by contributing their vast knowledge and expertise to the provision of scholarly works, the development of research protocols, by participating in the development of clinical practice guidelines, their peer review of the examination process, et cetera, et cetera.

Mr. Speaker, there's just a myriad of ways in which the current structure supports the training of doctors. We're at a point in time in Alberta where there is a shortage of physicians, particularly in many specialties and subspecialties, and it is precisely in these areas of specialization that we hear the government saying: we are going to take doctors out of the public system and put them into a private system.

Now, if I can move my main argument to the side for just a moment and talk about this confusion that the government seems to have about why there is a backlog in so many surgical areas. It's certainly not because we don't have the capacity in our public hospitals. It's because we don't have the personnel in our public hospitals. So, Mr. Speaker, it's an absurdity to the extreme to suggest that somehow we'd be adding capacity to the public system and minimizing waiting lists if we simply had more private provision. It's as though this government believes that there is a secret cache of doctors locked in the basement someplace that they can simply call up, as you would call up, you know, players from the minor leagues, to come and add capacity to the Alberta system. The fact is that if you have more private clinics, you're going to take those doctors out of the public clinics and you're going to have fewer doctors on the public side providing the same amount of service. So you don't add capacity at all.

Now, back to my main argument about the training. If you have these specialists now going to these private clinics – and these clinics are going to be forced to operate at a profit because the investors of those clinics will demand that – what you'll see is that these doctors will not be able to provide that same contribution. They're not going to be able to provide pro bono guidance and education and training. They're not going to be able sit on those committees. They're not going to be able to help develop those clinical practice guidelines. They're not going to be able to do rounds with doctors in training. They're not going to be able to participate in university discussions because their time is going to all have to be billable time for the company store.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, if the argument is put forward that we can simply make that a contract condition, that we'll force these private clinics into making sure their medical staff do all of these things, well, then you can rest assured that the private clinic owners are going to insist that there is compensation. So instead of all of these contributions being free of charge to the people of Alberta, courtesy of the medical profession in this province, we are now going to be in a position where the taxpayers are going to have to start paying and paying quite mightily for this, which would be otherwise a benefit that we would receive because of their participation in the public system.

Now, maybe there are some physicians out there that are saying: well, good, it's about time we get paid for that kind of contribution. But, of course, Mr. Speaker, most physicians that I've talked to have said that they are perfectly happy, perfectly willing to maintain their contribution because they see it as part of being a professional. They see it as part of what it is that defines them as a doctor in this society. I would like to hear from the government some response to this concern. How will we guarantee that this same degree of commitment from our senior practitioners will be there? How is it that it will not be eroded through the expansion of this array of private clinics, which will fundamentally alter the relationship that physicians have with each other, with their patients, with the regional health authorities?

Mr. Speaker, there's another point I'd like to raise – and I see that I only have a few minutes left, so I'll try to get to this one quickly – and that is regional disparity. When you again visit the government web site, what you find is that the authority for these contracts is primarily vested in the regional health authorities. There's language used in explaining the government's position that it will be up to each regional health authority to determine which contract and contractor will provide a benefit or a service, and I use the word benefit quite advisedly.

What we can see is an increasing growth in the patchwork nature of the provision of services, in the array of services. You will find in one health authority they'll decide that they want all private provision of, let's say, cataract surgery. In another health authority they'll say: well, we want all public. In another they'll say: we want a mix.

Now, we've got that situation in cataract surgery today, and it's created quite a bit of confusion and quite a bit of controversy. In fact, just today the government tried to address some of that controversy by introducing a new policy on foldable lenses.

Now, imagine if this were now the case when it came to tonsillectomies or hip replacements or hernia surgeries or any other of a vast array of surgical services. What you would find is that region-by-region decisions would be made not based on what is best value for the taxpayer or in the best interests of the public or particularly what will provide the best care level for the patient. Depending on the salesmanship of the private provider, depending on the relationship that that salesperson has with the regional health authority, what you will see is that some health authorities will grab onto one sales pitch and run with it. Another might reject it, and then another might say: well, we'll have to wait and see. You'll have Albertans not knowing what it is that they can expect, not knowing where to go for service, not knowing what it's going to cost them, and you can see a real growing disparity across this province because the provincial government has neglected to do one of the most fundamental things it can do when it comes to health care, and that is having a province-wide vision for what level of service Albertans can expect.

Because I had some experience in both being a contractor and approving contracts, I could see this variation not just being a problem across regions but even within regions, because of course in the more lucrative regions, those population dense regions, there will be all kinds of competition for the dollars. You'll see vendors popping up trying to undercut each other and trying to recruit the best salesmen so that they can try to take the business away from somebody else. This is hardly the picture of stability or the vision of health care that I find comfort in. It sounds much more like car salesmanship or maybe the fast food industry or some other kind of business, but it certainly doesn't look like health care, Mr. Speaker. So I am concerned as well about this patchwork quilt of contracting services.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

4:50

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to speak to the need to keep this discussion going, and I think one of the biggest reasons is that the public needs a chance for input. They need a chance to be heard, because they don't feel that's happening.

I look at the implications of this bill passing, and I have real concerns. It doesn't matter where I go. People come up to me and say: "Colleen, don't let them pass this bill. You've got to fight for us. They're not listening to us. They don't care." I heard it last night at a forum where the majority of the people expressed grave, grave concerns about this bill passing. I know that they even asked the Member for St. Albert to vote against it, to vote the way her constituents want, and they were told no.

MR. DICKSON: How many people were at that forum?

MRS. SOETAERT: There were probably between 250 and 300 people. Were there that many? Would you say that there were 200?

MRS. O'NEILL: Absolutely not.

MRS. SOETAERT: Would you say 200, St. Albert? I don't know. She had a hard time looking up. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: Please. I recognized the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert to participate. I would ask that all hon. members, once given the chance to participate in the debate, take the opportunity to participate and put their views forward. It's not debate time, participation back and forth, where I'm going to ask you a question or anything else. So please, let's recognize who has the floor, and you, hon. member, please focus on the subject matter.

Debate Continued

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So a lot of the people didn't have the time to ask questions and express their concerns. They didn't have the time, and that's a reality of a forum. I agree with that. As one gentleman left, he said: you know, Colleen, these are my concerns that I never got to express or ask the questions on. So I'm going to relate some of those concerns that he had.

He said that for some of these questions what he would request are "straight answers." He didn't feel he was getting straight answers. "We are here," he admitted, "to discuss the pros and cons of our health care, and it is serious business."

His first question was: "What happens if this is not properly administered?" There are no regulations for how this is going to be administered across all these private surgical facilities. Right now in our public facilities there is a system to check up on all the details, including cleanliness of a facility. Who's going to check that that is properly administered? The regional health authorities? How much are we going to put on regional health authorities? How can this possibly be cost-effective?

Another thing: "Could it [possibly] mean devastation of many families? Possible loss of life due to high cost of service and a medical problem put off for [far] too long." [interjections] You know, I hear comments and groaning about this. These are concerns that were handed to me on a piece of paper last night by a gentleman who didn't have the time to ask his questions. So I would think out of courtesy to the average Albertan that he has a right to ask the questions. He certainly isn't getting answers from this government, but he certainly has a right to ask them.

MR. HANCOCK: Send them over to me. I'll take them.

MRS. SOETAERT: Send them to your office, the minister says?

MR. HANCOCK: Sure.

MRS. SOETAERT: Okay. Well, he's obviously not getting responses from where he lives.

Let's try this. "Will this Bill 11 give all of us the same opportunity to health service as we have today at [the same] cost?" Well, we're afraid of that. We're afraid that it won't happen because of the enhanced service clause that is in that bill, and that's where it should be different. I know the federal minister requested that while making amendments, be sure to address this. Can't you see the conflict of interest happening when we have enhanced services that are optional and done in a private system? If they're done in a public system and they're needed, then they're covered and the money goes back to the public coffers and the public buildings and the public facilities. If those enhanced services are done in the private sector, people are put in a dilemma. Is that doctor saying that you need that enhanced service because you need it or because there's an extra buck to be made for that private facility?

Now, we would say that most are very scrupulous people and are doctors that believe in making patients well, but that will not cover those people who do not feel that way. After all, they've got to answer to a board of directors, they've got to answer to investors, and they're thinking: oh, this would make us another 250 bucks, and we're going to need that to make the profit margin this month, so let's tell that person that really they should pay for an extra enhanced service, whether they need it or not. That conflict is going to happen, and there's nothing in this bill to check up on that and to stop that. In fact, this bill allows for that to happen. They actually open the door for that. They pave the way for this. So that was one of his concerns.

The next question: "Will the cost to set up these new . . ." Now, he thought they were not-for-profit centres, so he obviously didn't understand the full implications of the bill yet. These are profit centres. They're making money at the expense of our health. "Will they be borne by the operators and not by an up front tax or hidden tax?" We're paying for these private operators to make money off our tax dollars. We're paying for it. We're paying for private businesspeople to make money off tax dollars. That should go against some people's grain in here, but it doesn't seem to. [interjection] Well, you know what? Speak, hon. member. I haven't heard you speak on this bill yet, so why don't you?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the chair has recognized the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert. The chair will recognize any other hon. members that want to participate and in fact will make a special note to call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek next.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Continuing on with this gentleman's concerns. "Is this right? The general understanding that once this lucrative system is in place the U.S. or Mexico [can access it] through NAFTA, can through a company or subsidiary invade our country and our system, or even challenge and sue for surgical values and lost potential profits. U.S. lawyers always look for a potential lawsuit."

Now, he has grave concerns about what this will mean with NAFTA, and to be very honest, we have several differing views on what it will mean. We're only going to really find out when it's challenged. You know what? That's too late, because if we lose that challenge, we've lost. So we're risking an awful lot on a couple of opinions. We're risking a great deal on a couple of opinions.

He says, "This is only a skim of what we do not know." It's what we don't know that concerns him. "Further, insurance companies will be advertising – You May Not Be Covered." In capital letters he's written this. You may not be covered. Get your insurance here. Hips Are Us. What will be next, Mr. Speaker? "We will not know if we are [covered] or not." That is another concern with the bill, the reality of who and what and how many things will be deinsured. There's no control on that. There are no regulations for that, and people are concerned about how many things will be deinsured. So I'd like to see a process for that simply through a regulation. [interjection] What kind of regulation?

MR. DICKSON: Secret.

MRS. SOETAERT: A secret regulation. That gives me absolutely no level of comfort. Why haven't we built a proper system that talks about what's insured and deinsured? Why haven't we done that? A simple regulation that is in secret. Bingo, suddenly something is covered. Bingo, suddenly something is not.

One of the suggestions I heard is that simple tonsillectomies be done. Well you know what? Tonsillectomies can be very serious surgery. Yes, I bet you 90 percent of them are quickly done, but the reality is that there is a high-risk factor there. Certainly the older you get with a tonsillectomy – when you hit the ripe old age past 18 . . . [interjection] Hey, you know what, Mr. Speaker? I've just thought of another thing, inspired by a member from over there. Try getting your tonsils out – no; this is to do with the bill – when you're 40.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, I thought you were going to suggest that something else be removed from the hon. member.

MRS. SOETAERT: Gee whiz, Mr. Speaker, you're on a different train of thought than I am.

DR. NICOL: But not necessarily a bad one.

MRS. SOETAERT: Not necessarily a bad one. I was seriously talking about tonsillectomies.

There is a doctor in this Assembly that I'll bet would tell you that if as an adult you're getting your tonsils out, you'd better not be in and out of surgery in a couple of hours, because you'll end up staying in the hospital at least overnight or a second night, and I know that from personal experience. Even a greater tragedy than having to stay in hospital for two days was that I couldn't speak for a week, Mr. Speaker. It was an absolute tragedy, not to my family but certainly to me. We weren't in session at the time, so I'm sure others would have found it a tragedy. It would have been catastrophic had we been in session and I had had that surgery.

Back to the bill and the concerns of this gentleman who came last night and handed me this paper because he didn't have time to express his concerns. "Do we have a safeguard against all possible intrusions and extra costs with this Bill 11?" Well, absolutely not; we don't. Then here's another note: "Can you trust this government to help us this time?" No. This is his comment, not mine.

In 7 years our medical costs have risen up to 30 percent for some people yet [people regretfully] accept it blindly. Examples: eye testing and glasses, dental, some medications, out of province coverage, cutback on maternity care, the monthly health care charge, and many sent home from hospital to fare as best they can.

Sadly, this bill does nothing to address that.

They talk about being innovative. If we want to be innovative, there are all kinds of things that I think Alberta has led on and could continue to lead on that are certainly not addressed in this bill: things like IV therapy at home; examples like the CHOICE program, that the Member from Edmonton-Gold Bar speaks of highly; the fetal alcohol syndrome program, that the former minister of family and social services promoted and that I hope the present one will encourage and continue and expand. Those are the kinds of innovations that we should be talking about. Long-term things are the smartest things we can do for our society. Educate them and get people out of poverty, give them an opportunity to change a life cycle. Those are the things that can long term help us in our health care system, not forcing people to accept a private, dual-track system that will cost us more.

His final question:

Do you not think we should have a moratorium on Bill 11 until the facts and safeguards are addressed and understood? It is serious.

Don't ignore it. These are the questions we would like addressed.

That wasn't just somebody fear mongering. That was somebody with very, very serious questions and concerns, and he didn't get a chance to ask them at the forum. But you know what? I will probably send a copy of this to the Justice minister because he said he would address those concerns. I have his name, but I will get his address for you, and I hope that you can answer them for him because I intend to. I would hope that the government will have that opportunity as well.

I want to speak for a moment – lots of things have been said about the ethics of this bill. Why would we push through overnight surgical facilities? Why would we push that in this province when in reality people would rather go home to recuperate? Day surgery and modern technology have allowed for a lot more day surgery, and people go home that night. Why would someone have to stay overnight? Obviously the answer to that is that the surgery was so invasive or difficult that the patient is at risk of serious complications that may require immediate medical attention.

The complications of surgery can affect any part of the body and may include neurological problems from the anesthetic; vascular problems such as embolisms or blood clots that may cause a heart attack, stroke, or other major organ complications; difficulty breathing; pinched nerves from blood clots pressing on nerves; internal bleeding; allergic reactions to anesthetics or other medications. So here we've got some serious, serious surgery happening, and that's why this government is pushing through the overnight hospital stay.

Yet look at the implications. Do you know what's going to happen with this? Number one, I hope that this bill gets scrapped, because that's what people in Alberta are asking for. They don't have enough information. I don't think the government knows all the ramifications and implications of this bill. They want those answers, and they haven't got them yet. All they know is that democracy is being undermined because people are being asked to vote for something that their constituents don't want, and they have concerns that have not been addressed.

A few more ethical problems. I'm talking about overnight stays here and why this legislation would push this through when obviously it's going to put people at risk. It's going to put people at risk, because the surgical facilities will not be able to provide all that the public system can with the proper intensive care and emergency care situations that are expensive to maintain, no doubt. We're just letting private clinics do the cream skimming, and that's not acceptable. It's not acceptable. So it's not merely good enough to notice that a patient is suffering postsurgical complications. Immediate intervention may be needed to protect the patient's health or to even save his or her life. Any facility that does surgery complicated enough to require an overnight stay will therefore require a full array of health care specialists to address any complication, and all these caregivers must be available 24 hours a day, seven days a week. What is needed is a full hospital staff, hardly affordable on the budget of a small, private surgical centre that aims to provide profits to shareholders.

You know, it's interesting. Jim Dinning has suggested that dedicated surgical centres will not require fully equipped operating rooms to deal with all sorts of surgery and thus will save money. If they are not fully equipped, though, then that facility is unable to attend to the postsurgical complications that will undoubtedly arise for some patients. Being purposely under-equipped is a danger to the health of patients and, thus, should be ethically unacceptable, and I think we all should think of the ethical implications of this bill.

Now, let's say that in the event that a patient experienced postsurgical complications beyond the capacity of a surgical centre, that they're unable to treat it, where would they go for assistance? What happens then? They would be transported back to the public system, which would have to absorb the high cost of treating complications. Patients with emergency postsurgical conditions would likely jump the queue ahead of patients waiting for surgery in the public system and may even bump nonsurgical but desperately ill patients. Why has no one addressed that ethical concern in here? Or are government MLAs just blindly accepting that it doesn't really matter, that health care isn't about ethics? It absolutely is, and I think there are government MLAs here who are failing to see that.

Bill 11 fails to regulate private health care facilities or providers outside the limited realm of surgery. Diagnostic clinics are not addressed in this bill, and that's one of the concerns about queue-jumping. Long-term care, nursing home facilities, home care services, and other outpatient providers such as physiotherapy services: all elements of private-sector contracted care should be regulated according to similar standards and co-ordinated within the public system. This bill does not actually regulate private health care services at all but serves primarily to allow private surgical facilities to open.

I'm hoping, Mr. Speaker, that I will have another opportunity at some time. Thank you.

5:10

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, actually I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this motion. Obviously, I'm certainly opposed to an early shutdown of second reading, and you know, there are some 52 MLAs from the government side and half a dozen from this side of the House that have not yet had the opportunity to address this bill in principle. Now, I would be surprised if those 52 MLAs did, because that would be a record, I think, in this House.

Quite frankly, I actually would encourage every member in this House to get up and speak. This is probably one of the most contentious issues that we will debate in this Legislature, certainly in my time, and I dearly believe that it's incumbent upon everybody in this House to put their position on the table. We were told that people would debate in the House. I have challenged four hon. members to debate. All of those members have said that they won't debate me and have said that they will debate in the House. So I'm expecting all those members to do that in the House, to put their statement of principles on the table for all Albertans to read and enlighten us all.

MR. DOERKSEN: Did you not read mine?

MS OLSEN: I haven't got yours yet.

MR. DOERKSEN: I gave a speech.

MS OLSEN: Well, that's great. The hon. Member for Red Deer-South has said that he's spoken. So out of four, that's one down, three to go. I'm very happy that the hon. Member for Red Deer-South has been able to put his information on the table. You know what, hon. member? I'm going to read that, and by the time we get into committee, you can rest assured we'll have some discussion about it. How's that?

Here we are needing to really discuss the merits and the principle of this bill, and in no short time we've seen a procedural motion used to stifle that. So, Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting, because I view democracy as giving a certain number of freedoms and liberties to citizens of a country or, in this case, this province. In fact, just for the information of the House, I always count on the Oxford dictionary simply because I think it's probably the best written reference book that we have. It states that democracy is defined as government by all the people, direct or representative; form of society ignoring hereditary class distinctions and tolerating minority views; principles or members of Democratic Party.

Well, you know, I would like to think that every single person in this House has a pretty standard view of democracy and that as we move through our debate and as we do the job we were elected to do in this House, people understand what that word is all about. I sometimes see things happen in here that democracy is only okay and acceptable if it's the government's form of democracy. You see, democracy is only acceptable to this government or to the Premier when it suits them. So it's okay for the Premier to bellyache about Bert Brown not getting appointed to the Senate, and he cites the fact that there was an election, a democratic election that put Bert Brown and Mr. Ted Morton as the two front-runners from this province that should go to the Senate. But you know what he did? On the other hand, he fired a democratically elected school board. So he uses democracy when it suits his need, Mr. Speaker, and I have a little difficulty with that.

The other thing he did was reneged on his promise to elect regional health authorities. Instead, he put his pals at the helm. This government, the Premier, who's the kingpin of the show, if you will, put his pals in the Calgary regional health authority and dispersed within all of those authorities around this province. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that's wrong. This government here will go after the federal government saying: that appointment was patronage; this appointment was patronage.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on, I presume, a point of order.

Point of Order Inflammatory Language

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Under 23(h), (i), and (j), inflammatory comments and making allegations. I do hesitate to rise, but it should be clear to all members of this House that there was an appropriate process for the appointment of hospital board members. It was a public process. There was advertising. There was an independent committee that reviewed and interviewed them. So it's totally inappropriate for the hon. member to indicate or to say to this House and to say to members of the public of Alberta that the Premier put his buddies on the health boards.

There was a public process advertising for nominations. Everybody who's taken any look at it at all knows that there was a committee. As I recall, in fact a very prestigious member of Edmonton city council was one of the members of the committee that I can remember off the top of my head who reviewed the applicants and made recommendations as to who went on the committee.

In light of what I said earlier, I would hesitate to intervene in debate at all, but it's totally inappropriate for the hon. member to make the allegations she suggested on the nature of the appointments to the hospital boards.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

MR. DICKSON: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, and addressing that directly, I think no point of order has been made.

I recall that when I had the privilege of being the Official Opposition health critic from about January of 1998 until about February of 1999, I had lots of opportunity to study the process whereby men and women were appointed to regional health authorities. Let's be absolutely clear. There may well have been changes to the process for appointment of the men and women to the 17 RHAs, but in no sense is that what anyone could ever describe as an open process. The government chose the people who were doing the screening.

I'd be the first person to say that there were some excellent candidates that came forward and were vetted through the screening process and now sit on some of those 17 regional health authority boards, but the reality is that the government controlled the process, controlled the people who were appointed. It was not transparent in any sense. I remember attempting to get information on criteria that were applied. In fact, it was exceedingly difficult even to find out who was on those panels.

We all remember that in the Calgary regional health authority we had a situation where Dr. John Morgan had been appointed as chair of the Calgary regional health authority, was the chair for less than a year – my recollection is that it was something like eight months – took some positions that were very much inconsistent and conflicting with the position of the government of the province of Alberta and the Department of Health and Wellness, as it is now, formerly the department of health. What we had was Dr. Morgan, poof, mysteriously, there one day and gone the next. Who arrives in his place but our cheerful Provincial Treasurer.

Now, I remember going to the Red & White Club in Calgary just two weeks ago. In fact, I went with the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. Speaking specifically to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I remember that there were some 800 Calgarians that showed up, and you know the thing that drew the longest and most vociferous response is when somebody challenged the legitimacy of the Calgary regional health authority as being representative of the 800,000 people in the Calgary health region. People applauded. They rose from their chairs virtually as one, provided a standing ovation to this one Calgarian that posed the question. It was an astonishing circumstance that brought home to me that regional health authorities in Calgary certainly don't have the trust, the confidence, and the respect of the people in the Calgary health region, and from my experience with many of the other health regions around the province, the same thing would apply.

The Minister of Justice on his point of order suggests that my colleague from Edmonton-Norwood, with an excellent reputation for accuracy and tough, penetrating analysis – I would think that the Minister of Justice would have appreciated that when she makes those observations, they are consistently well supported, buttressed by evidence, and that would certainly be the case here.

Those are the observations I wanted to make. I'm looking forward eagerly to your ruling. I don't know whether other members wish to participate – even the Member for Edmonton-Norwood may in fact want to offer some observations on the point of order – but those are the comments I wanted to share with you, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

MRS. McCLELLAN: I would just like to add to the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Very briefly.

MRS. McCLELLAN: It will be brief.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the point of order is well taken. There is a process that is documented for appointments to these health authorities. They are publicly advertised. There is a screening committee. It is very transparent. I think the member opposite does a huge disservice to the hundreds of people across this province who virtually volunteer their time in the service of their communities.

There are guidelines that the screening committee must follow. They are required to look at a variety of backgrounds. They look at people who have had experience in health services. They look at people who have had experience in community service and business experience and a variety of others.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the process for the appointment of regional health authorities was made public, and I think the hon. member, as I indicated, does a huge disservice to the hundreds of people across our constituencies. I certainly would take great exception if she is alluding to any of the members who serve on the three regional health authorities that are in my region. The people who serve on those authorities are doing it in the best interests of their community. They get no reward other than a sense of service to the community, and I think the honourable thing would be for that hon. member to withdraw that comment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood on the point of order.

MS OLSEN: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: On the point.

MS OLSEN: Just very, very briefly on this point of order. I in no way meant to impugn the reputation of anybody in this House. I do know, however, that Mr. Dinning was a member, and if we look at the Calgary regional health authority, Mr. Speaker, I think it speaks for itself.

So I don't believe there's a point of order. Your decision.

THE SPEAKER: Well, this is indeed unique. During the day, during the question period the chair heard a number of observations from members about the need to participate, the lack of availability of time. The chair recognized this hon. member at about 9 minutes after 5. The time that we've now exercised in debating a point of order is part of her speaking time.

The chair was listening very attentively with respect to all the comments to be made on Bill 11 and then heard quite a few comments that I guess prompted the suggestion that there was some violation of section 23:

- (h) makes allegations against another member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives . . .
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language.

Then the points of order just basically rallied around health boards. The chair really thought that the point of order and the House would be dealing with statements and accusations against the leader of the government.

So the time goes on. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, you may continue your debate in whatever time is left.

MS OLSEN: Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate on this bill right now. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:25 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 11, 2000 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 00/04/11
 [The Speaker in the chair]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated. Hon. members, prior to recognizing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, which we will do momentarily, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Speaker, Member for Highwood, and Rotarian.

head: Introduction of Guests

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted this evening to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly this evening 13 Rotarians and Rotary Anns and an exchange student who are seated in the Speaker's gallery. They are all from the Barrhead Rotary Club. They are Edwin and Christine Haltiner, Sara Haltiner, Don and Donna Meunier, Graham and Elaine Anderson, Vern and Donna Stocking, Patricia Shepherd, Sarah Crowfoot, Dr. Charles Godberson, and Deca Ambrosi, an exchange student from the fine country of Brazil. I would ask them all to rise to receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have some special guests in the gallery this evening. We have Lieutenant Kjosness and seven of her charges in the 395 air cadet squadron of the city of Edmonton. If they would be so kind as to rise and have the members give the traditional welcome.

head: Government Bills and Orders
 head: Second Reading

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

Mr. Havelock moved that pursuant to Standing Order 47(1) the question on second reading of Bill 11, Health Care Protection Act, be now put.

[Adjourned debate April 11: Ms Olsen]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to go back to my topic of democracy and speaking about this motion to close down debate at second reading.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, it seems like our Premier has a bit of a bad habit and this government has a bad habit. It seems that they have a huge addiction to closure. You know, closure 26 times since '93 is a significant number of times.

What the Deputy Government House Leader did last night was effectively bring in closure under another name. It's unfortunate, because we, as I said, have one of the most significant debates before us. It is in fact the most important debate we've had in this Legislature since I've been elected. I clearly don't understand why this government would want to do this given that this is the most important bill they've debated in an awfully long time. I'm not sure what the intent of it is, but I certainly know there are a number of people that need to speak to the principle of second reading, and that's just not going to happen.

Interestingly enough, we've talked a little bit about private health care, and this isn't a private health care bill, but I heard the junior minister of health on CKUA this morning. The junior minister was talking about the issue of enhanced services, and he said: well, you know, if we can have enhanced services now within a public system, why can't we have it within the . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Referring to Proper Titles

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you. I'll be very brief, Mr. Speaker, but to ensure that we don't have a recurrence of what happened last night, perhaps you can encourage the hon. members across the way to refer to members in this House by their correct names. There is no junior minister of health. There is an Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: I have no desire to speak on the point of order.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I'm sorry; I don't understand what you're saying.

MS OLSEN: I have no desire to speak to the point of order. I'd like to get on to my debate.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Oh. Well, okay then.

I think what we wanted to say here is that when you start referring to people by other than their proper title, then that's inflammatory and leads to debate. So if you want to refer to an hon. minister, please do so in the proper way. That is only the parliamentary way. Referring to him as anything else – Mickey Mouse, junior, or whatever – is really improper and unworthy.

Do you have any desire now to enter into this?

MS OLSEN: No. I'll continue on with my debate, thank you. I heed your advice, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I'm just trying to understand where the hon. member is coming from. If we're going to characterize each other with all kinds of things other than the proper way to address in this House, then it's going to just degenerate into catcalling and all the rest of it. Do you have an understanding that there isn't a junior minister? We have hon. members. We have ministers. We have associate ministers. We have leaders of the opposition. We have House leaders of the opposition. We have House leaders here in the Legislature. Do you understand that, hon. member?

MS OLSEN: As I said, Mr. Speaker, I take your advice, and I heed your advice.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Debate Continued

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To go back, I'm listening to the radio this morning, and I hear the associate minister of health speaking about private hospitals. He says: you know, if we can have enhanced services in the public system, why can't we have it within a private system? Well, I think that's clear. I think that's the reason we're here, is it not? If you have it in a private system, that means somebody's pocketing the dough; right? So any money over and beyond the cost of an enhanced service goes into a private entity; it doesn't go into the public system. So I'm not sure where his logic was. I'm never sure from time to time where his logic is.

We don't believe in for-profit hospitals: I understand the Premier said that over and over and over again. Then I listened to something that I believe is very misguided logic. So I need to know: do we believe in private hospitals, and do we, then, say it's okay for doctors and other entities to make money in this manner? I'm under the impression that that's not what's in Bill 11, but I sure heard that from the associate minister, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek. The Canada Health Act doesn't allow for that, Mr. Speaker. So what he maybe is asking and suggesting is wrong, because the Canada Health Act doesn't allow for it.

I see a lot of misguidance. All the more reason to refer this bill to a committee, as my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Manning suggested yesterday. I mean, let's face it. We have so many folks over on the other side: some people don't understand the bill, and somebody thinks it means something that it's not saying, and they make public statements about it. We don't know where others are coming from. So clearly a debate, like they do in the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, where they take a particularly contentious bill such as this and then all parties sit down and scrutinize that bill – that's what we should be doing. That's what we should be doing, and that's what would serve Albertans better than ramming this bill through and bringing in this form of closure today.

Carrying on from there, we also have the issue of what I believe is misrepresentation, Mr. Speaker. I get offended when I hear things being twisted and I hear things being said that clearly misrepresent statements. I'm going to give you a few examples right here. Yesterday, as reported in the press, Mr. Premier said that he found it hard to reconcile Mr. Rock's proposed changes with Mr. Chretien's message, which the Premier interprets as: go ahead and pass the bill. That's what he's saying Mr. Chretien has said.

Well, clearly, if we refer to the document that was tabled in this Legislature, the Prime Minister of Canada's letter to this Premier states:

As for Bill 11, I understand that the legislation is still being debated and you may be considering amendments. With this in mind, we have some concerns about the potential long-term implications of the current draft bill, which could be addressed through amendments. I understand that the Honourable Allan Rock is sending a letter to the Honourable Halvar Jonson in which Mr. Rock outlines these concerns. I trust that you will welcome his suggestions in the spirit of constructive dialogue which characterized our meeting in Calgary.

A little bit different than the Premier reporting that the Prime Minister says: pass this bill. I don't think so. A true misrepresentation, Mr. Speaker.

I also look at the issues outlined in this particular bill by the hon. federal Health minister. He does have concerns about overnight stays, and he does outline in here, Mr. Speaker, specifically what the Saskatchewan legislation and the Ontario legislation say, and it isn't the twist that's given by this government. Clearly, they do not allow for enhanced services. I would suggest that members of the public get hold of these documents that have been tabled, because this Premier and this government, as far as I'm concerned, are twisting the words of the federal Prime Minister.

Let's be up front and honest. You want us all to lay the information on the table. Let's not misrepresent it. Let's not misrepresent all the studies that have been laid on the table. The World Health Organization: we've done that. The Institute of Health Economics report by Dr. Cam Donaldson: let's not misrepresent that either. The only thing they're waiting for in that particular document is the 54 studies that they used and wanted for their report. I mean, that's a study they're standing behind, and they're standing behind it, Mr. Speaker, because they've already given it to Alberta Health. If they're not going to stand behind it, they're not going to release a study like that at all. For this government to say, "Well, let's wait, and let's get the final report," fair enough. Let's get the final report, but don't use that as an excuse to misrepresent or diminish the reports that are put out by academics on this issue.

Let's talk about the hon. Minister of Government Services' comments about dismissing Dr. Rachlis' report and saying that that's not worth the paper it's written on. Dr. Rachlis may have a different opinion from the hon. minister, but she has no business diminishing the work that he has done. None, none at all. Whether she agrees with it or not is another story, but to dismiss it out of hand the day it comes out, in fact likely not even read, is an absolute atrocity.

I feel that if we're going to tell Albertans about this bill, then let's tell them the realities of it. I have no problem standing up here and telling them about my fears about that bill. Not at all. I have not yet misrepresented one bit of information and in fact can cite specifically and submit a bibliography for everything I've said on that bill.

I think it's important that if we're going to talk about democracy and we're going to talk about giving Albertans information, let's make sure we're giving them the right information, Mr. Speaker. Let's not just say that there's only one side to this argument. Clearly, there is not only one side to this argument. I'm not the least bit impressed, nor would I call it democratic, to have the government try and twist everything that's coming out. I look at the examples that I've cited here today in terms of reports, and I just feel very appalled that that's how the government of a province as well-to-do and respected as this particular province is tries to pass bills.

Let's do the right thing, Mr. Speaker. Let's take this bill and put it before the Committee on Law and Regulations. You know, there's some validity to that. Do you know that members of the House of Commons see committee work as some of the most productive work they do? They get to look at the bill, they get to assess the bill, and they get to debate the bill amongst the group that's dealing with it. If it's a justice bill, then this group of justice committee MPs will look at that bill. There is nothing wrong with that process. That is an excellent process. In a truly democratic society we should not be afraid to use that type of process.

Mr. Speaker, I have to make a comment. You know, I watched the movie Doctor Dolittle with my son, and it was quite an interesting movie really. What it started out as was the sale of two physicians' practice to an HMO, and the one, Doctor Dolittle, had a little bit of difficulty with taking all this cash and abandoning his patients and was worried and concerned about what was going on, and in the end he doesn't sell out. In the end he says: "No. My patients are what's important to me. I am a doctor and I will look after patients. You know, the money that I can make selling my practice to an HMO isn't the way it should be."

I don't ever want to see our doctors put in that position, where the health and well-being of Albertans is registered in economic units. I don't ever want to see that, and that's what I'm afraid this bill is doing. This bill is putting the whole notion of health and well-being into an economic unit, and obviously that's not what Albertans want. Albertans want fairness. Albertans want access. Albertans want to be able to trust that their government is going to do the right thing for them, and at this stage that's not what they believe. The Premier can talk about, you know, the little incremental changes in the communications war, but he is not winning. He is not winning that war, Mr. Speaker.

I see my time is out, and I will take ample opportunity in Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Speaking to the motion by the Deputy Government House Leader and Minister of Economic Development. Premier Klein has been scrambling to clarify the health care plan, but most pressing in the debate is the question most Albertans are asking: why? What is in this for him? Premier Klein, the Premier, may be the only person who . . .

Speaker's Ruling Referring to a Member by Name

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, as you well know – and you've even caught yourself. Two strikes. As hon. members here we're obliged to refer to one another by the seat we represent, the constituents we represent, or . . . [interjection] Hon. member, the Speaker is standing at the present time, which means that you don't talk. We refer to other members as hon. members from their constituency or the position they hold. We don't use last names, and just within the first however many minutes or seconds twice you've referred to an hon. member. Premier is fine or the member for his constituency. If we could kind of keep to that, it helps keep the tenor.

Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take your advice.

Debate Continued

MR. GIBBONS: The Premier may be the only person who understands Bill 11. Alberta did have a good health system prior to his crowning in 1992. Doctors say that they're frustrated. They say that they're continuing to be pressed for a lack of operating theatres to work in. Why is this?

In a conversation with a surgeon recently, in his frustrations due to the lack of theatre time, he said that he hopes the bill goes through so Albertans will finally realize how bad this government is and their capability to govern this province in everything. After the conversation about what this government did in Calgary, blowing up a hospital, selling off a facility for next to nothing, creating a shortage, it didn't take him long to figure out what I meant by this is Calgary driven. We both can't figure out why the rural politicians aren't speaking out about their constituency concerns.

Mr. Speaker, when I was away a couple of weeks ago down in the United States on holidays, I was listening to a number of radio ads from law firms. They were stressing that if you think you have medical malpractice cases against your family, contact this law firm. Could that be what our future is in Alberta or Canada? Once the creep is over the boundaries into the other provinces, then we've got it right across. Dr. Modry's lame excuse to gain media support for his political friends is quite sickening. Thank heaven for the voice of reason from Dr. Alex Procyshyn, responding as the head of 1,800

Capital region physicians, when he pointed out that Dr. Modry speaks for a very small percentage of physicians in our region.

To get to the point, this government is grasping for any supportive letters from their political buddies. Maybe they are more than just political buddies to the Premier. Dr. John Di Toppa, head of ear, nose, and throat, will only support Bill 11 as long as there is no other money put into the public system, and it is not necessary to support the risk of unknown results. Doesn't this point out or sum up some of the major problems in the public system?

Some people are guessing or asking what's going to happen to the Charles Camsell. Well, maybe we might sell it off. Maybe Dr. Modry might want to run it as his own, but at the same time maybe we can give it to him and let him run it as a public system. Maybe he can be making the same kind of money. Maybe we shouldn't be jealous of the good physicians we do have in the province and try to hold them back on the amount of operating-theatre time that they do have in our system.

You know, we have to wonder about these doctors that are pushing for warehouse areas to give public health care to the poor and then keeping everything else for the ones that can afford it. The same doctor that I was mentioning before mentioned that a few years ago in a number of clippings. Also, he has told nurses that stand up with him and scrub with him within the operating theatres today that they can come with him when he does get his own private system, but he'll offer them $12 an hour. His comments were: that's all they're worth. Well, is this union-breaking? Is this a mentality that's spreading down from himself at these social functions, or are there other doctors that do agree with him? Guess who this gentleman is friends with.

The era of this government has been characterized by a number of broad themes since 1993. They include both privatization of public services and the tendency to limit the role and importance of the Legislature. When Albertans realize that Albertans actually govern and manipulate by the kitchen cabinet out of Calgary, maybe somebody's partner, well, it makes you wonder. Trust has been challenged.

Bill 11 should be called this government's and its partners' private hospitals bill. I'm concerned about sections in the bill like section 23. It goes a great length in prohibiting court challenges, previous judicial injunctions, restraining orders. It even prohibits questioning about the act or ministerial decisions. Why are all the protective measures needed? Once the act becomes law, is there no recourse?

Now, reading over different things. The Premier has suggested that there are a number of studies and reports on which the government based its rationale for Bill 11. The Institute of Health Economics study states that there is no published study on the efficiency of the purchase of surgical services for private facilities by public funders such as the RHA. You know, Mr. Speaker, this government has stated that there will be no queue-jumping and no two-tier health care. The study, however, indicates that two-tierism will likely result in the proposal. While the study provides strong evidence against Bill 11, the results themselves are not surprising. What is even more significant is the fact that it was Alberta Health and Wellness that funded this study, making it all the more difficult for the government of today to dismiss the findings of the group as the work of, with us, wing nuts.

Even more telling is the fact that the government had had this study in its possession for at least two weeks at the time we the Official Opposition made it public. Would this important study have been buried forever if it wasn't for the Official Opposition bringing it out? This government is already withholding from the public the results of the taxpayer-funded focus groups on private hospital policies. What other information is this government keeping from us and keeping away from this debate until it's over? More importantly, do we trust this government anymore?

Trust is a major item, and trust goes a long way. Let's think of a few years ago. Do you remember the name Schreiber? Do you remember the name Mulrone? You know, those things really pin on people, and they stay. They result in only a couple of seats left in there. This government's amendment to Bill 11 seems to be insignificant, but it is major, major. We think about what was said on the stairs of this Leg. by the minister in coming up here the other day: that he's going to change a few things, that he's going to maybe require RHAs to look at existing resources before contracting out. Should this not have been happening already? How much is being wasted now? Isn't this a common service that should be there? Do we have to have legislation around this? Then we had another item that actually was mentioned on the steps: strengthen the queue-jumping section. It is happening now.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order
Imputing Motives Relevance

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I know that it's extraordinary for me to rise on a point of order when I'm not as familiar with Beauchesne, but it seems to me to be on the whole matter of relevance and section 23(i). I'd like to ask if in fact there have been references both to things that I would suggest define motives for this government which I do not believe to be correct and also in the manner in which the digression in discussion continues to explore other governments and other people in other places. I would just ask for your ruling.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Thank you.
On the point of order, Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, thanks very much. I appreciate the opportunity, in fact, to compliment my colleague for what I think is a robust and vigorous debate and analysis of Bill 11. [interjection] In fact, I hear someone query whether my colleague is reading some of his speech. If we were to disallow every government member that read from their speech, we could wrap up the session in about a week and a half instead of three and a half months.

Mr. Speaker, the issue in terms of relevance. I'd hasten to add that I'm taking some direction from the Government House Leader, who in fact raised a most interesting argument on a point of order today and made the observation, that was concurred in, in fact, by the Speaker, sitting in your place, that the debate is – I paraphrase; it is not a quote – as substantial and as vigorous and as broad as any debate could be at second reading and that in no way is the member constrained by the fact that there's a text of a motion. That was welcome news to this member and to my colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, I've been listening attentively and in fact making notes in preparation for my own comments. I'm being guided much by the Member for Edmonton-Manning. In my view, everything he said is directly related to what's in the bill, the program and the policy behind the bill, and it is certainly fair and appropriate for any member of this Assembly to query what the rationale is, what the motivation is. That's what Albertans expect us to do. Your constituents in Highwood would have the same expectation.

Now, there may be some other colleagues that have some views, but those are the points I wanted to make with respect to the point of order. There may be other debate as well on the point.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, on the point of relevance.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We've had two people, one from this side, one from that side, and there hasn't been anyone else, so I think that's quite all right.

We have two points of order raised by the hon. minister. The first one was on motives, and 23(i) clearly states and deals with the issue of motives. It says: "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member." Certainly the hon. member was imputing motive to the government, and as the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has said, that is not quite as offensive. It's when they single out an individual member. The term "relevance," though, has another attachment to it, and if we were going in strict adherence to certain things, that might be true.

However, this afternoon the hon. Government House Leader did say, contrary to some comments, that on this part of second reading, under this putting of the previous question, wide allowance for speeches by all hon. members on second reading would prevail. That was concurred in by the hon. Opposition House Leader and by the chair. So what in other circumstances may appear to be a violation of the relevance under those conditions is not so, and the chair will rule thus.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning in continuance.

Debate Continued

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was mentioning about what was happening on the stairs of this Legislature the other day. We might as well start spinning right from the start, because we've had lots of spins over the last few months, starting with this. One was maybe that hip operations could be done out there. Well, that was totally thrown out right off the bat.

Then there was hernias. Let's talk about hernias. You know, one little nick could end up the same as what happened in Lloydminster a few weeks ago with that young 21-year-old lady.

Then we talked about operations last night, of tonsils, brought forward by Calgary-Egmont. I've done a little bit of studying on tonsils, and that's very, very scary. There aren't going to be too many anesthetists or doctors that are going to accept going out into any private area. Then there are other little secrets that haven't quite got out into the public in the last while as anesthetists start setting up their own little theatres and drawing in doctors. Did you know that a four-year-old child died in the last couple of weeks because of just dental surgery? Let's think about things like that, and those things still haven't got out into the public yet.

Getting back, Mr. Speaker, to what was actually mentioned on the possible amendments that are going to come forward in committee, in third reading, if we ever even get to them, because this government wants to push things through so fast.

Strengthen the queue-jumping section. Happens now. It should already have been stopped. In my previous speech yesterday we were talking about how if it wasn't for national television, we probably wouldn't have heard about the $2,000 per eye case down in Calgary. And, you know, has that really been checked into already? I don't know.

The third item that is a possible amendment is the strength of the privative clause. Nobody is above the law, Mr. Speaker. We'll need an overhaul to look at it totally.

Then the next item that could be possible is clarifying the process by which the minister can withdraw the designated status. Boy, I've got one big question on my side about what the rationale on that one is.

The fifth one: strengthen the conflict of interest rules. Another one I've got a great big huge item on.

The key message: this is just tinkering. It's just tinkering with a bill that should have been handled properly in the first place. You just don't put all the legal beagles in the world together and come out with the legal side of it, because as I mentioned yesterday, outside of Bill 11 in a responsive relationship with principle 11 of the federal system, we really do have a major, major problem with this bill. It is a bill that should not even be tinkered with anymore, not amended, not anything but pulled, Mr. Speaker.

After what must have been the 10th meeting between the deeply divided Conservative caucus in the last few days, the actual minister started talking about tinkering with it, and this is what the results are. We're seeing these few five items, and maybe there'll be six items or maybe there'll be seven, whatever. But how does everyone in this government accept what the truth squad – or is this the trust-us squad? Because if you want to tinker with the words and tinker with things, you're going to change the Cs and the Qs or whatever you have. Isn't it bad enough that this bill is being rammed down our throats and that this government refuses to hear any of the opposition to it? It's horrifying that we support such a following that we can blindly be led – and you got blindly led over the last few years, and this really, really concerns me.

This government promises more choice, but private health care insurers can refuse to provide people with the coverage. This government promises increased access, but private hospitals can refuse to provide you with the service. This government promises more efficient and cost-effective services, but administrative costs of private hospitals in the U.S. are 14 percent of the total budget as compared to 9 percent in Canadian public hospitals. This government promises to improve quality of services, but recent studies at Johns Hopkins and Harvard indicate that the focus on making a profit translates to a compromise in quality. This government insists that it is not creating another tier, just simply extending what we already have. This government doesn't acknowledge that abortion clinics and cataract surgeries have been contracted out for a variety of specific reasons. What this government wants to do is allow for more private, for-profit hospitals to operate.

This government assures us there is a plan, but there is little action that we can see, and over the last seven years the cutbacks, the layoffs, and the bed closures demonstrate otherwise. This has been a total void in the whole system, and not just in our province. It's a void right across the whole country. But the fact is that we're Albertans. I defend Albertans, and I could care less than to point my finger at somebody else, but we have to work with the federal government and build something, not be sitting there and the whole spin on today's world is what they're doing. You know, we can talk about agriculture all night, about what we should be doing on that one.

This government promises a system that will be transparent, but in reality will the private health care provider be shielded by the provincial laws that protect third-party business information? We now can't get access to the terms of private operators. Does everybody remember the past Treasurer, who designed and implemented the scheme to cut about $800 million out of health care spending? A theme that allowed no time to reform health care delivery, a theme that focused on firing more than 8,000 nurses and health care workers, a theme that ignored advice from the doctors in Alberta, but more a theme based on a huge lie.

The lie was that health care spending was absolutely out of control and that health care spending was driving us into bankruptcy. In fact, health care spending under the health minister of the day, now Leader of the Official Opposition, had flattened and was virtually level for three years before this present government came into place or this present Premier took over. In any event, when we think of the past Treasurer, now reincarnated as the saviour of health care with his unelected CRHA board loyal to no one other than himself and this present government, we are reminded that being able to operate the crane with the wrecking ball doesn't qualify you to be an architect.

So what is our plan as the Official Opposition? Slam the door on two-tier care by banning private, for-profit hospitals. Second, impose a 180-day moratorium on new expansion of private diagnostic and surgical facilities to allow for a determination of what changes are required before we conform to the Canada Health Act. Third, require doctors who practise in private hospitals to opt out of the Alberta health care insurance plan. Don't let them double-dip because, you know, there's only 5 percent of the real true doctors out there that are really into this game of looking for privatization. Fourth, require RHAs to disclose all expenditures paid to private health care operators so that Albertans can see whether these contracts are of benefit to them or just to the shareholders of the private operators. Five, we'd have to go back once we were government and repeal most, but not all, of Bill 40, the Health Information Act, and enact legislation that covers private health care providers too, not just public providers.

You know, Mr. Speaker . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, we seem to have a lively debate between two people who are hopefully going to stand up at some later time this evening and debate when they're recognized. Right now it's only Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes they think I need help. Sometimes somebody standing up with a point of order or something like that really gets me going here too. So how much more time do we have?

You know, Mr. Speaker, about once every 15 years Canadians engage in a debate about changing our health care system and the values upon which it's based. The last time it happened, Alberta led the debate, then over allowing extra billing by physicians. Finally Alberta was dragged, kicking and screaming, into the prohibition of extra billing with the passage of the Canada Health Act in 1984. This issue is upon us again, but this present government seems determined to privatize its way out of the responsibility for the mess they have created over the last few years.

We have to stress that we as the Official Opposition would like to stop the creeping of privatization which has been leading to the edge here in Alberta. I mentioned before that once the edge closes in on the boundaries of the borders of the other provinces, I don't know how they're going to stop it.

The private sector's involvement in health care has grown from 22 percent to over 31 percent since this present government came in place in 1992. Taxpayers' dollars are going to subsidize private operators whose contracts are hidden from the public view. We are in favour of free enterprise but don't believe in public dollars going to subsidize those who otherwise couldn't make a profit. Albertans don't believe in public subsidies, not for hockey players, not for struggling airlines, and not for private health care separate privatization systems. We should renew our commitment to public health care as the best way to foster health and economic well-being now and in the future.

Predictable funding formulas by the federal and provincial governments is one main thing that should be driven at. Like I mentioned before, there's been a void in actual plans and plans and plans, trying to keep up with technology. Everybody's talking about technology. Yes, technology is one of the major, major items, but we also have to have the plans to go along with it.

Involve health care providers and workers in defining and restructuring the public system. Find cost-effective and innovative ways to deliver health services complementing institutional care and community supports. You know, look at training and education. We're trying to work on every method possible to attract nurses and medical people back into our province. Yet we look at Grant MacEwan College, the only college training ground that we have in our city, in the Capital region area: 107 positions filled; 800 and some more applicants not attracted to it.

Well, believe me, if we're so short – and we know we're short, because if you take a look at the hospitals and at the emergency centre in the University hospital which will be opening in the next few months, they haven't got enough staff right now to open that. So this is a major, major item we have to think about.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

MR. JACQUES: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise tonight and to enter debate on Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act. I do just want to comment briefly on some of the comments that were made by the two previous speakers of the Official Opposition, specifically from Edmonton-Norwood and also the speaker from Edmonton-Manning.

It's interesting, listening to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood and reflecting back on Hansard and reflecting back on the Member for Edmonton-Manning, who made the motion yesterday with regard to raising Bill 11 on almost a closure basis to going into committee, and then listening to the Member for Edmonton-Norwood tonight talk about closure and talk about thwarting, if you like, debate on Bill 11 in terms of second reading. How interesting that all of them in the Official Opposition have the opportunity to speak not once, not twice, but three times on Bill 11. I just find that interesting, and virtually every other bill in the history that I've been in this Legislature, for the last seven years, Mr. Speaker . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Sorry to interrupt you, hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Hon. members, you'll have your turn. No need to drown him out while he's speaking. [interjections] No, no, no. I'm not wishing to enter into the debate at this point. I'm just wanting to remind you of courtesy and parliamentary decorum.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Debate Continued

MR. JACQUES: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was saying how in the seven years I've been here, in virtually every case each member has spoken only once on second reading, and somehow all of a sudden this transcends into something that is not normal or something that is completely unaccountable or not consistent with the standards of this Legislative Assembly. I just find that staggering, and I find it staggering that that Member for Edmonton-Norwood would attempt to twist the facts and the realities that we are faced with in this Legislative Assembly.

I listened to the Member for Edmonton-Manning, his attack on physicians who speak out in support of Bill 11, his attack on keeping things from the opposition. This is probably the only government in the history of Canada that would come out five months ahead of legislation and lay out the principles so everybody, including the opposition, could have the opportunity to see it. It's too bad that their Liberal cousins, their Liberal fathers in Ottawa wouldn't do the same thing, Mr. Speaker.

They attack the RHAs, Mr. Speaker. He sits up there tonight and attacks the regional health authorities, people who are community-minded, people who are out there trying to work on behalf of all Albertans. I mean, I just don't understand this. He attacks amendments he hasn't even seen. I mean, how can you attack something you haven't seen. It goes beyond comprehension.

Then he talks about how they're free enterprisers, but God help you if you make a profit; God help you if you operate a private clinic; God help you if you're in a private practice where you make money. I mean, really. [interjections]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, you will have a chance, but it's not while someone else is recognized and speaking. Is that clear? Edmonton-Ellerslie?

Hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, direct it through the chair.

MR. JACQUES: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't going to offer those comments, but I just couldn't resist with the members having stood up tonight and not contributed in a meaningful way to the debate before us.

Mr. Speaker, I do want to share three observations and comments involving, if you like, the process and the decorum that surrounded this debate in terms of Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act. First of all, I do want to commend all Albertans and particularly the opposition members, regardless of their political affiliation, whether it's the independent, the NDP, or the Liberals, because all of them have contributed to this debate, all of them have been voicing their concerns and what they believe are the views of their constituents, much as I have.

Having said that, I would like to reflect on some discussions that I had with three constituents last week who were here, and they were attending the Forum for Young Albertans. Most of us, a good number of us, had the opportunity to host them. Mr. Speaker, we talked about Bill 11, we talked about question period, we talked about the decorum in this Legislature, and we talked about the language we use in debate and so forth.

By coincidence and purely coincidence, the very next day – I happen to have a condominium in this great city of Edmonton – there is a flyer which has been sent out, I believe, by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. I looked at the statements on the front, and I said: "Okay. Well, I guess that's normal rhetoric. I can't get upset about it. I guess what they want to say, they want to say." But then I opened up the flyer, and what did I see in here?

Now, remember. This is going to constituents and trying to sell your belief, the Edmonton-Centre member's belief, on Bill 11. So the member took some quotes out of Hansard: asked by the member on March 8, asked by the leader of the opposition on March 15, asked by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, and didn't give the date. Then I highlighted some of the comments. Now, remember, this is all surrounding the decorum around Bill 11 and talking to the youth of our province and debating the issues of Bill 11.

I highlighted these words, and there were I think nine phrases in the questions by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. It talks about “after six years of attacks.” It talks about the Premier now threatening, about the Premier failing to anticipate, about shredding the senior’s report, about slashing, about double-crossing, about “attacking the very people,” about blaming seniors, and about “scapegoats.” Now, that is nine phrases in essentially two sets of questions by one member. The interesting thing is that when you look at the leader of the opposition, only one: “intellectually bankrupt.” Well, I guess that’s not too bad. And believe it or not, the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, none.

Now, I may not agree with the tone of the questions that may arise; that’s beside the point. The words were not inflammatory. They dealt with, if you like, the issues of Bill 11. Again, I may not agree with the tone. Fair game. The interesting thing is that now I get to send this out together with my comments to these three young constituents who were here and say: “Okay. I had a hard time expressing to you what I was feeling and trying to express about decorum and the debate surrounding Bill 11. If you take this, hopefully this will maybe serve, quote, as an example.” It’s probably not the best example, but unfortunately it’s the only one I could come up with in that short period of time.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to thank my constituents who have provided a lot of feedback to myself and to both my offices with regard to the whole issue of Bill 11 and their comments.

The other thing I wanted to do, Mr. Speaker, is to acknowledge in particular and to express our appreciation in terms of the health care providers of this province. Really, when we debate Bill 11 and all the issues surrounding health care, the health care providers are the ones that are on the front line. They’re the ones out there, if you like, feeling the heat and the pressure every day. All of us, I think, have had experience of them comforting us, praying with us. Certainly, there’s no question in my opinion and I think that of my caucus that they demonstrate a relentless pursuit of excellence in everything they do.

The last thing that I want to acknowledge, Mr. Speaker, prior to getting into specifics is that we do have health care successes every day, health care good-news stories. I did want to share with you if I can find it here, which I probably can’t – anyway, I will have to set that one aside and come back to it.

What I was trying to get at – and I will table it. It was an obscure little article in a newspaper in the city of Edmonton about a week ago. It talked about hearing tests being expanded. It talked about a grant from Alberta Health and Wellness of, I believe, a million and a half dollars to a researcher so that basically all newborn children in this province will have a hearing test where only approximately 50 percent may be done at the present time. The researcher had come up with very good evidence to suggest that this is a good thing to do in terms of the whole ability particularly of young children to learn, if you like, not the thought pattern, but in terms of the speech and the sounds, particularly during the first six months of their lives.

Those are the types of things that I think happen every day in this province, not because of the government, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we contributed a million and a half dollars, but we have excellent people in this province in terms of research capacity. We have almost a billion dollars in a medical heritage trust fund, unlike any other province in Canada. Tremendous work and tremendous research comes out of that every year for the benefit of Albertans and indeed the benefit of all Canadians. Those are the things that somehow as we go through the debate on health care and particularly on Bill 11 for some reason seem to get set aside and almost ignored.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act, is only one step in terms of the six-point program this minister and this Premier have outlined with regard to some of the challenges facing health care. I think the significant fact is that we’re not prepared to sit back as Albertans, we’re not prepared to sit back as a government and let somebody else try to do something. That is not Albertans’ nature. We confront things head-on. We make the changes. We come up with the innovations. It comes back to conviction, and I think it comes back to courage. That’s what Albertans have, and I think that’s what we are seeing in terms of Bill 11. Bill 11 is really saying that we’re not afraid to challenge the status quo.

At the same time, we recognize that Bill 11 is only a very minor step in terms of the total health care provisions in this province. It’s only a basic extension really of what’s happening today and putting some fences around those things that Albertans have expressed their concerns about.

The other thing I want to comment on, Mr. Speaker, is the whole issue of Bill 11 and the kind of consultation process that has evolved over a period of time. Yes, there’s no question that Bill 37 and the predecessor bill prior to that over the years constituted debate, but I think what they did do was permit a process whereby all Albertans had the opportunity to raise the issues, to express their concerns, to offer their alternatives, particularly through a panel which was struck at the time that basically Bill 37 was not preceded with. I think those are some of the fundamental issues we cannot set aside in terms of looking at the path and the history that has led us up to Bill 11.

The other thing I think we have to note, Mr. Speaker, is that Bill 11 is not a panacea, and we acknowledge that. It’s not intended to solve, as I said earlier, all the challenges. People have said: put more money in. Well, the reality is that some $1.6 billion has been put in over the last four years. That’s a 40 percent increase, a 40 percent increase in four years, 10 percent in the last year alone and a commitment in our business plan to increase that by another 21 percent over the three years. Those are very significant.

The one thing I did want to underscore there is that if you look back to that committee that I had the honour of serving on back in 1998, when we were reviewing the whole health care funding formula, we met with all 17 regional health authorities and the Cancer Board and various other groups, 30 some odd in total, with people like Mr. Percy, for example, who used to be a member of the opposition and who’s now a dean at the University of Alberta. Dr. Clarence Guenter was another one. All of these people, very knowledgeable, came together, setting aside partisan politics trying to come up with this issue.

One of the things as a backdrop – and it was only a backdrop – showed that in 1998 out of the five provinces including Ontario west, Alberta ranked third in terms of straight per capita spending. Nothing really to brag about, but that’s where we were. When you adjusted that by figures based on a nonpartisan organization and reflected strictly on the basis of setting aside or recognizing, if you like, the age population, the demographic population, the interesting thing is that we were number one. In fact, we were number one in Canada, and when you take into account since that time the expenditures we have made and the expenditures we will be making, I think it would demonstrate – and I wish I had those numbers today. I think it would clearly indicate that even on a per capita basis by far, let alone adjusting for demographics and for age, we’d certainly be number one without any question.

One of the issues that has been raised is two-tiered health care, the smear, the fear that somehow Bill 11 is creating or purporting to create another layer of health care. The thing that we have to point out, Mr. Speaker, that we have to look at, I believe the very essence of Bill 11: Albertans will not have to pay nor will they be able to pay for medically necessary surgeries performed in private surgical facilities. That’s the bottom line on that particular issue in Bill 11.

No matter how you cut it, no matter how you address it, that is the bottom line. That means there is only one system in terms of your economic posture in this province. Whether you're an MLA or not an MLA, whether you're a member of the opposition or the government or somebody in the gallery, what it simply means is that that health insurance card we carry is what you need to get health care service. As the Premier has said, nothing more and nothing less.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, is that Bill 11 also prohibits very clearly any kind of, quote, American style, for-profit private hospitals operating in Alberta. It even goes on further to say that no private facilities performing surgical services can operate outside the public system. It will also be illegal for anyone to pay for faster health service. There will be no queue-jumping allowed. It is very clear. Let us not even debate that issue. No queue-jumping. Read the bill. Black and white.

Another thing that I think we have to really set in the context of Bill 11 – and we've said it before, and I think we have to keep saying it, because I don't think there are a lot of Albertans that understand or even recognize it – is that there are 52 private surgical facilities operating in the province of Alberta today. Those 52 private surgical facilities perform over 150 different types of procedures, Mr. Speaker, and in the course of any given year perform over 20,000 of them. That exists today in the province of Alberta. It is good for medicare, it is good for our province, and it is good for those that want to take advantage and require that type of surgery. It also operates entirely within a publicly funded and publicly administered health care system, and that's what Bill 11 is all about.

We could go on and talk about, I think, the examples shown in other provinces in terms of the Shouldice hernia centre, for example. Yes, the debate says: well, it was grandfathered when medicare came in. But the point is, Mr. Speaker, that it's a private facility that operates today in the province of Ontario. For some reason – God, I don't know why – what we're going to attempt to do in Alberta is not consistent with that. It exists. It has existed for many years, and it's successful. Let our citizens of this province have the same opportunity that the citizens of Ontario have.

Let's not forget, Mr. Speaker, that every surgical facility in this province must be accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, not by the minister, not by myself, not by the Speaker, not by the Leader of the Opposition but by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. If I had to trust anybody in our medical system today, it would be the College of Physicians and Surgeons. I trust them. Maybe the opposition doesn't, but I trust them.

The issue with regard to NAFTA, Mr. Speaker, and the WTO. Certainly I think the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations has laid it out time and time again in question period, has issued the legal opinions. It's quite clear that Bill 11 will not permit any concerns under NAFTA. Quite clearly the carve-out provisions do apply and can apply. As we speak, the other contracts and the other facilities that are operating not only in this province today but in other provinces have never been and most likely will never be challenged under NAFTA. If they are, they are protected.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to conclude. I could go on, I guess, to many of the provisions, the individual phrases within Bill 11, but we will have lots of opportunity to do that in committee. I'm sure we'll be there a long time, in committee. We'll also have that opportunity again in third reading, so there will be lots of opportunity to get into more detail.

One thing I did want to share with you, Mr. Speaker. I sent a letter to a constituent very recently. Because the person had asked me: Wayne, would you please – pardon me; Mr. Jacques, Member for – well, he called me Wayne in the letter. Would you please put in your own words from your strictly personal point of view, setting aside politics, setting aside the fact that you're an MLA, why you would support Bill 11. I wrote these three sentences. I said: first of all, in three and a half years I will be a senior citizen. I said: on April 7 our grandchild celebrated her first birthday. I don't have to tell grandparents what the significance of that is. I said that for those reasons I support Bill 11.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's unfortunate that we have to rise at this point in the debate on Bill 11 to speak to an amendment that in effect is a closure amendment on second reading of Bill 11. I say it's unfortunate because it's at second reading – not at committee stage, not at any other stage of the bill except third reading when there's cursory return to it – that we debate and explore the principles of a piece of legislation.

I can't think of many pieces of legislation we've examined in the last seven years in this House that have principles that have Albertans so upset, and I can't think of another bill that's been before us that contains principles that are in such conflict one with the other. I can't understand for the life of me, Mr. Speaker, how any member of this Assembly could return to their constituency without having spoken to the principles at second reading of this bill.

If I understand the count, there are close to 50 members on the side opposite that have yet to voice their opinion on these principles and four or five on this side of the House that have yet to voice their opinion on the principles. Again, I think that's extremely unfortunate, and it shows that as legislators we have not done our job.

The principles of the bill, as I said, Mr. Speaker, are too important to be ignored. The substance, the nature of those principles is conflicting. We have two sets of principles: those principles that are embodied in the preamble of the bill that pretend or would embrace the principles of public health care, and we have then following a whole set of principles that endorse private medicine. The bottom line of the bill is that private medicine in this province will be expanded. We can argue about the details of that expansion and what the implications are for the future of that expansion and the kinds of devastation that expansion might have for the public health care system, but that's what the bill is about, an expansion of private medicine. So we have these two sets of principles in conflict with each other, demanding debate and demanding clarification.

There is a publication, or parts thereof, that I read recently – I didn't particularly agree with the point of view being expressed – a publication entitled Health Care Reform Through Internal Markets. One of the good things in that publication was a little summary chart at the end of one of the chapters where they laid out the kinds of principles that govern private medicine and those principles that undergird public medicine. It's that comparison, Mr. Speaker, that I think is so important when we look at this bill.

For instance, in private medicine there's a strong belief that individuals are the best judges of their own welfare. Opposed to that in the public system is that when ill, individuals are frequently imperfect judges of their own welfare. In defence, those people who argue that the public system is best indicate that sick and worried patients often can't look after their own interests and often don't even want to. They want someone to help them through it. The consumers, particularly sick people, often have no time and don't even have the option to shop around for the best buy.

I have an example from my own constituency, where a constituent was diagnosed with cancer, a rather rapidly progressing cancer. He phoned my office in great distress and frankly admitted that emotionally and mentally it was destroying him. He had been told that he had this frightful disease and that it was going to take at least six weeks to have the operation performed. That constituent was in no frame of mind to go shopping. He was having a very difficult time making his judgment. All he knew was that he wanted the work done and he wanted it done immediately. I think that's the kind of tension between the principles of private and public health care that you often find in terms of individuals and what happens to them when they're ill.

The private system believes that priorities are determined by your willingness and your ability to pay, that that should be the priorities in a health care system that's privately funded, while in the public system priorities are judged by the broader community about need, about what we have to have. We've heard much of that debate in this country over the last five or six years, about the kinds of services, the kinds of components we should have in the health care system. It's unfortunate that we aren't debating in front of us now a more comprehensive bill aimed at improving the public health care system rather than being taken off on a side journey into the world of private medicine. That fairness, that all people will be treated equally, that has been such a large part of our public system, is a principle that's abandoned in the private system where a willingness and, again, ability to pay becomes an overriding principle.

In terms of demand, if there's an erratic or catastrophic event, that's supposed to be mediated and taken care of by private insurance. When those same catastrophic events occur under a public system, they're made irrelevant. They're made irrelevant because they are part of the system. They're supported through those of us who have joined together, all Canadians, in provision of a system that we can draw upon regardless of our financial means. The research on the behaviour of the private financiers in the health system south of the border should certainly make us very wary and very careful when we examine that principle that somehow or other private insurance companies will alleviate concerns of a catastrophic nature when they arise.

The matter of equity is not addressed in a private health care system. Equity is a principle that's somewhat irrelevant to the system. For the public system equity is a major, major concern, the notion that income is not distributed equally, the notion that access would not be equal. A whole cluster of issues and principles surround that notion of equity and have been very, very influential in the development of the public system. If there's one thing we've been able to achieve, it's to insulate patients from the influences of inequity due to income or access or other kinds of problems that might plague them. There are vast differences when we start to look at demand in a private system and demand in a public system and how those systems respond to that demand.

There's a difference in terms of supply. In the private system profit is a proper and effective way to motivate suppliers to respond to the needs of demanders, and again that's a pretty firm principle. It's one that, interestingly enough, George Bernard Shaw commented on some time ago. I'd just like to quote Shaw's comments on doctors being involved in private medicine, because while the majority of the doctors in our province and certainly in our country fully support the public system, there is a handful – as the Premier has indicated in this Legislature by reading some of their support – a handful of doctors who would like to see not only Bill 11 pass but, I suspect, further privatization of the system.

This is what George Bernard Shaw said in that regard.

It is not the fault of our doctors that the medical service of the community, as at present provided for, is a murderous absurdity. That any sane nation, having observed that you could provide for the supply of bread by giving bakers a pecuniary interest in baking for you, should go on to give a surgeon a pecuniary interest in cutting off your leg, is enough to make one despair of political humanity. But that is precisely what we have done. And the more appalling the mutilation, the more the mutilator is paid . . .

Scandalized voices murmur that . . . operations are necessary. They may be. It may also be necessary to hang a man or pull down a house. But we take good care not to make the hangman and the housebreaker the judges of that. If we did, no man's neck would be safe and no man's house stable.

That's a little wisdom from earlier in the last century, Mr. Speaker, in terms of private medicine and the involvement of the medical profession in private, for-profit provision of services to patients.

Now, as I indicated, supply in the private system is properly and effectively controlled by profit, and it responds to the needs of the demanders. But the position we have accepted that is proper for our doctors and for medical provisioners is the one that's in the public system, and that is that professional ethics and dedication to public service are the appropriate motivation, focusing on the success in curing or helping those patients who need help. That's an important principle, Mr. Speaker. It's one that medical doctors promise to adhere to when they take the Hippocratic oath. It underlines the altruism we expect from those people who enter the medical professions and that we have become accustomed to being exposed to when we deal with those individuals, and any action, any movement towards privatization such as we see in Bill 11 challenges that.

I recently read an article from the States – I can't recall where it was from – where that very point was being lamented and how doctors and medical practitioners were being forced more and more to become entrepreneurs and to abandon this dedication to humanity, this dedication to making things better. I hope that by legislation like this we are not starting to open those doors or to push our doctors and our medical provisioners in the same direction.

When you speak of supply, Mr. Speaker, there are again vast differences. The priorities in the private system are determined by people's willingness and their ability to pay, and that's really the priorities and how they're set. In the public system that can be quite different. Priorities can be determined by where the greatest improvements or curing can be effected. So again a vast, vast difference. In the public system a reasoned approach to the improvement of the provision of services and establishing priorities for the provision of services and, incidentally, research contrasts quite starkly with those in the private system, where a willingness and an ability to pay are really the determining factors in setting priorities.

Again, in terms of supply, suppliers have a strong incentive to adopt least cost methods of provision in the private system. In the public system the predetermined limit on the available resources generates a strong incentive for suppliers to adopt least cost methods. Again, the public system has mechanisms built into it to contain costs, and the private system doesn't have that. If you read the literature – and I don't pretend to have read it extensively, but in the articles I have read, in terms of the Americanized system, private health care in other countries, in Britain and the movement there, a major concern is the growth of health care costs under private provisioners. We see it in the often quoted statistics – and we've had them quoted a number of times in this Legislature – about the amount of GDP that Canadians devote to health care as opposed to the amount of GDP that Americans do, something in the order of a 5 percent difference, with the Americans paying much more and being able to do much less with the dollars they provide in terms of covering all Americans and providing the quality of service that we accept in our country as a given.

There are a number of differences between private medicine and public medicine in terms of how adjustments occur. In the private system the theory is that competing suppliers ensure that prices are kept low and reflect costs. In the public system there's a central review of activities, and this is the mechanism that's used to generate efficiencies, through audits of service provision and management pressures to keep the system cost-effective. We saw that in the most recent report of the Auditor General of this province, who takes that responsibility to audit the health care department and health care spending and their provision of services. He takes that extremely seriously and has made some comments about the utilization of empty beds in the province and the inability of some of the authorities to keep track of money.

So we have quite a difference again in terms of the mechanisms that are used to keep prices low, and there's a sharp difference, too, in terms of how public the knowledge about those mechanisms is. We've again seen that contracts that have been undertaken with private provisioners have not been available for public scrutiny, in stark contrast to those between public bodies.

Mr. Speaker, there's a great deal more in terms of comparisons of the principles of private medicine versus the principles of public medicine that are at the heart of Bill 11. Again, I return to my comments at the beginning. I don't think we can afford to leave here before every member of the Assembly has had an opportunity to voice their opinion on those principles.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I wonder if we might have unanimous consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Actually there are two groups to introduce. The first one I espy in the public gallery opposite, a very distinguished labour leader in the province of Alberta. I'd invite Audrey Cormack to stand up and receive the customary warm welcome of the members of the Assembly.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I recognize a number of folks behind me in the members' gallery. I don't know all of their names, but I'd like to invite all those people who are here to witness the debate on Bill 11 to stand and receive the customary welcome of members of the Assembly, please.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 11
Health Care Protection Act

Mr. Havelock moved that pursuant to Standing Order 47(1) the question on second reading of Bill 11, Health Care Protection Act, be now put.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and it's indeed a pleasure to stand and speak at second reading of Bill 11. First, I want to say that I certainly agree with all of those who don't want a two-tiered, for-profit, American style health care system, and if I thought for one minute that what we were doing was leading us in that direction, then I certainly would be voting against the bill.

There's always been a fundamental difference between Canadians and Americans when it comes to health care. Americans do not see health care as a fundamental right to be provided by government, except for seniors and low-income children, pregnant women, people with disabilities, and some low-income parents. Everyone else must provide for their health care coverage through federal and all kinds of insurance schemes. About 65 million people in the United States are eligible for some form of assistance out of a population of more than 300 million, and many million do not have coverage of any kind.

This is not the kind of health care that Canadians or Albertans want. We in Canada are very proud that everyone is covered under our federal and provincial health care systems, and it's done through a federal and provincial partnership. The problem with the partnership is that the feds have reduced their support payments from 50 percent, when health care first began, to roughly 13 percent, and that certainly means that the provincial share is, by necessity, 87 percent for insured services.

Another fundamental difference is that Americans of means can buy the best of the best and avoid queues by paying for the service. If what is being proposed here in Alberta even remotely resembled that system, then I would be seriously against it. What makes this proposal quite different is that it continues the single payer, publicly administered, publicly delivered health care system but proposes to allow increased contracting out of surgical services that can be safely done in private clinics.

The health authority will take control of all the waiting lists, whether the service is being performed by a public or a private facility, so that no one can jump the queue and no one can pay for an insured service. It will be against the law for a facility to charge for insured services. Your Alberta Health card is the only currency you will need.

The service will be contracted out only if the facility and the staff are certified. The quality of the service is equal to or better than what could be provided in our public hospitals, and it's shown to save precious health care resources. Additional benefits would result in our public facilities because of the freeing up of beds and surgical suites in our existing facilities. The proposed changes in delivery of certain surgical services is no more than an extension of the regional health authority's ability to add flexibility to deal with increasing waiting lists.

The unusually high and growing volumes of these procedures are typical of an aging population and exist everywhere in North America, not just Alberta. The demand will continue to grow, and every province can ill afford to build new structures for this peak demand.

Now, many of my constituents have correctly observed that this bill sets out important terms and conditions that apply to all existing private clinics. Because our existing legislation does not provide the province with the tools to regulate their activities, Bill 11 provides needed controls. Everyone knows of examples of queue-jumping practices. Bill 11 will prevent queue-jumping by no longer allowing private facilities to control their own waiting lists. RHA professionals will now centrally control the lists and enforce severe penalties – $10,000 for the first offence and, I believe, $20,000 for the second offence – for anyone who buys or sells an insured service to circumvent the waiting list.

Everyone has heard of examples of inappropriate sales tactics and pressures to purchase optional enhanced services. There is currently no legislation or regulation that specifies standard products or services being offered by the regional health authorities. They're currently free to choose the standards that they wish. This has resulted in one RHA, for example, offering foldable lenses as their standard while others offer the rigid lens. Bill 11 establishes provincial standards, and the province has already moved to provide foldable lenses as recently as today as the provincial standard. The proposal provides the College of Physicians and Surgeons with the responsibility to choose the best products and services that will then become the standard for the entire province.

Other features of the bill make all new contracts public and prevent contracts that are not in the best interests of the RHA. For example, an RHA could not propose a contract that would cost more than the services currently cost that would not result in a benefit such as shorter waiting lists. So Bill 11 provides complete contract transparency.

MRS. SOETAERT: No.

MR. HERARD: Yes.

Now, as I said yesterday, every morning I wake up and wonder what the new twists and turns are that will happen today with respect to the feeding frenzy that goes on in terms of the media that essentially promotes conflict, confusion, confrontation, and the misunderstanding of relatively simple underlying policy issues. We saw the kinds of games that were played with respect to the description of what took place here yesterday as an attempt to close debate and closure and all that stuff, when in fact they know full well – you know, they've been around long enough to know – that if you want to delay a bill, then you send it to that famous never-never land of that committee that never meets. That's what happened here. The problem is that they got caught at it.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, we have had almost one hour of relative quiet where people politely listened to each other and we have gone back and forth. I know that you're anxious to get into the debate, but you've already spoken. So we would wonder if you would just take that as your turn in this series and let the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont continue without interruption.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you. I will try.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, very much. In fact, I was quite amazed at how quiet it has been.

Debate Continued

MR. HERARD: Anyway, we'll leave the games that are being played aside, and let's deal with the bill. Over the last 10 years improvements in technology and surgical procedures have made it possible for 52 private surgical clinics to perform more than 20,000 relatively minor surgeries every year that formerly were all done in our hospitals. We can all remember, for example, that our children's tonsils probably were done in a hospital, but we don't do those in hospitals anymore.

In the last decade an increasing volume of procedures done safely every day in clinics frees up thousands of hours of hospital operating room time per year and releases expensive hospital beds that cost between $600 and $1,000 a day. This results in improved access for more serious cases that continue to be done in our hospitals. In addition, cancellations due to emergencies are all but eliminated.

Now, this type of cancellation happens all too often, Mr. Speaker. You know, people present themselves at 6 or 7 a.m., prepare for surgery, and wait for hours only to be told that due to an emergency their surgery has been canceled, with relatively no information about when it will be rescheduled and no consideration for what you the patient went through to prepare, only to be disappointed and delayed. Currently more than 150 different types of surgical procedures are done safely every day in existing clinics, but they're currently subject to a 12-hour rule. This in essence prevents the health system from taking advantage of continuous improvements in technology and surgical procedures such as laparoscopic and laser techniques, that continue to be perfected and improve outcomes each year.

Bill 11 removes the 12-hour barrier and empowers the College of Physicians and Surgeons to define which additional new-age minor procedures can be safely done in an accredited clinical facility. There are currently a number of new procedures that could be safely done in a clinic but would require more than 12 hours to ensure appropriate monitoring and recovery. Should the province continue to use the most expensive route to health when every month we all marvel at the new techniques that are implemented by our health care professionals? Why should the regional health authorities be prevented from implementing new accredited advances brought about by an increasing investment in high technology and world-class medical research, that we're so proud of in this province?

Many members of the opposition have asked: why are we doing this now when we may be more than halfway through our second mandate? I mean, why would a politician even consider taking on this kind of an issue late in a mandate? The answer is that a politician would not dare to do that, but a statesman who believes in doing the right thing would do this and is doing this because it is the right thing to do. It's the right thing to do because it ensures that Albertans can take advantage of new medical advancements while controlling costs for future generations. The difference between politicians and statesmen is that politicians do things for re-election and statesmen do things for the next generation. Mr. Speaker, we all know where the politicians are in this Chamber.

I want to speak briefly about how disappointed I am at my fellow human beings across the way for placing partisan politics and their desperate re-election hopes ahead of the good of all Albertans. I say that, Mr. Speaker, knowing that some of those people are pretty decent people individually and they themselves abhor what they're forced to do by a power-hungry leader who will use any tactic to attack the trust that Albertans have of their government.

Mr. Speaker, in life as in politics relationships that are based on truth and honesty thrive and blossom, but those relationships that are based on lies, falsehoods, and bearing false witness soon are rewarded by banishment and defeat. So I say to my colleagues across the way that have forgotten why they're here and rely on falsehoods: the wages of your actions will amount to your defeat.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Before we call on the hon. Leader of her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, may we have unanimous consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, when I was introducing some folks in the gallery earlier, I neglected to note that there's another fellow in the Chamber that I thought deserved some recognition. Each year when I participate in the Forum for Young Albertans, there's a Conservative representative who does such an effective job at presenting the government case that I have to tell the students that he is really much fairer and much more reasonable than the government he's there to represent. I'd invite Ken Chapman to stand and receive the warm recognition of members of the Assembly here this evening.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 11
Health Care Protection Act

Mr. Havelock moved that pursuant to Standing Order 47(1) the question on second reading of Bill 11, Health Care Protection Act, be now put.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel privileged to rise and speak in this Legislature. The fact that this is a motion under Standing Order 47, a motion to choke off debate, to silence Albertans, does not give me pleasure. Nonetheless, I believe it's important that I do rise to speak to this motion.

Interestingly, I note the Government House Leader's concern about this being a closure procedure, but of course we know it is, and former Parliamentary Counsel Mr. Michael Ritter, who had very noble service to this Legislature, said so. Actually, he called it closure by another name today on a radio show. We all know that's in fact what it is, because of course the impact of this government's decision last night to move the question under Standing Order 47 was to have the effect of shutting off those speakers who had not yet had the opportunity to speak on second reading of Bill 11.

Let's look at what kind of a bill this is, Mr. Speaker. Probably in terms of the term of this government, since it took over in 1993, there has not been a more serious issue before this Legislature, one that affects as many citizens as Bill 11 does, one that affects one of the fundamental values of our nation as this one does. Yet after a very short period of time, four partial days, I think 11 hours of debate, not the 700 hours of debate that the minister of international affairs referred to today but rather 700 minutes of debate, on a bill which can have major, major ramifications even if the government members don't wish to address it.

So let's in the first instance establish why this discussion is going on here this evening. It is in order to stop any further discussion, addressing of the issues on second reading by those Members of this Legislative Assembly, who were sent by the voters of their constituencies to represent them in this Legislature. With one fell swoop this government's acting House leader stood last night, and the effect of his words was to shut down debate. It is a shameful display of power. It is a government that does not want to listen to Albertans, and interestingly, you know, Albertans will not be silenced on this issue. They will have the last word.

Mr. Speaker, as we head into this debate this evening, as we talk about this motion, this Standing Order, I as well as my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo would like to welcome the visitors to our gallery, to thank them for being here, to thank them for all their hard work, to thank them for fighting for public health care and doing the work of many more people than their numbers would indicate, for being the spokesmen for public health care in this province, and for providing the kind of leadership that has made sure that it's not just in Alberta in this Legislature that this debate is taking place tonight. This debate, this discussion, this bill has attracted attention right across the country as we see a government that has moved to try and in effect, in fact dismantle our public health care system even if they don't wish to admit it.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to this evening in the time that's allotted to me – and I take it as a privilege as the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition – outline one Canadian's understanding of medicare, how I came to have the views that I hold, why I believe it is wrong to choke off this debate, and why I think it's important that the debate go on and that members are free to speak with the conviction that their constituents give them to speak in this Legislature, not their own, not their party's but their constituents' views.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to begin at the very beginning. Well, I guess it won't be the very beginning, but it'll be something that's pretty monumental in my life, and that is my father's ascent in understanding in terms of health care. My father was born in Prescott, Ontario. He attended Queen's University, where he graduated with a medical doctor's degree. He then did his specialty in England at the Hammersmith hospital in internal medicine, and then throughout his period as a student at Queen's University, something about this province just said to him: you've got to go to Alberta. I don't know what it was. Well, I do know what it was, because now I happen to be privileged to live here.

My father actually decided that from Queen's he would come out and work in Alberta in the summers. He found his way to the Jasper Park Lodge, and he found his way to being a bellman at the Jasper Park Lodge, as so many students from across this country do. I mean, they end up at one of the big CN hotels working for the summer.

Golf was his second love after medicine. He happened to be a very good golfer and happened to find a very good golf course at the Jasper Park Lodge.

I think it's instructive because that early foray into Alberta in his university days at Queen's gave him the conviction that Alberta was where he wanted to return to, and he did. He came back to Alberta in 1937. He was on staff at the Royal Alexandra hospital here in Edmonton. He then met my mother, who was a lab tech, a University of Alberta graduate, and my mother and father were married in 1939. My father then, of course, volunteered for service, as so many of that age did, and while he was initially posted in England, he returned to Canada in his service for the army and became a medical officer here in Alberta.

[Mr. Herard in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, in fact this whole issue in terms of my father's history, the fact that he was a physician is very much germane to this debate. My mom and dad had five children, of which I am the fourth, and here is the debate that was ensuing. I was born in 1948, which makes me 51 years old, and that period, the '50s and early '60s, was the whole period during which the very earliest parts of the Canadian health care system began to be formed: the medical services act in Saskatchewan, the hospital diagnostic act in Saskatchewan. Throughout the '50s there was a good deal of discussion. We've had discussions about it here during Bill 11. That was the period of time leading up to 1963, when some of the early federal work was done to try and promote the Canadian health care system.

Nineteen sixty-three was a very important year in my life. That was the year my father actually passed away. He had a massive heart attack. Even though he was very committed to the public health care system that he'd seen developing, he wasn't able to practise in that system, sadly, but that was exactly the time when medicare was coming in. That time obviously had a very important effect on my life. At the time my brother was just heading into his first year of medical school and graduated from the U of A medical school, as did my younger brother, who followed me, both of whom are now practicing in Alberta in medical specialties.

My own experience as a student took me to the University of Alberta, and after doing my degree, a bachelor of arts, here at the university in languages, French and Russian, I then moved on to study at Universite Laval in Quebec City, and I think this is another piece of this one Canadian's journey in terms of support for and why I so strongly believe in the Canadian health care system.

While I was studying in Quebec, I lived in the old town of Quebec City in an old apartment that was actually an old home that had been rebuilt overlooking the St. Lawrence River just down from the Chateau Frontenac, where the guns shoot over the edge of the walls in this wonderful, wonderful historic city of Canada that is so fundamental to what this country is all about. If we look at the city and living in this city, living there being part of the city was a very important part of my education as a Canadian for it was here that I met my first separatists. This was the time, of course, in 1970 when the Parti Quebecois had elected its first members of the National Assembly, as it's called in Quebec. Its first members from the Parti Quebecois were actually there in Quebec City and two of them, very ardent workers for the Parti Quebecois, lived in the apartment upstairs from me and my girlfriend as we were studying as students at Laval.

You know, the reason why I became so committed to Canada, the reason why I thought it was so important that we look at the Canadian system is because of the Canadian values that I had firsthand experience with right there in Quebec. It was there that I learned about the whole issue of equality, the equality provisions that are so fundamental to the Canadian values that we have. Remember it was on those Plains of Abraham in Quebec City, those gorgeous plains that I used to walk past everyday as I walked my way out of the town to catch my bus to Laval University, where the English defeated the French. But Canada, to its honour I would say, instead of building a country based on the dominance of one culture, decided to build a country based on the equality of two cultures, a model of equality, a fundamental part of what has established Canadian values.

Those equality provisions, of course, have led Canada to be a leader not just as a bicultural nation but as a multicultural nation, a multilingual nation, a nation that believes in the equality of all persons, a nation which has benefited, I believe and have mentioned on so many occasions, from the fact that a former leader of the party which I am privileged to represent, Laurence Decore, took that model of equality that Canada had been built on, that I was experiencing there in Quebec, and in fact drafted the section in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which speaks to the equality of all cultures in Canada given that model of equality from which to build.

So what are the other manifestations of this model of Canadian equality? I would say that the second one is equalization. In other words, there are some provinces that have greater wealth or greater fiscal capacity than other. So what did Canadians do? Did we say that we were going to simply reward the ones with a lot of money and let them grow unfettered and let the poorer ones just sit there and, you know, take the luck of the draw? No. That's not what we did as a nation.

We were a nation that believed in the equality of persons and of regions, so we built into our constitutional framework the decision to ensure that those provinces with less fiscal capacity, those poorer provinces, would benefit from those that were more wealthy, a sharing of the resources of this wonderful country with each other. That's what we did. That's another piece of this puzzle, another piece of this commitment to the equality of Canadians that was built right from the very beginning, what distinguishes us as a nation.

What else, Mr. Speaker? What else gave us Canadian values? What makes us proud as Canadians? What distinguishes us? Well, let's look at another one. Education. Education without question. Unlike our American neighbours to the south in Canada we decided that we as a society, through our progressive income tax system, were going to support the right of every single person in this country to get the best possible education they could. You know, we didn't build our universities and our postsecondary institutions on private funding, on those who could afford to pay. We built them on the basis that all Canadians would have access to education because we deemed it to be a public good. We didn't see it as a private commodity. We saw it as a public good. So education is very much in keeping and consistent with the values that have defined this nation and this province until now.

Finally, let's move to probably the most tangible expression of Canadians' commitment to each other, and that is our public health care system, Mr. Speaker, our public health care system, which has grown to recognize that the risk of illness is shared amongst us all. It isn't one that's based on those who can afford to pay get better care. It is built on the notion that all Canadians, regardless of their ability to pay, should have access to the very best health care we can possibly provide as a nation, as a society, as a community.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, in this one Canadian's journey to here tonight and the reason I believe it is wrong for this government to choke off debate, there was my vision of Canada. I returned to Alberta in 1971, actually got my first job with the newly elected Progressive Conservative government under Peter Lougheed. It was interesting, because, again, in terms of the mandate that Peter Lougheed sought from Albertans at the end of the Socred era, after 35 years, the mandate that Lougheed sought was a mandate very much based on values: values of a world-class health care system, values of a public education system, values that addressed the needs of our seniors, values of the disabled, the AISH program that eventually came, values like human rights, human rights and the equality of all Canadians. Here it was. The very first piece of legislation that the Lougheed government brought into this hallowed Assembly was a piece of legislation called the Individual Rights Protection Act.

What was it about? It was about inclusion, Mr. Speaker. It was about equality. It was about the commonality that we share. It was all about reflecting the equality of Canadians. Mr. Speaker, as my colleague reminds me: look how far we've fallen. Look at the examples and the actions of this government when it comes to taking those values of seniors and pulling them away, the values of the equality of all persons and pulling them away and having arrived at the point where one in five Alberta children live in poverty. That is what's become of a vision that was very sound in '71. In 2000 it has been very seriously tarnished.

Let's move along, Mr. Speaker, move along through those years, the '70s, the early '80s, move to 1982, a very pivotal year in Alberta, a year when actually in the riding of Olds-Didsbury a member of the Western Canada Concept was elected as the MLA in a by-election. That was my first contact, if you like, my first experience not with Quebec separatists as I'd had in my university days in Laval but with Alberta separatists, people who believed that somehow the equality of the provinces should be smashed apart and those with the greatest amount of resources and those with the greatest amount of money would rise to the top and to heck with all the rest. Well, I worked in that 1982 election, and I think it was the election in which I really got the bug. I got the bug to run for public office in that election because I believed there were some things worth fighting for. As I participated as a member of Peter Lougheed's advance team in setting up that election, I realized that this was the kind of thing I wanted to do. It was to fight for some of the things I truly believe in.

As I was preparing my remarks for tonight, it reminded me of how important it is that all of us, all of us, not just talk about the issues that matter to us. The real test of the woman or of the man is the actions we take in order to fight for the things we value for ourselves, yes, absolutely; for our country, of course; but most of all, for our children, for the people that will pass on, and for the concern over what we will pass on to them.

The year 1982 was also a very turbulent time. It was the year in which closure was used once by the Lougheed government, once, Mr. Speaker, in that 15-year reign. Once it was used. Yet here we are again tonight as government is using the same amount of clout and heavy-handedness that an earlier version of them – although that's probably not fair to the Lougheed Conservatives – had used only once.

Let's move from '82 to 1984, because 1984 was a very important part of this standing for the equality and the values of our Canadian health care system. It was in 1984 that the Canada Health Act began to be discussed across Canada, obviously debates about the authority of the federal government to move into an area of provincial jurisdiction. The reasoning was that the federal government needed to ensure that there was a Canada-wide health care system, that there was a principle of portability in that health care system. As a result, the federal government brought forward legislation to present to Parliament on the Canada Health Act and the five principles, which we have thought for some time on this side of the House are extremely important. In Bill 11 we finally see them included in legislation in this province in terms of the work that's being done.

Anyway, let's look at the Canada Health Act. Let's look at the circumstances under which it came in and the debates that carried on in this Legislature. I think it's fair to describe it, Mr. Speaker, as: this was the province that was dragged kicking and screaming into the Canada Health Act. This was the province that wanted to continue the practice of extra billing, thought the federal government was wrong to come in and tell them what kind of health care system to have.

Guess who changed the views of this government in terms of the Canada Health Act? These people, Albertans, changed the views of this government, and the government finally realized they would have to agree with the Canada Health Act because it was the right thing to do. The infamous debates between Dave Russell, the Minister of Health, one of my predecessors in the post, and Monique Begin, who currently is a professor at the University of Ottawa, were debates that were amazing, full of colour, full of vim and vigour, but fortunately for all Canadians, Alberta's difficulty with the Canada Health Act was silenced as the bill passed in 1984.

Mr. Speaker, 1986, a pretty special year for me. I made the decision to seek a nomination for the riding of Edmonton-Glenora. It was a very highly contested nomination, and I'm pleased to stand here and recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder, who also was running in that nomination, and the former Member for Edmonton-

Whitemud. Of course, after Lougheed stepped down, Premier Getty needed to seek a new seat, and the person who was in Edmonton-Whitemud, which had been Premier Getty's former seat, stepped aside, and the Premier ran there. He got the nomination, and the person that had stepped aside for him came to the Edmonton-Glenora riding across the river. I mean, it's a big river; it's a big divide. He came across and sort of said that he wanted to run there. After checking to make sure that it was still an open party, as I had believed it was, and that anyone had the right to run for a nomination, I was assured it did. As a result, I was elected the MLA for Edmonton-Glenora in 1986 and was delighted – delighted – to be appointed the minister of education right off the bat.

Let me move to the issues of 1988 when I was then appointed minister of health, and let me set the context for when I was appointed minister of health. As I say, in 1984 there was the difficulty with the Canada Health Act, and there was extreme difficulty with the relationships within the health care sector. Recall that in 1988 in the spring before I was minister, there had been a nurses' strike in this province, a very divisive one, a very, very difficult one.

You know, in 1987, a year before I became the minister of health, the temperature, the tensions, the difficulty, the turbulence that existed in the health care sector had resulted in the Premier of the day, Premier Getty, taking the very important step of calling in December of 1987 the establishment of the Premier's commission on the future of health care, The Rainbow Report, and I do want to talk a little bit about The Rainbow Report, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important to lay the groundwork, lay the stage for what was happening in health care, because the reality was that there was no trust within the health care system. Nurses had had their right to strike removed in 1982. Physicians were feeling that they couldn't trust administrators to design a system or to develop a plan that was going to serve them. People just didn't trust the health care system.

I remember the instruction from the Premier when he called me: I would like you to take over the health portfolio, and I'm going to combine the old community and occupational health with the hospitals and medical portfolio into a single health portfolio. His instruction to me was: please, take it off the front pages of every newspaper in this province. So, Mr. Speaker, that was the environment. That was the kind of tension and difficulty that existed in health care in 1988 when I took over in September.

So I think it's important to look at The Rainbow Report, and contrary to what the Premier has said on many occasions, The Rainbow Report was not called when I was the minister of health. Rather, it was my predecessor, the hon. Marvin Moore. I was privileged to be the minister to receive The Rainbow Report and to respond on behalf of government.

Let's look at some of the issues within The Rainbow Report, some of the very important context within which The Rainbow Report was developed. Here was a consultation process over a two-year period, Mr. Speaker, chaired by the hon. Lou Hyndman, in whose riding I was privileged to follow as the MLA, who had given me my first job in this Legislative Assembly, and for whom I have the absolute greatest respect for his continuing work as he continues to serve this province in so many, many ways.

Anyway, it was Lou Hyndman who chaired this panel of very distinguished Albertans who did a process of consultation over the two-year period, which was, I guess, a model for what I believe consultation with Albertans is all about. You know, I think Albertans have become a little jaded to this term "consultation" because what they've been subjected to is health summits over a two-day period or a gambling summit for a day and a half or this guise of consultation which goes out when allegedly there's a bill like Bill 11. They do a health summit, they do a blue-ribbon panel, they do all these things. But guess what? They forget to consult with the doctors. You know, it's bizarre, Mr. Speaker, absolutely bizarre.

Anyway, when I think of consultation, when I think of listening to the people of this province, especially on something as fundamentally important as health care, I think the process that was embodied in Bill 11 was a really important indicator of the kind of consultation that needs to go on when something as fundamental as our health care system is debated.

What kind of things did they do? Well, they met with experts. They documented their studies. They actually have something called a bibliography at the back of The Rainbow Report document of the kinds of studies that were reviewed, the kind of responsibility they were prepared to take for the recommendations they made. They went to town hall meetings, unlike the current government, which avoids them at all costs. They went around to the people of this province and asked them what they thought: what do you think about where our health care should be in the year 2005?

Well, it was an amazing response, because The Rainbow Report, like other royal commissions across Canada in the early 1990s, was really a blueprint of what needed to happen in health care. Succinctly put, the conclusion of not just The Rainbow Report but the conclusion of the similar reports from across Canada in the early 1990s, whether it was Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Ontario, or the Maritime provinces – virtually every single province did a commission to look at it. And you know what? There's a striking similarity in terms of the recommendations of all those reports.

The conclusion was basically: there's adequate resources in health care; the key, however, is that we're not spending the dollars to get maximum value out of it. So the recommendation was not about increasing support for health care but about reorganizing the way we deliver health care, taking advantage of the technology advancements but also not just switching away from hospital services, which had been part of the planning that had been going on for many, many years, but building a community support infrastructure to receive the people who were being given short stays in the hospital and who could, with the appropriate development of that community model, prevent people from getting into the institutions in the first place. The implications of that little nugget of reform, that new direction for health care in Canada, and the consistent review of all the provinces across Canada is what led to government responding to The Rainbow Report, a role that I had the privilege to chair.

Mr. Speaker, The Rainbow Report, as you would know, didn't just talk about health care services. The Rainbow Report was this broad-reaching effort to link issues like educational achievement with poverty indicators, with health reform, with youth who were having difficulty, whether it was with addictions, whether it was with falling into the criminal justice system. There were lots of things we could do to live up to the goal of The Rainbow Report, which was healthy Albertans living in a healthy Alberta.

Let's look at the response to The Rainbow Report. As a result, there were actually 12 ministries that came together, which I was privileged to chair, who then worked out a response to The Rainbow Report, an action plan that each ministry would then commit to carrying out the goals that were identified in The Rainbow Report. That response came in December of 1991, and I think it's important to put it on the record because, as I say, the process was massive and it led to many, many of the recommendations being accepted, such as the establishment of a health service innovation fund, establishment of a health unit, health facility partnership adventure, the establishment of a collaborative process to develop health goals for the province of Alberta – what a concept – and the development of role statements for all the health partners, not just the health functions but health partners; in other words, this broad 12-department co-ordination exercise to develop a grid, if you like, a framework within which public policies could be analyzed to make sure that we were delivering programs that met the test of building towards healthier Albertans. I mean, it was quite a wonderful context.

MR. DICKSON: It didn't require $600 million being cut out of the health care budget?

MRS. MacBETH: No, it didn't require dollars being cut out of the health care system, and I will get on to that, Member for Calgary-Buffalo, if you just give me a moment here.

Many of the recommendations of course were accepted. A Health Ethics Centre, ethics of course rising to the top in terms of that with this technology is the need for ethical decision-making. Increased emphasis on health promotion, very much in keeping with the goals of The Rainbow Report.

But there were some recommendations of The Rainbow Report that were not accepted after this very broad consultation. One was the recommendation of The Rainbow Report to establish personal health budgets for Albertans. We hear this notion coming out again. In fact, I'm reminded of the research we've seen in recent months where this whole notion of giving people a personal health budget to manage for themselves would somehow give them the incentive to be healthier, and I suppose with some people that might be the case. But what about someone whose behaviour, if you like, hasn't led to their ill health? What about a child that's born with AIDS? What about that? Is that child responsible for his own health? Does that mean that his allotment for a personal health budget will only go so far and then: oh, sorry; it doesn't follow anymore. And while that's not a completely thorough review of the recommendation, it was the wisdom of the government of the day to refuse that recommendation.

Next we had the establishment of a supplementary health insurance plan. That was rejected by the government of the day, the supplementary insurance plan. Of course, it was this whole notion that was very much there in the minds of some Albertans at least, some of whom were even in the government, that somehow there should be a supplementary plan for this whole notion of enhanced services for people that could buy their way into better health care services than someone else. Well, in the wisdom of that 12-department review, that notion of a supplementary health insurance plan was rejected. It was not accepted as a recommendation.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The other recommendation that was rejected, interestingly enough, was the establishment of nine autonomous health authorities to manage health services across the province. Interestingly, one of the reasons why this whole notion of the regional authorities was rejected was because members of the caucus, of which I was one, thought this would create what they called a superboard, a superboard that would have the ability to kind of run the health care in the region, that would sort of take precedence over other boards that might have a very important role. As a result, the nine autonomous health authorities was rejected, but what was accepted was the whole notion of describing the role of reaching out beyond health care to look at access to the services that were needed to make a healthier population.

10:20

Just before closing on The Rainbow Report, I think it's very important to clarify the record, because there have been some completely inaccurate statements in this Assembly about what The Rainbow Report recommended, and there are two of those statements that are very key to this. First of all, The Rainbow Report was very, very clear, Mr. Speaker. The Rainbow Report recommended level spending in health care. The Rainbow Report did not utter one word about cuts of 30 percent to our hospitals, what followed in 1992. The Rainbow Report did not talk about . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, if you disagree with the hon. leader, you're free to get up and take your turn and speak, but for quite some time we've by and large each been listening politely to one side after another. Let us continue that for the rest of the evening and in the morning.

The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for your intervention.

Debate Continued

MRS. MacBETH: So what didn't The Rainbow Report recommend? It did not recommend cuts. No, Mr. Speaker, it didn't. It recommended that the dollars that were being allocated to health care should be reorganized and that it shouldn't all be in a state heavily weighted towards acute care and towards the institutional side, which frankly will always carry the greatest portion of the dollars because it's the most expensive piece of the system. But very, very important was the reallocation of dollars towards the community, towards supporting things like mental health services in the community, towards making sure that the community was ready to prevent institutionalization – and this is such a fundamental issue when it comes to long-term care and mental health services – and also to be there when people exited from the health care system after perhaps a major surgery, after perhaps an intervention with respect to mental health services.

Let's be absolutely clear. The Rainbow Report did not recommend that there be cuts to the degree that Albertans have borne over the last decade in this province, which were brought about by this government contrary to the recommendations of The Rainbow Report.

Mr Speaker, there is a second action that this government took and in fact is the subject of this discussion on Bill 11. The second action which this government took which was not recommended by The Rainbow Report was the proliferation and the growth and the attention being paid to the private sector in health care. What has led to a 50 percent increase in the size of the private-sector involvement in health care was not recommended in The Rainbow Report. The Rainbow Report was committed to taking the resources that we have in the public health care system and getting better value out of them, plain and simple. That's what I believe was the most fundamental mistake this government has made. The combination of their cuts and the growth and proliferation of the private sector in health care have led us to where we are today, where this government now wants to legislate the role of that private sector forevermore. It is a despicable action to take in response to a public health care system which is value based and so important to the people of this province.

Mr. Speaker, here we have The Rainbow Report, which I was privileged to receive, and then as I mentioned, the 12 departments co-ordinated the response. I was privileged to chair that. The job, I guess my job as the minister of health, was to then take The Rainbow Report and from the response by the government at the end of 1991 to work with the health care sector to come up with a plan for the future.

Part of that discussion was the ambulatory care policy, Mr. Speaker, because there was the notion that the private sector would be a better way, in the view of some, to develop our health care system. I didn't share that view. The first words out of my mouth when I was chosen as the minister of health in 1988, in September, were that I was a very strong proponent of the Canada Health Act, that I always had been and always would be.

Anyway, I actually had colleagues at the time, Mr. Speaker, who said to me: "How can you possibly say that? Think of all the fights this government had on the Canada Health Act." I said: "Well, so be it. I'm the minister of health, for the time being at least, and I believe that the Canada Health Act is probably one of the crowning glories in Canada in terms of legislation through the Parliament of Canada." I still think so.

So, Mr. Speaker, let's look at what led to the ambulatory care policy, which presumably this government sent in the brown envelope to the newspaper a couple of weeks ago. I've actually had it here in my desk, and because it was a document that went to cabinet and went to caucus, I was sort of thinking: should I make it public or shouldn't I? I withheld it, and then all of a sudden I find that in fact it has been leaked. As a result, I thought it would be okay to refer to it. Of course, it was referred to in the Consumers' Association of Alberta's study, which actually reminded me of the ambulatory care policy, because of course it was the policy that started to look at this whole notion of the proliferation or at least the desire of the private sector to expand.

Ever since medicare was established in the mid-60s, the percentage that's been allotted, if you like, to the private delivery of care, whether it's plastic surgery or physician services or physiotherapy or any of those kinds of services, has been around the 20, 21 percent mark. It was solid; it was really very consistent on that mark from 1963 right through to 1992. But guess what? In 1992, aah, it took a great big jump. That was when the 50 percent jump took place, Mr. Speaker.

But let me back up a little bit. As the minister of health I knew that there was a lot of pressure. In fact, I had lots of people that were very strong proponents for private care, many of the same who are now spokesmen, on the side of them, for expanding the role of the private sector. As a result, I brought forward, with the help of the very capable people within the department of health at the time, an ambulatory care services discussion paper. You know, unlike the government of today, these are the kinds of documents that then went out for discussion with medical groups, nursing groups. It was kind of: let's identify the issues with private care; let's make sure that we are building a very sustainable health care system instead of just writing a blank cheque to the private sector, which of course has been what has happened over the last eight years.

MR. DICKSON: Sort of a white paper.

MRS. MacBETH: Yeah, it was a bit of a white paper. It was a discussion paper, and I think it's very important to put the ambulatory care paper in context. Of course it's tabled, and if any of our visitors here tonight would like to take a look at it, they might find a very useful document in terms of what was proposed in 1991. If it had been enacted, in fact Alberta wouldn't be having to deal with the mess that's been created over the last eight years by this government.

Saskatchewan and Ontario, especially Ontario, had put in place a legislative framework to control the independent health facilities that because of technology were able to deliver services offsite of the hospital but would be able to be controlled, and there wouldn't be this difficulty with enhanced services. Of course, Ontario's legislation stopped it. Saskatchewan was very much working with Alberta, and they in fact brought their legislation in following up on Ontario's.

It's interesting, I think, to note in this discussion paper that I put out in 1991 a very pivotal issue, a very important issue, and one that's the subject of this bill, because what is ambulatory care? What does it mean?

I think it's important to put on the record what the definition of ambulatory care is in this paper, Mr. Speaker. Ambulatory care is defined as "the mode of service provision that requires the patient to ambulate [walk] to the location of the provider and leave on the same day after receiving care." So what does that mean? Well, what it means is no overnight stays. This was about services that could be delivered on an outpatient basis beyond the hospital walls but needed to be co-ordinated, but it ruled out overnight stays.

It talked about the model of the Ontario legislation. We knew that there were people in Alberta who were very, very much interested in setting up private facilities, but instead of doing what the Canada Health Act would have permitted them to do, which was basically set them up completely outside of the health care system, which of course the Canada Health Act does and always has permitted, these people wanted to have a framework, an ability to take a piece of the public health care system to deliver with public dollars in a private setting. Well, that was exactly the reason why this paper was developed, to stop that practice, to put a legislative framework in place so that those community services, not overnight but community services, would have the legislative framework that was needed.

Well, guess what, Mr. Speaker? It didn't get approved. It was very clear that the government, the caucus was not prepared to go along with these recommendations. You know, Mr. Speaker, as a minister I was very disappointed. I thought it was the right way to go, but rather than stay focused on that, I decided to dedicate my energies for the next year and a half towards building a plan for health care on the assumption that this ambulatory care policy would be brought in in due course. However, the government chose to ignore it, to their peril I would say, because had this policy been in place we wouldn't be having the discussion we're having on Bill 11 right now.

MR. DICKSON: And Albertans wouldn't be paying that price.

MRS. MacBETH: That's right. Just one other point, and the Member for Calgary-Buffalo reminds me. I think it's important to look at Bill 11 in context. Bill 11, as we know, not only takes these community services that are being delivered offsite of the hospital; it allows, of course, overnight stays. It allows the opening of the door towards private-sector care provision. Overnight is a very key point in the delivery of health care. It's that whole issue of admission to a health care facility, which is very different from simply walking in and getting the service one needs on a short-stay basis, not overnight.

As well, this paper, unlike what the government is proposing in Bill 11, would have included the private MRIs. This paper would have included the diagnostic, the fertility clinics, all of those things that are not covered by the surgical procedures only that are covered in Bill 11. That's another one of the gaping holes in the legislation. It goes too far on overnight stays, and it avoids the whole area of diagnostic, fertility, mental health, home care, nursing services that should be part of the framework of delivery.

Mr. Speaker, the framework for the future was then a major job that I had and was privileged to have as minister of health. The framework was really developed by working with every conceivable group in health care and often spread beyond health care as the communities came together to look at how we could take the dollars that were allocated in health care and recast them to build this community support base which was so necessary and so unanimously endorsed by the provinces across Canada. It was probably, I must say, one of the most exciting times in health care policy. The credit for coming up with the plan that was there by the fall of 1992 went to Albertans. The credit went to the many, many, many people – health care providers, community groups, health units, municipal councilors, MLAs – everybody that worked so hard to come up with this plan, which I was privileged to build.

Mr. Speaker, let's remember the context. Dollars were very, very tight. It was a very difficult time, and Alberta was living with a very tight fiscal framework. I would like to talk a little bit about the record of that time just for a couple of moments. With regard to health care over that period of time, contrary – and this was so well documented in the Taft/Steward report on Clear Answers: The Economics and Politics of For-Profit Medicine. The Taft/Steward report quoted this government as saying that they had to do the cuts because, quote, health care spending was out of control. Do you remember that? Do you remember those lines? Albertans had to be punished because the so-called health care spending was out of control.

Well, let's look at the record. Let's just put it out there and say what really was happening over that four-year span. This is, of course, something that I've tabled, but I think it's important for the members that are here this evening to know and to know that the credit goes to Albertans for the incredible cost control that was going on in Alberta from '88 to '92.

These are figures from the health information of Health Canada, very valid figures – I'm happy to table them – showing that Alberta from the period of '87 to '91 had the best cost control record, in real terms 1.3 percent growth on average over that four-year period. Now, that's pretty substantial, Mr. Speaker, when the Canadian average was 3 percent. One point three percent. That's to the credit of Albertans, who were living with very tight controls but who were moving towards something. That's what gave it the energy. That's why it came off the front pages of the newspaper. People were working. They knew there was a plan. They knew there was a way out of the difficult situation we were in.

Put another way, I think if we look at all the other provinces, we can look at the fact that Alberta's spending was kept at the national average, in fact slightly below the national average, as we moved through that period. Very, very different from the spin that was put on by the provincial government of the day to say to Albertans: everything's out of control, the sky is falling. Well, there's the record.

I think, as well, in terms of the record that it was important to reorganize the way that health care dollars were spent. I've already touched on that and of course the push toward privatization even with that very, very tight fiscal framework within which we were operating in Alberta. There was no growth in the private-sector delivery of service, Mr. Speaker. It stayed in that 20, 21, 22 percent range, where it had been for the previous 30 years.

Mr. Speaker, let's move on to '93, a new era, a new party. Some have suggested that in fact the name of the party should have been changed back in '93, suggestions of things like the Mayo Clinic north came to be, all of those notions of Alberta being up for sale, including the health care system. It was a very different time and a very disturbing time for a lot of people who had worked for a government and for a party that had seemed to support the notion of good management and sustainable health care, but that kind of came to a screeching halt once '93 hit.

I know the government doesn't like to be reminded of the facts in this issue of the cuts that were done to health care. It's very painful, but let's put it on the record just one more time. The cuts to the public hospital budget in the mid-90s was a 30 percent cut in the words of the Robert Evan's study that was focused, and of course . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, if you wish to dispute any of the things that the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition is saying, do so in your turn but having a chorus – this is not a choir, and you certainly aren't a choir. Could we just let . . . [interjection] Hon. minister, could we just let the hon. leader give her speech, and then if you wish to refute any or all of the things that she said, you're free to do so in the spirit of debate. Let us hear it.

Hon. leader.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know they get a little touchy. They don't like hearing the truth. The truth is here in the Evan's report, and if they don't like hearing about the 30 percent cut in public hospitals that took place in the '90s, which is the truth, they can go to the latest numbers coming out of the Canadian Institute for Health Information, which has shown that in fact it was just under 30 percent at about 28 percent. So, you know, the numbers speak for themselves. It talks about public hospitals and the cuts that took place in public hospitals. If they would actually read the information that's available to them, the kind of incredible information that this awesome opposition has put forward in fighting this legislation, they would be better informed, and frankly they'd be able to answer the concerns that are raised by their constituents in town hall meetings across this province.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to look at some of the issues that of course are very important. While this whole issue of hospitals being cut by 30 percent was going on in '94, guess what else was happening, just as an aside to my comments? This was when the West Edmonton Mall deal was being financed, when Albertans were being put on the hook for a $400 million debt that we don't know the end of. The same time as they were cutting hospitals by 30 percent in this province.

As well, let's look at 1994. A very important thing happened, you know. The other provinces in the meantime were watching Alberta, watching what was going on in Alberta in 1994, and they were watching it from the point of view of health care and especially from the point of view of private health care. Now, remember, by this time Ontario's passed legislation; Saskatchewan is developing its legislation, doing the work of trying to control this private-sector growth.

I think it's important to put on the record a meeting of health ministers in September of 1994, when federal, provincial, and territorial ministers of health discussed a number of issues, including the Canada Health Act, co-operation, and especially the whole issue of private clinics. It's important to put this one on the record, Mr. Speaker, and I'm going to read from the communique of the health minister's wrap-up of that September '94 meeting.

A small number of private clinics have recently been established which provide some insured health services for which the patients are charged a service or facility fee.

Well, we know what happened there.

Ministers [federal, provincial, and territorial] are concerned that continued growth in the number of such private clinics could lead to the development of a private system of health care in which people who can pay will get faster access.

Is the picture coming into view?

Such a system would have a negative impact on the publicly funded services available in Canada, where access is based on medical need. It was noted that Alberta is still reviewing the issue of private clinics and has not reached conclusions regarding their role and impact on the health system in Alberta.

Well, guess what? Alberta didn't go along with the plan to build a public system and to control the growth of the private sector.

It goes on. This is September of '94.

Ministers of Health agreed [all except Alberta] to maintain a high quality, publicly funded medicare system and agreed they will take whatever steps are required to regulate the development of private clinics in Canada. Alberta reserved inclusion in the regulatory strategy until its review . . . [was] concluded.

Well, here we are in 2000. Presumably their review is concluded, and the result is Bill 11, which, as we know, opens up private, overnight stay, surgical clinics-cum- private hospitals and ignores the private MRIs and all the other diagnostic services that should be covered. So an important part of the record, Mr. Speaker.

Let's move on, then, to Bill 37 and the first attempt to expand the private clinic role in Alberta. You know, this has been this whole debate over listening to who stands to benefit in terms of this piece of the public system being offered to private operators on a for-profit basis. Well, those who stand to benefit are those who can make a business out of it or, as I quoted in my remarks a week ago tonight, actually on the 4th of April, those few specialty physicians. Those are the ones who stand to benefit from this enabling of private, for-profit health care, medicare, to be delivered and which of course Bill 11 cements in the laws and statutes of this province.

I wanted to look at some of the excellent work that's been done by researchers, international, Canadian, and Albertan. I will do a little bit of a review of those documents. I was reminded of the health summit that many of us attended. In fact, I attended and sat with the hon. Member of Edmonton-Meadowlark, and many others of us were there, and we were privileged to hear Dr. Tom Noseworthy when he made his opening remarks at the health summit in 1999.

Of course, Dr. Noseworthy was with the department of public health services, the Faculty of Medicine and Dentistry at the University of Alberta. He was a member of the National Forum on Health, which made such important recommendations for the Canadian health care system last year. He's someone that has a lot of experience in health care. He was an intensive care physician, an emergency physician. His remarks at the health summit were wonderful. They were tremendous remarks. You know, I actually am one of those people that keeps every piece of – oh, I don't know; I'm a bit of a health care junkie, I guess. I keep all these wonderful reports, and as I was going through that pile of reports in my office, I came across Dr. Noseworthy's remarks. I remember the discomfort of the government MLAs in the room when he made his plea that we shut off the leak of the private sector. He said, "Get rid of it. Dump it. Forget it. Stop it. Work on the public system, and the private system will go where it needs to go, which is wherever it needs to go."

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I thought it was important to look at this whole issue of healthy Albertans and to look at the issue of the illness patterns, which Dr. Noseworthy talked about so eloquently in his presentation. You know, he said that it isn't just about the money we spend on health care. It's all about how healthy our citizens are. He went through some of the most incredible statistics, which I think are worth reading into the record in terms of the health status of Albertans.

Do you remember that little bit I spoke to you about, the health goals in The Rainbow Report? Well, these indicators are the kind of indicators that we need to improve upon. I think any of us as legislators need to listen to some of these numbers and make sure that we develop healthy public policy. It's not about trying to find a role for the private sector, that this government is so hung up on. It's about trying to build a health care system that makes our citizens healthier.

So let's look at some of the reality of the statistics. These are the ones that the government doesn't really want to show and with good reason. They're not very pretty. It shows that "injury is the leading cause of death for [those] from 1 to 44 years" of age in this province, 1 to 44; preventable, avoidable injuries, Mr. Speaker.

- Injury accounts for more potential years of life lost than any other disease.
- On average, 3.6 people [in Alberta] die every day due to injury.
- Comparing all provinces, Alberta's rate of injury hospitalization ranks second behind Saskatchewan.
- Injuries lead to hospitalization over 30,000 times every year and costed the hospital system approximately $524 million from 1985 to 1990.

This is Alberta, Mr. Speaker. These are the Alberta statistics. This is what needs our attention.

- Injuries, whether intentional or unintentional, fatal or non-fatal, result in tremendous financial and productivity costs.

Look at the costs of injury in terms of our economy. Look at the workers that this wonderful Member for Edmonton-Glengarry spoke to yesterday when he made the presentation to the WCB report.

- Motor Vehicle Collisions:
In 1997, 391 Albertans died from motor vehicle collisions. That is more than one death every day, all year.

That's unacceptable, Mr. Speaker. Why aren't we having legislation in this Legislature that looks to how we can improve the health status of Albertans instead of how we can enable the private sector to make a buck off the public health care system.

Let's look at the statistics of suicide. "The suicide rate [in Alberta] is higher than the rest of Canada," an indictment, Mr. Speaker.

- In 1997, more Albertans died of suicide than of motor vehicle collision injuries.
- Falls:
The rate of in-patient hospitalization is 24% higher [in Alberta] than the national average.

Why is that? Don't you think that's a worthwhile thing for us to start to probe so that we can eliminate the amount of injury from people falling? Look at our older people and the number of falls they have. What are they doing about it? Nothing.

- Work Place Safety:
From 1993 to 1997 work place fatalities increased [in this province] by 56%.

These are Dr. Noseworthy's numbers, Mr. Speaker.

- Gun control:
The rate of children killed with guns is almost twice the national average, and it is in fact comparable to the combined rates of Israel and Northern Ireland.

The death of children killed with guns, Mr. Speaker. What are we doing when we're not working to bring that rate down?

- Sport and Recreation:
In 1997, an estimated 194,310 injuries, or 532 per day, requiring medical attention resulted from participation in sport and recreational activities.

You know, we can teach our kids to be safer. We can do it. We can make a goal that we're going to reduce the number of young people having sport-related injuries. We can bring it down. That's what health goals are all about, Mr. Speaker, and it's not happening in Alberta.

To quote Dr. Noseworthy:

Death does save the health care system money, but it's hardly a strategy worth pursuing. This naturally shifts to the common rhetoric – to fix this problem all we have to do is to keep people healthy. The logic is absolutely inescapable. The reality is anything but.

That's what we need to be working on, Mr. Speaker, not on private health care, that this government wants to pursue.

Let's move to some of the other studies. We've extensively quoted the U.S. studies that show that private health care is more expensive, that the waiting lists are longer when it's a private, for-profit mix with a public system. In fact, many, many studies will show that the quality of care deteriorates in the private sector because of course there are different motives than what exists in the public health care system.

Let's look at some of the studies that have been done. I just want to cite them because I think they're really important. In Britain, a wonderful study by John Yates, the Institute of Healthcare Management. Interestingly, this is the study, the Cam Donaldson paper, that the government of course hid from the view of Albertans, the one that we've brought forward which shows that there is no evidence – remember? – in their preliminary study. The Cam Donaldson study is an interesting one. Of course, we brought it out because the government refused to. This was one they'd commissioned with their own Health and Wellness ministry.

This study showed that there wasn't any evidence to support this push to privatization which was being proposed in Bill 11, but the government responded to the fact that they'd kept it hidden for quite some time by saying: well, it's only an interim study. Of course, this is very germane to this debate here; isn't it? Because the amendment last night that we proposed or one of the amendments that I think we could have proposed would have been to take the interim report of the Cam Donaldson paper – you know, take Bill 11 off the Order Paper and wait until the final results of the Cam Donaldson paper come forward before going down this blank path with absolutely no research to justify where they're going. They wouldn't even do that. They're so bent on giving the private sector a role in taking up public health care.

Anyway, the basis of that Donaldson paper is here, and I would refer any members to Private Eye, Heart and Hip by John Yates, an excellent study.

I think the only piece I just was reviewing tonight, which is well worth noting – I know I can find it if I just take two seconds to do it. It cites the British health care service where, of course, physicians can practice in the public system and the private system. It took 16 surgeons who were operating in both the private and the public system and compared the waiting lists of those surgeons, depending on whether they were in a national health services clinic, which of course is the public system, or in a private group, and it was very instructive.

The waiting list for an orthopedic appointment with one surgeon was 14 weeks in the national health services clinic, but for the same surgeon who was operating in the private sector, guess how long the wait list was there. Three weeks. Imagine: three weeks in comparison in the private clinic. Let's take another surgeon. Another surgeon had in his national health services service a 23-week waiting list, 23 weeks, Mr. Speaker, for working in the public system, for someone that was followed by the public system. This same surgeon with the 23-week wait in the public system: guess how much it was in the private system. One week. He's operating in both systems. Why is that? Well, I'd refer members to the John Yates study. They might learn a little bit about why Albertans are so concerned about this legislation.

In Canada, of course, we have some excellent studies that have come up, and I really applaud the health care economists, the people who have been working on health care policy for many, many years in this province. We had five of them come together. I've never seen five researchers come together and collaborate on a study as Robert Evans, Morris Barer, Steven Lewis, Michael Rachlis, and Greg Stoddart did in Private Highway, One-Way Street, an excellent, excellent review.

This study, of course, repeats the 30 percent cut in public hospitals that Alberta put into place. This is the paper that reviews Bill 11, the one that many, many Albertans have been able to read because they've pulled it off the web site. It says – and we all know this, but I think it's worth quoting into the record – that “a unique feature of the recent Alberta proposal,” i.e. Bill 11, that is the principal focus of this paper, “is to allow private for-profit facilities to be the site of overnight care covered under the [Canada Health Act].”

It goes on, but I think the conclusion of the study is a very important one. It says:

Stripped to the bone . . .

Stripped to the bone, Mr. Speaker.

. . . the Alberta proposal appears to be little more than taking lousy odds on a very small payoff, and gambling with the health of Canada's health care system, for the sake of a few Alberta health care providers who would stand to gain considerably in the short term. It is troubling that the rest of Canada has been so slow to take notice of [what's going on in] Alberta, and that the premier has taken so little notice of Albertans' vehement objections.

Which brings me, Mr. Speaker, to what we're doing here tonight. Over and above Albertans' vehement objections to this legislation is a government that after 11 hours – 11 hours – have to move closure to keep Albertans quiet, to silence them, and it is a completely unacceptable . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Two things. One, we have the hon. Government House Leader rising on a point of order.

Secondly, the chair would rise on a point of decorum. We're getting people shouting at the leader, disputing whatever it is that she is saying. That's perfectly fine for you to do, but we prefer that you do it during your speech on second reading, not while the hon. leader is making her speech.

Now, a point of order, the hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j). I've listened for the most part quietly to the hon. Leader of the Opposition's 90 minutes of discussion tonight or almost 90 minutes – it will be in 10 minutes – but I can't sit quietly while she makes allegations that a member of the House moved closure, when in fact closure has not been moved on this bill. In fact, the only reason that this member is speaking tonight for 90 minutes is because she has the opportunity to do so because debate has been extended by a Standing Order 47 motion, which allows every member of this House one more opportunity to speak on this bill. So it's totally inappropriate for her to make the allegation that closure has been moved, when in fact closure has not been moved in any way, shape, or form.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the point of order.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I take your gesture and as always your helpful direction. I'm going to focus specifically on the point of order raised by the Government House Leader. He suggests in some fashion that what happened last night was not a form of closure. Well, I am astonished that the Government House Leader, who we assume is conversant with the parliamentary authorities, is not familiar with the citation which makes it abundantly clear. It's in Erskine May, which specifically says that to move that the previous question be not now put is a form of closure. It's not always styled closure, but that's the reality. If the Government House Leader has forgotten his parliamentary procedure, let me remind him. What it prevents the opposition from doing is moving amendments at second reading. We moved one amendment. We had at least two other solid amendments to move.

How many times have we heard in this House the Premier say: “Bring your amendments forward. We'll deal with your amendments. Have you got amendments to the bill? Bring them in”? So what happens, Mr. Speaker? Last night we come in. We have a number of amendments. We move the first amendment. It's debated and we vote on it, and the Deputy Government House Leader is on his feet insisting that the question be now put. What is that if it's not a form of closure? It prevents any further amendments being put.

You know, Mr. Speaker, if we'd had the opportunity, we might have moved an amendment that would say: let's defer any further consideration of this until we see the final report, not just the interim report. The health minister went on the other day about how important it was that we see the final report from the institute and Cam Donaldson and his colleague. Well, fine. Let's park Bill 11. Let's park it until we get the final report. That might have been the amendment we would have brought forward. We weren't afforded that opportunity.

Frankly, I'm astonished that the Government House Leader would suggest in any way, shape, or form that what happened last night was not a form of closure. That's contrary to the parliamentary authorities, it's contrary to the experience of anybody that's been in this Assembly for more than six months, and it's certainly contrary to what in fact was said in the course of debate.

Now, I may have colleagues that want to participate in the point of order as well, Mr. Speaker. I think it's of particular concern when the Government House Leader rises on a point of order. We assume that he's doing so with deliberate thought and with a careful plan, and I expect there may be colleagues that want to offer their opinions. This is an important matter for him to interrupt the Leader of the Official Opposition while she's using the time that's allotted to her under our Standing Orders.

Those are the observations I want to make at this point on the point of order.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, as the hon. member for Calgary-Buffalo has indicated, there has been an interruption in the flow of the speech by the Leader of the Opposition. It is a point of order. That's perfectly legitimate in the scheme of things if there is a point of order. Citing his reasons, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has counteracted the thoughts of the hon. Deputy Government House Leader. Before we enter into a back and forth, there has to be a back and forth, and so far there's been a this and this and there's nothing coming from the other side.

The chair would make a couple of observations. First of all, the original citation, as I recall it, by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader is 23(h), (i), and (j), which we can all remind ourselves are from the Standing Orders of this House. It's "makes allegations against another member." There was the inference, the allegation that someone brought in closure – and that was definitely a member – that the hon. Minister of Economic Development did do that, and it has been referenced before. So that would fit. Now, whether or not it is a proper allegation is the second thing.

"Imputes false or unavowed motives to another member" is (i). I didn't get the sense that that was being alleged here.

"Uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." Certainly, while the hon. Deputy Government House Leader did speak before he was able to issue his thoughts, the chair saw fit to intervene because disorder was coming perhaps with the nature and the enthusiasm which the speaker was using, and that's "language of a nature likely to create disorder."

Now, ending the comments, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader got into the whole business of whether it's closure or whether it's not closure. Then we have the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo saying that Erskine May, which would be the third reference that we use, says that it is a kind of closure. Then one could also probably find someone who might say that amendments at second reading are not amendments which actually bring anything to the bill. They're all negating, as has been brought up before. The three kinds of amendments are a hoist, which kills the bill; a reasoned amendment, which kills the essence of the bill; or the referral of the subject matter, which again does that. So what we're getting here is a debate over what's closure and what isn't closure, is a kind of closure. I suppose one could get into a debate that the referral of a subject matter to a committee is a kind of filibuster, and that really isn't helpful to the debate, it seems to the chair.

I would say that there is language that's likely to cause disorder in the House when we are characterizing it with a pejorative word like closure. Whether or not that's intended, it has resulted in a kind of dispute. I wonder if we could continue the debate without interruptions and hopefully to a peaceful conclusion.

The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was quoting from The Deklein and Fall of Canadian Medicare. There were a couple of other quotes I just wanted to cite in this whole review of some of the excellent Canadian and Alberta literature that has been produced. I quote from the report: "Moreover, relative to provincial GDP, the Alberta government's expenditure on hospitals was, in 1999, estimated to be 22.4% below the national average." Those numbers, of course, are from the Canadian Institute for Health Information, and I think it's a very important point.

Finally, we have a government – and in fact there were members this evening who stood up and said that there was no queue-jumping going on in Alberta. Let me quote again from the report Deklein and Fall of Canadian Medicare? where it says:

The latter case is illustrated by private MRI facilities in Alberta offering accelerated services for patients waiting for MRI in the public system. The private facility is permitted to offer patients an immediate MRI scan, at their own expense . . . In effect, then, the private clinic is profiting by selling patients the possibility of earlier access to public facilities, of queue-jumping.

There it is, Mr. Speaker, right there in the report.

Now, there are a couple more I want to make sure I get to before my 90 minutes have expired, and that is to put on the record the excellent work done by Michael Rachlis in terms of being very much a supporter of public health care in this country, a wonderful speaker who, of course, spoke to a public forum sponsored by the Alberta Liberal Party on the weekend and gave an excellent, excellent address, Mr. Speaker. But I wanted to note the letter to the editor in chief at the Edmonton Journal wherein he basically wanted to respond to the letter which was sent by the Alberta minister of international and intergovernmental affairs talking about the whole issue of NAFTA, which, of course, we know is a major concern in terms of the impact of Bill 11.

I think the key point that's made in the Rachlis letter, as has been made in countless studies – but here it is in two pages, and it's kind of easy to get through – is that the risk of the impact of Bill 11 and the possibility of a ruling by an international tribunal is enough to make most people say: let's not go down this road. That is the point. This government has no right to stand up and say that there will be no problem with NAFTA, when in fact there are many, many arguments to say that there may or there may not. At least they could admit that there is a risk, and that's what the reports show.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on about the U.S. and Canadian health care costs, the advantages to our employers in this country for public health care. I gave remarks to the Calgary Chamber of Commerce on February 9, which I'd actually be pleased to table in the Assembly, where I outlined the benefits to Canada of our public health care system and the huge disadvantage that would accrue if we moved along the lines of the American system in terms of costs to our employers in this country. So the evidence is clearly there.

[Mr. Herard in the chair]

I want to note in terms of Alberta as well in the few minutes I have left the excellent economic overview done by Richard Plain of the department of economics and public health at the University of Alberta, someone who actually has worked very, very hard for this provincial government but who is obviously a little distressed by Bill 11. I would like to cite an excellent paper done by Donna Wilson, who is someone who has done incredible work as a volunteer to attend health forums right across this province, who has worked tirelessly, and who is a strong, strong advocate for public health care. She has not just talked about it; she has put it into action in her report, a 10-point critique that is also available on her web site and an excellent review of the problems with Bill 11. Another excellent Alberta study is from Laura Shanner, a PhD at the John Dosssetor Health Ethics Centre, on the ethical concerns about Bill 11, an excellent, excellent review from a different perspective.

So here we have the economic reviews, the nursing reviews, the medical reviews, the ethical reviews, all of them pointing to what a disaster Bill 11 is, if only this government would just listen.

I tabled in the Legislative Assembly today, Mr. Speaker, the polls. Polls are a measure of the concern that Albertans have. These polls are unanimous, whether it's the Angus Reid poll, the A-Channel poll, or the one released today by the Canadian Union of Public Employees. All of them assert that by far the majority of Albertans are opposed to Bill 11. Interestingly, the more Albertans get to know Bill 11, the more they're opposed. That's what we're seeing as the trend line goes on the polling information. Yet what happens in this provincial Legislature? The government is ignoring the polls. They're ignoring the town hall meetings. They're not attending to the issues. The Premier refuses to do the debate with me, and I can understand why because here is the pile of evidence just in tonight's debate to show that where they're going is wrong, wrong, wrong.

So, Mr. Speaker, I could certainly go on, but my time is nearly up. I want to say that of course this whole issue of telling some of our members, including members on the government side, that as a result of this Standing Order 47 and this motion that the question be put, the impact is to finish off debate, to not allow any more amendments to come forward, amendments that we think would be very useful. Let's remember that we're at the point of discussing the principles of this legislation, the principles which Albertans find abhorrent, yet it is on the principles that this government has decided that, no, the guillotine will go down and there will be no more amendments, no more discussion before we get into the bill. They can call it what they want, but Albertans know full well what's going on in this Legislature tonight.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, let's go back to the lens, the lens that's looking on this Legislature to welcome and thank all the people that are here in our galleries tonight. Let's not forget that the lens isn't just here. The lens isn't just here. [interjections] I'm so glad you're there. Thank you.

The government may think that they're pulling one over on the people of this province. They might actually think that, but it's not true. Albertans won't be silenced. Albertans will have the last word. Either pull Bill 11 or call an election and let the voters decide.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

11:20

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am truly amazed that the Member for Edmonton-McClung would continue to play politics with one of the most important things that we have in our lives. When I say that, I know that when she talks about the percentage of cuts, that has been an indication of her speech all evening long. She knows perfectly well that the cuts were roughly 13 percent, and she knows perfectly well that there was $500 million taken out of a $4.3 billion budget. She knows that.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, much as the previous Speaker, who perhaps has more experience than I do, I think we have to try and be consistent. When an hon. member is on his feet speaking, then please confine your comments to when it's your turn to speak and give the hon. member the courtesy of giving his speech.

MR. DICKSON: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Questioning a Member

MR. DICKSON: Under Beauchesne 333 will the member entertain a brief question, Mr. Speaker?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. member simply has to reply yes or no.

MR. FISCHER: No.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Carry on.

Debate Continued

MR. FISCHER: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Member for Edmonton-McClung has taken her math and she can divide the numbers just as well as anyone else in Alberta. I do know that when some of those cuts were made, a lot of that money came out of administration and went right into hospitals. She might be able to find one hospital or one along the way that got cut, but that is misleading the public.

Mr. Speaker, I want to just make another comment. The opposition member mentioned that she had a plan back in her Rainbow Report days. Rural Alberta really remembered her plan all right, because she went up to the Peace River country with her bureaucrats – and I believe that she stayed home because she was afraid to go up there – and she told them that the way she was going to fix the budget and the costs was to shut those hospitals down. She terrorized people in that country and in St. Paul and in Bonnyville country. If we hadn't gotten her stopped, she would have gone right across rural Alberta shutting down every rural hospital. That was her intent at that time. She was a member of our caucus at that time, and she knew perfectly well what she was doing. So that was not acceptable to rural Alberta, and it still isn't acceptable today. We have to find better ways of controlling the cost.

I wanted to say one other thing about the overnight stays that the Member for Edmonton-McClung keeps talking about. For people in rural Alberta to come up here, whether it's public or private, to see the doctor and then be told to go to a hotel every night and come back in the morning for your operation is not acceptable to us either, Mr. Speaker.

I wanted to remind the Member for Edmonton-McClung of one other thing. She talked about herself and the past almost in her whole speech. I just wanted to remind her that we're in the year 2000 now, and things have changed an awful lot from that time.

Mr. Speaker, health care is something that's near and dear to every one of our hearts. To have health care at the right time can mean the difference between life and death. I'm sure everyone here has witnessed on a few occasions the lifesaving miracles of the Alberta health care system. We as Albertans should be very, very proud of the wonderful system that we have, and we should be proud of the people, the doctors and the nurses, who provide these miracles for us. It's not everybody that has a system like this. If you were going to be sick in Canada, Alberta's the place to be. Whether it's Canada or maybe North America, Alberta is still the place to be when you are sick. I don't think we should forget that, because it says a lot for the people that work in it and it says a lot for the system that we have now. This is what Bill 11 is all about: preserving and improving the system we have.

I also know that every member of this government feels very, very strongly on this issue. Each of our people has family and friends and relatives, and we know that someday they're going to have to depend on and use our system. We all want it to be there when we need it.

Certainly I'm a little bit different than the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti in that I'm not quite to the retirement age yet, but we do have a big family and a lot of grandkids and aunts and uncles and so on, an extended family, that we want to see have an excellent health care system. We're not going to do anything to destroy this system.

So when people say that we're out to destroy and dismantle this system, they're totally wrong. It's untrue, and they're misleading the public. Bill 11 is here to protect and preserve public health care in Alberta, and it's to provide options for the RHAs to use to help alleviate the long lineups and to relieve the pressure on the public system. Each member in this Assembly as well wants to abide by the principles of the Canada Health Act, and each member is certainly against any form of private hospitals in this country.

Mr. Speaker, both the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the federal Minister of Health, Allan Rock, in a letter to the province, have strongly suggested that we regulate and control the private health care clinics that are in this province now. They also suggest that changes must be made and that the status quo is not an option. When we look at the expenditures we have and the increase in costs – and I don't want to go over that too much, because it's been said many, many times – all we have to do is look at this chart for the last five years and see where the costs are going: an increase of 40 percent in the last five years and increasing at roughly 10 percent a year. Ten percent a year. Are we getting a better health care system because we put more money in it?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

MR. FISCHER: Many people will say no.

So what are we going to do, then? Put more money into it? Keep on feeding it more money, more money and don't change anything? That's what the Member for Edmonton-McClung wanted us to do: feed it more money. [interjections]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, please wait your turn. Go ahead.

MR. FISCHER: Mr. Speaker, when we look at the many, many private clinics that are helping the public system today, performing something like 20,000 operations in a year, can you imagine if they weren't there? Don't we think it is assisting the public system now, and doesn't anyone think that there should be some rules and regulations in place so that those public clinics can never turn into private hospitals? I have to say that somebody has their head in the sand if they think we're going to stand and have no regulation whatsoever for those private clinics.

Back in '92-93, when the Galahad hospital was shut down, what happened? In came Hotel de Health from the U.S. I went to the meetings. The doctors were there explaining all the things they were going to do and so on. We didn't have one bit of legislation in place to stop those people. The people from Galahad did a great job in saying no to them, but we didn't have anything to stop them. Surely to goodness this Assembly has enough gumption to put some regulation in place.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

We have how many long-term care facilities? Do we have private facilities now? We have a lot of them, and they offer a lot of health care in those facilities. What are we going to do? Are we going to let them develop into private hospitals, or are we going to regulate them? People are building more and more. Or do you want the government to build everything? I guess that seems to be what I'm hearing.

We want to have a health care system in this province that's going to be suitable for everyone. And we've got to be able to afford it. When you look at the costs and the chart, is it sustainable? Of course not. Every province in Canada knows that, and Allan Rock knows that, and he's suggesting that we do something about it. So I say that we should open our eyes and look at what we have now and look at where we're going from here. I don't think we can go back to 1988 and say that we should have done this or that or something else. Things aren't going to be perfect. Things change as you go, and no one's forecast is absolutely perfect.

So, Mr. Speaker, I just want to say, yes, we've got a lot of work to do yet with this bill. Yes, we want to have a bill that protects us. I want to have a bill like Saskatchewan has or like B.C. or like Manitoba or Ontario or maybe even Quebec. I think we deserve that. Why in the world would you think we would travel to those provinces and go to Saskatoon or maybe Regina to get something done instead of having it done here. Is that what the members across the way want? It sounds like it.

When we talk about free trade and the risk of free trade shutting us down and letting private health come in here, well, how many years has Ontario had their clinics? For 30 or 40 years they've had their clinics down there. Has free trade been a factor in it? Of course not. Would it be a factor in B.C., or is it a factor in these other provinces? When the Pan Am sports clinic in Winnipeg is doing their services, does free trade come in and interfere with that? No. So I think we have to look at this, and somebody has to use their common sense. It's time for the fear mongering to quit. I can say that you can't continually stand up and put fear into people because this might happen. Well, it's not going to happen, because the bill says that it won't happen. That's the law, and you know that.

Anyway, I want to just finish off by saying that we have a good health care system, and we're out here to protect it. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm not very pleased to get up and speak to this motion that was put forward under Standing Order 47, and that was that the question now be put. I'm one of the people that wasn't very happy about this because I didn't get an opportunity to speak in second reading debate. [interjections] I was here every time. I was in the lineup to be to a speaker. Whatever happened, the debate would adjourn. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members on both sides of the House, we have an hon. member who indicates that she wasn't able to speak, and we suddenly get a lot of noise. Now, perhaps that's because she's obviously spoken at least twice on this bill. [interjections] Then the record is wrong. She's speaking now and was speaking, according to the record, on the amendment, so that's twice at second reading.

We all have an opportunity to speak. Shouting at someone because you disagree with what they're saying is really not very well mannered. It's discourteous. We've tried to hold for most of the evening that we quietly listen to the opposite members, whichever side is speaking, and hear them out. Let them speak. Let them be heard. All hon. members, even the ministers.

MR. BONNER: She spoke to the amendment.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Thank you, Edmonton-Glengarry. Edmonton-Centre.

Debate Continued

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, no, I have not been given the opportunity to speak to the principles of the bill, as is usually the case in second reading. By the motion being put, I do not now get the opportunity to speak to the principles of the bill in second reading.

AN HON. MEMBER: This is your opportunity.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, that's interesting, because I'm actually being coached to go against . . .

Speaker's Ruling Clarification

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I just hate to intercede again here, but we did have a ruling made by sort of a joint effort by the hon. Government House Leader and the hon. House leader of the opposition and the chair this afternoon that said that you would have full range to be able to speak, and no one would be brought to heel on that. So if you wish to speak on all of the principles, this chair will defend that right, should anybody try and call "relevance" or whatever, as long as you're on the principle of the bill at second reading. So you do have the 20 minutes assigned to you on this occasion.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much for clarifying that and getting it on the record. I think there are a number of members that didn't understand what in fact had been happening, so I appreciate you doing that.

Debate Continued

MS BLAKEMAN: I do feel that this asking that the question now be put is in fact stifling debate. Certainly I would have an opportunity to have spoken more often than I'm now being allowed to do. I'm not up here speaking for myself. I'm up here representing the people that live in Edmonton Centre.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Not all of them.

MS BLAKEMAN: No, that's absolutely true, minister of intergovernmental affairs. I am indeed their elected representative. It's interesting, because the members opposite are very fond of heckling across to here, going: "Well, you guys lost; you guys lost. So tough beans." Well, as a matter of fact, I didn't lose. I won. I am the elected representative for Edmonton-Centre, and I am here representing the views of the people in my constituency.

How have I done that? Well, I've collected all of the e-mails and faxes and letters that were sent in and all of the little telephone message sheets, and I've got over 300 of those. To be fair – and I will put it on the record here in reference to those that requested it – I have had three pieces of correspondence in support of Bill 11 and four and a half phone calls in support of Bill 11. [interjections] Well, I'm putting the half in to be fair, because the gentleman actually phoned with concerns about the most recent Senate appointment and as part of that conversation mentioned in passing his support of Bill 11. So to be fair, I'm putting him in there. He did mention it, but that wasn't the purpose of the phone call. Three documents that I've received were in support of it. So a total of seven. Over 300 and getting close to 400 now – and I get a few more, about a dozen more every day – are very much opposed to Bill 11. So I am here speaking for these people, and my notes have been comprised from going through that correspondence I received. That's exactly what I intend to do here.

Now, one of the interesting things that happened and I suspect caused the reaction from the Conservative caucus so that this Standing Order 47 was brought in was that the opposition had introduced amendments at second reading. I thought: gee, is that such a bad thing? I looked in Beauchesne, and in fact there are two and a half pages in here all about how you can introduce motions at second reading. So I thought: well, this is obviously a legitimate process that can be used and called upon as part of parliamentary procedure. There are all kinds of things you can do: hoist amendments, reasoned amendments, referral of subject matter to a committee. Well, for goodness' sakes, I said. There's a reason why all of this is in here. It's obviously a reasonable option, a process to be called upon if there are people that believe it needs to be used in order to prevent the will of a government overriding the will of the people, and indeed that's what happened. But it seems to have very much upset the members opposite.

So I was able to speak on one amendment, and I'm now up speaking to this one, but I guess I don't get to speak again in second reading. I would like to go over what some of the qualities of talking about a principle of a bill are. If I check the dictionary, we've got things like: a general truth or law basic to other truths, as in the principle of self-government; a law or rule of personal conduct; moral standards collectively, as in a man of principle; that which is inherent in anything, determining its nature or essence; a source or cause from which a thing proceeds; a fundamental cause; an established mode of action or operation in natural phenomena, and the principle of relativity is an example of that. That is in essence of what second reading is about. It's discussing the larger, overriding principles and philosophy behind what is being proposed in a piece of legislation.

I wonder when Albertans get to have their long discussion on principle, because this one got a little truncated. I think it's perfectly appropriate that that discussion do take place. I've noticed, you know, that there's a really interesting thing that's been happening. I'll be looking forward to whoever gets up following my speech. There's some little rabbit warren of people back there from the public affairs department with laptops that churn out this Bill 11 debate summary instantly, as soon as one of us has spoken, and then puts their spin on it. So I'll be really interested in what kind of spin they put on what I'm saying, because my goodness, they certainly do appear to be sterling individuals when they are on the government's side and the spin is written about what theirs is. I wonder how much money that's costing taxpayers, to have that sort of 24-hour-a-day information turned out.

DR. MASSEY: The spin machine.

MS BLAKEMAN: The spin machine in the rabbit warren back there.

I wonder: what is the rush? What is the rush of this government to have to get through this section of the debate of the bill so quickly? I mean, is there some imminent time line out there I don't know about? Is everybody in a big hurry to have Bill 11 in their Easter baskets to take home? What is the big rush? If this is the most fundamental principle – and I heard one of the members earlier talk about this being one of the biggest things we've done in Alberta in a long time – I would think we would want to take all due care in discussing this and making sure that we were in fact doing something that was in the best interests of Albertans.

I notice that we've had – what? – 12 hours of debate on second reading or the amendment in second reading of this bill. I go: 12 hours? I mean, if everyone in this Chamber spoke, we'd have 27 hours of debate. So what's the big rush at the 12-hour mark? I mean, when they were debating the land claim in B.C., they didn't call closure until they had had over 100 hours of debate, but we're in such a big hurry that this government can't stand the 12 hours.

I will note and give credit to the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti. You know, I offered to come out into the communities of four MLAs, and those were the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View, the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, the Member for Banff-Cochrane, and the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti. I didn't get the courtesy of a reply from the first three, but I did get the courtesy of a reply from the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, and I noticed that he actually managed to be one of the lucky ones that has been up to debate. I do commend him for that, both for following up with a reply but also getting up to debate, because I would like to hear what the 50 members of this Assembly who have not yet spoken on the principles of this bill have to say. Certainly we've been promised that that debate and those views are going to be brought forward into this Chamber, and I'm looking forward to what they have to say.

I have a couple of questions that I wrote down as I listened to the Premier doing his debate. I'm wondering exactly how the clinics that exist now fit under this bill. I'm aware that March 31 was a renewal date for the contracts with the Gimbel eye clinics and a few of the other private clinics in Alberta. Now, that date has come and gone. Does that mean that these have now been renewed for some unspecified period of time and the legislation wouldn't affect them? What are the terms of the contracts that have been renewed? We don't get access to those, because they're secret. They've now been renewed, and we don't know for how long. We don't know under what terms they've been passed. So, you know, there could have been a contract signed for 25 years under the existing terms. They wouldn't be subject to any of the things that are being offered or at least talked about under this bill.

Over and over again people in Edmonton-Centre have said: why? Why this bill? Why does the government choose this as their vehicle for change in the health care system in Alberta? Why? They've watched question period, and I'll tell you, question period is going to be hitting the Nielsen ratings right away quick here. I am very surprised at how many people are watching question period and, in particular, seniors. Very interesting, the number of seniors that are watching question period. I commend them for that.

AN HON. MEMBER: How many in the gallery tonight?

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, well, everywhere that I could see, there were people in the gallery. It's 10 to midnight, so some of them have left now; I don't blame them. Certainly we had a very good showing out tonight. I also recommend that people follow along with this debate on the Internet, and they certainly can at www.assembly.ab.ca. I hope they are following along.

I can't get any satisfactory answers to the question: why? Why is this the choice? Why is this vehicle, this Bill 11, the choice, the vehicle that this government wants to somehow improve or change health care in Alberta.

I think the other question that's really important is: who benefits? A lot of Albertans are looking at it and trying to answer the why question. They can't answer it. They end up defaulting to: well, I'm not going to benefit from this, so who does benefit from this? Two important questions that need to be answered from this.

It was very interesting listening to the Leader of the Official Opposition as she led us through a history of health care here in Alberta from the 1960s to now, the various changes that have gone through, the proposals that have been brought forward, and the work that was done on it. I think the debate on Bill 11 really started in 1993. A number of other people have raised the issues of the health roundtables that were raised for discussion with the public about changing the health care system, but I always found it very strange that health professionals were specifically excluded from those roundtables. They didn't want doctors and nurses there. If you were one of those, you couldn't be at the roundtables. I thought: what a strange way to change a system, to exclude the very professionals who work in it every day and who could be giving you very good suggestions on how to change or improve it.

Nonetheless, the health roundtables happened. There were cuts. That certainly happened, and that was accompanied by a statement from the Premier that things were spiraling and spinning out of control. Well, we know now that they weren't spinning out of control in fact. There's never an answer from the members opposite as to why those statements were made and then the facts showing that they weren't true. I'd be interested in hearing that one. So maybe the people in the little rabbit warrens that do the really fast spin and have it back here in 20 minutes could put an answer into the next person's speech to answer that question.

We had a number of things change and happen here, and all of us were hoping that we were actually going to have the rethink of our public health care system, that there actually had been a plan in place. I think people really wanted to believe that. Then we got an announcement – when was it; last year, 18 months ago? – sorry; oops, no plan. Excuse me.

What results of other changes did we get to health care in the early and mid-90s? Well, certainly the medical practitioners, the doctors and nurses, have felt abused. They felt there wasn't a future. They abandoned ship and went to work in other places. The regionalization created its own series of problems. We spent a lot of money setting up all those different RHAs, but despite an increased reliance on home care we didn't get much more money put in there. The budgets have not increased in proportion to society's reliance on it.

So I think we didn't need to cut at the time. I think there were plans in place that we could have taken advantage of that would have saved us from that, but the government did cut, and now we have waiting lists and now we have people suffering. There's been a lot of talk from the other side about: oh, you know, we're spending this much more money than we did in 1982. Well, I should hope so. We've got a lot more people in Alberta than we did in 1982, so even if you spent exactly the same amount of money on each person, you're still going to have a larger budget by now. You've just got more people here.

The effect this has had on the people in Edmonton-Centre has been very real, and we really see that in the constituency office. For me, it means that the health of the constituent who waited so long to get in and get surgery deteriorated generally to the point that even though she got the surgery, she died. That is not a healthy system as far as I'm concerned.

I am looking for good legislation. I am looking for legislation that regulates and controls the private, entrepreneurial style of health care provision, but I'm also looking for all of those other important components of the health care system. We have a government that responds to waiting lists by suggesting that RHAs be empowered to contract with private providers, which is what Bill 11 is, and somehow the theory is that that would clear up the waiting lists. I have yet to see any kind of reasonable argument or proof on that.

You see, the question to me is that if a procedure costs X amount right now, and that's how much money is paid into the system or is paid to a hospital that's providing that particular procedure, then how is this better done in the private system, where there is at least a 15 percent profit margin built in? So if you're paying $500 for a certain procedure in the public system, and now you're going to pay that $500 in the private system, how are they going to make their 15 percent profit? When we're spending that $500 in the public system, this is not a system that needs to advertise its services to attract a client base. It doesn't need an enormous administration to coordinate payments from a variety of different payers, insurance plans and all.

How could this procedure possibly cost less in the private system? I think the answer is that it can't. Well, then, how is this possibly managed? I still don't have that answer for why. I'm not getting that answer for why. There's a lot of rhetoric tossed back and forth across over here, but my constituents are looking for some real thorough debate on this complex subject, which is why I was in favour of referring it to the committee, which is where we could have had some of this discussion. But that's not going to happen.

Part of my frustration and the frustration of people in Edmonton-Centre is hearing people get up and go: "It's in the bill. Read the bill. It says there will be no queue-jumping, so that's it. There will be no queue-jumping." Well, excuse me. You say there's no queue-jumping now, and there is. Nothing in that bill details how the queue-jumping will be stopped. It is a one-line sentence that says that there will be no queue-jumping and then does nothing to deal with how it will be stopped, and it exists now.

The same thing happens with enhanced services. It says that there won't be any enhanced services and then goes right on to say, yes, there will, and here's how you can do it: as long as you signed the piece of paper and you know it costs money and your doctor said it's okay, then you can buy enhanced services. Well, why isn't the government looking at things like what the Saskatchewan legislation did, which is say: no sale of enhanced services, end of discussion. What's more than that, they dealt with the queue-jumping problem by bringing all of the MRIs underneath the public health care system. That's where our queue-jumping problem is happening. It's happening with the diagnostics, and it's happening with the enhanced services. Lots of people have detailed stories prior to me, so I won't go into them again. I'll just refer you to www.assembly.ab.ca. You can read the Hansard for yourself.

I think there's a real question about whether we want to go to a system where we start having to view our doctors as medical entrepreneurs, because this is what happens. Particularly for seniors, this is where their concern is. There are two things the seniors say to me. One, they were here before medicare, and they do not want to see medicare eroded in any way, shape, or form. That's what they tell me over and over again. Okay. The second thing is that they find the idea of their doctor as a medical entrepreneur to be a really frightening thing. They're used to getting advice from a doctor which means this is what they should do, but they're not used to a system where they have to say, "Doctor, are you giving me medical advice or are you trying to sell me a product?"

I can see the Speaker starting to rise. Perhaps I could get unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent denied]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's fortunate that I don't need unanimous consent to speak, because it would be rather difficult to get a word in edgewise.

Cutting off debate in this Legislature is something that this government seems to do with ease but without grace. It's a heavy-handed government that must resort to cutting off a minority of speakers in a democracy that is supposed to have full and open debate on every subject that a member wishes to speak upon.

Citing section 47 of the Standing Orders is a pretty lame way to deal with an opposition that is supported by the public. Those opposite know that if there were no support in the public, we would not be here. Why not take the easy route and allow the debate to occur until such time as the public loses interest? That is how this democracy of ours works. It doesn't work on all the rules. It doesn't work on all of the impositions of position and policy. It's what the people out there believe is occurring. This government just throws that off, and it may be at your peril. I believe it is.

I don't think this government will ever, ever recover from the damage that you've done to the trust the people had in this government. Yeah, it's possible that you could be re-elected by buying a vote when the economy is so great. We went on and on and on with a couple of members opposite about the integrity of all of this and the debate on this issue and how it should not be carried on. We've heard all of that before. The fact is that a government cuts off debate because either they're lazy or they're afraid. That's it. There is no other reason.

AN HON. MEMBER: Yes, there are other reasons.

MR. WHITE: I sat in my place and listened to that member opposite make arguments, and I didn't hear one, not one argument other than that the government is afraid or lazy when cutting off debate. There is no other reason. Greater minds than I have written this, not me.

In fact, it's a sad day when this government cannot debate the issues. Some members opposite actually did their best to do just that, and I give them credit for that. Perhaps before the Member for Wainwright leaves – oh, he's not intending to leave. I will get into debating controlling the private clinics.

Let's step back for a moment and explain who I represent here. I represent an area of the city of Edmonton that is not rich. It has middle to lower socioeconomic wage earners by and large, a great deal of retired senior citizens, and some young families working their way into the higher income brackets. Virtually everyone is concerned about this issue. It is at the top of their list, the very top of the list, and this government decides that they don't want to hear any more debate? They don't want to explain to the populace what is transpiring?

The people in Edmonton-Calder want to know. They don't feel satisfied with the deliverance of a bill that they had a great deal of difficulty reading and understanding. They don't have the context of those that draft and redraft bills for this Legislature. These people are concerned about their here and now, and they're concerned about their future.

I get letters all the time and phone calls right at the moment from people, primarily seniors, if they have an opportunity to call during the day. And they're worried. They don't know what the bill means. Do you think this government has explained it to them? No, it totally and completely missed them. You can send all the bills you want, and it does not help them understand what the intent of the government is. In fact, they read, and they remember Bill 37, and they say: "Well, we didn't like that one. We're not exactly sure what it did, but we didn't like it at the time because it changed the system such that it was going to cost us more." Then another iteration and then the final iteration. What this government has done is successively made bad moves in this particular area of policy to scare the folks out there as to what the true intent is. [interjections]

Some of these people just don't listen well. I'm not scaring them. They're scared. And I haven't been getting the message out as well as the millions and millions of dollars of the government's program.

MR. DICKSON: An $8 million budget for the Public Affairs Bureau. Eight million dollars.

MR. WHITE: I'm reminded that there's eight million dollars spent annually in the public information bureau, a bureau that is to explain these things to people. That's eight times our entire budget, including living in the box next door. And you say I'm the one that's fear-mongering? I'm the one that's causing it? I mean, it's quite a compliment if I can do all of that to my constituents, inform them that well. I should be elected forever. But that's not the case. The case is they are afraid. You've heard it. There can't be anyone in this room who has listened to any constituents of their own and can say that they haven't heard of a great deal of concern and fear. Fear of change, and fear of change is real.

The people of Edmonton-Calder, like most other people, want a government that cares about them and a government that listens to them when they have some concerns. We've had a great deal of concerns. I personally filed almost 5,000 signatures here gathered by citizens in the constituency. I would like to think I could get that many people working for me on a campaign. It's not likely to happen. These people are working to benefit themselves and rightly so. This is the kind of thing that spurs people to change governments, and this government has lost its listen. They're not understanding how deeply this has cut, and I should hope there's some better discussion than I've heard on this floor in that government caucus.

Always we've heard before, today, and just this evening: what fundamental question do the folks want to know? What is the intent of this government? Is it to build private clinics/hospitals or whatever you want to call them? Is it to foster that growth and somehow by pure philosophical might save the taxpayer dollars in deliverance of the service? Is that what it is? Or is it, as the Member for Wainwright said, to control private clinics?

Well, that's the biggest joke I've ever heard. I mean, to control a private clinic, all you have to do is just not pay them. They'll go away. If they're not getting paid through the public purse, it's not very difficult to do. If you say you're not going to use them, you don't need a law to do that. You just say: sorry; we've got other ways of providing the service. And they stop. But you don't need to control them. What's to control? If you don't write the contract, you don't pay it, then the party to the contract that has the money definitely has the control.

Then ask, if you're going to start off in a direction, why reinvent the wheel entirely? Why not study it and say: look, there are humans throughout the entire world, there's health care throughout the entire world, and there are other civilized societies that have just as much money as this society and do provide health care. You'd think you'd do a literature study and say: well, see what works in the world heading in a new direction. Either this government did not do that, or when they did do that, they found that the answers were all contrary to this major philosophical push that was philosophically driven entirely and completely, because the facts just don't match. There is not a body of evidence that says a for-profit, private hospital or clinic, if you will, in combination with a public health care system works. It just doesn't work.

Then we hear all this Shouldice, Shouldice, Shouldice. Shouldice has been in business as a nonprofit hospital since 1957.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Nonprofit?

MR. WHITE: It was built into the system in 1957. [interjections] Well, it seems some members opposite are challenging the status of the Shouldice clinic. Well, gee, it wouldn't be hard to file a document, as it is filed at Queen's Park in Toronto under the legislation for nonprofit entities. It's a society. Somebody's missing something if the member opposite hasn't bothered to do a due diligence on that one. Citing that particular instance over and over and over and over again like some blind mantra and then not even knowing the fundamental facts of it? You're incorrigible in your disdain for the facts.

So why else would it be? We had a great one the other day. "Because it's the right thing to do." The right thing to do. I mean, gee, have you been hit on the head too often or what? Come on. Explain that. I mean, I go out and explain that to a senior, "It's the right thing to do"? Well, what? To cross a street? I mean, it's the old chicken jokes. I mean, that's as bad as it is. It has no basis in fact at all, and you're trying to sell that? I mean, that's getting pretty low. If you can't do better than that, let's just start over.

Then there's our former Treasurer. His great statement is: why wait for the facts; just go out and experiment. I mean, it's hard to believe that a man that has spent as much time on this earth as he has would experiment with something like health care. From my position when I have to hear senior citizens and the good citizens of Edmonton-Calder ask me why and they tell me they're fearful, I can understand why, because this government hasn't explained at all the rationale behind this bill.

Now, what happens if you're wrong? What happens if you're wrong on this one? What happens if you mess up royally, and this is not the right thing to do? Can you turn it back easily? I don't think so.

AN HON. MEMBER: Without suits?

MR. WHITE: No, I don't think so. Once you have contracts in place, and you have contractors, it is exceedingly difficult to wind it down. When you have a system up and running and you've replaced, in this government's terms, the bricks and mortar of the business of deliverance of health care, it's exceedingly difficult to wind that down. And if it costs more, we just pay.

I'd like to include in the record some of the comments that this member gets. There are about 30 letters or so that I intend to file, actually, so I won't be quoting precisely but just generally. I'll file them someday real soon when I have all their permissions to do so.

A letter to the Premier with the copy to myself as being the MLA. "There's something terribly wrong with the health care system in Alberta since you became Premier." It's a little tough, but we'll deal with that. "I therefore wish to register my opposition to the plans for the privatization and the for-profit hospitals/clinics in our health care system." It goes on to decry the nonrepresentation of their views in hospital administration, because this government promised and then reneged on the promise to elect the health authorities. These people were waiting for the opportunity to do that, and we all know how much the hospital system eats up of the budget.

Then there are some seniors. "My husband and I are seniors, and we worry about our future. We have seen our health care cut back over the past few years, and people like us have only small pensions and have to cut back on clothing and food and such so we can afford dentures and eyeglasses."

Now, you may think: oh yeah, I've got people whining and crying about it and feign crying on the other side. Well, that's really fine if you have a large income. You sit here. A lot of these people that I represent don't have that opportunity. They're past the years where they have earned income. They have to live on what they have, and since this government came to office in 1992, it's cost them a great deal more in pharmaceuticals, eyeglasses, dentures, and the like and other prostheses that are required for their daily living. It changes their health care plan, and it changes how they must live.

Here's another from just outside my constituency, and he's writing, again to the Premier. This private citizen, not a senior but able-bodied, towards the end of the letter: "The private health care bill is bad and you, the Liberals, must stop this one for sure. It will come again and again if it's not stopped this time and every time. It is bad medicine." And it is signed by the citizen.

And another one. I've got a copy, and why they would send me a copy, I don't really know, but they're from St. Paul, Alberta. They say of the research available that "what you're quite prepared to ignore indicates that private hospitals cost more." And they close off, the very bottom line, "Please, for the sake of my grandchildren, don't do this." This is a letter to the Premier.

Now, these are heartfelt, individually handcrafted letters. No, they're not cranked out on a computer. This looks like some kind of an old Olivetti that's been sitting in the corner gathering dust. It has a little dust mark in the A.

Here's one that's handwritten and is exceedingly difficult to read, quite frankly. This one is written just to me: "Let me restate my definite and unequivocal opposition to the further privatization of our health care system." This letter goes on and the hand gets shakier and shakier until the signature line. It's only a one-page letter, and it's direct for me. These people actually do take the time to write these letters, and they're heartfelt. They are fearful. They are fearful of what this government has in store for them now and in the future.

Another handwritten note. This one obviously not quite so old and shaky. This is a copy to me from a constituent. It's a letter actually to the Premier. "Please be informed that my wife and I are strongly opposed to your proposal of private health care." It goes on: "money back into the health care system to help alleviate the queue lines established by your earlier financial cuts." That's the simple belief of this person that obviously doesn't have a computer, doesn't have that opportunity. But they live in Edmonton-Calder and are fearful enough and concerned enough that they write a handwritten note to their Premier and to their MLA.

Another one – and I know not why I would get a copy – from an art gallery out in Sherwood Park. This particular woman cites that she is a taxpayer and a voter and a businessperson. She "deeply resents having my tax dollars spent on 'health care for profit'." It's an in-depth analysis, a three-page letter. She spent a great deal of time on it, obviously. Her distribution list is not terribly extensive, but it does cover me and a couple of other members on both sides of the House. She finishes off with: the health care for-profit system is a deciding factor, not increase in service and not increase in standards. This is a businessperson, Mr. Speaker, and she doesn't cover any fear of the system changing; she as a professional believes it is definitely the wrong way to go in the business.

Oh. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, I took more time than I intended.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sitting here trying to be very quiet and listening to the speeches. I must admit that at times my exuberance has gotten the best of me, because in fact I've heard many things that I believe are not quite what they seem to be. If I can just start with a quote by George Orwell from Politics and the English Language, 1946. He says: "political language . . . is designed to make lies sound truthful and murder respectable, and to give an appearance of solidity to pure wind." Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, what we have been hearing from the government members is pure wind.

If I can provide a quote from a constituent, who indicated that she wanted this read out loud.

I have been listening to the news and to hear our so-called "Government" make a statement like he will not hold a town hall meeting because all there will be is a bunch of "Left Winged Wacko Nuts." Do we not have a right to our own opinion without being called names by the Premier . . . If he cannot handle an honest debate; how can we say he is trustworthy.

I think those two go together quite well, and what we have seen in this Assembly is a lot of discussion from government members which seemed to be based on pure faith. There almost seems to be a cult developing with regards to what this Bill 11 is about. If you believe in Bill 11, you know that it will not provide private, for-profit health care; you know that it will not provide for queue-jumping; you know that it will not provide for enhanced services. The only people that seem to believe that are the cult members in this Assembly of this government. In fact, we know that when we ask questions like, "Will it be more cost-effective," the answer is no. Will it provide more efficiencies? The answer is no. Will it reduce waiting lists, whether it's for hips or for any other procedures? The answer is no. Will it increase the number of doctors or nurses in our health care system? The answer is no. Will it regulate facilities that have overnight stays? Well, no, those don't exist right now. So the answer is, no, it doesn't do that.

[Mr. Renner in the chair]

What does the bill do? Will it cost us more as taxpayers out of our pockets? The answer is yes. Will it increase the wait lists? The answer is yes.

12:20

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, while the chorus is entertaining and probably took a while to rehearse, it's inappropriate for parliamentary procedure.

MS LEIBOVICI: It would be impossible to rehearse this speech, Mr. Speaker.

Will it increase the wait lists? Yes. Will it decrease access to the doctors and the health professionals in the system? The answer is yes. Will it provide profits to private, for-profit health care operators in this province? You bet. That's a resounding yes.

I heard the speech from the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, and quite honestly I'd miss him being shocked and appalled. It was good to see him being back on track. I heard the Member for Calgary-Egmont. When he ran out of facts, what he had to do was insult our leader, and quite frankly I think that is inappropriate.

I heard the heartfelt remarks from the Member for Wainwright. I listened very carefully to his remarks because they seemed to come from the heart. It allowed me to have a bit of an insight into why the government members so fervently adhere to what they're being told with regard to Bill 11. But what I also heard him say was that the reason we need Bill 11 is in order to improve the system. Well, what's interesting is that when I look at a letter that the Premier of this province wrote to Mr. Booi, who's the president of the ATA, what he indicated was that "government has never claimed that contracting out some surgical services would be the solution to all challenges facing the health system." It's only an option. So, quite frankly, member, you can't have it both ways. It can't improve the system and solve the problems within the system yet be only a small piece and in fact something the government has never claimed would do just that.

So it's time to get some of the facts straight. It's time, I believe, to look at the fact that this government has been unable in five months to present one single report out of Alberta that substantiates their claims. We have brought forward reports from various associations, from various doctors, from the ATA – the list goes on – yet this government, with its thousands of employees and millions of dollars, has been unable to produce a report. The only report that has been produced by the government, like the interim report that we tabled and the report from the Department of Health and Wellness that we tabled, indicates that this plan will not work. What more do you need as evidence?

The reality is that the piece that's missing in the privatization plan of this government is the piece that deals with private, for-profit hospitals. Without the piece, the plan is incomplete. The only way this government can get that plan through is by pretending that they're approved surgical facilities, because the public will not buy the establishment of private, for-profit hospitals in this province. Is that not what the thousands of e-mails, the thousands of letters, the coupons, the thousands of signatures have said to us? That's exactly what they've said. You know, quite frankly, members, I know that's what you're hearing as well.

The speeches may be fine. In fact, they say the same thing over and over and over again. They are written almost by rote, and what they say is: "This bill will be the answer. This bill does not do what the Official Opposition says, and this bill is foolproof." Well, if it's so foolproof, may I ask, then: why is the government bringing forward amendments? Why is the government bringing forward amendments to deal with conflict of interest if that's not a concern? Why wasn't it in the bill when you've had three years to do it? Why is the government bringing forward amendments on enhanced services when you're so foolproof? You know what? You're not so right. The bottom line is that you're not so right. In fact, you are not doing the right thing; you are doing the wrong thing.

The reality is that we have many analyses here that have not even been tabled as yet. There's the analysis from the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses, who oppose the bill. They say that the bill "will be detrimental to the system by siphoning off valuable human resources into the private system. It will not address the need for reform." It does not support the principles of the Canada Health Act. It "claims to ban private hospitals, [but] there's nothing in the act that actually prevents private hospitals." It "will not ban queue jumping." It goes on to say what it will not do: everything that each one of these members who has spoken in this Legislative Assembly from the government has said it will do.

There's a recent letter that's come in to each one of you. Each one of you members received this letter from Dr. Daniel Cohn on April 6, so by now you probably should have had time to actually read what he has written. He is with the social sciences and humanities department. He's a Research Council of Canada postdoctoral fellow at the University of Alberta. What he says is that he urges you all to read this particular piece of information. What he says is:

I find myself in an interesting position with Bill 11. I never in my wildest imagination ever felt that I would have to explain to members of the Conservative Party how market forces work.

He goes on to say:

No one seems to have stopped to ask . . .

Other than us, of course, on this side.

. . . will the measures proposed in this bill actually achieve the stated aims of the government by lowering costs to the public, cutting waiting lists and improving access? In order to answer that question we have to consider how markets work, including the most basic of all market rules, the law of supply and demand.

Unfortunately, as the attached essay shows . . .

And maybe I'll send you some of these reports, because obviously you haven't read them all. [interjections] Thank you, minister. I have two ministers who are requesting that information, and you will be receiving the information of some of the reports that we have tabled.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

You know what? I'd also like to get your opinion as to whether you agree or disagree with the reports and what in fact you disagree with, because I think that would help the debate along. Hopefully I have a commitment from you as well to do that.

. . . the measures proposed in Bill 11 are only likely to succeed if the law of supply and demand is suspended in Alberta. Otherwise, the most likely scenario is that either costs and waiting lists will rise or access to care will be seriously eroded in rural communities and small towns.

For all of you MLAs in the rural areas . . . [interjections] I'm not saying this; this is Dr. Daniel Cohn.

It is not the works of Karl Marx or Vladimir Lenin that tell us this, but the works of Adam Smith and Milton Friedman.

I will send this to you just in case it's gotten lost in your mail, because I think it's important that you read that piece of information. Perhaps we can get some meaningful dialogue going on the actual facts of this bill and what this bill does and does not do and say.

Now the issue of the federal government. I've watched with amusement, actually, the play that's gone on with the Premier and the Minister of Health and Wellness and the federal Minister of Health and the Prime Minister. What I find amazing is that when the Premier says, as he did many months ago, that he wants the opinion of the federal government and he gets that opinion and he doesn't like it, what he does is go running off to the Prime Minister to say: give me another opinion. Those of us who do have children and those of us who can remember when we were children, remember how if we didn't like what our mothers said, we went running off to our father or vice versa. That's exactly the play we're seeing here.

I don't see what could be more clear than the federal Minister of Health having said to withdraw the bill, which obviously they're not doing. When you didn't like that, what he then said – and you've been asking for this all along – is that he's compared this legislation to other legislation across Canada and finds that it is not similar. Maybe I should just include this letter in the package as well. It is not similar to the legislation in respect to other provinces across this country, and in effect, while the provisions in Bill 11 seem to deal with queue-jumping, "it is our view," the federal minister's view, "that those provisions should be strengthened to ensure that services in Alberta will continue to be offered on uniform terms and conditions," and he suggests that perhaps you look at, as I believe the Member for Edmonton-Centre indicated, the Saskatchewan Health Facilities Licensing Act, that that would be wording that you would want to use to outlaw enhanced services. So it will be interesting to see what, if any, amendment the government brings forward on that tomorrow, I would assume.

He also indicates that to permit for-profit facilities – and I wish that everyone would listen very carefully to this one.

To permit for-profit facilities to sell enhanced services in combination with insured services would create a circumstance that represents a serious concern in relation to the principle of accessibility.

Just in case you don't know, that's one of the five principles of the Canada Health Act.

He in fact goes on to say that "the prospect of overnight stays" – and I know you all had your lesson on this bill dealing with overnight stays – "in private, for-profit facilities represents a significant enlargement of private, for-profit delivery of health care services in Canada." This is not, as the Premier likes to say, a small minor change. It's not a small minor change; it is significant. Have we got it now? Not small but significant. We've got it; we all understand it.

. . . a significant enlargement of private, for-profit delivery of health care services in Canada, and since it may have implications that will be felt in provinces and territories across the country, I suggest that it might be helpful to add a provision to prohibit . . .

I didn't hear the Premier say that that was an amendment he was bringing in. In fact, that's the amendment he wants, because that's enabling, as the Member for St. Albert likes to call this legislation, the enabling provision that allows for private, for-profit hospitals. That's where it is, Member for Wainwright, that's where it is, Member for Calgary-Egmont, and that's where it is for all the other members who talk about it. That's exactly where it is.

Further, he goes on to talk about conflict of interest, which this government didn't think was a problem until quite recently. It wasn't even in the bill.

Then he goes on to say that "'surgical facilities' as defined in Bill 11," which is your act, which is on the first page, section 2 – you talk about approved surgical facilities, and you look at the definition, and there are various kinds of surgical facilities that will be able to operate. These surgical facilities "would be considered hospitals under the Canada Health Act."

Members, can it be any clearer? Obviously that hasn't sunk in, so I'm going to repeat it again, even though I am using my valuable time to try and teach you something that by now you should know. That is that "'surgical facilities' as defined in Bill 11" – and if you all want to look at the definition in Bill 11, it will be there – "would be considered hospitals under the Canada Health Act."

MR. WOLOSHYN: By whose definition? Who said that?

MS LEIBOVICI: By the definition of the federal Minister of Health. Your Premier, your leader asked for his definition, and he's given it to you. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, with outbursts like this, when the chair finds it necessary to quiet the House down, it does not take away from the time of the speaker. It just makes us all be here that much longer. I wonder if we can keep our comments to ourselves and save them for when we have a chance to speak.

Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have unfortunately just been informed that I only have two minutes left, but if we want to do unanimous consent, I could go longer.

I need to address quickly Shouldice and enhanced fees, because I know that those are two issues that keep cropping up. What I would like to say on Shouldice is that besides it being a facility that has been grandfathered, a facility that is in fact nonprofit in terms of its surgical clinical part, for-profit with regards to the corporation that's set up to hire the doctors so there is a split – in fact I would like to know what the evidence is that the government has that Shouldice is cheaper.

Hernias that are done at Shouldice are done on an outpatient basis here in Alberta. Outpatient is supposedly cheaper than inpatient. Shouldice keeps their patients for an average of 3.2 days: overnight, three days. That's a significant cost to the OHIP system. So I would like for the government to explain to me how Shouldice is the example that shows how cost-effective the private – it's not for profit – facility is, the only example they've been able to find of a facility across Canada. How in fact is that cheaper and more cost-effective? Why should it be the example we use and that we're building our bill on?

The other issue that I'd like to bring up is the issue of the foldable lenses that Alberta Health is now paying for. I think this is a prime example of where private, for-profit has now driven the policymaking of a government. In fact it is the private, for-profit sector that has dictated to a provincial government, to a public body, what will be covered in order to ensure that there are no contraventions. That in fact is what this is about. To say that it is about medical necessity would be wrong, because in fact, Mr. Speaker, if it were about medical necessity, it would have been covered originally under the terms of the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act.

With that I close my remarks unless, of course, we have unanimous consent for me to continue a little bit more.

[Unanimous consent denied]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to rise this evening to talk a little bit more about the issues that are relevant to Bill 11 and the concerns that a lot of my constituents are having as they contact me to deal with some of the concerns they have. It seems that a lot of the constituents are at the point where they're waiting now to see what the amendments are that we hear the government promised they are going to bring forward and how those amendments will fit to the idea of how they approach the bill. What a lot of them are missing is the approach that Bill 11 takes to a fundamental change in the way our health care system works.

Historically we've looked at this as being a publicly provided system, a publicly operated system, a system that provides our health care services through public delivery. Over the last number of years we've seen that this has gradually been changing a little bit as private-sector, for-profit firms get involved in different aspects of that delivery of the health care system.

Mr. Speaker, that's one of the things that a number of people have raised about Bill 11. When we're talking about the involvement of the private sector in health care, why are we only dealing with the surgical facilities in this Bill? Why are we not dealing with the delivery of our health care by private-sector operators in the whole scope of services that are available? Why are we not dealing with it in diagnostics? Why are we not dealing with it in some of our mental health and long-term care facilities as well?

I think there's enough evidence now in the system that we should be able to look and see how some of those options have worked, how they're comparing. I know that we've seen some real debate in southern Alberta about the cost-effectiveness of some of the long-term care options that are being provided and how these are being delivered by the private sector, by contracting-out types of situations, and whether or not it's more effective to do it within the system.

The other thing that we have to look at, Mr. Speaker, is how some of our health authorities have dealt with a lot of the contracting out options and others have not. I know that in our area the Chinook health region has chosen to maintain their lab services inside the system. If we listen to the administrators and the board members from the Chinook region, their contention is that they are actually getting their lab services at a lower total cost than what some of the other regions are getting when they have to contract out. So why do we not have those kinds of comparative data sets available so that Albertans can look at the relative costs of the different versions of how their health care system can be delivered and the cost-effectiveness of that?

We talked about that quite a bit as I addressed second reading in my initial discussion the other night, but what we still have to look at is why it is that we cannot get effective cost data, comparative cost data from the system. If the true purpose of this process is to bring about some degree of competitive cost-effectiveness within the system, then we should be able to have benchmark situations created, even if they are budgeted scenarios, that will allow us to look at how the costs will compare. We're undertaking now the possibility of some significant changes in delivery of services, especially in the surgical facility area, and we want to make sure that the public is getting the best value for their dollar. Whether or not it can be done through an expansion of the public system or whether it should be done through contracting out has to be clearly costed out.

Mr. Speaker, one of the other things that constituents are still raising is dealing with the integrity of that public system in terms of who makes the decisions and on what basis those decisions are going to be made. People have always felt reasonably confident up to this time that when they go into the health care system, the criteria for decisions on what services or what treatment they're going to get, what diagnostic procedures will be applied, how the family doctor will deal with specialists – these have all been done with the sense of the citizen that these are being done in their best interest, in their health's best interest. Now what they're doing is asking: are these decisions going to be made on the basis of the dollar, or are they going to be made on the basis of the amount of profit that can be made? Will certain issues or certain procedures be encouraged or discouraged because of the option to make or not make more money through a private operator? Will they be looking at it from the perspective of: how can the patient feel that their good health is the criterion?

If we look at a number of situations, we've seen some of this privatization, and the bottom lines start to creep in already. We're seeing situations where people are being asked to leave or asked to check out of hospitals because they are being directed by the administrators as opposed to the medical staff. This is the kind of thing that we have to make sure doesn't go on as we move to separate those decisions from the public system even one more level. We want to make sure that the health of the patient is the part of the health care system that forms the basis for that kind of decision-making.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think many Albertans would really challenge or question the option of having multiple objectives in terms of the overall health care system, but the major objective that they want to see out of this is good health care for them when they get to access the system. So we have to make sure that confidence and that trust is maintained in the system. When we look at the accountability criteria that are implied in Bill 11, when we look at the accountability system that we have through the public health care delivery now, I think there are going to be some real questions raised as to the transparency and the degree to which individuals can enter into that trust and that full understanding of why decisions are being made and how decisions are being made when it comes to dealing with their health care.

Mr. Speaker, we also have to look at some of the other issues that we want to deal with, especially as we start dealing with the delivery and the access to our health care. We heard the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark speak a little while ago about some of the impacts that may result as we move to a cost-benefit or a profit-driven type system. She made reference to the idea of how supply/demand has to work. I mentioned this in my talk the other day. We are creating a situation by squeezing the public health care system. We're effectively creating a market, a demand for health care services outside the public system. We have to watch also that as we go ahead and do this, if we do create a situation where private surgical facilities are allowed to operate, are allowed to be involved in the health care system, that we'll be expanding the demand for staff, for qualified technicians, for nurses, for surgical specialists.

What we're going to see then is that as this expansion occurs, and especially if it occurs in a short period of time, we'll have a shortage of these professionals in their particular areas. What we'll see then is that there'll be a movement of people into the area or into the geographic location where the surgical facilities have a critical mass to operate in a profitable manner. What this will do is it'll take the trained professionals out of the smaller centres and out of the rural communities and concentrate them in the major areas. This will only exacerbate the situation that we see already where a lot of our rural health care facilities or rural health care clinics are not able to attract the kind of professionals that have the credentials that are necessary to give a well-rounded delivery of health care in those communities.

What we have to do is make sure that the staff are available. We have to also make sure that those staff are paid in a competitive way. We keep talking about the issue of globalization, of mobility of workers, and this is especially true when we get to the area of professional workers. We have to have a reward system for our health care providers in this province that is competitive with the rewards offered in all other jurisdictions where those people can move to freely. That basically means that we have to have a system of remuneration for our health care workers in Alberta that's comparable to all of Canada, comparable to all of North America, and probably comparable to quite a bit of Europe, where people with good credentials and training and experience can basically go and get residence in those areas and move their employment opportunities to the area where they can receive the highest remuneration for their service.

What we have to do is make sure that within Alberta we do have that opportunity without jeopardizing the service in our smaller communities, because they will be the communities that have the most difficulty in trying to attract and retain the kinds of professionals and the trained individuals on a diverse basis that'll allow them to provide a reasonably comprehensive health care system.

That's kind of how we have to look at this process and its potential impact on the access to and delivery of health care in rural Alberta. The smaller regional health authorities, where they don't have the critical mass to warrant one of these surgical facilities, are going to have to look at how they deal with getting their citizens access to those health care services. They've lost the critical mass from some people that want to move to the major centre, to the concentration centre to have those services delivered, and that's going to just erode their delivery as well.

Mr. Speaker, those are the kinds of decisions that we as Albertans within the context of our public health care system can make. We can make those decisions to make sure that everybody has a degree of access and a degree of equity of access to their health care systems and to the same quality of health care. If we allow the profit-driven motive to be the function, what we'll see is that the health care services provided in the areas where there's a critical mass will be at a different level than they will be in the other areas. What we'll then have to do is rely basically on the public health care system to provide the services in those other areas, and we'll be having to deal with how we provide that in the context of a cost-effective delivery system.

The other thing that I wanted to just mention very briefly is the way that we're going to be dealing with some of the other concerns that my constituents have been having. They're still not convinced, even after the discussions of this week as the bill has become much more publicly debated, that the queue-jumping options that we're dealing with in the bill will be fair to them and are going to eliminate the possibility of persons with the money getting services, getting access. That needs to be further explained. We have to look at how they will be able to feel comfortable that they're not being pushed down the list because other persons are able to come in.

It was good to hear in the last couple of days where we're going to be seeing changes now in the foldable lens funding and the paying of that. This is going to provide some other options and some more equitable delivery across the province. But that's the kind of situation that we have to be able to monitor and deal with before it becomes a public issue.

There has to be this degree of planning in the system so we can make sure that kind of differentiated delivery, the differentiated special services or add-on services or enhanced service, isn't driven by the private sector. It's got to be driven by the need of our citizens to feel that they're getting quality health care under their public system. We don't want them to be in a position where it becomes part of the negotiation as to where they get their health care delivery: if you go to the private facility, you can have this enhanced service, but if you go to the public system, that service is not going to be provided. This then becomes an issue of: how do we deal with that kind of equity and that kind of fairness in the delivery of our health care system?

Mr. Speaker, I think that just about covers the issues that I wanted to talk about in my limited number of minutes, but I think that we've got to look at the real issue here, the principle of what we see as the fundamental structure of our public health care system. As I spoke the other day, the background that I have in public accounts, in economics, in accounting, in public policy: it's really difficult for me to perceive how we as a public cannot deliver our health care system to Albertans at a cost that is less than what we can do when we do it through a private system, a system that's full of contracts, where we've got a whole series of administrative units built within those facilities to handle their transactions, to keep that extra level of bookkeeping that's necessary to go between the public system and the private system where, if we're doing it all in the public system, it's all done in one system of bookkeeping.

Every time we add another level of decision-making, of administration, of accountability to our delivery system, that adds a cost to the system. What we want to be sure is that whatever we do, we deliver quality health care to Albertans, and it's our responsibility as legislators to make sure that the public's dollars are used as effectively as we can to give them the level of health care that they perceive as desirable in their perception of what we should have as a public health care system. I don't think we can do that by adding a private sector to our public system. We can do it much more effectively within our public system. We can provide that quality health care, we can provide it on a timely basis, and we can provide it to the satisfaction of all Albertans at a more effective cost than any other system.

We don't want to lose that competitive advantage that this gives us when we have to deal with the rest of the world in the structure of our economic systems. We're already at enough of a disadvantage in the context just of geographic location. We have a lot of transportation costs to get our products to those markets. When we've got an advantage like our health care system, I don't think we want to jeopardize it by adding in another level of cost structure to that public health care system where we lose some of that advantage that we can give to our businesses in this community.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I think I'll just conclude and say that you'll be hearing a lot more when we get into committee.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I suppose it would be unusual to say, at this time as I stand to speak regarding perhaps the most important bill that has come before this Legislative Assembly since Bill 41 and the dramatic change that brought about for Albertans . . . Last evening when the hon. Minister of Economic Development, the Deputy Government House Leader, came forward with the motion to restrict and limit or invoke closure at second reading on Bill 11, that is the most unfortunate of circumstances. This motion is an abuse of the rules of this Legislative Assembly. It is a motion of closure.

Have the hon. members across considered what the Alberta Medical Association would think of that motion? Would the hon. members across stop and pause for a minute and wonder what the College of Physicians and Surgeons would say about this motion? The College of Physicians and Surgeons are more interested in delivering a public health care system that will relieve the long waiting lists for hip surgeries, but they're living in a province where a government and its leader believe that if they're not hearing the right thing – in their minds they want to hear nothing, and therefore this fascination with closure.

Closure would be a symbol in some jurisdictions of fascism. That's what it would be. Everyone in a democracy has a voice, and they're entitled to express their voice. They certainly should have their voice heard, and with this motion that's not happening.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, what the head of the Calgary physicians and the head of the Edmonton physicians, who have come out squarely against Bill 11, feel about this motion. Their opinions and their right to express them are being denied. So I do not understand how the Premier and his government can continue to push Bill 11 down the throats of Albertans.

One argument that the Premier and most recently the hon. Member for Sherwood Park have used is that our population is aging. Seniors are very upset that this regime is trying to scapegoat them, to blame them for all that has gone wrong with their attempt to reorganize our public health care system. The blame is solidly in their quarter, Mr. Speaker, because they have mismanaged the health care system. Now they want to blame the seniors of this province, but the seniors have every right to be upset.

Seniors remember what paying for health care or going without was like before medicare. They're now certainly not prepared to sit back and watch as this provincial government brings in a bill and forces it through this Legislative Assembly with closure, a bill that will destroy one of the very best health care systems in the world. Seniors are upset. They know how this government works. They know that this government is addicted to the use of closure, and they have firsthand experience of how this government's creeping privatization works.

In 1994 seniors' health benefits for eyeglasses and dental work were cut back by the Premier and Mr. Jim Dinning. Six years later they must pay out of their own pockets for services or pay into private insurance programs that will cover these services previously provided under the public health care system. Seniors see this same method of operation under way now. Our senior citizens and soon-to-be seniors are also worried whether or not they'll have enough money to cover deinsured surgeries or private health care premiums.

Prior to 1994 a lot of people retired or took early retirement as firms and governments rightsized and downsized and rationalized their operations. In negotiating their retirement packages, these older Albertans didn't bother negotiating for Alberta health care insurance premium coverage because seniors in Alberta didn't pay premiums. Many of those retirees today now pay over $400 each a year in health care premiums because of the Premier and Mr. Dinning's budget cuts, and these budget cuts took away the universal premium exemption for seniors in 1994. Seniors know how this government, with their idea of management, can mismanage a health care system. They do not trust this government whenever it comes to protecting our public health care system.

Seniors and their families remember that the Premier in his 1993 election literature promised to, quote, continue to support the people who built this province, end of quote. They remember that within 12 months the Premier had broken the promise and turned their world upside down, and now the Premier can't understand why no one in the province trusts him. That is one of the reasons.

Seniors also realize the Premier's promises to them weren't worth the paper they were printed on. Seniors are upset because they see the same type of promises being given again with Bill 11. I realize that governments get sensitive when the public loses trust in them, but this is what's happened in Alberta. Bill 11 has coalesced this mistrust. I'm sorry; that's how it is. The polls reflect this, Mr. Speaker.

Seniors also remember the Premier's promise to elect regional health authorities. Here we are, nearly six years later, and every single regional health authority board is still handpicked by the Conservatives. Seniors remember.

Now, this is another promise, and we can't understand. We get very sensitive, but you've lost the trust of the public. When the Premier promised that the expansion of the special waste treatment plant at Swan Hills would not lead to importing hazardous wastes from outside Canada, here we are 10 years later, and what do we have? Foreign hazardous waste going to the Premier's special waste treatment plant.

MR. HERARD: You're next.

MR. MacDONALD: Now, that's another promise not kept.

Mr. Speaker, I hear one of the hon. members over there, I believe from Calgary-Egmont, say that I'm next to go to Swan Hills. That sounds like this is a government that even denies that Auschwitz existed.

Mr. Speaker, seniors know that given time, the Premier's promise that Bill 11 doesn't mean two-tiered medicine is as empty as his promise to elect regional health authorities and keep foreign waste out of Alberta.

Now, another very large group of citizens who are very worried are rural Albertans and those people living in some of the smaller centres across the province. They know that the private hospitals will locate where the largest demand for services is, where the greatest number of potential patients live. So as the private hospitals go ahead under Bill 11, these citizens will be left wondering and worrying about how much and which services and surgeries will be contracted to the private operators. Rural Albertans already have to take time and money to come into the larger centres for specialists and tests.

This concern is addressed in the government's own study from the health research group. Their own study tells them this, but will they listen? No, Mr. Speaker, they just want to deny; they want to deny; they want to deny. People in smaller centres are already asking: if their local health authorities contract out even more procedures, how much time and money will rural patients and their families have to spend as they trek into the cities for care that used to be provided in their own health regions?

MS LEIBOVICI: And will they have priority in that other health region?

MR. MacDONALD: That is another question: will they have priority? That's a very good question.

The other question that needs to be asked is: how much money allotted for rural regional health authorities will be siphoned off by the private hospitals? For every patient that comes into the city for an operation, the public money that would have been expended in the patient's rural public hospital will now be going to the private operator's hospital, not the local public hospital. So the citizens outside the big cities want answers from this government before anything further happens.

On the CFRN news tonight they announced that 50 government MLAs have yet to speak at second reading on this bill. Fifty. Fifty government MLAs have yet to speak. Now, Albertans are smart, Albertans are practical, Albertans are innovative, and Albertans do not appreciate closure on any bill. All Albertans should be asked to join in on these health care discussions, Mr. Speaker, yet there is a denial, there is a convenient denial placed by the government with this motion. I am very, very disappointed. I'm very disappointed in this government that they would do something like this. Albertans need the full story, and they're not going to be able to get it with this use of closure. That is why it was initiated yesterday evening.

On behalf of all Albertans the Alberta caucus of the Liberal party asked for the results from the focus groups which were asked, I assume, a number of interesting questions. This first one that would come to mind is: what would you like to see on the front of our new health facilities? Is it "private hospital," or is it "approved surgical centre"? We all know what happened. Albertans are very suspicious, and they do not want to hear about a private hospital in a focus group, nor do they want to hear about it in a piece of legislation. We have to understand that when this government invokes closure, they are trying to hide the facts from Albertans, the facts, Mr. Speaker.

We have seen many attempts to find the truth. When we mention the word "truth," the first thing that comes to the minds of Albertans is the truth squads. Now, I see a couple of hon. members in here tonight that are members of the truth squad, but the truth is a very rare commodity when the truth squads fan out across the province. Mr. Speaker, the truth squads are going to have a great deal of difficulty now whenever they attempt to engage Albertans in debate, because the first thing Albertans are going to ask is: tell us the truth about closure. Tell us why this had to be done, this guillotine on debate. It is almost censorship.

There are many reasons why the hon. members across the way are sensitive to any debate that will get real answers as to why they're supporting Bill 11. There is no evidence that Bill 11 will lead to reduced health costs or waiting lists. The only tactic that this government has to sell Bill 11 is advertising. The government does not want to hear from other hon. members in this Assembly. It wants to just buy its way with taxpayers' dollars.

Now, instead of providing Albertans with the information they need – and they're denying it with the use of this closure – this government is giving us spin and propaganda, as I said before, paid for with tax dollars. I'm sure all hon. members have seen or heard the TV ads, the commercials, and the infamous mail-out containing the doctored version of Bill 11. The evidence is clear. Albertans understand this, and they do not trust this government.

If the government has so much evidence, it's not producing it. Mr. Speaker, the government has no evidence, no public support, and no medical support outside of a very few rich doctors who stand to make millions and millions of dollars if this bill goes through. The Premier, members of his cabinet, his MLAs, and the shadowy figures backing them have embarked on a major propaganda blitz to try and push this bill through. So it begs the question: why? Why the big push to go ahead? Why is this information in the contracts and the focus groups being kept from Albertans?

Now, it is interesting. We have to look no further than the Progressive Conservative Association of the hon. Gaming minister. A board member there is part of a family of doctors who were virtually given the Holy Cross hospital for $5 million right after $30 million of public money was spent upgrading it. That's a reason why. Who benefits, Mr. Speaker? You don't have to look any further than the donor list of the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta. Insurance companies, private laboratory companies, private hospital owners, health management firms, private nursing home owners and operators are all pouring money in and waiting for our health care system to be privatized piece by piece.

If this government were truly committed to protecting public health care, there would be a commitment to innovating our current public system. They would be opening up the empty beds and whole floors of hospitals, for instance, like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek. Let's open up the Grey Nuns, make it fully functional. They would hire staff. They would be hiring technologists and diagnostic professionals, so the expensive diagnostic equipment would be working full time.

Mr. Speaker, I think a member of the Friends of Medicare showed great insight when she likened the Conservatives' health policy to running a bakery in a grocery store. She described it this way. It's as if the Premier was the manager of the Co-op bakery. There's a growing demand for bread, and the store keeps running out, but instead of making more bread, investing in new ovens, and hiring more bakers to bake more bread, the Premier just tells the customers to go buy their bread at Safeway. It just doesn't make sense.

Mr. Speaker, I would request unanimous consent to continue my remarks.

[Unanimous consent denied]

MR. MacDONALD: I'm disappointed, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I asked for unanimous consent. I had at least one or two dissenting voices, so there's not much point in pursuing that.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am a little dismayed tonight that I'm rising to speak to a motion that was invoked on the floor of this Assembly yesterday, a motion that will invoke closure. It perplexes me, particularly when I read in Hansard, the March 2 edition on page 223:

I have given an undertaking to debate the bill in front of live television in this Legislative Assembly when it reaches second reading stage. There is no better place, Mr. Speaker, with you, sir, as the referee to debate a bill. That's where a bill should be debated, not in Liberal orchestrated or ND orchestrated town hall meetings but in the Legislature.

So I waited with great anticipation yesterday to speak to Bill 11 in second reading.

1:20

Now, as well, when I was looking today in Beauchesne, I looked under Stages of a Bill, at Beauchesne 640, and particularly section

(2) on second reading.

The stage of second reading is primarily concerned with the principle of a measure. At this stage, debate is not strictly limited to the contents of a bill as other methods of attaining its proposed objective may be considered. This stage is coupled with an Order to commit the bill.

So I certainly looked forward to speaking on this bill at second reading. I still cannot understand why I was denied that right, but I do look forward to speaking to the motion.

Now, I also looked at a number of things here, and I wondered why the Premier invited us to bring on amendments. It was a very fine amendment that my colleague from Edmonton-Manning had brought to the floor of the Assembly last night, an amendment that would have allowed us to gather more information on which we could make a very good decision on Bill 11. We debated this bill, but then after this amendment, we had the Deputy Government House Leader bring in a motion. Why would he do that when the Premier wants open debate? I looked over the Hansards, and I counted that only seven Conservatives out of a total of 64 members had spoken at second reading, for a maximum of two hours and 30 minutes. There were eight Liberals that spoke, for a maximum amount of time of two hours and 50 minutes, Mr. Speaker. Our lone ND had certainly taken his opportunity, and he had spoken for 20 minutes, his 20 allowable minutes. Therefore, at second reading we had a total of 16 speakers out of a possible 82.

[Mr. Herard in the chair]

Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning introduced his amendment, a very fine amendment, as I mentioned earlier. Now, this is even more perplexing. We had only three Conservatives out of 64 who spoke to the amendment. We had eight Liberals that spoke to this amendment. Again, the hon. leader of the NDs spoke to this. I must commend the Minister of Gaming, who certainly wanted to express some views on Bill 11. I must commend the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations for speaking. I must also compliment the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, who spoke on this bill. But when I look at the standing vote – again, that's a very good indication of what happened here – I notice that seven members of the Liberal caucus were here to have the standing vote. We had another member that came in the door just seconds too late, and she was not allowed to vote, which is fine. We agree with that ruling, but there were eight of our caucus here at that hour of the night last night: half of our caucus, 50 percent of this caucus.

MS CARLSON: The other 50 percent were out doing community work.

MR. BONNER: Well, that's right.

Now, I notice here in the standing vote that there were 31 out of 64 Tories that were available for the vote, and that's great. What I also notice here is that we had in the House last night the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness and the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness. They were also present in the House last night. Mr. Speaker, we are debating a bill in this Assembly that will fundamentally change what we have known as a very good public health care system in this province. It is going to be one of the major pieces of legislation that is passed in this Assembly. We had the minister of health and the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness present in the Assembly last night, and they chose not to speak to this bill that has brought more public concern, more public opposition than any bill since I've been in the House. Those two

hon. ministers did not think that it was in their best interests or the interests of their constituents or the interests of Albertans to speak. This is unacceptable, totally unacceptable.

As well, yesterday I had found on my desk the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta's 1998-99 year in review. Of course, they did a summary of issues. In the summary of issues they did mention many of the concerns that our seniors have. One of their major concerns, of course, was the long-term care system. They indicated that it was a very important concern for them throughout the province, and it was a major focus of the council's work. Now, this became even more important to me, Mr. Speaker, because another one of the concerns that these seniors had throughout this province was the accessibility of health care services for our Alberta seniors. This became a very important point because they are concerned about the availability of health care services as they get older. That was their major concern. [interjection] Yes, they are even concerned up in the constituency of Dunvegan. They are very concerned.

My concerns, the ones expressed to me in my constituency office, were by a senior who was doing her best to live in her own home, an 84-year-old senior. What happened was – and they didn't know how – she ended up with infection in both legs. Now, living on her own, she no longer drove, so she had to rely at first on neighbours, friends, and family to take her to the hospital three times a day at eight-hour intervals so she could receive her antibiotics by intravenous. This went on for a few days, and her family started to tell her they could not be available. They were starting to get concerns expressed by their employers that they could not be taking this amount of time off continually.

The reason that she had to do this was because they didn't have a bed for her in a hospital. They didn't have a bed for this 84-year-old person, so she was faced then with the decision of taking a taxi. She could take a taxi from her home down to the Royal Alex and back. A one-way trip was $10. So each day, if she didn't have a neighbour, a friend, or her family to drive her, this senior had to pay $60 per day to go to the Royal Alex for treatment. This is why this particular senior has grave concerns with the availability of health care services.

Now then, as well, Mr. Speaker, I also have a number of concerns that constituents have expressed to me. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to bring their concerns here to the floor of the Legislature. It's amazing that one of their first concerns when they read this bill was: it's called the Health Care Protection Act; why is it not called the public health care protection act? If we as a province are truly committed to the principles and spirit of the Canada Health Act, why is this legislation even required? What has happened to public health care in this province that has led to the introduction of a bill on the floor of this Assembly that cannot be supported by myself, by my colleagues in the Official Opposition, and by the vast majority of the constituents of Edmonton-Glengarry and Albertans as a whole? Bill 11 is a bill that is seriously flawed, and one that in the public interest should be pulled.

I was talking to an old friend over the weekend, a fellow I used to play a lot of hockey with, and we had a very good discussion. This is a gentleman who ran for the Tories in 1993 here in the city of Edmonton. Of course, we all know that in those days it was 'Redmonton,' and it still is, and we're very proud of that.

This person who ran for that party told me that he had spoken to many people that he'd met in that particular party over the years. He'd even spoken to MLAs that're currently serving. I know they won't admit this, and I don't expect them to step up, but he told me that this should not be called Bill 11, that this should be called Ralph's bill. None of them can understand why, when there is such a public outcry and such public opposition against this bill, this Premier continues to push this down the throats of Albertans. He did it last night again through his junior minister when he brought in his motion which effectively invokes closure at second reading.

Now then, why have we got to this point? What has been the combination of events in this province that has led us to where we are today? In 1993 a new ideology was presented to the people of Alberta. We were told that privatization was the way to go. We were led to believe that the private sector was more efficient, that our problem was spending, and that spending was out of control. Was this in fact true? Was the spending pattern in the area of health care prior to 1993 really out of control? All evidence indicates that from 1986 to 1992 – and I might add we had a very competent health minister at that particular time.

MRS. MacBETH: Best cost controls in the country.

MR. BONNER: That is absolutely correct. There were.

So when we had massive cuts in the public service areas of education, social services, transportation, Mr. Speaker, health care basically remained the same. This is where the twisted truths of this party began to take shape.

A closer look shows that in 1986 the per capita cost of health care in this province was $1,360. Now then, six years later those costs have risen to $1,393. A whole difference in six years of $33. If we want to average that out, that was only $5.50 per person over that time. So that funding wasn't that out of control here in the province.

Unfortunately, what happened in 1993 was that we started to get these drastic cuts. So from a level in 1992 of just over $1,300, in 1995 we dropped to $1,156. What a cut. No wonder our public health care system is starved. Those outcomes were predictable. A starved health care system had predictable outcomes which would force hospitals to close hospital beds, to cut staff, and not only that but to close hospitals. Again, who did we blame? We blamed Albertans who got sick. They were overusing the system. Can we believe something that looks that bad?

I think that when we're having this entire debate, Mr. Speaker, what's very important is that we rely on evidence, we rely on reliable studies that have been presented here. I know one was tabled earlier in our discussions, and this was headed up by nursing professor Donna Wilson, who compared seniors to other people who died in acute care hospitals. Her findings showed that the elderly patients received fewer high-cost treatments and that most received low-cost treatments. Ultrahigh costs account in just 3.8 percent of the deaths and skewed the statistics, but seniors were not to blame. The ultrahigh costs were associated with younger people with chronic illnesses, including those born with chronic diseases like cystic fibrosis and diabetes with complications.

Now then, if we want to look at diabetes with complications, one of the complications that diabetics have is that they lose the use of their kidneys. So they must go on kidney dialysis, which is a very serious condition in itself but also a very costly condition, because they require teams in order to treat people that are on kidney dialysis. So this is one of these illnesses that strikes all levels and certainly not one that can be pinned simply on seniors.

As well, Mr. Speaker, on Monday, April 3, 2000, a report titled the Public Purchase of Private Surgical Services: A Systematic Review of the Evidence on Efficiency and Equity was tabled in this Legislature. It was an interim report, and this interim report was very well done. Again it showed many, many fallacies in what we have been told about our public health care system. When we look at our public health care system, it is clearly demonstrated that it not only can compete with private, for-profit hospitals but that it can do it cheaper, it can provide better service, and it can also cut waiting lists. Our public system already has in place all the aspects of the Canada Health Act: accessibility, portability, affordability, universality, and public administration. [Mr. Bonner's speaking time expired]

Thank you very much for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to make these comments. I do have others, and I would ask through you for the Assembly's permission for me to continue with my comments.

[Unanimous consent denied]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: All right. Thank you very much. Let me start off by expressing my deep regret that as a consequence of the government's decision last evening to introduce a motion that the previous question now be put pursuant to Standing Order 47, some 50 government MLAs have been denied the chance to speak to the principle of Bill 11. They may well be afforded the chance to speak at the committee stage, but then, of course, we can only speak to detail of the bill, and at third reading debate is truncated. So it's a sad problem, Mr. Speaker, that on probably the single most controversial bill I've seen in the eight years I've been in this Assembly, 50 members of the Conservative caucus have been deprived of the chance to speak at second reading.

Something like 70 percent of the calls to my constituency office come from the other 20 constituencies in Calgary, many of them from Calgary-Varsity, and I don't know what to tell those Calgarians when they phone me and say: "Why is it that my member isn't standing up to reflect my concerns? Why is it that my member is not answering my questions around public health care?" Mr. Speaker, I don't know what I can say to those people to account for the fact that we've had so few MLAs in the city of Calgary who have been heard in speaking to the principle of this bill. So that's a concern I raise there.

You know, the Premier came to Calgary, put in an appearance in Calgary on March 16, and he was speaking at the fund-raising dinner. Mr. Speaker, I'm sure you were there. This was the Calgary Premier's dinner. [interjections] Oh, I've talked to a number of people who were there, and I've got all kinds of feedback in terms of the mood of the meeting. But what was most interesting is that the Premier spent some time to talk about a visit by the federal Minister of Health to Alberta.

MR. SMITH: You and I were at that meeting.

MR. DICKSON: I'm going to get to that, Minister of Gaming.

In fact, it's interesting to me, all this sort of byplay around the Hon. Allan Rock's visit to Calgary. We have the Premier going on in his speech to the faithful and not so faithful but with deep pockets, coming out indicating that the media had received more notice than Minister Rock had given the Alberta minister of health. Well, you know, I find this so ludicrous. Is that to suggest that when the Premier goes to Victoria to deliver a luncheon address, he has to phone the B.C. Premier in advance to tell him he's coming? The federal minister showed the courtesy to Albertans of coming to the city of Calgary to address it. I don't understand.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Premier went on to say that the audience for his speech was handpicked. Well, I saw the Minister of Gaming there. I saw the fellow who runs McDougall Centre in the audience, and they had prime seats. I got a front row seat, and the Minister of Gaming was in the second row, but the sight line was pretty good.

It struck me that for the Premier to go on talking about, quote, his political staff barring an Alberta minister of the Crown entry to his news conference – what absolute nonsense. You know, this is the government that provides private screenings to members of the media of Bill 16 and denied that to the opposition.

MS LEIBOVICI: Bill 11.

MR. DICKSON: Bill 11. Well, you know, Bill 16 is darn important too, but not as important as Bill 11.

Mr. Speaker, the point I was simply going to make is that the overreaching we saw in the Premier's speech at his fund-raising dinner reflects so much of the hype and the nonsense we've seen around Bill 11. I think the Premier does a huge disservice to the thoughtful, rational, intelligent people of this province by indulging in painting caricatures, caricatures of the federal government, caricatures of anybody opposed to Bill 11. It's so foolish, yet he persists in doing this, as we see day after day in question period.

I think, frankly, that Minister Rock did exactly what I would hope a federal minister would do. He came to Calgary. He acknowledged some really neat innovative projects going on in the city of Calgary. He talked about the Northeast clinic in Edmonton. He talked about the 8th & 8th clinic in Calgary, which incidently was closed the other day. You know what the sign was on the door? No physician available. For a period of time the 8th & 8th clinic was closed because we couldn't find a physician to operate in our facility.

Mr. Speaker, a couple of points I wanted to raise. When the Premier went through and was so busy slagging Ottawa, he didn't do much of a job in terms of making the case for Bill 11. He makes a big reference to the Shouldice clinic, and that's strange because the Shouldice clinic demonstrates the kind of cream skimming that we've been told by all the experts is endemic to private facilities. In fact, I've talked to people and I've got a number of accounts from people who, if you're outside the very narrow criteria of people who have a particular kind of hernia and present a particular kind of patient profile, you can't go there. They do the high-volume hernia procedures and leave all the more complicated ones for the public system. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, a couple of other concerns I wanted to raise in terms of . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: For a little while I was unable to hear the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo because of the noise that was going on on both sides, where we had several dialogues going. Right now we're just on one speech, and that's the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Debate Continued

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to have time in the 12 minutes or so I have left to cover all of the areas that I think are important.

I want to advise the Minister of Gaming that if he goes to www.garydickson.ab.ca and he looks under the speeches tab, what he'll find is that I've done a little five-page analysis. All members, drop by the site. I've done a little five-page analysis of Bill 11, so anything I don't get to today I encourage people – there's also a rotating question. It isn't just my constituents who can register their comments on Bill 11. I will table those comments in the House before I refresh the question. I wanted to make sure that that information was available. [interjection] No, but the other thing that would be helpful to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek: there are a number of hot links that will allow her to go directly to find out what the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness is doing in the area of PDD, to find out what the FOIP bureau is doing in the provincial government.

Mr. Speaker, the point I wanted to make is that there is an area here that begs further scrutiny. I go to the comments of the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. You remember the Tuesday night televised debate and the anchor of the government side, if you will, was the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. He attempted to make a number of observations, and I thought: well, here's an intelligent, thoughtful member of the government side, so he really would have the last word, and it would be interesting to see what he had to do in terms of analysis.

One of the things he said is that Bill 11 would mean that the government would "ensure that such a facility will never exist within the borders of this province." What he was talking about was a private hospital, Mr. Speaker. I think we've been able to establish that in fact a private hospital, as Peter Lown would recognize it – Peter Lown is the gentleman, the prof at the University of Alberta, that shared the blue-ribbon panel. You remember when he dealt with Bill 37, number one and number two, and he and his panel, appointed by the Premier, by the health minister, not by the opposition, said clearly that what was being talked about there was a hospital. If you have an approved surgical facility with overnight stays, that in effect is a hospital. It's a hospital under the Alberta Hospitals Act. It's a hospital under the Canada Health Act. It's a hospital in the parlance of – if you take 10 Albertans and line them up and you put to them the model and you say, "Is that a hospital?" Ten out of 10 of them are going to say: of course it's a hospital. It's only the government that persists in this nonsense that says it isn't.

I also want to draw the members' attention to a couple of excellent articles. This is all about privatization in health care, and there's a wonderful article that was done. Actually, it's a presentation by Pamela Bloomfield, Deputy Inspector General for Management, Massachusetts Office of the Inspector General. Her analysis was entitled Flawed Public-Private Partnerships: Lessons From Bad Bargains. One of the interesting things that she identifies under the heading Avoiding Bad Bargains – and one has only to think of some of the deals that the CRHA has made to see that we have the examples here, and they're readily available. She says:

Private firms that undertake public-private partnerships will ensure that their interests are protected, and public agencies have an obligation to do the same.

Then she goes on to say:

Developing and enforcing effective contract safeguards is also essential to protecting the public interest. The major business terms of the contract should be established prior to and incorporated into the competitive selection process to encourage realistic price proposals and reduce the public's financial exposure over the contract term.

However, high political stakes will increase the pressure on responsible public officials to move forward with the public-private partnership at any cost.

Then skipping ahead to the last part of the paragraph:

If walking away from the contract negotiations or replacing the contractor are not regarded as realistic options, the benefits of competition can evaporate.

That's confirmed by another study, in the CSG & ASPA magazine, entitled Privatization and Cozy Politics. I'd just quote the following observation.

Distaste for the "politics of politics" does not prevent some actors in the public and private sectors from turning privatization to their own political purposes. What might be termed "cozy politics" comes into play when goal displacement occurs. Cozy political arrangements enable companies or nonprofit agencies to win public agency contracts through political influence rather than technical core competence. The result is that those designated to provide the goods and services, along with their legislative and political executive allies, benefit at the expense of the intended program beneficiaries. On occasion, the public agency itself may become involved in such contracting out agreements.

Why is that important? Well, Mr. Speaker, it's because of the sorry experience we have in this province of section 15 of the FOIP Act, the section that the provincial government has refused to change. The three-year review was torpedoed because the government members on that review absolutely refused to reduce section 15. I filed a dissent to it. That's on my web site, too, Minister of Gaming, which I'd invite you to visit and review the comments there.

We had a bad history with section 15, in the way that's enforced. Why is that significant? Well, in the city of Calgary you have Dr. Steve Miller who serves as both medical director of HRG and head of orthopedics at the Foothills hospital. You've got Jim Saunders, former chief executive of HRG and now vice-chair of the board and had previously served as vice-president of the former Calgary regional hospital group, and so on. Then in June of '99 Saunders joined North American Medical, a Calgary company opening a U.S. style hospital in Cabos San Lucas. You've got Jim Saunders' job as chief executive of HRG taken over by Tom Saunders, no relation, who is president of Columbia Rehabilitation, another private health venture. He was also previously on the board of HRG.

Columbia Rehabilitation has contracts with both the CRHA and workers' compensation. The CRHA recently announced the EGO, the Equity Office Condominiums Corporation. They're talking about a one-stop medical facility in Douglasdale in southeast Calgary. Then we see another range of opportunities for clinics. Well, two of the key people associated with that are Fred Johnston, president of Equity Office Condominiums; Adrian Abbott, vice-president of marketing. Kabir Jivraj, the CRHA's chief medical officer, is one of the owners of Surgical Centres Inc., a privately owned company. The CRHA has surgical contracts with two clinics run by Surgical Centres Inc., one near the Foothills hospital and the other at Southland Court. Dr. Peter Huang, division chief of ophthalmology for the CRHA, and his brother Dr. John Huang were involved through Holy Cross Surgical Services. They paid $4.5 million to take over the old Holy Cross site after we spent . . .

MR. SMITH: In a public tendering process.

MR. DICKSON: Well, actually this becomes very interesting. The suggestion is that it was a public tendering process. What you had was that the government appointed a little group that screened a number of applications according to criteria that were approved by the minister of health. The entire process was not in any sense transparent. It was a closed process, and what we were left with at the end was an announcement that we were going to award the contract to the Huangs. I can go on detailing the concerns, but we have a number of concerns with the existing contracting relationships and the lack of conflict of interest legislation.

The Member for Calgary-Glenmore, getting back to his comments in the speech, talked about the protections that would exist. He talked about the health authority as one of one of the safeguards.

Well, I don't have very much confidence, Mr. Speaker, that the Calgary regional health authority is going to do the job of protecting public health care in the city of Calgary. They have no mandate other than what they get from the Minister of Health and Wellness and the Premier. The Member for Calgary-Glenmore said that we can rely on the Minister of Health and Wellness because he's the guy who has all of this discretion, but as I tried to point out in my initial speech at second reading, he has very broad and general discretion. There are very few criteria. There are very vague criteria in terms of how he's going to be able to apply that, and that's an enormous concern.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we go on. We have the Member for Calgary-Glenmore talking about the accessibility principle. In fact, all of the evidence suggests that accessibility is compromised now in the city of Calgary. It's interesting that the government is desperate to sell Bill 11. Hence you saw the announcement the other day that suddenly the foldable lens is now going to be insured. The foldable lens is now going to be covered. Just a scant few days ago, did we not hear the officials in Alberta Health and Wellness – it's usually Mr. Norris rather than the minister or the associate minister. In any event, Mr. Norris on behalf presumably of the department, the minister, and the associate minister will say: this is a medical decision; this isn't a political decision, and we don't have the medical studies that show that the foldable lens is an acceptable item, and even though Lethbridge provides it as part of the insured service, in the rest of the province we're not sure. The government is mired in quicksand up to their necks in Bill 11, and we suddenly have an announcement: the foldable lens is going to be covered. I'd like to think that that woman I talked about in my second reading speech who had to pay $4,000 is now going to get her money back.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise and participate in this debate this evening. We've heard much throughout the evening about last night and how limiting the amount of debate that one can have on second reading of a bill to a maximum of three times per member was somehow or other stifling the democratic process. Well, I can't understand the logic in that. I've been in this House for seven years now, and until now I haven't encountered an occasion where there would be a number of amendments that were introduced at second reading of a bill. So I frankly have no problem supporting the motion that is at hand.

As a matter of fact, I appreciate the ruling that was made by the chair, and I understand that in conjunction with respective House leaders, that in addition to discussing the motion that's before us – and that motion is to put the previous question – there is a great deal of room for members to speak to all aspects of the bill. So I would like to spend a little bit of time speaking about the bill this evening, but I also want to point out to all members, including the members of the opposition, that we are now at second reading on a bill. Parliamentary procedure dictates that after second reading we move to Committee of the Whole. At Committee of the Whole there is ample opportunity for members to voice concerns that they have heard, and Mr. Speaker, I intend to participate in the debate in Committee of the Whole. I may even participate in debate at third reading on this bill. So I don't feel that there is any way that I feel hampered in my ability to represent the views of the people who elected me from Medicine Hat on this bill in light of the motion that's before us.

I do want to spend a little bit of time talking about the principles of the bill. Much of what I had planned to talk about at second reading I will probably reserve until Committee of the Whole, because I think most of the input that I have been hearing from people in Medicine Hat has to do with some very specific issues on the bill, issues which I feel very confident will be dealt with through amendments, amendments introduced by the government, and I fully expect there will be amendments introduced by the opposition. In fact, the opposition has indicated that they have many amendments which they would be proposing to introduce. So I look forward to listening to those amendments and perhaps participating in the debate.

What I want to talk about tonight, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that we have heard repeatedly throughout the debate on Bill 11 about what an historic bill this is, how this is going to forever change health care from the way we know it. Well, I simply don't agree with that contention. Frankly, I think there has been massive misrepresentation made of what Bill 11 is all about.

Mr. Speaker, we have in place now a publicly funded, publicly administered health care system where there is some private-sector involvement through contracted surgeries. There is public-sector involvement. There are public/private sector partnerships. The system is not perfect, and no one ever said that the system is perfect. The system can be improved, and I think it is the obligation of any responsible government to constantly try to improve the system. Will this bill cure all of the problems that we experience with health care? Of course it won't. This bill never was intended to be – and I heard another member say it earlier this evening – a panacea.

What this bill does is provide a tool to regional health authorities so that they will have an opportunity to take the very positive experience they've had with contracting facilities for procedures that require less than 12 hours of convalescence on the part of the patient in the facility and extend those positive types of contracts to procedures that perhaps will require more than 12 hours. That is all this bill is about. It then goes on to say that if there is going to be a contract that requires more than 12 hours recovery, then there are some rules that are put in place on how that contract will be dealt with. That is the essence of the bill.

There is nothing in this bill that will force an Alberta resident to pay for a medical service. There's nothing in this bill that will allow for the quote, two-tiered system to develop in health care in Alberta, absolutely nothing. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I contend that without Bill 11 in place, if the status quo were left in place, we would very seriously see a threat of a two-tiered system developing in this province because there would be facilities that would establish themselves and they would be out there with the Visa sign on their door and people would be able to walk in and get the services. Bill 11 prohibits that. Bill 11 very specifically prohibits that, and it does it in a number of ways, most of which are included in the detail of the bill.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I want to get into some debate on the detail of the bill at the appropriate stage in debate in this House, and that is the Committee of the Whole stage. Therefore, I would move that we adjourn debate this evening, and I look forward to taking part in further debate at Committee of the Whole.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 2:08 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 12, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/04/12

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta.

Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Mr. Green Josiah, high commissioner for the Republic of Kenya. Accompanying His Excellency is his wife, Mrs. Anne Josiah. This is the ambassador's first official visit to Alberta since his appointment last December, and we're very pleased to welcome him and his wife to our province. Kenya, as members would know, is a Commonwealth nation in east Africa with deeply rooted traditions, a diverse landscape, and rich ecosystems unique to the world.

We had an opportunity over lunch to discuss opportunities for cooperation between our province and the Republic of Kenya, and we're very interested in having His Excellency and his wife return to our province very soon. We are very pleased that they've come to Alberta. We want to wish them a very productive and a very enjoyable stay in our province. Mr. Speaker, I would ask that they now rise and receive the very warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, we seem to have a list today.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to present a petition to urge the provincial "government to stop promoting private health care and undermining [the] public health care [system]." It is from citizens in Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Picture Butte, and Coaldale. I would ask that it be presented at this time.

THE SPEAKER: We'll come to that a little later.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a very interesting petition this afternoon. It is signed by 268 individuals from Redwater, Spruce Grove, and Edmonton. This petition reads:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Government of Alberta to withdraw Bill 11. We strongly oppose the use of For-Profit firms to provide health care. We request that all additional health care funding be directly invested to expand our existing Public Health Care system. All Albertans have a right to equal and affordable access to Health Care.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition signed by 266 people from Edmonton, Sherwood Park, St. Albert, Cardiff, Ardrossan, Lamont, Mundare, Two Hills, Chipman, Tofield, Morinville, and Ashmont. They are urging the Legislative Assembly "to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and table a petition that has been signed by 234 citizens in Alberta from the communities of Spruce Grove, Sherwood Park, St. Albert, Leduc, Camrose, Plamondon, Hay Lakes, Busby, Bittern Lake, and the city of Edmonton. They "petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition with 80 Albertans signing it from Vermilion, Mannville, Minburn, Elk Point, Hanna, Dewberry and the petition reads:

We, the undersigned the citizens of Alberta, strongly oppose the privatization of health care services in Alberta. We do not wish to see for-profit services used in our health care because we believe that this will lead to a two-tier system. We call for funding to be restored by the Provincial Government to public health care to reduce the current long waiting lists.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to table today signed by 511 Albertans from seven different communities across the province including Valleyview, Sunset House, Grande Prairie, New Fish Creek, Beaverlodge, Little Smoky, Calgary, Sherwood Park, Alberta Beach, Gibbons, Clyde, Ardrossan, High Prairie, Spruce Grove, Coronation, St. Albert, and Leduc. This brings the total number to over 13,000 today.

Thank you.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Once again, hon. members, there is a list here.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the petition standing in my name on the Order Paper now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and ask that the petition tabled under my name yesterday now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition introduced on April 11 with respect to concerns about private health care now be read and received, please.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure this afternoon to ask that the petition that's on the Order Paper in my name now be read and received. It's the one dealing with promoting private, for-profit health care in this province.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would request that the petition I tabled yesterday from Albertans opposing the privatization of health care now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the two petitions I presented yesterday now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to introduce a Bill banning the establishment of private, for-profit [hospitals] to ensure the integrity of public, universal health care may be maintained.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented on April 11 signed by 264 Albertans opposing private health care now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented yesterday in support of public health care now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to respectfully request that the petition I tabled yesterday, the 11th of April, be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that the petition with respect to public health care that I introduced yesterday now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, wish that the petition I presented yesterday signed by 239 Albertans requesting that the promotion of private health care and the undermining of public health care be stopped now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday, April 11, I presented two petitions to the Legislative Assembly. The first was from 257 individuals from Edson and Sangudo, and the second was from 396 constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar. If these two petitions could now be read and received, I would be grateful.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to file with the Assembly copies of a letter of congratulations sent by the Premier earlier today to Stacy Schiff. Ms Schiff is an Edmonton-based writer who yesterday was named the recipient of the prestigious Pulitzer Prize for literature for her biography entitled Verá.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I table today in the House the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission business plan for the years 2000 through 2003. AADAC, of course, is a provincial agency within Alberta Health and Wellness. In tabling these five copies of the business plan today, I want to acknowledge the sincere and hard work of the chair of the commission, the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, and the dedication and expertise of commission staff and their CEO in serving the citizens of this great province through their important work in treating and preventing addiction-related problems.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to table five copies of Court Reporters' Brief from April 2000. It was prepared by a number of the court reporters in the attempt to support the position they have taken with respect to court reporters being taken out of the courtroom. Along with that, I would ask that this synopsis and briefing be sent to the Minister of Justice on their behalf.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a brochure that was distributed to the constituents of Edmonton-Centre, encouraging them to get more information on Bill 11 by reading, watching the televised debate, and checking Hansard.

Thank you very much.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Speaker, I have three tablings today in opposition to Bill 11 from Darrel Runka, Linda Thomsen, and Joshua Stuart. Appropriate copies will be tabled.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is from Stephen Bown and Nicky Brink. They are opposed to the proposed development in Kananaskis, and they're sending their letter to the Premier.

The second tabling is from Michael White from Calgary. He is also opposed to any additional development in the Spray Valley area of Kananaskis County, and he is sending his letter to the Premier.

The third tabling I have today is from Lisa Downing, who states a number of facts about why any further development in Kananaskis Country should be stopped. Her letter is also to the Premier.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a document on behalf of Gwyneth Foster-Newell and Dan Newell on 94th Avenue in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. This is a simple reflection of their opposition to Bill 11.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, both to the Premier of the province. One is from a lady down in Strathmore, Ms Martineau. It's concerned with the development of the Kananaskis Valley.

The other one is from Elise Parker, with great concerns about the development in Kananaskis Country.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have three tablings. All three are diametrically opposed to the proposed Genesis development in the Spray Valley and Kananaskis Country. The first is a letter to the Premier from Emma Hannah of Canmore. Her particular and special interest is the habitat of grizzlies and wolves.

The second is from Gail Boehm from Calgary. Her particular interest is that she is a backcountry hiker and skier and is diametrically opposed to the development.

The third is from Jennifer Thornton from Canmore, again. She wishes an immediate stop to the future development.

Thank you, sir.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three brief tablings. The first one is an excerpt from the report of the Canadian Institute for Health Information showing provincial health care expenditures on hospitals declining by 27 percent between 1992 and 1995.

The second one is a summary and brief analysis of Bill 11 second reading debate from Tuesday, April 11.

The final thing is a list of the 48 government members that have not yet spoken at second reading on Bill 11.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today, all expressing opposition to Bill 11. The first one is a letter from Genevieve Thurlow, a constituent of Calgary-Egmont. She presents an extended analysis of reasons to oppose Bill 11.

The second one is a letter from Margaret Zyla from Calgary, again expressing detailed concerns about Bill 11.

The third one, Mr. Speaker, is a 25-page document written by Blair McPherson, and the title is The Real Reason for Stamping on Bill 11.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I have three tablings today. The first two are to the Premier from Terry Forkheim and Dale Hughes. They are opposing the development of a heli-skiing operation and four-season resort in the Spray Valley.

My last tabling today, Mr. Speaker, is to the director of environmental assessment from Shirley Marsh. Again, she is urging the government to stop the development of a heli-skiing operation and four-season resort in the Spray Valley.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have two letters with the appropriate copies regarding concerns and people expressing that they do not want any more development in the Spray Lakes area, Kananaskis Country. They are from Gisele Villeneuve and Martine Wilson.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table what's called a petition, but it isn't in the natural framework. It's from a group of Edmontonians who are Francophone. It says:

Nous les soussignes, citoyens de l'Alberta, petitionnons L'Assemblée Legislative de rejeter tout changement dans la législation gouvernant les soins de sante presentement fourni par le systeme public qui voudrait transferer ces services a des organisations a buts lucratifs.

[Translation] We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to reject any change in the health services legislation that would use private for profit organizations to deliver health care services currently provided by the public system. [as submitted]

Merci.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to rise and table the required number of copies of correspondence from three citizens who are writing with concerns with respect to the Genesis Land Development in the Spray Valley. To summarize their concerns and expedite the tabling, they raise concerns about power generation, the impact on wildlife, road upgrades and who would be responsible for costs, water quality downstream in Canmore, and the cumulative impact of this development.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Timothy and Jeff Duncan, two Mount Royal College students who happen to live in my constituency. I am happy to say that years ago Tim was involved in my campaign. He's actually much bigger now. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that they stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly six former pages of this Alberta Legislative Assembly. They are seated in your gallery this afternoon. Jonathan Seinen served as Speaker's page from August of '96 to December of '98, along with former pages Maria Yu, who served from January of '98 to May of '99; Ashley Rose, who served from April of '98 to December of '99; Sana Siddiqui, who served from November of '98 to December of '98; Robin Wilson, who served from November of '98 to April of '99; and Erin Martin, who served from February of '99 to December of '99. Accompanying former page Ashley Rose is her mother, Sharyn Rose.

We are pleased that they are able to view this Assembly from a different perspective. I would ask them now to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

MR. TRYNCHY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to the Legislative Assembly this afternoon 13 grades 5 and 6 students from the Meadowview school. The school has students from your constituency and also some from my constituency. They're seated in the members' gallery. They're accompanied by teachers Jeanette Shipton, Anita Sherwood, Lorraine Bartholow, and, I believe, Rose Phillips. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three people who work very hard for the province and people of Alberta: Danielle Brezina, John Nichol, and Dick Batten. They're up from Calgary today. They all work with the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, and they've been extremely helpful to work with in regards to drafting and making Bill 13 happen. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I have two introductions to make today. First of all, I'd like to introduce 50 very special guests, 50 examples of our most precious resource. They are students from Minchau school in my constituency who are accompanied by teachers and group leaders Laurel Chomyc of Shumka Dancers fame; Teresa O'Neill; and helpers Donna Graham and Anna Stevenson. I would ask all of them to please rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's also a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to everyone in attendance Ms Paddy Meade, the chief executive officer of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission. AADAC, as you know, is a major provincial resource in providing addictions expertise and in serving as a focus for substance abuse and gambling-related services. The commission is also a very major contributor to cross-government initiatives, including the Alberta children's initiative. Paddy is seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that she rise and receive the very warm welcome of our members.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege today to introduce to you 14 students from Rosemary, Alberta. They're accompanied by Mr. David Blumell. I'd like to draw the Assembly's attention to something very special. This will be about the ninth or 10th year in a row that Mr. Blumell has brought students from Rosemary school to the Legislature. Considering how far Rosemary is from Edmonton, I think that's a great honour. Accompanying David and the students are Mrs. Valerie Watson and Mrs. Lenora Dyck. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and introduce a young student who is visiting the Legislature for the first time. She is also an excellent defenceman on the Edmonton Girls Hockey Association Shooting Stars, who won the playoffs for their division in Edmonton this spring. I would ask Melissa Stevenson to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought you were playing hard to get today.

I have three introductions. My first is 32 students from Delton elementary school with teachers Mrs. Kathy LeBlanc and Mrs. Michelle Korchinski and parent helper Mrs. Williams. I would ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

I would also like to introduce to you and through you Ms Deirdre Crandall. She is the vice-president of the Highlands constituency association and has a long involvement in Liberal politics in Edmonton East and Edmonton Highlands. If she would rise to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

My final introduction, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly court reporters who were very instrumental in preparing the documentation for the Minister of Justice today: Sandy Dowhaniuk, Brenda Fusco, Shanah Clark, Joyce Lopatka, Michelle Fradette, and AUPE representatives President Dan MacLennan, Lynne Gingras, and Mike Boyle. If they would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Free Votes

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 8, 1995, the Premier said in this Chamber:

One of the beautiful things about a free vote in the Legislature is that the leader of the government and the Leader of the Opposition are just part of the Assembly. They are no more, and they are no less. I would hope that that would be the spirit that the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition would adopt when we enter into this very important phase of legislative democracy.

My question is to the Premier. Why has he changed his mind about free votes?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I haven't changed my mind vis-a-vis free votes. As a matter of fact, we've had more free votes since 1995 than in any other period in the history of this Legislature as it relates to private members' bills.

To speak to the issue of democracy – and I'm glad that the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition has brought it up – I would have the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General and Government House Leader talk about democracy.

2:00

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an interesting question that's been raised because, of course, since 1993 and the rule changes, private members' day – and today, Wednesday, is a private members' day – more private members' bills have been passed in this House than in any other Legislature that I'm aware of in the parliamentary Commonwealth system.

It's important to note that members vote on a free basis on private members' bills in this House, and Mr. Speaker, it's important to note . . .

MRS. SOETAERT: How many closures?

MR. HANCOCK: I hear the opposition yelling "closures." The debate on private members' bills is time-limited debate. We get two hours of debate at second reading on a private member's bill, and those bills can be as important in terms that they become law when they're passed by this Assembly. That's the democracy as we know it in Alberta. Every member of this House has an opportunity to bring forward a private member's bill and have it debated. Those private members' bills at second reading, at Committee of the Whole, and at third reading are subject to closure, as the opposition defines it, because it's time-limited debate by our Standing Orders.

That's democracy in Alberta. That's the democracy we operate by. Private members have the opportunity in this province to make law. We've seen it made, and we've seen it made in this province more often than in any other parliamentary democracy that I'm aware of.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, the first question had to do with free votes, and one of the time-honoured traditions of this Assembly is also free speech. That means that when an individual is recognized, other members have their freedom to listen to that particular individual and not interfere with them.

Today is one of those unique days in which we have a whole series of young people from around the province of Alberta in our galleries, and a number that I had an opportunity to meet a little earlier. I in fact extolled to them that one of the things we have in this Assembly is something called decorum, and when one hon. member is recognized, all other hon. members listen. So let's see if we can actually put that into practice, all members. That would be very useful, quite frankly.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, maybe the Government House Leader didn't get enough sleep last night. We're talking about government bills, not private members' bills.

Given that 56 percent of Albertans in the latest poll oppose this government's private health care policy, why won't the Premier let his MLAs reflect that reality in their positions in this Legislature through a free vote?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is no private health care policy in question. Therefore, the issue is irrelevant. Relative to the democratic processes that relate to government bills, again I will have the Government House Leader stand up and explain the rules of democracy to the Leader of the Official Opposition. Obviously she doesn't understand them, never has understood them, and still doesn't understand them today. So I'll have the hon. minister give her a clinic.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In responding to that, I just want to correct one of the statements that was made. The hon. Leader of the Opposition indicates that for some reason government bills are more important than private members' bills. Indeed, the government agenda is an important agenda, but every bill passed by this House becomes the law of the province of Alberta. Private members' bills come forward – and the hon. leader is sponsoring one, I think, this afternoon. If it passes, it becomes the law of the province of Alberta, and it's dealt with in time-limited debate under the Standing Orders of this House, two hours of debate before we vote.

It seems to me that as of last night there were some 1,100 minutes of debate on another bill before this House, 1,100 minutes. Under the Standing Orders of this House, of course, there's an opportunity to amend bills, and there's an opportunity under the Standing Orders to move the previous question, which was done. The Leader of the Opposition seems to complain that that's not democracy, but those same Standing Orders are the Standing Orders that this House has approved, the Standing Orders that this House operates by, and that is democracy in Alberta.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's try it again. Given that two-thirds of Albertans say that amendments of the Premier's private health care policy won't change their minds, why doesn't the Premier just drop his private health care policy altogether and do Albertans a favour?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, no. It's the right thing to do. The policy is to protect the public health care system as we see it today. It's to put fences and rules and regulations around something that has existed in this province for many, many years.

Getting back to this issue of democracy, this is a very, very important issue. Some people who were here in the Legislature when this leader of the Liberal opposition was the minister of education recall when she stamped her foot, and she said: I demand that every one in this caucus vote for the School Act; I demand.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the democratic process – and I know that one can only direct a question through parliamentary convention and tradition to a minister. Again, this is a question that has been posed by the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition. She said that there is no unanimity, that we're split. I will ask the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Affairs to respond as to how she feels about the government's health policy.

THE SPEAKER: Actually, we've spent eight minutes on this series of questions.

We'll move along to the second main question. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Foldable Intraocular Lenses

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All the polls say that the Premier is in trouble with his private health care policy. Albertans know it. Despite a million dollar advertising campaign with their own tax dollars, Albertans don't trust the Premier, his government, or his policy. But now he's finally spending another $3 million on upgraded lenses to try and fix the mess that's been created there. In other words, he's doing what he said he wouldn't do and that is to make a political decision to determine medical necessity in this province. My questions are to the Premier. Does the Premier plan to reimburse those Albertans who have paid out-of-pocket for the upgraded lenses up until now?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, when she was minister of health, created the mess. She was the minister of the day who put through the order in council signed by her to allow for enhanced services.

Mr. Speaker, relative to health policy: the bill that is before this Legislature now, I would remind all members, is only one component of a six-point plan.

Relative to what is happening generally I am going to have first the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness speak to this issue, followed by the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Premier, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to make a quick comment here off the top with respect to foldable lenses. This issue has been under study and under diagnosis, you might say, by this government and also by the medical fraternity in a broader sense for quite some time. We're happy with the very positive results that came out just recently so that we could make this important announcement yesterday, which will see about a $3 million investment into this area that will tremendously benefit Albertans. Equally important, it will standardize that particular issue, and it will take away any disparities that may have existed.

It's a very positive step, a very warm step for Albertans, and I will assure you that Albertans will be highly in favour of this as they come to know more about it.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we know, according to the Lamont hospital the cost of an upgraded lens is about $117 for that hospital's procedure. The cost at the private clinics ranges anywhere from zero to $250 to up to $750 for the same procedure. Can the Premier tell the people of this province and this Assembly what the government is paying for these upgraded lenses?

MR. KLEIN: An interesting question, Mr. Speaker, but first of all, I would like to pose the question. I'm not quite sure where the Liberals stand on this issue. Are they for or against the foldable lenses being covered as an insured service? Would they stand up or will they stand up now and declare where they stand on this particular issue?

Relative to the cost of this particular instrument, this particular device, I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond.

2:10

MR. JONSON: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest that perhaps the next request from across the way will be to reimburse all the Albertans that paid facility fees to clinics under her particular regime.

Mr. Speaker, the cost for a foldable lens is some $250. The cost for a solid lens or inflexible lens is about $35, $37. So in terms of the financial impact, yes, it is a significant financial impact, but we are following the changing assessment of what is beneficial to individuals in terms of having these lenses. We've adopted coverage for the foldable lens. I might just indicate that in Canada we are among only three provinces, as I understand it, that cover the foldable lens, which is the one that is deemed most beneficial to the patient.

MRS. MacBETH: We'll try again, Mr. Speaker. Given that the contracts that have been amended, obviously to accommodate this new payment scheme, will those contracts now be made public so that the public can see what the government is paying and what the clinics are charging for that procedure and those lenses?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if the Liberals would quit their filibustering, would stop their political nonsense and let us get on with the bill, then we can address the whole conflict of interest situation and the issue of openness and transparency as it relates to contracts, as it relates to folding lenses, as it relates to any other technological advance in medicine.

I'm pleased and very, very proud that we have within this government the Department of Innovation and Science that oversees the Alberta heritage trust for medical research. To talk about some of the marvelous advances that are being made relative to medical research, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. minister respond.

THE SPEAKER: I think we've now spent six and a half minutes in this set of questions. There are many members who have questions today.

Third question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Conflict-of-Interest Guidelines

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, almost daily the Official Opposition has presented very solid evidence on the economic, ethical, social, and business case benefits of public health care. The Premier has not answered the questions about who benefits from his private health care policy. So in reflecting the questions that Albertans have put to us and asked us to raise in the Assembly, will the Premier sign a declaration guaranteeing that he will not benefit from any association with private health care clinics in Alberta for a minimum of 10 years upon his leaving office?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have never heard such a sleazy question. I mean, this is the height. You know, will this hon. member sign an agreement? She was a consultant after she left as minister of health, went directly into the field of consulting on health care. No one ever posed to her the question: would she refrain for 10 years? That is a disgrace. It's embarrassing.

Relative to economic evidence, there are two ministers involved with the development of economic evidence as it relates to health care. One is the Minister of Innovation and Science, and the other is the Minister of Economic Development. Again, I will have the Minister of Innovation and Science supplement.

MR. HANCOCK: Point of order.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we have to recognize in this province that there has been a lot of economic development because of the direct evidence of this government, because this government has recognized the importance of innovation and a knowledge-based economy.

Now, if I could give you just one quick example. A number of years ago the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research was established. It is now a one billion dollar fund; a one billion dollar fund. This was done by a Conservative government that has the foreknowledge and the recognition of the importance of a knowledge-based economy, not by the nattering nabobs of negativism opposite, Mr. Speaker.

Let me give you an example of this. We have today a product going to market because of funding from the AHFMR. It was developed by Dr. Patrick Lee at the University of Calgary, and it is a cancer-eating virus. It was developed, it was first announced a little bit . . .

I see you're wanting me shorten up, Mr. Speaker, but this is important that Albertans recognize . . .

THE SPEAKER: Thank you very much. Let's move on.

MRS. MacBETH: Given that there is a current cooling-off period for members of Executive Council, will this Premier amend it to include a cooling-off period with respect to any benefit flowing from association with private clinics? It's the question that Albertans have asked us to raise in this Assembly.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how long I'm going to be around in this business, but certainly I plan to be around for at least another term.

I see that even the CUPE poll, although they tried to make it as negative as they possibly could, still had us at 40 compared to 24, which is not bad. You know, I like 66 percent a little bit better; I like 72 even a little bit better. We'll get back up there. That's no problem.

So I plan to be around here. I don't plan to get into the medical business, the oil business, whatever business whatsoever. I plan to stick around to represent Albertans and to keep this province strong and proud.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, it's a simple question. Will he amend his conflict-of-interest rules and regulations to provide for the review of the private, for-profit health care and the involvement of his own or any of his ministers in benefiting from those private health care clinics? Will he amend his conflict-of-interest rules and regulations? It's a simple question.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if anyone could have used a cooling-off period, it would have been the leader of the Liberal opposition. This leader, after losing the Conservative leadership, and not very gracefully, mind you, and serving out her time in the backbenches until the next election, went directly into the health consulting field. She had no problems with conflict of interest, no problems using her expertise – well, supposed expertise that she supposedly developed during her term as minister of health – as a consultant. This is the perfect example of the pot calling the kettle black.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is using health care policy changes as a public relations tool in a desperate attempt to win public support for its for-profit hospitals scheme. After years of turning a blind eye towards them, long-standing problems such as profiteering from the sale of foldable lenses at private eye clinics are finally being addressed.

Yesterday, the Premier told reporters that the government plans to announce a new MRI policy. Pursuant to this soon-to-be-announced

MRI policy, will the government refuse to approve Calgary regional health authorities' proposal to have private MRI clinics contract for public dollars?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I will have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond relative to the MRI situation as it pertains to all of Alberta.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, our overall initiative through Alberta Health and Wellness as a government has been, yes, for a number of years in our business plans to expand diagnostic services, particularly with CAT scan and MRI technology. There have been several occasions, including the examination of Alberta Health and Wellness' budget, where we have outlined the work that we are steadily doing to expand capacity for the benefit of Albertans in these areas.

I have by way of illustration indicated that over the past year we have added MRI machines, and the services will be shortly in full operation in Lethbridge. The diagnostic equipment is in Red Deer. It is moving towards being operational. Also, work is being done in Grande Prairie where one is planned, and the very beginnings of planning and work is occurring in Medicine Hat. So this initiative on the part of government is not at all new. It is a continuing effort, and we are looking to the advice of our Diagnostic Imaging Advisory Committee to plan further in terms of improving this service in the province.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question again to the Premier: will the government commit today to ending queue-jumping by investing in additional MRI capacity in public facilities rather than choosing to have public money siphoned off by private MRI clinics?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the AMA and all the medical professions agree that within the system there has to be a private/public kind of partnership. The AMA has said that quite clearly. The contracting out has always been part of and always will be a part of the system. What we want to do is to put some rules and regulations around the contracting out as it pertains to surgical procedures.

With respect to MRIs, this, as the hon. member knows, is not covered under the Canada Health Act, and it seems to me that it would be unreasonable for Alberta health to pay for a person who simply wants to get himself or herself checked out. I can guarantee you, and I can tell this hon. member that if a doctor prescribes an MRI, that will be paid for by the publicly funded health care system whether it's in a hospital, Mr. Speaker, or whether it's in a private clinic. It will be paid for if it is prescribed.

If a person, a perfectly healthy person – and I assume that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is; he looks very healthy to me. If this hon. member wants to say, "Well, you know, I'm not so sure about myself, and I'd like to go get checked out," and there's nothing wrong with him and a doctor hasn't prescribed an MRI, then he should pay. Don't you think so? [interjections]

No, you should pay. Oh, you would never use an MRI? Well, okay. Let's hope that you don't get banged up in a car accident, that you don't have a serious illness, and let's hope that your doctor never prescribes an MRI for you, because you know what, sir? One day you might just need one, and you'll be so thankful that you will be able to access that MRI through the publicly funded system.

DR. PANNU: My last question to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: what evidence does the government have that subsidizing private, for-profit MRI clinics is more cost-effective than adding additional MRI capacity in public facilities?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is much, much more to MRIs than the so-called socialist approach. There are MRIs in the private sector. I would ask the hon. Minister of Innovation and Science to speak, for instance, to the MRIs, the high-tech MRIs that now exist in public hospitals that are used not just for medical treatment but also for research in a number of fields. There are different uses and different applications of MRIs. This is new and advanced technology, and we want to make sure that we're on the cutting edge and that we have in place the environment to accommodate cutting-edge technology as it relates to MRIs. I'll have the hon. minister respond.

THE SPEAKER: Actually, no; sorry. You've already spent another six and a half to seven minutes. We're moving on.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Private Health Services

MS PAUL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act, has been consuming Albertans, union members, health care givers, and the media over the past few months. Published daily in our newspapers, there seems to be endless opposition and distrust with the bill. Uncertainty over the future directions in health care is unsettling to all Albertans and in particular to some of the constituents in Edmonton-Castle Downs. So Bill 11 needs to be amended to alleviate this distrust and uncertainty. My questions are to the Premier. Will the amendments that the government will be introducing during Committee of the Whole alleviate Albertans' distrust and concerns with respect to a number of sections in Bill 11?

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, we have a debate coming up today. It's clearly on the point. You went specifically to Bill 11. You talked about amendments. That question is clearly out of order, and if your supplementaries are on the same subject, I'm going to rule them out too.

MS PAUL: My first supplementary is also to the Premier. How can Albertans be assured that their public health care system is being safeguarded under this bill when the distrust of the hidden motivations behind the bill have been so forcefully voiced and written?

THE SPEAKER: I'm sorry, hon. Premier. I mean, we're into a debate. Go on to your second supplementary question.

MS PAUL: Thank you. My second supplementary, also to the Premier: will the Premier keep the promise he made to Albertans that they will be electing from the general public two-thirds of the health authority boards in the next election?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, yes. Absolutely I will commit. I will absolutely commit that there will be two-thirds of the regional health authorities elected in conjunction with the next municipal elections, which I understand will occur in October of 2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Catholic School Board Boundaries

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that there is a proposal to expand the boundaries of the Roman Catholic school jurisdictions in the province. Public school boards in my constituency are concerned about losing student funding and school facilities. My question is to the Minister of Learning. What is this proposal all about?

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that excellent question. Roughly two to three months ago the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association presented to me a proposal that would eliminate the need for four-by-four votes. Four-by-four votes are something that have been in the constitution since before the province actually became a province. What happened then in essence is that electorates within a four mile by four mile area had the right to elect a school board. The Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association – I give them the utmost credit on this – came forward and said that this kind of process is becoming very, very divisive to communities. It's ripping communities apart. There has to be a better way.

The Catholic School Trustees' Association put forward a proposal to the president of the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta and the president of the Alberta School Boards Association. These three people then got together and came up with a very good proposal that they then presented to their constituents. Mr. Speaker, what this proposal entails is that the 16 Catholic jurisdictions would expand their boundaries to encompass all of the province. This would, in essence, eliminate the need for four-by-four votes and hopefully eliminate the need for this divisiveness that occurs within communities.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: could you please tell me what is the status of this proposal?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, on March 10 of this year the three presidents, as I alluded to in my first answer, presented this proposal to their constituents. They talked about it. They held information sessions in Calgary and Edmonton, and subsequently what will be occurring is that each school board will be voting tomorrow as to whether or not they feel that this proposal should go forward. If the vote is yes, if the vote is more than 50 percent plus one, if it is very strong – obviously, at 50 percent plus one I will not act – it will come down to putting some legislation before this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is something that we all should hope for. We should all hope that that very divisive practice occurring in communities around the province will stop and that we can put some sanity to this whole process.

MR. BRODA: My final supplemental is to the same minister. What will this proposal mean to the public school boards in this province?

DR. OBERG: Thank you again for that excellent question. First of all, Mr. Speaker, what is occurring now is that when a four-by-four votes, the public school board has absolutely no input into it. The only people that can vote on this, the only people who can decide are the Catholic electorate, providing they are a minority within a four-by-four, four-mile by four-mile jurisdiction. The Catholic school board, or the Catholics within that jurisdiction that want that vote can go ahead without talking to anyone.

What is in it for the public school boards is that under the proposal that has been put forward by the president, first of all, there would be binding arbitration. Second of all, there would be a process that would entitle the public school board within an area to talk to the Catholic school board and come up with some administrative details. For example, what is going to happen to the students in small jurisdictions? If there are only 100 students in a small town, obviously you cannot have two schools or neither school becomes cost-effective, neither school becomes efficient.

So, Mr. Speaker, I believe there's a lot in it for the public school boards. I believe that the public school boards would stand to be the winners in this, because all of a sudden they would have a voice in something that they have never, ever had a voice in before in the past.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MLAs' Freedom to Speak and Vote

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not even nine months ago the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness, a truth squad commissar, said, and I quote, we are all responsible to our constituents as MLAs. It doesn't matter what the issue is or if it may be contentious.

My questions this afternoon are for the Premier. Mr. Speaker, why is this Premier preventing his MLAs from fulfilling their responsibilities to their constituents by closing off free speech and denying them their democratic right to vote freely?

Speaker's Ruling Intimidation and Threats

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, we had a series of questions in this particular vein here today, but I want to make it very, very clear that in this Assembly there is absolutely no intimidation. There is no threat. Members can freely come to this Assembly uninterrupted by anyone, are protected by the traditions of parliaments in this Assembly, will have the protection of the chair to make sure that absolutely nothing interferes with their right to do what their responsibility is.

This chair will follow the traditions found in the British parliamentary system of government and, if a vote is called on any item, will ensure that any hon. member can stand in his or her place and vote with his or her conscience. If this Speaker is informed by any hon. member in this Assembly that there is intimidation or threats or any other type of mechanism used to interfere with their right to function as a member in this democracy, then this Speaker will use all the weaponry within his authority as Speaker to deal with that matter.

Now, this chair will also accept points of order or points of privilege if any member in this Assembly feels that their integrity is being threatened with anything stated in this House by any other member.

So, hon. member, you proceed with your supplementary in the tradition of the parliaments to which we belong.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Premier also. Given that the hon. Member for Red Deer-North is parading around this country holding out democratic responsibility and the virtues of free votes as ideals, why is this Premier and his government making a mockery of the former Treasurer by invoking closure and denying MLAs their rights in this Legislative Assembly?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out before, we have had more free votes on private members' bills in this Legislature since 1995 than ever in the history of this Legislature. That is democracy. But when they talk about democracy over there in the Liberal Party, there are three proud members now of the Conservative Party who used to be Liberals. They crossed the floor because there was no democracy in that caucus, they couldn't express their feelings, they couldn't vote the way they wanted to vote, they had to stay to the script. They're over here with this party because they want to know what democracy is all about. That's why they left.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is also to the Premier. Given that the majority of citizens in northern Alberta oppose the Premier's private health care policy, are the demands of the private hospital lobby so strong that the Premier is willing to sacrifice government MLAs by denying them the right to speak freely and vote the will of their constituents?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, there is no private health care policy.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Premier, I'm going to recognize the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti. I presume it's a point of order you want to raise?

MR. JACQUES: Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: It'll be dealt with at the conclusion of question period.

MR. JACQUES: Thank you, sir.

THE SPEAKER: Fine. Thank you. The hon. the Premier.

MR. DICKSON: I'm raising a point of order as well, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Two points of order. The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this caucus is the epitome of democracy. I'm going to be honest and frank and share some happenings within our caucus. I know that this is a departure, but when we were discussing the health care policy as it relates to the bill, I asked the whip to exclude me from the meeting because I wanted caucus members – I'm proud of every one of them – to be able to sit around the table and to decide for themselves, without any influence from myself, as to where they felt they should stand on this bill. I understand that with myself out of the room the opinion was unanimous and the caucus was unanimous in their support for this bill. That is democracy. That is democracy. That is something that is so unfamiliar to the Liberals. They have no concept of democracy, but I'm going to have my hon. friend, the Government House Leader and the Minister of Justice and Attorney General stand up and give them a little clinic on what democracy is all about.

Speaker's Ruling Questions about Caucus Activity

THE SPEAKER: Please, please, please. Hon. members, I'm really bothered by the tone of what's going on in here. First of all, there's absolutely no requirement by any leader of the government to have to explain to anyone what goes on in the caucus in which he is a member. That is not the business of this House. That is not government policy.

Secondly, the type of question which may provide for aspiration with respect to purported intimidation or the like – we have one point of order that we'll deal with later in the afternoon, but this is a matter that I believe almost verges on the question of privilege. If there are suggestions being made that hon. members are, quote, being intimidated or pressured or anything else, then I want those hon. members to either rise in this House on a point or alert me later this afternoon that such a thing is happening because I would want to deal with each and every one of those cases and make sure that that will not happen in this particular Assembly.

Now, we're moving on. There are other members here this afternoon that want to participate, and I'm now recognizing the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Day Care System

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have recently either met with or heard from a number of constituents who have a business in the child care field. I have learned that there are a number of issues in day care regarding accessibility, staff wages, and retention. My question is for the Minister of Children's Services. Has the elimination of the day care operating allowance affected the ability of families to access child care?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, it's just one year ago April 1 of this year that the child care subsidy program came into our province as a result of my predecessor's actions. It has done a number of things. First of all, it has increased the number of families and children who have been supported by the subsidy program. Some 23,000 children are currently receiving subsidies at a rate of about $350 per child.

Secondly, the qualifications for income increased so that if two wage earners were earning less than a certain threshold, they could qualify for day care and support in either qualified day care establishments or family day homes. As a result of this, Mr. Speaker, we're very satisfied that more children in Alberta are receiving regulated, good quality day care.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental is also to the Minister of Children's Services. Parents and day care operators are concerned about maintaining quality care as there is high staff turnover. Can the minister tell us what is being done to address this issue?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, we are concerned about the retention of staff in day care. There are two things that I think are important to note. Number one, for level 1, basic orientation of day care workers, our department has contracts with colleges in the province, and day care operators on behalf of their staff simply need to apply for their staff to come and take that basic orientation or training. It can take three to six weeks. It's approximately 50 hours. We expend anywhere up to $370,000 annually in support of those operators and those day cares.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, we're looking at both long- and short-term solutions. We will be bringing to the standing policy committee some discussion about some options that are available. Many of the day cares also have advised me that they are very satisfied that they can work with those subsidy programs and with the families and in fact feel that they are well on their way to supporting their staff in the manner in which we would hope that it would happen.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, my second supplemental is to the Minister of Learning. How will we ensure enough qualified day care workers across Alberta when tuition is rising and enrollments in day care training programs are declining?

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. Minister of Children's Services already alluded to, a level 1 certificate, which is all that is needed to work in a day care, takes roughly a 50-hour course. The department of child and family services pays for that. If you as a student want to take the level 1 day care course, you just go and request that from your child and family services authorities. To receive a level 2 or level 3, which is required for an operating manager or an owner of a day care, then there is other training required.

Mr. Speaker, the interesting part about the enrollment issue is that we really have not seen declining enrollments in early childhood services. At Mount Royal College, for example, the enrollment has been roughly 2,300 to 2,700 consistently over the last five or six years. We are not seeing a decline in that enrollment. With regards to tuition fees, the tuition fees are roughly $2,400 for a course, but interestingly, again we have not seen a decline in enrollment in that particular service.

Mr. Speaker, obviously this government is worried about qualified day care personnel. We are attempting to ensure that there are qualified day care personnel, and obviously it is a very high priority for us. I feel that we are giving our students the opportunity to be educated in the very important, very critical work of day care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has access to the Public Affairs Bureau, with a budget of about $8 million, but when it comes to selling private health care, it's just not getting the job done. Each new petition, new fax, new e-mail, each new letter, phone call, town hall meeting against the private hospital scheme shows that Albertans will not be manipulated by the chicanery of this government. Yesterday the Official Opposition provided a full and complete accounting to the penny of the costs that we have incurred to protect medicare. The Premier and his government, however, have failed to reveal the true costs of their propaganda campaign. So my question to the Acting Premier this afternoon is: why should Albertans believe the Premier's promises on health care when his government continues to hide the full cost of the multimillion-dollar, taxpayer supported campaign?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member fully knows, the government cannot hide expenditures at all. One, they will all be accounted for in the accounting of whatever department they're incurred in. Secondly, at a committee called Public Accounts, which I believe is chaired by one of the Liberal opposition, there is an opportunity for at least two hours – I spent some time in that committee about two Wednesdays ago – where you can go into detail on every expenditure made in your department. You have two full hours to do that in Public Accounts.

As well, as I explained, we have a process where at the end of the year the accounts will be made available to Albertans. Mr. Speaker, interestingly enough, Albertans have been very pleased with the accounting they've gotten in the last years from this government. Rather than showing huge deficits and debts, they are showing balanced budgets and surpluses and a sustainable way to maintain our health care and our school system, which was not there in the time of the leader of the Liberal opposition.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, given that information delayed is information denied, why should Albertans have to wait for two years, under the process the minister suggests, to get access to the receipts, the invoices, the true cost of our government's expenses to try and sell us a private health care policy we don't want in the first place?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's interesting, and as usual there's an assumption made by the opposition, which has been the method used in this whole debate. Rather than clarity and facts, it has been assumptions and innuendo.

One, the debate on Bill 11 is not concluded. I don't think the opposition have finished their discussion, because I hear new things daily. I doubt that they were in those receipts.

Secondly, there is an opportunity for FOIP in this Legislature. The opposition should know about it because it is my understanding that they are the biggest user of it, and taxpayers' money might be paid to access that.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, my question is back to the minister. Never mind FOIP; never mind Public Accounts two years from now. Why won't you provide us the receipts right now so that Albertans can see that information while we're debating and voting on Bill 11? That's what it's all about.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Again, Mr. Speaker, why doesn't the opposition pay attention to what occurs in this Assembly? That would be a good question. That would be a very good question. In fact, some days ago, maybe weeks ago, in this Legislature was tabled an accounting of the expenditures, and I believe it came to $1.2 million that had been spent on those communications.

Is it any wonder that this opposition doesn't know what's contained in Bill 11 when they don't know what's occurring in this Legislature on a day-to-day basis? Unless that tabling maybe got mixed up in the multitude of tablings that they do in each and every session.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in about a minute from now we'll call on the first of five members to participate in Recognitions.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

2:50 Edson Mohawk Bantam Warriors

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize members of the Edson Mohawk Bantam Warriors. The team very successfully competed in the recent Alberta provincial bantam A championships, held in Medicine Hat during the weekend of March 17, and brought home the silver medal. These young Albertans are 14 to 15 years of age. Their passion for our national sport of hockey is evident in their commitment and dedication to the game and to their teammates.

I also recognize coaches Clarence Wanchulak, Dave Stewart, and Bill Taylor, the sponsors, the parents, and the fans for the support, time, expertise, and encouragement they provided to the members of the Warriors team.

Mr. Speaker, the citizens of West Yellowhead are indeed proud of these young ambassadors representing our region. I would ask all members of the Assembly to join me in extending our congratulations and best wishes to the team's members.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Racial Discrimination

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the short time I've got, I wanted to acknowledge the range of concerns I hear from the multicultural community in downtown Calgary. I think my constituency is home to perhaps the largest number of recent immigrants of most of the constituencies in this province. There were three studies that were done last year under the auspices of the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission, and there was an identification of some major issues, with a much smaller number of complaints in the area of racial discrimination than the numbers and the statistics warranted.

We know that racial discrimination continues to be a significant problem. I'll speak in terms of the city of Calgary, but I have no doubt it exists in other parts of the province. Mr. Speaker, groups continue to want to see a more aggressive stance taken by the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission. There's ongoing concern that we're not seeing a more focused approach in that respect.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Lo-Se-Ca Foundation

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In St. Albert we have a nonprofit organization called Lo-Se-Ca. The name stands for love, service, and care. In their mission statement they state that this association is dedicated to advocating for and improving the quality of life of persons with disabilities and their families by providing residential and other support services that enhance human well-being.

The Lo-Se-Ca Foundation opened its inaugural group home in 1992. This year they are beginning to celebrate their 10th year of operation and of giving to our community. Currently Lo-Se-Ca has a volunteer base of approximately 160 volunteers. In their vision statement they state that they vision "that all persons with disabilities shall have their individual needs supported so that their potential can be realized." They believe that "all people are entitled to live with dignity in the community." Today I wish to recognize their sterling efforts.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Volunteer Week

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week we celebrate volunteers. We acknowledge and thank those who give their unpaid time and energy to helping out. Edmonton, as you know, has been applauded for having a very high number of volunteers who give their time in a variety of capacities.

I'm particularly pleased to recognize the following generous men and women who assist me and my staff on a daily basis. We could not do what we do without them. They are Chuck Chamberlin, Merrill Stewart, Bill Kobluk, Alex McEachern, Irene Payne, Jean and Merv Rogers, Amy Poon, and Cesar Faundez. We owe them a lot, and I take this opportunity to express our thanks and personal gratitude to them all. Kudos to them and to all volunteers in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Friends of Medicare

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like this afternoon to recognize yet again the Friends of Medicare, who are dedicated individuals and volunteers, for supporting and promoting our public health care system. What they will be doing this weekend is putting on a rally in Calgary on Saturday and in Edmonton on Sunday. I urge all of the MLAs and Albertans who are able to come to this particular rally to make a point to come and to hear what some of the speakers will be providing.

In Calgary one of the speakers, it's my understanding, will be Dr. Harold Swanson. In Edmonton we will have Shirley Douglas and her son Kiefer Sutherland, who I am sure most people will want to come and meet, as well as Mel Hurtig. Entertainment will be provided.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising under 23(h) and (j) and under Beauchesne 101. During the question period the hon. Leader of the Opposition in I believe her first main question made the innuendo that the Premier of this province might profit from a policy of the government. Now, I'm saying that that's an allegation against the Premier. What the Leader of the Opposition did was the lowest form of low. It's a drive-by shooting. It's a smear by any other name, and it was purposely done for that effect. It was low, unwarranted, uncalled for, and unparliamentary.

Knowing full well, of course, that we have an officer of this House, the conflict of interest commissioner, who monitors an act of this House, the Conflicts of Interest Act, which provides for the rules with respect to disengagement once you leave this House and provides for the rules under conflicts of interest, and knowing that at common law in this province there are conflict of interest provisions that one should not benefit from what they do under a fiduciary duty to the people of this province, knowing all of that, in a forum where one cannot properly defend himself against that type of innuendo and that type of smear, she raised a question purposely designed – purposely designed – to raise in the minds of the people of Alberta that a member of this Legislature might benefit personally and financially from doing their public duty once they left office.

Mr. Speaker, it's almost a point of privilege. It probably should have been raised as a point of privilege. Certainly it's offensive to the rules of this House. It's offensive to the members of this House. It's certainly offensive to the Premier and offensive to Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. House leader of the Official Opposition on this point.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, what I recall was a reference to the Conflicts of Interest Act. We have legislation in this province that accepts . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, please. I'll recognize others on this point of order, but right now I'm recognizing the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. We have legislation in the Conflicts of Interest Act that clearly contemplates that a cooling-off period is appropriate for members particularly of Executive Council, that there is a perceived problem always with potential conflicts of interest.

The question that was asked was: would the government contemplate a change in that legislation? Well, I don't have the Blues in front of me. The Government House Leader suggests that conflict of interest was not part of that question. That's clearly what I heard. It is a perfectly legitimate question to ask whether the government will support and bring in, enact changes to that legislation to address the concern that many of us hear from Albertans.

By introducing a larger and larger role for the for-profit health sector, by enabling private stand-alone hospitals, that creates an enormous potential to abuse the public trust. The question is: will the government amend our conflicts of interest legislation to cut that off? That's what I heard, and until I see the Blues, that is my clear understanding and recollection of that set of questions.

The Premier, as I understood it, at no time said that he was prepared to countenance or champion such changes, and I think that is a perfectly legitimate question. The Government House Leader may read into it whatever he wants, but until the conflicts of interest legislation, a creation of this Assembly, ceases to be something we can talk about, I think it's perfectly appropriate to talk about potential conflicts, to talk about how we police them. The Government House Leader may read all kinds of motivation into it, but I'm dealing with the question as I heard it, and I think, Mr. Speaker, with respect, that that's the only basis on which you can deal with it and make a determination.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Sorry. You've already had input, hon. Government House Leader, on this point of order.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, it's important that misinformation be corrected.

THE SPEAKER: Well, that's fine. The chair will deal with it. It's not a debate that goes on and on and on. Do any other members want to add something to this point of order?

I'll quote the Blues.

Mr. Speaker, almost daily the Official Opposition has presented very solid evidence on the economic, ethical, social, business-case benefits of public health care. The Premier has not answered the questions about who benefits from his private health care policy, so in reflecting the questions Albertans have put to us and asked us to raise in the Assembly, will the Premier sign a declaration guaranteeing that he will not benefit from any association with private health care clinics in Alberta for a minimum of 10 years upon his leaving office?

That is the question before this point of order.

I might add as well, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, that you're next to be recognized with a point of order, but it may very well be that what I'm going to be saying here with respect to this point of order will not be dissimilar to what I'll say to the next point of order.

I'm very, very bothered about what's happening in this Assembly. The purpose of question period is to deal with policy. It is not to deal with personality. It is not to deal with innuendo. It is not to deal with types of questions, however skillfully organized they might be, that would suggest anything improper about an hon. member. Certainly Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j) and others and Beauchesne and the like can be quoted.

In this question, as the chair reads it again and again and again and as the chair heard it during the question period, it strikes me that the question is very clearly suggesting that there's something amuck here and that because a person happens to be the leader of the government – and it is this Assembly, by the way, which passes legislation, not an individual in this Assembly. This is still a democracy, and all hon. members will be in their places to vote one way or the other with respect to it.

The suggestion in here is that because someone out there has said to someone, "Gee, we don't know who's going to benefit from this; it seems that the only person that's going to benefit from this is the leader of the government," why don't we just get him to sign a declaration for 10 years? Well, what's that got to do with government policy? That's the suggestion being made against one member by another member.

I don't like this, and I'm not going to allow it. It's not going to happen again. It's not going to happen in the question, and it's not going to happen in the answer. The next point of order that will come up will probably have to do with an answer. So I give fair warning that the comments with respect to the question are applying with respect to the answer. I don't know. I mean, if you take a look even – well, I have to wait to see what the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo's point of order is about. I'm just assuming what it is.

I'm not permitting this type of question in this Assembly anymore. I will stand up, and there'll be constant interjection and intervention, not only on the questions but also on the answers. Everyone in this Assembly has earned the right to be in this Assembly. They are duly elected. They are answerable to no one but their constituents. And I want to underline that again. Every member in this Assembly is answerable to no one but their constituents.

They are not answerable to the leader of their party. They are not answerable to the House leader in this Assembly. They are not answerable to a whip. They are not answerable to the Speaker. They are answerable to only one group. That is their constituents. They're individual people in here, and if any House leader or any whip or any leader of a party believes that they are better, more powerful, and more demanding than anyone else, then I want that hon. member to come and see me, and we will deal with it in point of privilege, and we will deal with it in this Assembly.

This is a democracy, and it's not a sleazebag, innuendo kind of Chamber. We're going to end this, and we're ending it now.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, you have a point of order.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, as usual you've fully anticipated the item I was going to raise. We've moved from what you've characterized as innuendo to an express allegation by the Premier against the Leader of the Official Opposition. Once again I don't have the Blues; hopefully you have them in front of you. What I understood was the Premier to suggest that the Leader of the Opposition, after leaving public office, went to work in the health care field. I don't know whether he said for the government of the province of Alberta, but what I took from it was a clear allegation that the Leader of the Opposition had violated the provisions of the Conflicts of Interest Act.

I wanted to make it very clear, Mr. Speaker, that in raising this, my first reaction was that this may well be a question of privilege. I want to be able to review the text of the question-and-answer exchange, but I wanted to give notice now.

The point, of course, would be that the Leader of the Official Opposition, after leaving government service, did consulting work for a contractor that did work for the government of the Northwest Territories. She checked with the Ethics Commissioner, and pursuant to the Conflicts of Interest Act there are provisions, sections 40, 41, and 42, that all provide for members being able to go to the Ethics Commissioner to get advice. Earlier in this session you in fact reminded members of the significance of advice sought and received from the Ethics Commissioner. The point is that the Leader of the Official Opposition at no time since leaving elected office in this province has done consulting work of any kind for the government of the province of Alberta.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I say, I may well want to canvass the Leader of the Opposition in light of the observations you made a moment ago, but at this point I simply wanted to give notice that that is a concern. You've delivered a powerful message to both sides of the House, and I would appreciate an opportunity to be able to evaluate that, in fact specifically with the Leader of the Official Opposition, before having to characterize this issue as a question of privilege under Standing Order 15 or simply as a point of order.

Thanks very much.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's just say that I thank you for the statements you made earlier. It's about time. We need it in this House because we've gone far too far away from what we got elected to, which is an honourable and respectful position. The people of Alberta elect us to represent them in this House and to do so honourably. It's a privilege that very few people enjoy. I appreciated your comments. We on both sides of the House need to get away from this slide into sleazeball accusations. You characterized it very well, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you for it.

THE SPEAKER: Well, we've still got to deal with this, and we're going to have another kick at it. Here's what the leader of the government said.

Mr. Speaker, if anyone could have used a cooling-off period, it would have been the leader of the Liberal opposition. This leader, after losing, and not very gracefully, mind you, the Conservative leadership and serving out her time in the back benches until the next election, went directly into the health consulting field. She had no problems with conflict of interest, no problems using her expertise – well, supposed expertise – that she supposedly developed during her term as minister of health as a consultant. As a consultant. This is the perfect example of the pot calling the kettle black.

Now, a number of remarks were made a few minutes ago with respect to the first point of order. The same remarks apply to this second point of order. What is good for one side is demanded of the other side, and there's no exception to that. Hon. Opposition House Leader, I want you to know that I intend on intervening dramatically, and, Government House Leader, I want you to know that I intend on intervening dramatically. We're going to get to the questions. They're going to deal with substance and they're going to deal with policy, and we're going to get the personalities out of this.

I'm also going to implore on the whole question of brevity. There's no definition in this parliament of what brevity is, but brevity is now going to mean not four minutes for an answer or two minutes for a question. That's what it's not going to mean. If we have to whittle that down, we will whittle that down, and we'll find the model found in the Canadian House of Commons, which is 35 seconds for a question and 35 seconds for an answer. Unfortunately, if the time for an answer is 35 seconds, the hon. Minister of Innovation and Science will never be able to supplement an answer.

There is no time frame but let's get on with the business. There are hon. members in here, private members, who have an opportunity to raise questions. They're here to represent their constituents and have not had an opportunity, because it seems a series of individuals are dominating the question period. That's not fair and that's not right.

Now I want to really hear the point of order from the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

MR. JACQUES: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm referring specifically to the questions that were posed by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to the Premier. I believe, if I'm correct, Mr. Speaker, that you stood after the first question, prior to the addressing of the first supplementary, with a certain caution, and the member persisted. I stood at the conclusion of his second supplementary, i.e. third question, and the issue that I am referring specifically to – and I perhaps need some help or guidance in this, because I'm not an expert in parliamentary procedure. I refer to Standing Orders 15(1) and (2) with regard to a point of privilege, particularly the procedure involving a point of privilege, and also section 23(l) of our Standing Orders, together with Beauchesne, section 75, which deals with freedom of speech, and section 92, which basically deals with the "interference" with members.

I'm very concerned that, on one hand, it could be simply a point of order, that the question is not appropriate to be asked in this Assembly, but it was more in the context that the question was asked, that it in some way was suggesting that my ability to function within this parliamentary Assembly and indeed represent my constituency was somehow being muzzled, and I think that could possibly be one of the words. Unfortunately, again, I don't have the Blues in front of me. I know you do, sir, and maybe you could help clarify this issue.

I know that you did raise a caution. I'm not sure whether the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was doing this on purpose or whether he was attempting to cast some aspersion on my ability to function freely and totally freely within this Legislative Assembly. I'm very concerned about the words that were used. The tone is one thing, and I can excuse the tone. I cannot excuse the words that are written and captured in Hansard, and I would ask your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, if you would maybe kindly refer to the transcript in terms of the Hansard Blues. I would like your advice on that particular matter.

Thank you.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, as I understood the comments, the member hasn't decided whether to assert a claim of privilege. He referenced Standing Order 15. I take it he's doing similar to what I'd proposed to do on a concern I had raised, that he's giving notice now at the earliest opportunity, and he's going to evaluate his remedies. If he's looking for relief now, then I'd make some observations. If he's simply giving us notice and he's telling us that he's coming back tomorrow to particularize what his claim is, then I'd make my observations then.

So I hope I understand correctly what just went on.

THE SPEAKER: I'm going to make some statements with respect to this whole matter and hopefully bring it to an end. First of all, I'm not prepared to accept any points of privilege for what happened here today, and I say that to the hon. Opposition House Leader. In terms of the previous point, the hon. House leader indicated that he might look to see whether or not the hon. Leader of the Opposition might come forward with a point of privilege. I'm not prepared to deal with that. I'm not prepared to look at it. I'm not prepared to accept it.

To the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, in light of what I said a few minutes ago with respect to the other two points of order, I want to also make it very clear that I'm not prepared in terms of what happened today to review a matter with respect to a point of privilege on that. The chair did intervene when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar did rise. He gave clear statements in there, and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was further recognized. I just take this from the Blues:

Why is this Premier and his government making a mockery of the former Treasurer by invoking closure and denying MLAs their rights in this Legislative Assembly?

I suspect that in terms of what the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti is raising, it has to do with “denying MLAs.”

Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was further recognized, and he went on to this one:

Are the demands of the private hospital lobby so strong that the Premier is willing to sacrifice government MLAs by denying them the right to speak freely and vote the will of their constituents?

If I understand the comments made by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, after clarification there was something about further reviewing it. We’re going to deal with it now, hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, if you trust me to make the following, and I’m going to repeat what I said a little earlier.

This casting of aspersions with respect to members probably violates Standing Orders 23(h),(i), and (j), but more importantly than that it denigrates this Assembly. We can have an argument, and we can have a personality thing, and one member can say something about another member. We can deal with that, but it brings dishonour to everybody in this Assembly. He or she is raising it, and he or she feels intimidated by it.

I’m going to repeat this again, and I’m going to make this request again. If any member in this Assembly feels intimidated, feels threatened, feels cajoled – and I can find a hundred other adjectives to use to describe this – then they have a responsibility to no one but their constituents, and they must – must – rise in this Assembly or must visit the Speaker to discuss this matter. All of the authorities vested in a democratic parliament will be brought to bear against that member who provides the threatening or the intimidation or to that force outside of this Assembly who provides that threatening or that intimidation in terms of the protection of the integrity and the dignity and the opportunity and the responsibility of the member.

When a vote is called in this Assembly, an hon. member may choose to be in the Assembly or may choose not to be in the Assembly. That is his or her right. They’re answerable only to their constituents. We have an opportunity in this Assembly to have recorded votes. The names of those people are listed. That is public information. And I repeat again: no one can be intimidated, no one must feel intimidated, and the penalty for that is indeed very, very severe.

The hon. Opposition House Leader on the fourth point of order.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker’s Ruling

MR. DICKSON: This in fact was a 13(2). In fact you’ve raised the very issue that gives me some concern, Mr. Speaker, and it’s this. I certainly understand the concern about any member being intimidated by any outside force or some member threatening another, but given the question that was being asked, here’s what I’m trying to square. The substantial provisions dealing with party machinery in parliament, if we look at Erskine May from pages 210 through to I think it’s about 216, deal with the roles of parties and party organization. If I look at Beauchesne, starting at article 195 on page 55, there’s a great deal of focus on the role that the parties play in the House. The questions related to parties and party discipline.

3:20

Mr. Speaker, I know that you’re a keen student of what goes on in other parliaments outside of this place, and I see on a regular basis it being an issue and a question sometimes for debate, certainly for comment in the House in terms of when discipline is rigidly enforced, strictly enforced through the whip of a particular caucus, when it is not. I wanted to be clear whether your suggestion went so far as to suggest that it’s inappropriate in any way for one party to query whether the whips are on in another party and whether party discipline is being exercised to its full extent or not at all.

I’m not trying to enter into an argument but just to be clear in my own mind, to understand where it’s appropriate to recognize the role that political parties have, that whips have, that party organization has on the major public bills we’re dealing with. We’re not talking about private members’ public bills here and that area you have clearly said is verboten, the area of threatening members and so on. Your comments as I heard them were very broad, very broad, and they might have even gone so far as to eclipse or forbid discussion about party discipline and party solidarity and whether that is fair comment in this Assembly.

That’s my query, Mr. Speaker. I hope it’s somewhat clear.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Government House Leader, there was a question of explanation to the chair.

MR. HANCOCK: I’m happy to sit down, but I had a subsequent point of order which related to the same issue, and I thought it might be more appropriate to put them in the same context.

THE SPEAKER: Go ahead.

MR. HANCOCK: I had raised a subsequent point of order, and I was going to raise it under 23(j).

Mr. Speaker, first of all, every member of this Assembly, as you so rightly have pointed out, is responsible to their constituents and to no one else. If we join together in common cause with a common philosophy, with a common direction because we campaigned to our constituents on common themes, that is a member’s personal privilege that they bring to this House. As and when they determine to leave that common cause or stay with that common cause, it’s always a matter of that member’s personal privilege. The member opposite would know because a number of their members left their common cause when they no longer agreed with that common cause, five, as I recall, in the last two terms.

Mr. Speaker, it is always inappropriate, in my humble opinion, to suggest that any member of this House is precluded from speaking under the rules of this House. As you well know, you don’t call for a vote until no one rises to speak unless you’re called to do so by the Standing Orders, which have been adopted by this House by all members voting in favour of it, or unless you’re called to do so by a motion of this House which has been agreed to by all members. So all members determine what rules govern their actions in this House. All members determine whether they wish to rise to speak to a question or not.

There have been occasions in which members of this House on both sides have risen to speak, and sometimes people have risen to speak in opposition to a government bill, and that’s a member’s privilege. Whether they feel they can continue to support the government or not is a member’s personal privilege. They’re elected to represent their constituents, as you pointed out, and the question of whether they’re appropriately representing their constituents is a question for their constituents at the duly appointed time of an election. It is not up to any member of this House to suggest that any other member of this House rose to speak in the House or didn’t rise to speak in the House for any reason other than representing their constituents in the way that they think most appropriate.

In fact, there’s nothing compelling a member to rise in this House – the Liberal opposition wouldn’t know this or aren’t prepared to understand this – to merely repeat arguments that have already been made or that have been made ad nauseam. Therefore, one would not expect and should not expect in a democracy that every member of the House would speak to every issue every time it's called. That would be totally inappropriate, and we'd never get the business of the House done.

It runs against the principles of privilege in Beauchesne and in Erskine May to suggest that any member, because they do rise or they don't rise, because they do vote or they don't vote, because they vote yes or they vote no is being intimidated, is being forced to do so. It's a matter of personal privilege. Whether I attend the caucus of my party is a matter of personal privilege for me as a member. Whether I come into this House having attended a caucus of my party and made a collective agreement with the caucus of my party as to what business is going to be brought before the House and how it's going to be brought before the House is a matter of my personal privilege. If I don't agree with the decision that's made, if my grievance is sufficient that I should excuse myself from the caucus, then that is my personal privilege. The members opposite should know that, because they're the ones who had several members take that advantage and make that decision.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is totally inappropriate to suggest that any member in this House is constrained in any way by party discipline, by party membership, by party rules, because a member is always free – always free – to express their opinion, to speak and to vote as they wish in this House. If they choose not to sit with the government or they choose not to sit with the opposition, that is the member's personal choice, for which they're responsible only to their electorate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo in raising this under 13(1) essentially asked for an explanation. I think the clarification that the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo was seeking from the chair was one that the chair would intervene at certain times if certain members were to say certain things. Now, I'm going to reiterate and review these Blues from this little exchange with respect to this matter and may have something more to say on Monday if what I have to say now doesn't cover what it is.

This is a parliament. The people in here are Members of the Legislative Assembly. When this chair looks out, he sees 82 Members of the Legislative Assembly. Now, when hon. members come in here, hon. members choose. Some go to one side; some go to another side. Some come in as a member of this party; some come in as a member of this other party. Some with the majority party come in as members of the government; some with the second party come in as members of the Official Opposition. Those are designations that the members essentially outside of this Assembly give to themselves. This chair looks out and sees 82 Members of the Legislative Assembly who have all earned the right to be here.

Now, if the particular grouping that an individual belongs to, the party in other words, has certain rules of discipline for their members – the chair would never, ever, ever accept a point from a member who stood in this Assembly and said: Mr. Speaker, I'm really concerned about the disciplinary rules being imposed upon me by my caucus, and I want you to do something about it. It is not the chair's business if there are disciplinary rules. Or if an hon. member were to stand up and say, "Mr. Speaker, I have a point of privilege because my whip is telling me that I have to attend the House today, and I don't want to come," well, I'm not getting involved. This is not a matter for review. Or if it's said that you have to go to a certain event on behalf of the group, or the caucus, and you want to stand up here and say, well, your privilege, other than the fact that you are being denied the right to be in this Assembly – if you're being told that you have to go somewhere because someone doesn't want you in here to do your duty, then the chair in that case would get involved because that would be a form of intimidation for the member.

Party political stuff remains outside of this Assembly. Here you are hon. members, again, with no responsibility to anyone but your constituents.

Now, this little lesson here in political science, Alberta style, in this Assembly in the year 2000 I'm sure will be ongoing, but the bottom line for all of this stuff that happened today is that we're going to find some honour. We're going to find some integrity. We're not going to cast aspersions. We're not going to allow intimidation, and we're not going to make suggestions that anybody is going to vote a certain way. I have no idea who's going to vote which way until the vote is called.

It doesn't make any difference what the whip says. It doesn't make any difference at all. Somebody says: the whips are on. That exchange from one House leader to the next House leader, from whip to whip, makes no difference to the chair. If the government whip says, "The whips are on," and if four government members want to vote one way, that's their choice, and there will be no action permitted against that member in this Assembly.

Now, outside this room, if you don't get invited to the next cocktail party and if you don't get invited to the next thing, you live with that. I mean, those are the rules of the group. But in this Assembly that means nothing.

In fact, I have seen it in this Assembly when I as the Government House Leader stood up and led the vote on behalf of the government. After being a member of the government caucus and everybody agreeing that this is the way we're going to vote, my own Deputy Government House Leader right beside me stood up and voted against his colleagues and never even told his colleagues he was going to do that, which caused an internal thing. It had no difficulty with respect to the management of the House, but it did cause that particular Deputy Government House Leader some difficulty.

3:30

Now I've never had the current experience of being the Government House Leader and having the current Deputy Government House Leader in the House being my deputy, so it's not that particular deputy, but that certainly has happened in the past. I've seen members of Executive Council stand up and vote against government bills. That has happened in this Assembly, and there is no intimidation. You choose whatever you want to do and how you want to do it, but you're free to do as you want to do it in this Assembly.

Let's move on to Orders of the Day.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it's my pleasure to move the written questions appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 11, 12, and 13.

[Motion carried]

Maintenance Enforcement Program

- Q11. Mrs. Soetaert moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that the following question be accepted.
As of March 1, 2000, how many active files in the maintenance enforcement program were in receipt of payments from a jurisdiction named in the declaration of reciprocating states regulation?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Yes. From my understanding that has been amended, and I guess I'll speak after the minister clarifies that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would be prepared to accept this question if it were amended, so I would move the amendment that we strike out "as of March 1, 2000" and substitute "as of March 31, 2000." So the question as amended will read:

As of March 31, 2000, how many active files in the maintenance enforcement program were in receipt of payments from a jurisdiction named in the declaration of reciprocating states regulation?

Mr. Speaker, just by way of explanation, we didn't have our computer programs written to provide this type of information when the question came forward. I looked at it and indicated that that's the type of information I'd like to have. We've rewritten the program so we can provide it, but we have to provide it as of the 31st of March rather than the 1st of March. I hope the amendment would be accepted.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert on the amendment.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Actually, the minister sent over the amendment yesterday to my colleague, and it was accepted. I must say that that's an idea where a good opposition suggestion went forward. These kinds of things come to our offices often when collecting maintenance enforcement from people who are out of province. Out of country is sometimes extremely difficult. I know that all members in this Assembly get called about maintenance enforcement and the difficulties surrounding it in all their ridings.

That amendment is absolutely fine with the hon. member who requested the question, and I look forward to receiving that information.

[Motion on amendment carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert to close the debate.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that the information will be forthcoming.

[Written Question 11 as amended carried]

Maintenance Enforcement Program

Q12. Mrs. Soetaert moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that the following question be accepted.

As of March 1, 2000, how many active files in the maintenance enforcement program were paid to creditors in a jurisdiction named in the declaration of reciprocating states regulation?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand there is an amendment coming forward which was spoken of before.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to accept this question if it were amended. Therefore, I move the amendment that we strike "out as of March 1, 2000" and substitute as "of March 31, 2000." So the amended question will read:

As of March 31, 2000, how many active files in the maintenance enforcement program were paid to creditors in a jurisdiction named in the declaration of states of reciprocating states regulation?

Mr. Speaker, this question is essentially the same as the last question except the last one dealt with receipt of payments where this one deals with active files where we're making payments.

Again, the only thing I would add is that lest the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert that believe the sole motivation for this was the opposition questions, these are questions to which I had requested answers. We are constantly trying to improve the maintenance enforcement program, and in order to operate the maintenance enforcement program in the most appropriate way we need to have good management information. This type of information is useful to us.

So, again, by this amendment, we'll simply provide the information as of a date by which we can provide the information, March 31.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the amendment.

MRS. SLOAN: Yes. I appreciate the hon. minister's acceptance of the motion in an amended state and the provision of these statistics. I would just like to add the following comments, though, with respect to the request being made by the opposition, also in consideration of the responsibilities referenced in the lengthy debate we've just had relative to the responsibilities and rights of members to constituents.

We certainly have had in the constituency of Edmonton-Riverview a number of families who have found themselves involved with the department of maintenance enforcement. Regrettably, Mr. Speaker, I cannot just call up Justice and ask for information. In one particular case we had a constituent who had matters that related to needing to deal with Australia.

Now, we are aware that there are quite a number of jurisdictions under the declaration of reciprocating states regulations, and these include a number of states in the Commonwealth of Australia, Northern Ireland, Malta, Wales, England, Papua New Guinea, Barbados, Fiji, New Zealand. We have all the Canadian provinces, Northwest Territories, Yukon territory, Nunavut, the state of Alaska, and I believe quite a number of American states. We also have the Republic of South Africa, the Republic of Singapore, the federal Republic of Germany, and the Republic of Austria. All those jurisdictions are covered by the Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders Act.

Regrettably, it is time consuming and in my mind causes unnecessary delay when members of the opposition are not afforded the type of access to information that might be available to government members to deal with these very complex and troublesome matters. Many times you find families that are in this situation of dealing with this department. They are living an impoverished existence. Their children are not afforded the opportunities, Mr. Speaker, to access activities and supports that others might be, and this is compounded by the fact that we continue to have government policy in this province that supports the clawing back of maintenance payments if a mother is on social assistance.

If a woman is receiving social assistance in this province and she has a maintenance enforcement agreement, in most cases they're forced to undertake such action to have a formal agreement. Even when their ex-spouse has been providing support in good faith, this government chooses through social welfare policy, Mr. Speaker, to force them into a maintenance agreement. What we see happen then is a conflict escalation in the family unit, and quite often we see those families in our constituency offices.

Now, with respect to all of the written questions on this subject this afternoon, it would be of interest to me as to why the government does not include these as a performance measure in Justice or in the Department of Children's Services or perhaps in the department of human resources, because there is always the question – at least the question is always in the minds of the party supporting the children – did this person move away particularly to evade having to pay support?

Now, as in the case of this one constituent that we had, the ex-spouse was residing in Australia, and she was owed somewhere around $50,000 or $60,000. She'd had absolutely no success in having the department collect the money owed from her ex-husband in Australia, despite the fact that they were obviously a jurisdiction that was covered by this regulation.

Back to my point. What are the trends in this area? What are the trends with respect to parties that have status with maintenance enforcement leaving for other jurisdictions? We are asking this afternoon for active files. We could be asking: what has been the enforcement rate that this government has undertaken in those jurisdictions? How many files have they successfully collected moneys owing from? We're not asking for that material, Mr. Speaker, but there is a whole Pandora's box of problems in this area, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed found out. I believe that she was part of a review of this program just a short while ago.

So I appreciate the fact that the minister is agreeing this afternoon with amendments to provide the information asked for, but my main point is that this information should be publicly available and it should be included in the business plans of the department, whether it's as a performance measure or as a general reporting statistic.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased at this time to conclude my discussion and to support the amendment.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: On the amendment, hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Did you not speak at the outset?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, it's the only opportunity I have, Mr. Speaker, to close debate, because the motion is actually a motion from the opposite side. It's necessary for me to close debate on the amendment, because it's the only opportunity I have to speak, unless you can tell me that I have another opportunity to close debate at another time. But it's actually the opposition's motion, so I must, if I wish to speak, which I do, close debate on the amendment.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The Assembly would normally vote on the amendment, then the debate would continue on the question, at which time you could sum up on the question. But you don't have a right to close debate on the amendment.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, that would be great, Mr. Speaker, except I spoke to the motion when I moved the amendment, so the only opportunity I have now to speak, as I understand it, is to close debate on the amendment. However, if I'm wrong, I'd be happy to speak to the main motion.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Well, the rightness or wrongness of it, the chair would certainly recognize you once we have the amendment vote finished. [interjection] No, the chair may not. I did see Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert. Hon. member, did you wish to speak to the amendment?

MRS. SOETAERT: I did; didn't I?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. No. I thought you were rising . . .

MRS. SOETAERT: Yes, I would like to speak, and then I close debate on this; right? Yes, I'm right. I'm right.

On the amendment. I appreciate the minister giving us the information. I think it was well explained, the issues that we all face within our offices. This one is actually talking about people from Alberta who owe people in other countries, which is the same concern reversed. Just because those people leave our province doesn't mean that we don't care about those children, wherever they are, and that the noncustodial parent in the same way doesn't have that same responsibility to pay.

So I appreciate the amendment. I look forward to the information that we'll be getting from the minister. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Now, on the question as amended, hon. members.

Hon. minister, on the motion as amended, before the debate is closed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't wish to prolong this. I just simply rise because unfortunately I believe that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview has really abused the process of written questions by going on at length on other issues. But I don't want to deal with that. What I want to deal with is the allegation that members opposite don't get the same courtesy as all members of this House from my office when dealing with maintenance enforcement, which I hope is totally wrong, I believe is totally wrong.

I think if she questioned other members of her caucus, in particular the Member for Edmonton-Centre, she'd find that when they have the appropriate FOIP release from an individual to inquire about an individual's situation, they get the information, and when they inquire about policy issues, we respond on the policy matters. If that's not the case, then I think it would be appropriate for her to draw that to my attention as minister rather than to raise it in an inappropriate way during Written Questions and Motions for Returns. The only thing that's relevant to the discussion on the written questions and motions for returns is whether or not we should provide the information that's requested.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: To conclude debate on Question 12 as amended, the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To make some things very clear, written questions have a broad range of availability for debate within them. I think the issues of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview were very responsibly brought up, with very sincere concerns about what happens in her office. I also respect that this minister is one of the most available ministers, and his office, for me, has been very co-operative when we call. But I do think that if there's an issue there, usually the minister would look into it instead of being defensive, and I encourage him to continue being that way.

I do question though – and I think this is one of the things – when you have to FOIP something. Due to issues of policy, I know that I have and I know Edmonton-Riverview has always had a consent signed by any constituent that we were asking about or advocating for. Always. That's a given. That's a given practice, I would assume, with every Member of this Legislative Assembly. If we're asking about policy on maintenance enforcement, it shouldn't have to be FOIPed. It shouldn't have to be FOIPed. So those are some of the concerns that were raised and that I hope have been clarified.

To the amended question, in closing debate, I look forward to the information on this. I also note that the minister said that it was totally his own idea and that he wanted this information long before we asked the question. Well, maybe that's so, but I know we don't often get credit in here for giving them a little shove in the right direction, a little motivation for action. That's certainly our role in here, and we do it well. Whether they want to admit that or not, Mr. Speaker, that's fine, but I do appreciate the responses that are coming.

Thank you.

3:50

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The chair would first of all apologize to the Assembly. When we were on the amendment, it really should have been strictly on the amendment, and the chair did not direct the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Her comments would have been valid in the latter part of it, and she didn't choose to repeat them again. So I apologize for that.

[Written Question 12 as amended carried]

Maintenance Enforcement Program

Q13. Mrs. Sloan moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that the following question be accepted.

As of March 1, 2000, how many active files in the maintenance enforcement program related to creditors or to debtors where the payee or payor was resident in a jurisdiction not named in the declaration of reciprocating states regulation?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is of interest as well, and as I looked through the best list that we were able to access with respect to those countries, states, and provinces that were covered, there were at least a couple that stuck out that were not part of that list. One notable one is Saudi Arabia. Another one that is not is Scotland. Another is Mexico, and I believe the entire South American continent is not part of the list.

These are jurisdictions that seem to be jurisdictions where I think Albertans do tend to go and reside, particularly those that have involvements in the oil and gas sector, because similar types of resources are in those jurisdictions. The premise of our question this afternoon relates to how much work the department has undertaken with respect to files and how many active files exist where the payee or payor was a resident in a jurisdiction not named.

Again, we are not afforded this type of information in the business plan from the Ministry of Justice. It's not something that on an annual basis we or any member of the public who might have cause or have an interest in this particular area can look at and see, if they're entering into a maintenance enforcement agreement and they know their ex-spouse is going to be moving out of country, if there in fact is a record of pursuit, if you will, for that particular jurisdiction if it's not covered by the regulation.

I'm hoping the hon. Minister of Justice might talk about whether or not the department has had any discussions with the jurisdictions that I mentioned that are not part of the regulation and if there's any exploration being undertaken to consider including them under the declaration. I may stand to be surprised by this, but I somehow think, Mr. Speaker, that if there are jurisdictions not covered in the declaration, we probably won't find that they're – well, there may in fact be many active files that have not achieved much progress with respect to successfully paying or billing the parties for moneys owed.

As I alluded to in my earlier remarks, this is a program which has many complexities and many warts. Regrettably, we have an increasing percentage of our society in situations where they are confronted with needing to use the program because of our incidence of divorce. I believe that the statistics still remain that somewhere over 50 percent of marriages in this province end in divorce. I was struck by Reverend Laing, whom I haven't met but who made comments relative to the children at risk task force report, which was leaked to a scab worker with the Calgary Herald this week, about the fact that the report doesn't appear to address the root issues of what is causing family breakdown and why there continue to be a very large number of marriages ending in divorce. This is an area where I think we have to be very, very vigilant as legislators, as elected officials who are responsible, particularly in cabinet, to oversee and administer these types of programs.

We have a large percentage of our population that is in the category of either being on maintenance enforcement or possibly needing to utilize it, and we haven't had – and again I wasn't able to be part of the Justice debates this spring because we had simultaneous budget debates going on. I believe that on the day for Justice, Children's Services or Health or another debate was happening at the same time, so it was very difficult, and I was not able to take part in Justice. The measures that we utilize to monitor our success, if you will, and our progress in this department I think have to be continually examined, and questions 11, 12, and 13 this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, are very generic questions. All three are talking about active files and are not bringing forward – perhaps we should contemplate doing so – the complexity of other issues that exist within those files relative to maintenance enforcement.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased that we are anticipating an amendment before the Assembly this afternoon to suitably make the question supportable by the government. With those remarks, I thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Government House Leader, do you wish to move the anticipated amendment?

MR. HANCOCK: Certainly. She put me to sleep, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] I'm sorry. I do apologize to Edmonton-Riverview for saying that she put me to sleep. It was untoward of me to say so, and in my new model I will refrain from those sorts of comments. I'll even refrain from referring to Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert when she says she gives me a little shove, but I've always known she's pushy.

Anyway, I think where we were at was that I was to accept the question if the House would agree to an amendment. Then I would move the amendment, that we strike out "As of March 1, 2000" and substitute "As of March 31, 2000" so that the question would read:

As of March 31, 2000, how many active files in the maintenance enforcement program related to creditors or to debtors where the payee or payor was resident in a jurisdiction not named in the declaration of reciprocating states regulation?

Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the amendment I would just say a couple of things. First of all, I'm going to make the presumption, although it's not explicit in the motion, that they mean outside of the province of Alberta, and I trust they will read it in that context.

Secondly, just to clarify earlier remarks when I mentioned FOIP, my point was not that any member of this House should have to make a FOIP request to get information from maintenance enforcement, but if they were requesting information on behalf of a constituent – because Edmonton-Riverview clearly indicated that she had requests from constituents and was advocating on behalf of constituents – we would be pleased to deal with those requests if they had the appropriate authorization from the individual whose personal information it was, allowing us to release that personal information to them or discuss the file with them. I just wanted to be clear on the record with that.

Maintenance enforcement has done an excellent job, Mr. Speaker. It's a difficult unit. It's a difficult business to be in because it's always difficult to satisfy both the person who's expecting the payments and the person who has to make the payments, and they do an excellent job. I might say, while I have the opportunity to put it on the record in this House, how proud I am of maintenance enforcement and the job that they do. But there always is room for improvement. There's always room to do better. Sometimes we do fall down by not providing the service that the public has come to expect, but for the most part it's an excellent, excellent unit, and it does a wonderful job.

The amendments that were brought in and the changes that were made as a result of the work that was done by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed have only served to improve that program. I would just say to the hon. members opposite that if they want information about the program or if they want information about policy or if they want to talk about measures of success, we're always open for business.

[Motion on amendment carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: To close debate on Written Question 13, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would simply just like to thank the hon. minister for his co-operation this afternoon in making the question permissible, and I anticipate the government's support with respect to the main question.

Thank you.

[Written Question 13 as amended carried]

head: Motions for Returns

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it is my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 25, 26, 27, 28, and 30.

[Motion carried]

Woodland Caribou

M18. Mrs. Soetaert moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of any studies or reports that the government has authorized, conducted, or examined since January 1, 1995, concerning the historic or current population and distribution of woodland caribou in Alberta and copies of any documents indicating what measures the government has taken to ensure healthy populations of these endangered animals.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Motion for a Return 18 be accepted.

MRS. SOETAERT: I would like to thank the minister for the information. The hon. minister has inspired me to actually praise the minister for the information that we're getting. I mean, the importance of caribou in this province is quite important. These species are one of the few that are truly impacted by human contact, unlike moose and elk. The caribou are certainly different, and we'd hate to see that wonderful animal become extinct. I mean, actually, you know, it's on the quarter. The quarter has the caribou on it. There's a tune to that effect, too, but probably only those with younger children might remember it.

So, Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for the information, and I look forward to receiving that on behalf of my colleague.

[Motion for a Return 18 carried]

Government Members' Travel

M19. Mr. Dickson moved on behalf of Dr. Nicol that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of written approvals provided by the Premier, Executive Council, Treasury Board, and/or the agenda and priorities committee for out-of-province and out-of-country travel by cabinet ministers and government Members of the Legislative Assembly, MLAs, for the period January 1, 1993, through November 17, 1999.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately I must reject this particular motion. Ministers do file and they're required by the policy of this government to file news releases including their itinerary and the cost of their travel. So that's a matter of public record. It would be unusual to release Treasury Board agenda and priorities documents, those sorts of documents that are being requested, and there's no need to do so seeing as the information is a matter of public record in any event by virtue of the news releases, which I would advise the hon. member he can get off the government web page if he doesn't already have an easier way of getting it.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm quite surprised that the minister can't get us this information. A news release is quite a bit different than actually giving us copies of written approvals provided by the Premier, Executive Council, Treasury Board, and/or the agenda and priorities committee for out-of-province and out-of-country travel by cabinet ministers and government Members of the Legislative Assembly.

The reality is that not long ago there was a bit of a scandal in this province about ministers traveling at taxpayers' expense and the question of whether government business was done or not. So I'm surprised that the minister isn't coming forward and wanting to make sure that all the public out there know where the money is spent and where people are going and for what reason. We don't want somebody golfing in Mexico at taxpayers' expense. If it's at their own expense, that's something quite different.

The reality is that people in Alberta are concerned about the abuse of this policy. You know what? What's sad about this is that I would bet you that most ministers who travel overseas on a business trip work very, very hard – I believe that they do – and it's not much fun. But the reality is that the public image out there is that they're going on a junket. I would think that responding to this would be a way of assuring people out there that ministers are actually working and are not on a junket at taxpayers' expense. We've seen that happen in this Assembly with ministers going with no explanation of itinerary, and after it's found out what they're doing, then they come up with an itinerary after the fact.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier said he would look into this. The caucus members want to make sure our tax dollars are spent wisely, I am sure. So why are we hiding this kind of stuff? A news release is not sufficient information. It does not give us what we are asking for. I would think that most cabinet members, particularly, would really want this kind of information public, because I've heard several of them say how hard they work, how they don't like being away from home, how it's long, long hours, and that they really do work hard on these. Then don't allow some to go on junkets, and make sure the public know about it to keep your own members in check.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

DR. TAYLOR: This member raises a lot of kind of negative allegations about ministers that travel. As one that traveled internationally as recently as last week, I would like to make some comments on that, Mr. Speaker.

All of our travel has to go through agenda and priorities for approval. So there is a very . . . [interjection] Mr. Speaker, if she wants to talk, I'll sit down.

4:10

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Minister of Innovation and Science, you're the one that the chair has recognized.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you. So we have already a process. Now, once it's through A and P and approved, then a press release is released giving exact details of the travel and the meetings that one goes through.

If I might use my example, since she thinks ministers are going on pleasure trips. Last week I traveled to the United States. I caught a 9:30 plane out of Edmonton to be in Seattle. I flew to Vancouver, and because we were too late to make a connection, I rented a car in Vancouver and drove to Seattle, because I was the keynote speaker, the only Canadian invited to speak at a congress of world leaders, at a Microsoft conference for world leaders, by invitation only. There were 400 people there, Mr. Speaker. I was on at a quarter after 8 in the morning.

I got into Seattle at 2:30 in the morning, got up and spoke at a quarter after 8, had meetings the rest of the day, spoke again, another speech, not organized by us but invited by the Canadian consulate, who had invited 130 expatriate Albertans, people that were all graduates of the U of A, the U of C, NAIT, or SAIT. They thought there would be 30 to 50 people. That is what they told us. There were between 115 and 120 people that showed up out of their invitations. I spoke there, and we went into meetings until 11 o'clock that night. I got up at 6 o'clock and got a 9 o'clock plane out of Seattle back to Edmonton.

Now, if that member thinks that's a junket, if that member thinks that's a pleasure trip, Mr. Speaker, I take great exception. It was nothing but hard work, and we got a lot of attention from that. We have now Microsoft people coming to Alberta to meet with our officials to see how Microsoft can be part of Alberta and what Microsoft can bring to Alberta. I just get tired of the crap from those people in this Assembly.

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Would you like to reconsider your characterization of information that may be received that you disagree with?

DR. TAYLOR: I'll withdraw the word "crap," Mr. Speaker, and substitute "garbage." [interjection] Well, I can't use that word either. I think that would be definitely ruled out of order.

You know, it's all innuendo, and the public reads this, hears about it, and thinks that that's what ministers are doing. I would ask those members to at least be honest in their commentary and not try to mislead and lie to the public.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We have another offending word in there that maybe you might reconsider.

DR. TAYLOR: Which one?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: You indicated: "and lie."

DR. TAYLOR: Yes. I will change it.

MRS. NELSON: A barefaced falsehood.

DR. TAYLOR: The Minister of Government Services just suggested to me "barefaced falsehood," so that's the one I will substitute.

Debate Continued

MS LEBOVICI: It appears that we're a little touchy this afternoon.

The question was very simple, and in fact the minister himself referred to what our motion for a return is:

copies of written approvals provided by the Premier, Executive Council, Treasury Board, and/or the agenda and priorities committee for out-of-province and out-of-country travel.

Now, I recognize that out-of-province and out-of-country travel is not always a junket and in fact is a lot of hard work because of the time frames that we do see that the ministers have to comply with in terms of their meetings, but the request is very simple, Mr. Speaker. It is to ask for the written authorization. Why in fact could that not be produced? That is what the question was, and that is what I have yet to hear the answer to.

So I thank the minister for outlining what his work was last week. It sounds like he did some very good work, and we appreciate the work that he did on the part of the province, but still the issue at hand is: why can we not get the written authorizations? That would be very simple, I would imagine, to bring forward to this Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's a tone coming from the opposition with regards to this motion for a return that there's something that is not being openly laid out for the public. Quite clearly, as a minister who has been overseas a number of times, each time before my group, whether it was Energy or Economic Development, traveled abroad or stateside, our itineraries were reviewed and released in detail by our communication people to the media, who printed them or chose not to, whichever the case was, depending on the trip.

I can go back to the original trade mission trips that went down to Houston and the three times I was in South America. I've been in six different countries in South America. I've been on four trips to Asia. All of that information has been laid out. Clearly, if they're looking for something untoward, I don't know what else you could do but lay out the itineraries, even listing the meetings, who you're meeting with, the purpose of the meeting, and who will be in attendance.

The document that's filed is very comprehensive, and it's updated almost daily whenever you're going on a trade mission because inevitably what happens on these missions is that up to the very last minute or even when you're in that country, the add-ons, the add-on meetings that get put on it are fierce.

In my case I can tell you that when you first get asked to go on one of these trips, you think, "Oh, wonderful," and then you go on one and realize you take two sets of staff, a day staff and a night staff, because you wear them out. You try to pack 21-day trips into 10 days so you can get back. I know. I have. And places I've been I can remember coming back, and one of my staff brought over some pictures. I was showing them to my family, and my mother asked, "Did you go on the trip?" I said, "Well, I did but I didn't get to see any of that stuff" because we were in that room, that meeting room, and that meeting room. But we got pictures from the staff who went and saw it, because you take 2 sets of staff, a day staff and a night staff. They wear out pretty quick.

The itineraries, the schedules, the meetings, the purpose, the programs for the companies. I know we took 120 companies over to Asia, and we worked our bones off, literally. All of that was laid out. It was a big story for Alberta, a major profile.

Our process goes through agenda and priorities; it doesn't go through these other areas. Treasury Board does not approve these trips. It is an agenda and priorities item, so it doesn't do that. There isn't a process through there. We've talked about this in this House before. They're very tightly controlled because there are so many players that feed into this, particularly from the private sector and from the foreign counterpart that you're meeting with on a diplomatic level.

We do release details. We may not always put location as to where the meeting will be, and that is for security purposes. When we were in Lima, Peru, the streets were lined with assault vehicles, and submachine guns were on rooftops of the buildings outside our hotel room. We were protected by four RCMP because of the national security with the Canadian embassy there. We were not able to list off the actual meeting locations because of security purposes. We live in a country that is safe, but some of these other countries just are not. So you do get a shock when you go into some of them. I always say that when I write the book, I'm going to talk about some of the foreign travel and the places we've been where there have been military coups going on as we've been leaving, the tanks rolled down the street in the middle of the night, and we got out as fast as we could. So those schedules are not printed, but they'd make an interesting read afterwards.

Everything is open, Mr. Speaker. I know we can't provide you with approvals from Treasury Board. I've sat on the Treasury Board since 1990, 1992, and this is not a Treasury Board issue. This goes through agenda and priorities. I've also sat on that committee. Clearly, the way this is written, it's not there, but whatever comes there is filed with the press. So I think the motion is out of order, and we would not be able to honour it.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just very briefly. I hadn't even planned to speak to this, but there seems to be a great deal of sensitivity being shown by members of the government side on this particular motion for a return. If you look at the motion very carefully, what the motion is asking for is copies of written approvals provided by the Premier, Executive Council, and so on, on out-of-province travel. Nobody is implying an abuse of travel opportunities. Would I dare suggest that the minister of community services would go on a junket? No. I'm sure she goes on these trips for business purposes. The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and so on.

As a member of the opposition, I've only ever had one opportunity to travel at taxpayer expense, and that was to a parliamentary conference in Victoria. Certainly there's an agenda laid out ahead of time, and you do your share of work when you're there. Although a parliamentary conference – let's be honest about this – does allow some opportunity for relaxation, socialization, and exchange of ideas, too, which is good.

Particularly, when I look back at my experiences on city council, a lot of times we were forced to travel. We didn't want to travel. Nobody likes to be away from their family, but you're forced to travel. When the mayor comes to you and says, "Look; I need you to go down to Ottawa to attend a multicultural conference on behalf of city council," you can't say, "No, I'm not going to go." You have a responsibility to go. So you're away from your family. You catch these late-night flights, and you go down there, and you work, work, work. It is not fun. Nobody is suggesting an abuse here, although there were some questions raised during the summer, mind you, and we have to recognize that.

Just simply, again, the question of public perception, what the public perceives as being right or wrong and to lay down, just like we have in the dollars I spent for out-of-town travel in the province. We table those in the House and in public accounts. The amount of money that I use for transportation is clearly there: my salary, my benefits, everything. So just to provide Albertans, the taxpayer, every bit of information possible just so they can make that judgment themselves, that this was proper, that this went through the proper channels, that it was approved, and that there's accountability. That's the key, accountability.

On that note I'd conclude, but I don't understand why they're so sensitive about this one. Puzzled.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to conclude debate.

MR. DICKSON: Yeah, I don't mean to belabour debate. Just a couple of observations I want to make quickly. The first one is that I have a great deal of sympathy for the sensitivity of cabinet ministers, Mr. Speaker. I'd acknowledge that, I think, last calendar year I made 117 one-way trips, and half of those were waking up at 5 in the morning to catch the 6:20 flight from Calgary to Edmonton and then going back. So I understand the frustration that travel is no fun. Believe me, I have a great deal of sympathy for cabinet ministers that have to travel in terms of selling our province and selling the products and services this province has. That's part of the necessary work, and I wish the Premier would appreciate that.

I recall in question period he had some fun talking about my jogging around my constituency, and I laughed too because I thought it was pretty entertaining. But it's the same issue that transportation is a necessary part of our work. Whether you're a Calgary MLA that has to come to work in this place and then get back as often as possible to participate in events, meetings, and that sort of thing in that city, that's part of the job. I take the minister of innovation and the Minister of Infrastructure, and I think that when you do a lot of travel and particularly air travel, you realize, frankly, it is tedious, it is boring, it is draining, and it just isn't any fun. It's clearly no bonus. I suspect the same is true whether you're flying back and forth between Edmonton and Calgary or whether you're going to Bolivia or Ecuador or anywhere else.

Anyway, the observation I wanted to make is, firstly, that I have some sympathy for cabinet ministers, so this is not a question that travel is bad. It is simply a question of accountability. I heard the Minister of Innovation and Science say, reinforced by the Minister of Government Services, as I understand it, that the agenda and priorities committee approves all travel, and when a news release is issued, that in effect is an indication and confirmation that that travel has been approved by the agenda and priorities committee. I think the whole purpose of this is simply to ensure that if there's any travel, it has been properly authorized, there has been a process, and somebody is accountable other than the traveling minister. I think that's what we're asking for.

I appreciate the clarification from the minister of innovation, who I think has made it abundantly clear. I take it that applies to out-of-province travel, out-of-country travel by cabinet ministers and government Members of the Legislative Assembly from the period '93 to November 7, 1999. If that's what he's telling us, that all of that travel has been, in effect, stamped by the agenda and priorities committee, then that's exactly what I think my colleague was looking for. I take it we have that information, and I thank the minister for that clarification.

That's all I wanted to say on this, and hopefully we can vote it and start making some progress through this long list.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 19 lost]

West Edmonton Mall Refinancing

M20. Mr. Dickson moved on behalf of Mr. Sapers that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of financial planning and human resources minutes dated May 14, 1997, pertaining to the refinancing of West Edmonton Mall as listed on page 40 of the affidavit of records of Her Majesty the Queen in right of Alberta dated November 30, 1999.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Premier, I would like to indicate that, as has been said numerous times in the House previously, the issue of the West Edmonton Mall refinancing is now before the courts, and as such we will not be accepting this motion.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to conclude.

MR. DICKSON: Exactly, sir. We're hoping to make some progress here this afternoon.

The comment I would make is that it is one thing to offer commentary on a matter which is currently before the courts. If there is a subsisting issue in the courts, then I think all members should respect that process. But this issue is not asking for the government to comment on anything. What we want to access – it's a motion for a return. That means we want a document. What do we want in this case? It's a copy of some minutes. It's the financial planning and human resources minutes.

We know the record exists, Mr. Speaker. I have in hand the affidavit on production. Maybe things have changed since I practised law. This is styled "affidavit of records." But in the style of cause the Alberta Treasury Branches is the plaintiff. The defendants include a number of the Ghermezian family and a number of numbered corporations and named corporations. The action number is 9903-18469. In the affidavit of records, in the first schedule, the first part: "showing records in the possession of the Crown which it does not object to produce." So, in other words, there is no claim of solicitor/client privilege or any other kind of privilege. It's right there. It's number 024, and the document is identified.

So the document was part of what the Crown was prepared to disclose for purposes of the litigation. The document clearly exists, and the minister has not asserted that it does not exist. On what basis would he refuse to share it with us? He said: well, it's part of some ongoing litigation. Well, you know, the pleadings are part of some ongoing litigation, and you or I can go down and get a copy of that. That is no excuse, no reason. This is the former Minister of Justice telling us that it can't come because it's part of a court proceeding. Well, that's just utter nonsense. Utter nonsense. That's no reason the document can't be shared.

When the Member for Calgary-Glenmore was involved in litigation not so many years ago – well, he had a client who happened to be a particular litigant. If the litigant wanted a document that had been disclosed in the course of production, all he had to do was give instructions to his counsel, his solicitor, and his solicitor would make that document available. So it's the same thing here.

Now, we have a new Minister of Justice, and maybe he hasn't had time to turn his mind to it. But why wouldn't the current Minister of Justice make available to us a document which has been disclosed in the affidavit on production in this litigation? The fact is that it is cited in an affidavit. There is no privilege claimed. It's a disclosed document. This is one of those things that suggests that this is a government that still buys into a culture of secrecy, not what they claim to be, a government that's open and transparent.

It seems to me that the litigation is but an extremely convenient excuse to roll out that great big blanket of secrecy over top of the document. We could have understood if this had been in the second part of the first schedule, which was documents the Crown refused to produce or objected to. Minister of Justice, through the Speaker, why won't you share with Albertans this memorandum? The minister didn't even claim that this was going to violate section 15 of the FOIP Act or section 16 of the FOIP Act or sections 22 or 23 or 27, one of those often-cited exceptions.
