Now, we received a Standing Order 30 application, as I indicated, at 3:26 p.m., November 6, and then today on November 14 at 9:20 a.m. the text of the Standing Order 30 did arrive. So it abides by that. However, one or two hon. members have also raised the situation of: which standing order would you deal with first, the Standing Order 30 application or the Standing Order 40 application that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands submitted? That arrived in the Speaker's office at 11:15 a.m. on November 9, and it certainly did complete the text and abided by all of the conditions laid out in our Standing Orders. However, as Standing Order 30 requires an intervention and decision by the Speaker with respect to the matter whereas a Standing Order 40 requires a decision of the House, it would appear to be more appropriate that we deal first of all with the Standing Order 30 application, which will provide for a decision from the chair and not involve the members of the House.

head: Request for Emergency Debate

THE SPEAKER: So we're now going to proceed with the Standing Order 30 application. One more time and once again to draw it to all members' attention, the Standing Order 30 application has to do with a member requesting leave to move to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance of which written notice has been given to the Speaker at least two hours prior to the sitting of the Assembly.

The operative word is "urgent."

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electric Utilities Deregulation

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to impress upon you the validity of this motion under Standing Order 30. I am asking that you rule that the matter is indeed urgent and that it is consistent with the requirements of Standing Orders rules. For the record I would like to read into the debate of this Legislature the motion which I propose.

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the government's mismanagement of the deregulation of electricity markets in Alberta resulting in inadequate supply to meet rising demand and skyrocketing prices for consumers.

Mr. Speaker, I am guided today in my arguments by two very important authorities that govern the proceedings of this House. I'll be referring in my arguments to Beauchesne 387, 389, 390, and our own Standing Order 30.

Beauchesne 387, in the section entitled Motions to Adjourn the House under Standing Order 52 to Discuss an Important Matter, says:

The Standing Order is clear that the question [must] be specific and must require urgent consideration. It must deal with a matter within the administrative competence of the Government and there must be no other reasonable opportunity for debate.

Beauchesne 389 goes on to say:

The "specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration" . . . must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention.

Beauchesne 390 says:

"Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but means "urgency of debate," when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules . . . do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough.

Of course, Standing Order 30 spends a good deal of time dealing with the issue. Section 30(1) says that any member may request leave to move to adjourn the ordinary business . . . to discuss a matter of urgent public importance of which written notice has been given to the Speaker at least two hours prior to the sitting.

That, of course, has been done.

Under section 30(6) "an emergency debate does not entail any decision of the Assembly." It goes on to say in 30(7) that

- (a) the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration . . .
- (c) not more than one matter may be discussed on the same motion;
- (d) the motion must not revive discussion on a matter which has been discussed in the same session . . .
- (e) the motion must not be based on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the matter before us is in fact a matter of clear urgency and meets all the requirements set out in the sections that I have outlined. In accordance with Beauchesne 387 the government's mismanagement of electricity market deregulation in Alberta is "specific," requires "urgent consideration," is "within the administrative competence of the Government," and is needed because there has been no other reasonable opportunity to debate. The question is specific: be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, mismanagement of deregulation, rising costs, and skyrocketing prices for consumers.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, we are not asking for a decision. We are asking for a debate. We're being very specific. The question requires urgent debate. There are two issues that come out of these authorities on the question of urgency. One is the distinction in Beauchesne between the urgency of debate and the urgency of the substance. The two are not unrelated, of course. There is an urgency of debate, as I have outlined, because we have no other opportunities – this is the earliest possible time – and because of the substance of the problem.

The substance of the issue is the second feature of the urgency argument. Mr. Speaker, all Albertans are affected by this problem of rising electricity prices: all homeowners, all home renters, all businesses, all industries, senior citizens, young families, students, major manufacturing companies, small businesses. The list of affected Albertans is immense, and it affects people at home and at work. People with low incomes are choosing whether to heat or eat. Businesses are being hurt, and the government's mismanagement is destroying the Alberta advantage.

The question deals with a matter clearly within the administrative competence of the government, although the use of the word "competence" is questionable there. The plan to deregulate the electricity market has been pursued by this government for five years now, despite the warnings of the Official Opposition. The problem is the direct product of this government. It is within the administrative competence to pursue deregulation, and it is within the same administrative competence to debate it now.

Mr. Speaker, the question posed does not have any other reasonable opportunity for debate. There have been no other opportunities to debate this issue. The results of deregulation have been seen coming for a long time by this side of the House, but while they finally became apparent over the summer and the fall, there has been no opportunity to debate them until now. We have only one question period to question the government, but if question period was sufficient to deny a Standing Order 30, then there would be no need for Standing Order 30s, period. But question period is not sufficient, and that is why we have Standing Order 30 for issues like this. Therefore, in accordance with Beauchesne 387 I submit to this Assembly that this is the most appropriate time and place to deal with the issue.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, and in accordance with Beauchesne 389, the urgent matter is "so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention." Again, this is an issue affecting all Albertans. Skyrocketing prices affect everyone in their pocketbook. Some are being hit to the point that they must choose, as I've said, to heat or eat. An opportunity is needed to address the plight facing Alberta citizens and business.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we have already addressed the issue of urgency further clarified in Beauchesne 390. If electricity is not debated here and now, there will not be an opportunity to debate it in this Assembly prior to its full implementation on January 1, 2001, 47 days from now. This province may be facing unscheduled interruptions in power supply and the closure and exodus of business. This is a policy that will affect the lives of Albertans for years to come.

Mr. Speaker, in closing and in accordance with your own Standing Orders, I want to re-emphasize the urgency of this question. I challenge the Premier and his government to agree to an emergency debate on this issue, an issue of importance to every single Albertan.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Just one clarification. These are not my Standing Orders. These are the Standing Orders of this Assembly.

The hon. Minister of Resource Development on this point of order. We're dealing with the application under the point of order.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The opposition's motion under Standing Orders to put aside the regular business of the Assembly to debate the issue of this government's management of the deregulation of Alberta's electricity industry is not in order and should be denied on several grounds.

Mr. Speaker, no emergency exists today. Therefore, urgent debate is not needed, and there will be other reasonable opportunities to address the matter over the next few weeks during question period. I would be pleased to respond to any of the hon. members' accusations at that time. The government has been pursuing a steady and deliberate course towards deregulation since 1993. The opposition has had years to discuss the issue of this government's approach to deregulation in the House. In fact, the original introduction of the legislation came in 1995. The opposition then participated in the discussions, and with the amendment in 1998 the opposition members again participated in discussions. From reading the Hansard, there was general support for deregulation and competition at the time from a number of the members, so they are aware of the process of deregulation.

As well, Mr. Speaker, the government intends to introduce personal income tax amendments during this fall session, and that directly relates to energy rebates. Therefore, there will also be an opportunity to debate energy matters at the time.

Mr. Speaker, we have had and continue to see investment in generation in Alberta. In fact, there are double the number of generators out there at this time compared to 1995. Deregulation is not the cause of rising prices. In fact, deregulation will put a downward pressure on the energy prices.

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE SPEAKER: I think, hon. minister, what we're doing now is debating a possible motion. We're going to determine whether or not it's going to be debated. It's now dealing with the urgency of a Standing Order 30 application to waive all the business of the day. You just deal with this one.

Debate Continued

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned a number of issues in relation to the urgency. Through this deregulation process, when January 1, 2001, takes place, when full deregulation kicks in, to start with, 85 percent of Albertans connected to the electrical system – that's over one million residential units, residential homes, and residential farms – have up to five years, have up to 2005, before they have to make a decision to change. Within that five years they can also change. Over 124,000 customers, who are commercial, industrial, and municipal users that use less than 250,000 kilowatt hours of electricity, can also remain with their present regulated supplier up to three years. Therefore, the urgency in those two areas sure isn't there.

In addition to that, I know that a lot of the major industrial users of electricity have already signed long-term contracts with existing suppliers. In fact, a lot of long-term contracts were done and signed before the bidding process took place. The industries and also the bidders knew how much they could bid on the projects, and therefore the urgency definitely is not there.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, we also have a sale of additional electricity that is going to come shortly before the end of this month. Another 2,000 megawatts in packages as small as two megawatts will be put up for sale, and it will give the opportunities for larger industries that didn't bid through the initial process or smaller industries or commercial or municipalities even to bid on that, so they would definitely have a supply.

The other one I'd like to mention briefly, Mr. Speaker, is in relation to the actual prices of electricity and natural gas, for an example.

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE SPEAKER: I take it, hon. minister, that what you're basically doing is saying that you're not concerned about having a debate, that as far as you're concerned, let's have a debate. You're participating in one now. We are on a Standing Order 30 application. I've heard from the Leader of the Official Opposition, and again the same kind of suggestion was made there through body language. So that's it. We've heard your input now.

Anybody else on the opposition side? We're talking about Standing Order 30, and I'm going with the rules of Standing Order 30. Then I'm prepared to hear – does someone else on the government side want to participate in the Standing Order 30 application?

AN HON. MEMBER: Question.

THE SPEAKER: Well, there's no question. This is the dilemma with a Standing Order 30 application, hon. member. There is no question.

So, hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, you want to participate on Standing Order 30? Okay. But remember, Standing Order 30.

MR. WHITE: Urgency. Yes. Your admonishments are quite correct, sir. As I understand, Standing Order 30 speaks to the urgency of the matter. Well, sir, the urgency of this is of utmost importance to Albertans. Every single soul in this province relies on this energy.

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE SPEAKER: Excuse me. Thank you very much, but the Standing Order 30 application has to do with the urgency of this Assembly waiving all other of its agenda items to deny all other members an opportunity to deal with the business that's already been advertised for them to deal with, not with the question of the motion. Just tell me where it's impossible for anybody, another member, ever to raise the question of this issue again. That's all I want to know.

MR. WHITE: Well, sir, there doesn't seem to be any other forum, and the debate that did occur nine months ago was truncated by closure. There were less than 90 minutes of debate on the entire matter. It's so important to the people of Alberta that there must be a forum, and this is the forum.

The member opposite cites question period. Well, question period is not debate. It does not allow the give-and-take. It does not speak of the philosophical elements of whether it's free enterprise or whether it's under a regulated market. Those are some fundamentals that have to be decided. The government opposite says that there have been many, many changes since the time this government started working on this project, and it is true that we have yet to have a debate.

Therefore, sir, I think it's of utmost importance that this House adjourn the business of the day in that we have other days to deal with these elements of business, but this element of business is so important and so important today in that it is less than 47 days until this takes effect. If that occurs, contracts are signed, sealed, and delivered, and then there's no turning back. There are elements in this society, some major elements, that believe there are adequate reasons to say: stop, halt, and take assessment of the situation in that it can be stopped now. All contracts can be made null and void, whereas they cannot be the closer we get.

Sir, 37 percent of the energy is yet to be sold. That could be stopped today. Businesses are leaving Alberta, and there is an expectation . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please work with me on this one; okay? These are the rules of the House: Standing Order 30. I mean, three or four of the things you just finished saying are not in the motion, so I don't follow this.

Okay. I'm going to hear two more, and that's it. We're going to be here all afternoon. We're coming to a head on this.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, then followed by the Government House Leader.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that the motion of the hon. Leader of the Opposition should be ruled in order, and I have a number of reasons for saying that. The main reason why the Assembly should debate this at this time is that there are certain irrevocable decisions that are going to be made between the time of this sitting of the Legislature and the next election or the next sitting of the Legislature.

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE SPEAKER: Excuse me, hon. member. Now, I appreciate what the hon. member is saying, but when you have a Standing Order 30 application, it has to do with the unavailability of any other opportunity in the Assembly to deal with the matter, not the importance of the question. That's the difficulty with the acuity of the arguments under a Standing Order 30 application.

THE SPEAKER: The Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, you're absolutely correct. In order to set aside the ordinary business of the day, to set aside the opportunity for private members to have their bills, which have been carefully considered, put on the Order Paper, to set aside private members' motions this afternoon on issues that have been researched and where members have brought forward their time, to set aside at 4:30 the bringing in of letters from the Lieutenant Governor so that the supplementary estimates can be considered, to set aside the ordinary business of the day, which is the business of this House, for an emergency debate, Standing Order 30 does require something that is urgent and pressing and has no other opportunity for debate.

Now, if you look at the Order Paper, Mr. Speaker, no member of the opposition or any other member that I can see has put on a written question or a motion for a return requiring information. There's nothing under Motions Other than Government Motions, although, as the Opposition House Leader has mentioned, this issue of deregulation has been extant for some five years. There's been no motion other than government motion put on the Order Paper. No member of the opposition has taken the opportunity of any of the ordinary methods of bringing things to the attention of the House, and now they're bringing a Standing Order 30 asking that the very important business of the private members of this House be set aside and the very important business of bringing forward supplementary supply be set aside.

With respect to supplementary supply, of course, that goes to Committee of Supply, and there are opportunities in Committee of Supply to discuss a wide range of issues and concerns about how government should spend the people of Alberta's resources. There may well be an opportunity in Committee of Supply or under the Appropriation Act debate to raise issues regarding how government revenues are raised and spent. So there may well be opportunities for members during this session. In fact, if we can get on with the business of the session, get supplementary supply on the table, they'll have an opportunity to debate a wide range of issues relative to how government spends and raises resources that belong to the Alberta government.

So the question of urgency has been eloquently addressed by my colleague the minister of natural resources insofar as he has pointed out that this process is not something that's happened overnight. It's a process that's happened over a period of time. The opposition has acknowledged that that process has happened over a period of time. The question of whether we should adjourn debate in the House really boils down to: is it sufficiently important that there be a debate in this House on this issue today, to set aside all of the work that private members have done to bring their issues to the table and the supplementary supply that the government is bringing to the table this afternoon? I respectfully suggest, Mr. Speaker, that no case for urgency of that nature has been made.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have to address this today. We've heard the Government House Leader speak about the fact that this can be brought up in the budget. That is not true. The budget deals with the financial allocations and the expenditures of this government. This motion is asking for a debate about the management processes. There is no provision in the rest of this session to deal with any kind of policy or management process that deals with how this government is conducting and putting in place the deregulation system. This is our only opportunity to be able to deal with that kind of question in this House.

If we want to start talking about how they're going to deal with the allocation of the rebates, how they're going to deal with the return to Albertans of their money from the auction sales, that kind of thing can be dealt with in the budget. The policy issues cannot. This is the legislative session, this is the House that deals with the policy issues, and we must debate them now in this House before they make any more decisions that will further complicate and confuse Albertans as to what the end result of this process is going to be.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you have one kick at the cat. You had it.

Hon. members, there is no doubt whatsoever in the mind of the chair that this is an important matter and that this may very well be a very controversial matter. The difficulty the chair has is that the chair must abide by the rules of this Assembly and enforce the rules of this Assembly in terms of the basis of the documents that we have followed in the past. So, first of all, I'll just comment on the requirement in terms of the notice under the Standing Order 30 application, although I've already talked about this. I certainly viewed it to be adequate in terms of the prescribed times and in order.

For the Speaker to grant a request for leave, the matter certainly must relate to a genuine emergency requiring an urgent debate. If one takes a look at the wording of the motion, the motion itself suggests that the matter of urgent public importance is – and I'm going to quote directly from this – “the government's mismanagement of the deregulation of electricity markets in Alberta.” That in itself does not meet the criteria for an application under the standing order. I would like to draw members' attention to Beauchesne 394: “a general question of the maladministration of a department cannot be considered for debate under this Standing Order.” One could look at this motion and basically view it as a motion of nonconfidence or censure.

As well, the chair would like to draw members' attention to the book House of Commons Procedure and Practice, the one that we have here in this Assembly. I would ask you to review and refer to the sections on pages 587 and 588 of that book, the criteria used in the Canadian House of Commons for similar applications.

Then I would go one step further. If somehow the chair were to take the subject of urgent public matter to be increased electricity costs, the ongoing nature of that does not necessarily make it a genuine emergency, although it is very important and most controversial. Today 25 minutes of the 50 minutes in question period surrounded this particular matter, and the chair would suspect that in the days to come a fair chunk of question period will be associated with this.

Accordingly, the chair finds that the request for leave is not in order, and the question shall not be put.

Point of Order Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

MR. DICKSON: Can I stand under 13(2), please, in request of clarification with respect to something you just said?

THE SPEAKER: Yes.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, we've heard argument just moments ago that question period amounts to debate, and I thought I heard you in fact confirm that moments ago. I'd ask if you could help me with this. On March 8, 2000, in Hansard, page 309, and on April 17, 2000, page 1010, I took your comments then to be that question period is something very different than debate. Since from time to time I expect we will see other Standing Order 30s, I wonder, sir, if you would just help me understand whether you in fact are saying that what happens in that 50 minutes of question period amounts to debate, which is in fact one of the elements of a Standing Order 30. If I could have that clarified, I'd be grateful.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Well, in clarifying the whole thing, the Speaker would also like to point the attention of the hon. Opposition House Leader to Beauchesne 398 and to read it in context in terms of the discussion we're having right now.

Question period is not a debating time. The only thing that the chair did was just point out that in today's question period 25 minutes out of the 50 minutes were devoted to the whole question of electricity. The way questions are framed by certain people and the way questions are answered by other people may lead to some people suggesting that it is debate, but that's not the intent of question period and never has been the intent of question period. The intent of question period is to seek out answers to very specific questions, and if we actually went back to that kind of procedure and had a very specific question seeking out a very specific answer and had a very specific answer to a very specific question, whoa, we would have the true, ultimate question period, but as we're dealing with human beings, all of whom have very determined approaches of their own, sometimes we seem to waive and violate that and move away from that.

So let me just make it very, very clear again, hon. Opposition House Leader. Nothing that was said here this afternoon in terms of coming to this conclusion on this particular Standing Order 30 application would lead anyone to suggest that question period will be turned into a debating Assembly. The reasons were given by the chair, and the chair would repeat again: Beauchesne 398.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

THE SPEAKER: Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on a Standing Order 40 application.

Electric Utilities Deregulation

Mr. Mason:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly, in light of skyrocketing electricity costs which are punishing consumers and disrupting the Alberta economy, urges the government to call an independent public inquiry into why the deregulation process has failed so badly and put all electricity deregulation on hold until the inquiry reports.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the Legislative Assembly allow me to introduce the motion which I gave notice of earlier. Standing Order 40 requires two things: that it be urgent and pressing. I would argue, first of all, that it is urgent because we are faced with a very serious situation in this province with respect to electricity costs. We have businesses who are writing to the government and writing to the opposition saying that they will no longer be able to carry on their business in this province and are looking at relocating to other provinces. So that indeed is a very pressing and urgent situation.

In terms of dealing with it now and the arguments for dealing with it now rather than later – I tried to allude to that in my previous comments – there are some things that are going to happen between now and the beginning of the new year that will create a very dangerous situation, and this is our only chance to deal with them. The first thing is that there is a second auction, following the failed first auction, that is scheduled for just shortly after this Legislature is supposed to rise. Secondly, the implementation of the deregulation regime takes place on January 1, 2001. After that, by all accounts it will be very, very expensive and very difficult if not impossible to go back if we find we've made a mistake. So that, I think, speaks to the urgency of this question.

I want to also raise the question that there have been some statements made, some of the answers that were given in the question period, that's been referred to, that are clearly requiring some debate. The opposition has not had an opportunity to respond and cannot respond except in a debate. That is the statement that deregulation is not the cause of the present spike in electricity prices, which both the Premier and the minister have stated. That needs debate, and I think that's putting it mildly, Mr. Speaker.

I guess I would just appeal to members of the House, as well, that in terms of preserving the Alberta advantage, which this government is so fond of talking about, it is essential that low input costs for manufacturing be a part of that. Everything you've worked for, as much as we on this side have disagreed with the method, can go up in smoke if you don't deal with this and deal with it now. This is your last chance, Mr. Speaker, the last chance of the members of this Assembly to deal with this situation.

So I would ask those opposite to give unanimous consent so that we can debate this and have this debate which is very much on Albertans' minds.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the process for a Standing Order 40 application is much simpler than the process for a Standing Order 30 application. This simply requires unanimous consent of the House.

[Unanimous consent denied]

THE SPEAKER: Before proceeding to Orders of the Day, hon. members, I must point out to you something with respect to the Order Paper. Hon. members may have noted some slight modifications to the early Order Paper circulated November 9. One such modification is the withdrawal of Motion Other than Government Motion 548 to reflect the resignation of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

As well, Bill 14, the Alberta Treasury Branches Amendment Act, 2000, and Bill 22, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2000, both now at second reading stage on the Order Paper and introduced under the sponsorship of the Provincial Treasurer, thus not designating a particular individual, now show the name of the current Provincial Treasurer, the hon. Dr. West.

Government Motion 15, proposing the approval in general of the business plans and fiscal policies of the government, will remain as shown in view of the fact that the Order Paper reflects the actual mover of the motion on February 24, 2000.

Labour Legislation Review

513. Mr. Fischer moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to re-examine Alberta's existing Labour Relations Code and Public Service Employee Relations Act and propose recommendations for their improvement, particularly with respect to collective bargaining agreements.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and begin debate on Motion 513. The intent of Motion 513 is to get debate started on collective bargaining practices in our province and to show that the current process is outdated and seriously flawed.

Confrontational bargaining began half a century ago, when workers had virtually no basic fundamental rights and were forced to become hostile, even militant, to obtain those rights. Over the years, many of these fundamental rights have been enshrined in our Canadian Constitution or have been addressed in our provincial labour statutes. So we have come a long way, and I believe that in today's society there is absolutely no need to use this outdated, hostile bargaining process to arrive at a collective bargaining agreement.

It is time for a change. You may ask why the need to change when the majority of collective bargaining agreements get ratified without work stoppage and in due time. Here is a letter that I had written to me that describes what a very respected schoolteacher and principal of an elementary school in the Buffalo Trail school division thinks of the process. This letter was written during a long-drawn-out and bitter negotiation of their collective agreement that degraded to a strike vote and lockout situation. He said:

As a teacher in [the Buffalo Trail regional division], I just wanted to let you know that I am truly disheartened by the situation occurring in [the school division] between the trustees and the professional staff of the schools. This seems to be a particular trouble spot for labour relations in our province. Since the beginning of the amalgamation of school boards, we have had difficulty coming up with any reasonable process for establishing a comparatively reasonable contract. The initial years, we spent a great deal of time and energy trying to put the four former boards on an even playing field in terms of wages and working conditions. The last two settlements have been reached with a great deal of difficulty. We were in an eleventh hour settlement situation in January of this year to reach agreement for a two year contract that was in fact in place for only 8 months! This year we have yet another unique situation with a "lock out" of teachers before giving any real time to allow the negotiations to progress once lock out and strike votes were taken.

As a teacher, I think that we do have a problem [in this division]. I do not think that it is a "money issue," I think that it is a "trust issue." I submit that before any two parties can come to an agreement, they need to be able to "trust" each other. I personally do not feel that that trust exists between the two sides in [this division]. No one is willing to give an inch for fear that the other side might take advantage of their genuine desire to negotiate. Hence, we are miles apart in terms of our relative positions. I also feel that this labour situation will pass, however the bigger problem of "trust" will force us yet [again] into conflict after conflict. As adults fight and continue to fight, the children are the ones who will pay the price and will continue to pay the price, not only through pointless job action, but through a disintegrating employer-employee relationship.

I personally feel that we need help to resolve this problem. The deep seated lack of trust is too ingrained to heal on its own. Someone needs to help us look at this and ask "is this what education in the province of Alberta is all about?" I feel that this needs to be someone outside of our organization who can help all of the partners . . . to focus on the "education of its children as a unified team."

I also have another letter from a teacher parent who expressed her frustration over the long-drawn-out process and her fear that her daughter's education would be hurt.

The dispute ended November 9 with the minister of labour appointing a disputes inquiry board, who very skillfully brought the parties together and an agreement to their contracts. Yes, the dispute was settled, but the damage will not go away for years to come.

Mr. Speaker, during this past year, as bargaining took place, reports from both sides would come from people close to the negotiations about all the things that the other side would not agree to. Sometimes the truth is stretched a little; sometimes it's misinterpreted or distorted and then passed on from one neighbourhood to the other. Statements, sometimes accusations become very personal, even mean-spirited, causing huge hurt within the whole community. Since I've been an MLA, I have personally gone through strikes, lockouts, mediation, arbitration with teachers, nurses, and CUPE employees. They all have one thing in common, that everyone loses, in this case the school boards, the teachers, and the students. This has provided for an unhappy workplace.

Our government prides itself on listening to Albertans, and my motion is the result of this. My constituents raised their concerns about the collective bargaining process, and I'm acting on those concerns as well as some of my own. Mr. Speaker, I propose to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment that an extensive consultation with stakeholders such as employers, unions, and industry associations take place before any significant changes to the legislation. This consultation, hopefully, will be the basis of a lasting and effective labour climate in our province for years to come. So I also see Motion 513 as the starter for the consultation process that will take place down the road, and I'm sure that some of the ideas and comments from others will be brought forward and could be used.

Mr. Speaker, the primary piece of legislation which governs collective bargaining is the Labour Relations Code. The code applies to all employers but does not apply to all employees. For example, practising members of the legal, dental, medical, engineering, and architectural professions or persons in managerial positions are not governed by the code. The Labour Relations Code covers processes governing collective bargaining, collective agreements, dispute resolution, strikes, and lockouts. It also governs the rights of parties, unfair labour practices, and establishes the Labour Relations Board. In Alberta 90 percent of the collective bargaining agreements and 79 percent of the unionized workforce are covered by the Labour Relations Code. The remainder are covered under the Public Service Employee Relations Act, Universities Act, Technical Institutes Act, Banff Centre Act, Police Act, and the Canadian Labour Code for Alberta employees.

Mr. Speaker, one alternative may be to revisit the existing legislation and put in some rules that disallow any contact with members from either side. Negotiating in the public and through the media is causing many serious problems. Disallowing contact certainly would alleviate many of these negative communication problems and prevent further conflict. As well, there are other methods of collective bargaining that may be more beneficial to both labour and management, but too often the participants in contract negotiations come away from the process describing the stressful conditions and results as leaving both sides feeling the other side is the enemy. Moreover, the damaged and fragmented relationships that were the byproduct of these sessions do not leave a viable framework to work from in the future.

We must ask ourselves how this is affecting our workers, our businesses, and the economy as a whole. It has been proven time and time again that a peaceful and happy workplace will provide the maximum productivity. People will go beyond the call of duty to help others and to improve efficiency. Therefore, a peaceful labour climate is essential to the betterment of this province.

One alternative that I'd like to propose to you is called interest-based bargaining. Interest-based bargaining has worked well on several occasions in the U.S. in diverse industrial sectors. Interest-based bargaining focuses on negotiators addressing issues on their merits rather than haggling and taking hard stands. This method suggests mutual gains wherever possible and, where interests conflict, insistence that the result be based on fair standards, independent of the forced will of either side. The wanted result of this approach is to create a spirit of co-operation that works beyond the bargaining process.

In Arizona the Salt River Project, a public electricity and water company, used interest-based bargaining after facing a growing stalemate with the union representing its 4,300 employees. The new approach led to a productive contract negotiation and a dramatic decrease in the number of grievances. All grievances had been settled without going to arbitration through prompt meetings between labour and management to solve the problem on a nonprecedent-setting basis.

As well, the Missouri state legislature passed legislation in 1999 that put interest-based bargaining into law, covering all collective bargaining done by school districts in the state. The law has been well received and garnered a great deal of support from the teachers and the administrators alike in the state. Here are some comments from a local superintendent.

Teachers teach and kids learn from the first day of bargaining until the last with interest-based bargaining. The result is remarkably better, leading to solutions that are quite out of the ordinary. In districts that already enjoy good relationships between the school boards and the teachers, interest-based bargaining strengthens the relationships and gives you a new set of skills to work with. You can continue to use the skills throughout the year, long after the bargaining process itself is over.

A comment from a parent: interest-based bargaining is a problem-solving process that tries to meet the needs of all parties; it gives school boards a reason to listen to teachers more.

As well, the Wisconsin State Employees Union recently concluded negotiations using this method.

These are fine examples of interest-based bargaining working. When both labour and management went to the table aware that decisions would not be reached easily but were willing to negotiate in a spirit of goodwill rather than hostility, things got done, and the labour climate benefited. I'm not trying to say that interest-based bargaining is the answer to all our labour issues, but if we can start a process where some agreements are made using interest-based bargaining methods, then we have made some progress. To me this would be a step in the right direction.

So let's consider, folks, what I've said today. I'm asking you to look at our labour relations process and recognize that there is a great need to make changes. It is not in any way intended to take away any bargaining power from either side; it is about finding a better way. Yes, we as legislators have a duty to respect and listen to what Albertans are saying, and they are asking us to please find a better way.

So I ask all members to support Motion 513. It's a step into the 21st century, a step towards a more peaceful labour climate.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Wainwright, just for the record, a clarification: Mr. Speaker is not in the chair.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is with interest that I rise to address the Assembly this afternoon regarding the motion that the hon. Member for Wainwright has presented to the Assembly. Listening to his remarks, I need further clarification, but I believe what he is proposing here is, once again, right-to-work legislation for this province.

I understand he's using the example, Madam Speaker, of the labour negotiations that were going on between the teachers and the officials in the Buffalo Trail school division. I would like to remind the hon. member that last week I attended an induction ceremony for teachers who were becoming members of local 37 in the public school system. Local 37, of course, is one of the larger locals of the Alberta Teachers' Association. I may not have the year correct, but the moderator of that event said that the teachers of this province have had one strike in recent history, and I believe it was in 1972. So to bring forward this argument that there's no stability in labour relations between Alberta teachers and the various school boards across this fine province I don't think is quite sound.

Now, we're blessed this afternoon to have the presence in the Assembly of the hon. minister in charge of our Labour Relations Code, and I'm sure that he is very interested in participating in this discussion or debate this afternoon. Certainly we need balanced labour relations. The hon. minister has used the disputes inquiry board. It is one of the mechanisms that's available to him. Not only this hon. minister but an hon. minister before him in that portfolio used it. It was a mechanism that already existed, and it settled an issue in Calgary. It settled the issue.

The best collective agreement that can be reached is an agreement that's reached without any sort of arbitration. The best agreement is the one that's freely reached by both parties and that both parties are going to benefit from. If we're going to discuss balanced labour relations in this province, we have to look at the whole issue of fairness and the whole issue of equitable treatment in the workplace of all Alberta workers, not just teachers. We have to understand that workers in this province must be valued and treated with respect. Alberta workers are not a commodity. They are a resource to be valued and cherished.

I believe, Madam Speaker – and the hon. member can correct me if I'm wrong – that he described it as interest-based bargaining. I would have to question whose interest is going to be served here. Because we look at the whole arbitration process in this province, whether it's the public-sector unions or the private-sector unions, and they do not have confidence in the current system.

How do we improve it? That is a very, very good question. The first way to improve it is to restore confidence in the entire process. We have to restore confidence by looking at the Labour Relations Board. We have to look at the turnaround times in hearings. They're different for employers than they are for employees. Is that balanced, Madam Speaker? I don't think so. That would be the first thing that I would do to ensure that we have a balanced labour relations climate in this province.

We need to ensure that high standards are maintained in the entire workforce. We know that in the past there has been confrontation in the workforce, and when we look at the percentage of Albertans who are unionized and we look at the percentage of the workforce that is unionized yet does not have the right to strike and we look at the number of workers who have the right to strike, then the hon. Member for Wainwright would be correct in his assessment that we have an unstable framework, because we have a very low rate of the workforce which can actually withdraw their labour from the work site.

We look at situations that have developed in the recent past. We look at Dynamic Furniture. We look at what happened there. The situation at Dynamic Furniture went on and on and on. It divided entire communities. The reason why this occurred, Madam Speaker, was because of the imbalance in our labour climate in this province. There was the use of replacement workers. There were security guards hired. There were dogs hired. There were light plants employed. It was like a war zone in Calgary. I feel that the easiest way to fix the entire problem would be that after a first contract is signed or a site is certified by a respected union, if there is no contract agreed to by both parties after a six-month period, then binding arbitration be applied and help them both settle their differences. This is not done in this province, and we see the result in Dynamic Furniture.

We look at the unfortunate situation at the Calgary Herald, where individuals expressed their democratic right to not only join a union but to have a union represent them with their employer. This, unfortunately, didn't work out for the employees. The situation went on and on and on. I can't understand in this province where at one time the hon. minister could take such an active role – and in this case I'm referring to the fines that were imposed when the Alberta union of public employees had job action earlier this year – why there was not the same regard for the Labour Relations Code when there were long-drawn-out strikes at the Calgary Herald and long-drawn-out strikes at Dynamic Furniture and, if we want to go back to a previous time, at Canada Safeway when over 10,000 Albertans were on a legal strike.

Now, we have to be committed, certainly, to improving labour relations in Alberta, particularly in the health care sector. We can do this, Madam Speaker, by simply asking the health care professionals, whether they're in an association or whether they're in a union, to come to the table. By the table I mean between negotiation periods. I believe these organizations should have representatives on the respective health authorities. If we want to talk and we're sincere about improving labour relations in this province, that is one direction we should go until we agree to elect the regional health authorities.

I am becoming suspicious, like a lot of Albertans, because I don't think the government is too anxious to allow the directors of our regional health authorities to be elected. I read earlier that some hon. members were concerned about political instability not only if members of the general public were elected to the regional health authorities but if, say, Heather Smith, who is an excellent union leader, were to be, for instance, on the board of directors of the Capital health authority. This would be a step in the right direction, as I said, if we're sincere about balanced labour relations, because that way there could be a continuous dialogue between the employer and the employee.

Now, in the past we have discussed this in this very Assembly, and a former minister of labour, when the labour department was a stand-alone department, agreed with me and thought that, yes, there should be a continuous dialogue between the health care professionals, their unions, and the regional health authorities.

If we're to have a balance between labour's interest in gaining respect from this government, one of the first things that I would suggest be done is a complete inquiry into the whole process of appointments to the labour board. The hon. member did not speak of that when he proposed his motion in respect to collective bargaining agreements, but they're the ones that essentially administer the act, and there are individuals from other jurisdictions who question, unfortunately, the integrity of our system.

Now, I believe we should implement legislation to restore to health care workers the right to strike. Yes, we should have an essential services act in this province. The current system is not working. Every time there is a series of negotiations, the system is held hostage. We hear each side explain their case to the public, and essentially it becomes a public relations exercise. If we were to allow, before the negotiations start, both sides to sit down and determine any number of health care professionals that are going to remain behind or alternate if there is, unfortunately, a picket line, they can alternate so that there are always personnel on hand. This occurs now. Contrary to what a lot of people say, this goes on now, but it would be set up so that the system is never held hostage. Hon. members are astonished at this, but you have to look at the record. You have to look at this record of removing the rights of workers. It is simply not working.

We need also to have a look at the use of replacement workers in job actions and this practice.

MR. SMITH: You support that, eh, Hugh?

MR. MacDONALD: I hear the former minister of labour, the current Minister of Gaming, talking about his support for this.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I would like all hon. members across the way to examine the record. I know it's a sensitive record. I know that whenever we look at the three-year plan or we look at the five-year plan or we look at the business plan or we look at a key performance measure, we always take out, Mr. Speaker, the parts that we don't like. In this case I am looking at the Canada Safeway strike. It simply drove the time lost to job action or to strikes way up in this province, so it was removed. We put a star beside that strike and had it removed. That does not tell the true picture, because that was a divisive strike. It still is divisive. It's almost three years. In fact, it is three years, and people still talk about it. It left an impression on all Albertans. We think we have stable labour relations, but in reality we do not.

I have to caution all members because the hon. member initially, whenever he spoke, said that it's a time for change, but I don't believe it's a step in the right direction. A Time for Change may be a slogan that's used by certain political parties at certain times, but we must have a long look at the Labour Relations Code in this province. If we are to look at solutions that are coming from Arizona in this interest-based bargaining, negotiating on merit, spirit of compromise, this sounds very much like what the unions of convenience, which are growing at a rapid rate in this province, are espousing. I can only ask: who's the dialogue going to be between? Is it going to be between selected, as the government likes to call them, stakeholders, or is it going to include all members of the labour relations community? I would welcome more information on this interest-based bargaining. If I'm wrong, fine, but my first view of this is that it is simply another word for right to work in disguise. We hear the slogan from the Reform Party, A Time for Change – the hon. Member for Wainwright uses this – and that party advocates right-to-work legislation. So I want to caution all hon. members of this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, to be very, very careful.

We're talking about teachers. We're talking about health care professionals. We're talking about Albertans who are working in this province, and they're proud to work under a collective agreement. You ask each and every one of them; they will tell you that it improves not only their standard of living but also their family's. There has to be an equal share for all Albertans, and I'm not convinced that any sort of debate on right-to-work legislation or interest-based bargaining, or whatever you want to call it, is in the interests of Alberta employees or their employers.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to note that in 10 years the disposable income of Albertans has risen very little. My hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre is listening, and she may be interested to know that in the last 10 years the gap in wages between men and women has opened up so there's a 26 percent wage gap between female Albertans employed in the workforce and male Albertans employed in the workforce.

If the hon. member would – oh, my time is up. I'm very disappointed, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. SEVERTSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to speak on Motion 513, sponsored by my hon. colleague from Wainwright. I want to thank him for bringing forth a motion on collective bargaining in Alberta.

It's a type of a motion, Mr. Speaker, that I . . .

THE SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business for today has concluded.

head: Transmittal of Estimates

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have received a message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order!

THE SPEAKER: The Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2001, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

head: Government Motions

23. Dr. West moved:

Be it resolved that the message of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2000-01 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith, be referred to the Committee of Supply.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to my understanding of Standing Order 18(1), this would be a debatable motion, and there are a couple of observations I wanted to make straight off. You know, we used to talk about the current leader of the Alliance as the king of supplementary supply. He's not here now, but we find that he has a successor. It strikes me as of more than passing interest that in a province where the provincial government loves to tout itself as a champion of business, in a province where the government likes to portray itself as having some expertise in terms of the market economy and having some particular kind of insight and sensitivity to how we're going to create those high-skill, high-paid jobs for the young people in this province, we see that every supplementary supply time we have a process that I would think would be fairly embarrassing.

What this really tells us is that we have some serious structural flaws in the process, Mr. Speaker, by which we deal with budgets in this province. We look at provinces like Ontario that have identified this being of particular issue. What the province of Ontario has been able to do – I think they stole a page from the late Laurence Decore, who back in 1993 had proposed a new process for dealing with provincial budgets. It was in a document called Mandate for Change, and but for four percentage points in the popular vote the current Provincial Treasurer might be sitting over here having a critic position and asking the kinds of questions that I am.

One of the things that Mr. Decore had proposed was to develop a much stronger kind of budget scrutiny, a much stronger budget review process. Instead of having the government gnomes in the Treasury Department and I guess however many Conservative MLAs who are involved in that internal secret, invisible process sit around and decide what numbers go in what column, the proposal of Mr. Decore would be to open that up and not start in March, when the estimates are brought in, but in fact start far, far earlier. The Ontario budget model in fact picks up many of the elements of what I call the Decore proposal. You have a powerful all-party committee that picks a number of departments every year. They meet with the ministers of those specified departments long, long in advance.

In Alberta terms, if we were to translate it into the Alberta budget process, this all-party budget committee might start meeting in June, July, or August because that, we know, is when the provincial government starts assembling the disparate pieces that are then welded into some form of a budget process.

It's interesting to me that Mike Harris, who seems to parrot a lot of the things that are said in Alberta and imitate a lot of the things that are done here, has shown a degree of leadership which frankly has gone far beyond what his soul brother and counterpart government in Alberta has chosen to do. Why is it that Ontario has said that there's a better way of dealing with the budget, a way that gets . . . [interjection] I'm talking, Mr. Speaker, about a process. Now, I've got lots to say about the numbers, but, you know, the Provincial Treasurer ought to turn off his pocket calculator because I'm not going to start getting to the numbers yet. I'm still trying to talk about a philosophical approach to the way we deal with budgets in this province so that we don't get in what I regard as the embarrassing situation of having supplementary estimates come forward with the kinds of numbers that we see being put in front of us here in this particular question then.

I know all members are going to want to take their chairs to hear the further comments that I'm going to make in the next few minutes. Usually, Mr. Speaker, people have been around a little longer before they're walking out on my speeches.

The comment I think I was trying to make is this: we do need a process, a process whereby we have all-party scrutiny, aggressive all-party scrutiny, and a chance to be able to reflect the priorities, the needs, and the issues for all Albertans, not just those Albertans who happen to be represented by the much smaller number of Conservative MLAs that happen to be on whatever standing policy committee or budget review process the government has internally. The fact that year after year after year you see a billion dollar plus supplementary supply tells me that something is not working right. Is it because I don't want money for new schools? Of course not. Is it because I don't want to see additional money going to health care? Of course not. But I do want to see this as some kind of a program.

You know, we've put substantial amounts of additional money into health care in the last couple of years, substantial amounts. If the Minister of Health and Wellness had the floor right now, he'd be telling us and talking about that huge amount, those big infusions of cash. But you know something? [interjection] Well, that minister will have his time, as will the Government House Leader.

The point is that the wait lists don't seem to be getting any shorter in the city of Calgary. The classroom sizes in Calgary-Buffalo aren't shrinking. The number of university professors who choose not to stay at the University of Calgary because the pay rate there puts that university at about number 22 out of the largest 25 universities in Canada – it's not making a difference there.

So we see government talking about additional money going in, but where the rubber hits the road in terms of impact on my constituents and your constituents – we don't see big changes. I believe that's because what we have is money being thrown into areas where there are identified problems but not in thoughtful, strategic ways, not in a form that leads to identifiable, positive outcomes.

We'll be able to come back and talk about some of the specifics, but I'd just say: is government to have us believe that everything in supplementary estimates could not have generally been foreseen? Is the Provincial Treasurer about to tell us that there were just all kinds of emerging things that happened in the five or six months since last spring that there was no way of identifying in advance?

Well, I think that's nonsense. It may be that from time to time we have forest fires, so that requires some additional money, or we may have flooding in Medicine Hat, and that requires some additional assistance. But, Mr. Speaker, that's not what this is about. I mean, if you look through this fat package of supplementary estimates – and we'll be able to do that when that gets referred to Committee of Supply – what you see for the most part are things that we knew last spring required attention and required additional funding.

So the question then becomes: why is it that it takes the government six months longer than the rest of us in this Assembly to find out the shortfalls that require urgent attention? The Provincial Treasurer presumably has a heck of a lot more people giving him advice than this MLA does, and I know there are some real smart people in that department. I know that they talk to people in the cities of this province, they talk to people in the regional health authorities, they talk to people on the school boards, and they talk to people in the postsecondary institutions. So the needs and the demand for additional resources have been known for a long time, and they were certainly known when we wrestled with the budget estimates in February and March and into April of 2000.

I want to welcome the two new members of the Assembly. Some of us are on our way out, and I hope that the new members in the Assembly recognize that this is an area that requires enormous attention, and I hope they're more persuasive than I've been able to be in terms of opening up the budget process. You know, people come here from municipal councils, and they can't understand this arcane process that we use to develop a budget, because in those cases many of the municipalities do actually a far more open and transparent kind of budget scrutiny than we see in this Assembly. I mean, we could do so much better. We could just have a vastly better process.

Why wouldn't we do what Ontario has done and have that sort of powerful all-party committee which identifies five or six departments every year, that spends months doing an in-depth kind of analysis to see if we could get it right? Well, let me suggest some of the reasons why maybe government doesn't wish to do it. The first one is that once you pull away the cloak of secrecy, it means that people start looking over your shoulder and they start telling you at an early stage which budget allocation choices are good and which ones they don't agree with. That may mean that you have to more often, more frequently, defend the choices you make, and you have to defend why we can't find money to reduce classroom size but we can find money for a lot of other things.

You know, we have a province where our royalty structure and the kinds of moneys that the province receives, that the people of Alberta receive from the sale of our natural resources is significantly lower than rates charged in each of the other big natural resource provinces in Canada. If you look at Quebec and Ontario and British Columbia and you look at the kinds of rates that exist in terms of royalties, whether we're talking about lumber, whether we're talking about oil and gas, or whether we're talking about mining activity, what you find is a significant difference. And what you'd like to think . . . [interjection] Well, this was my authority, my former colleague Mike Percy, now dean of the business school at the University of Alberta and a fellow with very strong academic credentials. He had coauthored an article with another fellow at the university that identified the gap that exists between what other provinces charge and recover for their citizens compared to what happens in Alberta.

Well, that would be one of the issues that might be dealt with if we had a more open kind of budget process. There are lots of benefits that accrue, and I'm not going to have time to go through and identify all of them.

I just look forward to an explanation from each one of the ministers and from the Provincial Treasurer in terms of why the items in this supplementary supply request could not have been identified and could not have been foreseen. So when I ask questions and when some of my colleagues ask questions, I hope we're not going to be met with nonsensical calls that we don't support money for this, we don't support money for that, or we're opposed to additional funding. Well, that misses the point completely, Provincial Treasurer, through the Speaker. That misses the point completely. What we're trying to do is develop a more responsive process, a more transparent process, a more thorough process than anything we have now, and in an ideal Legislature we would not see these gargantuan supplementary estimate requests. It's as simple as that.

I know that some of my colleagues have observations they want to make as well to the process before we get into dealing with some of the detail, but I just think we have to get off this bandwagon. It's one of the problems with huge, powerful, majority governments. You know, they can always sort of clean up their mistakes after the fact because they have the numbers. But why wouldn't we aspire to a higher standard, members? Why wouldn't we try more diligently to do a better job of the budget analysis process?

I'll say to the new members that you may find, as I have, that one of the most frustrating things is when it comes time to deal with the budget. What you will find is that you have maybe seniors in your constituency and you have university students. What will happen is that in order to save time - and this government wants to turn the lights off in this building as quickly as they can - we split into two committees. If you're lucky enough to be in the committee upstairs, you're able to review the budget dealing with seniors, and if you're downstairs, you can only deal with the budget for postsecondary students. If you happen to have constituents who have issues in both of those budget areas, then you miss out. You can ask your questions down here, and you can tear upstairs. You can wave your hand furiously and try and get the chairman's attention, but tough; too late. There are nine other people already on the list, and they're going to turn the lights off upstairs at 10 o'clock, so you're not going to have time to be able to ask those questions there.

That's what's happening in this province, and we have seen the steady erosion of parliamentary democracy, the progressive diminution of the role and importance of individual MLAs. And probably the most eloquent testament to the dismantling of democracy in this province, if you'll forgive the hyperbole, is right here in the 2000-2001 supplementary estimates, general revenue fund. This is exhibit A. This is what tells us what's wrong with our budgetary process.

Mr. Speaker, those are the points I wanted to make, and I'm looking forward to further debate on this very important motion. Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on Government Motion 23 dealing with supplementary estimates.

I notice that the government has already committed close to a billion dollars over the budget that it presented just six, seven months ago. It's money that has been committed by the government without prior scrutiny by this Legislature. The supplementary budget estimates come to us as an afterthought, as something that has already happened, and the Legislature has absolutely no capacity to change either the numbers or the commitments that the government has made. This speaks to the low value that this government places on the debates that occur in this Legislature, and it's a sad commentary on a democratic body and the value that's associated with it by the government in power.

The billion dollar extra expenditures that are presented to us in this booklet show clearly that either the government didn't know what it was doing when it was presenting the budget to us or that it didn't listen to its civil service, who are expensive. We've been paying them quite a bit of money. I trust they're doing their job, but the decisions have to be made by the cabinet, by the Treasurer, and by the elected members on the government side.

Why there was no recognition in the budget that there will be upcoming expenditures - I can see some justification for spending more money in the area of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, as the drought perhaps could not have been predicted at the right time. But I also find that Infrastructure has got $419 million extra. Why was there a problem with anticipating and with government in fact making commitments to spending this money when it was preparing the spring budget? There's no explanation for it. The money has been allocated. Similarly, in Health and Wellness we have known in this province for many years the chronic underfunding of health care . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Government House Leader, you're rising on something?

Point of Order Relevance

MR. HANCOCK: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. Beauchesne 459, Relevance and Repetition. The motion is a motion to refer the estimates to Committee of Supply, and while the debate is interesting, it's more appropriate in Committee of Supply to talk about whether the numbers could have been brought forward earlier or those sorts of things. Really what we're debating is whether the estimates should be referred to Committee of Supply, which I think would call for a rather narrower discussion of the concept. Either the estimates should go to Committee of Supply or they shouldn't go to Committee of Supply for some reason. It's not that here's a whole bunch of estimates that are on the table now that shouldn't have been on the table or that the government shouldn't be spending or that the numbers are wrong.

Those are all issues to be debated in the Committee of Supply and when the appropriation act is brought forward. The motion before us is: should the estimates be referred to Committee of Supply? I think relevant discussion should be on that point.

THE SPEAKER: The point put forward by the hon. Government House Leader is certainly a valid one. This is a recommittal motion. The chair has been listening very attentively to the leader of the ND opposition, and I'm sure that before too long we'll reach that fork in the road where he'll tie it all together to make the argument to refer it to committee.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to come to the point. I'm glad that the hon. House leader did pose the statement in the form of a question. I'm trying to decide whether to support this motion or not, and I beg your permission to be able to state my reasons and make my observations before I come to a conclusion. I'm sure the hon. House leader on the government side doesn't want to stop debate in this Assembly or observations which are legitimate, which is our right to be able to make in the Assembly in representing our constituents. I'm not attributing to him any motives that he's trying to stop the debate, but it would appear that the consequence of what he is saying is to stop me from saying what my constituents certainly want me to be able to convey to my colleagues in the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, to return to my observations, to speak on the motion whether to refer it. I think we have to, of course, look at what the motion is about. In order to talk about the motion, whether it should be referred, you have to ask yourself: what is the motion about? The substance of the motion is something that we are able to speak to, and that's why I was referring to some of these numbers here. So if I may proceed.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, interestingly, Health and Wellness certainly won't have the ability, as I said, during this Assembly to tell the government that its expenditures are being misspent because they're already spent. It comes to us after the fact. So why we are talking about the motion is that we've got to be able to say: well, look, what's this money about? They're contracting out. There's lots of money being spent on getting some of the medical procedures done at costs which are much higher than we would incur if we were to keep these surgeries and these medical procedures inside the public system. Clearly, it seems to me, the $293 million of the $500 million being spent now in supplementary estimates on health is designed to I guess repair some damage that the government might have concluded it sustained during the Bill 11 debate.

So I'm just raising these issues. We have, I think, two days to debate this, and we'll certainly go into this in more detail at that time. We'll have the opportunity at that time to ask more specific and detailed questions, but general observations I'm sure are in order.

This scale of overexpenditure appearing here in the form of supplementary estimates just three or four months before the next provincial election again suggests that it's not something that the government couldn't predict when it did. That is to say that these estimates are designed to achieve certain other political ends, and I guess that might be why the hon. House leader didn't want me to go into any details on why it is that I have some questions about whether or not I will support this motion.

I notice that again education is completely absent. If the government was really interested in fixing things, it knows that our students at postsecondary institutions are protesting about the ever increasing tuition fees and the debt burden as a result of this government's policies on this. There's no money in here. There's no afterthought. There's no attempt to be sensitive to the concerns and the demands that students are making, to put some money in here so the universities and colleges could be given some more money so that they could then go to the students and say, "Well, we are freezing tuition fees, and indeed we are ready to roll them back." If this government sees the significance of young Albertans being able to go to university and college and prepare for the 21st century, prepare for the information economy, prepare for entering a world in which we will be competitive and will make a statement that we as a society are behind our young people who are willing to take part in this competitive economy as they prepare through our schools and universities, there's no such indication here.

Similarly, there's lots of lip service paid to how we need to protect our children, how we need to support them when they're young, how important it is to spend money on them, that every $1 spent is returned seven times over if we spend that money now. Is there any indication here that there's any attempt to spend any money to reduce class size? No, none at all. It really is not only what's there but also what's not there that speaks to how this government thinks about these crucial issues and concerns that Albertans have about their future, about their children's future, and about their institutions.

So in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker, to be handed this document this afternoon, to say that all you have to do is say yes to it – we have spent the money. You go back to your constituents and tell them, "Well, I couldn't do anything about this." If they say, "Well, government is wasting money; what have you done for us?" what am I supposed to say when I go back to them? That I can't do anything? There is no opportunity for us to speak to these estimates at a point where we could convince this government to change its mind, so it's a fait accompli. It's simply an exercise in nothing.

We had the Legislature receive this bill with $1 billion of Alberta citizens' money to spend, but we can't do anything to alter the government's mind on this, and that's what I find regrettable in this situation. So I certainly will be participating in the debate that will take place over the next two days and make comments in more detail, but I do want to say on behalf of my constituents that this is not the right way to spend public money. Public funds must be spent in a way that's accountable. They must be committed so that the commitment itself is accountable to the Legislature and does not let us spend this money and then come back and say: "What can we do? We need the money now."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would rise to reinforce the point I was trying to make on a point of order, that the motion before us right now is to commit the estimates to Committee of Supply, and all of the talk that we've heard from the leader of the third party is presumably to suggest that we should not commit this to Committee of Supply. Committee of Supply is exactly where we examine the estimates in detail, exactly where he has the opportunity to raise questions and concerns of his constituents, exactly the place to examine in detail and to ask questions, exactly the place to get the information he's talking about. He's delaying the democratic process, delaying our opportunity to get to that process by debating whether they should be even committed.

Presumably, if he doesn't wish to send the estimates to Committee of Supply, he thinks we should pass them without that examination. Well, the members on this side of the House don't want to do that. The members on this side of the House want to get to Committee of Supply so that we can examine in detail whether these appropriations are appropriate, whether these estimates are the right way to spend the money, and to justify the need for this additional amount of Albertans' money being spent on these important priorities. So I fail to see why the members opposite would debate a motion to send this to the committee where the very examination they called for is allowed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have been listening with interest to the debate this afternoon on Government Motion 23 as proposed to the Assembly by the hon. Dr. West.

Now, we have to look, Mr. Speaker, at the whole process, and we have to look at the whole process as to how this quiet, comfortably coloured document has arrived on this hon. member's desk. I could look at the blue-gray colour – some people would describe it as gun-barrel blue – and this document is to have an impact on all Albertans.

What part of the process have the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar been denied? Many people – many people – come to the constituency office to discuss important issues of public policy. Some individuals even surprise me with their attendance at the constituency office, but others come and say to me: Mr. MacDonald, what's going on with all this sugar-daddy politics? This, Mr. Speaker, is what they're referring to: sugar-daddy politics. There's an election coming up, Mr. MacDonald, and you have no influence on where this money's being spent. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo talked about this. He came up with sound suggestions, and I feel that before this is presented to me by the pages, I should as an elected representative have some input into this.

I have constituents who are very concerned about the state of the health care system. I see in this document there are many government MLAs – I counted them before, and it almost looked like a make-work project – a lot of them in there. I believe there are six, Mr. Speaker, six. I cannot understand why I cannot have as other jurisdictions have – as a member of the loyal opposition – some input into this. As I said earlier, constituents have observations on health care. They have observations on schools. But do we get a chance? No, we do not. We do not get a chance to discuss this. It is just presented to us. It's a take it or leave it procedure.

Now, I could leave this Assembly in 25 minutes, and I could say to my constituents – and they would not believe this – the government has essentially brought forward a motion to spend a million dollars to improve the office of the Auditor General. Incredibly, Mr. Speaker, in my years in this Assembly I have seen four copies of the Auditor General's report. It is becoming one of my favourite reads. I like Truman Capote, but I'm beginning to like Peter Valentine a lot as well, because he is exposing what this government is mismanaging. I see that in here Peter Valentine is getting another million dollars. I see Agriculture, Food and Rural Development: $100 million.

If I was to explain to the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar that in the last hour this afternoon this document was presented to the Assembly – we are going to spend a lot of money. We only have to think, I believe, of the pop group the Barenaked Ladies and If I Had a Million Dollars, their hit song. It seems that is the only song the government is listening to, and they're practising sugar-daddy politics and throwing money at every problem. They're not thinking about this.

I'm looking forward to Committee of the Whole, because as I review this document, I see lots and lots of questions that I can ask on behalf of the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar. I can leave this Assembly and can say that there was a 39 percent increase in the last four years in government spending. We look at the total here that's close to a billion dollars in unscheduled spending that is going to allow for even more mismanagement by this government. I cannot understand why so many hon. members of this Assembly do not at this time want to have any further discussion on the proposed motion by the hon. Dr. West, because this is taxpayers' money, and we cannot have a complacent accounting system.

With those words, Mr. Speaker, I shall cede the floor to another colleague. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't going to participate in this discussion this afternoon, but it appears that members of the opposition are bound and determined that we're going to have a debate on this debatable motion, so I thought I might as well participate.

I listened with interest to the last speaker. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the individual's comments, I'm not sure whether he's for or against the motion before us, because he was urging the members to participate in the discussion on supplementary estimates, and I thought that's what this motion was all about. This motion is a request of the Assembly to approve the referral of all of the things that the member was talking about to Committee of the Whole, to Committee of Supply so that we can get into that very detailed discussion that the hon. member was talking about. So, frankly, it would seem to me, although I may have misunderstood him, that he was in fact speaking in favour of the motion that's before us at this point in time. That being the case, I can't understand why, if the government members are in favour of the motion and obviously the opposition members are in favour of the motion, why we don't just get on with it, pass the motion, and then get into Committee of Supply and have this wonderful discussion that everyone is so looking forward to.

Mr. Speaker, sometimes I don't understand a lot of the intricate rules of this House, but this one is a very specific, very easy rule to understand. We have before us a very simple motion. The Provincial Treasurer has tabled supplementary estimates. He's introduced a motion that says: members of this House, there are some details, there's some discussion that needs to take place on these supplementary estimates. I propose that we send them off to Committee of Supply so that we can have that detailed discussion, and I ask that the members concur in this recommendation. Very simple, very straightforward. I think that we've had more than enough discussion on the issue, and, as I said, it appears that the opposition members are even now arguing in favour of the motion, so I would like to suggest that we get on with it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate what the Member for Medicine Hat said, but I think my issue, more than the money that has gone to areas that are, I would say, for the most part needed, is with the process, that needs to be changed and addressed. This is one of the opportunities to speak to that.

As the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona said, it comes here, and we're to vote on it. At no point is there a chance for us to be a part of that decision-making process unless I send a letter to the Minister of Learning and the Minister of Infrastructure and say: "Queen Street school is more than 55 years old. It's in desperate need of repair. It's been ignored forever. When are you going to act on it?" That's a letter, but that's hardly part of the decision-making process that goes . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: That's the school board's job.

MRS. SOETAERT: I'm glad the member brought it up. Queen Street school was priority 1 for the Parkland school board. They got priority 11 or 7 from Infrastructure. So don't say: talk to the school board. They've made it a priority, but it didn't happen.

Now, one might say that it's political posturing at certain points and places all over the province. If that's the truth, why aren't priorities considered when municipalities send them in and when school boards send them in? That should be the way it's done. An all-party committee could look at the budget requests and needs across this province. We have seen some areas get, maybe, overpasses where they didn't need them as desperately as other areas.

Of course this will eventually pass into committee. These moneys are spent. We have to pass it through this process. In fact, if we didn't have the supplementary budget, we probably wouldn't have a fall session in this Legislature, because it seems government members don't even want to be here. Fortunately, we at least have to be here for supplementary estimates. So we'll get to, oh, probably an hour's discussion on each one of these. That's a maybe.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Where are your members? Where are your members?

MRS. SOETAERT: Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that at some times I may have to speak for some members on that side. In fact, in this budget maybe an overpass at Brooks has been needed. Has that member had a chance to put in their priorities? They need an overpass at highway 38 and highway 1. People are dying there. [interjection] Sorry; highway 36. Thank you for the correction. I'm glad you know where it is.

Highway 36 and highway 1: a dangerous intersection that the people of Brooks have been asking for. Did their member put this into the budget somewhere? Did you have input to this? Did you have a chance? He says: absolutely. I don't see it here.

So how do we deal with priorities? How about that Catholic school in Brooks? A crowded school. In fact, try passing someone on the stairwell in that school. It's dangerous. Two people can't fit on that stairwell going from one level of the school to the other. They need a new facility. They're terribly overcrowded. They've been offered the building next to them, which is an older county building and which is second choice at best. They really need a new school, a proper facility, but they'll have to make do with a second choice, where the kids won't have a track, won't have a gymnasium for who knows how long. So I'm wondering: did the Member for Strathmore-Brooks have input into this? It's not in here. How about the water quality in Gleichen? It's not in here. Those issues haven't been addressed. Certainly Queen Street school hasn't been addressed.

Mr. Speaker, I feel a level of frustration, and obviously priorities from different members' constituencies are not being addressed. So how does this process work? Do you look at: gee whiz; which MLA might be in political trouble? Do we build a school there? Is that what we do? Is that how it happens? [interjection] They say: you know better than that, Colleen. I'd like it to be proven. Regretfully, I don't see that happening.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo talked about an all-party budget committee. That's what this Legislature should look at, but when they have a strong majority government, they don't think it's worth listening to the opposition. But you know what? That's then a sign of not caring. I know I shouldn't use the word arrogant, but that would symbolize that to me. So I would venture to say that we're missing the boat on this process.

If it isn't sugar-daddy politics, if it isn't vote-buying, then I think this process should be cleared up and changed, because it certainly looks that way. One person said to me, in fact in Brooks: "You know my 300 bucks that I'm getting back from the government? I'd much rather see my money go to that overpass, because I know someone who died there. If that intersection were safer, there would be fewer deaths." You know what? I know that's an issue in many places across our province.

So how do the priorities get to the table? Municipalities have sent in their priorities, and they get ignored. School boards have sent in their priorities, and they get ignored. Obviously MLAs send in their priorities. Do they get ignored? How does that happen? Where do the dollars get spent in that supplementary budget? Is it about vote-buying? Because if it's not about vote-buying, then this process isn't good. This process encourages the idea that we vote buy.

MR. DICKSON: It encourages sloppy administration.

MRS. SOETAERT: It encourages sloppy administration. In fact, it's interesting. I'm hoping, when we get to the Infrastructure debates, that we will have a list of what was actually done. I'm hoping that the minister will provide that for us, because it says: so much on school buildings. Which ones and where? Were they the school boards' priorities? That's what I'd like to see.

Quite honestly, it shouldn't be done this way. These priorities should be set long in advance, and they should be fairly and equitably done across the province. You shouldn't buy votes with pavements and school buildings and hospitals. What we should do is govern well enough to provide for the needs of all Albertans, not based on where you live or who you vote for but on the needs of a community. You know what? It could happen under a different budget process. It absolutely could. I don't see that happening here. I just don't.

Mr. Speaker, I think I've covered most of the things I wanted to mention. I also wanted to mention that, interestingly enough, I haven't seen in Justice – does the minister not realize that we're very desperately short of police across this province? I've heard complaints from municipalities across the province that they have the same amount of police force now they had in 1986, and their population has doubled. That isn't being addressed. So I would suggest that that issue isn't even addressed in this, and it should well be.

I will probably support it going to committee because the money is spent. So in order to at least ask questions and hopefully get some answers – I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, I don't like this process. You know, when you're in here, those are the rules for now. We can always work at changing those rules, and that's why I'm speaking to this motion. I'd like to see the rules changed on the way we go about this whole budget process. I would urge all members to have a rethink about this process, because I will have to hold my nose to vote to support to move this into supply because the whole process is wrong.

I will support the spending of most of this if it's clearly explained to me. Some ministers are very good about explaining where the money has gone and how the priorities were set up. From some, on the other hand, you don't get that kind of explanation. I would suggest that members on both sides of the House should have a little problem with that. I would suggest that they all should have a look at that.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the time to speak to the motion, and hopefully the budget process will change. It certainly will under the next Liberal government. So with those comments, I thank you for the opportunity to speak to this motion.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad for these few minutes I'm going to get to speak to Motion 23, which is to refer the 2000-01 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund and all matters connected therewith to the Committee of Supply. Interestingly, there's actually been some debate this afternoon, some input from both sides, which is a good thing to happen in this Assembly and one that I'm pleased to participate in and encourage.

In the four years that I've been here, every year there's a supplementary supply budget that's bigger than the one before. I think this is a question of process, and that's why I'm taking this opportunity to stand up and debate during this referral motion, Government Motion 23. This seems to be the only opportunity that I'm going to get to be able to talk about the process that this government chooses to use in how they have input. My colleague from Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert talked a lot about who actually gets input on this. Where does the information go? How do we know that it was considered or not considered? It is very much a closed process, and I don't think that's appropriate when we're talking about the resources, the tax money, even the oil and gas royalties. They belong to all Albertans, and I think this needs to be a more open process so that they understand and frankly could have some input into how that money is being designated.

I believe that supplementary supply should be unexpected, unforeseen – let me put it that way – expenses. I heard my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo allude to this before as well. It would certainly make sense to me if there were a supplementary supply on costs incurred for fighting forest fires that could not be anticipated in advance. Now, we know that every summer there are going to be forest fires. There should be some money in the budget to cover a reasonable expenditure, an average expenditure for forest fires. But if it was an extraordinary year, then I would expect to see a supplementary supply estimate for that.

MRS. SOETAERT: Or a drought.

MS BLAKEMAN: A drought is another suggestion. Or floods or any other kind of calamity that was unforeseen. But it stretches believability to think that money going into health care, given the crisis that's developed there, is unforeseen. It stretches credulity to believe that there isn't money in infrastructure given the state of our roads, our buildings, our schools, highways, provincial buildings. I mean, come on; of course there's supposed to be money spent there. Why is it now unforeseen money?

Now, probably what's really going on here is that it's bonanza money. Other people have talked about sugar-daddy money and vote-buying money and all of that sort of thing. I'm not saying that I'm not pleased to see that there is additional money coming into this government's coffers in this fiscal year. Of course I'm just as delighted as everyone else to see it. But the point is: why was it so unforeseen? Why did we have the previous Provincial Treasurer being the king of supplementary supply? Why would he want to earn that title?

I come from the nonprofit sector, and we're expected to produce one-, three-, and five-year budgets in the nonprofit sector. There's a clear expectation that the figures you come up with are based on what you expect to spend based on what your projects are – and that requires planning ahead – and also what you expect to bring in from revenue. Again, you've got to be as close to the mark as you can be. But that just doesn't seem to apply in this case. So what the government enforces on every nonprofit that applies to it for funding, it doesn't apply to itself. This seems to be: well, whatever; what the heck. It's a totally different set of rules. I won't go into what percentage point the previous Treasurer was out by, but it was something astronomical.

So why are we debating this motion at this time? Because I don't have any other time to talk about the process. When we're actually debating supplementary supply, I'm supposed to be talking about the numbers. I'm supposed to be questioning whether it was good value spent here, if it should have been spent there, or why wasn't it spent on something else? I don't have another opportunity to question the way this government develops its budget and particularly the way this government develops its supplementary supply estimates. I don't get another opportunity to do that.

You know, this afternoon the Speaker in his usual wise way ruled on a Standing Order 30 and a Standing Order 40 in which there was an attempt to debate electrical deregulation in this province. People were frustrated. This was the only chance we had. That's why we wanted to do it. Well, it's the same situation for us here today. What other instance do I get? As a member representing 38,000 people in Edmonton-Centre, what other opportunity do I get to come forward and question this process, to say: where do I get input on this? You explain to me the choices you've made here and why you make them this way so I can explain them to the people that live in Edmonton-Centre and are asking me these questions. This is my opportunity to debate the whys and the wherefores and the nickels and the dimes, although in this case we'll soon be talking about the millions and the billions.

You know, there's a level of frustration from this government that I see over and over again whenever anyone wants to question the process, but do you know what? This is the place to question the process. This is what democracy is about. Democracy is cumbersome, sometimes it's noisy, and it's certainly time consuming. That's okay. That's what it's supposed to be to keep an even balance. We don't have an even balance. We don't have a give-and-take in this province right now. We have a government that manages to set a process that is behind closed doors.

AN HON. MEMBER: Smug.

MS BLAKEMAN: Smug. Thank you.

Now, they're supposedly wanting to increase the role of the private member: more for the private member to do, more input from the private member. Do you know what? Private members exist on both sides of the House, and what we have here is private members that are all assigned to committees for which they are paid additional remuneration as well, and they get to go behind closed doors and develop whatever these little processes are that the rest of us don't get to be involved in. Well, all of us were elected here. There should be respect for everyone being elected here, and all of us should be involved in that process.

You know, the Member for Calgary-Buffalo has raised over and over again in this House a more democratic, more legislatively honourable way to go about this process, and that is, frankly, by having a legislative committee, an all-party committee that starts to work on this budget from way back. But do you know what? All those questions that we have to raise by using motions like Motion 23 to get the discussion out there could have been dealt with in a committee in a much more informal way, but the time still has to be put in. So it either happens there or it happens here. Right now it's happening here.

MRS. SOETAERT: You've got two minutes.

MS BLAKEMAN: Good. I've still got two minutes. I have more points to make.

I think it's important that we do take the opportunity to question what's going on particularly around these supplementary supply budgets, which have now become the norm, a way of life with this government. I had an opportunity to attend a private members' conference this summer. I didn't want to go originally, but I'm really glad I did because it put me in touch with a number of other private members from other provinces across Canada. I learned a lot about how narrowly focused this Legislative Assembly is. I can see the Speaker getting ready to rise. Just a few more minutes. Okay; good.

When I talked to other private members from other provinces in Canada and from the federal government and from our three territories now, it really drove home for me how restricted this all is.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before adjourning the Assembly this afternoon, might I draw to your attention, please, in the members' gallery Mrs. Sharon Lougheed and Allison Lougheed. Allison is the daughter of the distinguished Member for Clover-Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, and Sharon is the wife.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, November 14, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/11/14

[The Speaker in the chair]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Government Motions

Referral of Supplementary Supply Estimates

23. Dr. West moved:

Be it resolved that the message of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2000-01 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith, be referred to the Committee of Supply.

[Debate adjourned November 14: Ms Blakeman speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to make a few comments about Motion 23 and the request in that motion to consider the supplementary estimates that are before us and then to move on with them to Committee of Supply.

When you look through Beauchesne, Beauchesne outlines the conditions under which supplementary estimates are to be presented, and the conditions there laid out are five. One is "for a further grant to an existing service, in addition to the sum already appropriated." So the intent is that a program has for some reason or other expanded or the moneys originally voted for were insufficient, and there's need for adjustment. One would hope, Mr. Speaker, that given the kind of assurance we've had from the government in terms of the development of the business plans and the kind of attention that has been supposedly devoted to the budgeting process, the instances of this first condition occurring would be rare, that with the kind of planning we're assured goes on, there would be few instances where the government had to come back to the Assembly or had to make additional expenditures because of not being able to plan adequately in the first place.

The second condition that Beauchesne lists is "for a new expenditure on behalf of a newly-enacted statute," and if you look through these supplementary estimates that are before us, I don't believe any of the requests that we see meet that condition. Now, I may be wrong, but from a cursory glance through them, I haven't seen that reason given for any of the supplementary estimates that we find before us.

Beauchesne 946(3) indicates that supplementary estimates are appropriate "to meet the cost created by an unexpected emergency," and I think that in at least one case the increase in money required for fire fighting in the province under the Department of Environment is a legitimate sum that comes before this Assembly for ratification. It is something that is very difficult to predict, and one would expect that there would be occasions when that kind of contingency arises and has to be accommodated in budgeting through supplementary requisitions. So the odd instances in the estimates where this happens, I think, are worthy of support and one can understand, and I'm sure that ratepayers would understand.

The fourth condition that Beauchesne puts on supplementary estimates is that they may be used "to transfer funds from one Vote to another." Again, given the kind of planning that we expect goes on through the business plans, one would expect that we wouldn't find those kinds of adjustments in the supplementary estimates before us this evening.

The fifth condition that Beauchesne lists for supplementary estimates is "to extend the purposes of a Vote."

The reasons for supplementary estimates are laid out fairly carefully in Beauchesne. They do give a fair amount of latitude, but in general you get the feeling in reading Beauchesne that they are there and designed to cover the unexpected and to cover unexpected housekeeping difficulties that arise during the budgeting year, Mr. Speaker, and not for major program expansion.

It's for that reason I find it quite incredible that, for instance, in Infrastructure we find a request for almost half a billion dollars, an extraordinary amount of money being asked for in terms of Infrastructure. When you read the reasons, the need seems to be more than justified. Who could argue against money for health care facilities? Who could argue against money for school facilities? But the government had that information when the budget was made up. This is a no-brainer. They didn't have to come with this estimate. They had audited school facilities across the province. They'd sent out an MLA committee across the province. They had been told that there was a backlog of $750 million worth of expenditures needed in the area. They ignored that advice at budget time and, lo and behold, came back with a supplementary estimate for $419,000.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that really tests the outline in Beauchesne for supplementary estimates and really makes a bit of a mockery of the budgeting process itself. What sense does it make for this Assembly to spend the amount of time that we do examining the budget at budget time to have sums of this amount excluded from those budgeting plans and then to appear at this time as a supplementary requisition? It just does not seem to make sense or to be prudent planning when you come this late in the game with this kind of request.

As we go through the estimates – and we will in the next couple of days – I think that will be repeated again and again. We're going to find money included in these estimates that should have been part of the regular budgeting process, and I think that the government in many instances is going to be hard pressed to explain why that money appears now as a supplementary estimate and wasn't part of the original budget.

I go back to Infrastructure again, because the way that has unfolded over the past number of months has been rather disconcerting. We've had a series of announcements. In the last year there have been $237 million in school infrastructure announcements alone, and the distribution of those amounts, I think, is open to question, not only the distribution but the priorities that were followed in allocating those amounts. I've heard from school jurisdictions across the province that their priorities have been ignored and that in some cases they're hard pressed to understand why they've received the money that they did and also hard pressed to explain why projects that they and their local communities have deemed very important have been ignored by the Department of Infrastructure. So there are problems in this particular area with the amounts and the distribution of those amounts.

For instance, of the $237 million announced, Edmonton Catholic schools and Edmonton public schools, which educate about 19 percent of the children in this province, received $6 million, or a little less than 3 percent of the moneys that were distributed. So one starts to look at this supplementary estimate with a bit of a jaundiced eye, raising some questions about whether it's good planning that has brought these estimates before us or if there aren't some other factors that are playing high in the government's mind that are responsible for the decisions that are being made.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, of course, we'll end up supporting the motion, because the money that is being put in place is money that we argued for at budget time and prior to budget time, is money that was required, and we're glad to see it here. But the bottom line is that it makes a mockery of the business plans and the kind of long-range planning that this government pretends to reflect in that budget they present to us in the spring. [interjection] I hear the minister from somewhere over there saying, "Not true," and I'll be delighted when he joins in debate and explains half a billion dollars worth of infrastructure money that they just neglected to include in budgets.

I think that with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude and look forward to the debate on the individual department budgets. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise to speak in favour of Motion 23, although I have a number of remarks before giving up the floor, having this opportunity to chide the government for their budget practices or lack thereof. Any government that has more spending in a supplementary budget in any particular area than they have in the original budget is doing something wrong somewhere.

Certainly it is difficult in this province that has to rely on indeterminate estimates of income to lay out a total and complete plan to decide what has to be spent in any one area, but it does not mean to say that the expenditures could not be expanded and could not be laid out properly so that all those that rely on public funding would know from whence it came, and it wouldn't be a big surprise to them that suddenly there's money available for infrastructure that is so sorely needed. There has been many a proposal to spread that income, which I'll get to a little later.

If you listen to the Auditor General year after year after year, he would much prefer that a budget be laid out in increments such that it could be easily understood by those of the public that are interested to find where the government intends to spend the income at various levels of income. That does not seem to be the case in this government. This government is a seat-of-the-pants expenditures government, and it's quite obvious. There's been more money spent in supplementary estimates . . . [interjections] There seems to be a great deal of chirping from a minister or two on the other side. If the other members are so willing to engage in debate, I wonder if perhaps they'd stand in their places and do so and defend this supplementary estimates package either in its entirety or even in part, but of course they will not do so, because chirping is so much easier to do from the sidelines as opposed to engaging in debate that they're not very good at.

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE SPEAKER: Please remember that the matter under discussion before the House now is a committal motion to put it before a committee. This is not a time to defend anybody's estimates. We haven't got to the point yet where the Assembly would even deal with them.

MR. WHITE: That's true, sir. The admonishment comes from both sides. Thank you, sir.

MR. WHITE: It is true that it matters little what the debate is if the chirping from the other side is unfocused, and of course it always is, because it's never on record. It matters little what they say, and they just interrupt debate.

A budget should be open for review and scrutiny by the public and should be understood to be a document that they can rely upon. Certainly last spring's budget could not be relied upon, and some X billions of dollars are readjusted in this supplementary estimate package, which will be more fully debated in detail in each element. Suffice to say that this is not a document that could and should be looked at with any great deal of joy by those who would like to know that a government is dealing with their funds in a competent manner. To spend as you go may do well if you are running a paper route, but this is a province of some note and distinction and deserves the consideration of some expenditures.

This government doesn't seem to believe that any amount of debate on any subject is worth while, notably the number of sitting days that we sit – actually, I think P.E.I. sits marginally less than the province of Alberta – to hear about the estimates. We double up on the estimates debate, which is in many cases hardly a debate in any event at all. The opposition or any members of the public are excluded from the decisions as they relate to individual expenditures. I wonder why the people of Alberta don't express themselves in the way of votes now and again and say: look; we'd like to have a little more information than this. But I suppose we will be doing that early next year to find out whether in fact they do want to know more or not.

The income in this province and its fluctuation from year to year is the point of difficulty, and this member certainly recognizes that and knows that it cannot be accurately predicted. But it can be predicted as to the various levels of expenditures that could move up with the income level, and certainly a better estimate could be made of the income if the government didn't lowball the income estimate, as it has done for the last six years.

Then when dealing with the income, it might be a little creative to share that income with the municipal levels of government and perhaps the school boards such that there would be some elasticity in all of their budgets and being able to budget and plan for some capital expenditures, perhaps, that might be on a wish list that each and every one of those levels of government is quite capable of preparing and debating in their own circles. One would think that might be an answer to deal with this stop-and-go budgeting that seems to be prevalent in this Legislature. Of course, there's one debate that would be good to have in a budget debate, not a supplementary budget debate but a full and open debate – if it had to be in a supplementary debate, so be it – and it is the rate at which the extraction of natural resources takes place in this province. The resources are finite, particularly the resources that relate to oil and gas and conventional and synthetic crude. Certainly there's a learning curve that members of the public could and would like to go through. After all, the Legislature is, in the government's own words, a mere steward of the resources, and the ownership rests with all Albertans.

Quite frankly, the debate is long overdue. It should in fact start in schools, in junior high schools and high schools, and should continue with the public, because the resource runs out at some point, and whether it runs out in the lifetime of those members that are here, in the lifetime of the children of those that are here or their children's children, it will run out. Some kind of planning and knowledge in that area by the owners of the resource – the knowledge base should be up there such that proper budgeting can take place so that there is something left over for them in their pursuit of life and happiness.

The other area that could and should be explored is the ramifications of further development of renewable resources. I'm thinking of a wide-ranging debate on the forestry industry and how the longevity of that business should be debated fully and to what extent tourism and ecotourism and the like can supplant some of that income and to the extent at which there should be a much longer horizon on the cropping of those resources. Currently, as members will know, management agreements on Crown land, owned by all the members present as well as all the members of the province of Alberta – it is their resource – are being managed but on a very short-term basis, when long-term considerations for the leaseholder should be in the works. Quite frankly, that debate does not occur in this Legislature. You'd think it would, because it is fundamental to the foundation of a budget, and it certainly isn't something that can be structured quickly. It has to be an ongoing debate such that all Albertans would understand.

There is, of course, the other consideration on income. As the income level of the general revenue fund through the various forms of royalties rises, the owners of that resource end up paying more for it. To explain that simply for natural gas, a year ago natural gas was at A rate, and with the advent of the Chicago price being applied to Alberta with the increased take-away capacity, or the capacity of taking the gas out of the province – without any debate we might end up with volumes on that, but that being said, at the rate at which that's going out, the income level is substantially higher. Of course, the price is substantially higher, too, so that the average citizen – while their government pocket is being filled up with all the extra revenue, their individual pocket is being depleted rapidly. There is no offsetting compensation there, and this member would think that it would only be reasonable that every time the price of a resource that is owned by the citizens of Alberta went up, then the price they paid for that resource through their rate would be commensurately reduced or at least held in check so that particularly those who are on fixed incomes don't end up lesser for the experience of owning a resource that has an increased value.

Likewise, it happens in pumped gasoline too. Every time the price of conventional crude goes up, the provincial coffers get filled to the brim, and the average soul out there gets told: oh, no, no; that's a good thing for you because your government is making money at it. Unfortunately, it hits the old pocketbook every time you have to put some money in that tank, particularly if you're living out of the cities, where you have to do a lot of driving just to live. I mean, it's a fact of life that one has to put money in the tank just to survive. That is a deterrent from being a good citizen of Alberta, when you cannot rely on your government to give back some of that money that they're putting in the provincial coffers at your expense.

Now, there are a number of areas on this that I could and should cover, but those are the ones that I wanted to cover most importantly now in supplementary estimates. It is simply not reasonable to come to the Legislature and in two days or less decide that the expenditures are in order simply by putting through a buffed blue book or – what colour do you call that? – a bad buffed book and describe it as good spending and is certainly not the way this member would like to see estimates and the expenditures in the province of Alberta. Certainly the citizenry should be able to count on a little better method of determining what expenditures are reasonable in a province of this magnitude without having to wait till the very last minute to figure out what it's going to be expended upon.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, the only other major comment and complaint one has is that these expenditures, while being presented in the Legislature, are being presented on an ad hoc basis throughout the calendar year and don't seem to take any form of measure and any forethought at all. It just seems to be governing by the seat of their pants and doing the best you can with the dollars that flow in at any moment and in the time that you can get a caucus meeting together in order to expend those funds.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the members for their time and leave some more time on this matter for others. Thank you, sir.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to respond to the committee motion we see before us this evening that will bring in, once again, more supplementary estimates by this particular government, a government that tries to, it apparently appears, outdo itself each time new supplementary estimates come in to see how much money they can spend in that particular manner.

Earlier this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I believe it was, the Member for Medicine Hat complaining that we were debating what is in fact a debatable motion in this House. He didn't think it was necessary to do so. In fact, it's very necessary to do so, and it would be frivolous and irresponsible on behalf of the Official Opposition if they did not seriously undertake their role as the watchdog of government in terms of watching what comes forward from this government, reporting it to the people of the province, and then responding back to the government in terms of the kinds of responses we get, and that is what we're doing this evening. If this government didn't try to rush through agendas in a fashion that gets them in and out of the Legislature as soon as possible, we would have much more opportunity to gather feedback from Albertans and be able to share that with the government. My understanding is that government doesn't necessarily want to hear that feedback because it isn't always positive, and it certainly isn't positive when we talk about supplementary estimates and that particular process.

Mr. Speaker, here we have a government who has, since my stay in this Assembly, which is more than seven years now, prided themselves on their ability to copy or model business models in terms of the way that they process information and the way they assemble their budgets and spend their money. They like to brag about that all the time, and we hear about it constantly, but in fact when you take the time to examine the processes, it isn't the case at all. What they've taken is an abridged form of business practices and manipulated them to a point where they can say that this is what they're doing, but they don't follow any best practices at all that I've been able to discern over these particular years.

In fact, I have paid close scrutiny to this because it is my area of expertise, Mr. Speaker. Long-term strategic planning, budgeting, management budgeting are areas that I do have some knowledge of. This government does not follow any of those processes and in that case are not responsible in the management practices that they do follow.

I would like to say that this is definitely something that has to be promoted by political agenda as opposed to expertise within government departments, because it is my experience that the government employees working in the various departments are very competent people. They certainly know how to benchmark, how to do strategic planning, how to meet budgetary line items, how to manage within the systems they have. They know best practices, and they honour those practices when they are allowed to do so, Mr. Speaker. So we have what should be an excellent business model that this government could follow in terms of estimates, revenue projections, and spending given the kind of competence there is available within the various departments. On one side we have that, and on the other side we have the political agenda that drives this government and at the final end those decision-makers who decide how the money will be spent, when it will be spent, and how it will be accounted for.

Well, there is a deep valley between these two thought processes and management practices, Mr. Speaker, because what the government actually does is not in fact a competent business model that they have the capabilities to perform by. You would think that they would be able to bridge that big valley and be able to marry their political agenda with a best practices kind of mandate and go forward in a very responsible manner, but they don't.

It does take real vision to be able to do that, and we don't see that kind of vision from this government. We don't see a five-year, 10-year, 15-year, 20-year kind of profile from this government where we are looking forward to a future that really benefits Albertans. What we see here is the kind of planning that gets us from election to election. This is gerrymandering of a type that is absolutely appalling to witness every year. You take the money and you adapt it to the kind of manner that you wish, which meets a political agenda, Mr. Speaker, rather than management practices. It isn't the Liberal way in this province. That's for sure. This is the Tory way that we have seen certainly in practice for all of the years that I have been in this Legislature. What that means is that several times a year we get supplementary estimates in here that are asking for huge amounts of dollars, millions and millions, billions over the course of the years, that we see being asked for in a practice that rewards and punishes groups in areas in this province.

Why would they do that, Mr. Speaker? Well, we can easily see why if you take a look at it from a political agenda perspective. People know that they can be rewarded. Areas know that they will be rewarded for a variety of activities, for the performance of certain kinds of criteria, and that they will not be rewarded if they don't follow through with the kind of performance that the government is expecting. We hear that from municipalities all the time. I was out not that long ago a couple of hundred miles west of Edmonton visiting a few towns, who said that they would never again elect an opposition member because the flow of funds stopped to their counties and to their municipalities.

Well, those are grave concerns that these areas have. Why is that? Because what we see happening here – and we see it in this supplementary estimates when you take a look at it on a page-by-page basis. If you take a look at Infrastructure, if you take a look at some of the other areas that we see in here, Health and Wellness particularly, we see spending coming forward that easily could have been incorporated into any kind of minimal long-term strategic planning, and it didn't happen. You can't tell me that overnight you know that you need another road or another bridge or another hospital or another form of infrastructure, Mr. Speaker. Those needs don't occur overnight. They don't occur in six months. They build up over a series of years, and if you're doing strategic planning in any kind of responsible fashion, you know that, you work it into your budget, and you project the need, not like what happens here where the money just gets dumped to address whatever particular pressure point, to use the Premier's phrase, that happens to pop up in that particular quarter of that particular year.

MRS. NELSON: The forest fires are kind of important.

MS CARLSON: Well, one of the hon. members is talking about forest fires, Mr. Speaker, and I was waiting to address that particular issue until we get to the Environment estimates, because while on occasion you will have the requirement that we see in Beauchesne, which says, "to meet the cost created by an unexpected emergency," which can be forest fires, for the most part the dollars spent on forest fires this year could have been projected and could have been planned for.

AN HON. MEMBER: That is not correct.

MS CARLSON: That is correct, Mr. Speaker, and I would direct that particular minister's attention to the estimates where they talk about the dollars that were spent. This particular time I believe it was "to support forestry companies' efforts to improve forest management practices related to fire risk."

Now, fire risk didn't occur overnight. Companies have known for years and have been requesting and wanting to have improved forest management practices. Many of them have undertaken improved management practices on their own. It's commendable that the government would support . . . [interjection]

AN HON. MEMBER: Why don't you join in the debate? [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, hon. minister. The tradition is that we have one person, one hon. member, speaking at a time. Right now we've got two or three engaging in lively debate back and forth, and neither of those two or more individuals was recognized. Hon. Minister of Gaming, we only have one member recognized, and that is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

While I'm on my feet, just if you could engage the chair as opposed to addressing several of the ministers who are inappropriately making comments, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try not to allow them to further provoke me, although I have to tell you that it's a little tough.

MS CARLSON: Just to settle the fire question, which seems to be a highly contentious issue – and I understand that the former Minister of Environment is particularly touchy about this because he happened to be the minister at the time. I am not saying that you can 100 percent predict what the forest costs are going to be in any given year in terms of fires. However, Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is that the department does have models they follow that give them a range within the forest fires, and certainly in bad years, like we've had for the past couple of years, they are going to have to come back in here, undoubtedly, and ask for supplementary moneys. I have no problem with that. What I have problems with on the fire side is that they didn't do enough planning to understand that the best thing they could be doing in this province is helping forest companies' efforts to improve forest management practices and budget for that.

Why do they have to come back for more money for that? We're talking a lot of money here. We're talking $2 million that they've asked particularly for that. That exactly can be budgeted. There's no way you can tell me that it's impossible to project what they might have put in the budget in terms of that area, a very necessary area. Perhaps if they had spent those dollars in previous years instead of gutting this department, like they have in the past, we wouldn't be having all of the kinds of problems we have right now with fires. So that is something that I think could be addressed.

In addition to that, when we take a particular look at forest dollars this year, they talk about $1.2 million “to fund higher than budgeted cost of improvements made to forest airstrips used in fire fighting.” Well, why are we waiting to upgrade those strips until we’re in the middle of a fire? Once again, Mr. Speaker, a little forethought, a little strategic planning on the government’s side and we could be addressing those issues.

Now, you and I both know that when you’re spending infrastructure dollars, it’s a lot more to spend when you have to react on the spot than when you can step back from the situation and do some planning. Weather conditions, availability of suppliers and supplies, all of those conditions create additional costs when you have to spend the money right now rather than being able to plan for it.

So what I’m saying is: why isn’t this government responsible in that kind of manner? When they talk about following best practices, as industries do, then why aren’t they following best practices themselves, Mr. Speaker? Those are exactly the kinds of reasons why we need to be able to debate the introduction of supplementary estimates into this Assembly, because this government mismanages the dollars of this province, and it is appalling that it happens. People need to know that it happens, and people need to know that when they come in with a thick book like this asking for more dollars at this time of the year, what they’re doing, I say and many people in this province say, is buying votes. That is not a responsible way to govern.

Almost to the dollar everything that they’re asking for in these supplementary estimates could have been forecasted and budgeted for properly. If they were in fact any kind of a company, particularly a publicly traded company, the whole front bench would have been fired this year, Mr. Speaker, because nobody in private industry would allow the kinds of cost overruns that we’re seeing in here or the lack of strategic planning. [interjections]

You know, Mr. Speaker, I hear more chirping from the other side from people who are refusing to engage in debate in a legitimate fashion in this House, but I’m happy to respond to those requests for information. They want to know: what about revenues?

Well, in fact, they have windfall revenues. This government is hardly responsible for windfall revenues. They cannot take the credit for what drops right out of the sky into their lap, no matter how much they try to. So what should they be doing with that money? I say they should be following their own legislation, which would be demanding them to pay down the debt, because that’s the legislation they brought in. Rather than coming back for supplementary estimates like this, put it all back. Put your money where your mouth was. That’s not what this government does, and it’s once again irresponsible on their side not to do that.

Another thing that we have talked about time and time again in this Legislature when we talk about supplementary estimates is bringing in adjusted budgets every quarter. Industry does that. If industry sees windfall profits falling in their lap, they adjust their budgets. Does this government do that? No, because they want to have these windfall dollars that they can dump back on areas within the province that people are complaining about or where they created a need where there was not one before because of chronic underspending or improper spending in the past.

So, Mr. Speaker, if we had a government that was responsible in those kinds of areas, we would have no need for supplementary estimates like this. There was a time in this province when supplementary estimates were one page long, where really, truly the only dollars they came back for were emergency kinds of situations like floods or fires or what we’re seeing here, some extra dollars going to farm income programs. Those were the only kinds of dollars that were asked for. What we have now are new budgets being brought in, budgets that haven’t been debated in this Legislature, budgets that do not give any kind of thought to the long-term kind of planning that is sustainable in this province.

These are election-to-election spending dollars that we’re seeing here. This does not do the people of the province any good at all. It may ensure that this government continues to get re-elected, because people know how they have to play the game to get what they want in this province, but it isn’t responsible government. It isn’t a government that works for the best efforts of the people.

We are very lucky in this province that we have experienced several years now of windfall profits from oil and gas, but those days will be over in another 25 or 30 years. What are our children going to do then? If this government continues or if any government follows the kinds of practices that we’ve seen occur in these years in terms of budgeting, this is going to be a very sorry province.

You know, some of the ministers don’t care because they say they’re going to be dead. No one could complain about that. But in fact many of us will have children and grandchildren who will still be around, and I care about what happens to this province. This is a great place to live. I want to ensure that it’s a great place for my children and my grandchildren to live in and that they want to stay in this province because the jobs are here, that the environment is conducive to them living good, happy lives here. It’s not going to happen if we see governments continue to mismanage in the way that this one has, and supplementary estimates is the prime example of how this mismanagement occurs.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that those ministers that we’ve heard from will get up and defend their actions at this particular point in time. They certainly had a lot to say to what I have said so far. Let them respond. Let them respond on the record in a manner where we can send their speeches out to people who are concerned about how this government spends their dollars and when this government spends their dollars and see what they have to say.

I want the hon. Treasurer to stand up in this Legislature and tell us exactly why he doesn’t bring in adjusted budgets when the revenues of this province change. Why doesn’t he do that? That is a best practice done by every successful company in this country and in fact around the globe in this particular environment that we’re working in. They bring in adjusted budgets all the time as conditions change. We have conditions changing dramatically in this province from month to month, week to week, sometimes day to day, but this government just absolutely ignores that so that they can build up these huge slush funds and dump money where they want to when they want to do it.

You know, the day is going to come when the people of this province understand completely what it is that they are doing. They won’t tolerate it anymore, because it isn’t a responsible way to spend the dollars that we see. Let’s see the Treasurer stand up and defend that particular provision. Let’s see the rest of these ministers, who have been so critical of what I’ve had to say here tonight, stand up and defend the reasons why they need to be spending millions and millions of dollars at this particular point in time. How is it that they don’t have the vision to be able to plan what they need just for 12 months? Let’s not talk about three years or five years or 10 or 15; let’s talk about the next 12 months. How is it that they cannot manage their own budgets to project what it is they’re going to need for those months? Give us the reasons for this. Let us examine them. Let us see where the shortfalls are. What we’re going to find in some of those areas, Mr. Speaker, is that where there has been chronic underfunding, we are now seeing increased pressure.

Particularly, I would like people to take a look at child welfare in that particular instance. Even in the descriptions that they put here in Children's Services, we see absolutely critical problems occurring in this particular department. Why? Because in their rush to the bottom, to be able to bring in huge surpluses, they haven't properly funded areas that are critical to the future of this province. A critical area, Mr. Speaker, I would put to you, is children: the lives of children, their ability to cope, to grow, to be educated, to be the best that they can be. We have a responsibility to those children.

When we take a look at this page and the list of reasons why this government is saying they need supplementary estimates in this particular department, we know that this government has forgotten about children and has refused to make them a priority. What we are seeing here are areas of funding that are particularly required because this department is in crisis, Mr. Speaker. I certainly intend to take my full 20 minutes, when that particular program comes up, to speak about the issues that I've seen in my constituency and that we're seeing falling through for children in that particular area.

This is one department where this government seriously needs to sit down and think through what it is they are trying to accomplish, what it is they need to accomplish, and how they're going to fund that. We have critical problems in this particular area. You know, if you don't maintain a building properly, it'll eventually crumble and deteriorate. Well, when you don't maintain children properly, we pay a much higher price, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Your 20 minutes are up, hon. member.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this evening to speak to Motion 23 as well, the supplementary estimates. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods had outlined, in Beauchesne there are a number of conditions that we must follow in dealing with supplementary estimates.

Now then, as well, when I look at this – and I see that today the government announced that our surplus is in excess of $5 billion, yet here we are, just after a budget was presented in this House six or seven months ago, asking for $1 billion extra in supplementary estimates – something tells me that something here is wrong. Have there been extraordinary circumstances that have arisen since that budget? I think not. Could it be that the plan that was presented to us back in the spring session was not very good? I think that is a distinct possibility.

I also want to say that it is no secret to any of us that an election is fast approaching in the spring. We have a tremendous mess on our hands with electricity and the price of electricity in this province, and this government has to do something to look good to the people. So in many areas here I realize, as do all my colleagues, that money is required, but it would seem to me that after that announcement today, Mr. Speaker, that we do have a surplus in excess of $5 billion, our problem in this province right now is certainly not in the generation of wealth but in the distribution of that wealth and making sure that wealth gets down to the levels where it affects everyday Albertans, not only everyday Albertans but Albertans that need it most.

So what we have here is a very embarrassing situation. I looked at the city of Edmonton when they were doing their budgeting for the 2001 World Championships. They were $2 million over budget in one particular area. There was a public outcry. But here we are in this rich province, where we are coming back asking for 1 billion extra dollars, and there's no public outcry. All I can say is that the people of this province certainly cannot be aware of the shoddy budgeting practices that occur. I think that we do have to have more input from more people here. If this was a onetime event, Mr. Speaker, it would also allow us to say that this is an abnormality, but this is something that happens each and every year when we get to this time of the year.

When we look at the supplementary estimates, yes, we do need new schools in this province, we do need health care, and we have to shorten waiting lists. We do have upkeep on our schools, but it's also a little strange to me that we have public school boards in this province and part of their job is to set a priority list of what they need in the way of new schools, which schools have to have maintenance and whatever. Yet far too often, when moneys are allotted to these school boards, those priority lists are thrown out the window, so we get schools being built where there isn't a priority.

I think that we do have to look very, very seriously here at this whole process and say: let's give Albertans a very clear picture of where their dollars are being spent. It certainly isn't too hard. I know that this government here is in touch with many focus groups. They have direct dealings with our regional health authorities. I know that the constituents of Edmonton-Glengarry certainly don't have any problem in phoning me or stopping me in the street or sending me e-mails or whatever and giving me their views on these types of things.

I also think that when we are looking at the supplementary estimates and we do require more money in certain areas, then it should be imperative that we see those dollars going where we are going to be able to deliver a much better service to Albertans. I look at the case of us having hospital wards now that cannot be opened because we don't have enough trained nurses in this province. We see a situation where we've had many teachers leave the province because of opportunity in the United States, and I say: why are we not making those opportunities for our people here in this rich province? Why are we not stopping the brain drain by keeping our best educated, by keeping our talented people here at home?

I had the opportunity to talk to an oncologist from the Cross cancer clinic, and he indicated that for him to work here in Alberta, he took a $40,000 cut in pay. He could make $40,000 more if he was working in British Columbia, $40,000 more if he was working in Saskatchewan. So here we are with a $5 billion surplus here, and we can't even afford to pay oncologists over at the Cross cancer clinic the same rate of pay that they would get if they were in Saskatchewan or if they were in British Columbia.

So we have a three-year business plan, yet are the goals of those business plans being met? Obviously not. When we don't get it right here, what do we do? Well, we come back for supplementary estimates. It reminds me a little bit of the Speaker's golf tournament. There, Mr. Speaker, you can buy mulligans. So if you hit your golf shot and you don't hit a good golf shot, well, you can take out your mulligan and you can try it again. That's exactly what this process seems to be. When you don't get it right the first time, well, we'll try again. We'll throw more money at it. So the process is flawed. Do these people need the money? Do these different departments need the money? They certainly do, yes.

In looking at this and looking at all of those conditions that are set out here under Supplementary Estimates in Beauchesne, section 946, I would have to say that many of these five conditions are not met here today.

Certainly we can see a need for supplementary estimates for those issues that we can't predict, and it seems that the favourite term tonight is fire fighting. Certainly some years are going to be worse than others, and some fires are going to be bigger than others, but we certainly know that the trend with our weather pattern over the last few years has been for drier and drier summers and certainly conditions that would enhance the number of forest fires and the expanse of those fires. So, yes, let's make that budgetary request in the spring to cover those conditions. If we do need more, yes, but let's not lowball that figure so that we have to be back in here time after time asking for this amount of money. Certainly these funds are justified for such things as health care, for education, but the whole idea of us coming back here for a billion dollars in supplementary estimates makes a whole mockery of this budgetary process.

So with those few words, Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude my remarks on Motion 23. I would have to say that I do support this because there are many of these departments that do require money. Hopefully this money will get down to the service level where each and every Albertan can see an improvement in their life.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for letting us stand up and talk about this, but you know, it just seems like a short few months ago that we were in here and a short few months ago that we were talking about the normal budget. I think it's leading up to an election coming up pretty soon.

When we look at the number of missed performance measures that this province has actually had over the last few months, this government has missed 62 performance targets in 1999-2000, bringing an accumulated total of missed government performance measures up to 264 in just four years.

If we go through this, under health: Albertans' overall rating of health care systems as good or excellent was 63 percent, below the target of 75 percent established by this government. Now we see money going in. You know, it sounds good, the money going back in, but actually without a plan, Mr. Speaker, it does bring a lot to mind.

As the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods talked about, what is the purpose of supplementary estimates? "Supplementary Estimates may be presented . . . for a further grant to an existing service, in addition to the sum already appropriated."

Well, when the past Treasurer came out with the budget this spring – why are we underestimating budgets year after year and coming back in the fall to bring these forward? In some cases the only reason we ever come back into fall session in this province is to come for the supplementary, because the bills that were left on the table sure weren't big enough that they were going to force this government to come back in.

We look at what has happened since 1993 in the dismantling of health, education, transportation, infrastructure, and especially human infrastructure in this great province we have. It goes back to: why do we actually have supplementary estimates?

Another one was "for a new expenditure on behalf of a newly-enacted statute." Well, have we had very many of those? Or have we just had ones that have been put on the back shelf, like all the studies we have and all the different symposiums we have that just go back on the shelves and collect dust until you want to bring one or two items out and talk about them and make it sound good to all Albertans that you've actually done a study?

Another one is "to transfer funds from one Vote to another" – well, that's probably the truest extent of the whole thing – and "to extend the purposes of a Vote."

Mr. Speaker, going back to the failed performances in health, ease of access to health services was 64 percent below the targeted 75 percent estimated by this government. The percentage of Albertans reporting failures to receive needed care was 10 percent above the targeted 7 percent established by this government. Under education, high school completion rates within six years of entering grade 9 remained at 70 percent below the targeted 75 percent estimated by this government. Parents' satisfaction that students are learning what they need to know declined by 77 percent in 1999-2000. Parents' satisfaction with the value for money spent on the ECS to 12 schools in their communities was 71 percent in 1999-2000, below the 80 percent target estimated by this government. We've also already heard about Children's Services, and there are many others.

Yesterday, as the AAMDC convention started, they came out with a slogan, and the Minister of Municipal Affairs actually started off in his speech yesterday, Facing the Future, talking about everybody tightening their belts over the last few years and looking at the future. Well, talking to many members coming in from all over the province, infrastructure is still the largest. It doesn't matter how much you put in there. The big push on today was the fact of how many dollars went back in, and now we're going into dollars and cents going out to all the 420 municipalities throughout Alberta. Well, with that, it sounds great. You know, we talk about telephones coming in in the 1900s; now we're getting fibre going out all over the province in the 21st century.

The actual dollars that are going out are very needed. The timing of it stinks. The planning could have been over the last three years, after the debt was actually taken care of, but the thing is, it's coming out now. Now we're talking about all the money going out in supplementary estimates. Why are we in here? The $8 million that was announced by the Treasurer this morning is about all that's left that you can actually spend at this present time leading up to the next election. To supplement, if you don't regain more money by more oil royalties and so on, is something you have to maybe – you know, are we going to gain more money? Are we going spend the full $8 million over the next few months?

Mr. Speaker, I feel that education, agriculture, the infrastructure, and municipal transfers and all that are fine and dandy, but the fact is that we have to work with the three levels of government. We have to look at what we brought out as a bill this past spring as revenue sharing. Instead of bashing it and bashing what the feds did or didn't do, the fact is that we've got three levels of government that should be working together. I hope that as the years come, we're not looking at supplementaries with this amount of dollars coming forward every time we come back in the fall session.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Government Motion 23 carried]

24. Mr. Hancock moved on behalf of Dr. West:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 58(6) the number of days that Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2000-01 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund shall be two days.

[Government Motion 24 carried]

Adjournment of Session

25. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns to recess the current sitting of the Fourth Session of the 24th Legislature, it shall stand adjourned until a time and date as determined by the Speaker after consultation with the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, this is the normal procedural motion, which we introduce very early on the first opportunity in each session, which provides for the normal process of arriving at an adjournment when the business of the session has been achieved. We will probably be subjected to the usual discussion and argument from members opposite that we're coming into session and already wanting to adjourn it. That, of course, is balderdash. It's not the case. This is simply a procedural motion. We have every full intent of spending the full amount of time allotted to Committee of Supply and to passing the appropriation bills and to dealing with the remaining legislative agenda of the government in this fall session.

So it would be remiss of me if I did as I have on other occasions: just simply introduce the motion and then let others say that we were trying to stop a session before it was started. That, Mr. Speaker, is not the case. This is simply a procedural motion which allows us to do an orderly conduct of government business in the Legislature, and when the business agenda is completed and the members have been satisfied with their opportunity to speak to bills, we can adjourn the session at that time.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, methinks the Government House Leader protests too much. It's interesting he should be so defensive in introducing this motion. If indeed the motion were as innocuous as the hon. minister would have us believe, then . . . [interjection]

Mr. Speaker, this is, in fact, a serious motion. When we saw the government introduce electrical deregulation and costs started to soar for consumers, I'm sure one of the things that crossed the minds of many Albertans was: ah, another excuse for our provincial government to turn the lights off in the Legislative Assembly sooner than ever, yet another excuse to abridge the legislative session. [interjections]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, we have a Government House Leader who suggested that perhaps we not debate this too long, yet we have a whole bunch of people on the front bench who are prepared to debate. It remains a perplexity.

In any event, we still have the convention that goes that only one member is standing and speaking at a time, and the only person that has been recognized by the chair at this moment is the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, it may just be that it's tougher for a lame duck legislator to gain any respect, but I'm going to try harder. I'm absolutely going to try harder in the few moments I have left.

It seems to me again that if this government focused half as much energy on trying to deal with the top-of-mind issues for our constituents, wherever they may live in this province, as they do with closing the doors, winding up the session, and hightailing it back to their diverse constituency offices, we would have a vastly more responsive scheme of government, Mr. Speaker. It strikes me that if this Legislature were to sit for a little longer than two or three weeks, you know what the bonus would be for the 3 million men, women, and children that live in this province? What it would mean is that in this Legislature we would be dealing not with the unimaginative list of bills that the Government House Leader has proffered on the Order Paper; we would be dealing with the top-of-mind issues of the people that live in this province. What might those be? Well, I can only reflect what from the perspective of downtown Calgary seems to be important, and other members can supplement.

I particularly welcome new members in the Assembly who may wish to follow up and perhaps talk about some of the issues that may be particularly important to their constituency. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View I can see is poised because he's going to join this debate as well. I look forward with great anticipation to what those members are going to add to the debate.

If we were in fact to sit not a matter of a few days and a couple of weeks but a long enough time, here's the bonus to Albertans. Number one, we'd be able to address an absolutely abysmal shortage of mental health beds in this province. We'd be able to identify why it is that the Calgary regional health authority has been talking about somewhere in the order of 30 to 40 new mental health beds and they've been talking about that for over a year. Do you know what's happened? Because we can't get nurses to staff those beds, we're not opening the beds that the CRHA had promised six months ago, four months ago, two months ago. People come into my constituency office in downtown Calgary, and the last was a fellow who ended up assaulting an individual specifically because it was the only way he could access a psychiatric bed in a city hospital in the city of Calgary. That's what's happening.

You know, I think the government's plan is that we're going to go through two or three weeks in this Assembly and they don't want to talk about those things. We'll deal with miscellaneous statutes, we'll tinker a little bit with the justice system, and we'll try to fix up some of the problems in the child prostitution bill, but you're not going to see a response to those top-of-mind issues.

What other kinds of issues? Well, I went to get my teeth cleaned the other week, and the dental hygienist and I were busy chatting. You know what she talked about? She has two children, one in grade 8 and one in grade 10, and she's taken both those children out of public education, out of public schools. This was of interest to me because she lives in the same community I do, and I know those schools to be excellent schools. My daughter was a product of those, and I was involved in the parent advisory councils. I queried: "Why would you take your children out? These are excellent schools; lots of parental involvement." You know what her response to me was, Mr. Speaker? She said: "My children are not getting the quality of education that my husband and I think is important when there are 34 children in one classroom and 28 in the other. I don't think that's a learning experience. I've taken my children out, and they're currently in a private school."

You know, I would be interested to hear the comments of the Minister of Learning if we had a chance to be able to address this in this all too brief legislative session. I'd like to hear what his solution is, because what's happening – and I find this continually – is that we have more and more parents voting with their feet for an alternative to the public education system. The reason is because they feel there are too many pressures, too few resources in the public education system, and they do what all parents do. We all are motivated to advantage our children, philosophy aside. I mean, I don't blame parents for seeking to advantage their children if they're able to put their children in an alternative or a private school, but I certainly fault the people responsible for public education for creating that situation.

I remember being in a debate with Ted Byfield at a forum with a bunch of independent school principals, not what you might think would be a crowd naturally sympathetic to somebody promoting public education. We spent some time talking. They were saying that they have huge enrollments; they have waiting lists for their private schools. We went around and we polled most of the principals who were there. You know, what they said in most cases is that parents are coming to seek out a private school because of their frustration at classroom sizes and impaired access. Whether it's speech pathologists, language specialists, behavioural specialists, they can't find a lot of those resources in the public system. You, Mr. Speaker, with a long history in public education, know better than anybody how important it is to be able to make sure that system is able to deal with that wide variety of needs. The Minister of Learning, I think, knows that. Why aren't we talking about that in this fall legislative session?

You know, the SPEAK group, Support Public Education – Act for Kids, held a meeting in Calgary last week at Central memorial high school, and I had a chance to go and listen to parents from I'd say probably 30, 35 different school councils scattered throughout the city, all four quadrants. They came, and they made presentations. I don't think there were any members of the government caucus there. There may have been. I didn't see any. I don't know whether there was anybody there from the Department of Learning listening to those parents. But you know what they talked about? As parent after parent got up, they talked about their frustration with a public education system that doesn't meet their needs, and they talked about the disconnect.

We have a Minister of Innovation and Science that travels around the province. I mean, he's clearly found religion. He speaks with a passion.

MR. SMITH: He found it before he got elected.

MR. DICKSON: It's a metaphor, Mr. Minister.

He speaks with a passion about innovation and science, and that is wonderful, and it is exciting to see, and I love to see that kind of enthusiasm. But when he talks about this information age and the glorious opportunity that's in front of Albertans, the disconnect is that we're not doing the job in K to 12. We're not doing the job in basic education to be able to train those young people, to be able to provide them with the kinds of supports to be able to realize that rosy, exciting dream that the Minister of Innovation and Science paints for us. I want that dream to materialize. I think all of us want that dream to materialize, but we're not getting the job done in ECS to grade 12.

We still have an abysmal situation with ESL instruction in the city of Calgary. We still have a high school dropout rate for ESL students which is in excess of 60 percent, and that's not acceptable to me. I don't think it's acceptable to the Minister of Learning. Should we not be talking about that, and is this not the forum and the time to do it?

Mr. Speaker, the University of Calgary is supposed to be one of the foremost learning institutions in the country. It's something we're all very proud of in Calgary, but what continues to happen is that we are not competitive in terms of the salaries we pay our professors. The University of Calgary has gone from – I think it used to be about 23rd of the top 25 universities in Canada in terms of staff salaries. I stand to be corrected by the Minister of Learning if he disagrees. My understanding is that some additional money has gone in. We've now inched our way up, so I think we're now about 20th at the University of Calgary. Well, Mr. Minister, in my respectful opinion and, I suggest, in the opinion of many Calgarians it's not good enough. That's the sort of thing we should be talking about, and where else do we do it? In what more appropriate place do we do it than this forum, and we do it here in November or December of 2000.

If we were sitting longer, one of the things we might talk about is Rotary House. This is at the Kerby Centre. This is a unique shelter. I suspect some ministers have visited this facility. Maybe the Minister of Community Development has been there. This is a facility for seniors who have been abused, and since it opened on June 1, 1999, there have been 76 seniors that have been able to seek shelter in this place away from places where they were being abused. They have a funding crunch now. They have a serious funding crunch. [interjection] Well, maybe it's been resolved by the intervention of the Minister of Community Development. If that's the case, I thank him. But the last time I spoke to the folks at the Kerby Centre, there was a shortage of funds.

VLTs. The Minister of Gaming is with us tonight, and you know, we have so many questions we could put to this minister that in itself could occupy two weeks. Six thousand machines in a province that were never approved, never sanctioned, never asked for by Albertans, brought in by our government and the current Provincial Treasurer, who was interested in generating some – well, for whatever reason he brought them in. We've got 6,000 machines, and you know what my constituents would like to debate? Not raising the limit as the Minister of Gaming had suggested a couple of months ago . . .

MR. SMITH: I never suggested that. No, I didn't.

MR. DICKSON: Well, inaccurately reported in the media then in terms of speculating on an increase in the 6,000 machine limit.

You know, I think most Albertans and most Calgarians – in that so-called referendum a couple of years ago the question was: do they go, or do they stay? What was missing was the question that I put on my www.garydickson.ab.ca web site. We gave people an option there. You know what they told us, Mr. Speaker, about that? What they told us was in fact so prophetic that I can't put my finger on it right at the moment, but I want you to know that I'm going to get that, and I'm going to table it like I have all the other web site question responses.

AN HON. MEMBER: You've tabled half the world already.

MR. DICKSON: Well, I want to share it. People in Calgary-Buffalo are animated, and they're engaged in debate. They deserve to have their views reflected in this Assembly, and I'm trying hard to do that.

MR. SMITH: It'll be better next April.

MR. DICKSON: Well, your hope may be that the next MLA for Calgary-Buffalo may be a little quieter.

AN HON. MEMBER: It's going to be a cop. It'll be a cop.

MR. DICKSON: Well, we'll see about that.

Electrical deregulation. You know, Don Getty got beat up and tossed out of office because he cost Albertans over $1.2 billion in failed, misguided, stupid adventures in terms of MagCan, trying to build a magnesium plant in High River, NovAtel, and the list goes on and on.

This minister of natural resources said yes to a power auction where we took an asset valued by a professional independent at over $4 billion and participated in an auction, and we got a little more than $1 billion. And instead of doing what he had the power to do, which was say: no, unacceptable, I will not preside over kissing off, passing off over $2 billion in taxpayer value; I'm not going to just let that go up into the ether – he didn't do that. Do you know what he said? Because he had to shore up a government's misguided, mismanaged electrical deregulation system, he said: we will accept the bids.

Let's realize what's happened here. We have taken $2 billion in assets in this province, and they have gone up in smoke. This government thinks that by giving the citizens of this province $20 a month off their electricity bills for one year – that doesn't help 70 percent of my constituents who are tenants, by the way – by giving that kind of refund and by giving a couple of $150 cheques, people will forgive and forget. Mr. Speaker, wrong. Wrong because Albertans are not that foolish. They're not that short-sighted. They're a darn sight smarter, I'd like to think, than the people that designed this electrical deregulation system.

I want to be able to talk about that. My constituents want that discussed, and I suspect there are some people in Calgary, whether in Calgary-North or in Calgary-Foothills – there are constituents who also have concerns, and they want to see those things expressed, and this is the place to do it.

We haven't even got to the flat tax yet. You know, I think we need to give Mr. Day a DNA test. The putative father of the flat tax in this province is denying paternity. The man who was here to vote once for closure on the flat tax and the second time to jam through the flat tax bill has now gone to Ottawa, and it's like he never heard of it before. He wants nothing to do with the flat tax. It was good enough for Albertans, but apparently it's not good enough in terms of the next step in trying to sell this to Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pretty concerned about that. My constituents are pretty concerned. Most of my constituents fall in that middle-income range, and those are the people who want to demand some accountability from these ministers opposite. How is that going to happen?

I can see that there has to be some supporting information here. At www.garydickson.ab.ca over three weeks we had 12,712 hits, and this is what they said. Sixty-two percent felt that Alberta should freeze the deregulation process until January 1, 2002, and take steps to better protect the consumer. Thirty-eight percent of those people wanted to return to the regulated electrical utility system. How many out of 12,712 wanted to proceed with deregulation of electrical power? Zero.

Now, it is fair to say . . . [interjection] The Minister of Justice, always on the bit, immediately realizes I have no idea that those 12,712 people actually reside in Calgary-Buffalo, and it's true. I have found out that there is a prolific writing professor at the University of Arkansas with the same name as this member, and there are probably people visiting my site thinking they're going to find out something about archeology.

MR. SMITH: Well, they are.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, you can't keep up with the Minister of Gaming when he's on a roll, and he's hot tonight.

Mr. Speaker, when I asked my constituents about Bill 18, I had 2,013 hits over three weeks. Fifty-nine percent, or 1,187, said that they supported a progressive tax system with high-income earners paying at a higher rate. Forty-one percent, 825 people, supported a flat tax system with taxpayers paying the same rate.

[Mr. Herard in the chair]

There are so many good questions here. I asked people about what they thought of HRDC and the Alberta version, which is the Department of Government Services. You know, we have the Minister of Government Services here. With all this focus on Jane Stewart what we didn't realize is that right here in the front row in this Chamber we have a minister who is collating personal information on eight different government departments.

Ah, it's gone so quickly. I'll leave it to others to carry on.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was interested in the comments by the Government House Leader when he introduced Motion 25 and indicated that this is a housekeeping motion and one that appears at this time during the proceedings at least twice a year. That's true, but that in no way, I think, makes unnecessary or unneeded comments about that motion because of the context, the short period that has been allotted for this session, calling it as late in the fall as it has been called and running up against the holiday season. So whether we like it or not, there is a limit on the debate time, and that's unfortunate because I think there are things going on in the province that won't be addressed during this session and that need to be addressed.

My colleague from Calgary-Buffalo has talked about one that is first and foremost on many constituents' minds, and that's energy deregulation. No matter how the problem is explained to people, they still feel that the increased power costs they are facing are a direct result, first, of government's inaction over five years in creating a climate of uncertainty in the market and that it's going to be a long time – I think the Premier said earlier today that it would be at least three years – before there could be more power on-line. Constituents are holding the government directly responsible for it. The attempt to have an emergency debate on it today that failed I think was unfortunate. Certainly there are opportunities in question period to raise the issue, but the kind of thorough discussion, wide-ranging discussion that's needed on that particular matter is not scheduled to happen unless it happens as it's dragged into debates on other issues. So energy deregulation I think is one reason not to limit this session and not to be looking at adjournment.

I think that if you look at schools – I've held a couple of town hall meetings where parents with children with special needs came to express their concerns. They're having great difficulty. They're having difficulty accessing the kind of speech pathology services they need. They're having difficulty accessing the occupational therapy they need. I guess the underlying problem that they're having is accessing the programs that they need for their children. Nowhere do I see on the Order Paper or in the plans for this contracted session an opportunity where that problem can be addressed in but a cursory or perfunctory manner, and that's unfortunate, because it's a group of parents and their children who deserve better.

I think the climate that many seniors in this province find themselves in right now is more than unfortunate. I had a senior call me several weeks ago when she received the third notice of increases for power from her condominium association. Those increases had gone from $43 a month to $65 a month to $103.50 a month. Her comment at that time, Mr. Speaker, was: it's becoming a choice for me because I'm on a limited income; I either heat or I eat. In a province that is as rich as this province is at this particular moment in history, that seems to be almost tragic.

I think seniors are living in a climate of uncertainty brought on by costs in the health care system. I was working with a senior with a parent in a long-term care facility in another jurisdiction and trying to help her get her parents together. They were informed that it would take at least two years before there could be a transfer from one of the health regions to another. Those kinds of fears about health care, about long-term care, about costs rising out of their control I think are causing seniors to really be worried, and again I think it's an opportunity and an obligation of this Assembly to stand back and to address those kinds of problems. Again, given the kind of Order Paper that we have and the kind of business before us, I don't see that opportunity in a session that is scheduled to adjourn within two or three weeks.

I think the impact of school closures, the whole infrastructure concerns that are being faced by communities and school boards across the province and the way they're being resolved certainly should be open for debate. There'll be an opportunity to do that when we look at the budget estimates, fortunately, but not the in-depth kind of examination of that problem and the concerns about priorities for projects, how those priorities are arrived at, the concern about the impact of school closures on rural communities and on urban communities. The position that the Department of Infrastructure puts school boards and communities in I think is really very, very unfortunate, to say the least. Again, it's something that this Legislature should be addressing.

The previous speaker mentioned mental health, and there are huge, huge questions surrounding the provision of mental health care in this province. The kind of advice that has come from professionals in the field and the kind of direction that the province has taken seem to be exactly opposite. We have yet to have that kind of a debate in this Legislature: the whole notion of community-based treatment versus centralized treatment. The uses that are being made of the facility in Ponoka I think really have raised a number of questions in people's minds. Again, it's unfortunate that they won't be the subject of a wide-ranging debate, at least not in this session.

Health care, of course, still remains the number one concern in people's minds. In the door-knocking that I've done in the last number of weeks, the same question comes up time and time again, the same topic. Bill 11 has now become code for all of the ills of the health care system in this province. People are still concerned about the directions we're taking, the lack of care when care is needed, and the long waiting lists that they are faced with when they do indeed need care. So the health care debate rages in the province. Again, I don't see the opportunity in this short legislative session for those very serious questions to be addressed or plans by the government to do anything but what they have done so far, and that's to try to defend the indefensible.

The deferred maintenance at postsecondary institutions. The Auditor General has commented about the health and safety concerns, the risks that that deferred maintenance may possibly raise, and the need for a long-term plan to make sure that those risks are mitigated. Again, that won't be part and parcel of this session.

There is the whole Swan Hills fiasco and the details around the winding down or the continued operation of that plant. Again, the opportunities for public airing of those concerns are going to be limited in a short two-week or two-and-a-half-week session.

We have thousands of students across the province protesting tuition and the rising costs, the rising fees at postsecondary institutions. We have the eighth lowest student funding for postsecondary education in the country. One of the richest if not the richest province decides that we could be number 8 in terms of funding young people into postsecondary institutions. We have the fastest growing tuition rates in all of the 10 provinces: 208 percent, 210 percent over the last 10 years. Again, the kind of serious discussion that the students who will appear here tomorrow from the University of Alberta and the students that will appear here later in the session think this Legislature should be dealing with regarding those concerns are not likely to be addressed in a short two-week or a two-and-a-half-week period.

There are many reasons, Mr. Speaker, why this adjournment is a bit of an affront appearing on the Order Paper, housekeeping or not. With Albertans concerned with everything from health care to school closures to the state of the Swan Hills facility, I think that people will see this motion for what it is, not merely a housekeeping motion but a motion that allows the government to escape the kind of scrutiny that the issues that I've just outlined deserve.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I conclude. Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to get a few words in this evening in debate regarding Government Motion 25.

We seem to have at the least, Mr. Speaker, not enough respect for democracy in this province. We seem to think that all activities should happen outside this Assembly. My hon. colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods was discussing issues that I believe cannot be discussed in the time that we have allocated to us.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

When you think of issues such as electrical deregulation, the impact of that, the impact it's going to have on residential users, light industrial users, hospitals, schools, and the impact it's going to have on heavy industry in this province, which uses the majority of electric power, when this whole idea came forward – and all hon. members of the Assembly know the haste in which Bill 27 was debated. Closure was used. We didn't have time in the Assembly to debate that issue. Look at the cost of this now, Mr. Speaker.

I have to think to myself that we need to have a more thorough examination of all the initiatives that are being proposed by this government in this Assembly. By cutting short the time, we are doing a disservice to Albertans. I know there are people in this Assembly that say – and I disagree with them – that the less time this Legislative Assembly is in session, the less time there is to make laws and therefore there are less restrictions on Albertans. But when Albertans go to bed at night, they want to know that when they wake up, they can flick a switch and there's going to be electricity. They want to know that there's going to be a source of natural gas for their furnaces. Industrial leaders in this province want to know that there's a reliable and cheap source of feedstock for their industrial processes.

Now, I know there are some members of the general public who approach me and talk about the sugar-daddy politics of the current government and how they resent that. There are other people who come forward and say to me: this is crony capitalism in this province. There are the winners and the losers. We have a major lawsuit happening in this province where citizens – Mr. Speaker, it's incredible – have rallied together and are suing their very own provincial government for compensation for untreated pine shakes. Now, it's always a serious matter when citizens band together to sue their government, and this type of lawsuit involving thousands of consumers from across the province is very, very unusual in this province. What are we doing? Are we going to have time to discuss this, discuss what happened? Certainly not, and I think we should. At least we can prevent this from happening again. We can find out what went wrong and when it went wrong.

Mr. Speaker, political careers are at stake here. My gosh, the leaders of the government are going to have to wonder about this individual or that individual. Exactly how able are they with all this going on? Thousands of documents, I'm proud to say, have been released or obtained by the Official Opposition through freedom of information. Now, freedom of information is one of the very, very best tools that the opposition has to keep the government accountable. We're just trying to do our job, but if this session is only going to last a few days, I have a lot of questions to ask. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, the hon. Minister of Justice, is as interested in this issue as I am.

We have untreated pine shakes all over the province. We have the issue of treated pine shakes now coming up. There were tests done on this product. Everyone was assured that Alberta taxpayers, who were financing the tests, were not receiving the information in a timely fashion. We have to get to the bottom of this issue. Albertans paid for these tests, yet they were denied the information. I'm sure many of them, as they went to the lumber store, would have been very grateful if they could have been provided this information. By closing the doors on this Assembly, Albertans are going to be denied a chance to question their very own government. We have letters flying between this company and that company and going to the government suggesting that perhaps this is going to reflect on the product, that it is not a good reflection on this product. Consumers, if they get this information, are going to lose confidence in the product. Now, what we're looking at, as a result of that, is probably another lawsuit by Albertans against their government. A person can stand up in question period, and the slogan can be: it's before the courts; I can't answer that.

Another fight that has come to light is the whole issue, Mr. Speaker, of timber permits in the province. Incredibly I have only so much time, and I have so many questions to ask regarding that issue. Am I going to get the chance? No, not with this motion. I will not. We have a lot of questions. Now, I believe that in the time between now and 1993 whenever this government tried to convince Albertans that there were limited funds, very limited funds for core programs like health care, education, in some areas of the province we were giving away wood fibre at fire sale prices. We put a new definition of free in the words "free enterprise." And here we go; we're not going to get a chance to hold the government accountable on this. I found out all of this with a FOIP request, that the government wants to ask for $624,000 to allow me and a researcher to obtain this information. Will I get a chance to question the government on this? I don't think so.

I have other questions, Mr. Speaker, that I regretfully will probably not get an opportunity to ask, and they relate to another FOIP request. The government wanted to charge me $54,000 for information relating to the Canada-Alberta labour agreement. I got a list here just the other day. I was astonished to find out that $3.5 million of this money had gone to the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce, of all things. [interjections]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, again we just have one hon. member who's been recognized, and we can certainly hear a number of people over on this side wanting to enter debate. If you could wait until the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar concludes his remarks, then you are free to enter into debate, Minister of Gaming, but right now we have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Now the FOIP request. There was $300 million provided to this province from the federal government, and we all hear how there has to be this devolution of power from the federal government and the provinces can look after themselves. They can look after themselves, and they want all this power. They want an increase of power. So I thought: let's find out how prudently this money was spent. I didn't have to wait too long before the Auditor General wrote about this. The Auditor General in his last report talked about overpayments, sloppy accounting, and I thought that in order to do my job, I'd better check into this, and I did.

Now, we have over a three-year period roughly $100 million coming into this province for programs to train citizens of this province to enter or re-enter the workforce. Let's have a good, thorough examination of this program to see if it should be expanded, because what we're doing, Mr. Speaker, is talking about increasing provincial control over programs, but at the same time we are not monitoring to see if they're working, if this money is being well spent. Will this be a topic that will be debated in this Assembly? I think not. We won't have time.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned Red Deer a little earlier, the city of Red Deer and the Chamber of Commerce and the money that they are receiving and will receive in the future relating to this Canada-Alberta labour agreement. I visited the city of Red Deer in September. Yes. I found a lot of houses down there where people were very upset with these pine shakes. Wow. There were a lot of pine shakes. I was in Red Deer-North, the north end of the constituency. As my honourable colleague from Lethbridge-East would say: they were as mad as hornets.

At this time I would like to congratulate the new Member for Red Deer-North. I understand, of course, that this is her first evening session, and I wish her well in her job as representative from Red Deer-North. The former member certainly had a lot to say in this Assembly, and I'm anxious to hear how she is going to represent her constituents.

However, Mr. Speaker, I also hear from the hon. minister of community services here. I doubt if I will get the chance in question period to find out if the building that's going to be named after this individual has pine shakes on its roof, because I'm sure it's going to need to be repaired. That's going to be a problem. In Spruce Grove, I believe it is. You know, the government will have to pay for a new roof for that place as well. They'll probably try to convince the public that they put the wrong kind of nails on, like what occurred at Grant MacEwan.

There are lots and lots of issues that, unfortunately, we do not get to discuss in this Assembly. We look, Mr. Speaker, and we listen to the comments from the other side of the House. We go to classrooms in our constituency, and students ask about government, they ask about the role of opposition, they ask about the role of government members. They ask me about the confrontational nature of this Assembly. I tell them that it is part of question period. The most vital part of the opposition's role is question period and holding the government accountable. I think this is one of the most effective oppositions in Canada. The reason I can say that with confidence is because the government wants to keep the number of days down to the bare minimum where they can sit there and have us hold them accountable. They can run and they can hide, but we have so few sitting days in this Assembly that it is a tribute to our diligence in holding them accountable. They simply do not want to be here. They simply do not want to be in this Assembly, because they know they cannot answer the questions.

We are looking at an economic boom here. We're looking at large surpluses. But we have a health care system that doesn't work. We have elementary schools where the rain is pouring in on the blackboard.

AN HON. MEMBER: The sky is falling.

MR. MacDONALD: They can say: the roof is falling in; the roof is falling in. You bet the roof is falling in.

It is incredible that we have such a narrow focus. We have resources that are dwindling. We have a problem with our electrical system. As I said before, health care: we have people waiting far too long, and we have a shortage of health care professionals. And as I said, we have schools that are simply not adequate. Yet I'll turn on the evening news some night after the session is over, and I'll hear one of the hon. members from the government side talking about how we have to have a well-educated workforce to compete in the global economy. I have to question their sincerity in that statement, because it is simply not being provided adequately.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would like to remind all hon. members of this Assembly that we cannot take for granted this Legislature. We all stood somewhere in this province in the last week with our heads bowed for those who were willing to sacrifice their lives so we could stand in here and have the protection that comes with freedom of speech. I feel that I'm being denied my rights as a Member of this Legislative Assembly by this government not providing adequate time to debate many, many important issues.

Thank you.

[Government Motion 25 carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 38 regarding notice to allow for Official Opposition and third-party opposition changes to standing committees of the House.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move Government Motion 26 as follows:

Be it resolved that the following changes to the following committees be approved by the Assembly: on the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts that Mr. Mason replace Dr. Pannu and that Dr. Massey be appointed, on the Select Standing C o m m i t t e e e on Legislative Offices that Mr. Sapers be appointed, and on the Select Standing Committee on Law and Regulations that Mrs. Soetaert be appointed.

[Government Motion 26 carried]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, November 15, 2000 1:30 p.m.
Date: 00/11/15
[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, guide us so that we may use the privilege given us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Give us the strength to labour diligently and the courage to think and to speak with clarity and conviction and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Colleagues, as many of you know, our colleague from Edmonton-Castle Downs, hon. member Pamela Paul, has been absent from the House. You'll be glad to know that she has recovered from her eye surgery this past week and is now at home recuperating. I'm sure all of you will join with me in wishing her well in her recovery.

You might also want to congratulate the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, who is now a proud new grandfather, and it would be quite appropriate to do the normal thing. [applause]

Please be seated.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition from citizens concerned with mature and aging women's health, particularly osteoporosis.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition today. It is signed by 370 students, the students for environmental and social action, who were responding to the concerns in Kananaskis Country, students who are now very happy with the government's decision in that regard.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I'm pleased to introduce a petition signed by 311 Albertans from Edmonton, Calgary, Spruce Grove, Legal, Fort Saskatchewan, Blairmore, and Sherwood Park. They are petitioning the Assembly "to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you very much.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented yesterday on mature women's health and osteoporosis now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Alberta Government to take an enlightened preventative approach and add the newer and more effective medications and therapies to the Alberta Drug List to ensure the health of an aging society.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented on the promotion of private health care by this government be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would request that the petition I presented on Thursday, May 25 requesting the government to maintain Kananaskis in a natural state now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta:

1. To immediately disallow any further development of the Spray Valley of Kananaskis Country, including those proposals currently under consideration;
2. To maintain Kananaskis Country in a natural state that provides high quality wildlife habitat and nature-based recreational activities;
3. To create a Wildland Provincial Park which protects the whole of the undeveloped parts of the Kananaskis and Spray Valleys.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that the petition I tabled last spring regarding private health care be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table with the House today five copies of the Alberta Economic Development Authority's Positioning Alberta for Continuing Success Activity Report 1999-2000.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly three reports today: the year 2000 annual report of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta, the 1999 annual report of the Workers' Compensation Board of Alberta, and the 1999 annual report for the Appeals Commission for Alberta's Workers' Compensation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I have the honour of tabling the Alberta Justice annual report 1999-2000, the Alberta Law Enforcement Review Board's 1999 annual report for information purposes, and the annual reports of the Alberta Law Foundation and the Law Society of Alberta.

As our annual report shows, Alberta Justice is responding to the concerns of Albertans raised at the 1999 justice summit, which I might say was the brainchild of my predecessor and my colleague . . .

MR. HAVELOCK: Jon Havelock.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, I can't use that name; can I? And I don't know where you're from.

In 1999-2000 we enhanced community partnerships, increased the role of the victims. We've clarified accountability, increased funding for crime prevention initiatives, and I'm glad to report that our efforts appear to be paying off. Crime rates continue to fall in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of the annual report on the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. This report outlines the work for the past year as the council has moved to develop an Alberta disability strategy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a letter that I have today sent to the Premier in reference to his statements in this Legislature yesterday, when he said, "This leader of the Liberal opposition was the person who licensed the very first private MRI clinic in this province." In the letter I state:

This statement is a lie.

During my term as Minister of Health, I did not license, nor approve, nor in any way encourage private MRI clinics.

In addition, it is the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta that would license a private MRI clinic, not the Government of Alberta nor the Minister of Health.

I resigned as Minister of Health . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader, thank you very much. This is Tabling Returns and Reports.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of letters from eight dedicated board members from the Youth Dance Unlimited company urging the government to have more "support for the Arts in Alberta recognizing the lasting social, educational and economic benefits to the community," five copies of eight letters.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a large number of questionnaires that I'd like to table. They outline the concerns that victims of brain injury have in this province.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of letters that are specifically directed for the benefit of the hon.

minister of health and the associate minister dealing with concerns and shortcomings expressed by Alberta victims of brain injury and outlining difficulties with medical coverage, home care, employment, recreation, income, and so on and so forth.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to table a number of items, the first being an agenda from the External Advisory Board of the Graduate Students' Association of the University of Alberta. I have been privileged to attend this session, and I have, accompanying that agenda, enclosed two postcards which the undergraduates and the graduate students are providing and hoping people will send to the government. The postcards state, "Tuition in Alberta has risen over 208% . . ."

THE SPEAKER: Please, hon. member, let's get on with the tablings.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So I will table those with the Assembly.

I also have today five copies of a Discussion Paper on the Attributes of a National Framework for Injury Prevention and Control. This was shared in October at a national conference on injury prevention that was held in Kananaskis.

Accompanying that, Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased to table today five copies of the annual report of the Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research, an outstanding centre which is doing vital work and deserves additional support from government.

Thank you.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I have but one tabling, and this is Canada's Annual Survey of Emergency Food Programs prepared for the Canadian Association of Food Banks, October 2000.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first is from the Bragg Creek Environmental Coalition, who are requesting a "moratorium on all resource developments in Kananaskis Country until a watershed assessment" is conducted and its recommendations are implemented.

The second is a letter from Paul and Jean Greig, who are also concerned about Kananaskis Country.

The third is the third quarter results as reported by Bovar where they tell us how they lost $1 million and their subsequent plans to return this plant to the government of Alberta and the people.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, the first of which is a letter from Mr. Roy Kramar. He's a constituent of mine, and he is asking that the Capital health authority reimburse him some $1,500 for three MRIs that were required for his neck, his back, and his head in March of this year, sir.

The second tabling, so that the government does not miss some of the important items and misinterpret a number of the statements of the market surveillance administrator, is a report filed by him to the Power Pool of Alberta on prices in the summer of 2000, sir. The five copies are herein contained.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would file five copies of What Students Have Said, excerpts from the 25,000 postcards delivered to the Minister of Learning earlier today by student representatives of institutions across the province asking that tuition be limited to 2 percent.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. One is a letter from St. Albert Protestant schools expressing their concerns over boundary changes.

The other issue is from St. Albert Protestant schools as well, expressing their concerns that unless there is stable and consistent funding for the DARE program, it will no longer be available to as many students as have been fortunate enough to get this program offered to them so far.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. Both of them are documents which I have received through freedom of information. They are relating to the treated pine shake. The first one is entitled Shake Treat Protocol. It is recommendations for pressure preservative treatment.

The second document, Mr. Speaker, is Treated Pine Shake Inspection Report from the manufacturers, Skyline, Majestic, Shakemaster, and Cowley. This is not a very good record, I'm afraid, to announce to all members of the Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Miss Clair Sparrius of East London, South Africa. Clair is an exchange student with the Rotary Club of High River. She is seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I'd ask her now to rise and receive the warm, traditional welcome of the Assembly.

And the second introduction, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly councillors from the MD of Willow Creek: Councillor Brian Dahl from the constituency of Highwood and councillors Dave Claypool and Kelly Donahue from the constituency of Livingstone-Macleod. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the warm, traditional welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you today to the members of the Assembly Manuella Peel from Onoway, Alberta. Mrs. Peel is the mother of Dwight Peel, a young man who was killed in a workplace incident on June 27, 1998, just two days after his 17th birthday. I met with Mrs. Peel earlier today to discuss how we can educate employers and young people on the importance of ongoing safety in the workplace. We must educate and protect our young and inexperienced workers. With Mrs. Peel today is her sister Mary Anne Munn from Calahoo. I would ask Mrs. Peel and her sister to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and to the members of the Assembly two classes from James Mowat elementary school in Fort Saskatchewan. They're accompanied by teachers Ted Fellows and George Sebest and also parents Mrs. Cunningham, Mrs. Prochinsky, Mrs. Lequire, Mr. Arnott, Mrs. DeBruyn, Mrs. Regush and by Mr. Fluker, the bus driver. If they'd please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a great group of students from Archbishop MacDonald high school in Edmonton. There are 57 visitors here. They are with their teachers, Mrs. Jane Warren and Mrs. Phyllis Schumacher, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. LANGEVIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three very special ladies from the Lac La Biche- St. Paul constituency. We have Mrs. Helen Broadbent and Mrs. Judy Thompson. They are here today because their husbands are councillors for Lakeland county, and they are at the AAMD and C convention in Edmonton. They are accompanied today by my wife, Juliette. I would like to ask all the ladies to stand and be recognized by the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 13 special guests from Vulcan county. We've got five guests in the members' gallery and eight in the public gallery, and I would ask if they would rise as I introduce them. In the members' gallery are the administrator, Robert Strauss, Councillor Ian Donovan, Councillor Grant Lahd, Councillor Merle Wyatt, who's also one of the newest councillors elected, and the public works supervisor, Nick Zubach. In our public gallery are Reeve Wayne Davey, another new councillor, Charlene Shearer, Glenn Logan, Councillor Darryl McDonald, Councillor Doug McIntyre, and Councillor Rod Ruark. Along with them are two spouses, Brenda McIntyre and Mr. Wayne Shearer. I'm pleased to introduce them to the Assembly. Please give them a warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Later this afternoon we will be joined by 41 guests from Our Lady of Victories school here in the City of Edmonton. I had the pleasure last week of visiting with these 35 students. They are accompanied today in this Assembly by their teachers, Mr. Dave King and Mrs. Margaret Petruk, as well as parents Sandy Fitzgerald, Shelley Hunt, and Caren Pierchajlo. I would ask that all members provide these students with a warm welcome this afternoon.

Thank you.

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, I have two long-term residents of Red Deer to introduce to you and members of the Assembly today. The first is Shirley Alford, who is a former principal of Mount View elementary school as well as an educator at Red Deer College. The second person I'd like to introduce is Burns Peacock. This is actually his first visit to the Legislature, but he is one of six brothers to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly 21 students and two teachers that will be joining us shortly I suspect. They are from McArthur elementary school, and they were brought today to the Assembly for a tour and a photograph by their teachers and group leaders, Ms Sas and Mr. Jerry Bernard. I hope that the Assembly will welcome them warmly when they do arrive.

Thank you, sir.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly one individual very important to me, my daughter Susan. She's a nurse officer on a Norwegian cruise ship, and she works in the Caribbean and is leaving in the next couple of weeks to go back there again. She is seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three Edmonton members of the Alberta College and Technical Institute Students' Executive Council, the Alberta Graduate Council, the Council of Alberta University Students. They are Leslie Church, chair of the Council of Alberta University Students; Naomi Agard, vice-president external of the University of Alberta Students' Union; and Brad Wuetherick, executive vice-president of the Graduate Students' Association at the University of Alberta. They are here today representing over 100,000 students in the province and delivered earlier in the day 25,000 postcards to the Minister of Learning asking that tuition be limited to a 2 percent increase in the coming year. With your permission I would ask them to rise and to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Chairman of Committees.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce some guests from the Lacombe-Stettler constituency. With us today are 10 hard-working members of the Eagles youth council, a self-advocacy group mandated under the auspices of the Lacombe Action Group for the Handicapped. With them are helpers Ms Shara Hargreaves, Mrs. Sharon Dilworth, Mrs. Lynne Kilpatrick, and Ms Marisa Jackson. I had the opportunity recently to attend one of their council meetings and was most impressed. I would ask that they rise in the members' gallery and receive the warm, traditional welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electric Utilities Deregulation

MRS. MacBETH: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Utilicorp Networks Canada has just applied to the Energy and Utilities Board for a 31.6 percent increase in the delivery charge for its residential customers in southern Alberta for 2001, this on top of an earlier increase that was pulled back. Enmax and EPCOR have already increased their electricity rates for residential customers this year. It's now clear to everyone except this government that the Klein energy policy, or the KEP, the made-in-Klein Alberta price for electricity, is hitting consumers and businesses hard in the pocketbook. My questions are to the Premier. Why does the Premier continue to misinform Albertans when he says that electricity rates will be going down in 2001 under the Klein electricity policy when clearly prices are going up for consumers, whether they be residential, industrial, or commercial?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I explained yesterday, this is a situation that is not peculiar to Alberta. Electricity prices are increasing, indeed, worldwide. The good thing is that because of our prudent fiscal management and because of the electricity pool, we are able to reduce every household electricity bill by $20 starting January 1. So this increase to which the leader of the Liberal opposition alludes would result in about a $10 a month increase. That is a cash increase on the average household bill. With the $20 rebate the consumer is still about $10 ahead.

If the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition requires further clarification relative to this very generous rebate, I will have him expand.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier confirm that the increase in electricity rates for southern Alberta residential consumers in 2001 will in fact eat up and consume more than his paltry onetime credit on their utility bills?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition construes to be paltry, but $840 on average to the average householder in Alberta is not paltry. It's not paltry to me: $840. Maybe she's in a different income bracket than many of us, and maybe it's paltry to her, but to most Albertans $840 on average is not a paltry sum and will go a long way – a long way – to alleviating the rising costs of electricity.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier then stand up in this Legislature and guarantee residential customers served by Utilicorp that electricity prices will not go up by 15 percent in 2001 because of the Klein electricity policy?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, nothing in life is guaranteed, and what I would like to point out is that these electricity rate increases have occurred under a totally regulated environment, a totally regulated environment. We are not yet in deregulation. Quite simply, when that power comes onstream – we know that there are two cogen plants about to come on stream, one at Joffre and the other at Suncor. There are proposals now to bring more coal generation power onstream, about 1,400 megawatts of new power plus additional transmission capacity.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, as I pointed out, it's a situation that is not peculiar to Alberta, and secondly, this is a manifestation of the tremendous economic growth that we are experiencing in this province. It's estimated that there are something like $50 billion – $50 billion – worth of new projects onstream. There are people moving to this province in droves, as the hon. Provincial Treasurer pointed out. They don't bring their roads and their hospitals and other facilities with them. We have to accommodate this growth, and rising electricity costs are one of the consequences of meeting the demands of growth. It's that simple.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, about two hours ago the state of California declared a crisis in their state. This state also had done deregulation, and they're now paying as much as $200 per megawatt hour off the grid to supply the residents and businesses of the state of California. Yesterday the Premier claimed and has repeated here today that deregulation of electricity had not occurred and that Albertans are apparently still living in some regulated environment under the Klein energy policy. This Premier and his government are so desperate to avoid taking responsibility for skyrocketing electricity bills that they are now trying to deny the impact of their own legislation. My question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Premier.

THE SPEAKER: There's a bit of preamble in there. We're coming to the question? Please, finish the question.

MRS. MacBETH: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Is the Premier telling Albertans that his government has deliberately allowed the price of electricity to increase by 700 percent at the wholesale level in four years under his government-regulated environment?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this is a function of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board relative to the regulation and approval of rate increases. The leader of the Liberal opposition knows that as well as anyone else. This government, the Executive Council, or the caucus of this government, does not set power rates, and she knows that. To stand up there and try to imply that this government sets power rates is false. It is absolutely false. It is untrue, and the leader of the Liberal opposition should stand up and apologize for making a false statement.

Relative to the situation in California as it compares to Alberta, I'll have the hon. Minister of Resource Development respond. But I would like to point out before I ask him to respond, Mr. Speaker – and I'll use the case of my own condominium here in Edmonton. My last power bill, I think, with the rate increase was about $26. Now, as of January 1, with a $20 rebate, I'll be paying $6 a month. That is not a lot to pay for power. Because of prudent fiscal management we were able to do that. Now, if she thinks there's something wrong with that, stand up and say so.

I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

THE SPEAKER: Actually, hon. Minister of Resource Development, events in California are not within the administrative competence of the Minister of Resource Development. Supplementary.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier is apparently contradicting himself. Can he tell this Assembly what are we in right now, a regulated or deregulated or re-regulated market?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely astounded by the lack of knowledge displayed by the leader of the Liberal opposition. You know, the whole program of deregulation has been ongoing now – for what? – three, four, five years, and it's been stated time and time and time again that a deregulated environment for those who want to be deregulated takes place January 1, the year 2001. For those who want to remain in a regulated environment, they have the option of doing so, I believe, for five years.

I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much. I think that what we need to clarify, Mr. Speaker, is that over a million residential homes and residential farms have the option to stay under the regulated system for five years. In addition to that, over 124,000 customers who are commercial, industrial, and municipal and who use less than 250,000 kilowatt hours of electricity also have an option to stay up to three years. So the system is working well.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that electricity rates have gone up under regulation and are going up under deregulation, will the Premier admit that the Klein energy policy means higher electricity rates for consumers?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm so very flattered that she would allude to this policy as the Klein energy policy, because when people get their electricity bills, when the households throughout this province get their electricity bills as of January 1 and they see a $20 reduction – as I said, in my own case relative to my condominium here, when my bill goes from $26 down to $6, I would be very, very happy to say: this is all the result of the Klein energy policy.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Seniors' Benefits

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, many condominium owners are senior citizens, and under the recently proclaimed condominium act thousands of owners are making extra payments on top of their condominium fees to meet the condo reserve requirements. On top of that, they're being hit with huge increases in their electricity and natural gas bills. My first questions are to the Minister of Resource Development. Given that unlike the government seniors like to plan ahead, exactly how are they to pay their bills when the electricity rebate program ends 13 months from now?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, what I've indicated is that we will continue monitoring the situation and make adjustments accordingly. I don't want to predict today what will happen a year from now. I don't think that is a wise move. Electricity rates could come down, or they may go up some. In order to make a wise decision when we're spending taxpayers' dollars, it has to be done properly. You can be guaranteed that this ministry will continue monitoring the situation and making adjustments accordingly.

In relation to seniors, Mr. Speaker, there are programs right now under Community Development that can address these issues. They're under the special-needs assistance program. The appropriate minister may want to make additional comments.

THE SPEAKER: Well, actually we're going to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, but, you know, it's almost impossible for anybody to look down 13 months. Beauchesne 428 covers these things and a whole series of exemptions. Please proceed with your supplemental.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. To this same Minister of Resource Development: will a high-rise condominium that is not individually metered be treated as a high-rise apartment and receive the commercial rebate?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, the rebate will be received. In addition to that, the department staff are also working with a group to ensure that individuals who need the rebate will get it, so we'll continue working on that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question was to be to the Minister of Community Development. Perhaps I could address it instead to the Premier. Could the Premier answer this? In helping seniors cope with these rising utility rates, will this government now eliminate health care insurance premiums for seniors and index the Alberta seniors' cash benefit to the inflation rate to help them pay these utility bills, as suggested by the minister?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to health care premiums as those premiums relate to seniors, I would point out that the threshold at which seniors are required to pay health care premiums is fairly high indeed. In other words, this government's policy was to assess health care premiums on those seniors who could afford to pay. I would remind the hon. member that most seniors in this province are below that threshold, pay very little in health care premiums, and many, I would venture to say most, pay no premiums whatsoever.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. deputy leader of the third party. [applause]

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, but I hope you're not going to thump on that side when I'm done.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier claimed that the recent dramatic increases in power rates were taking place due to a regulated system. Until April of this year I was a shareholder representative in one of the three largest power companies in Alberta, and I saw firsthand how the uncertainty created over the last five years by this government interfered with decisions to invest in new power generation. My question is to the Premier. Has the government done any research at all into the effects of their misguided deregulation scheme on electricity rates, supply, or reliability?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I'm disappointed. I'm disappointed that the hon. member doesn't know the amount of time and effort that has gone into this. As confirmed by the Liberal opposition, indeed this has been going on now for five years, tremendous consultation with the energy industry, including the corporation to which the hon. member belonged – and I believe that was EPCOR – tremendous consultation with EPCOR, with Trans-Alta, with ATCO, with numerous companies that were interested in cogeneration, with wind power generators, with cities like Medicine Hat that also use gas to generate electricity, with the stakeholder groups, a tremendous amount of research. Five years' worth of research has gone into the program to deregulate the energy industry in this province.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, the Premier did not answer the question, which was: has the government done any research at all into their plan? He simply said that they've taken five years. Well, if they'd taken 10 years, the lights would be out all over the province.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the lights are on.

Again, I have to repeat that, yes, there are rising electricity costs. Those costs would have risen in a deregulated or a regulated environment. As I pointed out earlier, this is a manifestation of tremendous economic growth unparalleled in this country.

I would remind the hon. member that the corporation to which he belonged, EPCOR, was one of the strongest proponents of deregulation.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has also claimed that electricity prices are rising all over the world, but in our two neighbouring provinces, British Columbia and Saskatchewan, prices are frozen and will remain frozen next year, as well. So why did the Premier then claim . . . [interjections] I'm sort of accustomed to being allowed to ask questions with some silence. Am I not entitled to that here, Mr. Speaker?

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, not only have you been recognized; you are most certainly entitled to raise a question. But I would like to remind the hon. member that he cannot initiate debate without proper notice of motion. This is called the question period.

Please proceed.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. Why, then, doesn't the Premier admit that in adjacent provinces, who are making a killing selling power to us now, there are stable and low electricity prices? It's called the NDP advantage.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is no NDP advantage; I'll tell you that.

Here's the CIBC report which says that they lay much of the blame for B.C.'s economic performance on the feet of the province's New Democratic government, which instituted economic policies that often stand in contrast to those of Alberta. This report by the CIBC says that it's unlikely now that B.C., with a population of 1 million people more than Alberta, will ever, ever surpass Alberta again as long as an NDP government is in power.

Mr. Speaker, power in British Columbia I understand – I stand to be corrected – was doubled, then frozen. The B.C. government has nothing to do with power in B.C. The simple fact is that they have water, tonnes and tonnes of water that flows and flushes down the west slope and is able to generate cheap power, unlike a landlocked Alberta, which is dependent upon primarily coal and to some degree natural gas and to some degree wind. Very little power in this province is generated by water. The same is true for Manitoba.

I'm going to talk about one other ND province that is facing the same situation as Alberta, and indeed the rates are going higher and higher and higher and higher in NDP Saskatchewan.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North. [applause]

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, many of Alberta's postsecondary students are facing rising tuition costs. My questions are for the Minister of Learning. Given the ongoing concerns raised by students, will the Minister of Learning consider a freeze on tuition?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is an excellent question. Over the past two to three months I've been talking with ACTISEC, I've been talking with CAUS, I've been talking with the Graduate Students' Association as well as the chairmen of the boards of governors of the universities and colleges to come up with a consensus on the tuition fee issue. Tuition fees have been projected to increase. That is directly related to the amount of dollars that we give to the universities. I feel that the best way to approach this issue is to work with the universities, with the colleges and allow them, by giving them more money for their budgets, to decrease the amount of tuition fees.

Mr. Speaker, in some universities and some colleges in this province the tuition increase has been zero percent. I don't want to change that.

The other point that I will make, Mr. Speaker, is that in a newspaper article last week there was announced a potential 5.7 percent increase at the University of Alberta. That is unacceptable. I have talked to the University of Alberta officials at this time, and we will come up with an agreement on this.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, what is the minister's response to students who say that Alberta students now pay more than the national average?

DR. OBERG: Another excellent question. If I may, I'll refer to a document called the Scholarship Consultants of North America, which is a nonprofit organization. On the 25th of July it put out the Guide to University Costs in Canada. Mr. Speaker, if you'll give me a little bit of time I'll talk about the three things that it says.

First of all, they're absolutely right on the tuition and fees. What it states is that in Alberta we are third highest in the country when it comes to tuition and fees. Mr. Speaker, to say tuition alone is not indicative of what is actually paid. The other interesting point is that when you add in tuition and fees, room and board, and books and supplies, or the total cost of a student going to university, all of a sudden we're down to fifth in provincial average. The University of Alberta is 21st out of 42 universities. The University of Calgary is 22nd. The University of Lethbridge is 23rd out of 42 universities in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, as you can see, we do have the third highest provincial average, but again I say that tuition is but one aspect, one element of student debt, and we are working very actively to decrease student debt.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, what is the minister doing to ensure that all students have access to postsecondary education?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, I could go on on this topic for the next half an hour, but I know you wouldn't want to do that.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to infrastructure, the hon. Minister of Infrastructure just put in $210 million to expand the physical access for students in Alberta. The access fund provides for an extra 1,200 students per year each year on the student loan side in this budget. In this budget this year we increased the student loans by 22 percent. We will increase them by 50 percent over the next three years. Those are huge increases. Access is the thing that is most important when it comes to university, because we want our students going to university, and as a government we follow through on that promise.

Child Welfare

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, my questions are for the Minister of Children's Services. Does the minister believe that the principles enunciated in the Victims of Crime Act, section 2, that "victims should be treated with courtesy and compassion and with respect for their dignity and privacy," applies to proceedings involving child welfare?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, that is not a piece of legislation that I'm familiar with, but I can say that we believe that in every case dealing with children and child welfare, we treat them with dignity and respect, and we similarly treat their families with dignity and respect.

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, can the minister defend the departmental stance that forces victims of abuse to testify in public proceedings even when such testimony is harmful to the victim's well-being?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, it is our obligation to protect victims. We do that through the Child Welfare Act. We do our utmost to protect victims of any type of abuse. In terms of presenting their case in court, there are times when the child will have an opportunity to challenge the fact that the child welfare director may not have illustrated cause – I give you the example of the illustration with PCHIP – should they choose to represent themselves.

MRS. SLOAN: Can the minister confirm how many statements of claim have been filed citing that the department of child welfare and the government of Alberta have failed to act on allegations of child abuse?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, if such record exists – and I am very confident that we can determine what information is available – I will table that in the House forthwith. I do not have that information with me today.

Persons with Developmental Disabilities

MRS. GORDON: Mr. Speaker, last year the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness undertook a comprehensive review of the programs and services available in Alberta for persons with developmental disabilities. This review was prompted by parents and family members, by PDD recipients, and by community agencies who are very concerned about issues related to funding, mandate, eligibility criteria, wage compensation, and numerous other issues. Recently I had the privilege of attending a well-run meeting of the Eagles council, a self-advocacy group made up of PDD recipients. My questions are to the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness. Mr. Minister, what specifications have been taken in response to the many concerns that were expressed regarding the provision of services for PDD recipients?

THE SPEAKER: The Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, there are a number of initiatives that have occurred as a result of the extensive and very comprehensive provincewide review that I was pleased to undertake last year. For example, with respect to stabilizing the funding base, I'm very pleased to tell everyone that we have increased funding to this area of PDD from $283 million a year ago to over $321 million this year.

Secondly, in September of this year I was very pleased to announce the Alberta brain injury initiative, which includes a provincewide consultation and a forum. That, by the way, is guided by a group of community-based coalition action members who will develop a policy framework for us very shortly. They'll bring that forward in the form of a concrete action plan very early in the new year, and we will enact what we can to assist adults with an acquired brain injury from there.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would add that perhaps the most significant thing in relation to one specific recommendation on workforce retention and wages is that on October 30 of this year I was very pleased to announce an increase of $24 million, which will go to the frontline workers that are employed by community agencies in this province. That is going to tremendously help. That will help to stabilize the workforce that is engaged in providing services and programs for persons with developmental disabilities, and I sincerely hope it will also attract new people into that profession, because it's very important. The end recipients of PDD programs will be the primary beneficiaries along with their families.

MRS. GORDON: How will you ensure that the recently announced wage increases for community agencies will indeed reach the frontline caregivers as you intended?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, that's a very, very good question. Let me just explain that each jurisdiction has a legal contract or some type of grant with conditions or some form of other legal agreement which allows funding to flow from our PDD boards to the community agencies who are the actual employers of the PDD workers. In order to ensure that those PDD funds flow to the intended frontline workers, we do have a monitoring process that is in accordance with those legal agreements through which we track those particular types of expenditures.

For example, the PDD program requires and then it also reviews audited financial statements from each of these community contracted agencies. We also have under the individual funding arrangements the ability for PDD boards to perform audits on salary records with respect to local service providers. So we feel confident that by following these procedures, these mechanisms, those particular increases will reach the frontline workers as intended.

I just want to stress that those frontline workers are not government employees. They are employees of the contracted agencies. We have a good spirit of co-operation in working with them in that regard.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you. When I attended the Eagles meeting, the general membership indicated that transportation is an issue. Thus, Mr. Minister, will your department and our government consider undertaking a comprehensive review of all transportation requirements needed by PDD recipients?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we all know, accessing adequate and appropriate transportation is obviously a very important issue to our PDD recipients and to all members of the disability community, particularly so for those who live in areas where public transportation may not be as readily accessible and available as elsewhere. However, when someone specifically needs transportation to access a PDD-funded service or to access some form of employment support or whatever it is they wish to access, transportation costs can be covered through our PDD funding support program. Our PDD community boards at the very moment, in fact, are working with local authorities on transportation issues such as have been identified.

I would just quickly add, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities is also reviewing this matter. In fact, they're reviewing it as we speak. The results of that review, which is being carried out on a very comprehensive study basis, of personal supports will be available as an interim report within a few weeks, and I'll be very happy to bring it back and share it with the member and with her guests who are here from the Lacombe-Stettler area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nine thousand dollars in private debt, $3,000 in government student loans, two jobs in the summer, two years in university: this is a quote from one of the postcards that was delivered to the Minister of Learning earlier today, and my questions are to that minister. Why in an era of billion dollar surpluses does the government continue to pursue a tuition cap policy that leaves students debt ridden?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe that in my reply to the previous question I was asked, I outlined the issue as to where we stand in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, quite frankly this government believes that we in Alberta have a responsibility to ourselves for our postsecondary education as well. Presently the taxpayer foots the bill for roughly 75 percent of the actual costs of going to university. Seventy-five percent is a lot of dollars. As I stated earlier, we are ranked third in the country when it comes to tuition fees, but our universities are ranked 21, 22, and 23 out of 42 universities in the country when it comes to actual costs.

Mr. Speaker, we've increased the student loan programs by 22 percent this year. We've increased it by 50 percent over the last three years. That is a tremendous amount of dollars that are going to those kids that really need the help.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the same minister. Why does the government continue to offload debt onto Alberta students? That's what this is.

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, we do not offload debt. As a matter of fact, the amount of debt has gone down significantly within the last year. The average debt for any student last year was $12,500. It has decreased to $11,500.

When there are people out there who cannot afford to go to university, we help them significantly. Under our student loan program, Mr. Speaker, a person can benefit from over $40,000 in student loans and only pay back $20,000 for a four-year program. That $20,000 is the Canadian government's student loan, which has no remission program. That's their Liberal cousins that do not give any remission. We're the ones who give remission to students.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you Mr. Speaker. Given that the student loan program accounts for only a portion – only a portion – of many students' indebtedness, when will the government and this minister stop promoting the myth that the remission program adequately caps student debt? It's a myth.

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, again, I will quote from the study by the nonprofit organization that looks at actual costs. In Alberta at the University of Alberta it's $10,196 per year. That includes tuition and fees, room and board, and books and supplies. Our student loan program provides more than $10,000 per year for these students. Again, I say the obvious. We give remission in Alberta. The Canadian federal government gives no remission on their student loans. When someone takes out $40,000 in student loans, $20,000 of it is remitted from the province of Alberta, not the federal Liberal government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Workers' Compensation Review

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Now, I understand that the minister has received the final reports from two separate WCB review committees. Would the minister share when he plans on releasing these reports to the participants and to the general public?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, in fact, in the interest of trying to ensure that injured workers were dealt with in a fair and expeditious manner, I did set up two committees to report on WCB claims. The first one, chaired by the Member for Red Deer-South, was what we called the MLA/WCB service review committee. What we wanted there was to have a look at the actual service that was being provided by the workers' compensation organization.

The second one, of course, was to look at the Appeals Commission as it related to the Workers' Compensation Board. You might remember that this was chaired by a retired judge, Samuel Friedman.

I have received both of those reports. We're currently reviewing the recommendations, and on Monday next, November 20, we'll be releasing both reports in their entirety.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: would the minister outline the process that he plans to use for approval and implementation of the significant policy and legislative changes that are being recommended in those reports?

MR. DUNFORD: What we'll do, Mr. Speaker, upon the release of the reports, first of all, is to ensure that as many people in Alberta that want to avail themselves of the report will have an opportunity to do that. While I'm not going to go into a full consultation process, because I think that has been done with the two committees, certainly as the minister responsible for the legislation, I'll then accept feedback on those reports. I'd anticipate providing until the end of this year or early into next year to hear that type of feedback.

MR. HERARD: My last question to the same minister: since all hon. members on both sides of the House continue to hear from injured workers with serious problems with respect to their dealings with the WCB, when can these workers expect to hear something encouraging, something positive, some good news with respect to these reports?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, I think that'll happen in a couple of ways, Mr. Speaker. First of all, with the public release of the reports there'll be some encouragement on the part of all Albertans but particularly injured workers in terms of the recommendations that have been forthcoming. Of course, certainly I'm available, then, to hear their particular comments on that. Then as we move forward, while I don't have any direct responsibility in terms of the day-to-day operation as the act currently stands, if there are recommendations that are to be accepted that lead to legislative or regulatory change, of course we will use the processes of this government and this House to deal with that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Labour Market Development Program

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General in his 1999-2000 report on the Alberta Department of Human Resources and Employment revealed that a pilot audit of 10 percent of educational institutions that provide basic education, upgrading, postsecondary, and apprenticeship instruction under the skills development program showed significant overpayments by the department. I received, through freedom of information a list of these contracts. My questions this afternoon are for the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Can the minister tell this House how much of that money went to the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, indeed, is correct in the sense that the Auditor General did make comments on the labour market development program, especially as it led to skills development programs. We have undertaken an audit internally based on that particular advice we received from the Auditor General.

Then there was a request from the hon. member under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, and when we calculated what it would take to comply with that particular request, then I think in a spirit of willingness to examine the situation, we offered an opportunity for the member to receive the list of contracts that we had had and to make a choice of those that he wanted to look into.

This is the first notice I've had since that agreement was made with the hon. member that there are any particular cases that he wishes to examine further. He's now put the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce on the map, so we'll have to look at that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: can the minister tell this House exactly how much money was given to the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce and what programs it was spent on? This is money from your department. Are you telling the House you have no control over your department?

MR. DUNFORD: So here we have the hon. member playing the political game. He asks us for some information, and we supply that information to him. It was my understanding under the agreement that he would provide us with a list of contracts that he wanted to see, and we would in fact supply those contracts, and I stand here today still committed to that particular agreement.

What we find now is that the hon. member has decided that — there is a list of I think over a thousand contracts that were provided to him, and now there is one which he wishes to have further examined. I want to make the commitment to the hon. member. We, of course, will in fact examine that contract, but we also provided him the opportunity to name 225 contracts, so I would expect to hear of the other 224 whenever you find it convenient. If you wish to use question period to do it, that'll be just fine with me.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment: considering that this list was compiled on August 10 of this year, why won't you release this information this afternoon for everyone in the Assembly?

MR. DUNFORD: That was not part of the request, Mr. Speaker. I find it very interesting that the hon. member would be taking this tack. We, of course, believe that the . . . Hon. member, I'm talking to you. I'm trying to answer your question.

MR. MacDONALD: And I'm listening.

MR. DUNFORD: That's good.

THE SPEAKER: Actually, we all talk through the Speaker.

MR. DUNFORD: Sorry.

The information that we have provided to the hon. member is considered by me to be public information. We believed that the hon. member was acting either on his own behalf or perhaps even on behalf of the Liberal caucus. It doesn't make any difference to us. We believed that he was serious and was concerned about what he was doing. We find out today that maybe there were other motives afoot, and that's fine. We understand him to be a politician, and we are starting to understand just what kind of politician he really is.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Irrigation Canal Drowning in Calgary

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently there was a tragic accident when two very young Albertans drowned in the irrigation canal in Calgary. On behalf of the Legislature I visited the family and expressed our condolences. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Environment. Can the minister provide insight into this tragic situation?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, there are no easy answers when a tragic event such as this occurs. However, staff of Alberta Environment have done a thorough review of the situation and the circumstances as near as can be determined up to this incident occurring. As the people in Calgary of course are aware and others might be apprised, the western irrigation canal runs through several kilometres of eastern and southern Calgary. It is a canal which is there to facilitate drainage and water supply in Calgary. It's paralleled by a riding path for bicycles or for walking, and also on one side is one of the mainline railways. There is a fence, but the fence has many openings in it for intersections and so forth, so there was the opportunity for access by two young people. Unfortunately, they may have entered through one of those natural openings or through a hole that seemed to have been cut in the fence on one side.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, the department is investigating this thoroughly. We do take it seriously and are doing everything we can to make recommendations to prevent such an event occurring in the future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is also to the same minister. What action is Alberta Environment taking to avoid such tragedies occurring in the future?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, there has been an overall investigation of the situation, which involved looking at the physical characteristics of the area including the canal, the fence, the access to the canal that is available there. Alberta Environment will, after completing its consultation and contacts with the city of Calgary and with others directly affected, be coming forward with a report and recommendations. It's my understanding that that report is now in draft form and will be double-checked with the people who have provided information and so forth and will be considered for release in the near future.

MR. CAO: My second supplementary is also to the minister. The minister said that there's an audit report in the near future. When would we expect that then?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, it's my information that a draft report will be available shortly. I expect that it will be available next week, and we will review that particular report. I with my officials will look at it and examine it as to whether we feel that there should be further follow-up, whether there are questions that possibly could be answered that haven't been answered. Once that review has taken place, following that, there will certainly be an announcement of the results of the report.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I've noticed that today there'll be four hon. members participating in Recognitions, and we will proceed to this particular part of the Routine 30 seconds from now.

Hon. members, before calling on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to participate in Recognitions, let me just provide some recognitions as well in terms of kudos to a number of members here today who participated in Oral Question Period. The documents and the books we have of course are filled with all the rules that we have and the guides that we have, but I would like to point out by way of kudo today the exchange between the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the hon. Minister of Children's Services. All the rules were followed. Three questions and three responses were given in two minutes.

To the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont and the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment, all the rules were followed. Three questions and three responses were provided in four minutes. At that particular pace we would have almost a doubling of the number of questions and answers that we have in the Assembly. So there is some good reading that people might want to look at tonight and tomorrow.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Osteoporosis

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to recognize November as Osteoporosis Month. Osteoporosis is a degenerative disease that affects more than 200,000 Alberta taxpayers, 150,000 of which are women. In fact, few people are aware that more women die from osteoporotic fractures than from breast and all other gynecological cancers combined. As the percentage of our population which are seniors increases in this province, osteoporosis is going to become more and more relevant as a public health concern.

Osteoporosis is not a normal part of aging. It is a preventable disease. Identifying those people most at risk is actually relatively simple if the proper measures are in place. While the majority of money spent on osteoporosis is dedicated to short- and long-term treatment, prevention is really the cornerstone to managing this disease.

As Osteoporosis Month proceeds, this is an opportunity for us to educate ourselves and others about this serious disease and to reassess how we address its prevention and treatment.

I'd also like to take this opportunity to recognize the mature women's health network at the Grey Nuns hospital and in particular Dr. Patricia Bayne and Shelly Haugen for continuing to raise awareness and for helping to keep me on top of this issue.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Vanderwell Heritage Place

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta held their most creative Senior Citizens' Week event contest for 2000, and as chair of the council I'm very pleased to announce to this House today that the winner is the Vanderwell Heritage Place lodge in Slave Lake.

Slave Lake held not just one creative event but a whole week's worth. The event was nonstop: a stew and bannock supper cooked by the Native Counseling Services of Alberta; a hotdog and ice cream lunch with a local grade 4 class; local celebrities coming daily to serve lunch at the lodge, including the Slave Lake mayor, staff sergeant, and local officials; students competing for lunch with the seniors by drawing pictures, writing letters, or making handicrafts; and the kids' dance studio transporting seniors by van to a studio recital and home again. Since then celebrities have joined the seniors in a rockathon to raise funds for a handicraft supplies cabinet at the lodge.

Slave Lake, you are truly a winning community through appreciation of your seniors. Congratulations.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Capilano Elementary School

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I would like to recognize Capilano elementary school, Earth school 2000. Capilano achieved Earth school status in 1996, the first Edmonton public school to do so. It meant that the school, staff, parents, and community completed 1,000 environmental projects. This was a remarkable accomplishment for a very small school, less than 150 students.

Capilano school has now successfully become an Earth 2000 school. Everyone undertook projects: individual students, small groups, classrooms, and staff members. The alpha students, as part of their life skills program, gathered recycling boxes around the school and sorted materials. Within the community families challenged other families to meet or beat their total number of recycling activities. One family even had a birthday party at which children created space costumes from recycled materials. By October 13 the school had more than met its goal.

Capilano is only the third school in Canada to have accomplished this double Earth feat. A globe is symbolic, Mr. Speaker, of double Earth school status. The students of Capilano school challenge all Alberta students to join them in their concern and care for the environment.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Health Care Privatization

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize November 15, 2000, as the day of action initiated by the Council of Canadians over the threat of privatization and commercialization of our health care system in Canada. Their aim is to focus on the gradual privatization of our Canadian health care system, which is happening across the country. Large numbers of Canadians will kick off this day of action with rallies in Victoria, Calgary, Toronto, Montreal, and four other cities across the country. Last night the Edmonton chapter of the Council of Canadians held a public forum on Canada's health care system, which was attended by well over 250 concerned Albertans.

I congratulate the council and its chapters for their dedicated work in keeping Albertans and Canadians involved in and informed about this most crucial issue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, we have provision on Wednesdays for up to seven recognitions. We've had four, and I'm now going to call on the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Spruce Grove Saints Soccer Team

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Little has been written about a soccer team from Spruce Grove, the indoor soccer U-13 boys, the Saints, and they dominated last year's indoor soccer season. They were coached by Rob Dean, Dave Howard, and managed by Boris Iwashkiw. This team remained undefeated with an outstanding record of 14 wins and one tie.

They won the Edmonton Minor Soccer Association gold medal for the '99-2000 indoor season, and at the end of the outdoor season in 1999 the same team won the gold medal in the top division of EMSA, and they won the gold at the Belvedere tournament and the gold at the Vermilion tournament.

On that team are Trevor Dean, Dave Fenske, Jeff Kaiser, Jeremy Iwashkiw, Kyle Pagnucco, Aaron Peddie, Steve Toporowsky, Craig Lerner, Tyler Van Brabant, Steven Nachtigal, Daniel Howard, Myles Van Kuelen, Jason Oulton, Alex Hawkins, Trevor Plumb, and Matthew Astle. They are a wonderful team that Spruce Grove is very, very proud of, and they won the gold, the provincial championship, this past season.

Thank you very much.

head: Statement by the Speaker

November Events

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Recognitions is an important aspect of our Routine. Periodically, however, my office does receive contact from individual groups in the province who say: gee, a number of recognitions were given to a number of groups, but ours was unfortunately forgotten. So I just want to advise all members that November is CPR Month, Crohn's and Colitis Awareness Month, Diabetes Awareness Month, Family Violence Prevention Month, National Community Safety and Crime Prevention Month, Osteoporosis Month, Pancreatic Cancer Awareness Month, Christmas Chocolate Campaign Month, Bone China Tea month on behalf of the Osteoporosis Society of Canada, the Luge for Liver activity in Calgary, United Way Fund Raising Campaign, Christmas Seal Campaign, March of Dimes Campaign, Girl Guides Mint Cookie Weeks, Adoption Week from November 12 to 19, National Addictions Awareness Week from November 12 to 18, the National Marfan Awareness Week from November 12 to 18, the International Day for Tolerance on November 16, and the Christmas Kettles Appeal begins on November 17 and goes through to December 24.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it is certainly my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of Written Question 22.

[Motion carried]

Community Mental Health Grants

Q22. Ms Blakeman moved that the following question be accepted.

What were the application process and the criteria used for determining successful applicants for the community mental health grants for the 1997-1998 fiscal year?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I accept Written Question 22.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. I'm very pleased to hear that from the Minister of Health and Wellness. This has been an issue of some concern to a constituent of mine, who even had the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark write to the previous minister on his behalf looking for clarification and then came to me. He is looking for the community mental health grants that were distributed in the '97-98 fiscal year over and above the usual operating grants given out to community and nonprofit groups.

I'm delighted to hear that in fact the minister will be providing me with that information. I will then be able to pass it on to my constituent. One more step in Alberta towards open and accountable government and sharing of information.

[Written Question 22 carried]

head: Motions for Returns

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it is my pleasure once again to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places.

Bill 209 Employment Standards (Parental Leave) Amendment Act, 2000

[Debate adjourned May 23: Ms Blakeman speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. I've waited a long time to be able to debate this bill. I think I was able to do my first two minutes about six months ago, so I'd like to complete the last 18 of them at this point.

Bill 209 is proposed by the Member for Calgary-Fort. On the face of it, I really like what's being proposed here in that our current situation of leave is narrowly focused, restricted to maternal leave, and the longest possible leave, unpaid of course, that is sanctioned under the employment standards act here in Alberta is 18 weeks. The member is proposing that any references to maternal leave be widened and the terminology changed to that of paternal leave and that a possible total of 27 weeks could be taken by either parent but not simultaneously, one parent at a time.

I appreciate that this is a private member's bill. It's not a government bill, so perhaps this is an idea that's being sort of tried out or run up the flag pole to see if anybody salutes. I hope that if that is the case, the government will follow through on that. If not, my compliments to the member for forging ahead with what he believes is a good idea.

Now, there are wider implications in this bill. Every action has a consequence to it, and I don't think that we can look at this bill in isolation of all of the other programs, benefits, remedies, and in some cases drawbacks to what's available to people. What struck me when I looked at this bill is that it's a very middle-class bill. I would venture to say that it will be mostly the middle class that could possibly take advantage of it. I don't know if that's what the member intended, but I wish there were ways of having those that would benefit from this program captured in this net, that the net could be cast wider.

Essentially what the bill is dealing with is job security. The 18 weeks that's current or the 27 weeks that's being proposed under this bill is about whether your job will be held open for you, when you can return to your job. There's no payment that's coming along with this. I've already had some people contact me about this. I've received some e-mails on it, and a lot of people don't understand that that's what is being proposed here. The only payment that is possible at this point with either maternal or paternal benefits comes through the EI program, so the 27 weeks that are being proposed here – some people have also talked about the federal government expanding their similar program to 52 weeks – that's about job security. That means you can take that time unpaid, and when you come back at the end of that period of time, the same job should be there or a job that's very similar to it.

Therefore, it's mostly the middle class that would be able to benefit from this program because they're the only ones that are going to be likely to have earned enough money to have enough savings in the bank to tide them over this period. When you look at who is qualifying for EI benefits in this day and age, I'm afraid I'm not smiling happily at the current federal government, because the changes in the EI program . . . [interjection] Well, I'm so glad that the member agrees with me that we should have better parental leave programs, and I'm looking forward to his input on this debate.

The point is that it is members of that middle class that would be most likely to be able to access the current EI program in that the program is now based on the number of hours that have been worked over a specific period of time. What we have is an increasing participation in the workforce by women but also by men, which is part-time people working several part-time jobs. Well, their EI benefits and eligibility are much lower as a result of that and more and more people working on contract which has no EI benefits attached to it whatsoever. I mean, if you're a real high flyer that's able to command a very large contract fee, good on you. But I hope the individual would have incorporated into that fee things like holiday pay and in this instance some money tucked away for parental leave, because they're not going to be able to access any funding through the current EI program.

This program as proposed by the Member for Calgary-Fort, while obviously intended to be open to everyone – I don't know how many will actually be able to enjoy it, if the bill indeed passes, simply because they can't afford to. I look at this again, and I say that you can't look at this issue in isolation. I know that the government has a tendency to sort of behave or develop policies as though children were somehow hatched, that they don't come from families. Well, you have poor children, and they come from poor families. You have to look at these things in context. If this government was really interested in supporting families with children, I have a couple of suggestions to make, and maybe there's a way that the member can tie this into his bill or work along with it as ancillary programs, but I don't know that the bill is going to be as useful as it could have been without the context that I'm about to describe.

For example, there's been a long period of lobbying for midwifery services. Women don't really have any choice in how they have their baby in this day and age. Parental leave aside, whether it's paid or unpaid or how long it is, right now they don't even have a choice about how they are going to birth their child. So there's an issue that the government can be working on. I've been lobbying the government for over 10 years now. This is not a difficult thing to do, and it certainly does give families more choice and makes a number of people much, much more secure in that choice.

Child care. A number of years ago the government cut direct subsidies to the child care centres themselves. The subsidies are only directly available to the parents, which, as we know – it's been brought up in this Assembly before – has really reduced the flexibility of these child care centres. They're supposed to be available to cater to 40 children in one day. Well, they've got to keep the staff on, and the staff have to be trained, et cetera, et cetera. But they might only get 10 kids showing up. They don't have any kind of subsidy that is covering all of those children that they are going to have to cater to in a whole year, so it's on their dime, and frankly they're nonprofit societies, most of them, and can't afford that dime. We have a reduced number of spaces for child care that are available in Alberta because the nonprofit societies simply can't afford to keep their doors open or keep them open at the level they were before.

Midwifery, child care: two issues that this government could work on if we're really interested in the context of parents spending time with their children and making sure that their children have a quality experience.

Let's look at schools. When parents are deciding whether or not they're going to have children, they're going to take all of this into their decision-making, and they should. I'm sure that most parents are really conscientious about that. Are there going to be schools available for their children? Will there be schools available in the vicinity, or are they going to be living in one of these areas where the ground is there, the empty space is there, but: no, gosh, sorry, you're supposed to have a school; yeah, yeah, we thought it would be built 20 years ago, but it's just not on the list. So your child will be in university by the time they actually build the school a block away from your house.

I mean, that's a consideration here if you are going to talk about children and families in Alberta. So is there even access to a school? Are you going to put the kids on a bus? Maybe the parent has to consider taking the time to drive the child to school. That's also a consideration as to whether they are going to have children. How many children are they going to have, and what quality of life are we talking about here? Is the school system going to be funded adequately, or is that child going to be sitting in a classroom with 35 other kids? It's a consideration for a parent, and I'm sure that a conscientious parent is considering choices like that.

Let's assume that we got this child all the way through school in some kind of quality education. Now we're looking at university tuition. Already today we've had representatives from colleges and institutes of technology and universities here. I mean, can these parents afford to support their child or to put money aside or to cosign the loans, frankly?

So when we're looking at a bill that starts out by talking about parental leave, all of this has to be in context. You can't make these decisions and I don't think parents do make these decisions in isolation. I don't think somebody jumps up one morning and goes: "Hee-haw, the government of Alberta has extended the parental leave to 18 weeks. That's it, boy; we're going to fire up here. Let's have a kid because of that one."

I think most people are going: "Hmm, is it the right time of my life? Am I in good health to do this? What sorts of resources are available to my family to carry this through? Can I afford the time off work? Is there a possibility of putting enough money aside in our working lives for this kind of education?" So all of these things have to be taken into context.

A more difficult side to look at for this government when we're looking at the issue of children in families is the 60 percent increase in children in custody. That's a really stunning, horrible figure for all of us legislators in this Assembly to be working with. I'm sure that those parents, when they had those kids, when they contemplated whether that leave would be useful to them or not, didn't contemplate being so poor that they'd have to put their children in care, in the care and custody of the government.

I'm not saying that I don't appreciate what the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort has brought here. I do. But I think you have to look at it along with a number of other issues. As I said, I think parents today, prospective parents, do have to look at it. I mean, if we want to be economical about it, they essentially have to do a risk assessment. Can they afford this and all of the other things that are going to add up to that? I've talked about some of the bills that they know they're going to have to face.

I have to say that I am startled when I look around at people I know who don't have children and who I thought would have had children, who I expected to become parents. You know, without prying, but you do, you say: so you decided never to have kids. One couple flat out said to me: "Well, Laurie, you know that we're Alliance/Reform supporters and that we're very comfortable with the current government. We believe there shouldn't be any maternity benefits at all, that you should pay the whole shot yourself. That's what we believe. We like you, Laurie. You're still our friend, but we're not going to vote for you." Okay. Fine. They're still my friends. They looked at all of these costs, and they decided not to have children. I hope that's isolated. I really hope that's isolated, but I don't think it is anymore. I think more and more people are doing that risk assessment and going: uh-uh, it's not adding up here. It's particularly not adding up in Alberta.

I would like to support this bill. I do like the idea that parental leave is extending what's available now, that it does allow fathers to be more involved in the early years of their children's or their adoptive children's lives. I think that's really important. You know, I've campaigned for women's rights and equal rights for a long, long time, and part of that package is encouraging men to get more involved in their children's lives. I think this is a really concrete way to do that, and it is showing leadership. There is an expectation or a hope that indeed fathers would be taking advantage of having a parental leave program, so I really like that.

I think the additional time that's being proposed is also helpful, but I would urge the member to work in conjunction with members of his own government and perhaps look at talking, as well, with the federal government. In this day and age for a one-income family it's very, very difficult to get along. I think you have to have a number of other things in place. It's not enough to just say: "Great. You know, you can take more time off, and your job will still be there." I think there are lots of other things that are coming into play in this day and age.

When I talk about the one-earner family, this is partly what's got me a little confused about the mover of this motion. When we were discussing Motion 506, which was put forward by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, that was a motion that was to value in a very concrete way the value of a stay-at-home parent in a one-income earner household. I've looked at the Hansard, and in fact the hon. member that's proposing this bill spoke against that motion. So I don't quite understand what the deal here is. Yes, giving unpaid leave or extended unpaid leave to one group of people is good, but we don't want to value the stay-at-home. I don't understand what's being said by that. Do we want them to just stay home for 18 weeks, then get back into the workforce? In speaking against and, I'm assuming, voting against Edmonton-Gold Bar's Motion 506, there was no support for those families that choose or are financially able to have one income earner and the other parent staying at home. To vote against what was being proposed in that motion and then to come forward with this bill is, I'll admit, giving me two messages, so I'm not sure exactly what this all stands for and what the support of the government is for all of this.

Those are the comments that I wanted to bring forward in this debate. I just want to quickly reference some of the e-mails and mail that I've received on this issue, and in particular they're pointing out the same inconsistency that I just pointed out. It doesn't seem clear on what kind of parents they're willing to support and for how long, again raising the concerns about the very low welfare rates causing parents to have to put their children into care with the government and what that really says about a commitment to children. This one person in particular was most annoyed with having the 52 weeks of unpaid leave put forward by the federal government and was looking to see what the provincial government was proposing.

I look forward to the continued debate and the responses to my questions from the mover of the bill, and I wish him all the best with this bill. I think it deserves some support, but it also deserves more action from the government.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to rise today and to speak in favour of private member's Bill 209. As a parent myself and now a grandparent many times over I believe it is critical that this government does everything in its power to help families and improve the well-being of children in this province. Bill 209, proposed by my colleague from Calgary-Fort, represents a small but important step toward improving the lives of many of Alberta's children.

Since we've all been away for a while, I'll begin by refreshing the memories of my fellow members as to what Bill 209 would entail. This legislation would amend the Employment Standards Code to allow for a maximum of 27 weeks of parental leave, which could be taken by one parent or divided between both parents as they see fit. The intent of the bill is to permit new parents to spend as much time as possible with their child in the all-important first few months of the newborn's life. The bill also amalgamates current provisions for maternity leave and adoption leave, giving adoptive parents the same opportunity to form a lasting bond with their new child.

Mr. Speaker, I support Bill 209 because I firmly believe that allowing a parent or both parents to spend just a little more time with their new children can have a significant impact on the future of the child. In fact, it is one of the more important factors in ensuring that children grow up to be caring, responsible, and well-adjusted adults.

Longer periods of parental leave are in line with this government's other intervention programs that encourage mothers to spend more time with their newborns. Furthermore, there is currently an extensive volume of scientific evidence that suggests that children who have more direct contact with parents in their early months and years turn out to be better adjusted and healthier adults. As a result, Mr. Speaker, parental advocacy groups across North America have been very active in promoting early childhood involvement by both parents, particularly since dual-income households have become the norm in our society. In other words, the commonly accepted belief that children whose parents take an active role in their early development are more socially adjusted is supported both by scientific evidence and by experts in the field of child development.

Even further arguments have been made regarding the need for fathers to be as active in early parenting as mothers are. Some studies have demonstrated a direct relationship between children's behaviour and the amount of time and support provided by not just mothers but fathers as well. This bill would address that factor by allowing the parents themselves to determine which of them would take the leave and when, rather than restricting them to a few short weeks of maternity leave.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, there are volumes of social science research that address the issue of early childhood development and the effect of a young child's environment on how that child will function in society as he or she grows up. I won't bore my colleagues by enumerating them all in detail, but I will point out that the findings of these studies are consistent and unequivocal. They indicate that the quality of a child's psychological, emotional, and intellectual development is significantly better when care is received from a parent as opposed to a paid caregiver or other relative.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the president of the Canadian Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, Dr. Elliott Barker, has argued very persuasively that nothing is more important in the world today than the nurturing that children receive in the first three years of life, for it is in these earliest years that the capacity for trust, empathy, and affection originates. However, if the emotional needs of the child are not met during these years, permanent emotional damage can occur.

Mr. Speaker, it seems obvious from the evidence that extending parental leave is a desirable option for this province. The question then becomes: will the cost of this program be passed on to small employers? The answer is: of course not. This legislation will involve no added cost to employers in the province of Alberta. The only sacrifice employers will face is that they will be required to hold an employee's position for an additional period of time. In some cases this could be up to nine weeks more than the 18 weeks currently granted by the Alberta labour code, or it could be less if both parents choose to split the 27 weeks unpaid leave that would be allowed, assuming they have different employers.

However, I must emphasize that this is not paid leave. The 27 weeks proposed in Bill 209 simply refer to the amount of time an employer must hold a position open for an employee on leave. Any payment an employee receives will be from the federal government employee insurance program, not the employer. This is a program that Albertans already pay into, a program that every other jurisdiction in this country allows their parents to take advantage of for at least 25 weeks. In other words, Mr. Speaker, by making use of this federal program, Albertans will simply be reclaiming what is their own.

I should also mention here that other jurisdictions in Canada permit much more generous leave time for parents. This legislation merely aims to bring Alberta in line with the national average. New Brunswick, the Northwest Territories, and the Yukon all offer 17 weeks of maternity leave which must be scheduled prior to the expected date of delivery. These jurisdictions also provide a subsequent 12 weeks of parental or adoptive leave, a potential total of 29 weeks' leave. This is leave which may be used by either parent as long as both parents are not away from work at the same time.

The province of Ontario offers 17 weeks of maternity leave and 18 weeks of parental or adoptive leave, while Quebec has the most generous leave of all jurisdictions. They offer 18 weeks of maternity leave and up to 52 weeks of parental leave. In fact, Quebec was the first province to introduce maternity and parental leave provisions into its employment standards act. Moreover, that province was instrumental in pressuring the federal government to extend EI coverage to parental leave beyond the current 27 weeks.

As of January 1, 2001, Mr. Speaker, the federal government will provide EI coverage for maternity and parental leave for a period of 50 weeks. British Columbia and Nova Scotia have already announced that they will extend their leave provisions to one year as well.

Mr. Speaker, it should by now be evident that the leave provisions offered elsewhere in Canada provide greater support for families than the provisions offered in this province. In Alberta employees who have been with the same employer for at least a period of one year receive only 18 weeks of maternity leave. Currently adoptive parents receive just eight weeks of leave. Clearly, Alberta is being left behind, and we must act soon to give our families the support they need and deserve.

I'm sorry to say, Mr. Speaker, that this support is perhaps more forthcoming even in other countries. A recent report published by Save the Children concluded that rich countries may not be the best at taking care of their mothers and, in turn, their children. The report ranked Canada ninth in the world when it came to the well-being of children. I looked into this and found that many of the countries that outranked Canada have longer leaves for new parents. Actually, many of these were European countries. In Europe women generally receive a well-paid leave. In Norway, for example, mothers can take 42 weeks parental leave at full wage or 52 weeks at 80 percent.

What Bill 209 proposes is not so drastic a measure. Rather, it strikes a wise balance between the needs of children and families and the economic realities faced by Alberta employers. Madam Speaker, private member's Bill 209 is not even recommending that we extend parental leave to one full year. In my view and that of many employers, such a move would be excessive in our economic climate. This bill is proposing that we extend leave for parents to bring it in line with the national average, and it is asking that we do take meaningful action to enhance the welfare of our children.

Furthermore, Madam Speaker, this amendment to the Employment Standards Code would amalgamate current provisions for maternity leave and adoption leave; that is, it would provide adoptive parents with the same amount of parental leave as a biological parent. This is certainly a positive initiative that would reinforce the notion that the rights and responsibilities of adoptive parents are equal to those of biological parents.

For these reasons I would urge my colleagues to support Bill 209. It offers us a rare opportunity to make a significant difference in the lives of Alberta children, and we should not pass it up.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This government, when it comes to family values, likes to talk the talk, but they don't always walk the walk. Bill 209 is a step in the right direction when we look at family values and we look at those components of quality of life that lead towards family values. When we look at Bill 209 and we look at the current legislation, the Employment Standards Act and the 18 weeks of maternal leave that is allowed, the extension to 27 weeks is certainly a step in the right direction. It falls short, of course, of the federal legislation. The extension to 27 weeks is a benefit, and of course the application to parents who adopt is particularly good.

Society has changed during my lifetime dramatically, and attitudes have changed. We talk about the old school, and we talk about the way it was. It is changing, and it will continue to change. That change is, generally speaking, good because it does recognize that life is a whole lot more complicated and becomes more complicated and more stressful as time goes on. There used to be a time when you went to school and got a grade 12 education. You went out and got a job as a mechanic's helper, whatever. But there's a whole new emphasis on lifestyle. There's a whole new emphasis on recognition of family values, of doing what is best for one's child or children.

The member from what I call the triple S riding likes to hear some of my stories about my younger days, and I'm going to talk just a bit about the way it used to be – what? – 35 years ago. I recall when my son was born. My son – she's not even listening.

MRS. SOETAERT: I am.

MR. WICKMAN: I'm telling a story that will interest you.

Now, it involves my son when he was born about 35 years ago; you know, my son the architect. Back in those days, when Silvia was pregnant and in the morning had her labour pains, I was a milkman working for the Northern Alberta Dairy Pool. She had her labour pains. We got up. I drove her to the hospital, dropped her off. I didn't even walk her in. I dropped her off, and I went on to work. I finished my milk route that day. Afterwards I went to the Grand Hotel, bought a round of beer, and passed out cigars. That's the way it was back then. You know, it may sound shocking to newer parents here, but that was par for the course. If I wanted to go into the delivery room, of course, they wouldn't have allowed it.

Now, I compare that to 10 years ago. Some of you may remember me sitting here so anxious. I had this communication network set up when my daughter-in-law was in the University hospital and we were in anticipation of my first grandchild, who turned out to be a very sweet granddaughter, Ceira. Now, when I got the message to get outside there and make a quick call, I called my son. He said: Dad, you get down here in 20 minutes; otherwise it will be too late. We got down there. Of course, he was in the delivery room.

MRS. SOETAERT: You weren't though.

MR. WICKMAN: No, I wasn't. I got there a bit too late.

The other grandparents were there. My wife was there. There were brothers-in-law there. It was like family there. It was a really, really happy occasion, and that is the reality of today. I imagine we're going to see further changes.

Now, my next story involves 1971. This will brighten the heart of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. I worked for the students' union at the University of Alberta, hired by David Leadbeater. We were not part of the academic staff or the nonacademic staff. We were a group of about 40 employees. One of the first things we did was formed a union. We unionized the student union staff, and we were allowed to do it. We became a local of CUPE, and we joined the Edmonton and District Labour Council. Now, in our very first contract that we negotiated with the students' union management and executive – and this is almost 30 years ago – we got paternal leave. That's almost unheard of, and we rejoiced, thinking that other unions would follow and this would become par for the course. It didn't happen, because we had the advantage of dealing with a very, very enlightened employer and being students, who tend to be a bit more idealistic and at times a bit more, maybe, realistic to the changing times. So there are examples that we can look back to where there is some recognition that there have to be changes.

Now, we look at what is happening federally. We have changes in the employment standards there that allow for I believe it's an additional six months of leave shared by both spouses or both parents, 27 weeks apiece. Of course, that's without pay. We look at the current EI Act that allows up to six months with pay, and as far as I can recall – and I stand to be corrected here – that only applies to the mother. I don't believe that the father has that option of staying at home and the mother continuing to work, whatever the case may be, or going back to work or them sharing it. I don't believe it applies to parents who adopt, but again I could be wrong.

Many, many years ago I remember seeing a movie with Michael Keaton; was it? It was called Mr. Mom. Some of you may have seen that movie. It was considered a comedy, but it was a concept that has become more and more par for the course in today's society. That is where the father stayed at home and the mother went to work. Of course, in the movie the father is mocked, because they refer to him as Mr. Mom. He goes shopping with the other moms, and he goes to the park with the other moms. He's the only one.

He's the only father who stays at home. Now it has changed. There is recognition that the father wants the same role in raising a child – not in the birth of a baby, of course, but in raising a child – being there in the early days as the mother in many, many instances. In many instances now the father will be the one that will stay home and raise that child as the mother goes to further her career.

In fact, my wife has a cousin in Germany that has gone to the extreme that he has not only stayed at home as the caregiver for that child, but he has taken her name. Now, I know that is very, very unusual, and I know that many of the female members of the House here will probably applaud that particular move. Ten years from now we may see many, many husbands doing the same thing when they get married: taking the spouse's name. Apparently in Germany they're not allowed to put the two names together, so you have to pick one or the other.

What it does is demonstrate that attitudes have changed. Attitudes have changed in most countries around the world. Attitudes have changed such that we recognize there is a much greater role for fathers in raising their children than we saw in the past. We have to take the appropriate courses of action to ensure that there is recognition. Of course, Bill 209 is a step in the right direction. We see some positive direction in that recognition of the family values that this government likes to talk about so much.

When I think back to my early days – and we all have pleasant memories of our children and grandchildren. The Member for Livingstone-Macleod, if I remember right, became a grandfather for the first time. What a thrill, eh? Wouldn't you like to be there right now with that grandchild? Exactly. That's one of the reasons that some of us sort of see that there's life after politics, because we have the opportunity to spend time with those grandchildren.

So the role of a parent, the role of a father, the role of a mother becomes very, very important, and the role of a grandparent becomes equally important. I'm not sure if this government has ever fully addressed an issue that is indirectly related, and that's the rights of the grandparent. Have we ever dealt with that one, the rights of the grandparent? In other words, if something were to happen that my son and daughter-in-law were to separate for whatever reason – let's say it was bitter – could I be denied further access to my grandchildren, who love me dearly? I thought we did deal with a bill.

MRS. SOETAERT: No. You can go to court.

MR. WICKMAN: We can go to court. Okay. Well, that's very, very positive too.

When we talk in terms of family values, when we talk in terms of a family model, we talk in terms of course of the mother, the father, the grandmothers, the grandfathers, and it's all one big unit. We have to respect that it's one large component that consists of a number of subcomponents. It's very, very important that all members of that particular family have the opportunity to participate in those experiences that are so joyful.

I imagine I could sit down with my departing member the Provincial Treasurer. I imagine I could sit down with the Provincial Treasurer, and we may have some differences on this in terms of family values. Nevertheless, I am glad that there is some recognition on that side of the House of the importance of this particular bill. It has come from a member of the government side, and that to me is an indication that we may see a vast majority of this House support Bill 209 at this particular stage so it can advance and can be given royal assent and we actually see it proclaimed.

So I do congratulate the member for bringing the bill forward. If it was my particular bill, I probably would have gone a bit further even, but I recognize that you sometimes have to take baby steps. Sometimes you can't achieve everything overnight, so being a realist, I think the member realizes that possibly even he would like to have seen an expanded bill. But sometimes you try and sell too much, and you end up with nothing. Sometimes it's better to take a little bit here, and in a year from now you take a little bit more. Then eventually you achieve your own goals.

Now, there may be one or two others that might want to speak on this bill. I know we're down to just a few minutes, so just in case there's any last-minute thought – and I know the Member for Calgary-Buffalo can never resist the opportunity to stand up there and speak – I will give up the floor.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very glad to have this opportunity to participate in the debate surrounding Bill 209, the employment standards amendment act. Many people may not be aware that Alberta currently allows the lowest amount of sanctioned maternity and parental leave time of any jurisdiction in the whole country. For this reason I believe it is long past time to revisit our current maternity leave provisions. In fact, our current maternity leave provisions were established in the old Employment Standards Code of 1976, almost 25 years ago. Though many of us have benefited from these provisions and they have served a very useful purpose, much time has passed and many things have changed, including our knowledge about the best child care and nurturing.

In light of the knowledge that good parental care is so critical in the first months and years of a child's life, I strongly support the principle of Bill 209. Just to clarify, Madam Speaker, that principle is that the true beneficiaries of this legislation and of parental leave will be the children of Alberta. How will they derive that benefit? By being around the most important people in their lives, their mom or dad, for as much time as possible in the very critical early stages of life. It is true that parents will also derive some benefit from having access to 27 weeks of leave. However, parents who take maternity or paternal leave are performing a valuable contribution to Alberta and helping to raise happy, well-adjusted Albertans for the future.

Turning from the future to the past for a moment, I know that many of us here in the Assembly had the benefit of being raised, at least in the early years, by one parent who stayed at home. I also know that many of us in this Assembly may believe that is the best way to raise a child. Now, we may not be authorities in the field of child care, but many of us are parents and grandparents with a lot of subjective evidence on which to base the conclusion that a child raised with the love and care of its parents has a great start in life. In this case, Madam Speaker, it is a conclusion that the child care experts agree with. Those who preceded me in this debate have cited studies and statistics that demonstrate there is considerable truth to this hypothesis.

One might be tempted to ask, though, why we need legislation to create something called parental leave rather than just extending maternity leave. Well, parental advocacy groups across North America have been very active in promoting early childhood involvement by both parents, particularly since dual-income households are increasingly the norm. In fact, Madam Speaker, seven out of 10 families in this country are dual-income families.

Arguments have been made regarding the need for fathers to be as active in early parenting as mothers. Among others, Dr. Paul Amatos of the University of Nebraska has demonstrated a direct relationship between children's behaviour and the amount of time and support provided by not just mothers but fathers as well. Now, it seems only sensible that as a government we should leave it up to these families to sort out their own hectic schedules and determine on their own which parent will take leave and for how long. Bill 209 allows parents this freedom of choice, another reason I support it. However, Madam Speaker, despite supporting Bill 209 and its basic intent, I must also note one potential problem with the legislation.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, but unfortunately under Standing Order 8(5)(a), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would now invite the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort to close debate on Bill 209.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Let me begin by saying that I'm very grateful to all of my colleagues who have contributed to the debate on my private member's bill and the many Albertans who called and sent e-mail to indicate their support. I was pleased to see a number of members of this House rise in support of the Employment Standards (Parental Leave) Amendment Act. I have also taken note of the concerns raised by some of my other colleagues. Despite these minor concerns, I still believe that Bill 209 is a positive initiative that could make a profound difference in the early development of young Albertans.

In fact, Madam Speaker, that was my perspective in designing this bill. I approached the situation not from the point of view of the mother or the father or the employer. I considered the issue from the perspective of a newborn, of a recently adopted child. From the perspective of that child the very best thing possible is without a doubt to spend as much time as possible with a loving and nurturing parent.

Bill 209 does several things in order to achieve this highly desirable goal. First, it raises the permitted amount of unpaid leave from 18 weeks to 27 weeks, bringing it in line with the national average. Secondly, Bill 209 amalgamates maternity leave and parental leave, thus allowing parents the freedom to determine which one of them will stay home with the child and for how long. Thirdly, Bill 209 extends this new parental leave provision to adoptive parents as well, giving them the same rights as other new mothers and fathers.

Madam Speaker, I think the potential benefits of Bill 209 are clear. As we have heard in this House, study after study shows that the early relationship between parent and child is one of the most critical factors in determining the future health and happiness and success of a child.

Now, Madam Speaker, there are just a couple of additional points I would like to emphasize as we conclude the debate on Bill 209. I know that some of my colleagues have expressed concern about the effect that this legislation will have on businesses in Alberta. However, given the recent extension of the federal employment insurance benefit to cover parental leave for the entire year, Bill 209 is unlikely to cause Alberta businesses to incur any significant additional cost. It may cause some temporary reduction in staff availability, but with 1.5 million Albertans in the workforce and only 37,000 births per year the impact is likely to be quite minimal. It is even possible that productivity could improve as employees return to work energized and refocused after 27 weeks rather than tired and distracted after just 18 weeks.

So, Madam Speaker, since my bill's impact on Alberta's tremendous prosperity is likely to be minimal and the potential impact on the future of our children is so great, I would urge all my colleagues to support the bill. If there remains any minor or technical problems with the legislation, they can surely be worked out at the future stages of this legislative process, but the principle behind the bill is unquestionably sound.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, this bill represents a momentous opportunity to make a real difference in the lives of Alberta children and families. We cannot afford to pass up this chance. Please think and feel for the Alberta infants when you vote on this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Bill 210 Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2000

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and present my private member's bill, Bill 210, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, to the Assembly today.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to dedicate Bill 210 to Ben and Darlene Keuben, Susan and Gordon Smith, Jean and Doug Powell in loving memory of their children Amber and Brandy Keuben, Amber's boyfriend Craig Powell, and Brandy's friend Stephanie Smith.

It's over four years since the tragic day that these young people lost their lives. In an instant on June 23, 1996, near Morley, Alberta, the lives of three families were shattered. Four young people returning home to Calgary, returning to their families following a weekend camping trip, were killed instantly in a head-on collision. The lives of these four young people were ended by a convicted impaired driver. He was drunk, and these young people paid the ultimate price.

If I may, Madam Speaker, I would like again to read to the members of the Assembly an excerpt from the letter written to me shortly after by the parents of two of these girls.

Two of these young people were our daughters – Amber who was 20 and Brandy who was 15. The other two were very close friends of our girls. Not only did we lose our family that day, but our life as we've known it has changed forever. As parents you work and dream for a future for your children. Our dreams also died. We are left mad. We are left angry. We are left frustrated. Most of the time we are numb, and most of the time we are sick. How do you walk away and rebuild your life? We are now at a point where we need to see some changes made. How many more innocent people have to die before we realize that the impaired drinking laws are not working?

Madam Speaker, the alleged drunk driver in this case was charged with four counts of criminal negligence, one count of criminal negligence causing injury, and four counts of impaired driving causing death. This man did not even possess a valid driver's licence.

By the time the preliminary hearings were concluded and a court date was set for the accused, a year and a half had passed since that tragic day. This extended period of time was extremely difficult on the family. How do these three families pick up the pieces of their shattered lives following such a tragic event? Furthermore, outrage and disgust followed the sentencing, which was a five-year jail term for killing four young people. The driver will be eligible for parole in 20 months. To this family and many other Albertans, murder is murder, whether it's by a gun or by a car.

Madam Speaker, Alberta has the fifth highest rate of people charged with impaired driving of all the jurisdictions in Canada and almost two times as many as Ontario and British Columbia. In 1998 one out of five drivers involved in fatal collisions had consumed alcohol. As the involvement of alcohol increased, so did the severity of the accidents. In 1998 there were 17,345 casualty collisions in Alberta. In 1,586 of them, or 9.1 percent, the drivers had either been drinking or judged to have been impaired. In the same year 22.6 percent of fatal collisions involved drivers that had been drinking or impaired. Across Canada among fatally injured drivers who had alcohol in their blood system, 62 percent of the fatalities had a BAC over 150 milligrams, 22 percent of fatalities had a BAC of 81 to 150 milligrams, 16 percent of fatalities had a BAC of 1 to 80 milligrams.

Madam Speaker, although Criminal Code impaired driving convictions can give rise to significant consequences, an accused person routinely faces the possibility of additional sanctions. Most of the provinces and territories have instituted administrative penalties or controls to mandate action against the suspected and convicted impaired drivers, some of which may be effective immediately and independently of any Criminal Code conviction.

It is clear that more can be done to address this problem and stop unnecessarily placing the lives of Albertans at risk. If this were Utopia, the federal government would have invoked a zero tolerance in the Criminal Code long ago. In Canada every eight hours someone is killed by an impaired driver.

Statistics like this have prompted me to take action. This Assembly cannot change the Criminal Code. It is out of our jurisdiction. What we can do is write our own traffic laws in the interest of public safety. This is what my bill does. It prevents drivers who blow over .05 BAC to the legal limit from driving for 24 hours. It is very simple. It is a reasonable request, and it is the right thing to do.

Clearly we must continue to educate and raise awareness to put an end to these tragedies, to save the lives of these people. In fact, this legislation is driven by the tragic death of my constituents in my constituency and across the province due to impaired motorists. We should be moving to make it harder for drunk drivers to offend and to get drivers whose judgment is impaired by alcohol off the road. This is what my bill intends to do.

Most provinces have legislated brief periods of licence suspension for persons whose BAC is over 50 milligrams of alcohol but less than the criminal legal limit of 80 milligrams. The purpose of such action is to allow the police to suspend drivers at the roadside for up to 24 hours in the hope of preventing an impaired driving offence, to give them one more mechanism for prevention.

Madam Speaker, many studies and interest groups have expressed the view that despite the fact that a BAC of .08 percent is the legal point of criminal impairment, a driver is actually impaired at much lower levels. For example, the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, AADAC, notes that even with a BAC below .08 percent, thoughts, judgment, and ability to estimate distance can be impaired and reaction time decreased. AADAC states that at a .06 percent BAC, judgment is somewhat impaired, there is some loss of physical co-ordination, and a person is less able to make rational decisions about their capabilities.

Madam Speaker, these are drivers that police have at their own discretion the ability to suspend for 24 hours. These are drivers that are often let go at a check stop. This should not be the case if these drivers are a threat to the public. Moving to .05 may be more of a deterrent to people who do not want to break the law. I hope this bill will start the process to move to a .05 legal limit, help educate people that their judgment slows down when you drink, and put pressure on the federal government to get their act together.

Madam Speaker, all Canadian jurisdictions except Alberta have legislation to address a .05 BAC. In British Columbia if a driver is caught driving with a BAC of .05 to .08 percent, the driver is subject to a 24-hour suspension, which is recorded on his or her driver's licence. Saskatchewan uses a points system to assess drivers and their infractions. If drivers are caught a second time with a blood alcohol level within the warning range, a BAC of .05 to .08, they receive an automatic 24-hour roadside licence suspension, and more points are applied to their licence. If an experienced driver is caught a third time with a blood alcohol level within the range, they receive an automatic 24-hour roadside licence suspension and must attend addiction screening. Newer, probation drivers face a much stiffer penalty and extension of the driver probationary period of one to two years.

In Manitoba a driver caught with a BAC between .05 and .08 receives an automatic 24-hour licence suspension and pays a $40 surcharge when they renew their licence. Already touted as having the toughest drinking and driving laws in the country, Manitoba has recently made them even tougher by automatically impounding the vehicles of impaired drivers for 30 days and 90 days for repeat offenders. They expect that this could cut impaired driving fatalities by half.

Ontario legislation states that if a driver is caught with a blood alcohol level between .05 and .08, a peace officer can require the suspension of his or her driver's licence for a period of 12 hours. Drivers in Ontario's graduated licensing system – that's new drivers – must maintain a BAC of zero or be subject to a 30-day licence suspension and fine.

Newfoundland drivers caught with a BAC between .05 and .08 are subject to an automatic 24-hour roadside suspension plus a $100 licence reinstatement fee to be paid within 30 days. If the fine is not paid, the driver's suspension continues until the payment is made. If a driver is caught three times within two years, that driver is then subject to a two-month suspension and must take a Think First alcohol education program.

If caught driving in Prince Edward Island with a BAC between .05 and .08, the driver is subject to a 24-hour licence suspension. Drivers under the age of 19 who are caught with a BAC within the range are subject to an administrative driving prohibition, which causes a suspension of 90 days in addition to the regular 24-hour suspension.

The Northwest Territories currently does not deal with the BAC of between .05 and .08. However, public consultations are currently under way to possibly introduce legislation which would impose administrative penalties upon drivers caught driving with a BAC of over .04 percent. These consultations are expected to be completed, but as of this date no legislation has been passed, and the legislation proposals have just been recently submitted.

Madam Speaker, Bill 210 is not going to take drivers with a BAC of .05 to .08 and lock them away and throw away the key. It simply takes a driver who is a danger to public safety and removes his or her driving privileges for 24 hours. What Bill 210 is saying is that drinking and driving hurts everyone involved, so just don't do it. Having a 24-hour suspension is certainly going to make anyone think about it before they drive having had a couple, because in fact many impaired driving accidents happen after only a couple. This legislation will work in keeping drinking drivers off the road, making our roads safer for all Albertans. Having a licence suspension for 24 hours for drivers in that range is a small initiative that will pay huge dividends by saving the lives of Albertans.

Bill 210 is supported by the Calgary and the Edmonton police; the RCMP; AADAC; the Alberta Motor Association; PAID, which is People Against Impaired Driving; MADD, which is Mothers Against Drinking Drivers; the McCauley seniors action group; SADD, which is Students against Drunk Drivers; and many, many other Albertans. A majority of Canadians want their elected officials to introduce tougher laws and stiffer penalties to halt incidents of impaired driving. A random poll of 1,200 Canadians revealed that 9 out of every 10 Canadians believe that impaired driving is a problem that governments should fight. Three of every four Canadians surveyed believe that federal and provincial governments are not doing enough to reduce the blood alcohol concentration levels from 80 to 50.

Madam Speaker, Bill 210 could have saved the lives of Amber and Brandy, Craig and Stephanie, and countless other Albertans.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to speak to Bill 210, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2000. I can appreciate where the member is coming from. I've listened intently, and I guess from this I'm trying to figure out: would making this law have saved those lives?

I had a cousin. She was in her mid-30s with four children, owned a Wendy's in Grande Prairie. Locked it up late one night, and on her way home she was killed by an impaired driver. Would this type of legislation have saved her life? I don't know, and I don't know if making the net bigger and catching more people at a certain blood alcohol level is how we achieve that. Is it addressing those people who drive impaired? Is that not the issue we should get at? That's what I want to see in legislation. I want to be tough on those people who drive impaired.

I haven't decided how I'm going to vote on this bill. I am going to listen to everything. What I really want to weigh out is: is that the prevention that we're looking for?

Our youth group has had a speaker from Mothers Against Drinking Drivers, a powerful, passionate speech. Every time my kids drive to a party or go somewhere, especially Friday and Saturday nights, I always say, "Drive carefully." I always say a prayer that they come home safely. So that's what we need to be looking for. I would venture to say that some of our young people are far better than we are. In fact, just the other night my daughter was going to a party, and she phoned me – she's 18 – and said: "Mom, I'm going to have a couple of drinks. Would you mind picking me up at midnight?" So like a good mother of course I said: sure, that's no problem. Now, fortunately she was at a party next door to my mom's, and Grandma said: well, you just crawl into bed here. So that's what she did. And do you know what? A lot of kids do that. They'll stay overnight at somebody's place. They'll have a designated driver. To me that's where we should focus our energy, on education and prevention.

I know many of us have seen kids from our communities be fortunate enough to be part of the PARTY program, where they take kids to the hospital and there they set up a program so that kids know what it's like to try to eat with limited capabilities, to try to do things when they're unable to see or unable to walk. It's a powerful program for young teens. Every young person I've talked to who's gone through that PARTY program has benefited from it and has realized that that's not where they want to be. They are very conscientious about safe driving and drinking and driving.

I want safer roads. I think all of us know of someone or know of a family or have someone in our family who's lost their life because of an impaired driver. I don't think there's anyone here who wouldn't say: "You know what? That's criminal, and it can't be allowed."

Now, going to .05 instead of .08, I don't know if that's the answer. I really don't. I will tell you that one of the answers – and I don't think there's anybody who is informed about the DARE program who would disagree with this – is prevention programs like the DARE program. That's the drug and alcohol resistance education program that is offered to grade 6. In some places they're trying to get it offered to grade 8, and that would be key, because you've started a good train of thinking, kids on their way to being able to handle peer pressure, which I think is more intense in junior high than at any other level. Then to catch them in the middle of junior high, to have access to that program again in grade 8, I think would be an excellent, excellent thing for us to do.

You know what? That does take a commitment of money because you're going to have to hire a larger police force because it is a program delivered by policemen and policewomen. It's important that it's delivered by them because then those kids see those police in the community, not just the guy giving Mom or Dad a ticket when they go too fast or the bad guy on TV. They see them as real people who care about them. Though the dollars put into that would seem significant, the dollars we would save by doing that would be far more significant, far more. If we can prevent one child from being involved in drugs and alcohol, then we've achieved with every bit of money what employing a larger police force would do. So I would say that that's where the focus should be, on prevention. I don't know if it's making that net bigger, but focusing on the people who continually drive impaired.

I don't see how this legislation would have saved my cousin; I really don't. Maybe if one young person somewhere had been aware of a designated driver program or the Red Nose campaign that happens at Christmastime – those kinds of things we should be encouraging and supporting because that's where we get to the root of the problem, and that's where I'd like to see our focus.

So I'm reserving how I'm voting on this. I'm not sure. I'm one of the strongest voices about people having a drink and driving. I'm opposed to that, and I'm sure everyone in here is. But the reality is how we educate people. Is that not the key? If education isn't the key, then I think we've missed the boat, because education is prevention, and that saves lives. When people don't drink and drive, that saves lives. If we don't deal with that – I mean, one thing is punishment, but the other thing is prevention. Even if the person who killed my cousin is in jail, she can't come back. So that's the key that I would like to see addressed: the prevention issues with drinking and driving.

So with those comments, Madam Speaker, I'm not sure how I'm voting. I'm strongly opposed to impaired driving, as everyone is. I don't think there's any debate in this Legislature about that, but the debate is: how do we best approach that? I'm not sure that this is the right tool to use, but I am going to listen to some of the debate, and I'll make up my mind as the debate progresses.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand in this Assembly and participate in this debate. First of all, I'd like to congratulate the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing this legislation forward. I know that she's been working hard and carrying out consultations on this legislation for some time now, and the final product is certain to stimulate debate in this Assembly. The member especially deserves congratulations for proposing legislation that will help make Alberta a safer place, where tragedies resulting from drunk driving will no longer touch Alberta families and their loved ones.

Madam Speaker, impaired drivers kill an average of 4.5 people and injure 125 people in Canada every 24 hours. The tragic loss of loved ones by drunk driving is horrifying and unacceptable. I believe that any legislation that could stop, slow, or limit the number of impaired drivers on Alberta's roads should be seriously considered by this Legislature.

Madam Speaker, as many in this Assembly may know, I take a zero tolerance approach to impaired driving, and that's why I believe this legislation needs to be examined. The fact is that many Albertans still drink and drive. Nationally in 1996 there were 78,894 persons charged with impaired driving offences. In other words, for every 100,000 persons aged 16 years and over, 335 were charged with impaired driving. Although this rate represents a 6 percent decrease from 1995, we cannot afford to claim victory against the problem and become complacent when deaths and injuries are still attributed to impaired drivers in this province.

Alberta's rate of persons charged with impaired driving offences has been gradually decreasing since 1981, falling from 1,431 in 1981 to 486 in 1996, nearly a threefold decline. Historically, however, Alberta's rate, while steadily declining, has been consistently higher than the national rate. This trend needs to be addressed. Any death due to impaired driving is an unacceptable death.

Madam Speaker, I wish to add to this debate by outlining some of the initiatives undertaken by government organizations and commissions, particularly the efforts undertaken by the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission. I feel that it is important to outline their position on impaired driving and the sort of work that is being done in relation to prevention. AADAC strives to make a difference in people's lives by leading them to an addiction-free future. The Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission recognizes that impaired driving remains a complex issue of concern despite the progress that has been made in recent years. Currently AADAC is focusing on the addiction factors related to impaired driving and is committed to working in partnership with Alberta government departments, agencies, and other stakeholders to address this very important issue. AADAC believes that a variety of strategies, including prevention, education, as was mentioned, harm reduction, enforcement, and treatment, are required in order to further reduce impaired driving in this province.

As we can see from the declining rates of people charged with impaired driving, there is some good news in the battle against impaired driving. In the last few years society has grown more aware and less tolerant of impaired driving than it once was. Impaired driving is now viewed almost universally as a serious offence and a behaviour that is socially unacceptable.

There's been marked reduction in the magnitude of the impaired driving problem over the past decade. In Alberta licence suspension as a result of an impaired driving conviction has declined 54 percent, from 17,160 in 1988-89 to 7,835 in 1997-98. Madam Speaker, although this is a positive trend, Alberta continues to have one of the highest offence rates for impaired driving, ranking fourth among provinces and territories in 1997.

Recently many Canadians and Albertans have been calling for a reduction in the Criminal Code blood alcohol level. Groups like Mothers Against Drinking Drivers, MADD, have been spearheading this effort and calling for a move from the current .08 blood alcohol content to .05 blood alcohol content. This lobby has been successful in many Canadian jurisdictions. The rationale behind this is due to evidence that people suffer impaired judgment and control at levels way before the current .08 BAC.

Madam Speaker, we know more now about the effects of alcohol consumption than we did when the original .08 BAC was enacted. The physical effects of alcohol consumption vary depending upon the levels of alcohol consumed. These symptoms, as some of us may know, can occur for different people at varying levels of consumption based on such factors as tolerance, size, age, and so on. Studies done by the Addictions Research Foundation of Ontario concluded that impairment occurs at a much lower level than previously thought.

Madam Speaker, at a BAC of .03 to .08 the physical effects of consumption are cited as including euphoria, diminution of attention, judgment, and control. It also marks the beginning of sensory motor impairment and loss of efficiency in finer motor performance. We have all seen bad drivers, but a driver suffering from these symptoms does not sound like a driver that I would want to share the road with. It is for this reason that groups ranging from prominent medical associations to Mothers Against Drinking Drivers call for the use of .05 as the point of legal impairment, as Bill 210 helps us move towards.

It is refreshing, Madam Speaker, to see that a wide spectrum of groups has become involved in addressing the impaired driving issue. Health agencies, law enforcement, the insurance industry, and community action advocacy groups have all contributed towards reducing the problem. Although a variety of strategies have been developed to combat impaired driving, the emphasis has tended to be on legislation and law enforcement. Other approaches, such as public education, hospitality employee training, and the designated driver programs, have proved to be important.

Madam Speaker, AADAC will continue to develop and deliver quality prevention and education programs that assist individuals, families, and communities to develop healthy approaches and attitudes towards the use of alcohol. AADAC's prevention messages contribute to increased responsibility with respect to the use of alcohol and other drugs and can therefore help reduce the incidence of impaired driving.

Madam Speaker, the commission also supports the development and implementation of prevention initiatives that focus specifically on those segments of the population that disproportionately contribute to the impaired driving problems, such as repeat impaired drivers. AADAC is committed to reducing harm and promoting health recovery amongst those people affected by alcohol problems. Concern goes beyond high-risk behaviours and heavy drinkers to include the majority of Albertans who drink in moderation but may find themselves in a situation where they or someone else has consumed an excess amount of alcohol.

While the commission supports such initiatives as designated driver and server intervention programs, AADAC opposes any availability of alcohol marketing practices that would be expected to increase the risk of harmful consequences such as impaired driving. AADAC does not deliver programs specifically for impaired drivers. Rather, counseling and treatment services are available to all Albertans who need them. Within AADAC individuals have access to a range of treatment options and will be actively involved in defining their treatment goals and the most appropriate methods for achieving them.

Legislation and regulation should be aimed at promoting the health and well-being of society and discouraging drinking and driving amongst all age groups. Regulatory strategies must be multidimensional and should include measures such as better enforcement of existing laws, graduated licensing, and public education.

Madam Speaker, AADAC will continue in its efforts to work with individuals, government agencies, communities, and other stakeholders to promote responsible alcohol use, reduce the adverse consequences associated with inappropriate consumption, provide effective prevention and treatment services, and conduct research. Well-conceived and executed research into the prevalence, causes, prevention, and treatment of alcohol problems and consequences such as impaired driving should be conducted on an ongoing basis. The results of such research should be communicated to advance public and professional knowledge and to improve service delivery. We hope that these preventative measures reduce the number of impaired drivers on Alberta's roadways, but as stated earlier, that is not the only answer. We must become more effective at enforcing the laws we already have.

Madam Speaker, recently the Department of Infrastructure initiated a new plan to deal with this problem. While I support Bill 210 as an initiative to get drunks off the road, I am looking forward to seeing what sort of impact recent initiatives have made on impaired driving in Alberta. In November two changes were initiated, a 10- year window instead of five for monitoring repeat drinking and driving offences and the administrative licence suspension; that is, the ALS program. The result will be harsher consequences for drivers caught drinking and driving. This new initiative will monitor repeat offenders for 10 years instead of five. A first, second, and third conviction within a 10-year period will receive a one, three, or five-year suspension and associated intervention.

The ALS program brings an immediate suspension to the accused's driver's licence, an automatic three-month driver's licence suspension, or disqualification for drivers charged with providing a breath or blood sample more than .08 or refusing to give a breath or blood sample. This new initiative also includes an automatic six-month driver's licence suspension or disqualification if the offence results in bodily harm or death.

Madam Speaker, Bill 210 then may complement these initiatives by adding a mandatory 24-hour suspension for drivers at .05 BAC and above. Many jurisdictions in this country have moved to a 24-hour suspension for .05 and above. Due to the recent evidence about where the actual level of impairment occurs, I conclude that Bill 210 should be seriously considered by this House.

Madam Speaker, this Assembly can't change the Criminal Code of Canada; it's not in our jurisdiction. But what it can do is enact a 24-hour suspension for drivers between .05 and .08 BAC in the interests of public safety.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I hadn't initially planned on speaking to the bill, but, you know, in the eight years that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and I have both been in this Assembly, she has established a very impressive record of taking private members' bills that in fact earn the support of a majority of members in this Assembly. One of the things I've learned – it may have taken me a few years – is that when the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek speaks and introduces a bill, you'd better pay attention because there's an excellent chance that the next time we see it, it's going to be a government bill or it's going to become law. So it's because of my respect for that member's proficiency and facility for being able to make law that I want to offer some observations.

[Mr. Renner in the chair]

I'd just make this comment first. I don't think there's anybody in this Assembly that is not concerned about the carnage on our highways. I don't think there's anybody who is not concerned about the impact that drinking has when impaired drivers get behind the wheel, and I don't think there's anybody in this Assembly who would not want to see a reduction in the injuries and fatalities on Alberta highways. For me, though, it's a question – and I've often talked in the Assembly before about making a distinction between things that sort of make us feel good or that sound like you're doing something about a problem and things that have a direct connection with achieving the decided outcome.

You know, I heard the member. She spoke eloquently in terms of her motivation for bringing the bill, and I accept that very genuine motivation. But my question to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek would be – and I never heard her say that – if we had a roadside screening limit of .05, would these fatalities that she talked about with such impact have been avoided? Well, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek believes that is so.

I've spent a little time looking around at what we know. We've done a lot of work in this country in particular, not just through AADAC but through different organizations. It seems to me that we've learned a few things about what the impact of drunk driving is and what's going on on our roads.

I notice that you always see the researchers in here, the ones I run into Sunday or Monday night when I roll into the Annex who have been working hard. I don't know whether the government researchers have seen this, but there was a 1998 study done in Vancouver by the Vancouver police and the Vancouver transportation lobby group, SENSE, that came up with some information which in fact has been replicated in other studies in Alberta, and I'll talk about some Edmonton studies in a moment. One of the things they found and that was also in an Ottawa 1995 Traffic Injury Research Foundation report is that in the majority of cases Canadian drivers involved in alcohol-related accidents leading to injury or death have blood alcohol levels well in excess of .08, well in excess. I'll mention some Edmonton stats in a moment too.

It seems to me that the person who is killing on Alberta highways is not the woman of petite stature who has a half-glass of wine and happens to register because of her metabolic rate and her size and weight and so on. After a half-glass of wine she may be over .05. Statistically, the person who is more likely to maim, kill, and do injury is a person with double, with 130, 140, twice the legal limit. Those are the people statistically, on an evidential basis – the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek may have seen some of those studies – who are doing the injury on our highways.

The average blood alcohol content among drivers in the Ottawa study was more than twice the legal limit. That same study found that there were two categories of drivers who really present the major problems on Alberta highways. The first group are the habitual hard-core drinkers who repeatedly drive after drinking with high blood alcohol concentrations – that's well over 80 milligrams – and they're very resistant to behaviour change. That group represents less than 1 percent of Canada's population, but it accounts for more than one-third of the fatal accidents in which alcohol is a factor. Now, the other group of drivers are the young, thrill-seeking males aged 20 to 25. It's interesting here that if we're trying to make a road safer, the evidence suggests we would be focusing on the very serious repeat offenders who drive with way over 80 milligrams and then focus on those young drivers.

It's interesting to note that I think Quebec is the only other province in Canada that has an age of majority, an age to be able to drink, of under 19. I think every other province in Canada is 19 or higher. I think Quebec and Alberta are the only ones with an 18 age.

So the two things that suggest to me that you'd consider if we want to make our roads safer are, number one, raising the age to be able to access alcohol to at least the level of other provinces, 19, and the second thing that I'd want to do would be to say: how do we do a better job of making sure that we get those people who are so absolutely intoxicated it's a wonder they can get the key in the ignition, never mind out of the parking lot and onto the highway? So that's a concern.

You know, there was a story I noticed in Alberta Report that talked about one study, and of every 100 road fatalities caused by legally impaired drivers, more than 75 percent had a blood alcohol concentration in excess of .15. Think about that: 75 percent in this group were nearly double the current legal limit of .08.

Now, at this point this brings in one of my other concerns. It's about fairness of law, and it has to do with this. Sometimes I think we get a bit bamboozled and buffaloes by science. We've got to remember that blood alcohol and blood alcohol absorption is uniquely a personal experience. If you take somebody who is 190 pounds and somebody who is 90 pounds, what you will find is that depending on metabolic rates, we all take alcohol into our bloodstream at different rates. [interjection] Yeah, of course referring to my friend from Edmonton-Meadowlark down the way.

I've practised law long enough to remember when .08 was brought in, and it was a question of looking at a rate at which most people began to show some evident impairment. But there are lots of studies that show that if you're talking about who can't drive safely, whose ability to be able to turn, to accelerate, to brake is somehow adversely affected, it varies. Point zero eight sort of caught most people, and that's why that was settled on. To go with .05 – and I know we're not talking a Criminal Code offence; it's about a roadside suspension. I'd give this with more vigour and more passion if I thought this was an amendment to the Criminal Code. Still, the point should be made. I think the point is that what we should be recognizing is that what you do is you expand the net.

Now, we know that we don't currently have enough police officers in this province to do the job. You talk to the Calgary city police force. You talk to the Edmonton city police force. What they tell you is that they are so darn busy, they are overrun with so many demands that they're not able to focus on some of those hard-core repeat offenders that are causing all of the problems. I think that's part of the reality.

I wish I could hear from the Minister of Justice on this thing because I'd feel a lot more comfortable if I knew that there were more resources going into getting those people who are driving at twice the legal limit and prosecuting them to the full extent afforded by the Criminal Code. This would make more sense to me, but here's the problem I have, Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, through the Speaker. We now have police officers doing more roadside suspensions of people such as that woman who has had a half-glass of wine and is driving back to the office from lunch or the MLA or the cabinet minister who has just finished a meeting with the hotel association and is driving back to his or her office. I specifically did not focus on any given member. This is a hypothetical member. Bear with me: hypothetical.

Let's recognize that you take finite police resources, so we've got more police officers now administering roadside suspensions to people who are driving back to the office after that half-glass of wine. If we had an infinite number of police officers, great, but that's one fewer police officer or reduced police resources to be trying to hammer the people that are creating the problem.

One of the things I found really interesting – I'll just see if I can quickly find it. I had seen a study that talked about why wouldn't we be saying that we'd have much tougher sentences for repeat offenders. Although I can't find the quote as quickly as I'd like to, I think the point I'm trying to make is this. In this province there was a survey done in the city of Edmonton. I stand to be corrected, and I invite the former Solicitor General, who I know has an encyclopedic memory of everything he saw as Solicitor General years back, to set me straight, and I encourage the former Attorney General to advise me if I'm wrong. There was an Edmonton study, and what the Edmonton study found is that police officers are too busy, that a lot of people who should be charged with impaired driving are not being charged with impaired driving. And why is that? Because they find they don't have enough time to invest in the court process. They don't have enough time to do the work that's involved in putting together an impaired driving prosecution. So it seems to me that what we've got, Mr. Speaker, is an obvious way of trying to make our streets safer, which would be to make some changes in terms of the resources available through the police service and through the Ministry of Justice.

Mr. Speaker, one of the other things that we know makes a big difference is public education. We've seen some of the impact of that, and we all know that when we go to a party now we see – and I'm really proud of young people. I see young people that impress me with their maturity, and they typically have a designated driver. I see more young people driving far more responsibly than was the case when I grew up. I mean, all of that public education is having a significant, positive impact. There's more we can do around that.

Mr. Speaker, I forgot to set my timer, so I'm hoping I may get a signal from the table in terms of how close I am to the end. This is where in the script it's supposed to say, "Move to finish with a flourish," but since my notes are a bit scattered, it's not going to be quite as clear as I would want it to be.

I was talking about an Edmonton study, and I do want to share this with members because I think this is significant. There was a study done in Edmonton, and what they found was that the highest blood alcohol content by an Edmonton Police Service handheld Alcosure device and digital intoxilizer that year, in 1997, had been five times the legal limit of 80. The report went on to say that on average the 2,000 drivers, 90 percent of whom were male, who were charged with impaired driving blew double the limit, and one-third were repeat offenders.

Just to come back to a point I'm making, not very precisely but hopefully it's there in the course of my argument, what we should be doing is ensuring that we have enough police resources – and that's a provincial responsibility – to ensure that we invest the time to make sure that those people who are driving with a serious level of impairment literally have the Criminal Code thrown at them. I don't want to hear about Crown prosecutors having to cut deals because they're too busy, because their caseload is too big. I mean, that's where we start making a change.

You know, maybe the former Attorney General and Minister of Justice will tell us, through the Speaker, why it is that if you go into the main remand courtrooms in Edmonton and Calgary, you find Crown prosecutors that aren't using all of the tools available in the Criminal Code. The Criminal Code has got at least five different offences that can be used. You've got serious penalties. You've got provision for compounding penalties for repeat offenders. But do you know what happens? Too often we don't ask for them. Too often we have plea bargains that mean that something is passed for a sentence . . .

DR. WEST: Well, that's your profession. Your profession does that.

MR. DICKSON: My profession, which I'm proud of, ensures that the guilty people go to jail and the innocent people are not punished unduly. I'm proud of that, former Solicitor General. You know, Mr. Speaker, there was a slur on a profession which I am very proud of, and I shouldn't allow myself to be baited.

I sometimes wish at a time like this that the government took the kind of good advice they get from the Canadian Bar Association, that they get from groups that have a lot of practical experience in terms of dealing with impaired driving, because there are a host of things we can do.

I'd refer members to some studies. There's The Role of Alcohol in Fatal Traffic Crashes in British Columbia over a four-year period, that I cite in support of the point I'm trying to make. There is an Edmonton study done by the University of Alberta, Factors Antecedent to Impaired Driving, January, 1988, which is good reading.

AN HON. MEMBER: In 1988?

MR. DICKSON: Well, you know something? Impaired driving isn't a brand-new phenomenon, and some of the research that's been done in 1988 is as valid and as useful in 2000 as it was at the time it was written.

[The Speaker in the chair]

There is a further report on beverage alcohol concentration and traffic safety which was done in Ottawa in I think 1990.

Much more to be said, but by somebody else, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member that preceded me said, he enjoys standing in the Legislature and speaking after the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. Well, I likewise always look forward to speaking after the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Calgary-Buffalo, I would want to say as I begin here that I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek's intentions and the principle of the bill have to do with drunk driving, intoxication, and we aren't dealing presently within this bill with the resources available to police departments or police services. That certainly is an issue and can be talked about under other circumstances.

I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing forward Bill 210, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act. I know that she has spent considerable time and effort over a long period of time gathering information, talking to informed groups and associations so that she could bring this forward. Her intent is sincere, and she is speaking from the heart when she talks about individuals in her constituency that have lost loved ones due to drunken driving, so I thank her for that.

I think it is also timely that this is before us today because we are moving very, very soon to a time of year when drinking and driving does become an issue. You just need to talk to any law enforcement official, who will tell you that during the next month to month and a half they have more incidents that they have to deal with than at any other time of year.

As has been mentioned by former speakers, over the last 20 years awareness about the dangers of drinking and driving has certainly increased. In the old days a lot of people didn't see drinking and driving as a major concern for Albertans. There are probably many of us in this room that when we went to high school, college, or university didn't think twice about drinking and driving. I, like a couple of other speakers before me, want to congratulate some of the young people today for their commitment to taking very seriously the responsibility for drinking and driving. Most of us that have older teenagers or young adults can tell you that they very much rely on designated drivers or taxis or some other means to get them home. We know that they are responsible, and we as adults and our generation could actually take some very serious lessons from them as to how you do this and manage it well.

Another thing that has happened over a period of time is that the roads in this province have become busier. There are more people and more cars. Cars are moving faster, and people are all in a hurry. The reality on today's highway is very different than it was for many past generations. With these developments one would think that alcohol-related driving accidents would be on the decline. However, over the last 40 years the rates of most crimes have declined except alcohol-related driving accidents. You would think that today, with everything that is being done – all the groups that are actively making people aware, the public education, the prevention, the ad campaigns – people would be terrified of the consequences of drinking and driving and would make a continuous effort to stop doing so. However, we still see people that are intoxicated, that still get in a car and continue to drive.

During the past year Edmonton police arrested a near record number of people who were driving under the influence. I think this is a clear indication that drinking and driving is still a huge problem in this province. In fact, Alberta has the fifth highest rate of people arrested for drinking and driving among the provinces. Twice as many people are arrested for drunk driving in Alberta than in Ontario and British Columbia. Of course, as we all know, British Columbia and Ontario certainly have greater populations than Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I feel this is a shameful statistic, one that needs to be addressed, and that's why I support Bill 210 as sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. Bill 210 creates an administrative penalty for drivers who have a blood alcohol level between .05 and .08. That means that the driver who is found to have alcohol in his blood will not be permitted to drive a vehicle for 24 hours. The advantages of this suspension are clear. A driver whose licence is revoked for 24 hours will not be able to get back into his or her vehicle and cause harm to other people. That is the immediate benefit, and there are still greater longer term benefits.

What exactly is .05? How much alcohol does that amount to? Regardless of how many drinks it amounts to, people who have a blood alcohol level of .05 are impaired. Their nervous system and their ability to react quickly to emergencies are diminished, so getting these people off the road makes it a safer place for all of us.

I know it has been said many times, but people do not have the right to drive. Driving is a privilege. We've talked about driving as a privilege in this Assembly before when we discussed the hon. Member for Red Deer-South's private member's bill on graduated licencing. Indeed, it is a privilege, and it isn't a privilege that each and every country in this world has. Driving in many countries in Europe and Asia is taken very seriously, and impaired driving is taken more seriously, when even body parts such as arms and hands are cut off if you're caught as a repeat offender for impaired driving.

One of the biggest reasons I like this proposal is probably the hardest to measure and verify. What I'm referring to is the symbolic importance to the offenders of receiving this form of sanction, the 24-hour suspension. Almost all Albertans are indeed good, law-abiding citizens, who would never intentionally harm others. There are thousands upon thousands of drivers out there, both young and old, who will have a couple of drinks at the football game or go for a beer at the local pub after work. These are people who have been doing these types of things for years without hurting anybody or getting in an accident, but this, Mr. Speaker, is where the false sense of security comes into play. People think they've had a couple of drinks and then drive home countless times, and they can continue to do so without incident.

What they aren't thinking about is that they are indeed impaired. Their judgment is slow, inaccurate. Their reflexes are slightly numb. As well, with defensive driving you have to think at all times what other people are doing on the road, how other people are driving. Are they, in fact, impaired? I'm afraid that is all it takes to cause thousands and thousands of pounds of steel and glass to collide, lives to be lost, loved ones to be maimed.

Under the provisions of Bill 210 some of these casual drinkers will be given a stern warning and the inconvenience of losing their driving privileges for a mere 24 hours. It's my hope that many of these people will see this as such an unpleasant experience that next time they'll take the LRT, they'll find a designated driver, or they'll take a taxi.

Unfortunately, there's another kind of Alberta driver out there. I think this bill will help to stop them before they kill someone. These are problem drinkers, people who do not realize that they have a problem. They are the men and women who consider themselves weekend warriors. They like to go out, get intoxicated with friends, celebrate, and have a good time. These people have the potential to develop a more serious drinking problem and then take that problem on the road. For many this 24-hour suspension could be a warning sign.

If we speak of warning signs, I know one that has worked very, very well in my area has been the Denver Boot. When you live in a small community and you happen to know everyone in town and where they live, when you see a car parked alongside that house with that Denver Boot on, you know that everyone will be talking about it in the coffee shop, around the dinner table, and it definitely impacts the person. They are very mortified. Their neighbours are mortified, and their family is mortified. So it is a warning. I think when the Denver Boot was introduced, there were probably many that felt it would not have an impact on this whole area of drinking and driving, but I can tell you that in a small community, when you know the recipient, it has made a big difference.

For someone who has never broken the law, having your licence suspended for blood alcohol concentration would send a strong message. It would send a strong message to other members of the family, to employers, employees, and friends. I, again, say very strongly: this would be a stern warning and an inconvenience.

I would also like to commend the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert in talking about what has been done in many of our high schools and with many of the programs in the province. I concur with her and think that there is a lot more that can be done with public education, with working towards greater prevention, and ongoing awareness. I know that in today's world more and more the local police are involved with many programs within the high schools, and I know that they continually work with the young people to keep them aware of many of the statistics that we've heard today. I don't think that this bill would preclude any of those programs that are ongoing, and we must ensure that they continue to be ongoing, but this bill today is dealing with a completely different matter.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose talked at length about his role and the role of AADAC. I would like to commend AADAC. I think they have done a tremendous job over the last few years with some of their ad campaigns. One that really stands out in my mind – I think it was last year's – showed an horrific, horrible accident involving some teenagers. This young girl died in the accident, and her boyfriend had to go and tell her parents. The caption was Don't Be a Bloody Idiot: Don't Drink and Drive. I really think that particular ad campaign really was significant.

The one they're using this year I would ask you to pay attention to. They're comparing the wine glass in the gentleman's hand to a lethal weapon. As we move along in the ad, the glass does turn from a glass to a gun, and it talks about him having a lethal weapon.

I think these are powerful ads, Wetaskiwin-Camrose, and if you'd take that back to AADAC – I think they are doing an excellent job of really making you aware. They're the types of ads that you will pay attention to, and they do get your attention and those of our young people. So I thank you.

I would ask all members of this Assembly to please pay special attention to what the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek is trying to achieve. I think it's just another tool that we'd be allowing law enforcement agencies in their fight against drinking and driving. It levies a small but firm penalty for those who push the limits of alcohol consumption and then drive. At the same time, the bill does not permanently affect a first-time offender. It does not mark a person for life for making an error in judgment, but it does serve as a stern warning that when a person pushes the legal limits of alcohol consumption, he is endangering his life and the lives of many, many others.

I personally would like to thank the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for proposing this bill and inviting such stimulating debate on such an important issue. I think Bill 210 is a timely and important piece of legislation, and it deserves the ongoing attention of members of this House.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and that we reconvene at 8 p.m. in Committee of Supply.

THE SPEAKER: On the motion put forward by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, would all hon. members in favour please say aye?

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE SPEAKER: Opposed, please say no. The motion is carried.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:14 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, November 15, 2000 8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/11/15

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: Good evening. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

For the benefit of those that have gathered this evening, we're going to be going over some of the supplementary estimates for the year 2000-2001. The committee is the informal stage of the Legislature in which people are able to sit in their own places or indeed move around. They may take off their jackets. They may have coffee. We only have one person standing and talking at a time though. That's a general rule.

head: Supplementary Estimates 2000-01
General Revenue Fund

Children's Services

THE CHAIRMAN: We'll now call upon the Minister of Children's Services for opening comments.

MS EVANS: Thank you very much. Children's Services ministry is requesting a supplementary estimate of $46,372,000 for its 2000-01 budget. The base budget currently is $536 million, and the additional funding I will briefly summarize in the following areas.

Twelve point nine million dollars will be used to fund higher than budgeted increases in child welfare caseloads. The average monthly child welfare caseloads have risen from 12 and a half thousand approximately in September 1999 to 13,836 in September of 2000. The average monthly caseloads have almost doubled since 1993, when the figure was 7,980. The average cost per child welfare case was $1,807 in '99-2000, up from $1,721 in '93-94. These cost increases are due in part to the rise in complex cases such as children with fetal alcohol syndrome currently being more frequently diagnosed, mental illness, and severe behavioural disorders. The age breakdown for children in care: 30 percent of caseloads are ages zero to six, 34 percent ages seven to 12, and 36 percent ages 13 to 17.

A recent report dealing with child welfare caseload growth was presented to government. The internal document, which is now publicly available, has provided valuable advice from stakeholders, which we're currently reviewing with partnering ministries and community stakeholders, and we'll continue to explore improvements in that area.

Handicapped children's services. There will be $10.2 million allocated toward higher than budgeted increases in handicapped children's services. Caseloads and higher average cost per case are the reasons for this increase. The number of families supported through HCS increased from a monthly average of 8,289 in '98-99 to an average of 8,462 in '99-2000. HCS helps families meet extraordinary expenses that arise because of their children's special needs. We now fund intensive behavioural programs for children diagnosed with autism, and other cases include children with cerebral palsy or mental disorders. The average cost of an intensive behavioural intervention is between $40,000 and $60,000, and our average cost per caseload for handicapped children's services in 2000 is $5,826.

Six million dollars will be spent on the early implementation of recommendations from the Children's Forum and task force which will continue to build on the results from the Children's Forum and the Task Force on Children at Risk reports. I must stress that other ministries are absorbing significant numbers of cost, not the least of which are the $45 million in additional funds currently for education, for hours recommended for kindergarten. So this adds to those recommendations from other ministries which support the task force recommendations.

The risk assessment and reduction model which is now being used is a $2.1 million expenditure which is also helping us with permanency planning for children in the care of child and family service authorities. The model addresses child protection and safety with a particular emphasis on the risk of future abuse and neglect. As child neglect in Alberta does not diminish, we are as a government trying to fill the gaps through agencies, both private and public sector. The other focus is on our permanency planning.

We have additional funds for contracted agencies recently announced, $8.7 million that will provide increases to contracted agencies. This should be no surprise. It was indicated some three years ago that over a three-year period there would be every attempt by our government to assist those contract agencies in delivery of special services to individuals with special needs.

For employee compensation there's an additional $5.5 million to fund higher than budgeted employee compensation costs primarily for staff working with child and family service authorities.

Youth in transition from care: $938,000 will be allocated to assist youth in transition from government care to independent living. These funds are part of the national child benefit, a federal/provincial partnership designed to reduce child poverty and help parents work their way toward independence. Our goal is to help young people in care to enter adulthood on solid ground thereby preparing them for future success.

I ask for your support of this supplementary estimate. Our mission is to work with our partners to enhance the ability of families and communities to develop nurturing and safe environments for children, youth, and individuals. You've heard about some of the important strategies we are undertaking to achieve that goal. You know that our work has just begun, but we're committed to our vision.

I'd now be pleased, Mr. Chairman, to hear any comments and respond to questions following.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Children's Services is a relatively new entity that manages a complex population with an equally complex system. These evident complexities have been further compounded by the government's move to regionalize this system in the last five years. In reality, this evening I find it hard to criticize any cash allocations to such an underfunded system.

The minister and all staff, bureaucratic and front line, must be commended for working under extremely difficult and demanding circumstances where the stakes are high and human. That being said, their goodwill would benefit from cabinet support from this government to the degrees that tax reform and debt reduction have achieved, and I certainly hope, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Treasurer is listening.

There is a cost for ignoring or choosing to underfund such a vital system. That cost was clearly magnified by the Auditor General in his 1999-2000 annual report. It is further magnified by a most compelling report titled Child Welfare Caseload Growth in Alberta: Connecting the Dots. I will refer to it at a point just a bit later in my remarks.

What the Auditor General magnified in his report this year of this department, Mr. Chairman, is that the regional entities formulated by this government were by and large ill equipped to manage or fund the responsibilities that they had been given by government. The Auditor General found financial statements that did not fully report the cost of providing required services, that did not follow generally accepted accounting principles, that had poor or nonexistent processes for the provision of services and billing of services between regions. He found accounting officers that had potential conflicts of interest accompanied by a general inability in the department to determine if almost $32 million that had been spent on support services was economically spent.

Further, the Auditor General found in this department just several months ago that a letter which had been written by the former minister had informed regional child service authorities that surpluses might not be available or carried over to the subsequent year. It was his finding that financial statements of the authorities were prepared on a premise that these moneys would be available, but it had never actually been clarified that surpluses would remain with the authority, and unless I'm mistaken, Mr. Chairman, that confusion continues to exist.

There was further confusion about surpluses that had been achieved by agencies. This confusion arose from different interpretations as to whether those surpluses were revenue of the authority or the department. In one case the authority wanted to account their surplus as a receivable, and they were told by the department they could not.

In the Auditor General's report on page 69 is perhaps the clearest message that the hon. Treasurer and other cabinet colleagues need to hear this evening. He recommends that Children's Services "review the funding formula to ensure that the allocation of resources is consistent" to meet the expected needs of each Children's Services authority. To paraphrase, Mr. Chairman, it is a compelling statement that the Auditor General needs to give direction to this cabinet that they should adequately fund the provision of services to vulnerable children in this province and account for them clearly and consistently in their financial statements.

We have heard the hon. minister tonight speak to the allocation requested, $46,372,000. In fact, Mr. Chairman, the reality is that the budget of this ministry was underestimated, was underreported, and as a result of that we now find ourselves in a position where the minister must come through supplementary estimates to ask for that kind of additional allocation.

Now, there are other ministries that are responsible for these increased costs, and I think it would be misleading tonight to speak only to these issues from the perspective of Children's Services.

I would like to move now to the report on child welfare caseload growth published in August of 2000. One of the issues that was highlighted in that report was the impact of low social assistance rates in Alberta and the cuts made to social assistance rates by this government in the early '90s on child welfare caseloads. I quote from the report.

The largest group of people receiving public assistance in Alberta is single mothers of dependent children. The pressure on these women to find work once their babies are six months old suggests that caring for children is undervalued when compared with the ability to be independent of public assistance.

Further, it was cited that families on welfare [in Alberta] do not benefit from the increase in the Canada Child Tax Benefit launched in 1998. Most provinces claw back the increase in federal funds from families with children on welfare and spend the money on other programs . . . Only two provinces [in Canada], Newfoundland and New Brunswick, allowed families with children on welfare to keep the money and use it to improve living conditions.

Now, I should summarize, Mr. Chairman, that I'm making these remarks and recognize that it won't be perhaps until next year's budget that the cabinet will in fact make the right choice and adequately fund this department. I think they have the evidence within these reports to do so, and in highlighting these areas this evening, I hope that it will provide the additional impetus they require to make services for children, particularly vulnerable children and families, a priority.

This is also citing from the report:

In 1998, the estimated welfare income for a single mother with one child [in Alberta] received $11,088 annually. That income includes basic social assistance, additional benefits, Federal Child Tax Benefit and Federal GST credit, as recorded by the National Council of Welfare. Eleven thousand dollars. Now, I don't know about you, Mr. Chairman, but I know that I could not raise my two children on $11,000 and have them grow up to be healthy, productive, and functional individuals.

In the report on pages 45 and 46 there were a number of examples that the authors used to highlight the difficult realities people face in trying to access welfare, and I will highlight just a couple.

A mother on welfare [in Alberta] told [the researchers] that she did not have a telephone, as it was not a benefit covered under welfare. In order to have contact with his children, her ex-husband covered the . . . cost of phone. Welfare defines this as child support, so it is deducted from her monthly cheque.

How does that make sense? Why are these types of areas not being reformed to make it more supportive for families in this province?

Another example.

A First Nations agency paid the damage deposit for a single mother who was moving to the city. The welfare worker considered the value of the damage deposit as income and deducted it from the welfare cheque.

These types of examples are rampant in the system, and they need to be addressed.

I want to turn to some of the other issues. I am cognizant of the fact that there are allocations this evening for staff compensation, but with due respect to the minister, Mr. Chairman, I don't think they go far enough. That is because, again in the caseload growth report, one of the most significant causative factors in caseload growth was attributed to the fact that we have largely unqualified staff and an enormous rate of turnover in Alberta in child welfare.

It may be of interest to our guests in the gallery this evening that Alberta is the only province in Canada that hires child welfare staff with less than a bachelor of social work. The rate of turnover within our staff in Alberta is very high. Since 1993 over 900 child welfare workers have terminated or transferred out of the province, while combined with the hiring of new staff and responding to growing caseloads, recruiting to these vacant positions results in chronic, significant inexperience in the front line. Currently 43 percent of child welfare workers in Alberta have less than two years' experience.

Again, the report through a variety of pages talks about the degree of the problem that we have in human resources in child welfare. As I say, with due respect, I don't think the allocations this evening, when spread across the departmental staff, the agency staff, and contracted staff, go nearly far enough. I would encourage the minister and like-minded members in the government caucus to continue to educate those members of cabinet that have doubts about making allocations in this area. We seem to have the belief, Mr. Chairman, that debt and Alberta are not synonymous, and we have gone to great lengths in this province to eliminate our financial debt. Well, if you agree with that stance, then I think any member that takes that approach should read this report, because this report magnifies the depth of the human debt in this province. Unless we do something about it, we are going to pay the price in the future.

We've lost some of our best professionals in this department, and as is the case in health care, in nursing, in medicine, we're going to have to spend some money to get those people back. Again, the allocations this evening are talking about current staff, but we don't have enough staff, and the staff that we have are not qualified enough. Those that are qualified are not receiving the supports they require to deal with the very complex high-needs population.

If that overview and explanation with respect to human resources is not sufficient, Mr. Chairman, I'm most certainly available to reinforce it at any time should the government require that.

Just to finish off in the area of staff, in human resources, I mentioned that 43 percent of all current frontline child welfare staff have less than two years' experience. In addition to that, of the current staff without a bachelor of science or a master's of social work degree, more than half have less than two years' experience. We've deprofessionalized the care and the service delivery in child welfare.

I'd like to just move to another area for examination that is not directly spoken about in the allocations this evening but is definitely evident, and that is the needs within our aboriginal population, which comprises approximately 50 percent or thereabouts of the child welfare caseload. When it comes to this population, it is of no surprise, perhaps, to any member of this Assembly or to most First Nations bands that their population is growing at almost double the rate of the general population, and within that there are many children and individuals who have complex social, physical, and mental needs.

The caseload report highlighted some of those, and I'd just like to summarize them this evening. The rate of suicide is cited among First Nations adolescents as being up to seven times the national rate. There is a high incidence of alcohol and substance abuse, a high accompanying incidence of fetal alcohol syndrome. We have approximately 24 percent of aboriginal families being headed by lone parents.

This leads to one of the recommendations made by Allen De-Leary, the Assembly of First Nations health director, who was quoted in 1999 as saying:

A comprehensive child health policy framework does not exist at this point and there is a great deal of work to be done in examining (First Nation) children's health issues. We can begin by addressing the socio-economic, environmental and housing situations of First Nations families. Overall, there is a lack of programming and support for children between seven and twelve, there's an urgent need for a suicide prevention strategy among children and youth, and there's a lack of recreation opportunities for . . . youth [as well].

Now, at a later point in this session, Mr. Chairman, I'm going to be releasing a report that I have completed on youth suicide in Alberta that addresses both the aboriginal and nonaboriginal population, and I will speak, I am hopeful, about the incidence of suicide in Alberta at some later point. I have had the opportunity to speak with the Minister of Children's Services and the Minister of Justice and the minister of health about the lack of a co-ordinated suicide prevention strategy in this province and our continuing high rates of suicide in young people and in the general population. That, again, is something. When you calculate the lost hours, the lost potential, the loss in terms of family and society, this government should be concerned about the high incidence of suicide, and to date we have not had any co-ordinated program or any acknowledged leadership entity to deliver suicide prevention services in this province.

In that same vein, as long as I've been in this Assembly, as long as there have been Children's Advocate reports in this province, they have cited the lack of services for 16 year olds and 17 year olds. There is a huge gap, it appears, if a child for whatever reason finds themselves independent before they are of legal age in this province. There is this big, black hole that they fall into. One of the reasons – well, it's as crystal as this. What the caseload report says is that older teens are seen as less of a priority for service. The major finding of this report was on the need for a coordinated approach to providing services to 16 and 17 year olds to prevent [them] from falling through the [cracks] . . . This concern was echoed by staff from the Youth Secretariat, "Adolescents are seen to be the most expendable. As caseloads increase, services to youth are reduced or closed and expectations are increased."

As I said, this has been mentioned on numerous occasions by the Children's Advocates. It relates to social services. It relates to SFIs. It relates to the provision of child welfare services, and it relates to the provision of services through our department of health. This particular population could be one of the reasons why, particularly in the male population, our highest incidence of suicide is in males between the ages of 10 and 40. If in fact we were able to detect and intervene with some of these youth at this age, perhaps we might be able to make an impact that would prevent them from taking their lives or being involved in the justice system at a later time.

I want to just quickly summarize as well. In the annual report of Children's Services this year it was cited that the department was a defendant in 45 legal claims. In 1999 there were 49.

Forty of these claims have specified amounts totaling [approximately $70 million] and the remaining five have not specified any amount . . .

Included in the total legal claims are thirty-nine claims amounting to [$63 million] in which the [department] has been jointly named with other entities.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview will have another opportunity perhaps later, but Edmonton-Centre would like to make a comment before the minister replies.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes, I would. Just a very brief issue or question I'd like to raise that could probably be captured in the minister's answer. The minister is aware that for some time I've been bringing forward the issue of employees in the nonprofit sector that are doing work similar to that done by department employees. There is a tremendous wage gap there. I notice in here that there's "$8,734,000 for increased funding to contracted agencies and service providers to support employee compensation adjustments." From what I have been asked in talking to people in the community doing this kind of service provision, they haven't been given any indication of how this money is to be spent, what sector it's being spent in. They've been told handicapped services, but they don't know exactly whether they're allowed to do that. When would the minister anticipate being able to give a clear explanation to these service providers?

Second to that, this is onetime funding. Is there an expectation, then, that this increase for employee compensation will be continued forward in other budgets, or are they somehow supposed to give their employees a raise and then take it all back on the 1st of April? How is that expected to continue on into the future?

The third question is: does this in fact address the wage gap, and will it keep up with the increase that the public-sector employees are experiencing? What's happened before is they got a little bit of extra money, and they raised their wages. Then the public sector raised their wages, and the gap was even wider. So if the minister could talk a bit about that, I would appreciate it, and I can be sure to get the minister's answers out to those agencies that have been speaking to me.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to raise that.

MS EVANS: Mr. Chairman, did you wish . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: It's not what I wish. I'm just serving the hon. minister.

MS EVANS: I was wondering if the hon. opposition have tabled all their questions and then I could respond.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview had more.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I did want to raise actually what I consider to be a very serious issue, and that is the issue relating to the Social Care Facilities Review Committee. We have had an investigation conducted by this committee very recently that has found in the instance of a man dying within an inner-city shelter in Edmonton that the contributing factors to that man's death, who had suffered a grand mal seizure and had related physical and mental problems, that the facility was understaffed, that the staff in the facility did not have adequate first aid or CPR training, and that there were not policies and protocols in place that would have facilitated them acting to have the man medically assessed. He was in the facility for six days before he died, had not been referred to the medical clinic on-site, nor did he have a medical assessment during the last 24 hours of his life when he suffered the seizure in the shelter.

Now this committee has been largely inactive and not utilized by government. In fact, there have been numerous instances where these types of situations have occurred in social facilities in this province, but there has been a subliminal movement to direct actions internal to the department so that there was no public accounting, no public investigation, no public reporting.

When the committee was compelled by the provincial Ombudsman to investigate this man's death, the committee itself did not understand that it had the legislative and statutory mandate to conduct investigations into social care facilities. They did not have policies about investigations. They were not trained in investigation procedures. They have in fact, I am told, raised the fact that they as a committee are not adequately funded to conduct investigations into instances of unsafe practice or care or instances of people being harmed or dying in these facilities.

I do not see a supplementary estimate before us this evening for this committee. It's a statutory entity. It falls under the minister's portfolio. I'm very, very concerned, Mr. Chairman, that the government is by de facto reducing the role this committee could play by insufficiently funding them to fulfill their responsibilities. That is not here, and I would look to the minister for some confirmation as to when that committee might see an enhancement of their resources to enable them to provide a more accountable system of reporting and investigation to the public of Alberta.

Now, just accompanying that concern, in the annual report for Children's Services, which heightens where I fear this committee is going, the committee was only referenced on page 41 and it was referenced only in the context that they were responsible to inspect day cares, when in fact the Social Care Facilities Review Committee has the responsibility to investigate any facility that is providing services in the social service sector: group homes, any inner-city shelters, women's shelters, the Yellowhead Youth Centre, any facility, whether it be a foster home or a facility of a larger nature. This committee has the statutory responsibility to inspect them and to investigate them if a complaint is received, and the government, number one, is not reporting that responsibility. Number two, they're not funding that responsibility. I would ask the minister this evening when the government plans to concretely make the funding of that committee a priority.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you. I will endeavour to summarize or highlight some of the areas the hon. members opposite have raised, and then supplementary to this, Mr. Chairman, I will come back and further provide a tabling to address additional concerns.

In the very first instance, in discussion about the supplementary estimates the hon. member has noted the caseload growth, the transition to regional authorities. As we all know, we have had some growing pains with those. However, there's been some significant benefit which has accrued even since the Auditor General reported. In other words, at the time of the formation, if I could take you back to May of 1999 to the formation of this ministry, we had an acting deputy minister. We did not have our finance officials. We did not have so many of the core services within the department itself coalesced in a fashion that was going to make sense and be able to interface quickly in this transition period with the children's authorities.

Although on the face of it the report from the Auditor General and other criticisms might appear that we have not done the work, actually other indicators will show that we have forged ahead. For example, on the matter of interauthority protocol the CEO forum of June 12 of 2000 actually confirmed a protocol that will see funds transferred in a fashion that will address many of the Auditor's concerns, particularly those in the financial management and reporting areas. The authorities, even since March of this year, with the guidance of our ministry executive team have made significant improvements in accounting for its transitions through the regional service centres. There are indications that the authorities today are following the protocol, as the charges recorded as receivables and payables now do match, something that the Auditor General had criticized.

Probably the most significant thing for me to comment on is the confusion that seems to have arisen over surpluses left with the authorities, and I think it's most appropriate to deal with this as one would a family where the incomes are different with each family member. If it's a husband and wife and groceries go up or the cost of fuel goes up and one budget is covering what another is not, then we see some transfers that have to be made. Similarly, too, the authorities originally had predicted population needs-based formulas, which did not reflect the actual needs within communities. An illustration in the northern communities was that foster families were less of a premium than they are in the surrounding urban areas.

So ultimately we have looked at the 18 authorities. Those that yielded total surpluses of $5.6 million have been looking at ways with our department of retaining at least a portion of the surpluses and then applying these funds to meet their responsibilities. However, we are one department, and it would be irresponsible of us to have some with surpluses and some with deficits, as we are a one-service delivery agency to the assurance of all the authorities in Alberta, and we're working to make progress to make sure each child is well served, no matter where they are. So we will provide more, and I will be tabling very shortly the response that we have to the Auditor General's report relative to all the matters he raised.

I'd like to talk a little bit about the comments made by the hon. member on workload standards. That report has implications for many of the ministries that are attending here, quite specifically

Human Resources and Employment in the manner of welfare rates, and other members of the government who are addressing many of those concerns by not only examining the workload standards report, the caseload report, but seeing whether or not, with the work we've done this year improving standards, we've made considerable strides.

Mr. Chairman, no doubt the hon. members are aware that we added 200 staff this year to serve the needs of child and family services authorities, and although there is criticism about the amount of money staffing has received, this is a North American phenomenon, that we have not only a shortage of qualified degreed professionals for social services. We have a need – and it was agreed to by the association – largely because of some remote areas to include two-year educated professionals, who with team leaders have performed remarkably in the field. However, we continue to strive with our staff training to improve the experience of the staff, and we do recognize that we have a need for further staffing.

I'd like to comment about the First Nations and the Metis progress. The hon. member has highlighted suicide prevention as an important strategy. We have the additional capacity now of additional service workers in the field. Just yesterday at the child service conference in Banff . . .

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members of the committee, if you could talk without us hearing you, that would be very helpful. The noise is just slowly rising, not yet to a crescendo, but we're hoping not to reach that point. I wonder if we could engage in our conversations in a much quieter tone so that we can hear the minister and other members who are speaking.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you. We would have added additional members to serve not only on reserves but in Metis settlements to try and determine what the causal circumstances are of depression, of those types of frustrations and situations that lead to suicide and other traumas within the family.

I'd like to comment a little bit and just briefly on the hon. member's highlight of liabilities within the department. We do recognize that there are some long-term debts associated with litigation that has been brought to bear on our department. There is a plan, working with the Minister of Justice, to try and reconcile those liabilities, and we will report further on that.

Further, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre talked about the employees in non-profit organizations. As the hon. member is no doubt aware, a number of the activities undertaken by the deputies of the respective departments who received some of the funding for contracted services have defined how those service dollars are to be released. The comments about it being a onetime funding and what is the future of the formula – I'd like to give the assurance to the hon. member that we have considered what the formula should be so that there is always a seamlessness once the contracts have been managed within government, so that we don't have gaps of people in contract managed positions. We have been working with the authorities to see how we can responsibly manage that as well. Some of the contracts we have dissolved and have moved to a fee-for-service basis, but the very illustration the hon. member brings forward of the needs of those staff to be compensated in a way that's comparable so that they retain staff is something that I would suggest my hon. colleagues in health and others are also very keenly aware that we try and manage this within a framework that works. So I will provide that along with your indulgence of some of the comments that will come from the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, who actually led and managed the review of that particular issue.

I comment on and will be tabling later in this session the Social Care Facilities Review Committee report. Clearly, the issues the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview raises about what has been seemingly a less active committee are things which I think I can say categorically have been changed. We are working to make this committee a viable, well-resourced committee. The addition of Vice-Chairman Jean Wilkinson recently to help serve the committee's needs and the internal review of that committee itself and its own practices and policies has been considered. I would also confide that I have approached the Minister of Infrastructure about the possibility of having a member of his staff become a part of the review so that we not only look at those things that are qualitative in the social services facility reviews but look at those things that could address some of the facility issues.

Mr. Chairman, with your indulgence I will more thoroughly respond to the criticisms and comments and concerns raised by the hon. members opposite and provide that tabling in the House.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the supplementary estimates for the Department of Children's Services, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Agreed to:

Operating expense	$46,372,000
-------------------	--------------

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Would hon. members please give consideration to reverting to Introduction of Guests?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed?

The hon. leader of the third party.

head: Introduction of Guests

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this House a large number of guests who are visiting tonight. They are sitting in the public gallery and also, I guess, in the members' gallery. These are citizens who were opposed to Bill 11. They were last night present in very large numbers, close to 300 strong, at the Council of Canadians meeting to organize, to make sure that public health care in Canada is protected. So I'll ask all the visitors to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Infrastructure

THE CHAIRMAN: I'd call upon the minister to make some opening comments and then invite questions and further comments.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to move supplementary estimates this evening of $419 million for our department, Alberta Infrastructure. It'll be allocated as follows: $170 million for health care facilities; $235 million for the school facilities program, K to 12; $6 million for postsecondary facilities; and $8 million for the infrastructure Canada/Alberta program, otherwise known as ICAP. I'd be pleased to answer any questions.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a real privilege to get up this evening and raise some questions and talk about the supplementary estimates for the Department of Infrastructure.

I guess the recognition is that in the past number of years infrastructure quality, upgrading, and maintenance and the development of new facilities across the province has kind of lagged behind as we've acted to balance budgets and that. There's a lot of questions that come up when new programs are funded. We recognize that the government has added quite a number of dollars to the different facility groups in terms of health care, education, and basic infrastructure for local governments, but what comes back a lot of times when we talk about these is exactly how that decision-making process is implemented and what kind of priorities are put on it.

On behalf of the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, who's had a couple of tours around the province talking to people about infrastructure, I wanted to raise a couple of issues that she was made aware of in those tours that effectively relate to how the priorities are set and how the decisions are made in terms of the actual request by a local government or a local authority to the government and then the actual decision-making that's made within the government. For example, the Brooks separate school board has been asking for a school to replace their crowded facility in terms of St. Joseph's Collegiate, yet the government is not acting on their requests. So how do they get a feel for how the priorities are put in place?

They've given the government basically a couple of different alternatives, the option of a new facility or an upgrade revision of a county building that's there that can be turned into a school, but then they have to have some of the support facilities, like gymnasiums, that go with it. So these are the kinds of issues they raised.

You also see issues coming up in terms of some of the priorities that are given to other activities, especially with respect to safety within some of the communities in terms of how do they get upgrades on intersections or how do they get new bridges. These come from some of the areas when they have to look at how they deal with bridges over major rivers. For example, the county of Newell wants a new upgraded bridge over the Bow River. They want to know why these kinds of requests are not getting the priority that they feel they express when they talk to the government.

I guess some of the others don't show up – maybe they'll come under the Canada/Alberta infrastructure program – but communities like Gleichen have been asking for an upgraded water treatment plant so they can have fresh potable water in the community. Most everybody in that community now has to use bottled water, and they want to know how the priorities are put on in making the decision to upgrade that. I think there might be some complications there in the context of this First Nations community because there would have to be some federal participation in those kinds of decisions. Still, we have a responsibility to make sure that all our citizens in Alberta do have access to potable water and the kind of infrastructure that's possible to deal with those kinds of things and the needs of the communities.

I guess the other area that some of the counties were asking about was how they deal with getting priority put on the commitment that's there from the irrigation districts to maintain the bridges across the irrigation canals. It gets to be a kind of nonresponsive negotiation process when they have to deal with the irrigation district, and what role can the government play in doing that?

So in many ways, Mr. Chairman, what we're kind of asking for is clarification here, very much like we heard in Children's Services, in terms of how the formulas work to put the priorities on so that the bodies in those communities responsible are actually making requests. When the response comes back, it doesn't have the same kind of prioritization that they sent in. So that's kind of the issue.

We look at it in the context also of some of the issues of safety that have come up. You know, we're hearing a lot about the intersection of highway 36 and highway 1 outside Brooks. There were a number of accidents there in the last couple of years. Why is it that this intersection has not received priority for upgrading? We've seen another one at 22X and 24 just east of Calgary, where in the last two or three weeks there have been a number of serious accidents.

Here it's a matter of how the government goes about making users of those intersections aware that all of a sudden we've gone from a straight-through highway to now having a stop sign on it. People are running that stop sign. What is it that has to be done, or what kind of information can be conveyed in terms of warning signals? We see that a lot of the cities, when they change an intersection, will have a whole series of signs up along the street coming up to it talking about new signals or a new stop sign or this kind of thing. I drive that highway 24 outside Calgary quite frequently, and all they did was put in a few rumble strips, but some of the highways are such that rumble strips just sound like normal wear on the road.

So we want to have some signs put up to kind of warn people that there has been a change in that intersection, that there is a stop sign coming and that they need to be aware of that and start slowing down so they can actually do what the sign says when they get there and prevent these accidents that occur, because those deaths are really unfortunate. Mr. Chairman, we not only need to look at making these kinds of changes; we also need to talk about an awareness campaign or education programs for a period of time where people can become aware of the fact that we've had some changes.

Some other issues have come up in terms of how the $235 million has been allocated for school infrastructure, new construction and upgrades on facilities. How do these upgrades get justified in the context of the school utilization formula? Now, there are a number of communities – and this has been especially critical in Calgary, with all their new development. We see that the school board or the school division in its entirety has a utilization factor that doesn't justify, from a provincial context, saying: we need to have new construction. Yet when you go out and look at the growth that's occurring in kind of the peripheral communities, the new subdivisions that are going in, there are no schools out there to serve these communities.

We were aware the other day of the comments made by the Minister of Learning on the attractiveness of some of these minischools, basically kindergarten to grade 3, that are being put up on a temporary basis. What we need to do also, if we're going to start doing that, is look at the possibilities of giving the school boards notification of what they mean by temporary. I look at some of the facilities that I've had to deal with, and the temporary buildings now are probably just about as old as I am, Mr. Chairman, and, you know, I'm beginning to show a little bit.

What we have to do is start looking at what are the requirements in terms of expectations so that they can build these time-sensitive planning processes into their budgeting and their decision-making. So if we're going to give you a temporary building, we'll say, well, that's got to last you for 10 years, or until a growth pattern is established or until some other condition occurs. They need to have that kind of information conveyed to them so that as they go through their own prioritization and their requests to the Minister of Infrastructure for new facilities or an upgrade on a facility, these kinds of things can actually become part of the constructive decision-making that these school boards go through and also in terms of the health authorities.

That's the kind of thing we have to start looking at in terms of clarifying some of the issues that come out. I know the $419 million that now has been allocated will go some way to help the shortage, but we are still hearing from a lot of the health authorities and the school divisions that their facilities need to have upgrades to make sure they serve the needs the authority has been given, the mandate to provide to Albertans. I guess in a primary way safety has to be looked at and then the issue of capacity and the how to deal with expansion kinds of issues that go on as well.

So those are some of the questions that are being asked of my colleague as she travels around Alberta to deal with infrastructure.

I've got a couple of points that I'd also like to raise in terms of, say, the school formula in terms of how they look at defining the space allocations. We're hearing from some of the schools in my area that they're considering the stage in the auditorium as a classroom. Well, does that mean they're going to have to move desks in there for the day and then take them out during the drama class so that the students can have access to it? Or is it the sense that they figure the school should be providing enough utilization so that the stage is used at all times, so that the classroom the students came out of while they were taking their drama or their speech or maybe their music or whatever and using the stage can have somebody else in it taking history, math, or English, those kinds of courses?

This is the kind of clarification that we need to look at. We've heard an awful lot about hallway medicine. Well, we don't want to start dealing with stage-based education. This is not the kind of thing we want to start moving toward.

I guess the other issue I wanted to raise was a comment that was made at one of the standing policy committees in terms of a presentation made by the Alberta Irrigation Projects Association. When they were requesting some clarification on the infrastructure dollars for their canal rehabilitation, there were some suggestions made that they should be applying for money under the Canada/Alberta infrastructure program.

I guess the question there is: how do these extra levels of government apply for the infrastructure grants when they cross over a number of identified jurisdictions within the programs, say a number of counties and municipal districts? Or when they get into serving the water delivery needs of some of the local towns and villages in southern Alberta, how do we get the joint action so that the irrigation district has some authority to actually put forward a request for some of those Canada/Alberta infrastructure dollars? Assuming that was the implication of that comment when they said they had to get joint funding through the Canada/Alberta program in the federal government's infrastructure commitment, will the provincial government help the irrigation districts lobby the federal government to get them classified as an identity that can apply for some of these infrastructure dollars?

It has normally only been done between the three levels of government, but in Alberta now we're putting together a number of what are effectively cross-jurisdiction, quasi-governmental bodies like the regional irrigation districts, the health authorities, the children's services authorities. You know, some of our school divisions now cross local boundaries as we've gone through the amalgamation. How does that cross-identified municipal government level work when we're trying to deal with what has been defined as a three-level program, yet we're now effectively having four levels of government?

Those are some of the questions that we wanted to raise. I know some of my other colleagues have questions, and I'll cede the floor to allow them to have a chance. It's important that we recognize that even though the $419 million that's been allocated above the allocation of the spring budget go quite a ways towards addressing the issues of infrastructure, what we really need to do as we allocate these extra dollars is make sure that the decision-making process is transparent and that the partner groups – whether it's the health authorities, the school divisions, the local counties, municipalities, urban municipalities as well, or, even in the case that I brought up, the irrigation districts – understand how these infrastructure dollar decisions are made and that they feel they've been listened to and that they've been heard as they make their requests and find out that the actual dollars being allocated don't follow that request, don't follow the same priorities.

It seems strange to me to be sitting in Edmonton and saying that I have a better view of the priorities of a school division or a health authority when they're asking for dollars for infrastructure. They're the people on the ground. They're the people mandated to provide the service, and we should be respecting their own priorities and their own decisions in terms of which requests they make.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I'll cede the floor and let some of the other members raise their concerns about the infrastructure area as well.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. minister, we have a few more questions before you answer. Is that agreeable?

MR. STELMACH: Sure.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have a few questions this evening for the hon. minister. Whenever we consider the grand sum of $419 million, we cannot take that lightly, particularly in regard to what the Auditor General wrote in his recent report regarding the Infrastructure department.

Now, I believe, Mr. Chairman, that I'll start with the smallest sum this evening and go to the largest for the hon. minister. For the $8 million that's Alberta's share of the Canada/Alberta infrastructure program for the year 2000-2001 I have the following questions. What programs will be targeted? Will municipalities submit proposals for money, or will the government choose programs from its own priority list? Also, will municipalities be permitted to pool funds for a joint project? For instance, let's say waterworks or an irrigation canal.

The next amount is $6 million. This amount is to assist, as I understand it, with the construction of the information and communications technology, ICT, centre at the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology. This, as I understand it, is going to permit an increase in student enrollment by up to a thousand students. The students are going to be educated in the high-demand information technology fields. Now, this is only a small part of the total cost of that project. As I understand, Mr. Chairman, it's in the range of $52 million in total costs. That figure comes to mind.

eral's report regarding the University of Calgary and the problem they're having with construction contracts there – and last year in the Auditor General's report there were significant flags raised regarding the University of Alberta. This is money that belongs to the taxpayers of this province, and I would like to know from the hon. minister what accounting procedures his department has in place to ensure that contract administration on this project is adequate and the mistakes that were pointed out at both the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta are not repeated. A sign of a complacent government is one that is careless with the bottom line. History, I'm afraid, has a tendency to repeat itself, and after what happened and after it was reported here, we have to ensure that it doesn't happen again.

Now, my hon. colleague from Lethbridge-East was talking about the school facilities evaluation project, and all hon. members of this Assembly realize the work that was done in the past by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, ably assisted by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow. They went about the province. They surveyed the entire school system for mechanical and structural deficiencies. I would then like to know from the hon. minister exactly what recommendations the department is planning on taking from that report and spending a portion of the $235 million on.

We realize that there are growth pressures. Renovation and modernization backlogs need to be taken care of. There are schools in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar – Kenilworth junior high comes to mind. I was visiting there earlier this month, and incredibly, Mr. Chairman, you could see through the cinder block wall from the principal's office to the corridor. It wasn't a little beam of light. You could actually see through the wall. Their criteria, how this money is to be spent, on what schools and where, are very, very important.

We have schools, not only in my constituency, where the rain enters the roof and channels off the edge of the blackboard. Mr. Chairman, some hon. members may think this may reduce house-keeping costs because there's going to be less chalk dust, but I'm afraid this is a problem. Whether we want to realize it or not, that's up to the hon. members across the way. This is a problem. It's a backlog, and it has to be taken care of, but it has to be taken care of in a manner that's fair to all areas of the province. I'm not convinced that this money is going to be shared equally. Whether a constituency votes for an hon. member of the opposition or whether they vote for a member of the government, this has to be dealt with.

$170,000,000 for health care facilities capital projects to address waiting list pressures, new capital projects to improve access to acute care, and for priority infrastructure maintenance and upgrade needs.

Well, is this going to improve health care for Albertans? As one of my constituents addressed to me: Mr. MacDonald, this is the government's blink money, and this blink money is not going to fool me. I said to this individual: are you sure about this? "Yes." Mr. Chairman, I can only assume that some of this money – and the hon. minister can correct me if I'm wrong – is going to the expansion of the Royal Alex. This individual went on to say to me: "It's not until the next election cycle. The government is planning to make a big announcement now, but they're not going to open this facility until before the next election in 2005. This, Mr. MacDonald, is simply blink money, because the government realizes they had to blink."

The citizens, whether they're in the galleries tonight or whether they're going to read Hansard tomorrow, know exactly what's going on. They know what has happened to our health care system. Will $170 million restore confidence in this system? I question that, Mr. Chairman, but it is welcome.

We need to ensure that the north half of the province has an adequate children's hospital. Is this going to be addressed in this sum of money? We need to consider many, many ways to improve the health care system. During the health care privatization act debate that went on – pardon me; the Health Care Protection Act – there was a lot of discussion about the number of beds that were available in the Capital health authority. The Capital health authority officials themselves said: don't worry; we have bed capacity to last until the year 2008 at current population projections. We have the beds. We don't have the personnel to stand beside them and tend to the sick. Who are we to believe: the people who are running the regional health authority or this document?

We're suddenly before an election. Health care is the number one concern of Albertans. I'm afraid that I do not think this amount of money, Mr. Chairman, is going to restore the trust of Albertans in this current government to deliver publicly funded, accessible health care for all its citizens.

Mr. Chairman, before I conclude my remarks, there's one little point that I would like to make regarding the school facilities and the upgrading. Two years ago my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods was determined to see education funding improve, not only for the students but to restore the structural integrity of the schools. Question after question was asked, and members from across the way would stand up and say: "$600 million" – it was really $200 million each year for a three-year period – "is enough. What do you want?" Well, when I see this figure, I have to conclude that it is a silent acceptance that that $600 million was wrong. That figure was wrong. Hon. member after hon. member stood up and said: "What do you want? It's $600 million." Well, obviously, this is an admittance that that was wrong. When I see these figures, I have to think that this is, as one of my hon. colleagues calls it, planning by the seat of your pants before an election.

With those comments I will anxiously await the minister's response, but I will cede the floor to my colleague from Edmonton-Centre. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Yes, I understand the need to be brief.

There's one issue that I wanted to . . . [interjection] Oh, my goodness. Well, we really needed more time to go through this amount of money. A billion dollars we are trying to get through in four hours or something. It's just not enough time for scrutiny and questions to be asked.

Nonetheless, we're spending $235 million for school facilities under the Infrastructure program "to address growth pressures and renovation and modernization backlog as identified through the School Facilities Evaluation Project."

Now, I am the MLA for a downtown area in a metropolitan area, so most of my schools are classified as inner city. They're older schools, and I don't have as large a population of children as many of my colleagues in here do. We have few kids but great diversity, which brings its own pressures. I go into my schools as often as possible, and one of the things that I'm hearing perhaps is this: the school facilities evaluation project has different criteria than the criteria that's used by the school boards to determine who's next on the list or who gets what kind of money or what priority rating they're getting.

As one principal put it to me, "You know, it's the engineers deciding what's going on here," and that may not necessarily be the way the school or the school board wants to approach it. So somehow with this money going in here, we've now got, I guess, not dueling criteria, because obviously in this case the Department of Infrastructure is the piper and they get to call the tune, but I think that I'm questioning that. Certainly I'm questioning it on behalf of some of my schools.

These are all older schools. They were all built very close to the turn of the last century, and almost none of them have had any kind of really serious renovation since then. I have schools that have floors that are badly in need of repair and upgrading. I have schools that had carpets put in in the '60s and '70s, and they're still in there. I have schools with lots of chalkboards, lots of chalk, and all of that is still in the air, and with the carpets and the flooring it's all still hanging in the air. These schools have old air circulation, so it's not moving all of this respiratory debris out of the schools. So when we're looking at a standard of what is healthy and safe for our kids to be learning in, somehow that criteria isn't coming into place here with these school buildings.

In particular, I have a concern about St. Catherine community school, they call it, in Edmonton-Centre. Now, that school is certainly experiencing all of those difficulties, and it really is creating a respiratory crisis, if you want to call it that, for the students who are going there. I'm sure the minister has heard of the boiler that sometimes works and sometimes doesn't, and the principal was trying to be fair with me and said, "Well, what was in the paper in September, you know, maybe was a bit worse than in fact it was," but the truth is this is a school with a boiler that truly sometimes works and sometimes doesn't. We just can't have that there.

I don't understand why we ended up with these competing criteria. Why wasn't what Infrastructure was doing worked in as well with the criteria that have already been established by the school boards? Every time I've asked questions about this, I've been told by the members opposite that they just go from the list that the school board or the school division provides. Well, that doesn't seem to be what's happening here, and I'm getting some schools left out. I'm pleading my case on behalf of that school in particular, but I'm asking the question about why it's happening. That's the issue that I most wanted to raise under this.

Given that we're talking about almost half a billion dollars being expended in this department, it's very frustrating not to be able to have a full and open debate on this. I mean, there are a number of recommendations that were brought forward by the Auditor General that haven't been addressed, and I didn't even have a chance to look at how the money that's being spent here relates to the key performance measurements that were put forward by the department in the budget from this spring.

Having said that, thank you.

MR. STELMACH: Okay. Very briefly to try and answer all of the questions that came up with respect to the three major components of the Infrastructure department. With respect to roads, bridges, and above-ground interchanges, there's quite a process that's followed involving not only the municipalities but also a review of major categories, that of safety of course.

The second is the review of the traffic warrants, the counts, and also to try and project into the future where some of the future growth will take place. There have been quite significant changes in traffic patterns in the province over the last three, four years, only because there had been unexpected growth in some key areas in the province. I'll give you examples: along the highway 2 corridor, Edmonton to Calgary, huge growth in Grande Prairie and some towards the south in Alberta, around the Lethbridge area and along highway 3.

Now, all the municipalities put together their priorities. We look at those priorities very carefully, and the individual priorities from the municipalities are then prioritized, go into the hopper, and are looked at for the overall provincial ranking for priorities.

One issue raised today was with respect to interchanges. There are a number of interchanges that will be going in over the next three years and a number of bridges. Now, with the bridges it will be over 85 bridge structures, and we're working very closely with the contractors, the engineers, and also the bridge suppliers, because as a result of that much growth in that particular area, we have to be very careful that we don't start creating inflation, especially on the span material.

Now, bridges are not only those over irrigation canals, over the rivers and creeks, but also a bridge structure is an interchange structure as well. The most significant number of structures will be in the north/south trade corridor, on Deerfoot, and the two major ones here. The biggest one will be where Cheapo Joe's is on Calgary Trail South. That will be part of the Anthony Henday, and the Ellerslie one is a little farther. The reason for two interchanges is that at Cheapo Joe's it'll be a California-style flyover, and it'll be the original in Alberta, quite frankly.

Now, on secondary highways we're still following all of the input from municipalities. They rank their priorities. In fact, today we had a number of meetings at AAMDC, and a number of municipalities are coming with shared priority lists, which greatly enhances moving their projects forward, because they're now tying two regions together and linking them with a good road.

On the schools there are a couple of things here. With respect to the audit, I would say that Alberta without a doubt is the only jurisdiction in Canada that completed such a very comprehensive condition audit of all the existing 1,460 schools. The audit was done by professionals, engineers and architects that followed a set of criteria that was put together by the professional community involving the school boards as well as the Alberta School Boards Association. They applied that same criteria to all the schools. The comment was made: well, why don't we use the criteria established by school boards? Well, what happened then was we didn't have the same criteria, so we had mixed information coming from school boards saying: well, this school in our jurisdiction is definitely the worst. But compared on a provincial basis, it wasn't as bad as some other school in another jurisdiction.

They rated in points, I believe, of up to about 1,200 and then down. We've covered off, I believe, the schools from 1,000 to 1,200. Those modernizations have been awarded. We're chiseling away at the 800 to 900. We've also given all school boards an additional $40 million in BQRP to deal with the smaller modernizations, those on the condition audit of roughly 700 points and down, because these would be small maintenance projects. Now, that's with modernization. Some school boards, now that they have pretty well an idea of the cost of modernization of some of the schools, are now wondering if all of the schools in their jurisdiction should remain open or if should they rationalize some of the schools in a particular subdivision. Let's say that there are five schools. Could we work with three schools and have three good, very well modernized schools with all the amenities, including the best technology? Especially if we have five schools and most of the students are based in, it doesn't make sense to of course modernize all of them if students are coming from different areas.

On the new school construction, we're in the midst now of a fairly extensive subcommittee review, which is chaired by Mr. George Nicholson, who was the chair of the Edmonton public. There are a number of recommendations coming forward. The report has been put in draft form. It's now with the school boards to look at. One of the changes that we're looking at is maybe a sectoral utilization formula. You would take a large grid like the city of Calgary or Edmonton and say: well, it's not reasonable to take a student from Mill Woods all the way to Castle Downs, so why don't we maybe break it down to quadrants and then look at the utilization rate in those quadrants?

As well, they're looking at how utilization was calculated before. I mean, do we use cafeterias for instruction? No. School gymnasiums? No. Gymnasium stages? No. So we're going through all of that. The comment I want to make is that it's coming from the bottom up. It's not coming from the top down. The school boards are working out the differences amongst themselves to see where they can come to an agreement on a lot of these points, because they also understand that policy for rural may be slightly different than for urban as well. We certainly don't want to bus students three hours one way in a rural community. It just doesn't make sense. So some of those schools will definitely have to remain open. That will be coming forward for further review. Once the boards have their stab at it, then it's going to come through the standing policy committee. Then it will become a policy that we will then follow in further evaluation of new school projects.

There was a comment made here: are we making all of these monetary infrastructure decisions by putting projects into only government ridings? We've got to kind of smirk at it, because we have the School Buildings Board that makes all these decisions. They are people appointed by statute to a committee, and they look at the evidence that's presented by various school boards in terms of accessing the funds available for modernization and for new school construction. So if their school is high on the list in the audit, it's going to be modernized. If it hasn't been modernized today, it's on the list, and it will be done.

The ICAP. There are three categories. It's about $106 million that's going to go through the RTG, the rural transportation grant, to municipalities. That's going to top up with dollars they have available to date. That's about $106 million. There's a pool of funds of $30 million and $21 million. The first priority, and again as agreed to by AUMA and AAMDC, is that these go into green projects, be it water or wastewater related. The $21 million is an amount there that could be for projects that are nominated by either the federal government or the province.

There was a comment raised about: can an irrigation district apply, or can maybe some other organization apply? Yes, they can. If they work with a municipality or if they're not even involved in a municipality but are, like, an irrigation district, they can actually apply for the money as long as they pay their third, because it's going to be one-third/one-third/one-third. The problem is that our money will be over three years because we can't forecast out six years. The federal money will be doled out over a period of six years, so there's going to be a gap, and somebody is going to be carrying part of those projects. I suspect it will be the municipalities or whoever applies for the money.

I think that as quickly I can answer the questions raised, but I'll check Hansard. There may be something there that I've missed, and I'll get back to you.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the supplementary estimates for the Department of Infrastructure, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Capital Investment $419,000,000

9:30

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food, and Rural Development.

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to present these estimates here tonight. The $98 million requested in the supplementary estimate will provide partial funding for the $233 million farm income support package announced last month. Farmers are being hit by continued income and cash flow problems, and this onetime funding will provide emergency support to Alberta farmers and ranchers. The support package consists of a $180 million farm income assistance program supplement payment of $6 per acre for all cultivated acres. This is in addition to the $4.29 paid in March of 2000. New program components totaling $51 million will provide $3 per acre on native pasture and payments to beekeepers of $3 per registered colony in the year 2000.

The income support package also provides low-interest loans with payment deferral to eligible farming operations under the Alberta farm income disaster loan program. The cost of this initiative is $2 million. The department is reallocating $135 million from other ministry programs to fund the balance of the income support package. The two major sources of this reallocated funding are reduced payments to the Agriculture Financial Services Corp. for the farm income disaster program and for crop insurance. AFSC will need less money from the department than was originally budgeted for several reasons. One, the new federal/provincial agreement regarding cost sharing of FIDP was not finalized prior to the completion of the 2000-2001 budget. Therefore, the budget included the full cost of funding FIDP without any federal contribution. The new cost-sharing arrangement results in a lower provincial requirement for FIDP than was originally budgeted.

FIDP claims for previous tax years are lower than originally forecast. The resulting unused funds will be reallocated to partially fund the new program that we announced in March.

Also, the $131 million farm income assistance program acreage payment in March of 2000 reduced the farm income disaster program liability for this tax year and thus has freed up budget dollars for the new program. Funding flowing from these new programs during the calendar year will also help reduce the farm income disaster program liability for the taxation year 2000.

Fourth and finally, crop insurance payments from the department to AFSC represent the province's share of crop insurance premiums. Lower participation and reduced value of crops insured has resulted in the province's share of crop insurance premiums being lower than was budgeted. The unused budget money will also be applied to the new program.

I would also like to mention that the support package provided an advance of up to 50 percent of the estimated eligible payment under FIDP for the 2000 crop year where there is an extreme reduction in farm income. Except for some minor administrative costs, there is no extra cost associated with this advance payment.

Even with the current safety net programs such as FIDP, crop insurance, and the net income stabilization account producers across the province have said that they will be hard pressed to meet 50 percent of their cash costs this year. It is important, Mr. Chairman, to point out that FIDP, crop insurance, and NISA are programs that are designed to help farmers through short-term drops in income. The new program funding is required because we have experienced a prolonged period of reduced income in the agricultural sector. This new program along with the advancement of FIDP payments puts much-needed money in farmers' hands. The majority of the money will be paid to farmers before the end of the calendar year.

Mr. Chairman, the supplementary estimates send a message that the agriculture sector remains a high priority for this government, so I would certainly encourage all members to support this request for some $98 million.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Yes. We support the supplementary request, Mr. Chairman. This is something that farmers have said on a number of occasions they needed, and basically it shows that the programs that have been in place have not been adequate to cover the needs, as the minister said, of long-term downturns in price, downturns in the economic well-being of the agriculture community. A lot of this is caused by the unwarranted subsidies that are going on from the U.S. and the European Community that depress world prices. We don't have the treasury in Canada that the Americans or the Europeans do to provide that, so we have to provide programs that work to support farmers on a need basis and keep them sustainable while we can deal with the negotiations that are necessary to bring about some kind of rational approach to the world agriculture situation.

But with those kinds of positive comments on the side of the support that's out there, there are a couple of questions that still come up in terms of how the effectiveness of the programs work and the farmers that are actually receiving the benefit from these programs. We recognize that FIDP combined with the acreage payment program works kind of in tandem as well as with the NISA program that supports through the federal programs. What happens, then, is that we end up with a situation, especially the way it worked out this year, where the government made their initial payment in the spring, based on the – what do you want to call it? – registered farmer for the different acres eligible, based on the 1999 permit books or application and proof of farming activity as substantiated through the process.

The fall payment, the $6 additional payment, was made based on the same acreage identification that occurred in the spring. In other words, a farmer that farmed land in 1999 was asked to identify their acres in the spring of 2000, and they were given a payment to supplement their income from the '99 year. I've had a number of phone calls from farmers who have transferred the title of some of those acres by sale or through new lease agreements on operational ownership of those lands. What's happening now is because they were not the registered owner in the spring, they're not getting the money to help them through this year's low commodity prices, low rainfall, high rainfall in the north that prevented them from harvesting, or the high energy prices that effectively drove their costs of production up. They're asking why this happened.

As I listened to the minister just now make the explanation, he's talking about these dollars being paid based on that, and then he's also talking about making a long-term commitment to the agriculture community. Does that long-term commitment mean that effectively in the next fiscal year, the next tax year for farmers, the next crop year for farmers they'll be getting payments to cover the higher costs and the lower prices and the weather uncertainties for the 2000 crop year? I guess the question the farmers are raising is this: if they farm the land this year, they are the ones that have to pay the expenses this year, they're the ones that are receiving the low prices or the low yields because of the disasters, then why is it that they're not the ones getting the $6 payment when it comes out this fall? This is a real issue for some of them.

Now, the minister in his comment said that this is a long-term program, that they'll be dealing with it until the long-term situation improves. Does that mean that farmers who had a difficult time this year will be getting the payment next year? Will they be going through a different acreage identification program for next year so that farmers who are actually farming the land this year are getting the money to support that activity? This has really caused a concern in the agriculture community, because what's happening is that they can't go back to the previous owner and say: "Oops. Sorry. We bought the land. Now they're paying you for farming the land, but we're actually farming it. Give us the money." It doesn't happen, Mr. Chairman. Nobody passes that on.

Maybe this is what we need to do: start an education program for farmers and for the legal community saying that starting as of this time, if anybody transfers agriculture land either through sale or through lease agreement, there had better be a contingency clause written into that, that if there are any new government payments that come after this date, even though they're based on the ownership or the operational characteristics prior to this date, they accrue to the individual who actually farmed the land after this date. Maybe we should be putting forward an education program for all the lawyers out there saying that this needs to be put into any sale agreement from now on so that money actually gets to the individuals, to the farmers who have lost money this year because of farming circumstances.

I guess the other issue that was raised on a number of occasions was the adequacy of the farm income disaster program and the crop insurance combination. In dealing with the situations that came up because of the drought in southern Alberta, we saw that the crop insurance this year was not available for pastureland, hay land, forages. Farmers were saying: "What happened? In previous years we had the option of crop insurance on our forage lands. This year it's gone." The minister now, in his announcement of this program, said that they would be making sure there was a program available for next year, so we've got one year in between the $3 acreage payment that came out that again may not go to the actual operator for this year. How do we deal with that in the context of getting the money in the hands of those basically livestock operators that were grazing those lands this year when they didn't have the option of crop insurance and they're not getting the $3 payment as well for the native pasture issue? So these are the kinds of questions that come up as we look at basically the fairness of these programs and/or the timeliness of them.

If this is truly a program dedicated and directed to the income losses of the '99 crop/tax year for farmers and there will be a corresponding program next year for the 2000 crop/tax year, then we need to make farmers aware of that so they can go to their banker and say: "Look, we know there's a program coming for us next year because we had a bad year this year. Hold us over." Because right now bankers are telling people that based on this year's income received from the cropping activities or the agricultural activities plus the support from government, it's not enough to justify carrying them another year. Farmers are making those decisions and bankers are making those decisions on behalf of farmers. But if this is going to be something we need to be able to say is ongoing, it's long term until we see some kind of resolution in the international situation, then farmers need to be made aware of that.

I'm encouraged by the minister's comments tonight when he talked about this being a program that has to reflect the long-term needs of farmers. I hope what he's saying is that this kind of support will be available. If it's going to be available on a year-to-year basis, what we need to do is make some kind of provision so that it's more timely; in other words, the people who farm this year get it this year. That can be done by using the acreage identification list we already have and allow a window of opportunity for individuals to file a dispute of acreage claim or whatever you want to call it, a change of acreage claim. When the announcement was made by the minister this fall about the new $6 payment, there could have been a two- or three-week period where individuals were required to notify Ag Financial Services as the administering agency for this of a request to have acres changed on that list. Then any of those acres could be put into a verification process. The rest of the acres in the province, which basically amount to probably 80 to 85 percent of the acres, would be paid in the same way they are now. So the other 15 percent, because it was requested by a farmer, would be given the option for review of ownership.

That's the only real concern that we have about the way this money is being allocated. It's really needed by the farmers, and we have to make sure that when we do put these programs in place, it's going to the farmer who needs the money, who was the farmer of record during the year to which the money is allocated.

Thank you very much.

MR. LUND: Mr. Chairman, I must make a few comments relative to the comments of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. He talked about the problem where land has changed hands from 1999 to the year 2000. I can assure you that we wrestled with this problem.

But let me tell the other side of the story. The fact is that when I toured the province – and I spent four days touring the drought areas – I was asked the question: when would you be able to come out with a program? My response was that I would aim to try to do something by the middle of October. Farmers consistently said to me: "That's not fast enough. We have a cash problem now, and we need the money by the 1st of October because that's when the bills start flowing in."

So we went back and looked at: how can we design this program to get the money out quickly? If we were to go with the individual that farmed in the year 2000, that meant that we would have to ask everybody – everybody – to put in a new application form. That meant no money in the year 2000. So we looked at what that means versus the 1 percent or less that changed hands. Do we penalize the 99 percent – they wouldn't get money – for the sake of the less than 1 percent that are changed? [interjection] Well, hon. member, you might not like the truth, but that's a fact. If you're going to pay to a different person, we've got no way of knowing who that person is without having everybody apply. So the fact is that that was the consideration.

Now, as far as this payment, another situation that plays into this is that the federal government owes us, owes Alberta farmers, about $180 million, and that is based on 1999. If you multiply six times the 30 million acres, that's $180 million, and it works out to $6 per acre. So that's the amount of money the federal government owes us. They have offered us $10 million. Basically that works out to 30 cents an acre. That's what the federal government has offered us. We don't expect that the federal government is going to pay the money, so the Alberta government on behalf of the federal government is paying the money. So those were the two reasons we went with 1999.

Hon. member, there is forage insurance. It's just pasture insurance that was discontinued. There is forage insurance. The pasture insurance was discontinued for many reasons. Number one, it actuarially was not sound, so we either had to do something with the premiums or else continue to cross subsidize, and that wasn't acceptable.

Secondly, we constantly heard people complaining about the program. Farmers were not happy. It's a difficult one. We have not committed that we are going to have a pasture program next year. What it looks like we will probably be doing, because as you know, we're doing a complete review of the all-risk crop insurance – we may run some pilot projects because we've got to find a different way of assessing. This is just not working, what we had out there before. So we will be looking at possibly using a weather derivative. There are a number of things that we might be doing on a pilot project. But it's also interesting to note that even with pasture insurance, many farmers, many ranchers will get as much money out of the $3 per acre as they would had they had pasture insurance. So it's not a complete wash, but at least it certainly goes a long way to cover the fact that they didn't have the pasture insurance.

I guess I find it rather frustrating, because it's been our objective all along to come up with some kind of programs that in fact would cover the risk, cover the disasters, and have them ongoing so we don't have to come back with these ad hoc – the hon. member's absolutely right. We're into a major problem with subsidies in the United States and the European Common Market. The treasuries in Canada can't and won't be able to match those subsidies, so we need to find a way, programs that will take the farmers through these very difficult times. The current crop insurance program doesn't do it. The NISA program without some modifications doesn't cut it. It's more of a retirement program as opposed to a risk management program. FIDP, while it works well for one or two years' disaster, doesn't work well over the longer period. We're working hard, and I invite the hon. member, if he's got some ideas on how we can design these programs so that they will work better for the farmer, we're only too happy to hear them and would encourage that kind of input.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to just ask a few questions. I've been made the agriculture critic for the third party, even though I can't even grow dandelions, but there was a 50 percent chance that I would be the agriculture critic, so I am. I just have a couple of questions for the minister.

I note that the government is complaining about being excluded from federal farm assistance, and I would like to know why the government did not pursue alongside the governments of Saskatchewan and Manitoba the farm assistance, particularly not co-operating with those two provinces as vigorously as they might have done, and how much the minister feels this may have cost Alberta farmers, which is now being made up in part from the $98 million additional subsidy.

I would also ask another question, Mr. Chairman, and that is why the supplemental payment to farmers is being given to all farmers based on their acreage and not depending on need.

MR. LUND: Quickly. On the issue about the lobby that occurred in Ottawa, the fact is that I was there ahead of them. I was ahead of those two Premiers. I met with the federal minister of agriculture ahead of those two Premiers. We were there. We did what we could. It's got nothing to do with the presentations. It's all got to do with two federal Liberal cabinet ministers. Those two Premiers didn't do anything; it all had to do with two federal cabinet ministers, Goodale and Axworthy. Those are the people that got that money for Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

As far as paying everybody, one of the things we have great difficulty with is that when you try to target, the process gets extremely long. You've got to fill out a lot of forms, and the administration cost goes up. As well, we have already two, actually three major programs that are targeted. The FIDP program, the crop insurance program, and the NISA program are all targeted programs. So it just really didn't make any sense that we would design another program, spend a whole bunch of time – incidentally, there would still be no money out there if in fact we had gone that route. With the route we took, 90 percent of the money is already in the hands of the farmers.

THE CHAIRMAN: Having heard the supplementary estimates for the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, are you ready for the vote?

Community Development

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. minister will make a few comments to begin, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm requesting $63,588,000 in total extra funding for the following. The first request is for $775,000 for a grant under the nominal sum disposal policy. This is for the Northern Lights regional library headquarters. This increase is surplus neutral and has no impact on the province's bottom line.

The second request is for $483,000 for amortization expenses related to the Western Heritage Centre. This is a case where the amortization does not increase the spending target for the ministry, but for the current year authorization for increased spending on an expense base is required.

The third one is a request for $50 million for centennial legacy projects, which I'm sure all members are duly familiar with by now.

The fourth request is for $10 million, targeted onetime funding for seniors supportive housing incentive program.

The final request is for $2.33 million to fund new and existing units in the rent supplement program.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. [interjection] No, thank you. I've got way too many issues I want to raise.

The first issue I'd like to look at is the $483,000 for the amortization expense related to the Western Heritage Centre. Now, I've raised this issue a number of times with the minister. In fact, it was raised before my time, and I'll just bring up a couple of examples of that.

Questions asked in question period on Wednesday, March 16 of '94 to the deputy Premier, and the response from the then deputy Premier was:

There are dollars in the current fiscal year, which will end March 31, 1994, and there are no dollars committed thereafter.

The issue was raised again with myself asking the question on Monday, February 28, 2000, in which the Minister of Community Development says that the programming [is] still the responsibility of the centre. They will be funding it all. There isn't any Community Development money going in there . . . [and any] maintenance is looked after through Infrastructure.

Those are the minister's own words, and that was around the budget debates in this fiscal year.

So all of these assurances that there's no money coming from Community Development, certainly no money for programming, and if there's any infrastructure money or maintenance money, it would come through Infrastructure, and here I am in a supplementary supply where there's $483,000 coming out of Community Development. Did the minister not anticipate this in February of 2000 when the budget was brought forward? If not, then why all these other assurances that there's no additional money going into the Western Heritage Centre?

Let's look at another one. Tuesday, February 29, 2000:

We now own the building. The people look after the programming, so there is no money allocated in this budget for the Western Heritage Centre, period, says the minister. And here we are, money going to the Western Heritage Centre. So exactly what is this money for, why wasn't it anticipated, and why is it contravening many, many reassurances from the minister, past and previous, that no money would come from the Alberta government going into the Western Heritage Centre?

Let me be clear. I like the Western Heritage Centre. I've been there. It's a great place. But what's the deal here? The government says that they're not going to put money into it, and then there's money going into it. So where's the plan? Where's the justification? What's going on here? That's the Western Heritage Centre.

Okay. Let's look at the $10 million that's going into seniors' housing. Now, I try hard to keep up with all these spending announcements that come out of the government, but frankly, at the rate we're going here, since May 6 until November, there have been about four pages that I have notes on of different announcements. So my question is: is the seniors' housing and lodge accommodations of $10 million that was announced on August 31, 2000, the same money or different money than the seniors' supportive housing incentive program that was announced two weeks later, on September 12, 2000, also for $10 million? Is it the same money that was announced twice in two different press releases, or is it two different sets of money for $10 million? If it's two different sets of money for $10 million, where's the other $10 million? I only see 10 coming out of Community Development, who is responsible for seniors' housing. So if there's an extra $10 million, where is it and which department?

MR. DICKSON: It's the old coin on a string trick.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yeah. It's a good one. Or maybe you just keep announcing it over and over again, and eventually people think you've spent $10 billion on this. I don't know.

When we're looking at seniors' housing, exactly how many projects are going to be funded? Which projects or partnerships will be funded out of this? Is the minister able to give us the number of beds or rooms or suites or mats on the floor that are going to be created from this one-time-only funding? In which housing markets are we expecting to see this? Is the seniors' supportive housing incentive program a private-sector partnership? Is this money going to the private sector to provide these, or is this being done by the government? Well, the minister will have time to respond to me.

I'm also interested in knowing how this announcement of the money – and please don't misunderstand me. Let me be very clear here. We need housing for seniors. We need affordable housing for seniors. We need low-income housing for seniors. But I'd like to know where the plan is. When I look at the key performance measures in the government and lottery fund estimates of 2000-2001, which is the year that we're in, and I look under seniors, Effectiveness of Information and Benefits Provided to Seniors, we're not even talking about housing in here. So when I look at the goals and the major strategies, the major strategies in relation to seniors are the study on the impact of aging. I'm reading this very quickly. There's nothing in here. I'm sorry; "efficient delivery of programs that meet the social housing needs of Albertans." Is that the strategy that's being met by this seniors' housing?

There's another item in here that's about "$2,330,000 to fund new and existing units in the Rent Supplement program." Which of these is it? How is this fitting into the plan that's already been put forward by the government? Or, in fact, do we not have a plan? Do we just kind of chuck money at programs?

One of the things I'm seeing happen is that groups are identifying ongoing needs. They're saying, "This is how much money is needed for this." The government comes back and says: "You're not going to get that much money. You're going to get half or 25 percent of that or whatever." So the group tries to make do with that half or 25 percent or whatever it is. Then three months before the year-end the government comes along and says, "Oh, we are going to give you all of it." Well, at that point it's not that they can go back and do the salary increases or the long-term planning or any of the other things that they needed time to do. They end up going: "Oh, my God. How do we use up all this money in three months?" You buy things, which isn't what they really needed. They wanted to be able to run the programs. So I'm really frustrated with this throwing money at it, big chunks of money in a short period of time. It's not part of a plan. I can't see where this was in your plan from February of 2000, when that budget came forward. So how does that all work?

Let's look at the $50 million for the Alberta centennial legacy projects. Now, this is one that's near and dear to my heart, and I have to say that certainly with two of the projects that received funding under this, I'm personally very pleased to see them get funding. We're aware that $38 million – certainly I've seen the press release – out of that $50 million has already been allocated, but I haven't been able to determine what were the criteria, what was the application process for groups to be able to get some of this money. It appears that the money was given out before any process was in place. So what about all those other groups that would like to have a chance at this pot of money? Thirty-eight million out of the $50 million is already gone. So an interesting process was involved there.

Again, I'm very happy to see a number of projects that did get the money, but I say: what about all the rest of the projects? What about the projects that could've been done in Dunvegan, Calgary-Buffalo, Calgary-Fort, or Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan? None of those people even knew that this program was in place or that there was an application process, so how do they get in on this one? I think I've even got a letter to the minister on that, asking how that all worked, and I haven't had a response yet.

So those very quickly were the major points that I wanted to raise around this, about that money for the Western Heritage Centre, the criteria and application process for the Alberta centennial legacy projects, the $10 million for seniors' housing. Exactly what is it, and how many times has it been announced?

I've been at a meeting for the SHAC group where the minister was in attendance, and I know that he learned some things. It was good for him to get out from underneath the dome. A number of points were raised by that group. Have they been addressed in this funding to create new and existing units in the rent supplement program?

I'm sorry; I'm just going to go backwards briefly. When we look at the seniors' housing, did you consider any of the studies that have been brought forward from across Canada of seniors' housing needs? I did read the press release, and I have to admit to you that it was kind of confusing what exactly was being contemplated there. It was a lot of language and not very clear on what exactly was going to happen and how much was going to be put where.

We've got the Urban Futures Institute's report, Housing Alberta's Seniors in the Next 30 Years, by David Baxter and Andrew Ramlo. Was that sort of thing considered in this $10 million? Because one-time-only funding for housing at $10 million isn't going to take us very far. How far did you think you were going to get with it?

So very briefly in not enough time – and I apologize to Albertans out there that I haven't had enough time to really be able to scrutinize this and bring forward all the questions that I'd like to bring forward. But I'm aware of the press of time here and the other people that would like to speak to the issue.

Thank you for the opportunity to bring those questions forward, Mr. Chairman. I look forward to the responses either given now by the minister or I'll happily accept them in writing at a future date.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: I wonder if we might have the Minister of Environment make his opening comments.

MR. JONSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wish to put before the committee the supplementary estimates of my department. I wish to indicate that our forest responsibilities account for the supplementary estimate I'm bringing forward to the committee. It comprises increased fire-fighting demands, improvements to airstrips used in fire fighting, and also the financial support that's needed to support the companies' efforts to manage the overall fire-fighting risk.

I think, in providing the background on the support for this particular supplementary estimate, it's important to note, Mr. Chairman, that our forest protection is based on a fast initial attack to minimize the size, damage, and impact of fires. This is especially important as communities and industrial and recreational activities increase in forested areas, and it's important to protect not only the forests but also those particular sites.

The 2000 forest fire season started with a continuation of the drying trend across the province which was experienced in both the 1998 and 1999 fire seasons. With precipitation in Alberta early in the year 2000 fire season, the fire hazard levels reached and surpassed those levels experienced in 1998 and 1999. Conditions were monitored daily as the beginning of the fire season approached. On October 23, actually, we made the decision to begin preparations for the fire season one month earlier than usual, commencing on March 1. From January to April 2000 there were more fires reported and a larger area burned in the protection area than in the same period for either of the previous two fire seasons. Dry conditions continued in certain parts of the province, particularly in the south and in certain spots in northern Alberta, and it was necessary to be prepared and to work to put out those fires and also to address some of the conditions which could have led to their spreading to larger areas.

Mr. Chairman, my department incurred heavy, extensive fire costs across the province over the year. This was further impacted by continued dry conditions in southwestern Alberta throughout the season. A very significant factor in all of this in terms of locations and fires was the very, very sizable late-summer fires near Blairmore, which were very serious and required a major effort in terms of overall forestry fire fighting.

Mr. Chairman, we're putting before you a supplementary estimate. Part of it is an increased funding requirement of $29.8 million, and this is required to cover these unfunded costs that I've been referring to. As I think members of the Assembly are quite aware, the use of airplanes is increasingly deemed to be effective and provides very rapid response in terms of our fire-fighting effort. In the supplementary estimate there is a provision for $1.2 million that was needed to upgrade airstrips used in the fire-fighting season. I think all in the Assembly would agree, Mr. Chairman, that we have to maintain safe airstrips and meet Transport Canada and Alberta Environment safety and environmental standards as we operate our water bombers and surveillance planes in this overall effort.

Mr. Chairman, before I conclude, I'd just like to mention that there's one other area of increased cost that is reflected in this overall estimate. This was for reimbursement of the increased holding and protection charges some forestry companies paid related to amendments to their forest management agreements. The companies involved here agreed to this increase but with the understanding that there would be reimbursement of a portion of these charges for the eligible expenditures actually made by the company in carrying out approved forest protection activities.

While this is not perhaps the ideal solution in terms of overall fire protection, it is, I think, a very important thing to note. That is, if we can get the co-operation of industry to work with us in terms of overall fire suppression, fire prevention matters, it will be of benefit to the overall forest industry and the overall situation in the province. So this partnership with the private sector, I think, is a very important one, and we have to recognize, Mr. Chairman, the extraordinary costs that were incurred there. Finally, I think that we also have in those proposed supplementary estimates, as I said, the proposal to reimburse companies for the efforts and the planning and the work they've done on their own to help with preventing and putting out forest fires of $2 million.

Overall, Mr. Chairman, it is always a difficult task for government to predict exactly what the needs are going to be in a given year for fire fighting. During this year they were higher than what was provided for in the overall budget. On the other hand, I think due to some very effective measures that were taken, they are lower, if I could put it that way, Mr. Chairman, than would have been the case if we hadn't been improving our overall efficiency as a department and our overall efficiency in this particular area of fire fighting.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to respond to the Environment estimates this evening and the additional program funding requirements as requested.

Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that we support fire protection and forest protection based on a fast initial attack, which is the process this government has undertaken. However, we do have some concerns with some of the ways that the moneys are forecasted and managed in that regard. I would take us back a couple of years to when we saw the gutting of this particular department, particularly around protection areas, where we lost a great deal of the experience we had within the government in forest fire fighting. That loss came at a cost to us that I would suggest we are still paying today, that we see reflected sometimes in these increased costs.

I agree with the minister that it's very difficult to predict what the fire suppression costs are going to be for the year, and I agree with the minister when he says that it's important to have a fast attack and to maintain the necessary supplies and equipment associated with that. But we have to recognize that we are in a situation in this province for not one year or two years but for three years now – and it looks like we're going into our fourth year – where we have a high fire hazard. The water tables are low in the province. Weather conditions are indicating that there is a potential for this high fire hazard to continue. So I would expect, Mr. Chairman, that when we see the budget for next year, we're going to see a budget forecast in there that could reasonably anticipate these kinds of increased costs so that we don't see the government coming back for another $30 million for costs in fire fighting activity. It's hard to predict, but there are models, and we would expect them to come in closer to the dollars.

When we talk about another item where additional funding is asked for here, the $1.2 million for "higher than budgeted cost of improvements made to forest airstrips used in fire fighting," once again upgrading those strips and maintaining safe airstrips is of critical importance. No doubt about that. But that is infrastructure, Mr. Chairman. I asked this question last night, and I'm surprised that I didn't get an answer to it tonight: how is it that we can't predict from year to year what the infrastructure maintenance costs are going to be? How is it that somebody can't go out and look at those airstrips before we get into fire season and see what kind of improvements are going to be required and build those into the budget? I think it is irresponsible not to have done that, and I would expect once again that to be addressed in next year's budget.

Then there is the $2 million "to support forestry companies' efforts to improve forest management practices related to fire risk." Good idea, Mr. Chairman. Partnerships like that I think we can fully support at any given time. But once again, these partnerships didn't happen overnight, and the cost could have been anticipated and projected in the budgets. We would expect to see that again next year. If there are partnerships that they're going to go into with companies on improving forest management – and I would hope there are – we're going to see those outlined in the budget in the new year so that they don't come in supplementary estimates. Let's do a little strategic thinking on the government side. Let's be proactive in some of these instances and be a step ahead of the game instead of two steps behind.

Those are my concerns about these supplementary estimates, Mr. Chairman. I will close on one additional concern I have, and once again that's the process that we undergo this evening. So much money in supplementary estimates and so many departments have to be crammed into a very limited time span. Look at how many large budgets we had to talk about this evening and huge dollars being expended in supplementary estimates, additional moneys the government is coming back for at this late time in the year, and we are going to in total spend two and a half hours talking about them. That is an appalling state and is something that needs to be addressed. With that I will close.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the comments of the member across the way, and I'm quite prepared to sit down and discuss the specifics of them with her. I think we are in a general sense in agreement that this is an important area that needs attention and it's not always as predictable as we would like, so thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the supplementary estimates of the Department of Environment, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Agreed to:

Operating expense and capital investment	$33,000,000

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Offices of the Legislative Assembly

THE CHAIRMAN: To speak to this, we'll call upon the chairman of the Legislative Offices Committee, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. LANGEVIN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On the Auditor General's supplementary estimate you'll realize if you look in your booklet that the regular budget this year was $14,639,000, and the supplementary estimate is for $1,045,000.

There are two reasons why the Auditor General needs extra funding in this year's budget. The first reason is that there's a severe shortage of qualified or professional accountants in Alberta. Also, because we're experiencing a very fast economic expansion in our province, private enterprise is prepared to pay much higher wages for accountants. So the office of the Auditor General is operating understaffed, and they were forced to farm out quite a bit of work this year to private-sector firms. This farming out to private firms is much, much more costly than our own staff.

The second reason, Mr. Chairman, is that the Auditor General is required to do more and more work every year, and the reason for that is that we're forming new boards that are responsible to government. We just formed 18 new children's services boards and also nine PDD boards across the province. There are a lot of accounting procedures in the first year or two of operation. These new boards are starting with new staff, and they have growing pains, so it requires a lot more hours for the Auditor General's office to do the accounting of these boards at the end of the year.

These are the two reasons the supplementary estimate is needed this year.

Thank you very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. You know, this is one of those areas where what's not said on pages 9, 10, and 11 of the estimates book is more instructive than in fact the text that appears. I'm a member of the Legislative Offices Committee and recall the Auditor General coming forward and asking for the additional requisition. I think what has to be marked and noted is that a significant reason for the cost is the fact that there have been serious problems with the management and governance in the child and family services authorities.

One need look no further than the 1999-2000 annual report of the Auditor General. One sees as one goes through there that in the province's haste to create these authorities – Calgary was the first one, and then a number of authorities followed. What happened is that we just had a number of defects in terms of the kinds of governance, the kind of accountability systems and mechanisms that aren't there. One has only to look at the Auditor General's report on pages 72, 73, 74, and 75. You find comments that "the majority of Authorities have not adopted formal procedures to ensure" compliance with "section 9 of the Child and Family Services Authorities Act." There was a need for "further instruction [on] legislative and regulatory requirements." Many of the child and family services authorities did not have a formal evaluation process for the CEO.

I guess one of the things I'm always struck by is – we've seen government in this province talk about deregulation and setting up boards that are closer to the people. I mean, we know the sort of lexicon and the language that goes along with that. But what we find in practice is something often very different than the theory. Just as we've seen with the regional health authorities, while we talk a lot about decentralization, we find enormous kinds of centralization that go on with those. To the extent that the boards aren't as effective as they could be, you continue to have an environment where you have some strong centralizing forces.

You have the comment on page 73 by the Auditor General that "most of the Authority co-chairs indicated that their boards do not have a formal self-evaluation process either for individual board members or the board as a whole." We have vacancies on authority boards which are "proving difficult to fill," and on and on. You've got the Keystone child and family services authority. That's a wonderful label, isn't it? The Keystone authority. The financial statements contain "an adverse opinion resulting from significant departures from generally accepted accounting principles."

Well, it seems to me it's important that the Auditor General have the resources to be able to administer the kind of rigorous scrutiny necessary to ensure not just that dollars are being well spent but that children are being adequately protected. But it has to be marked and noted that largely the reason we are here looking at the supplementary supply is because some things were not done properly within the management of the child and family services authorities. I think that while that wasn't the sole and exclusive reason for the additional funding, it certainly was a substantial part of the cost. That has to be pointed out because that's not apparent. The explanatory note on page 10 says:

The increase is due to a continuing shortage of professional accounting staff that has extended reliance on temporary staff, and a significant increase in private sector public accounting firm chargeout rates.

Well, what I heard the Auditor General tell us is that there have also been significant – significant – problems in doing the audit work on those child and family services authorities. That has increased the demand on the Auditor General, and as a direct consequence of that he's looking for additional money. So there are the other factors, but let's not gloss over, let's not conceal from Albertans the fact that there are serious management, governance, and accountability issues in those child and family services authorities, and that's why we have the additional resource.

If we extrapolate, if we have those concerns about the governance of child and family services authorities from a question of managerial efficacy and efficiency, then what kinds of risks are we running, Mr. Chairman, in terms of the purpose of those authorities, the protection of children? It's maybe a disquieting comment to end the evening, but it needs to be said.

Those are the observations I wanted to make. I'm certainly going to vote for and support this, because the Auditor General is an important check on big, powerful governments that proceed to make ill-advised plans, execute them poorly, and then don't put in place the systems to evaluate where they've fallen short of the mark. We need the Auditor General to be able to provide that important function, and that's why I'm supporting the supplementary estimates in that area.

Thanks very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the supplementary estimates of the office of the Auditor General, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Capital Investment	$1,045,000
--	-------------

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote on the office of the Auditor General be reported?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you. I move that the committee rise and report progress and request leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. LANGEVIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the 2000-2001 supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2001, reports the approval of the following estimates, and requests leave to sit again.

Children's Services: $46,372,000 for operating expense.

Infrastructure: $419,000,000 for operating expense and capital investment.

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development: $98,000,000 for operating expense and capital investment.

Community Development: $63,588,000 for operating expense and capital investment.

Environment: $33,000,000 for operating expense and capital investment.

Office of the Auditor General: $1,045,000 for operating expense and capital investment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

[At 10:37 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, November 16, 2000 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 00/11/16
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

In a moment of silent contemplation let each of us remember those taken before their time and all those who have suffered as innocent victims of violent tragedy. We resolve to comfort the families, friends, and communities who have keenly felt the loss of loved ones through acts of violence and the disregard for the sanctity of that which is most precious: life itself. May God provide them eternal peace. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you members of the Korean Veterans Association who are seated in your gallery this afternoon. This year marks the 50th anniversary of the start of the Korean War. Many Canadians fought valiantly in the Korean War, and their contributions to preserve a free and independent South Korea cannot be forgotten. On Alberta government missions to Korea we have made a personal effort to visit the Canadian war memorial at Kapyong in remembrance of the sacrifices of Canadians for democracy in Korea.

I am honoured today to introduce from the Korean Veterans Association, unit 21, from Edmonton – and I will ask our guests to rise and remain standing as I introduce them – first, Mr. John Kolanchey, padre; Mr. Levi Power, president; Mr. Roy Brand, first vice-president; Mr. Jean Pierre Van Eck, second vice-president; and Mr. Hurbert Whitford, treasurer. Unfortunately, Mr. Roly Soper, the president of the Korean Veterans Association prairie region in Calgary, could not be with us today. I ask all of the Members of the Legislative Assembly to give our guests the most warm welcome and our appreciation.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Bill 26 Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill, Bill 26, being the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act.

This legislation will create a day of remembrance recognizing and commemorating the Holocaust and other instances of genocide.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 26 be placed on the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, today I table a response to the question raised by the member from the opposition yesterday relative to confirming statements of claim filed about abuse.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Resource Development.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to file two documents today, one relating to the restructuring of Alberta's electricity industry and the second to natural gas prices. An Ipsos-Reid poll indicated that a full majority of Albertans heavily endorsed the move towards competition in the provincial electricity industry and, second, a provincial comparison of Canadian natural gas prices from the October and November 2000 issues of the Canadian Gas Price Reporter. These show that Alberta has the lowest natural gas prices in Canada.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I would table with the Assembly five copies of the Department of Environment's response to Written Question 7.

As well, I would like to table five copies of the Department of Environment's response to motions for returns 14 and 15.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I wish to table today five copies of the environmental protection security fund annual report from April 1, 1999, to March 31, 2000.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. LANGEVIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chairman of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I have two tablings today. Firstly, I would like to table five copies of the annual report of the Auditor General of Alberta for the year '99-2000, which is submitted pursuant to section 19(4) of the Auditor General Act. Copies were distributed to all members on October 12, 2000.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table five copies of the annual report of the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, again for the year '99-2000, which is submitted pursuant to section 61(1) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Copies will be distributed today to members.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a audit performed by the Auditor General on our contracts.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much Mr. Speaker. I have four separate tablings this afternoon. These are documents that I've received through freedom of information from the Department of Municipal Affairs. The first one is a letter dated June 24, 1998, to the Hon. Murray Smith from Calgarians complaining of roof rot.

The second is a letter dated June 10, 1998, addressed to the hon. Member from Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, and it is also complaining of roof rot.

The third document is dated Monday, June 15, 1998, and it is an e-mail to the Premier of our province complaining about roof rot in Sherwood Park.

The fourth and final document is dated June 14, 1998, and is also addressed to the hon. Premier. It is from the Terwilligar Hill Estates Home Owners Association, 150 households, complaining about roof rot.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would file five copies of Caught in the Middle: Graduate Students and Rising Tuition Levels in Alberta, an executive summary done by Arthur Arruda at the University of Alberta for the University of Alberta Graduate Students' Association detailing the very difficult position that the government's policy of allowing tuitions to rise has placed students in.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first one is a letter from Brian Callinan. Mr. Callinan says that "the government's electricity rebate is unfair to and discriminates against renters who have their utilities included in their rent."

The second letter is from Carol Rauf, who complains about the extraordinary delay in getting a response from the Alberta health care office, 25 minutes on the phone waiting on the line.

The third one is a letter from Darlene Zloklikovits, an Alberta Injured Worker's Society representative. She takes exception to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment's words that are printed in Alberta Venture.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table five copies of a draft private member's bill called the Bill 11 Repeal Act, 2000, which I will be introducing at the first opportunity that becomes available for me to do so. This bill is a commitment I made to the people of Edmonton-Highlands.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table two letters this afternoon. One is to the Hon. Halvar Jonson; the other is to the Hon. Gary Mar. In the letter to Minister Jonson the request is that the payment of $695 for a private MRI be reimbursed to Karen Rodway.

In the letter to Gary Mar the request is that the payment of $920 for a private MRI be paid to Carole Parent, as well as an apology for the tremendous stress that she was placed under.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and table in this Assembly the Edmonton Joint Planning Committee on Housing community plan on homelessness 2000-2003 executive summary report, which was prepared through a community consultation process by the Edmonton Joint Planning Committee on Housing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my pleasure to table the 1999-2000 annual report of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, which presents its work in providing alcohol, other drug, and gambling problem prevention, treatment, and information services to the people of Alberta. AADAC is a Crown agency within the Ministry of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table today the requisite number of copies of a story outlining how the Prime Minister jumped the queue in order to get surgery from a private surgical facility not available to the public.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the chair would like to table five copies of a memorandum from the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort requesting that Bill 209, Employment Standards (Parental Leave) Amendment Act, 2000, be brought to the Committee of the Whole on Tuesday, November 21, 2000.

head: Introduction of Guests

MS HALEY: Mr. Speaker, I'm so pleased to be able to rise today in this Assembly and introduce two residents of my constituency. It doesn't happen very often that I have people here, so it's a real honour to be able to host them and to introduce them to you and through you to our Assembly. The first lady is Heather Davies, who works very hard in the town of Chestermere and is also the chairman of the Chestermere Weed and Water Committee, which is a huge issue in our area. The lady accompanying her is Captain Sherrie Webster of the Royal Canadian Air Cadet squadron in Strathmore, number 903. She is working very hard to set up a cadet squadron in the Chestermere area as well, only to do with the Navy. I'm just absolutely delighted to have them both here. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. SEVERTSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to the members of this Assembly 120 grade 6 students from the Fox Run school in Sylvan Lake. They're accompanied by teachers Ms Robin Irvine, Mr. John Fielder, Mrs. Karen Adair, Mr. Teplyske, and Miss Michelle Doz along with 14 parents. They're here to observe a whole hour of this Legislature. I know the grade 6 students will be on their best behaviour. I just ask my colleagues also to be on their best behaviour. At this time I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have an introduction this afternoon as well. It's an individual that's well known within this Assembly because she was a frequent visitor during the Bill 11 debates. This afternoon she has brought her grandson to enjoy the festivities in the House. The individual is Shirley Armstrong. If she would stand with her grandson to be recognized and receive the warm welcome.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two sets of introductions today. Let me start with the first one. I have the pleasure of introducing 43 young people visiting from Mexico. They've been in Alberta since September, and they'll return home on December 15. They are seated in the members' gallery. They're all here to learn about our politics and society as well as to bone up on their English. They're accompanied by two instructors, Mr. Helmut Nikolai and Mr. Alex Peralta. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is of a colleague of mine and of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, Dr. Bernard Schwartz, who is sitting in the public gallery. I ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electric Utilities Deregulation

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. About three hours ago the Premier addressed the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties at the closing session of their convention here in Edmonton. Many were surprised that the Premier didn't address the concern that has certainly been top of mind for those councillors, particularly that issue of the high cost of electricity in Alberta. The Premier did say, however, that the AAMD and C was the backbone of his government's support in this province. So my question to the Premier is: what does the Premier say to the virtually unanimously passed resolution at the convention where the members expressed their great concern about the forecasted rate increases under the Klein deregulation scheme?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I did address the question of deregulation. I indicated to the AAMD and C that we will continue to work with them. I also pointed out that if any person or corporate entity wants to stay in a regulated environment, they have the option of doing so for five years. I also explained that high electricity costs are due to a great extent in part to the phenomenal development that is going on in this province as I speak. It's simply a supply/demand situation. It has nothing to do with regulation or deregulation. It simply happens to be that this province is in the midst of one of the most significant economic booms of the last century and perhaps this century. We don't know what the future holds.

What I will say to the AAMD and C is that we have put in place almost $800 million to offset the rising costs of electricity as it relates to municipalities, as it relates to government infrastructure within those municipalities, as it relates to businesses, as it relates to farm operations. In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, of course, starting January 1, there will be a $20 reduction in the bills of each and every householder in this province, and that should go a long way toward alleviating the rising cost of electricity.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, it doesn't, in fact.

So what does the Premier say to those AAMD and C councillors who have grave concerns that deregulation is leading to price instability because of inadequate supply under his watch?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the situation has occurred under a regulated environment. It is simply a case of being able to bring power onstream, and you just can't snap your fingers and create generation.

It's like everything else in this province. You know, we have to deal with the pressures and the challenges of growth. That's one of the downsides, unfortunately, to economic growth and prosperity. Whether it's electricity, whether it's infrastructure, we have to deal with these pressures, and we are dealing with these pressures. No other jurisdiction in this country, Mr. Speaker, has been able to do as we have been able to do, and that is to provide very significant rebates to alleviate the high cost of energy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What about the councillors' concern that the rising cost of electricity is leading to higher input costs for our agriculture industry resulting in inflation and cost increases for consumers down the road?

MR. KLEIN: Quite true. Quite true, Mr. Speaker. It's a concern I heard when I traveled the province about a month ago, and I indicated that as well to the delegates of the AAMD and C. Hopefully when the 1,400 megawatts comes onstream, prices will go down. There will be more electricity, more transmission capacity. In the interim to help the farmers offset the higher costs of input relative to farm production, we have introduced an $800 million program that will hopefully alleviate to some extent the higher costs of electricity and the higher costs of input.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Versacold is an Edmonton-based company that is involved in the food and beverage industry. It is in fact facing a 136 percent increase in its electricity costs under the Klein deregulation scheme. The options that are being considered by Versacold today are going out of business or moving its Alberta operations to another Canadian province where electricity is cheaper. How can this Premier claim that Alberta has low electricity costs when Versacold will pay 12 cents per kilowatt hour for electricity in 2001 in Alberta compared to 4.5 cents in British Columbia, 6.6 cents in Saskatchewan, 3.7 cents in Manitoba, and 5.5 cents in Quebec?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt about it; electricity costs are going up. It's happening under a regulated environment. It could happen under a deregulated environment. It would happen in any event because it's a supply/demand situation. What I would say to this company is that, yes, we're doing our best through a rebate program to offset the rising cost of electricity. When you take that rebate into account, I think the company will find that our prices are comparable to those in the provinces just mentioned.

I would also remind the company that this is the lowest taxed province of any jurisdiction in Canada, Mr. Speaker, that we have a highly educated work force, and the only way taxes are going in this province are down. So I would say: weigh all the costs before considering a move to another jurisdiction, because there will be an adjustment in the marketplace vis-a-vis regulations. I can tell you that the taxes in those ND jurisdictions, those socialist jurisdictions, are guaranteed to go only one way, and that is up.

MRS. MacBETH: So, Mr. Speaker, what is the Premier doing to see that supply is increased in order that the prices will go down before the five- to seven-year predicted scenario at best in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. Minister of Resource Development respond to set the record absolutely straight as it relates to electricity prices.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll just supplement on this. As far as the winter supply, the total demand for this winter for electricity is going to be 7,700 megawatts or so. The total capacity we have as far as supply is 9,400 megawatts. So that leaves over 1,600 megawatts that will be available. In addition to that, through the process from 1998 to 2000 1,400 megawatts of electricity came onstream, and in the next couple of years we expect another 1,600 megawatts to come onstream. So the process is moving.

What I've done also is just recently announce a 10-point plan. That will definitely deal with the issues that the opposition member has addressed in the House. [interjections] Well, Mr. Speaker, I could go through the 10-point plan.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Economic Development: what does this minister say to a company that has realized that there is an Alberta disadvantage, not an advantage, when it comes to electricity rates in this province?

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, hon. Leader of the Opposition. What I say is simply what the Premier has said, that when you take into account the overall tax structure, when you take into account the infrastructure, the availability of a highly talented and educated workforce, Alberta is simply the place to be. As the Minister of Resource Development indicated, we are going to be addressing this issue over the next couple of years. In fact, our department is working very closely with his department with respect to the issue.

I'd also like to point out that when you look at what Alberta has done the past few years, from '94 to '99 we have led this country in growth, 3.9 percent. We are forecast to actually lead the country in the year 2000 by over 6 percent. So we are addressing the issue. The problem the Liberals have, Mr. Speaker, is that we're too successful. They don't like it.

THE SPEAKER: You want to supplement, Provincial Treasurer? Briefly, now.

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, the question was about the Alberta disadvantage. I would like to point out the advantage that has taken place since 1994. When they're looking at electrical rates and considering moving, they must consider all the other advantages that there are in the province of Alberta. Since 1994 we have cut $3 billion in either personal income taxes, business taxes, fees, property taxes in the province of Alberta. In fact, all taxes were cut. Besides going to a single rate of tax and a $1.3 billion discount in personal tax, plus the $955 million taken out of small business tax and corporate tax, other taxes taken since 1994, our reducing user fees and charges by 60 million, we have reduced residential and farm education property tax. We've eliminated the provincial machinery and equipment tax. We've implemented the Alberta family employment tax credit for low- and middle-income working families. We've reduced the aviation fuel tax, 5 cents to 1 and a half cents a litre. We've dropped the railway fuel tax, 9 cents to 3 cents. We . . .

THE SPEAKER: Thank you, hon. Provincial Treasurer. [interjection] Thank you, hon. Provincial Treasurer. I have 13 additional private members who would like to participate in addition to the two leaders. We'll now move forward to the third main question from the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Private MRI Clinics

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier confirm that Albertans who have enough money can and do jump the queue in order to get access to public health care systems in this province with private MRIs?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, there are 30 cases that are under investigation as it relates to diagnostic services, I think specifically MRIs. Relative to where that is at this particular point, I will have the hon. minister respond.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, this has been the subject matter of some discussion with the Minister of Health, my federal counterpart for at least, I guess, the next 10 days. A number of cases were brought forward to the attention of the Minister of Health, Allan Rock. The Hon. Mr. Rock and I have talked about this. I have indicated to him that in accordance with our Health Care Protection Act we will comply with the Canada Health Act. These cases were brought to his attention. I indicated to him that we would fully co-operate with any investigation that he would make and provide the information required and that if there was a conclusion that we're offside the Canada Health Act, we would move to rectify it.

I point out, Mr. Speaker, that these types of facilities exist across Canada. These are in other parts of the country. We have worked very hard at increasing our MRI capacity. We currently have seven MRIs in the health care system. Two years ago we did 23,000. Last year we did 31,000. This year for the first quarter we did over 10,000. We're projected to go over 40,000 for this year. We will have on board, in addition to the seven publicly funded MRIs that we have right now, an additional six by the end of April, which will give us the highest MRI capacity per capita in the country.

Mr. Speaker, these are important issues to discuss on a national basis. It is not just in Alberta that these types of facilities exist but in other parts of Canada as well, and that is the reason why Minister Rock has made his commitment to me that we will work together to help resolve this.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, let me just give them a simple question, and the question is to the Premier. I think it's the Premier's responsibility to answer this because he's been around the map on it so many times. Will his government pay for all medically necessary MRIs in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we do. If a doctor prescribes an MRI or a CAT scan or an X ray, that person will get that X ray, that CAT scan, that MRI, or any other diagnostic service under Alberta health care. It's as simple as that. There is a simple answer to a very simple question.

MRS. MacBETH: That applies as long as they wait, Mr. Speaker.

The question is: when someone receives a private MRI that is medically necessary and pays for it out of their own pocket, will this Premier ensure that the public health care system will cover the cost of that medically necessary MRI?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I am not all over the map on this. As I said before, there are 30 such cases, precisely the kind of cases to which the leader of the Liberal opposition alludes, that are now under investigation. Once again I will have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness explain exactly what is taking place.

MR. MAR: Just to be very brief, I have indicated again to Minister Rock that we will co-operate fully with his investigation of cases involving MRIs and that if we are offside the Canada Health Act, which we have committed by legislation to comply with, we will move to rectify it. But at this point, Mr. Speaker, the investigation is not complete. There has been no conclusion drawn that we are offside the Canada Health Act.

THE SPEAKER: The deputy leader of the third party.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the government's deregulation is driving costs of electricity through the roof, the Premier is trying to dodge criticism by saying that power prices are rising everywhere and that it has nothing to do with deregulation. He claimed yesterday that even in NDP Saskatchewan the rates are going higher and higher and higher. The Premier is wrong, and we've confirmed that with the minister responsible in Saskatchewan. My question to the Premier: why did the Premier falsely claim that electricity rates in Saskatchewan are going higher when in fact skyrocketing electricity rates are unique to Alberta and caused by this government's own deregulation scheme?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, in fact, electricity rates in Saskatchewan increased significantly then the government in its typical socialistic fashion capped them.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, if five years of research has gone into electricity deregulation by this government, why did the Premier not realize that rates have been frozen for four years in the regulated market in neighbouring Saskatchewan?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we have had and we still are in a regulated environment.

You know, Mr. Speaker, this hon. member more than any other person in this legislative Chamber should know about electricity rates and how those rates are set, because he served on the board of one of the major electricity producers and distributors in the province, a company by the name of EPCOR. This hon. member was involved in setting rates and getting approval from Edmonton city council to confirm those rates. This hon. member knows all about the procedure to hike rates, because he's been part of it.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: You have been recognized, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good one, Mr. Premier.

If five years of research has gone into electricity deregulation in Alberta, will the Premier undertake to table in this House all studies that the government has done or has had done on the effects of deregulation on electricity prices and supply or reliability of electricity supply in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, certainly no offence to the hon. member, but in this Legislative Assembly there have been countless documents tabled, both in favour, in support of deregulation and from the opposition, I'm sure, opposing deregulation. There's been a tremendous amount of documentation already tabled in this Legislature. If the hon. member can be specific as to the type of documentation he might require, I'm sure that the hon. Minister of Resource Development will do his best to make sure that that information is made available.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Labour Market Development Program

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce is an important and respected organization in the city of Red Deer, and in fact this year their executive director, Ms Jan Fisher, was recognized by the Canadian chamber as the executive director of the year. Yesterday the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar used pleonastic questioning to create suspicion about a labour market development agreement awarded to the Red Deer chamber. Well, Red Deer is concerned about openness and accountability. My questions today are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Would the minister please assure this Assembly that the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce contract followed acceptable procedures?

MR. DUNFORD: Yes, I certainly can, Mr. Speaker. Under the labour market development agreement we contract agencies and service providers to deliver job training and labour market programs to eligible Albertans. It might be of interest to people here in the House today that we have over 1,770 LMDA contracts and 3,000 training on the job contracts awarded through a tendering process. So the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce competed – and I'd like to make sure we highlight that: competed – to provide integrated employment services for youth on an open tender call in 1998, and they were successful in this particular bid. The contract was initially for one year, and based on successful performance, it was amended to the three-year maximum permitted under that tender call. The total cost of that contract was $3,095,910.

MR. DOERKSEN: To the same minister: what assurances can the minister give the Assembly that AHRE, Alberta Human Resources and Employment, is accountable for other funding provided for the range of job training and labour market programs?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, we do have policies and standards in place, Mr. Speaker. This is public money that we're talking about here, so we have to make sure that we manage it as effectively as we can. This is the reason we are a jurisdiction that uses a tendering process to select contractors. We believe that this assures us, then, of good value for money.

Now, our staff monitor those particular contracts and the services that then are provided again to ensure that we receive the deliverables that were contracted for. We have clear and reasonable expectations and results that we measure on the progress of those contracts, and as everyone here knows, through annual reporting we do report on our performance.

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, one more to the same minister: how do you know whether the money spent on job training and labour market development is in fact used appropriately?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, we had Alberta Learning conduct three audits on behalf of our department, and also the Auditor General conducted two audits of our programs, and the findings, of course, from those audits are followed up with managers and, where needed, agreed upon corrective action then is taken. As a matter of fact, I tabled one of those audits here today.

When we took over these programs from Human Resource Development Canada there were some issues regarding contract management. These audits demonstrate that we have improved management of these contracts.

Coal-fired Power Production

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, Alberta companies are responding to the Klein energy crisis in a number of ways. Some companies are leaving the province, some are being forced to lay off staff, and others, those who cannot leave because of significant investments in their plants and factories, are beginning to convert from natural gas to coal to power their operations. Clearly, these conversions are a direct result of the government's mismanagement of our abundant supply of natural gas. My questions today are to the Minister of Environment. Will the minister confirm that the government, through caucus or its committees, has been asked to approve the conversion from natural gas to coal for large-scale cement plants in Alberta?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it is the case that I have been informed that there are at least two firms in the province who are contemplating making an application through the proper regulatory process to convert from natural gas to coal. I would like to assure the hon. member that they will have to go through the proper regulatory review and that they will have to have a review and an examination which is thorough with respect to meeting emission requirements.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, when was the government planning to tell Albertans about these applications, and what is the appeal process for those who do not agree with the application?

MR. JONSON: Well, I would like to perhaps make my first answer a little bit clearer for the hon. member. That is, I indicated that I am aware that there are at least two firms in the province who are contemplating this particular move or this particular application, Mr. Speaker. At this point in time I am not aware of any formal, comprehensive application that has been made through the regulatory process for this particular purpose. Certainly if and when that occurs – and I expect that it will – we will then be able to report on the nature of their application and the timing of the process of review.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development to supplement.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to make a couple of points. We shouldn't interpret this conversion as being something that is negative. In fact, my understanding is that there are many environmentally safe processes in place now where coal can be used for the generation of power.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, at a time when our coal companies in Alberta are struggling due to the international price for coal, I think this type of expansion, this type of creativity and entrepreneurship is actually welcome within the province. It's supporting a strong local industry. Certainly, I've had some discussions with some companies from the economic development perspective and have encouraged them when it makes sense to do so to invest in this type of process.

MS CARLSON: But the issue, Mr. Speaker, is: can either minister guarantee Albertans that our health and well-being as well as the quality of our air and our water will not be compromised by a government decision to allow an increase in the industrial burning of coal? They absolutely cannot do it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. JONSON: If I could, Mr. Speaker. I realize that the question is probably not in order, but I do want to indicate that the emission standards that we set as a province, whether it is from the petroleum industry or from the coal industry in this province, are among the highest in the world in terms of the requirements that they put in place to protect the environment. There will be no exceptions made outside of those requirements and those standards as far as these applications are concerned.

As the previous responder indicated, we have an abundance of coal in this province. It is a very valuable resource, one that providing it can be done in an environmentally responsible way should be developed and used in this province. It's one of our many resources that should be utilized in an effective way.

THE SPEAKER: Well, I was going to rule the question out of order because it was argumentative and it had its own answer in it, so we don't need a whole series of supplements with respect to that.

The hon. Member for Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Cancer Treatment

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government says that it has heard Albertans concerns over waiting lists for health services and is taking steps to address that concern. We all know that when someone is diagnosed with cancer, then time is of the essence. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister tell us what the status is for cancer waiting lists?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to give this response today to convey to this Assembly the report that has been given to me from the Alberta Cancer Board, and that report is this. First of all, the time that it takes from the time a patient is referred by his doctor to see an oncologist: that person will see an oncologist in one week or less. Secondly, when an oncologist prescribes chemotherapy, the average time for waiting for that chemotherapy will be seven days. The third piece of information given to me by the Alberta Cancer Board is that when an oncologist prescribes radiation for either breast or prostate cancers, the average time until that radiation treatment is given is four weeks, and in the case of other tumors it's even less time. So that's great news from the Alberta Cancer Board.

MR. BRODA: Mr. Speaker, my second question is also to the same minister. Can the minister explain why waiting lists are on target now when earlier in the year we heard from some Albertans who had to travel to the United States for treatment?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, it is true that in March of this year waiting lists, particularly radiation treatment for breast and prostate cancers, were very long at the Cross Cancer Institute here in Edmonton. It was some 11 weeks, and in Calgary at the Tom Baker cancer centre it was four to four and a half weeks. In large part those waiting lists were created by a shortage of specialized cancer treatment staff, especially radiation therapists, and there is a national, indeed perhaps even an international shortage of these types of specialists.

What we did, Mr. Speaker, in response to that was we gave the Alberta Cancer Board an additional $9 million in May of this year to hire more radiation therapists and expand cancer outreach services. That $9 million was part of an overall package of some $55 million that would reduce wait lists in a number of other areas.

Mr. Speaker, again, there are a number of different inputs that will help us reduce waiting lists: the people – that is, radiation therapists in this case – equipment, and of course places for these people to work. People, plant, and equipment are the three inputs that have helped reduce waiting lists in this province.

MR. BRODA: My final question to the same minister: what action is the minister taking over the long term to address waiting lists for cancer treatments and other health services?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I think that in looking at surveys of Albertans who use our health care system, the overwhelming majority of them, some 89 percent of them, say that the service they receive is good or very good. Having said that, I think that from time to time people have expressed concerns about access. Access is, of course, the first thing we want to improve in our six-point plan for health delivered earlier this year.

As I said in my answer to the first supplementary, there are really three things that help to address the issue of access, and that is people, plant, and equipment. First of all, Mr. Speaker, we have committed to increasing the number of positions in our postsecondary institutions in the health professions by 850 new spaces this year. There are now 5,650 people training in our postsecondaries in health professions. Also, we are funding an additional 2,400 new frontline staff over the next three years. Of course, many of those will be nurses.

We are also building new facilities and upgrading existing facilities for the expansion of both acute and long-term care beds, expanding our capacity for surgery, emergency, dialysis, and other medical procedures. This commitment was in the magnitude of $793 million.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to point out the importance of equipment, and I want to congratulate the Cross Cancer Institute in Edmonton on today's announcement of a revolutionary new device to be installed next September. The Cross expects that this device, which is called a helical tomotherapy unit, will provide more accurate radiation treatment and will reduce the number of treatments per patient, which will of course also make the treatment less expensive.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MS LEBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans in this province continue to pay out of their own pockets for medically necessary services like MRIs. Yesterday the Premier said during his news conference that the Canada Health Act would have to change in order to make MRIs an insured medical service. Even this afternoon we heard from both the Premier and the minister of health that they are skirting behind the issue by waiting for the investigation to be completed by the federal Minister of Health. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier today, right now, instruct his minister of health to include all medically necessary MRIs, whether they're performed within a hospital or outside of a hospital, as an insured service under the Alberta health care plan?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it seems that I've already answered that question. It's my understanding that if a doctor prescribes an MRI or a CAT scan or an X ray or any other diagnostic service, if a doctor prescribes it and that person goes and has the diagnostic procedure done, then it's covered under Alberta health care. It's as simple as that.

MS LEBOVICI: Let's try this again. When an MRI, which is always prescribed, is performed outside of a hospital and is not contracted through the regional health authority, will the Premier instruct his minister of health to pick up the cost of that MRI? Mr. Premier, I think you know what I'm talking about, I know the minister of health does, and the former ministers of health do as well.

MR. KLEIN: I know exactly what the hon. member is talking about. If it's prescribed by a physician and that referral is made to have certain diagnostic services, that will be covered under health care.

Mr. Speaker, if a person gains access to an MRI or to a CAT scan or to an X ray and if there is no demonstrable medical reason to have the diagnostic service performed, then it stands to reason that that person should pay for it.

MS LEBOVICI: As Mrs. Karen Rodway of Edmonton paid out of pocket $695 for an MRI that was prescribed by a doctor and as Mrs. Carol Parent of Sherwood Park paid $920 out of her pocket for a medically prescribed MRI, by what the Premier has just said this afternoon, you should be refunding those two individuals their dollars. Will you be doing it? Yes or no?

MR. KLEIN: Thank you for that. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, I'm trying to answer a question. I don't know precisely what the answer is. [interjection] No, I don't know. I can only guess that in this particular case the doctor prescribed an MRI.

You know, I'm blue-skying this. The doctor says to the patient: "Yes, you need an MRI, but it's not urgent. Therefore, we can schedule you in, say, in a couple of months." Right? That person then says: I don't want to wait a couple of months, and I'll just dig into my own pocket and go get it done tomorrow. Right? Those are among the 30 cases now that I understand are being investigated to make the determination that in fact they were medically prescribed procedures and that everything was done in accordance with the Canada Health Act and with Alberta health care standards.

I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the best way to explain this is to use an example from our emergency wards. I've traveled to many hospitals throughout Alberta, and what you'll find in many hospital emergency wards is a sign that says: the patient in most need of urgent care will be treated first. So we rely upon physicians to determine the need or the urgency that a person has for an MRI. Where you are in the line does not depend upon when you arrived at the line, but it depends in accordance with your need. In the case of emergencies, the waiting list is zero. The waiting list is zero.

Mr. Speaker, we rely upon physicians to determine whether an individual should have one immediately or in a week or in two weeks. There is a priority listing, and if an individual whose need is not as urgent as the emergency case that I outlined, then they will have to wait. In our system if that individual wishes to pay for one privately, our system allows that. Now, that is the subject matter of our current discussion with the Minister of Health, Allan Rock. That is exactly what we will work towards to resolve.

Again, Mr. Speaker, these facilities exist across Canada.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

High-speed Internet Access

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. About a year and a half ago the technology support people from the Elk Island public school board expressed their concern about the difficulties students in communities outside Sherwood Park had in accessing the Internet for educational purposes. A question for the Minister of Innovation and Science: how will the Internet access change as a result of the announcement made recently at an Elk Island public school in Sherwood Park?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, this is an important question. It was raised at the AAMDC this morning at their open session with the ministers, and it is an important question for rural Alberta. As of today only about 30 communities have access to some kind of high-speed bandwidth. What this will mean is that 420 communities will have full access to full high-speed and full bandwidth right across this province.

In regards to the Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan area in particular, there are 31 sites eligible to be hooked up into this high-speed bandwidth system. Of those, 17 are educational institutions. So there will no longer be a situation, as I saw two weeks ago in that area, that when students are hooked up to the Internet, the computers in the office have to be turned off and that when the office computers are on, the students can no longer be on the Internet. That will no longer happen, and it will certainly be effective for the Elk Island school district as well.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister explain why the contract was awarded to Bell instead of to Telus?

MR. HAVELOCK: In one minute.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, in one minute or less I'll try, Mr. Speaker.

Essentially this was very clearly a business decision. We brought in communications consultants from outside of Canada to look at proposals. We also used several firms inside Canada to look at the business cases as well as the numbers involved. It was very clear that on a business case the Bell consortia was the best bid.

I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that that Bell consortia consists of Cisco Systems, Microsoft, Nortel, and 360networks. As well, there are a number of Alberta companies involved with that, and they include Axia Netmedia, Total Telcom, Wi-Lan, and Netcom. So this will benefit all Alberta business.

If I might, I have one quick quote from an article entitled "Alberta Supernet already paying dividends." The president and chief executive officer of Tecskor says:

"Microsoft is now approaching us to do a joint project. I don't think we would have showed up on this sphere in years gone by . . . When I asked Cisco and Microsoft why they wanted to be involved in Alberta, they said this will be the only place in the world that is going into this level of integration and this level of complexity for high-speed Internet."

Another Alberta advantage of the 21st century.

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, could the minister let us know if he'll be posting on the Internet the two requests for proposal?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, the requests for proposal were posted on the Internet, but we will not be posting the bids. Both of these companies, Telus and Bell, provided private, proprietary information, so we cannot post those detailed bids on the Internet.

I would add, Mr. Speaker, that this is a win/win for Telus as well because Telus already has most of the optical networks underground in the province of Alberta, and certainly Bell will be working with Telus to light up those optical networks.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Bill Young*, an 80-year-old senior in Edmonton, paid $725 for a medically necessary MRI. My questions are to the Premier. How can the Premier claim that there is no two-tiered queue-jumping in this province when Mr. Young paid $725 of his own sweat-soaked loonies for a medically necessary, doctor-prescribed MRI?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again I don't know the details of this particular case. Did this particular patient wait the prescribed time? This is all conjecture and it's all hypothetical, but if the doctor said, "Yes, I can get you an MRI. You should have one. It's not urgent. It'll take a couple of months," and if the gentleman in question said, "Well, I want it, I'm willing to pay for it, and I'll go get it on my own time and pay for it," then that does not come under the rules vis-a-vis access to MRIs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Again to the Premier: will the Premier be sending Mr. Young and other Albertans a rebate cheque to refund the cost they paid out of their own pocket for an MRI, a medically prescribed, doctor-approved, necessary MRI?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this hon. member obviously doesn't believe in or respect in any way, shape, or form the process. The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness has said that these cases – and I understand there are about 30 – will be investigated completely in accordance with a request that he received from the hon. federal Minister of Health, Allan Rock. So if in fact all the rules were followed and if in fact these gentlemen and others are entitled to receive the rebate, they will. That investigation is now taking place.

Once again I will have the hon. minister respond.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to point out that all MRIs are ordered by doctors, whether they are through the public system or through a private facility. Again I wish to remind the hon. member that the use of these types of tests should be done on the basis of who is in need of it most critically, that you don't get it just because you want it, that you get it in accordance with a priority need established by your physician.

Now, we think, Mr. Speaker, that it is important that those that are critically in need of it get it right away. Obviously the Prime Minister doesn't believe that, having used a facility to go to the front of the queue himself. But the fact is that we believe we rely on physicians to determine what the need of an individual happens to be.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Will the Premier instruct his minister today to have all medically necessary, doctor-prescribed MRIs insured as a service under the Alberta health care plan? Will you do it, Mr. Premier?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, what is going on over there? I mean, do they not get together? Do they not trust one another to ask a question? I mean, I think there have been about three or four of them asking the same question to get the same answer. What do they do in their caucus? They're saying . . .

MRS. SOETAERT: Answer the question.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know that the question has been answered about three or four times already. You know, it is beyond me. My God, it is beyond me that these people would sit around their caucus table and say: well, I'll ask this question, but you re-ask it and then you re-ask it and then you re-ask it, and that way we can consume all our time during question period, because we can't think of any other questions to ask.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to sum up.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, not a summary but perhaps an additional bit of information.

Just to reiterate: this year we are projected to do over 40,000 MRIs – those are 40,000 MRIs – in the public system and paid for by public money, and the number of cases that have been brought to the attention of Minister Rock amount to 30. So I'd have to conclude, Mr. Speaker, that if you've got 40,000 cases where the right service was delivered at the right time and you only find 30 that were not, you're doing pretty darn good.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to a Member by Name

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, just a brief comment about a practice that seems to have grown in some degree of popularity this week, and that is actually using the name of an individual member in the Assembly. We all know that the time-honoured traditions in this Assembly are such that we refer to an hon. member by the name of their constituency or by the name of the portfolio they might have if they are a member of Executive Council.

In watching this procedure this week, the chair has come to the conclusion that perhaps the chair has added to some of the confusion with respect to this, because on one occasion this week the chair did get up and make mention of an hon. member who was not here and did make mention of the hon. member's name herself, which is not in the same context that would be in the combativeness of question and answer period. As well, the table officers, certainly on Wednesdays when we deal with written questions and motions for returns, will call on the hon. member by name only. We will look at that, and I will instruct them to no longer start naming the hon. member with respect to that.

I want to make it very clear that starting on Monday, nobody's name is going to be referred to specifically, directly or indirectly. It will not be the Klein energy program. In the same way, I have now received about 15 acronyms referring to virtually every member of the Official Opposition, and I'm not going to allow those to come to the floor either.

So it will be the Premier's or the minister's or what have you, but it will not be the individual name of the individual minister or any other member in this particular Assembly. That's a form of dignity that is extremely important.

Now, hon. Minister of Environment, you sent me a note requesting a hope to revert to tablings. Is this something that you inadvertently forgot to do during tablings, or is this as a result of something that occurred in question period? This part I will not deal with today. If it's something you wanted to do during tablings . . .

MR. JONSON: It was something that arose from question period, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Might we revert, then, to tablings?

head: Tabling Returns and Reports
(reversion)

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table five copies of an item of information which references the procedure to be followed by the firm Inland Cement in applying for conversion from natural gas.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Metis Week

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to acknowledge the commemoration of Metis Week in the province of Alberta. For the Metis people of this province and the Alberta government this week is an event-filled one. On Tuesday we opened a two-day workshop in Edmonton with the Metis Settlements General Council to prepare for the dissolution of the Metis Settlements Transition Commission in March 2002. Dissolving the commission is part of the overall plan agreed to by the Alberta government and the settlements towards the goals of self-reliance and self-regulation for this unique Metis land base here in Alberta.

Yesterday at Government House Premier Klein and Mr. Randy Parenteau, the president of the Metis Settlements General Council, signed a memorandum of understanding in part to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the Metis settlements legislation. This memorandum of understanding will help the Metis Settlements General Council with the Alberta government to review our future financial arrangements as well as the economic viability of the eight settlements that make up Canada's only Metis land base.

Earlier this morning I had the privilege of greeting members of the Metis Nation of Alberta Association, led by their president, Audrey Poitras, as they held their Louis Riel commemoration ceremony here at the Legislature. This evening, also here in Edmonton, my hon. colleague and Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs, Pearl Calahasen, will attend the first annual Louis Riel banquet, hosted by the Edmonton Metis Cultural Dance Society. At that event she will officially announce the Alberta government's cosponsorship of two Metis cultural scholarships in commemoration of two well-known Metis Albertans. Minister Calahasen and myself will also be attending the Delia Gray memorial gala tonight, hosted by the Metis Nation of Alberta Association. Delia Gray was one of Alberta's most recognized Metis elders.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government is clearly committed to its partnership with Metis people in this province. As partners we share a mutual goal to improve socioeconomic opportunities for Metis people. The government of Alberta will continue to work both on and off-settlement with other governments in the private sector toward our common goal of improving these opportunities for Metis people.

On behalf of this Assembly I send best wishes to all Metis people living in Alberta. May they always stand proud of their heritage and their part in the making of western Canada.

THE SPEAKER: Thank you, hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold

Lake. I do know that once again I may have added to some confusion with respect to this by saying that starting effective Monday I would do this, but the fact of the matter is that the rule is applicable today as well.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, no notice had been given to me, but we'll recognize you, please.

Provincial Treasurer

MR. WHITE: Sorry, sir, but I will promise not to name names. How's that? A good start?

Today I'd like to recognize the contribution of a true Alberta patriot, a democrat, sometimes diplomat, an overseer of a government-owned bank, a recent convert to the virtues of climate change, none other than Alberta's current Provincial Treasurer, for his retirement later, perhaps this year or next.

Mr. Speaker, the record of the Provincial Treasurer over the past years has been overwhelming: $262 million dollars in losses and disposal of assets of the Alberta Mortgage and Housing Corporation, $56 million in estimates of loss of the disposal of ALCB properties, $2.7 million in estimated losses of the divestiture of the CKUA radio station, $447 million in the disposal of transportation and utilities assets, and an estimated $2.3 billion in residual value of the auction of the generating capacity in the province of Alberta's electricity plants. Sir, that is over $3 billion of estimated losses in this member's privatization and deregulation schemes.

On the fiscal side our record is equally overwhelming, sir. A proponent of small government, Mr. Speaker? I think not. The Provincial Treasurer has increased the base budget spending over 8 percent over the past years. That's over $1 billion in unbudgeted spending in this year alone. A city the size of Calgary would have to be added to the province of Alberta to keep up with this member's spending. He's rapidly closing in on the previous Provincial Treasurer's supremacy as the king of supplementary supply.

Mr. Speaker, we'll all miss the Provincial Treasurer when he does leave this Assembly, but we think perhaps the one that'll most miss the member is the Auditor General. The Auditor General is now asking for an additional $1 million in order to keep up to the spending habits of this particular member.

Thanks.

Speaker's Ruling Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Provincial Treasurer, when the chair in his capacity as the Government House Leader negotiated with the former Leader of the Official Opposition in his position as the Official Opposition House Leader – a provision in Standing Orders and the changes in Standing Orders will allow for members' statements – it was always anticipated that members would be able to provide those statements without interruption. It was never anticipated in the mind of this particular person nor, I do know, in the mind of the individual I had arrived at agreement with on these members' statements that in fact hon. members in this Assembly would rise and attack for two minutes another member in this Assembly. That was never envisaged to be the purpose of Members' Statements.

In the past members have interrupted on points of order during an hon. member giving a statement, and the chair has said: no, that would be inappropriate. Hon. Provincial Treasurer, you might take the weekend now to determine the content of this statement, and if you wish to pursue a point of privilege, that is certainly one of the options available to you as a member of this Assembly.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 7(5) I'd invite the Government House Leader to advise us as to the business that will be before the Assembly next week.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We anticipate that on Monday, November 20, under Government Bills and Orders for second reading we will be dealing with Bill 20, Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2000; Bill 22, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2000; with the possibility of Committee of the Whole on Bill 20 and Bill 22; and as per the Order Paper.

On Monday evening at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders, Committee of Supply, supplementary supply, day 2 of 2, considering the estimates of Health and Wellness, Government Services, Environment, Municipal Affairs, and Justice. Should the Assembly permit, we would intend to revert to Introduction of Bills for the introduction of Bill 28, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2000, (No. 2), and as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, November 21, at 4:30 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for second reading Bill 22, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2000; in Committee of the Whole Bill 3, Statute Revision Act; and as per the Order Paper. At 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of the Whole Bill 3, Statute Revision Act; Bill 20, Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2000; and Bill 22, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2000; for second reading Bill 28, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2000 (No. 2), and Bill 29, Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2000.

On Wednesday, November 22, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for second reading Bill 29; under Committee of the Whole bills 3, 20, 22, and 28; third reading based on progress; and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, November 23, in the afternoon under Government Motions Government Motion 15, approval in general of the fiscal policies of the government, the maiden speeches of the two new members of the House from Red Deer-North and Edmonton-Highlands; under Government Bills and Orders for second reading Bill 29, Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2000; third reading of bills 3, 20, 22, 28; and as per the Order Paper.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before proceeding to call Orders of the Day, might we revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to other members of the Assembly 57 Calgarians who traveled here today by bus to witness the debate with respect to Bill 26, the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act. Among them are 30 survivors of the Holocaust, including five who have received citations from the government of Canada for their outstanding contributions to Canadian life.

Our guests here this afternoon include Jack Adler, Dora Aftergood, Cynthia Aizenman, Rosette Azran, Lauren Bell, Jeanette Berger, Rudy Berger, Bronia Cyngiser, Sidney Cyngiser, Aron Eichler, Ofer Eliezer, Shoshana Eliezer, Maxine Fishbein, Lily Fixler, Charlie Feher, Benny Freitag, Tzvia Gersten, Charles Groner, Terry Groner, Alex Halpern, Riki Heilik, Eva Hoffman, Lotti Iuni, Harvey Kane, Benny Katz, Faigee Kifer, Louise Kirschner, Oscar Kirschner, Bill Kohn, Esther Krygier, Fanny Lewin, Ralph Lewin, Max Lipsman, Sid Macklin, Sahbra Marcus, Reverend Clint Mooney, Henri Mydlarski, Dave Pertman, Peter Pivtorak, Slava Pivtorak, Freda Plucer, Rabbi Moshe Saks, Brian Sander, Alyse Schwartz, Susan Schwartz, William Schwartz, Dora Segal, Harold Segal, Judy Shapiro, Alex Shkolnik, Sigmund Sobolewski, Efran Sturwind, Dr. Bob Thomson, Fanny Wedro, Jaye Yarrow, Elliott Zuckier, Minnie Zuckier. At this time I would ask our guests, who are seated in the members' gallery, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with humbleness and great honour this afternoon that I, too, rise to introduce some special guests from Edmonton. They are survivors and second generation as well. Amongst the survivors and the second-generation individuals are Alvin Goldsman, who is president of the Jewish Federation of Edmonton and also an officer with the Canadian Jewish Congress and national vice-president of the Jewish National Fund; Gillian Horwitz, chairperson, Holocaust Education Committee of the Jewish Federation of Edmonton and national vice-president of Hadassah-WIZO; and Gayle Tallman, executive director of the Jewish Federation of Edmonton.

They, too, are here this afternoon to watch a very special event as we pass the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act, an act which commemorates Yom ha-Shoah, wherein the annihilation of 6 million Jewish men, women, and children occurred. If they would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House as well.

Thank you.

head: Orders of the Day

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would request unanimous consent of the House to waive Standing Order 73(1) to allow second reading debate on Bill 26 on the same day as it received first reading.

Bill 26
Holocaust Memorial Day
and Genocide Remembrance Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Premier on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to move on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore second reading of the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act.

I would like to open my remarks with a brief excerpt from the memoirs of Elie Wiesel, a Holocaust survivor and a Nobel prize winning writer. The passage recalls the day that Mr. Wiesel and his family were seized and sent to Auschwitz. He writes:

Our turn came on Tuesday, May 16. "All Jews out!" the gendarmes screamed, and we found ourselves in the street. My little sister was thirsty, and my grandmother too. They didn't complain, but I did, not openly, but it amounted to the same thing . . . As in the presence of death, I didn't dare raise my voice. This was where my childhood and adolescence, my prayers, studies and fasting had led. These moments would remain forever etched within me. Wherever life took me, a part of me would always remain in that street, in front of my empty house, awaiting the order to depart.

I see my little sister, I see her with her rucksack, so cumbersome, so heavy. I see her and immense tenderness sweeps over me. Never will her innocent smile fade from my soul. Never will her glance cease to sear me. Never will the sound of her voice leave my heart. She was thirsty, my little sister was thirsty.

Mr. Speaker, the images evoked by this brief passage are unforgettable. For the survivors of the Holocaust such as Elie Wiesel, even to speak of what they endured has always been very painful, more painful than most of us can imagine. I had my imagination enlightened in such a realistic fashion when I had the opportunity to visit Israel about five years ago to visit the Yad Vashem, the Holocaust memorial. Even more vivid and more stark and more dramatic an example of man's inhumanity toward man was the memorial that was dedicated to the children who perished in the Holocaust. But speak of it they do, with courage and thoughtfulness, and across the world many people have heard these voices and learned the somber lessons these survivors can teach.

On one day every spring in countries around the world these voices come together as one, on Yom ha-Shoah; that is, Holocaust Memorial Day. The voices join with other voices, the voices of survivors of other acts of violence, hatred, and genocide. Together these voices ask all people to remember the victims, whom writer William Styron so vividly describes as "the beaten and butchered and betrayed and martyred children of the earth." These voices do more than help us remember. They remind us that respect for one another and respect for the diversity of human life can never be taken for granted. They compel us to resolve even more strongly to be vigilant in the protection of human life and dignity. They urge us to speak out whenever a person or a people is persecuted or abused.

In Alberta and across Canada people are rightfully proud of the traditions of diversity and respect that underpin society. Freedom of thought and freedom of worship are a hallmark of the province and the nation, but that does not mean that Albertans should stop listening to the voices of those who have witnessed the horrors of persecution and genocide. Just last month cowardly attacks on two Edmonton synagogues demonstrated that there are still lessons to be learned. Importantly, these lessons do not apply only to one historical incident or to one cultural group. Sadly, human history is littered with episodes of horrific persecution. Virtually no continent has escaped the scourge of persecution and abuse. Virtually no people are without painful memories of suffering at the hands of others.

The Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act will ensure that Albertans do keep listening to all voices and all people who have lessons to teach us about how fragile human rights can sometimes be. It is the government's hope that the act will heighten the awareness of Yom ha-Shoah among Albertans and give greater profile to the work of Alberta's Jewish community and other cultural groups who bring their collective wisdom to the commemorations on that day.

It is also the government's hope that with the passage of this act Albertans will be encouraged to learn more about other acts of persecution, whether they be episodes of so-called ethnic cleansing or of genocide masked as civil war. Albertans are caring and compassionate people, and it is also our hope that the act will stimulate Albertans to express their compassion to those who have lived through the violence of persecution.

Above all, Mr. Speaker, it is our hope that this act will serve to strengthen Albertans' resolve to speak out in the face of persecution and to help those people who need their help. We hope the act will help to make the voices of survivors of all forms of persecution ring even more loudly and eloquently across the province. If the act can help achieve these goals, then perhaps the millions of victims will not have perished in vain.

Thank you. [applause]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am proud and I am honoured to rise in this Assembly to affirm the support of the Official Opposition for Bill 26, the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act. On May 3 of this year I spoke in the Assembly to mark the occasion of Holocaust Remembrance Day. This day has been set aside internationally for remembering the victims and the survivors of the Holocaust and for reminding us of what can happen to an apparently civilized people when bigotry, hatred, and indifference reign.

I have been honoured to represent two constituencies in Alberta in this Legislature. The first constituency I represented was the constituency of Edmonton-Glenora, in which the Talmud Torah school was located, a school where I knew students, and we went to school together when those students moved on into junior high schools in the public system. I am now honoured to represent the constituency of Edmonton-McClung, where the Talmud Torah school has come along as well. I feel it a great honour to be a representative of this great province and of this great city and to have had the opportunity to learn a great deal about people of the Jewish faith.

In my remarks on May 3 in this Legislature I urged this provincial government to consider two initiatives which would provide a living remembrance of the Holocaust. The first was the passage of legislation similar to that in several other provinces, in fact seven in this country, to recognize a Holocaust Memorial Day, Yom ha-Shoah. The second was to place a memorial on the grounds of the Legislature. These two actions would be a living memorial to ensure that we never forget. I am very pleased, and I thank the Premier and his government for acting now to see that Alberta will join with the seven other provinces in Canada by formally recognizing Holocaust Memorial Day. The Holocaust was a state-sponsored, systematic persecution and annihilation of over 6 million men, women, and children solely because of their Jewish faith. For this reason the legislation is overdue and is welcome.

Mr. Speaker, there is another reason why this Legislature must recognize and mark the issue of the Holocaust. It is because the denial of the Holocaust has reared its ugly head in our province. The revelation of teachers in the classroom teaching denial has been dealt with by the courts and dealt with by a committee of this Legislature, the Committee on Tolerance and Understanding, led by a former member for the constituency of Calgary-Buffalo, Mr. Ron Ghitler.

As a former minister of education I had a responsibility for ensuring that public school curriculum and school materials accurately reflected the significance of the Holocaust, building on those court decisions and the legislative committee. For this reason, I believed that stand-alone legislation would have been appropriate, as I had outlined in May. Nonetheless, I support this legislation before us today in respect for all concerned.

While Jews were certainly the primary victims, Mr. Speaker, Gypsies, the handicapped, and Slavs were also targeted for destruction or decimation for racial, ethnic, or national reasons. Millions more, including Jehovah's Witnesses, Soviet prisoners of war, homosexuals, and political dissidents, also suffered grievous oppression and death. The Holocaust itself speaks to the very essence of humanity. Other genocides in Armenia, Cambodia, Yugoslavia, and Rwanda clearly demonstrate that genocide is not a European phenomenon but a human one repeated too often throughout the 20th century.

Remembrance of the terrible events of the Holocaust offers an opportunity to reflect on the moral responsibilities of individuals, of societies, and of governments. We must always remain vigilant against hatred, persecution, and tyranny. Alberta's communities, which include survivors of concentration camps, their children and their grandchildren, many of whom I am privileged to know, must be recognized for their efforts to educate all of us to ensure that the unspeakable horrors against humanity will never happen again.

Those of us privileged to know survivors of genocide and their rescuers and their liberators have a special obligation to carry forward their legacy of remembrance and of education. Yom ha-Shoah, Hebrew for Holocaust, ensures that their sacrifices will never be forgotten by succeeding generations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [applause]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party in the House.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am honoured to rise on behalf of the New Democratic opposition and my colleague Brian Mason to support Bill 26, Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act.

Alberta becomes the eighth Canadian province to set aside a special day to remember the victims of the Holocaust and of other genocides that have plagued humanity. I commend the government and in particular the Member for Calgary-Glenmore for bringing this long-overdue bill forward. This bill sends a powerful message that we as elected legislators will not tolerate the hatred that lays the seeds for genocide. The Holocaust stands out in modern human history as a particularly horrific genocide. The state-sponsored attempt by Nazi Germany to systematically exterminate the entire Jewish population of Europe is unparalleled in its barbarism and sheer cruelty.

The fact that the bill's preamble specifically recognizes that the Nazis and their collaborators murdered 6 million Jewish men, women, and children is extremely important. This legislation, once proclaimed into law, will send a message to the Holocaust deniers who are still among us. Despite the irrefutable evidence for the Holocaust and the searing images of the death camps that should leave no one unmoved, there are unfortunately still those among us who either deny that the Holocaust occurred or who claim that the number of those who died is vastly exaggerated.

Not too many years ago a well-known Holocaust denier, Jim Keegstra, was infecting the minds of Alberta schoolchildren with his hatred and intolerance towards the Jewish people. Only the persistent and courageous efforts of students and parents led to the eventual removal of Mr. Keegstra from the classroom. While Mr.

Keegstra was eventually charged with hate crimes, the best antidote to the Jim Keegstras and Ernst Zundels of the world is positive legislation such as Bill 26.

I'm pleased that the bill recognizes that there were other groups who were also systemically murdered at the hands of the Nazis and others. These groups included Russians, Ukrainians, Gypsies, the mentally and physically disabled, gays and lesbians, and Germans themselves who dared to oppose Nazism and Hitler's horrific designs.

This is an appropriate occasion for each one of us to search our own hearts and to root out the hatred and racial or religious intolerance that lays the seeds for genocide. We can never afford to become complacent. The Holocaust and genocide perpetrated by Nazi Germany originated in the xenophobic mind of Adolf Hitler. Who could have predicted that the warped mind that authored Mein Kampf in the early '20s would a decade later become the leader of a powerful state that subsequently went on a murderous rampage across Europe and Africa?

In making the point that we can never afford to become complacent, I'll briefly quote from a speech given by South African Archbishop Desmond Tutu during a visit to Edmonton two years ago. In talking about racial hatred and intolerance, Archbishop Tutu said and I briefly quote:

Racism ends up in the xenophobia that we see of the neo-Nazi in Germany, that we see in the National Front in France and in England. Racism is not nice. It is not respectable. I hope that we can become more tolerant, but there is one intolerance that I would like to promote: that we will have zero tolerance for racism because this pernicious evil sprouts other ugly things such as homophobia. Racism is often a breeding ground for other prejudices as against women, as against old people, against immigrants.

Nor should we consign the Holocaust and the other genocides perpetrated by Nazis to history as something that happened before and will never happen again. In 1994 the genocide in the African country of Rwanda led to the death of hundreds of thousands and perhaps millions of people in several weeks of carefully executed madness and murder. Just four years ago genocide returned to Europe in the mass murder of thousands of Bosnian Muslims in the supposedly safe haven of Srebrenica. Here in Canada in a few weeks' time we'll mark the 11th anniversary of 14 women at the Ecole Polytechnique in Montreal. These women were murdered for no other reason than that they were women.

Again, by passing this important bill today, we as legislators are sending an important and a clear message countering the hatred and intolerance that all too often consumes our world, our country, and sometimes our own province. But passing this bill today is not enough. As legislators we have a responsibility to ensure that the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act achieves the noble statements made in the bill's preamble, which I paraphrase as follows: to look within ourselves and reflect on the enduring lessons of the Holocaust, of other incidents of systematic genocide, racism, and hatred, and to reaffirm our commitment to uphold the human rights of all and to value diversity and the multicultural richness of Alberta society.

We need to reflect carefully on the words of Archbishop Tutu before following the advice of those who so flippantly talk about setting aside important rights and freedoms enunciated by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Unless we respect the human rights of all, including minorities, no one's human rights are safe, Mr. Speaker. As legislators we need to make sure that Holocaust and genocide remembrance becomes part of the curriculum in our schools. We need to provide leadership and not leave it only up to community organizations to organize activities and events that mark this special day.

I just want, Mr. Speaker, to draw attention to a book recently published by the University of Alberta, by two University of Alberta academics, one of whom I had the honour of introducing to the House earlier today, Dr. Bernie Schwartz, who is sitting here in the members' gallery this afternoon. The title of the book is The Holocaust's Ghost: Writings on Art, Politics, Law and Education, and just a brief description of the book:

The Holocaust is history, an event now past, of unparalleled barbarity and cruelty, but the Holocaust is not consumed nor is it contained by historical fact. In Holocaust's Ghost it is hoped that memory will forge vigilance, a moral and political watchfulness for Holocaust, whether in the form of proposals or accomplished political arrangements.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it's only if we remember the lessons of the past that we'll avoid having these tragic events repeated in the present and in the future. Only if instilled in our children the absolute necessity of respect for the human rights and dignity of all persons will we stamp out the evil seeds that lead to holocaust and genocide.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am very honoured today to rise in support of second reading of the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act. We all know that the Holocaust was one of the world's most horrible crimes. Today we are called upon to reflect and remember the senseless and systematic annihilation of 6 million innocent Jewish people from 23 European countries, from Austria to Yugoslavia, during the dark days of World War II. In addition, atrocities were also committed against millions of others who were targeted for their level of physical or mental ability, race, other religious denominations, and sexual orientation. Out of racism and hatred individuals and entire families perished by the deliberate actions of one's fellow human beings, an event so horrific that it can never be forgotten or erased from our past. If the world fails to recognize, remember, and learn from it, it could happen again.

Today in this House history will show that in Alberta we not only talked about remembrance; we legislated it into law. The passing of this bill reaffirms the Alberta government's commitment to uphold human rights and to value the diversity of multiculturalism in this province while reaffirming our commitment to fight against racism, violence, hatred, and persecution. This government is involved in various initiatives which not only support and address human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism, but it also recognizes the efforts of those who fight against tyranny and oppression.

Let me give you just a couple of examples. Through our community initiative programs 46 grants amounting to almost a million dollars were awarded this year in support of fostering and promoting human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism. Included was a grant to the Calgary Jewish Centre to hold a Holocaust education symposium for 1,800 grade 12 students. Last year the Edmonton Jewish centre received a grant to hold a symposium called Facing Hate, which also focused on the Holocaust. In addition, the Canadian Arab Friendship Association received a grant for a project called Alberta Arab: A Visual Exhibition.

Let us not forget that during World War II, Alberta sent mothers, fathers, sons, and daughters to bravely serve as members of the Canadian armed forces. Many Albertans paid the ultimate price with their life to prevent the world from falling into the hands of evil.

I recently had the privilege and honour of being a part of a ceremony in which this government dedicated the Ex Coelis range of Alberta mountains in honour of the First Canadian Parachute battalion. These brave soldiers were the first to land behind enemy lines on D day. What I remember most about meeting and talking with this group was that they were first and foremost proud Canadians and many of them proud Albertans. Their will to succeed was surpassed only by their resolute commitment to ending a regime that had caused such destruction and evil in our world. It is this kind of spirit and culture which is the strength of our province, a testimony to the rich diversity of Alberta that allows us to walk together with a common concern for each other.

While it is a relatively easy process to enact this legislation, it is far more difficult to achieve. Although I believe that as a society we are more aware of the presence of hatred, racism, and persecution, it is still amongst us. But by committing ourselves each and every day to have respect for one another, we start to challenge the seeds of injustice that are based on evils of hatred and racism. In this country and around the globe we must always stand on guard, on guard for ourselves and those who are unable to speak out against behaviour and attitudes that extinguish and choke the rights of citizens and individuals.

Perhaps we may never fully comprehend or understand the grief endured by the survivors and their families, but we can extend our deepest sorrow and with it our perpetual and sincerest commitment to reflect on the enduring lessons of the Holocaust with a vision to educate ourselves and our children on the perils of hatred and war, to consider and speak out against other times and incidents of genocide and persecution, to uphold the human rights of all citizens, and to value diversity and the multicultural richness of Alberta society.

At this time I would like to acknowledge the support of so many members of this Legislature for embracing and supporting this initiative. The fact that we can proceed as one sends a very powerful message that although we may disagree at times, we are united in continuing to work together for the common good, a true symbol of hope in the battle against racism with a vision to ensuring that a Holocaust never again darkens the face of this Earth.*

Mr. Speaker, I consider it to be a great honour to have had the privilege to address the Assembly today on this very important piece of legislation. It is a very significant and proud moment for this Legislature and for our province. I hope for all of us that as time passes by, this day and the passing of this bill are remembered as something which eases the pain for the victims and survivors of the Holocaust and, in doing so, it becomes one of the most moving, memorable, and significant events in the life of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fifty-five years ago World War II came to an end, and with that end came a truth that could no longer be ignored, a truth that political and religious leaders could no longer deny, that fellow human beings could no longer dispute. That truth was that the Nazis' final solution to the Jewish problem had led to the systematic murder of 6 million Jews in death camps.

These death camps were concentration camps with special apparatus specifically designed for systematic mass murders. Six such camps existed: Auschwitz/Birkenau, Belzec, Chelmo, Majdanek, Sobibor, Treblinka. Each day as many as 12,000 people were gassed at Auschwitz alone. To put those figures in perspective, each day the population of a town like Wetaskiwin would disappear overnight. In 14 months at the death camp Treblinka, a population the size of Edmonton, 900,000 Jews, disappeared. As one survivor remembers:

How does one describe walking into Auschwitz, the smell? And someone pointing out to you that those are gas chambers, that your parents went up in smoke. When I asked, "When will I see my mother?" several hours after I came into the camp, I was shown the smoke. This is how I found out where she went.

The history of the Holocaust, the 6 million Jews, of which almost 1 and a half million were children, who were rounded up and slaughtered, of those who survived the camps and were used as slave labour, is not told today to shock or horrify but to ensure that we never forget. We must not forget the others that were murdered as well: Gypsies, the mentally and physically disabled, homosexuals, Jehovah's Witnesses, political enemies. But we must acknowledge and can never deny that Hitler's final solution was directed at the Jewish people solely because of their faith, their parents' faith, and their grandparents' faith. This fact makes the Holocaust unique.

As a veteran prisoner in the Sachsenhausen concentration camp would tell new arrivals: "I have told you this story not to weaken you but to strengthen you. Now it is up to you!" And so the story of the Holocaust must continue to be told.

The word "Holocaust" brings different images to people's minds, and I warn you that these images are graphic and are told not to weaken you but to strengthen our resolve. There were images such as those that met the American soldiers on entering the concentration camp.

We went outside into the yard. In front of me I could see human hair. There were piles of boots, shoes, suitcases, eyeglasses, to my left was four-wheel hay wagons and two-wheel push carts. Only those wagons contained nude bodies of men, women and children, even babies. All nude, all dead, all piled as high as they basically could pile them.

There are the images of those transported in mobile gas vans.

The back of the van would open, the Jews were made to get inside the van . . . the driver then switched on the engine, crawled under the van and connected a pipe from the exhaust to the inside of the van. The exhaust fumes now poured into the inside of the truck so that the people inside were suffocated. After about ten minutes when there were no further signs of life, the van set off toward the camp where the bodies were burned.

There are the images of the selection process, which determined those who lived and, in most cases, those who died a slower death and those who died within hours of reaching the death camps.

"Selection" – We needed to get undressed every day. We needed to run – not walk – in front of S.S. Officers. We needed to show that we still had strength left . . . If one had a scar, a pimple, if one didn't run fast enough, if one didn't look right for whatever reason to the particular person that was doing the selection . . . they would stand there with a stick . . . to the right or to the left . . . one never knew if they were in the good line or the bad line . . . one line would go to the gas chambers, the other line would go back to the camp . . . to live another day.

The images of children who lost their lives and others who lost their childhood is perhaps the most vivid.

I remember one set of twins in particular; Guido and Inga aged about four. One day Mengele took them away. When they returned they were in a terrible state; they had been sewn together, back to back, like Siamese twins. Their wounds were infected and oozing pus. They screamed day and night, then their parents managed to get some morphine and they killed the children in order to end their suffering.

These images are real-life experiences that horrify, sicken, repulse, yet they are images that cannot be swept away, cannot be rationalized. They are images that cannot be denied or diminished.

The Holocaust Memorial Day – Yom ha-Shoah Act, to be commemorated on the 27th day of Nisan, is one way to ensure that the memory of those who died and those who survived is never forgotten. It will be from this day forward a time to ensure that the indifference, ignorance, and denial of the Holocaust is erased. It will be a time to educate, remember, and challenge all here to ensure that not only our future but also our present constantly upholds dignity, individual freedoms, social justice, core human values, and reminds us of the fragility of our democracy.

*Paragraphs 3 and 4 were part of the member's speech but not delivered. Inserted with the approval of the Speaker.

We cannot really explain the Holocaust, nor can we explain how civilized men and women could engage in these horrors, how world leaders and citizens around the world could close their hearts and doors to the hundreds of thousands of Jews who tried to escape before it became too late. But we must remember the Holocaust to prevent it from ever happening again.

It needs to be remembered that Canada was one of those countries who closed the doors. When Canada was asked at the 1938 Avian conference of world leaders how many Jews would Canada accept, the answer was: none was too many. As a result of that conference the German foreign office was able to say:

Since in many countries it was recently regarded as wholly incomprehensible why Germany did not wish to preserve in its population an element like the Jews . . . it appears astonishing that countries seem in no way anxious to make use of these elements themselves now that the opportunity offers.

It would be so easy to blame, yet I believe that the silence of the survivors has been broken not to blame, but as a survivor has said: I know I cannot bring back my family, my little brother, the million and a half children that were destroyed . . . but maybe I could reach some people and make them understand that this did happen and it can happen again.

The survivors that are here today are no different than you and I, than our parents or our grandparents. You would pass them by on the street and not know their history. Some of you here today in the Assembly may be first-generation Canadian, as I and my husband are. Some of you are second or third generation. Many of you have family, parents who immigrated to Canada because of persecution in their homeland. Yet never in human history has the persecution of a single race been so systematic and calculated, aided by state-of-the-art technology which allowed for these mass exterminations.

Human beings, Jews, were seen as replaceable waste products. Even in death their dignity was raped. Their ashes and bones from the ovens of the crematoria were crushed with wooden mortars and used as fill and fertilizer. Human fat from the burned bodies was collected in ditches near the incineration site and used as fuel for the fires that burned the bodies. Dental gold from the mouths of prisoners was melted and recast into gold ingots. Human hair was used to stuff mattresses and be processed into felt to be used in industry and manufactured into felt stockings.

Yet "I have told you the story not to weaken you but to strengthen you. Now it is up to you."

Generation to generation, l'dor v'dor is a concept in Judaism that ensures that the passage of the teachings of the Torah, of knowledge and faith, occurs from generation to generation. Holocaust Memorial Day follows that tradition, as generation to generation the life experiences of the survivors and the death experiences of the victims will be retold and remembered by all Albertans.

There is another Jewish concept, the concept of mitzvot, good deed. For every good deed we do, the world becomes a little brighter as ignorance and hatred are pushed further away. All human beings can perform *mitzvot*s, and during the Holocaust there were many examples of righteous Gentiles. With the passage of the bill today we, too, in here are engaging in a mitzvot to bring to life the inhumanity of humans to other human beings so that this inhumanity cannot occur again.

There is so much more to say, so much more to leave unsaid. There is so much more to remember and much more to forget. There remains much to learn, to look forward to, and to caution against. As Gillian Horwitz, chairperson of the Holocaust Education Committee of the Jewish Federation of Edmonton, has stated: this day will give all Albertans the opportunity to reflect on the horrors of racism and human rights issues.

This designated day makes it possible for Albertans to join with all Canadians across the country to observe Holocaust Memorial Day every year when it falls on the 27th day of Nisan, the date of the lunar Jewish calendar which is designated the International Yom ha-Shoah Day. This will be a time to reflect on the consequences of persecution and genocide. The world must learn from the past, and it is our responsibility to eradicate all forms of racism and religious persecution. Today is yet another step to ensure, as an individual on the March of the Living indicated:

As the children of the future,

As the hope our mothers bore,

We must learn of the horrors past to prevent the world from more.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak in support of second reading of the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act.

After the Second World War, when the world began to learn the true nature and extent of the Holocaust and other atrocities committed by the Nazis, Pastor Martin Niemoller wrote this familiar quote:

First they came for the Communists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Communist. Then they came for the Jews, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Jew. Then they came for the Catholics, and I didn't speak up because I was a Protestant. Finally they came for me, but there was no one left to speak up.

Mr. Speaker, it's been my privilege to work with the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities and, in fact, to join with others to speak on behalf of the disability community. In conversations with individual members of the disability community they often convey to me that safety issues are their primary concern. In reality, before those referred to by Pastor Niemoller, the first to be taken away to be killed were people with disabilities. No one knows how many were killed, but at a conservative estimate 250,000 men, women, and children with disabilities were murdered. Many others perished in forced labour camps. The perpetrators of the Holocaust practised their barbarous techniques of mass killing on persons with mental and physical disabilities. The gas chamber was developed in the winter of '39-40 and was first used to kill people with disabilities.

Mr. Speaker, we know what happened in Germany and then in occupied Europe between 1933 and the end of the Second World War. We know evil people following an evil leader did evil things. We know that bad people co-operated and collaborated with them to do their evil deeds, and we know, as Pastor Niemoller reminds us, that evil things happened, indeed could only have happened, because good people, the majority of people in Germany, in occupied Europe, and in the rest of the world did nothing. The Holocaust began and the Holocaust continued because too many good people did nothing and said nothing.

I take it as a privilege and an honour to stand in this Legislature today to speak in support of the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act. Annual observance of Yom ha-Shoah will give me and all Albertans the opportunity and the occasion to acknowledge our individual responsibility for the defence of human freedom and dignity and to rededicate ourselves to that cause.

We cannot change history. Much as we might want to, we cannot rewind the tape and replay a happier scenario. What is done cannot be taken back or denied. If we cannot change history, we can remember it truthfully, faithfully, and honestly. We can reflect on the meaning of the events of history and the suffering and death that were too often part of those events. We can respect the memory of those who suffered and died for no reason other than they were who they were and could not change. By remembering and reflecting with respect, we can learn from history, and finally, we can teach the lessons of history to our children and our grandchildren.

We cannot change the past, Mr. Speaker, but we can change ourselves. We can change our understanding of history and people. We can change our attitudes. We can change the way we behave, and if enough of us do that, we can change the world.

That is the lesson I take from Pastor Niemoller's reflection on the Holocaust. It's a lesson we can all share by taking a day each spring to remember and reflect on the hard lessons of the Holocaust.

I am pleased to speak in support of this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, also, am honoured to be able to participate in this debate at second reading on this particular bill as the human rights spokesperson for the Alberta Liberal caucus.

We have heard, since debate started at second reading, some powerful, powerful speeches that have addressed the horror and the significance of the Holocaust. Rather than reinforce some of those messages, I intend to discuss the kinds of challenge that confront us as Albertans, as Canadians in late 2000, with some suggestions in terms of how we attempt to meet that challenge.

I don't know whether everyone knows that the Simon Wiesenthal centre, that tracks on a worldwide basis far right extremism, estimates and calculates that at the time of the Oklahoma City bombing in 1995 there was one identified neo-Nazi web site. In 1999 it's now estimated there are 1,900 neo-Nazi web sites.

We see survey after survey that identify Canada as being the best place to live. One of the things that people identify as being such a wonderful place to live is themes of tolerance and themes of acceptance and an embracing and a reveling in our diversity. Canada is that, and we know Alberta is that, but we also know that in our communities and in our province and in our nation we are not immune to the kinds of intolerance and the kinds of bigotry and the kinds of hatred that surface from time to time. We're not immune to the kinds of influences that contribute to a Joerg Haider of the Freedom Party, a Holocaust denier like David Irving, or the several hundred neo-Nazis that marched through the Brandenburg Gate in Berlin just a few months ago to celebrate the 67th anniversary of the Nazis' ascension to power.

Yes, Albertans are tolerant, and we celebrate differences, but we have elements of our history that we can't be proud of. It was in this province that Jim Keegstra at Eckville high school preached his particular kind of hatred. When we look to the leaders in Canada's hate movement, I regret to say, I really regret to say that Alberta is well represented among those people who provide the leadership. And this isn't going back decades. It's not going back to the time of the Second World War. We talk about the world in which we live today. Jim Keegstra, Ernst Zundel, Terry Long, Malcolm Ross: they have their followers in this province.

You know, at the Canadian Association of Statutory Human Rights Agencies that met in Banff in May of 2000, Warren Kinsella was there. Warren Kinsella is the author of a book that I hope everybody reads, if they haven't yet, called Web of Hate. In his book he documents what for many of us was the surprising growth of the purveyors of hate, and we find that these people have infiltrated institutions.

Going back to 1993, the Canadian Airborne regiment we found had been infiltrated by purveyors of hate. We had a federal political party just a scant few years ago – I won't identify the party because that's not important – and we had a candidate in the York Centre constituency who said in a speech, and I quote, that if an immigrant comes into Canada and gets a job for $150,000, he is taking jobs away from us, the Gentile people, the white people; close quote. Well, that person was expelled from that party, but the point is that here was somebody who was aspiring to elected office, to be a leader.

I think there are powerful things we can do, and we don't have to look very far for solutions and strategies in terms of how we deal with purveyors of hate. I think we have provisions in our Criminal Code, but we have to ensure that our Human Rights Commission is aggressive, we have to ensure it's independent, we have to ensure it's effective, and that's something we're responsible for. We pass the budget for that.

One of the most powerful documents we've seen in this province was authored by the Select Special Committee of the Legislative Assembly on Tolerance and Understanding. It was chaired by a former MLA for Calgary-Buffalo, Ron Ghitter, and what he talks about in the report is that the single most effective way to deal with purveyors of hate is through a strong public education system. Far beyond any type of prosecution mechanism, the single most effective way of counteracting hate is to ensure that a public education system teaches our children how to get along, how to respect each other in spite of our differences, whether they're religious or racial or whatever those differences might be. There is no better way of guaranteeing that the Holocaust never happens again and that genocide never happens again.

We could do a lot more. One of the key recommendations was that every three years there should be a survey of grade 8 and grade 11 students to determine their attitudes around tolerance and understanding. We did it one time, and some of the responses were a bit scary. We identified in some grade 8 classes that there were attitudes that contribute to the very kind of evil we're identifying and talking about today. We haven't followed through on some of those things.

I think of my predecessor and late friend, Sheldon Chumir, the former MLA for Calgary-Buffalo, and the work he did in terms of trying to promote a strong public education system.

So we have the challenge right here, beyond the powerful speeches we've heard today. We're the ones that fix the budget for our Department of Learning. We're the ones that have input in terms of the curriculum that's taught in Alberta schools. I hope that in addition to the powerful message we've heard resonating in here this afternoon, we take that sort of commitment that's so apparent this afternoon and convert it into action, convert it into action in terms of the allocation of resources.

I guess the other thing I'd just say is that I think there's an enormous role for leadership in elected people at every level of government. We all have a leadership role. Whenever we hear the propagation of hate and whenever we hear jokes and stories, we all have a responsibility to speak up, because that's the only way you root out the kind of evil that has led to tragedy such as we deal with today.

So I think we have an enormous challenge, and there's a great deal we can do in very practical ways. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore to close the debate.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are voices calling out to us from history, and they have much to teach us if we listen. These voices come from the Holocaust, the state-sponsored, systematic persecution and annihilation of European Jewry by the Nazis and their collaborators between 1933 and 1944. Those forces of tyranny murdered 6 million Jewish people and millions of others because of their race, religion, disabilities, or sexual orientation, including 1 and one-half million children, and they brutalized so many, many more.

The Holocaust voices teach us about a singular tragedy, about what human beings did and can do to other human beings. They teach us what can happen to civilized society when bigotry and hatred rule. They teach us about the dangers of simply being bystanders and of remaining silent. They teach us about the black and painful side of human nature.

When the full horror of the Nazi atrocities became public knowledge towards the end of World War II, Winston Churchill stated that the world was being confronted with a crime that has no name, and so it was that the term genocide came into being. Contemporary events tell us that genocide is a phenomenon, one that has been tragically repeated throughout the 20th century and, indeed, repeated so very recently. The voices of history teach us the need to commit to a legacy of remembrance, education, and conscience.

Mr. Speaker, it's easy to pass legislation. It's harder to stand vigilant, to do our part to ensure that such atrocities do not happen again. Passing this legislation is the beginning of a process. It is the things we do tomorrow and next week and next year that count. The people in this room, from honoured guests to my fellow colleagues in this Legislature, have important roles to play to help carry the message about Yom ha-Shoah, Holocaust Memorial Day.

We must remember the men, women, and children who died during the Holocaust. We must also remember and honour those who survived this time of persecution, and we must not forget other terrible instances of injustice and genocide. We must learn from these terrible examples. We must teach ourselves, teach one another, teach our children, for each generation must learn anew. We must look within ourselves. We are obligated as human beings to walk this path together. We can draw hope from each other.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to conclude by acknowledging with thanks Mr. Aron Eichler and Mrs. Riki Heilik, who brought the idea for this bill to my attention. I also wish to thank the Premier and the Minister of Community Development and indeed all hon. members for their support.

Mr. Speaker, on Holocaust Memorial Day, Yom ha-Shoah, we will remember, for we must never forget.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 26 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 26
Holocaust Memorial Day
and Genocide Remembrance Act

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

[The clauses of Bill 26 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 26.

[Motion carried]

[The Speaker in the chair]

MR. TANNAS: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 26.

THE SPEAKER: Do all members concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE SPEAKER: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request unanimous consent of the Legislature to waive Standing Order 73(1) to allow third reading debate on Bill 26 on the same day as it received second reading.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 26
Holocaust Memorial Day
and Genocide Remembrance Act

MR. STEVENS: I move Bill 26, Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act, for third reading.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, I take it that you're moving third reading and there are no further speakers.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 26 read a third time]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, one of the unique things about a democracy is that on any given day on any given occasion all members in the Assembly can rise to the highest level possible. On this day this Assembly has done very, very good work, and all members should be proud of what has been accomplished here.

We have a Hansard. The Hansard will record all the speeches given by those who participated here today, but one thing our Hansard does not include is a copy of the bill. And as we go forward into history, history will not know exactly what has been in the bill unless the hon. members permit me to read the context of the bill into the Hansard.

4:00

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE SPEAKER: Bill 26, Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act:

Whereas the Holocaust was the state-sponsored, systematic persecution and annihilation of European Jewish men, women and children by the Nazis and their collaborators between 1933 and 1945, and this horrific act is part of our common history as citizens on this earth;

Whereas the Nazis and their collaborators murdered 6 million Jewish people, including more than a million children, during that time of persecution and death;

Whereas the Nazis and their collaborators also persecuted and murdered millions of other people because of their race, religion, level of physical or mental ability or sexual orientation;

Whereas during World War II, Albertans bravely served as members of the Canadian Armed Forces, and many Albertans paid the ultimate price, their lives, to protect and preserve freedom and democracy;

Whereas "Shoah" is the Hebrew term for "Holocaust";

Whereas it is fitting and right to observe Yom ha-Shoah, the Day of the Holocaust, as a day to remember the victims and survivors of the Holocaust and to honour those who fought to defeat tyranny and genocide;

Whereas this day provides Albertans with the opportunity:

- to look within themselves, reflect on the enduring lessons of the Holocaust and educate their children, their colleagues and their fellow citizens on the perils of hatred,
- to consider other times and incidents of systematic violence, genocide, persecution, racism and hatred that call out to us from the past or continue today, and
- to reaffirm their commitment to uphold the human rights of all and to value diversity and the multicultural richness of Alberta society;

Whereas on Yom ha-Shoah we will remember, for we must never forget;

Therefore her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, enacts as follows:

Yom ha-Shoah, the Day of the Holocaust as determined in each year by the Jewish lunar calendar, is proclaimed as Holocaust Memorial Day – Yom ha-Shoah.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the memorable events of today I would move that we call it 5:30 p.m.

[At 4:03 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, November 20, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/11/20

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Dear God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Thy guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Hon. members, would you please remain standing as we ask Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem.

HON. MEMBERS:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly His Excellency Dr. Yuri Scherbak, ambassador of Ukraine to Canada, who actually first visited our Assembly earlier this past May. The ambassador is here today to mark the official inauguration of the Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations. The council's first meeting will be this afternoon, and the ambassador will join the MLA from Redwater and myself at this very special event. Our Premier and the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations will join us later this evening. This council will be made up of 12 members representing Alberta's Ukrainian community, and its mandate is to explore ways to strengthen ties between Alberta and Ukraine, particularly in light of Ukraine's proclamation of independence a few short years ago.

As the ambassador knows, Alberta has a very long and proud relationship with Ukraine, and people have been coming to Alberta from Ukraine for over 100 years now, such that we have nearly 300,000 people of Ukrainian descent living in Alberta who contribute to our province in every way possible.

His Excellency Ambassador Scherbak is accompanied by Mr. Dave Sereda, who is the president of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress for the Alberta provincial council. [remarks in Ukrainian]

We welcome you very sincerely on the occasion of this important and historic day. We are anticipating much success with this initiative. [as submitted]

They have risen, Mr. Speaker, and I would now ask this Assembly to sincerely extend the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table petitions containing 22 names from Airdrie-Rocky View constituency, 17 names from Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency, 283 names from Calgary-Nose Creek and Calgary-Shaw constituencies, 12 names from Lesser Slave Lake constituency, and 673 names from the constituencies of Cypress-Medicine Hat and Medicine Hat. The petitioners are urging the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Alberta human rights act to allow "health professionals to opt out of those . . . procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to present two petitions today on behalf of the constituents of Highwood. The first petition regarding building a Catholic kindergarten to grade 5 school in the Black Diamond-Turner Valley area is signed by 127 constituents.

The second petition, with 63 names, is supporting amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I have a petition signed by 445 Albertans from Camrose, Wetaskiwin, Millet, Ponoka, Hobbema, Bashaw, Vegreville, Mundare, Ryley, and other nearby towns urging the Government of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to present a petition signed by 60 Albertans from Edmonton, St. Albert, Sherwood Park petitioning the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented on May 25, 2000, urging the government of Alberta to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour dispute at the Calgary Herald be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned, petition the assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark on a Standing Order 40 application.

MS LEBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I give notice that at the appropriate time this afternoon I will make application under Standing Order 40 to deal with the following motion: "Be it resolved that this Assembly address the crisis in access to emergency care in Calgary hospitals."

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two reports that I would like to table today. The first is the MLA Workers' Compensation Board Service Review Input Committee report, and the second one is the report of the Review Committee of the Workers' Compensation Board Appeal Systems.

MR. CAO: I'd like to table the letter from my constituents regarding the drowning of the children in the city canal.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. First is the report released today by the Official Opposition, Lost Promise and Potential: Alberta's Statistics on Youth Suicides Programs and Challenges.

Accompanying that report, Mr. Speaker, I am also pleased to table the ministerial briefing and agenda for that ministers' briefing which occurred on November 8 with ministers Evans, Hancock, and Mar. At that time the status of programs and the incidence of suicide in young Albertans was shared with those ministers.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three documents to table this afternoon. The first one is an MRI bill of $499. This bill was paid by Rose Senio. She is a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar. It was for a medically necessary procedure.

The next two documents that I have to table, Mr. Speaker, I've received through FOIP. The first one is a letter to the hon. Minister of Justice. It is regarding the rotting roofs in Heritage Mansion East near Heritage Mall in southwest Edmonton.

The next document is also concerning the rotting roofs in Alberta, and it is to the Cobblestone Court Condominium Association in Fort Saskatchewan, Alberta, and it is signed by the Hon. Murray Smith.

Thank you.

1:40

THE SPEAKER: Okay, hon. members. The other day I made it very, very clear. We're not going to be using individual names in this Assembly. We're going to be using titles; two violations today. Now, no more.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table some information on how the increased electrical rates are affecting condominiums and condominium boards resulting in significant increases in condominium fees. Some good information.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I'd file five copies of a document entitled The Education Dividend: Why Education Spending Is a Good Investment for BC, prepared by Robert Allen for the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives. It indicates the social value of having completed a university degree.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies to file with the Assembly, and it's an invitation to attend the ASET convention this spring. It's titled Alberta Unplugged. It's ostensibly to explain the deregulation of the utility industries, and I suspect a good number here would do well to attend.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling, and it's a press release relative to Bill 20. I'll just read the title of the press release: Alberta Government to Pass Law This Week to Drastically Reduce Families' Rights in Fatality Claims Including Drunk Driving and Murder of Children. The group spokesman is Rick J. Mallett of James H. Brown & Associates.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table a letter written on behalf of ATCO Electric which is an amendment to its regulated rate option tariff. Hearings begin today, actually, before the Energy and Utilities Board. The reason for the amendment is because the ATCO original price forecast was at $70.82 per megawatt hour. Because of the forward market price in the 103- to 110-megawatt range, the company has had to file an application to raise that rate.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. One tabling consists of the appropriate number of questionnaires that have been responded to by Alberta victims of brain injury dealing with the issues of concern to them such as housing, transportation, and so on.

Secondly, I'm tabling five copies of a letter addressed to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness and to the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness which have been hand delivered to their offices last week. Again it's asking for some follow-up action in terms of those that are victims of brain injuries in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: Today, as well, hon. members, I'm tabling five copies of a package of information regarding the School at the Legislature program, which was launched today in co-operation with corporate partners Shaw Communications Inc., Capital City Savings and Credit Union, and Quality Colour Press Inc.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to my colleagues in the Legislature a very accomplished young woman who is with us today in the members' gallery. Ms Adelle Peterson is an 18-year-old University of Calgary student and this year's recipient of the 4-H Premier's award, the highest honour given through the 4-H program. She received this honour thanks to her outstanding efforts and achievements during her eight-year membership in 4-H. She has proven abilities in leadership and effective communications as well as a strong record of accomplishment in school and in other activities. During her year as the 4-H Premier's award recipient, Adelle will travel the province serving as a 4-H ambassador and promoting the 4-H program. It's important to note that Alberta now has the largest 4-H membership in Canada. Accompanying her today is her father, Brian; her mother, Colleen; and her brother Bryce. I now invite Adelle and her family to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Nadezda Petrova, deputy head of the Economics and Planning Committee in Russia's Primorsky region. She has come to Alberta as part of the Yeltsin democracy fellowship, a program which brings Russian leaders to Canada to study the country's legislative, judicial, and economic systems. Her focus is to learn about regional development strategies, and she is looking at Alberta as a solid example of a province that has successfully achieved economic diversification and stable growth. She is also interested in Alberta's natural resources sector and exploring possible private-sector linkages. My colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-East and I had the privilege of meeting with Ms Petrova last Friday at McDougall Centre in Calgary. There is certainly much we can learn from each other and many areas of common interest to discuss. I would ask that our honoured guest please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly students from Lago Lindo elementary school in Edmonton-Glengarry. They are accompanied today by their teacher, Mr. Doug Sprake, and their principal, Mr. John Eshenko, along with Mrs. Marilyn Ghering and Mrs. Pat Wandler. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask with your permission that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly Mr. Sam Friedman, or Judge Sam as we affectionately know him. Judge Sam was the chair of the appeal systems committee, whose report I tabled just a few minutes ago. With him today is Fred Clarke, a member of that committee who represents the business community here in the province. I would ask the two of them to rise and receive the warm greetings of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise to introduce two leaders within our province who are seated in the public gallery. Louise Rogers is the president of the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses, and Jane Walker is a nursing management consultant well known throughout the province. I would ask both to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly my pleasure today to introduce you to two classes from J.J. Nearing in St. Albert. They are here with their excellent teachers, Mrs. Sonia Reid and Mrs. Christine Sowinski, and parent helpers Mr. Rick Kulak, Mrs. Bernice Grenier, Mr. Tony Gull, and Mrs. Madeleine Bertschi. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a special day, and I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 20 very hardworking, very diligent, very excellent students from John A. McDougall elementary school, one of the schools in my riding. They've had a big day today because they're here participating in the School at the Legislature program, which Mr. Speaker has inaugurated today. I would like to also introduce the teachers that are accompanying them: Mrs. Leticia Carter, Mrs. Heather Parliament, student teacher Mr. Tom Stewart, and vice-principal, Mrs. Nancy Weber. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly three staff members from Alberta's maintenance enforcement program. Although members of the Assembly may not have met these three people, I can assure you that the many requests that come through my office with respect to maintenance enforcement are ably handled by these individuals. With us today are the program director, Manuel da Costa; senior manager of collections, Kevin Quail; and the manager of the program's special investigations unit, Shauna Curtin. As minister responsible for the program I'm proud of the work that's done by these individuals and by all members of the staff of the maintenance enforcement program. Last year the program collected more than $127 million on behalf of Alberta families and children. These individuals are seated in the members' gallery. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Calgary Medical Services

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Revelation of a tragedy has once again forced Calgarians and all Albertans to ask questions and face the inadequacies in our health care system. Over the weekend Albertans first learned of the tragic death of an individual in an emergency department some months ago. Despite much-needed public dollars being put in health care, despite the hard work of physicians and health care professionals in the system, the core problems are left unsolved by this government. My question is to the Premier. Can the Premier provide an explanation to all Albertans and in particular to the citizens of Calgary as to why the health care system failed an individual and their family in this case?

MR. KLEIN: As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, Calgary health officials unveiled plans today to deal with emergency room handling. I understand that the Calgary regional health authority's critical incident committee has unveiled a six-point plan to deal with backlogs in the emergency department.

Relative to the details, Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I must say, first of all, that this is a very unfortunate and regrettable incident that took place, but I'm pleased to see that the Leader of the Opposition has acknowledged a great deal of the effort in terms of the work being done by the staff of our hospital systems in this province and also the significant amount of money that has gone into the system.

I can confirm, Mr. Speaker, that this individual was seen in the emergency room of the Rockyview hospital and that he was assessed by the staff there. As a result of his death the regional health authority conducted a critical incident review. That review precipitated in some 31 recommendations for improvement in the system on how emergencies are treated in Calgary. Physicians and staff were involved in making the recommendations. Many of those recommendations have already been implemented, and a number of them are going to continue to be implemented over the months to come, but I am confident that the regional health authority has dealt with the situation properly.

I would perhaps in closing comment that there are some 250,000 people that go through the emergency system in Calgary at least as at last year. That is a tremendous volume to deal with. If I could say one thing, it would be that if we could say that 95, 97, 99 percent of the people got the right treatment at the right time, we'd have to say that was a good system, but it is not perfect, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier tell this Legislature why Calgary still does not have enough beds to meet the needs of a predictably growing population in the Calgary area?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know that statement to be true. As I understand it, with the closure of the Holy Cross and the Bow Valley centre, the old General hospital, we were able to open up, indeed, hundreds of new state-of-the-art beds.

Relative to the bed situation in Calgary, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, it is not simply a question, of course, of opening up beds; it is also a question of having the appropriate equipment and the appropriate staff. We know that across Canada, indeed in other parts of North America, there is a critical need for staff of all sorts, health care professionals. We have responded by increasing the number of people that are trained in our post-secondary system. We increased it by 850 this year so that there are now 5,650 people in our postsecondary system training in health care professions. The Minister of Infrastructure may wish to outline some of the important infrastructure investments that have been made and announced this year. Also, with respect to equipment, of course members would be well familiar with investments in the area of renal dialysis equipment and MRIs and so on.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, few provinces, in fact no provinces, have the fiscal resources of this one, so why will this Premier not commit to long-term, sustainable health care funding instead of the one-shot injections which even the Auditor General of this province has criticized his government for?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we are doing perhaps more than any other province in terms of our commitment to long-term sustainability. The one-time cash infusion was for capital. The opposition has complained about not enough MRIs. We have now equipped our hospitals with seven MRIs. Six more are on the way. We've done significant upgrades. We were able to allot to the city of Calgary some $190 million for a new children's hospital. This is on top of countless millions of dollars that were allocated to various regional health authorities for capital upgrades.

On top of that, the sustainability of the system is something that we're going to have to work with on a national basis with the Prime Minister, with the national Minister of Health, with all the ministers of health across the country. I can tell you that the way health care spending is going – and I think Lorne Gunter alluded to it in an editorial in the Edmonton Journal yesterday – these costs are rising each and every year as they relate to operating.

Mr. Speaker, when the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition was the minister of health, she was faced with the very same problem, and that was the problem of sustainability. How do you address operating costs? We're able to address through one-time spending the capital problems facing the health care system, but the big challenge in the future – and I would seek the help of the Liberal opposition – is the sustainability of operating costs. Really we're heading to something like 40 percent of the total operating budget in operating costs, and this is not peculiar to Alberta. This is happening across the country, and indeed it's happening around the world.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electric Utilities Deregulation

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's move to another area of mismanagement, and that's electricity deregulation. The evidence keeps mounting against the Premier's electricity deregulation scheme, which has resulted in inadequate supply and skyrocketing prices for consumers right across this province. The Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties passed a near unanimous resolution calling on reconsideration of the deregulation scheme. The Premier's own market surveillance administrator said that uncertainty has caused "reluctance on the part of suppliers to invest in new supply" in Alberta. Now a former minister of utilities and telephones, the hon. Dr. Warrack, says that investors have been reluctant to invest in new supply because of uncertainty and financial risk. To quote Dr. Warrack: uncertainty and risk kills investment. My questions are to the Premier. Why is the Premier ignoring the mounting evidence that proves conclusively that the government's deregulation scheme is responsible for inadequate supply and skyrocketing electricity prices for our farmers, our consumers, our industries, and our businesses?

MR. KLEIN: No doubt about it, Mr. Speaker, the prices are going up. Admittedly there was some uncertainty, but with the pooling and the opportunity now to source alternative forms of energy, we are very confident that through a deregulated environment those prices will come down.

Mr. Speaker, because of our prudent fiscal policies we were able to provide two rebates, well, actually three rebates: one for business, farm communities, and so on, which should go some distance over this interim period to bring down rates. Certainly as of January 1 each householder in this province will see a $20 per month reduction in his or her power bill, and of course in about one week's time Albertans over the age of 16, tax filers, will be receiving the first installment of a $300 rebate of $150.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important to have Albertans understand the impact of the one rebate, and that is the $20 reduction. Right now in Winnipeg the average householder using 750 kilowatt hours pays $49.26. In Vancouver it's $50. In Montreal it's $50.79. In Medicine Hat it's $53.45. In Manitoba for those who use Manitoba Hydro, it's $60.08. In Edmonton it's $61.34. If the consumer uses TransAlta Utilities, it's $67.38. These are all October prices. Regina is $68.32. In Calgary it's $68.50, Toronto $69.71, Kalispell, Montana – these are in Canadian dollars – $69.61, SaskPower rural $70.43, St. John's, Newfoundland, $72.12, ATCO $73.19 – that's mostly the northern customers – Salt Lake City, Utah, $76.70, Halifax $78.98, Portland, Oregon, $79.93, Denver, Colorado, $84.01.

Mr. Speaker, the point I'm trying to make . . .

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that the average price at the pool was $14 per megawatt hour back in 1996, can the Premier explain the jump to now over a hundred dollars according to the ATCO reapplication on the regulated rate option?

MR. KLEIN: A lot of it has to do with supply and demand, but, Mr. Speaker, I'm more concerned as to how the ordinary householder is going to be affected.

Now, I'm going to come back to Edmonton, Alberta. As of January 1 that $61.34 will come down to $41.34. Mr. Speaker, those TransAlta utility customers will come down from $67.38 to $47.38. In Calgary it will come down from $68.50 to $48.50, and those consumers using ATCO will come down from $73.19 to $53.19. Alberta consumers, the ordinary person, the household consumer, will be paying among the lowest rates in the country.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, just as Mr. Justice Friedman spoke about a "culture of denial" in his WCB report, why is this Premier washing his hands of the rising electricity costs that consumers are having to bear in this province because of his government's mess that he created in deregulation?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this is not a culture of denial. These are facts. You know, the Alberta taxpayer pays the Liberal Party to have researchers as they do for the Conservative Party. If you don't believe these facts, get your researchers and check them out. Check them out. I'm just saying that in Edmonton as of January 1, power rates will go . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Denial.

MR. KLEIN: This is not denial, Mr. Speaker. This is fact: January 1 from $61.34 to $41.34, TransAlta Utilities customers from $67.38 to $47.38, Calgary from $68.50 to $48.50. That is fact.

In addition, we now go to the other major issue, and that is natural gas, and I would like to offer some comparisons there as well. In Edmonton it's $5.80 a gigajoule. In Calgary it's $6.16. In Saskatchewan it's $6.25. In B.C. it's $7.57. So much for the ND advantage. In Manitoba it's $6.37. In Ontario it's $7.84, and in good old Quebec it's only $11.08 a gigajoule.

THE SPEAKER: Third main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, while the Premier can try and paper it over, Alberta consumers are extremely concerned about increases in their monthly electricity bills. Back on March 23, 1998, the then minister of energy promised residential consumers that they would see stable electricity rates for a long period of time into the future. This week the tariffs established by ATCO and EPCOR for consumers under the regulated rate option, which is the option the Premier has talked about – if Albertans don't like deregulation, they can stay with his regulation – will be presented to the government regulator, the Energy and Utilities Board, for approval. As a well-known columnist has said: impatient consumers can translate into unhappy voters. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier confirm that under the regulated rate option residential consumers in Alberta will be exposed to market prices for electricity, meaning higher electricity bills?

MR. KLEIN: If they wish to stay in a regulated environment, of course they won't for at least five years. If they wish to go into a deregulated environment, they'll have the opportunity of shopping around. It's not going to happen overnight, but in the interim – and I say this to the leader of the Liberal opposition – because of prudent fiscal management we've been able to offset rising prices. [interjections]

Well, the next election. I'm sort of looking forward to the next election. Oh, I am looking forward with great delight to the next election, Mr. Speaker. And you know why they're trying to make as much hay now by raising fears, unfounded fears through innuendo? They're trying to raise these fears now because they know darned well as of January 1, when the ordinary householder receives his or her electricity bill and sees that bill drop from $61.34 on average to $41.34, from $67.38 to $47.38, from $68.50 to $48.50, from $73.19 to $53.19, well, of course they're going to vote for us.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, getting back to the question, will the Premier acknowledge that since ATCO is revising its projections for the regulated rate option with new prices that are up from $70 to $103 per megawatt hour, this is going to be passed on in higher prices to the consumer?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that's very much a possibility. It probably will happen. But in the interim we are able to offset on average per household the rising cost of electricity by something like $840 a year. The leader of the Liberal opposition only talks about the increase in electricity prices. She doesn't talk whatsoever about the very generous and energetic program of this government to offset those rising costs, and I think that that's inherently unfair.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, let's talk about the offset, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier confirm that the increase in the wholesale price under ATCO's application could mean an increase in the average monthly residential bill from $59 currently to over $100; in other words, a $41 difference under the regulated rate option?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I really don't think that will happen. Right now, ATCO is $73.19, will be $53.19 on average for the average household. Relative to anticipated increases over and above that, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. CARDINAL: Well, Mr. Speaker, this process is before the board now, and it would be unfair to comment on it until later on this week once a decision is made.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Hip and Knee Replacement Surgery

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week, the director of surgical services for the Calgary regional health authority reported that 719 people are waiting for up to a year for hip and knee replacement in Calgary. In other words, there are almost twice as many people waiting for hip and knee replacements in Calgary today as were waiting two years ago. My questions are to the Premier. Can the Premier please explain why waiting times for hip and knee replacements in Calgary have climbed by more than 80 percent given government claims that hundreds of millions of dollars are being provided to reduce waiting times for these procedures?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't have that detail in front of me, but I will ask the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to respond.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the numbers cited by the hon. member are correct, and the fact of the matter is that there is a greater demand for hip and knee replacement surgery that is a function of our aging and growing population. So although we have made great improvements in surgical procedures and the numbers of procedures being done, they are not keeping pace with the demand for it. The CRHA had indicated to me that they have improved the number of surgeries that they do by 20 percent this year to 1,445.

Mr. Speaker, we are working on this particular area. I wanted to note that Alberta is a partner in the western Canada waiting list project, and this project is studying waiting lists for joint replacements and other procedures and is trying to look at ways that we can change the way that waiting lists are compiled, making them fairer to patients and ranking them based on a patient's pain and prognosis for recovery.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Premier will give his word to this House that waiting times for hip and knee replacements will be reduced by adding capacity to the public health care system rather than by contracting out these procedures to private, for-profit hospitals like HRG.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know of any hip or knee replacement procedures, defined as probably major surgery, that are contracted out. Indeed, some other minor surgeries are contracted out to alleviate pressure on the public system so that these procedures can be performed. We're constantly working to alleviate those waiting lists.

I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I think that it's an interesting point to make that the contracting out of cataract surgeries, as an example, to private surgical facilities, that are paid for by the public system by the way, do allow hospitals to use their surgical facilities in hospitals for more critical surgeries like hip and joint replacements. So the purpose of the Health Care Protection Act to allow a regime that permits this type of contracting out under rigid circumstances and standards will actually help provide exactly what the hon. member is asking for; that is to say, greater capacity within the public system in a public hospital for the doing of things like hips and knees.

Mr. Speaker, specifically on the issue of hip and knee surgery the regional health authority in Calgary was given some $2 million to improve access to this particular kind of surgery. That was part of a package of some $54 million that was announced earlier this year for improvements to access in a number of different areas across the province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the minister of health. Will the minister assure the House that the reason that waiting times for hip and knee replacements are being allowed to skyrocket in Calgary is not to make it easier for the CRHA to contract out total joint replacements to the HRG private, for-profit hospital once the provincial election is over? Will you please give that assurance?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we have in fact put more resources, as I've indicated, into dealing with these types of surgical procedures within the public health care system. I've not heard of any plan being brought forward by anyone for doing these kinds of surgical procedures in private surgical facilities.

I note that the College of Physicians and Surgeons will determine whether such things could be safely done in such facilities, but to this point no such determination has been made that I'm aware of, because nobody's come forward with a proposal to do these types of services under a contract under our Health Care Protection Act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Maintenance Enforcement Program

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As members of this Assembly we often receive questions from constituents regarding the maintenance enforcement program. I often hear from both parents and children having difficulty making ends meet because of parents who default on their court-ordered maintenance payments. My question today is to the Minister of Justice. What has this minister done to ensure court-ordered maintenance orders are indeed obeyed?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1998 the MLA review of the maintenance enforcement program and child access concluded that the program did not have the tools to collect maintenance in situations where debtors were able to pay but refused to cooperate with the program to fulfill their court-ordered obligations. In response the Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act was passed in November of 1999 to strengthen the ability of the maintenance enforcement program to collect support from those who can afford to pay.

Over the past year the program's ability to take action against defaulting debtors has been expanded. Staff now have the ability to cancel a debtor's driver's licence, to report defaulting debtors to the credit bureau, to place garnishees in a more timely manner, to seek a court order for collection when corporations or other people are used to shelter a debtor's income or assets. Over the past year the act has enhanced the program's ability to collect court-ordered payments and to ensure that Alberta families receive the financial support to which they are entitled.

Mr. Speaker, the maintenance enforcement program is about helping children receive the support that they need from parents in situations where there's family breakdown. It's an important way to enhance the quality of life of children and the opportunity of children to achieve in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary to the same minister: what's the maintenance enforcement program doing for cases involving debtors who can afford to pay but constantly neglect their obligations?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, while there are many families in this province where maintenance payments are made on a voluntary basis, as they should, there are unfortunately those situations where parents don't voluntarily step forward to take care of their parental obligations. Under the maintenance enforcement program we've initiated a special investigations unit that was initiated last November to handle their most challenging collections. The unit assesses files for further action when a default hearing order or maintenance enforcement program standard collection procedures do not result in payment. The unit has collected over the course of this year $4.3 million, Mr. Speaker. It's been very successful. [interjections] Four point three million dollars which previously was not being collected on behalf of children in this province.

Keep in mind that these cases represent only a small fraction of the 43,000 files that the program deals with. The program, Mr. Speaker, over the past year has collected more than $127 million on behalf of children in this province. It is making a difference.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Another common complaint is the long wait time in trying to get through to maintenance enforcement program offices. What's Alberta Justice doing or has done to improve the information services available to the clients?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, with more than 43,000 files it's essential for us to find new and more efficient ways for people to get information and get service. During the past year we've expanded the client services centre by increasing the number of complaint and troubleshooting specialists. Staff on the phone lines field an average of a thousand calls per day.

Last year we also implemented a new MEP info line. This is a computerized, interactive phone system that allows clients to hear and update file information 24 hours a day, seven days a week. This system receives more than 3,300 calls a day.

I recently announced the launch of the MEP accounts-on-line initiative. From the comfort of their home, public library, or office MEP clients can now access and update account information privately and securely over the Internet.

AN HON. MEMBER: That's if they can afford the computer.

MR. HANCOCK: They can go to the public library if they don't have a computer at home.

The system also provides clients with the ability to submit a question to our staff and receive an electronic response. It's hoped that the system will free up staff to deal with more complex issues or concerns. Currently the average call wait time to speak with a client service representative is about five minutes. In the past that was up to half an hour.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we announced publicly the Help Us Find program, where we're publishing the pictures and names and information that we have about chronic debtors who have defaulted and whom we cannot find through any of the other tools available to us to ask the public to help us find these people and help them to live up to their obligations to their families.

Youth Suicide

MRS. SLOAN: Twenty-five percent of fatality inquiries conducted on the deaths of children in care indicated that these children had died by suicide or under suspicious circumstances. In the report Lost Promise and Potential, released today in this Assembly, a survey shows that there are serious gaps in the provision of suicide prevention programs for children by health and children's services authorities. My questions are to the Premier. Can the Premier explain why the incidence of suicide amongst children in care is so high?

MR. KLEIN: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, any suicide, especially the suicide of a young person, is a terrible and tragic loss. I can tell the hon. member that the ministry does recognize that youth suicide is a serious concern, and each youth lost is indeed a tragedy, as I said. There are some initiatives as I understand it. Unfortunately the minister responsible is not here to respond to this, but perhaps she can offer the hon. member a written response.

I understand that relative to training in suicide prevention, two days are devoted to suicide intervention training during the four-week child protective services training – these are the staff people within the hon. minister's department – which is mandatory for all new child welfare workers in the province. All foster parents are required to take suicide awareness training. The Alberta Association of Services for Children and Families' standards specify that all contracted child welfare service providers must have suicide training.

Children's mental health within the Alberta children's initiative: a project is in the developmental stages to address children's mental health, including youth suicide, led by the Alberta Mental Health Board.

In response to recommendations from the Children's Forum – and the hon. member was part of that forum – and the Task Force on Children at Risk, Children's Services will be implementing community response teams for children at risk in three locations across the province. I understand that is a pilot program, Mr. Speaker.

I could go on and on. There are a number of initiatives here that are being undertaken, and I'm sure that the hon. minister or my office would be very happy to provide the hon. member with the information she requires.

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Premier, if the government's response has been so comprehensive, why is it that we have 24 to 51 children every year committing suicide in this province and have had so since 1990?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, according to the information I have, Canadian youth aged 15 to 19 had the third highest suicide rate out of 23 countries. This is Canadian youth in the country. New Zealand and Finland have higher rates. This is sourced from the Suicide Information and Education Centre based on the United Nations' report The Progress of Nations 1994. This is the same organization that produced this document that was tabled I believe earlier today.

Over the last 10 years an average of 26 youths 15 to 19 years of age have committed suicide each year, but the rates are falling. This is as it pertains to the province of Alberta. I understand the peak for male youth suicide rates ages 15 to 19 was 1977 at 40.2 deaths per 100,000. The most recent data for 1998 shows 25.1 deaths per 100,000. It's tragic that we even have that many deaths through suicide, Mr. Speaker, but the rate is falling.

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, we have a model of suicide prevention that was developed in our own backyard by the Suicide Information and Education Centre. It was proposed to this government to be implemented in 1997, has been implemented by the United Nations, Finland, Norway, and Australia, and we today in Alberta continue to not have a provincial program for the prevention of suicide. Why is that, Mr. Premier?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that statement is not entirely true. I just went through a number of initiatives that have been taken and are currently being undertaken by the Department of Children's Services. I only went to about the fifth or sixth point, but I can tell the hon. member that all child and family services authorities have early intervention programs that provide services based on the needs of the community. These services relate in part to the whole problem of children at risk and the suicide problem.

Many child and family services authorities have developed transitional supports for youth who are reaching the age where they are no longer eligible for child welfare supports, and the ministry is now examining options for expanding these transitional programs, particularly by providing more time with a mentor or a caring adult to help support these youths through the transition to adulthood, and this is, as I understand it, the most difficult period in a young person's life. We are working in particular with aboriginal groups, where the suicide rate unfortunately is high, and government is to promote capacity building to help aboriginal communities respond to community needs, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are regarding rising electricity costs. Earlier this year Alberta's independent market surveillance administrator looked at the reasons for jumps in prices over the summer. To the Minister of Resource Development: did the report find any inappropriate behaviour in activities in the marketplace that might help explain price increases?

MR. CARDINAL: No. Mr. Speaker, the market surveillance administrator, also known as the MSA, was very clear in his report. In fact, in a press release he emphasized that there was no particular activity to warrant a sanction against generators. In addition to that, of course we are following up on the recommendations that have been made in that report by the market surveillance administrator. In addition, there is a lot more to come from the MSA. This is, in fact, only the first report, and it's a first stab at collecting data. The MSA himself recognized that further analysis has to be done and staff put in place to make sure that the handling of reporting is done properly in the future.

In addition to that, of course one of the major areas that was reported by the MSA was the issue of the lack of retail competition in the city of Lethbridge area, and the MSA will be completing this report and forwarding it to us in the near future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. In part the report addresses short supply putting pressure on prices. Is this in some way a result of deregulation?

MR. CARDINAL: No, Mr. Speaker, definitely not. Full deregulation does not start until January 1 of 2001. Of course, you know, the reason for the high prices is driven by the high demand as far as economic activity. As you're aware, there are over $33 billion worth of economic initiatives, and with the population growth in Alberta the increased demand for electricity is over 6 percent.

In relation to the supply itself, Mr. Speaker, the whole process has already doubled the number of generators in the province since it came in. In fact, in the last three days I've met with three different organizations. One was a lumber company in northern Alberta that was in the process of developing a cogen plan using waste wood. Although they're only generating 20 megawatts, they will use 10 megawatts, which will mean taking out 10 megawatts from the existing generation system but in addition to that adding 10 megawatts to our system. Now, that's only one company. This deregulation has allowed that to happen.

Today I talked to an organization that's interested in hydrogeneration in northern Alberta. Again, this is another company that's looking at a number of options, and I'm willing to meet with that company.

I was in Pincher Creek today and saw the opening of Vision Quest, which has, I believe, 14 new windmill generators set up which will be generating enough electricity to supply 6,000 households, and this is green power, clean, safe, the cleanest, in fact, in the country. They indicated themselves that without deregulation this would not have been possible. So it is working, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the minister provide us with an update as far as what the province has done with the issues identified through the MSA report?

MR. CARDINAL: Well, Mr. Speaker, the 10-point plan is basically what has come out of part of the MSA report. One of the areas we're looking at . . . [interjections] Supply seems to be the concern from the opposition.

One of the areas we're looking at, of course, is looking at all angles in getting more supply into our system. One is supply from B.C. and Saskatchewan and also local industrial load. The other one we're looking at is increased transmission between Edmonton and Calgary to ensure that any of the economic activity that's in cogen, in particular in industrial development in the north half of the province – we'll be able to transfer electricity to the southern part of Alberta. The other one, of course, is for us to move forward in selling the balance of the unsold electricity in smaller packages. This will all happen during the month of November.

Electricity Rebates for Condominium Residents

MS BLAKEMAN: Mr. Speaker, last week, recognizing that the growing number of seniors and new families living in condominium complexes are facing huge increases in their utility bills, we asked how the government's electricity rebate program would apply to them. The Minister of Resource Development didn't seem clear as to whether condominium units where units were not individually metered would receive the commercial rate electrical rebate, like the high-rise apartments, or just the flat $20 rate, like the single residents. Alberta condominium owners facing steep hikes in their condominium fees as a direct result of higher heating and electricity bills need this information. My questions are all to the Minister of Resource Development. First question: will the minister confirm that condominium owners whose units are not separately metered will be receiving the commercial electricity rebate?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Resource Development.

MR. CARDINAL: Yes. That's a good question Mr. Speaker. Because they're not metered individually, they will not be getting the $20 rebate, but the condominium project will receive the industrial rate, 1.8 cents per kilowatt hour off. That's over $760 million again being returned to Albertans as part of the $1.6 billion rebate program we've provided. I believe most condominium owners, the board, will probably return that money to the individuals in one form or another.

MS BLAKEMAN: I'm sure they'll be delighted to hear they're getting the industrial rebate.

Given that most condominium boards are not aware that they're entitled to this rebate, whether it's commercial or industrial, what has this government done to inform condominium boards and condominium owners of the rebate amounts and the methods, and what will they be doing?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, we, of course, have advised already and will be advising the condominium owners.

Just remember that seniors will also be eligible for the $300 rebate, and if there happen to be two in the household, they will be receiving $600. So they are eligible. Now, in addition to that, seniors, we feel, are very high needs sometimes, and there are also other support programs provided through Community Development that can offset any additional expenditures that were not projected as part of their budget.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. For clarification, then, would the minister please clearly state whether the condominiums will be treated under the industrial rebate or the commercial rebate – the minister has said both things thus far – and how exactly the government will be informing the condominium boards which is applying to them? Nobody has told them anything right now. That's why all the confusion.

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, they will be receiving the industrial rate starting January 1, 2001. The industrial rate will no doubt be more than the $20 rebate at this time, because that $20 rebate can change also. At this time the industrial rate is no doubt higher than the $20 rebate that's going to be provided. So, yes, they will.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, you have to realize is that the renters of the condominium select the board of directors. They have voting authority. They will be advised. We will be advising the public out there as to how to access these rebates, and they in turn as a board can determine how that money is refunded to the owners.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Diabetes Treatment and Prevention

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents are raising concerns regarding coverage of diabetic supplies. These supplies are important in the management of the disease and in avoiding the costly complications associated with diabetes. Since this government places an emphasis upon wellness and prevention of illness, it seems appropriate to provide coverage of diabetes medication and supplies. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: will the coverage be expanded as part of the provincial diabetes strategy?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I should say at the outset that many of the costs associated with diabetes monitoring and management are already covered by Alberta Health and Wellness. I should outline those things before I go on to answering the question: should there be more that's done?

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta monitoring for health program covers a portion of costs related to supplies for adults who are insulin dependent and have no other insurance coverage. Eligible adult Albertans are covered for $350 in costs annually, and there's an additional subsidy that can be applied for for an additional $200. In aggregate this results in an annual budget of $2.3 million. Costs of supplies for children with diabetes are covered under the child health benefit program of the Human Resources and Employment department.

Mr. Speaker, an important thing to note here is that the development of a diabetes prevention strategy is an initiative that's included currently in our Alberta Health and Wellness three-year business plan for 2000-2003. It will look at these needs and issues surrounding this particular disease.

MR. JOHNSON: The final question then is: when is the implementation of this provincial diabetes strategy expected to start?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the diabetes prevention strategy, as I said, is contemplated for the Department of Health and Wellness in our three-year business plan for 2000-2003. Right now that strategy is in a preliminary stage of development. It will look at the needs and issues that surround the disease, including the issue of such things as test strips, blood sugar test strips, pumps and injection supplies, and also urine-test agents.

There are some 90,000 Albertans who are affected by this disease. Some of them do not know it. However, Mr. Speaker, we will continue to work with the Canadian Diabetes Association, the Alberta clinical guidelines unit of the Alberta Medical Association, and the Alberta Research Council in holding a provincial forum and releasing a report on its findings.

head: Statement by the Speaker

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before proceeding to the next item, the chair would like to make a statement. The chair would like to follow up on an intervention made last Thursday, November 16, 2000, after the member's statement by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. The chair intervened at that time because in the chair's view the statement by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder could be construed as an unparliamentary attack upon another member. Therefore, this seems like an appropriate time to review the rules as they apply to Members' Statements so that all members are clear.

The chair indicated on page 1928 of last Thursday's Hansard that when the Standing Orders were amended in 1993 to provide for Members' Statements, it was intended they would proceed "without interruption." In fact the chair ruled on June 5, 1997, on page 1056 of Hansard for that day that a point of order would not be entertained during a member's statement. To be clear, the chair has never meant to imply that all the rules about parliamentary language and order and decorum in this Assembly could be abandoned during Members' Statements.

Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j) still apply to Members' Statements as they do to all proceedings in the Assembly. It is a tribute to members of this Assembly that we have gone for over seven years without the chair having to address the content of members' statements. All members should be aware of the rules for the Canadian House of Commons and statements by members. When those rules were established in 1983, Speaker Sauve noted that "personal attacks are not permitted." This rule has continued according to the book House of Commons Procedure and Practice from pages 363 to 364. Certainly, as one of the authors of the 1993 amendments to Standing Orders, the chair wants to stress that it was intended that this and similar rules about decorum would apply to Members' Statements.

This chair wants to ensure that the greatest leeway possible is given to members during Members' Statements. Those statements must conform to the general rules of decorum that we follow in the Assembly. Last Thursday the chair believes this line was crossed in the remarks by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, especially his concluding remark about "the spending habits of this particular member" in speaking of the Provincial Treasurer.

The chair believes this clarifies the matter and sincerely hopes we will not have to revisit the subject of the content of a member's statement again.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much. Pursuant to Standing Order 13(2), while you're clarifying this for our further information, do I take it, then, that the same rules that apply in debate in any other area of activity of this Assembly also then apply? In other words, things that would be permissible in terms of criticism of somebody's performance as a minister of the Crown, which is permissible in question period and in debate on any bill, also would be available, as it is, Mr. Speaker, in the province of Ontario with private Members' Statements, in the House of Commons, and I've got a long list of samples of what passes in those other areas.

If you might confirm, sir, that it's not a different set of rules for private members' statements and recognitions than apply for the kind of debate that would happen in any other aspect of the activity of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, the uniqueness of members' statements is that the chair has never, ever allowed interventions during members' statements. That makes them very special. The chair recalls the discussions, the honourable discussions that occurred between this particular individual, when he served as the Government House Leader, and the honour and the integrity given to this discussion by the former House leader of the Official Opposition. It was always intended that in this Assembly should the members of this Assembly want to proceed with members' statements, then hon. members would be provided two minutes to provide and present a case in terms of virtually any subject they wanted, but never was it ever intended, in terms of the integrity displayed to this individual when these rules were being determined by the former House leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition, that one would ever venture into an area of which former Canadian House of Commons Speaker Sauve has eloquently said, "Personal attacks are not permitted."

Now, personal attacks are not permitted, period, in this Assembly at any time, but in the case of members' statements this chair has always ruled that there would never be provision provided for a point of order or a point of privilege, whereas in virtually all other activities in this Assembly, for an hon. member who feels that the subject matter that is being discussed and debated would afford an affront to them, that hon. member is always given the option of rising and rising immediately on a point of order or on a point of privilege. But the one occasion when the chair has said that it would not intervene would be during the time frame of Members' Statements. That was to be a special opportunity afforded to members to make their own statements in any way or shape they wanted.

Now, if there's any further clarity that's really required for that, the chair would invite a visitation from the House leader of the Official Opposition to further analyze what it is that the hon. member is struggling with. But let us just repeat very, very clearly again. Members' statements were to be dealt with as a special opportunity for members uninterrupted. Uninterrupted. At virtually any other time in this Assembly if one hon. member is speaking and another hon. member feels that there is something incorrect, an affront, that hon. member has an opportunity to rise. They can do it during question period. They can do it during a debate on the estimates. They can do it during the debate of any bill. The one time there would be no interventions would be allocated to the period of Members' Statements, and at all times – at all times – decorum and honour should be the mainstay in which members in this Assembly might want to conduct their activities.

Now, let us proceed to Recognitions. There will be five today that will be recognized, and in 30 seconds from now the chair will call on the hon. Member for St. Albert.

I'm sorry. Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you. I'm very pleased to be able to introduce some guests. I don't often get guests from Cypress-Medicine Hat, and I'm pleased to have in the members' gallery today Len Mitzel, who is the reeve of the county of Forty Mile; Harold Halvorson, a producer, rancher, and farmer in that area; and Jim Holofs from Lethbridge. This group was in a meeting with the hon. Minister of Infrastructure today about a pipeline, the South East Alberta Water Co-op, that will drought-proof all of southern Alberta. Will they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Steward Centre for Personal and Physical Achievement

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday the Rick Hansen Centre, which is a centre for body-working at the University of Alberta for disabled persons, was renamed the Bob Steadward Centre. Bob founded the centre in 1978, and he was also instrumental in developing the International Paralympic Games, in which disabled athletes compete. Earlier this year he was named a director of the International Olympic Committee, the IOC.

It is fitting that this centre would be named after Bob Steadward, who has dedicated his life to providing opportunities and challenges, particularly in the field of athletics, to persons with disabilities. The centre was previously named after Rick Hansen after his world tour in 1987. However, he has given his blessing to the new name, and I wish to extend my best wishes to Bob and to all members of the Bob Steadward centre to continue the work that they provide.

Youth Suicide

MRS. SLOAN: As we nationally acknowledge today as National Child Day, let us do more than mouth platitudes about the value of our children and their worth to our province. Instead, Mr. Speaker, let us seek to understand the challenges and problems lived by Alberta youth and seek to address them. Lost Promise and Potential, Alberta Statistics on Youth Suicides Programs and Challenges, released today in this Assembly, seeks to acknowledge National Child Day in such a way.

Suicide is responsible for 25 percent of the deaths of children and youth between the ages of one and 24. In 1999, 37 children between the ages of zero and 19 committed suicide, according to vital statistics. Lost Promise and Potential confirms that 24 to 51 children annually in Alberta have committed suicide since 1990. For children in government care one-quarter of the deaths reviewed by a fatality inquiry also highlighted this issue.

Despite the severity of these statistics, the Alberta government has refused to implement a provincial program for the prevention of suicides. Concerns exist that the government is leaning towards the development of a prevention framework by the Alberta Mental Health Board. This is simply re-creation of the wheel. Our children are important and deserve the best model and program for suicide prevention that exists. On National Child Day and every day our children deserve nothing less.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Rotary Clubs Polio Plus Project

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I wish to recognize the important efforts of Alberta Rotary Clubs. Nearly a hundred Rotary Clubs meet in many constituencies in our province, and all are partners in a worldwide Rotary fund-raising program to end the scourge of polio among children.

In the early 1980s Rotarians were looking for a suitable project to celebrate their 100th anniversary as a service club, and in 1985 Rotary Clubs in Alberta joined with clubs around the world to launch Polio Plus, a plan to distribute polio vaccine free of charge to children of 125 countries where polio was endemic.

In the last five years nearly 2 billion children have been immunized. By the beginning of this year only 30 polio-endemic countries remain, and within a year this will be reduced to only 10 countries. By joining with UNICEF, the World Health Organization, and the national health departments of these countries, the world's children will be free of polio before the 100th anniversary of Rotary in 2005. Then, thanks to Rotarians in Alberta and Rotarians all over the world, this crippling disease will no longer be a threat to our children.

Chief Justice Kenneth Moore

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, on October 19, 2000, some 1,300 friends and supporters of Chief Justice Ken Moore gathered at the Roundup Centre in Calgary. The purpose was to pay tribute to a wonderful leader in this province on his retirement. Chief Justice Moore provided thoughtful and fair direction as he co-ordinated and supervised the administration of justice throughout this province through the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta. In fact, he provided that key leadership pretty much from the time that we merged the district court and trial division of the Alberta Supreme Court to create the new Court of Queen's Bench. His door was always open and not just to this young lawyer, who showed up needing some guidance and direction.

At the event in October colleagues and speakers celebrated his commitment to his family, his profession, his city, and his province. Chief Justice Moore was instrumental in the creation of Calgary Legal Guidance and instrumental in the creation of the Legal Archives Society. We salute this remarkable man and thank him for his huge contribution to the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Snack in the Shack Program

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is the difference between June 30 and July 1? To some Edmonton children it is the difference between having a hot lunch one day and going hungry the next. Today I'd like to recognize an outstanding program that has made a big difference in the lives of many children. The program is called Snack in the Shack, and it provides lunches for children during the summer months, when they no longer have access to the school lunch programs.

The founders of Snack in the Shack, Teresa Androschuk and Candice Furneaux, have turned a small idea into a big success. It operates out of city park green shacks and serves 500 to 600 kids daily. An impressive 95 percent of the food is donated, and the program runs almost entirely on hardworking community volunteers.

This program helps prevent the obvious developmental and physical side effects of poor nutrition, which put children at greater risk for many degenerative diseases. Snack in the Shack is also a big help to families on fixed incomes who often find that their monthly income leaves little left over for food, making things like fresh fruit a luxury item.

Most importantly, Snack in the Shack is an example of a preventative program that works. The long-term benefits of these kinds of programs are shared by all of us. We owe all the volunteers of programs such as Snack in the Shack our gratitude for helping to contribute to the well-being of our children.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, on Monday we have allocation time for seven recognitions. Will there be additional government members who want to participate today? That being the case, we'll proceed, then, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Victims of Brain Injuries

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to recognize Albertans who are the victims or have a family member who is a victim of a brain injury. To me it appears like these are the forgotten ones, the ones that are sort of lost in the medical system and out there on their own, struggling, fighting. Between myself and the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark we tabled a good number of questionnaires in the past week, some this morning. We tabled a number of letters pointing out the concerns they have.

Just to briefly go over those concerns. Home care is critical to them. It is capped at a different level. Prescriptions are a problem to them: income, AISH, CPP. Some of them have to use some of their dollars to buy extra drugs and such. Employment opportunities are very limited. Retraining can become a problem. Transportation: there's a shortage of trauma centres for victims of brain injuries. There are a great deal of concerns there, and I would hope that the minister and the associate minister of health can address those concerns, will meet with the individuals, and will get something done.

Villeneuve Historical Society

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to just take the opportunity to recognize the Villeneuve Historical Society, a group of hardworking people headed by Monique Altman, that did an amazing job over the last three years on a history book made for the Villeneuve community called A View to the Past. It's based on the early settlers, the Metis, many of the Belgian community, French and German. Originally the church was St. Pierre's and then eventually St. Peter's. There are stories about the hall, the original store, the ball teams, pioneer families of Soetaerts, Bokenfohrs, Belangers, Borles, Sheehans, and Kremers. It is an absolute tribute to those early pioneers. It also has a special tribute to the young men sent to war. Articles on politicians, if you can believe it, are quite good, I must say.

A special congratulation to Monique and her team for a job well done. They have certainly given our community a treasure.

THE SPEAKER: I wish to advise, as all hon. members are aware, that a special Hansard is being prepared to cover the events of Thursday last, dealing with Bill 26, the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act, which covers all the passage through readings one through three, and the text of it will be available shortly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark with respect to a Standing Order 40 application.

Emergency Medical Services in Calgary

Ms Leibovici:

Be it resolved that this Assembly address the crisis in access to emergency care in Calgary hospitals.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I gave notice that I would make application under Standing Order 40. The subject of Albertans' health is always an important one, but recent tragic events in Calgary have turned an important matter into a pressing and urgent one that has to be dealt with now.

Health officials in Calgary have blamed the tragic death of a patient in that city on the overcrowded waiting room of the Rockyview hospital. Calgarians, either directly through experience or indirectly, have been aware of the serious hospital bed shortage problem plaguing their city's three acute care facilities for years.

Similarly, health care workers, those working directly in the system, know of these problems intimately and have expressed growing concerns over bed shortages and overcrowded waiting rooms in Calgary's emergency departments. These bed shortages have created no end of discomfort for Calgarians in emergency situations, but only this past summer has the level of overcrowding and the number of hospital bed shortages reached the stage where Calgarians' health and Calgarians' lives are at risk, and it may get worse unless this matter is debated immediately.

The Calgary regional health authority's own document indicates that some 4,000 people this year have spent the night in emergency waiting rooms because no beds were available. These people are waiting for hours in emergency department waiting rooms for the simple reason that there are not enough beds in the hospital. A level of risk to patient health and patient life shows no sign of diminishing.

In January 2000 the average number of people spending the night waiting in Calgary's three acute care facilities was 10 people per night. Ten people per night were spending the night in emergency department waiting rooms because of the lack of beds. Today the average number of people spending the night waiting in emergency department waiting rooms because there are no beds available in Calgary is 20 people per night, and it could get worse. This is a 100 percent increase since January. The number of people having to wait in emergency department waiting rooms for a whole night because there are no beds has in fact doubled since January.

As we head into the winter flu season, the ever increasing number of people spending the night in emergency department waiting rooms will only get larger. If we don't address immediately the bed shortages and the overcrowding problems in Calgary, we will fail Calgarians requiring emergency situations. Calgarians' health and Calgarians' lives may be put at risk.

This is clearly an emergent matter demanding the immediate attention of this Assembly in emergency debate. Calgarians are facing a crisis in their emergency rooms, a crisis that will only get worse unless this Assembly gives this serious issue the weight it deserves.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, under a Standing Order 40 application certain matters have to be dealt with. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has correctly followed all the rules, and the only decision now is one of the Assembly to choose to waive what we've scheduled to do this afternoon to move to this particular application. So one question will be asked, and the question is: is any hon. member opposed to adjourning the regular Routine for the day and moving to a Standing Order 40 application?

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate April 28: Mrs. McClellan]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, you adjourned the debate. Do you wish to continue?

MRS. McCLELLAN: No.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If I could take a few minutes to speak about the Justice Statutes Amendment Act. It is quite a lengthy piece of legislation, and I realize that as a statute it has several parts to it. What's been pointed out to me and one of the things that I have noted is 5(a): the Lieutenant Governor in Council will be able to make regulations outlining situations in which court fees can be waived. Currently there are no provisions. That is certainly a thing that I think will serve us well. We've all seen situations where court fees should be waived, and this will give that possibility to people who cannot afford that.

This has come to the minister's attention. I haven't been part of the negotiations back and forth about this legislation, but certainly one of the things that we've received correspondence on is section 74. In that, the bill amends the Survival of Actions Act. Currently, as a result of several decisions by the Court of Appeal of Alberta, if an individual is killed in, for instance, a motor vehicle accident, the estate has the right to claim for damages in relation to what that individual would have earned had their life expectancy not been cut short by the accident. The amendment of the Survival of Actions Act eliminates this claim of damages. However, this does not prevent a deceased's children from being able to maintain a court action for their dependency claim. The amendment of the Survival of Actions Act does not eliminate a valid dependency claim.

Now, I know there are different views on this, and even I know that lots of individuals from groups like Mothers Against Drunk Driving are raising concerns about this. I realize it's controversial, and because of that maybe it deserves a bit more discussion. Of course, there's a provision that if a spouse is killed in an accident by a drunk driver, then there is compensation that can be . . .

DR. TAYLOR: Sit down.

MRS. SOETAERT: No. I'm not sitting down. I have the right for 20 minutes, and you just might make me go that long now. [interjection] Thirty. It's a statute. Oh, let's go over each one of these, Madam Speaker.

Actually I'd like to express some of the concerns I've heard, and I am glad they will be in the amendments. Had those been sent over, I might have had a peek at them, but I guess they haven't been sent over yet. [interjection] Oh, we got a note. Isn't that thorough? I hope Hansard can record sarcasm.

Anyway, I would like to mention that this has come to our concern. I realize that in an accident . . .

MR. HANCOCK: Of course, you never called me about it until today.

MRS. SOETAERT: Interestingly, the minister says: I never told you about it until today. I actually have some correspondence here from the former Member for Edmonton-Norwood in which she sent a letter to you the minister on June 29 expressing concerns in the controversy over section 74. So, hmm, I guess you got the note prior to today, Mr. Minister, but I would never question you on that, understanding all the correspondence that comes across your desk. I know you do the best you can with remembering every piece of paper that comes across that. Just so we know, the former Justice critic did a marvelous job, and she was doing her homework and sent information to the minister. I'm not sure if she got a response from that letter, but it's getting there, I'm sure. That's only four or five months ago.

Madam Speaker, of course through the chair, as I like to keep it. I was pointing out that we realize that when a spouse or a parent is killed in a tragic accident, for example when a drunk driver is killed, that is handled, and that is covered. This whole question, though, of compensation for a child who has been killed tragically does need more discussion, and I'm sure we're all of maybe two minds on that because there is no amount of money that could replace a child. Just no amount of money. We sometimes forget that even when adult children die, that's a terrible blow to families. I think of, you know, elderly parents who, for the most part, get support from their adult children who are in their midyears – I like to call them mid-50s now, since I'm still on this side of that – and expect that kind of support.

I'm not talking financial support but that emotional support, that actual physical support that when the furnace breaks down or the water leaks, someone in their family is available to come over and fix it. You know what? When you're elderly, when you're in your 80s and 90s, those kinds of things are very disturbing, and often they don't think to call the plumber. They will call their son or their daughter and hope that they can fix those kinds of things.

Until I see the amendments, I just don't think section 74 has been adequately discussed. People may also know that there was a court case on this, in fact. You know, with all the different decisions on this, I don't think we've got the proper legislation to deal with it yet. So that's one of my concerns about Bill 20.

Within these statutes there is one of the other amendments, to the Provincial Offences Procedure Act. That raises two issues. The first is that the maximum fine able to be imposed with respect to an offence will increase from $400 to $1,000 and, second, that the Lieutenant Governor in Council will be able to make regulations allowing a person acting as an agent of the court to receive payment for offences, most commonly speeding tickets, which are sections 67, 68, and 70. These agents will be allowed to charge a surcharge for providing this service. This means that a speeding ticket for $50 would actually cost the offender $50 plus the service charge. I'm wondering: will there be job losses for those who currently collect these fines, or is that going to affect that at all? Has the minister thought about that? Is it the intention of the ministry to appoint current private registries as agents of the court for collection of these fines? Is that part of the intent of that statute? I know the minister is listening intently.

MR. HANCOCK: One more way for people to pay.

MRS. SOETAERT: It's what? One more way for people to pay.

You know, the thing that really bugs me about speeding tickets is you can only blame yourself. You can't blame it on anyone but yourself. I know that if I'm speeding and I'm actually going to pay a surcharge on top of the fine, maybe that will make my foot be a little less heavy. You know what, Madam Speaker? I have said that it is only the driver's fault when you get a speeding ticket. What I resent the most, not that I've had to do it often, is writing a cheque to the Provincial Treasurer. That really hurts. That really, really hurts when that happens to me. I usually pay it quickly so others members in my family don't find out. However, the transportation critic: that doesn't happen often to her. I appreciate the opportunity to point that out to the minister.

A few other points. These are quite the statutes here, a lot of them. The Contributory Negligence Act is also amended, and the amendment is simply to reflect that the last clear chance rule is not applicable in determining liability of a party. This reflects the common law, which eliminated the last clear chance rule many years ago and therefore doesn't alter the law as it is applied currently.

You know, these acts truly are interesting, Madam Speaker. The average person – I consider myself average – does have difficulty going through this and slugging through it to see what it changes from one act to another, and there are many acts within this. How many actual acts have been addressed by this? One, two, three, I believe: the Provincial Court Judges Act, the Provincial Court Act, a few others. It's quite a big piece of legislation, so if I point out a few other changes, well, that's the joy of an act this big. There are so many different angles to it.

The Alberta Civil Trial Lawyers Association has, I know, sent correspondence to the minister and has sent us correspondence as well as we asked for some of their input. Of course, they as well are concerned about section 74, so I'm anxious to see the changes on that.

I guess, Madam Speaker, that I hope all members have had a chance to look at this in full detail. Certainly it is huge, and it is a lot to go through. I guess what I hope comes out of this is that people are served better in our province, that the courts aren't such a scary place. Now, I know that maybe there are lawyers in here who make it – I mean, it's their everyday place of work. But I think for a lot of people the court system is quite intimidating. I think it is.

When the former Justice minister set up tours for anyone in the Legislature who was interested in seeing the remand centre and the young offender centre, I really appreciated that. As I journeyed through the day, one of the things I noted in the young offenders court was the young, young children who were there. The other thing I noticed: with the maybe 60 young people who were in that room, there might have been eight or 10 parents. That was indicative to me of the long way we have to go in this province toward addressing family issues. You know, if you see a young person in trouble with the law and no guardian or parent with them, then you kind of know that there's lots of trouble elsewhere in their lives, that the action is just a result of maybe a lot of troubles in their background. So that was quite telling for me.

When I visit especially grade 6, the grade that takes government, I often describe the young offender centre to them. Especially around election time I say that there are a couple of reasons you don't wreck those signs. They are expensive, they're advertisement, it's against the law, and I don't want to see you in the young offender centre. I tell them about going to the classroom and talking to the teacher and saying to the teacher: "You know, I bet these kids are kind of tough to teach. These are some pretty tough kids." That teacher said to me: "Colleen, this is one of the easiest classes I have ever taught. Not easy, but discipline is not an issue, because if they're not behaving, if they don't want to learn, they just go back to their cell." Then I tell the young students in the class: "Do you know what's in their cell? A window and a bed. No TV, no stereo, and probably worst of all no telephone." That kind of wakes up a few kids, and they say: "You know, I don't want to be there. It's not a fun place to be."

I guess, coming back to the statutes, the reality is I hope this serves our people better. To say that I'm aware of every single statute and exactly the repercussions of it and how it will apply wouldn't be true, but I have indicated some of the areas of concern that have been brought to us, and I assume those will be addressed in the amendments. So I look forward to that stage.

I am sure that other of my colleagues, who are probably more knowledgeable about the justice system than I, have had maybe a better opportunity to interpret what these statutes will mean to the people of Alberta and to the people who have to deliver them, to the lawyers and to the judges who are given this legislation to work with.

So that is my hope for this Justice Statutes Amendment Act, and I look forward to further debate on it. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Madam Speaker. After receiving input from groups representing victims, the Alberta government will be bringing forward an amendment to the Justice Statutes Amendment Act that section 74 be put aside for the time being. Section 74 proposed an amendment to the Survival of Actions Act, and this amendment came about following a ruling by the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal ruled that the loss of future income can survive a person's death. In other words, a person's estate could sue for the person's potential income if they had not died. The government does not believe that was what was intended in law. It should also be noted that the Law Reform Institute of Alberta proposed that the law be reversed to indicate that financial loss could be determined only for a person's living years.

Madam Speaker, the province consulted with the legal community before this particular amendment was proposed. However, we now understand that groups such as MADD, or Mothers Against Drunk Driving, are concerned about this proposed amendment. Our concern, conversely, is not to have them unduly concerned about it. They argue that the amendment would affect many Alberta families in addition to the crime that has already been committed against them by an impaired driver. MADD, or, as I said, Mothers Against Drunk Driving, is concerned the proposed change would effectively eliminate any recovery by the estate of a deceased person in relation to their future loss of earnings.

So, Madam Speaker, the Alberta government has heard what this group representing victims has to say. I suggest that the second reading on the other proposed amendments should continue in light of the fact that the government will be proposing a House amendment to delete the proposed amendment to section 74. The Alberta government will only bring forward another amendment to section 74 after it has consulted with these specific victims' groups.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to focus my debate this afternoon on two specific sections in this bill which, I believe, are not supportable, and I will provide the rationale for that position.

Section 21.21, which is titled "Inability of judge to complete proceedings," and section 21.42, "Judge's residence", I believe, Madam Speaker, have been cleverly designed to address an embarrassing situation that this government found itself in arising out of an investigation, which was court ordered, into the Stoney Indian reserve. In 1997 Justice John Reilly ordered an investigation into the Stoney Indian reserve and specifically cited a concern that he had received information that $50,000,000 worth of timber . . . had been taken off the reserve in 1995, and yet none of that money was paid to the tribal government, and none was available for badly needed programs.

Specifically, the concern arose when in response to this order the then Minister of Justice and Attorney General for Alberta was reported to say that the matter was not in his jurisdiction but was in the jurisdiction of Indian Affairs. The judge said:

If he said this, he was incorrect to the extent that criminal activity anywhere in the province is [within] the jurisdiction of the Provincial Minister of Justice.

What arose further, Madam Speaker, with respect to this order was the fact that resources on the reserve were acknowledged to be the common property of all members of the community, yet $50 million worth of these resources were apparently removed with no accounting and no distribution to the general population, none of it being available for education, health, welfare, or economic development. It was the view of Justice Reilly that this was a crime against the Stoney people, including, I might add, Sherman Labelle, who was the young man who committed suicide at 17 years of age that I mentioned this afternoon.

What section 21 speaks to is the inability for a judge to complete proceedings. Now, most people who are in the know about this case, Madam Speaker, will know that the government and Justice Reilly have been engaged in lengthy court proceedings arising from this matter, and during those proceedings on at least one occasion Justice Reilly became ill. It would be my proposal this afternoon that this section has been specifically designed to allow the Justice minister to intervene if he does not like the direction that a Provincial Court judge is taking relative to his applications and rulings.

Further, section 21.42, which speaks about the judge's residence, is exactly what this province attempted to enact to remove Justice Reilly from his division in the Cochrane and Morley areas. They made an application suggesting that this justice should be moved to Calgary. We know that that was in fact reviewed by the courts, and the province lost their position.

Now, the plot even gets thicker, Madam Speaker. We also know that over a year ago the province of Alberta was ordered by the court to pay the court fees incurred by Justice John Reilly and to date have not paid that bill. That is in contempt of court. Yet we find ourselves today debating in this Assembly an act and amendments which directly relate to that very case and most likely would have been enacted had they been in effect at the time Justice Reilly made his decision on the Stoney Indian reserve in 1997.

The injustice of all of this, Madam Speaker, is not only for the Stoney Indian people and not only for Justice Reilly, but it directly relates to the socioeconomic status of the Stoney Indian people, of which Sherman Labelle was one. I'm reading from a fatality inquiry that was written subsequent to Sherman Labelle's death in May of 1998, a year after Justice Reilly ordered the investigation into the conditions on the Stoney reserve. In the fatality inquiry recommendations surrounding Sherman Labelle's death, he made a number of other recommendations, which we find no evidence this government has responded to.

One of them was that he recommended the Provincial Department of Justice establish a Special Prosecutions Branch for the Prosecution of Crimes Against Aboriginal People.

We are almost two years since this report was written. We have a bill before us that could have incorporated that recommendation, Madam Speaker, and it does not. Justice Reilly proposed that such a branch should employ investigators from each of the aboriginal language groups in Alberta so that investigations can be done in the language spoken by victims and accused persons.

He suggested that it should be given a mandate to prosecute all matters from domestic assaults to racketeering, and the mandate should specifically include investigating and prosecuting any allegations of criminal activity within Indian and Northern Affairs Canada, and tribal governments.

Just on that specific point, Madam Speaker, in the 1996 report of the federal Auditor General he said that there was $100 million unaccounted for in the Department of Indian Affairs. It was Justice Reilly's belief – and it is a belief I share – that when large amounts of money are poorly accounted for, there is a very high risk of theft and fraud. If the Minister of Justice [either past or current] takes the position that this is not his responsibility this will create a fertile field for corruption.

I am assuming, Madam Speaker, given the fact that we do not see these recommendations incorporated in this statute and have not seen anything with respect to the ministry publicizing that they will be enacted, we are prepared as a government to bear whatever fruit this field of corruption produces.

3:30

The other recommendation that arose from Sherman Labelle's fatality inquiry was that the provincial government enact a statute that makes it an offence for any person who holds an elected [office], or who is employed in the public sector, to make a false statement.

I can attest that when I swore my oath of office, I was astounded that it did not contain anything about honesty or telling the truth. Not a word. It primarily spoke to swearing your allegiance to the Queen and to her successors but had absolutely nothing about taking an oath that required you to tell the truth. The province continues not to have a statute that requires that, Madam Speaker, despite what the hon. ministers might attest this afternoon.

It was suggested that if such a statute was enacted, penalties should be included that include removal from office or employment, and fines in any amount deemed appropriate by a court, and that the court may direct payment of all or a portion of such fines to informants who bring [forward] the action.

The lunacy, Madam Speaker, is that we don't see that this government is alive to any of those recommendations. None of them are incorporated. What we see are cleverly drafted amendments in Bill 20 before us this afternoon that are directly geared to taking people like Justice Reilly out of the system. In my mind – and anyone who wants to can stand up and tell this Assembly otherwise – when I look at the facts, the facts are that the court has heard out this case, that they have ordered this government to pay damages to this individual, and that the province is in contempt of that order and has been in contempt of that order for a year. How are we to be led to believe that this government is sincerely concerned about achieving justice, about achieving fairness, about respecting our judiciary? This is manipulation at its finest. So those two sections, unless the minister would like to provide rationale that they are intended for some other purpose, in my opinion are directly intended to eliminate the problem which this government sees as Justice John Reilly.

I want to spend a bit of time also on several other recommendations that came about through Sherman Labelle's fatality inquiry. It's important to make the point this afternoon that fatality inquiry recommendations on the deaths of children in care, regardless of their age or origin or race, are not publicly acknowledged by any ministry. There's no accounting for how those recommendations have been implemented or funded by government: not in the Children's Advocate report, not in the ministry of health's report, not in the Ministry of Justice's report, and not in Children's Services' annual report. For no other reason than to publicly acknowledge the value of a human life, in this case the life of Sherman Labelle, I think it's important this afternoon that we give air to some of these recommendations. I would invite any minister of the Crown to stand this afternoon and tell me why that is the case, why we do not see fatality inquiry recommendations publicly accounted for and funded.

Further recommendations in Sherman Labelle's fatality inquiry, just completing the statement about telling the truth. When the investigation into the Stoney band was ordered in 1997, there were many public statements made by politicians, officials of the INAC, and others denying that there was a problem in the Stoney band or indicating that if there was a problem, it was an exceptional one. Now, we know that clearly that's not the case. We have allegations of corruption and problems in Hobbema, we have well-documented problems within the Stoney Indian reserve, and there are others.

Accompanying that, Madam Speaker, we also have statistics that confirm for us that these aboriginal populations are also suffering a high incidence of fetal alcohol syndrome, a high incidence of disabilities, a high incidence of suicide. There's no money for programs on reserves to address these issues. Why is that? Because the province is failing to deal with the corruption that exists. The Stoney band in that order was a direct example of that.

Just to not entirely cast the blame on the Ministry of Justice, Madam Speaker, I think it's important to point out as well that recommendations were made to the department of health and social services, now human resources, that unilaterally those ministries should provide health care workers to reserve communities, and that all non-aboriginal workers be required to have an aboriginal person in training for their position with a deadline for that aboriginal person to take over the position.

Justice Reilly provided statements that were made in the royal commission relative to this recommendation which I will not cite into the record this afternoon but which most certainly give justification for that recommendation. He said that the problems of physical and mental health in reserve communities are approaching what will be a national disaster. Whether this is the responsibility of the federal or provincial government should not slow immediate steps to reverse the downward spiral that is occurring.

Again, Madam Speaker, at least during my term of office, when this fatality inquiry was written and the Stoney Indian band proceedings and investigation occurred, I have not heard the ministry of health or the ministry of human resources respond to that recommendation.

Further, it was recommended that an aboriginal education system be developed. It was recommended that the provincial government should unilaterally provide teachers and support staff to reserve schools to insure that the standards of education in those schools are equivalent to provincial standards.

Witnesses testified to a number of students transferred from the reserve school to off reserve schools who were found to be functioning much below the grade level they were said to be.

I have not heard the Learning minister respond to that matter.

I would appreciate and welcome clarification from the government side relative to the statements I've made this afternoon. While I acknowledge that there are some very positive amendments within this statute, I believe that the amendments proposed under section 21, specifically section 21.21 and section 21.42, cannot be supported, Madam Speaker.

With those remarks this afternoon I will conclude. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I've listened with interest to the debate so far this afternoon regarding Bill 20, and I have not only questions this afternoon, but I believe that during committee I will have a better chance of perhaps getting some answers.

Now, as I understand it, under this bill there will be a significant consolidation in the Provincial Court. There will no longer be the divisions that we now see with the Criminal Division, the Youth Division, the Family Division, and the Civil Division. But when we talk at any time about the judicial system, one thing has to be certain, and that is that the public has confidence and respect in the judicial system. We have to examine appointments to the Provincial Court system in this province, the appointment of judges.

As I listened to the remarks of all hon. colleagues of the House, I can't help but think – and perhaps the hon. Minister of Justice at some time will answer this for me – that there has been a dramatic increase in the number of female law students graduating from law school. In the last generation there's been a dramatic increase. I think it's over 40 percent, and correct me, please, if I'm wrong. It could be that close to 50 percent of all students graduating are female. I would like to know what comparisons there are for judges as far as gender balance in our Provincial Court system.

I would like to know if there has been any consideration by the hon. minister to, say, alternate the post of Chief Judge between a female judge and a male judge. I'm just curious if there has been any consideration to that as this bill was developed and drafted. Certainly I think that we need to have gender balance in the court system. This is a province that's come a long way and is noted across the country. This is the province that's the home of the Famous Five. So I'm just curious if any discussion took place of that nature in the development of this bill, Madam Speaker.

Now, as I read this – and I would understand it to be a reason of security – we're talking in section 21 of a judge's residence: "designate the place at which the judge is to reside." If the hon. minister in due course could explain the reason for this, I would be very grateful.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked about the situation down west of Calgary with Judge Reilly, and we have to look at conflict of interest legislation. Here we have a very modest approach to conflict of interest for members of the judiciary, that "a judge does not have jurisdiction to hear any matter in which the judge has or has had an interest." Well, who's to know? Who is to know if there was to be a conflict there? If the hon. minister in the process of this debate could explain that, I would be very, very grateful.

Now, this is an issue that is of great importance to me and a lot of other Albertans as well, the whole idea of exhibits. In here in section 21 we deal with the control of exhibits in a court case. I would like to know what studies have been done in other provinces, for instance. How do other jurisdictions handle exhibits that are before a court? Are they or are they not public information? The pillars of the judiciary are openness and accountability. If people are to have faith in their justice system, you have to have those two items, openness and accountability.

I have to bring one case in particular to the attention of all members of this House, Madam Speaker, and that is the case of the province versus Bovar in Swan Hills, where there was a leak of PCBs, furans, dioxins into the air going back to 1996. This case went before the Provincial Court. Of course, Bovar was fined 600 and some odd thousand dollars. That was the global fine, and it was to be a creative sentence. Now, the exhibits – and there were many in that particular case – were withheld from public view. When these exhibits were withheld from public view, a lot of questions have gone unanswered, and they have gone unanswered to this day.

There are questions relating to the blueprints. There was, Madam Speaker, a repair done on a furnace in Swan Hills, and the repair was done inadequately. There was a lack of inspection. There was a lack of inspection regarding the quality of the welding. There was a lack of inspection regarding the lack – the complete lack – of insulation that was to protect the steel in that furnace from extreme heat, and as a result of those two occurrences, two instances of the lack of inspection, the furnace developed a leak and the pollutants did not burn at a high rate of temperature. They simply escaped through the cracks in the steel and went up the flue gas into the surrounding atmosphere in Swan Hills.

The Liberal researchers and myself thought we could get to the bottom of this, but we went to the courthouse in St. Albert and were denied access to these exhibits. These exhibits would have told us a great deal about how and why this accident happened. It would have told us who the contractor was, probably, that did the welding and installed this plate inadequately. It would have told us if there was any testing done. It would have told us the welding procedure. It would have told us so many things, but we were denied access to those exhibits, and I cannot understand why, Madam Speaker, if we're going to have an open and accountable judicial system.

Now, I had enough interest in this case that I went to Swan Hills myself. I drove up there on the day there was to be a hearing regarding how this 600-plus thousand dollars was to be spent with the creative sentencing. I got to the courthouse. Both parties were arguing before the judge – I believe the judge's name was Chief Judge E.J. Walter at this time – and I listened with interest, along with, I believe, individuals who were associated with the Sucker Creek Indian band. We sat and we listened to arguments and how they were presented.

Incredibly, there was an argument presented to take half the money, as I recall – I don't have the notes before me, Madam Speaker, but I believe it was half the money. Close to $300,000 was to be used to construct a chain-link fence around the Swan Hills waste treatment plant. This chain-link fence was to be in all directions 1.5 kilometres from the centre of the plant. The first thing that had to be done, of course, was that a cut line was to be cut through the bush, and this chain-link fence was to be installed in the middle of the cut line so that the larger mammals, the moose in particular, could not graze close to the Swan Hills waste treatment plant. The idea behind this, of course, was that the top end of the food chain wouldn't be eating contaminated plants. So this was one place for the money to be spent.

I believe there were to be also graduate students hired to do some long-term studies on the effects of the pollution in the immediate area. Regardless, Madam Speaker, this information was important then, and it is equally important now that the Swan Hills waste treatment plant has come back into the hands of the taxpayers. The cleanup costs, I have to remind the Assembly, were always going to be paid by the taxpayers. But when we look at the exhibits, as is determined in Bill 20, we have to be very, very careful about what we're doing here whenever we're setting up a law to govern exhibits in our Provincial Court system. It's very important that the public always has access to those exhibits because of what I, myself, and the Liberal research team experienced in St. Albert. This information is vital, yet we did not have any access to it after the Chief Judge ordered that all exhibits be sealed from public view.

Now, the cleanup costs before, Madam Speaker: I can't imagine how high they are. They're obviously in the millions and millions of dollars. Is anyone else liable for those cleanup costs, or is the taxpayer going to foot the bill after this faulty repair work was done in the plant? Perhaps we will never know.

When we think of creative sentencing, we usually don't think of a global fine of over $600,000 and what it's to be spent on, like we do in Swan Hills. We're going to build a chain-link fence around an industrial facility, a chain-link fence that's 1.5 metres high, and we're going to do some studies. Now, I don't know the conclusion of this: what happened with this proposal for the chain-link fence. I've inquired. I've been persistent in my inquiries, and I have received no answers, Madam Speaker. The exhibits, to my knowledge, are still sealed from public view. There's this lack of confidence in Alberta towards the safety code system. Now, perhaps if these exhibits were made available, we could find out the whole inspection process, what happened up in Swan Hills and what did not happen. I don't think that's going to happen, and I would ask all hon. members of this Assembly that when we are considering passing a law discussing the exhibits before the Provincial Court, we're very, very careful that the public always has some form of access to these exhibits.

Now, Madam Speaker, I was of the opinion – and obviously I was wrong – that I could go to a courthouse anywhere or anytime and ask to see those exhibits and I could expect a temporary delay because they would be in a warehouse somewhere. They would be catalogued somewhere, and perhaps it would be three or four days before they could be assembled. But that is not the case. I think that when we look at the number of tax dollars that are going to have to go into the cleanup of Swan Hills and the timing of this unfortunate release, we need now more than ever to have access to all exhibits.

It is an issue that I don't believe is going to go away, because certainly there's going to be a debate about the future of Swan Hills. There's going to be a debate on the pollution that has occurred there and just how far or how wide an area the pollution has occurred in. Certainly it's greater than 1.5 kilometres in any direction around the Swan Hills waste treatment plant. One of the experts that was in Swan Hills in the courtroom said that this pollution could drift as far away as the Arctic.

When we look at that simple case – it may seem simple to some people, but it's actually quite complex. The simple fact is that there was inadequate inspection, and look what it caused. We cannot think for one minute that exhibits in the courtrooms of this province should be sealed from public examination at any time.

With those remarks, Madam Speaker, I would cede the floor to any of my colleagues who would like to participate in this debate. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On June 29, 2000, my former colleague Sue Olsen, who was then the Member for Edmonton-Norwood proudly serving her constituents as their MLA and our caucus as the Justice critic, wrote the Minister of Justice, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, regarding section 74 of the . . .

DR. WEST: Point of Order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Excuse me, hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Point of Order Referring to a Member by Name

DR. WEST: There has been a lot said recently about using personal names in the Assembly, and it doesn't seem to be getting through to some members of the opposition.

MR. SAPERS: You know, it's nice to see the Provincial Treasurer paying attention to the rules for a change.

Sue Olsen is a former member of this Assembly, and I think we could all say Sue Olsen as many times as we wanted without offending any of the Standing Orders. So I would hope that the Provincial Treasurer would pay close attention to the rules now that he's discovered that some exist to cover debate. If I could continue.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Actually we did hear last week from the Speaker of the Assembly, who talked about using constituency names instead of proper names. However, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora is right. The member is a former Member of the Legislative Assembly, so proper names can be used, but I think it is worth while to say that we are going to try, as the Speaker mentioned last week, to make reference to the people that are in the Assembly presently by constituency.

Thank you.

DR. WEST: My apologies for that.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I note the Provincial Treasurer's apologies, and I appreciate that.

MR. SAPERS: The point that I'm making, Madam Speaker, is that when Sue Olsen was in fact the Justice critic and responsible for reviewing Bill 20 as put forward by the government, a letter was written to the Minister of Justice suggesting that section 74 was problematic and citing many good reasons for that.

Now, we hadn't heard back until the Member for St. Albert rose earlier in the Assembly today to say that the government had changed its mind on section 74 and talked specifically about wanting to consult with victims groups. Well, we'll have much more to say about that when we actually see the form of the amendment. Of course, the time to have introduced an amendment would have been in committee, but since the Member for St. Albert spoke about the proposed amendment and it didn't offend the chair at the time, I'll take the opportunity to refer to it as well.

It is very strange to have the government put forward a bill over such a length of time, to have the feedback that is received, to have the correspondence early in the summer and to have no response to that correspondence, and then today during the second reading stage of the bill to be told: oh, don't worry; an amendment is coming. It's sort of like when a government tells you that the cheque's in the mail. Of course, this government does that too, Madam Speaker. They make the same sort of promises.

The issue with section 74 of the Survival of Actions Act, of course, is that it limits the ability of survivors to make claims particularly against the loss of future earnings. I couldn't help but wonder whether or not the government was trying to insulate itself from lawsuits. All we had to do was reference the headlines with the tragedy in Calgary. Of course, we see that the government has itself been sued many times and will continue to be sued as a result of its mishandling of health care. If there should be a tragic loss of life that is attributable to a government policy, as appears to have been the case in a Calgary hospital, this section 74 could have limited the government's liability, or at least it could have limited the penalty assessed to the government.

This is not just idle speculation, Madam Speaker. I mean, this is the same government that brought in Bill 26 in the last session, which would have denied the constitutional rights of those individuals who were forcibly sexually sterilized. The government saw no problem in denying those individuals the legal right to court, to sue the government for compensation. They saw no problem with that.

So it doesn't take much effort to connect the dots between the government being named in lawsuits as a result of deficient policy and then trying to protect themselves by sneaking in through the back door, really, in a very complex bill, an omnibus bill, this section, which has been quite rightfully targeted by many members of the legal community as obnoxious. Of course, we hear today that the government intends, so we're told, to bring in an amendment to correct it.

You know, I really do worry about what's going on with the government when they continually bring in these obnoxious bits of legislation which tend to totally ignore that individual citizens need every opportunity they can to go to court. The government should be searching for ways to increase access to justice. When I saw Bill 20, I opened it up eagerly because I was looking to see whether or not we've learned anything from the centre of excellence project at the University of Alberta regarding access to civil justice. I wanted to see whether or not the government had learned anything from the very successful experiments in other jurisdictions regarding the unification of courts or mediation or alternative dispute resolution.

I looked at Bill 20, and unfortunately – you know, I do see some good things. There are some positive changes in Bill 20, and I'll give this Minister of Justice credit where credit is due. The provincial board is in dire need of reorganization. The way in which we appoint judges to that court is in need of improvement. Dealing with the collection of court fees and fines, there are better ways to do it, although I'll be coming back to that point in a minute. So it's not that this bill is totally problematic.

The Minister of Justice has put forward some competent ideas in this bill. But as is so often the case and what makes it so difficult for a member of the opposition who truly wants to see the best things come out of this Assembly, because the work we do here is supposed to benefit all of the citizens of this province, is that within a bill that could have had some very straightforward, positive elements, there are these nasty bits secreted away. It also does make me wonder why some of these weren't in a miscellaneous statutes act and why some of them, like the proposed changes to the Survival of Actions Act, didn't come forward as a stand-alone piece of legislation, because they are that significant that they deserve that level of debate and scrutiny and public awareness.

It will never be adequately explained to me how this government makes its decisions about how they're going to queue these things up, so I am left to my speculation that it is done quite on purpose; that is, to make sure that the nasty bits, as I refer to them, are hidden and aren't immediately apparent except upon close scrutiny.

Madam Speaker, I referred a minute ago to the issue about the payment and the collection of fines. I think it was my colleague from Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert that first raised this issue that private registry agents are now going to be given the ability to collect fines under the Provincial Offences Procedure Act. So under the act that is referred to as POPA, the Provincial Offences Procedure Act, the fines – typically traffic fines, motor vehicle fines – are to be paid. Now these private registries will be agents, and they will be allowed to do this. This is business expansion.

I don't know if the Minister of Government Services wants to get into this debate or not, but I'd be very curious to know whether this business growth was something that was negotiated as a result of the investigation. I think it was about a year ago when there were some difficulties with the private registries and there was some discovery of some breaches of privacy and confidentiality. I think there was also some suggestion that there was not uniform pricing, and the minister at the time then had to enforce some pricing changes to do with the services that were provided by these registries. So I'm wondering whether or not what we're seeing before us in Bill 20 is now an outgrowth of all of that. Was there some deal arranged with the private registries? If there was, I'm not saying that that would be a bad thing, but I would just like to know whether there's a quid pro quo going on here and if there's going to be any kind of ceiling put on the service charges.

In a way, you know, I find it a little offensive, no pun intended, that for a fine of $100, $50, or $75, particularly if I'm in a remote or rural community and I would normally access government services, registry-type services, and I'm now being told I have the opportunity to pay this fine, that I would have to pay a surcharge to satisfy the fine. [interjection] I hear the Minister of Justice saying that you can go to the courthouse, but perhaps he wasn't paying careful attention when I said, "in a remote or rural community."

Somebody who has access to a courthouse in one place could get away with paying just the fine, whereas another Albertan would have to pay the surcharge. It just seems to me that you are creating sort of a second tier here. Now, I know this government's really fond of multiple tiers when it comes to accessing what otherwise would be public services. But why in heaven's name would there be a surcharge on a fine?

Then I also think about this government's record of incarcerating those who've been unable to pay fines and the fact that we have in Alberta a very high proportion of offenders in provincial jails who are there simply because they can't afford to pay their fine. Is this in any way going to ameliorate that? Well, of course not. It's an additional financial burden on individuals who already find themselves facing incarceration because they don't have the cash to pay a fine. I'm not sure that this has been very well thought out, and I'm not sure that I support the notion of a private registry agent being able to levy a surcharge at their whim on a fine that's imposed by law. That seems to me to be sort of a double penalty.

Another question that I have is a question about what Bill 20 does under the Public Trustee Act. Under the Public Trustee Act as it currently is constituted there is the direction that there be a common fund and special funds and that interest moneys earned when this money is being held by the Public Trustee is forwarded or credited to the common fund. Now, there are other examples. The Alberta Law Foundation, for example, receives its income stream from the pooled interest income on trust funds held by Alberta lawyers. In the same case the Public Trustee certainly has this interest as a source of income.

Now, nowhere in the government briefing notes, nowhere in the government debate to date has it been made clear what impact this change will have, because if Bill 20 is passed without amending this section, there will no longer be the interest revenue flowing to the Public Trustee, to that common fund. Now, is this going to have impact on the operations of the office of the Public Trustee? Is this going to have impact on the Albertans who utilize or depend upon the Public Trustee?

Again, I know that the members of the government are going to say that I'm just a cynic, but we've just had one of the largest transfers of money from the Treasury to the Public Trustee, money being held in trust on behalf of those very same sexual sterilization victims that the government wanted to deny legal rights to under Bill 26. In fact, I think it was part of the settlement agreement that the money that was paid to the sexual sterilization survivors was to be held by the Public Trustee and administered by the Public Trustee. I believe that that was an article of the agreement. So you have this money, which I'm presuming is being set up in special accounts individually for those Albertans, a huge transfer, millions of dollars being held, and now we're being told, right after that transfer of dollars from one pocket of the government to the Public Trustee on behalf of these Albertans, that interest money will no longer go into the common fund, into the pool fund.

I just wonder if there's a relationship, and I'd like to hear from maybe the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Human Resources or any of the government departments that would like to perhaps address this issue and either acknowledge that, yes, there is a relationship between these two occurrences and that it's a big sum of money and that it's going to be a real cost or a burden to the government somehow, or tell me that, no, there isn't a relationship, and explain how it is that the office of the Public Trustee and those Albertans who utilize the office of the Public Trustee will be affected, and settle my concerns that they'll be affected negatively by this change.

Now, the bill substantially reorganizes the Provincial Court. There's good and bad here. Right across the country there's an increasing awareness of the need to specialize when it comes to the administration of justice, yet with this notion of specialization sometimes you tend to segment people. So you have this real push and pull: do you specialize and run the risk of segmenting people and not dealing with all of the issues in as holistic a way as you can, or do you have a very broad-based approach so that you can capture all of the issues that an individual may be bringing to court but run the risk of the specialization, of the ability to be precise and to have particular knowledge and awareness and experience in a very narrow area?

What I'm worried about, particularly, is how this reorganization is going to impact on the administration of youth courts and youth justice. I remember having almost to the point of arm-wrestling matches with members of the Crown over the years for the need to have specialized youth prosecutors, as the police would have specialized youth policing units and as probation would have specialized youth probation officers and as we began to build and then staff young offenders' halfway houses and youth custody facilities. It was a real battle to get the courts to recognize that it wasn't just a career killer to be a youth prosecutor, that in fact it was important and necessary work.

So there's been tremendous expertise built up in Alberta courts amongst Crown prosecutors, and there are some very dedicated people. In fact, we've had some wonderful experiences in Alberta, you know, with the young offenders project, the adjudicate project for pre-young offenders, and the provincial government is to be congratulated for being a participant and a funder of that. The youth courts themselves have evolved along the way. Now with this reorganization I'm just wondering whether or not we're going to see an erosion of the courts' ability to have a particular sensitivity to youth and young offender issues.

This troubles me because of all the rhetoric around young offenders, and right now we're seeing it just coming into full bloom. You know, we've got Stockwell Day, another former member of this House who's now aspiring to higher office, running around spreading the notion that youth crime is out of control and that something ought to be done about it. Of course we all know – and I think our Minister of Justice again is to be commended for pointing it out – that in fact youth crime across the country and in Alberta is down, that violent crime is down, that we've had some tremendous success with some alternative programs. So you've got all of this rhetoric coming from the leader of the Reform/Alliance about crime and how horrible things are, you've got the reality that isn't nearly so bad, and now somewhere in the middle we have a provincial government initiative which I think at least has the potential to be a step backwards in how it is we address youth crime in the province of Alberta.

You know, Alberta once had the unfortunate distinction of being the jurisdiction that incarcerated the most youth on a per capita basis for the longest periods of custody. One of the real ironies is that when many Canadians are asked about youth crime and the youth justice system, they have the mistaken impression that actually the adult system would be tougher, whereas we know that in the adult system there are conditional release provisions that don't exist in the youth system. Actually, young people serve more real time, flatter sentences, on a proportional basis than they would if they had been processed through ordinary or adult court. So this is a real irony, and I would hope that the Minister of Justice would . . . [interjection] You know, I hear the Provincial Treasurer saying something under his breath there about the John Howard Society, which of course I used to work for. I remember that when the Provincial Treasurer was the Solicitor General, he used to fund the John Howard Society millions of dollars a year. Of course, those were the days, eh?

The reality is that this bill, Bill 20, does have the potential to be a step backwards, and I would hope that that step isn't taken. I am anxious to hear the current provincial Minister of Justice make some comments about how reorganization of the Provincial Court will not erode the expertise that has been created within Alberta youth courts and to make sure that we are still going to be able to do the best for both the accused and, of course, their victims and make sure not just that that court process is as efficient as it can be but of course that the outcome is as just as it can be. I haven't heard from the government anything that would make my level of caution or concern go down.

Madam Speaker, Bill 20 is a mixed bag. We see, first of all, that one of the most controversial sections, the one that deals with limitation of claims for survivors, may or may not be amended in a way that may or may not address the concerns put forward by the Official Opposition and by members of the legal community. We also have a section that reorganizes the Provincial Court in some ways that'll be helpful but in other ways could be very problematic.

We have this notion of business expansion for private registries in the province. We already have seen difficulties with private registries, so we don't know what the outcome there is going to be. We certainly have concerns around the fairness of a surcharge on a legally imposed fine. We also of course have these questions, which haven't been addressed, about the Public Trustee and how the operations of the Public Trustee may or may not be impacted.

This is early enough in the proceedings on Bill 20 that there is plenty of time for the government to address these concerns. Maybe the Member for St. Albert will do so during committee. Maybe we'll hear directly from the Minister of Justice, or maybe the former Solicitor General would like to dip his oar back into those waters and enlighten us once again. You know, it was certainly the highlight of my career, Madam Speaker, when the former Solicitor General came to visit me in my offices in the old McLeod Building and told me about his plans for the justice system in Alberta. Little did I dream in those days that I'd be sitting across the floor in this legislative Chamber still fundamentally disagreeing with him in almost every substantial area of the administration of justice.

In any case, I know that there are others who are anxious to speak to Bill 20. I would hope that the specific concerns regarding young offenders are addressed by the government, and I think it's timely for the government to do so because of all this inflamed rhetoric coming out of the Reform/Alliance party during the federal election campaign. The government of Alberta can do a service not just to Albertans but to all Canadians, I think, by trying to introduce some honesty and some truthfulness into the discussion of youth and youth crime and the administration of the youth justice process at this point in Canada's history.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEBOVICI: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I, too, rise this afternoon to address Bill 20, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act. I've listened intently to the commentary on Bill 20, that it is, as my esteemed colleague from Edmonton-Glenora indicated, a bit of a mixed bag in that there are a number of changes that have been introduced to the bill, some of which are not as substantive as other changes.

The main one, that has been an issue for a number of months now, deals specifically with section 74 of the act. It's my understanding that there will be an amendment brought forward into this Legislative Assembly to address some of the concerns that have been put forward by individuals as well as by the Alberta Civil Trial Lawyers Association as well as by some other legal counsel who represent individuals who have lost loved ones due to the negligence of others.

It is interesting that when one reviews the course of this particular bill, yet again one sees that the consultation by government has been incomplete. In order for this bill to have been drafted and brought forward in this particular fashion and then subsequent to that have input from some of the stakeholders, it is obvious that once again the consultation was not as complete as it could have been. The principle at stake under section 74 is very significant. The full impact of the passage of the bill as it stands right now, without the amendment – and, again, it would have been helpful to see the amendment prior to the passage in second reading to ensure that this is an amendment that would address the concerns of all the interested parties.

If the amendment is not clear in its intent, the actual impact of Bill 20 could still be that it would be very difficult to claim for wrongful death in Alberta. In fact, wrongful death claims could well be restricted to the amounts stated in section 8 of the Fatal Accidents Act, which is $40,000 for the spouse of the deceased, $40,000 for the parents of the deceased if the deceased is under 26, and $25,000 for the children of the deceased. [interjection] I've just been informed verbally by the Minister of Justice that in fact what the amendment will do is delete the proposal under the bill as it now stands so that it would revert to the status quo. If that in fact is the case, then I would be able to support that particular change wholeheartedly. So I look forward to Committee of the Whole stage of the bill to ensure that that will occur, and I will reserve any further comments with regard to section 74 and the impact it would have had for the Committee of the Whole stage.

There is another area under Bill 20, which again some of my colleagues have referred to, that might in fact be problematic, and that is the amendment to the Provincial Offences Procedure Act which allows for the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations allowing a person acting as an agent of the court to receive payment for offences such as speeding tickets. These agents will be allowed to charge a surcharge for providing the service, which means that the speeding ticket – for instance, if you had a $50 speeding ticket – would in fact cost you $50 plus the service charge.

Now, we've had several rulings, both within this province as well as across the country, that talk about the fact that user fees are potentially service charges or vice versa. Even though this would then be provided through the registries, it is my understanding, the question is: is that in fact a user fee that has been tacked onto the speeding ticket? I don't know if that has been addressed, if there is a possibility of it being looked at in that particular fashion.

The other issue, of course, is the whole issue around privacy and whether the private registries are in fact the place to go to pay for some of these fines. That, I think, is an issue that needs to be looked at. Through my constituency office I get on occasion remarks from individuals that indicate that perhaps the registries are not as tightly supervised with regards to the provision of certain services. That is an issue that some of my constituents have brought to my attention. Again, this whole issue of the ability to pay for some of these offences at a registry as opposed to the current system is one that I think needs to be looked at closely with regards to the implication of doing this particular change.

The other question is: what is the contingency plan, if any, for the individuals who may well lose their jobs with regards to a change in the method of payment? If it is no longer a public agency that will be administering these fines but a private agency, one would think that there may be some layoffs, as we have seen in the past when services are moved from the public sector into the private sector. I would be curious to know how many individuals may well be affected and laid off as a result of that particular change in the legislation and what the cost impact would be to government with regards to severance pay and other payments that might be forthcoming as a result of that.

So those are some of my basic comments with regards to Bill 20. Bill 20 does go into some other areas as well with regards to changes that are made, but I think those are two of the more substantive changes. I do look forward to the Committee of the Whole stage.

I will take the opportunity at this point to congratulate the minister for listening to the concerns of all involved with regards to section 74, if in fact the deletion of that particular clause within the bill is going to occur in the Committee of the Whole stage, and on behalf of those individuals thank the minister for listening to those particular concerns.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Apart from the urgings of the hon. member next to me here, I do have a few observations that I'd like to make on Bill 20, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2000. I think it is very critical at this time that we do look at this particular bill, particularly when we look at our judicial system. In some regards it parallels what we do in this Legislature. It's an area in our society today where there isn't much confidence, certainly not as much confidence as we would like to have. So when do look at this, I look at this specifically from the point of view of many of the constituents of Edmonton-Glengarry, many of whom have to access the judicial system, whether it be in family court, whether it be in divorce court or, in some cases, other matters dealing with the courts. I know that even though this bill is quite technical and tough to get through, the implications of what we do in this Assembly certainly will impact their decisions and the way that they are dealt with by the courts and how they view the courts.

I do have some questions here. In particular, these again are some of the concerns that I've had through my constituency office, and when we get down to that level of people, the everyday citizen in Alberta who has to deal with the court system, one of their major concerns is certainly the long waits. Like everything else, they see fees going up. This not only impacts them in what happens, but certainly these costs they experience are costs that many of them cannot afford.

I do have some questions for the minister. One of those is: if we do go with a unified family court, what further changes would we have to expect with this particular bill to handle that?

MR. DICKSON: Excellent question. Excellent question.

MR. BONNER: Well, thank you.

When we look at this, as well, if we do go with a unified family court, then of course we're going to have to have many more judges to staff this particular . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Female judges.

MR. BONNER: Yes. I certainly see an excellent opportunity here where we could increase the ratio of judges, male to female. We could certainly increase the number of female judges. Particularly when I look at things like family court and divorce court, it would give us a much more balanced approach from that perspective. It certainly would give us a balanced approach to judgments coming out of the courts.

Now, as I'd mentioned, it's certainly going to require many more judges to staff a unified family court. So what I'd also like to know from the minister is what estimates he would have to indicate how much more this is going to cost for staff, not only for judges but for additional staff that will be required by those courts. As well, I'd like to know what share Albertans can expect they would have to pay and how much the increase is going to be there. I'm certain that they would like to know what the federal share would be as well, because we really only have one taxpayer in this country, whether it be at the federal, provincial, or municipal level.

Then in looking at the review of Bill 20 here, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2000, I think it is an excellent suggestion that the Provincial Court will no longer be divided into a Criminal Division, a Youth Division, a Family Division, and a Civil Division. This consolidation will certainly be of benefit to all.

Another excellent suggestion in here is that the Lieutenant Governor in Council will be able to make regulations outlining situations in which court fees can be waived. Again an excellent suggestion, because under the present system many of our people of low income or who are caught up in the social safety net that we have certainly don't feel that the courts are accessible to them. So with the waiving of fees, Madam Speaker, I think this will be an opportunity where these people will see that the courts are accessible, that they are participants in a system where there is fairness, where there is accountability, and where all Albertans are treated fairly by a system not because of how much money they have and what they can afford but by what is right and wrong.

As well, I look here and I see that the Lieutenant Governor in Council, Madam Speaker, will be able to make regulations allowing claims of up to $25,000 to be heard in the Provincial Court. Again, this will require more judges at this level. It is a good suggestion, but what would be the cost in this particular system if we were to look at increasing that rate to $25,000?

Earlier today we had some statements made here by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and these were in regards to provisions which would be in place governing the management of exhibits in the court's possession. Earlier today as well, Madam Speaker, the minister responsible for the WCB tabled two reports in this Legislature. Again, some excellent suggestions in there where the appeal process would be more open, would be more accountable to those people that have to utilize those services. Even in the appeal process as it now stands, the injured worker does not have control of that information that goes to the Appeals Commission. That information is supplied by the WCB, and it is a situation where the injured worker does not get to determine what information he or she can put in there.

As well, when we look at the Swan Hills waste treatment plant, Albertans have $400 million invested in that plant.

MR. DICKSON: And counting.

MR. BONNER: "And counting" is absolutely right.

Yet when requests have been made to look at the exhibits surrounding some of the activities that have occurred there, these people, Albertans, that have put out to date $400 million – and it's increasing – don't have the opportunity to examine all those exhibits. As something that is so critical to the health of particularly those people in the region, then we certainly feel that they should have that opportunity to examine exhibits and whatever.

As well here, we have seen certainly a change since the '93 election where we've gone to more privatization in this province and certainly less and less influence in providing service to Albertans from the government perspective. It's now being taken over by private enterprises, and one of these is our private registries. I certainly, along with many of my colleagues, am against the expansion of private registries to the point where they would be given the opportunity or be appointed to collect fines on behalf of the judicial system. So in looking at this, again we see a situation where costs for this particular type of service in our system are being downloaded onto the everyday citizen here in Alberta, one that certainly they were not looking at before under the old system and certainly one that we'd be opposed to at this particular point in time.

As well, in dealing with this bill, Bill 20, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, and looking at section 74 amending the Survival of Actions Act, it was certainly good to see today that the hon. Member for St. Albert discussed changes to this problematic area, certainly ones that I support, ones that I support because, in consultation with victims groups, the consultation process was incomplete. Definitely when we are dealing with something such as the Survival of Actions Act, we do require a great deal of feedback from Albertans, and I think this is something that the government should be commended on at this time, for holding back on this particular section. When I look at this, I also can draw parallels in the reports which the minister tabled today regarding the WCB all-MLA review committee, as well as Justice Friedman's Appeals Commission review.

In all cases the one thing that Albertans want more than anything else is their rights under any changes. They have to not only have their rights, but the system that's put in place also has to be open and accountable.

So, Madam Speaker, those are a few of my observations in dealing with Bill 20. At this time I'd like to conclude those comments, and I'd also like to adjourn debate on Bill 20.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 3 Statute Revision Act

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in regards to this bill?

The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you. Madam Chairman, I'd like to move some amendments to Bill 3, Statute Revision Act.

As you may recall, the Statute Revision Act was introduced during the spring sitting. There were some concerns raised at that time about the drafting of it, and we wanted to make it abundantly clear that the Statute Revision Act is an act which is proposed simply to provide for the facility and ease of Albertans to be able to consult their statutes on a regular basis. The revision act allows the consolidation of statutes on an official basis. It does not allow any substantive revision of those acts, but in order to be abundantly clear, we have worked to try and arrive at some wording which we think will satisfy the concerns that were raised.

With those comments, Madam Chairman, I would move the amendments, which are currently being distributed, as amendment A1.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Yes, we'll refer to this as amendment A1, and they are being circulated right now.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Madam Chairman, thank you very much. In one of these I guess uncharacteristic moments, I want to spend a few moments praising the government of the province of Alberta and the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. [interjection] I want to assure the Minister of Municipal Affairs that I would have been happy to make exactly the same observation had I been looking forward with as much excitement as many of my colleagues to the next provincial general election.

So why would I heap praise on the Minister of Justice, as the Justice critic for the opposition? Well, I think what we've seen with Bill 3 is that some legitimate questions were raised. I also want to acknowledge the role played by Sue Olsen, my esteemed former colleague and Justice critic, whose tenaciousness and feistiness no doubt led to some of the changes that we see now in terms of this amendment, A1.

There are not a lot of ministers, in my experience in the Assembly, who are as open as the Minister of Justice. You know, to have the minister phone you up as critic or as Opposition House Leader and say, "Come on over; we've got some people from the department here; we're taking a look at some draft amendments; we'd like some input from you" – in fact, we didn't have draft amendments then. My colleague and I met with the Minister of Justice. We parked our political baggage and our party labels at the door, and we sat down as a group of people determined to discuss what we thought were problems with the bill and how we could make it better.

In some respects it's a shame that this is such a small bill and it affects in many ways such a tiny, tiny sliver of the business of the province of Alberta. But the lessons I took from it as we sat down and explained some of the concerns that we had – and I hope I'm not breaching any without prejudice sort of conversation because I'm talking not about the substance of what was said but the tenor of the discussions. Concerns were raised by the opposition that we felt that Bill 3, as it initially was presented, went beyond what government said it was going to do. We thought there was a potential – and I underscore that it was only a potential – for people involved in doing revised statutes also to make changes that perhaps went further than they should. So we asked how we could make sure that it was clear in the bill that this was only to prepare a set of revised statutes, and for minor amendments and so on, who decides what's a minor amendment?

I might just go to the specific things that the opposition had raised. If you look at section 3(h), this is what it says the Chief Legislative Counsel may do: "make minor amendments to clarify what is considered to be the intention of the Legislature." Well, you know something? When I sit in the Legislature, I'm not sure what the intention of the Legislature is. I hear the Minister of Community Development, who may get up and make a spirited speech and say something, and the Member for Edmonton-Centre may be saying something very different. Maybe we vote on some things, but who among us would be bold and brave enough to say, "I knew precisely what the Legislature meant"?

It's not uncommon that in Charter challenges, challenges under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, those words that we utter sometimes seriously and sometimes thoughtlessly in Hansard come in front of a judge, who scrutinizes them to try and decide what the heck the Legislature meant, and it's not always clear. It's not at all always clear. [interjection] Yeah, I dread that too. I'm embarrassed sometimes that some of my less thoughtful, more poorly researched comments might be the basis of somebody trying to discern the will of the Legislature. So imagine how we would then have the Chief Legislative Counsel making these kinds of decisions. Do we not put that fellow in an awfully impossible position?

We're very fortunate in Alberta that we have a fellow like Peter Pagano who does this work. In my experience, when I think of a list of people who I've enjoyed working with, Peter Pagano would be close to the top of the list, just a gentleman in every sense of the word, a genuine professional and somebody who is the ideal person to be doing the kind of work he does. But, you know, if he moves on to become the deputy minister of justice in some province that needs his skills, what about the next person that comes along? I'm not sure that I have as much confidence, so I ask that question.

The other question we asked was about 3(i), "make changes to reconcile apparently inconsistent provisions." Well, Madam Chairman, every day in this Legislature I see what I think are apparently inconsistent provisions. I may not be able to persuade you. My friend from Calgary-Glenmore is sometimes a bit of a tough challenge to persuade in these apparently inconsistent provisions. I see them all the time. It may be that my glasses aren't clean enough and my reading skills not proficient enough, but, you know, if you think about it, it's not as clear cut as you might think.

The other concern that my colleague Sue Olsen and I had raised was in 3(n).

Make minor amendments to other enactments not being revised that are required to reconcile them with a revised enactment as if the minor amendments were amendments consequential to the revised enactment.

Well, once again that admits of some contention, some ambiguity, and we wanted to make it clear that the power of Legislative Counsel is clearly constrained by this Assembly.

So those were the changes, 3(h),(i), and (n), that my colleague Sue Olsen had asked for some clarification on.

Now, what has happened is that the government has brought forward amendment A1. What we see immediately is that they've gone to 3(f) and they've added the words "but not so as to change the sense of any enactment." That's important, and it may be argued that that was always clear in the first place. If you go to sections

(1)(h) and (i), we see changes there. It now provides for "change any outdated reference to an organization, a person or an enactment of Alberta or of another jurisdiction so as to make the reference current and accurate," and that replaces (h) and (i). So that takes out the two problems that the Liberal opposition had with Bill 3. It resolves them completely.

Then what we had was a new provision, (n), and here are the key words. I know members are following closely at their desks as I speak, and I just want to make sure everybody can see and I want to make sure that everybody knows. The words here are "minor consequential changes," and I know that in Calgary-North there are people, men and women, who will sleep better tonight knowing that the government of the province of Alberta has made it clear that it is only "minor consequential changes," not some other kinds of minor changes where somebody in the drafting section of the Department of Justice after the fact thinks: I think we should do something different; this should say something different.

So that's an excellent change, and in fact the Minister of Justice has gone one further by adding a new subsection (2). This is very comforting also: "no change may be made under subsection (1) that has the effect of changing the intent of any enactment." You may say: well, that was always implicit; that was always the belief. But now we don't have to worry about somebody's good judgment. It now specifically expresses what the government says was its intention all along.

You know, there was a Hindu philosopher named Kabīr, who lived from 1400 till about 1499, who may have been thinking of the Liberal opposition when he made this observation.

Men have always looked before and after, and rebelled against the existing order. But for their divine discontent men would not have been men, and there would have been no progress in human affairs.

Well, maybe a bit of a pompous quote for three or four minor changes in a bill, but I think nonetheless it shows that the work of the Legislature is for opposition to ask questions. That shouldn't be the end of the dialogue, but then have the minister, as this Minister of Justice has done, take those concerns and respond by bringing in a set of amendments that in fact clarify. That's exactly the way the legislative process should work.

I might ask an old, wily veteran like the Minister of Government Services: how many times does that play out in this House? Not often enough. You know, when questions are raised in the opposition, we have a runaway train locomotive so often on the part of government public bills, and they won't be changed for love or money. But we could do more of this, members of government and members of the government caucus. In any event, that was a very long and torturous path to say that I support the amendments that are in front of us. I encourage all members to vote in support of amendment A1.

I may go back and put this up on my wall, and when I see those new Liberal MLAs coming in by the dozens – by the dozens, ladies and gentlemen – I figure I can maybe get 40 Liberal MLAs in my office, whoever is occupying it after the next election. They will be lined up in the hallway, and I want to point out to them – I want to have Bill 3 festooned on the wall of my office, and I want to be able to explain to them how government ought to work. And when they work with the opposition and when they see the Minister of Justice as the Justice critic after that next election, I want them to remember that here was an act of leadership on his part, and I hope that they will accord him the same respect that we have been accorded in this Legislature.

I may have some other comments I want to make after I see how the amendment vote goes, but I'll defer my comments until that point. I'm looking forward to the question on A1, Madam Chairman.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

MR. DICKSON: Now, Madam Chairman, there's something else I'm going to say to those 40 or 50 Liberal MLAs after the next election when they sort of gather down there, while we're waiting for the renovations to be done to sort of break up those offices so we can get more members in on the second and third floors in the Annex. There's another thing that I want say, if they'll let me back in the building without my security card. I'm going to want to come back in, and I'm also going to want to tell them something else. I'm going to encourage them to look at a wonderful book. You know, the Speaker of this Assembly has brought to our attention a terrific book. It's called House of Commons Procedure and Practice, and it's edited by Robert Marleau and Camille Montpetit. This is a terrific book. It's 1,052 pages long, and when you have papers that are kind of crumpled, you put this book on top of them, and in five or 10 minutes the paper is pressed out and those creases are gone.

What I'm going to say to all of those eager young Liberal MLAs in a new Liberal government is that we should look specifically at chapter 17, because there's a section there on delegated legislation. If they looked, the chapter goes from page 685 to page 696, and it won't take very long to read. It is a wondrous, wondrous story, members. It talks about a decision in 1964 by something in Ottawa called the Special Committee on Procedure and Organization that recommended . . . Now, you can imagine what this is, so just wait for this. The recommendation was for a parliamentary committee to review regulations made as a result of delegated legislative power and to report to Parliament any regulations or instruments which the committee believed exceeded the authority delegated by statute. Doesn't that make everybody feel kind of warm, as you hear that expression?

There are people in Calgary-Fish Creek who would be saying: "Right on. That's exactly what we think should be happening." There would be people in Calgary-Mountain View taking to the streets and saying: yes, that's exactly what should happen. People in Calgary-Fort are saying: "Is that not what happens now? It happens in Ottawa." The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek or the Member for Calgary-Fort or the Member for Calgary-North Hill or Calgary-Mountain View or Calgary-Glenmore or Calgary-North West – my own MLA of Calgary-North West – would have to go back to their constituents and say that in Ottawa there is a committee, Madam Chairman, and you know what it does? It reviews every single statutory instrument referred to it on the basis of 13 criteria. It provides the criteria to both Houses of Parliament at the beginning of each session.

So here are some of the things that this all-party committee – and we probably have some Alliance supporters in the Assembly, hopefully not many. [interjections] We've got a few people who are being outed here this afternoon as we speak. There will be a time when members will regret volunteering, but that's fine. We appreciate the Minister of Government Services' volunteerism now.

What those members will be part of, if they are Alliance Members of Parliament elected from this province to go to Ottawa, is they will have the benefit of sitting on a committee that reviews every regulation, every statutory instrument, every piece of delegated legislation that's dealt with at the federal level. They will have a chance to scrutinize it. What can they do when they scrutinize it?

They will find out whether the regulation in question is authorized by the terms of the enabling legislation. They will note whether it has complied with any condition set forth in the legislation. They will look at whether it's in conformity with the Charter. They will note if it has any retroactive effect without express authority. You can make a long list, but I don't want to take the time of members now, because I know they're focused and studying their dinner menus and their speeches for this evening. That's going to be exciting, because I know people are going to have as many tough questions when we're dealing with the Department of Health and Wellness supplementary supply as my colleagues have got from their constituents, and we're looking forward to that.

My point is simply this. In Ottawa they have a committee that gives those Alliance opposition members a kind of power that opposition members don't have in this Assembly. They get to oversee regulations, and they get to oversee subordinate lawmaking. We're being denied that in this Assembly, and I hope none of you would be complicit when your friends in the Alliance party go out and start talking about the death of democracy in Ottawa. I hope no member in this Assembly has put himself or herself in the embarrassing position of supporting that, because that would mean that they'd be also supporting dramatic changes in this Assembly such as the Liberal opposition has pushed for since the election of 1993.

So why am I going through this long parade of what's going on in the House of Commons? Madam Chairman, you have been too courteous and too polite by half because you've not challenged me on that, and I thank you for that. I think that was because you were confident that before I finished my 20 minutes, I would loop back, that I would pick up Bill 3 and say that the one thing we're missing in this bill, despite all of the great, positive changes the Minister of Justice has done, is not being able to review those regulations.

If you look at section 10, "The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations." But we might as well be saying: "Government, go out there and start signing a blank cheque. You go out there and start signing a blank cheque, because when it comes to regulation-making in Alberta, the sky is the limit. The sky is the limit."

You know what's interesting? We've had some people who have been in this Assembly and are now running for Parliament – in one case I can think of, as leader of the Alliance – and every time I hear this member talking about the importance of democracy and the importance of the role of the private member and the role of the individual member, I ask myself, Madam Chairman: where was that member's sense of indignation when time after time we have brought forward an amendment to refer regulations to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations? Did that member join with the opposition a single time?

I'll bet we have moved that amendment 30, 40, 60 times in this House. We've tried hard to get it in on every single bill where there was an abuse of the regulation power. Did the current leader of the Alliance, on any single occasion, not only rise and support it but ever utter a word in support? So now we see that the purported champion of parliamentary democracy, the ostensible hero of the role of the individual member, has suddenly got religion, and he's pounding the political pulpit in terms of propounding a new way of doing things.

You know something? The issue is not what you say you're going to do in the future, and we all know that in this Assembly because we've all gone through an election. What counts is what you've done when you had the power and the opportunity to make a difference. So don't tell us what you're going to do down the road. Show us you did it differently, and it may be, depending on what the election outcome is next Monday night, that maybe we'll find suddenly a bit of a rebirth in the government caucus as they prepare to take the armor out of the armory and start, you know, hitching up the horses to the wagons and preparing for that next election. Maybe the government may start realizing that Canadians do want a Parliament that works, a Parliament that's responsive, and individual members that can take responsibility for what they do here and the laws that are passed, whether it's in the statute or whether it's in one of those 500 to 600 regulations we pass every year.

Madam Chairman, that's the point I wanted to make with respect to this, and I'm thinking that there may be some people who will want to read that section in the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, because it works. It works. You know, we have good representation at all these Canadian parliamentary conferences. I think we had the Speaker, sometimes the Clerk – almost always a delegation of MLAs go to conferences around the country. We talk to other Members of Parliament, members of the provincial parliament, MNAs, MLAs.

We've all had that experience of people looking at us strangely when we tell them this aberrant way we deal with subordinate lawmaking in Alberta, and I'm embarrassed. Somewhere between the bun and the soup course I sit there and say: "Oh, please don't let that member from Ontario ask me how we deal with regulations, because I would be so embarrassed. I hope I can get to dessert." It's holding my breath almost through the whole meal, just hoping that nobody will expose the frailty of democracy in Alberta. Sometimes, you know, people think I'm rude, because I'm just eating as fast as I can, because I'm hoping that nobody will make eye contact and ask me that penetrating question which will ruin my digestion, disturb my meal, embarrass me, and make me report that maybe I'm an MLA from Saskatchewan or B.C., so that I don't have to answer that awfully embarrassing question: how can it be that you pass this legislation in a province like Alberta, with the best-educated workforce in Canada, and you do it in such a darn undemocratic way?

Madam Chairman, the opportunities for me to make this case are diminishing. They shrink before my eyes. My parliamentary life is expiring. The sand is running out of the hourglass, and that may be a cause of celebration for Hansard, and it may be a cause of celebration from members opposite. But, you know, if I get that chance to speak to that host, those dozens of new Liberal MLAs – I have a darned good feeling that the veteran MLAs should come back, that my colleague for Edmonton-Glenora is going to be championing that, and my other colleagues who come back are going to be championing that. I know those smart, new candidates will immediately see without any hesitation at all the frailty in the system we have now. They will immediately respond, and I will be so proud.

I want to come back in this Assembly. I'm going to see if I can get at least a back row seat. I'll wear my nose and glasses. I will come in disguise, Madam Chairman, and I will sit in the back row, and I will wait for that wonderful moment when a Liberal government says: we're taking these regulations, and we're committing them to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. That will be perhaps the most wonderful moment I could imagine in this Legislative Assembly Chamber. It makes me sentimental just to even contemplate that happy outcome.

Madam Chairman, you know, we don't have to wait until the next election. I mean, the Liberals will be proud to make that change, but every member here this afternoon has a chance. You don't have to wait until then. You could take on Bill 3, and you can say: "We're going to reinvent democracy. We're going to do it right now in this Assembly." People in St. Albert will appreciate their member, and people in Edson and Hinton will with one voice thank their member. People in St. Paul and Crowsnest Pass and people in Drumheller understand the importance of a Legislature that works and MLAs that are truly accountable. They will all be thanking you, members, and that Minister of Justice will be . . . [interjection]

Madam Chairman, I want to just digress for one brief moment. The Minister of Government Services, I think, feels that somehow her contribution to democracy has not been marked here this afternoon, and maybe we could spend a moment commenting on the contribution that the Minister of Government Services has made to parliamentary democracy.

Madam Chairman, when I came into this place as a rookie, much like the Member for Edmonton-Highlands did just a few days ago, I looked across and there were some people from Calgary who I knew of before, didn't know personally, and I looked to them for some direction. I looked to them for some leadership, because we didn't have a lot of MLAs from Calgary at the time on my side. So I viewed the Minister of Government Services as a sort of big sister, you know, because she was always very kind.

MRS. NELSON: How big?

MR. DICKSON: My older sister. She was very kind. [interjections] Madam Chairman, she asked for some special attention. I mean this only in the sense of parliamentary experience, and all members understand that.

You know, I tried to take some cues from that member. Madam Chairman, we are talking about the underpinning of parliamentary democracy, and I'm not really intending to be humorous. This is a serious subject, and I'm trying to give it the weighty kind of attention that it warrants.

I looked to that current Minister of Government Services, and I was trying to take some cues from her. I was trying to take some signals. She was probably one of those people that sent me a congratulatory note when I first got appointed to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. I'm not sure I kept it, but I'm sure she probably said: congratulations, Gary; you'll do a great job on this committee. You know, I probably phoned my wife that night I was so darned excited: "Guess what? The Minister of Government Services thinks I'm going to do a great job on the Committee on Law and Regulations." You know, I probably made a few speeches. I probably rushed back to Calgary-Buffalo: "I've been appointed to the Committee on Law and Regulations, and boy, I'm sure darned excited about that. I can't wait to swing into action."

I think I probably lined up some old law books I had not used since first-year law school on the role of administrative law, had them dusted off, and I probably brought two boxes up to my office in Edmonton. That was largely because I guess I misread the hint I got from the Minister of Government Services. I'm sure it was my fault, not the message we got, and I'm sure she was sincere in wishing me good luck on this exciting new committee assignment.

You know, having made a fool of myself by rushing back to Calgary-Buffalo and giving speeches about my new assignment, can anybody imagine the acute disappointment I then experienced to find that I'd been neutered in the parliamentary sense. There had been an operation, and I was leaving this Chamber in a radically altered state than when I arrived.

AN HON. MEMBER: Was it a sharp knife?

MR. DICKSON: Madam Chairman, it was a painfully dull knife, and it was a procedure that pains me even now to recount.

I think my time on this bill runs out. I hope members are going to be able to support Bill 3, because it's a darn good bill. We made some changes here. And Sue Olsen: wherever she is out on the campaign trail tonight, I know all members join with me in wishing her every success in carrying the campaign there. I look forward to a positive vote.

Thank you very much, Madam Chairman.

[The clauses of Bill 3 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

MR. SHARIFF: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports Bill 3 with some amendments. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official record of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? Carried.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:20 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, November 20, 2000 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 00/11/20
 [The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Please be seated.

[On motion the Assembly resolved itself into Committee of Supply]

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Supplementary Estimates 2000-01
 General Revenue Fund

Health and Wellness

THE CHAIRMAN: We call on the minister to make his opening comments with respect to the supplementary estimates.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to present the supplementary estimates for the Ministry of Alberta Health and Wellness and its associated provincial authorities for 2000-2001. I present these supplementary estimates on behalf of my colleague the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness and Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek and our colleagues the Member for St. Albert, who chairs the Alberta Health Facilities Review Committee; the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, who is the chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities; and the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, who is the chair of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, also known as AADAC.

Now, it may seem a bit unusual to refer to introducing supplementary estimates as a pleasure, but for me, Mr. Chairman, it is because this additional funding will help us address Albertans' health priorities, such as improving access and reducing waiting lists, buying replacement or additional equipment, meeting the long-term care needs for our seniors, implementing new programs to protect Albertans' health, and providing fair compensation to our valued health care workers.

Meeting these priorities in this way does not imply a failure in our budget planning process. Rather, this additional investment is the direct result of this government's responsible approach to fiscal planning. We cannot and do not base our provincial or Health and Wellness budget on fluctuating prices of energy. That would be like an individual taking out a mortgage for a house on the basis of hoping to win a lottery. Instead, we can and do base our annual budget on a reasonable, sustainable, and conservative estimate of this province's projected revenues. That is responsible budgeting.

However, situations can arise that are not expected and therefore not planned for. New needs can emerge, and if we do realize unexpectedly higher revenues, then that is like winning the lottery, and we can look at addressing needs over and above our budget. But we do that after we know we have the money and not before.

I would also remind hon. members that every payment we make against our debt frees up funds that we no longer have to pay in interest. That provides ongoing funding that is available for program, operating, and other health costs. Again, we do not plan on this income before we have it, which is why it is not part of our original budget. So coming before you today with our supplementary estimates does not indicate a failure in our fiscal planning. Rather, it shows an unqualified success.

I would now like to present the amounts I'm requesting by priority, starting with Albertans' highest priority, waiting lists. Waiting lists are a reality of health care, and the types of procedures for which people are waiting speak volumes about the reality of our society. Waiting lists for heart surgeries, major joint replacements, and cancer treatments are all symptoms of an aging population.

The onetime commitment of $5 million for open-heart surgery and angioplasties and $7 million for hip and knee and joint replacements will help shorten the waiting lists for these procedures. Already we are seeing the results. At the end of June of 2000 waiting lists for open-heart surgery were down 14 percent from the same time in 1999.

We're just beginning to feel the impact of our aging population on cancer rates. The new head of the Cross Cancer Institute in Edmonton, Dr. Brent Zanke, has already warned us that cancer rates will continue to climb as the baby boomers reach the age of highest risk, and new drugs will further increase the cost.

The $9 million supplementary estimate for cancer treatment and drugs will pay for precious weeks saved in providing these life-sustaining treatments. Already our commitment to cancer treatments and drugs have brought waiting lists for chemotherapy down to one week and radiation treatment for breast and prostate cancer from 11 weeks to four weeks.

If waiting lists for joints, hearts, and cancer largely are a product of an aging population, then waiting lists for general surgeries are a symptom of our growing population, and so is the need for more physicians in acute care. People from across this country and around the world are coming to be part of the Alberta advantage. Statistics Canada numbers from the year ended June 30, 2000, show that our province welcomed almost 12,000 other Canadians to Alberta and almost 13,000 immigrants from other countries while only 7,000 Albertans left our province. Sadly, Mr. Chairman, 18,000 Albertans passed away in the past year, but almost 38,000 new babies were born here. In all, we had a net gain of 37,000 new Albertans last year alone.

The $15 million supplementary estimate for general surgery will help reduce waiting lists for these necessary procedures. This is an investment in Albertan's health and quality of life and is also the price we pay for economic success and our high quality of life. Another $6 million annually will help reduce waiting lists for equally important renal dialysis services for those with kidney disease.

The $8 million for acute care physicians is another symptom of our growing population and its health needs. Health authorities will use these funds to provide physicians, nurses, and other staff for expanded or new programs to address shortages for inpatient services in acute care hospitals.

I want to note here that our health authorities are doing a remarkable job in attracting physicians to this province, especially when we understand that a shortage of health professionals is an issue shared by every jurisdiction in North America. Over the last five years the number of physicians in our province has grown by 11 percent compared to only 3.6 percent nationally. However, as physician numbers go up so will the amounts that we must pay in physicians' fees.

The other major item under waiting lists is MRI scans and MRI equipment. These have been the subject of some debate in this session, and I do understand the concern. The demand for MRI services is rising exponentially, 33 percent between 1998 and 1999 and a 59 percent increase in just the first quarter of this year compared to the same period last year.

Since we announced our budget, higher revenues have permitted us to allocate $14 million in onetime funding to buy six more MRI units for Alberta's public health system. That amount is part of these supplementary estimates. In addition, I congratulate the Calgary and Capital health authorities for finding the funds to buy an additional MRI each. These two units, added to the six that we are funding and the seven already in place, mean that next year we will have 15 MRI units operating in our public health system, and Alberta will have the highest per capita MRI capacity in the nation. In the meantime, until those additional machines come on-line, this government has authorized health authorities to reduce current waiting lists by contracting the needed MRIs.

I ask for $2.4 million in onetime funding to pay for these unexpected but necessary expenses and an additional $2 million to provide ongoing operating support for these new machines. Machines without operators serve no one.

To provide trained professionals to operate these machines, NAIT has recognized the need and is offering a new Alberta MRI training program with input from the regional health authorities. The first class began in October, and the 15 students will graduate in June of 2001, when the eight new MRIs have been installed.

MRIs are not the only equipment our provincial health authorities require. Aging equipment needs to be replaced, and the pressures of a growing and aging population require additional capacity. These estimates include $50 million for equipment like dialysis machines, ultrasound units, and echocardiogram equipment. Just like waiting lists these estimates for equipment amounts are symptoms of our changing society, specifically our technological advancement. As our society continues to advance its technology and that technology proves itself effective, the demand will continue to grow and so will the cost.

In total the supplementary estimates include $112.7 million for equipment: the $14 million for MRIs, $50 million from higher than expected provincial revenues, and $48.7 million from federal government transfer funds. Operations for equipment are an ongoing expense, but the initial purchase is well suited to onetime spending. When funding becomes available, we will take advantage of that to go beyond the base to meet additional equipment needs, and you will see that reflected in these estimates.

Waiting lists may be the top priority for Albertans, but they are certainly not the only priority. As we continued to assess Albertans' health needs, we took action where it was needed and as provincial revenues allowed. These estimates include $13 million for the Alberta Mental Health Board. Ten million dollars of that is to enhance community programs so people suffering from a mental illness can get the help that they need to stay in their homes, neighbourhoods, and workplaces.

I'm pleased to note that this government has almost doubled the funding for community health services over the last five years to keep pace with a doubling of the number of Albertans receiving services over the same period of time. Over that period of time, the number of institutional beds is down only slightly, so we can continue to provide for those who need facility-based care.

The other $3 million to the Alberta Mental Health Board is to implement a new eating disorders program. Bulimia and anorexia nervosa are particularly insidious because they affect so many young people, even children. This funding is an investment in their health, their life, and their future.

These estimates also include another $3.4 million for our children: $2 million for the children's mental health initiative and $1.4 million for youth substance abuse programs being delivered through AADAC. These initiatives are part of my ministry's much bigger role in the Alberta children's initiative. That role includes action on fetal alcohol syndrome and the student health partnership initiative, which provides in-school support for students with special health needs.

Seniors are at the other end of the age spectrum, and their needs are growing along with their numbers. These estimates include $20 million for long-term care and home care to help our seniors age in place so that they can continue to enjoy the independence and comfort of living in their homes and communities.

Seniors are also the largest single group of prescription drug users. Eighty percent of all drug benefits we pay are for seniors. New, more effective drugs are a boon to the people who are helped by them, but they are also expensive for governments that have to pay for them. These estimates include $10 million to cover the increased cost of prescription drugs.

By constantly reviewing procedures and listening to Albertans, we are able to identify which procedures or medical goods are proven necessary and effective. We decided to cover the cost of medically necessary, high-cost dental treatments that are a prerequisite before surgery and can correct congenital deformities or address the impact of trauma, cancer, or other conditions.

We also decided to cover the cost of fibreglass casts. Given the proven quality of fibreglass casts, it is reasonable to cover them as a standard item. These supplementary estimates include $3 million to cover the cost of extending public insurance coverage to include these and other procedures.

Some life-saving procedures require more aggressive intervention in the form of transplant surgery. These estimates include $1 million for the early research stages of a new organ and tissue donation and transplantation initiative. The work is based on an advisory committee review that resulted in 99 recommendations. Many of those recommendations require public input before we can act. I expect a report on this fall's public consultation some time early next year.

The backbone of any health system is the skills of the dedicated people who deliver the services. These estimates include $39 million to cover the cost of recently negotiated salary settlements, $10 million for a nursing development initiative, and $15.2 million to adjust compensation levels for employees and community agencies that provide services to Albertans with special needs. Those agencies operate under the leadership of AADAC and the persons with developmental disabilities boards, or PDD boards. The adjusted compensation brings the salaries and benefits of these employees into line with other health care workers. That will help reduce turnover and bring greater stability to service delivery.

The largest portion of the amounts for compensation adjustments, over $14 million, is for the about 10,000 PDD workers who provide frontline support to clients. The Building Better Bridges report identified higher wages for PDD caregivers as a priority. This commitment recognizes and acts on that priority. For AADAC the $426,000 total increase in wages will affect up to 350 workers to provide direct support or management for addiction services. The full compensation is $26.5 million over two years. These amounts for next year will be included in our base budget.

The $10 million for the nursing development initiative will upgrade the skills of our nursing workforce, and the $39 million for negotiated settlements simply enables us to meet this new level of commitment to health care workers' higher salaries and benefits. These estimates include $8.9 million to eliminate operating deficits for voluntary organizations like the Bonnyville health centre, St. Joseph's general hospital, and the Caritas Health Group, that operate acute care facilities in the Capital and Lakeland regions. These organizations did not benefit when we provided funding to eliminate health authority deficits last year. This supplementary estimate corrects that situation.

To conclude, the onetime total of these supplementary estimates is $146 million, and the amount that will be annualized is another $147.6 million, for a total supplementary estimate for Alberta Health and Wellness of $293.59 million. I come before this Assembly and ask for funds that will reduce waiting lists, introduce new health programs, and buy new cancer drugs and new equipment like MRI machines. I ask for money that will provide comfort and care to seniors and pay our health care workers what they deserve. I ask for your support. I ask that you support the care, service, and programs that these estimates represent and that you provide your approval for meeting these pressing needs.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: Before recognizing the Health and Wellness critic, I wonder if we might have unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to take the opportunity tonight to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly an individual that has served this province with distinction for I believe it was 17 years, give or take, as the MLA for Medicine Hat. He also was Attorney General, minister of advanced education, minister of intergovernmental affairs, and also Deputy Premier. I was proud to serve with this individual, who has gone forth into the private sector and has made a way outside this Assembly, proving that when I leave here, there's a chance. I would appreciate it if we would extend a warm welcome to – and I say the honourable – Jim Horsman from Medicine Hat, who's in the Speaker's gallery. Please give it up for a member of this Assembly.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You know, it was interesting listening to the minister of health run down the list of expenditures that have been outside of the regularly budgeted period of expenditures. The thought that came across my mind was that spending taxpayers' dollars and more of it doesn't necessarily mean that there is better management or accountability of our health care system or in fact that those are the areas that the extra dollars are required for.

It reminded me that since the health budget estimates, which were held on March 17 and March 20, 2000, on April 17 of this year I also submitted a list of questions to the Department of Health and Wellness asking for an accountability as to how our almost $5 billion health care budget is being spent. To this day, Mr. Chairman, I have not received a reply, and unless it is somewhere in the mail, I think it is rather astounding that in fact there has not been a reply from the Department of Health and Wellness with regards to the questions that were put forward by the Official Opposition.

When I look at the report, which was in fact a rather damning report, from the Auditor General's office on the Department of Health and Wellness, it too indicated that there are problems within that department in terms of accounting for the expenditure of a major portion of this province's funds. I'm sure that the Provincial Treasurer would be more than willing to look after that, because in fact it is a huge issue that this department has not been able to reply to some very specific questions about the expenditure of public funds.

There are a number of issues that are outstanding, that still remain, and keep cropping up with regards to issues in health care, and the minister actually touched on some of those issues but, again, seems to miss the boat in terms of how to address the vast problems that we have in health care. I'd like to go to the one issue that he did spend some time on, and that was the expenditure of health care dollars providing for new MRI equipment. The minister and, quite frankly, the Premier in his response to questions that we have put forward in the Legislative Assembly don't understand the issue.

The issue is very simple: an MRI which is medically required is no different than if you or anyone else in this Legislative Assembly, for instance, broke their foot and needed an ultrasound. You can have it done within a hospital environment, or you can have it done within a laboratory environment, a private laboratory that is contracted to a hospital. That has been the process for years and years and years, yet this government insists on saying that medically required MRIs that are had outside of a hospital environment in fact will not be covered by this government. It quite frankly boggles the mind to know how the rationale is made that differentiates whether I with a prescription in my hand need to wait eight months for an MRI . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, I wonder if we can contain the volume of our voices in discussing lively and important topics. You may not realize that in doing so, you're drowning out the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: An individual who has a doctor's prescription can either wait for eight months for an MRI within a public hospital or go and pay out of pocket for an MRI outside of that facility. The reality is that all this government has to do is cover the prescribed MRIs under Alberta health care rather than hiding behind the investigation that's going on at the federal level, rather than hiding behind the fact that the Canada Health Act may or may not cover MRIs that are taken outside of a hospital setting. That's all this government has to do, include it under the Alberta health care insurance plan, and – you know what? – the controversy is over. It's as simple as that. So I provide you with that solution yet again, but for whatever reason the government is refusing to take that on.

Shortages. Again, the minister wrings his hands and bemoans the fact that this province has shortages with regards to doctors, with regards to nurses, with regards to other professionals in health. Yet when he looks at the fact that there are foreign doctors within this province right now who are able – they have passed the exams, and they would be able to practise within the province if in fact some internships were opened, if residencies were opened. The government has refused to provide those extra positions. I believe it was 26 positions that were provided for this year for foreign doctors, and when the foreign doctors phone the department to find out what the processes are, they are told: we don't know what it is. There is no clear answer as to how in fact foreign doctors who have the qualifications are able to obtain the positions in order to intern.

There's still the issue of nurses being offered part-time positions. The minister wrings his hands yet again and says: oh, we can't find any nurses to fill positions within this province. Well, if there were some kind of directive, perhaps, from the minister to say that positions should be full-time positions, then perhaps we would have a very different situation with regards to the ability to recruit nurses in this province.

When you look at other health care professionals – pharmacists, physios, some of the complementary health care professions – again the minister has dragged his heels. It's my understanding that the facility at the University of Alberta that trains pharmacists in this province and has a Canada-wide reputation for being number one – in North America, I believe, as well as one of the top facilities in this country – is antiquated: the labs are old; the ceiling is leaking. And this is where we are trying to recruit and train pharmacists, that are well needed across this whole province.

The issue of chiropractors and the levels that chiropractors are provided, whether or not they're adequate for individuals to go and get chiropractic services, is a question that has not been answered by this minister as well and is one of those complementary health professions that may in fact save costs to the health care system in the long run.

There is a whole host of other issues with regards to prevention and early diagnosis that this minister has skirted around. There was a question in the Assembly this afternoon with regards to diabetes, yet the minister refused to answer whether or not the test strips to test the sugar levels for diabetics will in fact be paid for, will in fact be provided by the government. The minister stood in this Assembly and refused to answer that very simple question, even though it was a recommendation that came forward under the committee that had been set up. The question is: why? Where are the priorities, and how are those priorities decided? In actual fact there does not seem to be a coherent plan to say that this is where we are moving as a department and this is where we are going to put our priorities.

The whole issue of sleep apnea. I as well as other members of the Official Opposition and, I know, members of the government have received queries with regards to why in certain areas sleep apnea and the tests for sleep apnea are covered and why there are others that are again paid out of pocket. So again we have set up a two-tier system within this province. The waiting lists are incredibly high for testing for sleep apnea.

The Calgary lab is a disgrace. I know that those members who have actually taken the time to tour the Calgary lab, the regional lab, know that that is true as well. It is a fire hazard, and it is a disgrace that a province with this richness would have a lab that would be in the dismal state that it is physically in. I give full credit to the workers within the Calgary lab, who are working in conditions that are almost close to Third World with regards to the conditions and do not meet any standards that are set by any accreditation body in this country. That is an area that the minister has closed his eyes to and pretended does not exist.

The whole issue of environmental health and the impact of the environment on health. We have seen what happened in Walkerton with regards to water quality. We know that feedlots and the effluent from those feedlots is of huge concern to the surrounding communities, yet again it is questionable whether the minister of health has had any input into that process. And if that minister has had input, that input has obviously been so minimal that there has not been much seen on the impact of the environment on health. That, in effect, is a huge issue as well.

So what we see is that we have a department that knows how to spend money, that knows how to spend a lot of money but doesn't know whether it's spending its money wisely or not. The accountability is not there, the follow-through is not there, and the overall view is not there of what is important to ensure that some of the huge issues in health – the waiting lists, the waits in the emergency rooms, the fact that we have shortages of various health care professionals, the stresses and strains between administration and professional staff, as we saw in the Mistahia health region – are dealt with in a manner that is in fact coherent.

When we look at the issue of the regional health authorities and whether or not in fact those regional health authorities are working, it's my understanding that there is a study that has now been put forward to try and assess - this is seven years after the regional health authorities were developed - whether or not the regional health authority administrative structure is working.

The question that now the government has to face and this minister will have to face is what to do now that there are going to be elections. The minister has made a commitment that in October this year there will be elections. I believe the reason that we don't know what the rules are for those elections as yet is that the regional health authority boundaries will be changed. In order to make those rules, it's much easier to do that once these changes occur, and that change will not occur prior to a provincial election because of the disruption we will see within the regional health authorities. If it is not the case, as one of the former ministers of health seems to be indicating, then I would like to have this minister of health put on the record, once and for all, that the 17 regional health authorities and the Mental Health Board and the Cancer Board will remain as is, untouched. And you know what? I don't think that's going to happen. But if it does, so much the better.

The issues around funding and sustainable funding. You know, I, as we all are, have been watching the federal election, and what I found quite interesting is that the former Provincial Treasurer of this province has the unmitigated gall to stand up and say that the sixth principle of the Canada Health Act is going to be sustainable long-term health care funding. Yet when we ask this minister of health whether or not in fact we are going to see sustainable long-term health care funding for regional health authorities throughout this province, we get no reply. There had been no long-term sustainable health care funding when we had the former Provincial Treasurer, who could in fact have done that in one of his last budgets. He didn't do it. He's not going to do it on the federal scene. Neither has this government ever put forward long-term sustainable funding for health care. It is not happening.

What we see are these ad hoc bits and pieces that seem to rain down from on high to the regional health authorities, who of course are not going to say no to additional funds. But I think that if anyone here sat down one on one with those regional health authorities, had no mikes, no pieces of paper in hand, the reality is that they would say: "We'd prefer not to have targeted funding. We'd prefer to be able to have a budget that's long-term over three years, that actually covers our needs and requirements, and not have to guess as to what we're going to get money for, whether we're going to get money that's designated for an MRI or we're going to get money that's designated for angioplasty or we're going to get money that's designated for something else." The reality is that that's not the way to budget. If in fact the regional health authorities are set up as independent bodies, then they need to be given the ability to budget without Big Brother looking over their shoulder. So that is a huge, huge issue in what we've seen.

Mental health is another area where this government has failed dismally over the last number of years. We have had over and over and over again presentations from community mental health groups. There's now the alliance on mental health that is headed by a former Conservative cabinet minister, who very clearly has outlined what the issues are in mental health: the fact that the dollars are not being spent wisely, that we have people continually falling through the cracks when it comes to mental health. The impact on the general health system is that it affects the delivery of acute care and emergency health care systems when the mental health system does not match the needs of individuals within the population.

Again, it's a lack of understanding of how the different issues of health interrelate and what the necessary conditions are in order to really provide primary health care, in order to really provide community-based health care, in order to really provide preventative health care, in order to really understand what the issues are around knowing and dealing with the determinants of population health. These are all issues, quite frankly, that when I listen to the minister of health, either he doesn't understand or he doesn't want to understand. But the reality is that if we are to see movement in our health care system, if we are to see some of the drastic concerns of Albertans addressed, they cannot be addressed unless one looks at the totality of what health is and what the determinants of health are. That, unfortunately, is not occurring.

One of the other issues I'd like to bring up with mental health is the fact that the mental health ombudsman has very little teeth. I had written to the mental health ombudsman to ask him to investigate something that he had brought up in one of his reports – that would be a couple of years ago now, because he's usually a year behind – wherein he indicated that there was a shortage of facilities in the Calgary regional health authority and there was a lack of mental health beds. According to his mandate, it appeared to me that he would have not only the ability to investigate but also the ability to make some recommendations. When I brought that to his attention, the reply was that no, that is not within that mandate, and thank you very much. No one will probably do that.

The other area is the Health Facilities Review Committee. They've had an increase of $50,000 to their budget, yet when they are asked to review certain situations, their mandate is also limited. Again, the whole issue of accountability is a huge issue, and the question of "Are our public taxpayer dollars being used appropriately?" has yet to be answered by this minister and by this department.

I do look forward to some responses to the comments I have made this evening. As well, I would like to have the responses, unless they are in the mail, to the questions that were brought up at the designated supply subcommittee as well as those that I tabled on April 17. If the minister or his department doesn't have either of those, I'd be more than willing to provide those questions again to the minister. I look forward to the responses that will be brought forward.

Thank you very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

8:40

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, thank you very much.

AN HON. MEMBER: What about ambulances?

MR. DICKSON: Well, there are a number of concerns with respect to ambulance services, and I know my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark is looking for some answers there.

Uncharacteristically, there are two things I wanted to focus on tonight. I know there are many of my colleagues with other questions and I may think of some others later, but there are two matters I wanted to deal with, firstly health information and rules to protect the privacy of patient information.

I want to inform all members, in case they didn't know, that the December 15 deadline for the proclamation of Bill 40, the Health Information Act, is going to come and go and we're not going to have a piece of legislation. On the one hand, that's not a bad thing, because Bill 40 was a badly flawed piece of legislation. But it's interesting, if you talk to people in the Calgary and Capital regional health authorities, that they have committed enormous resources, programming, in-service training, all those things keyed to what they had been told by Alberta Health and Wellness would be a December 15 implementation date. Now what's happening is that people in the regions are asking me what's going to happen. They're asking my colleagues: where are we going with this thing? So, Mr. Chairman, I say through you to the minister that we need some indication.

Now, I know that the Canadian Mental Health Association, Alberta branch, has made common cause with a B.C. freedom of information association and other groups. They have been pushing for change, but the change isn't going to be in the regulations. It would require a structural change, as I understand it, to the legislation.

So my question, Mr. Chairman, would be this. Is the Minister of Health and Wellness contemplating bringing Bill 40 back in so that we can address some of the problems that we tried to identify as an opposition last December? Maybe we'll have a chance to deal with the other 40-odd Liberal amendments that we had prepared last year and never had an opportunity to move because the government invoked closure.

Let's recognize what's happening with the indecision around Bill 40. We've got a great deal of what might be costs thrown away by the bigger regions trying to prepare to embrace this whole new regime in terms of health information, and what we've got is not very much certainty in terms of what's happening. What's the specific reason for the delay?

The government seemed to think they had all the answers when they invoked closure time after time after time. In December of 1999 they had the answers: we're not going to deal with those Liberal amendments. Well, if they had all the darn answers, why is it that the bill hasn't been proclaimed?

Now, as I say, my first preference is to bring it back in and let's speedily start fixing the flaws and the problems in that bill, but let's have some explanation in terms of what's happened to it. One of my questions would be: does it have anything to do with the fact that in the U.S. the White House is now preparing a whole set of new rules on medical data privacy? The scope of the U.S. federal legislation is going to go much further because it's going to limit the use of disclosure of data by insurance companies, not covered by Bill 40. It's going to cover nursing homes, medical laboratories, services that will not be covered for the most part under Bill 40. Is there some attempt to achieve some level of congruency with respect to the new U.S. rules?

Mr. Chairman, you will remember, of course, that in November of 1999, when President Clinton put forward his rules for public comment, there was a concern then that they didn't go far enough, and that was partly because of the limited jurisdiction of the U.S. federal government dealing with health information. They also have a federal system, and as a consequence they have some challenges around homogeneous compatible rules also.

So, in any event, I'm most anxious to find out what the status is. Let us remember, members, that in 1995 the FOIP Act came into force on October 1, and on October 1, 1997, it was to apply to a whole range of information statutes, in fact virtually all Alberta statutes. I think it was in September of 1997, about a week before the deadline, that the government exempted all the major health statutes from the scope of FOIP. So just a reminder that the Hospitals Act and I think the Nursing Homes Act have been carved out from FOIP. They have remained out here on an island, an island of information vulnerability, Mr. Chairman, because there are no rules on this island. This is the . . . What was that?

MR. WHITE: Jurassic Park.

MR. DICKSON: Jurassic Park. Thanks very much, Edmonton-Calder.

Just stretch your imaginations a little bit, members and Mr. Chairman, and imagine that we have this sort of Jurassic Park island, and we've taken our health information and sort of parked it over here on this Jurassic Park island. The rest of the mainland is all protected. We have rules that deal with health information and what information can be collected and what information can be shared, but in Jurassic Park it is truly the law of the jungle. There are no rules other than the paltry protection available under the Hospitals Act, the meager minimums that we might find through the professional association bylaws of the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses, but we don't have any comprehensive laws like we do for all other kinds of personal information held by other government departments.

In the Jurassic Park of health information it's Dodge City, to mix my metaphors. It's the law of the jungle, and I don't think that's good enough. Mr. Chairman, I think we're entitled to some certainty. This is your health information and my health information. I don't think you're satisfied to see it out there in limbo, unprotected as it were, but that's exactly where we're at right now. So that's a major concern.

Now, the other point I wanted to make, Mr. Chairman, would be this. We've talked today about a crisis in emergency wards in Calgary hospitals. You know, I'm going to suggest that we have an even bigger problem in the Calgary region, and it's access to mental health beds and access to mental health services. The delivery of mental health services continues to be in a woeful state of governance. We have major, major problems in terms of allowing people to be able to access psychiatrists and psychiatric beds in a timely way, and it just is not acceptable. We surely don't have to wait until people die or throw themselves out windows or take their own lives to know that in this big, wealthy, prosperous province we are doing a lamentable job in terms of delivering mental health care. I guess my question is: where in these estimates is the provision of resources and answers to fix some of these major problems?

Anyway, those are the points I wanted to raise, and I may have others later. I'd just challenge the minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, and all members: let's bring that health information off Jurassic Park island, let's bring that health information over to the mainland, where it can be protected, sheltered, and accessed when appropriate.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak to these estimates tonight, not very happy, though, that we have to talk about the additional dollars that have been required and asked for this year in health. Regardless of how much money this government has asked for, this system is still broken when it comes to health care, and no matter how much money has been thrown back at all the Premier's pressure points, there still are a lot of unresolved issues within the health system.

The inefficiency that we see in the system is becoming increasingly frustrating for the people of the province when they have to access that system. I would like to talk about an experience I had with the health care system this summer that outlines some of those frustrations. At the end of this discussion, I will have a number of questions that I'm hoping the minister of health will answer for me with regard to the additional moneys that were asked for in health authorities. Perhaps even the overlap comes in eliminating the deficits in some of these capital regions as we see the dollars being allocated here in the budget.

Mr. Chairman, as often happens in my constituency when people find themselves in crisis at the hospital and feel like they are getting the runaround or are not getting timely service from the system or they don't understand the process, they'll give me a call and ask me to come down to the hospital and just check on the process of how things are going. Well, this summer it was my sister who gave me a call, because her husband had been taken to the hospital.

He was hurt in an accident in his business. A large piece of equipment was dropped on the baby finger of his left hand, and it was smashed quite badly, broken in a few places and quite badly twisted. Because their business is in Mill Woods, he went to the Grey Nuns hospital. He was in quite a bit of pain, and there was quite a bit of blood. What they did at that hospital was X ray it and find out that it was broken in a few places and that probably he would need the services of a plastic surgeon. So for several hours they hemmed and hawed there trying to decide what to do.

Well, the Grey Nuns no longer has access to plastic surgeons, Mr. Chairman, so what has to happen then is that he has to go to a hospital where those services are available. After seven hours – this happened around noon. About suppertime they decided they're going to ship him over to the U of A, tell my sister that it'll be about another three hours before the transport is ready to take him over there, and then he may or may not see a doctor that evening, and they'll see what's happened.

In the meantime, he can't drink anything, he can't eat anything, hasn't been given any painkillers even though his finger is quite badly damaged with the bones hanging out and things of that nature. She says: well, I'm just going to put him in the car and take him over there because that's going to be faster. So off they go to the university.

It's at that stage – that's now about 8 o'clock at night – that they give me a call and say: is this standard practice? Well, Mr. Chairman, you would think that in a country like Canada in a province like Alberta, where we have the kinds of surpluses and people like to brag about the health care system, that that wouldn't be the case, that that wouldn't be standard practice, but in fact it is. So that's the first on my list of questions that I hope the minister answers. How can it be more efficient to have to transport patients around from hospital to hospital as opposed to the way things were done in the past, when you had specialties in hospitals or else if the specialties were only in one hospital, this was well known? People who thought they were going to be requiring those kinds of services would go directly to the hospital that could serve them.

Of course, what happens when they get to the University hospital is that it's 8 o'clock at night and the plastic surgeon has gone home. So my brother-in-law and his wife are sitting in an examining room waiting for some kind of doctor to come and see them. In the meantime I get there, Mr. Chairman, and go to the reception desk only to find out that they can't find my brother-in-law.

They search all over the emergency ward. The security guard there tells me that he isn't at the hospital. I insist, and after a few more forays around he finds him, finds him not in the emergency ward but in the hall across from that in the plastic surgery ward. Well, he's there in an examining room down a long hallway where there are no lights, no doctors, no nurses, no support staff. There's just him and his family in this examining room with the bloody gauze all over and the blood dripping on the floor, and he's sitting in a chair. Now it's 9 o'clock at night, and he's had no water to drink since noon, nothing to eat and no painkillers.

Well, I go and round up the resident, who hadn't seen them yet. They had been there for over an hour. They had been placed originally in this particular room by a nurse. The resident comes in and says that he's not quite sure what he is supposed to do with him because the plastic surgeon has gone home. So we have a bit of a discussion about that, and he goes back to speak to the plastic surgeon again, trying to decide what to do. Well, it's another hour and a half, Mr. Chairman, before he comes back. He says that he has talked to the plastic surgeon. This is a Tuesday night, and they're not going to do any more surgeries until Friday. So what he's going to do is temporarily try and splint his finger and sew the skin up, because it is split open on both sides, and send him home.

Now we're talking 10:30 at night. He leaves again. He leaves the room. When he comes back in, he's pushing a hospital bed into this examining room, where apparently he's going to be doing this surgery. He can't get it in the door, Mr. Chairman. This examining room is really not built for an operating bed to come into. So I help him bring that in and set it up in the middle of the room. Now his kids are there too, and the family is sitting around watching this happen.

The doctor, who is a resident, brings in a kit of the supplies he's going to need to do this little bit of sewing up and splinting before he sends my brother-in-law home. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that there is no one assisting him. This higher priced doctor is doing all this work in terms of bringing in the bed and setting up the supplies. He says to me: "I can't do this surgery alone. Can you assist me with it?" I go: "Well, sure. Like, I don't what I'm doing, but I'm quite happy to help if that gets us out of here any faster." I said, "Where are the nurses?" He goes: "Well, there are no nurses; we're understaffed in the hospital." I said, "Isn't there another doctor who can help you, an intern or another resident or something like that?" So he says: "Well, I put in a call. There is another resident around, and maybe he'll show up."

So he opens up the pack and tells me what he's going to do and what he needs me to assist in doing, Mr. Chairman. He puts on the sterile gloves and promptly drops the first needle. Well, he hadn't brought a spare. Now he has his gloves on, and he needs to go and get more equipment, so he takes me with him through the hallway with all these sick people, into the other emergency ward to the dispensary and gets the nurse in the dispensary to hand me the needle, and back we go. I open up the package. He takes it with his gloved hands and starts the process of freezing my brother-in-law's fingers. It was like a circus. It was unbelievable what had to happen there, the tearing open of all these sterile packs, disinfecting all the stuff that he was using.

In the meantime another resident comes in, a resident who is an even younger doctor than the one who is working on my brother-in-law, and says that he is there to help. So the resident who is doing this sewing up tells him to pick up a specific piece of equipment. He goes: I don't know what that is. He looks at me and he says: do you know what it is? I pick it up and hand it to him. He says to the other doctor: well, you can leave because she's helping me. So there I am. Now it's midnight. I am assisting this doctor. I don't have any medical training. The other resident that they sent in knew even less than I did, Mr. Chairman. Now, how can that be? This is a guy who is supposed to have gone through medical practice.

There are still no nurses in sight. There are still not even any lights on in the common room just outside the examining room. This doctor doesn't have enough of some of the gauze and stuff he needs, so he sends me out to one of the trolleys to pick it up and bring it back in. He makes a huge mess all over the floor with all this stuff. There was nobody there to clean it up. He tries to splint the finger. It's not working. It's wobbling all over the place, so he gets me to put on gloves and hold the bone while he splints it and then hold it again while he sews it up. He runs out of sutures. So back I go again through to the other emergency while he's standing there sewing up my brother-in-law's finger. I go back by myself and say: I need another package of sutures for this doctor. The nurse just gives it to me. I go back through emergency and open up the pack, and he takes it, and he finishes sewing up my brother-in-law's finger.

Now it's 1:30 in the morning, Mr. Chairman, in this crazy zoolike instance that we're in. He's bandaged up. He writes us out a prescription and says, "Okay; you can go home now." I said: "Well, what about the prescription? He still hasn't had any painkillers. When the freezing comes out of this finger, it's going to hurt a lot." The doctor says, "Well, there's a 24-hour pharmacy around the block on the corner. Just go in there and pick it up." I said: "No way. That isn't happening. This guy has been here since noon today. You haven't given him a single painkiller for the whole time he's been here. Now you're telling us to go and spend another hour in the pharmacy to pick up a prescription before anybody can go to bed. Everybody has to go to work in the morning. This guy is going to be in pain. You have to give him at least enough medication to get him home until someone can get up in the morning and go to the pharmacy and get the painkillers." So with a great deal of reluctance, because that isn't hospital policy, he gives him enough drugs to get through to lunch the next day. However, it seems like hospital policy at the University of Alberta these days is having anybody who happens to be in the room assist in medical procedures. I wonder when this happened and how this changed.

I completely understand people's frustrations with this system. They're not understanding how it can be that with all the money going back into health care, we could have a system where somebody off the street has to assist the doctors in their procedures because there isn't enough staff. How did that happen, Mr. Chairman? How is it that we do not have enough qualified staff in the hospitals, be they doctors, be they support staff, be they nurses, be they aides, whatever? There is not enough staff in that hospital, and that's an absolute joke in terms of process and how that was managed.

He wasn't the only person in that situation. There were lots of people, when we left there after 1 o'clock in the morning, who had been sitting there when I came in. From the first instance, when they lost him as a patient in that hospital, when they sent him over there when they knew darn well that there would not be plastic surgeons who could attend to him at that time, to not having qualified staff looking at him, to not having qualified support staff to aid in their procedures, to the policy of sending people home without any pain medication who've sat there for over 12 hours with no food or water and no pain medication – the process is an absolute joke. However much money they're spending, it isn't being spent properly.

I would request that the minister of health take a look at that process, have some sort of an audit process. Perhaps this is something the Auditor General can take a look at, a review of how the hospitals are being managed at this time, where the real needs are. I think the real needs are in understaffing and in their being able to efficiently organize services. There are no efficiencies in transporting people back and forth like that and having long lag times in the transportation end and in the time that they're being seen by doctors. How can long waits be cost-effective, even for the medical staff, when you have trained medical staff who have to come back and constantly reassess these people?

There is never an instance in any kind of a business where a long wait is more cost-productive than getting the services to the people or to the need as soon as possible. So I want the minister of health to tell us how, with all of this money being put back into the system, those long waits are more efficient than what we had before and how they can be managing staff in that regard, because it's wasted time when you have to come back and re-evaluate the same person three or four times.

You run the risk, Mr. Chairman, the very risk that we heard about in question period today, where someone had gone to emergency, had been not properly assessed or had too long of a time period between their assessments, and ultimately died of a heart attack right there in emergency. We're going to see this happening more and more often. How can we be anything but judged as a Third World country when we see those kinds of processes happening?

How efficient can it be to temporarily bandage people up and then bring them back a few days later for their surgery? There's a cost involved in that, Mr. Chairman, and it isn't just the cost of the hospital supplies and services and staff. There is a cost to that individual who is the patient and to their families. There's the stress and the strain for the patients and their families during that time period, and there's the downtime for the patient.

You don't talk about the pain that that person is in, and in this case my brother-in-law was in quite a bit of pain for three days before he got into surgery. What about the downtime for work? Who's supposed to run his business in the meantime? We're not even talking recovery time now, after he has the surgery. We're talking about the lead-up time to when the accident occurred, a disruption in the business, to the point in time when he has the surgery, to the point in time when he can come back to work. That is downtime for people that is a real economic multiplier in terms of lost production in this province, and I think that's something that this government should be taking a serious look at. This economic multiplier effect we are seeing by not having an efficient health care system costs us in many other ways than just in health care.

Mr. Chairman, I think the minister of health should be taking some responsibility for taking a look at that and understanding the total costs. If he isn't, then I would charge the Auditor General to take a look at that in his assessments. When you have people who are out of work for long periods of time, when they are waiting for assessment or they're waiting for surgery, then there is an economic cost to that for employers, for business owners, and for everyone associated with that person.

Clearly his wife couldn't work at capacity during that time period because she had to take care of him and had to make arrangements and had to take him back to the hospital. The stress on the family – the kids suffered during that time period.

It is an abysmal kind of situation we see occurring in our hospitals, and it is not by any stretch of the imagination an efficient way to run hospitals. This transporting the patients back and forth, Mr. Chairman, has been going on for a long time, and it is a completely irresponsible way to manage a system, even in terms of the plastic surgeons that are operating out of the U of A. He was not back there until Friday, not because he took Wednesday and Thursday off. He was not back at the U of A until Friday because those other two days he was scheduled at the Misericordia.

Now, how can this be? When doctors are not given any kind of consistency in terms of where it is they can practise – two days here, two days there, two days back there – there's no stability in that for them. They don't have time to establish relationships with the other working staff in the hospital. I don't think it's the best kind of situation that we can present for those doctors to be working in and is a contributing factor to why we're losing very good medical staff in this province.

You know, soon after this occurred, I had the occasion to talk to a young doctor who had done his training partially in the States and partially in India and whose parents own a hospital in India. He couldn't believe this was an Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, hospital that I was talking about. In fact, I took him, then, to see this hospital where he could see what looks like a state-of-the-art facility, Mr. Chairman, and see for himself what it looks like, because he stated to me that in all of the Third World countries he's been in – he's been in a few of them and certainly definitely in India – you would not get this kind of inferior service.

So when we take a look at these supplementary estimates where we see the minister of health asking for approval for all these dollars going to health authorities and to reduce waiting times for major diagnoses and treatments, I tell you, it's a joke, because it hasn't improved one iota in this province. It's gotten worse. Year after year we hear more and more of these kinds of stories. These are not horror stories, Mr. Chairman. These are the realities that people are facing day in and day out in what should be a state-of-the-art facility not just in appearance but in service delivery, and we don't have that.

You know, the resident that was doing the sewing up was very frustrated with the system. He's a local Alberta boy, grew up in Camrose, trained at the U of A, is hoping to spend his whole life practising here in Alberta but is completely frustrated by the conditions that he's working in. He was literally run off his feet that night, Mr. Chairman, and absolutely no support or assistance.

Now, you tell me that it's cost-effective to have a doctor pushing beds around in a hospital. It isn't. You tell me that it's cost-efficient to have these doctors running around putting together their packs and finding boards. He had to find a board from somewhere that he could prop under the mattress on this bed so that my brother-in-law could lay his arm on it so that he could operate on his finger. It was triage medicine at its worst in a state-of-the-art facility.

How can the dollars that we see being asked for here have been effectively spent when this is the kind of medicine that people are having to put up with on a day-in and day-out basis? How can we expect that young doctor to spend the next 30 or 40 years practising in this province in those kinds of conditions? I think it's an unrealistic expectation, Mr. Chairman. There are many, many facilities that he can go to throughout the world that will provide the kind of support to him and to patients so that he doesn't have people wildly upset with him. This is an appalling situation we have in this province.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Chairman, thank you. I'm going to be supporting the Minister of Health and Wellness in his request for this additional close to $300 million worth of funding. It makes me reflect to a time in this Legislature after the '93 election when I was the health critic for the Official Opposition, and the hon. Member for Drumheller-Chinook was the minister of health. I was thinking to myself: boy, you know, what we could have done with an extra $300 million back there in '93 and '94 and '95. It would have changed our relationship in a very fundamental way, I think, between myself and that hon. member. Because, you know, in those days what we were doing, of course, is that we were warning of the consequences of the cuts.

We were talking about how it would be safe to cut three-quarters of a billion dollars almost, more than $700 million, out of the health care system so quickly. We were talking about how the system would have to contract so quickly that the ripple effects would be felt for years and years and years and that we would be faced with having to rebuild at additional cost.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

We were told at the time – and, you know, I'm sure the minister of the day was given the advice of her officials, and I know that there was a political will to reduce expenditures – that this was thought out, that we were simply causing panic, and that we were simply misunderstanding what the government's intent was, that the system would be intact, that it would be safe, that this was all part of a grand plan. It's not worked out quite that way.

You know, there have been some changes in the health care system that have worked out, and I think it would be irresponsible for anybody to say that everything that's happened in Alberta health care as a result of government initiative has been a failure. But not even car manufacturers accept the degree of recalls that we've seen in our health care system in Alberta. It's not a matter of making an absolute statement that it's all been good or it's all been bad, but on balance a lot of those dire warnings that came from the Official Opposition, from the medical staffs, from the professional associations, from the nurses, from the academics, from the other observers have proven to be bang on.

There is no clear evidence of that in this supplemental estimate request that we see before us today. If you go through the list repairing some of the damage that has been done to our acute care system, repairing some of the damage that was done to our mental health system, putting more money into preventative programs finally, respecting reports that have been commissioned by the government in terms of dealing with children at risk, it's a shopping list, really, that represents so many of those predictions which unfortunately have been proven to be so accurate.

Mr. Chairman, there was one thing that caught my eye when the Minister of Health and Wellness was talking about I think it was a $3 million allocation for an eating disorder program. I support that. I've seen some of the work that's been done, particularly in the Capital health authority, on eating disorders primarily amongst youth and particularly amongst young women. I can tell you that as the father of a 15-year-old daughter, the pressure and the images and the messages that young women receive these days about what's fashionable and what isn't, you know, are sometimes so hard to cope with, and I'm happy to see this money going in there.

But when the minister was talking about bulimia and anorexia nervosa, it made me think that is exactly the kind of disorder that the whole health care system has, and it's been forced into this kind of sickness because of provincial funding patterns. You know, it's either feast or famine. It's cut, cut, cut, cut, cut, cut, cut, and then all of a sudden it's binge, binge, binge, binge, binge, binge eat.

This is a significantly disordered system not because of the men and the women that work in it, who are trying to keep it stable and on balance and keep its weight at an even keel, but because of government policy. It's squeeze it and squeeze it and squeeze it and take all of the money out of it that you can, force people to make silly, drastic cuts and bad management decisions because they're given no choice: balance the budget; get rid of the costs; eliminate staff; close down programs. Then when it suits the government, they unlock the freezer, turn on the oven, and they throw in the feast and serve the funding buffet once again to the health care system. Then they wonder why it is that the system is sick. Well, you know, it's because of this eating disorder. It is not a good way to run a system; it's not a balanced way or a healthy way to run a system.

I can't even begin to imagine the person-hours that have been spent in the last seven years planning and replanning, budgeting and rebudgeting, forecasting and reforecasting because of the change in government funding. Since 1998 I believe we have seen something like two dozen onetime spending announcements. In the last couple of years we've seen I believe the number is 24 or 25 – I stand to be corrected – new announcements outside of the budget process for health care. So that would be the equivalent of about one a month.

Can you imagine being the administrator of one of the regional health authorities and being told, "Okay; well, you have to meet this deadline. Get your budget in to the minister so it can be approved." You have to ask yourself: "Well, why should I bother? It's not going to be my budget. By the time I finish working on it, there's going to be another budget announcement."

It's no wonder that the Auditor General reveals that in fact there is no consistency in the health regions as to whose budgets have been submitted, submitted and approved, approved by the minister, or just simply received by the department. It's no wonder that there's no consistency, because the health authorities, quite frankly, have learned that whatever the state of affairs is today may not necessarily be the state of affairs tomorrow because this government isn't planning. It's simply reacting.

So you see all these onetime spending announcements based on a reaction. Sometimes the reaction is right on and it's necessary, and sometimes it's simply a political reaction to sort of make the bad headlines go away. Of course, they're not going away, Mr. Chairman. Unfortunately we've got the tragedy of the patient in the emergency room in the Rockyview in Calgary. We've got headline stories in major daily newspapers right across this province talking about shortages of equipment, of physicians, of nurses, of technicians. These aren't just the story of the day, but these are stories that have shown up from time to time over the seven years that this government has been experimenting with Alberta's health care system. So it's very disconcerting.

As I said, I will support this request because I believe this $293.6 million will be well spent. As I look through the list, I don't see one expenditure which is necessarily wrong-minded, but I see within the context of this a total abdication of responsibility for planning and managing the system in a competent way that makes this system predictable and stable and accessible to people when they need it and for the reasons that they need it.

Mr. Chairman, the mental health care system is a great example of this. We've got a system that has been self-described by people within the system as a system ranging from one that's in flux to a system that's in chaos. Most recently at a meeting it was described as being a system in shambles. These are the people that work in the system and that manage the system that are using these words to describe it. Now we see that the government is putting some more money into the mental health system. The Alberta Mental Health Board is going to receive an additional $13 million. Now, I'm certain that that money will be well spent, but the difficulty is that it has to be done as an article of faith that that money will be well spent.

Based on the experiences that I've had as an MLA and as the health critic and as the Treasury critic, my opportunities to travel around the province and to meet health care workers in mental health from one part of this province to another, I know of the need. I've been impressed by the statements of need, so I would like to thank the government for also recognizing the need and for making the funds available. But, you know, there's another part of me that takes a look at the sort of hard, cold facts as they're presented in the Auditor General's report, which tells us that there is a lack of accountability throughout the health care system, that there aren't outcomes tied to funding decisions, that we don't see a good audit trail on all the dollars that are spent, particularly those dollars that are contracted to private agencies. Then I just have to wonder whether Albertans are getting the best value for every one of the health care dollars being spent.

Mr. Chairman, the Alberta health care system has been fragile for some time, and I think that it is the responsibility of the men and women in this Legislature to try to do something about that fragility. If this supplementary estimate is a step towards doing the right thing, then we should get on with it, but we should also make sure that we get on with so many of the other necessary steps that have to follow: putting in the accountability structures, making sure that the funding is stable and predictable, ensuring that Albertans get access when they need it, admitting when mistakes have been made, not just rejecting out of hand the appropriate and legitimate concerns that are brought forward not just by members of the Official Opposition but also by the professionals in the system, not painting those who question government initiative as enemies or nuts or whatever other name they're being called but, instead, listening carefully to what's being said and analyzing it and then making a careful and judicious decision as to whether or not the information being provided is information that has legitimacy and currency.

The government has been far too defensive about its health care plans. It has been far too quick to point fingers of blame at others. This latest finger-pointing at the federal government is a great example. I mean, you have a provincial government that after winning a mandate in '93 set about changing health care funding and its original plans to the tune of about a billion dollars. The health care funding went down; the health care premiums were increased. We were told that it was okay to slash this program. I remember the Treasurer of the day, Jim Dinning, when he was asked, "Why is it okay to take this much money out of health care?" responded: it's because what I've learned is that you've got to hunt where the ducks are. I guess what he was saying is that because we know we spend a lot of money on health care, it must be okay that we can take a lot of money out of health care. There was really no greater analysis than that.

Then for the same government to turn around and say, "Oh well, you know, our system is really in trouble" – you know, it depends on what day of the week. On some days everything's fine, but when a real problem does emerge and you can't hide it from public view, then of course the government doesn't want to take responsibility for it. They blame it on the feds because the federal government, of course, was under fiscal pressure and cut transfer payments. So all of a sudden the fact that the provincial government cut $700 million and caused thousands and thousands of health care professionals to lose their jobs and the system had to shrink so quickly – all of that is conveniently forgotten, and it simply becomes the federal government's responsibility. Well, of course, that's just poppycock. I think the provincial government knows that. I'm sure the Premier was aware of that when he was writing his poison-pen letters to the Prime Minister. It just doesn't serve Albertans very well.

What would serve Albertans well is to own up to the mistakes that were made, to realize that damage has been done, and then to work diligently to correct it and not do it with this binge and purge kind of spending and to get away from this earmarked or enveloped onetime only. I am encouraged that some of this money in today's supplementary estimate will be annualized, that it will become part of the base budget, particularly the money that's being spent to top up the employee compensation for contracted agencies.

I know that this isn't specific to the Department of Health and Wellness, but maybe those other cabinet ministers that are with us today could reflect on this. I just wonder whether or not this commitment will be made governmentwide. You know, there are contracted agencies in Human Resources and contracted agencies in Justice and contracted agencies in Learning that are all, I think, fighting the same battle, the battle being that the so-called voluntary sector agencies are really underpaying their staff right across the board. This has been a longtime problem, and it's really quite damaging to these agencies, especially in a tight employment market, as we find ourselves now. It's very difficult to recruit and retain competent staff, and it's good to see that some acknowledgment of that has been made when it comes to working with persons with developmental disabilities and some of the people in the treatment centres in the voluntary sector, but it would be nice to see this commitment being made governmentwide.

In any case, Mr. Chairman, I guess this would make spending announcement 25 or 26. The saga continues. I'm certain it will continue until we have a general election, and perhaps at that point the Minister of Health and Wellness will have an opportunity to see what life is like from the other side of the coin. Of course, I know that when my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark is occupying the office of the Minister of Health and Wellness, she would look forward to your insightful queries and criticisms, because of course as members of the Official Opposition, once we're on the government side, we will be respectful of the input that you can provide and we'll recognize that at least we can learn from the mistakes that have been made in the past.

I want to thank the minister for his opening comments. I hope he'll take an opportunity to respond to some of the questions that have been raised, and I look forward to the continuing debate.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will try to be brief in that tonight's moving awfully quickly and there are a number of other departments that need to be heard from.

My queries and questions and concerns centre around mostly the lack of planning in this department and the unbudgeted expenditures, not the planning for the supplementary estimates unto themselves but the overall planning. Quite frankly, in this day and age when information systems are such as they are, one would think that some reasonable expenditure planning would be set out such that the government would decide the level of service that they want to attain for the citizenry, estimate the number of persons that are in the province currently from count and estimate the growth, I gather at some 37,000 annually, and plan on that. But quite frankly it doesn't seem to be the case. It seems to be catch as catch can. It just seems to be an ad hockery at every stage. To spend another $300 million through the course of a year simply because you have it seems to be less than reasonably good planning.

Quite frankly, I'd think you would want to start off with the right budget. I know the citizens that I represent, all they want to know is that all the funds are being expended as best as they possibly can be, and you certainly don't do that, as the previous speaker said, by binge and tight, squeaky budgeting. You just can't do that and attain any kind of efficiencies at all. I think you'd want the right budget. You'd want to establish what in fact is actually needed. The citizens of Edmonton-Calder, although not the most affluent of any in the province, would certainly say that whatever it takes, spend it and spend it wisely, but start out with a plan. Don't start just throwing money at it and deciding after the fact whether you have enough or not. I mean, any fool can build a house at any cost, but it takes a good planner to make those adjustments and those decisions early on in the game so as to have the plumber follow the carpenter and not have them falling over each other. That appears to be what is happening in this budget.

Another area that concerns me a great deal is the lack of planning in long-term care. I represent a great number of seniors and those that are getting to the state where they need higher levels of care than that which home care can give them. A number of years ago there were a number of models developed in maintaining the highest state of wellness of a senior. That is to say that any senior's wellness wanes and comes back. A senior might be 85 and living in their own accommodations either in their home or in a self-contained living unit, a senior's apartment or such, and have a fall and break a hip and have to be moved out of that accommodation for a good deal of time because she simply can't manage. She can't afford to have both that place and another place, so she's in a much higher level of care.

Well, the wellness model dwells on getting that person back to the highest state of wellness, where she could in fact be back into a self-contained living unit. But the present system does not allow that. So now she has this broken hip and she's off to active treatment care, and from active treatment care she's bumped down to hopefully long-term care where there is a severe shortage, so what happens is that she gets caught in a longer stay in active treatment than she actually should and then goes from there to a nursing accommodation. Well before she should be back on her own, she goes from a nursing accommodation back to her own accommodation. It simply is not a good model. It's dysfunctional all the way down the line. We simply don't have any slack in the system at all to be able to put these people in and bring them back out. Maintaining that senior at the highest level of wellness throughout the entire process would be the best model. Of course, that would be perfection and you would need a great deal of capital expenditures, but we don't hear enough about heading towards that at all.

Another area that concerns me a great deal is the state of the mental health facilities and the deliverance of mental health care. It's been thrown to the wind. After renovation in Ponoka there are fewer beds now than there were in the '50s, '60s, '70s, and '80s. Alberta Hospital has fewer beds in it now. There are fewer beds in all of the active treatment hospitals in the city of Edmonton and I suspect in Calgary also. Quite frankly, we've taken those people that are on the margin, on the edge as it were, and said to them: "You are on your own. You're out there." There are very few support systems. Quite frankly, if you go down to the east end of our city now and go into the places that accommodate the quasi homeless, that's where you'll find a great deal of these people that were at one time being at least partly cared for in these institutions and were working towards moving out as opposed to just being pushed off the edge and dumped.

The final area of concern is this government's insistence on laying the blame anywhere at all other than at their own doorstep. I can't recall, quite frankly, admission of an error ever by this government. Whoever one is and whatever the endeavour, there are errors and they do occur, and the way to deal with them is to admit them and move on. But to say that the state of the health care system today is because of the federal government cuts is absolutely ludicrous. The cuts that occurred in '93-94 and '94-95 in the provincial realm were followed by the cuts in '96 and '97 by the federal government. It's totally unimaginable that one can now look back and say that that's why the system is such as it is today.

We're pretty well agreed, at least in the public – not in this Chamber they wouldn't be – that the cuts that were made in those years were too fast and too far without any planning at all. It caused bumping in the ranks of those salaried union employees, notably nurses and all those that were in the nursing field from RNs to LPNs and to other registered practitioners, such that all of their lives were disjointed. Many of them just threw up their hands and quit. Many left. Today we're left with a horrible shortage of staff and people that are in positions that they're really quite frankly not very happy with and a myriad of strange working conditions: three days a week here and another two days over somewhere else. Quite frankly, it's not the way to run any kind of an outfit, and this member is not overly pleased with it.

Mr. Chairman, I've taken longer than I expected given that we have to get on with some other areas of expenditure and we have to do so before 11:30 tonight, so I'll cede the floor to others. Thank you, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Health care is an extremely interesting program, Health and Wellness. When we look here at the supplementary estimates, we see a figure of $293,593,000. It's so much it's hard to comprehend, and that's just supplementary. What I find so amazing about the whole procedure is that we're spending considerably more now in terms of actual expenditures in health care than we were some time back before we had all these significant changes, yet the complaints that we get, the evidence that is clearly pointed out in terms of shortcomings in the health care system continue to build. It seems that the system isn't getting better; it just continues to get worse, with more problems that keep being added: shortages of doctors, shortages of professional health caregivers like nurses and so on and so forth. What the solutions are I don't know. If I had the solutions, I would certainly give them. I'm sure the minister of health doesn't have them at his fingertips, but there has to be a way that the whole area of health care can be explored.

One of the problems, I believe, Mr. Chairman, is going back a few years ago, when basically the health authorities were set up and basically they were cut by something like 17 percent. A lot of the boards had no expertise in terms of health care. They were good, community-minded people, but they didn't have that health care background. They didn't have that experience. They were given a short period of time to draft new budgets and deal with cuts of something like 17 percent, if I recall correctly. It was a very difficult task. It was an impossible task. We saw the health care system dismantled. We saw facilities close. We saw facilities blown up. It was a terrible, terrible state that the health authorities were put into. It was because they were told to do a task, a task that government had done before, but the health care authorities were going to do it with a lot less money.

I guess it's comparable – and some of you may already know this. If you were to take a $20,000 car, strip her down and throw away the parts, and rebuild that car part for part, rebuild the entire car by buying each part at a time, that $20,000 car would end up costing you $180,000. I think that's what's happened with the health care system. It was dismantled. Equipment ended up who knows where. We saw the operating room at the Grey Nuns close down. We saw what happened at the Misericordia: floors were converted for normal office space. Then when the government started to pour money in, they had to come up with new equipment to replace the equipment they had previously. They were starting to rebuild the health care system bit by bit.

But we've dwelled on that many, many times in the past. I just want to dwell on a couple of specific areas of concern, the most recent areas of concern that I seem to have been flooded with for some reason in my constituency office – maybe it's because people know that I'm retiring, and they figure they can get that one last big hurrah out of me – is the victims of brain injury. I've tabled questionnaires. I've tabled letters. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has done the same. We have clearly pointed out that there is a deep problem in this area that has not been addressed, and we can't see any attempts to properly address it.

We see a disparity between the home care capping under that particular program as compared to the PDD program. On the one hand people are able to access under home care self-management up to $3,000 a month. Then we see these other areas where the need may be just as great, but they're restricted to $1,800 a month. Obviously that creates a real hardship. Between the Minister and the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness the two of them do have enough information. Now, if they want to act on it, they do have a starting point. There are many associations that deal with victims of brain injury, and they are eager to work with government in this province. They will work, and they will try and find solutions as long as the government takes the initiative and says, "Yes, we want to make your life better."

Another area that I've gotten flooded with letters on in the last while is chiropractic services, where they have to pay a surcharge on top of what's paid, and the limitations in the whole system when people go to see their chiropractor. To a lot of people that's the logical alternative. To a lot of people that's the program, that's the medical service that keeps them out of the hospitals. Some people regard it as a quick fix. Sometimes it may be a quick fix, but that quick fix does the trick, and it does probably eliminate the need for a lot of surgery. There are a lot of people who don't like the idea of going under the knife. Some of us have done it several times and we're accustomed to it, but there are a lot of people that don't. So that has to be looked at. The limitations on it right now discourage people from going to their chiropractor.

Another area that I think is equally important – and I'm sure the minister is aware of this – is physiotherapy. Now, physiotherapy is interesting because it doesn't involve institutions. It doesn't involve hospital stays. It involves going to a clinic, going to an office, or whatever. You get physiotherapy, which can prevent some very, very serious consequences. At the same time they can teach you exercises that are necessary to eliminate problems that may occur, but there are limitations on that.

Now, I'm going to give you an example, and that was me this summer with some arthritis in my arm, rotator cuff problems and all that, a lot of problems up here. My doctor sent me to a physiotherapist: nine visits under Alberta health care. In my case nine visits did the trick along with the exercises I do twice daily on a regular basis, and I guess I'll do that for the rest of my life to prevent the problem from getting worse. But a lot of people may need 20 visits to correct the problem, and after nine the funding is cut off. If people don't have the income to pay out of their own pocket, they have to throw in the towel. The condition deteriorates, and eventually they'll end up in the hospital undergoing expensive surgery, undergoing expensive hospital stays. So when we talk in terms of a portfolio that talks about health and wellness, wellness to me is sort of defined as preventing bad health; in other words, we take steps when people are well. In fact, some provinces actually reward people for being well. But the emphasis should be on the wellness, not just necessarily on health.

When we start making life difficult for people to live in the community, to avoid the institutions, the health care facilities, we're working against a whole system. We're working against the whole concept of the betterment of health care. When we restrict home care, for example, to the degree that the person isn't being properly attended to, again the resource there is hospitalization. We all know what the cost of hospitalization is. We all know the problems that go with hospitalization.

Mr. Chairman, there are a number of departments we have to deal with tonight, and I'm looking eagerly forward to talking a bit about the Department of Municipal Affairs, under the retiring minister.

I'm sure there are many others that have similar backgrounds; the Member for West-Yellowhead, for example – I know that he has a municipal background – and the Member for Edmonton-Calder. There are lots. Even the Premier has a background in municipal politics. So I'm going to conclude on that note because I want to make sure we can get into municipal government.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of comments that I want to raise on the supplementary estimates for health care. This is the kind of program we see that has raised a number of issues that both address some of the critical needs in the health care system and also in some ways that raise questions in terms of the funding and the funding process.

As I've traveled a lot of rural Alberta and I listen to concerns from individuals that are involved directly or as employees or as deliverers or as administrators or sometimes also as patients, we end up kind of talking about what can be done to improve the health care system and what is needed in order to provide the kind of solutions to the issues that get raised in our discussions. A lot of them are saying, "Well, yes, we do need more funding," but they're also talking about the kinds of structural changes in administration and direction that they would like to see in terms of the relationship between the local community and Alberta Health at the central level.

In terms of the funding that has been given out in the appropriate subsections in terms of the dollars that we are dealing with here in our appropriation, we see dollars that are targeted towards reducing waiting lists and towards capital improvements, towards long-term care, capacity alleviation. These get kind of distributed out, and the question that always comes up in terms of some of these regions is that they want to know why it is that certain formulas, if you want to call it that, are used in distributing some of these funds where in other cases they don't seem to see any rational reason to it. Also, a lot of times these dollars are distributed effectively with strings attached in terms of what they can use it for and how they can actually build it into their service delivery.

What they want to see is the flexibility allowed for them to make the decisions in terms of where those dollars are directed. Even when we start talking about allocations for long-term care, when they want to get into the issue of needing more capital versus operating dollars or more kind of specific services or support services or how they balance long-term care with home care, that kind of flexibility is best determined by the local health authorities rather than by a distant administrative unit when they allocate these dollars.

So I guess what I would like to see in terms of responding to some of these issues on behalf of these constituents and administrators that have raised these questions is a little more leeway, a little more flexibility provided as the dollars go out, you know, even the trade-off between capital and operating dollars. Sometimes some of the regions need to have that kind of flexibility to best address their particular need in the structure that they want to approach.

Mr. Chairman, the issue of dealing with internal provision of service versus contract provision of service – that kind of decision-making should be done at the local level rather than through the way the dollars are provided by, you know, the central Alberta Health allocation of those dollars. Some of these communities have the structure within their public administration system to handle additional capacity, additional service provision. Others don't, and if they want to provide it, they have an option to go out into a contract situation. So they're asking for that flexibility and that trade-off. As they talk about it with other administrators across the province, this is one of the things that they're giving back to me as a major concern of a lot of these administrators and health care providers that are out there.

We also have to look at how they handle the dual administrative charges when there's a contract-out provision in the sense of how they deal with this in the context of getting that critical mass that allows them to have a specialist, allows them to have a specialized service provision under the public umbrella. If they have to start dealing with a number of different agencies in their contract situations, they don't have that ability to provide central expertise. Then sometimes those contract agents don't have it either because of the fact that they're dealing with small units of delivery.

The option there has to be provided so that the major provider in the context of the health region can develop that critical mass in terms of service delivery to provide the efficiencies that are there associated with some degree of scale economies so that they can have, say, a specialist out there that does provide one service, one focus that they can use dealing with all of the individuals in need of that service in their region as opposed as to trying to deal with it on a contract basis when each one of these contracts, then, has to provide a specific type of geographic service.

This is especially critical when we deal with the rural communities, where geography and access and timeliness of access become a much greater issue than what we're talking about, say, when we're dealing with the Capital or the Calgary health authorities. What we've got there is a geographical area where a critical mass is part of the definition of those regions, you know, in the sense that Edmonton has a population that's large enough, Calgary has a population that's large enough to deal with a number of specialists. But if we're starting to talk about some of the smaller regional health authorities, for them to bring in, say, a specialist in geriatric services and they have to do it through three or four different contracts with subagents or providers of those services, none of them have the capacity to fund properly that geriatric specialist. So what we need to do, then, is provide provisions within this contract and delivery system where the health authority can have a broad-based delivery of those systems but also the specialist that's necessary to provide the very specific needs to the individuals across the whole region.

This comes out especially when we're starting to deal with some of the specialized needs of seniors. We move them into the transition to a nursing home through assisted living models or through some kind of home care/lodge system, and if we don't have that specialist there to deal with them at every one of those levels, what we have to do, then, is look for outside agents that cover the delivery of health care at all of those different levels of treatment or levels of need. In many cases that's not what we see. We have some outside agents that want to focus on the idea of a nursing home concept where, you know, RN/medical needs are a major part of it. Others want to deal with the concepts at a partial need basis where medical needs are not as critical to the client or the patient as are the personal care needs. So we end up with that kind of a mix, and we have to have these specialists that are able to deal with the patients at all those different levels.

This is, I guess, the flexibility that a number of individuals that I've had a chance to discuss health funding with are looking for, that flexibility being provided to them rather than the rigidity we see, that when the extra dollars come down they're specifically defined to be used in a certain way and in the context of a certain type of delivery system. So what I would like to see, I guess, is those kinds of issues addressed where we can provide that flexibility so that the regional health authorities can use their administrative expertise and put together kind of out-of-the-box delivery mechanisms where the design of that delivery of service is specific to the needs of the community rather than directed from above in the context of the label or the envelope that those dollars are provided in.

So with those few comments, Mr. Chairman, I think that's kind of the way I'd like to see some of the future adjustments made here, but in the context of providing these additional dollars, I think the health care system unquestionably needs that support. It needs the commitment that the funding will be there to deal with the needs at all levels in the care spectrum and that we'll also be able to work closely with the deliverers of lodging and the deliverers of personal care in the context of joint funding programs so that we can have an effort provided to support these individuals so that they can live in a degree of dignity as they age.

The other issue is funding for waiting list reductions. This is the kind of thing where we need to have better estimates developed of the demand changes, the demographic implications on those demand changes, and I think it would be appropriate to have that kind of information provided with the funding so that we can better understand where the targets are and what are acceptable levels of priority setting and the mechanisms for that priority setting as well.

With those few comments, Mr. Chairman, I think it's appropriate that we're going to be increasing the money, especially for the health care area, and we'll wait until later to debate some of the others. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you. I have a couple more issues that I didn't have a chance to address in my original remarks. I started off my comments at the beginning of this debate indicating that basically just because we're spending more doesn't mean we're spending more effectively. A Canada West Foundation document, Primary Care Reform in Canada: An Overview, substantiates that statement as well. What it states is that organizational reforms alone are not sufficient to improve health outcomes, cost for care, and other dimensions of health services. Other critical factors are a high level of commitment to values inherent in the reformed service delivery and funding models and changes in attitudes and behaviour among physicians, other providers, and patients. This change is cultural, measured by quality assurance and evaluation, and is critical to successful outcomes and attainment of objectives.

It also indicates that reform of the health care system "should promote one or more of efficiency, effectiveness, equity and quality of service" and outlines some of the important criteria for measuring whether the reform has been successful.

Now, for seven years we have heard in this Legislative Assembly that the health care system has in fact been reformed. We know there have been some drastic changes in health care over the last seven years, but whether that has been a process that has bettered the health care system, has made it more efficient, has made it more effective, has made it more able to meet the needs of a changing and growing population I think is more than debatable. When we see stories on a daily basis that indicate that individuals have died waiting for services, that individuals have not been provided with the service they deserve and they need in a timely manner, then we know that in fact there have been and are still severe problems within the delivery of our health care service.

Some of the issues that still need to be addressed and are long-standing are in regards to ambulance services, perhaps more so in the rural areas than in the urban areas. In fact, yet again we see where this government had set up a committee, which this government likes to do, and there were recommendations that were put forward by the Judy Gordon committee on ambulance services within this province that have yet to be addressed. In fact, what we see are articles such as the one in an October 30 Red Deer newspaper, which I believe is where this one is from, where it says, "Province passing ambulance buck?" Darren Sandbeck, who is chairman of the Alberta Ambulance Operators Association, which gathered in Red Deer, said that the government didn't consult operators before it established its billing structure, which shortchanges municipalities. He said that if it takes more than one trip to move a crew and a patient, then that is what the government should pay. Ted Hickey, deputy chief with the Red Deer Emergency Services, indicated that the government's refusal to discuss fair compensation is risky.

This is a long-standing issue that has continued over a number of years with regards to the provision of ambulance services throughout this province. Ambulance services are an essential service, yet we see the government refusing to acknowledge that fact. As a result, we also have the situation in Calgary with the paramedics there and the disputes inquiry board that had to be employed to ensure that those services would not be interrupted.

There's another issue that is growing in its importance in this province that I believe needs to be discussed, and that's the role of fund-raising within the health care system. More and more we are finding that well-intentioned groups are fund-raising for essential hospital services, for essential hospital equipment. That, in fact, I do not believe should be the role of not-for-profit groups. To engage in fund-raising for essential services is part and parcel of what the government should be providing. We start to tread a very fine line between what can be provided for and what can be expected by a regional health authority in terms of the budget and what the regional health authority has to add into their budget as a component based on fund-raising or the charity of the citizens who live within that health authority region.

The ethics of that particular method of budgeting and that particular method of providing dollars to regional health authorities is one that needs to be discussed more broadly. It needs to be discussed in public, and it needs to be addressed as part of a larger issue of what is the role of government, especially in the delivery of public health care services. So that is an issue that I don't think the government can hide from anymore as it becomes more and more obvious that we have now gone back to a system of lotteries for funding essential health care services, and that, quite frankly, is wrong.

Another issue that has been brought to my attention that I would like more information on is the whole area of vaccinations. We have recently seen in the Edmonton area where a whole group of children between the ages of two and 18 have been vaccinated for meningitis. It is my understanding that there is now some research and evidence that is beginning to crop up that in fact vaccinations and wholesale vaccinations may have a detrimental effect on the resistance individuals have to certain diseases. I am not by any long shot a medical professional, and that is why I am asking for some information from the minister with regards to what long-term studies have been done on population groups that have been vaccinated, what the effects have been, what dangers are inherent in vaccinations being provided.

Also, what kind of up-front information is provided through the public health boards to parents so that they can make their decisions as to whether or not they wish to have their children vaccinated, and what are the potential effects, both positive and negative, of vaccinations on children? Again, so the parents can make informed decisions, is that information that is provided up front? It has been a long time since I have taken my son for a vaccination, so I'd like to know what the procedures are that are currently in place.

With regards to any research that is being done, what are the departmental guidelines with regards to potential conflicts of interest between the professionals who are conducting the research and the results and the impact of that research? I would appreciate any information the department can provide on that as well, as that particular issue seems to be gaining some momentum.

There is one other area that I would be interested in other, of course, than those other unanswered questions. Again, if the questions have been answered and they are somewhere in my in-basket, then I will indicate that I will look forward to reading them and would like to see the answers. If not, I look forward to receiving the answers.

The issue of enhanced medical services as a Pandora's box that this government has now opened under Bill 11. Hopefully with a MacBeth government Bill 11 will be repealed, but until such time, the whole issue of enhanced medical services is now something that needs to be addressed. We saw a recent example where an ophthalmologist was put in the position of not being able to provide a service, and obviously it appears that the rules are very unclear as to how the approval process is provided for charging for an enhanced medical service. I see no reason that the policies and procedures for that should not be made public so that everyone is made aware of how a service is deemed to be enhanced, how the costings are provided for that enhanced service, and what are the criteria for the provision of the enhanced services. As I indicated, this is a Pandora's box that I do not believe the government will be able to close.

The whole issue of contracting and Bill 11 is an issue that has not been satisfied to any degree. The reality is, unless the department can provide some answers to the questions I asked, that I do not believe they have the information available in order to be able to approve the contracts that they have and that the minister has approved in the last month, month and a half. If, in fact, the information is available as to the potential benefits of providing private contracts, the cost-effectiveness of those contracts, the conditions under section 8 that are required to be met, then I believe it behooves the minister to make all that information available.

In addition, I would like to have answered the question as to how a contract could be approved under the Capital health region with a provider of ophthalmology services when in fact there was no ophthalmologist on staff and that particular centre did not provide ophthalmology services in the Edmonton area. I would like to know on what basis the minister signed that particular contract that indicated that it was effective to have a new player in the provision of ophthalmology services in the Edmonton area and how, in fact, it was determined that that would be of benefit to the Edmonton region, especially given the fact that the regional eye centre at the Royal Alexandra hospital is not working at anywhere close to full capacity and could do all the current cataract procedures that are now being done in the private clinics quite comfortably within the public setting. So my question, very directly to the minister, is: how could he have then signed any of those contracts when in fact the criteria as outlined under section 8 of Bill 11 were not met?

I believe that is a very serious issue that the minister needs to respond to, and to respond in generalities, as we have seen in the past with consultants' reports, quite frankly doesn't cut it. What we need to know are the actual specifics on which those contracts have been signed. Unless the minister can provide that information up front, I believe that accountability is an issue that needs to be addressed in the delivery of our health care services.

So those are some of the additional remarks that I have to make.

I would like to close by saying that on a continual basis, on a daily basis I still in my office, as the official health care critic, receive letters, telephone calls, faxes, e-mails from individuals across this province in many different regional health authorities who are not receiving the services they need. These are individuals who are in pain. These are either individuals who have gone through the health care system and have found it lacking and are still in pain or individuals who cannot get their needs met and are looking for some kind of resolution. They are caught, quite frankly, in a system that does not work and that does not address what their requirements are. Given the state of this province's budget, of its ability to address some of those needs but its inability to actually want to address those needs, it is quite distressing for all, especially those who are in need and who have a real requirement to have their needs met.

I would hope that the government looks very sincerely at some of the issues that have been brought up within these discussions and attempts to address them and to address the real underlying issues. They may not make headlines. To address the real underlying issues of the environment, to address the issues of poverty, to address the impact of a lack of education, which have health impacts later down the road, don't make the kinds of headlines that providing two MRIs for the Edmonton region do, but those are where the real reforms have to occur and can occur if there's a commitment on behalf of this government. Unfortunately, that commitment is not there, and as a result we are all suffering from that lack of commitment.

So I look forward to the minister's reply, and thank you very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Actually, in listening to my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark, it put me in mind of some other questions that I hadn't heard answers to yet this evening. You know, I know that the Minister of Health and Wellness has been dutifully recording all of these, and I'm looking forward to a blockbuster presentation from the minister before we vote on his estimates. I know he won't disappoint us.

Just a couple of things I might start off with. As somebody that from time to time attends CRHA meetings, a number of questions come up, and since the meetings in the Calgary region really don't provide any opportunity for people like me or any interested Calgarians to pose questions, how refreshing if we had a bit of a question period at the outset or maybe at the conclusion of every CRHA board meeting. It doesn't exist, so I have to take advantage of the opportunities when I get them here.

My understanding is that Dr. Jivraj reported to the Calgary region board that $9.6 million of the $38.9 million allocated to the CRHA would be directed to wait lists and diagnostic issues, but I was a bit surprised to find that wait lists would be reduced by between 10 and 12 percent. That's Dr. Jivraj's estimate of the impact on wait lists with the additional funding. I'm saying to myself that 10 or 12 percent is better than zero percent, but when you look at the disparity between what the AMA has published in terms of optimum or ideal wait times for various procedures and then what the actual experience is in the Calgary region, I don't think a 10 to 12 percent reduction in wait lists is sufficient, Mr. Chairman. I don't think it's good enough, and I suspect there are 800,000 Calgarians that want to find out why this government is prepared, presumably, to accept a 10 or 12 percent reduction in wait lists.

Cardiac surgeons had requested a dedicated theatre at the Foothills medical centre. Is that going to happen, and if so, when?

The wait for an MRI in Calgary, according to Dr. Jivraj, used to be 190 days, and the plan is that with increased capacity it's been reduced to 110 days. So my question is: would the Minister of Health and Wellness tell us what he believes to be an optimal time? I mean, does he view 110 days as an acceptable wait, Mr. Chairman, for an MRI?

My other comment. You know, one of the worst-kept secrets in the province is the Calgary regional health authority budget. It was approved on September 19, 2000, by the Calgary regional board and sent off. In fact, this is what the minutes say: "As requested, the document has been sent to Alberta Health, in draft form, for their approval." Now, every time I see this, I ask myself: what is the point of having a regional health authority if they don't have the power to decide on the budget to meet the needs for their region?

Just think about this for a minute: the budget as requested. Well, who requested it? Presumably Calgarians would like to see the budget. Calgarians would like to measure to determine if this budget reflects their priorities in terms of wait lists, in terms of access to a psychiatric bed or a psychiatrist or any of those things. But no, it's not Albertans who requested the delay. It presumably is the Minister of Health and Wellness. I'm still looking for some explanation in terms of why we gussy this up and describe it as decentralized decision-making power when right here on page 3 of the agenda of the September 19 minutes from the CRHA what's abundantly – abundantly – clear is that this is a mechanism with no power and presumably not much influence.

The other thing I'd ask. We have continuing problems with mental health services in the Calgary region, and you know, it seems to me that as long as I've been in this Legislative Assembly, we've been identifying issues and problems on mental health services. The initial Provincial Mental Health Advisory Board, when my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora and the former Leader of the Opposition were involved with the health critic area, was a major issue. Then we went to the Provincial Mental Health Board, and what we saw was more money being spent in terms of sort of macromanagement alignment, reorganization, but what psychiatrists will tell you and what nurses and physicians will tell you is that there is no significant enhancement improvement in access to mental health services. How can that be? It just can't continue in that fashion.

At that same September 19 CRHA board meeting, we had Mr. Waldner indicating that they're looking at augmented staffing in emergency. Well, perhaps the minister can tell us what that augmented staff looks like in emergency at the three adult sites right now at the end of November 2000.

There was to be provision of a temporary unit in place in the Peter Lougheed centre by February 2001. Is that the earliest we can do it? I mean, we've been waiting. The Mental Health Consumers Network in Calgary has identified a critical shortage going back for at least the last two years, and we still talk about having to wait until February to see some action. Not good enough. Completion of a permanent unit which will be available in the fall of 2001: you know, this is thin gruel to people with serious mental health challenges that are looking for help and can't access it.

Dr. Jivraj reported in September that we have a net gain of 58 physicians, which is a 3 percent increase. Well, we've had a bigger than 3 percent increase in Calgary's population, so I want to know what the minister's plans are. Where in this supplementary supply request are there the resources to significantly impact that problem of new people in the city of Calgary that can't access a family physician?

Now, just quickly moving on, a June survey was done of nurses in the Calgary regional health authority. More than 500 nurses took the time and effort to fill out a nursing survey. I'd like to know if the minister will tell us, as we evaluate his estimates here: what did those nurses identify? It was interesting that there was a 46 percent response rate, which is unusually high for these kinds of surveys. I'm most curious in terms of what the nurses told the Calgary regional health authority was required. Will the minister share with us that kind of information, tell us what kind of responses were provided in what you euphemistically described as the nursing workplace satisfaction survey steering committee, the NWSSSC? Would the minister share with us what the results were of that survey, because the last nursing workforce satisfaction survey conducted in November of 1997 provided, I think, some really good benchmarks.

Every time I look over my shoulder, I'm reminded of one of those excellent nurses in the Calgary health region who has moved on to another career. How many other nurses are going to aspire to run as candidates in the next election? Goodness knows, it may be a more satisfying career to be here in the Legislative Assembly on a Monday evening than to be working those late night shifts at the Foothills hospital. So our friend from Calgary-Cross in fact may have started a bit of a trend where we have the politicization of nurses who have seen these ongoing shortages and frustrations and decided they're going to raise their voices. We know that nobody works harder than nurses do, a very formidable force in the Assembly if they were to mobilize.

One of the problems – and I ask specifically the minister of health. When they fiddled with the priority list to move the Alberta Children's Hospital up – you remember that it was about fourth or fifth on the list, and then they created a parallel list to be able to move it up. What's happening is we have a Calgary laboratory facility that can't meet accreditation standards. In fact, you might be interested, Mr. Chairman, because I expect that from time to time you may have some lab results that are going to be processed not in beautiful downtown Okotoks but perhaps in the Calgary region, in downtown Calgary.

You know, one of the things that was said by the Alberta College of Physicians and Surgeons – and I commend this injunction specially to the Minister of Health and Wellness: the greatest concern of inspectors on the committee is the inadequacy of physical facilities at both the main laboratory and Foothills medical centre sites; workplaces are generally cramped and noisy; cramped quarters and a lack of proper storage space create an unsafe work environment for laboratory personnel. These are pretty strong words from the accrediting body.

I had a chance to tour the Calgary region facility with, I think, Elisabeth Ballermann of the Health Sciences Association maybe a couple of years ago. At that time it was identified as a major, major problem. You know, if you think about it, we have this network of couriers that are running health samples from laboratories down to a facility, part of which is two trailers parked behind this little building on 10th Avenue in Calgary. They're not well heated. They're not well lit. I sometimes think when we watch the Olympics and see the enormous concern around the environment in which the drug testing goes on – well, this isn't for a few elite Olympic athletes. We're talking about the place where our family's tissue samples go for testing and blood goes to be tested. Decisions are made on the basis of those laboratory tests to operate or not to operate and how long to wait, and the doctor's diagnosis is dependent on work being done.

When you think about it, the laboratory in so many respects in modern medicine is the very heart of your medical system. It doesn't matter how many people you've got in hospital beds. If you can't readily access the laboratory tests, it doesn't matter. So we have a very, very significant problem, and I don't know what's being done to fix it.

You know, we've had a critical shortage of pathologists, a major, major problem coming. We don't have enough pathologists, and what's happening is you're now seeing advertising by the big health centres in Toronto and American places for pathologists. We don't have enough pathologists. We don't have a competent, adequate, safe laboratory facility for the 800,000 people in the Calgary region, and I don't see that addressed anywhere in these estimates. Minister of Health and Wellness, please point out to me where it is on page 46 or page 47 that we're going to see some changes to that laboratory facility. That's a concern.

I have a constituent that assaulted somebody, and this may be of interest to the Minister of Justice. He assaulted somebody because it's the only way he could get a bed in a psychiatric facility in the city of Calgary. He had been to my office, has made numerous trips looking for help. This fellow needed assistance. We sent him to the west-side clinic and the east-side clinic, and we made whatever sort of recommendations we could to diagnostic services, but what he needed was a hospital bed. He's got that now, but he committed an assault, knowing that that was what would happen, that the police would pick him up and he would at least get a psychiatric bed. Is that what we've come to in Calgary in 2000? The most prosperous place in Canada, and we've got people who have to commit a criminal assault to be able to get a psychiatric bed, because they know you cannot get one for love or money right now in the city of Calgary. Not good enough, Mr. Chairman, not good enough at all.

There were supposed to be 20 crisis stabilization beds established at the Holy Cross hospital; now that initiative has been stalled. Why has it been stalled? When are those 20 crisis stabilization beds going to be available to people who desperately need them, Mr. Minister? When is that going to happen? Those are some of the concerns that I wanted addressed while we're dealing with this.

The other matter that gives me some real concern has to do with standards in terms of nursing homes and the whole issue of long-term care centre standards. I may have been out of the room briefly filling my water glass when my colleague the Health and Wellness critic was into that area, but maybe I could just supplement and indicate that we have seen other provinces move so far ahead of us. What they have done in the province of Ontario is understand that our seniors that require long-term care don't deserve second-class care. That too often is what we're having.

We don't have enough facilities in this province to be able to deal with people with serious forms of dementia and Alzheimer's. I know what the challenges are in Calgary. I can only imagine what happens in Drumheller where you have a smaller number of people, I would assume, with dementia, so it's tougher to have a dedicated wing or a unit in a facility for people with dementia issues. I can only imagine what kinds of problems we're having there.

My question is, Mr. Chairman, specifically to you and through you to that Minister of Health and Wellness. Where do I see reflected on pages 46 and 47 of this Supplementary Estimates: General Revenue Fund booklet an allocation that's going to significantly improve the quality – the unsatisfactory quality, I might add – of nursing homes and long-term care facilities right now in Alberta?

Is there anybody who thinks that we can't do any better? Is there anybody who thinks that right now we're doing just as good a job as we're capable of in this province in terms of long-term care? I invite you to put your hands up. I mean, is there anybody in this Assembly tonight that thinks we're doing an adequate job in terms of long-term care needs? Mr. Chairman, I hope Hansard reflects through my comment that I saw not a single hand raised except for the Member for Lethbridge-West. I suspect that he may have been sending a friendly greeting to me rather than registering a vote in the poll we're doing this evening. I hope Hansard is going to note that not a single hand was raised when I put that question on whether people were satisfied.

So we are in agreement then – Calgary-Fort, I see, nods in agreement – that we're not doing an adequate job in terms of long-term care. Let us all, then, ask the Minister of Health and Wellness perhaps with a single, strong, united voice: where's the funding here that's going to make a difference in long-term care? Where is that? Where is that funding? I don't see it here. I need to help the members because I know they also will be concerned, and they also will want some answers to that. It may be that those government members are asking the same questions in quiet voices, in hallways, in private meeting rooms, and so on. I'd like to think that's what's happening. There's clearly a role for that, Mr. Chairman, but there's also a role when we are here in the year 2000 and we still see some of the same problems.

You know, when I see the hardworking Member for Calgary-Bow over there – one of the biggest losses this Chamber is going to have is that she's not going to be back after the next election. Why that's a loss to this Legislature is that she has done a lot of work around the homeless situation in Calgary, and she's been to those meetings where people have identified the large number of homeless people who need to access a mental health bed and mental health services. She knows that I think it's something like 38 percent of the people in Calgary who are part of that identified homeless population have a mental health issue. We must do much better, and I don't see that reflected in this supplementary supply estimate.

Thank you very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the supplementary estimates for the Department of Health and Wellness for the year 2000-2001, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Capital Investment	$293,593,000
--	---------------

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Municipal Affairs

THE CHAIRMAN: We could begin our deliberations on this with comments by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Municipal Affairs is requesting a supplementary estimate of $21,773,000 to be used in the following ways: $10 million is required to automate the collection of property tax assessment and building permit data. A new automated system will standardize the information collected and improve stakeholder access to provincial assessment and building permit data. The new system will also make the assessment equalization and education tax requisition process more efficient by using current information instead of information that's a year old. This will result in a system that municipalities, the province, and the taxpaying public will find simpler and easier to understand.

As well, the new system will address the need municipalities have for greater access to assessment information when reviewing their own equalized assessment for accuracy, fairness, and quality control. It will make it easier and cheaper for municipalities to access sales and assessment data from neighbouring municipalities so they can compare results.

The building permit component of the new system will address the need for greater uniformity in administering the Safety Codes Act through the province. Standardized, timely data will make it easier to monitor compliance and safety code inspections and share information.

The new system will also give municipalities an important tool for improving the effectiveness of their permitting and inspection services, and permitting data in the new system will improve our ability to monitor assessment growth and predict changes in assessment bases. This will result in more timely information to support provincial and municipal decision-making. The new automated system for assessment and building permit data will be implemented partly through partnership grants with the cities of Edmonton and Calgary, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties.

Moving on: $400,000 is required for a grant to the Alberta Fire Training School to improve fire and emergency training. This grant will enable the Alberta Fire Training School, which is affiliated with Lakeland College in Vermilion, to provide better access to fire and emergency response training. Currently training for some fire and emergency procedures is not available in Alberta. This grant will facilitate a made-in-Alberta solution to meet our current and future training needs.

Still on the topic of serving Albertans in emergencies, $1.85 million is required to expand Alberta's emergency public warning system. A provincewide emergency warning system will enhance public safety by quickly delivering emergency warning messages through the broadcast media. Systems are currently in place in the Edmonton and Calgary areas that allow municipalities as well as provincial and federal government departments to warn Albertans of impending emergencies, such as tornadoes. The enhancements will include technological improvements to the existing systems and extend the coverage to about 95 percent of the Alberta population. Timely warnings through a provincewide system are expected to reduce personal injury and property loss following these provincial emergencies.

As we are aware, Pine Lake experienced a devastating tornado this past spring, and $9.5 million is required to provide assistance following this tornado disaster. Approximately $2.8 million of this amount, pending an audit, will be recovered from the federal government under the provincial/federal cost-sharing agreement.

As I said, the total cost of all of these initiatives is $21,773,000. Overall these funds will help Albertans in a very significant way. They'll provide for better property tax assessment and building permitting. They will lead to improved training for fire and emergency personnel. They'll provide more Albertans with warnings when disasters threaten, and they'll provide assistance to those who suffered losses during the terrible Pine Lake tornado.

I urge that you support these requests for supplementary funding, and we will attempt to respond to all of the questions that may be raised regarding the supplementary requirements for Municipal Affairs.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thanks to the minister for the summary to support his request for supplementary supply. I do have some questions, and I'll go through them really as quickly as I can.

I note that there is almost $22 million in total being requested, and it has been somewhat broken down in the estimates book. I made note of your comments just now, but I have some questions particularly around the $10 million amount that's being asked for in terms of capital equipment and financial support to local authorities. Mr. Minister, this is in relation to your comments about building a better assessment process and building permit data collection process. I'm wondering if you can tell me what capital assets were purchased or are contemplated being purchased for the $2 million, and who will own them? Are these provincial assets or are these municipal assets? Which local authorities are there that received the $8 million worth of support, and was there a priority list? I mean, was it at $8 million and that was the total amount of money that was needed, or was there some picking and choosing that went on? [interjection] Okay. I think you anticipated my next question, so Hansard should note that the minister, through the Chairman of course, is indicating that it was a provincewide program, so it wasn't a matter of picking some local authorities over others.

I also have some questions about the Alberta Fire Training School. I must say that I have been very impressed that the Fire Training School has been making considerable efforts to inform members of the Legislature about their activities and their operations, and I for one have appreciated finding out more about the FTS. But I'm a little confused right now because the Fire Training School used to be part of Alberta labour, as I understand it, and now it's operating more as a subsidiary of Lakeland College. Again, well, through the chair . . . [interjection] Yeah. The Fire Training School, I thought, was operating as a corporation that was a subsidiary of the college, so if I'm wrong in that understanding, then perhaps the minister could supplement that. In any case, part of the supplementary request is for a $400,000 grant to assist in its development strategy. Was this primarily for marketing its services so they can sell its training services, or is this growth for the school? I wouldn't mind just a little bit more detail about that.

There is nearly $2 million being requested for the expansion of the Alberta emergency public warning system. About 1 and a half million dollars is capital investment, and about $300,000 is for operating expenses. This would just be for my own benefit, Mr. Chairman, my own education. I'm not sure what areas in the province are now covered by the public warning system, so when I see a request saying, "Well, we want to expand," I don't know what the expansion covers. I would just be interested in knowing: does this give us 10 percent more coverage, 20 percent more coverage? Does it pick up new population areas? Does it pick up new hazards, or again is there a priority list in terms of expanding the system and this hits some of those priorities?

I would also like to know about the type of equipment and when it was installed and by whom. Were these tendered contracts? Are these assets that have now become Crown assets? Are there multiple vendors out there that were involved in this work? Just some information about I guess how the 1 and half million dollars was spent particularly and whether or not there are ongoing costs now. Are there increased maintenance costs, or were maintenance and contracts part of the tendering initially?

The Pine Lake disaster recovery program request is also of interest to me, because I haven't seen a report, Mr. Minister, on the number of claims that have been processed. Were there claims that were denied? How much has actually been paid out both in terms of the dollar volume but also the number of claims that were paid? Are there some that are in dispute or appeal? It seemed to me that there was some confusion, which is understandable. I mean, the relief program was announced just on the heels of the disaster itself, and I'm not sure that there was a lot of time to work out all the details, so it is understandable if there would be some confusion.

Time has now passed, so I'm just wondering if we had a situation where the coverage now that we've had the benefit of hindsight was seen as being too broad or too narrow? What lessons have we learned should we ever have to face this kind of a natural disaster again? What lessons have we learned that we could apply to providing appropriate relief in a timely manner? I'm wondering if there was a separate pool of money that was therefore made available after the individual claims were settled to local authorities, to municipalities, what number of claims came in and what their dollar value was.

Finally, Mr. Minister, my question, not specific to the Pine Lake disaster recovery program but to disaster recovery initiatives more in general. It seems that we have in this Assembly for several years in a row now come back with supplementary requests based on tornadoes, floods, fires. Of course, these things aren't predictable. I mean, we don't know what natural disaster is going to happen where next. But I think we have a pretty clear sense that given the nature of this province and the geography and its location and the weather patterns, et cetera, we are unfortunately going to be facing these kinds of natural events. So have you thought more – we've talked about this in the past – about building a pool of funds for disaster relief on a more ongoing basis that would be more adequate so that we're not always coming back and looking in terms of supplemental supply?

As I ask you that question, you know, the thought is going through my mind: how would I feel as an opposition member knowing that you as the minister had this pool of money out there that you could use at your discretion without bringing it back to the Legislature for approval? I'm not sure that that would be the best process either. In terms of ensuring that there's adequate protection and ensuring that the province has the ability to respond rapidly to these natural disasters, I'm just wondering what efforts you've made through your department to put this kind of expense more into your plan and build the appropriate constraints around it so that we know there's a good accountability trail.

Those are my queries, Mr. Minister, through you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate you listening so carefully. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of questions that I'd like to raise. The minister spoke about the additional allocation to kind of improve and standardize the provincial assessment type work that's going on. I guess in that context I would like to relay a concern that was raised to me the other day and ask the minister if this kind of situation is going to be addressed in this provincial standardization it gets into in terms of assessments and how they're handled.

Basically, about a week or 10 days ago now I was called by an individual from north central Alberta who's living in a small community. I don't want to put his name on the public record because I don't have that permission. He bought a home that had previously been assessed at a $9,000 level. It was a kind of small community. What happened was that when he paid for the home, he paid $23,000. The end result was that his taxes went way up in excess of what the two neighbouring houses were taxed.

When he appealed it, he was told: "Well, yours have gone up because we're on market value assessment. You paid that for the house, so now we multiply the mill rate times the new value." He said: "Well, what about the neighbours? They've got bigger houses, bigger lots, more services in their houses. Those houses should be worth at least what mine was." The response back from the local assessment appeal officer was: well, those houses haven't sold yet, so we don't know what they're worth.

The end result was that he lost his appeal, and he's now paying much higher taxes on his house than either of the neighbours who have both bigger lots and bigger homes and potentially within the market structure of that community have a higher potential market value even though they haven't been realized because the houses have not actually transferred title.

This is even further complicated because he went back to his real estate agent and said: "Well, why didn't you warn me that my taxes were going to go up by a factor of almost three times? When we talked about my ability to afford this house, we talked about the tax payable based on the historic assessment." What this individual is asking is that part of the promotion or the adoption of this new market value assessment for small rural municipalities, not municipal districts and counties but urban municipalities in the small areas – the real estate agents need to be brought up to speed in the context that when the market value is determined by a sale, what they do is that market value that now becomes the assessment gets multiplied times the mill rate to give the new tax base.

So what in essence he was talking about was that there was a lack of information there for him to make a proper decision, and when he started asking questions about it, even through his real estate agents, they didn't know the answer. Obviously, the assessment appeal officer for that small town didn't have the appropriate answers either, because he was telling him that these other properties would not have a new assessed value until they actually were sold. Well, I think the general process at least in a lot of them is that any sale in a particular community could potentially affect the assessed market value of almost any home or dwelling within that adjacent area with similar characteristics.

These are the kinds of issues that I hope the minister is talking about when he is talking about trying to get some more information out there and funding this better provincial assessment process as people become aware of it. I also do intend on behalf of this individual to write a letter to the real estate board in the province and ask them to check and make sure that their individuals are providing appropriate information to potential buyers when they look at the cost of living in their home as they move into a new purchase.

Those are a couple of the issues that kind of got raised in terms of the minister's reference to the new assessment improvements that he's increased money for. I hope it will address some of these issues that were raised. If not, we'll pursue it some other way with the minister.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

MR. DICKSON: Actually one question for the minister, something that puzzles me a little bit in terms of the additional money for "collection of assessment and building permit data." The Inner City Coalition in Calgary is made up of probably about 13 communities in the heart of the city, and there has been an exceedingly high level of frustration over difficulty accessing assessment information in the city of Calgary.

I understand that we have a municipal government that's primarily responsible for property taxation, but given the fact that the city is a creature of the province, that they have no plenary jurisdiction – the only jurisdiction the city of Calgary has is what the provincial legislation permits it. I'd ask the minister if he has used his office to raise with the city of Calgary the concerns that a number of inner-city communities have had with respect to being able to access in a timely way a lot of the assessment information. It seems to me that there's not a lot of what the city does that is more basic than their property tax system, and the assessment information, it seems to me, ought to be not a closely held secret but something that ratepayers should be able to get without the kind of difficulty that these groups have experienced in Calgary.

I expect, Mr. Minister, that you meet with mayors and chief commissioners for certainly the larger centres, and you might want to put this on the list. We often get a bit of a whipsaw effect here, with people arguing that they're bound, their hands are tied because of some provincial directive, and then the province goes back and says: "Well, no. It's a city policy decision how accessible this information's going to be." I haven't made an exhaustive study of the issue, but I'm sharing with you the feedback I get from a lot of concerned Albertans that think they should not have such a difficult time getting key assessment information so that they're able to challenge their assessment in a meaningful way, in an intelligent way.

At the end of the day, Mr. Chairman, it saves time. To have citizens and groups and community associations like Sunalta having to spend – I see the Member from Calgary-Fort. Maybe he has some perspective to share with the Assembly on this. Certainly the communities the Member for Calgary-Fort represents and Calgary-Buffalo and Calgary-Currie, maybe even Calgary-Bow – those people have a lot of issues around this thing. I haven't heard it raised yet, but it's something that you might want to look into, Mr. Minister.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Well, thank you for the questions. They were all good questions and all very genuine, and I'll try and respond to them. If there's something lacking, please get back to me, and we'll fill in more details.

The $10 million is basically to try and capture the requisitioning the same year as the live assessment. At the present time we're requisitioned on the basis of last year's information, and rather than do it on the one year, which we're not able to do because we don't have the information in time, we requisition on the basis of last year's assessment and actually aren't able to capture the information in time.

So what this will do is bring the two together. We'll be able to capture the growth in the same year and actually requisition on the basis of current growth rather than being a year behind. That's really what it's about. We're working through AUMA. In conjunction with AUMA we'll be a central clearing agency as well as within our own department. Most of this is going to go into the software programs throughout the province so that it can all be fed into one central agency. We're going to be able to be more current with the information.

MR. SAPERS: One software company?

MR. PASZKOWSKI: No, it probably won't be one software company, but we're going to try and make it as limiting as we possibly can so that the information is as concise as possible. We're in the process of developing this, so it's not that it's been done.

Fire training. The purpose of the fire training is primarily to develop an industrial fire training, which we don't have at present in the province. At the present time for the large industrial operations, for their fire training they're sending their people to Houston, Texas, and Denver, and we'd like to be able to do that here in Alberta. The fire training school works in conjunction with Lakeland College; they're not part of Lakeland College. It's simply to better utilize and be more efficient in the operation, so what we've got are two groups that really utilize one set of equipment. It's far more efficient to do it that way, through that type of process.

The number of claims. I don't have the number of claims that have been paid on the tornado at Pine Lake. I can get that for you, and we will get that for you. We'll also get the ones that have been denied and the ones that are still being negotiated.

Expanding the early warning system. We want to cover southern Alberta, which we're not able to do at the present time. We're wanting to cover the northern part of the province, which we're not able to do. At the present time we're really covering the broad Edmonton and broad Calgary areas, and this new expansion will cover 95 percent of the province. So I think that's significant, and I think it's fair that all Albertans should have access to the early warning system, which is what this is about, to warn you that there is indeed some potential danger out there as far as weather is concerned.

Pine Lake was actually a textbook case of dealing with emergencies. I was there at 11:30 the same night of that tornado, and by that time everything was firmly in place. The whole process was operating and functioning. To my mind, to have had the process in its entirety functioning and going full out within such a short period of time: the roadways were cleared; they were able to access all the devastation; the halls were all functioning and operating; the power plants were all operating and running – it was the middle of the night by that time. It was truly, truly an impressive sight from that aspect. It was a terrible devastation, a terrible unforeseen development.

Indeed, I think under the circumstances I really, really have to compliment the county of Red Deer for their organization, for their preparedness. The whole community came together very, very willingly, and certainly if we were ever going to do a textbook on dealing with a tornado, that would be as good an example as we could ever get. So I compliment the people that were involved because they did an exceptional job of coming together very, very rapidly and dealing with a terrible, terrible emergency.

Preparing for emergencies budgeting. Last year we didn't have any; this year we had three disasters. I have absolutely no way of knowing what you could prepare for. I have no way of anticipating and I don't think anyone would really want to be able to anticipate just what the emergencies would be. I don't know how we could possibly budget. The key is to be able to be there when it's necessary. We've always made that commitment, and we have always fulfilled that commitment. I think that's all that Albertans really want and Albertans really should be confident in receiving. When there is a disaster, we will be there. That's what Albertans are asking for, and that's our objective to fulfill.

Market value assessment. Market value really works on comparables, and I don't know the community. I don't know the size of the community. I don't know the details. If you were willing to share more of the details with me, I'd be quite prepared to look into it. If it's a very small community, perhaps there haven't been any sales there for a while either. Without the details I'm not in a position to make any comments.

As far as Calgary, we are working with the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary because they are the most advanced in this program. Indeed, the idea is to be able to access information more readily so that it can be available, so that it can be useful, so that it can be of benefit to everyone. That's the intent of this: so that we can have actual information at our fingertips when it's needed, when it can be useful. Certainly that's something that we found we really need with the education tax, for example. We're always a year behind, and we're not able to capture that live assessment on the growth. That's really why we're trying to move towards.

So I hope I've been able to answer your questions. If there are others . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, Mr. Minister. First I should just clarify. The confusion that I referred to was in terms of applying for the cash compensation or benefit, not about the response on-site immediately following the tornado, in the couple of days following. It was quite remarkable. I do a lot of camping in the Gull Lake, Pine Lake, Bentley areas, and it really was remarkable. Those folks are to be congratulated. So I just wanted to make that clear. That was the confusion I was talking about; it was not what the emergency response was on-site.

You may not be able to provide me with the answers right now. It would be all right if you could undertake to get back to me later. I'm just a little intrigued about the discussion about the software development for the assessment process. I'm assuming that that's not an in-house project, that it's in fact something that's being developed by one or more vendors external to government. I guess I would like to know: who actually owns the intellectual property that's being developed? Will it be the government of Alberta? Will it be the individual municipalities, municipal authorities? Will it be something that will become in effect a project of the AUMA, or are the software developer/providers going to maintain the ownership and license it back to either the government of Alberta or the municipal authorities? Or is it a combination of all the above? So those details, when they're available, would be interesting.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: For example, Edmonton and Calgary have different systems, but they're well into it, so why reinvent the wheel when there's information out there. They operate on slightly different systems, but nevertheless we're going to be able to utilize the systems that both Edmonton and Calgary have. So rather than try and put a lot more resources to get one common system, we're going to utilize what's out there and also impact with new in areas that don't have that type. Really, Edmonton and Calgary are the most advanced as far as providing that type of information.

Who's going to have this information? It's going to be AUMA; it's going to be the government; it's going to be the municipalities. It's going to be accessible to everyone really. That's the intent.

Now, as far as Pine Lake is concerned, we actually had a record of all the people that were involved in the tornado. I should point out that in identifying the path of the tornado, Environment Canada really is the one that identified where the tornado was actually located, and we used Environment Canada's information to identify which part was inside the tornado belt and which part was outside the tornado belt. Once they have drawn the lines, we don't have any flexibility because we don't have the capability to determine weather, which Environment Canada does. That's their responsibility. That's part of the agreement, and in some cases that's been part of the issue, where people have taken issue: are they in or outside the tornado? We don't get involved in that as a province. That is determined by Environment Canada.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks. I must be having some difficulty in being precise with my question. Access to the data or the product of this assessment software was one issue, but it's the actual intellectual property, the ownership of the actual software itself that I was interested in. Again, is it going to be licensed? The systems that are in place in the cities of Calgary and Edmonton: are they large-scale, integrated systems, you know, SAP-type systems, or are they being developed specifically for this real time assessment project? If so, is that going to multiple vendors, like that's going to be developed outside the department? If that information isn't at your fingertips, I would just appreciate maybe some correspondence later on about the ownership, the intellectual property issues involved.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the supplementary estimates for the Department of Municipal Affairs, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Okay. Carried.

Agreed to:

Operating Expenses and Capital Investment	$21,773,000
---	--------------

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Justice

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Justice to make his comments.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The Department of Justice is asking for supplementary supply in the amount of $1,450,000. It's really a very straightforward request. One million dollars in additional funding will be used to enhance mental health services for young offenders in custody under supervision in the community. The money will be used to enhance the department's ability to safely house young people with mental health problems. This will reduce the risk of harm to staff and to the offenders themselves. The initiative will allow custody facilities the ability to more effectively manage young offenders with mental health problems. It's extremely important, Mr. Chairman, that we deal with some of the mental health issues that we have, particularly with a focus on young offenders.

The funding will also enable us to put in place programs that respond to unique and special mental health needs of female young offenders and aboriginal young offenders. The department will be partnering with the Alberta Mental Health Board to design appropriate mental health programs for young offenders in custody or on community supervision. We'll provide increased assessment and counseling support at the young offender centres in Calgary and Edmonton and for young offenders on probation in group homes and in camp programs. Funding will also allow us to provide more culturally sensitive responses to aboriginal offenders.

So the bottom line is that the million dollars is part of our children-at-risk program and part of Justice's response to issues of children at risk, focusing on one of the main areas of concern, one of my main areas of concern, particularly, in the Justice system, where we have to deal more with root causes of crime, in particular, if we want youth – if we want any offender – to go back into the community more able to handle the pressures and the causes that got them into trouble. In the first place, we need to deal with mental health issues.

I'm pleased that we've been able to ask for and hopefully receive approval from this Legislature for an additional million dollars, which will assist us in this year in that program and will help us to continue dealing in the long term with some of the root causes of youth in crime. There are certainly other root causes such as drug and alcohol addictions, but the mental health issues are very important, and we want to be able to address those.

The other $450,000, Mr. Chairman, will answer the concerns raised by Edmonton-Glenora when he earlier commented on the need for wages for contracted-out services to be dealt with on a broader basis than just health and PDD boards. Of course, in Justice we have contracted out services, and we have people who are supplying those services, staff employed by service agencies, who need to be brought up in terms of their pay. The $450,000 that's being requested for the Justice budget will assist us in improving the pay packet for contracted out services of that nature.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, I can't help reflecting about how refreshing it is to hear a Minister of Justice in this province talk about making safer communities by making an investment in terms of social development and an investment in terms of children. It's a perspective that many of us on this side have accepted and subscribed to for a very long time, but it's been a little lonely in this Assembly, I might say, as we've dealt with Justice budgets for the last number of years, because my colleagues didn't hear very much resonance on the other side around some of those really basic needs and trying to match resources to them. So it's encouraging to hear that tonight.

Two things. Firstly, having recently become Justice critic again, I probably missed this, but is there a detailed list of the specific recommendations in the Children's Forum that are going to benefit as a result of the $1 billion in additional funding? One million dollars. It's a good thing I'm not the Treasury critic, hon. Minister of Justice, through the chair. It seems to me that there were a host of recommendations that came out of the Children's Forum and the Children at Risk Task Force report. Our job, my job is to try and assess what progress we're making on them. It would be a whole lot easier if the minister could tell us: these are the recommendations that are going to be funded by this supplementary grant. Perhaps he could just confirm that nothing like that has been tabled to date.

So we have $1 million that is being spent with two lines on page 60. That's not to say that it's not appropriate that we spend on children's services, but I just say that a million dollars is a million dollars. I expect that when people come asking for money, we'd apply the same rigorous standard to supplementary supply that we do at budget time, which is that we find out exactly where those dollars are going, so that when those members who are lucky enough to come back in February deal with the next budget, there'll be some tough questions around to find out if those dollars have made any significant improvement.

There are a couple of areas where I can suggest the minister may want to pay some particular attention. Just today, November 20, a UN agency report came out on the sexual commercialization of children. This is a worldwide analysis of what's been done by various nations that had agreed to participate in a program to try and deal in an aggressive fashion with the sexual exploitation of children. It came out of the Stockholm declaration, August 31, 1996, entitled the Stockholm declaration and agenda for action against the commercial and sexual exploitation of children. Canada is a signatory. I note when I go through this a couple of things that are significant, and I'm sure the Minister of Justice probably has not had time to go through all 171 pages of this report. When he looks at it, one of the things he might be drawn to would be the note on page 47 that "there are . . . accounts of Chinese children being trafficked into Western Canada" for purposes of prostitution. He might advise us if in fact that's been an identified issue in the province of Alberta.

As a former minister of intergovernmental affairs, he will understand the opportunity that provinces have to prod the national government and fellow ministers of Justice in other provinces. He might want to address page 50, where it talks about the failure of Canada to adopt a national plan of action. In fact, I quote from page 50.

The failure of Canada to develop a National Plan is disconcerting, however in contrast to the USA, at least a follow up strategy to the Stockholm World Congress has been developed.

There is some indication that some things are being done, but I'd like to know what the Minister of Justice is doing in terms of lobbying his counterparts across Canada to come up with that national strategy that Canada had undertaken in Stockholm in terms of dealing with the commercial and sexual exploitation of children. I don't know what role the province has had, and maybe the minister can tell us. One project is called Out From the Shadows and Into the Light and the other one is called Stolen Innocence. These are projects set up by Save the Children-Canada dealing with prevention, rehabilitation, and recovery. It seems to me that in a province that prides itself on being attentive to the issue of teen prostitution, child sexual abuse through prostitution – and tomorrow we're going to be dealing with a Bill 29, which is going to be dealing specifically with some changes – I'd be interested in the minister's comments with respect to this UN instrument and where we're going to go with that.

The other thing I take the minister to is a report that was tabled by my colleague for Edmonton-Riverview. The report is entitled Lost Promise and Potential: Alberta's Statistics on Youth Suicides Programs and Challenges. When the government talks about children at risk, there are no children more at risk than those who have been in care and then the subject of a fatality inquiry. These are children who have died by suicide or by circumstances of some suspicious nature.

You know, I'm indebted to my colleague for Edmonton-Riverview, who has gone through and done an analysis of these different fatality inquiry files. Do you know what you find, Mr. Chairman, when you read through? Some repetitive recommendations. I think those of us responsible – everybody in this Assembly in a form is a kind of guardian for the children of this province; aren't we? We all have a responsibility to the children of this province. One can reasonably ask: why is it that we haven't done more in terms of acting on the recommendations in these fatality inquiries?

In fact, if we go through the reports, you know, we have a nine-year-old male whose name I can't mention because of a publication ban in Hobbema who died; a 15 year old, Donald Robert LeClaire, in 1994; John Ross McKinnon in 1995; Cynthia May Elliot in 1995; Jackie Beauregard in 1995; Olivia Rae Calfrope on November 5, 1995; Isaac Gerard Mercer in January 1997; Sherman Laron Labelle on May 21, 1998. We look at each one of these fatality inquiry reports. What we see are thoughtful recommendations that I think require government action. Who else would we look to for leadership in this? You might say the Ministry of Children's Services.

You might say some other ministries. I would like to think that some of the leadership in fact would be coming from this Minister of Justice. I think one of the proposals would be that the Justice department should be co-ordinating statistics on child and youth suicide on an annual basis.

I think it's hugely important that recommendations from fatality inquiry reports be assessed, perhaps as recommended by my colleague for Edmonton-Riverview, by a joint committee of Children's Services, health, education, and Justice, the youth sector, on a quarterly basis.

So my question to the Minister of Justice: in the absence of a detailed breakdown of which recommendations from the children's summit are going to be funded and which recommendations from the Children at Risk Task Force report are going to be funded, would he go through and address the specific recommendations which appear on page 30 of that report tabled today by my colleague called Lost Promise and Potential and tell us what his position is with respect to each one of those? There is no more important business in this province than looking after children in care, and every child that takes his or her life while in care I think warrants the most serious attention, not by a single ministry but by a number of ministries. So here's a good concrete proposal from Edmonton-Riverview. I want to know from the Minister of Justice whether he will do that.

Should he choose not to follow these recommendations, will he tell us in precise details what his alternate proposal is to get a handle on what I think is an unacceptable number of suicides of children in care? These aren't children living with their parents. These are children in care of the province of Alberta. The parens patriae jurisdiction we've got imposes a very high jurisdiction indeed.

The only other comment I'd make with respect to the estimates is that, you know, we heard some comments earlier today about the role of agencies like the John Howard Society, and my colleague for Edmonton-Glenora takes some ribbing from a former solicitor general about that, but the reality is that one of the strengths in this province is that we have had, I think, some marvelous leadership provided by a range of community agencies. I don't mean just John Howard, because I'm proud to have been associated with that too, but Elizabeth Fry and Native Counseling. There are a range of organizations in this province. I look at PLENA, the Public Legal Education Network, and the leadership provided by the Alberta Law Foundation. I mean, some of the best things to do with Justice in this province have happened really almost in spite of the provincial government, sometimes on a contracted basis but quite independent of government.

So this is a time where I might make common cause with the Minister of Innovation and Science. Here's an area where in fact it's not the government that's being the real innovator. In many respects it's been these nonprofit, community-based agencies. I'm sorry if I mischaracterized the Minister of Innovation and Science. If he prefers the way government does it by blunder and trial and error, that's fine, but I quite appreciate the leadership we found from those nonprofit agencies, and I think it's a good thing that we're providing some additional employee compensation. I might say that this is the sort of thing I think could have been dealt with in the budget last March, and I'm disappointed it wasn't. But I'm certainly happy to see some funding adjustment there because that's a vital part of the matrix, the network of services that help make our community stronger and safer.

Anyway, those are the comments I wanted to make at this stage, and I know I have some colleagues that wish to speak as well. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Through you to the minister, I appreciate his opening comments. He said his one and a half million dollar request was very straightforward, and we've got some questions. It is relatively straightforward. I'd like to start on the additional funding being requested for employee compensation of agencies under contract. This is a long time coming.

I recall a report written for this provincial government – oh, this must be now going back close to 20 years, 15 at least – the Goldstein report, which looked at social agencies under contract with the government. At that time it was identified that there was an average of about a 20 or 22 percent difference in the salary that was being paid to employees of contracted agencies and those employees of government doing similar work at similar classifications. I know that when the lobby effort was launched by those involved in providing services to those with developmental and other disabilities, they were talking once again about this 20 percent differential.

I'm just wondering how this $450,000 is going to be allocated and how much it addresses that perhaps 20 percent or more differential or shortfall in the salary structure of these contracted agencies? Is the department going to be telling the agencies that they can give fixed percent raises, or is there a classification system that has been developed that'll determine how this money is going to be allocated? Is this onetime funding in terms of adjustment, or is it going to become part of the base contracts for future-year negotiations between the minister and these agencies?

My advice to the minister would be that he make it multiyear, that he build it into the base, and that he give these agencies some stability. Many of these organizations have been partners with the provincial government for decades and decades and decades, yet they have to go through the administrative trouble of every year renewing their contracts and starting from zero, which just eats up a lot of time in terms of the agencies, their volunteers, and of course the minister's own departmental staff. So I would hope that could be made clear in terms of how this money is going to be allocated and whether it's multiyear and whether it gets built into the base and how much control the agencies will have on how it is ultimately spent.

The million dollars for housing and custody of young offenders, particularly those with mental health services, is welcome indeed. I'm wondering, though, because it says that this is partial year funding, whether I can safely make the assumption that we will see in the departmental estimates in the next annualized budget for the minister that this is now part of the base, that there's new program development, and that it's going to be annualized. Mr. Chairman, I think it's important for the Hansard record to show that the minister is nodding in agreement, that yeah, that will in fact be the case.

Will this money be spent in terms of providing additional staff resources in existing custody environments, or in fact are we looking at the creation of new open-custody houses, a potential for more actual bed space in different facilities? If so, where would those be located? If it's more staff, are we doing anything to address capacity? I know that the minister made reference in particular to female and aboriginal youth. Maybe the minister could let me know whether female young offenders sentenced to open custody will now have truly open-custody resources to serve their sentence in or if they will still be using a cell at, in the case of northern Alberta, the Edmonton Young Offender Centre, which of course, as the minister knows, is built as a high-security, closed-custody facility. It's always been a bone of contention between myself and the department that young women sentenced to open custody because of a lack of resources find themselves doing time in a secure-custody facility. I believe that's inappropriate, and I'd like to know whether or not this funding will address that.

So, Mr. Chairman, my queries are relatively few. I'd just ask, of course, for some clarification from the minister. I must say that it is refreshing indeed to hear a minister talk about investment in youth in terms of prevention of criminal activity or the prevention of recidivism and the understanding that these interventions if done properly can have tremendous and dramatic results. It's always nice to have an opportunity in the Assembly to reflect on the good work done by the voluntary and the nongovernment sector in the provision of criminal and social justice services.

There's a proud history and a tradition in this province of involving groups, ranging from the Salvation Army to the Elizabeth Fry Society to the John Howard Society to St. Leonard's Seven Steps Society, Mennonite Central, just a whole host of first-class agencies that have worked to achieve justice in this province for a very long time. It always puzzles me when I hear either the Provincial Treasurer or some of his other colleagues speak disparagingly of these community-based, volunteer-driven, not-for-profit organizations as though the work that they do is somehow not deserving of public support. It's nice to see that they in fact do get public support and that in fact some of that public support is going to be increased as a result of tonight's discussions.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the supplementary estimates for the Department of Justice, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Agreed to:

Government Services

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of the Minister of Government Services I'm pleased to present the supplementary estimates for Government Services in the amount of $1,500,000. As set out in the estimates, $280,000 is being requested for compensation to the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council, $700,000 for information systems enhancement, $520,000 for landlord and tenant advisory services in Calgary.

With respect to the $700,000 in information systems enhancements, suffice it to say that the system is being overtaxed by an expanding economy, an expanding number of people utilizing the services in this province. The overtaxed information systems need to be sustained. They need to build immediate system capacity and enhance their infrastructure in order to maintain response times. There's a need to stabilize systems by expanding computing capacity, specifically upgrading Calgary and Edmonton local area networks as well as the servers used by external clients to access the systems.

Government Services is moving to new technology to meet governmentwide standards. Infrastructure investments will help support the one-window gateway initiative, which will be a cross-ministry administrative priority. The funding will also be used to respond to client requests for e-commerce relating to land titles services. Specifically, it will add services to the SPIN program, which allows clients to search and order survey plans over the Internet. In the past the digital survey plans were only available in paper form. The SPIN service has been referenced in recent newspaper articles about the best-in-class Canadian information productivity award. Government Services also received the innovative service delivery award at a major technology conference in Hull, Quebec. In addition to the increased convenience that this initiative has meant to customers, Government Services has also been able to secure aging land title documents that were in danger of serious deterioration and possible loss.

The $280,000 in support of AMVIC is in support of a policy change for a delegated regulatory organization that licenses businesses to sell and repair motor vehicles. The organization is called the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council. Regulations stipulated that all existing licences would expire early in order to facilitate and fund the formation of the council. The motor vehicle industry, which is spread throughout rural as well as urban Alberta, was opposed to the early expiry, and Government Services agreed that the policy change was unfair and would cause undue financial hardship to the industry. It therefore amended the regulations to allow licences to terminate on their original expiry date, thus the loss of revenue on the renewal fees.

The third amount, the $520,000, is to provide continued landlord and tenant advisory services to the residents of Calgary. The city of Calgary currently provides the services, but they're under no legislative requirement to do so. They recently advised Government Services that they would be terminating the services as of December 31 of 2000, which was unanticipated, so an additional funding of $520,000 to provide the services through our consumer information centre and to handle the additional 70,000 inquiries per year is necessary. The services include communicating with landlords and tenants on their rights and helping to resolve landlord and tenant issues. It's disappointing that Calgary will not continue the service from Calgary, because trying to do the same through the Edmonton offices will not be as effective as a council that had formerly operated in Calgary, where they knew the marketplace. However, it's necessary that those services be provided, and if the city of Calgary is no longer going to provide them, it's incumbent on Government Services to do so.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of questions, firstly on the $700,000 for information systems enhancements. There was a peculiar kind of timing in that we saw the Minister of Government Services this last spring, in estimates on the main budget, going on about the call centre that her department was organizing, and also her excitement at the fact that we were going to take personal information about individual Albertans from eight different government departments and start networking that information. At the very same time, Jane Stewart was being pilloried daily in question period in the House of Commons, and some of us said: Mr. Chairman, how is it that this is happening in Alberta with so little attention?

We've asked some questions and I've got some FOIP applications outstanding, but I want to register a concern on behalf of the opposition that the plan that had been developed by the Minister of Government Services seems not to have been adequately tested. I suspect that most Albertans would be astonished to find out that their own government plans to take their information in one of eight different government departments and start mixing and matching it for purposes the individual Albertan won't know, all without, as best I know, any consent required from the individual Albertan.

This is all about internal planning, so I want to register that very strong concern with respect to the $700,000 and say that we want a lot more information in terms of those issues that had been expressed at the time we were doing the main budget. I'm not sure why this couldn't have been foreseen. What's new now that we didn't know in March and April of this year? I've listened carefully – and I know that the Justice minister is doing his best filling in for his colleague – but I didn't hear an explanation.

Now, on the landlord and tenant advisory services in Calgary, it's interesting that this has been in effect a freebie that's been provided by the city of Calgary. It seems to me that if this were a little bigger priority – and you're listening to an MLA where over 70 percent of my constituents live in rented accommodations, so probably nowhere else in Alberta is this kind of a service more important. I guess I'm a bit surprised that there isn't some more formal arrangement between the city and the province so that the city can't just sort of casually say, "Well, we're not going to cover this anymore," and the province is going to pick it up.

That brings me to the question, then, of wondering, just before the time runs out on me, Mr. Chairman, that at one point the Municipal Affairs department . . .

Vote on Supplementary Estimates

THE CHAIRMAN: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, but pursuant to Standing Order 59(3) and Government Motion 24 agreed to November 14 in the year 2000, I must now put the following question. Those members in favour of each of the resolutions not yet voted upon relating to the 2000-2001 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund, please say aye.

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE CHAIRMAN: Those opposed, please say no. Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. At this time I would move that we rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions and reports as follows.

All resolutions relating to the 2000-2001 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund have been approved. Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a list of those resolutions voted upon by the Committee of Supply pursuant to Standing Orders.

Supplementary supply estimates, 2000-2001, for the general revenue fund for the year ending March 31, 2001: Government Services, operating expense and capital investment, $1,500,000; Justice, operating expense and capital investment, $1,450,000;

Municipal Affairs, operating expense and capital investment, $21,773,000; Health and Wellness, operating expense and capital investment, $293,593,000.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would request unanimous consent of the Assembly to revert to Introduction of Bills to allow for the first reading of Bill 28, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2000 (No. 2).

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 28
Appropriation (Supplementary
Supply) Act, 2000 (No. 2)

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to introduce Bill 28, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2000 (No. 2). This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a first time]

[At 11:49 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, November 21, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/11/21

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Lord, renew us with Your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service of the people of this great province. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the newly elected board of directors of the Alberta Long Term Care Association. Seated in your gallery are President Greer Black, Vice-president Helen Lantz, Vice-president Wayne McKendrick, Vice-president Phil Gaudet, and directors Nora Kirkham, Greg Ulveland, and John Pray. Past President David Martin and executive director and former member of this Assembly Dianne Mirosh are also in the Speaker's gallery. I would ask that these guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

MRS. O'NEILL: Mr. Speaker, I present in the Assembly today a petition signed by 56 St. Albertans, a total of 178 names of individuals who are advocating that Alberta health professionals be able "to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

MRS. LAING: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to present a petition of 38 people of Calgary and surrounding area in support of Bill 212, the human rights conscience legislation for health care workers.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table petitions containing 219 names from Athabasca-Wabasca constituency, 87 names from Calgary-Elbow constituency, 127 names from Calgary-Varsity constituency, 112 names from Grande Prairie-Wapiti and Grande Prairie-Smoky constituencies, 261 names from Lethbridge-West constituency, 175 names from Sherwood Park constituency, and 413 names from Wainwright constituency. The petitioners are urging the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Alberta human rights act to allow health professionals "to opt out of those . . . procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table today petitions bearing 406 names, mostly from Coaldale, Picture Butte, Hays, Vauxhall, Enchant, Iron Springs, Stirling, Coalhurst, Lomond, Nobleford, Diamond City, Monarch, county of Lethbridge, and eight other communities outside the Little Bow riding supporting the move under Bill 212.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to present a petition signed by 89 Albertans, including 13 from Calgary-Glenmore, urging the Government of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition this afternoon from 51 residents of Lethbridge-East. They are petitioning the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the government to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health [care] professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief in the life of humans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present to the Assembly in which the signatories are requesting that the Assembly "pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained."

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented yesterday be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also would like to ask that the petitions I presented yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that tomorrow I will rise again and move that written questions and motions for returns appearing on Wednesday's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Bill 29
Protection of Children Involved
in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2000

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill, being the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2000.

It's important to note that the legislation framework will be maintained. The act is solid, and it is working well. With it we have effectively provided support to many sexually exploited and abused Alberta children. These amendments are simply designed to strengthen this important legislation and enhance its effectiveness.

The amendments have two purposes: to enable children to obtain additional care and to ensure that children's rights are protected. Some of the amendments are based upon recommendations made by police, social workers, and service providers. They suggested several changes that would enable them to provide additional care to these victimized children. In keeping with the recommendations the amendments propose extending the initial confinement period from 72 hours to a maximum of five days. They also allow a protection-of-children-involved-in-prostitution director to apply for a maximum of two additional confinement periods of up to 21 days each. This additional time will enable social workers to stabilize the child, keep the child, break this cycle of abuse, and begin the recovery process in a safe and secure environment. The remaining amendments ensure that children's rights are protected.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 29 be placed on the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Bill 221
Public Health Care Protection Statutes
Amendment Act, 2000

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure this afternoon to introduce Bill 221, the Public Health Care Protection Statutes Amendment Act.

This bill amends several health statutes to protect our public health care system. The major focus of this bill is the repeal of Bill 11, ensuring that overnight patient stays must be performed in a public hospital and strengthening conflict of interest provisions. I look forward to the debate on this bill as the occasion arises.

Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 221 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table today the appropriate number of copies of a letter addressed to me from Students Against Drinking and Driving in Medicine Hat and area, congratulating the government on recent changes to legislation to reduce the number of impaired drivers on our roads. They also presented me with a banner which I will be discussing in Members' Statements later on.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I'll move quickly. I have seven different tablings. The first one is a copy of the reasons for judgment of Provincial Court Judge Karen Jordan, dated July 28, 2000, and her judicial determination that the current child prostitution law lacked procedural safeguards for children; secondly, a copy of the British Columbia Secure Care Act, passed by that Legislature on July 6, 2000.

Since Bill 29 deals only with the abuse of young people, I'll be tabling some documents dealing with the larger challenge posed by street prostitution in Calgary: firstly, A Community Resources Handbook on Prostitution Issues, prepared by the Calgary Police Service vice unit and CAAPI, Communities for Awareness & Action on Prostitution Issues; a two-page description of CAAPI activities since it was created in September of 1997; a three-page summary of community volunteer hours donated to CAAPI, totaling $300,567; the Community Strategies Report to the SPC on Community and Protective Services of the city of Calgary; and finally, a report presented to the Calgary Police Commission entitled Overview of Prostitution Activity in Calgary.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one document. It's double sided, and I'll refer to both sides. It's based on information that has been prepared by Brad Severin, the senior tax manager of BDO Dunwoody, as well as some reports in the Edmonton Journal with an analysis of the so-called Day/Klein Alberta Flat Tax – that was their characterization – as well as information prepared in an article titled Shifting the Burden, by Greg Flanagan. The material has been condensed and consolidated by Mr. Bill Daly, B.Com, MBA. What it demonstrates in both the text and the chart is the effect of the flat tax on Albertans and, as a result of the Paul Martin mini-budget, it indicates that the 37 percent . . .

THE SPEAKER: Well, thank you very much. We'll accept the tabling, hon. member. Please, please, would you also refer to Hansard, my comments last Thursday and Monday in terms of naming names.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to present two separate tablings. They are from the Alberta Committee of Citizens with Disabilities and the Alberta Association for Community Living. They are addressed to the Minister of Community Development as well as to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and they're with regards to the controversy around the Anno Domini exhibit.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: And to the hon. Member for Edmonton-

Meadowlark, congratulations, this day being your 25th wedding anniversary.

The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings this afternoon. The first one is copies of a report called Child Poverty in Canada, Report Card 2000. This report concludes that one in five children in Canada still lives in poverty, an increase of 402,000 since 1989.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter that I received from the president of the Alberta College of Social Workers, asking the Members of the Legislative Assembly to increase Alberta's welfare rates and recognize that "irrespective of any definition, poverty has a profound and sustained adverse impact on the overall health and well-being of Albertans including young children."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of an excellent article from Alberta Views magazine entitled Born in Alberta: Midwives Struggle to Bring a Healthy New Attitude into the Birthing World.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would file five copies of Paid in Full: Who Pays for University Education in BC? by Robert Allen, who makes the argument in the paper that university students actually pay for their tuition and their education in full.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I have a number of tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter to the Premier dated October 9, 1998, wherein an injured worker identified 10 problem areas with WCB. Seven of these were included in the Appeals Commission report in the review of the Appeals Commission by Justice Friedman yesterday.

The second is a follow-up letter dated October 13, 1998, again to the Premier from an injured worker, regarding representation on the board of directors of WCB wherein he recommended that there be two injured workers, one representing the northern part of the province and the other representing the south.

A third letter: the Premier's response to his letters, dated November 25, 1998.

Finally, another letter to an injured Calgary worker from the Minister of Human Resources and Employment outlining the procedure for handling the reports on the WCB when they are completed.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table this afternoon. Both these documents I received from Municipal Affairs in a FOIP request. The first document is from a homeowner in Nottingham district in Sherwood Park, very concerned about the rotting pine shakes on the roof.

The second document is also from a couple who were very concerned about their dream home; they cannot afford to put a new roof on it. The original roof was pine shakes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you very much. I have five reports to table today. The first is the 1999-2000 annual report for the Alberta Registered Professional Foresters Association; also the Alberta Dental Association, January 1, '99, to December 31, 1999; the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, November 1, 1998, to October 31, 1999; the College of Chiropractors of Alberta, April 1, 1999, to March 31, 2000; and the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta, April 1, 1999, to March 31, 2000.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table the November 20, 2000, report from the United Nations on the sexual commercialization of children.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to acknowledge on behalf of all members that today, November 21, is the 21st anniversary of the hon. Speaker of this House, who was first elected to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for the Barrhead-Westlock constituency in the by-election of November 21, 1979. I'd ask all members to join me in showing our congratulations on this occasion.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. TRYNCHY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to introduce to the Legislative Assembly this afternoon guests who are seated in the members' gallery: Florence Burette from Belgium, who is with the Rotary International youth exchange hosted by the Westlock Rotary Club; Henricke Marsman from Holland, who is with the ASSE international exchange; and Liesa Barends from Germany, who is staying with farming relatives. These students are continuing their high school studies at R.F. Staples school in Westlock and are accompanied by Les Dunford, publisher of the Town & Country, a local weekly news publication. On your behalf I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 45 grade 6 students and their teachers Mrs. Esteves and Miss Ewald along with parent helpers Mrs. Adams and Mrs. Schramm from the Brander Gardens elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They're here today to observe question period and to visit the Legislature, and they're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's a pleasure for me to introduce 47 students who will be joining us at 2 o'clock. They were particularly interested in hearing the Premier respond to questions that will be asked. They are from Ekota elementary school, and today they will be accompanied by Mrs. Andrea Cooper, Miss Colleen Reeder, and Mr. Donald Auch, all teachers at that school, and by parent Mrs. Heather Pollock. So I'm hoping that the Assembly will welcome them in absentia, because they will be following the transcript in Hansard.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two groups of students that I would like introduced to the Assembly this afternoon. The first group is from Terrace Heights school. There are two classes. There are 49 pleasant and polite students. They are accompanied today by their teacher Mr. Tom Jaques, also another teacher, Jennifer Bruns, and aid Toni Smith. Also joining the group are parent helpers Chris Hardeman, Dorothy Janetzki, Audrey Bliss, Lorna Doan, and Julie Green. Some of the students are in the public gallery, and if they would now rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly, I would be grateful.

Mr. Speaker, the second group that I would like to introduce this afternoon to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly is a group of 10 students. They are accompanied by their teacher Daiana Andreoli. They are from the Learning Store on Whyte, and I would like to say that one of these students has visited the Gold Bar constituency office to discuss issues of concern with me, and I was delighted that she took time from her schedule to come and visit. I would like to introduce Katey Brisson, Daemon Bordian, Craig Doran, Joel Byggdin, Amber Jacobs, Miranda Jacobs, Samantha Carter, Jodi Mandick, Jaime Mandick, and Ryan Cyr to all hon. members of the Assembly. They're in the public gallery, and if they would now rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly, I would be grateful.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly, seated in the public gallery, three visitors: Mr. Bill Brown and Ms Sheelagh Weslosky, accompanied by Mr. Thomas Lukaszuk, whose face will be a little more familiar in this Assembly in the very near future. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't sure that I'd be able to do this, but thank you very much. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly again my school. McDougall elementary/junior high school is here participating in the School at the Legislature program, and today they are watching the proceedings from the members' gallery. I would ask them to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this afternoon I introduced to you and members of the Assembly some of the newly elected board of directors of the Alberta Long Term Care Association. I also note in the gallery today some other members of the Alberta Long Term Care Association who are attending the association's annual general meetings here in the city of Edmonton. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they, too, rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and to introduce to you and through you to members of this Legislature the Team Alberta that looks after children who need protection from child abuse in the form of prostitution. They are from both Calgary and Edmonton and are seated in the public gallery. From the city of Edmonton police, Detective Guy Pilon and Detective Brian Robertson; from Wood's Homes in Calgary, Madelyn MacDonald, manager of the Safe House; from Calgary Rocky View child and family service authority, Ruth Copot, the executive manager, and Julia Casey, a prostitution worker; from Calgary as well, a volunteer protective worker, Karen Prosiak; from the Metis Child and Family Services, the executive director, Don Langford; Richard Ouelett, the manager of child and family services crisis unit from Ma'Mowe, and Kim Harboway, also from the Ma'Mowe region; Bev Oldham, the program manager of child and youth services from Catholic Social Services; Kevin Hood, manager of the protection of children involved in prostitution initiative; and from the city of Edmonton, police communications, Anette Bidniak. They are in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly representatives of CAUS, which is the Council of Alberta University Students. I met with three of them today, and I recognize one other one. They are Naomi Agard of the U of A, Leslie Church from the U of A, Dezmond Belzeck from U of Lethbridge, and Duncan Wojtaszek from U of C. They are meeting with MLAs to discuss two very important items: tuition and fees and student loans and learners' assistance. They are in the public gallery, and I would like them to now stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take an opportunity to introduce through you to members of the Assembly 27 students and their teacher. They're currently on their tour of the Assembly building and will be joining us shortly, but I would like it noted that they were visiting. They're visiting us from St. Martin's Catholic school: teacher Natalie Harasymiw and her 27 very, very dedicated students in the Ukrainian bilingual program. They'll be watching the proceedings shortly, and I'm sure that they will have many, many questions when they get back to their classroom.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electric Utilities Deregulation

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier claimed that the electricity bills for residential consumers would go down in 2001 under his botched electricity deregulation scheme, more infamously known as the KEP.

Mr. Speaker, a September 15, 2000, information request filed by ATCO Utilities to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board on the regulated rate option shows clearly that electricity rates will go up between 57 and 80 percent at least for residential customers in the year 2001. I'd like to table that document now. So either the Premier is being misinformed by the Ministry of Resource Development or he doesn't understand how electricity prices are set in Alberta or he's out of touch with the reality of skyrocketing electricity prices for residences, for seniors, for renters, for farmers, and for small businesses across Alberta.

My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier stand up in this Assembly and apologize to Albertans for spreading misinformation on electricity rates when the facts clearly show that electricity rates are going up under his deregulation scheme?

MR. KLEIN: No, Mr. Speaker, but I would suggest that the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition should be apologizing to Albertans for the malicious scare tactics she's trying to use.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, why would the Premier deliberately misinform Albertans when he claimed that the electricity bill for an ATCO residential customer would go down by $20 per month next year when the evidence from ATCO, which I have just tabled, shows it will go up by $36.48 per month, a 45 percent increase including his infamous rebate?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this matter is now before the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. I don't know. Does this member assume or presume to prejudge what the board might or might not do? You know, this is a quasi-judicial board that is set up to hear applications for rate increases. We don't know what is going to happen. Is she suggesting now that perhaps she would like to direct the board to bring in a judgment that might coincide with her statements? I think that's very presumptuous of her.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Yes, and on the first assumption that the hon. Leader of the Opposition made, the rates regardless of what they are will go down $20 a month starting January 1. So to tell somebody that the rates are not going to go down by $20 is misleading the public. Again I reiterate that as the minister responsible for the balancing pool and what's going out, the rates that we're going to subtract the $20 from will be determined by the EUB, which hasn't taken place yet, and therefore no matter what the letter is or what the assumption is from ATCO Electric, they do not have their rates set yet.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you. In fact, the ATCO numbers show that the rate would go up by 71 percent without the rebate, and we negative it down to 45 percent with the rebate, so my question is back to the Premier, Mr. Speaker. Does this Premier have one shred of evidence from his own researchers or from his own office which shows that electricity rates will do anything but go up, or is he simply trying to bury his own personal responsibility for skyrocketing electricity prices in Alberta come 2001?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, yes. Electricity rates are increasing. That is a fact. I would point out that the government is providing very generous shielding from rising electricity rates. In some cases, including the rebate and the $20 monthly reduction in power rates, some households will benefit to the tune of some $840. That's a very significant amount of money.

We're doing all we can to try to encourage new energy to come onstream as quickly as possible. The demand is growing above the forecasted rate due to the outstanding economic conditions in this province, Mr. Speaker, but the main point here is that while electricity rates are going up, we've been able, because of prudent fiscal management, to provide very generous rebates and power rate reductions.

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

THE SPEAKER: Before recognizing the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for her second main question, just a comment coming out of Beauchesne with respect to language. While this chair would certainly encourage vigorous, pointed questions and answers in the question period, it would like to point out that in the rules that we do follow, in Beauchesne 489 there are a number of phrases that have been ruled unparliamentary. There are a number of such phrases beginning with the word "deliberate:" deliberate distortion, deliberate malignity, deliberate falsehood, deliberately distorted, deliberately misstated the truth, deliberately misled, deliberately misleading.

In 490, "since 1958" a few certain words, with respect, have been used in certain contexts, but Beauchesne 492 clearly looks at the phrase "deliberately misinforming," and it basically indicated that it has "caused intervention," and "deliberately misleading" is in there following "deliberately misinforming."

So look, let's be vigorous, let's be aggressive, and all of that, but let's also have some decorum.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. The second main question.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. EPCOR has also filed an information request with the Energy and Utilities Board comparing rates for residential and other customers in 2000 and 2001 for its southern Alberta customers, and I am happy to table that information for members of the House. My questions are again to the Premier. Will the Premier confirm that an average residential consumer in southern Alberta under EPCOR will see at least a 25 percent increase in their electricity bill next year under his deregulation scheme, not the decrease he wrongly claimed yesterday?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I can't confirm anything that is before a regulatory agency. You know, they could go in and ask for a 300 or 400 percent increase. We don't know what is going to happen. This is a quasi-judicial board.

I can tell you one thing, Mr. Speaker. This government on behalf of the people of this province will be intervening in all of these cases where power companies are seeking rate increases. In the spirit of co-operation, rather than fear mongering, I would invite the Liberals to join with us in that intervention, because it is not in any one's political interest to see high power rates and to erode the Alberta advantage.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier confirm, then, that an average commercial customer in southern Alberta, according to EPCOR and the information that they have filed with the EUB, will see at least a 33 percent increase in their electricity bill in 2001 under his deregulation scheme?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, it would be highly inappropriate for anyone to really comment on a situation that is now before a regulatory agency. I have indicated that there are a number of applications for rate increases, and this government will be intervening to protect as much as we possibly can the interests of Albertans.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, will the Premier confirm that an average farmer in southern Alberta, under the EPCOR rules and the EPCOR filing, will see a 57 percent increase in their electricity bills according to the EPCOR documents filed with the EUB?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, I can't confirm anything because this is now before a regulatory agency, a quasi-judicial process.

Mr. Speaker, I can confirm, however, that we have put in place for the farm community, for the business community, for the institutional community a program that is close to $800 million to alleviate the rising costs of electricity. I can confirm that.

THE SPEAKER: Third question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electric Utility Costs

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta classrooms are overcrowded and are lacking adequate resources to deal with special education needs of our students. Parents continue to work casinos and fund-raisers to pay for basic education needs. The government's own numbers indicate that an average elementary school with 175 students will see its monthly electricity bill increase by $1,474 – these are the government's own numbers – while receiving a rebate of $393 per month, leaving a shortfall of nearly $1,100 per month to our typical elementary school. My questions are to this Premier. What part of the school budget is the government advising elementary school principals to take the money out of to pay for an extra $1,100 to buy the electricity they need to light the school?

MR. KLEIN: This is pure speculation, and the member's statements are not entirely true, because what she fails to mention is the $800 million rebate program that we have put in place to help institutions such as schools.

Relative to this particular case, Mr. Speaker, some work is being done in conjunction with the Treasurer and the hon. Minister of Learning, and I'll have both these ministers respond.

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, we are working with Learning through Treasury to look at how we can mitigate some of the cost of the energy, natural gas and electricity, and the amount of rise in the fuel cost used in buses and otherwise. We'll be looking at that between the two departments. Out of a $4 and a half billion budget that we have involved in Learning, we're probably looking at something between $12 million and $30 million for Learning if we could find it either internally or through operation and maintenance, working with Infrastructure. This will not be directed only to Learning, but we'll also be looking at health care and other public buildings in the province of Alberta.

I believe that on a percentage basis they're trying to scare the public and the parents and the schools into thinking that something is totally out of control, but I would suggest that $15 million, plus or minus, to address electricity out of a $17 and a half billion budget is not something to alarm Albertans about.

THE SPEAKER: Short? Okay.

DR. OBERG: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was just going to add one point, and that is that the school boards together with the universities and the public sector are looking through their organization called PICA to enter the upcoming energy auction to attempt to get lower prices. I believe that this is a very good way for the schools and the universities to purchase lower priced energy, and they are presently in the process of doing that.

MRS. MacBETH: So, in other words, school boards have to hire a market analyst in electricity, and maybe they'll pay for that too.

My question is back to the Premier. With Alberta Learning's last annual budget recording that 26 of the provincial school boards ran operating deficits last year, how many more school boards are going to be forced into a deficit position because of this government's skyrocketing electricity prices?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I will have the hon. Minister of Learning respond, followed by the Provincial Treasurer.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The reason that 26 boards ran deficits is quite simply that they dipped into their operating reserves. By dipping into their operating reserves, they showed a deficit in their operating budget. This was a planned expense, and these boards did not have a deficit.

DR. WEST: And, Mr. Speaker, on top of that last year we put 158 some million dollars into picking up some deficits in this province, and besides picking up deficits, like with the Calgary school board, we also applied those dollars through to the other boards and some of them are running surpluses today. I would suggest that in the three-year business plans we also put another 19 percent increase over the three years into the Department of Learning.

I would think that if we can't accommodate some of the ups and downs of a budget of that largesse, then we're not very good managers. I would suggest that the hon. member of the Liberal opposition stop fear mongering out there to the general public. Indeed, most of these administrative changes are internal to any organization and not just to education or to health or to running law courts or to running your individual homes or businesses. I believe that time and records will show that this type of direction by the opposition . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, please proceed with your next question.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know the Provincial Treasurer and the Premier would love to blame the utility companies, but the responsibility for this is squarely with the provincial government.

Mr. Speaker, given that grants for grades 1 through 9 were scheduled to increase by $123 per student next year but now electricity bills, according to ATCO and EPCOR and the government's own numbers, could increase by $75 per student, will this government commit to increasing student grants so that our children won't be penalized for the mismanagement of electricity deregulation in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that question has been answered, but I would point out that there has been absolutely no mismanagement, and, yes, we will ensure that our children, the children of this province, are well educated in accordance with the rules and regulations set down by a very competent Minister of Learning.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. deputy leader of the third party.

Natural Gas Pricing

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's policy has supported the wholesale export of Alberta natural gas into the American market forcing Albertans to pay California prices for natural gas. Yesterday the price of natural gas crossed the threshold of $8 Canadian per gigajoule, an all-time high. Royalty revenue from natural gas prices is pouring into the provincial treasury at a record rate, yet Albertans are being threatened with bankruptcy and cutbacks in school programs because they can't afford to pay for basic utilities. To the Premier: given record high prices for natural gas, what does the government plan to assist school boards, universities, health authorities, municipalities as well as average Alberta households with skyrocketing utility prices?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to natural gas, yes, we're very fortunate to be the gas producer of the nation, and, yes, the price of gas is contributing significantly to provincial government coffers. That's why we've been able to provide a $300 rebate to every individual over the age of 16. That's why we're able, in conjunction with the Provincial Treasurer and the Minister of Resource Development, to look at what we can do to further assist in the area of public institutions, including schools and universities and hospitals.

I would remind the hon. member that in Alberta the price of gas per gigajoule is $5.80. That's the November price. In Calgary it's $6.16. In Regina it's $6.25. In Manitoba it's $6.37. In British Columbia it's $7.57. That's Vancouver. In Toronto it's $7.84, and, Mr. Speaker, in Montreal it's $11.08. We're still the lowest.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Premier's numbers check out a little better than the ones he gave yesterday in the House.

Given the huge benefit of record high natural gas prices to the provincial treasury and the energy industry, why will the government not commit to a plan that will directly assist public institutions with rising utility costs?

MR. KLEIN: We have, Mr. Speaker.

I just want to comment on a comment that was made by the hon. member. The prices that I have quoted, Mr. Speaker, are accurate prices. The source is the Canadian Gas Price Reporter, and it comes from the October and November 2000 issues.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, how can the Premier say that the government has done all that it can to address skyrocketing utility costs when school boards, universities, health authorities, municipalities, and average Alberta households clearly can't afford to keep paying more and more for their gas and electricity?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have never said that we're doing all that we can. If there's more that needs to be done, we will do it, but let's talk about what we have done: three rebate programs, one in the order of $800 million, to alleviate the rising costs of electricity as it relates to businesses, farm communities, public institutions; a $20 a month rebate or reduction in everyone's electricity bill, starting January 1; and a $300 cash rebate to every Albertan over the age of 16, the first installment of which will be going out, I think, within the week.

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, could I just add one thing to what the Premier just said? Rising gas prices and that do return quite a bit of royalties to the province, but we're forgetting one thing. In the province of Alberta, besides the rebates that the Premier is talking about, we have been able, starting January 1, to lower personal income taxes by 20 percent in this province. We have been able to lower the education portion of the property taxes on residential properties. We are able to start rolling back small business taxes and corporate taxes. All of these will help these individual residences, buildings, businesses to pay their increase in electrical and their increase in gas costs. As we go forward, since '94 till now, because of the buoyancy in the oil and gas industry, we have been able to lower our debt to $8 billion, releasing $1 billion in interest. As well, we have been able to address individual needs . . .

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Child Prostitution

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a few weeks ago the president of a community association in my riding came to my office to raise issues on prostitution activities – these activities threaten the health and the safety of the residents and the young people, especially those involved – my question is to the hon. Minister of Children's Services. In light of the pending decision on the judicial review, what are you going to do to protect the youth against prostitution?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, it's well known by yourself that there has been a tabling today. I will not reference that. Rather, I will talk about the fact that since Judge Jordan provided a ruling that raised questions about the PCHIP Act, we have gone to court with two pieces of legislation: the PCHIP Act as well as the Child Welfare Act. We have taken the time to do our best to provide all of that legislative support when an apprehension takes place. We have in fact taken the time to evaluate and discuss with the members of the street teams, members that I've introduced here today, what the options are in which we could deploy to provide strength and even greater program delivery to those children who are in fact sexually abused by the predators and pimps that have been among them in this society.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. What specific action are you proposing?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, in a summary, and more to come later, we are proposing an extension of an opportunity for confinement, and we are proposing an opportunity for additional treatments in a situation where the director would bring that forward towards the courts as a valued and responsible thing to do for the child. We are proposing to make those kinds of treatments available for a longer period of time and in fact an extension beyond a first extension to enable the child to be free from abuse and to get whatever corrective action is possible for any substance abuse that might have occurred during the time prior to their apprehension.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is to the same minister. What is the government doing to help children at risk in the interim?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, regrettably there was a delay of some of the apprehensions in that period first following Judge Jordan's ruling, but since that time at least 23 children have been apprehended using either the PCHIP Act or the new policy directives under the Child Welfare Act. I'm very confident that the work that has been done to try and protect these exploited children has been maintaining its consistency in the last few weeks. We've had such rigorous support of the legislation that may come forward later that we are very pleased that we can report that we are working as well as we possibly can.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

School Infrastructure Grants

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With a three-quarter billion dollar backlog of needed school repairs and construction the government has announced the new century schools fund. Edmonton public and Edmonton Catholic schools received $6.6 million, or about 2.8 percent of the $238 million in grants. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure. Does the minister deem this grant to the Edmonton boards fair given the age of their current school building stock and the need for schools in suburbs?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to inform this House that the criteria that have been established for new school construction, modernization, and renovation is fully transparent, and all school boards know what they have to do to meet the current criteria.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How then did the minister determine the allocation of these moneys when the Auditor General has indicated that the goals of his department and the goals of the Department of Learning don't necessarily match? So how do you come up with the allocation?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the hon. member is coming from in terms of the goals. [interjections] No, he's the one that said that, not the Auditor General. He's the one that made that statement here in the House.

One of the things that we have in the Department of Infrastructure, Mr. Speaker, is a very close working relationship with a number of ministries. One is the Minister of Learning, the other is the minister of health. We also work with the Minister of Community Development. What happens is that the programming is decided upon by those various ministries. Then they come to us in terms of infrastructure and ask us to find the funds necessary to put those facilities in place.

Now, with respect to the dollars that were given, I repeat: there are very clear criteria established by the School Boards Association of this province. If you don't like those criteria, go back and get them changed with the authority.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: can the minister explain to this Assembly why local school board priorities are not honoured when school building grants are determined and allocated? Why don't you honour those priorities?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, again the hon. member is saying, "not honoured." We put $235 million in additional funds this year that have to be expended before the end of this budget year, March 31, 2001, and a further $400 million in the budget year 2001-2002. This morning I even told all of the school boards that were in attendance today that we know that all of that construction cannot occur. Over a billion dollars worth of construction and renovation in this province cannot occur in one year. It may take three years to do it all, and we will partner with them. We'll park the money with them. They can draw interest on it and plan all of their construction in a very co-ordinated way and get the best value for their tax dollars.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Hormones in Meat Exports

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. There's a preliminary report out by the European Commission that questions Canada's control of chemical residues, including hormones, in live animals and animal products. It goes on to recommend that the European Commission ensure that Canada food commodities of animal origin not be imported until these deficiencies have been rectified. As Alberta is an exporter of beef and animal products to the European Community, would the minister please update this House as to what is taking place and what the minister is doing about it?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is happening is protectionism at its very worst. It's true that there is a mechanism in the WTO's systems where sanitary and phytosanitary items can be identified, but to say that Canada is outside of those is really a stretch. The fact is that we have some of the safest processing and the best protocol in the world in Canada, and Alberta, of course, has extremely good and tight regulations relative to the safety of food.

Now, it's an interesting situation, because in Canada we restrict the sale of drugs and the sale of certain hormones, whereas in the European Union they just restrict the use. So, of course, there is much more danger in the European Union, in fact, of products getting into the food chain that should not be there.

It's also quite interesting to note that the European Union has great difficulty with disease. I believe that probably a lot of this is to draw attention away from their problems and focus it on another area. But I can assure the people of Alberta and the people of Canada that the meat in this province and in this country is extremely safe. The protocol is there, and it's adhered to.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the minister indicate what the next steps are, and how will Alberta insist in ensuring that this decision is overturned?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, another interesting thing to note is that in fact the Europeans have not found any contaminants in the samples that they have conducted, but the process is one where they do an audit, and that is what's happened. This is a draft report. The audit is sent to Canada, and the Canadian Food Inspection Agency and Health Canada will be responding to it. It then goes back, and the final report out of the EU should be available sometime in the latter part of December.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how significant to Alberta's economy is our export of meat products to the European Community?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, out of Alberta there's only about $1 million worth of product that goes to the EU. Really that's only about .04 percent of our total exports, so it's not large. I guess what we are really concerned about is that in fact the European Union would indicate that there is a problem with the safety of our meat products in Canada, and that is just simply not the case. We will be working very closely with the Canadian Food Inspection Agency and Health Canada to prove that it's not the case.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Workers' Compensation Review

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, who's responsible for the Workers' Compensation Board, released two separate reports condemning the Workers' Compensation Board as unfair and unaccountable. The first report on the appeal system, chaired by retired Justice Friedman, found that workers, employers, and advocates had an overall dissatisfaction rate of 70 percent with the effectiveness of the system. The report states:

Each Committee member has expressed concern about what seems to be a well-entrenched culture of denial within the [Workers' Compensation Board] and one which treats many long-term disability claimants with suspicion.

Further, the report states that "the greatest and most immediate need is to bring accountability into the appeals process." My questions are for the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. In response to a question from the media yesterday, I heard the minister say that he was not surprised by the findings of the reports, and if that is the case, why did he not act before now?

MR. DUNFORD: I would just like to remind the hon. member of the process that we went through. There had been a number of letters that had been received by the ministry and of course we were aware of certain activities that were taking place on the streets here in Edmonton. Clearly, action was required, and I believe that I accepted the responsibility of that action. I put together two committees to look into the situation, and we released those reports the other day.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister commit to this House that he will make every effort to implement the majority of the excellent recommendations contained in the two reports, as he indicated in his letter dated June 20, 2000, to Mr. Allan Jobson, an injured worker in Calgary, where the minister said:

Later in the fall when the review process is complete, I will forward the committees' findings to Rick Lelacheur, Chair, the Board of Directors and Mary Cameron, CEO and President of [the Workers' Compensation Board] for implementation.

MR. DUNFORD: That in fact has been done in the sense that copies of the report, as they were released to the public yesterday, were forwarded to the Workers' Compensation Board, and I've asked for a response and a plan of action as to how they plan to deal with the recommendations.

In the meantime, of course, there are other stakeholders in the province that have to have an opportunity now to react to the recommendations, and of course, Mr. Speaker, we will be allowing an opportunity for that to happen. The time frame that's been set is that they have until January 31 of 2001 to respond.

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, in a WCB news release today it states, "The recommendations will be incorporated into the WCB's service consultation review." Does this mean that the minister has transferred the implementation of these recommendations of the two reports to the Workers' Compensation Board?

MR. DUNFORD: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member should know – and I assume that he does – the recommendations covered not only legislation and regulation but also policy. As the hon. member is also aware, my responsibility as far as it relates to Workers' Compensation is for the administration of the act, and of course I accept that responsibility. As he knows, within the act there is a board of directors that is then responsible for the day-to-day operation of Workers' Compensation. So I would expect them to look very closely at those recommendations that call for policy changes, and I'll make the commitment. I'll accept what responsibility I have as to whether or not there will be changes in legislation and regulation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Fraudulent Telemarketing

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fraudulent telemarketers and mail-order swindlers will steal millions of dollars this year from Albertans. These professional con artists peddle everything and anything. These scam artists are very inventive and persuasive. Telephone calls and colourful mailers offering products at greatly reduced rates and free prizes can sound very exciting, but simply they are lies. My questions are all to the Minister of Government Services. Given the recent telephone scam where people are being contacted and told that someone in their family is ill or in trouble and are being asked to call a number with an 890 area code, which creates long-distance charges, what is your department doing about this?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Telephone marketing scams are becoming a way of life today as we have more electronic transfers, I guess, and the high-tech industry is moving into some of the marketing schemes. The hon. member is quite right. We have seen an increase in some of these scams in the province of Alberta. In fact, this last year we've had over $600,000 worth of complaints that have come through to the consumer side of our ministry.

I will say at the very beginning that if you're offered something that sounds too good to be true, it probably is. So consumers need to be aware that they should not be conned into thinking they're getting something for nothing or getting a special deal without fully investigating it.

In this particular case of people phoning with regard to this 890 area code, the RCMP and the local police were on to this scam very quickly and issued a full alert to consumers and to regulators throughout the province and across Canada.

What we are able to do is to work with the authorities to help warn people against some of these scam artists. We have a consumer information line that we have put in place this year – it actually has had over 80,000 calls to it – where we ask people to call in before you make the commitment. Call in even if you have, and if you need help, we will help you out. It's a toll-free number.

We've been trying to launch more awareness on, again, trying not to be suckered into the deal of: have I got a deal for you. These freebies just are not that. They are scams.

We're working with the authorities, the police – the local police and the RCMP – and other jurisdictions to make awareness out there for consumers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most of my second question has been answered by the minister, so I'll go to my third one, please. Given that these fly-by-night or boiler room operations, as they are commonly known, are using leased office space and can pack up in a flash, what laws are in effect to protect Albertans?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, again we worked hard this last year. As most members will remember, we brought in place a new Fair Trading Act in the province, which puts some meat into the penalties and provided for some protection for consumers. This act has penalties of up to $100,000 and/or two years in jail.

This first year of operation we have actually completed 1,600 investigations under this act under consumer protection, so it is working. We are going to continue to be tough but fair as far as our consumer protection legislation goes.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

School Board Finances

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the government pretends that public education is adequately funded. In fact, they've repeated this fallacy so often that they've actually begun to believe it. While the government's ministers are off touring Poland and Mexico, parents, students, and teachers are left behind back home selling entertainment books and working casinos to try to pay for school basics or just fighting to keep their community school open. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why is the Peace River school board being forced to consider closing up to 10 community schools, including Whitelaw and Nampa, while the government has a $5 billion surplus and enough money for cabinet ministers to tour all over the world at taxpayers' expense?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To start this off, I would just like to say that the hon. member was recently in the Strathmore-Brooks constituency to hear some issues. She stood up here in the Legislature and talked about highway 1 and highway 38. There is no highway 38, and that wasn't even where the intersection was where there were problems. I think this hon. member should take a look around when she is traveling around the province at taxpayers' expense and at least find out what the issues are before she talks about it in the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member has talked about is the issue in Peace River. In Peace River they have some schools where the attendance is down. They are looking at what to do with them. They are looking at possible different explanations as to how they can group their students to give the students the most learning opportunities that they can.

The Department of Learning is about learning opportunities. We have increased the budget this year alone 8.8 percent, and that is money that has gone directly to the school boards. In our business plan, as the hon. member knows, there's a 19 percent increase over the next three years.

Mr. Speaker, I would invite the minister for intergovernmental affairs to comment on travel around the world.

THE SPEAKER: No. We're going to go on.

The hon. member.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Learning. How is it that after waiting nine months for a dyslexia diagnosis at the Glenrose, a Grande Cache family's nine-year-old daughter is placed in a classroom with 33 other students and no special help, yet this government has a $5 billion surplus and a team of ministerial globe-trotters?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, I just wonder what the hon. member's constituents would say when she comes down to Brooks and she doesn't know what is going on. Perhaps she should actually listen when she comes to a meeting. The people in my constituency were asking, "When are we going to be getting highway 38?" because it hasn't been there before.

What the hon. member has asked the question about has to do with the flexibility of the school boards. The school boards are given a grant at this moment for X number of dollars per student. It is up to the school board then how that grant is dished out, how it is done. Mr. Speaker, that is the way it is done. The school board receives the grants. The school board then allocates it out. A class of 33: again, I don't know the individual circumstances, but I'd be more than happy to talk about class size at any time with this hon. member.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you. Will the minister explain, then, how it is that a school in Claresholm has no proper music or physical education programs, a shortage of classrooms, and grades 2 and 6 classes with over 30 students while your government has a $5 billion surplus and enough money for cabinet to take trips to Asia and Europe?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I simply have to comment, and I'll stand on the record of priorities for education and health in this province. I am disappointed in the hon. member opposite, and frankly I am surprised by her comments, because as a person who has sat in this Legislature, as a citizen and a well-educated person, she must understand that 1 in 3 jobs in this province depends on international travel. She must understand that about 80 percent of what we produce in this province is exported. She must understand that the livelihood, the education, the health care of every citizen in this province depends on international trade.

To suggest that any minister travels for any other reason than to sell Alberta and the Alberta advantage does this hon. member disservice. As I said, I am disappointed and certainly expected more knowledge of the importance of international trade in this area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Classroom Sizes

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know teachers play a very important role in the success and development of our children. They strive to ensure that every child is safe, motivated, and challenged. Teachers and parents continue to share with me their concerns about the size of some of the classrooms in local schools, especially in the younger grades. My question is for the Minister of Learning. If we know that smaller class sizes help teachers in delivering the highest quality of education, why do we not set a maximum limit on class sizes?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, that's an absolutely excellent question, and it's great to get such a good question. I have looked at the issue of class size backwards and forwards and every way within. [interjections] If the hon. members across the way would like to hear the answer, perhaps they could be quiet.

I recently received what is called a small-class project which deals with the whole issue of class size. This was the project that was done in Edmonton, and it was dealt with with the $500,000 that we gave to the Edmonton public school system. I will just comment on some of the statements that they have made in this. First of all, what they did is they reviewed the literature around the world. They reviewed the literature on class size. The first comment they make is that in 1998 Jeremy Finn, who had reviewed all the literature, says that he believes that the issues around class size persist because of the, and I quote: powerful commonsense appeal of small classes to alleviate problems indigenous to our classrooms.

They go on further, and they talk about the STAR project. The STAR one was a project in Tennessee that realistically set the tone for what is happening in class size. Upon critiquing the STAR project, a Mr. Hanushek says: the net benefit to achievement was a onetime one-quarter standard deviation improvement in test scores for those kindergarten or first grade children in small classes; although the initial gain was maintained, scores did not continue to improve.

I will go to the Calgary board of education. I believe this is very important. Lytton and Pyryt in 1998 did a study on the Calgary board of education. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, I know that they don't believe Calgary has anything to do with Alberta, but it is extremely important to us. Lytton and Pyryt found that one variable that appeared to have no practical effect on achievement was class size.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, I trust you have copies to table.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental is to the same minister. What is the government doing to reduce class sizes in high-needs schools?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I alluded, we gave $500,000 to the Edmonton public school system to identify this exact issue. To decrease the class size in high-needs schools in grade 1, $500,000 was put into the Edmonton public school system. The results of that were very, very positive.

The bottom line is that when it comes to class size funding, school boards must have the flexibility. They must have the flexibility to do one-on-one teaching. They must have the flexibility to indeed, in some cases, decrease class size. They must have that flexibility.

As a matter of fact, I've spent over the last five days with the School Boards Association and the various school boards around the province, and almost to a T, when posed with that question, they said that they would opt for flexibility as opposed to me enveloping funds and forcing a class size upon them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is the minister's response to parents and teachers who say that current class sizes are affecting the performance of Alberta students?

DR. OBERG: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, when you take a look at our achievement tests, when you take a look at our standings around the world, when you take a look at any parameter that we are measured with with students around the world, what we see is that everything . . .

MRS. SOETAERT: Aren't you going to do anything about class size?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert has asked about class size. Obviously she is not listening to what I'm saying, so perhaps she just could be listening.

Our students have increased significantly over the past three and four years in all aspects of achievement tests. Mr. Speaker, our diploma exams are down slightly this year, but our students in Alberta are getting excellent education and are only improving.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: In 30 seconds, hon. members, I'll call upon the first of three members today to participate in Members' Statements.

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Students Against Drinking and Driving

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity today to congratulate a group of people in my community who believe that youth leadership and a positive attitude are the best methods for saving lives and preventing injuries caused by drinking and driving.

Dedicated to addressing the issues of impaired driving, Students Against Drinking and Driving, or SADD, encourages student awareness of the consequences of driving while under the influence of alcohol. Promoting alternatives to drinking and driving, SADD encourages students not to participate in activities that may end with destructive and often fatal consequences. Instead, SADD chapters work with students all over Canada in an effort to build their confidence and learn how to manage their behaviour in ways that result in safer choices.

Mr. Speaker, recently I had the pleasure of receiving a banner from Students Against Drinking and Driving chapters in the Medicine Hat area. There are currently chapters active at Crescent Heights high school in Medicine Hat and Eagle Butte high school in Dunmore. They presented me with a banner signed by hundreds of students from throughout southeastern Alberta, along with a letter congratulating the government on recent legislative changes. They also encouraged us to continue to support programs aimed at reducing impaired driving.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the use of props in the Legislative Assembly is prohibited by our Standing Orders, so I am unable to display the banner at this time. I would, however, like to thank you and your staff for assisting me in having the banner displayed in an appropriate place in the Legislature Building. This morning I was pleased to have you join me as a photograph was taken. It is my intention to return the banner as well as copies of the photograph to the students at Crescent Heights high school.

I ask all members to join me in extending congratulations to these outstanding students.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Persons with Disabilities

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the things I want to do before I leave this distinguished room, the Legislative Assembly, is get on record the priorities for persons with disabilities, as I see them. This should be of particular interest to the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, the chairman of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, and to the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

Parking. The parking situation has become ridiculous, with a sevenfold increase in placards in recent years. There is a solution that's a no-brainer. The solution is that you have a two-tiered system: wider stalls for wheelchair use only – they would be identified maybe with a red placard – and then family parking for the elderly, expectant mothers, and people with small children, that would be identified with a different-coloured placard, possibly blue.

The building code. The building code has to be revamped. We still have architects and planners in this city who build a wheelchair ramp in front of a handicap parking stall. When you park, you can't get on the sidewalk. Or they design a nice cubicle in the washroom, but the door goes inside instead of out, so when you get in there, you can't close the door behind you. It has to be spelled out in detail for some of them.

Education. What the Minister of Learning did at NorQuest, the learning centre, is good. I toured that the other day, and that concept should be pushed even further.

AISH. I think the minister is reviewing AISH. At least, I hope he is. There is a need for an ongoing review of regulations. Home care: we need sufficient funds for home care because disabled persons, like anybody else, prefer to live in the community instead of an institution.

Employment. There's always a shortage of employment, particularly for persons with very severe disabilities. For somebody like myself, it's not too difficult, but for somebody with a real severe difficulty, it's very difficult.

In that short period of time of two minutes I've spelled out those five as the priorities that have been relayed to me by persons with disabilities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Affordable Housing

MRS. LAING: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. November 22 is national housing strategy day to mark the second anniversary of the meeting of big-city mayors and the caucus of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, which declared homelessness to be a national disaster.

In Calgary the number of homeless people continues to increase. The city of Calgary census of the homeless in May showed an increase of 800 people in spite of the excellent work being done by the Calgary Homeless Foundation, the drop-in centre, the Salvation Army, the Mustard Seed, the Inn from the Cold, and other frontline agencies.

Many people are drawn to Alberta in search of a new way of life due to our vibrant economy and our high employment rate. Mr.

Speaker, they find jobs. What they cannot find are affordable homes. The buildings today being done consist of high-scale condominiums and costly suburban family housing. There's a great need for affordable housing for single men and women, young couples starting out, and low-income families. Today there is an ever increasing number of families and children on the street.

When I attended the national symposium on homelessness held in Toronto, there was a consensus that strong action is necessary by three levels of government and the whole community to address this growing problem. Many initiatives were put forward as possible ways to increase affordable housing. Some suggestions included tax credits for developers and builders, a GST exemption on affordable housing building material, and an easement of municipal zoning bylaws to encourage the creation of secondary suites.

Measures to keep people in their homes once they have found affordable housing would include a range of support services to meet their needs and prevent eviction. This support service could be as simple as a loan of $38 to make up a shortage in their rent or perhaps directing a person to the appropriate agency for assistance with their problems.

Emergency shelters are only stopgaps. They provide a mat to sleep on and a roof over your head, but they're not an adequate form of housing, and when it's time to leave, where do you go?

Homelessness is a growing problem which affects all of us, and an important solution is affordable housing, which requires the efforts of everyone.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on a point of order.

Point of Order

Questions outside Ministerial Responsibility

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The point of order arises from the first set of questions by the Leader of the Official Opposition to the hon. Premier. I think it was the first answer to the first question. There was a surprising intervention by the Provincial Treasurer. Now, the authorities I would cite would be Beauchesne 409(6) and then also, if we look at House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 427. We talk about questions that should not "address a Minister's former portfolio or any other presumed functions."

3:00

I was looking at this grand new seating plan for the Legislative Assembly – I think this has just been redone – and as I look at the list for the bench opposite, I see we have somebody described as the Member for Athabasca-Wabasca, Minister of Resource Development. Then I look down and I see that the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster is designated Provincial Treasurer. Now, I listened carefully, and although I haven't seen the Blues, the question did not relate to anything within the responsibility of the Provincial Treasurer. The response, more surprisingly, would have been perfectly appropriate coming from somebody who was responsible for Resource Development, but what we heard was the Provincial Treasurer speaking about the energy program and the energy policy of the province of Alberta.

I guess my question is this, Mr. Speaker. You've been encouraging us in the short life so far of this fall session to make sure we refer to members by their proper title, but you'll understand if members opposite are a little puzzled, because we're not sure, now, who is going to answer questions for the energy policy of the government of the province of Alberta, if not the Premier. I'm sure that quite apart from whatever embarrassment may be done to the minister who has that responsibility by having his overeager colleague spring to action, it does make it a bit puzzling. I suppose if we're going to allow the Provincial Treasurer to answer and supplement those kinds of questions, then I trust that you will permit me and my colleagues to put questions to such members as we choose rather than those that fall simply within their narrow departmental and portfolio responsibility.

Thank you very much.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Opposition House Leader obviously didn't listen very clearly to the answer of the Provincial Treasurer. He very clearly said, when he got to his feet – I heard him; mind you, I'm sitting quite close – that he was the minister responsible for the power balancing pool. He has responsibility in this area. When the members of the opposition want to raise questions about how Albertans are affected by power rates, that clearly falls into the area of the power balancing pool and very clearly falls into the competence of the Provincial Treasurer to comment on it.

As well, however, members opposite have been straying into other areas relative to that context of energy and how it relates to learning and how it relates to other areas. One of the areas that clearly he had talked about was the effect on Albertans of the government's fiscal policies relative to energy and other areas. The Treasurer is certainly competent to talk about the benefit that Albertans get, the Alberta advantage, which comes from the prudent fiscal management of this province resulting in moneys available to provide for tax relief and for energy tax rebates, which are clearly within the purview and competence of the Provincial Treasurer.

Specifically with respect to that particular question, the Provincial Treasurer provided his grounds of competence to answer the question in his answer to the question.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the point of order raised today by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo was an interesting one, but clearly the response is found in the various rules of the books that we generally follow, Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, and the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo did refer to Beauchesne 409(6).

A question must be within the administrative competence of the Government. The Minister to whom the question is directed is responsible to the House for his or her present Ministry and not for any decisions taken in a previous portfolio.

Generally that's viewed to mean the following: that when a question comes along to the minister asking the minister to review something that's happened in Switzerland, there would be an intervention because that clearly is not within the administrative competence of the government, of this government anyway, in terms of something afar. Generally that's the way we've dealt with it.

Now, more interestingly, though, perhaps it's prudent once in a while to review some of these things. Under "Replies to Oral Questions" in Beauchesne 416:

(1) A Minister may decline to answer a question without stating the reason for refusing, and insistence on an answer is out of order, with no debate being allowed. A refusal to answer cannot be raised as a question of privilege, nor is it regular to comment upon such a refusal. A Member may put a question but has no right to insist upon an answer.

(2) An answer to a question cannot be insisted upon if the answer be refused by the Minister on the ground of the public interest; nor can the question be replaced on the Notice Paper. The refusal of a Minister to answer on this ground cannot be raised as a matter of privilege.

417. Answers to questions should be as brief as possible, deal with the matter raised and should not provoke debate. I like that rule.

418. The Speaker has stated, "Hon. Members may not realize it but questions are actually put to the Government. The Government decides who will answer."

Questions do not go to ministers. They go to ministers as members of a government.

419. The Prime Minister answers for the government as a whole and is entitled to answer any question relating to any ministerial portfolio and matter of policy. Likewise, the Prime Minister is entitled to delegate this responsibility to the Deputy Prime Minister even when the Prime Minister is present in the House.

420. The Speaker has stated, "Of course, the Chair will allow a question to be put to a certain Minister; but it cannot insist that that Minister rather than another should answer it."

Then, interestingly enough, in that excellent book called House of Commons Procedure and Practice, which certainly both House leaders have and which the chair would like to advise both House leaders that the chair regularly spends Saturday mornings reviewing, the chair would simply like to draw to the attention of all hon. members – I believe this is on page 432:

Questions, although customarily addressed to specific Ministers, are directed to the Ministry as a whole. It is the prerogative of the government to designate which Minister responds to which question. The Prime Minister (or the Deputy Prime Minister or any other Minister acting on behalf of the Prime Minister) may respond to any or all questions posed during Question Period. Only one Minister may respond to a question, and it need not be the one to whom the question is addressed who actually answers it. A different Minister may, under certain circumstances, reply to a supplementary question. The Speaker has no authority to compel a particular Minister to respond to a question.

Okay. The bottom line is this. In the order of precedence that we have in this House – and this has been utilized before – it's the chair's understanding that the Provincial Treasurer in fact acts first in the order of precedence after the Premier. So that would, in essence, be akin to something coming out of Beauchesne and the Canadian House of Commons saying that one would be the Prime Minister, i.e. the first minister, and the other one would be the Deputy Prime Minister, or the second minister. Clearly, in the order of precedence that would provide the hon. Provincial Treasurer to supplement an answer.

Secondly, in hearing the first question – and the chair did pay particular attention to it – one could almost argue that because it had to do with electricity, had to do with the fiscal side, the economic side, it would be rather normal for the Provincial Treasurer to supplement if there was something worthy to supplement or add to the question at hand.

Now, very specifically to you, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Should the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo or any other member in this House choose to direct a question to any member of Executive Council and it is not within the administrative purview of the particular minister – as an example, if an hon. member wanted to address a question with respect to education but directed it to the Minister of Community Development as a kind of a pesky, you know, testy little thing to be mischievous, well, it would be quickly reported by all the media in the world that the hon. member who had directed the question had not done their homework and was unable to ascertain which particular minister of Executive Council was responsible particularly.

So it's a sharp-edged sword that cuts both ways. The bottom line is: if we address the questions to who is normally the minister of the department responsible for it, other ministers from time to time are in a position to supplement. In the case of the order of precedence that we all follow in this particular House, it would not be uncommon for the Provincial Treasurer, who is first on the list in the order of precedence after the Premier, to be in a position to supplement, if we in fact abide by the rules found in other parliaments in the country of Canada. So it was worthy of discussion today, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Thank you very much.

Bill 210

Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate November 20: Mrs. Gordon]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to rise and speak in second reading on Bill 210, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2000. I carefully read Hansard of the member who proposed the bill as well as Hansard of the several members who have spoken since then.

This is an interesting bill, because I think people, myself included, have a varied reaction to what's being proposed. When I first thought of this in my personal experience, certainly drunk drivers cause fatalities, but they also cause life-changing, lifelong injury. The fatality has a terrible effect on the members of their families and their friends who are left behind: perhaps office workers, business associates, friends at school, et cetera. But to me, certainly where my personal experience is, injuries caused by drunk drivers that don't result in fatalities also have a lifelong effect on family and friends and neighbours and coworkers and friends at school.

There is a story like that in my family. We had a family member who was driving from Regina to Saskatoon late at night. They were still feeling pretty good after a day of meetings and thought they'd drive back that evening. The roads should be fairly empty. A young person, who was well over the limit for blood alcohol and was driving the wrong way down one way of the dual carriageway, plowed into my family member and left them with lifelong injuries, multiple leg fractures which resulted in the person having to walk with a cane for the rest of their life. Essentially the side mirror came through and hit them in the face, as a result of the driver hitting them. Their jaw was rearranged and all of their teeth – there were extensive multiple operations to try and rebuild the teeth and the jaw – and they lost an eye.

I think drunk drivers have an effect on everybody in our society. Certainly the groups like MADD and PAID – and I think there's a student version of this as well – have been absolutely right and quite successful in publicizing the effects of drunk driving on our society. Those campaigns are often referred to by people as being successful, and I think the reduction that we can see in the fatalities and injuries caused by impaired drivers is obvious. They have contributed to this being less acceptable. Drinking and driving is less acceptable in society.

Just to return briefly to finishing this story, I think certainly the effect it had on my family member and on the rest of the family is that this person used to drive a lot. They really liked to get in the car and drive to Montana or drive down east, and with those kinds of injuries they sustained, that just isn't a possibility anymore. I think flying is not in a budgetary realm of possibilities, so that's pretty much curtailed that sort of traveling. This person was very active, did a lot of volunteering, very active with the church, continued to work a number of different consulting positions, and this has really affected their ability to do that. You know, when you're not steady on your pins because of an injury, you don't really like to be out at night when it's dark. We live in a northern climate here, so we are dealing with icy roads and icy sidewalks. It's scary for somebody that has suffered that kind of an injury.

As I said, they were dealing with Saskatchewan insurance laws, which I frankly don't understand, and I gather that this young driver had been arrested before for impaired driving, in fact had lost their licence and was driving that night without a licence. Something happened with the insurance, something about a fund that's set aside for uninsured drivers, and you know, by the time the smoke cleared, this injury cost my family a lot of money because the amount of money that came out of that pool nowhere near covered the trips of family members from Alberta into Saskatchewan to be with this person in the hospital, and there had to be several of them. They were in the hospital for about three months, and that tells you the extent of their injuries.

So it's a terrible blight on our society. I really, truly detest drunks, and I detest drunken drivers. I just have no time or patience. There is no reason for anybody to be truly impaired and to get behind the wheel of a vehicle. There just isn't. Frankly, they deserve everything they get.

Now, I look at the member's own figures that I took from Hansard, and I've noticed something. Maybe the member will have time to answer what's going on here. In her own figures she notes that of the fatalities caused by drunk drivers, 62 percent were over 15 percent, or .15, we would call it, 22 percent were between .081 and .15, and 16 percent were somewhere between .001 and .08. So somehow in there the percentage of fatalities that are created by lowering the acceptable blood alcohol content from .08 to .05 is a little hazy. It looks like it's less than 16 percent.

What else could society be doing or could we be doing as legislators to cut down on the amount of fatalities and injuries from impaired drivers? Leaving aside the responsibility of the impaired driver, let's look at what else we could be doing to discourage that and to make roadways safer.

I think there's still work that could be done around highway and road maintenance and highway and road design. I'm sure we all have our piece of highway – I'm sorry; I don't. But many of the members that have ridings outside of the metropolitan areas most likely have a little stretch of highway that's a killer. Everybody in the area knows it, and they refer to it with some sort of nickname that indicates that. So there are things that we could be doing to improve highway maintenance and design that would cut down on some of those injuries. I've also had it pointed out that in some cases highway signage would reduce this.

Now, what else could we be doing? How could we be affecting people more to not even consider drinking and driving? I look at funding for the DARE programs. I know that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and at least one of my other colleagues have lobbied the Minister of Justice for increased funds to pay for the training of DARE officers. That budget hasn't increased by that much. There's some astronomical waiting list of schools and of grade 6 classes in Alberta that really want to have a DARE program, and there aren't enough people trained in Alberta to be able to go around and fill that demand. So there's another area where we could be doing something very constructive by putting enough funding into that program to train enough police officers to, in fact, be going out and giving those DARE programs to every grade 6 class in Alberta. What's wrong with that?

I also think we should look at the funding for AADAC. They've been reducing the amount of money available for AADAC, and that's a rate of recidivism that we're worried about there. If people have already acknowledged that they have an alcohol abuse problem, then what are we doing to get them out of that permanently? I would say that we should look for funding for AADAC and please quit cutting it.

When I look at the province's own traffic safety in Alberta statistics, I note that "of all drivers involved in fatal collisions 22.8% had consumed alcohol before the crash." It doesn't give us the level of their blood alcohol content. "Of all drivers involved in injury collisions 5.6% had consumed alcohol before the crash." This opens another whole discussion. I do wonder sometimes. We've made it so easy to get alcohol. I think there is personal responsibility to be . . . [interjection] Yeah, I hear what the Member for Edmonton-Highlands is saying, and that's why I'm struggling with it. This government certainly leads the way in sort of putting intrusive legislation on people to stop them from having that leeway to make their own bad decision.

I guess because I grew up in an Alberta society that was heavily permeated by Social Credit doctrine and where everything was very carefully regulated - but why do we have to buy alcohol at 2 o'clock in the morning? Why do we have to buy alcohol on Sunday? I guess that's just personal responsibility. It's not for me to say that other people shouldn't be buying it. They can buy it if they want to. I guess I just would choose not to.

Part of what concerns me about this legislation - and I've talked a lot about the positive sides of it. What essentially bothers me about the legislation is that I think we run the risk of making criminals out of decent Albertans. We all understand what .08 is, where the impaired level is for ourselves. I know that that's one drink and no more for me, that I'm well under. I don't know what the blood alcohol content would be for me if it was lowered to .05. I might be a criminal. Are we then saying, "Don't drink and drive, period, ever," that no alcohol passes your lips even if it's five hours later?

I looked at the factors, and this is again from some great, long paper. To estimate blood alcohol content, knowledge of certain factors is required. These may include: sex; age; height; weight; consumption start time and stop time; pattern of drinking; type of alcohol consumed including number of drinks, size and alcohol content; time for which [the blood alcohol content] is being calculated (or BAC value(s) detected if a retrograde or antero-grade extrapolation is required); times meals eaten; disease states; any medications that were taken.

That's a whole whack of stuff to try and figure out.

So I'm wondering if what the member is trying to propose here is that no one should ever drink and get behind the wheel of a car, and if that's what being suggested, then is there a sort of time line that goes along with this? I don't want to see a regulation come in that is hard for Albertans to figure out and as a result we criminalize average Albertans unnecessarily.

Again, I started out by saying that I've got no patience for truly impaired people, for drunks that kill or hurt people on the road. I just don't have any time for it. But I found that with the work of groups like MADD and PAID, understanding societally was improving and that everybody sort of knew where .08 was. I don't think they know where .05 is. I don't want to see that done to average Albertans.

I'm looking forward to the rest of the debate on this bill because

I really am undecided about whether to support it or not. I think the intent behind it's really good. I think that a lot of work has been done by the member to come to that point, but I think there are a lot of things to consider there: whether in fact this is the right level to set, what educational campaigns will be put in place for people, whether they get the kind of education about that list of stuff that they're supposed to keep in mind that I read into the record, whether we are really going to make a significant reduction in the numbers of fatalities and injuries when we're dealing with the fairly narrow band of percentages that I went over earlier. Somewhere under 16 percent of the people that have had impaired accidents in the past would be captured by this legislation. So a number of questions and concerns there.

I'm sure everybody in here has got a personal experience with this. Everybody is uneasy about the amount of drinking and driving that goes on and, I think, frankly, about the amount of wildly impaired driving that goes on still. I look forward to the rest of the debate, because I haven't made up my mind on this one yet.

Thank you for the opportunity to raise the points that I did raise.

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, there are individuals who are listening to this debate outside of the Assembly. I want to assure them that I will try to speak slowly and clearly and articulate my phrases, but should I get carried away and go on too quickly, they should know that they can always read the remarks in Hansard, that they will be put into the record that way, and I would encourage them to do that.

Also, Mr. Speaker, referring to your earlier comments, I just wanted to pass on a remark to you about when you were ruling on the previous point of order. That certainly was a magniloquent speech. That was a magniloquent speech. You see, in our household we try to increase our vocabulary. My kids will want to know that I used that word in the speech today, so I can show them in Hansard that in fact I used it. The other day I used another term, "pleonastic questioning."

It is a pleasure today to stand in the Assembly, Mr. Speaker, and to add to the debate on private member's Bill 210, presented by my colleague representing Calgary-Fish Creek. I want to commend the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek because I think she understands the importance of private members' bills in our Legislature. Alberta in the last years has actually had quite a number of private members' bills pass through all the stages and in fact become incorporated into legislation. I think that's a significant improvement to the parliamentary tradition that has kind of evolved here in Alberta.

She's also recognized one other very important point in drafting a private member's bill, and that is that you have to keep it short and specific and to the point to advance a particular cause. That is exactly what she has done. The previous speaker referred to a number of different suggestions that would be helpful in terms of addressing the whole problem with drinking and driving and too much consumption and access and the DARE program, but, Mr. Speaker, that is not what this bill is all about. If you would incorporate all of those suggestions into a private member's bill, the possibility of it actually passing through this Assembly would be greatly diminished.

In fact, what the member has suggested - and I'm reading right out of the bill - is that if a peace officer, by reason of an analysis of the breath or blood of the driver of a motor vehicle, has reasonable and probable grounds to believe that the driver has consumed alcohol in such a quantity that the concentration of alcohol in that person's blood exceeds 50 milligrams of alcohol in 100 millilitres of blood, the peace officer shall require the driver to surrender the driver's operator's licence to the peace officer.

Mr. Speaker, I think that's pretty clear in terms of what the intention here is.

For a long time in this Assembly I have been an advocate of taking preventative measures to eliminate or to reduce motor vehicle accidents. Some members will recall that in 1995, in fact, Bill 212, the Motor Vehicle Administration Amendment Act, proposed that Alberta institute a form of graduated licensing to allow new drivers to gain driving experience under the safest possible conditions. I'm proud that that initiative passed, received royal assent, and in fact will become part of the Traffic Safety Act. The purpose of that initiative was to save lives in Alberta, and the initiative from the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has the same goal. Bill 210 proposes to take action and to be proactive on an issue that poses a great threat to the safety and health of Albertans, and that is accidents that are caused by impaired drivers.

Mr. Speaker, our police need tools to protect society from impaired drivers and especially hard-core drinkers who are resistant to change. Statistics indicate that it is not the younger people now who are the repeat offenders of our impaired driving laws. It is the older drivers, who are into a lifestyle, a bad habit, and are finding it difficult to change.

My colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek shares my concern for traffic safety in Alberta and rightfully so when one considers the statistics. In 1998, 1 in 5 drivers involved in fatal collisions had consumed alcohol. To make matters worse, as the severity of the collision increased, from nonfatal to fatal, the involvement of alcohol also dramatically increased.

Mr. Speaker, I see my time is up, and I will be glad to continue my debate on the morrow.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South has interrupted himself. It is now 3:30. We must move on to the other remaining business we have scheduled for today.

Labour Legislation Review

513. Mr. Fischer moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to re-examine Alberta's existing Labour Relations Code and Public Service Employee Relations Act and propose recommendations for their improvement, particularly with respect to collective bargaining agreements.

[Debate adjourned November 14: Mr. Severtson speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. SEVERTSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to speak on Motion 513, sponsored by my hon. colleague from Wainwright. I want to thank him for bringing forth a motion on collective bargaining in Alberta.

This can be a controversial issue to discuss in this Legislature, but it doesn't mean we shouldn't talk about it. By engaging in a reasoned discussion of issues surrounding collective bargaining and labour relations, we further our understanding, and from this we may be laying a solid foundation for policy down the road. I think, as well, that the fact the hon. Member for Wainwright is bringing forward a motion at this time shows his willingness to support labour and a good labour relationship climate in Alberta during this time of prosperity. As the member stated, we are always looking at ways of doing things better, and if there are better methods for collective bargaining in Alberta, then we're willing to discuss them and potentially implement them.

Mr. Speaker, we also want to discuss any changes we are making with the relevant stakeholders involved. We want to hear what employers, unions, and workers are saying about the possible changes. It's through this consultation that good policy benefiting all Albertans is made. I respect the message that he's conveying to the House, that collective bargaining does not have to be a lose/lose or does not have to be a win/lose but in fact can be a win/win situation.

I'd like to spend a few moments replying to the comments by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, because I really think that he's confused on a few points. First and foremost, this motion is about strengthening the collective bargaining process and the labour climate in Alberta, and if you read the comments by my colleague from Wainwright, you'll see this. Mr. Speaker, this motion applies equally to all workers in the province. It asks the government to look for alternatives that will improve the collective bargaining process for everyone in Alberta.

I'd also like to mention that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar stated that there had been only one strike involving teachers since 1972. Well, I'd like to clarify for him – I have a list – that from 1971 to 2000 there were about 25 strikes or lockouts and then mention a few of them: Sherwood Park in 1990, Calgary in 1980, '91, and '92, and Battle River in '92. I find it humorous that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar would skew the intention of the motion for this political purpose. It's almost like he didn't listen to what my colleagues had to say, because if he had listened, he would know that Motion 513 is balanced and is in the interests of all Albertans, all employees and employers. We have a good system in place right now and a fair, stable relationship climate. There are areas that need to be examined, and that is what we have done in this debate.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to discuss the positives of our system, because there are many. You wouldn't know it from listening to the opposition, but things are going all right in Alberta. In 1999 Alberta lost 1.23 person-days per 10,000 person-days of work due to strikes and lockouts. This is the second lowest rate in Canada, after Prince Edward Island. This very low rate was accomplished through relationship building with key industry stakeholders. Again, who better to consult about a fair workplace than those people involved in it every day? This means asking both sides of the workplace, employers and workers, what they think is good and what they think could be changed. A balanced approach has led to stability and a low work-stoppage rate, which is good for all Albertans. We are committed to a safe, fair, productive, and innovative workplace in Alberta, and by and large we have laid the groundwork for this.

I think the Minister of Human Resources and Employment should take a lot of credit for creating this environment. Under his leadership Alberta has seen a stable and growing workforce. In this time of growth and expansion in our economy a productive, harmonized labour climate is vital. With 1.5 million Albertans currently employed and 33,600 new jobs created over the first nine months of 2000 alone, it is something we have to keep striving for.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

It should be noted that Alberta enjoys the strongest productivity growth in Canada, the highest level of productivity of all the provinces, but, Mr. Speaker, there are many areas where we can do things better. I'm committed to the collective bargaining process. At all times it is better for the parties to come to some settlement at the table themselves as a community-based solution. Bargaining in good faith is always better for the labour relationship climate than imposing settlements. When settlements are imposed, both sides come away from the process feeling cheated, even if that was not the case.

Mr. Speaker, I think every member of this Assembly has had at one time or another a potential for work stoppage in his constituency, and I also bet you that the vast majority of those potential work stoppages were resolved before a strike or lockout occurred. So there was the potential, but it was avoided. Now, the point I think my colleague wanted to make and one that I wholeheartedly agree with is that even though there was no work stoppage, the damage was already done. Both sides participating in contract negotiations came away from the process feeling stressed out, feeling pushed around, and feeling ripped off. The zero-sum nature of contract negotiation creates an environment of mistrust and stress. Tell me: is it the basis for a peaceful and productive work climate in the future when you have employees feeling disempowered by the process? Are they going to be happy, efficient members of a team down the road? No, of course not.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is not the case in every contract negotiation that occurs in Alberta, but it is the case in some. So if we can somehow improve the process of these high-stress negotiations and create a more productive environment, one that's positive and that labour relations can be built from, isn't that an improvement and isn't it good for the province? I think it is.

A reasonable solution to bargaining is what workers in this province want, and on the part of this government we are committed to the collective bargaining process. We respect that process, and we support agreements reached at local levels as opposed to anything forced. The interest-based bargaining method my colleague discussed may be one such solution for certain cases that arise. As my colleague stated, the most important aspect of interest-based bargaining is that both sides share information about their interests and concerns. They create a menu of possible solutions to their concerns and work to achieve solutions that best meet everybody's needs.

Brainstorming is an important tool in creating an environment of free-flowing exchange. Participants are encouraged to consider each other's ideas and to build on each other's thoughts. This builds a positive environment from which negotiations can flow. Now, to me this sounds like a much better premise to build a contract and a viable future than a high-stress, winner-take-all environment.

Mr. Speaker, it may be asking too much to believe that negotiators from both sides during bargaining would all play fair and share each other's secrets and agenda. In my opinion, interest-based bargaining is not a panacea for unhealthy labour/management relationships, and it shouldn't be viewed as a replacement for the adversarial bargaining which all parties must embrace, but there are times when it can work. I know for a fact that interest-based bargaining is being successfully used across the United States, in states with diverse labour relations environments like Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Arizona, to name a few. In the Iowa public school system, where there are three counties with historically strained labour/management relationships, interest-based bargaining has led to a new environment of trust and a new way of dealing with grievances. In the words of one Iowa teacher: "People used to fear the adversarial approach. With the interest-based approach, it's much easier."

I know, as well, that interest-based bargaining was used during a contract negotiation by the Ottawa Citizen newspaper and its employees to come to a successful agreement. The guild, one of Canada's largest media unions, with more than 7,000 members in television, radio, and print, represented the employees. The union newsletter reported: interest-based bargaining produces speedy pact in Ottawa. They also reported that negotiators still had to tread carefully, but there was no question there was less stress and tension during the bargaining. As well, the League of Educational Administrators, Directors and Superintendents of Saskatchewan have expressed interest in using this process. Large companies like Intel and IBM have adopted some form of open-door dispute resolution and have reported an improved labour climate.

Mr. Speaker, the alternatives my colleague from Wainwright has proposed are not just theoretical. They have worked in the real world. What has worked so well for people in other parts of North America may work here, and we should be open to this possibility.

I want to close by reiterating that we have a pretty good system currently in place in Alberta. We know this from statistics I mentioned earlier: having the second lowest person-day loss due to work stoppages in this country and having the highest level of productivity in Canada; the fact that we have an employment standards call centre that has sent information to more than 150,000 employers and employees across the province on the interpretation and application of the Employment Standards Code each year; the youth employment strategy, offering young people the opportunity to acquire skills and knowledge for career planning. All these initiatives have created a skilled, productive, and knowledgeable workforce, which in my opinion is also vital to labour relations. Having a top-notch, informed labour force means that good decisions have been made by negotiators in resolving disputes.

As I stated in my comments today, there have been cases where the process has broken down, and the outcome in these cases was less than optimal. The labour relations climate was damaged, and it has taken years, in some cases, to repair it and get back to the viable framework of peace. Mr. Speaker, we have seen cases where using an alternative like the interest-based bargaining method has produced positive results. I say to my colleagues, in asking them to support this motion, that we should put two and two together and realize that there are cases where the process has broken down and that if there's a method that may be used to avoid a breakdown, why shouldn't we use it in Alberta? That is what this motion is about: looking at alternatives and making the process work better.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands in the few minutes remaining.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was trained for 11 years in city council to speak in five-minute periods, so this may be my opportunity, and perhaps other members could learn from this example as well.

I appreciate the hon. member's motion that he's put forward calling for a review. I guess I would say first of all, Mr. Speaker, that there's nothing that is wrong per se with looking at interest-based bargaining, but I also feel that given the government's record in this matter, there's cause for some concern since the motion is not worded in a way that deals strictly with an examination of interest-based bargaining but is designed to have a complete, open, and unencumbered review of our labour legislation in this province. The previous times that the government has looked at labour legislation, we've always ended up, at least from the point of view of workers, with a worse situation than when we started. That is, I guess, what the concern is on my part.

It may interest one of the ministers to know that not only was I involved in a power company making decisions but also involved on the management side in a number of labour discussions and negotiations. I found that one of the things that happens most often is that one of the parties loses patience with the adversarial collective bargaining system, and they begin to believe that it won't produce results in the end. We saw that, I think, a couple of times.

Once I was involved on the Library Board when we were dealing with our employees there in a negotiation. They were difficult negotiations, Mr. Speaker, and they went on for some time. It was clear on the part of some members of the administration of the library and indeed some members of the Library Board that they lost patience and gave up and just believed that there was no alternative to either a strike or a lockout. Those of us who believed in the collective bargaining system persevered and went the extra mile to review the various demands in the negotiations again and again, and we eventually came to an agreement that was beneficial to both parties, and that was using the existing system that we have here.

I had a similar experience in the city of Edmonton when we dealt with negotiations around our DATS drivers, our disabled adult transportation system drivers. They were difficult again, Mr. Speaker, and again there were people that wanted to give up on the collective bargaining system and not see it through to produce the results that it's completely capable of reaching. In the end, those of us who insisted that we continue the negotiations succeeded in getting an agreement that gave those drivers their first collective agreement at considerably less cost to the city than was originally projected by our administration. So I think the first thing I'd like to say is that it can work.

The second thing that I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, is that there are a number of things I would like to see from the government in terms of improving collective bargaining legislation before I'm willing to support a motion like this that could in fact open the door to right-to-work legislation right after the next provincial election. That's what the fear is. It definitely is the fear I have.

There's no recognition of the right to strike in this province. There's no protection against the use of replacement workers. Mr. Speaker, I think we should be extending prorated benefits to part-time and casual workers, equivalent to those that are provided to full-time workers. We should be extending employment standards, health and safety, and workers' compensation legislation to farms and ranches employing three or more workers. If the government is willing to do those kinds of things, then I think we would be prepared to look at some sort of review, but the kinds of reviews that have been done in the past have certainly prejudiced workers' rights.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Under Standing Order 8(4) I must put all questions to conclude debate on the motion.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:50 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Motion Other than Government Motion 513 carried]

Pension Reform

514. Mr. Hlady moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to examine its future in the Canada pension plan or explore other options, including a made-in-Alberta pension plan or a mandatory personal retirement savings plan.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to bring forward Motion 514 for the consideration of the Legislative Assembly. I would like to begin today, Mr. Speaker, by explaining the rationale behind this motion. I must emphasize that this motion does not call for Alberta to opt out of the Canada pension plan immediately. It does not necessarily call for Alberta to opt out of the Canada pension plan at all. What it does do is acknowledge that the current state of the CPP represents an extremely urgent issue that warrants a high level of preparedness on the part of our government.

To give some sense of the magnitude of the problem, I can tell you that one 1999 survey revealed that fully 76 percent of all Canadians believe they will receive either a smaller Canada pension than those retiring today or else no Canada pension at all. I happen to share that concern, and I know that many of my colleagues do as well, if not for themselves then certainly for their children and grandchildren.

Now, I don't think it comes as a surprise to anyone in this House that the future stability of the Canada pension plan is in serious doubt, but to really understand why the security of our retirement savings is so precarious, we must understand the nature of the CPP. The CPP was established in 1966 as a mandatory, earnings-related pension plan. Unfortunately, it was also established according to a pay-as-you-go, or pay-go, formula. Under this formula the CPP is largely unfunded because the benefits paid to current retirees are financed not by the permanent assets of the plan but by the contributions of current employees. This means that the CPP is currently liable for an estimated $465 billion in future benefit payments.

MR. MAGNUS: How much?

MR. HLADY: An estimated $465 billion, while it actually only has $36.5 billion in assets on hand. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it does not take a genius or even an economist to figure out that a pay-go system is only viable as long as the funds entering the system in contributions are greater than or equal to those being paid out in benefits.

Unfortunately, this has not been the case for the CPP since 1992. As a result of changing demographics, the gradual expansion of survivor and disability benefits, and the indexing of the plan to changes in the annual cost of living, the Canada pension plan now pays out far more than it takes in. For example, in 1996, 10 million working Canadians contributed approximately $11 billion to the CPP. However, that same year 3 million Canadians drew almost $17 billion in benefits. It's plainly obvious that this type of situation will not be sustainable for very long.

The CPP was designed to have a small reserve fund on hand to cover two years' worth of benefit payments, but this has not been sufficient to avert the imminent collapse of the system. In 1995 the person responsible for overseeing the CPP, the chief actuary of the office of the superintendent of financial institutions, issued a stern and sobering warning. He predicted that unless substantial changes to the CPP were made, the plan would be completely exhausted by the year 2015. That's just over 14 years from now.

In response to the chief actuary's dire prediction a series of reforms to the CPP were enacted in 1997. The CPP reserve fund was expanded to provide five years of protection, and an independent investment board was established to manage the reserve and invest it in market instruments other than low-yield provincial bonds. In addition, it is planned that premium deductions will be increased from their '97 levels of 5.6 percent to a new fixed rate of 9.9 percent by 2003. At the same time, the basic annual exemption for CPP contributions has been frozen at $3,500. Finally, the formula for calculating pensions was changed in order to make them more comparable to earnings at the time of retirement.

However, it is quite possible that these 1997 reforms to the Canada pension plan will not be sufficient to avert the impending disaster. For instance, William Robson, a senior policy analyst with the C.D. Howe Institute, has seriously questioned whether the new 9.9 percent contribution rate can be sustained. He has concluded that better funding, sound investments by the CPP investment board, and a mixture of good luck and good management may – I say may – allow the 9.9 percent rate to be maintained. However, it could go much higher. To quote Mr. Robson: even the best outcome in these areas will leave a substantial share of CPP premiums for younger workers. This is effectively a tax on the younger workers today. That's the fundamental of it. He goes on to point out that even this admittedly grim best case scenario is not likely to occur.

So with the future of the Canada pension plan increasingly in doubt, it seems only prudent to explore the possibility of opting out while there is still time. Whatever form a new pension plan or a mandatory RSP might take, it would have numerous and significant advantages over the current system. Mr. Speaker, while in my next few pages I speak mainly in regards to an Alberta pension plan, a lot of this would also affect an MRSP.

First, the new plan would maintain many of the positive features of the Canada pension plan while abandoning many of its liabilities. The new plan would still be universal, applying to all Alberta workers. It would still be portable, with contributions able to be retained whether a worker changes employers or even moves to another province. However, the new plan would be far more actuarially sound than the old CPP with its legacy of inefficiency and financial mismanagement.

This government already has a proven record of fiscal responsibility and appropriate delegation of authority to independent entities. These methods of governance would surely serve an Alberta pension plan very well. It is also likely that the benefits provided by an Alberta pension plan could be designed more accurately to reflect the unique needs and demographic circumstances of Albertans.

These benefits would also be much more responsive to changing economic trends and priorities.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, an Alberta pension plan would be much more fair to Alberta contributors. In 1996 residents of this province contributed over $2 billion to the Canada pension plan while drawing only $1.6 billion in benefits. Alberta is the only province in this country where contributions exceed the benefits that they receive back. In other words, people in the rest of the country pay an average of 92 cents for every dollar of benefits received, while Albertans pay $1.27. University of Calgary political scientist Tom Flanagan has described the situation in somewhat more colourful terms. He said: Alberta is getting hosed. I'll leave it up to the Members of the Legislative Assembly to do the math for themselves, and I'm sure they'll agree.

We should also not overlook the important sense of ownership that an Alberta pension plan would bring to the citizens of this province. In poll after poll Canadians indicate that they feel a great deal of frustration and resentment when making CPP contributions because they are perceived as nothing more than another tax. The inner workings and management of the plan in Ottawa are so complex and obscure that many people do not think of CPP contributions as an investment in their future quality of life. They view it as an encumbrance or duty, and therefore it undermines the core value of trying to plan for one's future financial independence. That's the whole purpose of doing this in the first place. However, if Albertans felt that the pension plan was run by and for them, it could make a huge difference in their attitude towards making contributions and their feelings about having a successful future.

Our government has always had a strong commitment to openness and accountability in these matters. This positive record would only increase the level of public confidence in the plan. In short, an Alberta pension plan could potentially be seen as more legitimate and reliable than the current CPP.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of additional reasons why an independent, made-in-Alberta plan or MRSP should at least be considered. It is true that opting out of the CPP would not be easy. If substantive changes were to be made, the move would require the approval of two-thirds of the provinces in Canada representing two-thirds of the population of the country. However, despite the difficulty of opting out, it might be easier now than at any point in the future.

There are two reasons for this. First, it is unlikely that the current Ontario government would oppose the move, given its traditional ideological affinity with our government. There is no guarantee that this would be the case under future Ontario governments and certainly isn't today, which would essentially have a veto on this issue by virtue of Ontario's large population.

Secondly, it is now relatively clear what Alberta's share of current CPP assets are. This is because any cash surpluses contributed by Albertans are now invested in provincial bonds. However, with the CPP intending to expand its reserve fund in the next few years and invest it in the open market, it will soon become quite unclear which of these investments belong to Alberta and which do not. If Alberta is to opt out of the CPP, we should consider doing it now or very soon, when assets and obligations are relatively clear, rather than later, when they may not be.

There's one last reason why I believe that the government of Alberta should consider opting out of the Canada pension plan. It is a very intriguing reason. If Alberta is seen to be vigorously pursuing a credible, realistic alternative to the CPP, it is possible that this would spur the federal government into implementing meaningful and effective reforms to the CPP.

In 1998 the then Provincial Treasurer, Stockwell Day, developed and released a set of seven reasonable principles upon which such reforms could be based, which we put forward as a provincial government to the federal government. The first principle was to preserve the universality and full portability of the CPP. That is an objective that I think we can all agree with.

The second was to establish a reliable base for CPP funding that would minimize the intergenerational transfer of debt. To me this would seem to suggest the desirability of some kind of fully funded pension system. Under this type of system retirement benefits would be paid out of an individual's own lifetime savings rather than draining the savings of current contributors.

Third, the Provincial Treasurer proposed that there should be a readily discernible relationship between what contributors pay into the plan and what they take out in the end. Once again, this seems to me to be very fair, Mr. Speaker, a commonsense proposition.

Fourth, it was suggested that mandatory contribution rates should leave room for individual private savings initiatives. This is a clear recognition of the fact that while it is necessary to have a universal mandatory pension plan, each individual is really in the best position to determine his or her own retirement needs. Should one invest in bonds, stocks, mutual funds, or GICs? How many risks should one take? What would be an adequate retirement income? These are all decisions best left to the individual, and any well-designed government pension plan should not impinge upon the ability to make those decisions.

The fifth principle is that individuals and employers should have the ability, where appropriate, to develop equivalent or superior benefit packages.

Sixth, all generations should in some way share in the costs of dealing with the current CPP's problems. Other jurisdictions have undertaken a similar approach when dealing with the transition from one pension system to another. This often involves the issue of some kind of recognition bonds that acknowledge contributions under the old plan and can be invested into the new one.

The seventh and final principle proposed by Alberta was that the Canada pension plan's governance should be made more cohesive and accountable. Once again, this is simply common sense, Mr. Speaker.

In fact, it seems to me, as I'm sure it does to many of my colleagues, that these seven principles would be an excellent foundation on which to build a stable, secure retirement savings plan here in Alberta. If the exploration and examination suggested in this motion cause the federal government to reform the existing CPP along these lines, I'm sure that most of us would be completely satisfied. However, if Ottawa does not respond to our investigation in a responsible manner, these same principles could be used to form the basis of an Alberta pension plan.

In other words, the motion I am sponsoring here today does not advocate the abandonment of existing government policy, nor does it necessarily propose the abandonment of the CPP. It simply recognizes that the strongest position for Alberta to be in is to have fully considered all of our options and to be fully prepared to take any course of action necessary to preserve the retirement savings of our citizens.

I hope I've made it clear by now that the Canada pension plan is in serious trouble. I hope that I've also made the case that some type of Alberta pension plan or a mandatory RSP would have certain advantages over the current system. These advantages would include better management, more secure investments, more individual control, and a genuine sense of ownership. Our serious consideration of opting out might even convince the federal government to reform the existing CPP in line with Alberta's proposals.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge all of my colleagues to support Motion 514. We must take action now to preserve both our retirement savings and those of the future generations.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have the opportunity to speak to Motion 514, a made-in-Alberta pension plan. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View may be a decent fellow, but he keeps coming up with these harebrained schemes that he brings into the Legislature that are completely unsupportable when you take a look at them in detail. [interjection] Well, maybe not harebrained. [interjection] Well, let's talk about that alleged Liberal scheme in Ottawa.

In fact, if you take a look at when the CPP got into the greatest degree of difficulty in this country, it was under a Conservative government. In the last few years the federal government has taken some significant steps in terms of rectifying the issues that are there in a process of reform for the CPP in order to ensure that there is a future sustainability and to stabilize contribution rates. [interjections] In fact, all this chirping that we hear right now, Mr. Speaker, does not speak to the position that their own government has taken.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, the long and true tradition of the House is that only one member is speaking at a time, and right now the only member that's been recognized is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. If you don't like what she's saying, then you have in your turn an opportunity to get up and refute whatever arguments she might put forward.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member who introduced this particular motion likes on occasion to engage in fear mongering, which is what we have with this motion that has come to the floor of the Legislature. That's exactly what has happened. On the one hand, he's saying how bad the plan is and how it's going to crash and burn. On the other hand, his own Provincial Treasurer since 1997 has been working with the federal government along with the rest of the provinces in terms of coming forward with plans that are addressing the situation. It's in progress, and it's working quite well.

What this member wants in addition to the fear mongering and in addition to just sending up trial balloons, that are really unsustainable when you take a look at them, are three layers of pension plans in this province. He just finished saying that his discussion is not about abandoning the CPP, but what it is about for sure is a double kind of system, where they talk about a mandatory retirement savings plan, a mandatory retirement savings plan from a government who says that they don't force anything on Albertans and that this is a province of options and choice and free will. Well, that's not what this pension plan says. It talks about mandatory plans and then goes on in that mandatory plan to talk about the kinds of investment risk that would be placed on individual contributors.

Well, I think people should have flexibility and choice in the kinds of options they're taking a look at, and that's not what he's talking about. With the mandatory plan we're going to see higher administrative costs. We're going to see the impact on women, which is going to be significant because of their higher life expectancy. In addition to no kind of opting-out clause, like the CPP has, for women who take a break from their out-of-home work life to stay home and raise their children, which is quite surprising to me given the stance this government allegedly takes on that position on many other issues, it doesn't talk about Alberta's share of the unfunded liability of CPP, and it doesn't talk about transitional provisions that have to be adopted. And that's just on their mandatory retirement plan.

Then when you talk about their Alberta pension plan, when you take a look once again . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, these are private members' motions, and these are not government motions. These are private members' motions.

MS CARLSON: I have figured that out, not like this member says.

In fact, what we see in his comments is a position that he has supported, a stance the government has taken, and this is the debate that I'm bringing to the floor here. I would hope that some of his colleagues would rise to his defence, other than chirping comments like that, hon. minister across the floor.

If you take a look at the Alberta pension plan that he's proposing, there are lots of added risks built into that particular system when you take a look at the smaller population base we're talking about in Alberta, including economic volatility and the portability of benefits, which he didn't really significantly address.

I'm wondering if this hon. member would be prepared to comment on the status of the negotiations that are happening now at the federal Liberal government level in terms of rectifying this position. Does he support those changes or not? If he's saying that there shouldn't be an abandonment of the CPP, does he believe that the steps the federal government, in conjunction with this provincial government, is taking are going to work or in fact are going to crash and burn? This is what it appears he is alleging in his comments. So if he could comment on that, I would appreciate it.

There are many, many questions that he did not answer when he went through the options that he's got here in terms of the MRSPs. Particularly I'd like to focus, because we don't have very much time, on the issue of women in this particular instance. If this proposal were brought forward without special legislation, then what we see happening is that women retire with lower retirement income than men for identical work and contribution records because of higher female life expectancy, so we see that they would over their lifetime have less pension income available to them. If he could explain that.

He also said that the burden of CPP now falls to the younger generation to pay. I don't disagree with that, but I don't see how that is different under his plan. It would seem to me that under the plan he's got for the mandatory, self-directed RSPs, that's also an issue. They're going to have to pay for the benefits owing under the current system and build their own retirement savings plan. So what kind of percentages is he talking about under an MRSP that young people would have to be contributing? He complained about the percentages in his comments, but we can see that those would be significantly higher.

How does he plan to address administration costs, Mr. Speaker? They can be significant. [interjection] Yes, those are good questions, too, that I hope he has an opportunity to answer. Definitely administration costs are a serious issue that needs to be talked about.

There's been lots of talk over the years about a separate Alberta pension plan, and it has the same essential structure, as we hear it coming from him, as the CPP. In the short term it looks like it would be a good idea, because of course we have favourable demographics and high employment rates in this province. It is a great province to live in; there's no doubt about it. [interjections] It is a great province to live in. That's why I'm here. That's why I'm happy to support my constituents.

But we have to be ever wary, Mr. Speaker, of these kinds of ideas that are floated that can harm the good life that we have in this province. We have to be ever vigilant to these kinds of trial balloons that are floated that have hidden risks in them, that people may not know or understand at first glance. So I think it's very important for us to take a look at those issues.

We didn't hear the member who introduced this motion talking about administration costs and economies of scale in terms of the collection of those dollars. He didn't at all, I believe, address that in any kind of a satisfactory function, so I would like to see what his answers are to that. Perhaps he could put them in writing, Mr. Speaker, as I don't believe he'll have another opportunity to speak to this, because I know that we have a lot of people who are very concerned about it.

He didn't talk, I don't think, about how we would administratively measure, monitor, administer the three kinds of plans that he's now talking about. This government and this member as a private member have supported positions that talk about less regulation, less administrative cost, less duplication, but that isn't what I see coming forward in this particular motion, Mr. Speaker. So I wonder how he intends to address that.

What happens with their mandatory plan when the market falls? We've seen phenomenal growth over the past few years in many of the different kinds of investment plans that people have had when they talk about RSPs, but what happens when the market falls, Mr. Speaker? What do we see then for those people who have been forced into this mandatory plan that he's talking about? I think those are the kinds of debates that we have to have. I think they take a lot more time than we have available to us in motions.

I would like to recognize the work that the Alberta chamber has done on this issue. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 20

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate November 20: Mr. Bonner]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity here to speak to Bill 20, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2000. We've recently seen – in fact, today they hit my desk – amendments that have been brought in by this government. First of all, I would like to talk about those for a moment.

How can it be that with this government, who has lots of time to draft this legislation and to bring it forward into this Legislature and to run it by various groups who have a vested interest in the legislation being brought forward, we see time after time amendments being brought into legislation that are in fact at least as substantial as the bills themselves if not even bigger than the bills? This is what we see again, a series of literally pages of amendments having been brought in on a bill that was originally introduced. You know, we don't see other Legislatures across Canada having this kind of difficulty.

Amendments should be minor in nature, Mr. Speaker. They shouldn't be substantive in nature, because if the government had done their groundwork to begin with, they wouldn't be necessary. How do other jurisdictions handle legislation when it's brought forward? Before they draft the legislation, they send it out for a vigorous review and debate to groups that are interested in the proposals. Those people can kick it around, talk about it, get together with government members and fine-tune the legislation, talk about options, and find compromises where necessary so that when the legislation in fact hits the floor of an Assembly, it's well drafted, well thought out, and is the best possible legislation that can be brought forward.

Unfortunately, since I have been in this Legislature, since 1993, that doesn't seem to be the case. We see shoddy drafting, many groups unsatisfied when the legislation first hits the floor. Often we see the government bring forward amendments to this legislation after they go out and consult with groups. That's what has happened in this case, Mr. Speaker. A very well-respected group, MADD, Mothers Against Drinking Drivers, had some concerns with this legislation. Why this government and the minister responsible for bringing in this legislation didn't go to them in the first place and iron out any concerns or difficulties is of keen interest to me, but clearly they didn't think it was necessary at the time.

So what happens? Barely after having the legislation introduced, we have amendments brought into it. So that speaks, I think, to the arrogance that this government has in terms of the regard . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, talking about amendments, I'm just curious. Is this not second reading, which is on the principle of the bill, as opposed to amendments that may be coming from some other side?

MS CARLSON: Absolutely, and it's in principle that I'm speaking against the need for amendments to a bill, Mr. Speaker, so I hope that addresses any concerns that we may see from members across the way. In principle we should be having a bill that is very clean, that has met the needs of most groups in this province, and that isn't what we see here. I'm speaking in principle to the legislation. We can speak in principle about how it's drafted, about the content of it, clause by clause if we wish to, and any overriding principles, and that's exactly what I'm speaking to here. [interjection] If the minister doesn't like it, I suggest that he get up and talk about that. In seven years I certainly do know how to talk in principle about legislation, about the problems involved in drafting it. We have seen a number of concerns that have come out of this legislation but also some good work.

So now you've been chastised. Now I will talk about one of the things that have been good with this, and that is the co-operation that we saw between the Minister of Justice and our Justice critic. I think it's commendable when we see that, Mr. Speaker. Certainly I've had the opportunity to work in co-operation with government members over my duration here in the Legislature, and it can be very helpful when we see ministers who are prepared to sit down and hear concerns that we have had and to take them seriously and to work them into the drafting. So while a component of this bill was deemed to be not acceptable by groups, certainly some things were drafted and changed beforehand.

I would like to thank the minister for the co-operation that he gave in listening to and working with our Liberal Justice critic. I think those things enhance legislation. Mr. Speaker, it isn't always just our role to oppose what comes to the floor of this Legislature. Often we can work with the appropriate ministers to talk about the kinds of improvements that can be made, therefore limiting the kind of debate time we see on bills and limiting the number of amendments that come from this side of the floor.

I do have a couple of concerns about this bill. One of them is the provisions that are put in place governing the management of exhibits in the court's possession. We've seen a number of examples in the past, particularly the past couple of years, where it looks like the management of the exhibits in the court's possession created a problem for us.

I'm thinking particularly of Bovar and what's happened with the Bovar waste treatment plant in Swan Hills. A number of the records were not made available to us that were really contentious in nature and should have been made public to the people of this province. So there are some concerns around that issue, and I'm hoping we see that cleaned up before this legislation gets passed, Mr. Speaker. They can be substantive in nature. I think the public have a right to know when their health is placed at risk or potentially at risk. They have a right to know, when we're dealing with hazardous waste, what companies have done in the past in dealing with those. We have a right to know what kinds of negotiations they've made with the government when the government is funding some or all or part of the operations of companies like that. It hasn't always been the case where you've had accessibility to that.

Also, there are some problems in the management of exhibits for the appeal process for WCB. So I would hope that we would be talking about that in this Legislature. I'm hoping the minister will address that.

I think some of the parts we see in here are good. Where it talks about in the bill where the Lieutenant Governor in Council will be able to make regulations outlining situations in which court fees can be waived – because currently there are no provisions – this is a good provision I think. We talk about openness, fairness, and accountability in that regard, and the process for people to be involved in a court system in a manner in which they can afford it. So I actually quite support that particular provision that's going to be brought in.

I think there are a number of other questions that we have. When you take a look at the amendments that are going to be coming into the Provincial Offences Procedure Act, there are two issues that we have to talk about. The first is that the maximum fine able to be imposed with respect to an offence will increase from $400 to $1,000. I think that's good. I think that there should be a sunset clause reviewing all of those kinds of limits on an ongoing basis, because times change and it's something that needs to be brought to the minister's attention and dealt with according to severity and cost issues; you know, cost of living. A slight wrap on the knuckles is not always satisfactory. We need to make sure that there are some teeth in some of this legislation, so we welcome that.

Secondly with regard to this particular amendment, the Lieutenant Governor in Council will be able to make regulations now allowing a person acting as an agent of the court to receive payment for offences; most commonly, speeding tickets. I see it as the intention of the ministry to appoint current private registries as agents of the court for the collection of these fines. This is an expansion of private registries as we see it, and they will then be charging a surcharge for providing this service.

This is more downloading that we see. This is another user fee being imposed on the people of the province. While I know we want to make it easy and accessible for people to pay tickets and fines on time, Mr. Speaker, I'm wondering at the added cost that goes in when we talk about another layer of user fees. Many people would argue that it's fine to do that, that the people broke the law, by the kind of ticket they got, so they should be fined for that. Well, they are. The user fee charge is a different issue, and it's one that we've seen before this Legislature any number of times in terms of another way of taxing the people of this province. I do have concerns about that, and I hope that the minister will be able to speak to those for us.

I think at this time in second reading, Mr. Speaker, those are the comments that I have. It's quite a lengthy bill. I haven't had a chance to get through all of it yet, so I am definitely looking forward to the time in committee when I can discuss this bill in greater depth.

Thank you.

4:40

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. You know, there are times when I really wish I had a law degree, and this is one of them.

MR. DICKSON: You're the next best thing. You're an MLA, the next best thing.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. I'm being encouraged that being an MLA is the next best thing, I guess in that we can actually create the laws.

I've often stood in this House and said that we should do the best job possible with the most consideration, and I'm working hard to understand everything that's in here. I'm also cognizant that the process for this bill coming before us today has been a bit of a climb in that the bill was originally presented in the spring, and there was such a fervor of reaction to it that the government spent some time, I guess over the summer, putting together amendments. I understand that there will be significant amendments brought forward while this bill is in Committee of the Whole.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Actually, that's a good sign for the process: that if it's recognized and understood that mistakes have been made or not enough consultation happened or perhaps the government was being a little too hasty in some areas, they would recognize that it just wasn't going to sit well with the people, and that in fact they did have the strength, the stamina, to take it back and try and come forward with some improvements.

I think all of us would prefer that the time was put in on the front end and that we had a nice sort of clean bill to work with. That's one of the reasons that I'm struggling, because I'm having to look between the bill and the amendments and correspondence that has been received from stakeholders and go back and forth and try and figure out what's being talked about, whether it's still there or whether it might be amended. It gets a little confusing. So, yes, I guess I wish it had come forward in better shape, but I will give all credit to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General for having realized that there were some issues, and he has taken it back and evidently will bring forward amendments on it.

One of the things that I've noticed, particularly when I talk to colleagues across the country, is that we haven't been very good in Alberta about reviewing our statutes and our laws to make sure that they are up to date and that we don't have some sort of dusty ones sitting up on the shelves there that don't really pertain and are not really used anymore.

One of the ones that's come to my attention is the fire code, which doesn't ever seem to really be reviewed, and the old stuff that doesn't pertain anymore is never expunged from it. We just keep adding more onto it. Certainly I've heard from businesspeople in my constituency that frankly that's a real pain for them because they just have to keep paying out more money to do more stuff to conform to the code, but they're still having to conform to everything else that's in that code from when it was first put forward much earlier in the previous century.

So if this is a good attempt by the government to go back and re-examine and remove things that don't work well anymore or don't pertain anymore and try and streamline the process while always, of course, remaining on guard for citizens' access to the justice system, then I think this is a good bill, and the Minister of Justice gets brownie points for that. I think it's important to do a top-to-bottom, bottom-to-top review . . .

MR. DICKSON: Side to side.

MS BLAKEMAN: . . . side to side, as well, and back to front, of all of our legislation, especially the large codes that we all live by that just tend to keep adding on and adding on without ever going back.

Now, one of the things that I wanted to talk about – a couple of things I noticed in here. I noticed, if I'm reading this right, that the Lieutenant Governor in Council will be able to make regulations that could waive court fees. It's my understanding that that hasn't existed previously, and certainly with a lot of the issues I deal with that would fall under this, I welcome that, because I think in many cases that is prohibiting people from accessing justice. So if that is the case, I'm glad to see that.

In another section – I'm mindful that I'm in second reading and I'm speaking to the intent of the bill, but in speaking to the intent that I see in some of these sections . . .

The payment hearings, the Lieutenant Governor in Council being able to make regulations governing payment hearings. I hope that this will have some positive effect on the gridlock we can get into with maintenance enforcement payments because that's an area where I find things slow to an absolute crawl, where you have a debtor who has defaulted repeatedly on a maintenance order and the creditor can't seem to shake any money loose from them. But if in fact circumstances have changed for the debtor – they lost their job, or they went back to school – if something has changed where they really can't afford to be making those kinds of payments and they need them reduced, they need to go back into court and change that so that there's some payment forthcoming to that court order, rather than just not paying anything at all because their circumstances have changed.

So I'm hoping that these payment hearings, which I think are to determine a person's ability to pay the money under a judgment and to be able to set forward some sort of schedule or method of payment for the debtor – if I'm reading this correctly, this should really help with maintenance enforcement. We all get these cases in our offices. They're heartbreaking, and I think they're particularly heartbreaking because this is about a court-ordered payment for children. This is not about adults squabbling. It is about a court-ordered payment for children, and that money is needed for those kids to have a decent life. Very rarely are we talking, you know, really high payments, where it's gold-plated skateboards and that kind of thing. For most of these kids these court-ordered payments are to make sure that they have a decent diet, that they have enough money to pay their school fees, that maybe they could participate in some sort of extracurricular activity, that they have decent clothing and warm clothes in the winter. This is not extravagant stuff.

What I have seen too much of is that the debtor simply won't pay for whatever reason, and despite much work on the part of the creditor they just can't get the money out of them. This would allow them, if I'm reading this right, to be able to get some sort of reasoning as to why the debtor isn't paying and set up a schedule for them to pay.

When I first started working with maintenance enforcement cases, I was dealing with people that had arrears of $80,000, $110,000. Just imagine how long someone has not been making a court-ordered payment to rack up $110,000 worth of arrears. That must have been most of a kid's life, between zero and 18, that they didn't get that money, and they should be getting it.

I know that the minister has been working on improving the maintenance enforcement program. Certainly this member is not going to stop urging the minister to make improvements to the maintenance enforcement program, because I think it's a great tool for us and a very important component of a modern society that we're able to get these payments made. So I hope that's what's possible under this section that is talking about payment hearings, that we could get debtors into court. We could say: "Let's see. What are your assets, and what's your ability to pay? All right then; let's pay." Then get some payment schedules worked out and get the money coming in.

I mean, I understand that if somebody really wants to flaunt the law, it doesn't matter how many times you drag him into court and hand him a piece of paper that says that you must do this. If they're bound and determined they're not going to do it, they just ignore the piece of paper. I think there's a good section of society that will do something wrong if they think they can get away with it. Frankly, if they're brought before court on something like this payment hearing, that would be enough to have them straighten up and fly right, as my mother would have said. So I hope that's a possibility there.

Now, one concern that I do have in working my way through all of this – and I heard my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie comment on it briefly – is that I'm just not comfortable with what's going on with these private registries. It sounds to me like there are sections in this bill that are about allowing the appointment of a third party to collect fines that are levied through the court system, and then that third party would also be allowed to put a charge on top of the fine to pay for their services.

Those private registries: I'm never going to be comfortable with them. I think there are real issues around privacy. We've already seen problems with personal information getting out through the private registries that has to do with the information they currently have access to, which are things like drivers' licences and birth and marriage certificates. We've already had trouble with privacy around that, and here's just another area where a private company, a third party, gets access to very personal information about people and then gets to make money off it. I am never going to be comfortable with that. So if the minister is making notes about responding to any of the issues that we're raising, I'd sure like to hear some reassurances about this. To be frank, I don't think that I'm going to be much reassured. Given the examples we've got before us from other private registry examples, there's not much you could tell me that would reassure me around this one. I think we'd be cruisin' for a bruising' on that one, and I think it's because it's around privacy.

You know, I've often spoken in this Assembly about the need for us as legislators to be the stewards, to show the leadership and to protect the people that live in Alberta, to provide legislation for them to protect them from an invasion of their privacy, from personal information about them being used for some reason that they, one, didn't know about and, two, didn't have an opportunity to give their permission or approval for. In the four short years I've been in this Assembly, we've seen an increasing amount of violation of that, and we have not shown leadership in this Assembly as far as protecting that personal information on behalf of people. So we really have to work much, much harder on that one.

Another issue I want to talk about sort of globally is the question of access of women to the judicial system. What I see and what I hear from women that come to me – and as the women's issues critic for the opposition I hear from people all over Alberta: e-mails, letters, phone calls, people coming to my office. I think I can safely say that this is a fair selection from across the province. Actually, there's a project being done in Calgary. It would be really interesting to have a look and see whether they were finished yet because it would pertain to what's being proposed in Bill 20. It was around women's access to the law, to the judicial system, and I think it was being done by the Calgary Legal Guidance centre. [interjection] Well, they assist with restraining orders, but I think this project may be done in conjunction with Women Looking Forward, which is an excellent organization in Calgary that has been a good, strong advocate for women and has done a lot of very useful research on that as well.

What I see is that women can get beat up by the system, whereas someone with more money or more familiarity with the justice system can keep dragging women into court to defend themselves against accusations that are being brought forward under various family law matters. We've got the access enforcement law that this government brought forward, and there are a couple of other ones where there's a demand that women appear and basically have to justify or defend themselves. This can be used to really impact them economically as well, because many women are working in minimum wage jobs or lower wage jobs where they're paid by the hour. So if they have to go to their boss at Kentucky Fried Chicken or Revy or the janitor service and say, "Sorry; I have to get the afternoon off to appear in court to answer this," they don't get paid for those hours. That's not included in their salary, so they've lost the wages. Then there's ancillary costs of actually appearing in court that they've got to pay.

This may not be a big deal for many of the members in here, but for the women that I've talked to, parking downtown to go to the courthouse becomes a major obstacle when you're looking at a $10 bill, a $12 bill for all-day parking. [interjection] But it's not about paying their . . . The minister is aiding in my debate here.

The point is that if they have to appear in court, in most courts you're told to show up when your docket number blah, blah, blah. Well, they don't tell you what time that's going to happen. You're just supposed to come at 8 o'clock, you wait your turn in line, and you don't know when that turn is. So you start paying that parking at a quarter to 8 in the morning, and if your case isn't heard until 4 in the afternoon, you've racked up 12 bucks' worth of parking. And if you don't get heard, come back tomorrow; you can start it all over again. So that kind of cost is a factor for women.

When I look at Bill 20, I'm searching for what's in that bill that would alleviate some of this financial battery that happens here. I mean, besides the parking costs or bus fare – it could also be bus fare – if they're from out of town, then they're paying travel and accommodation costs as well, which really can raise the costs. Again, if they're having to travel from out of town, they may well have to be paying someone for child care. Well, all of this just to defend themselves against something that's pretty frivolous or often appears to be frivolous or a challenge to a custody hearing over and over and over again. I mean, I've had women who have just given up and said: I can't do this anymore; I can't afford to do it anymore. There's something really wrong with our justice system if that's how women are feeling, that they get beat up by the justice system.

MR. MacDONALD: Maybe they could have more of an active role in the justice system.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, yes. Thank you. That's a nice segue, because I think it's important that we also look for a gender balance in the appointment of judges. I don't think I've seen that in Bill 20, but hey, there are amendments coming forward, so sh'boom, sh'boom, it may show up.

You see, part of what we've learned in jury systems – wherever you see juries that are set up for granting of moneys and things, representations on agencies, boards, and commissions, and certainly in the judiciary – is it's really important to have that representation that mirrors what our society is, and our society is 52 percent women. It's important that we have a much better representation of women in the judiciary, because they bring with them a life experience that may not be shared or understood by men. I've got all kinds of examples of where that was pooh-pooed: “No, no. You're not saying that men can't understand women's experience.” Blah, blah, blah.

Well, in fact when we were able to get the representation on the committees, you know, on Canada Council, it was a huge thing to get gender representation on Canada Council. It was argued for years that this was not fair and that it should be based on the merit and that good art was good art, blah, blah, blah. Yeah, well, good art by some women may not catch men's imaginations, but it's still good art. When we got the representation balanced on the Canada Council, we started to see the number of grants that were being given and support being given to female artists going up. Before that, there had been an inequity about how the grants were actually given out. So it's really important that we do our very best to achieve a gender balance in appointment of judges.

I know that this Justice minister is concerned about issues like that, and I look to him to show leadership in that area. He is certainly in a position to exercise that and to address some of that imbalance, and I'm sure he could do it if he worked at it. So I encourage him to do that. I understand that it's not covered in this legislation, but, as I say, maybe it could come forward in an amendment or at least be aware of the need for this, you know, as he moves forward. He has been a pretty good Justice minister. I think I'd still prefer somebody from the opposition to be Justice minister, but he's been a pretty good one. That's okay. We'll be on that side soon.

So just to wrap up that section, the whole issue of women's access to justice is still an important one. I know people like to say: “Oh, you know, we've achieved gender parity. What's your problem? What are you bellyaching about now?” But we haven't. I mean, there are certain things that we have managed to achieve, a certain balance that we have even enshrined in law and certainly in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but we don't have women making wage parity with men, not by a long shot. The higher the education of the woman, the more likely that she would be achieving closer – I think, the gap closes to about 91 cents if she's got a degree or advanced degree, but that's closing the wage gap from 65 cents on the dollar. So this is a real issue. It's not true. We like to say that every person will be treated equally under the law, but it's not.

The effect that that law has upon women can often be very different, and usually it's tied to what their economic status is to begin with. If you're bringing someone in that's making minimum wage or 6 bucks an hour or $6.05 an hour and they're losing four hours' worth of work, plus they're having to fork out, you know, for meals and travel and parking and child care, this appearance in court could cost them a whole bunch of money. I'm not saying that it's inappropriate that they be called to court, but I think we have to look really carefully at what the setup is that's enabling the judicial system to be used as a battering ram, a financial battering ram on women. There's something wrong there, and it needs to be addressed.

MR. DICKSON: They're excellent points.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much.

I know that a number of groups were concerned about the section on Survival of Actions, which enables a family member to sue for lost earnings essentially. I'm aware that it's being proposed that that section be removed, that that section in the amended form be struck out. I mean, in some ways that may well be an antiquated idea, but in other ways I don't think it is. You know, we have a middle generation of people here who may well not end up with the retirement earnings that they expected. In fact, their children may well have contributed financially to their retirement, and that may be a key factor in whether people are able to enjoy a secure retirement as compared to a struggling, impoverished retirement.

I think certainly that legislation was also a big part of the campaign of several groups including MADD and PAID to drive home the point of drunk drivers killing young people on our highways and what a loss that is to the families. That was the only route that the family had to go through in order to make that point or ask for that restitution, that recognition of a loss, and that includes the financial loss to the family.

MR. DICKSON: Wrongdoers have to be held accountable.

MS BLAKEMAN: Wrongdoers have to be held accountable. It's interesting we're talking about that, because earlier in the day we were on a different discussion about what more could be done to catch and punish drunk drivers. So I wasn't inclined to be too concerned about that when I first heard about it, but the more I've thought about it, the more I think it was right of those groups to come forward and say: this is a piece of law that is important to us and allows us access to the judicial system. That is what I've been talking about in every point that I've raised along here. It is about access to the judicial system. It's about the court fees being waived. That's access to the judicial system.

I've talked about the payment hearings for maintenance enforcement. That's access to the judicial system. I talked about women's access in particular and how the courts can be used by some to batter them or economically punish them, and I talked about the need for a gender balance.

So this is an interesting piece of legislation. We're in second reading, so I've got lots of time to watch these amendments and see if perhaps there's an opportunity to get in a few of the other issues that I was concerned about. Essentially, I'm looking for improvements in Albertans' access to the judicial system.

Thanks very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an opportunity to stand this afternoon and speak to the issues of Bill 20 and the Justice Statutes Amendment Act. As we look at the structure of this bill, it leaves one with the idea that the government is trying to amend a whole series of different acts and, in doing that, is trying to bring some degree of continuity or uniqueness or oneness, I guess is a better term, to the concept of what we have in terms of our justice in the sense that the different acts being pulled together now are going to fit better within each other.

One of the things that we don't really see associated with this, even in terms of some of the information that was put out, is a reflection in terms of the role that the government sees in the context of how they envision the judicial system interacting or being responsive to individuals. Trying to put all of this together with a whole series of amendments to a number of different bills doesn't really explain to us how they intend to pull these together and make for a better judicial system, because we don't really know what their end objective is when they have a system that's finally operating so that we could say: "Yes, that's the target we're going to. Will this amendment really get us there or not?" That kind of background and that kind of principle that should be here as we look at this bill and look at the amendments that are in it to a number of different statutes don't give us that vision.

So what we have to do is kind of look at the provisions of the bill and see whether or not they do develop any kind of a visionary view or visionary expectation in terms of a new justice system, a new way that the justice system would work, a new way that the justice system would effectively provide better service. It's kind of like what we're trying to do here is just the old concept of you fix whatever part is most likely to break down and you don't worry about the rest of it, rather than going back and seeing whether or not there's any fault in the design at all. So what we end up trying to do here is see whether or not the system is effective and the system can provide better service for us as we move to a future justice system that's going to operate under the guidelines as outlined in Bill 20.

I guess the first thing they talk about and that comes to mind in terms of the structure of the courts is the amalgamation that they're proposing, which would basically do away with the separate divisions – the Criminal Division, the Youth Division, the Family Division, and the Civil Division – as entities within that court system. They're going to come together. Now, I guess the question there is: how does the government see this as creating efficiencies? Why is it that they want to try and pull these together? What are they trying to get out of it? I guess when you start to bring together groups under functional areas, you try to do this from an organizational point of view when you see some efficiencies that might result from bringing them together.

I guess the issue that we want to look at here is trying to bring all of these under one judge so that, as I read this in my limited knowledge of the judicial system, on any given day a judge can be in a courtroom and any one of these different kinds of cases could come before that judge. Now, I guess if we're relying on the judge solely to deal with the technical aspects of the law, they have to apply it in the same way in each one of these kinds of cases. But what if an individual asks for the case to be heard by a judge? What if the issues that become specific to the way lawyers interact with the client, the way the prosecutor interacts with the defendant – what if these kinds of issues come out and they're different as we look at the different legal procedures that are allowed, say, in a civil case or in a criminal case or a family court case?

I think most of the concerns that come here have to deal with how we want to have ease or facility of access, especially for our family courts, because so many of the issues that we've heard discussed already this afternoon come out in trying to guarantee effectiveness, guarantee a degree of compassion through the system. I don't mean compassion in the context of the outcome of the proceeding but compassion in the sense of the ease of the proceeding to facilitate the people who are involved in it. We don't want to see those kinds of procedures being developed that create the rigidity that has to be held for different kinds of court cases.

So I guess we look at that: what are the expected efficiencies that we'll gain by having this? I would hope that as the government proceeds to get into the next sections of debate on this, as we go into amendments – or it would even be great if some of them would stand up and respond a little bit as we talk about those principles so that we can better prepare our debate and our suggestions when it comes time to amend this bill in committee. If we can understand what the end objective might be, then we can understand better how to evaluate whether or not these amendments will actually give us the kind of outcome in our judicial system that my constituents or constituents from any one of the other representatives here see as being beneficial.

So I guess that, Mr. Speaker, has to be the first thing I want to raise in terms of how this is going to be effective when we bring these together. What are the efficiencies that we're going to see there? How can we measure the cost-effectiveness of this in terms of its relationship to both the speed and the effectiveness or the legality of a proceeding? Does it work through and follow the appropriate sets of laws and still have that little bit of participant compassion that I was talking about?

The other thing that I kind of looked at in terms of some of the issues that come with combining these departments is the rural aspect of it. A lot of times, you know, some of the rural courts are quite able to handle a lot of the issues that come up with some of the different kinds of prosecutions or defences or legal actions, but we also see situations where the associated services may not be available in a rural community, and they have to go to a different area. Rather than having the courts located in an area where there is sufficient volume to deal with both the surrounding services that are needed to make sure that that works right, that the hearing proceeds along, that the support systems are there, whether they're, you know, lab systems that are necessary for a criminal prosecution or the human support systems that are there, say, for a family court action – how do we make sure that happens?

In order to have those kinds of things be cost-effective both for society as a whole and the individuals involved, we've got to have critical mass there so that there's a volume of use that will give the participants some perception or some expectation of a reasonable income. It wouldn't do to have certain kinds of courts located in areas or available in areas where they didn't have that efficiency that they could build up. So that's the kind of thing that came to my mind as I looked at how this might affect rural areas.

The other side of that might be that in a rural area, because there isn't a volume, a judge should be able to do a little bit of everything. Well, that's getting back to the idea of how much the judge has to be involved in the technical aspects of the case as opposed to the technicalities of the legal procedures of the case. If we want to have the judge involved in being able to evaluate some degree of, say the process in a family law case or a civil case or a criminal case, there's a degree of expectation in technical knowledge that should be there in that judge to deal with it. Can we have that in a kind of broad-based universal type court system?

The other thing that comes up in terms of some of the issues that are associated with the rural areas – and I guess many of the rural community members would be quite supportive of the idea of being able to just run into the registry and pay their fine, but then the question comes up in terms of when the surcharge gets added on. What we're doing – and this applies to anybody who would use that registry – is we're saying that the fine effectively gets increased by the markup that's associated with that service fee that the registry agent charges. So fines are not effectively going to be equal for individuals who have committed the same crime in the sense that if you got a speeding ticket with a $50 fine on it, if you pay it through the court system, you get it for $50; if you pay it through a registry, you may have to pay $55.

What you're going to do is almost get into a situation, Mr. Speaker – so many people now say: "Well, you know, I live in Lethbridge. I was traveling outside Leduc. I happened to go through a radar trap, got a ticket. I know I wasn't speeding, and I want to challenge this." You've got to go back to Leduc or you've got to come to Edmonton or you've got to come somewhere else to say: I want to plead innocent. It costs you more to come from . . .

MR. MAR: You were probably speeding.

DR. NICOL: Well, we won't debate the accuracy of my accusation.

It's easier for me just to say, "Okay. I'm guilty. I'm going to let that go," rather than undertake that whole expense of coming from Lethbridge up to, say, Leduc to plead my case.

Well, we're going to have the same thing here essentially in the sense that the penalty of the law is not equal for everybody who is subjected to the rule of law. I think what we need to look at here, then, is a provision for the agents, however they're going to be defined, whether they're registry agents or not, to collect the $50 fine so that the actual penalty for the infraction is the same no matter where you have this infraction. They take a little bit out of the fine, whether it's the same percentage or whatever, so they can still get their $5. They send the $45 into the respective collector of those dollars, whether it's the city, the rural municipality, or whatever, and the impact, then, and the penalty paid by an individual for a court-leveled fine is equal no matter how you choose to pay it.

Mr. Speaker, the issue that comes up is: are we fining people to encourage them not to commit an unlawful activity, or are we fining individuals to collect revenue? My suggestion and my belief in the judicial system is that the reason we have fines is to encourage individuals not to commit an unlawful activity, not to generate revenue. If we're trying to generate revenue with this, then what we have to do is look at it from the perspective of how we can make sure there's a fixed revenue coming, and adding on the service charge depending upon where the individual pays is a legitimate aspect. I don't think it is in the context of my perception of what a judicially imposed penalty is; that is, an equal penalty for every person to try and provide them with an incentive not to recommit that same kind of unlawful activity.

I think that what we should do is make the fine payable at a whole series of different places, provide convenience for the individuals to make payments, but do not in essence create a differential cost associated with how you choose to make the payment, because this in effect, then, puts in place a different penalty for individuals based on how they make that payment as opposed to the same penalty to deal with the breaking of a law.

Mr. Speaker, another thing that stands out in the context of the bill as it's being put together is how to deal with some of the things that come out in the context of, say, section 19. I know we're not supposed to talk about the specific sections, but as we look at the application of this bill to make the judicial system more open and more flexible, I take it that what we're seeing in that section is basically a legitimization or a legislative approval of some of the things that we're now seeing happening through the family court sections, where individuals can petition to have a hearing on payment ability without having to have legal counsel or have direct infringement, you know, in the normal process. They can go straight to the family court judge and have their hearing without having to go through all of the rigamarole that's associated with a petition from a lawyer.

Now, I guess what we want to look at here is how fair and how equitable that kind of structure and access system works in the sense that there are a lot of other aspects that come into play here in terms of having fairness developed in those kinds of surprise hearings, you might want to call them. When they do in essence have this petition for a payment hearing, we have to make sure that that kind of a process provides for fair and just notification to everybody who may be impacted by any decisions that are there. You want to make sure that the individual or the parties that are potentially going to have their receipted dollars reduced should be provided with an opportunity to be there as well. So that kind of balance has to come into effect so that in the context, say, of a family court action the custodial parent, who is receiving money in support of a child, is notified if the noncustodial parent applies to have a reduction, and the custodial parent then has the option to come and question the legitimacy of the information that's being provided in that context of a hearing. The need of that, I think, stands out as we look at how the process works out.

Another aspect in the provisions here is the amendments that will make sure that the Chief Judges are not subject to frivolous court action in terms of the execution of their duties. I think this is again a good way to make sure that the court system is provided with some degree of integrity, but we also have to make sure that there is a process in place for scrutiny so that the judicial process doesn't get to be careless. I guess that's where we rely on the aspect of procedural appeals through a superior court, whichever level we're at. The next level of court then gets to make the judgments on the accuracy and integrity of the judicial process as it was executed in the context of a particular court case.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, November 21, 2000

Date: 00/11/21

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 20 Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2000

[Debate adjourned November 21: Dr. Nicol speaking]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The leader of the ND opposition, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to speak on Bill 20 in its second reading. This bill is extensive and complex. The Justice Statutes Amendment Act attempts to amend four different, complex statutes. It's divided into four parts. The first part deals with, of course, the amendments to the Provincial Court Act. The second part deals with Surrogate Court matters. Part 3 deals with the Provincial Offences Procedure Act, and the last part is sort of miscellaneous other amendments.

It's a bill that covers a whole lot of very complex existing statutes and acts and attempts to change them, I presume, to modernize these acts to some extent, to make changes in them so that the technologies that may be available now to courts and the judicial system can be used in the court procedures. So one of its intentions seems to be to sort of modernize the existing statutes, and I suppose it's also supposed to make our justice system and judicial system accessible to Albertans, more accessible than it might have been up to this point.

The justice system is an extremely important and significant aspect of modern democratic societies and democratic governments. It's important because it provides legitimacy and credibility to the decisions made by institutions, such as the one in which I stand, that make laws. The laws of course have to be enforced and implemented and interpreted, and the judicial system and the judiciary play a very important role in then mediating the relationship between citizens who may find themselves in conflict with laws or in trouble with the existing laws, which are represented by state institutions, and themselves as individuals.

So the justice system is an extremely important element of our democratic governance, the three branches of government being the legislative, the executive, and the judiciary. Each has its own degree of autonomy, independence, and at the same time they are inter-linked. The job of the justice system and the judicial system is to deliver justice to citizens while maintaining the integrity of the state institutions and its laws.

The act, as I said, is very, very broad ranging, and not being a lawyer, I find, obviously, dealing with this act somewhat challenging because of its legal technicalities and the procedural complexity that are associated with the judicial system. Nevertheless, there are some general principles, I guess. As I said, one of them is accessibility. The system of justice, for it to be one that has the support of citizens, must be accessible to them. It must be open. It must be seen to be just. It must be affordable. So in my comments I'm trying to see if some of these principles, some of these basic expectations of a good judicial system are reflected and embodied in the amendments that are being proposed here.

I'll start with the very last part of this act, which is part 4, Other Amendments. The one that I find most important here is the one on page 38 which deals with the recovery of damages. I'm starting with this because I received a call in my office from Medicine Hat the other day, and the caller expressed some concerns about the manner in which this recovery of damages section of this proposed bill will limit the damages that can be pursued through the courts by members of the family of the deceased. So there is clearly a concern there among ordinary Albertans about how this bill might in fact make justice perhaps somewhat less accessible to them, what they see as just to be less accessible if this part of the bill is passed.

Similarly, going back to part 3, which deals with the Provincial Offences Procedure Act, the part of the bill that appears on pages 36 and 37 in particular, which deals with the use of third parties to collect fines and money owed from ticket violations and what have you, this is a sort of arrangement whereby, I guess, private registries will be allowed or empowered to receive these moneys on behalf of the court.

In addition to some of the comments I've made on it, which pertain to the privacy issues that this arrangement raises, there's also, of course, the question of some service charges that these collection agencies may be able to levy on people who go there to pay the fines related to ticket offences and whatnot. These service charges, at least from my reading of the bill – the scale of it, the amount of it, how much it will cost on top of the fine that is to be paid – is a matter that seems to be left to be dealt with or negotiated, say, between the person who's going to pay the fine and the collecting agency. So it's another area where I hope the Minister of Justice will be able to answer some of these questions as to why it is that this arrangement is necessary, how it will make the justice system more accessible, how it will add to the convenience of Albertans in their ability to pay the fines at locations where they may be across this province.

Particularly, I guess, those who possibly live in big cities can avoid going to the registries and certainly can go to the courts and pay directly without therefore having to also pay on top of the fine a service charge that we would owe if we were to use a local private registry. In small communities, away from big cities, where citizens are already at some degree of disadvantage in their access to the courts because of distance and the expenses that they have to undertake in order to seek justice when they find themselves having to go to court, they are the ones that will be using these registries and will be liable to these service charge payments, which I think is unfair. I think it makes access to justice more difficult for them. It makes it more expensive for them. It adds to the already existing geographically generated disadvantage to them. So that's part of the proposed bill that I again find not addressing in principle the question of accessibility, affordability, and convenience to Albertans. This was the section under the Provincial Offences Procedure Act that I was commenting on.

One of the other sections of the act that I would like to just briefly comment on – the Survival of Actions Act part is the one that I guess I already referred to. That certainly is a matter that was brought to our attention by some citizens, and I would certainly like the minister to address that perhaps in the House to see whether or not the concerns that have been expressed to us can be allayed by his explanations.

The first part of the act deals with, of course, the Provincial Court Act. There the section that caught my attention – and I must say that I haven't had the opportunity to study thoroughly every part or section of this proposed bill – is the one that falls under Provincial Court judges. I guess, again, one of the principles that I'm trying to see if it's addressed, if it's respected, if it's observed in the development of these amendments to the existing statutes, is the independence of the judiciary, which, as we all know and we all agree, is one of the fundamental principles of a good judicial system like the one that we do have. So any changes that we make to the Provincial Court Act, particularly changes that may affect Provincial Court judges and their independence, are the changes that I think must be most closely scrutinized by this House.

I'm curious about the changes that are being proposed on pages 3 and 4. I'm sure the minister would like to address those, to provide us with some explanation as to whether the changes proposed here indeed bolster or reinforce the principle of judicial independence, not only by way of independence of the judiciary vis-a-vis the executive or the Legislature but the independence of the judges within the administrative system of the judiciary itself. From my reading of this section, I get the feeling that the powers of the Chief Judge as written up here would seem to make that power so great, so central to the court system that individual judges might find that in the exercise of their best judgment they either have to risk their independence or autonomy or risk earning the wrath of their superior judges in the judicial system.

I'm using my words very carefully here because I don't by any means want to convey to the House and to members in the House the sense that there's something seriously wrong being done here. I'm raising some questions here which I think must be answered, must be addressed by all of us in all seriousness in order to make sure that this principle of judicial independence, both inside the judicial system and in relations between the judicial system on one hand and the other bodies of the government on the other, is preserved, is respected and, if possible, further strengthened. The independence of the judiciary is absolutely critical to the integrity of the system, to the credibility of the system of justice, and to the ability of citizens to have faith that the system works for them, that it is there for them and is there to serve their collective interests.

On page 4, section 21.1(7):

Where the chief judge makes any decision or takes any action with respect to a matter referred to in subsection (5) or (6) or any other matter relating to the administration of the Court, that decision or action is not subject to any type of judicial review by a superior court unless that decision or action is, in the opinion of a superior court, patently unreasonable or not within the powers, duties or jurisdiction of the chief judge.

I wish I could recall the details of a recent case in which a judge challenged, in fact, the decision of the Chief Judge in this province and was able to, I guess, persuade the court that his concerns and his objections were genuine and serious, and the court took them into account. Now, I wonder if this change that's being proposed here will in fact make it difficult for another judge in a similar situation tomorrow or once this bill is passed and proclaimed to be able to seek redress to a decision that he or she might consider to be patently wrong. So I have concerns about the amendments proposed here along those lines, and I would like the Minister of Justice later on perhaps to address some of these concerns and assure me and the House that the proposed changes will in fact not lead to what I fear will be the consequences if these amendments are approved by the House.

I guess these are my general concerns about this. Other than that, I think the bill seems to have certainly been carefully crafted. Much of it merits our support. It's a good bill, and the minister is to be commended, I guess, for the work that he and his staff have done and the care that they've shown in drafting the various amendments, but there are some sections of it which I find have raised some questions and which I find potentially troubling.

So with those comments, Madam Speaker, I will close my remarks. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to make some short comments this evening in support of Bill 20, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2000. The court system, of course, is of vital interest to all citizens, and you just have to witness the heat around the debate over the last number of years on the Young Offenders Act and those claiming that it's too lenient and those claiming that it's too harsh to get a bit of a feel for the passion with which citizens in our country approach the justice system.

In this Legislature we've had private members' bills that would have made changes to the justice system. One was to elect judges. So the justice system is a source of constant comment, criticism, and renewal, and I view the bill before us as part of that renewal.

Having said that there's a great deal of citizen interest in justice matters, I did put out a householder four weeks ago now, and in that householder I listed all the bills that were before the Assembly during the 24th Legislature and a brief summary of those bills. On this particular bill I received only one phone call. That phone call really wasn't about the bill; it was to bad-mouth lawyers. So I'm not sure, at least in my part of Alberta, that that interest is quite as strong as I thought it was.

I think the principles that underlie the bill and that we're to be addressing at this stage in discussion are principles that, of course, surround the administration of law and the means by which law is applied. It's those general principles that are being modified in the bill. Then there seems to be a set of subprinciples. I think most speakers who have spoken to the bill agree, too, that the justice system has to be made more user friendly and that the system has to be more accessible. I think that those guiding principles are sound and ones worthy of support and are reflected in the legislation with the specifics of the bill.

I also noted that the impetus for the change came out of the justice summit that was held. I guess I'm pleased to see that that was the root of these changes. The number of summits that were held in the last five or six years and the amount of direct legislation that came out of those summits I think is rather small, so it's good to see before us action being taken by the government that is a direct outgrowth of that justice summit.

Commenting on accessibility, I think it's something that we all run into in our positions as MLAs. I have a group of condo owners who look at the justice system with some dismay in terms of it helping them to resolve the current problems they face. Part of that surrounds the whole notion of accessibility and being user friendly. They feel removed from the system, and they are more than skeptical that the relief they seek can be found in the system or, at least if it is going to be found in the system, that it's going to be a very lengthy and protracted process. I think they'll take heart at some of the changes that are embodied in this particular bill.

The extent of the justice system in the province was a surprise to me. I knew generally about the justice system, but I didn't realize that there were Provincial Court locations in 74 communities across the province and that 23 of these are run on a full-time basis while the other 51 sit on specified days – it's much more extensive than I'd believed it to be – and that there are 106 Provincial Court judges. That's a substantial body.

Some of the changes are designed to enhance the role of those 106

Provincial Court judges and the ability of those courts to deal directly with breaches of its orders as a court. They'll be able to deal with items like tenancy agreements, they'll be able to order the return of property, and they'll be able to conduct payment hearings in civil matters. I think this is going to be important. They increased the limit for Provincial Court civil matters, and that makes sense.

One of the innovations in the changes proposed is that it enshrines the civil claims mediation process and the pretrial conference process in law. That was a pilot that was undertaken in 1998 and '99 and was a great success. I think the record, if the minister's information is as we have received it, is that they handled 1,074 mediations in 1999 with an average success rate of close to 70 percent. That's a very impressive record, and to be able to incorporate that process that brings people together and seeks to come to a solution through mediation into the act, I think, is very sound indeed. I think that if you put that in context with the fact that in 1998-99 there were 28,865 actions filed in the Provincial Court of Alberta, you start to get a feeling for the significance or the kind of impact that that mediation process can have on the justice system.

Madam Speaker, I'm not sure that I have a lot more to say. I appreciated the comparison chart that the minister provided us. I understand that section 74, which has been rather controversial, is going to be amended by the government before we finish dealing with this bill. I think it's supported by a number of individuals and groups that that should be removed, although I notice that the minister's comment was that it was really a misinterpretation that led to the difficulty being raised with that section. Nevertheless, I think it's appropriate that it not be part of this bill.

With those few comments, Madam Speaker, I'm pleased to support the Justice Statutes Amendment Act. Thank you.

8:30

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure, standing in this Assembly on the eve of the upcoming election, to enter into the debate on second reading of Bill 20, Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2000.

As the Minister of Justice has illustrated and voiced his keen interest in getting this bill through, I do wonder if Bill 20 is his only hiccup in holding his members in this Assembly. You know, Madam Speaker, the Minister of Justice has put forward some competent ideas in this bill, but as so often is the case, it makes it so difficult for members of the opposition, who truly want to see the best things coming out of this Assembly, to show Albertans why we're here, because we work for them as the elected people of this province.

The bill that we see put forward has actually got some substantial information in it. Under the different things that we look at, I'm wondering: could we not ask the Minister of Government Services and her department whether or not the questions have any parallels with her department? It was about a year ago when some of the difficulties with private registries came out and it was discovered that there were breaches in privacy and confidentiality. There were also some suggestions in the minister's department at the time that there was not a uniform pricing, which then had to be enforced through pricing changes, to do with the services that were provided by the registries. Was Bill 20 derived from this actual concern? I do wonder about some of the things.

You know, when we look at other things, it's interesting to hear that the provincial Minister of Justice made some comments about how reorganization of the Provincial Court will erode the expertise that has been created within the Alberta youth courts. To make sure that we are still going to be able to do the best for both the accused and of course their victims and make sure not just that the court process is as efficient as it can be but that the outcome is as just as it can be, I haven't heard from the government anything that would make my level of caution or concern go down.

Madam Speaker, Bill 20 has contradictions. We see first of all that one of the most controversial sections, the one that deals with the limitations of claim for survivors, may or may not be amended in ways that may address the concerns put forward by the Official Opposition and by the members of the legal community. We also have sections that reorganize the Provincial Court in some ways that are helpful but in other ways could be very problematic. I also understand, going through and perusing Hansard, that at this stage there have been some changes already in section 74, so that type of item is very well received. I think the legal community will be looking at that with great interest.

I think it's very critical at this time that we do look at this particular bill, particularly when we look at our judicial system. It is an area in our society today where there isn't much confidence, certainly not as much confidence as we'd like there to be.

I look at this especially from the point of view of many constituents of Edmonton-Manning, many of whom have accessed the judicial system, whether it's been family court, whether it's been divorce court or, in some cases, other matters dealing with courts. As they come into the constituency office and voice their concerns to me, they state that it's the expense on their part, that the system's too complicated, and accessibility is always a problem as they present their case to me. They're concerned around the unified family court system. The question that must be asked in our law system is that it's becoming too expensive. The major concerns are certainly the long waits, accessibility, and the cost. This not only impacts them in what happens, but certainly these costs they experience are costs that many of them cannot afford.

A question that has come to mind is: how many more judges will be required? We have an excellent opportunity here; we could increase the ratio of judges male to female. So what I'd also like to know from the minister is what estimates he would have indicating how much more it's going to cost for staff, not only for judges but for additional staff that will be required by those courts.

In looking at the review of Bill 20, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2000, I think it is an excellent suggestion that the Provincial Court will no longer be divided into the criminal division, the youth division, the family division, and the civil division. This consolidation will certainly be of benefit to all.

Another excellent suggestion here is that the Lieutenant Governor will be able to make regulations outlining situations in which the court fees can be waived. An excellent suggestion, because under the present system many of our people of low income or who are caught in a social safety net don't feel that the courts are accessible to them. So with the waiving of the fees, Madam Speaker, this will be an opportunity where these people will see that the courts are accessible and that they're participants in a system where there's fairness, where there's accountability, and where Albertans are treated fairly by a system not because of how much money they have and what they can afford but because of what is right and what is wrong.

You know, in looking at correspondence that has been sent to us – it was pointed out while I was perusing the bill – the Lieutenant Governor in Council will be able to make regulations allowing a claim of up to $25,000 to be heard in the Provincial Court. The current system is $10,000, although the regulation is currently set at $7,500. The Lieutenant Governor in Council will be able to make regulations governing payment hearings. These payment hearings are for the purpose of determining a person's ability to pay the money owing under the judgment in the court by an estimate schedule and other methods under which the amount owing is to be paid.

The Lieutenant Governor in Council will be able to make regulations with respect to pretrial conferences and mediation. The clerk of the Provincial Court will determine which matters must go through the process of a pretrial conference prior to proceeding to trial, and the powers of the pretrial conference are set out in Bill 20. Now, this can be "giving directions with respect to matters raised or otherwise considered during pre-trial conference" or "setting out the results of the pre-trial conference." This can be done by "amending pleadings" and "striking out pleadings by reason of the failure of a party to attend a pre-trial conference" or other directions the court considers appropriate.

You know, as we look at this bill, it has a lot of substantive effects as opposed to being merely a housekeeping bill. As I mentioned before, it has substantive importance to the minister. I know that my House leader says that I can speak for 30 minutes, and by prolonging this, maybe we can get another couple of weeks of question period out of this, Madam Speaker. But I do want to set out the main points of this bill and that I am for the bill.

I would like to say, in saying that I will be backing this bill, Madam Speaker, that the main highlights that are really making this bill worth while are that it consolidates the Provincial Court Judges Act into the Provincial Court Act, repeals the Surrogate Court Act, expands the jurisdiction of the Provincial Court to encompass matters that previously could only be brought before the Court of Queen's Bench but can now be dealt with in the Provincial Court, and, finally, limits the grounds for review of a Chief Judge in an administrative decision, as in the case that was brought up by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, the Judge Reilly case.

So, Madam Speaker, I will take my leave, and hopefully as I sit down, many members from the government side will stand up and carry this debate on so we can carry on this evening as we are.

Thank you.

8:40

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close debate.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have to admit that up until the last few moments I was entirely puzzled by what we were seeing, because the Justice Statutes Amendment Act was introduced in this House on Tuesday, April 18, almost exactly seven months ago, and until yesterday it suffered in a din of silence. Then we've had, of course, all this wonderful input in the House in the last day and a half and, I must say, such wonderful input it is.

I'm so pleased that at least one member of the opposition is doing his research. I have to commend Edmonton-Mill Woods for having gone back and read Hansard and the comments that were made when the act was introduced and referring to some of the information that was provided at that time as to the purpose of the act. So many of the other opposition members failed to do their research, and while I appreciated the positive comments that were made – and I don't wish to sound defensive – it would have been so much more elucidating if some research had been done on the information.

I do want to deal with some of the issues that have been raised because this is an important act, notwithstanding the fact that we've discovered that the real purpose of most of the speeches was to waste time and arrive at more question periods rather than to actually deal with the issues in the act. But there are important issues, and some of those important issues have been raised. Spruce Grove-St. Albert started it off with discussion about the Survival of Actions Act. And I must say that it is a bit disappointing because, as I always try to do in introducing an act, I met with the Justice critic, then the Member for Edmonton-Norwood, and I believe the Opposition House Leader, and I outlined exactly what was going into the act and why. So I am a bit disappointed to have people come back and tell me that they weren't communicated with.

It would have made for good reading and research if any of the members of the opposition had read the final report, no. 76, of the Law Reform Institute with respect to section 74.

AN HON. MEMBER: It's right there.

MR. HANCOCK: Is that the copy that I sent over yesterday afternoon for your members to read? It would have been, because it sets out quite clearly the reason why section 74 was included in the Justice Statutes Amendment Act. The report clearly indicates the process which the Law Reform Institute went through in order to arrive at their conclusions. While it will be my intention in committee to introduce an amendment – and I'll get to the reasons why – to take that section out of the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, I want to be clear that section 74 was included for a very, very good reason.

First of all, I am of the belief that when the Alberta Law Reform Institute delves into an issue of law and makes a report, those reports should not sit on the shelf. Those reports should be acted upon. The issues, the recommendations where appropriate, where possible should be brought forward and embodied in our law. So I wanted to put that out, and the Law Reform Institute made some very good comments on the whole question of the interpretation of section 5 of the Survival of Actions Act and the interpretation that came forward in the case known as Duncan and Baddeley. They have referred to a number of the reasons why the law should be clarified and why it is necessary to have a section like section 74.

Now, the reason why we're going to be proposing an amendment I'll deal with when we get to Committee of the Whole, but I just wanted to put on the record that we do not do these statutes by stealth. We do not slip sections in.

Section 74 is in fact the recommendations from the Law Reform Institute, a 61-page report, a very well-researched and briefed report, which I would commend to the opposition members and members of government to read, because we will be wanting to discuss this issue over the course of the next few months. It is one which should come back to this House in the future after consultation with members of MADD and PAID and other organizations. I must say that I did have a lot of input from the plaintiff's bar as well on this issue. It does behoove us to have some discussion. I'm so pleased that people are now attuned to that particular issue and that we can have a meaningful discussion on it in the future.

There has been a lot of issue made of the Provincial Offences Procedure Act and particularly the question of registry agents being able to accept the payment of fines. For the benefit of Lethbridge-East and Edmonton-Strathcona, who talked about the principles of the act – and I appreciate them delving into the principles and objectives of the act – what the Justice Statutes Amendment Act is all about is easier access to the system, easier access to the courts, better opportunities to resolve disputes, encouragement to resolve disputes through mediation and through other processes. One of the ways in which we can make the system more accessible to the public is providing more avenues for them to access it.

Now, it may be a small thing, but the payment of fines is one area where the more outlets, the more availability there is, the more accessible it is to the public. Nobody is forcing anyone to go to a registry agent to pay a fine or to pay a surcharge for the purpose of paying that fine. They can pay the fine in the old way. They can take it down to the courthouse. They can send it in by mail. They can do any one of a number of things to avoid the surcharge. But if they happen to be in a registry agent renewing their insurance or renewing their licence and they would like to pay their fine at that location, is there any good reason why they shouldn't be able to do that, have the convenience of that, and yes, if they wish, pay the surcharge in order to have that convenience? They don't have to. They can put it in an envelope, put a stamp on the envelope, mail it in on a timely basis, and it'll certainly be accepted.

I hope that in the future, Madam Speaker, we'll be able to afford people the opportunity to go to our web site and to log in on the web site and make payments of their fine through electronic funds transfer on the web site. I hope that that will be offered in the very near future.

That issue has been raised by a number of members opposite, and I did want to address it. I don't anticipate, as a couple of members do – I think Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert indicated, for one, that she was concerned about the number of people that would be put out of work. Well, it was clear in my introductory remarks and it's clear now that this is an expansion of availability, of accessibility. We won't be closing any of the clerk's offices because all of a sudden everybody's paying their tickets through another venue.

Edmonton-Riverview raised concerns about what could be encapsulated in the words "judicial independence" and referred to a specific case. Quite frankly, I guess I expected that that might be raised. What I want to assure Edmonton-Riverview and what I want to assure again Edmonton-Strathcona in his comments about the sections on pages 4 and 5 of the bill is that what we're attempting to do . . . [interjections] Well, Edmonton-Riverview made comments yesterday, and Edmonton-Strathcona did today, and I want to address them both at the same time. The purpose is not to detract from judicial independence but certainly to improve the efficiency in the operation of the court in allowing the Chief Judge, not the Minister of Justice but the Chief Judge of the Provincial Court, to order the resources of the court in a manner which makes most effective use and provides, again, best access to the public of Alberta.

If the Chief Judge of the Provincial Court determines that he needs more judges in a particular area to handle a particular workload, then he should be able to order the resources of his court in order to accomplish that, whether that would mean moving judges temporarily or permanently in terms of the area that they sit in or whether that would mean moving judges temporarily or permanently in terms of the division in which they sit. That's the purpose of the section. It allows the Chief Judge the opportunity to organize his court in a manner which deals with and provides the best access to Albertans who need it and to deal with time to trial and those sorts of issues by reordering the resources that he has at his behest.

There is provision made in the bill and there is further provision which will be introduced in the amendments, which I hope to get to at some point in time . . . [interjection] Soon. My own member is admonishing me: soon. We will introduce those amendments, which will provide a process for a judge who doesn't like the decision or the ordering of the Chief Judge to appeal to the Judicial Council and have their grievances heard. But it is unseemly for judges to be going to court and particularly unseemly for judges to be going to court at the expense of the provincial government for both sides of the case and having the province bear all the expenses of both sides of the argument, taking it through the processes of appeal, when there is a more appropriate forum readily available to them. That's the intent. It's not an intent to in any way interfere with independence of individual judges or of the judiciary at all, but to allow the Chief Judge to utilize those resources to do what is the most important issue here, and that is to provide better access by Albertans to the Provincial Court.

Many, many other comments were raised, but most of them fell in those categories. I cannot let the opportunity pass, though, to deal with some of the comments that were raised by Edmonton-Glenora, because quite truly they hurt. They do. They're very hurtful comments. In the middle of debate Edmonton-Glenora referred to "nasty bits," that in a bill that could have some very straightforward, positive elements, there are these nasty bits secreted away. He says:

I am left to my speculation that it is done quite on purpose; that is, to make sure that the nasty bits, as I refer to them, are hidden and aren't immediately apparent except on close scrutiny.

Madam Speaker, that strikes so very close to the heart.

When I engage in this process of drafting and bringing forward legislation to improve the judicial system for Albertans, one of the processes that this minister engages in is sharing with his opposition critic exactly what's going to be in the bill. Not the direct wording of the bill, not a draft of the bill, because it would be quite inappropriate to give the actual draft of the bill before it's tabled in the House, but the concepts that are going to be in the bill, including the nasty bits, and pointing out – in fact, I think his colleague the Opposition House Leader might confirm for him that I even point out some of the areas that I think might be particularly controversial. Rather than hide them, I want to highlight them so that we can have a good debate on them. To come back and accuse – and I think it is an accusation – of secreting nasty bits in a bill is very hurtful and quite inappropriate. I think it would be appropriate for him to rise in his place at an appropriate time and direct an apology on that particular issue.

I think that deals with most of the issues that have been raised by members of the opposition speaking in the session on this issue.

Edmonton-Glenora referred to the unified family court and whether this is somehow synchronized with the work that we're doing with respect to a unified family court. There is a Unified Family Court Task Force. I'm looking forward to a report from them. But I must indicate to the House that we have to work on two planes. We have to continually improve the existing structure so that Albertans can have greater access and better access to the courts and timely resolution of their disputes while we're working on what the long term might be and what the big picture might be for the courts. So while it may be appropriate to refer to the unified family court in this context – and I think I did refer to it in my opening remarks – we must continually do work to improve our legislation to improve the courts as we now know them while we're planning the future of the courts. That would be the only comment I'd make on the Unified Family Court Task Force.

Edmonton-Glenora did refer, again very cynically, to the parts of the act which deal with the Public Trustee Act, and all I can do at this point in time is assure him that there is no intent in this bill to in any way harm Albertans whose affairs are being taken care of by the Public Trustee. Albertans protected by the Public Trustee will not be affected negatively by the changes to the act, but I will get Edmonton-Glenora some more detailed information, because he has such a lack of trust for me, some additional information to show why this is not a nefarious, nasty bit secreted away but is an important change to be made at this time.

I do want to thank members of the House for allowing an omnibus bill – it's not an omnibus bill but a bill which deals with so many acts. As was quite frankly and quite rightly pointed out by Edmonton-Strathcona, this all comes together into a package which makes sense when you read it in the context of what our provincial courts are doing, what our courts are doing, and what the judicial system is doing to provide a good opportunity for Albertans to resolve their disputes.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'll call the committee to order.

Bill 20
Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2000

[Debate adjourned November 21: Dr. Nicol speaking]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Justice.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Chairman. It seems like only moments ago we were dealing with this very bill. I'm delighted to rise in committee to deal with some of the issues that we've just been talking about and to move an amendment, which I believe will be called A1, to Bill 20 and to ask that it be dealt with as a package.

Madam Chairman, Bill 20 is designed to enhance the court system, to provide improved access to the courts in Alberta, and the legislation deals with a wide variety of changes to speed up the court process, particularly in regard to civil cases. As a result of the bill sitting over from the spring session and in fact having been sitting out there for public discussion and consumption for a matter of seven months, we've had an opportunity to receive further input from members, from the public, from the Provincial Court, and we're proposing amendments now to take into account some of the feedback and input that we've had.

The hon. opposition Justice critic himself, of course, as the House will remember, called Bill 20 good news and was able to point out only a few things that could be done better. Well, Madam Chairman, we're now tabling the amendments to the Justice Statutes Amendment Act to do just that.

I want to just highlight a few key points. The amendments that are being presented now would increase the maximum limit for small claims cases in Provincial Court. After the proposed House amendments the maximum limit that could be established would increase from $10,000 to $50,000 instead of the previous $25,000 that was proposed in the bill. The reason for that is that after having some consultation – I thought we were pushing the envelope a little at $25,000 but discovered that there was quite an appetite, actually, for increasing the levels available to the Provincial Court, civil claims division, to a higher limit.

Now, of course, we're not able to go to that higher limit immediately. Members will remember that the small claims limit, the actual limit, is set by regulation within the confines of the upper limit that's set in the act. So while we set it at $50,000 in the act with this amendment, it will remain at $7,500 until we have satisfied ourselves that the resources are available to allow the gradual move up, but we would hope to do that on a timely basis.

Provincial Court provides a simpler process than the Court of Queen's Bench, and parties are able to represent themselves more easily. It's not very cost-effective to take a claim of less than $50,000 to Court of Queen's Bench. The Provincial Court, to the extent that we've been able to consult with them, has indicated that they don't have any concerns with raising the limit to this amount, so it seems appropriate to put the amount up to a reasonable level, the $50,000 level, and try to work as diligently as we can to achieve that level.

The opposition also expressed concern about proposed amendments regarding Provincial Court judges' powers regarding contempt. The legislation ensures that contempt orders are issued only to ensure compliance and not punishment, and the amendments, I think, serve to clarify that.

We have also addressed the hon. Justice critic's concerns dealing with the privative clause and how complaints against judges would be dealt with. The amendments provide for a clear process of taking the matters to the Judicial Council and outlining some of the concerns around that. The Judicature Act would be amended so that complaints by Provincial Court judges and justices of the peace about decisions of supervisory judges would be dealt with by the Judicial Council rather than by a judicial review in the courts. The legislation also amends the Judicature Act to review remuneration and benefits for judges, masters, and justices of the peace every four years instead of every three years. Currently, you will recall, we have to have a Judicial Compensation Commission every three years. Federally they have them every four years, and this amendment will allow us to align with the federal practice. This will reduce the costs associated with the process itself.

Another amendment allows the minister to establish a tariff of fees and expenses that will establish the amount paid by the government to parties involved in a complaint by a judge against a supervisory judge to reimburse them for their costs of legal representation. Let's be clear about this. We're not intending in any way, shape, or form to interfere with an individual's ability to select the counsel of their choice. All we're attempting to do here is to make sure that the cost that's borne by the public for those sorts of disputes are paid for at the normal government rates rather than allowing participants to go out and hire the most expensive lawyers available.

The Jury Act is proposed to be amended to provide for confidentiality of juror addresses. Another amendment provides that the monetary threshold for jury trials should be set by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. The current limit of $10,000 is generally recognized as being too low. Enabling the limit to be set by regulation will now allow a new limit to be set after adequate consultation with stakeholders. This is consistent with the approach for the small claims limit.

The Court of Appeal Act will provide powers to the registrar, deputy registrar, and case management officers to assist the court with case management and other initiatives. That is important because it allows us to take and use judicial time for judicial purposes and take administrative procedures out of the hands of judges, if the court decides they want to do it that way, and allow administrative officers to handle those. It makes for a more efficient use of the resources and better use of judicial time.

Finally, there is an amendment included to deal with the Legal Profession Act to provide that the Legal Aid Society will operate the legal aid plan in accordance with an agreement with the Legal Aid Society, the provincial government, and the Law Society of Alberta. This is good news, Madam Chairman. It puts the legislative framework in place, and of course this section will not be proclaimed until all the i's are dotted and the t's are crossed. We've been in negotiations for some five years with respect to the proper model of governance and process for the Legal Aid Society, and we now have an agreement which all parties have signed, and now we have to look to ensure that it can be implemented. When we're satisfied that it can be implemented, we need the legislative framework to allow us to do it, and that's the purpose of this amendment.

That leaves me only with section 74, the Survival of Actions Act. I did deal with it in second reading briefly. The proposed amendments delete section 74 of the bill and remove the proposed amendment to section 5 of the Survival of Actions Act. Madam Chairman, that proposed amendment was a good amendment. It was consistent certainly with what the Alberta Law Reform Institute had suggested should be done. We had requested the Alberta Law Reform Institute to canvass and consult on it, and they did. But I must be clear. There were not a lot of people who participated in that consultation process. In fact, until this weekend there were not a great number of people who were interested in section 74 of the Justice Statutes Amendment Act or, to put it another way, were interested in what we were proposing to do with respect to section 5 of the Survival of Actions Act. It did not become a major issue until this weekend.

Now, I will say that I have received quite a number of letters from plaintiffs' bar lawyers. They made very good arguments in those letters, but they were arguments which had previously been made and considered by the Law Reform Institute. So on reviewing those letters and submissions, which were very good – I met with a number of plaintiffs' bar lawyers, in fact, on that particular issue, but in the final analysis I was satisfied that the better view of the law was that which was being proposed by the Law Reform Institute.

Having said that, this is a significant issue to be dealt with. The Court of Appeal has expanded the law in Alberta, has created essentially a new head of damages in Alberta by its interpretation of the Survival of Actions Act. There certainly are some cases which are proceeding based on that, and there is an issue to be discussed. I do not believe that the Survival of Actions Act and the compensation that's provided in that matter is where most members of MADD, PAID, and others should be looking, in fact. If there is a problem to be reviewed, it probably is in the Fatal Accidents Act, in the limit set out in there, the $43,000 limit, I believe it is.

The Law Reform Institute I think quite rightly says that justice does not require that a wrongdoer be punished by award of damages. That's not the purpose of civil court. Justice does not require an award to be made to an estate of a deceased person on the sole grounds that an award would have been made to a living plaintiff.

In other words, again I would commend to members of the Legislature that they review the institute's report. It's a good report. I think it's sound law. It's something we should be considering and something that hopefully we will consider again in the future, once more public discussion has been had on this particular issue.

Madam Chairman, those would be my comments with respect to the introduction of the amendments tonight. I would ask the House to consider them favourably and get on with passing Bill 20 so that we can improve the service of justice and the administration of justice in this province and provide better and greater access to the public of Alberta to the courts of Alberta.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks very much, Madam Chairman. An interesting turn of events in the debate on this bill. We've just had a quick transition from second reading to committee, and while we were concluding second reading, the minister took it upon himself to take the opportunity to make I think some gratuitous comments, leading into the introduction of the amendments as well, regarding the length of time that this bill has been before the people of Alberta and then suggesting that it wasn't creating much interest and then furthermore suggesting that there was no legitimate reason for prolonged debate, or at least he couldn't understand it.

[Mr. Herard in the chair]

He makes the point that there were seven months and then all of a sudden this flurry of activity and then suggests that the Official Opposition has some cynical reasons for wanting to prolong debate. Then he turns around and he tables 13 pages – 13 pages – of amendments. With my quick count it looks like some 21 different sections of several different bills are being proposed to be amended. The minister stretches credulity by stating that he can't understand why there is some spirited debate.

Mr. Chairman, the minister felt pierced, hurt, I believe he said, that there was a suggestion that some nasty bits were being secreted away within this bill. Of course, some of the nasty bits are now being amended, particularly those dealing with the Survival of Actions Act and those sections dealing with judicial independence. I would say that the minister should review the history of the government that he's a part of before he worries about the cynicism on the part of the Official Opposition. I would suggest that the Official Opposition is being realistic when it makes the observation that the government hides things which would not receive widespread support within bills.

Mr. Chairman, there are several examples of this. We've got Bill 26, of course, which would have taken away the legal rights of some Albertans. We've got the privative section of Bill 11, which would have protected the government from legal action. We had a proposed environmental protection act which would have allowed the minister to make side deals for development on otherwise protected land. We've got numerous bills where the real guts, the real substance, of the bills are left to regulation sections, and of course the regulations are never debated before the standing committee which was created just for the purpose of debating and reviewing such regulations. So this government has a track record, a history, in fact has perfected the science of secreting away nasty bits within proposed legislation.

So I would say, as the minister has asked me to apologize for making this observation, that perhaps he should dry his crocodile tears and he should apologize to this member for his bad acting and his overstatement of the facts.

Now, I will say that near the end of the minister's rather defensive response to the second reading debate, he did say that he would be providing some details of the impact of this legislation on the operations of the Public Trustee and those Albertans that depend on the work of the Public Trustee. I look forward to receiving those details prior to the passage of this bill, because I think this group of Albertans who are vulnerable deserve that respect. Certainly we have an obligation as members of this Assembly, Mr. Chairman, to provide the scrutiny that this section requires before we give the government permission to change the operations of the Public Trustee.

I would once again say, Mr. Chairman, that the Justice Statutes Amendment Act as an omnibus bill does contain many bits which are troubling and even nasty. Some of them are being saved now by these amendments amongst these 13 pages of amendments. I would just ask the Minister of Justice to carefully consider whether or not things like section 74, which has now been removed, would have been better served in a discussion as a stand-alone bill.

The Alberta Law Reform Institute has written an excellent report, and it deserves to be studied. It deserves to be considered. I was intrigued by the minister's statement that when that body provides the government with these reports, it's incumbent upon the government to act quickly. I note that, of course, this is report 76 from that August body, and I'm just wondering if the minister would like to give us a rundown of how quickly they've acted on the other 75 of those reports, including of course the ones on a unified family court.

That being said, Mr. Chairman, I will listen to the minister's response as we continue the committee process, as we review these amendments, and I suggest that we could even see these – did I say 13 pages? I believe it's 10 pages; I don't want to misstate myself. I perceive that we may see these 10 pages of amendments now even grow in size as committee proceeds.

Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Justice.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I don't want to belabour this too much, but I think it does need to be said that I didn't indicate at all that the government had any policy with respect to these. I indicated that I as Justice minister felt it was appropriate to look at, and I think it's my role as Justice minister to look at the Institute of Law Research and Reform reports and bring them forward where appropriate and not leave them on the shelf. I wanted just to clarify that.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has quite rightly pointed out that the amendments were tabled tonight, notwithstanding the fact that in my usual form I shared the concepts earlier with my critic. I think it would make for better debate if opposition members and other members of the House had a chance to peruse the amendments, and therefore I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Chairman, I would move that the committee now rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Herard in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. LANGEVIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on Bill 20. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur with the report? All in favour, please say aye.

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 28
Appropriation (Supplementary
Supply) Act, 2000 (No. 2)

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move for the consideration of the Assembly Bill 28, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2000 (No. 2).

The contents of the bill having been considered by Committee of Supply for two full days with vigorous debate and exchange of viewpoint, I would request that the Assembly consider passing this and letting us go home at a reasonable time tonight.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. You know, that's so disrespectful of Albertans, who are actually footing the bill for this supplementary supply request. It's not enough for this government to miss their budget estimates and their targets by billions of dollars every year. They have the audacity, then, to come into the Assembly and try to make a joke out of asking for nearly a billion dollars worth of supplemental estimates, a requisition just so shortly into the fiscal year. It really does show their arrogance.

It does remind me of that quote that's attributed to a banker, I believe, in the States: you know, a billion here, a billion there, and pretty soon you're talking real money. That's the kind of arrogance and disrespect that this government has for the taxpayers of this province. Every budget we've seen is just sort of a preliminary first guess. I mean, it's as bad as the Justice Statutes Amendment Act. You know, we see 10 pages of amendments to that bill. We see supplementary request after supplementary request.

Mr. Speaker, since 1993 we've had six supplemental supply requests brought in by Jim Dinning, one former Treasurer, another seven supplemental supply requests brought in by Stockwell Day, another Provincial Treasurer, and now we have a supplemental supply request for $979.321 million, this particular bill, brought in by the current Provincial Treasurer. It just makes me wonder how long he's going to keep his job, because there's a horrible track record of Treasurers being able to keep their job in this province.

The Alberta Liberals have a tremendous amount of difficulty continuing to support this government, particularly in this latest installment of its spin the giant wheel and see where the budget lands today. These latest budget estimates represent I believe the 26th separate onetime spending announcement for health care in the last two years. Now, that is managerial incompetence writ large, paid for of course out of somebody else's pocket.

It's interesting to me that when Stockwell Day was Treasurer, he made a lot of noise about accountability and fiscal responsibility and transparency and openness, and then he went along and brought in nearly $3 billion worth of supplemental supply estimates. Now this current Provincial Treasurer is well on his way, with his first supplemental supply estimate, of eclipsing even that inglorious record. It took Stockwell Day I believe it was his first three or four supplemental requests to top a billion dollars, and of course the current Provincial Treasurer will be able to do that with his very next blink of an eye.

So, Mr. Speaker, we're really left on this side of the House scratching our heads. What is it that these folks do around their agendas and priorities and budgeting committees? Do they simply just have nap time and wait until the oil revenues come in and then say, "Oh, golly, let's spend some more money because we underbudgeted in so many areas"? This supplemental request covers the Ministry of Health and Wellness, Ministry of Government Services, Ministry of Environment, Ministry of Community Development, Ministry of Infrastructure, Ministry of Justice, Ministry of Municipal Affairs. It provides new money to the Auditor General. I mean, it's a real shopping list.

You would think, Mr. Speaker, that they would be better at it after 30 years. You would think they've had enough practice and that they would be better at it, but I guess you just can't teach some old dogs new tricks.

Now, I want to take a look at what this means in the context of the overall budget and financial integrity of the province of Alberta. Let's take a look at this supplemental supply bill and relate it to the second-quarter fiscal update, which the Treasurer just released on November 14, far earlier than it's ever been released before. We can only conclude that the reason why the Treasurer was so anxious to rush this report into the public domain was to try to deflect attention away from those issues that are really troubling Albertans right now: the waits for health care, the overcrowded classrooms that their children are facing, how thin their wallets are getting when they have to fill up their car at the gas pumps, their rising, skyrocketing electricity bills, their fuel heating costs, which are going through the roof.

Those are the issues that Albertans from right across this province are talking to the Official Opposition about, and they see it as hypocrisy, frankly, that the government would say: "Oh no, no, no. Everything's fine. Everything's fine. Just trust us. Look; we have a quarterly update for you." Well, you know that you can't put this quarterly update in the bank, Mr. Speaker, and Albertans know that.

Now, let's see what this quarterly update really means, and let's put this in the context of this little spending splurge that the Provincial Treasurer wants to take us all on. We have revenue projected now in this province of $23,555,000,000. That's an all-time record, I believe, for the province of Alberta. They are telling us that this will generate nearly a $6 billion surplus at this point in time. Certainly a $6 billion surplus gives us lots of flexibility to do some things which we should have done long ago, and that is fund appropriately those core services that Albertans depend on.

Let's look at what the program expense size is. In the same quarterly forecast we see that a total expense of $18,726,000,000 is being projected. Okay. Nearly $19 billion. Of that, nearly a billion, $945 million, is debt servicing costs. This leaves a net program expense of $17,781,000,000, nearly $18 billion.

Well, let's just compare that $17.7 billion back to the revenue forecast. Now, if we take a look at the revenue forecast and you see that . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The Government House Leader is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Questioning a Member

MR. HANCOCK: Under 482 Beauchesne would the hon. member entertain a question?

MR. SAPERS: Yes.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: He said yes.

Debate Continued

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I realize that we've gone a bit past that point in the debate, but it took me a moment to find the rule. I'm wondering whether the hon. member, in raising questions about the Provincial Treasurer's tabling of the quarterly report on November 14, a full two weeks earlier than one might normally have anticipated, in order for members of this House to have the full benefit of that report during the full period of time that the House was sitting, feels that members should not have had access to that information for that period of time while this House was sitting.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I think there was a question there.

MR. SAPERS: Well, I'll take that as a precedent and expect full disclosure of the finances prior to any sitting and the answer to all of our questions prior to the passage of any bills. That would be a great standard to set, Mr. Minister. Thank you for committing to it.

Now, as I was saying, what we see here is a total revenue projection of $23.5 billion, but just for the sake of argument let's project into the future. Let's be good prudent fiscal managers in this Assembly, something that's uncommon, and let's see if we can bring the government along and take them down this path of being prudent and careful and actually having a vision and a sense of the future.

Now, at some point, Mr. Speaker, I think you'll agree with me that our nonrenewable resource revenue is going to begin to diminish and eventually disappear. If we take a look at the $23.5 billion in projected revenue right now, we see that crude oil royalty revenue accounts for nearly $1.4 billion. It's $1,365,000,000. You take that away from the revenue projection, and what you're left with is $22,190,000,000, still enough to pay for the program expense of nearly $18 billion.

But now let's take away the royalty revenues that come from synthetic oils. That's nearly a billion dollars. That's $930 million. That leaves a revenue stream of $21,260,000,000, still enough to meet those $18 billion worth of program expenses. But then let's take away the natural gas revenue as well, the revenue that flows because of the gas resources in this province, and that's $5,318,000,000, nearly 5 and a half billion dollars. You take that away, and you're left with a revenue stream now of $15,942,000,000.

Now, that $15,942,000,000 actually means that you're going to have a net deficit, if that royalty revenue wasn't there, of $1.8 billion, $1,839,000,000. You've got $15.9 billion in revenue. You've got program expenses of $17.8 billion. So you've got this deficit net of the nonrenewable resource revenues.

When is this government going to realize that it has to start planning for that eventual future? The conventional crude is drying up. The rate of exploration and the rate of extraction in terms of gas is at such a rapid pace that it's not going to be there for all that much longer. I'm told that even the newest of the oil sands projects are looking at maybe 30 years' worth of mineable reserves. Thirty years, Mr. Speaker. That's not all that long in the future. So when is this government going to get serious about creating baseline accountable budgets that adequately fund core programs and then planning for the future in such a way that we're not on this roller coaster, this roller coaster of lowballing revenues and budgets at one point, setting them ridiculously high at other points, going on spending sprees when it suits the government politically, as we get ever closer to the election, and then ratcheting back all of that funding and being so disrespectful to all of the partners that the government is involved with, conveniently after another mandate has been provided.

It really is an unethical, unprofessional, irresponsible way of managing the affairs of this province, and it's gone on far too long. I would ask, I would plead with members of the front bench of the government to think carefully about the next time that they come to this Assembly hat in hand saying: "Oh, gee. Really we didn't mean it. We just made a little bit of a mistake in our budget, so would you please give us a supplementary supply?" I would ask them to fight at that cabinet table to do what it is that they've promised to do, and that is to take their responsibility for providing truthful and honest estimates of program expense and revenue, bring forward a budget for the scrutiny and the approval of Albertans, put it out there in a form and at a time when it can be carefully reviewed, debated, when we can have genuine citizen input, not input trumped up through these mail-outs and these glossy brochures but genuine input.

Let's take a look at reforming the process by which we do budgets in this province. Let's take a look at reforming the process by which the Legislature gives its seal of approval to those budgets. Let's make sure that all members are treated as equals in that review process, that all Albertans, regardless of who they voted for or which party their member happens to represent, have a chance to have their input heard and respected, Mr. Speaker. Then we will have a process with integrity that's been promised, that has the transparency and the openness and the accountability that the new leader of the Reform/Alliance, or whatever they call themselves, speaks of.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

I just have to say that it makes me shake my head when I hear that leader of that party talking about the need for more accountability and more openness in the federal government, knowing full well what it was that we had to endure in this House during his term as Provincial Treasurer. Apparently that shadow over openness and accountability continues to fall over the Legislature in the person of the current Provincial Treasurer.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm glad to have this opportunity to speak to the estimates. Imagine getting maybe two chances to speak to a billion dollars' worth of extra funding.

A few things I wanted address in this that I can't help but mention. Can't the government predict at all what the expenses are going to be? I mean, we heard today from school boards across the province about their infrastructure deficit. There's a huge infrastructure deficit in this province. And you know what? Couldn't that have been foreseen at all? Certainly if you'd contacted school boards and health authorities, that could have been indicated and those kinds of things could have been addressed, I think, this year rather than next year or the following year or the following year.

You know, it's not always new buildings. Often it is maintaining old ones, because if you don't maintain those old ones, then by the time you go fix them, it's a toss-up as to whether you should fix it or build new. I mean, all of us I'm sure at one time or another have lived in an older building at some point in our lives, maybe going to university, maybe we do now, but certainly – my husband used to say that the only thing that works around this house is me. He meant himself not me, of course, but he meant on the house. So I'm sure that's straight.

But, Madam Speaker, my point is maintaining these buildings. Because I am the Infrastructure critic, I want to talk about some of those shortfalls that have not been addressed in this document that I've received, which is the amount of information we get. I would really appreciate from the Minister of Infrastructure – and I'm hoping he will get this information to me. It says here, "Health Care Facilities," but it doesn't list which health facilities were addressed, which school facilities were addressed. If anyone would relay that, I would ask for that list of what buildings were worked on. What did the extra money go to? I would really appreciate knowing that. I don't think that's asking too much.

AN HON. MEMBER: It's on the web site.

MRS. SOETAERT: Pardon me? It's all on the web site? I really spend a lot of my time in here. I would appreciate it, then, if they could just table it.

In that Infrastructure deficit we've talked about priorities. In fact, that question came up today by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. That question actually had the minister squirming. He did not like the question, and the answer wasn't sufficient. The point is: how do you set your priorities? For example, the Parkland school division has a list of priorities. The first priority wasn't addressed, not the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth. The seventh one was addressed. So if we're actually listening – yes, it's confusing to me too, Madam Speaker. I'd like to know how the minister decided on the seventh priority of the Parkland school division rather than their first. I think that's a fair question.

AN HON. MEMBER: Is it political?

MRS. SOETAERT: I want to know if it's political, because the Member for Stony Plain has indicated that it is, so I'd really like that cleared up. I think I deserve, and I think my constituents and in fact all the people across this province deserve to know how priorities are set up and spent within this department.

I'm so glad that the Minister of Learning told people across the province that I was on tour down in Brooks. You know, each of the MLAs are allowed five trips a year, and I think if you're going to do a critic portfolio properly, you should use those trips. I think actually every MLA, whether you're in a certain portfolio or not, has to think outside of the area you're from, because if you're just from . . .

MR. DUNFORD: So you support overseas trips for ministers?

MRS. SOETAERT: No, not overseas. I'm talking Alberta; I'm talking Albertans here. [interjection] No, I didn't support a trip to Mexico by the Minister of Learning, but that is not about estimates right now.

I'm talking about when I went down to Brooks. If I'm going to be the critic for Infrastructure, then it's worth me knowing that it's highway 36. I'll correct that now. By the way, for people who used to wonder about highway 794, it is now highway 44, and it is two-thirds done. We have one-third to go there, just so you know that number changed. Seven years I've been here, but that's okay. So highway 36 and highway 1: a dangerous, dangerous intersection. Where's that overpass? Certainly it's been a priority for the area. Where is their MLA speaking up on it? So those are the concerns I heard.

The water in Gleichen: why has nothing been done about that? The people in Gleichen are drinking from bottled water. They all buy their water.

DR. OBERG: Point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Point of Order Questioning a Member

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm rising under Bauchesne 482. Would the hon. member entertain a question?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have only 20 minutes, and I want to use it for my speech on estimates, but I'll gladly meet with the minister afterwards.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: So the answer is no?

MRS. SOETAERT: The answer is no, but I'll gladly meet with him after, and we can talk about the people in Gleichen. It's funny. You know what else? This will be good, because then the people down there will know that maybe the minister is speaking out once in awhile for his constituency.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, the chair would remind you that we are on Bill 28. Come on; let's get back to it.

Debate Continued

MRS. SOETAERT: Yes. That's the appropriation estimates. Yes. All the estimates. I'm asking how they set their priorities and how things get ignored and neglected across this province, and I want to make sure it's not political, that it is practical for people.

While I was down there, I also noticed . . .

DR. OBERG: Hey, Colleen, who paid for your trip to go down there?

9:40

MRS. SOETAERT: You know, my expenses are all there for my constituents to see anytime they want.

While I was down there, interestingly enough many of the councillors down there were concerned about the lack of policing and the shortage of police, and I'm sure the Minister of Justice has heard that. It's too bad the Minister of Learning is doing a Mexican hat dance while I'm trying to speak, but I must have hit a nerve.

With Justice estimates I would like to address the fact that the DARE program and the issue of underfunding of police, that we don't have enough police in this province, was mentioned down south, and that's not news across the province. I'm sure you're aware of that. If we want to support community policing and be active with the DARE program, then we need more police, because it's no doubt that they're the best ones to deliver that program. So I would encourage that.

The Catholic school in Brooks. I had a tour of that school, and you know what? That's dangerous. It's dangerous. A hallway during recess and going down that stairwell is a bit risky, and you know what? Now that school is being faced with taking their second – well, I wouldn't even say it's their second priority, but instead of getting a new facility, the choice they're being given is to take the building beside it and do major renovations on that. There won't be room for a decent parking lot, a decent track for the kids. They have to build a new gymnasium. So, you know, that's a poor second choice that that school is facing, and you think a facility doesn't reflect an education? It absolutely does. It absolutely does. A gymnasium that has a low roof – you know, the Member for Dunvegan I'm sure knows. I'm sure he knows that a quality building makes a difference in how healthy kids are when they come to school. Proper lighting, proper phys ed, proper track, a decent music room: all of it from an infrastructure point of view is absolutely essential to a good education. I'm going to leave for a moment the infrastructure issues.

I would like to talk about MRIs. It's been brought up in this Legislature. I want you to know that a senior citizen came to my office a couple of weeks ago, and he needed an MRI. He was having headaches. He would have to wait four months, and he said: "Colleen, I can't. I can't wait that long." Yet he didn't have enough money. He had to kind of find it, maybe borrow it from his son. I didn't like doing this, but of course we will help him do this. The pity of it was that I couldn't get him into the public system, so we helped him find a private system where he had to pay I think it was $450 to get an MRI. That's wrong. That's wrong. People shouldn't have to pay for that.

If people need an MRI, they should get it in a timely fashion. And you know what? It should be paid by public dollars. Medically necessary should be paid for, and it isn't paid for. It isn't paid. Then he says: they jumped the queue. It's because you've underfunded it. So Mourie Hooper should sit with back pains for nine months, the minister says. Neck and shoulder and back pains, and he would have to wait nine to 12 months for a prescribed test.

So his doctor recommended it at a clinic that is recognized by this government. He was actually . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: The doctor obviously didn't think it was an emergency.

MRS. SOETAERT: You know what? It was an emergency. [interjection] Well, would you consider not being able to work for nine months an emergency to a family? I certainly would. I certainly would. Obviously, Madam Speaker, they don't care about people who don't have the money to pay for things, that a family has to borrow money in order that somebody can go back to work. That's not respect of people.

The other thing that I want to talk about is long-term care beds. That certainly hasn't been addressed in this budget either and the issue . . . [interjection] You say you've heard that story before. Well, you haven't listened then. You haven't listened, because those of us who live near the capital cities, Edmonton and the other city Calgary . . . [interjection] Right; it's not the capital, Edmonton is. We like to think the outlying areas, though, are the most important areas of course.

The Member for Redwater knows well what I am talking about when I talk about boundaries and the inability to access a long-term care bed for somebody who lives in Villeneuve, five miles away from St. Albert. Can't access. Can't even get on the list for a long-term care bed in St. Albert. That's appalling, Madam Speaker, and that's not been addressed by this budget. St. Albert knows that well too. Absolutely.

MRS. O'NEILL: And you're wrong.

MRS. SOETAERT: Oh, she says I'm wrong. Well, I'll challenge you on that one any fine day.

Now, Madam Speaker, the other issue I want to talk about is how busy our emergency rooms are. I have seen nurses that are just run off their feet, that are asked to stay another four hours after their shifts, that are swamped, that are called back from days off. You know what? They legally can't say no. They can't say no. Now, that's not acceptable. I would venture to say that part of the reason we are short of teachers, nurses, and doctors in this province is because they have been undervalued by this government for the last few years. They have in fact cut their wages. They tell them they're not valuable. They make them feel like they're not valuable by how they're treated, so who would want to go into those professions? Professions that I absolutely admire and respect.

One person said to me, "Well, you know, we're in debt because of the nurses and teachers.” Baloney. It was mismanagement by this government, absolute mismanagement: loan guarantees to Bovar, MagCan, and NovAtel, which continue on. So instead of valuing these fine people – and I will give credit to the Minister of Learning, who actually praised them today. I will give him credit. He’s the first education minister I have heard give that in the last five years. He’s the only one who has. Until that time, they were devalued. Now here we are scrambling to find teachers and nurses. What a pity in a province with a $5 billion surplus, in a province that is the most beautiful one in this country, that should have all the advantages of being the wealthiest province and the most beautiful province. Instead we’ve created a human infrastructure and a physical infrastructure deficit. Sad, sad statements.

One more issue that is an issue that I received from Sturgeon school division, and that is the reality of fuel costs and how that ties to transportation with their schools. I know all school jurisdictions struggle with this one but certainly rural jurisdictions far more than others, because their bus trips are huge and long and their gas expenses are very high. As fuel costs increase, so are their increases. They have some recommendations as to how to adjust that. Their recommendations are that Alberta Learning examine the impact of increased fuel prices on school boards and provide additional funding as required for this increased cost and that Alberta Learning review fuel costs on a regular basis and adjust the fuel component of transportation funding on a quarterly basis in accordance with the variance in fuel costs. I know that might take a little bit more work for the department, but I think a quarterly review of that would be a bit fairer and would certainly serve our children better, because those costs then wouldn’t come directly out of the school board funds.

Madam Speaker, I’m going to conclude my remarks. [interjection] Well, I still have three minutes. I might keep going, then, since I got such encouragement from West-Yellowhead.

I have to say that this kind of budgeting isn’t fair to people. It’s good-time Charlie spending instead of a decent plan at the beginning of the year. One year kindergarten gets funding in September. Well, of course they’re grateful for it, but my goodness, they could have planned for it in May or before that. Couldn’t the government figure that out in the original budget? I bet they could.

9:50

MR. STRANG: School starts in September.

MRS. SOETAERT: The Member for West Yellowhead says that school starts in September. Who do you think plans for September 1? We all just walk in and throw ’em in a room, I guess. That’s the point: you don’t plan. My goodness, if you really don’t know how school works, you really should hop into some of the early, early meetings that start in April and maybe prior to that to see how many students you’re going to have, what grades they’re going to be in, what programs you’re going to offer, how many grades, how many staff you need. You’re planning in April, not in September. I can’t believe that, but anyway, we’ll keep working at them, Madam Speaker.

I think I ask on behalf of many, many people in Alberta: consistent budgeting, a fairer process, an all-party budget committee that actually looks at issues and priorities, that depoliticizes it so that priorities are made on people, that the kids who are going to school in an old building might be a priority before somebody else who just wants a new school. I think it’s about kids and it’s about people; it’s not about politics. [interjection] If kids are our future, then treat them right.

So, Madam Speaker, I’m disappointed that this government can’t plan properly, that people aren’t being taken care of like they should, and that’s not to say that most of this isn’t needed dollars. What it is to say is that I don’t see the priorities that my constituents are telling me about, and I don’t see fair budgeting so that people can plan.

Those are my concerns with this budget. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would like to address Bill 11, and I’m taking a look at the schedule . . .

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Bill 11?

MR. MASON: Bill 11. I missed that; didn’t I? I really wanted to be here for that, but the government’s timing was off.

All right. So we’re up to Bill 28 now, Madam Speaker, and I would like to address what I find to be quite shocking, and that is that in less than one fiscal year this government has spent nearly a billion dollars of money that was unbudgeted. That’s got to be a record. Maybe it’s not. Maybe it’s been worse in previous years. I guess what I’d like to suggest to the hon. member, Madam Speaker, is that I think the government should be able to plan its expenditures and get approval from the Assembly in advance of making those expenditures.

I just want to take one example. I won’t take all of them, but I’d like to take Health and Wellness. Here we have an amount of $293,593,000 in additional expenditures. Now, the people on this side have been calling for the government to spend more money in health care. Well, we certainly have, and it’s not that per se that I’m objecting to; it’s just the manner in which they’re going about it. Now, just before the last election, Madam Speaker, the Premier, after denying it for years through all of the cuts, finally admitted that the government didn’t really have a plan for the cuts they made to health. He admitted it, and I have the Edmonton Sun clippings to prove it. Imagine my surprise that the Premier would admit that the government didn’t have a plan, but he’s like a cute little puppy who’s made a mess on the rug. What are you going to do? All you can do is clean it up. You can’t take a newspaper and go after him.

The question I have is: over that intervening time since the last election, has the government improved its performance? Has it pulled up its socks? Has it learned to plan for education? Has it learned to budget appropriately for the expenditures? I would say to that, Madam Speaker, that all you need to do is pull out the latest report of the Auditor General of Alberta, and you will find exactly the answer you’re looking for. I’d just like to quote some of the marginal comments in the section on Health and Wellness. Here’s one.

While payments to physicians have increased, questions of accountability remain.

While steps have been taken by the Department to contain drug costs in Alberta, costs continue to increase significantly.

The Department has limited information to compare planned and actual drug use and costs.

We previously reported delay in finalizing business plans.

And here’s the one, Madam Speaker. If I found this billion dollars in unbudgeted spending shocking, here’s what I find that’s appalling, and that is that the “health budget has increased more from interim funding than from annual budget increases.” Now, that’s the most telling comment that you could find.

I’ll just go on a little bit farther in the Auditor General’s report. It says:

Although budget increases and other steps have been taken, the pattern of prior years continues. The 1999-2000 health authority business plans were not settled until well into the fiscal year. Most health authorities were asked for resubmissions or addendums to be provided to the Minister in the fall of 1999 when, again, more than half the year was over and the process of preparing new or updated business plans should begin again covering the next three fiscal years.

He continues.

The need to improve planning capabilities is also indicated by the extent of continuous additional funding announcements sometimes described for "one-time" purposes. These often repeat for such things as buying equipment, hiring more health care workers, covering physician payments in excess of planned limits, and eliminating debt and deficits of health authorities.

MR. HANCOCK: It's been tabled. You don't have to read the whole thing.

MR. MASON: Well, you know, I think it would bear if the whole thing were read, Madam Speaker, to the minister and the Government House Leader, because it's obviously not sticking in the government's head. It's not rocket science. It's not something that's hard that they need to figure out. They don't even have to listen to the opposition's side to get it. If they just read their own Auditor General's report, they would realize. I'll read a little bit more.

While subsequent additional funding may provide relief from immediate budget pressures, it is not conducive to good budget management since repetition may create the expectation of continuing amounts in addition to planned annual budget increases. This is evident in the latest business plan submissions where, again, many health authorities are forecasting operating deficits for the fiscal year 2000-01.

It goes on and on. I could read more, and I think it would be very beneficial to the government side to hear it. The point I'm trying to make is that there are very good reasons why they need to come forward and tell us that they spent a whole bunch more money than this Assembly allotted to them, and that is because they haven't fixed the health care system. They're not doing planning. They're not making sure that the budgeting is happening appropriately within the health authorities. All that adds up to big money that the taxpayers are expected to spend, and the government should be capable by this time of doing better than they are doing.

Now, some of this is not related to the mere common, garden-variety mismanagement from this government with which we are so familiar, Madam Speaker. A lot of this expenditure has the smell of an election to it. I think it's one thing for this government to collect a great deal of money from their corporate friends in order to finance their election campaign. That's legitimate. Certainly the corporations benefit from their largesse. But I would really say that it is wrong to use the taxpayers' own money to make large increases in expenditures when they ignored the public the whole time before the election. All of a sudden at the last minute they're flush with cash and they can spend the money and throw it into areas where they will obtain political advantage. That is what I find the most reprehensible about this bill.

So, Madam Speaker, needless to say I'm not going to be supporting this bill. I think the government should clean up its act first of all, and I think the people of Alberta can see through attempts . . .

10:00

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, I have a point of order from St. Albert.

Go ahead.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

MRS. O'NEILL: Madam Speaker, on a point of order in Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). I choose to raise this issue. May I proceed here?

Madam Speaker, section (h) suggests that someone speaking in this Legislature cannot make "allegations against another member." Section (i) says, "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member," and (j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." I would suggest that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands is imputing motives that are not valid. In fact, I think he has totally misspoken, and I would ask that he withdraw what he has said because he is making allegations that I think are quite out of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On the point of order, hon. member.

MR. MASON: Well, maybe, Madam Speaker, it would be helpful if the member could specify what statements created such offence.

MRS. O'NEILL: Madam Speaker, if I may, I'd like to point out that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands has suggested that the government would be making money from and certainly would be assisting certain businesses by virtue of our expenditures in this supplementary estimate and benefiting from our plan of allocating these funds. I take it very seriously. I think it's quite inappropriate.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, do you wish to speak?

MR. MASON: Madam Speaker, I certainly didn't intend to indicate that there were specific favours in return for campaign donations, simply . . . [interjections] No, I did not. I simply said that it is well known that the Conservative Party receives a great deal of campaign financing from corporations, and it is also well known that the Progressive Conservative Party also does a great deal for the corporations in this province.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Sometimes when the debate takes place and I ask members to go through the chair, this is often why, because then we don't have the discussion going back and forth. You are addressing the Assembly through the Speaker.

On the point of order as raised by the hon. Member for St. Albert, (h) and (i) talk about "against another member." The chair did not hear the hon. member speak against another member.

I realize it's 5 after 10 on Tuesday night. I would just ask that we try to do two things, to go through the chair and to talk about the bill that we have in front of us, and avoid some of these side discussions and some of the side remarks, and then this type of thing won't happen.

Thank you.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I will attempt to sum up, because I think the point that I'm trying to make is that if the government were more diligent – and I've just used the example of one department and tried to draw upon the Auditor General's report to make the point – in ensuring that there were planned expenditures and that there was accountability within the system, then we would not be asking this Legislature to rubber-stamp postfact an expenditure of a billion dollars. It shouldn't happen.

You know, I suppose the more cynical of us would certainly think that the timing is suspicious relative to the election. That's for sure. I will not be supporting Bill 28, and I also will not be speaking for 20 minutes, although I'm taking direction from my colleague here in the Official Opposition and learning how to speak for more than five minutes at a time.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Minister of Government Services.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. I'm pleased by the opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 28, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2000 (No. 2). This is asking us to approve an additional $979,321,000, so almost a billion dollars in expenditures, which is a lot of money considering that the total budget that we just approved mere months ago was around $16.1 billion, as I remember. As the Member for Edmonton-Highlands has pointed out, we're not even three-quarters of the way through the year and already there's a billion dollars more that has been spent without the prior approval of this Legislature, which I think is probably also a vote in favour of having this Assembly sit more often. If the government is going to be so keen on coming up with additional expenditures and no plan, then perhaps we could be of assistance to them in that planning if we were all in this Assembly. Even better would be an all-party committee, which we've often suggested, which would maybe cut down on some of the rancor which is created here.

Now, as I look through the list of departments that are asking for approval for additional funds, which I'm assuming many of them have already been given and have spent, the Auditor General is asking for more money to advise and audit all of the government services. That's an interesting one, because the Auditor General is actually quite a small department, and they get great sympathy from me in trying to follow this government around in tracking these expenditures. It's certainly not a smaller government. It's a larger government since I got here, and in trying to track that money, the Auditor General is in need of additional staff to help him do that. In particular, I understand that additional money had to be expended to pay for outside accountants to deal with the extra workload of coping with the move to the children's authorities, both to give advice and also to attempt to create the audit trail and track the audit trail on setting up those children's authorities, which seems to have created some large snags in the system. So that was a little over a million dollars for that.

You know, when you consider it, that's a fair amount of extra money to help chase down what happened when the government tried to start yet again another delegated administrative organization and push the responsibility for delivering services onto these regional children's authorities. No doubt they will experience the same frustrations as the regional health authorities did in that they have the responsibility to provide the services but don't in fact have the authority to do it because they don't have the authority to get enough money to provide the services that they're mandated to do. So I'm sure we'll be hearing more about that department in the future. The short-term result of it was that there was more than a million bucks that had to be expended by the Auditor General on that one.

I notice that under Agriculture, Food and Rural Development we have $98 million in farm assistance, and I certainly don't begrudge those farm assistance programs. I'm more than willing to work along with everyone in here to discover how we can protect and promote and make the family farm stronger. But when I look at that, I'm also looking through the rest of them for what is comparable assistance to the metropolitan areas. Certainly I have to answer questions from people in Edmonton-Centre who say: "Well, what kind of assistance did we get? What assistance was available to our small businesses? What assistance was available to us here?" So I think they're looking for parity, and I can't fault them for that. But I also can't deliver them an answer why that happens and we don't see equal programs happening in the cities.

When we were debating supplementary supply, I asked the questions that I wanted and sort of got answers from the minister about how the increases to the employee wages were being distributed. I asked the minister to please ensure that the groups that were affected got clear information on how the money was to be distributed, how much into each area and exactly what that meant, because the groups that had spoken to me within days of my raising this, I think two days before, said that they still hadn't heard. They'd heard a rumour that the money was coming, but they weren't at all sure what area it was supposed to go into, how it was supposed to be done, how much they got. The minister was able to assure me that future budgets would in fact be raised to cover these increases and that it wouldn't be a onetime raise which was then rolled back come the first of April once we're past this one-shot injection here.

I also was able to speak during supplementary supply at length on community development, so I don't need to spend any more time on that. Well, actually I do need to spend more time on that, but I won't because this is my opportunity to comment on some of the areas I haven't been able to speak to.

Two days. Two days of debate on a billion dollars. I still find that shocking. Two days, and one of the days was two hours long. Thanks to the stamina of my colleagues here, we were able to get in almost four hours' worth of debate on supplementary supply yesterday. Six hours. Six hours of debate on a billion dollars. That will never sit right with me. It just does not seem right that that's all that's allocated. I know the government feels confident that they've discussed all of this internally, but that's not the point. The point is that this money is to be approved in this Legislative Assembly after full debate, and six hours for a billion dollars isn't full debate, not in my books, not in the books of the people that I represent. We haven't been able to ask all the questions that our constituents bring forward to us, have them asked and answered in this House. I still object to that. [interjections] Well, give me time. Are you willing to let me speak for more than 20 minutes? Okay. Well, when I hit my limit, I'll ask for more time.

MR. DICKSON: You can go back and reference the previous Hansards.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes, of course. I can go back and check Hansard for all those questions that were asked that weren't answered. Yes, you're right. I will come back to that.

Okay; I'll look at Environment. I notice there's $33 million being spent there on fire control, if I'm remembering right, which pretty much always comes forward as a supplementary supply item because the government doesn't particularly budget up front for that, which again I always sort of question. You know that there are going to be some fires. Why isn't there some of that money in the budget? No, it always comes forward as a supplementary supply.

Government Services is a million and a half, which is a modest sum out of this billion dollar budget. My compliments to the minister for holding that one on the line. Then $280,000 in compensation to the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council for revenue lost due to changes in regulation. That wouldn't be being in the business of being in business; would it?

AN HON. MEMBER: No.

MS BLAKEMAN: Good. I'm sure the minister will talk about that. Seven hundred thousand dollars for information systems enhancements, and $520,000 for landlord and tenant advisory services in Calgary. Now, that one sounds like a good investment of money.

I'm sure people in Calgary really appreciate that, because we've all – well, I can't speak for the rural members, but, boy, I can tell you that any of the members in the cities get quite a few landlord and tenant questions and issues, and there isn't a heck of a lot that we can do for them under the provincial legislation. There's the Residential Tenancies Act and one other – I'm sorry – that I can't remember off the top of my head.

AN HON. MEMBER: Mobile home tenancies.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, mobile home tenancies. No. Sorry; I don't deal with that in central Edmonton.

There isn't a lot that we can do for them. They're looking for more advice about how to handle the situation. [interjection] I think that would be very helpful. I know I'd like to see an expansion of what's available through Landlord and Tenant Advisory in Edmonton.

In Justice there's $1.45 million, which is partial funding of initiatives for recommendations out of the Children's Forum and the Task Force on Children at Risk report. That's a million dollars, and the remaining half million, "for increased funding to contracted agencies and service providers to support employee compensation adjustments" – now, that's certainly an issue I've talked about a lot in this Assembly. With the increase in contracting out to either nonprofit organizations or private organizations, private companies that provide services that the government used to, there became a huge wage disparity between what government workers doing the same job were getting . . . [interjection] You're addressing it, and I'm giving you compliments for addressing it. Would you rather I not? I can harass you about something else if you'd prefer, but I thought you'd like to hear it.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, through the chair.

MS BLAKEMAN: I am sorry. Absolutely. Your wisdom is coming from the front in waves, and I regret deeply not having directed my comments to you.

AN HON. MEMBER: That is sarcastic.

MS BLAKEMAN: No, it isn't sarcastic. It's absolutely true. She certainly dispenses wisdom from there. Do you not consider it wisdom? I certainly do.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, through the chair.

MS BLAKEMAN: It is through the chair.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Not back and forth.

MS BLAKEMAN: It's your wisdom being dispensed. It's wisdom. It's just not sticking. I don't know. All right.

Municipal Affairs at $21 million. There's a fair amount in different areas that's being assessed here, and I don't have the expertise to talk about it in a short period of time, so I'll let someone that has more experience do that.

Now, there are two areas I'd like to concentrate on. One is infrastructure and the other is health. I've raised this previously, but I just feel so strongly about it that I have to raise it again because it's really affecting the schools in the constituency of Edmonton-Centre. There's a little over a quarter of a million dollars that went to schools for growth pressures and the school facilities evaluation project. What I'm concerned about here is that previously when we asked questions of the government about why weren't certain schools that were so in need of repair or money being put into it, we were told: "We don't make the list. The school board makes the list. When we've got the money, we give the money to them, and they take the first priority off the list."

What happened with this school facilities evaluation project is that a different list got developed with different criteria than what the school boards were using. I know that the MLA for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert had also talked about this, where I think she had a school that was number one on the list and it turned up as number nine on the other list.

MRS. SOETAERT: It was priority one, and they chose priority seven.

MS BLAKEMAN: They chose priority seven, and that absolutely reversed them.

I certainly have schools where I'm really concerned about the health of the students that are in them. They were rated at a high priority by the Catholic school board that was in charge of it, and it's not happening for them.

So I guess there are two issues here. How are we falling so far behind in maintenance of schools? I think in some cases it can be argued that we've created unhealthy spaces for children to be learning. With the increasing number of respiratory problems that we see from kids, to have them in an enclosed space with a very old furnace system, with poor ventilation capabilities, with old wood floors and old carpets and chalk dust, this is not a healthy atmosphere for a lot of these kids. It's not a good place to be learning, and I don't think in the end it's a safe place for those kids if we're making them feel ill or causing them respiratory distress. Because this is the classroom they've got, they've got to be in there.

So I still struggle understanding the choices that this government makes about where our money is spent in this province. I think that our schools and our children deserve more of that money, frankly. They are our future. There's a lot said by members of the government about how much they value families, how much they value students, but I just don't see that manifesting itself.

You know what? There have been a few of the very old schools in my riding that have received some upgrading, but there are several that have not and really need it. Then to find out that a different criteria is picked off by this school facilities evaluation project – I don't understand what went behind that, and I guess I'm challenging the assumptions that were made there. If the school boards have been trusted for X number of years to come up with the priority rating, what's wrong with them now? Why did their priority rating get put aside in favour of another one? I still have not heard a satisfactory explanation for that.

Health and Wellness funding I have not had an opportunity to speak on. You know, I've heard a lot from the government about onetime spending and injections and addressing pressure points, and none of this to me says rational plan. From everything I've experienced in my life – and I think there are many lessons that are easily learned out there in the real world. You know, you can waste money if you don't plan how you're going to use it, and you end up with onetime spending to stopgap a pressure point or however you want to put this. But that's not the best use of that money and the most efficient use of that money. Certainly the Auditor General had a lot to say about that in his '99-2000 report. You know, pointing out that more money was spent than was originally budgeted I think was one of the comments he made at one point.

Where is the plan? I keep seeing the government make choices here that are equivalent to someone coming to me with a project and saying, "This a $40,000 project," and I in place of the government say: "Okay, fine. Then I'll give you $25,000." And the person says: "I can't do the project for $25,000. I can't do a good job at it. I can't achieve the performance measurements. It just won't be a very good project." "Well, $25,000 is what you get." So the person tries to run the project. They can't hire as many staff. They get a smaller office. They make do with some borrowed equipment or something. It's obviously going to be a short-term project now, not one that's going to be ongoing. But wait. You know, a couple of months before the end of the term I'm going to go to them and say, "Okay, I'm going to give you the missing $15,000 for your project."

Well, there's not much the project manager can do at that point. Most of the year's gone. It's not as though they can go backwards and somehow hire staff that they would have had in place for, you know, eight, nine, 10 months. You can't go back in time that way. I suppose you could manage to give raises to the existing staff for the few remaining months, probably raises that they well deserve, because the choice was made to pay staff less in the first place because they only had $25,000 for the project.

What ends up happening is that because you can't do anything to sort of put the project back on the plane that it was supposed to be on – a lot of times choices are made: "Okay, we've got this money. We've got to spend it before X period of time. Well, we'll buy stuff, and then maybe next year we won't have to buy the stuff and we can put that money into the office space and the staff and the program services. Maybe we can keep the project going that way." So, you know, they buy the computers and they buy the photocopiers, whatever. But this is not good planning, and they're not going to be able to search around for a deal when they're running around with their 15 grand clutched in their fist, going, "Quick, quick, find me a photocopier. I've got to spend the money by such and such a date." It's not an efficient way to use what should be limited resources. This is taxpayer money we're talking about. Yes, in this province 35 percent of our budget is still money from resources. [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] Oh, permission to have my time extended.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I'm sorry, hon. member, but under Standing Order 29(d) that's impossible.

The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I wanted to talk about Bill 28. I usually get in once or twice during the debate on the appropriation bills. Tonight I thought I would get in now as opposed to a little later on. I guess some of the comments from the members opposite made me decide to get involved.

They talked about planning. I'm a member of the Treasury Board and have been on the Treasury Board for a number of years, and I've watched the fluctuations of the revenues that we're able to deal with go up and down like peaks and valleys. When the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert started to talk about no plan, there was very clearly a plan that was laid forward to put our fiscal house in order. She will remember that there were actual acts passed and laws passed in this Legislature to ensure that this government and this province had a plan that would take us into a position where our fiscal position would be such that we would be able to have a long-term plan future not only for us but for everyone else.

I heard a little yipping in the back row there about $30 a barrel. I'll remind hon. members that about 18 months ago, maybe even less than that, we were sitting at $13 a barrel for crude oil. It may not even be 18 months. The fluctuation in the crude prices has been fierce. We saw in a six-week period an increase in crude prices of $10 a barrel, which is a phenomenal swing in a commodity that we have absolutely zero ability to control or impact what that price will be.

We also saw at the same time a major increase in natural gas. It wasn't that long ago that natural gas wasn't even a separately traded commodity. It was rolled into the same revenue base, and it was very difficult. I've heard people talk about what a terrible thing it is to have the price of gas up at $4, $4.50, $5, $5.50 an mcf for gas, that this is terrible, terrible, terrible. I remember also when in my past portfolio as minister of energy we were sitting at 99 cents an mcf for gas, and nobody whined about how terrible it was to be down at 99 cents. It wasn't enough. So then we went up, and then we went down.

What I'm trying to explain is that the plan that this government laid out dealt with a responsible way to do two things: first, to eliminate the deficit and, second, to pay off the debt. The debt we all agreed was the burdens of the past. None of us could change it. We all wished we could. The fact remains that it was there.

If hon. members look at the budget and the second-quarter report that was filed by our Provincial Treasurer, they clearly can see that the debt-servicing cost, which when we started off was just shy of $2 billion a year for interest payments on the debt that the province was carrying – today, because of the plan that brought down systematically the cost of our debt, we are now looking at well over a billion dollar reduction in the interest expense that we are paying. That reduction in that interest expense becomes long-term forever freed-up dollars that can be used for program expenditures. In the interim, when we have additional revenue from our operations in a given year, we are able to deal with some of the backlog, the pileup that hasn't been able to be dealt with because quite frankly we did not have the money.

While we were clearing our deficit and paying off the debt to bring down that interest expense money so we would have program funds, we were doing reviews. In fact, the Department of Infrastructure did an extensive review on the backlog of infrastructure that needed to take place within this province that hadn't because we didn't have the money. That involved school construction. That involved road constructions that were way behind. That involved upgrades in our health facilities, our postsecondary institutions, et cetera. We also had a school facilities review that was put together to help us identify the need areas that were immediate and those that could be stretched out as we had more dollars made available.

This year in our budget we did not budget for our oil revenues to be over $30 when we started off. There are a number of reasons. When you're looking at budgeting for a commodity, you look at what is happening in the world market. Well, at the time we were doing budgets, we had requests, which I found, quite frankly, rather odd, from Canada and the United States to the OPEC nations to turn the taps on, to bring down the price of crude oil.

When I was back in the oil patch, we were doing the absolute opposite. OPEC was going in and turning the taps on and driving the price down to where we almost destroyed the industry. All of a sudden the United States and Canada were begging them to turn the taps on to drive the price down. Instead of saying that this is good because we have additional operating revenue coming through this year that can accommodate some of the backlog of projects that were not able to be accommodated because of the lack of revenue base, here we were out asking for a drop in revenue.

It didn't happen. In fact, revenues went up even more because of supply/demand needs within the marketplace. As a result, because Alberta is fortunate enough to be the 10th largest producer in the world, we were able to take advantage of the increase in revenues that were coming through. In fact, our revenues went up to $23.6 billion on our second-quarter forecast. That freed up some dollars to catch up on the backlog on our infrastructure that we had not been able to do.

We still were not able to put this into program spending, because that would mean we'd have to be assured that our revenue base was going to stay up there in the longer term. We made a commitment as a government that we would not spend money we didn't have coming in, because it's against the law in this province to run a deficit. It's also against the law for us to expend any more than 25 percent of any additional operating revenues that come in in a given year until the debt is paid off.

Now, this year we were able to put dollars out into some of the pressure points that have arisen because of the backlog, because of the growth scenarios at all levels of government in this province. The Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert said that none of these things apply or meet the requests of her constituents. Well, if these don't fit into your constituency, then there's a real problem in your community. I can't think of one community in this province that would not be grateful to have some of this additional operating revenue flow through to meet some of the demands within the community, whether it is to put in the road construction they've been wanting for quite some time, to upgrade some of the schools, to put in some of the new schools.

I'm like you. I have one of the fastest growing constituencies in this province. In fact, between the last election and this one, I have 6,500 new houses. I need schools. However, the school demands from the city of Calgary were different from what, naturally, I would like to see, so I did not get a school, but hopefully in the next go-round I will. I accept the reality of life that there are other pressure points that have to be dealt with first. [interjections]

There are other things that all of a sudden came forward in some of the major centres and into . . . [interjections] Are you going to keep yapping over there, or are you going to listen?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Please, through the chair.

MRS. NELSON: Madam Speaker, I was absolutely amazed, though, by the other member that spoke who talked about the $33 million that went to Environment. Well, $29 million of that went to fight forest fires. Nobody can predict what the forest fire situation is going to be in any given year. We've had fluctuations in this province of over $80 million in a given year. No one knows what that will be, but the thing is that when it happens, we have to respond, unless the hon. member is suggesting that we just let it all burn away. You know, I don't believe that to be true. So when we have to put dollars into Environment to do forest fire fighting, it has to be there, and we have to come back to this Assembly to have that approved.

In this same budget there was $1.2 million to upgrade airstrips to get in to fight those forest fires. If you can't get in there, how are you going to land them if you don't have a decent runway for them to land on? It's not safe. So you put $1.2 million in to upgrade the airstrips.

[Mr. Herard in the chair]

You know, we get into the health area. How can anybody object to the funding that's going into health? In health, as we know, there'll never be enough money to do it all. We all know that.

There never will be enough money to do it all, but when we have isolated areas and we put $3.4 million . . . [interjections] You're not in the debate.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, when we get into areas of health and there's $3.4 million in response to the Task Force on Children at Risk report, how can anybody object to that? That money is critically necessary. It's so very important that we deal with some of the instability within our youth programs and that we provide these children at risk programs. They have to be there. We are in a position because of the additional operating revenues to be able to deal with that today. We were not able to do that before.

We look at the $10 million going into the nursing development initiative. We've heard people say that we need that development, we need that initiative to come forward now. We're in a position this year to deal with that.

We look at the $13 million for the Alberta Mental Health Board. Surely no one could say that that is not in the best interests of Albertans. Surely they couldn't do that.

I'll refer members to page 46. We've tried to be explicit on how these dollars have been allocated. This doesn't happen in an hour meeting. This takes months to go through and try and allocate these dollars as best we can. In fact, we've even summarized them in this supplementary estimate report. It tells why we put dollars into the various regional health authorities: to reduce waiting lists, to look at long-term care facilities, to deal with salaries, and, yes, to deal with MRIs. Part of the debate on the MRIs was: is the federal government going to come into the supposed partnership? Well, it didn't, so we are not waiting for that. We're moving forward because we know we need to have these MRIs in place now. So when you look at this, we tried to put this out in as much detail as possible so that hon. members have an opportunity to clearly understand where these priority areas are going and what they're used for.

I look at the $6 million that's going to assist in the construction of the information and communication technology centre at NAIT. This will allow an increase of a thousand students to come into the program. We've heard about waiting lists. We've heard about backlogs. Surely nobody can object to that. These are obvious pressures and demands that have to be met, and this year we're in the position with additional operating revenues to deal with these pressure points.

Hon. members, the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert says: let us debate. Well, she hasn't debated at all. She turns around and isn't even listening to the topic.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre said that she had a bunch of questions. I asked her to give me her 10 questions, and I didn't get any. She talked for 20 minutes without giving her 10 questions. I wish she would give her 10 questions, and then we could in fact get back to talking about them.

She talked about the Ministry of Government Services, on AMVIC, and indicated what was the $280,000 in AMVIC. Well, that was in support of the industry council, because what you had was a mismatch. [interjections] Just a minute. Don't tell me what it is. I'm going to tell you. It's my ministry.

Mr. Speaker, this program was put in place to be self-regulatory. It's gone through a transition process and actually got caught in the middle of the fees and service review program. This is the final draw on this funding to transition AMVIC forward so that it takes over the investigative and regulatory and licensing process through the motor vehicle industry. They've done quite a job actually. They had over 91 investigations that were very, very important investigations through the program.

The other thing was the $520,000 for the landlord and tenant advisory service in Calgary. I talked with the Member for Calgary-Buffalo earlier on that.

AN HON. MEMBER: Money well spent.

MRS. NELSON: It is money well spent, but it's a disappointment for me, I have to admit, quite personally. This was a situation where our major centres, Calgary and Edmonton, were offering this service for over 20 years and doing a very fine job, quite frankly, of dealing with difficulties under the landlord and tenant act directly, having firsthand knowledge of the community, of the landlords, and of the tenants for over 20 years. This year the city of Calgary's administration said that this wasn't a core program for Calgary, and literally said: we're not going to do this any longer.

This is a vital service for citizens in Calgary, they do a wonderful job here in Edmonton, and I'm terribly disappointed. I did try very hard to convince the council members and the mayor to maintain this program because of the service it does offer. I thought I had it worked out with them that they would continue on, and then this fall they informed us that they were not.

The difficulty I have is that we're going to have to run this program from here. I don't believe we'll be able to offer the same calibre of service that we could have from Calgary directly. I'm hopeful that the city of Calgary will change their mind and continue on because I think the program has been extremely effective.

So we're going to have to add extra operators here to pick this program up so that we can answer those calls and questions. [interjection] Well, they walked away from it. Edmonton has done a tremendous job. They are planning on keeping theirs, and I would encourage them to because they do a wonderful job in all honesty.

This one I'm not happy with, I have to be honest with you, but we cannot desert the difficulties that will arise in Calgary. That's why these programs are there, and that's why we've spent a lot of time on that one program alone. I've probably spent as minister five months trying to resolve this, to no avail.

So when someone says there's not a lot of planning and a lot of thought, I take great exception to that. We have spent as departments and ministers the good part of five or six months going back over numbers and trying to find ways to handle as many pressure points as we possibly can. We haven't hit them all, and I hope no one would expect we would, because we still have to follow the Fiscal Responsibility Act in this province. We still must follow the law, that says we have to pay down our debt. Quite frankly, if we get that debt cleared off, there will be 900 million additional dollars that can go into program spending. We're not far off, but we haven't completed the job. So we must stay the course and get that finished so we can in fact have additional dollars for programming.

Mr. Speaker, those are my comments for second reading, but I hope hon. members will think when they get into this debate.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to make some comments this evening about Bill 28, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2000 (No. 2). I'd like to address my remarks primarily to the $235 million for school facilities to address growth pressures and renovation and modernization, the backlog that was identified by the school facilities evaluation project. I think it's fair to say that across the province school boards and parents welcomed the money that's being put into those facilities, but I think it's also fair to say that there has been a great deal of unrest and a great deal of dissatisfaction with the lack of facilities and the lack of money that's been available to address the problems over the last six or seven years. That backlog has resulted in some peculiar problems that are going to be very difficult to face over the long run.

The problem isn't an urban problem; it's urban and rural. I hear from school boards, I hear from people in small centres in the province who are frightened about the future of their school and the impact the closure of those buildings would have on the viability of their community, and I also hear from people in major centres, Calgary and Edmonton, who are disturbed about the impact the lack of a neighbourhood school has on their neighbourhoods. So it's a problem that goes across the province from border to border and involves both public and separate school supporters.

One of the real difficulties is the way in which the funds are distributed. For years now the government has used a utilization formula that looks at the amount of space that a school district has and bases any new moneys on the percentage of that space that's occupied by students. That formula, Mr. Speaker, is a most destructive formula. It destroys communities. It pits neighbour against neighbour. It's something that I think has to be changed. I think yesterday we were shocked by the death of a youngster in a Calgary high school and, prior to that, the death of Jason Lang. We have to ask ourselves, in terms of the kinds of communities that we're building: how wise is it to predicate the education of more and more youngsters in this province on sending them out of their home communities and allowing them to be placed in situations where they are absolutely anonymous?

I was at a Jackson Heights parent meeting where they're asking for a new junior high school, and one of the parents there made the argument most eloquently. She said: "We need a junior high school in our neighbourhood. I want to know where my junior high school youngsters are." She said: "If you're going to bus anyone, bus out the young ones. We don't worry about them." It's the junior high and the high school students that leave the confines of our neighbourhood and our community. There's no one that knows them, no pressure from the adults in the neighbourhood, no one that calls them to task for their behaviour. It's tragic, and it's rooted in large part in the utilization formula that's been applied over the years and that's still being applied. I think the government should just honestly say that there's only going to be so many dollars put into infrastructure for schools rather than playing this game with the utilization formula and using it really as a mechanism to cap costs for school buildings.

Information and evidence from at least a couple of boards I've been informed about that they've provided in terms of busing students over a 25-year period is that with what they paid for that busing, they could have had a building in the community for the 25 years and would still have the building after the 25-year period had passed. So the whole notion behind restricting the building of schools is one that the government should revisit.

In terms of accessing the funds from the government, I think there's a growing dissatisfaction with the separation of the capital projects and the capital budget into the Department of Infrastructure from the previous department of education or the Department of Learning. If you look at the Auditor General's latest report, on page 186 the Auditor General comments on it:

We noted opportunities for improvement in linking the information on strategic education program delivery, as developed by Learning, to the capital plans for school facilities.

There are several references by the Auditor General about the discrepancy. Infrastructure is sitting down and making plans and Learning is sitting down and making plans, and there's a mismatch. That doesn't serve Albertans well. It certainly doesn't serve the accommodation of schoolchildren well when you have that mismatch.

The Auditor General, in questioning at Public Accounts, indicated that there were some real concerns that the money being spent by Infrastructure on schools was being spent in the most effective and efficient manner and one that was congruent with the goals and aims of the Department of Learning. So I think it would be well worth the government looking at those two departments and evaluating how successful the split has been in meeting the needs of school districts at least. I'm not sure what the experience is with health facilities.

One of the things that has been lacking from the word go in this Assembly since 1993 is a long-term plan. We've had a couple of MLA committees tour the province and conclude that there was $750 million worth of backlog in school construction. We've had a recent audit by the Infrastructure department. There's still no long-term plan. Again, it's not just the opposition saying that; it's confirmed by the Auditor General, and that's the reference on page 185. Referring to the Department of Infrastructure, it says:

The Ministry also requires information on strategic service delivery options and forecasted needs to develop strategic long-term capital plans. Such information would include strategic policy changes, options, and priorities as well as forecasted needs based on economic analysis and projected demographic data.

That, I think, has been our concern for years in this Assembly, that there wasn't that long-term plan, and there still isn't a long-term plan. Here we are spending an additional quarter-billion dollars on buildings, and it's being done in the absence of any kind of strategic planning or long-term planning. I think that's regrettable.

I was at a meeting in Jackson Heights in Mill Woods, where the parents were requesting a junior high school, and a representative of the Department of Infrastructure informed the meeting that decisions were made by the School Buildings Board and, further, indicated that the School Buildings Board was an independent body. I find great difficulty with that. The School Buildings Board is appointed by the government. One of the difficulties, of course, is that it's impossible to appeal their decisions. So there'll be decisions made that are not consistent, for instance, with the priorities of a particular school district, and there's no appeal to that decision. Again, I think that's unfortunate.

It raises the question that was raised earlier in question period today, and that is the whole business of priorities. School boards across the province go to great lengths to do demographic studies and projections, to survey their communities, to balance the kinds of needs as they see them in their districts and set down on paper and submit to the government a list of priorities as they see them that would be best for their community. They find it distressing and frustrating, to say the least, to find those priorities ignored.

There have been a couple of examples given already this evening. A board west of the city that submits a list of priorities and finds the number one priority ignored and the number seven priority funded by the government. That's not a singular case, Mr. Speaker. That happens time and time again across this province. Again, I think it does a disservice to the department when those kinds of things happen, and it certainly erodes any kind of confidence that decisions are being made on any sort of fair and equitable basis in terms of the allocation of those funds. So in applauding the spending of this $238 million, it's done within the context of a real worry that funds are not being allocated as effectively and as fairly and as openly and as transparently as those school boards and those parents, who depend upon the government for the financing of those facilities, would like.

I'd like to conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, with a plea again for long-term planning. I looked at some projections for Edmonton public schools, and by the year 2010 Edmonton public is going to have 100 schools that are 50 years or more of age. That's a huge inventory of old buildings, and I don't understand, I can't see how the province is going to possibly meet the needs that district will find itself in the middle of come eight, nine, 10 years from now. They aren't alone in the province. I suspect that the stock in Calgary and other urban areas and in some of the rural parts of the province is aging and that the aging pattern is similar elsewhere.

So I go back to the plea for some long-term planning – certainly there's been enough information gathered by the government to make that kind of planning possible – and that again, when that planning is undertaken, the people it's going to affect be included in the discussions.

I'd conclude with those comments, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to have an opportunity to speak on the appropriation act this evening. I've been listening to the opposition members talk about this act, and frankly I think they've really missed the boat. It's not the first time, but I think that it's really necessary that I have an opportunity to talk about the appropriation act, the budgeting process, because it's obvious to me that despite the fact we've been talking about the budgeting process here for the past two or three years as we have been dealing with eliminating first our deficit and now working towards eliminating our debt, they still haven't figured out what it is that we're doing and why we're doing it.

Let me begin by using a bit of an analogy, and then if you'll excuse me, Mr. Speaker, I'll certainly bring it back to the bill at hand. Before I became a Member of the Legislative Assembly, as you know, I managed a small business. In our small business we did things in much the same way, only on a much smaller scale, as what we do here in the Legislative Assembly and the government of Alberta. At the beginning of each year we would sit down and put together a budget, our best guess of what we could reasonably expect to have in income and what we could reasonably expect to require in expenses. We made the best efforts to develop that budget, and at the end of the year, like here in government, we wanted there to be a bottom line that was doable. What I mean by that is that if we estimated our expenses too low, then we would have a problem at the end of the year. If we estimated our income too high, we would similarly have a problem at the end of the year.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

Well, what we do here in Edmonton in the Legislative Assembly – and we went through this spring a very prolonged process of going through government estimates. We went through that beginning of the year process, and the Provincial Treasurer used the best efforts, the best statistics available at the time to estimate what reasonable amount of income the government could expect.

One of the differences between government and small business is that with the exception of resource revenue, the projections that governments can make for most of the other sources of revenue are relatively consistent. The nice thing is that when we determine what the tax rate is going to be, with a relatively small margin of error we have a pretty good idea how much revenue we're going to derive from taxes. That's because everybody has to pay, unlike with a small business, where when you estimate what your revenue is going to be, it's dependent upon people choosing to buy your services. In government we require them to fill out tax returns.

We do have the issue of resource revenue, and it's been mentioned by a number of members throughout the discussion, not only in the debate on the bill but throughout the discussion when we were in Committee of Supply on these estimates. The resource revenue tends to be very unpredictable. As a result, in order for there to be any opportunity or any possibility of having something resembling a balanced budget at the end of the year, it's necessary to be extremely conservative in the estimates at the beginning of the year and ensure that if prices should drop, which they're prone to do from time to time – we've all lived through that – there is sufficient cushion, there is sufficient margin within the budget so that the expenses which we are committing ourselves to can be paid. That's the process we went through last spring.

At the same time, the government through consultation with the citizens of Alberta some time ago said to the citizens of Alberta: you know, there is something happening in the government of Alberta that we're very pleased about, that we're very proud of, but we need your assistance. What is happening is that as we begin to pay down our debt – and when we started this process, we were talking about some day having the fortunate position of having paid down net debt – we asked Albertans through a mailer how we should as government prioritize our spending when it comes to dealing with resource revenue, which frankly can be very unpredictable. Clearly, very clearly, Albertans said that we want you to focus primarily on continuing to eliminate the debt, but at the same time we also want you to have some flexibility to deal with emerging issues, to deal with areas of concern with respect to growth pressures that we're experiencing in this province.

So I think that very prudently the government made it a policy and then in fact took it one step further, brought that policy here to the Legislative Assembly, where it was passed, and we have now legislation that says that 75 percent of any unbudgeted revenue, 75 percent of a surplus, a cushion, whatever you want to call it, must be allocated to continue to reduce our debt. That's in accordance with what the people of Alberta told us.

With the other 25 percent there is some flexibility. There are a number of things that can be done with that 25 percent, and a number of those things I think you'll see reflected in Bill 28 in the appropriations that we have before us. There can be a portion of that 25 percent allocated to onetime spending in infrastructure. When I look at the bill in front of me, in the schedule of the bill I see there are $419 million allocated to Infrastructure, $293 million that's allocated to Health and Wellness, a good portion of which is infrastructure.

We also had the opportunity to say: now, at the same time as we're dealing in this 25 percent realm, it doesn't all have to be spent. Some of it can be recognized in the form of the recognition to the taxpayers of this province that perhaps more taxes were collected than were required in this particular year. We're in the very fortunate position this year of being able to do that as well. While it's not reflected specifically in this bill, that is certainly part of the overall package that we're dealing with as a Legislative Assembly, and that's the $300 energy refund that will be forwarded to Albertans over the coming weeks and months.

That is also within that 25 percent envelope, and that is indicating to Albertans two things. First of all, we're in a position where we can refund taxes to individuals that were not required as a result of unforeseen revenues from the volatile resource revenue side of our income statement. Secondly, we have to recognize that although high oil and gas prices are beneficial to the province of Alberta in the form of royalties that are collected, there is also a cost of that that has to be recognized, because all of the residents of Alberta are having to purchase their gasoline, the natural gas to heat their homes, other utilities that are dependent upon natural gas, and those prices have increased. I think it really does two things. First of all, there is an opportunity to share the unforeseen revenue with our taxpayers and, secondly, to recognize that there are some additional costs that must be borne by the residents of Alberta.

That's really where we find ourselves this evening. We find ourselves at the midpoint in our budgeting process. Madam Speaker, I talked earlier about the analogy of when I had a small business myself, and I talked about how we did our budgeting. At the middle of the year, which is where we are in the fiscal year from a government perspective, we sat down and we looked at it and we determined: how are we doing? We had projected X number of dollars for revenue. Does it look reasonable that we're going to be able to meet the projections? Perhaps we've been very fortunate. Our marketing programs were very successful this year, and it would seem that we have higher than expected revenues.

What did we do? We did the same thing as the government is going through right now. We looked at our priorities. First of all, we considered: is there some debt that we are going to be able to reduce as a result of having increased revenues? Secondly, we looked at some of our expenditures. We look at, first of all, whether there were some capital expenditures that needed to be addressed. Finally, we looked at programmed activities. Are there some expenses that we perhaps have had unanticipated and that have arisen throughout the first six months of the year? Are there perhaps some areas where when we were calculating our budget at the beginning of the year, we really didn't allow ourselves to do everything that we would have liked to do?

A good example is that maybe we have a staff education training program and have budgeted to have 10 employees attend a training conference, and now we can change that budget and allow 15 employees to attend that conference. Those are the kinds of midyear adjustments that every business, small and large, in Alberta does. Those are the same kinds of adjustments that we as the people who have been entrusted by Albertans to look after one of the largest if not the largest business in the province of Alberta, the Legislative Assembly and the government of Alberta – that's exactly the same process that we're going through right now.

We have just completed an analysis of the first six months of operation, and we found a couple of things. First of all, our resource revenue is higher than anticipated. As a result of that, we have some additional dollars that we need to deal with. We have legislation in place that says that 75 percent goes to reduce the debt, and I think that's the smartest and the best thing that we could do. Then we look forward to see where there are areas where specific dollars can be invested that will enhance the value of government to Albertans and enhance the quality of life for our constituents here in Alberta.

Most importantly, one of the things where we have to be extremely careful, just as you have to be very careful when you're doing midterm adjustments with your small business – I talked about the fact that in a small business you might be able to increase for this year the number of employees that you would be able to send to educational programs, but you have to be very careful that this does not become something that is going to be an ongoing cost. Because we've been fortunate enough to have unanticipated revenues, we can't make decisions this year that are going to impact upon every other year.

So we talk about increasing the budget in certain areas, but that's a onetime increase. And when you look at the vast majority of the items that are before us in Bill 28, again we're looking at onetime expenditures. There are some areas – and we have heard about them in the discussions this evening – that will have some long-term implications. But in relation to the $978 million that we're here discussing this evening, those decisions and those areas where there are some long-term implications are extremely small.

I want to express my support for this bill. I think the appropriations have been well thought out. They are something that I can support, and frankly I can feel very comfortable on behalf of my constituents in Medicine Hat in supporting these appropriations. I compliment the government on their prudent fiscal management, and certainly I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that I will continue to represent my constituents in Medicine Hat and will insist that the government continue to operate, from a fiscal perspective, in the prudent manner which we're seeing reflected here this evening.

These are appropriations that are based upon midyear reassessments that make sense. They were unanticipated, either unanticipated at the beginning of the year, when you talk about areas such as forest-fire fighting, or they are the kinds of expenditures that can only be made when revenues, in the case of the government of Alberta resource revenues, are sufficiently high to allow for some interim onetime spending, which we're seeing here this evening.

So I encourage all members to support this bill. I look forward to the vote on this bill later this evening and of course to continued debate when we get to third reading tomorrow.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I have been sitting and waiting anxiously to participate in the debate on Bill 28 this evening. I look at this, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2000 (No. 2), and I have an urge to change this to the blink money bill, because certainly the government has finally blinked in this province. We know there's an election around the corner. The frost is getting deeper in the ground every night now, and I think before the spring rolls around and that frost leaves the ground, the government is hoping this blink money, this bill, will make the citizens of this province forget about the last seven years and what has occurred in their education system, whether the adjustments to the health care system are adequate. We find it difficult on this side of the House to support the latest installment of this supplementary estimate without some explanation of how the new spending will contribute to meeting defined outcomes.

Now, hon. members from across the way, Madam Speaker, talk at great length about the three-year business plans. Well, perhaps they need to revisit these business plans. We have close to a billion dollars in extra spending. In fact, this amount is the second largest unbudgeted spending by any Provincial Treasurer since 1986. A lot has happened not only in this province but in this country and in the North American economy since 1986. We had, of course, in 1988 the start of the free trade agreement. The free trade agreements have grown, and they've gone from America to Canada to Mexico and beyond. I'm going to get to this a little later in my remarks, but it is very important to realize the changes that have occurred since 1986.

Perhaps individuals have been asleep at the wheel, so to speak, because there has to be a process of budgeting so that this doesn't occur year after year. I'm not going to start in 1986, Madam Speaker, and talk about the special warrants. I'm not going to talk about what occurred in 1992-93, and I'm not going to talk about what happened with the previous Provincial Treasurer and missing the targets.

Hon. members, I heard the previous speaker talk about how individuals may have missed the boat. Well, this budgeting process has missed the mark by a billion dollars, and that is a large sum of money. I don't care if you're a small businessperson or the chairman of a multinational corporation; a billion dollars is a billion dollars. I can go down through the list. I can see where the money is going, and I notice that Human Resources and Employment is not on the list. That must be a tribute to the individual budgeting that's going on by the minister and his department officials. They're not here looking for any extra money, so there must be sound practices. I would have to say to the other departments here in the government that perhaps they should take the hon. minister aside and say: "How are you doing this? Can you show us how this is done?" Obviously the leadership shown is good enough in that department, so perhaps it should be in all government departments.

What we're essentially doing here, Madam Speaker, is in six hours allocating a billion dollars. It is important that everyone work together to reduce waiting times for open-heart surgeries, joint replacements, other elective surgeries, getting the MRI business settled, cancer treatments, and the hiring of staff not only at the Cross institute in Edmonton but also at the Tom Baker centre in Calgary. These are important issues.

We knew what was going on with the shortage of health care professionals two years ago, but what did we do? We did a study, and then we squirreled it away in the Legislature Library, never to be seen or heard from again with the exception of the good research that was conducted by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. This report became public information. This isn't new news about Health and Wellness and how much money is needed. That should have been addressed last spring. There should have been a plan in place. There should have been a plan in place two years ago to deal with a shortage of health care professionals.

Now, in this budget I have to question how much money in Health and Wellness went into the propaganda campaign on the health care privatization act, Bill 11, as it was affectionately called by everyone. How much of this money was spent on that campaign? In six hours any member from across the way can certainly join the debate and enlighten not only this member but all Albertans.

Now, we heard earlier in the Assembly the remarks from the hon. Minister of Government Services. The home constituency, I believe, is Calgary-Foothills. I, Madam Speaker, had the pleasure of visiting Calgary-Foothills recently. I was in a fine school there. I was in the gymnasium. I was at a meeting there, a public meeting, to talk about pine shakes. Yes, pine shakes. I met an individual there by the name of Mr. Harry Chase, the nominated candidate for the Liberal Party in that constituency. He was outside handing out cards and literature in Calgary-Foothills. This was a fine school. The hon. minister is talking about more schools. I believe the number she used was those 6,500 more homes or 650 more homes. I didn't quite catch the number, but that is dramatic growth. I was astonished to get out of my car in the school parking lot, and I thought for a minute I was in Twin Brooks in Edmonton. I looked all around. There were pine shakes on every roof, and I thought: wow, there's trouble here; there's trouble here.

I see no amount of money in here . . . [interjection] It doesn't matter. I hear the word "treated" shakes over there. It's been brought to the attention of all consumers in the province, and now the treated pine shake is rotting just like the untreated pine shake.

There was no testing done. There was no testing done on this product.

However, it occurred to me, when I was looking through this billion dollars, that there was no sum set aside for the homeowners. Now, I look around the Assembly this evening, Madam Speaker, and in the communities of St. Albert, Sherwood Park, Banff-Cochrane, Calgary-Fish Creek, certainly Calgary-Foothills, or Red Deer-North there are citizens there who are really upset and are looking for compensation from their government.

I know there's polling going on because people phone me and they say, "Mr. MacDonald, someone in my neighbourhood was contacted." But I don't see any amount in there that is going to satisfy these individuals from all over the province, because they're very, very angry with their government. They feel that the government has been inadequate in their explanation: how this product was promoted and authorized by the government.

Also, in her remarks the hon. Minister of Government Services was addressing this House regarding the terrible thing about gas prices, natural gas prices. This party has a very solid plan to reduce gasoline taxes. A very solid plan.

MRS. SOETAERT: That's why they borrowed it.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. I guess imitation is a fine form of flattery, and whenever hon. members leave this Assembly and move on to the federal political arena, they adopt our policies. Poof, just like that. Last summer we couldn't get them to talk about it, but this summer they were talking at length about our policies and adopting them.

However, the high price of natural gas and what it means to Albertans, what it means to an Alberta farmer. For instance, Madam Speaker, we think of the fertilizer plant in Redwater consumes an enormous amount of natural gas. What's that going to do to the price of fertilizer? That is one of the more unique fertilizer plants in western Canada and in the northwestern American states. Is the price of fertilizer going to be increased in the spring? It's going to increase because of the increase in the price of natural gas. We're looking at envirofuels out here on the east side of the city. It's feedstock, which is a derivative of natural gas. They've had a shut-in because their feedstock is not competitive with other jurisdictions in North America. So there are a lot of things happening here that we need to address in this Assembly.

We think of the price of ethane. I bring to the attention of all hon. members of this Assembly the statement that was made by the economics professor from the University of Calgary, Professor Robert Mansell, I believe. The statement went something like this, Madam Speaker: it is a major policy shortcoming of this government of how we have addressed the ethane issue in this province. Everyone knows that the economy has expanded here. Ten percent of all economic expansion in the decade of the '90s was as a result of the petrochemical industry, its expansion. The economy expanded around it. That expansion is going to stop because of this government's ethane policy.

I was in the library this afternoon, Madam Speaker, looking up electrical prices, and I noticed in one of the three budget documents that the amount of ethane used in this province, whenever you look at the total production in this province, has gone from 32 percent down to 29 percent in one year, yet the industry has expanded. So we have to look at our pipeline capacity. It's fine to say that we have to look after the producers of natural gas, but we also have to look after the resources of Albertans, and this government is not looking after the resources of Albertans so that they're going to be available perhaps for value-added manufacturing in the future.

Now, this is a University of Calgary professor who was saying that this is a major policy shortcoming of this government, a major policy shortcoming. We need to have a good look at this. We have to consider in this the methanol plant in Medicine Hat. Energy prices: are we going to have to have another bill? Are we going to have to have another series of rebates for farmers whenever the high price of fertilizer occurs? Natural gas: are we going to have to have some sort of rebate for envirofuels? The methanol plant in Medicine Hat.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Excuse me one moment, hon. member. I would remind the Assembly that we are not in committee. We don't need quite this many interjections.

Go ahead, hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am very, very concerned about what is happening in this province, because – and this bill is no reflection of this – I believe at this time in the history of this province that with prudent management there can be set up for generation after generation of Albertans a fund that can work for the benefit. But whenever we are spending money like this in billion dollar amounts without any respect for a budget process, we are doing those generations that are to come in the future a disservice.

We can say that times have changed from April to August, from August to November. We didn't know what the price of the natural resources were going to be. We had no idea. We lowballed it, and now look at it. But the reality is that we have a very, very good idea, Madam Speaker.

We can talk about energy tax refunds. We can talk about electricity auctions. We can talk about education property tax reductions, business tax reductions. We can talk about information system enhancements, risk assessments. But we need a budget process that Albertans can have confidence in. They cannot have confidence in this system. We need to look well into the future, not just past the next election. We need to think of a future where conventional crude oil reserves are dropping and dropping and dropping. We need to look into the future when through the western sedimentary basin, the Peace River Arch, the Alliance Pipeline will be connected up to the Territories. It will be moving gas from the Territories to Chicago, bypassing Alberta.

In five years I would like all hon. members from across the way to explain to me where our natural gas royalties will be. Where will they be in 10 years? What sources of revenue are they planning on using? Will the petrochemical industry continue to expand? I certainly hope it will, but I'm not convinced that is possible with the current policies that have been adopted by this government.

We have to think of the core programs, and whenever we think of the core programs of this government, Madam Speaker, we think of health care of course, we think of education . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Infrastructure.

MR. MacDONALD: Well, I just don't know about Infrastructure, because what I can see at Infrastructure, Madam Speaker, is sugar-daddy politics: we're going to pay this, we're going to build this, we're going to do that, but we're only going to do it while there's talk of an election. How much money will the Department of Infrastructure have in two years? I don't know, and I have to question that.

We need in this province, if the electorate is to have confidence in their government, sound budgeting practices. Whenever we repeatedly come back for more money and more money, that is not sound budgeting.

I'm very disappointed that I cannot continue this evening, Madam Speaker, but with that, I shall take my seat. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. We're speaking tonight to the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2000 (No. 2), Bill 28 as we are referring to it on the Order Paper. It speaks to the expenditures that have been allocated by the Treasurer and the various departments in response to those areas that have been identified by our constituents, by the people of Alberta, and by the organizations that we trust to care for the delivery of many of the programs in this province, be they education as in Learning or in the Health and Wellness department or Children's Services or certainly the Community Development portfolio as well, to say nothing of the infrastructure needs.

It is commonly understood, of course, that the business plans of this government deal with the base budgeting, and those are well planned. They are mindful of the needs that are current and growing in the province in the respective departments. However, there are some projects that do require funding of the nature of supplementary allocation of funding. Some of those are pilot project funding, pilot projects that are deemed necessary for us to assess whether they're going to be properly delivering some outcomes that can be sustained and that are fine or whether they need to be redirected and reformatting.

We also are certainly mindful of the targeted funding expenditures that we identify over the course of certain years, in particular this year, that are targeted to address a certain need obviously at a certain time, and that's what this requisition is speaking to. We do have the onetime expenditures that certainly compose most of these supplementary estimates. There is nothing wrong, and it's not a dirty word to speak of onetime expenditures. They are ones that are responsive to what we have had identified by our communities.

I'm going to use in particular some examples from the supplementary budget program. I'll speak specifically to the Community Development department. We all know that our libraries are well used. The use of them is in high demand. It certainly is in my community. So the supplementary budget or requisition as identified here for the Department of Community Development speaks specifically to the Northern Lights regional library system at Elk Point, to the expense of $775,000, looking at how it will be best allocated.

I'd also like to identify, of course, that we're looking to and we have begun as a government funding Alberta centennial legacy projects. These are projects that I think are befitting projects, befitting sites if you will, and endeavours that our respective and smaller communities will benefit from greatly in recognition of the fact that in the year 2005 we are ramping up to celebrate our centennial.

I want to mention, too, that there is acknowledgment in this supplementary budget of some of the workers in Health and Wellness, particularly in the area of providing services for persons with developmental disabilities or in the delivery of children's services to individuals and individual programs. There is an allocation, of course, for an increase in pay for those who are in the service of these respective clients.

So to say that our government works without a plan is, of course, something I believe the critics have to keep repeating to themselves because they want to believe it, not because it's a fact. There is a great deal of planning put into our budgeting, whether it be in the long-term planning of business plans or, as we are asking for in this particular bill, whether it be in response to what we know are needs within the community, what have been identified, what have been assessed as valid, and what we see as a government as a response because we have the revenues available to us prudently now.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for St. Albert, but in accordance with Standing Order 61(3) the chair is required to put the question to the House on the appropriation bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a second time]

[At 11:46 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, November 22, 2000 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 00/11/22
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Elaine Dafoe, who is the mayor of the town of Turner Valley in the beautiful constituency of Highwood. Her Worship is seated in your gallery, and I would now ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. LANGEVIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three guests who are seated in your gallery. We have Mr. Scott Sutton, the Alberta Ombudsman, and he is accompanied today by his lovely wife, Betty-Jayne Sutton, and also a staff member, Dixie Watson. Mr. Sutton is here today to witness the tabling of his annual report. I would like to ask our three guests to please rise and be recognized by the Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two petitions to present. The first one is signed by 150 constituents from Carstairs, Didsbury, Cremona, Huxley, Trochu, Three Hills and the Olds area, as well as Albertans from the Calgary area. It petitions the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

The second one is signed by approximately 4,700 constituents from the Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills area, and it petitions the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to establish a hemodialysis satellite unit in the Olds/Didsbury area which could eliminate the need for patients of the area to commute to Calgary Foothills hospital three times a week for treatment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition here signed by 15 people. They're in support of Bill 212, the human rights conscience legislation for health care workers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition of 33 names from the Calgary community, seven of whom reside in Calgary-Currie.

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition on behalf of 20 constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar to present to the Legislative Assembly this afternoon. These constituents are residents of Ottewell Lodge, and they are very concerned that there are no bathtubs in the new Ottewell place.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table six petitions containing 111 names from the Drayton Valley-Calmor constituency, 8 names from the Dunvegan constituency, 140 names from the Barrhead-Westlock constituency, 115 names from the Rocky Mountain House constituency, 94 names from the Calgary-Lougheed constituency, and 15 names from the Calgary-Mountain View constituency. The petitioners are urging the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Alberta human rights act to allow "health professionals to opt out of those . . . procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to present a petition signed by a number of concerned Albertans who are urging the government to take an enlightened preventative approach and add the newer and more effective medications and therapies to the Alberta Drug List to ensure the health of an aging society.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition signed by 215 individuals from the constituency of Redwater, and the petition reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

Thank you, sir.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to table this afternoon a petition signed by 246 Calgarians in Calgary-Glenmore, Calgary-North West, and assorted parts of the city of Calgary urging the Assembly to urge the Calgary regional health authority "to reconsider the relocation of Unit 47 of the Foothills Hospital."

Thank you.

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to present a petition to the Assembly signed by a number of Edmontonians, and it reads as follows:

To the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, in the Legislature Assembled:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

They keep on coming in, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, today I'm pleased to present a petition signed by 54 people, 18 being constituents from Calgary-West and 36 being Albertans from other constituencies, all of whom support Bill 212, the human rights conscience legislation for health care workers.

Thank you.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd request that the petition standing on the Order Paper under my name now be read and received. I believe there's more than one. You can do them all if you would, please.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce legislation requiring a minimum of two people on shifts from dark to daylight.

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce legislation requiring a minimum of two people on shifts from dark to daylight.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented on November 15 on osteoporosis and the Alberta drug list be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Alberta Government to take an enlightened preventative approach and add the newer and more effective medications and therapies to the Alberta Drug List to ensure the health of an aging society.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented on November 15 be now read and received.

1:40

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta:

1. To immediately disallow any further development of the Spray Valley of Kananaskis Country, including those proposals currently under consideration;
2. To maintain Kananaskis Country in natural state that provides high quality wildlife habitat and nature-based recreational activities;
3. To create a Wildland Provincial Park which protects the whole of the undeveloped parts of the Kananaskis and Spray Valleys.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, may the petition that I presented November 15, 2000, against private health care be now read and received, please.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2000 (No. 2)

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2000 (No. 2).

It's a bill which changes two pieces of legislation: the Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority Act and the ordinance to incorporate Alberta College. Mr. Speaker, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act is unlike other bills in that it has already been discussed by all parties and thus presumably would move through the House without too much debate.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling the requisite number of copies of an agreement that is entitled Energy Agreement Brings Benefits to Health and Education. This is something that will allow every school, hospital, public college, and technical institute in Alberta to benefit from stable prices, price discount, and consolidated billing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table two documents today, both associated with the Alberta science and technology leadership awards, affectionately known as ASTech. They have an event every fall that celebrates the leading science and technology people in the province, the people that are contributing to the new economy. We have some copies of the program, entitled Celebrating Innovation, and then I have a list of the winners that I'm tabling as well.

It's interesting to note that one of the winners is known as the Edmonton protocol. It's a group that is developing a cure for type 1 diabetes and is known around the world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the youth employment strategy brochure providing an update on youth employment strategy and part of this government's commitment to keeping Albertans informed about the strategy. This is a joint partnership of Alberta Learning and Alberta Human Resources and Employment and ensures that youth employment is looked at from the perspectives of youth in school and youth in the labour market.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings today. I'm also tabling the appropriate number of copies of each one. My first tabling is a letter from Arlene Chapman, provincial co-ordinator of the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters, who is opposing the Liberal Bill 211, the Alberta Taxpayer Bill of Rights. She is concerned that the bill will jeopardize stable, long-term funding for important social programs.

The second tabling is a letter from Shelley Williams, executive director of the Bissell Centre, who is opposed to the bill because the bill draws lines and divides people into camps.

The third tabling is a letter from Yvonne Schmitz, executive board member of the Calgary and District Labour Council, who believes the Liberals are feeding into the aggressive agenda of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation.

The fourth tabling is a letter from Brian Bechtel, the former executive director and would-be Liberal candidate in Edmonton-Norwood, who hopes that the bill is unsuccessful.

The last tabling, Mr. Speaker, is an editorial from the Edmonton Journal dated April 5, 2000, calling Bill 211 a Liberal "stupid tax stunt."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four documents to table today. These are fact sheets prepared by the Graduate Students' Association of the University of Calgary. The first document is called The Crisis for Alberta Graduate Students, and this indicates that many students are accessing the campus food bank, incurring debt loads over $25,000, and finding it difficult to complete their degrees in time.

The second document, Mr. Speaker, is called Why Tuition is the Problem, and this document states that the underfunding of universities is responsible for unbearably high tuition levels and ever increasing tuition fees in the province.

The third document is called How Much It Would Cost, and it draws attention to the fact that for $20 million the government could freeze the tuition fees of all postsecondary students in this province.

The last document, Mr. Speaker, that I'm tabling is called The Failure to Address Graduate Student Debt and draws attention to the grave consequences that students face as a result of very heavy debt loads.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table five copies of a document entitled HungerCount 2000: A Surplus of Hunger, Canada's annual survey of emergency food programs in association with the Canadian Association of Food Banks.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table letters that I've received from 130 residents of Fort McMurray, or the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, who work in the service sector and are struggling with dealing with skyrocketing housing prices. They've received no satisfactory action from government on this matter, and I'm pleased as Leader of the Official Opposition to place their concerns on the public record on their behalf.

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Speaker, I have four separate tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter from Manfred Lohka of Calgary addressed to the Premier and copied to myself as well as some other members. It is a very eloquent plea for more funding for universities and particularly notes the importance of basic research.

Mr. Speaker, the second tabling is actually two separate documents from the Advanced Coronary Treatment Foundation. The ACT For High School CPR training program was launched today in the city of Edmonton, and there are some documents which explain the program as well as the role of the Kiwanis, the school boards, the foundation, and the other partners in this very exciting and important initiative.

Mr. Speaker, the third tabling is a document entitled Analysis of Sessional Paper 1155, which is the text of the comments I would have said during my tabling yesterday, but I was interrupted.

Mr. Speaker, the final document is a document entitled Tabling Commentary, which compares tabling commentaries against number of words, based on those which have been interrupted and uninterupted by the Speaker.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted this afternoon to table a report that was done by Sue Olsen, former MLA for Edmonton-Norwood, and by the Edmonton John Howard Society. It's entitled Youth Justice Report: Views of Youth on the Justice System, May 2000, a report I commend to the reading of all members of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from Margaret Coutts, who is president of the Red Deer River Naturalists. This group is concerned about detrimental effects to their health and the environment from a proposed 12,000-head hog farm to be located close to the Red Deer River.

The second tabling is copies of letters from Anne and Dale Watson of Red Deer. They are asking that the government stop plans for logging in the area west of Nordegg.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter and a petition from the Kananaskis Coalition expressing their approval on the announcement that the "Spray Valley Provincial Park will become official in December 2000."

Thank you.

1:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have tablings here. It's a letter from Sturgeon school division No. 24 and their recommendations as to how schools could better deal with the impact of increasing fuel costs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would file five copies of a series of postcards addressed to the Premier and to the Minister of Learning asking them to cap tuition increases at 2 percent. They're part of a campaign by representatives of the 107,000 postsecondary students in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is five copies of a report on the supports for independence and benefit levels for women and children commissioned by the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters.

The second tabling is copies of a letter from myself to the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee requesting "that the Public Accounts Committee summon a number of witnesses pursuant to Standing Order 66" to deal with the "$18 million identified in the Annual Report of the Auditor General 1999-2000 on pages 111-118."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five documents to table this afternoon in the Legislative Assembly. These are documents that I received through freedom of information from the Department of Municipal Affairs. The first one is a letter from the Alberta Home Builders' Association to the hon. minister requesting a meeting to discuss the pine shake issue.

The second letter is from the office of the Premier, and it is a letter of acknowledgment. It is CCed interestingly enough to the hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

The third document is a letter to the Premier of the province, and it states in here, Mr. Speaker, that "the durability of treated pine shakes is no more certain than the durability of untreated materials."

The last document, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from the last official minister of labour in this province's history to a councillor of ward 3 in Strathcona county, Karen Bernard, regarding the whole issue of treated and untreated pine shakes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted today to table the appropriate number of art calendars. At the official launch today of 2001 artwork calendars held at the Edmonton Art Gallery at the 10th annual artwork calendar project put on by Capital City Savings, with participating school boards of Edmonton public, Edmonton Catholic, Elk Island, and northern Francophones, there were 2,600 submissions of artwork from young students throughout our capital region, and 14 were picked. I'm very proud to say that there is an up-and-coming fantastic bunch of artists in our community.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a series of letters from a gentleman from Calgary by the name of Robin White, no relation, although I gather by his summary that we do agree on a lot of items. He is totally opposed to the major development of the Spray Lakes area in Kananaskis Country and totally agrees with the Praxis survey and further agrees that the government is doing the right thing to care for the responsible stewardship of the environment.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, pursuant to section 27(1) of the Ombudsman Act I am pleased to table with the Assembly the 33rd annual report of the office of the Ombudsman for the period January 1, 1999, to March 31, 2000, and the financial statements of the office of the Ombudsman as at March 31, 2000.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege today to rise and to introduce to you and through you to all assembled a team of people that are going to lead throughout Alberta a CPR risk, react, recognize, and resuscitate for high school students through the ACT high school CPR program. This program will teach children in grades 10, 11, and 12 the importance of knowing CPR. Dr. Terry Sosnowski, medical director of Edmonton emergency medical services; Earl Clements, the past president of the Kiwanis Club; and Sandra Clarke, executive director of the ACT high school CPR program: I'd ask that these honourable people please rise and that we give them the customary warm salute.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I have two separate introductions I'd like to make today. First, I'm very pleased to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly Mr. Jamie Rice, who is in Alberta for a co-op work term as an administrative resident with Capital health authority as part of his masters in the business administration co-op program from McMaster University. Jamie selected our Capital health authority for his residency because our Capital health authority just happens to have been identified as a leader in health care in Canada. I'm delighted that he's here and that he's accompanied by Mr. Brian Hlus, the director of government affairs at Capital health. I would ask both of them to please rise and receive a very warm welcome in our Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also very pleased to introduce to you and through you to everyone in the Assembly Mrs. Vickie Belanger and her daughter Nicole, who are touring the Legislature today and are now in our Assembly to view our proceedings. Vickie, of course, distinguishes herself as being the cousin of my wife, Cristine. I would ask that she and her daughter both please rise and receive a very warm welcome from our Assembly as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislative Assembly two classes from Father Leo Green in Edmonton-Manning constituency. There are 19 students in the French immersion class, and they're with their teacher, Mrs. Manuela Ferrante, and their student teacher, Miss Ann-Marit Johnson. She just mentioned that she has a full-time job coming up in full immersion. The other class is 27 students in the English class, and they're accompanied by their teacher, Miss Marilyn Marr. They're up in the public gallery, and with your permission I'd like them to stand and get the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two members of the Progressive Conservative Youth association: the vice-president of organization, Blake Robert, and the first vice-president, Jamie Tronnes. They are both seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure today that I introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly 49 students from one of my favourite schools, Holy Family Catholic school in Mill Woods. Today they are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Caroline Lepps, Miss Donata Christiansen, Mrs. Gail Kossowan, and one of my friends, Mrs. Beth Devlin. They are also accompanied by parents Mrs. Karen Young and Mr. Roy Marouelli. I would ask that they all please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. They are in the members' gallery.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not often I get guests up to the Legislative Assembly, and I'm extremely pleased today to introduce to you and through you four very special guests from the town of Olds. They are Gordon and Joyce Jorgensen and Fred and Marlene Campbell. It was their hard work that was instrumental in getting approximately 4,700 names gathered on the petition that I presented earlier today on satellite dialysis. I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Viola Cassis, president of the Graduate Students' Association at the University of Calgary; Monique Tuffs, Graduate Students' Association at the University of Calgary; and Parminder Basran, a graduate student at that university. These three student leaders are in the city today talking to legislators and trying to convince them that their campaign to cap tuition increases at 2 percent is an important campaign and one that they hope will be supported by members of this Legislature. They've left with me a series of postcards for the Premier and for the Minister of Learning, which I'll see are delivered, with important messages from students with regards to that tuition cap. They're in the public gallery, and with your permission I'd ask that they stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and to the members of the Assembly a class of grade 6 students from Fultonvale elementary school. They are accompanied by Mrs. Karin Bittner, their teacher, and student teachers Mrs. Judy Prins and Miss Gayann Hutchison. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am just thrilled today to introduce to this Assembly and to you a great group of athletes. They are the St. Albert White Sox, the 55-plus slow-pitch team who just this summer won the Canadian championship in Whitehorse, Yukon. In fact, part of their claim to fame they have told me is that they have beaten teams that the Member for Lethbridge-West has played on and the Member for Whitecourt-Lac Ste. Anne. It's a great day for us in the Assembly. If I could read their names and they could stand up as I introduce them: Al Brown, Norm Carruthers, O'Neil Chevalier, Ron Crosby, Rod Gauf, Lloyd Haddon, Vern Holland, Stan Kolomyjec, Brian Kupsch, Clarence McDonald, Archie Miskiw, Larry Murray, George Odovichuc, Leo Provencal, Jack Rudd, Wayne Samis, Don Stewart, Jim Walsh, Glen Winder. They are also here with Marlene Miskiw, Joyce Odovichuc, and their daughter Kari. They are in that gallery as well. I would ask that we please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 31 students from H.A. Kostash school in Smoky Lake accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Harris; parents and helpers Ms Fletcher, Ms Jarema, Ms Eldridge, Mr. Sawchuk, and Mr. Ponich. I believe they're seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce 42 citizens from the city of Fort McMurray and the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo representing l'ecole Dickinsfield school's grades 4, 5, and 6 classes. Their teacher, Mrs. Ball, is accompanied today by parent helpers including Mr. Koskovich, Mr. Lowell, Mrs. Best, Mrs. Doblanko, Mr. Ball, Mrs. Clarke, Mrs. Mustard, Mr. Martin, Mrs. Gaudet, Mrs. Parsons, Mr. Lingelbach, Mr. Meintzer, Dr. Levitz, Mrs. Grewal, and Mrs. Chung. Now, the senior member of this afternoon's delegation is a very proud grandmother, Mrs. Mary Koskovich, with her 4-year-old granddaughter, Angela. They're all here this afternoon representing l'ecole Dickinsfield, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

Diabetes Awareness Month

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to stand here today on behalf of the government of Alberta to recognize November as national Diabetes Awareness Month.

Mr. Speaker, in the 79 years since the discovery of insulin too many of us have come to think of diabetes as an inconvenience or at most a controlled condition, but for the 90,000 Albertans with this condition and the estimated 40,000 who do not yet know that they have the disease, the reality is serious. Diabetes is Canada's leading cause of death by disease. Heart disease is two to four times more common in diabetics. Diabetes is the leading cause of adult blindness and of half or more of all of the amputations worldwide.

Our doctors, nurses, and other health professionals provide exceptional care to Albertans with diabetes. To help them with that care today I added the new drugs Actos and Avandia to Alberta's drug benefit list to combat type 2 diabetes. These two drugs are the first of a new class of medications for diabetes therapy. These drugs help to control high blood sugar levels by reducing insulin resistance and enabling the body to respond to the insulin it produces.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has a proud history of success in research in combating this disease. Ever since University of Alberta researcher James Collip worked with Banting and Best to develop human-usable insulin, Alberta has been on the leading edge of diabetes research. The University of Alberta has developed a ground-breaking pancreatic islet transplant therapy that holds the possibility to free some diabetics from insulin injections. Eight clinics around the world now use the Edmonton protocol.

Mr. Speaker, just today the University of Calgary announced a new gene therapy that has successfully put type 1 diabetes into remission in lab animals. These findings lay the groundwork for clinical trials on the use of this gene therapy to cure type 1 diabetes in human beings. This is yet another example of our universities using genetic research to solve medical problems and highlights once again the significance of the successful mapping of the human genome.

Mr. Speaker, the first description of diabetes was in Asia Minor in the first century A.D. Now almost 2,000 years later we stand on the cusp of a cure. We all look to the day when diabetes like smallpox will exist only in history books, and Alberta research will have been a significant part of that achievement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that diabetes requires public awareness and wider public understanding. Diabetes Awareness Month and the minister's remarks on this condition today help to serve this purpose.

Alberta does have a proud history, and the minister is right to laud our researchers, but conditions like diabetes also require sustained government attention and proper, stable government funding, attention and funding that recognize the high costs associated with this disease.

Mr. Speaker, costs for persons with diabetes can range from $300 to as much as $1,000 a month. Currently Alberta health care insurance covers a fraction of the potential monthly costs for Albertans dealing with this condition even with the new coverage for Actos and Avandia.

Mr. Speaker, some 90,000 Albertans have been diagnosed with diabetes. This means their daily routine is in large measure directed by their condition. From their waking hours to the time they go to bed, persons with diabetes must monitor their blood sugar levels and inject their bodies with insulin or take other medication as required. Persons with diabetes must monitor closely their diet and eat only the kinds and amounts of foods their bodies require. For a senior on a limited income the additional out-of-pocket expenses associated with diabetes, including diet, testing, and medication, are a serious hardship.

It's all well and good, Mr. Speaker, for the minister to recognize Diabetes Awareness Month with words, but it would be even better if the minister would also recognize Diabetes Awareness Month with sustainable directed funding, funding that would help Albertans burdened not only with the weight of diabetic symptoms but also the costs associated with treating those symptoms.

Thank you very much.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electric Utilities Deregulation

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are very fair-minded people, and they rightfully expect that the government is watching out for their interests. Like passengers on a ship they assume that the captain is on the bridge watching out for icebergs and sandbars and shoals and rocks, and they get angry when they realize that the captain has been sleeping on the bridge. The ship has hit the rock, and the Premier is still asleep. When will this Premier wake up to what Albertans know, and that is that his own deregulation policies have led to these higher prices?

MR. KLEIN: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are fair-minded people. The captain has not fallen asleep on the bridge. No captain of any ship remains awake 24 hours a day, seven days a week, 365 days a year, not even this member when she was captain of the health ship. As a matter of fact, you talk about someone who wasn't awake. You know, this hon. member, who was then the minister of health, was asleep at least three-quarters of the time.

Mr. Speaker, we have not hit a brick wall on this particular matter. The Minister of Resource Development has explained time and time again the causes for rising electricity prices. He's outlined a 10-point plan to address this issue. This is not hitting the wall. This is taking responsibility. This is guiding the ship to come to some kind of amicable resolution to this particular problem.

I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important issue. The opposition leader is sending a wrong message out there. I've said this before. Eighty-five percent of the electricity consumers connected to the Alberta electrical system, over 1 million residences, have up to five years – listen carefully: five years – before they have to make changes, and those are all regulated.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker – this is also very important – there are 124,000 customers that use less than 250,000 kilowatt hours of electricity that also may remain under the regulated system for another three years. Those are two very important areas. In addition to that, a lot of the large industrial consumers, commercial consumers, and municipal consumers have already signed long-term contracts with the power purchase holders right now, and they are protected.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the person that's criticizing that there is a disaster out there is wrong.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would this Premier please explain to Albertans how the government intends to intervene against itself at the EUB when it's his government's own deregulation policies that have botched it up, led to skyrocketing electricity prices, and led to the whole mess that Albertans are in today?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the shriekings of the leader of the Liberal opposition simply are not true. No matter how loud she yells, what she is saying is not true. She is not being truthful with her caucus, she is not being truthful with this Legislative Assembly, and she is not being truthful with Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, while the intervention may not be typical, I believe and members of this government caucus believe that protecting consumers is the number one priority of government. That's what it's all about. The Leader of the Opposition may choose to fear monger and confuse the issues and distort the facts, but that is doing a disservice to Albertans.

The fact is – and the hon. Minister of Resource Development pointed out the facts – that we are currently in a regulated market. Albertans, as the minister pointed out, will still have the option of remaining on the regulated system for five years; that is, the average, normal consumer. That means the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board will continue to be a regulatory body, and while that role exists for them, we will get involved in a productive way to protect consumers. We have an obligation to protect consumers and to ensure that any regulated rate increases are justified.

Mr. Speaker, I point out again that any consumer can stay in the regulated environment for five years after January 1 of the year 2001.

Now, relative to intervention, Mr. Speaker, anyone can intervene in the hearing process. It is a normal part of the regulated environment, and I would encourage the Liberal opposition, rather than fear mongering, rather than choosing to confuse Albertans and distorting the facts, I would invite them to join with us in the intervention process. The Alberta Energy and Utilities Board hearings are open to the public and are a fair and impartial review process.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, we've been intervening for the past five years on energy deregulation. I don't know where the Premier has been.

Mr. Speaker, what we've got is market uncertainty, we have higher electricity prices, and we have inadequate supply to meet rising demand. Is the Premier now saying that he's going to re-regulate an electricity energy market that he spent the last five years deregulating?

MR. KLEIN: No, Mr. Speaker, we are not going to re-regulate. Indeed, the power companies and many of the people who have signed those long-term contracts do not want us to re-regulate. They want to make sure that there's going to be an orderly transition, and that's what the minister's 10-point plan speaks to.

Where we find anomalies in the system and situations in the system where we think extraordinarily high increases are being applied for, we do have an obligation to protect consumers, and we will do that. I would point out that section 28 of the Alberta Energy and Utility Board Rules of Practice allows for governments to intervene in the hearing process. We will do precisely what we're allowed to do, and we would again invite the Liberals to join us in the spirit of protecting Alberta consumers.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has spent the last five years ignoring Alberta consumers, and the Premier knows it. The Premier ignored the chairman of ATCO. He ignored the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. He ignored a former minister of utilities, ignored the Alberta federation of rural electrification associations, ignored the Consumers' Coalition of Alberta, ignored the Public Institutional Consumers of Alberta, ignored the Industrial Power Consumers & Cogenerators Association of Alberta when they tried to tell him that his energy deregulations scheme was going to drive prices up. So the question is: why should anyone in Alberta believe that this Premier is interested in protecting anyone other than himself and his government from this massive mess we are in on deregulation?

MR. KLEIN: How would I be protecting myself and members of my government? We are consumers too. You know, we're all consumers of electricity in this room. Why would we do something that is going to deliberately cause pain to ourselves, Mr. Speaker? We know that a deregulated environment overall is going to increase competition and eventually drive the price down.

Relative to the associations to which the leader of the Liberal opposition alludes, there are other people and other organizations that have totally the opposite view.

I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important issue. We wouldn't want anyone to mislead Albertans in the information. I have Hansard here from 1998. I don't want to read all of it, but there are lots of your members from that side, Liberal members . . .

THE SPEAKER: Okay. Hon. minister, to the point, please.

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, very carefully, the hon. members from the opposite side indicated in 1998: we support the principle behind deregulation. So we are moving forward with what you supported. We're listening to you.

Mr. Speaker, if the opposition members have some better ideas or better plans in relation to the whole deregulation process that would help Albertans, the consumers out there, please provide those plans to us.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition has been fighting this from the beginning. The promise of this government was that prices were going to go down with deregulation, and they're going straight up.

Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier is prepared to intervene against himself and his own flawed electricity deregulation scheme, is he prepared to admit finally here today what he refused to admit two days ago, and that is that his own deregulation scheme is leading to higher prices?

2:20

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it has been pointed out time and time and time again that deregulation has nothing to do with higher prices. We're facing a situation in this province of unprecedented economic growth. We're facing a situation of power companies not being able to bring on an electrical supply quickly enough. The electrical producers will tell you that through the regulatory process they've been unsuccessful thus far in getting more transmission capacity onstream. That is being addressed in the minister's 10-point plan.

Mr. Speaker, when I say that the leader of the Liberal opposition is distorting the facts and confusing and misleading Albertans, I say that with all sincerity, because there are so many factors that are leading to high electricity rates. The hon. member is trying to imply that these rate hikes are occurring under a deregulated environment. We are not now in a deregulated environment. We are in a regulated environment, yet the applications for rate increases are taking place in a regulated environment. I think it's inherently unfair, and the hon. member does a disservice to herself and to her caucus and to Albertans by trying to imply that this is now taking place in an unregulated environment. That is not true.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, does the Premier agree with his own market surveillance administrator, who says that one of the key reasons for the uncertainty and the lack of supply in the market today is because of the deregulation process by his government?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, admittedly whenever you bring about change which eventually is for the better, it creates uncertainty. If there's anything that's difficult to bring about – I know that the leader of the Liberal opposition knows nothing about change, because she was always afraid to try something new or to do something differently. We know about change, and we know about change for the better.

Yes, change does bring uncertainty. I can recall when the liquor stores were privatized, Mr. Speaker: great uncertainty about the changes that would take place. When we franchised the registries: great fear about the changes that would take place. But it's all turned out for the better. The opposition yelled and they screamed and they said: uncertainty here; this is going to happen; the world's going to come to an end. Well, it didn't.

There are so many factors. Yes, admittedly, uncertainty is one of the factors. It's not the only factor. There are numerous other factors that are leading to higher power rates.

If the hon. member would like to hear once again from the hon. minister, I will have him respond.

THE SPEAKER: We're going on to the third main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Increased Utility Costs

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta families receiving assistance from the province were struggling to make ends meet well before this government botched the province's electricity supply and price structure. HungerCount 2000, an October 2000 survey of food bank usage, shows that 63 of Alberta's 70 food banks participated in this national survey. Interestingly, the province with the highest GDP per capita, the province with the highest surplus also has the distinction of one of the higher usage rates of food banks by children in the country. In fact, fully 42 percent of those assisted in Alberta are children. My questions are to the Premier. Given that 42 percent of Alberta food bank customers are currently children, how much higher does the Premier expect that number to go as more and more families are forced to divert food money to pay for electricity and heating bills?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again a complete, absolute, I would suggest malicious distortion of the facts. What the member opposite fails to point out is that every household in this province will receive as of January 1 an automatic $20 reduction in their electricity bill. In addition, every person over the age of 16 – and a 16 year old could be considered in some cases a child. In the case of a two-parent family, that would be $600. That goes a long way, to the point where an average household, whether the salary level of that household is in the low level, the medium level, or the high level, will receive in the neighbourhood of $840. That is very significant.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that HungerCount 2000 also shows that Alberta social assistance and disability incomes currently don't even cover one month's rent for a one-bed apartment in Calgary, how are Albertans on disability and welfare incomes to cope as their rents increase by $25, $50 - who knows? - on January 1 due to skyrocketing electricity prices?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that is an absolute falsehood and distortion of the facts. When the leader of the Liberal Party stands up and mentions the $20 a month reduction in electricity bills, when she mentions the $300 per person rebate, then she's telling the truth. Then she's telling the truth. Yes, there will be increases, but those increases will be offset to a great degree . . .

MS BLAKEMAN: Not for renters.

MR. KLEIN: It all depends. You know, I heard this across the alley. I'm sorry. Across the way. "Not for renters." Well, there are some renters who pay electricity bills. There are different billing situations for different rental situations, Mr. Speaker.

The simple fact is that on average consumers will receive a $20 reduction in their electricity bills plus the $300 each cash in hand. Until the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition starts to mention that, she is not telling the whole truth, and she has an obligation to tell the whole truth.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

MRS. MacBETH: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'll table again the estimated ATCO bill on an average residence that I tabled yesterday including the rebate.

Mr. Speaker, given that families and individuals working at Alberta's minimum wage must currently use, according to HungerCount 2000, 64 percent of their paycheque to pay for one month's rent in Calgary, how are these Albertans supposed to cope as rents increase due to electrical and heating bill increases on January 1, 2001?

MR. KLEIN: Well, again, I'm going to have the hon. minister or ministers respond, but I remind the leader of the Liberal opposition that very significant rebates are being put in place to compensate for the rising cost of electricity. Once again, I think it is improper and it is dishonest. No. I'm sorry. I take that back. It is not quite truthful of her to leave that very important component out.

Relative to the situation as it relates to low-income families, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't think it's fair to leave the impression with Albertans today that our SFI rates wouldn't even cover rent. I believe the location identified was Calgary. This is simply not true. We have a situation with shelter rates and with assistance to low-income families where we look at what is happening in the different situations, and we help certainly as best we can.

In terms of the reference that was made to people working at minimum wage, I want to make sure that the leader understands that we currently have somewhere around 2 percent of Alberta's population that's working at a minimum wage level. Most of those are students. If, in fact, we have people working in that kind of an environment that have families, we have income supplement plans. We have children's health benefit plans. We have employment tax credits. I mean, there is a situation in Alberta where we do look after those that need our assistance.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Contracted Podiatry Services

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On September 29 of the year 2000 as part of its PR campaign around the proclamation of Bill 11 the Conservative government announced that 18 contracts with private surgical facilities were being renewed or extended. In making this announcement, the minister of health said that Albertans will now know what agreements have been made, how much they will cost, and what's being provided. Well, the minister was not being entirely up front in making this statement. My question is to the Premier. Why did the government on the very day that Bill 11 was proclaimed fail to disclose that the Calgary regional health authority was signing a contract for podiatry services with the wanna-be Health Resource Group private, for-profit hospital?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know the situation as it relates to podiatry, but I can tell you that Bill 11 contains in it law that requires regional health authorities to abide by certain rules and regulations vis-a-vis contracting out and the disclosure of those rules and regulations and conditions of the contract.

Relative to the specific situation as it relates to podiatry, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the best of my information is that 34 contracts were approved under the Health Care Protection Act, and of those 34 contracts only four were with new providers. The rest of them were with existing providers, and there were no new services that were being provided. I'll be happy to look into the issue of podiatry services for the hon. member.

I can say that the global amount of the contracts that have been approved to this point total in the range of $9 million. That's $9 million out of a roughly $5.6 billion budget for this year, so it's a relatively small amount. It's an important tool that regional health authorities will use. I'll do my best to provide the full information that the hon. member requests.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the Premier: if the government can't be trusted to be forthright with Albertans about the contract between the CRHA and HRG, how can Albertans trust the Premier's assurances that there are no secret plans to allow hip replacement surgeries to be performed at HRG?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I stand to be corrected on this particular issue. Podiatry, as I understand it, is a service that involves treatment of the feet. Now, it's my understanding that podiatry services have been contracted for some time now. It seems to me that some podiatry services are contracted to an agency like the Kerby Centre in Calgary. It's privately contracted.

Now, there are rules and regulations put in place to cover that kind of a contract. Those same rules and regulations would cover a contract with HRG or any other institution, Mr. Speaker. I fail to see here what the problem is, but perhaps the hon. minister can shed some light on it.

MR. MAR: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I've given my undertaking to the hon. member to look into the issue of podiatry as it relates to HRG with the Calgary regional health authority. I see no reason why we can't look into that and have information brought forward if such information exists.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister would also inform this House whether podiatry surgeries already being performed at HRG are being performed despite the fact that the minister has not yet approved that particular contract.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, again, I'll be pleased to look into this particular matter. The process pursuant to our Health Care Protection Act is quite an involved one. It involves the College of Physicians and Surgeons approving certain procedures that can be done within private surgical facilities. They have very strict standards with respect to whether they can be safely done from a medical point of view, and then the regional health authorities must come to the minister for approval of contracts for such services.

As I have indicated, Mr. Speaker, I'll be happy to look into this for the member.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Development of Former Gainers Site

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have some questions regarding the former Gainers packing plant site, which is located in my constituency and which was sold to Fletcher's, now Premium Brands, some time ago. At the time of sale Fletcher's indicated that within a short time a bacon plant would be up and running with many new jobs. So far nothing has happened and the property has fallen into disrepair and my constituents await the jobs that have yet to be created. My questions are all to the Minister of Infrastructure. Could the minister please inform this Assembly and my constituents why there is no development taking place on the Gainers site?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The sale to Fletcher's was under the understanding and condition that Fletcher's would construct a bacon plant on the site. They have until October 2018 to exercise the option. However, at this particular time they are waiting for better security of availability of hogs in the province of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is: what will become of the site if Fletcher's doesn't develop the site? Was there any commitment in the agreement of sale that development must occur?

MR. STELMACH: Whether or not Fletcher's proceeds with the plant is up to them. However, we do have the right to repurchase the property for the same amount of money we sold it to Gainers for. As I said before, we have till October 1 of 2019 as a province to exercise the right to repurchase the property at the same price we sold it for.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Could the minister tell this Assembly whether this government has received payment in full for the property?

MR. STELMACH: Yes, we have, Mr. Speaker.

Electricity Rebates for Condominium Residents

MR. GIBBONS: Mr. Speaker, in just seven weeks time condominium owners and renters are facing condo fee and rent increases from $25 to $150 per month because of this government's mismanagement and supply of electricity and natural gas. Over the next month many of the 200,000 condominium owners across the province will attend annual general meetings to approve their higher condo fees to cope with massive increases in heating and power bills. Already renters in apartments are receiving notices of rent increases for January 1, 2001. To the Minister of Resource Development: will the minister mail out the rebate information notice by Friday so the condominium owners know exactly how this government's massive electrical price increase and their rebate, small as it is, will affect them?

MR. CARDINAL: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we can do that.

But I wouldn't say that the rebates are necessarily small. We are trying our best to serve the consumers out there when the need is there, and we've always said that we'll continue monitoring the situation and make adjustments accordingly as we move forward.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, we will be selling an additional 1,900 megawatts of electricity by the end of this month. Those dollars will be added to the consumers out there once the sale is completed. Once we determine the formula to use to pass on those dollars, we will be doing that. So to assume that the dollars provided are too small is not fair.

MR. GIBBONS: My next question is to the Premier. Given that the Premier says that the power bills for condos and apartments like his own will drop $20 on January 1, 2001, could he explain to apartment dwellers exactly why they are receiving notices of rent increases from $25 to $50 per month starting January 1, 2001?

MR. KLEIN: I will tell you exactly and precisely what is happening in my own condominium building. Yes, I did receive notice that condo fees are going up. As a matter of fact, I received a notice two years ago. The percentage of increase is less this time than it was the last time around, and that's before there was any talk of any electricity increases.

My condo fees will go up by, oh, I think it's about $15 a month, something like that. I'll get the $20 a month, but that goes to pay for things other than electricity, because I pay my own electricity costs. Every person in our condominium unit pays their own electricity bills. Mr. Speaker, this increase is for the general cost of the upkeep of the condominium, of the property. I pay my own electricity bills. As the reduction applies to my own electricity bill, even with the 14 percent, or whatever it is, increase by EPCOR, I'll still be paying in the neighbourhood of $5 or $6 a month on my electricity bill. That is not high.

What I would tell the condominium association, first of all, is that we have the lowest overall taxes in Canada, that personal and business tax cuts in Alberta since 1994 have totaled some $3 billion.

In 2001 our single-rate tax on income will be fully in place. Albertans will be keeping an additional $1.3 billion more in their pockets, thanks to the new plan. About 200,000 low-income Albertans will come off the tax rolls absolutely. We've announced business tax reductions of $955 million a year, and these will be phased in as affordable over four years starting April 1, 2001. Education property taxes will be reduced by $135 million in 2001 and frozen at $1.2 billion a year. User fees have been reduced this year, saving Albertans more than $60 million a year. The M and E tax has been removed. There's been a dramatic reduction in the aviation fuel tax. I could go on and on and on.

MR. GIBBONS: Finally, to the Minister of Government Services. As the protector of consumers in this province what monitoring and enforcement mechanism has the minister in place to ensure that electricity rebates will flow through to the renters?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier and the Provincial Treasurer and the Minister of Resource Development have indicated in this House time and time again that Albertans will receive, starting the first of the year, $20 a month for their electrical bills. Those people that pay their electrical bill will in fact receive a refund of $20. I don't know how clearer it can be if you can't get that. [interjection] If you'd quit yapping, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, I could answer the question.

The members opposite, Mr. Speaker, have had the fun today of trying to mix up rental increases with the power bills. There is a process in place under our landlords/tenants act that actually governs the due notice that must be given for rental increases in this province. I would ask the hon. member if he's not familiar with the statutes to please pick them up and read them, because they were debated fully in this House. I believe the members opposite actually supported the tightening up of rental increases that were put into the new statute.

I do know that my colleague the Minister of Resource Development needs to supplement this answer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Renal Dialysis Services

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dialysis patients in my constituency have to drive up to three hours two to three times a week to receive dialysis treatment. These trips, in addition to the treatment itself, are very physically demanding and have caused some people to actually move from their homes in rural Alberta to the city to access this service. My question today is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What steps has the minister taken to provide a better level of dialysis service to rural Albertans?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'd like to acknowledge the people who organized the petition that was tabled earlier today by the hon. member asking the question. I'd also like to be able to give by way of background a bit of information on how these services are provided not just to people in rural Alberta but to all Albertans.

Renal dialysis programs, Mr. Speaker, along with other specialized procedures such as organ transplants, would be a good example, are considered to be provincewide services. The Alberta Department of Health and Wellness funds the Capital health authority and the Calgary regional health authority to provide provincewide services. Through this funding both the CHA and the CRHA operate separate renal programs in both the north and south areas of the province. The northern and southern Alberta renal programs each manage dialysis outreach services throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, the provincial funding allocated to renal dialysis services for 2000-2001 is in the range of $50 million. That reaches approximately 1,600 people and represents an increase in budget of 27 percent over the previous fiscal year. In addition, special onetime funding of $6 million was announced on the 18th of May of this year to increase capacity for kidney dialysis to meet the increased needs and improve the quality of care that's provided.

MR. MARZ: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Why are the doctors in Calgary not referring patients to Red Deer, which is closer and more accessible, especially in winter months, and would be more of a convenience for those constituents?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the Red Deer satellite program is operated by the northern Alberta renal program and is already operating its sixth unit at full capacity. Residents in the Olds-Didsbury area, those constituents, would normally receive services through the southern Alberta program, which would be operated out of Calgary or Hanna.

MR. MARZ: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: when can my constituents who require dialysis expect to be provided with a more accessible service?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, knowing that this question was coming up, the Minister of Infrastructure reminded me that there are expansion plans that have been completed to double the number of dialysis stations at the Hanna site from two to four stations, with three shifts a day for a total capacity of 12 patients. Also, in the south there are expansion plans to increase renal service capacity in Lethbridge by 20 beds. Renal dialysis services are increasing at the rate of 14 percent a year, yet the need for the service continues to rise.

I should note, Mr. Speaker, that a Renal Task Force has been established to look at issues regarding ongoing planning of renal services in Alberta, and on the issue of accessibility I have asked this task force to consider that issue. The southern and northern programs also maintain contact with satellite units and regional health authorities to actively monitor the current and future needs of this program.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Video Lottery Terminals

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission oversees a gambling industry in which $13 billion will be wagered this year with a billion dollars of that flowing into the government pockets. This appointed commission answers to no one but the minister responsible for gaming and his cabinet colleagues. My questions are to the minister responsible for gaming. Given that for two years this government gave selected race track operators a cut of slot machine money that according to the Auditor General was illegal, why, then, did the minister and the gaming commission negotiate an illegal contract?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, that's probably the first preamble I've heard in the last 10 days that actually has a remote proximity of fact when he says: yes, the industry does wager $13 billion, of which 93 percent is paid back in prizes and stakes, leaving a mere 7 percent for the use of taxpayers and all Albertans in the Alberta lottery fund.

Now, with respect specifically to the Racing Corporation's normal review procedure, we looked at what we were doing, what were our practices. I think we are a best practices organization. The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission asked the Auditor General to come in and say: "Okay. Let's look at this, examine it. Is it appropriate with how the funds flow?" We said: would you please review that? He did review it, and he came back and reported to us that the Appropriation Act is not correct, and the gaming act is out of sync with the way that you're moving the funds through.

Mr. Speaker, then we started to speak with the Auditor General, and on September 11 in the Auditor General's report he said . . . [interjection] "People don't rob banks to make out-of-sync withdrawals," says the member.

2:50

THE SPEAKER: Please, please.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I guess he's accusing the Racing Corporation.

THE SPEAKER: Sorry, hon. member. I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. The second question.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Gaming: with the apparent collapse of the Resortport in Calgary, who will be given the 450 slot machines ordered for the race track proposal? The Calgary Stampede board?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. SMITH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think it is important to provide clarification that we did not think the Racing Corporation was robbing banks to make out-of-sync withdrawals, as was reported by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. But what we do know is that the Auditor General said in his report that we need to take measures to correct, and then he said: I am satisfied that the operation and remedial and rectitudinal measures taken by the AGLC are correct in putting the direct flow of funds through the racing renewal initiative in proper perspective, proper accounting, and in accordance with legislation as set out by the Crown.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Resortport application the 500 slot machines were committed to that agreement. That licence has been pulled by the Alberta Racing Corporation, so without that licence, then, there will not be a requirement to put those slot machines in there. In fact, the member well knows that there is a freeze on gaming expansion, that there's a freeze on casino licences, and that nothing is happening until the proper reporting and the new policy come in place for the gaming policy review.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Speaker, my last question is again to the minister responsible for gaming. After already waiting for over three years, when can the residents of the Fort McMurray area finally get to see the VLTs removed, as voted upon by the citizens?

MR. SMITH: Well, taking your previous guidance, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that is before the courts, and it would be inappropriate for me to comment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Palliative Care

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With our aging population there is a growing need for palliative services to care for the terminally ill. During 1998-99 I was vice-chairman of the Alberta long-term care review, with my colleague the hon. Member for Redwater as chairman. We heard from many Albertans about the need for compassionate, palliative care. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How are we meeting the needs of palliative care patients in Alberta?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the issue of palliative care has been raised by a number of my colleagues in government, including the hon. Member for Red Deer-South, the Member for Redwater, and this Member for Calgary-West. We do take a compassionate and caring approach to palliative care and focus on quality of life for patients and families during a very difficult time.

Palliative care services are considered a core health service in the province, and they are managed and delivered through home care programs and hospice sites in some communities throughout the province. Regional health authorities are responsible for providing palliative care through acute care settings, homes, hospices, and lodges in their regions.

Since the release of the policy framework on palliative care in 1993 Alberta Health and Wellness and health authorities have enhanced palliative care in this province. As an example, Mr. Speaker, both the Capital health authority and Calgary regional health authority operate hospices throughout their cities, quite a number of beds. I should point out that palliative care is a priority in the 2000-2001 business plan for a number of different regions in Alberta.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, in March of 2000 Alberta Health and Wellness provided funding to develop a caregiver's guide. This guide describes supports that informal caregivers can provide to dying relatives or friends, and this guide will be distributed provincewide by the long-term care resource centre.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The long-term care review committee was asked to examine the issue of supporting drug costs for home-based palliative care. Can the Minister of Health and Wellness please advise the Legislative Assembly what has resulted from those recommendations?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I must say at the outset that that committee did an excellent job of addressing this particular issue. As a result of their recommendations on 1 February 1999, Alberta Health and Wellness launched the palliative care drug program, which has been very well received throughout the province. The program provides coverage to any Albertan who is eligible to receive benefits through the Alberta health care insurance plan and has been diagnosed by a physician as being palliative.

What the plan does, Mr. Speaker, is it provides premium-free coverage for medications that are required by palliative care patients. Most importantly, the program increases the quality of life for the palliative patient and supports the patient's choice to be treated in their own home, hospice, or in a lodge.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. Can the minister further describe what type of response this program has received from Albertans?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I think it's fair to say that the response has been very positive, and there have been many supportive letters and comments that have been made. It is a program, I think, that has not only been demonstrated to be widely accepted, but it's widely used throughout the province as well. As at the end of March 31, 2000, we had 338 Albertans on the palliative care drug plan. As at September 30 of this year that number has increased to 655. I think this program has demonstrated that it provides a tremendous benefit to the patients and their families, as I said earlier, during a very stressful time.

Increased Utility Costs

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, the Premier's bungling of the electric market is hurting all aspects of society: families, seniors, small and big business, and also nonprofit groups, community leagues, and amateur sport associations. For example, the Knights of Columbus arena here in Edmonton in an estimate from EPCOR will see an additional $75,000 added onto their $135,000 annual bill for electricity if they lock in their rates now. That is a 55 percent increase that will need to be covered by families and adult group users of the facility, who are also being hit with increased electricity costs at home. My questions today are for the Minister of Resource Development. Are there any plans to lessen the burden faced by these and similar recreational facilities?

MR. CARDINAL: Of course, Mr. Speaker, we've been working. In fact, I'll be meeting with the AUMA in the very near future. A lot of facilities of that nature, that this member mentioned, fall under the urban municipalities and rural municipalities. A number of them, of course, are already eligible for the rebate program. The $760 million that we provided back to those particular consumers will go to nonprofit agencies through their municipalities.

If this individual is concerned about prices for facilities in Edmonton, I would do this. If this happened in my own municipality and my own municipality was pushing increases on electricity rates and setting the rates, Mr. Speaker, then I as a member would be approaching the municipality to question the municipality, your mayor and council, as to why those rates are being increased, because they are regulating the processes.

3:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Considering that any assistance these facilities will be getting will not be enough to offset the increase and will still leave a huge increase in the bill, what other measures can be taken so the kids are able to continue to access these facilities when user fees for them will have to go up?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. Again, I'd just like to indicate to the member that it's fine to bring questions of that nature to the House, and we definitely made a commitment. We made a commitment that we will provide all the services that we can provide at this time, and we will continue monitoring the process and making adjustments as we move forward.

Again I would remind the member, Mr. Speaker, that maybe he should also be addressing this particular issue along with his leader and the opposition to their city council. They do set the rates. They're the people you vote for to get elected. Go talk to them.

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, the minister obviously doesn't realize that the deregulation program was provincially sponsored, not municipally. Therefore, how does this minister specifically plan and what programs is he going to put in place to ensure that amateur sports facilities are affordable to all children, parents, and adult users of this province?

MR. CARDINAL: Again, Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to remind the member that the city of Edmonton regulates the rates, specifically electricity rates, in Edmonton. That member, if he is a responsible member, should be approaching his own council on those particular issues.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, we have a very, very strong economy. We have over $30 billion worth of economic initiatives announced, and they are moving forward. The economy is hot in Alberta, and Albertans are benefiting, including through tax breaks.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, today seven hon. members will participate in Recognitions. We'll begin with the first in 30 seconds from now.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ernest Manning High School

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, November 20, I was very proud to attend and participate in the annual awards ceremony at Ernest Manning high school, located in my constituency of Calgary-West. Ernest Manning has a proud history of achievement in many areas: academic careers and technology, fine arts, math, and citizenship. Twenty-seven recent grads were awarded a total of $36,500 with the government of Alberta Alexander Rutherford scholarships, which honour the high school records of recent graduates presently enrolled in postsecondary institutions.

More than 200 special guests, students, teachers, parents, and friends attended this special annual event, Mr. Speaker. From the Ernest Manning choir vocalists leading O Canada, to opening remarks, to the principal's greetings, through an impressive number of individual awards, scholarships, and bursaries donated by the community and individuals, to the finale, the prestigious Governor General medallion, the specially decorated cafeteria was alive with an aura of celebration, caring, pride, and achievement. It was truly a special evening of community for all to remember and cherish.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

White Ribbon Week

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. White Ribbon Week begins on November 25, three days from today. Thousands of communities and millions of Canadians, indeed millions upon millions across the world will participate in white ribbon campaign activities to show their support for ending violence against women. I would like to recognize organizers and participants of White Ribbon Week. I applaud those who acknowledge their responsibility to urge men to speak out against violence against women. By wearing a white ribbon, they symbolize their opposition to men's violence against women. It is also a personal pledge never to commit, condone, or remain silent about violence against women. In Canada we wear ribbons until December 6, Canada's National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence against Women.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Frank Spinelli

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of myself, the government of Alberta, and I'm sure all members of this Assembly I wish to offer my deepest condolences to the members of the family of Frank Spinelli, who passed away earlier today in Edmonton.

Mr. Spinelli, who many know as the owner of the Italian Centre Shop, was not only an icon in the city of Edmonton and indeed the province of Alberta. He was a deeply committed family man and an outstanding philanthropist and community supporter. Many Italian immigrants owe Mr. Spinelli their beginnings in their adopted country through employment prospects and also through his generous support in helping them to get on their feet.

Frank Spinelli will be dearly missed not only by the Italian community but by anyone who had the privilege of meeting and knowing this extraordinary individual.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

St. Albert White Sox

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to recognize the St. Albert White Sox. This is the 55-plus men's slow-pitch team who hit it out of the park this past summer and won the Canadian slow-pitch championship in Whitehorse, Yukon. This strong team has also won the Canadian championship in '94, '95, '98, and 2000. In fact, four players have been in all four championships: Rod Gauf, Jim Walsh, Don Stewart, and Vern Holland.

The St. Albert White Sox are great athletes, and they not only know how to play ball, but they know how to have fun. I would like to mention their names: Al Brown, Norm Carruthers, O'Neil Chevalier, Ron Crosby, Rod Gauf, Lloyd Haddon, Vern Holland, Stan Kolomyjec, Brian Hlus, Clarence McDonald, Archie Miskiw, Larry Murray, George Odovichuc, Leo Provencal, Jack Rudd, Wayne Samis, Don Stewart, Jim Walsh, and Glen Winder.

Congratulations. You've made us very proud.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to recognize members of the newly formed Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations. They are the co-chair, the hon. Gene Zwozdesky; members John Chomiak, Bud Conway, Dr. Ehor Gauk, Oksana Hnatiuk, Eugenia Leskiw, Yuri Moskal, Art Mykyte, Dr. Roman Petryshyn, Dave Sereda, Edith Zawadiuk; alternates Dr. Olenka Bilash, Ivan Kupchenko, Lisa MacDonald, Ed Piasta; academic adviser Dr. Bohdan Klid; advisors Wayne Clifford, Barry Mehr; and secretary Jeff Morrison. I look forward to working with this fine group of volunteers from our provincial Ukrainian communities.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Sierra Youth Coalition

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize the excellent work done by the Calgary group of the Sierra Youth Coalition. This is a dynamic network of youth that initiates and participates in environmental issues and actions. In October they organized a two and one-half day intensive conference attended by more than 90 people entitled Bridging the Gaps, Understanding and Acting Towards Sustainability.

The purpose and goal of the conference was to offer an opportunity for youth to explore the many diverse and complex perspectives of sustainability through an open forum environment. Perspectives were provided from a variety of community organizations, industry, government, and First Nations groups. Youth were able to assess how sustainability fits into our society and may act as a tool for positive change, while working towards bridging gaps between groups and generations. Their efforts clearly help in advancing and integrating collective efforts towards social, economic, and environmental sustainability. They will be very effective leaders in our future.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Canadian Telework Day

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to recognize today as Canadian Telework Day. Telework Day is an Internet-based conference which showcases Canadian telework initiatives and supporters. Telework uses new technology to enable employees to work away from a traditional office setting, usually from their homes. More than 1 million Canadian employees currently telework, and the number is quickly growing.

The Alberta government recognizes the benefits of teleworking and has developed and posted formal teleworking agreements on the personnel administration office web site. Last year's event to track the strong support from business and government leaders focused on the benefits of teleworking in our workforce environment, transportation, and economic development. The Minister of Human Resources and Employment has provided messages of support over the past two years.

What makes this day unique is that organizers of this event do not want people to come to it; that is, not physically. To save fuel, time, and air quality, the only way to get to this event is by logging onto their web site at www.ivc.ca/td2000.html.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: We will move very shortly to a point of order, but before that, hon. Member for Redwater, might I please draw your attention to Hansard of last Thursday and last Monday and ask you to perhaps review them, particularly those sections dealing with naming of names? Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on a point of order.

Point of Order Provoking Debate

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, it was the second set of questions, and there was a supplementary response from the Minister of Resource Development. The reference in Hansard would be Beauchesne 408(2) with respect to answers not provoking debate.

I heard the Minister of Resource Development say – and I don't have the Blues – words to the effect that the Liberals supported deregulation in 1998, and in fact it sounded like he was quoting. I couldn't see, but it looked like he had some kind of a Hansard excerpt. What's provocative about that, Mr. Speaker, is that I recall being in the House in 1998 when the government had to resort to closure because the Liberal opposition was unable to get questions answered. I would hope that the minister has not taken out of context some general comment where one of my colleagues has said that as a general rule we're not opposed to deregulation in any particular sphere but make the case that Albertans will be advantaged not prejudiced by doing so.

With respect to Bill 27 – and if somebody has Hansard available, I'll stand to be corrected – I specifically remember closure being invoked. Mr. Speaker, in the years you've been here, I know that you've never seen closure invoked when you have the opposition locked up in full support of a government initiative. It doesn't happen, has never happened. For him to suggest, as he did while the cameras were rolling, that this Liberal caucus supported deregulation in 1998 when in fact we were raising concerns in anticipation perhaps of some of the mess that we've seen unfold, is just as provocative as can be. I'd hope that we'd be able to clarify and ensure that that sort of unfounded provocation isn't repeated in the course of this fall's sittings.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on this point of order.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, it's always interesting when members of the opposition wish to allow the difference in time to allow them to change their position. The hon. minister was quoting from Hansard, in fact March 23, 1998, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, when the member for Edmonton-Ellerslie said, "We support the principles behind deregulation." I could point to a number of other instances in Hansard where members of the Liberal opposition supported the concept. The Member for Edmonton-Calder, for example, on second reading debate on the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 1998, on March 17, 1998, said, "I must say on behalf of myself and at least a good deal of my caucus that we intend to look upon this bill favourably."

There are numerous references in Hansard to when the Liberals, talking about electrical deregulation only two years ago, were favourable to the concept that competition – I could quote again from March 17, 1998, from Edmonton-Calder.

The system worked quite well for a long time, until such time as most recently, when across North America we've come into deregulation and allowance for some private enterprise to enter the market. Personally I don't have any difficulty with that. In fact, I think that it is the way of the world, and certainly we have to get [people] to a place where we may – and I stress "may" – be able to as customers reap some of the benefits that competition can and will serve.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberals can try and reverse themselves, try and put time and distance between previous positions and now. My colleague was answering the question in a positive, straightforward message and pointing out that in the past they've supported the position that's been taken by the government. Now they're trying to show themselves as being the saviours of the consumer and trying to scare the consumers in this province by raising things and saying that there's a massive problem that the government has mismanaged, but the bottom line is that there was a favourable viewpoint from the opposition, which many, many instances in Hansard support, and they can't reverse themselves just because they don't like what they said in the past.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo did rise on a point of order, and he did give the correct citation, Beauchesne 408(2), that answers basically "should not provoke debate."

Here's what the Blues actually say. I quote the hon. Minister of Resource Development:

Mr. Speaker, this is a very important issue because we wouldn't want anyone to mislead Albertans in the information. I have Hansard here from 1978. I don't want to read all of it, but there's a lot from your member from that side, the Liberal member.

So the Hansard Blues point out 1978, at which point the Speaker says: "Okay. Hon. minister, to the point, please." Then the hon. minister says:

Mr. Speaker, very carefully, the hon. member from the opposite side indicated in 1998 . . .

So now we move 20 years.

. . . we support the principle behind deregulation. So we are moving forward with your support. [interjections] Yeah, we're listening to you.

Mr. Speaker, if the opposition members have some better ideas or a better plan in relation to the whole deregulation process that would help Albertans, the consumers out there, please provide those plans to us.

Well, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo rose on a point of order. Basically, I think the point he was making was "should not provoke debate," and the hon. Government House Leader came back and quoted from Hansard certain things which certainly added to the debate. My conclusion to the whole question period today was: one whole debate, period. So we've had a point of clarification raised by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, responded to by the hon. Government House Leader with respect to this matter, and we're now going to move on to Orders of the Day.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, I will now move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

Bill 210
Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2000

[Debate adjourned November 21: Mr. Doerksen speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

MR. DOERKSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you will recall, yesterday afternoon I was beginning to speak on Bill 210. I'll resist the urge to go back and start my speech all over again, but I do want to assure members of the Assembly that today I will not wax poetic. I will probably leave that to another member who might choose to do that today. Today I will stick to some factual matters and try to debate the principles of Bill 210.

If I recall, I kind of left off with the fact that we were discussing the statistics with respect to alcohol involved in accidents, and I had noted that in 1998, 1 in 5 drivers involved in fatal collisions had consumed alcohol. To make matters worse, as the severity of the collision, from nonfatal to fatal, increased, the involvement of alcohol also increased. In 1998 there were 17,345 casualty collisions in Alberta. In 9.1 percent of those casualty collisions the drivers had either been drinking or were judged to have been impaired. For the same year, in fatal collisions 103, or just over 22 percent, of the drivers had been drinking or were impaired. This is unacceptable since we have known for decades that alcohol affects a driver's judgment, reaction time, perception, and increases the severity of traffic collisions. Therefore, it makes sense to consider further restrictions on drivers that drink, and there is a compelling argument to have 24-hour suspensions for anyone caught driving between .05 and .08 blood alcohol.

Reflecting back, one of the arguments that was presented when we debated the provisions of graduated licensing had to do with whether the tools used to measure blood alcohol were in fact sophisticated enough to be able to measure blood alcohol content precisely. That was one of the reasons in the debate on that bill why we didn't want to go to a zero tolerance: because we didn't think we had the equipment to be able to measure that. I think we have progressed to a stage where, in fact, we do have devices that are sophisticated enough to measure accurately the blood alcohol content, so to move from .08 to .05 in fact is a realistic attempt to try to improve and continue to reinforce the message in Alberta that driving while impaired is not acceptable.

Mr. Speaker, an impaired driver can be anyone. There is no single image or personality type that indicates a drunk driver, but there are certain statistical groups that remain prevalent. Young males are still the most likely group of drivers to have consumed alcohol before a crash. In 1998 there were more than four times as many male drivers as female drivers who had consumed alcohol and been involved in a casualty collision. The majority of these drivers were males younger than 45 years old. In terms of involvement per 1,000 licensed drivers, males between 18 and 21 years of age were most likely to have been drinking before the crash.

Impaired driving can happen at any time and anywhere, but the odds go up for collisions involving alcohol on weekends, in the early morning hours, and during warm-weather months. In Alberta in 1998 October was the month with the highest number of casualty collisions involving alcohol, almost 11 percent of the total. May had the highest number of alcohol-involved fatal collisions, with 13 percent. A little-known fact is that most fatal and nonfatal collisions involving alcohol in Alberta during 1998 occurred on Saturdays. The most likely time period for these collisions on any day of the week was between 11 p.m. and 3 a.m.

With these statistics in mind, police officers in co-operation with other organizations step up Check Stop initiatives to stop impaired drivers before an accident occurs. The compelling argument behind Bill 210 is that it is still possible for a driver who blows between .05 and .08 to drive away from these Check Stops. Currently an officer only has the discretion to impose a 24-hour suspension if they suspect that an individual is impaired through their behaviour. This clearly should not be the case when many credible studies by leading researchers indicate that drivers between .05 and .08 are in fact impaired, have judgment loss, and loss of sensory perception.

In addition to the loss of life and limb let us not ignore the incredible toll this takes on our health care system and the ripple effect on other costs to taxpayers. It is not only an issue of death and injury. It is an issue of responsibility in so many ways.

Mr. Speaker, you will recall a rather tragic accident that happened in my own city of Red Deer and one that was actually the catapult that led to some changes to our regulations to do with riding in the back of pickup trucks. Not widely talked about in that case but probably more significant an issue was the fact of the impairment of the driver of that pickup truck. Not only do I consider it important with respect to riding unrestrained in vehicles, but the issue clearly in this case was a matter of intoxication.

With the rules we have and the legislation we have and the attitude we have toward drinking and driving, clearly we've been making progress in our society, but we must continue to take steps to encourage people to act responsibly. I think what the member has done here with this bill in allowing the 24-hour suspension of a licence for that .05 to .08 makes good common sense. It advances the yardstick, if I can use that analogy, to help us to continue to drive that message home.

Mr. Speaker, with those comments I will now take my place and listen to the other comments from speakers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure this afternoon to make a few observations about Bill 210, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2000. I think not only all members of this Assembly but all members of society here in Alberta and, in fact, the world certainly want to see impaired drivers off the road. We all have a responsibility to do just that.

Now, then, the federal government, when they decided to put in a level of .08, certainly had done an incredible amount of testing to come up with that figure. When that figure was established, there were quite a few cries that this figure was far too low, and there were other cries that this figure was high. It was a level that was set where people could still operate a motor vehicle and the maximum level where people could operate a motor vehicle. So when this was established, the intent of that law was to get at those people that violate that level.

This existing law certainly has altered – drastically altered – the behaviour patterns of people who are driving and particularly the youth of today. We certainly see a much, much more responsible attitude towards drinking and driving today from our youth than we've ever seen before. Now, then, as well we have many, many organizations out there who, again, are profiling and bringing the message to people. We have programs in schools such as DARE. We have a program, which will be starting very soon, called Operation Red Nose. We have the PARTY program. We have had for many years safe grads here in the province. So all of these organizations certainly are doing their part to educate to try and prevent drunk drivers on the road.

Now, then, in her opening comments the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek certainly outlined that the severity of the accident in very serious accidents and that the number of deaths certainly were attributed to higher amounts of alcohol. I don't think there is anybody in this Assembly or the province that doesn't agree that more can be done. So what are some of the things we can do if we truly are concerned about getting drunk drivers off the road? What can we do?

Well, let's look at what we can do as a province. What could we do to lessen the opportunity for people to be behind the wheel when they shouldn't be driving? This province licenses every liquor outlet in this province that sells alcoholic beverages. We have not decreased the amount of time those are open, but we've increased the time. So have we done our part, our responsibility to shut that down? What have we also done for people that serve alcohol in the restaurants and bars or whatever in this province? Have we decreased the time that those establishments are allowed to stay open? No. We've increased the time, and we've also included Sunday drinking now. We as a province certainly could look at those two situations and say: "Yes, we have a responsibility. Yes, we are serious in cutting down the availability of alcohol when people can be out on the roads." We certainly can do our part there as well.

Now, I noticed that last week AADAC's annual report came out, and in reading this report, I was quite interested in some of the comments that they have here. One I'll quote out of the report.

The best prevention programs are based on efforts to "build better people" by focusing on the strengths young people have and encouraging adults to play an active, supporting role in children's lives.

This to me is how we are going to impact, how we are going to change the behaviours of people in this province and something that we can definitely be committed to.

When I look here in the supplementary estimates, general revenue fund, I see that we have an increase of $1,826,000 for assistance to the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission. Then I say: if we are truly committed to educating our youth, to educating our population, how much of this money went into further development of programs that will impact people and that will get them off the roads when they have been drinking and prevent them from going on and causing the carnage that happens when we have these horrific accidents?

Now, then, we can be proactive, Mr. Speaker. We can make a difference. I think that rather than an arbitrary amount of .05, we can do things that will impact our message much more strongly than that. What we want here is prevention. What we have to do is look at those people who are causing these horrific accidents, the people who are not at .08. The seriousness of the accident, as the speaker from Calgary-Fish Creek has said in her opening remarks, was that the people were far in excess. These are the people who are driving when their licences are suspended as well. So those are the people that we have to focus on. Those are the people that we should be targeting not with the law but with education programs and counseling.

As well, what else could we do in this province? Well, we have the right in this province to license at what age people in this province can buy alcohol. We also have the right to license at what age these people can go into an establishment that serves alcohol. Now, in many of the provinces here in this country that age is 19 years, yet ours remains at 18 years. So there again I think this is another area where, if we are serious, we can be very, very proactive in regards to that.

I think that when we look at these other suggestions, all we can do is get a much healthier attitude towards drinking and driving. We have come a long way, Mr. Speaker, since the original limits were put in, and we certainly can create much more awareness of what is happening in the province today.

What we have to do here as well is expand the net. In other words, how can we reach these various groups that are out there? How can we reach those individuals who constantly get behind the wheel of their vehicle when their alcohol limit is over .08? That is our challenge today: not setting a limit lower, that I don't think will have that much influence or would not have the lasting impact, the lasting influence that we seriously need in this society.

You know, we have organizations out there like MADD, SADD, PAID, and these people do a magnificent job. They are certainly bringing the awareness of impaired driving to the front, and certainly there isn't anyone that doesn't know the anguish that a family goes through when they lose a loved one due to an impaired driver. That pain is a searing pain. It's a pain that never goes away, and the intensity of that pain certainly is there for them for the rest of their lives.

What I would like to emphasize most of all, Madam Speaker, is that if indeed we are serious in this province about getting impaired drivers off the road, then there are many things which are proactive. There are many educational programs that we could certainly be supporting more fully. There is certainly legislation that we could bring in which would definitely impact those people who have been charged, who do have a degree of recidivism, when they are drinking again and trying to climb back behind the wheel when they are under suspension or when their blood alcohol level is greater than .08.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, those are a number of the observations that I would like to add to the record when we're dealing with Bill 210, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2000.

Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise this afternoon to speak about Bill 210, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, in support of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, who has brought this to the floor, and certainly I agree with the comments of the previous member, Edmonton-Glengarry, as well.

Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the hon. members of the Assembly of some of the reasons why such an important initiative as Bill 210 is necessary in the fight against drunk driving. Alberta has the fifth highest rate of people charged. That's the fifth highest rate of people charged with impaired driving out of all the jurisdictions in Canada and almost two times as many as those in our neighbouring province of British Columbia and also in central Canada, in Ontario. This is quite alarming. In 1998 one out of five drivers involved in fatal collisions had consumed alcohol. As the involvement of alcohol increased, so did the severity of the accidents, and there was a direct correlation between the involvement of alcohol and the severity of the accidents. Back in 1998 there were over 17,000 casualty collisions in Alberta, and in 1,586 cases – that's almost 10 percent of them – the drivers had either been drinking or been judged to have been impaired. In the same year 22.6 percent of fatal collisions involved drivers that had been drinking or impaired.

Madam Speaker, outside the provisions of the Criminal Code, impaired driving convictions can also result in a significant consequence. An accused person routinely faces the possibility of additional sanctions. For example, just one example, most of the provinces and territories, including Alberta, have instituted administrative penalties against suspected and convicted impaired drivers, some of which may be effective immediately and independently of any Criminal Code conviction, and that again is an important initiative. I am very proud that Alberta is intent on that particular administrative penalty.

However, Madam Speaker, it is clear that even more can be done to address this problem and stop unnecessarily placing the lives of Albertans at risk. Every eight hours someone is killed by an impaired driver in Canada. Every eight hours someone is killed in this country because of an impaired driver. It's statistics like this one that have prompted me to speak in favour of this initiative put forward by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

This Assembly cannot change the Criminal Code – it is out of our jurisdiction – but what we can do as a province is write our own traffic laws in the interest of public safety. That is what Bill 210 does. It prevents drivers who register between .05 and .08 blood alcohol content from driving for 24 hours. It is a very simple and reasonable request.

Now, Madam Speaker, we should be doing everything we can to make it harder for drunk drivers to offend and to get drivers whose judgment is impaired by alcohol off the road. That is why Bill 210 intends to do that. Other provinces have also legislated brief periods of licence suspension for persons whose blood alcohol content is over 50 milligrams but less than the Criminal Code limit of 80 milligrams. This allows the police to suspend drivers at the roadside for up to 24 hours in the hope of preventing an impaired-driving offence. Really it is preventative, this measure that is being introduced by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. In Alberta police have their own discretion, but let's strengthen that discretion and allow them to do their job legislatively, and that is the ability legislatively to suspend a person's licence for 24 hours.

Bill 210 would also make sure that there is no question as to whether an individual is competent to drive while in the danger zone of .05 to .08. This would give our law enforcement officers another tool in strengthening driving safety practices across this province. In British Columbia today if a driver is caught driving with a blood alcohol content between .05 and .08, that driver is subject to a 24-hour roadside suspension, which is recorded on his or her driving record.

Saskatchewan, our neighbouring province to the east, uses a point system to assess drivers and their infractions. If drivers are caught a second time with a blood alcohol level within the warning range of .05 and .08, they also will receive an automatic 24-hour roadside licence suspension, and more points are applied to their licence. If an experienced driver is caught a third time with a blood alcohol within this range, they receive an automatic 24-hour roadside licence suspension and must attend addiction screening.

In Manitoba a driver caught with a blood alcohol content level between .05 and .08 receives an automatic 24-hour licence suspension and must pay a $40 surcharge when they renew their licence. For the folks in the far east, in Newfoundland, drivers caught with a blood alcohol level between .05 and .08 are subject to an automatic 24-hour roadside suspension plus a $100 licence reinstatement fee to be paid within 30 days.

Madam Speaker, these are tough measures against tough opponents, drunk drivers, who are threats to us all, especially when we learn of young people being robbed of such a young life by being hit by a drunk driver. Bill 210 is not going to take drivers with .05 and .08 alcohol levels and lock them up and throw away the key. It simply takes a driver who is a danger to public safety and removes from them their driving privilege for 24 hours, no more and no less. What Bill 210 is saying is that drinking and driving hurts everyone involved, so just don't do it. Having had a 24-hour suspension is certainly going to make anyone think again before they drive after having a couple, because in fact many impaired driving accidents happen after just a couple.

I would encourage members to give strong consideration to this bill, not only to the legal ramifications but also to the spirit of its intent in protecting all Albertans. This legislation will work to keep drunk drivers off the road, making our roads safer for all Albertans. Having a licence suspension for 24 hours for the drivers in that range is a small initiative that will pay huge dividends by saving the lives of Albertans. This initiative, I know, is very much supported by Students Against Drunk Driving as well as by Mothers Against Drunk Driving and, I believe, by the majority of Albertans.

Finally, I would urge all members of the Assembly to support Bill 210 in this fight against impaired driving. This initiative from the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek is why she has earned the title the princess.

Thank you so much, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand today to speak on Bill 210, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2000. I won't call her the same thing that our hon. member did, but I will thank the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing this forward and for her dedicated commitment to the families who lost their loved ones. I listened intently as she spoke, and my heart goes out to them.

As I understand the bill before us, it is to allow peace officers to suspend a driver's licence for 24 hours upon tests, breathalyzers, showing the driver to have in excess of 50 milligrams of alcohol in 100 millilitres of blood. Currently a 24-hour suspension can be given if the level is in excess of 80 milligrams of alcohol in 100 millilitres of blood.

In studying this bill and looking back to see where other jurisdictions have it, I see that Manitoba moved to this limit in 1997, and other provinces also have similar provisions for licence suspensions for those slightly under the .08 limit. While I support legislation which makes Alberta roads safer, Madam Speaker, there are some questions as to whether or not the .05 limit for a 24-hour suspension will remove the truly dangerous drivers from the road.

We have to focus on and support education. Education is working slowly, but it is working. Society has become more responsible around drinking and driving. Statistics show that impaired driving is very drastic. Previous speakers mentioned the fact of where Alberta is ranked in Canada as well as comparing it with B.C. and Ontario. I think we have to look at how education is working. Our communities are working very hard with the public to inform and to educate, to bring out that drinking is not a responsible item to do if you're going to be driving.

I do know from raising children that you've always got to correct them as they're walking out the door, but I feel that from what I've been told by the last two of my children, there's always a designated driver. This is something that I'm really amazed by. It just happened to be that when I was growing up, liquor didn't give me a thrill such that I had to go out and drink liquor to have fun. I had fun anyway. I grew up in the country. I don't say that a lot of well-educated, well-established people that I know within the city or in the province did not have a good time by drinking.

I do look at a lot of the aspects around drinking, and I go back to the fact of education. You know, it was brought up by a couple of other members, one being the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, about the DARE program. The DARE program is a wonderful program, and if we could put money into education in this province, we should be putting it into that. As I mentioned the other day in an introduction, there was a Sergeant Ewatski . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, but under Standing Order 8(5)(a), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to close debate on Bill 210, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2000.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to close debate on second reading of Bill 210, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2000. I appreciate all the comments that I've heard from members in the House. I just want to make one thing clear. What this bill consists of is the fact that if you are pulled over and you currently blow yellow, the police officer has the right to tell you to park your car. What this bill is doing, the only change that this bill is currently making, is saying: you must park your car. That's the only difference. Between what is happening out there now and what this bill contains is one word, and it's "must" park your car. I'd like members to think about that in the rest of the debate, and I thank you for your time.

[Motion carried; Bill 210 read a second time]

3:50

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'd call the committee to order.

Bill 209
Employment Standards (Parental Leave)
Amendment Act, 2000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: I have no amendment at this stage. Should I continue speaking about the bill now?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Yes, you can go ahead, hon. member.

MR. CAO: Well, thank you, Madam Chairman. I would like to begin by saying that I'm very happy to see that Bill 209 has made it to this stage in the legislative process. It is very gratifying for me to know that so many of my colleagues share my deep concern for the welfare of Alberta children. I also would like to thank the many Albertans, interested parties, and stakeholders for their expression of support and their help in developing and drafting the bill.

Developing this legislation has been a long process for me. In one sense it began when I assisted the former minister of labour. As the chair of the Employment Standards Regulation Review Committee, I discovered that the minimum parenting leave in Alberta is the lowest in any jurisdiction in Canada, and I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Varsity, now the Minister of Gaming, for such an opportunity for me.

In another sense this issue has been with me for even longer than that. In my constituency work I have frequently encountered countless cases of hardworking parents who required parental leave beyond what the current rules allow; for example, one hardworking young family who had experienced the birth of their first child. Unfortunately, both the mother and the baby were not at all in good health, but the father could not take leave to care for them. Instead, he was forced to quit his job. However, having quit his job, he was not eligible for unemployment insurance benefits. I also learned of another case in which a new mother had to stay home longer than the current maternity leave period of 18 weeks. She, too, was forced to quit her job and lost all her seniority benefits with the company. I also know that there are many hardworking new parents who are in distress because of the demands at work and the natural family duties for their infants.

In the course of my work as an MLA, I have also had occasion to visit a number of child care facilities. I realize that the level of care offered in many of these facilities is superb, and I'm also aware that economic realities leave no other alternative for many parents. However, I believe that as a government we should do everything in our power to avoid the type of scene that I've witnessed too many times: very young infants, practically newborn, lying alone in cribs, missing out on the warm touch of a loving parent. This is how I came to see the importance of parental leave from such an entirely new perspective.

It is not easy at first to view the issue of parental leave from the perspective of the newborn or recently adopted child rather than that of the parents or the employers, but once you do consider the issue from the point of view of the child, it becomes easy to see why these changes to parental leave make sense.

I'm extremely happy that so many members of the Assembly were able to adopt a new perspective and give their support to Bill 209. I also know, Madam Chairman, that some of my colleagues have serious reservations about this legislation. Considering the matter from the perspective of the employer, they raised concern that Bill 209 would interfere with business operations and staff utilization. Specifically, it is feared that the provision allowing for 27 weeks of parental leave would increase staff costs and thereby decrease competitiveness. I would like to assure everyone that I have considered this aspect of the legislation very carefully, and there are a number of reasons that the proposed 27 weeks of parental leave would not place a significantly greater strain on the businesses than the current 18 weeks of maternity leave.

First, I would like to point out that regardless of whether the period is 27 weeks or the existing 18 weeks, the cost of recruiting and/or training a replacement worker would be exactly the same. Even if the leave period was as short as one week or as long as 52 weeks, the worker would still have to be found, hired, and trained at the same cost to the employer. These costs are already budgeted in the normal business planning process. Clearly, this aspect of Bill 209 would not cause further disruption.

It has also been argued that businesses would face a drastic loss of productivity if the leave period were extended to 27 weeks. However, statistics confirm that this is clearly not the case. As I mentioned in previous debate on this bill, there are over 1.5 million Albertans in the workforce and only 36,000 births and approximately 200 adoptions per year. Please bear in mind that not all births or adoptions are by out-of-house working parents. Even in the worst imaginable case for the employer, if all eligible parents took the maximum permitted amount of leave, which they don't have to do by law, then there would be a reduction in the labour availability, not productivity, of less than half of a percentage point, according to my calculations.

Surely, Madam Chairman, the vaunted Alberta advantage and the growing size of the Alberta economy could sustain such an unlikely small reduction in labour availability, especially if it is for such a worthy cause. From my experiences in managing staff in the corporate world, I strongly believe that the productivity gained by caring employers and less stressed and loyal staff will surpass such a small reduction.

Not only is this bill likely to impose only a minimum inconvenience to business operations, but it may also result in significant cost savings for government. It is estimated that for every dollar spent on quality parenting programs for children in the earliest stages of development, between $7 and $10 in social costs are saved by the time the child reaches the age of 19. In other words, when we say that Bill 209 is an investment in the future of our children, we mean it quite literally.

Now, Madam Chairman, in order to set the tone of today's debate in Committee of the Whole, I would like to share with you some other comments I received from stakeholders when this legislation was in the earliest stage of development. By referring back to these encouraging statements over the past couple of years, I have been able to remain firmly focused on and committed to the primary goal of this legislation. I hope that my colleagues will keep these sentiments in mind as they debate the finer points of Bill 209 today.

One person from the Developmental Disabilities Resource Centre of Calgary wrote: thank you for the long awaited change in this legislation. Another wrote to say: at last, someone is proposing positive change, and I wholeheartedly support your changes; parents should have the opportunity to be with their new child and promote family ties from birth onwards. Yet another woman wrote: as an approved adoptive parent awaiting placement of a child in my home, I strongly feel that increasing the parental leave to 27 weeks is a much needed, family-friendly change, and the additional weeks provide for such critical bonding time between parents and child; please accept this letter of wholehearted support.

I received far too many encouraging comments to share them all with you today, but I'll just read one more, if you'll permit. I received a letter from the director of the Calgary Family Day Home Agency, who wrote: as an agency which has worked closely with mothers of newborn children for over 15 years, we certainly support this bill; for the very best beginning of the children of parents who must work, we suggest that parental leave should be even longer.

The director also informed me of research that clearly showed that 80 percent of a child's brain is already developed by age three. The same research has proven that a child's sense of security, which is developed through appropriate physical and emotional bonding with the parents in the first few months, is a prerequisite for proper development and independence. In fact, close parental contact and interaction make a significant difference during the earliest months.

I could go on, Madam Chairman, but I think I have made my point. I urge my colleagues to keep the big picture of child and family development clearly in mind as they debate the specifics of the bill today. I look forward to hearing and perhaps responding to any concerns they may still have. Albertans are looking at us to walk the talk of people, prosperity, and preservation.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to speak to Bill 209. Because it's a private member's bill and the restrictions of time, this is the first opportunity that I've had.

I like the idea of increasing the unpaid maternity leave portion so that people have the option of staying home longer with their new child, whether it be an adopted child or a birth child. I'm glad that adoption is included. I know that not every member knows, but I am going to take just a little moment, if I may, to brag about why I'm so proud of the adoption part of this legislation. It's because just last month I became a mother-in-law. [interjections] Yeah, I know. Don't you feel sorry for my daughter-in-law?

My new daughter-in-law has a little boy who's four. Now, Jordan is my grandchild. I am very, very proud of that, and I would challenge anyone to question that part, because Jordan is part of our family, and that makes it pretty special for me. Hopefully, God willing, my son will be able to adopt him, because that's in the process too. So that's all important stuff. In fact, I have many nieces and nephews who are adopted, and that's been just such a gift to our extended family that I'm glad to see that adoption is included in this bill.

I also want to point out that I am glad the references have changed to include parental leave. I'm going to give men a few kudos for a minute, so I'm sure they'll all just perk right up and listen there. I must say that men of, I think, actually my generation, which should be a few people in here, are better nurturers than maybe their fathers were just because roles have changed in society.

Certainly I love my father, and I feel so fortunate to have him such a big part of my life. He brought home the paycheque, supported seven children and put them all through university and college and paid the dental bills. My mother ran our household, and God bless her for thriving through that. That was very much the '50s and '60s. However, I would say that in the '80s and '90s and into this new millennium men are doing more of a nurturing role, and that's why I think the leave for men that is addressed in this is very important. I have seen men take a year's sabbatical to stay at home and raise children or work part-time so they can help raise children. I think that's healthy for society, and I think it has to be, if we are going to have strong families, that men must take more of a role in raising children. So I support the change in those words to "parental leave" rather than just "maternity and adoption."

One of the things I was wondering about maybe the sponsor of the bill will have a chance to address for me. One of the things that I was looking at – I like to look at things of course from the mother's point of view and getting the extra time, et cetera, if you can afford it, because it's without pay, which of course eliminates quite a section of people who can't afford to just take time off. Right? Because they are without pay. In Alberta right now it's an employee's world. We're so fortunate here that I know employers who are just looking for people. The stores in the malls, especially at Christmastime, the Dairy Queens, the McDonalds, all kinds of restaurants are desperately short of employees. So I don't know. Have you talked to businesses about what this would mean to them and their reaction to it? I just would be interested to know if you have spoken to them and what has been the response from them.

Some of the sectional analysis that I'd like to take a moment to refer to – I had understood there might be amendments coming, but I hear today that there are not. So there are no amendments coming at all, as I understand it. Maybe the member would like to talk about what he was thinking, but it's decided: no more amendments. So I want to take a moment to speak about section 45, which only offers leave benefits to pregnant employees who have worked for an employer for "12 consecutive months." The requirement that the employee has worked for the employer for 12 consecutive months remains in place, but leave benefits would be open to all employees, and this would include birth and adoptive mothers and fathers. I'm wondering: would there be a restriction on the age of the child that you're adopting? Even if it's a 12-year-old child: is that a factor? That's my question to the sponsor.

The current allowance for unpaid maternity leave is a maximum of 12 weeks prior to the due date and a minimum of six weeks after the birth with an additional three weeks if a doctor gives a note. So right now, as I understand it, there are 21 weeks paid in a maternity leave or in a paternal leave, as it will be now. But this bill – I think it's under section 46 – will allow the birth mother to begin her leave up to 12 weeks before the expected due date, with a provision for a minimum of six weeks after the child's birth. Now, maybe I didn't read it closely enough, but maybe the sponsor can say: can the two parents split that leave, one of them take 10 weeks and the other one take another 10 weeks? Can it be worked out like that?

It's been a long time since I've had maternity benefits, you know, so I haven't really dealt with it very much right now. In fact, interestingly enough, I don't think it's mentioned in our members' services. Maybe that's a good thing, but it would be interesting. One never knows. History could be made in the Leg., hopefully just not by me in that way. I'm glad the chair got a chuckle out of that. [interjections] There are a couple of people there catching on to this. That's good.

So I just wanted to ask that of this sponsor, if he would mind clarifying that.

Presently if you're employed – in any industry at all? – you're allowed parental leave. Okay. So this would extend it but without pay and without affecting their jobs. So if I'm a trucker for a big firm, I could extend that leave, but without pay, and my job would not be in jeopardy. Is that correct?

You know what? I'm going to support that. I realize that without pay this may not affect very many people because a lot of people need to work or choose to work, and that I respect. I think I always worked part-time while my children were young. That was a choice we made, and for us it was the right choice. For some people it's not. I respect that every family is different, and how you make it work is the best for you. But not everyone has that choice of taking an extra unpaid leave, so I don't know how many this bill will help. I'm sure it will help some. In reality, when you go on maternity leave, you're not getting full pay; you're getting part pay as it is. Then to go on no pay for an extra – it would be another six weeks; correct? It's another six weeks, I believe, that this bill would provide for. It's nice, and I support it, but I think a lot of people can't afford it.

I don't know if we're ready to extend paid benefits, because I don't know if businesses can afford that. I also don't want to penalize people for having children. My goodness, if we don't have children in this province, we're in a lot of trouble, and I don't think there's anything more important than our children.

So maybe the sponsor could answer a few questions, and since we're in committee I may have a chance again, because I had a few other things, but I'm interested in that before I continue, if you don't mind, Madam Chairman.

Chairman's Ruling Opportunity for Debate

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Before I recognize another member, I would remind people that we are in committee and this does not restrict people to speaking once. People can speak more than once, so possibly after several speakers the sponsor of the bill might want to stand and answer some of the questions for the benefit of the debaters.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Debate Continued

MS EVANS: Thank you very much. I am very honoured to rise and speak in support of Bill 209 and to in fact endorse the 27 weeks of parental leave for either birth or adoptive parents. Clearly the legislation is of great importance because it affects so many Albertans having children or adopting children.

In 1988 adoptive parents were granted limited adoption leave with strict guidelines. They had to have been with the same employer for one year and adopted a child who was three or younger. They were only given eight weeks' leave from the date of custody, and only one parent was eligible for leave. In 1991 the MLA for Ponoka-Rimbey introduced a bill that would have proposed to change the code so that employees could take advantage of all parental leave under the federal unemployment insurance program. It would also have allowed fathers the opportunity to take parental leave. However, that bill died.

Once again in 1991 the minister of labour at the time petitioned the Justice minister to change the code as it applied to parental leave. The changes would have followed the points outlined by the MLA for Ponoka-Rimbey, but it was never carried out. At that time, as a parent, as a local decision-maker I clearly remember some of the debate centering around whether or not it was appropriate for government to interfere with what parents chose to do and to impose values either on employees or parents for the disposition of parental leave following either adoption or birth.

Parental advocacy groups, however, across North America have vigorously promoted early childhood involvement by both parents for several years. Their belief is a commonly accepted one: that when parents take an active role in their children's early development, they are socially adjusted. Clearly, too, during our discussions at the forum last October with Colleen Klein several people came forward and said several things, among them that early brain development, the early bonding of a child with one or both of its parents preferably, would in fact enhance that child's opportunity for growth and development and for their natural adjustment to the rigours of living.

Inequalities between birth mothers and adoptive parents exist today, but by giving adoptive parents the same access to leave, we recognize the important role that adoptive parents play and that an adopted child is equally important in Alberta. Anecdotal, a very amusing story from my past suggests that in fact adopted children, when told of their adoption, could take pride in the fact that they were chosen by the parents; they didn't just happen to come and have to be accepted.

When you compare other provinces to Alberta, the entitlements for maternity are similar, but clearly Alberta lags behind on parental leave because we have thus far failed to grant leave for fathers.

Ergo I am in support of this bill. I feel the benefits would positively affect both the parents and the children. Madam Chairman, I am confident that with support for the bill by the hon. Member of Calgary-Fort, we will elevate the importance of children in our society and in fact enhance and benefit children who heretofore would not have been recognized.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I'm pleased to stand to speak to Bill 209, Employment Standards (Parental Leave) Amendment Act, 2000. I support Bill 209 because I firmly believe that allowing a parent or both parents to spend just a little bit more time with their children can have a significant impact on the future of the child. In fact, it is one of those more important factors ensuring that the children grow up to be caring, responsible, and well-adjusted adults. As other people spoke of with their children, my children were fortunate enough that my wife did stay home for the first few years, and I do believe that our grandchildren now, with their mother staying home with them, will be well adjusted.

Children do need a longer period of time with parents, and if parental leaves are in line with the government's other intervention programs, that encourages mothers to spend more time with their newborns. Furthermore, there is currently an intensive volume of scientific evidence that suggests that children who have more direct contact with parents in their early months and years turn out to be better adjusted and healthier adults.

Now, as I'm looking at this, Madam Chairman, the objective of the bill is to increase the minimum number of weeks of unpaid parental leave available, create an option for . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Excuse me, hon. member. I would remind members that at the committee stage you are still supposed to be seated. Hon. Member for Redwater, at the committee stage we do allow some latitude, but standing is not one of them.

MR. BRODA: My apologies.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you. This bill increases the minimum number of weeks of unpaid parental leave available, creates an option for parental leave, and gives birth and adoptive parents access to the same leave options. We are watching that the federal government has brought in a change giving one year's maternity leave, but as we read the news, we're finding out that not all employers in the province will accept more than what was previously in our province. As an employee I can see some of those things. I do believe we should be expanding it by a few weeks. I think it's very, very important. I'll absolutely say I'm not in agreement totally with what the federal government is saying.

We also realize by listening to the presenter that the government will not be bringing any more amendments forward. I don't know if that's because the minister spoke out prior to him.

Also, listening to the presenter, he says that study after study shows that an early relationship between parents and children is one of the most critical factors in determining the future health and happiness and success of a child. Now, going back to this, currently a birth mother has access to 21 weeks of unpaid maternity leave. Maternity leave can begin up to 12 weeks prior to the expected delivery date and must be at least six weeks after the birth of the child. The six weeks' time frame can be reduced upon agreement between the employee and employer and with a note from the employee's doctor stating that this will not be detrimental to the mother's health. An additional three weeks of leave is available with a doctor's note. There is no legislative option for parental leave. This is an important issue, and if this is in the new legislation, then it's a very good step.

As we are going through some of these bills – and these are spring bills as well as the ones that are coming forward this fall – it's interesting and should be acknowledged that beneath the cloak of a private member's bill is something that is way overdue. In fact, our current maternity leave under the old Employment Standards Code of 1976 is 25 years old. Speaking in favour of the amendment, my rationale is that these amendments standardize the leave benefits available to all new parents, and options for paternity leave are created.

Similar legislation exists in other provinces, as we've heard from other members here: British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario, Prince Edward Island, and Newfoundland. Some of these amendments could have had clearer wording, and minor changes would serve to clarify but not change the intent of these amendments. I do commend the member for bringing this forward.

All references to “maternity leave and adoption benefits” are changed to “parental leave benefits.” The amendment to section 1(1) replaces the first reference to “maternity and adoption benefits” with “parental leave benefits.” The third amendment makes the wording change to the title of division 7 of the act.

I believe it is time that we moved along. Hopefully the presenter has a few different things that he can bring forward from some of the questions from us, but I do believe that we have to move forward with this particular bill. I don't think that employers will be affected by going one step at a time and bringing it forward.

Madam Chairman, at this time I take my leave.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Madam Chairman. It's my pleasure to stand before my colleagues and speak to private member's Bill 209. I'd like to commend the Member for Calgary-Fort for bringing forward this legislation.

The importance of investing in early childhood development has been demonstrated time and time again. This bill first and foremost is about giving infants the best possible start in life. Bill 209, the Employment Standards (Parental Leave) Amendment Act, responds to the need to provide more flexibility, options, and choices for parents by changing the Employment Standards Code to provide up to 27 weeks of parental leave benefits to be taken by either the birth parents or adoptive parents, by one parent or divided between both parents as they see fit.

There are significant benefits to extended parental leave, not only for children and parents but also for employers and the wider society. These advantages include better maternal and child health and well-being, increased time investment of parents in the early years, increased retention of female employees, decreased recruitment costs, and improved labour market status for women.

If we want the brightest future possible for our province, we must ensure that all our children have the best possible start in life. There's overwhelming evidence that success in the child's early years is the key to long-term healthy development. Nothing is more important than for parents to be able to spend the maximum amount of time with newborn children in the critical early months of a child's life. I say that from the perspective of one who has been a teacher all my life, having worked with children for many years, and also from the perspective of being a parent raising four of our own children and now, this year, as a new grandparent observing young grandchildren adjusting to a new life with a parent on leave from work.

One of the key provisions of Bill 209 is the creation of parental leave. Division 7 of the Employment Standards Code will no longer be entitled simply maternity leave. This may seem like a simple wording change, but I would like to speak in favour of this provision for a moment and explain its significance. The right to parental leave is recognized in a growing number of countries. Over 100 countries, including virtually all industrial nations, have enacted some form of parental leave policy, and, in general, parental leave entitlements are becoming longer.

In France there are 16 weeks of maternity benefits, 84 percent of basic daily wage for the first and second child, and 24 weeks for the third and subsequent children. They also have up to three years of unpaid parental leave, which includes job protection and can be combined with part-time employment or education and training.

In the Netherlands there are 16 weeks of maternity leave and full wage replacement, unpaid parental leave up to six months, and flexible employment conditions.

In the United Kingdom there are 18 weeks of statutory maternity leave at 90 percent of the previous wage for six weeks, 12 weeks at a flat rate, and 40 weeks of unpaid family leave.

When you look at the advantages of extended maternity and parental leaves, it's not hard to see why these countries are so committed to supporting their new families. Benefits for children and families include reducing household stress and fostering the nurturing of children by mothers and fathers, while simultaneously ensuring continuing economic support for these families. Long leaves of over 20 weeks are associated with better maternal health, as measured by mental health, vitality, and role function, whereas the reverse is true for short to moderate leaves of 12 to 20 weeks. Obviously, then, my colleague from Calgary-Fort was not out of line in establishing the parental leave threshold of 27 weeks.

An increase in maternity and parental leave supports healthy interactions between parents and their young infants and children. Longer parental leaves also allow both parents to share the work and caregiving responsibilities of parenthood. Significant time investments on the part of parents are associated with improved health for young children, and therefore parental leave can improve pediatric health. Such time investments may include breast-feeding, which is related to improved health through a decreased incidence or severity of many diseases and possibly enhanced cognitive development.

In an extensive study of nine European countries it was found that more generous parental leave rights reduced deaths of infants and young children substantially. Parental leaves may thus be a cost-effective method of bettering child health. I found this statistic particularly amazing: rights to a year of job-protected leave were found to be associated with approximately a 25 percent decline in postneonatal deaths, an 11 percent decrease in fatalities occurring between the first and fifth birthday. Those numbers cannot be ignored. Increased parental leaves also provide greater choice for parents regarding how and when to reintegrate into the workforce.

Parental leaves are not only good for children and their parents, but there are also benefits to employers. One is greater employee retention. Numerous studies in Canada and the U.S. and Japan have found that more women return to work after childbirth where parental leave systems are in place. The total length of available maternity leave exerts a strong deterrent effect on quitting the labour force or changing jobs, particularly for a second or subsequent birth. I believe it is clearly more cost-effective to develop a well-planned parental leave policy than to lose the worker concerned and have to replace him or her permanently.

However, we must ask ourselves whether Bill 209 gives employers enough tools to adequately anticipate their staffing needs. I know that as an employer I would find it extremely disruptive if one of my employees abruptly declared that they needed to take a leave or abruptly returned to work early. I've already discussed this issue with my colleague from Calgary-Fort, and I know he is working hard to address it.

Madam Chairman, no one is naive about the costs and concerns of extended parental leaves and benefits. While parental leave can disrupt an organization, especially in the case of small businesses or when it involves highly qualified workers, employers can also suffer heavy costs from the absence of formal arrangements for reconciling work and family life. Some employers, either on their own or through collective bargaining agreements, already offer workers options for longer or partial leaves, and some provide additional benefits to top up what is available from EI. Many of these employers recognize that such practices support productivity and aid recruitment and retention of valued workers, especially as competition for skilled workers increases.

Right now employers are experiencing massive amounts of change. Many have recognized the need for and advantages of more flexible work arrangements. Extending parental leave provisions and benefits is an important and positive step towards developing a comprehensive approach to children and families and promoting a healthy integration of work and family responsibilities. The last 35 years have witnessed profound changes in the nature of work, in women's and men's roles, and in the ways workplace and public policies affect the well-being of individuals, children, and families. We must attain government legislation, workplace practices, and community supports that work in concert to support a productive economy while also supporting the well-being of families and communities.

Given the importance of the early years for children's development and the benefits of providing extended parental leave, I applaud the private member for his desire to extend parental leave. This province must meet the challenge of modernizing social programs to address the changes we are facing in the 21st century. Adequate and appropriate maternity, parental, and other leaves need to be part of a comprehensive approach to support parents in looking after their family responsibilities. Family issues are not strictly private concerns. They need to be addressed in constructive ways by governments, employers, and also employees.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Madam Chairman. It's a pleasure today to rise in committee to address an important topic that affects the welfare and the development of Alberta's children. As both a parent and a community member the well-being of Alberta's children is always a matter of deep concern to me. I know my hon. colleague the Member for Calgary-Fort has their absolute best interests in mind in presenting this bill. It's obvious that if a child is afforded the opportunity to form a strong and loving relationship with one or both parents in the first few months of life, it can't help but have a positive effect on that child's life and on that child's future.

However, Madam Chairman, despite our common goal of raising happy, healthy children in the province of Alberta, the members of this Committee of the Whole may still debate whether the specific provisions of this bill represent the best way to achieve the goal. I would like to applaud the Member for Calgary-Fort for taking the initiative to bring the bill forward and have it debated. Suggestions on how we can improve the lives of Albertans are always welcome, but they need to be carefully examined and debated. Our proper role as legislators is to do our best to improve the quality of life for all Albertans, and in keeping with that goal we have to examine all legislation to ensure that what we pass in this Assembly is of true benefit to Albertans and does not represent excessive legislative intrusion into their lives.

Madam Chairman, you and I both know that this government has gone a long way to improve the quality of life of all Albertans. Our government does its best to use good, well-considered ideas to make Alberta's programs and services more efficient and more useful to Albertans, and these are exactly the things that this government is doing in the area of Children's Services, for example. The Ministry of Children's Services is constantly working with communities and individuals to bring even more effective services to children and families. In fact, the changes that have been implemented over the past several years in this province have made Alberta a leader in the country and indeed all of North America.

These changes have come from good ideas being put forward and debated, with only the best of those ideas being put into action. I know my hon. colleague from Calgary-Fort, who has proposed this bill, supports the search for these ideas. That's why he has brought this legislation forward, as part of that search and to initiate debate on how extending parental leave can further improve the quality of life for Albertans.

With that being said, I must also state that I do have some serious concerns about specific provisions within the bill and the consequences they may entail. I don't mean to suggest that this legislation wouldn't benefit the children of the province. I don't doubt for one second that some children in this province could benefit significantly from such an initiative. However, my potential concerns are for the overall well-being of women in the workforce and the economic well-being of all Albertans, including children.

My concern with the legislation, Madam Chairman, is for the strong economy of Alberta and how this bill might damage the Alberta advantage, that is so crucial to the prosperity of this province. I must again stress that my concern with this bill does not stem from a lack of commitment to the children and families of Alberta. As an MLA the health and welfare of the families and children of Alberta is of utmost importance to me. I'm simply pointing out some potential problems with this legislation so that my colleagues and I can make a fully informed decision on this important matter.

Specifically, Madam Chairman, I'm concerned with this bill because I suspect the legislation could damage small business in the province of Alberta. It seems clear that we need to assess and consider the full impact that Bill 209 could have on business, particularly small businesses in this province. Small business plays a very important role in maintaining our prosperous economy. Small business is a large employer in this province, and one could say – we've said it for years and years in this Assembly – that small business is the backbone of the Alberta economy. The impact of this legislation could be detrimental to small business, and we must be sensitive to the fact that many operations in this province don't have the resources to deal with the loss of an employee for an extended period of time.

It's a fact that 75 percent of small businesses in Alberta employ fewer than five people. For these businesses the presence of particular workers can be crucial to the success of their day-to-day operations. Like everyone in this Assembly, Madam Chairman, many of my constituents are small businesspeople, and I consider it an important part of my responsibility as an MLA to represent their interests and to help promote the growth of their businesses. Such businesses are vital to the Alberta economy.

In addition to causing staffing issues for many smaller operations, Bill 209 has possibilities of opening up a system for potential employee abuse. Madam Chairman, I'm aware that many companies operating in the province offer generous leave provisions to their workers. For instance, the Alberta Treasury Branch allows employees to take up to six months of maternity leave, with an option for an additional three months without pay. Because generous leave provisions such as this already exist for companies that can afford them, we need to explore the issue in greater depth before proceeding with any change that would affect all companies.

It seems to me, Madam Chairman, that some large companies already allow for extended maternity leaves because they can afford it. It's important to them because of the type of business they're in, and they're trying to attract highly qualified staff to their organization. Many large businesses find it worth while to provide such benefits and have already taken steps to do so. As MLAs we have to consider whether it's the role of the government to require small businesses to provide the same leave. As we all know, every business is different, and their staffing needs are determined by the type of business they're in.

Madam Chairman, Bill 209 also creates another problem. Many companies that find themselves temporarily needing to replace a staff member could find themselves burdened with additional payroll taxes, and the increased costs could seriously undermine job creation in this province.

This legislation also impacts women in the workplace. While large companies should be able to manage the flow of temporary replacement workers, hiring and training costs at small companies could quickly become unwieldy. As a result, protracted absences from work will continue to cause women to lose their places in the promotion queue. With constant turnover, women risk being denied employment until they are through having children. For similar reasons this bill could lead to an increase in hiring discrimination against women. I don't believe it's in the best interests of this province to add reasons for either overt or covert hiring discrimination.

One example of the possible impact of this legislation is the current situation in the province of Quebec. Madam Chairman, the province of Quebec is thought to have the most progressive and generous maternity/paternal leave provisions in this country. Quebec offers 18 weeks of maternity leave and up to 52 weeks of parental leave. In fact, Quebec was the first province to introduce maternity and parental leave provisions into its employment standards act. This is relevant to our debate because workplace discrimination towards women is a serious problem in that province. In Quebec one woman a day loses her job because she's pregnant or recently had a child, according to the Quebec Council on the Status of Women. The official complaints – 352 in 1999, 359 in 1998, and 374 in 1997 – are probably only the tip of the iceberg. We can well imagine that there are many more cases that are not being reported because many women feel they'll hurt their chances for future employment if they in fact complain.

Madam Chairman, the problem persists even though labour laws and human rights codes have provided tools for addressing discrimination. It is indeed unfortunate that this sort of discrimination exists despite Quebec labour laws, which are thought to be the strictest in the country. On paper a woman taking maternity leave must be guaranteed the same job or an equivalent post with no loss of salary, benefits, or status for at least one year after she returns to work. Furthermore, an employer is forbidden to fire or demote a woman within 20 weeks of her return from maternity leave. However, it is clear from the numbers that even strict legislation like this may not be the answer.

Madam Chairman, what needs to be addressed is the stereotype that once women start having children, they will stop working. While that may have been true in the '50s, the reality today is that nine out of 10 women return to work within one year of giving birth. It seems quite clear, given the statistics, that Quebec's legislation is not working. In fact, by attempting to grant longer leaves to mothers, it may have created another problem altogether.

The final problem with Bill 209, Madam Chairman, is that it fails to address certain types of workers. Due to a changing workplace a growing number of employees are on contract or working freelance. However, many of these Albertans will not benefit from this legislation. Not only are they ineligible for unemployment insurance benefits, but their contracts also tend to disappear during a maternity leave because there are a hundred others waiting to snap up available opportunities.

For these reasons I submit to my colleagues that legislating extended parental leave may not be the answer working parents need. If you'll forgive the digression, Madam Chairman, ultimately what we need to do is change the mentality of employers. Corporations have to realize they have social responsibilities, and when they hire a young woman, potential maternity leave has to be considered. I'm proud to say that many Alberta corporations have taken the lead on this and have already extended maternity leave over and above what is currently legislated.

Madam Chairman, as Alberta companies extend their responsibility for parental leave, increased competition in the labour force will pressure less progressive companies to get their act together on this issue. That's what I would like to see: market forces working to improve parental leave provisions in Alberta. It's possible that further government interference could prevent these natural market forces from occurring. In this province the reality is that if a company wants to hire young, dynamic, and competent workers, they have to recognize that many of these workers want families too.

Madam Chairman, companies are beginning to realize that it is of mutual benefit for employers to provide extended maternity leave. They're coming to see that it's not just a responsibility for them to create conditions favourable to women having children and to invest in family-friendly policies and practices, but it is actually to their benefit. We see many examples of this occurring already in Alberta. I feel that this legislation sends a wrong message to business and could prevent this evolution from occurring on its own.

I know, Madam Chairman, that all of my colleagues in this Assembly share a heartfelt concern for Alberta families. That I've pointed out some potential flaws in Bill 209 in no way diminishes that concern. I just think that we need to consider the entire picture before we make a major legislative change like this one.

Madam Chairman, in my riding of Calgary-North Hill most of the businesses are small businesses. I have chatted with them over the last couple of weeks when this bill, a private member's bill, came to our attention. Quite frankly, they're concerned about it. My feeling at this point in time is that I do need more time to do more consultation with those people in small business in my communities to make sure that this is the right thing for us to do.

Thank you, Madam Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Madam Chairman. Speaking to this piece of proposed legislation is a pleasure and long overdue. I'd like to thank the member opposite for bringing it to the attention of this Legislature and this city. It's unfortunate that it's coming so late in the sitting, but it will in this session certainly garner some interest and some debate. Regardless of the potential downsides pointed out by the speaker that went before this member, I do think it needs to be considered and certainly needs to be much more fully debated not just in the Legislature but out in the public too, particularly in those areas that he was most concerned about, the area of small business.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Parental leave has all those same arguments you hear about the potential for women in the workforce to be discriminated against. You hear all of the negatives. You hear those over and over again. What you don't hear enough of are the positives and an understanding of what fundamentally the parents' role is. Now, in days gone by it was the mother's responsibility to raise the children. That is not the case today. We understand the connection between early childhood bonding and the security and the social adjustment of those children. We understand a whole lot more of that, and the legislation has followed, followed way behind, mind you, but it is following.

This is just one more step. Alberta is way behind the times in recognition of the need for parental leave and the need for an overall framework not just to this piece of legislation that if and when passed would allow the extension of the leave but the whole recognition of a parent's responsibility and a government that lends an ear. Now, I'm talking about perhaps extension into areas of taxation and areas of suspension, promotions, all manner of areas that require some honing and an overall framework in order to bring children into the world and bring them into a loving and bonding relationship with one or both parents, preferably beyond just the parents but bonding with the grandparents in the early days too. There is absolutely no substitute for the bonding that occurs in those early days and the security that it passes along to the child.

Speaking in the broader sense of a society's investment, it's this member's view that there is no single more important investment in a society than in its children. We recognize that we the people of the province of Alberta invest a great deal in education from K to 12 and in postsecondary education, whether it be universities or a trade or any one of those areas, and we invest further in adult education. Yet when it comes to this fundamental area of getting a head start – getting that first step, getting the confidence in that little mind so that it is secure enough to venture forward, to break out of that secure position and expand the horizons, to look beyond just the need for a touch and feel secure that there is some support for that learning – that is so fundamental to the needs of a society that wishes to invest in itself.

I would think that this piece of legislation should pass with a breeze, should in fact be studied in society to say: look; here is an area where we really can make some contributions to society in the longer haul. We're talking 10, 20, 30 years when the investment will pay off. Moving from 12 weeks to 18 weeks may be the right number. This member certainly doesn't know, but it certainly needs some examination, and this piece of legislation is a very, very good start.

There are other areas of this particular bill that interest me: the nonsegregation of a parent, a parent being one or the other of the parents. It doesn't seem to discriminate as to male or female, partner or not, and I suspect that would cover same-sex parents perhaps. I know not. It doesn't seem to outline that. It may be in other legislation that this member is not aware of. Even if it is or it isn't, it matters little. The child is not looking for gender support at this level. This child is simply looking for some care and some attention and just the unequivocal devotion and the love of that parent. That appears to be the spirit of the legislation, and certainly this member would be very supportive of that.

The other area that it doesn't seem to discriminate against – and thank goodness for that – is the adopted child. An adopted child does have a little more difficult time later on. Particularly if there's a visual difference or a magnitude of difference between the birth parents and the adoptive parents and, therefore, with the look of the child, it does run into difficulty. But this child must know that he or she comes into the world loved, loved and cared for, and that is absolutely – absolutely – the most important. So to separate and segregate an adoptive parent from a birth parent would be an error, and I'm very happy and pleased to see that the member included an adoptive parent as equal to a birth parent. I'm not too sure that 12 weeks in advance of an adoption is required, but I do think it certainly requires that period thereafter.

I personally would extend that period well beyond the 18 weeks after a child comes into the world to make that bonding proper. Personally, it worked out exceedingly well. My children are now 17 and 19, both at the university across the river here. Their mother and I chose to go to the expense of having a stay-at-home parent. It was our choice to have my wife stay home, but the option was there to do that. She felt that she wanted to do that, and it worked out rather well for the first 15 years of their life. It seems to have stood them in very good stead in their life, in having a very even keel, recognizing their social responsibilities, and being very adaptive. They developed well.

I would think that giving that same head start to a child could be a little onerous to a society. I happened to be able to make enough money to support a family of four, and that's not the case in all instances. While I think it's certainly desirable, it's not necessary in a society. But if two parents are required to work, it would be nice if society could see its way clear to financing or in some way assisting a parent so a child could get that head start in the first three years of life, until such time as the child is willing to break out and to socialize in a larger community, even though it may be an hour or two at a kindergarten or a day care. That would maybe not be the perfect world, but it certainly would be heading in that direction.

I recognize that the provisions for parental leave in Canada are pretty well accepted now, save and except in Alberta. The proponent of the bill has said more than once that Alberta is lagging behind and it has the lowest level of parental leave. That is certainly not the kind of advantage one would like to think that an Alberta parent does receive from their government.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

Quite frankly, this piece of legislation is long overdue, and it deserves much more consideration than that which it will receive in this Legislature in that this Legislature may be coming to a close rather shortly and this particular item may die on the Order Paper. I would like to think that this House will support this legislation to the extent that it is clear to the government caucus and the opposition caucus from this kind of legislation, maybe not this particular draft but other drafts, that there should be some energy expended in this area, in speaking of the wellness of children, working on parental wellness at the very early stages as opposed to trying to do it at the other end, when you're dealing with crime and stabbings and the like. Get this base down pat and start working at that level and I would suspect that the outcome would be proven to be most beneficial to society in general and to some parents, to the parents in the next short while, most beneficial to them specifically.

Now, you've heard all the objections. We've heard them from time immemorial. It'll put small businesses in jeopardy of closure. It'll put women at a disadvantage in the workplace by reason of the employer discriminating against a potential mother. You've heard all of that, and yes, it may occur. It does not mean that the legislation should not work towards educating those people. There are societal pressures to say that that is not the way a good corporate citizen would act and react. It is not the way that a reasonable person would react and prove the negative elements and the naysayers of this piece of legislation to be true.

We heard earlier that these kinds of things should be left to market forces. Well, I lay before you that if everything was laid to rest in that wonderful marketplace, then we would not have any WCB, we would not have any minimum wage, we would not have a number of safeguards, of checks and balances, if you will, in a society that does actually care for those that do want early childhood education, particularly for that kernel, that start of a life.

I could go on at some great length, but I would like to again compliment the member opposite for bringing this piece of legislation forward and hope – hope – that he is going to be able to gather around him some like-minded souls in his caucus to push this legislation to the fore such that it will become a government bill and such that the government bill will then be able to examine the entire area of this parental leave. All of it is associated with bringing a child into a loving relationship with their parents and with the greater society.

With that, Madam Chairman, I will cede the floor to a member opposite. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. 5:00

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity this afternoon to speak to this private member's bill. It's not very often you have the opportunity in the Legislature to actually have such a strong influence on the future of society. This is a very strong piece of legislation that allows us to make a very clear statement about things that are important to us, namely our children.

Madam Chairman, I'm quite interested in the fact that this has been a very controversial piece of legislation relative to Alberta's position and where we are federally and the fact that the hon. member has looked at an opportunity not only to bring our legislation into a provincial model that we can showcase across this country but also the opportunity to take an important issue and give us the opportunity to discuss in our Legislature the value of children and the value of parenting.

Madam Chairman, a number of the issues that are raised in the legislation deal with the length of time leave is available. They talk about the opportunity for mothers and fathers, both birth parents and adoptive parents, to have the opportunity to be with their children. They also bring into fact that the workplace, which has an important impact on families, has also a role to play in this. I'm delighted with the fact that this legislation has engaged our employment opportunities and engaged our community to talk about what our values are.

We have some concerns, obviously, about what is the right amount of time. It means different things depending on where you're employed. We have the opportunity in this legislation – and I'm urging and encouraging my colleague for Calgary-Fort to continue his consultation with the community. The last thing we want is for people to feel uncomfortable with the impact to them.

We have some opportunities here, Madam Chairman, through this legislation to identify the crucial needs of bonding with children at the newborn stage and their parents but also to solidify the family unit. We also know that that's a very key factor in the health of our families. We also know that employers are going to be impacted by this legislation. We know we've got some conditions with the federal government coming into play at the beginning of January, so it's not as if the employment sector of our province isn't aware that there are changes that are coming, because this discussion paper has been out federally for quite some time.

So, Madam Chairman, I'm excited about the fact that my colleague has brought forward a very sound piece of legislation. It gives us an opportunity to share with our constituents, the business communities, our families, our social agencies, and our health community and talk about the impact of this legislation. I daresay over the next several months we'll have the opportunity to continue to discuss this. I think it's important that the member bringing forward this private member's bill have an opportunity to clarify some of the concerns that have been raised in the debate in committee this afternoon, so I'm not going to take too much time. I'm going to ask if he has an opportunity now to answer some of the questions that have been raised.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I really appreciate that it's been an afternoon of some interesting speeches, and I have enjoyed hearing the different sides and the Minister of Children's Services. I think the consensus is that we all support families. We all want to make the best possible environment for our children. If that means making a longer parental leave available to people, then I appreciate that. I'm not sure if all the employers have had a chance to peruse this bill. Probably most would support it, because if you have people who are pleased with their work and happy with their job and able to balance family and home and work, then you have happy employees.

I hope we have a further chance to debate this, but I would like to move that we now adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

MR. HAVELOCK: Madam Chairman, can I just go straight to adjournment until this evening? Is that appropriate?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: No. We have to now rise and report progress.

MR. HAVELOCK: All right. I move that we now rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

MR. RENNER: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on Bill 209.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur with the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:07 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, November 22, 2000 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 0/11/22
 [The Speaker in the chair]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Statement by the Speaker

Sub Judice Rule

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before starting second reading on Bill 29, Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2000, the chair would like to make a statement about the scope of debate for this particular bill and the sub judice rule. As members are aware, there was a challenge to the constitutionality of the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act last summer. The decision by the Provincial Court of Alberta was the subject of a judicial review application in the Court of Queen's Bench, which has been argued but has not been decided upon yet. The Minister of Justice and Attorney may wish to comment on the status of the case if the chair's understanding is not correct or accurate.

The rule about matters that are sub judice is found in our Standing Order 23(g), and that order states:

A member may be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that member . . .

- (g) refers to any matter pending in a court or before a judge for judicial determination
 - (i) of a criminal nature from the time charges have been laid until passing of sentence and from the date of the filing of a notice of appeal until the date of a decision by an appellate court, or
 - (ii) of a civil nature that has been set down for a trial or notice of motion filed, as in an injunction proceeding until judgment or from the date of filing a notice of appeal until judgment by an appellate court, where there is probability of prejudice to any party but where there is any doubt as to prejudice, the rule should be in favour of the debate.

This Standing Order was amended effective February 14, 1995, based on the 1993 report of the Select Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform, which was concurred in by the Assembly on November 8, 1993. Appendix A of that report states, "It is widely held that the rule does not apply to Bills, as the right of Parliament to legislate must not be limited."

There is broad support for this view. As Beauchesne's 6th edition states in paragraph 508(3), "The convention applies to motions, references in debates, questions and supplementary questions, but does not apply to bills." Furthermore, paragraph 510 states:

The Speaker has pointed out "that the House has never allowed the sub judice convention to stand in the way of its consideration of a matter vital to the public interest or to the effective operation of the House."

In the book edited by Marleau and Montpetit, House of Commons Procedure and Practice, the position of the Canadian House is put forward quite clearly at page 535.

The convention has been applied to motions, references in debates, questions and supplementary questions. It has also been applied consistently in criminal cases. However, the convention does not apply to bills, as the right of Parliament to legislate must not be limited. If the sub judice convention were to apply to bills, the whole legislative process could be stopped simply by the initiation of a writ or legal proceedings in one or other of the courts of Canada.

A point of order was raised on the subject of sub judice and a bill then before the Assembly on May 11, 1995. Speaker Schumacher ruled at pages 1740 and 1741 of Hansard for that day in favour of the bill proceeding. He relied on the principle that the sub judice rule cannot prevent consideration of a bill.

As the chair indicated, the matter involving the constitutionality of the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act has been argued before the Court of Queen's Bench, but there is no decision. In considering the question of prejudice, the chair notes that the 1977 Special Committee of the Canadian House of Commons on the Rights and Immunities of Members found at page 727 of the Journals for April 29, 1977, that it is very unlikely that a judge would be influenced by what is said in the House. Presumably the convention is concerned with the protection of juries and witnesses from undue influence.

To summarize, the sub judice rule is a self-imposed limit on the freedom of speech which Assemblies have adopted out of respect for the judicial branch of our system of government and for the rights of litigants. However, the authorities reviewed by the chair make it very, very clear that the rule is not meant to restrict the ability of Assemblies to proceed with their vital duty of considering legislation and making law.

In this case and after reviewing numerous authorities, the chair must rule in favour of freedom of speech and against the application of the sub judice rule, not out of any disrespect for the judicial branch but in support of the fundamental principle that the Assembly must be able to legislate. Application of the sub judice rule would in the chair's view unduly restrict members in considering Bill 29.

The chair would like to remind members that the other rules of debate such as relevance, the restrictions on unparliamentary language, and the other rules of decorum and order apply. The chair would specifically remind members that it is inappropriate to criticize or impute motives to a specific judge. The chair would refer members to paragraphs 493 of Beauchesne's on this point.

Bill 29

Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2000

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am extremely pleased to sponsor these amendments to the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act. This important legislation has made a positive impact upon the lives of many sexually exploited children. With these amendments we will be increasing the act's effectiveness and our ability to provide these children with support and assistance. These amendments have two purposes: to enable children to obtain additional care and to protect their rights.

At a recent meeting with police, social workers, and service providers they made a number of recommendations. They suggested several changes that would enable them to provide additional care to these sexually exploited children.

In keeping with these recommendations, the amendments propose extending the initial confinement period from 72 hours to a maximum of five days. Social workers tell us that a child often spends the entire 72 hours recovering from life on the street, usually sleeping and usually recuperating. Sometimes the child is in an alcohol- or drug-induced state. There is often little time to work with the child before he or she is released. It is also insufficient time to properly assess the child's needs. These needs could include social/psychological assessments, medical exams, drug testing, and suicide risk assessment. This amendment would provide social workers with the critical time.

Confining a child at risk for a slightly longer time period has been tried elsewhere. For example, in Ontario a child in need of protection can be detained up to five days without a court order. Ontario law has been upheld by the Supreme Court. This amendment gives a director the discretion to decide how long a child needs to be confined, up to a maximum of five days.

The amendment is also proposing allowing a protection of children involved in prostitution director to apply to a court for a maximum of two additional confinement periods of up to 21 days each. This additional time will enable social workers to stabilize the child, help the child break the cycle of abuse, and begin the recovery process in a safe and secure environment. Additional confinement could be requested when the child's situation involves significant long-term involvement in prostitution and a number of other risk factors, such as possible involvement with a pimp, drug or alcohol abuse, or illness.

Breaking free of prostitution is extremely difficult. It takes time, perseverance, and a lot of continued struggles. The need to apprehend youth more than once is a clear indication of that difficulty. Spending more time with them will provide them with additional encouragement and additional support.

As well, this additional time allows the child to attend a drug or alcohol addiction treatment program. Many children involved in prostitution are also dealing with substance abuse issues. A residential program of at least three-weeks' duration will provide an opportunity to offer sexually exploited youth programs to assist them in exiting prostitution. Again, another time when time is critical.

Other proposed changes to the act ensure that the children's rights are protected. As soon as the child is confined, that child will be informed in writing as to why he or she is confined, the duration of the confinement, court dates, and the right to legal representation. Providing written notice of their legal rights complies with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The child will also be given opportunity to contact legal aid. In addition, each child will be told he or she may request a court review of the confinement.

A review of an initial confinement of up to five days must be heard within one day of that child's request or, if the court is closed, at its earliest possible sitting. If the child is confined for up to 21 days or for a renewal of the 21 days, the review must be heard within five days of the request. Five days' notice is given to allow both parties, but especially the director, to gather evidence and to prepare their case. Policy will state that a director will provide the child with the request-for-review form and help the child complete the form if requested.

The amendments also provide for adjournments. An adjournment may be requested by a director or a child when a child requests a review of their confinement or for a show cause hearing. This step may be required if the child needs time to contact a lawyer, for example. This adjournment when a child is initially confined for up to five days will not be more than two days unless a longer adjournment is agreed to by both the director and the child.

These amendments also allow an adjournment when a further confinement of up to 21 days is requested. This adjournment may not be longer than seven days unless the court rules that a longer adjournment is necessary. An adjournment may be needed if the child or the director needs more time to prepare for the hearing, the child needs more time to contact a lawyer, or a court time cannot be scheduled, for instance.

As well, a number of procedural safeguards have been added to the act to accommodate these more complex legal processes. A child, a guardian, or a director may appeal a court order for a further confinement or a refusal to grant a further confinement order of up to 21 days. This appeal may be made to the Court of Queen's Bench.

As well, a court may prohibit the publication of court proceedings that identify a child or a child's guardian to ensure the child's protection and confidentiality. The court may exclude a child from testifying if the evidence could seriously injure that child. It may also exclude the public from the courtroom to maintain the proper administration of justice.

It is important to note that these amendments do not affect our request for or the need to conduct a judicial review. As I mentioned earlier, a Provincial Court ruling found the act to be unconstitutional. The judicial review will further examine the Provincial Court ruling and establish the legislation's constitutionality. If a decision is provided when these amendments are being considered, we will quickly determine the decision's impact and proceed accordingly.

We feel this is an appropriate time to make changes. We see opportunities to improve upon this legislation and expand the help we provide through it. The law's development, inception, and implementation was made possible through a concerted community effort, including the community, police, service agencies, aboriginal groups, children involved in prostitution, parents who have had children involved in prostitution, and many, many others. Together we shaped and we implemented this visionary legislation.

Now, again, because of the impetus from the community, changes are now being brought forward. The law has enabled us to help many children at risk. The police, social workers, and service providers today also tell us that it is working well. They've also told us we can do more. These amendments enable us to do just that.

I believe these vulnerable young people need all available means of support and assistance. Strengthening this act is one way in which we can provide that help. I look forward to enabling the police, the social workers, the service providers, the children, and the parents to provide greater help and help them rebuild their lives. I believe we must do whatever is required to help the children in Alberta to break free from this exploitation.

Protecting children involved in prostitution is a subject of great importance to me. It is a matter that has touched me personally through my involvement in the community and has compelled me to find effective ways to help these children. It began when I met the parent of a child involved in prostitution, which led to the introduction of the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act in 1999.

A number of years ago, Mr. Speaker, I joined a parent support group. Through this group I met a mom whose child was involved in prostitution. I was appalled that a child from a stable, loving home in a good community could be lured into prostitution. I went on police rides in Calgary, saw Popcorn Alley, spoke to several children and adults involved in prostitution, and I even spoke to the johns and the pimps. I learned about the ugliness that occurs there. I felt that there must be something I could do to prevent this from happening to other children. I believe that these changes will help us to improve the support we provide to these children and will help us to take further steps towards addressing the sexual exploitation and abuse of our children through prostitution.

Mr. Speaker, I have received many calls and letters of support on this issue, two that clearly stand out in my mind. One was from a young woman who is currently on the streets. She called me and told me that if this legislation would have been there when she first started at the age of 14, she would not still be on the street at 23. She said the kids on the street like it, and also the girls do, and they feel it is the right way to go.

The second, Mr. Speaker, entails a young girl who I got personally involved with a year ago August. We rescued this young girl. I guess we can call her any name we want. We got her off the streets, got her into a safe house. I recently attended her graduation from a drug and alcohol program. There were probably 350 people in that hall listening to this young girl tell us about her involvement in prostitution. But I think one thing that stood out in people's minds was a poem that she had dedicated "to all [those] who have helped me." I would like to read it, if I could. She says:

I have met angels that have saved my life.

I have met angels that were once black are now white.

I have met angels from the pit of hell,

Who now stand beside me sober and well.

These angels are beautiful and bright.

They have given me the wings that have helped me in my flight.

I urge all the members of the Assembly to support these amendments. These amendments strengthen our ability to help kids exit prostitution while at the same time protect their legal rights.

Our focus and commitment as a government has always been on doing everything we can to help children involved in prostitution and help them put their lives back together and offer them all the support we can to achieve this goal. With your support we can work together to stop this abuse of our children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I'm pleased to be able to participate in debate on Bill 29. The bill was introduced yesterday for first reading, and now we are embarking on debate at second reading. We have sent copies of the bill out to a number of agencies, frontline workers, people involved in dealing with teen prostitution to solicit their feedback. Obviously, we're in the early stage, and I expect we will hear a lot more from people directly interested in the bill.

I might start off by saying that my inclination is to support this bill at second reading. I have a number of reasons why my recommendation to my caucus colleagues will be to support the bill, but there's much to be said in terms of what's in the bill and in some cases what's missing from the bill.

I was fascinated with the news release that was issued yesterday, November 21. The headline proclaims: "Government to amend law protecting children involved in prostitution." I had the opportunity of attending the news conference that was conducted by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Children's Services, and I was disappointed that the news release, in my respectful view, was less than honest. It talked about a need for legislative change based on, quote, feedback from frontline workers. There is no question that there was feedback from frontline workers, but what the news release made no reference to is the real reason we're here today. It's because of the decision of a Calgary family and youth court judge, Karen Jordan. The decision that was rendered by Judge Karen Jordan and reasons for judgment are dated July 28, 2000. I've tabled that. I tabled that yesterday, Mr. Speaker, in the Legislative Assembly, so it's a sessional record. Members are able to access that, and I encourage them to take a look at that judgment from our family and youth court judge.

The facts of the case are really pretty straightforward. What we had were two 17-year-old females who were apprehended by Calgary police on September 13, 1999. They were taken to a protective safe house and confined there for two days. The girls applied for a ruling that the bill we are about to amend with the current bill is in violation of sections 7, 8, 9, and 10 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Judge Jordan found a couple of things. Firstly, she found that the act was intra vires; in other words, it was within the legislative competence of the province of Alberta to enact. She found that the act violated section 7 of the Charter because children who were detained were denied the opportunity to answer the allegations. She found that the act did not violate section 7 because children were subject to an assessment. She noted that in cases of children in these circumstances there was no right to what we might describe as pretrial silence.

Number 4, she found that the act does violate section 8 because warrantless searches, searches without the benefit of a warrant obtained through appearing in front of a judicial official, were not subject to any kind of judicial scrutiny. She found, fifthly, that the act does violate section 9 of the Charter because there's no judicial scrutiny of apprehension. Number 6, she found that the act does not violate section 10(b) because there's no right to counsel and said that there is not a constitutional right that these children would have to counsel. She said the act does not violate section 10(c) because there's no access to habeas corpus. Then she found that violations can't be saved by section 1 of the Charter.

This brings up one of the most interesting things I've found. If you look through this very thoughtful decision of Judge Jordan, you know what was interesting? Most members I think appreciate that under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms there is what's called the saving provision, section 1, which sets limits as may be reasonable and "demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society." And one of the things, Mr. Speaker, I found myself asking when I read through the judgment was: why would it be that the province of Alberta, which litigated this case, chose not to submit any evidence on section 1 of the Charter?

There was no argument advanced by the province of Alberta that argued that there's a compelling societal interest, that there's a compelling interest in the safety of children that ought to override the specific Charter provisions. It was open and available to the province. If they believed that this legislation does all of the wonderful things that they contend, why did the Justice officials involved not make that argument? Why was it not raised? Why was there no evidence led? It's a puzzle to me, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that before the end of the debate we're going to get an explanation for that, because it's curious indeed for the Crown to be silent on that.

There are some key elements in that judgment. I have to say in the strongest possible language my discomfort when I heard the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek responding to Judge Jordan's decision. Her comments about the Charter displayed . . .

MRS. FORSYTH: I apologized for that.

MR. DICKSON: Well, I never heard the apology in this House, and I don't know whether the apology was extended to the judge.

Nobody else deals more directly with the problems that exist on the streets of our community than family and youth court judges.

The second thing I want to say is that the value of the Charter, Mr. Speaker, sometimes get lost, but that Charter is the only thing that protects the rights of individual citizens from governments that get carried away with interfering with those basic rights. When we see a lack of appreciation of the importance of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, I think that's a matter that warrants considerable concern and a great deal of attention.

The other thing I wanted to say was that there was no mention in the news release of a very peculiar strategy followed by the Crown, by the government. They had available to them the suggestion by the Leader of the Official Opposition that we could reconvene the Legislature in late August or September, and we could deal immediately with building in some of the procedural safeguards that Judge Jordan found were missing from the act.

What happened was that the province said: "Well, no. What we're going to do is we're not going to appeal it," presumably because they felt they would not be successful on an appeal. What they chose to do is a very odd and rarely used recourse. It's a judicial review application. That's being argued in front of Justice Rooke of the Court of Queen's Bench, and we await his judgment at this time. But it strikes me that the government is really trying to ride two horses at the same time. I mean, why wouldn't we just come back in and fix the flaws in the existing statute? Why is the province going and incurring the expense of this judicial review application? What may well happen is that we may see a decision from Justice Rooke that requires other changes to the legislation, so then we end up sort of fiddling with this thing again.

I think what we want is certainty. I think what frontline workers want is to know the rules under which they can apprehend and detain children at risk. What the government has done is they have in fact imported a great deal of additional uncertainty into this matter.

The other thing missing from the government news release the other day – and I thought this was interesting – was that there's no mention of what's been done in British Columbia. British Columbia has adopted an act called the Secure Care Act. I heard the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek talking the other day about Bill 6 in Ontario, but that's a private member's bill. In British Columbia they've actually brought in an act, and there are some things that I think are meritorious in that British Columbia act. It deals not just with teen prostitution; it also deals with drug abuse, which arguably affects far more young people in this province than those who are prostituting themselves on the streets of our province.

What the B.C. model does – it's a more holistic, more comprehensive plan in terms of how you deal with and protect children at risk. There are some similar provisions, but it's much broader, and I'm going to commend to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and to the government and to the Justice minister that they look more closely at the B.C. model because I think there's much to recommend it.

In looking at the bill, one of the things I did was attempt to compare it with the UN convention on the rights of the child. Members will recall that not so long ago, largely as a result of the work undertaken by the Member for Calgary-McCall, this province, quite silently and very late to the game, said that they would confirm and endorse the UN convention on the rights of the child. That means that we should be able to test Alberta legislation against that.

There are a couple of changes I'm going to propose by way of amendment to the bill. What Judge Jordan was concerned about is that when children are apprehended, in every case they are not brought in front of a judge. We know that because it's a human system, sometimes errors happen. You may have a young person picked up who in fact was not involved in street prostitution, and to the extent to which this person can be basically detained against her will, there are some concerns around that. Judge Jordan was concerned that a judge wouldn't be involved in reviewing every one of those cases. The government, on the other hand, in this amendment package has said: well, we're going to give some information. Presumably it would be a poster on the wall saying: here's the legal aid number. Or maybe they'll be given a slip of paper saying: if you want legal advice, this is who you can call. My proposal would be this: that we have a duty counsel system in the province. What that means is that anywhere in Alberta there are lawyers who are available to assist people and provide summary legal advice. In fact, if you go into one of the big criminal courtrooms in Calgary or Edmonton any day of the week, you will find there's a duty counsel available. So when somebody shows up without a lawyer and is about to plead guilty or whatever in a system or forum they're not comfortable or familiar with, there's somebody who can give them some summary advice and perhaps give them some advice in terms of what they should do in court and can help give them some information in terms of how they can get legal representation.

My recommendation, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Children's Services and the Minister of Justice and the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek is: why wouldn't we ensure that we have a lawyer available in Lethbridge and one in Peace River and maybe a couple in Calgary and Edmonton who would be designated duty counsel so that when a child is apprehended under this act, they would be able to meet at least within 24 hours with somebody who would give them some legal advice? That is a compromise position, which means they wouldn't have to appear in front of a judge in every single case, but it would ensure that those children who choose not to avail themselves of the opportunity to go in front of a judge at least receive some legal advice. I think it's something that the government ought to look at. They're familiar with the duty counsel system. It works. It works well. I think it provides a measure of protection.

Is it not strange, members – I just ask the question. The reason we have the statute is because we say there are children on the streets of our communities that aren't able to exercise good judgment to protect themselves. Isn't that the whole raison d'être for the bill we're dealing with? Yet under this bill and this amendment package we then say: well, these children have the wherewithal and the maturity and the kinds of judgment to decide in what cases they should go to court and to decide in what cases they should seek out legal advice. The reality is that most of these girls that have been apprehended so far spend the first two days sleeping. They often come in either in a state of intoxication or having consumed some illicit drug. Not in every case, but this is a common circumstance. For this bill to simply say, "We leave it to the children. Here's a poster on the wall if you want to phone a lawyer. There's the phone number if you want to find out about your legal rights" – I don't think that's good enough, Mr. Speaker. So that proposal I think is one that has merit.

The second one would be this. When there was an analysis done of all Alberta legislation to determine whether it measured up to the UN convention on the rights of the child – it was done by the Alberta Civil Liberties Research Centre – on page 13 of their report, in talking about the Child Welfare Act, they say that this represents one of the high points in terms of legislative compliance.

Though the CWA is certainly not without flaws, it is in strong compliance with the Convention . . .

I say parenthetically that that's the UN convention on the rights of the child.

. . . in several key respects. Most notably, the Act establishes an advocacy program for children in care, the Office of the Children's Advocate, which should be emulated in other legislative and service provision contexts, e.g., the young offenders system.

So why would we not require, members, in the annual report that's done by the Children's Advocate that we specifically charge the Children's Advocate with the responsibility to review the operation of this legislation? It just provides one other measure of oversight to ensure that the act continues to work the way we as legislators hope it will work.

Now, what I want to do is go back and point out some of the issues that Judge Jordan had identified. Before I do that, I'd just suggest that anybody who's interested in the area look at this report on UN compliance, How Does Alberta's Legislation Measure Up? You can look at articles that are impacted by the legislation. Those would be articles 3, 25, 37, which all are things that we've agreed to as a province, so presumably that means we've got to make sure our legislation measures up. There are some areas that I'm not sure do measure up.

If I can just quickly touch on some of the things that Judge Jordan had raised. I quote from page 6.

The Act, not unlike the tobacco control legislation, is far from perfect. It merely locks children up for a few days so that social workers and child care workers can attempt to gather some information about them, information which will hopefully enable the families, child care and mental health professionals to help these girls avoid or escape this sad, deplorable, dangerous lifestyle. The time frame for such an assessment is short and may be inadequate.

Mr. Speaker, Sharon Heron, the director's witness in that case before Judge Jordan, was frank that the girls, having been apprehended, spend a long time sleeping. This is presumably a response to the deleterious effects of their lifestyle; having been given the opportunity to sleep, their bodies demand it. These lengthy periods of sleep obviously reduce the amount of time available for any assessment to be carried out.

The judge goes on to say that there is a narrowness to the bill. When we contrast it with the B.C. Secure Care Act, what we find in British Columbia is that there's a much bigger focus in terms of providing a whole range of supports and programs. One of the things we're going to have to figure out with this bill is that now that we're going to have a longer period of possible detention, that's going to mean substantially more money is going to be required for the frontline agencies. I didn't hear the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek address this in her comments. Perhaps she did. There's going to have to be substantially more money available to ensure that those services are provided.

MRS. FORSYTH: You were at the press conference.

MR. DICKSON: Well, I attended the press conference, but most members in this Assembly didn't have that opportunity.

MRS. FORSYTH: Then you know the answers.

MR. DICKSON: Well, I didn't get a lot of specific answers.

I'm hopeful that the Minister of Children's Services will stand in second reading while we're debating this and particularize the kind of additional resources that are going to be available, because ultimately that's what's key to making this bill work.

I say again that I'm prepared to recommend to my colleagues that we support the bill, but we're going to bring forward amendments that we think recognize the fundamental concerns. Really what Judge Jordan said was that there was no problem with the purpose of the bill, except there had to be procedural safeguards.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Tempting as it is to launch into some, perhaps, remarks that would challenge the worthy opposition member, who has given us much to think about, I will first address some of the prepared remarks relative to the bill and then in my concluding period follow up with some remarks briefly to address some of the concerns he raises.

First of all, I'd like to give you true stories about child prostitution, stories that have been related by the people that were introduced in this Legislative Assembly yesterday and stories that I think will underscore the importance of child protection through the enhanced and stronger Bill 29, that will improve and in fact give even additional tools to protect children involved in prostitution.

Around 11:15 Monday night of this week two Edmonton city police officers were driving around 118 Avenue and 88 Street and noticed a car pull up to the sidewalk and two young girls get in. They weren't sure if they'd been waiting for a ride or working the streets but after following the car for a while pulled up beside them and examined the situation. It was a john/prostitute scenario. After pulling over the car, it was determined that the driver was a 26-year-old man and that the girls were 14 and 15 years of age. The girls had been offered $150 for sex, and luckily the police officers stopped anything from happening before it was too late.

Earlier in the evening, at around 10:30, a mother had called the crisis unit to report that her 15-year-old daughter had been gone for about a week and that a school counselor had informed her she was missing from school. The counselor explained she was worried that her daughter's behaviour could involve prostitution. She was really concerned. The mother was told she had a couple of options: a support agreement under the Child Welfare Act or the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act. After hearing the options, the mother thought the PCHIP was a better fit and requested that a worker call her to discuss this potential help and services available. Ironically, less than an hour after the mother had called, the police walked into the crisis unit with the mother's daughter and a 14-year-old girl, who also happened to be the mother of a three-month-old baby. The local child and family services authority is looking after the situation involving those two girls.

This scenario paints a true picture of the PCHIP legislation. A mother heard the various options to help her daughter and chose PCHIP as the best route for help. Secondly, PCHIP is there to apprehend children involved in prostitution and to help these children deal with the challenges they have in their lives and to end this horrible lifestyle and regain normal youth activities.

Over the past year and a half of implementation of the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, community stakeholders and staff from various government ministries have identified a need for longer term holistic treatment that better addresses the specific needs of children involved in prostitution. Hereby goes one of my comments that I would make relative to the suggestion of the hon. member that we could have reconvened in August to quickly put in place procedural safeguards to address Judge Jordan's concerns. Mr. Speaker, that would have been impractical, given that we have taken some period of time not only to review legislation across Canada but to review the workers' attitudes and findings themselves.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, in the interval between Judge Jordan's ruling and the tabling of PCHIP, we have had two decisions from the Supreme Court in the matter of apprehension of children, one in Manitoba and one in Ontario, which further have underscored the right of the social worker to apprehend children and the right for child protection to be maintained. The five-day period, for example, comes from the Ontario ruling.

So we're quite confident that in the interval we've not only been able to gather information that's been valuable for the amendments that are proposed, but we have responsibly reviewed the track record of PCHIP in the first year and some months and been able to do two things: strengthen the act and address the concerns by Judge Jordan.

At a forum held with the MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek and the Minister of Justice last summer, the need for longer term treatment for sexually exploited youth was reiterated by the community stakeholders. Recommendations indicated that programming must continue to ensure protection of sexually exploited children.

Relative to treatment related to addictions, Mr. Speaker, most of the three-week programs that are available from AADAC could be put in place pending the needs of the child. Dollars obviously are a part of those resources, but other reassignments of existing resources are possible within the treatment options that could be available, given the possible and hopeful proclamation of this bill in the near future.

The amendments are designed to provide strength. The legislation's framework will be maintained, and the act is solid and generally, Mr. Speaker, is working very well. With it we have effectively provided support to many sexually exploited and abused Alberta children. The amendments will simply complement the legislation's existing provisions and enhance its effectiveness.

We can only begin to understand the needs of young people by listening to their stories and thus providing better support for them and their families. This is where, in speaking to intake workers, the outreach Street Teams, and listening to the lawyers and other stakeholders that have come forward, perhaps the following two stories indicate what we most frequently find.

Kari was a shy and quiet 15 year old. During the course of the school year a group of grade 12 boys began to taunt her and laughed at her when she walked by, calling her ugly and leaving her alone. One guy in the group, Jason, began to stand up for her and tell the guys to leave her alone and began to pay more attention to her. During this time Kari's parents noticed changes in her behaviour. She seemed withdrawn and unhappy at times. Concerns escalated when the school counselor called Kari's parents with the news that he had noticed that Kari had been making superficial scratches on her wrists. The counselor began to meet with Kari but could not pinpoint the cause of her behaviour. Kari began to be sexually active with Jason. As the summer holidays approached, Jason began telling Kari that he had ideas of how they could make a lot of money over the summer. Soon he asked her if she would work as a prostitute. She was shocked and refused. He kept asking and became much more persistent.

One day when Kari was with Jason and his friends, the ones that used to make fun of her, he announced that today was the day she would make some money. When she refused, he threatened to kill her and her family. He set up a date for her. Fortunately, when the police learned of the situation and intervened before harm could come to Kari, charges were laid against Jason. PCHIP voluntary services became involved as a result of a referral from the vice unit, and a PCHIP worker now supports Kari as she sees a therapist twice weekly. She and her family have traveled a long road to recovery and are still dealing with pain and scars, but Jason has been charged and sentence is pending. Kari is doing relatively well and has not been involved in prostitution.

Brenda had been involved with child welfare for over a decade as a result of the family's inability to protect their children due to alcohol addiction. She still loves her family and, despite being placed in care a number of times, typically runs away from placement and returns home. Brenda runs to the streets when things are not going well at home and has become connected to a group of young people who use drugs and alcohol. At the age of 12 she became involved in prostitution, using crack cocaine, injecting heroin, and had been connected to a pimp that she called her boyfriend by the time she was 13.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on, but the most intriguing thing for me is the people who have spoken to me saying: aren't you concerned about children's rights? Of course I am, and that is embodied in the legislation that we have brought forward. But could you really imagine saying to a policeman: of course if my daughter exercises her rights, you should leave her with that john, that pimp, that person that is personally violating and sexually abusing her. Would you prefer that to having her brought home?

Mr. Speaker, when we have an opportunity for the extension of the drug treatment program under this legislation, access to drug and alcohol treatment programs will be available, a response tailored to the social needs, and early childhood specialists and others that can help these children regenerate and rejuvenate their lives. Education and job training will be immediately available and, most of all, housing in a safe place to provide them an opportunity to review their current dependence and set a stage for a new type of independence.

The protection of our children is the pertinent issue in this legislation. That was recognized by Judge Jordan. Action in the area of child prostitution needs to be dealt with on three fronts: prevention, early intervention, and treatment. We must realize that breaking free of prostitution is extremely difficult. It takes time and perseverance, time that is built into this legislation and perseverance by workers that know the course of treatment necessary. There are constant struggles, yet this cycle of abuse must end.

We will continue to encourage the end of the child's involvement with prostitution and will never give up on a child at risk. Additional time spent in a caring environment allows the child to attend a drug or alcohol addiction program. It's been found that residential programs of at least three weeks have a solid success rate.

An article in yesterday's Edmonton Journal noted that Vancouver is becoming a destination for sex tourists who prey on children. The Progress of Canada's Children Into the Millennium, '99-2000, says that the child sex trade exists everywhere in Canada, from large cities to remote logging camps. Mr. Speaker, it would be comfortable to say that it only exists in inner cities, but I would suggest that that's simply the geography where child prostitution occurs. The children that are involved come from all over Alberta and come from other places as well.

We cannot allow children to be involved in prostitution. On the 10th anniversary of National Child Day, November 20, the International Committee to End Child Prostitution explained that we have to do more to end the world's sex trade. Clearly this legislation and the support provided are needed more than ever. This concern is reinforced by youth who have been apprehended under the act. They say that we must emphasize to youth that other choices are available to them. We are at a time in our history where children have many choices but fewer people to really listen to them. There are people in our communities who are willing to take the time and help them overcome obstacles.

So what are our achievements to date? Our government is dedicated to helping sexually exploited children. The children are victims, and within our means we have taken many off the streets. In fact, since the Provincial Court ruling, 23 children have been apprehended using either the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act or our new policy directives in the Child Welfare Act. Since the act's inception in February 1999, 427 apprehensions have occurred involving 194 youth, 82 of which have been apprehended more than once, reaffirming our commitment to never give up on one single child. The ages of the apprehended children range from 12 to 17 years.

Our focus has always been and will continue to be the children. We're making a positive impact on their lives. Children and youth, who've had high regard for the community follow-up workers, comment: "You can trust them. They're caring. I tell them stuff I wouldn't tell anyone else." When you get these kinds of responses, it shows we're making a difference.

Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member of the opposition spoke, he asked why we did not challenge the Charter. I will not attempt to go into the legal arguments, but I'd remind the members in the House that clearly we had an opportunity to wait for two Charter rulings, for two Supreme Court rulings relative to the apprehension of children. To in fact arrange for some opportunity for the child to review their apprehension in court – and I know that the hon. member has cited a duty counsel system. But to do that would in fact be unprecedented, for we do not have, in any circumstances, a challenge to the apprehension. Rather, we are enabling them to challenge the confinement. We have in fact provided for them to have a written opportunity to understand their rights, court dates, and the opportunity to receive legal advice. Clearly it could be some form of duty counsel system, but quite frankly the child may or may not have their own choices, and we should avail them of that.

Mr. Speaker, there is a public perception that this legislation is good. It is the first of its kind internationally. It acknowledges that children involved in prostitution are victims. It makes it clear that individuals who are children and who are being controlled and exploited and abused are victims and not criminals, and it is a significant shift in people's attitudes towards this issue. It is a community issue. Child prostitution is an issue that we all own. If we are all going to save the child, it behooves us to be involved collectively.

Mr. Speaker, one additional comment. With the longer period of detention, a significant number of dollars, I think I can assure this body, would be available. Clearly we can make those adjustments, not only with the agencies that are currently under contract but with other agencies that can be adapted. For example, the AADAC residential treatment facilities can provide additional assistance in maintaining the child in a well-cared-for environment.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, by allowing the victims of the sex trade to be confined in a safe house for longer than the original 72 hours, we give social workers and others more time to counsel and help the child toward the recovery process. We in fact give youngsters a chance to make a complete break with street life and the sex trade, our ultimate goal. We feel we have achieved a balance that addresses court concerns and the needs of the children and will continue to do whatever is necessary to end child prostitution and help children start a life free of abuse.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before recognizing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, I'm going to call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on a point.

Point of Order Member's Apology

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, thanks very much. Pursuant to Standing Order 23(1), I suppose, I wanted to apologize to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. In my comments a few moments ago I had taken issue with some things that she had said publicly after Judge Jordan rendered her decision. I understand from the member that subsequently she retracted the statements she had made. I wasn't aware of that. I appreciate her doing so, and I think it's important that the record should accurately reflect the fact that she withdrew the statements she made after learning of the decision from the youth and family court judge.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: And the chair very much appreciates the upholding of the decorum rules of our House.

Debate Continued

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to enter into the debate on this bill, and I would like to begin by affirming the minister's commitment to help sexually exploited children. I believe it is something the government has done that is very, very progressive and indicates that they would like to deal with some of the social conditions under which many Albertans live.

I think, however, that perhaps the bill has a little bit too much focus on the confinement of children who are caught up in this trade and not enough on what can be done to permanently help them make a break with the street. I think that the confinement element of this PCHIP bill could be strengthened if we talked more about the continuum of programs that can be made available to the youth in this situation and indeed to the families who are in this situation.

I think the bill could be strengthened if it required the government and the responsible agencies involved to adequately fund and make available all required programs which would be of benefit in allowing these young people to make a permanent break with the street. That should be a part of the bill, and I think we should be legislating government action as well as legislating the activities of our young people.

I have a number of questions for the minister that I hope she will be able to answer at some point in the debate. First of all, could you tell us, Madam Minister, where these children will be confined for the 21-day period and how you will ensure that this 21-day confinement is not experienced as punitive by the children. What services will be available during the 21 days that will ensure that the children get the help they need, assess their current needs, and determine their future plans? What new funding will be established to ensure that the children get the support services they need for this new confinement period? Will those with five-day confinements be in the same facility as those with 21-day confinements?

Support services that I think, Mr. Speaker, ought to be provided during the 21-day confinement period are as follows.

Psychologists to do a psych assessment to determine the trauma and abuse issues and the appropriate treatment required.

An addictions counselor. Most street-entrenched youth are dealing with substance addictions and the added addiction to the street life, which is often not adequately understood. I understand that AADAC is working on a program in this regard. Sexually exploited youth have said they need to have different treatment programs than other youth who are in secure custody. How is this being addressed?

A recreation therapist. Children certainly have lots of energy. They just can't sit around locked up for 21 days. The children need cultural and spiritual support.

I think there's going to be a significant cost to some of these programs, and I hope the government is committed to meeting that need. I'd like to know what dollars for programs will be available to increase the choices of sexually exploited children for voluntary programs which address addictions; physical and mental health concerns related to trauma, abuse, and poverty; transitional housing; schooling; and employment training.

I would further, Mr. Speaker, like to ask the minister: what sort of evaluation has been done on the effectiveness of the current three-day confinement? Why would the legislation be amended to provide for five-day and 21-day confinement if the three-day confinement has not been properly evaluated?

Those are some of the questions, Mr. Speaker, that I have on what happens to the children during their confinement and what steps are taken, other than taking them off the street, to make sure that they never return to it.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word also about the drafting. As I read this piece of legislation and try to imagine it from the point of view of a scared, 12-year-old girl, I think the drafting is designed more to meet court challenges and Charter challenges than it is to ensure that children actually understand what's happening to them. If you read the language, the intimidation factor is something that I think needs to be adequately dealt with. It may not have to be dealt with here in the legislation, but I would like some assurance that this is going to be child friendly so that when the children are taken into custody, things are explained to them in a way that they're going to understand and in a way that they don't find intimidating.

As I read through it:

A director must inform a child with respect to whom a show cause hearing is to be held under subsection(12), in writing, of

- (a) the director's reasons for, and the time period of, the confinement,
- (b) the time and place of the show cause hearing,
- (c) the right to attend the show cause hearing,
- (d) the right to contact a lawyer, and
- (e) the telephone number of the nearest office of the Legal Aid Society of Alberta.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that from the point of view of an inexperienced 12-year old this needs to be changed. This needs to be put in a fashion that they will understand, and I would certainly concur with the suggestion that someone, a legal aid lawyer or somebody, should be required to be available right at the point of confinement of the child rather than some director reading a list of rights or handing a written list of rights to this scared child.

Mr. Speaker, the last point I want to deal with in respect of this bill is in fact the whole question of poverty. Poverty exists throughout our province. It's not just confined to the rural areas. Poverty is a major contributing factor to the situation that many of these children find themselves in. It's certainly not exclusively caused by poverty, but I believe that poverty is a major factor with respect to all of these situations.

Now, in Alberta there are very, very serious problems with child poverty. In Alberta in 1998 the child poverty rate was 17.1 percent, Mr. Speaker. That's nearly one child in five in this province, and in absolute numbers it's 128,800 children according to the report on Child Poverty in Canada: Report Card 2000. So one in five, Mr. Speaker.

I would certainly be remiss if I didn't talk about the record of this government with respect to social assistance and the dramatic cuts that they have made in the 1990s in social assistance and the dramatic impact that that has had on the lives of many, many children in our society. The complete abandonment of responsibility for social housing to provide affordable and safe housing is another black mark on this government's record.

We know, those of us that have been involved with housing, that the government – and I certainly heard the minister of housing at the time, Dr. West, speak to a housing conference and lecture everybody about . . . [interjections] Well, he's the Provincial Treasurer now. At the time these programs were cut, he was responsible for housing. I heard him speak in Calgary, and he lectured all of the providers of social housing in this province on the need for people to pull themselves up by their bootstraps, Mr. Speaker. It's that attitude that's contributed greatly to the problems facing our young people.

As I said earlier, a couple of ministers are trying to stem the flood. They're trying to put their fingers in the dike to stop the flood, and another minister, the Provincial Treasurer, is going at the dike with a backhoe.

Mr. Speaker, the government needs to get all of its ducks in a row if it's going to tackle this issue. It cannot just simply say, "We're going to apprehend these kids once they get into trouble," and not look at the cause and their culpability in creating the conditions that put these children on the street in the first place. I urge the government to reconsider its approach to social assistance, to reconsider its approach to the budgets for people on social assistance, the housing allowance, to look at many of the programs that have been eliminated in this province, and then we can begin to seriously tackle the real issues relating to child prostitution in this province.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to have the opportunity this evening to speak to Bill 29, Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2000. Certainly we are happy to see this come forward into the Legislature. There was some concern that it wouldn't hit the floor this fall, but we are happy to see it brought forward.

Many of the amendments that we see in here I find to be improvements on what we saw before us in the Legislature in the spring, but I do still, Mr. Speaker, have concerns with one particular section, and that is the review of the confinement decision. I do have some concerns about that.

I agree with the Minister of Children's Services when she says that we all own prostitution as an issue in this province and in this country. Certainly we really have some responsibility towards children who are involved in prostitution, and we must make every effort that we can to eradicate it and to help those children through that process when they get involved in that kind of lifestyle.

With that in mind, I don't think, Mr. Speaker, that section 4, which talks about the confinement decision, is yet adequate enough in terms of addressing the kinds of issues there are. The way the section is put forward, where they give these young women who are put in care the right to ask for a review of the director's decision and the right to contact a lawyer and just give them the telephone number of the nearest office of the Legal Aid Society of Alberta, assumes a great deal more maturity and presence of mind than likely those people have at that particular time and space in their life. I think we have to take a look at that very seriously. This is one area where an amendment would be justified in terms of being brought forward.

In responding to that particular point which my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo had brought forward, the Minister of Children's Services said that to do something like bring in duty counsel for these kids, lawyers under contract, where they'd have access to the service immediately, would be something that would be unprecedented. But I respectfully disagree with the minister on that point. I think we do have a precedent for that kind of action in this province, and that is the action that takes place within WIN houses in this province.

When women come into WIN houses, they are mature most of the time. They are older women, not really younger women, a cross section of women. They are in a state of mind, Mr. Speaker, where they are unable to make decisions that have a great deal of impact on their lives at that particular moment. It takes all of their resolve and all of their ability just to have made it into the house itself. They are beyond the ability to make other kinds of choices that are going to require decisions, paperwork, often money. They're not able to do that, and WIN House has recognized that.

What they do is within 24 or 48 hours of the women having entered the shelters, they bring in social workers; they bring in legal aid counsel. They bring in the kinds of resources that these women and often their children require at that moment in time. It isn't a choice. If you are there in the shelter, you are expected to show up for the appointment. I think that's good, because when people are at critical stages in their lives, sometimes they need an additional catalyst or a strong hand on their shoulder to help them along in the process that they have embarked on.

Once these children are confined, they're at a crossroads in their lives. They need some help in making the decisions that are going to help them leave the life of prostitution, leave the life on the street, and move forward. Leaving what you know always puts you in a state where you feel unsafe, where you're unsure, where you're not confident of what the next step is, where you're scared, where you're apprehensive of what can happen, what will happen, what could happen. All of those states render a person unable often to take the next step.

I would suggest that when we are talking about children here, young girls, we are placing too much responsibility and too much of a burden on them to expect that they are going to be in the kind of mind where they are going to be able to rationally exercise their right to contact a lawyer or to even physically be able to retain the phone number of the Legal Aid Society, make the first phone call, stay on hold while they get connected to somebody or wait for someone to call them back. All of those steps, while they seem very minor in nature to us, are monumental steps for those young women to take at that particular point in their life, and I say that we are placing far too much of a burden on them if that's the kind of request that we are making of them at that time.

They are under outside influences that can be very hard for them to say no to. Remember, these are girls that have been taken out of their environment, often not willingly, so now you're asking them to willingly choose to contact a lawyer who can help them take the next step. I don't think it's possible for that to happen, Mr. Speaker.

I think we have to recognize the state of mind that those young people are in at that time. Regardless of the fact that they have a lack of maturity and that they have a history of making decisions that are hurtful to them, not helpful to them, it's our job to give them a hand up in this process, and we can best give them a hand up, Mr. Speaker, if we automatically provide the kinds of services that will help them get one step further along in the process. For those reasons, I very respectfully request that the government take a look at this position and look at strengthening this particular section with an amendment, which I am sure would find support from all members in this Assembly.

Once that's done, Mr. Speaker, I think we also have to address issues of what isn't in this bill. It just isn't enough to provide the kind of short-term security that we're seeing here. There are still severe problems in communities in terms of the lack of adequate resources for street programs and adequate accommodation. All of us who have been the parents of teenagers or who are the parents of teenagers know how hard and how stressful that can be sometimes and how different teens react to their teen years in different ways. Sometimes they just leave. Well, where do they go? If they don't go on the street to make money, do they have other options available to them?

Why don't we look at solving this problem before those kids hit that kind of street life? We need to ensure that we have enough programming for them, enough accommodation for them, and enough resources that they can access before they get to that stage in their life. It's much easier to give a person a hand up when they're only one step away from the kind of life we would like them to lead than when they have involved themselves in lifestyles like prostitution or drugs or the other kinds of lifestyles that are so detrimental to their health and their safety and their well-being and their ability to be contributing members of this society, Mr. Speaker.

I know that the Minister of Children's Services is very concerned about this very issue. I've heard her speak a number of times on it. I would support any endeavours that she undertakes to address this issue before it becomes a prostitution problem. I would respectfully urge all of her colleagues in the government to also support her in those endeavours. I don't think we can stress enough how important it is to support children before they hit the street and, once they are there, to support them in the process of getting them off the street.

Mr. Speaker, the dollars that we spend up front in preventative kinds of care and in providing adequate options for young people will be dollars where we reap the rewards tenfold after the fact, not just from a monetary perspective but from respecting the rights of human beings, particularly girls who end up on the street involved in prostitution.

Mr. Speaker, those are my comments at stage 2 of this particular bill, and I hope that the government takes them seriously and that we see some additional strengthening of this bill before it's passed through this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this evening and to speak in support of Bill 29 and to thank and I guess applaud the efforts of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for the work she's done in trying to bring the issue before the Assembly and to put it on the public agenda of this province. That takes a lot of determination, and it takes a lot of hard work to succeed, as she has done, in bringing the whole issue of child prostitution to the Alberta public in a way that I think has been caring and in the best interests of children.

I was struck, while driving across the city earlier this evening, by a radio report. I wasn't paying too much attention initially, but they were interviewing a speaker who was talking about the law before us and the changes that had been made to protect the rights of children. Somehow in the conversation the issue of residential schools for native children arose, and it caused me to reflect back on that time in our history when the very churches were responsible for believing that they knew what was best for children of native families and in those children's best interests took them from their homes and placed them in residential schools. At the time, Mr. Speaker, there was widespread public support for moving those children to residential schools, and it was sanctioned by the church, which was even more powerful in those days. There was a general feeling that if native children were going to succeed in this world, they had to be cut off from their culture, they had to learn English, and they had to be schooled in the ways of the majority white population.

Here we are a number of years later, Mr. Speaker, reflecting back on all those good intentions and what those good intentions did to that particular group of children. The story that has emerged, of course, is not very pretty. The kind of remorse and the kinds of apologies that some of the churches have had to engage in is something that I'm sure those hardworking missionaries and church people who were responsible for the program years ago could never, never have possibly imagined would be an outcome of their work.

I use the example, just as a word of caution, that when we become so enthusiastic about knowing what is right for a group of children, it also is incumbent upon us to take a few minutes to reflect in terms of: are there some downsides to this? Are there some things that we're not paying attention to in our enthusiasm to try to rectify what we see as a great evil being inflicted upon young Albertans? I started to think back about the context in which child prostitution in this province thrives. We've been so concerned with fiscal realities of the province that I think we have to take some responsibility for the kind of social context that we've created in which these youngsters grow up. We have been so bent on creating an economy of winners and losers and we have been so ready to discard those who are not successful in that economy that I think we are reaping some of the side effects of those policy thrusts.

You see it manifested in a number of ways. I see it in some of the families in my constituency who are on social assistance. There is a resignation on the part of some of them that they have no value or that they are certainly undervalued, that somehow or other they are guilty for having to ask for help from the government and that they are worth less in some way or another than their fellow citizens. So I think we've started to create a context where the kinds of things like child prostitution can thrive, where youngsters who have little self-concept, who have little value for their own being are easily led into the kinds of grim circumstances that previous speakers have described. For that, we all bear some responsibility.

I guess the third thing I would like to touch on just briefly, Mr. Speaker, is the necessity for adequate resources for this program. I don't think there can be any doubt in anyone's mind that this is a very high-maintenance program. It's a program that is going to draw heavily upon professionals, be they childcare workers, be they counselors, be they police, be they lawyers. It's going to take some of the most skilled in those professions to work with these youngsters and to bring about the kinds of changes that we all want. It would be sad if a bill that has been brought in and has such goodwill in the province and has such support – it would be a shame if the goals of that program were thwarted for the lack of adequate resources. I think that's a real danger, and I think we have some parallels with other programs in the province that are currently underfunded that should lead us to be a little wary and to question the resources that are going to be put at the disposal of those who are charged with carrying out the mandate of this legislation. We need to back up the good words of this bill with the dollars that will make it actually work.

I'm sure that the program will be watched carefully. The successes they've had to this point are impressive. The changes in the legislation that we see before us tonight will hopefully make the program even more successful. I look forward to hearing that, as do all members of the Assembly, and to the eradication of an evil that is probably one of the worst and one that preys on and destroys the lives of young Albertans.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak to this bill, and like many of my colleagues I will join in praise for the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for the work she put in to bringing this before us.

In looking back, I remember I had reservations about the bill as it was initially introduced. I've gone briefly through the Hansard and looked at the number of my colleagues who participated in vigorous debate about the proposed bill at the time and also noticed that three of the Liberal amendments were in fact accepted at the time we were debating it. It's certainly clear to me and I think it should be clear to everyone here that members of the Official Opposition in no way want to delay passage of this amendment bill. I think we all feel really strongly that protection of children is a major part of our responsibility as legislators, and we take that responsibility seriously. But as legislators we are also responsible for passing the best possible legislation.

When I look at how the program as implemented has run, I think some of my original concerns were alleviated, but other of my original concerns were not. There is obviously an attempt to address some of those concerns in this amending bill as it is brought forward to us tonight.

The sort of history, the tale we will all tell in the years to come of how this bill came into being and the work that was done on it, how the initial program developed, I think is a really good example of the legislative input, the community input, the workers who've actually worked with this program, and the involvement of the court in pointing out to us as legislators that we had to make amendments to the bill to make it the strongest piece of legislation possible. It's a good example for us to look back upon, and I'm sure I will do that.

I think what's important here, certainly from the comments Judge Karen Jordan brought forward, is that the apprehension is not the concern here, but it is the ability to have access to have your day in court, if you want to put it that way, for anyone who is apprehended to be able to have their chance to explain in court if they feel they need an opportunity to explain.

I think it's really important that we do understand that all of our laws need to conform to the Constitution and to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and to place a limit on a personal freedom. It has to be subject to the reasonable limits prescribed by law and those that can be justifiably demonstrated in a free and democratic society. We hear that phrase, but what does it really mean? I think even children, even child prostitutes who are apprehended need to have that constitutional right upheld for them. I am certainly willing to come into this House and assist in amending a bill that is going to do that on their behalf. I'm proud to be involved in that process when that's what it's going to do.

One of the concerns I think has been raised previously, but I'll just go through it briefly, as I think it's important when you're dealing with children in particular. I notice that the provisions of the act are allowing that they will be given a piece of paper that gives them information which is very valuable: people they can call, assistance they can look for. That's all well and good, but when it comes to whether they actually want to apply to appear in court, that's sort of written on a piece of paper and handed to them. There's a leap of faith or a leap of logic here. If we believe that these children are so in need of protection that we're willing to apprehend them because we feel they can't make decisions about their life, then we take this leap of faith and say, "Well, if we just give them a piece of paper and tell them to phone this guy if they think they might be interested" – I'm not quite getting the connection there. I think more has to be done in an advocacy way or in an information provision way than giving them a piece of paper and saying: you can phone this if you want. One of the suggestions that's been made would be to provide a judicial counsel.

9:30

MR. DICKSON: Legal counsel.

MS BLAKEMAN: Legal counsel. I'm sorry.

It makes perfect sense to me that there's a human being there that a young person can talk to and ask questions of or perhaps have them provide information that they can then react to. Because not many of us, hopefully, have the opportunity to come into contact with the legal and judicial systems, we don't know what the rules are here. We don't know what we're supposed to get. Frankly, we all watch way too much American television and think that all the American rules apply to us, which they don't. We really are kind of stranded then. We don't know what's supposed to be happening.

To assume that a young person we've apprehended because we don't think they can make their own decisions about their life at that point or they're unduly influenced by someone else can all of a sudden now stand up and go, "Right, I have to take control of my life and look after all of this; yes, indeed, I will follow through and contact this phone number," I think is a bit of a stretch. If we're really looking to being of assistance to these young people – and that is what the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has brought forward; we are trying to be of assistance to them – then let's do it in a very real and tangible way. Let's get this so that there is some kind of legal counsel available for them who's on a salary, who's available to give them information, and who, if they want additional help, can help arrange for that.

My bias as an MLA in a larger city comes through here, and I needed to be reminded by one of my colleagues representing an area outside of Edmonton and Calgary that that's all fine and dandy for a big city to have someone like that available, but what about the smaller centres or rural centres? Okay, this can be worked around. There's nothing to stop us from looking at having a team of lawyers who are educated specifically in this legislation offering this kind of counselor information and who are on call for various areas of the province. I hope that that will be taken into consideration and given serious consideration by the drafter of this bill.

My colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods just raised some really poignant reminders to us all of how quick we can be to decide that we know what's best for certain groups of people. What that brought to mind for me is that in all of this dealing with a bill around child prostitution, I don't know how many of us or how many of the public ever really grappled with the thought: what kind of a society are we that we have children selling sex, that that goes on in our society? Frankly, somebody's buying the sex, and that's why it's going on.

There's a lot more to consider in the context of this bill than merely talking about apprehension and constitutional rights of children that have been apprehended. I think we also need to take a moment and step back and say: what are we doing in this society that we still have child prostitution? Heck, while I'm at it, why do we still have adult prostitution? Why is this a part or a component of our society? Why do some people find it necessary or important? Because that's still not acceptable to me. I've worked the better part of my life on issues of concern to women and, frankly, on issues of concern to girls. We haven't really talked about what's underneath, the need for this legislation. I hope we'll all take some time to do that and maybe look at other leadership roles that we as legislators could be taking on this issue.

[The Deputy Speaker in the Chair]

The other thing that I just wanted to bring up is that we keep referring to girls, that they're girls. Yes, that's true for the most part. We are dealing with young women, but there are also young men, and we shouldn't forget that, because I'm sure that they will be some of the people that are also affected by the passage of this legislation.

I think this has been a good process. Some people might consider that it's been a little rough, and maybe it didn't go exactly the way they wanted it to or as quickly as they wanted it to, or maybe they didn't want to see it come back here for the amendments that were certainly recommended by the courts, but they were also recommended by the workers that had actually been in the system and had been working the program as it has existed so far. So the recommendations for longer term, protective, safe custody I think is a good idea, and it's obviously coming with words of experience from those that have actually worked in the program. Because it's true. You know, what on earth would make us think that in 72 hours we could solve all these problems? I think that in 72 hours they would mostly sleep, because these kids have not had an opportunity for just plain old sleep and maybe a decent meal. So it makes perfect sense to me that we would be looking at a longer period of time for safe custody.

Beyond that, if you're going to get into any kind of treatment, you're looking at quite extended periods of time. I notice that the ones that are being talked about here are further confinement of up to 21 days, which can be renewed an additional 21 days. So we've got 42 days there. That's six weeks, which isn't a very long time to turn someone's life around. I am not, believe me, recommending that for some reason we incarcerate children for years and years, but I think we do need to understand that if we're going to be running programs for them – and they don't necessarily have to be run as safe custody – the kinds of issues that are going to be involved here, this ain't going to be solved overnight and it ain't going to be solved in 42 days. So I hope that there are the context of programs that are needed to support these children beyond the five days or the 21 days or the 42 days.

The last thing I wanted to do was commend the community groups, the grassroots organizations, who have been working on prostitution issues all the way along, usually with not a lot of fanfare, certainly the communities that I have spoken with and sat in on their meetings and their working sessions as they try and grapple with this kind of activity in their communities. I just want to take a moment to recognize the work that they do. They are trying to protect their communities and make their communities a safer spot, and they've always approached it with an understanding that they are dealing with human beings, human beings that are prostitutes. They've always treated them with understanding. I think that's a very admirable quality.

Some of them have been very inventive. I remember one woman who used to dash out on the street and paint, actually, the licence plate numbers of the johns on the street, which certainly had an immediate effect upon things. It was a very innovative way to look at moving the johns out of her neighbourhood, but it was really particularly affecting her children as they walked home from school and were propositioned.

So I just want to take the time to acknowledge the work that's been done all along by the community groups and what they have contributed to this very serious issue, that is really a scourge upon our society. If this is the least that we can do as legislators in passing this amending bill, good for us, and I hope that we continue to look for ways in which we can show leadership on this issue.

Thank you very much for this opportunity to speak.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to rise this evening to speak on second reading of Bill 29, the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2000. Certainly at the outset I want to commend the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing forth the bill and the amendments and thank her for the consideration that's been given of the very important issues that were raised in Judge Karen Jordan's judgment earlier in the summer.

Certainly it was that judgment which led us as an Official Opposition to suggest that we return to this Legislature this fall to correct some of the imbalance that was noted in Judge Jordan's decision, an imbalance of, yes, to protect the child but also to protect that child's rights. I think it's exceedingly important, given the kind of lifestyle that virtually all of these young people have led, that they understand that society is trying its very best to provide an example of fairness, an example of rights and to live in accordance with those rights and to give them an example of how they might live that way as well.

I think there's been a good deal of discussion on this legislation, and it has really focused a good deal on the issue of morality, that the actions of young men and women engaged in prostitution is a question of morality. I thought that one of Judge Jordan's points that she made in her excellent judgment that's very much worth noting was paragraph 27 where she said:

It is not axiomatic that the legislation is penal or criminal law because it authorizes the apprehension and detention of children engaged in prostitution. If the only reason for trying to eradicate this activity were moral, it would follow that legislation directed at this purpose would be criminal law.

Then reference is made to a Supreme Court of Canada ruling by Swain, which is cited in the judgment:

“A statute that includes a prohibition and a penalty and is enacted to serve a public purpose commonly recognized as being criminal in nature will fall within the scope of Parliament's criminal law power . . . such public purposes include peace, order, security, health, and morality” . . .

There are, however, valid reasons for trying to eliminate prostitution in which children are involved which are not based in morality. Prostitution is a dangerous enterprise; female participants, whether children or adult, are subject to [dangerous] harm and even death at the hands of both pimps and johns. Alcoholism and drug addiction are widespread within the trade. The risk of sexually transmitted disease is so high as to be a significant public health risk.

I think it's a very important part of the issue that we are dealing with here, Mr. Speaker, and one that certainly causes me to participate in the debate. The legislation itself certainly deals with finding a child in the vulnerable practice of prostitution and in dealing with the apprehension of that child and then the confinement of that child for up to 21 days subsequent to the apprehension. I would like to think more in terms of what we can do as a society to prevent that scenario from developing, also what to do in terms of the rehabilitation of that young person once the 21-day maximum period has been expired.

On the prevention side, having long been a proponent and always will be of the importance of public education, I think really we need to look at our children and look at the reality of what some of our children are born into through nothing on their part except that they happen to be born into a world. They may be born into that world with poverty, with disease, with health problems which perhaps few of us can comprehend, with issues of an economic lifestyle that leads them to poor health, poor educational achievement, and a downward cycle which we as a society, I believe, have a responsibility to correct to the best of our ability. Obviously, we can't do everything for everyone, but surely we can focus our efforts on children and look at children with, perhaps, a new lens as we move into the next century.

In terms of children we know that when children are born, there are signs that will indicate the kinds of difficulties that child will have in later life. Assessment done of newborns will often pinpoint issues in terms of health and learning that are very critical to how that child then proceeds. So if we look at a model which I've spoken about before in this Legislature – and it's a model which was developed by the Calgary United Way in terms of looking at how we might better address the needs of children. Having done that initial assessment from, say, the birth of the child up to the age of three, we can identify as a society some of those problematic indicators in that child's life.

Then from age three to six is a perfect opportunity to intervene at an early point for the purpose of trying to make that child as ready as possible for school when they begin at age six. That requires early intervention for those children who need it the most and is often a key not only to that young person's learning ability but to their health and their ability to then thrive as an independent citizen in our country.

Then they move into school, and from six to 10 children learn basic skills. From 10 to 14 there's the same Calgary United Way model, where the children are learning social skills that give them the ability to function in a self-sufficient way and in an independent way. Then from age 14 to 18 in that same school system that the provincial government has a responsibility to run and run effectively, that child then emerges at age 18 with, hopefully, the very best that our society can give that child to going on to be a good citizen. I mean, that is the trust that we are given as legislators: the responsibility right off the bat for every single child born in this province. There is clearly no better way of preventing the kinds of things that are leading children to prostitution, to many other lifestyles which are going to harm them and make them in fact exceedingly dependent upon society and dependent upon others rather than giving them the independence and the rights of citizenship that I think all children, quite frankly, deserve.

That, then, is on the prevention side. The key to a model that looks at prevention is that it also identifies problem behaviours wherever they occur along that path from zero to 18 and, where there are issues that a child needs to be dealing with or that society needs to help that child deal with, surely to goodness identifying those needs within the school system and then supplementing with counseling, with health intervention, or with support in any way is clearly part of what we as a province I think have a responsibility to do. So that's the whole issue of prevention so that hopefully as we go through this process, as we pass this legislation, we will have fewer kids who come to the point where they are living in a way that takes away, surely, the greatest part of their self-esteem and their rights to be children and to become adults.

Mr. Speaker, that's on the prevention side. Then if we move to the apprehension of these young men and women, let's look at the time subsequent to that apprehension, and that's the whole rehabilitation side. The rehabilitation side is obviously one that several people have spoken about here in the Legislature. I would simply like to cite that the issue of kids that are vulnerable and on the street does not only include kids involved in prostitution. It certainly involves young people who are homeless, young people who have substance addictions, young people who have been demoralized and are vulnerable in our society and have probably been violated in many unspeakable ways. Often these young people are running away from abuse in one situation only to come upon abuse in another. They are running from one vile situation to another that can be even more wretched in terms of their lives, and often they see no hope at all and no way to extricate themselves from lives of hopeless misery.

Mr. Speaker, I think we also must be mindful that many of these young people are disadvantaged by maladies that often go undiagnosed, including fetal alcohol syndrome . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members who are attempting to make long-distance conversations, would you please take those conversations out into the Confederation Room, which is meant for exactly that.

The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, many of these maladies will go undiagnosed, including attention deficit disorders, mental illness, brain injuries, fetal alcohol syndrome, substance abuse, and many other issues. These are young people in need. They are in need of rehabilitation and all that we can do to set them on a track that leads to their own good health and good opportunities to learn.

One of the programs which I would like to offer to the Minister of Children's Services as a model for rehabilitation is one that she may wish to look at in Edmonton family and community services. It's actually called the phase 3 program, Mr. Speaker, and I was privileged to work extensively in this program when I was out of public life in the mid '90s. It's a model of preventing family violence. What it is is young women in this case. Certainly it could involve men as well, but at the moment it's just involving women.

There are three phases to the program. The first one is that the young woman presents herself to family and community services having been involved in some kind of violent situation. The first phase of the program is a clinical look at violence and how it has manifested in the lives of others. It's really trying to understand the whole cycle of violence. We know there are many patterns of violence, including the obnoxious triangle of rescuer, persecutor, and victim. That study of violence as a model is one that is the first phase of the program.

The second phase of the program is that the young woman will then look at her own life and try to determine how that cycle of violence is manifested in her own life, so in fact it's a personal chronicle of the kinds of behaviours, the kinds of choices and decisions that have been made that have led to this violent behaviour.

The third level, at which point I was very privileged to be involved, is called the mentorship model. Having examined violence as a behaviour, having examined their own behaviour and how violence has impacted their life, the young woman then moves into the third phase of the program, which would involve the victim, someone who has already gone through the program and has experienced the same kinds of violence issues, as well as a mentor. That was a woman who was in the community who might work with this triad of people to try and build a plan to curb violence in their lives in the future. Interestingly, for some of the women the best that they could do to come up with new behaviours to fight violence in their lives was the ability to stand before someone and say, "No, I do not wish to participate in that kind of activity, behaviour," you name it. That was a huge step for many of those women, as you can imagine.

For some the plan to eliminate violence from their lives was as complex as one woman who actually developed a training program for the city of Edmonton police in terms of entering into a family domestic violence issue and training the police as to what issues to look for, what questions to ask, and what kinds of behaviours would encourage both parties to deal with the issue. I would highly commend the program to the member because it really did get into the issue of building a support network for these women with other women in the community who were interested in helping them. It is an activity which I think would be very useful to some of these subsequent to the 21-day period.

There are also many women and men in this province who want to be part of and to help in creating a new culture of nonviolence in Alberta.

Finally, I just wanted to speak to the legislation and to alert the minister to something we will be bringing forward, and that is an amendment to try and measure the effectiveness of this legislation. I think so often, whether it's establishing a budget for a particular goal in mind or drafting legislation with very laudable goals in mind, sometimes legislators will forget that we need to put in place at the same time a monitoring and evaluative tool that will ensure that the goals of that legislation or that budgetary process are in fact being met as we go down the road. Otherwise, we're just throwing money at problems rather than saying: this is where we want to get to in one year or five years, whatever the goals are. To build in those evaluative tools I think is an extremely important part of budgeting as well as in legislation.

Judge Jordan actually presents in chapter 37 in her judgment some very excellent suggestions in terms of how to describe the goals that we want to achieve. Then we will look at the legislation perhaps in two years' time and say: "Have we achieved that? Is there something that we need to do to amend that legislation to make sure we can achieve those goals?"

I'll just highlight some of the questions in the judge's decision, but I think it's a real credit to Judge Jordan for the work that she put into this judgment and the very fine direction she is giving us as legislators. Some of the questions that she asks are: "How many accept the services [that are being] offered?" Perhaps some will not. Perhaps some will shut down, and we have to know that. "How many return to the same lifestyle?" What kind of monitoring and follow-up is around for these young people? "How many gradually escape from that world?" What kind of success rate is there?

Are those numbers any different from the numbers where the prostitutes have not been apprehended and confined but have moved onto a more conventional lifestyle? How many children who have been apprehended and confined are subsequently beaten by their pimps? Are those numbers any different from the beatings endured by girls in the trade who have never been apprehended? Are beatings by pimps taking place because they are sending a message to these girls and others that they must not reveal anything during the assessment which would endanger the pimp or effect him economically? Are there beatings . . . which take place to encourage the girls to replace the income that was lost during the time of confinement? What attempts are being made to determine whether under-age prostitutes are actually leaving the trade or merely working in trick pads? The questions go on and on, but the Government of Alberta [she writes] has not made a commitment to provide us with answers even though the liberty of children is being curtailed.

So I think building some evaluative tools into the legislation itself would help in that knowledge that we are doing something. We are evaluating it, and we are forcing future Legislatures to evaluate it as well.

Finally, I wanted to close on the whole issue of the rights of the child and to cite the UN convention on the rights of the child, which, of course, we all know Alberta did not initially support. I have always been an advocate of the convention and deem it to be very much pro-parent and pro-family but most of all pro-children. The convention certainly talks about the fundamental importance of ensuring that children's rights are protected, no matter what their age. I think it is particularly germane to this legislation to look at the convention on the rights of the child and the several articles in it about recognizing children's rights. So many times I think young women and young men who become involved in dangerous behaviour like prostitution do so because there are some real difficulties with power and authority and with dominance in their lives. So often, while they have ended up in this kind of life, it's because they have been unable to grow and become themselves self-sufficient in order to make good decisions that are in their best interests.

If the legislation is not respectful of their rights, then what we as legislators are doing is simply perpetuating that pattern, which has often led to their troublesome behaviour in the first place. I think the fact that the legislation is in the process of being amended to improve and protect the rights of children is a commitment we all need to make to continue in that advancement. I think it's very much an issue of ensuring that all legislation respects the equality of all persons, even those young kids who've ended up on the street and need help.

I would like to thank the hon. minister and the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing forward the legislation. I hope the statement by the Minister of Justice that if subsequent suggestions came along that we felt as legislators would continue to improve this legislation, that we all make a commitment to certainly embody those in future amendments. Certainly for our part we will be bringing forth an amendment to do as I suggested, and that is to build an accountability mechanism into the legislation. We will be suggesting that the evaluator of that effectiveness of the legislation will be an independent children's advocate, which we have long advocated on this side of the House.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. members for the privilege of addressing this legislation, and I look forward to continuing to participate in its passage in this Legislature.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to join the debate on Bill 29 and the state of its reading. My colleagues, who have spoken this evening on the bill, made some important points on this bill, Bill 29, which is titled Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2000. This piece of legislation clearly recognizes once again in this House the problem we are faced with; that is, we have lots of children on the street who are victims of prostitution. The bill focuses on providing protection to these children who are already involved in prostitution.

I support this. I certainly want to commend the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for the passion with which she has pursued this matter for some time. I also want to thank the Minister of Children's Services for providing leadership and political will to take action on this matter. When the minister was speaking on the bill about an hour earlier, she was talking about the main assumption driving this bill, that is that children are not criminals; they are victims. The children who are in prostitution are victims, and we need to treat them as such. They need our sympathy. They need our care. They need our help. This bill is an attempt, I guess, to provide this help through a process of apprehension and provide them safe care for a period of time.

I think we'll agree that we need to work at both the apprehension and protection of children who get into this difficulty. But we need also to work at two other levels, the level of prevention, so that we can then hope to find two, three, four, five years down the line that our actions have in fact reduced the number of children who risk ending up on the street and ending up exploited in prostitution. So prevention, apprehension, and the third stage I think is the rehabilitation side, which in this bill is only marginally addressed. Mere apprehension, which in this case can last I guess about six, seven weeks altogether, may not be enough to protect these children unless we pay attention to the rehabilitative sort of measures that are needed even after these children are released from custody in the safe houses.

So I hope we will pay some attention during this debate to all three stages: how to prevent children from getting to the stage where they have to be rescued and then the rescue part, which is the apprehension and putting them in safe houses, and then the postapprehension and postrelease measures and programs that are needed if we are to in fact provide these young people with hope and with skills and with the abilities and the capacities to be freed from this terrible exploitation that they willy-nilly get subjected to as they adopt this particular way of living, for however short a period.

The Member for Calgary-Buffalo made an interesting comment, which I would like to revisit for a moment. The one thing that I find troubling, as he did, in the bill in its present form is that although the bill does now require the director to provide reasons to a child that's apprehended, give the information, give information on legal rights and the right to seek legal counsel, the bill seems to assume that the apprehended child is in a mental frame of mind psychologically sound enough and having the ability to exercise reasonable and good judgment in order to seek these avenues which are legally provided in the bill. But I guess the point the Member for Calgary-Buffalo made that I like is his attempt to draw attention to the fact that the very fact that these children are in difficulty is perhaps because they are not capable of making good judgment.

If that is the case, if they're not good decision-makers – and if they are in difficulty, we can infer from it that most of them are not good decision-makers – then it seems to me to be rather problematic to leave it to those children under conditions of apprehension to make decisions about whether or not to seek advice, legal advice in this case. So I am somewhat concerned about the arrangement that the bill doesn't provide which will ensure that these children indeed will have this right and the ability to exercise this right to seek legal counsel. I hope that as we go through the bill, as we try to amend it and improve it, we will build into it those provisions to address this concern expressed by several members on the floor of this House.

I also want to, since my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands spoke, I think eloquently, speak about the position that our caucus takes on this bill. I won't repeat what he had to say, but I want to spend a little more time on the prevention side. I think we will be remiss in addressing the problems our children face, particularly those who fall victims to prostitution, if we don't address seriously the issue of prevention and the conditions that seem to lead children into this difficulty in the first place. So with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will quickly move on to that.

In order to do that, I would like to draw the attention of the House to a document that I tabled in the House yesterday. The document that I tabled in the House yesterday is called Child Poverty in Canada: Report Card 2000, and this document was prepared by Canada 2000, a nonpartisan, cross-Canada coalition of over 85 national, provincial, and community partner organizations providing information and recommendations regarding child poverty in Canada. Now, I would certainly hope that members with deep concern for this problem that this bill tries to address and rectify will find some time to take a quick look at this document, because it does provide some very significant and important information that we need to look at if we are to seriously discuss and address the issue of prevention.

I'm assuming, of course – and there are perhaps some who may disagree with me – that poverty is one of the key factors which leads children into the street first and from there on to becoming victims of prostitution. Poverty, as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands indicated, is not confined to a few parts of Canada. Child poverty is highly generalized. In our province it's quite high: 17.1 percent. These are 1998 figures. This is in spite of the fact that the rate of economic growth in our province has been good, has been very high. It appears that there doesn't seem to be a close relationship with reduction in child poverty and economic growth. There seems to be a disconnect between economic growth and the rates of child poverty.

According to this count, we have 128,800 children in this province who live under conditions of poverty. Poverty is not something that's an abstract concept. It affects in concrete ways, in real ways the daily lives of families, children in terms of the safety that they enjoy, in terms of the housing that they have, in terms of family conditions under which they live. All of these conditions are germane for our consideration if we are interested not only in dealing with the problem once it occurs but in doing something about preventing this problem from occurring or from growing.

So the evidence is clear – some of this is reported in this document – that most of the children who are growing up in poverty are growing up in families where parents are working. Most of the families where children grow up poor are families which are working families, so we have a growing number of working poor in our country and in our province.

Some other interesting information here that we need to take into account and that I want to put on record has to do with children up to 14 years of age who are likely to be experiencing poverty. Aboriginal children: about 52 percent of them are likely to experience poverty. Children of visible minorities: about 42 percent, according to this document, Mr. Speaker. Children with disabilities: about 23 percent. So there are clearly some social groups in our society, in our community that are much more likely to have children who will be exposed to conditions of poverty. Poverty is I think recognized as one of the key determinants – certainly it's not the only determinant, I agree – for pushing children into all kinds of personal difficulties, including prostitution.

In order to then address the issue of the prevention of prostitution, I think we need to ask ourselves what needs to be done in order to reduce the likelihood that children, particularly those who grow up in certain social groups and communities, will not have to face those conditions of poverty which generate problems including prostitution. Unless we pay some attention to this, I think we will be simply dealing with the symptoms and the consequences and not with the causes of poverty, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to emphasize this. I know that this is a matter that's been recognized across this House, but I think it requires emphasis. It requires reiteration as we move towards putting in place a law which hopefully will withstand any future court challenges to its legality and constitutionality. We should not only deal with the apprehension side but deal in fact with the causes that lead to it, dealing with the problem of poverty and providing protection for children.

A few other factors. The youths that we are dealing with are between the ages of 16 and up to 24, and surely lots of youths between 15, 16, and 17 are apprehended, I guess, in terms of prostitution. According to this report, youths face particular hurdles in overcoming poverty. The demographic group of youth at this age that we are trying to provide protection to from becoming victims of prostitution is precisely the group that's exposed to a higher incidence of poverty than other age groups in our community, so we need to pay attention to that.

Before they get to be 16, 17, 18, young children of course need child care. Quality child care services are still not available nor are they affordable for most families, particularly for families that we categorize as the working poor. So that's another front on which we need to work, and I would hope the minister would be taking note of some of these matters as we discuss this bill.

Lack of safe, secure, affordable housing: another factor that's associated with it. Similarly, I guess, there's an interesting statistic here of who uses the food banks. Forty percent of food bank users are children, although only 26 percent of Canada's population are children. So that's another indication of the depth of poverty that many of our children experience and face on a daily basis.

It is these conditions of poverty that our children experience on a fairly large scale across this country and in this province which draw attention to why the problem of prostitution and other problems that young children face persist. The persistence of child poverty in rich countries like ours, according to this report, undermines both equality of opportunity and commonality of values. It therefore confronts the industrialized world with a test both of its ideals and its capacity to resolve many of the most intractable social problems, and prostitution certainly is one of the most intractable social problems that we are seriously trying to address in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to close by saying that I support the intent of the bill, the general intention and the goals of the bill, but I think what we need to do is work on more than just apprehension and putting these children in secure safe homes for a period of six or seven weeks. We need to go beyond that, both with rehabilitation after the release of children from these safe homes and, much more importantly perhaps, at the other end, at the level of their childhood experiences and the poverty that many children experience.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to close debate.

MRS. FORSYTH: I'll have the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: I'd call the committee to order.

Bill 28
Appropriation (Supplementary
Supply) Act, 2000 (No. 2)

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. There are some additional comments I'd like to make further to the comments I made in speaking to second reading of this bill.

THE CHAIRMAN: We're having a little bit of difficulty hearing. Perhaps your laptop is obscuring the microphone, which does inhibit the sound quality.

MR. SMITH: No, no. Leave it like that. It was good. It was fine.

THE CHAIRMAN: Thank you for your assistance, hon. minister.

I think that will probably be better now.

MS BLAKEMAN: Sorry about that. My apologies to Hansard. I didn't mean to obscure the microphone.

Yes, I am pleased to continue with some of the points I was raising last night in second reading. I was speaking specifically of my concern about the proclivity that this government has shown for this injection of one-time-only funding in responding to pressure points. And let me be clear: this is not about saying that you shouldn't be spending this money. Obviously, the demand from Albertans to have money restored to budgets like education and health, the infrastructure money going into maintenance and renovation of schools – the money has already been talked about by other people.

But what's important here is the whole planning process. I noticed that on February 23 of '99 in the Hansard debate on the Fiscal Responsibility Act – again, I always find that a little bizarre, that the government felt it had to pass legislation to keep itself from creating a deficit. That always struck me as odd. Did they need that legislation in order not to go over, that they had to somehow constrain themselves? That legislation will never make sense to me. Who did they think they were constraining? Obviously they had to constrain themselves.

Don't let me get off topic, Mr. Chairman. Keep me on topic. In this debate of the Provincial Treasurer, he says:

Twenty-five percent of [the surplus] will be available to us for items like infrastructure, pressures, and onetime capital spending that is in place already. There will be a plan where we can see in an orderly way what we can do to accelerate some of our infrastructure costs.

So the plan is simple yet detailed, but it builds in the fiscal discipline in terms of our own planning process. Every minister who's planning their budgetary spending has to realize that we have three-year business plans in place, that they're being reinforced by this particular act. This puts teeth in the three-year business planning process and puts discipline into our own particular planning [process].

But that's not in fact what's happened, and these remarks are 18 months old now. In fact, the three-year planning process for the most part has gone right out the window. Certainly that's what the Auditor General is bringing forward in his comments from the recently released '99-2000 Auditor General's report, that in fact the planning process isn't followed.

I used an analogy last night about, you know, if you restrict the amount of money so badly that's going into a program that they can't really do the program properly and then come flying in like some deus ex machina in the last moment and dump a whack of money on these projects, they can't in fact go backwards and do the project they were actually trying to do or offer the services they were actually trying to do or run the program they were actually trying to do. I mean, it's too late. Nine months of the year has gone by. So they take that injection of money and in trying to make some kind of recovery or perhaps looking forward into the future say: "Well, okay. We'll purchase equipment now with this injection of funds, and then we won't have to buy that equipment next year, and that'll free up money to put into programming." You know, this isn't part of the plan, folks.

So I'm really concerned, because I don't see the leadership coming forth from the government that is about a genuine planning process. At the same time, the government puts expectations on a number of groups that they work in the community, certainly on the nonprofit groups, that they're to develop absolutely gold-plated, blue-ribbon, award-winning business plans, and they're to know all this stuff and project three years into the future and absolutely stick to it, because if they don't, they'll get punished. They'll get less grant money. They'll get less contract money. They'll get punished. But nobody's doing that for this government or maybe the government has to pass another piece of legislation to somehow punish themselves, since they seem so keen on somehow passing legislation that's going to restrict them.

Another quote, again from the previous Provincial Treasurer from March of '99, A Plan for a Debt-Free Alberta: "Business plans are the cornerstones of Alberta's prudent fiscal management." Well, I can see that that's what the government wanted to do or thought it was doing, but that's certainly not in fact what it's done. That's what I want to keep calling attention to. The planning process of this government has gone out the window, the baby and the bathwater, because they're not following these plans. They can't, not when the money is coming in such an unstructured and sort of peaks and valleys way.

Here's another comment from A Plan for a Debt-Free Alberta, issued in March of 1999.

Controls on in-year spending increases are legislated. No more than 25% of the economic cushion and any forecast revenue increases over budget can be committed to in-year spending increases or revenue reduction initiatives in a quarterly budget update.

Well, that's all fine and dandy, but even in this past year we saw that the government had to bring in an act in the spring to change its own Fiscal Responsibility Act, because they'd already spent more money than that 25 percent that they'd allowed themselves to. So they had to remove that 25 percent limit. They'd already broken their own rules, so, gosh, we'll just change the legislation temporarily. This is not a plan. This is fudging it after the fact to meet the reality of the choices that have actually been made.

I mean, essentially we've got a government that's operating on a three-month plan, not on a three-year plan. It's on a three-month plan. The amount of money that has been announced as released since – well, let me just pick three months back: September. Okay. Well, at the very end of August we had a whack of stuff come out. Oh, my goodness. There were press releases on the RHA salary settlements for $39 million; a press release on eliminating accumulated deficits of voluntary organizations operating acute care facilities for $8.9 million – I think that's bailing out the RHAs – Children's Forum and children at risk task force report, $3.4 million; community mental health and eating disorders, $13 million; centennial projects, $50 million; seniors' housing and lodge accommodations, $10 million; rent subsidies for low-income households, $2 million; child welfare and handicapped children's services, Children's Forum, children at risk task force report, $29.1 million.

Those are all press releases dated August 31, 2000. All that money poured out in one day. Oh, I'm sorry. I missed one: the Pine Lake tornado disaster recovery program at nine and a half million dollars. That also happened at the same time. Then we had the fire fighting costs, which were announced both at the end of August and on November 14; the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research also at the end of August; Northern Alberta Institute of Technology, August 31; 30 percent reduction in crop insurance premiums for farmers also August 31.

Then we get into September: energy tax refund, $345 million; electricity auction rebate, $60 million; senior supportive housing incentive program, $10 million. Now, that's the one I asked the minister about when we were in supplementary estimates debate. That's the one that looks like the $10 million for seniors has been announced twice, but I don't see more than $10 million forthcoming, so I don't know what that second one was about. Education property tax reduction on September 13 is another announcement; farm income assistance program on October 6; Canada/Alberta infrastructure partnership on October 10. Oh, my goodness, this goes on for pages.

Well, there's no need for me to read this all into the record. I'm sure that the press releases are available. It does go on with another 20 announcements from the end of August up until – the last one I have here is November 14, which is when we started into this session. So over three months all that money was announced. It is a three-month planning process that we're operating under.

How is that manifesting itself? Well, here's the experience that I'm having at the constituency office. All this money is going back into health care. Certainly people were asking for that, and I've asked that money be reinvested into health care. But I have to ask about the planning process that's going on here, because the waiting lists are getting longer, not shorter. So what's going on here?

I mean, I used to phone up and try and argue my case on behalf of my constituents, that they needed to get into the hospital or get a bed or be considered on the waiting list for a particular type of surgery or treatment, and chances four years ago were pretty good that I could actually plead my case well enough to get the person in there. So obviously I'm successful at pleading cases. I don't think my ability there has lessened, but I'll tell you, I cannot get attention for anybody now, for any constituent. In the last six to eight months, nobody moves, no lists move, nobody gets added to them: "Sorry, ma'am; there are 30 people on that waiting list. They're all in as a bad shape as your constituent. Everybody's going to have to wait."

Here's another example: a constituent who has a pinched nerve in their back. They've now been at home since October, I think. They've been told that they'll have to wait until May to see the neurologist to even begin treatment. So here we have a person who is an active, contributing member of society, working hard, paying their taxes, whose now going to be out of commission for – what are we talking? – six, seven months.

Their point to me is: you know, this is costing the system a lot of money. This is costing WCB payments or insurance payments or the insurance coverage from the employer to keep this guy at home waiting to see a doctor. He goes, "You know, it's cheaper in the end run to fly me to Toronto to get the operation, and I'd be back at work in a month or two." At this rate he's not going to be back to work for a year. How is this a good plan? How is this addressing the system, not to mention what that's doing to that person and their quality of life and their family and their friends and their coworkers? How much is that costing, not only in money, which is important, but also in quality of life for them and for everybody around them?

Another example: someone that I work with has recently been diagnosed as a type 2 diabetic. You know, that's a very hard thing to face in your life. It's very difficult, and it's very tricky. At the beginning of this diagnosis to get it right you've got to learn a whole new system of what you eat, when you eat it, and all of this testing that goes on and how you get this right. With type 2 most people start out able to control the diabetes with diet and exercise and very careful testing. For the most part they don't need insulin, although some of them may be receiving medication for a sort of pancreas booster. So you've got to learn a lot when you're first diagnosed with this.

When does this person who's just been diagnosed get in for the educational component, what I call diabetes school, that they get sent to? March. That person has to go five months without the instruction about how they're supposed to manage essentially every waking hour of their life.

They said to their doctor: "Well, what am I supposed to do? How am I supposed to learn all this stuff? I know I'm supposed to be doing this. I know I'm supposed to be careful. You know, you can show me how to do the pinprick test and the pharmacist can show me how to do the test strips and things, but how am I supposed to do all this diet control? How do I learn all of this stuff? Who's going to tell me how to do this?" Well, "Sorry," says the doctor. "I can't get you into this diabetes school until March. I guess you could go to the library and get a book." This is, you know, a thoughtful person that this has happened to; I'm sure they will go and get a book.

But the system obviously intended that there be some intensive counseling around nutrition and diet and exercise and a whole lifestyle change. The system intended that that counseling be available to them very quickly to help them get on the road to managing diabetes. This person is now going to have to wait five months. As described by their doctor, they're a raging diabetic. They're coming up, you know, 10 points higher than where they're supposed to be on their testing scale.

So what's going on? All this money is being put back into the system, yet we're not seeing improvements in the waiting lists. We're not seeing the improvements in treatment that's supposed to happen. We're hearing all the time about the cuts that happened in the mid-90s and the way the nurses were treated. They all left. We can't get them back now. This strikes me as really badly managed. That's my concern.

You know, it's our job here. This is what we're paid to do, to provide leadership and manage this budget carefully on behalf of all Albertans. I don't see the manifestation of that at all, and I certainly don't see it being manifested in a positive way.

We had the government cuts in '93, '94, '95. Money started to be put back in I think it was around '97 or '98. The government is recently going around touting: oh, we're back up to the levels we were at. Well, excuse me. You're back to the levels you were at in '94, which was after the majority of the cuts happened. So it hasn't really been restored back to where it was. Frankly, with the increase in population that we've had in Alberta, which is a good thing and is a good economic driver, the economic calculations that need to be done, the cost of living increases – a budget of a billion dollars in 1992 is more than that in the year 2000. You've got to allow for that cost of living and inflationary rate to be calculated into this.

So where do I see the movement of this government to the point where the health care system is renewed, rejuvenated, remodeled? I never saw that. That's what this was all supposed to be about. We were going to rejuvenate this health care system. We were just going to strip it down to the bones, and we were going to rebuild it right. I'm not seeing that.

The regional health authorities seem to have been the big panacea to this remodeling. Well, there are all kinds of problems involved with the regional health authorities and certainly with reporting and responsibility. Frankly, they may have the responsibility to provide the services, but they're kind of strapped if they don't have the proper finances to do it. How are they supposed to do it? That goes right back to this whole planning cycle. They can plan their little brains out, but if they don't have that sustainable funding, then their plans all fall apart.

When I look at performance measurements, at the performance of the government and of the health care system, I think we're sadly lacking. We're not coming up to the mark there, and in many ways I think we now need to develop different performance measurements.

I will certainly support the money that's in this appropriation bill, but I have serious concerns about the planning process that this government is using right now that is landing us in the position we're in.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak to this bill in Committee of the Whole.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've had some opportunity to speak to these estimates, but you know, I'm not quite done, so I was really pleased that I had this opportunity tonight. I see a few things that I hadn't had a chance to mention.

I wanted to ask the minister about the Western Heritage Centre. I had a call from somebody who lives in Cochrane, and they just asked me what the plans were for the Western Heritage Centre. They've noticed that there are a lot of commercial buildings coming in there, kind of like a strip mall within the Western Heritage Centre. Did you know that? There's a restaurant now and a coffee shop. Something like that is either coming in or it's there, and they're a little worried.

I mean, if that's the goal, to make money there and try and balance - it's lost a lot of money over the years. If that's the goal, then is that what we want to do with museums? Do we want to make them commercialized? Is that the point in bringing those restaurants and commercial stores into the Western Heritage Centre? Now, when they were doing that they said: you know, there are some people who own restaurants in town that are a little worried that that isn't fair competition. That was their concern.

I really hope I get answers to this. I know the Minister of Community Development is going to read Hansard and answer my questions. Hello? Hello? And I don't mean Hansard. They're so good up there.

What else did she say about that? That was her question: what's the purpose of all these stores setting up in the Western Heritage Centre?

The other thing is: how did they get the contracts? Were they tendered out? Did different companies have the opportunity? I know. There's a catering business. That was it. A catering business supposedly gets a contract - and you could have banquets and dinners there. I'm embarrassed to say, married to my cowboy husband, that I haven't been to the Western Heritage Centre. Now, that is a crime, I know, and believe me, when we're in Cochrane next, I know we will. We spent three hours at Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump, and we spent a couple hours in Fort Macleod. [interjection] Oh yes, believe me.

You know what? As much I enjoy it, my husband, that's right up his alley. Anything western, anything native, anything cowboy: that's him. I guess we're on our way to Turner Valley next time. That's in your constituency, Mr. Chairman. You can brag, I know, but I have the honey producers' production plant in Spruce Grove, that I'll give you on a tour of.

So I really hope the minister will read Hansard in case he didn't hear all my questions about that, but that was the call I got from a constituent in Cochrane. So if that's happening, I would just like to know: why? Was it tendered out? I mean, maybe it's not happening, but this person - and I have the record of it in my constituency office - phoned me with these concerns of what's happening there, that it's changing from a museum to a commercial site. They didn't know if they were paying rent and how they got the contract and the catering contract. So if the minister wouldn't mind looking into that and responding, I would really appreciate that.

Another thing I was looking at was the seniors' housing. One of the other things that affects some of my constituents is the Youville home in St. Albert. Believe me, that Youville home has served the St. Albert community and area for a very long time. Regrettably, in the last few years it has not been able to serve the Sturgeon area, but certainly the people in St. Albert it has. In fact, just last month the Youville Sisters handed over the guardianship of it to Caritas Health Group. It was a touching and emotional time, because that has been something the Grey Nuns have done in St. Albert for a long time. They have provided health care for those people in St. Albert and area for a long, long time.

Now, the Youville home is an old building, and I know the board is seriously looking at building a new facility rather than renovating.

It just isn't feasible to renovate, so they're looking at this new building. I am wondering if there will be that centennial legacy funding coming for it, maybe for the legacy that the Grey Nuns have left. Maybe that could possibly be something that they could qualify for, or maybe that's already in the works.

MS BLAKEMAN: That's a credit to you if it is.

MRS. SOETAERT: Well, thank you. Thank you. Edmonton-Centre says it's a credit to me if it is. Well, I thank you for that.

MS BLAKEMAN: You worked on it.

MRS. SOETAERT: I thank you for that, but I would give far more credit to the board and the work that the board has done for the Youville home and certainly the residents and the people who continually work for the Youville home and most definitely the Grey Nuns, first and foremost the Grey Nuns.

My final thing in this opportunity was to talk about Milk River and the infrastructure that is slated . . . [interjection] Which highway is that? That's 4, I believe. You know, I have a map that I'm always going to bring out here just to remember all of those numbers. Of course everyone here knows that highway 794 has changed to 44. For seven years you've been hearing 794, and now it's 44. It was close to being named Soetaert Way, but at the last minute we decided 44 probably would be more practical and proper.

So back to Milk River and highway 4.

10:50

MS BLAKEMAN: Was that in the plan?

MRS. SOETAERT: Milk River?

MS BLAKEMAN: No. Changing the highway numbers.

MRS. SOETAERT: Yes, it was actually a good move, changing the highway numbers.

Now, Milk River, highway 4. Here is a community that for the most part wants the highway to pass - I'd better get this straight in my head - on the east side. The east side would mean going near a graveyard. Maybe there's a big hill that would have to be cut down a bit, worked within. Very few farmsteads disturbed; in fact, I don't think any. That's been the choice of most of the people in that community. Instead, the department has made it its priority to go on the west side, where a railroad track will have to be moved and access to the grain elevators will now be difficult. Farmers will have to travel, like, eight miles around to get to the grain elevators, where it used to be half a mile. About four or six farmsteads will be affected. Certainly one will be gone totally. The farmstead will be gone because of this highway.

The reason? I can't find out why. It isn't for financial reasons. It is more expensive to move the railroad tracks, to have more accesses, and to buy out those properties than it would be to go on the other side. People from the town have told me that it's political interference, that that's what happened, that there are one or two high-profile people down there who want it going on the west side rather than the east side. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would hope that the Minister of Infrastructure takes a second look at this, because this has split the town. This is affecting farmers. As a matter of fact, the town council of Warner had a vote: 5 to 6 in favour of lobbying the government to change that route. Instead of where the minister has decided to put it, on the west side, the county of Warner has asked the government to change their mind and put it on the east side.

Those are the people who live there. Those are the people who have to access that town, more so than the people traveling by.

I know there's a tourist information centre there, and I know that's what some people want people to see as they go by. I do know that if you want to access that information centre, you will, but if you're on that highway – and that's going to be part of the big Canamex – you're really not stopping at the tourist information centre. You're a big heavy truck; you're going through. You are not going to cross all the overpasses to go into town. But if you are a tourist looking for information on Writing-on-Stone provincial park or you want to canoe the Milk River, that's when you go into that wonderful tourist centre and get great maps.

I've actually canoed that Milk River. Some parts of it were pretty slow, and some parts of it were pretty good. They woke me up. Tipped only a couple of times. Tells you what a poor canoer I am.

The idea that I'm trying to point out here is that I know this is slated to be done next spring. I know that it is going on the wrong side of that town. I know that the majority of the people do not want it, and it's just shades of – I don't know. I don't know why. It's going to be more expensive to do it that way. It is going to disrupt more people, and local politicians in the county of Warner have said: we don't want it either for our farms. It's not convenient either. So, Mr. Chairman, I'm really worried about that.

If we had more time and a longer session, it would be a question in question period. Then I would most certainly hope to get a real answer from the minister. I can't get a cost-benefit analysis from him. You know why? Because I don't believe it's done. I think it is political pressure from a small group, who have insisted that the minister go by the west route come heck or high water, do it so that people can see the tourist centre and the dinosaur as they go by. That does not serve that community. It does not serve the people traveling. It does not serve industry as they go by. It just serves a couple of people, who for reasons I don't know have decided that that priority is more important than people, than established farms that have been there for decades.

I don't know how to get him to change his mind on that. I don't know what else I can do. As the critic of that, as a person who has listened to so many people – I've read all the articles from Milk River. People have called me. I know Lethbridge-East has a file that thick on it. I'm really worried about what's happening in Milk River. In the long run we're going to pay more and it will be inconvenient for people and I think it will take years, if that goes through, for that town to heal all the hurts that have happened over that highway. Now, isn't that a pity.

I'll tell you that when they decided to finally rebuild highway 794, the engineer said to me: we have never had such an easy time of talking to local people as to where their driveways will have to be put, as to whose yards will have to be cut up a bit; never had such an easy time planning a highway. Because the community asked for it and needed it. That's what happened.

In this case the community does not want the highway on that side. That's why it will be headache upon headache and heartache upon heartache for the people. I hope the minister is listening.

So, Mr. Chairman, those were three more points that I'm glad I've had the opportunity to speak to tonight. I hope the Minister of Infrastructure does a second think on this, because certainly the people of Milk River deserve that. I would expect their MLA should be speaking for them, as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, would like to add some additional comments to supplementary estimates this evening. Listening to the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert reminded me of my trip to Milk River and a stop at the local Co-op gas station where the operator of that station, unsolicited, came out with this huge barrage of comments about that highway. Certainly what I heard from him echoes what we've heard this evening from my colleague. I think she has hit the nail on the head there. It is certainly a consideration for the minister in terms of whether or not they're going to go ahead with the proposed plans as they've been outlined. I think she is right: it has divided the community. People are very upset. This fellow told me that he is quite prepared to show his displeasure when it comes to the next election. So we'll see what happens there.

Also, once he got on a tear about the highway, he said: I've got more concerns about this government. He had issues around health care, issues that I don't see having been addressed in these estimates. Those were about access to health care for rural communities, once again. We've heard those concerns in the past, Mr. Chairman. What he said to me was that he hopes that if the Premier ever breaks his leg, he does it down in that backcountry. He's going to throw him into the back of the pickup truck and take him over the country roads to the local hospital, and then the government will have an appreciation for how necessary tertiary care is in rural communities.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly have to agree that all the money being asked for and thrown back into health care hasn't addressed outstanding issues at all. In fact, it was last night that I got a call from a local constituent who called me up at home on a rant and didn't even say, "Hi, how are you?" She just said her name and went into the concerns she had about her sister, who had recently broken her ankle in three spots and had been sitting in the University hospital for 36 hours after having been transferred from the Grey Nuns, which was a concern that I talked about the last time I talked in supplementary estimates, about how we can't get adequate care at our local hospital. Many people are being shipped out to the U, and what that does is add great stress and strain on families and pain certainly for the patient and uncertainty in terms of when and how they're going to be properly cared for.

Well, she was very concerned because, of course, her sister needs an operation to set the bones, and after 36 hours it looked like there was no end in sight. She called me at about 7 o'clock at night. Of course, unless it was an extreme emergency, there would be no further operations that evening, and she was wondering how long this was going to go on. Her sister was doped up regularly, so at least she wasn't in a great deal of pain, but of course she was missing work, not starting the healing process, looking forward to a recovery time that would be substantially longer than it would have been had the bones been set when the accident happened, and with no end in sight, Mr. Chairman.

I said to her that the good news was that her sister hadn't been sent home. We have had several instances where people with broken legs or ankles or bones in their feet have been sent home to wait until they could be called back into surgery, which doesn't seem to be a very efficient use of dollars, Mr. Chairman. We certainly don't see those kinds of concerns being addressed in these supplementary estimates.

So what I said to her was that it isn't all bad news in terms of how the process is working right now and that she needed to outline, write down a chronology of what had happened to her sister and follow it up as they go through the process so that it can be brought to the minister of health's attention. We don't seem to be getting any kind of a focus on those kinds of issues in this Legislature, regardless of the money being dumped back into the system. We're not meeting the primary needs of people in need on any given day in this province, Mr. Chairman, and that is really unfortunate.

This woman was absolutely outraged. She said that her sister has to hobble to the washroom on one leg while the other one is in a great deal of pain through the hobbling process, having been broken in three places. She's on very heavy painkillers. They are worried about the withdrawal symptoms afterwards. She's away from her home, away from her family, away from her children. Her husband is having to take time off work, so now they've got two incomes that are in jeopardy, and the situation is completely disruptive for the entire family, Mr. Chairman. That's just this week's bad-news story about health care in this province, which none of these additional dollars seems to have adequately addressed.

I'll leave health care for the time being, because I really want to get back to the supplementary estimates on Environment. I didn't have much of an opportunity the other evening to speak to the Environment estimates because of the number of departments that we had to go through in that evening. I do want to come back and address some of the issues in fire fighting, which is where the dollars have been asked for in these estimates.

What we see here is a 77 percent increase in the funding asked for in fire fighting. Now, nobody wants to complain about dollars asked for in fire fighting, Mr. Chairman, because we all know how needed and necessary fire fighting is in the province of Alberta for many reasons, not just to preserve the forests but to preserve the forest industry, often to preserve wildlife and other agricultural land uses and buildings and towns. We want fire protection, but we also want estimates and costs for fire protection to be at least reasonably accurate, to be based on best case scenarios. It isn't just me asking for this. We literally see this document for the second year in a row in the Auditor General's report.

If we take a look at the annual report of the Auditor General, 1999-2000, we see that on page 104 they talk about the financial administration of fire fighting. What the Auditor General talks about there is that the year previous, being the '99-2000 year, five recommendations were made by the department regarding the financial administration of fire fighting. In addition to these recommendations, the AG is documenting that "the Department received dozens of other fire fighting-related recommendations as the result of internal operational reviews." Good to do internal operational reviews. Good to incorporate those recommendations. So what's happened so far? Well, really nothing, Mr. Chairman.

What the Auditor General goes on to say is that in order to give the Department time to decide its priorities and to implement changes, we will wait until 2000-01 to follow up progress against our recommendations.

So what we have is a report that came out for the '99-2000 year where there were a number of recommendations, more internal recommendations. By the time of printing of the 2000-2001 AG's report nothing has happened so far. Let's hope that some of those recommendations are implemented quickly, Mr. Chairman, because certainly some of them are very, very easy to implement.

If we go back and take a look at the annual report of the Auditor General of Alberta, 1998-1999, we actually see those recommendations for what they are. Some of them I did mention briefly in my comments the other night in terms of fire fighting, but they certainly deserve a little more attention.

We want to know what the status is, Mr. Chairman, of addressing the recommendations from the '98-99 Auditor General's report. We want to know why these recommendations haven't been implemented, the one out of five or one out of any of the internal dozens of recommendations that were made, by this point in time. They're quite easy to take a look at, quite easy to process, and just simply haven't been met at this time.

It actually shows on page 150 of the '98-99 report recommendation 27, where the AG states that it is recommended that the Department of Environment budget for the expected annual fire fighting costs based on the most current information. Further, it is recommended that the fire fighting budget be subject to legislative approval, including approval for any supplemental estimates required during the year.

That recommendation is broken down into the five subrecommendations that the AG refers to in the subsequent year's report.

So what does he ask for first? He says that in his view "the fire fighting budget should be controlled by the Legislative vote process." Well, what a good idea, Mr. Chairman, something we've asked for on this side of the House many times. We know that the government doesn't like that kind of scrutiny and doesn't like to have to justify what they're doing, but in fact it's the best way to spend the dollars of the people of this province, and fire fighting is no exception.

What we see is that the fund that the dollars come out of provides the opportunity for expenditure without any legislative approval at all. At this time "it is a fund to be distributed at the discretion of the Minister, subject to guidelines established by Treasury Board." The AG believes, as we do, that the controls embodied in the annual estimates and the vote process are important to ensuring accountability throughout the process, Mr. Chairman. We have asked for more accountability in any number of instances, not just in this department but in many departments, and we see this backed up by the Auditor General.

What he goes on to talk about, too, is that "the Ministry is required to operate financially within centrally approved financial parameters" and having a separate fund arrangement for fire fighting "offers significantly greater flexibility than budgeting through the Legislative vote process." Well, the minister of course likes to have that kind of flexibility, because they can do what they want, when they want, how they want, and easily come back and ask for more money. It isn't a case where it's not possible for them to budget reasonably from year to year.

The AG goes on to talk about how in fact "the Department has the ability to forecast a severe fire season early in the fiscal year," which is a little bit of what I talked about before. The budget is brought in early in the year, before March. That's prior to fire season. We know what a lot of the weather conditions are at that time. You can make estimates based on several of the last years' fire-fighting expenses and rainfalls, and we know what the precipitation load has been in the province. We know where the groundwater tables are. There's good science, where we can make excellent projections in terms of what supplemental estimates might be needed, what costs there are that could be incurred at that time and should be incorporated into the budget at that time, not in a separate fund, as the minister so likes to do.

So preparing supplemental estimates, then, should not be a compelling reason to avoid the legislative process. This is a process that can easily be incorporated into budgets. If fire seasons then turn out to be less than what were expected or budgeted for, unused funds can just go back, and we'd be happy to support that, Mr. Chairman. I think it would be a really good idea.

He goes on to talk about how "best estimates for the year should form the budget request." Well, we've talked about that a lot. It's just best practice, good business practice, reasonable ways to anticipate annual fire-fighting responsibilities, and they are. As the AG says, fire fighting responsibilities are routine in the sense that the department has to address these challenges each and every year.

He goes on to talk about how “prudent management and accountability dictate that an organization should budget for its expected annual expenditures based on the most current information available.” Well, that’s what you do in your household. That’s what you should be doing in government, and certainly fires are no exception, Mr. Chairman. Easy to do that. He talks about, gives them good documentation in terms of the guidelines they should use. He talks about calculating the “recent historical results plus sophisticated predictive capacity based on systems that monitor and analyze weather,” all of which the department has, all of which they do a good job at. Not just weather but vegetation and all the other significant forest fire factors, which we have gone over in detail in budget estimates and which the minister is well aware of.

They can’t always predict the severity of a fire with the actual outcome of the cost for the season, but there is a framework arranged so that they can predict what is reasonable. So they can make a best estimate, which is what a budget is supposed to be, which is why they could incorporate it in the budgetary process rather than going through the separate fund that they estimate under now.

So having done that, then why do they ask for less money than they’re going to need? We don’t know the answer to that, Mr. Chairman, but we would expect those answers to be forthcoming fairly soon because we are soon going to be at another budget year and the start of another fire season. We want to ensure that we get a good estimate, the best possible estimate available from the department on that.

The AG goes on to talk about: “upcoming replacements and upgrades should also be budgeted.” Well, I talked about that the other day just briefly when we talked about improvements to fire airstrips. The AG agrees. He says:

Of increasing concern in recent years, the Department needs to plan for the replacement or upgrade of its fire fighting infrastructure. For example, the Department feels that community airports need to be upgraded and aircraft and equipment replaced. These types of expenditure should also be budgeted annually as they support the essential service.

Airstrips do not disintegrate overnight. There’s an erosion over time. There is a maintenance and upkeep standard that needs to be met, and you don’t find out about that in one day or yesterday. There’s a building process time for that, and as you would maintain any other type of infrastructure like roads, you should be maintaining fire-fighting infrastructure. All of that is completely predictable, Mr. Chairman, and certainly the department is able to forecast those in advance. So it is absolutely inexcusable that we see those kinds of costs coming forward in an estimate budget.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Now, the other point that he makes is that “financial reporting issues can also be resolved through Departmental budgeting.” What that means is that solutions to existing financial reporting issues that we’ve heard about repeatedly could easily be taken care of if they’d just do adequate budgeting. If they did that, if they did forecasting for fires in a predictable kind of fashion, like we see other estimates coming through at budget time, then the need for the enhancement fund should also be reviewed, which is also one of the AG’s recommendations. There wouldn’t be a need for this large fund if they did proper budgeting, and we think that the department should certainly take a look at this.

A few other questions that I would like to address before I run out of time. Does the department continue to tender for contract services, or does it now issue requests for proposals, as recommended by the Auditor General? We would like that cleared up. Certainly we would suggest that the department follow the Auditor General’s recommendations. We would like to know what services are tendered. Hopefully, I’ll get answers to those questions in a timely fashion. I don’t want to have to wait to put it in a written question in the next legislative session.

Also, in addition to that, for which services is a request for proposals issued? So if we could get that information.

Does the department do a complete cost-benefit analysis, being sure to consider all relevant data, before contracting out services? The AG pointed out that the analysis that the department has been doing was not adequate and was sometimes done after the services had been contracted out. Easy to clean that up, Mr. Chairman, and I would like to see that addressed.

A couple of questions. What is the minister’s projected estimate of the amount of Alberta’s forest that will be burnt in the next five, 10, and 20 years? I ask that, Mr. Chairman, because these estimates must be taken into account when we talk about timber allocations and the impact of various commercial and recreational activities on Alberta’s green spaces. This is going to be critical in the years to come. You know, when we talk to industry, they talk all the time about the overallocation of the timber resources. Every time we have a large forest fire, that significantly bites into their inventories and puts more pressure on areas to be developed in terms of timber resources, which puts more pressure on lack of access for commercial and recreational activities in other areas.

It also puts more pressure on protected spaces, and that is something this Assembly knows we are particularly concerned about. We need to start doing some adequate forecasting in these areas, because we have far too many requests for our green spaces now. The landscape is under a great deal of pressure, and that puts other species at risk in the province. We have seen the consequences of that in the past. We can completely alleviate those kinds of pressures with proper planning. That’s all it takes, Mr. Chairman. Not lobbying by specific groups but proper planning that takes into account the sustainability of the landscape of the province in a manner in which we want it to go forward for not just the next five years but for our children and for their children. This is an issue that this government has neglected to take a look at. They seem to plan in election-year cycles rather than in viable, operational cycles that would maintain the viability of Alberta landscapes for all users, not just for environmental users or for species but also for agricultural users, for commercial users, and for sustainability in terms of access to water and the land.

Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. I’ve been sitting and wondering whether I was going to get an opportunity. My colleague had so many questions and so many excellent comments that I thought I might not be afforded this last-gasp opportunity to raise some concerns and ask some questions before we retire the supplementary estimates for 2000.

MR. SMITH: The last time in your career.

MR. DICKSON: You know, I try hard not to wallow in nostalgia, Mr. Chairman, and I’m encouraged to do exactly that by the Minister of Gaming. If I had ever realized that being at the Tuxis and older boys’ parliament with the distinguished Minister of Gaming would land me here at 11:19 a month before Christmas, I might have taken some different choices in my life. At the time I'm sure he told me he was the leader of men, and I thought that when he came to the Legislature, I should come as well.

MRS. SOETAERT: You were here before him.

MR. DICKSON: Well, that's true too.

There were a couple of observations I wanted to make when we're dealing with supplementary supply, and I might start by saying how disappointed so many Calgarians were when there was a meeting at what's now called, I think, the Euro-Canadian club, in lovely Calgary-Bow on the banks of the Bow River. This happened about a month ago. The school community in Calgary got very excited, Mr. Chairman, because word went out, word spread out, fanned out through the community like a brushfire. The word was that the Deputy Minister of Infrastructure and the Deputy Minister of Learning were coming to Calgary to meet with the Calgary school community.

We must have had about 400 people in a room. There were people from the Calgary public school board, there were many, many school council chairs, and there were parents, teachers, and representatives of the teaching profession. I recognized a couple of school principals I knew. They were there as part of the LEAP program. You'd know, Mr. Chairman, that in Calgary the LEAP program is the device that's been developed by the Calgary board of education to try and decide how they go about determining what schools should close.

Obviously this is something that aroused a lot of interest. I'm sure in Calgary-Fish Creek it may not be so much a problem, but I know in some communities it is. I see my friend from Calgary-Fort there. He represents some of those older communities where we don't have as many children now as would have been the case a long time before.

In any event, I attended the Friday night of this Friday night and Saturday meeting. People were very interested to hear what was going to happen with respect to what the announcement was going to be in terms of the school utilization formula. What's happening is we have too many new areas in Calgary that cannot get a school, and we understand the province is saying: well, we're using the school utilization formula, and you'll get no new schools in Calgary until you have a higher rate of utilization. What was so distressing is that the government has been promising for at least the last year and a half that the school utilization formula would be revised, and every government minister – and maybe, Mr. Chairman, even you've shared this in your constituency – people have said that the formula is too arbitrary; it doesn't accurately reflect lots of ways that our public schools are being used on a meritorious basis, but they don't get credit under that existing formula. So the government had said that we will import some more flexibility.

Now, we happen to be lucky to have here a former chairman of the Calgary board of education as I look around. We have expertise here. I don't know whether we'll hear from the Minister of Learning here tonight, but maybe the former, former, former, former chairman of the Calgary board of education can tell us what's wrong with that school utilization formula. All the school councils in Calgary know it, and the minister has acknowledged it.

So I specifically went to the Euro-Canadian club because I thought we were going to have at least the outline presented to all of this Calgary school community of what the new school utilization formula would look like. I sat there and I listened to the Deputy Minister of Learning and the Deputy Minister of Infrastructure, and they teased us. They said: well, we continue to work on this; there will be changes. I thought, Mr. Chairman: what an insult to these people who have come out, who have been waiting for an announcement of what the changes are going to be. You have all of these key stakeholders, to use the government parlance, in education, and we had no news to share with them. The government wouldn't tell us what that formula is going to be changed to, what the changes are going to be. What does that show us?

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

Mr. Chairman, I'm so pleased to see you in the chair this evening, and I'm hopeful that you're going to have some opportunity to offer some input in this because of your experience in education.

I'm distressed. In the supplementary supply debate this would have been, if you like – in law there's an expression called last clear chance. This was the Minister of Infrastructure's and the Minister of Learning's last clear chance to come in front of this Assembly and tell us what the changes would be to the school utilization formula. As I look around, the associate minister of health may know what that new school utilization formula looks like. Our new colleague from Red Deer: somebody may have shared with her when she was working hard in the by-election campaign and given her some ammunition so that when she went door-to-door and people complained about education, she'd be able to say: you know, there's going to be a new school utilization formula, these are the new criteria, and this is how it's going to apply and this is when it's going to kick in. Maybe she has that information. I don't have it. Maybe the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake has got that information.

This is too much like the Whack-a-Mole game. I mean, we can go around asking people. I don't know who has the secret. I don't know who knows that information. So if somebody could put their hand up, it would save having to go from member to member to member to find out who has that information. But I don't think it should be such a game; do you, members? Do you think it should be so tough to find out what's happening with the school utilization formula? We need to know what's going on with that school utilization formula, and I haven't heard.

The other meeting that I found instructive was going to Central Memorial high school. It was a meeting organized by SPEAK, Support Public Education – Act for Kids. Once again a lot of school counselor representatives came together, and lots of concerns about overcrowded classrooms. Where in Bill 28, anywhere in this little flimsy four pages – I mean, you lose it. It's not even substantial enough to be a bookmark, it's such a skinny bill. Where in Bill 28 is anything that's going to address overcrowded classrooms? There's nothing that addresses the school utilization formula. So the minister comes along and asks for the extraordinary kind of relief, more dough, when we don't have a clear sense of answers to those questions.

All members maybe would want to spend a minute and reflect on this process. Is there anybody dissatisfied with this budget process, Mr. Chairman? Is there anybody dissatisfied with this process?

AN HON. MEMBER: Satisfied or dissatisfied?

MR. DICKSON: Dissatisfied with the process.

MRS. SOETAERT: I am.

MR. DICKSON: Anybody else dissatisfied by the process?

Chairman's Ruling Rhetorical Questions

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, I don't know where it is that you're authorized to call these sort of impromptu votes. I think hon. members should know by now that rhetorical questions are not to be answered. I would ask the hon. member not to awaken too many people by your votes.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, you've caught me out, and I confess what I was hoping to do was to economize on time. The evening is late, and I thought if I could integrate some of the concerns that the government members had in my comments, we'd be able to save 20 or 30 other speeches that are going to be tried to be jammed in, but they're going to have to do it on their own. I tried.

MR. DICKSON: The point is this. We ask questions around the supplementary estimates, and do we get answers, Mr. Chairman? You will remember back to Monday evening, November 20 – this is only a couple of days ago – we were looking for answers from the Health and Wellness minister, and we didn't get them. If you look through Hansard, the kinds of things that call out for some explanation. We have the Minister of Health and Wellness on November 20 telling us that "our health authorities are doing a remarkable job in attracting physicians to this province."

Well, Mr. Chairman, in downtown Calgary we have a substantial number of foreign-trained physicians. Why don't we spend a fraction of the dollars that we pay headhunters to send off to South Africa to find physicians that we sort of take away from those countries that also need physicians? Why don't we recognize that in our communities, certainly in Calgary, there are plenty of people who have medical training, who have practised as physicians?

I remember a reporter telling me he was at the Westin hotel in Calgary, and there was a conference with physicians talking about the challenges of rural practice. People from all over the world were there. He left the conference, and the parking lot attendant setting up the bill had been a doctor in another country. This is the guy in the little booth in the parking lot taking the ticket and collecting payment for somebody parking at the Westin hotel. The reporter started talking to this fellow, and he explained how he had come from another country, had been trained as a physician, had practised in that other country, and has been waiting over four years to try to be accredited in Canada.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, if we spent just a fraction of the dollars we spend on headhunters, we'd be able to utilize some of the talent of those new Canadians, those people who are looking for work. And I'm embarrassed as an Albertan that that sort of thing happens and we don't do a better job with that.

Mr. Chairman, there were a couple of other things I was going to ask. The Minister of Municipal Affairs the other night told us about some of the reasons why he was looking for additional funding. What I didn't hear him say and what I was waiting for was a specific response to the recommendation from the Information and Privacy Commissioner. That report landed on our desk maybe last Wednesday or Thursday. [interjections] Well, I'm talking about what's missing, hon. minister, through the chair. What I'm talking about is that there was a recommendation from the Information and Privacy Commissioner of this province, who challenged the government again and said it's important that this province deal with the protection of privacy in the nonpublic sector. That's a recommendation he's continued to make.

You know, we've heard comments that this is something government is working on, but the reality, Minister of Municipal Affairs, through the chair, is that other provinces in fact are holding public hearings. Other provinces are in a very public way moving towards legislation. I saw a draft bill the other day from Saskatchewan and draft legislation from Ontario. This Minister of Municipal Affairs isn't providing us with any information in that respect, and it makes it tough to deal with supplementary supply.

The Minister of Health and Wellness told us the other day that one of the things that's going to happen is $13 million for the Alberta Mental Health Board to enhance community programs for people suffering. My question would be: why wasn't that part of the budget? Why wasn't that dealt with in March of 2000? The mental health crisis in this province is no more aggravated in November of 2000 than it was in March of 2000. Mr. Chairman, why would it be that that sort of thing couldn't be addressed then?

The Building Better Bridges report identified higher wages, so we see some provision for that in the supplementary estimates and in the appropriation bill. Why didn't we deal with that in March? You know, that's not in the category of a forest fire. I mean, that's something that could have been addressed then.

Mr. Chairman, I'd ask some questions about what was happening with Bill 40 and the fact that regional health authorities geared up, did in-service training, did a lot of work to prepare for the advent of Bill 40. December 15 was to be the date for proclamation of that legislation. It hasn't been proclaimed. We understand the deadline is off. What are the regional health authorities to do? They need certainty, and they're not getting it from this government. One would think that would be something government would be prepared to come in and talk about and to tell us.

Mr. Chairman, rent subsidies for low-income households. We've got a provision in an announcement made August 31, 2000. What I want to ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs, the Minister of Infrastructure – I read that the Member for Fort McMurray, for the Wood Buffalo area, is talking about calling for rent controls. I applaud his advocacy on behalf of constituents who can't find an affordable place to live. He's doing what an MLA is supposed to do: he's raising those concerns and he's looking for answers.

Well, in Calgary-Buffalo over 75 percent of my constituents are renters. Many of them are facing dramatic rent increases, and that was before the KEP came along and the 20 percent further increase in electricity rates and 35 percent increase in natural gas rates. Those costs are all being passed on to my tenants. Where's the government remedy to deal with that? Maybe the member from the Wood Buffalo region has got some assurances that that's going to be addressed in some concrete way. I haven't heard them in this Assembly. I don't see that being addressed in a supplementary estimate package. Those are issues that are important to people not just in Fort McMurray but in downtown Calgary and I expect in Edmonton. Those are issues that we should be dealing with, we should be getting answers for, and I don't see them, Mr. Chairman.

It seems to me that for persons with developmental disabilities, we continue to have a real problem there, Mr. Chairman. I'll give credit to the government that they've decided to supplement the pathetically low salaries that are paid to people who work in that area, and that's positive. But we have a real problem with governance. I see the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness opposite, and he's working furiously away at his desk. He may be penning a note to the Provincial Treasurer this very moment saying: when are we going to clean up the mess that's been created with that structure of local PDD boards?

I'd remind members that when the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness came to Calgary and talked to those groups, people got really excited. They thought: here's a fellow who's taken the trouble to come and listen. I think everybody was impressed. Everybody I talked to that met the Associate Minister of Health of Wellness was impressed. They got a bit excited when they heard the report was coming. But the difficulty is that we don't see any action on cleaning up the mess with governance.

Mr. Chairman, it's a good thing it's committee. I may get up again. Thank you very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a real pleasure to stand this evening and speak to the supplementary estimates legislation. It's important that we look at some of the issues that come up in terms of how the allocations are put out.

We notice that as we get into looking at, say, the Infrastructure dollars, there's a number of values that go out in terms of the allocation to different institutions. What you have to do is begin to question the methods that they're using and the protocol that they use to determine which institutions get their dollars and which do not.

I notice the dollars that are going out to NAIT to expand the capacity to put out a high-tech program, yet when it came time to do the funding for the University of Lethbridge's library, this group failed to provide the dollars to do that. What they did was allow them to borrow the money, and then they have to pay it back out of their operating grant. Well, you know, that's kind of creating a double standard as you go across and develop different methods of putting together the infrastructure that's necessary for the support of the education programs, especially the advanced education programs, in our province. If they want to finance these kinds of things over time and allow for local discretion to build their infrastructure with the materials they're putting together, what they have to do is look at the possibility of developing a per unit funding so they end up with a formula that allows them to have certain dollars for capital just the way they now have certain dollars for their operating grant.

But effectively what they've done at the University of Lethbridge is reduce the operating grant now by the amount of money that is necessary to service a debt load that's there because of the obligation they have now when they're building their new library. If you have to look at advanced education institutions, I don't think there's any part that's more critical to the appropriate and proper functioning of a university than a library that's adequate, a library that is modern, a library that has the kind of volumes that will broadly support the different programs that are being offered by the institution.

You know, we look at the University of Lethbridge, and they were always ranked quite high for the midsized university category, but one of the criteria that always came out in terms of their ranking was the fact that their library resources were limited. They didn't have what was considered an adequate library service for their students when they were compared to the other midsized universities across the country. We have to look at it and see how these kinds of priorities get put in place.

When we were in Committee of Supply, I also mentioned the fact that I was quite disappointed in the way the dollars were allocated to the income support or the supplementary payment to the agricultural sector this fall. What they did was just basically pay it on the past list of eligible farmers. Yet we look at the turnover of land in the province, and a number of individuals were affected very badly by that. They were farming new land this year that they didn't get payments on because the list was made up of the people who farmed land in 1999. What in essence we did was we had some leakage out of those dollars to the nonag sector, and the individuals who were farming the year before were given these dollars.

I guess, Mr. Chairman, what we're really saying here in these two examples I give is that as we go through the initial budgeting process to give our budget debate and the budget authorization in the spring session and then we look at the potential for supplementary supply, we have to look at it also in terms of how those additional dollars either support or violate the kind of parameters that were put in place for the budgeting we had in the spring. I guess the formulas and the allocation procedures that are used in the initial budget don't really seem to follow as we get into looking at supplementary estimates and supplementary dollars to kind of fill in the needs of the province as we get to the subsequent opportunities to spend. These are also just a function of whether or not we happen to be having a good revenue year, and we get to spend that extra 25 percent and how it works out. You know, we're now down to the point where the contingency fund in the . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: I'm sorry to interrupt the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, but under Standing Order 61(4) I must put the question proposing the approval of the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for consideration by the Committee of the Whole. Does the committee approve the following appropriation bill: Bill 28, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2000 (No. 2). All those in favour, please say aye.

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE CHAIRMAN: Those opposed, please say no. Carried.
Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee do now rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. TANNAS: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports Bill 28.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? Carried.

[At 11:47 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, November 23, 2000 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 00/11/23
 [The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O divine Father, as we conclude our work and prepare to return to our constituencies, help us to draw strength from the opportunities to renew our friendships and acquaintances with the people we were elected to serve. Guide us to reflect upon Thy bounty so that we may more deeply appreciate how fortunate we are to live in and to serve in Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

Hon. members, I'm pleased to acknowledge that today, November 23, is the 13th anniversary of the hon. Member for Drumheller-Chinook, the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. She was first elected to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta in the by-election of November 23, 1987.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly Jeanette Fuhr, Bruce Fuhr, Murray Kulak, and Gerry Levasseur. These four generous individuals participated in an auction to raise funds in support of Team Canada and their preparations for the 2000 Culinary Olympics. Thanks in part to the support from good people like our guests today, Team Canada had an excellent showing at the Olympics held recently in Erfurt, Germany. The team placed fourth overall and came home with one grand gold, three gold, and one silver medal in the various competitions. Our visitors contributed to the team's efforts by bidding on lunch with the Premier, and I'm very pleased to be able to welcome them here today. Earlier I had the opportunity of sharing a meal with them. They're seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I ask you to please join me in offering them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed truly a real honour and pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all Members of this Legislative Assembly two very special people from the constituency of Vegreville-Viking seated in your gallery, a former MLA that served in this Legislature from 1971-86, Mr. John Batiuk and his wife, Rose. Mr. Batiuk and his very supportive wife, Rose, set the very high standard of work ethic and dedication to constituents in the former constituency of Vegreville, which now forms the larger constituency of Vegreville-Viking. I wish them all the best and good health. I know they have risen in the Assembly to accept the warm response, but please give them another hearty support.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and to members of this Assembly members of the Northern Alberta Development Council that are seated in your gallery as well. The NADC covers 60 percent of the geographical mass of this province and yet has a population of only 10 percent of our province. The members of the public that represent the NADC are here today. I would ask them to stand as I call their names. Representing Fort McMurray we have Art Avery. We have Doris Courtoreille from Kinuso; Berkley Ferguson from Boyle; Gerald McIvor, vice-chair of the NADC, from Whitecourt; Pete Merlo from Grande Prairie; Mike Procter from Peace River; and Al Toews from Fort Vermilion. Also here today from the NADC based in Peace River are Pat Nelson, Audrey DeWit, and Brad Bishop from our staff. They bring a wealth of experience, and I ask them all to stand to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented on osteoporosis and mature women's health on November 22 be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Alberta Government to take an enlightened preventative approach and add the newer and more effective medications and therapies to the Alberta Drug List to ensure the health of an aging society.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had tabled a petition yesterday with respect to a relocation of patients at unit 47 of the Foothills hospital. I'd ask that that now be read and received, please.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Calgary Regional Health Authority (CRHA) to reconsider the relocation of Unit 47 of the Foothills Hospital.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition which I presented to this Assembly on November 22, 2000, requesting that the provincial government stop promoting private health care now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I tabled yesterday be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Provincial Treasurer.

Bill 30Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000 (No. 2)

DR. WEST: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 30, the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000 (No. 2). This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will enable us to deliver the tax rebate to Albertans, some $690 million in two cheques of $150, the first of which is going out today. This bill defines the eligibility for that. It is required in order that the federal government will use their list of tax filers to deliver this out of Winnipeg. I'd be pleased to say that that involves 2.3 million people in the deliverance of these cheques.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to rise and table the appropriate number of copies of three reports: our response to recommendations of the Auditor General; the outline of the process and initiatives for addressing the child welfare caseload growth report, Connecting the Dots; and, finally, our response for notice of implementation for the contract wage enhancement amount announced earlier this month.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. One is the CFB West Master Plan supporting information document outlining the historic dedication for the military base in Calgary.

The second tabling I have, Mr. Speaker, is the minutes of the meeting of July 18, 2000, of the Citizen's Advisory Roundtable outlining the outstanding issues with respect to base development and community input.

1:40

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table some more monthly bill comparisons which have been supplied by ATCO Electric in their hearing on the regulated rate option before the EUB comparing the proposed price schedule for a consumer of 600 to 1,500 to 13,000 kilowatt hours of electricity.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got three documents to table. The first tabling is a document called Boyle McCauley Health Centre Annual Review. This community-owned health centre responds to the unique needs of Edmonton's inner-city residents through a wide range of holistic and accessible services in an effective and compassionate manner.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a copy of a letter to the Premier from Sylvia Campbell, president of the Southern Alberta

Environmental Group. This group is asking the Premier to commission a public review of the environmental, health, and social consequences and impact of factory farming and industrial livestock operations in Alberta.

The third and final document, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from Wayne Magnuson of Calgary requesting me to point out to the Premier that the provincial prosperity is passing by hungry children of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings, and I'll proceed as quickly as I can.

Firstly, a set of amendments that the opposition puts forward in the spirit of constructive opposition to Bill 29, the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2000.

Secondly, a copy of the Duty Counsel Manual that's produced by the Legal Aid Society of Alberta.

Next, a series of articles with respect to the Lougheed Building and the importance of the Lougheed Building being preserved. Firstly, an editorial from the Calgary Herald, May 29, 1999. Next, an excerpt from Legacy magazine, November 19, '99, entitled Time for a Change: The Alberta Historical Resources Act. Next, a Calgary Herald editorial, February 2, 1999, Historic Deal: Saving the Lougheed Would Set a Valuable Precedent. Next, an excerpt from Alberta Views magazine entitled Please Save the Grand/Lougheed. Next, an article which appeared in Legacy magazine, February 2000, entitled Time for a Change. Next, an opinion piece by Professor Donald B. Smith, department of history, University of Calgary, entitled Spare the Lougheed. Further, an editorial, Calgary Herald, November 5, 1999: Razing the Lougheed Building Demolishes a Part of Us All. And finally, an excerpt from a book entitled Calgary's Century: Calgary in the Twentieth Century from the vantage point of one of Alberta's most historic buildings.

Finally, Mr. Speaker – and thank you very much for your patience – the results of the Edmonton-Meadowlark constituency questionnaire conducted in October 2000 and submitted on behalf of my colleague for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I have four separate tablings. The first tabling is particularly significant as today the Premier and the Treasurer announced a survey for Albertans. Well, I have just completed a survey of the constituents of Edmonton-Glenora. I'd like to table the results of that survey. It clearly shows that the priorities are targeting spending on priority programs, the elimination of health care premiums, and the reduction of postsecondary tuition fees.

Mr. Speaker, the second tabling I have is correspondence from Chantelle McNichol, the director of the International Adoption Families Association, which represents over 200 families in Alberta. They're asking for the speedy passage of Bill 209 and hoping that it will be passed in this session and the debate won't be truncated through some process.

The third tabling is a document entitled There is an Alternative. This is a policy document published by the Alberta New Democrats, and what it demonstrates is that their tax policy calls for a tax increase of some $500 million, Mr. Speaker.

And finally, an article written by the former leader of the New Democratic Party in Alberta, Pam Barrett. The article is entitled Canada Needs Flat Tax System. That's the New Democrat policy.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Further to our efforts to increase suicide awareness I have three tablings today. The first is Suicide Surveillance – 1999, completed by the Chinook health region and prepared by Population Health Information.

The second is A Summary of the Alberta Suicide Data Report, compiled by Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research, Suicide Information and Education Centre, Alberta Health and Wellness, and Health Canada.

And my final tabling today, Mr. Speaker, is copies of the Yellow Ribbon Suicide Prevention Program, a most comprehensive program, with credit to the Drayton Valley and Crossroads mental health and health care centres.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Consistent with the undertaking that I gave in response to a question by the hon. Edmonton-Strathcona member at page 2049, I am tabling the requisite number of copies of the response to him, a letter to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. The hon. member knows that podiatry services provided in this provincial facility are not insured and therefore do not require approval under the Health Care Protection Act.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings this afternoon. The first is from Jack Fife, the school council chairperson at J. Percy Page high school. The letter outlines the parents' concerns about the overcrowded conditions at their school.

The second is from Rhonda Brazeau, a parent with a child attending Sakaw elementary school, who is also concerned about funding for education in Alberta.

The next tabling is from CPAWS supporting the government's commitment to creating the new provincial park in Spray Valley.

The next tabling is from Doug Beaton, who is the principal at Crawford Plains school, and students Kevin Fox and Jessica who support Read-in Week, Mr. Speaker.

The final tabling is a letter from Coleen Taylor and Craig Harris outlining their concerns as parents of a child with type 1 diabetes.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to make three tablings today. The first is a letter to the Premier and the minister of human resources from an Alberta injured worker. In this letter they outline numerous instances where the minister and the Premier have indicated their support for the speedy implementation of recommendations from the two reports prepared by WCB. Also in this letter they ask when the steering committee will be named and whether there will be representation from injured workers on that committee.

The second is an article that appeared in the November issue of Alberta Venture magazine, and again it's a quote that was brought to our attention that the minister seems to think that the WCB is working on all cylinders and only requires fine-tuning.

The third is another article on WCB from Alberta Report, and in here it's outlined by injured workers that they feel that under the present system they are "guilty until proven innocent" and that they are "suspended without pay."

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is a copy of the minutes of November 7, 2000, from the council meeting of the county of Warner, and at this they passed the following notice of motion. That the County of Warner lobby the Provincial Government and Alberta Infrastructure to realign Highway 4 east of Milk River . . . [due to] safety concerns, projected cost savings, accessibility and less disruptions to fewer homesteads.

The second tabling is from CAUS. That is the Council of Alberta University Students. They have a very good brief that they've presented to all MLAs. In it they talk about tuition and fees, student loans, and learner assistance. If they haven't got you yet, they certainly will make their presentation to you, too, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters today, both of them concerning funding of the arts. The first is from George Fenwick of Calgary, who's urging the government to recognize the tremendous benefit the arts bring to Alberta and to increase funding to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts and to the arts groups.

The second letter is from Dianne Johnstone, who's the president of the Alberta Music Festival Association, which is the umbrella group for the Kiwanis festivals, which is very well known to all of us. They also are urging the government to increase funding to the arts, in particular to look at the funding of this particular festival.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three documents to table this afternoon. All of them are documents I have received through freedom of information from the Department of Municipal Affairs. The first document is a memo sheet received in the Alberta department of labour September 11, 1998, from the Alberta new home warranty program. The Alberta new home warranty program is concerned with the treated pine shakes. They're not even sure they comply to the Alberta building code.

The second tabling I have this afternoon is a summary from September 29, 1998, of Alberta area roofers. Roofers have very little confidence in the use of the treated pine shake.

The third document is a handwritten note, document 001148. It's addressed simply "Murray," and it is talking about the rotting pine shakes in Calgary.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly 52 students from the Innisfree school and their guests. They've traveled here today to witness this Assembly, and I must say that of significance is Innisfree's strong community leadership, which has produced more Rutherford scholarships on a per capita basis than I've ever seen in other schools in my constituency. As well, this school has fought hard in a community that's not as large as others to stay open, and one of the comments made by the people downstairs that were touring them was: I've never seen a better disciplined group of students from grades 6, 7, 8, and 9 that's traveled here. So I'd like to introduce them and have them stand along with their teachers, Mr. Leonard Grabas and Mr. Real Hryhchuk, and parents and helpers Mrs. Donna Saskiw, Mrs. Susan Cannan, and Mrs. Marianne Berg. Would they stand in the members' gallery to receive the warm welcome of this House.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Chairman of Committees.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you. On your behalf, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of 14 young Albertans from Holy Trinity Academy in Okotoks. They're accompanied today by their teacher, Mr. Mark Buckley. I'm pleased that they are able to see you in the Speaker's chair today. I would ask them to now rise in the members' gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to introduce an awesome group of students from Ormsby school in the constituency of Edmonton-McClung. The students were very glad to be among the first classes to view the latest portrait of His Honour Bud Olson, a former Lieutenant Governor of our province, and were delighted to be here at that time. There are 50 students along with their teachers in the public gallery. They are accompanied by Mrs. Linda Vanjoff; Mrs. Linda John, the teacher assistant; Miss Andrea Oikawa; and Miss Cynthia Scott, student teacher. I would ask all the students to please rise and receive a very warm welcome from the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to be able to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two very bright young university students. The first is Lanny Westersund. Lanny is a student in Calgary, a long-time supporter of Calgary-North Hill, and well known on this side of the House. The second young gentleman has traveled all the way from Acadia University in the Maritimes. In conversation with him there's no doubt in my mind that he's going to do very well in the future, because he states that he is a huge fan of our Premier. I would ask that Paul Barnes and Lanny Westersund stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I'm pleased to introduce to you and other members of the Assembly the Feeg family from my constituency of Calgary-Lougheed. Visiting are mom and dad, Corinne and Curtis, and sons Matthew, 14, Nathan, 11, and Jordan, 4. These boys are all receiving their education in nontraditional ways. The youngest, Nathan, is being home schooled by his mother this year, and the older two boys are going to school electronically over the Internet. The whole family has a real interest in the way government operates at every level. They've been to city hall, and now they've traveled here to see how our Legislature operates. They're seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly two community leaders from my constituency of Medicine Hat. They've joined us today to participate in the unveiling of the portrait on the third floor of another constituent of mine, His Honour the Honourable Bud Olson, the past Lieutenant Governor. I would like to introduce to you the mayor of Medicine Hat, His Worship Mayor Ted Grimm, as well as the president of the Medicine Hat College, Mr. Ralph Weeks. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to rise and ask all members to recognize them.

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Dunvegan I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you to the members of this Assembly five of his constituents from Fairview: Michel Buitendyk, Josh Zylstra, Miriam Buitendyk, Jennifer Buitendyk, and Jakie Weenink. They will be visiting the museum later on today. They are seated in the public gallery. I request that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 54 students from Sir Alexander Mackenzie school, which is located in the constituency of St. Albert. They are accompanied by Mr. Roger Bouthillier and Mrs. Janet Hurley. These are teachers who have year after year brought their grade 6 students here and have done a remarkable job of informing these students of the workings of the Legislature. They're also accompanied today by Mr. Paul Pringle, a teaching assistant. They are, I believe, seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

MR. THURBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my hon. colleague the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake – and I'm not sure if the group has come into the House yet, but I think it worthy that they be introduced anyway. He has 24 students and seven adults from John Wilson elementary school in his constituency, and they are accompanied here today by their teacher, Mrs. Linda Pederson, and six parents and helpers: Mrs. Leila Sehn, Denise Cartier, Leah Wile, Darcy Ramsell, Gloria Creighton, and Teresa Howard. I would ask that if they are in the galleries, they rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

2:00

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me today to stand and introduce one of the three people that keep my office in Lethbridge running on, I hope, a fairly consistent basis in support of the people in Lethbridge-East. I'd ask Inga Jesswein to rise. She was actually one of the candidates who ran against me in the 1997 election for the New Democratic Party, but she's joined our office now in the fight for the opposition to private health care and the support of the people in need. I'd ask Inga to rise and receive the warm welcome.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two very important people in my life: my husband, Bob, and my son Jeremy. They are here today to witness my maiden speech. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly five students who are participating in the home schooling program and reside in various Edmonton constituencies. They are Lauren Hucal from Edmonton-Castle Downs, Alexander Forsyth from Edmonton-Mill Creek, Miranda Pilipchuk from Edmonton-Mill Woods, Nicole McKenzie from Edmonton-Mill Woods, and Heather MacLean from Edmonton-Whitemud, the constituency which I have the honour to represent. With the students are parent helpers Teresa Cox, Debbie Forsyth, Della Marko, Sheila MacLean, and Pat Cox. The students have taken a tour of the Legislature, have participated in a mock legislature, and they're here today to observe question period. I'd like to take the opportunity to introduce them to you and to the members and ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: If there are no more introductions of guests, I'd ask unanimous consent to revert to tablings. We scurried on a little too fast, so if we may have your consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports
(reversion)

MR. WHITE: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table a very important letter from the Industrial Association of Southern Alberta. These are heavy users of electricity in the southern part of our province, and they just yesterday authored a note to the market surveillance chairman asking for a formal investigation into the noncompetitive pricing practices of some of the marketers in the province of Alberta. It seems that the marketers are requiring long-term contracts in the sale of assets . . . [interjections]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: It's a tabling, not a speech. You don't have to read the whole contents. I think you've made your point.

head: Oral Question Period

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Imported Power Costs

MRS. MacBETH: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Alberta consumers, as we know, are facing skyrocketing electricity bills because the wholesale price of electricity in Alberta has increased from $14 on average per megawatt hour to over $118 per megawatt hour so far in 2000 under the Premier's electricity deregulation scheme, the KEP. According to the province's own market surveillance administrator during times of constrained supply in power, importers of power such as B.C. Hydro's subsidiary Powerex can become a pivotal supplier and can affect the wholesale price of electricity on the power pool. The province's market surveillance administrator goes on to say that in April 2000, when the wholesale price of electricity in Alberta was over $100 per megawatt hour, Powerex was setting the price for 51 percent of the time. Now there are reports that the federal Competition Bureau is investigating price fixing by Powerex to drive up the price. My questions are to the Premier. Mr. Speaker, how long has the government of Alberta been aware of the investigation being undertaken by the Competition Bureau as regards the importation of high-priced electrical power into Alberta from Powerex?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we too read reports of that investigation. It appears that the federal Competition Bureau began an investigation about a year ago. Both the federal Competition Bureau and the market surveillance administrator are independent bodies.

In answer to the question, never mind the silly preamble, but the question, we were not made aware of complaints that they received and were not aware of this investigation. We are concerned, however, about prices and any effort to clarify price concerns for Albertans is a positive thing. Obviously if they think there is something wrong or something that deserves investigation, certainly it's the attitude of this government that that investigation should take place.

I would point out that as with any other case before the bureau we are unable to comment on it while it is before the bureau and under investigation.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta consumers through the Power Pool have paid over $170 million to Powerex over the past four years in order to import high-priced electrical power to cover Alberta's supply/price crunch . . .

Speaker's Ruling Preambles

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. leader, just so that we're all going with the same set of rules, in question period the first question may contain a brief preamble to set it up, and that's hopefully followed by a brief answer. Then the second and third questions carry no preamble.

Imported Power Costs (continued)

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, the question to the Premier is: has the Premier instructed his market surveillance administrator to undertake a full investigation in conjunction with the federal Competition Bureau?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Resource Development supplement, but as I pointed out, both the federal Competition Bureau and the market surveillance administrator are independent bodies. I think it would be inappropriate for me to direct the market surveillance administrator to do anything.

As to how it all works, just so the leader of the Liberal opposition knows, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The market surveillance administrator, of course, completed a report recently to the Power Pool – and we received a copy of it – with a number of recommendations. The Power Pool itself will be following up on seven of the recommendations. I believe we will be dealing with two recommendations directly.

One of the items that came out of the whole process, of course, is the development of a 10-point action plan that will definitely deal with a number of the issues the opposition leader has identified.

One major . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: If we are going to apply the shortness to one side, we should do it to both sides.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, what assurances can the Premier give to Alberta consumers that the possibility of price fixing from power importers will not occur under his KEP, costing Albertans even more in their electricity bills?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the Minister of Government Services supplement this answer, but just to state the case as clearly as we possibly can, the federal Competition Bureau is looking into suspected electricity price fixing by the two corporations that were mentioned by the leader of the Liberal opposition.

The market surveillance administrator cannot – and this is in answer to her previous question – investigate interjurisdictional issues. In such a case, it may refer that type of issue to the federal Competition Bureau. I suspect that's what has happened.

The federal Competition Bureau has the capability to obtain warrants and has related legal capacities. In other words, they can do all that they possibly can do to collect the evidence and launch a prosecution if necessary. Mr. Speaker, if there is evidence that there was price fixing, I'm sure that the federal Competition Bureau will take the appropriate action. This has nothing to do with the government of Alberta. This has something to do with two corporations who happen to be in the power business.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Second main question. The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Increased Utility Costs

MRS. MacBETH: Fine. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier finally admitted that his government's deregulation scheme is responsible for skyrocketing electricity bills being paid by Albertans, and although the Premier is trying to pass off his rebate scheme as a shield to these skyrocketing prices, it's clear to everyone in Alberta, except perhaps some of the members on the front bench, that the rebate doesn't even begin to cover the increased electricity prices approved under his KEP.

MR. HANCOCK: Point of order.

MRS. MacBETH: For example, the current price for an average user is $70. The proposed price schedule by ATCO is $120, a $30 increase when you include the rebate, so will the Premier confirm that his rebates are a mere drop in the bucket and don't cover the increase?

Speaker's Ruling Preambles

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, if we have a long preamble with all kinds of things in it, then whoever has to answer that question has to untangle all the of the preamble before they can get to the question. One long thing doesn't necessarily deserve another but receives another. Mr. Premier, if you can break your way through this.

Increased Utility Costs (continued)

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, you are absolutely right. You know, the longer the preamble, the longer it's going to take me to untangle the preamble to get to the question, and unfortunately after doing all that untangling, by the time it all takes place, often I forget what the question was, and I'm sure that the leader of the Liberal opposition forgets what the question was.

I did catch one thing in the preamble, and that is that the opposition is alleging the Premier has changed his tune regarding the role of deregulation in electricity supplies and prices. What I said is that when you bring about change, it doesn't matter where that change occurs, whether it's in electricity deregulation or whether it was the privatization of liquor stores, the privatization of registries, whether it was taking the 200 health jurisdictions that existed under the former minister of health, who is now the leader of the Liberal opposition, or taking the 181 school boards, 40 of which had no schools, that existed under the former minister of education, who is also now leader of the Liberal opposition – whenever you bring about dramatic change, Mr. Speaker, there is going to be some degree of uncertainty. That is one of the small reasons, part of the small reasons. There are other reasons as well, and they have been explained.

Mr. Speaker, relative to another comment in the leader of the Liberal opposition's preamble, she alluded to this measly sum. When did $1.7 billion become a measly sum? When did an average of $840 per household become a measly sum? It may be measly to the leader of the Liberal opposition because she lives in a totally different environment than the average ordinary Albertan. I don't think it's measly, and Albertans don't think it's measly.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, his rebate doesn't even cover half the increase.

How does the Premier explain the fact that a farm customer served by ATCO will still experience a $30 per month, or 21 percent, increase in their power bill in 2001 even when his rebate is included?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that application is now before the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board.

Relative to the regulatory process, and appropriately so, I'll have the hon. Minister of Resource Development respond.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've promised to continue monitoring the pricing situation and make adjustments accordingly in the future.

When it comes to the whole pricing and confidence in the electrical system, one of the issues that keeps popping up from the opposition is the lack of confidence in deregulation by them, and the issue of supply keeps coming up. This is very, very important, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday one of their companies, EPCOR, which is part of the city of Edmonton, announced that they will be moving forward a new 400 megawatt generating plant at Genesee. Most of those people are residents of Edmonton. They own EPCOR through the city of Edmonton. Their own company has confidence in the deregulation process, confidence that they don't have. Now, they can go talk to their company.

MRS. MacBETH: So, Mr. Speaker, back to the Premier: why would this Premier try to take credit for returning the customer's own investment in those plants, especially when he's only paying $1 out of the $4 that they're owed?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know that statement to be true, nor am I involved in the intricacies of electricity financing. [interjections] I am not. But we do have a minister who's very involved and whose department is very involved, and I'll have him respond.

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, this won't be long. One of the things is that it was an open market, an open sale, open auction that was market driven. The opposition, of course, assumed that there should be $4 billion raised. When you have an auction like that that is open, it is market driven. It happens that $1.1 billion was raised, which was returned to Albertans. There will be another sale completed at the end of November. Those funds, again, once the formula is completed, will be returned to Albertans.

One of the things I'd like to mention, Mr. Speaker, is that over 85 percent of the residential consumers, residential farms have an option to stay with their existing supplier for up to five years under the regulated system. The residents of Edmonton will also be regulated by their own council, which is thousands of people. They can address that through their council.

Special Waste Treatment Centre

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, Alberta taxpayers paid over $441 million to support the Premier's Swan Hills waste treatment plant and are on the hook for an additional $22 million in cleanup costs. That $441 million would have built a power plant the equivalent of Genesee 1 and could have protected consumers from skyrocketing electricity prices under the Premier's KEP plan. So while the Premier seems determined to wash his hands and his government is working furiously in the back rooms to have a new sweetheart deal to prop up the waste treatment plant, my questions are to the Premier. Since the Premier has been tied to taxpayers dollars flowing to the waste treatment plant since he was environment minister in 1989, how many more millions of taxpayer dollars is he prepared to spend to keep this negotiation hidden past the next election?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, along with the hon. Minister of Environment we have had the opportunity to enter into negotiations with two companies that are interested in taking over the plant at this particular time. Interested. Nothing is conclusive at this moment.

Mr. Speaker, you know, it's very interesting how a change in political parties can change the tune. I go to the April 30, 1990, Hansard. I read from that Hansard an excerpt of the then minister of health waxing eloquently about the Swan Hills waste treatment plant. She was talking about a subject that related directly to her department at that time. I'm going to put her words back to her, because I'm sure she would like to hear them. It says:

Well, again, Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a leader across Canada, because we are the first province that was able to be part of the collection of dead drugs, and they are being disposed of by the Special Waste Management Corporation out in Swan Hills. It's a perfect example of the link between environment and health which . . . speaks to the leadership of Alberta on the issue of the environment and our health.

She loved it then. What's the matter now?

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I know the Premier would like to hide the sweetheart deal, but let's go back to it. How could the Premier say that there isn't some kind of backroom deal going on to continue the relationship with Bovar when his own department is refusing to disclose the future ownership of the hazardous waste plant in a request under freedom of information to his department. I'll table that refusal.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I understand that there has been a FOIP request to my office. The Liberals have launched other FOIP requests. I'm sure that there are numerous freedom of information requests relative to Swan Hills with the Department of Environment.

To answer the question, quite simply there are no backroom deals taking place. There are none whatsoever.

MRS. MacBETH: Will the Premier guarantee Albertans that not one more penny of taxpayer dollars will be used to prop up the operations of the waste treatment plant after December 31, 2000?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the question comes down to whether there's going to be a handover, and certainly Bovar has indicated that it's going to happen. Do we close the plant down? Do we decommission it? Do we put all those people out of work when there is an opportunity of perhaps having another operator take it over? Do we go to that huge expense? This is what we're trying to determine right now.

Mr. Speaker, relative . . . [interjections] No. You didn't get the answer that you wanted.

What the leader of the Liberal opposition is suggesting is that we put the province . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, I'm at a loss to explain why somebody would ask a question and then continue to interject while an answer is being attempted. I wonder if we could . . . [interjection] Both sides. We have a number of people on the side of the Premier here who are busily talking while the Premier is trying to answer the question, just as there are people over here talking. Why can't we just allow the Premier to answer the question and the hon. members to ask it in some sort of civility.

Hon. Premier, if you can conclude.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've said basically all I'm going to say. It's too bad that the Minister of Environment isn't here, because he's been more involved in the detailed negotiations relative to what is going to be done with that plant.

But there is concern. There's genuine concern about closing the plant down, doing a full decommission, doing the environmental cleanup, and then having someone come along saying, "Hey, this is a plant that we can operate at a profit, and perhaps we can use different marketing methods and so on" and then going to the expense of starting it up again.

Those are all of the kinds of things that are being considered in the context of the responsibilities and the duties of Executive Council, Mr. Speaker. They are not backroom deals. It's part of the normal business. Yes, it's a problem, and we're going to have to deal with it.

I would remind the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition that when she was minister of health, she was madly in love with this plan. What has happened?

Electric Utilities Deregulation

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, this government's botched electricity deregulation scheme was based on the California model. Electricity deregulation has led to havoc in California. Within the past week there have been numerous emergencies in California as a result of power shortages, and a full-scale consumer revolt is brewing. Power prices have quintupled from what they were last April, and there's growing evidence that power companies are engaging in collusion to drive up prices. To the Minister of Resource Development: why is the government continuing to promote a power deregulation scheme that has led the state of California to the brink of disaster?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'd like to clarify the issue that the deregulation process, which has been in place since 1993 and 1995 legislation and an amendment in the energy and utilities act in 1998 – it is a completely different process. I understand that one of the problems with the California situation, of course, is the high demand for electricity and the ability for the state to be able generate electricity. I understand that during the period of time when Alberta developed over 1,400 megawatts of electricity, the state of California only developed 700 megawatts, and their population is probably 10 times or more greater than Alberta. So it is a completely different situation.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, also to the minister: why has the government put the California Power Exchange, which is responsible for power blackouts and skyrocketing electricity costs in that American state, in charge of the power auction that's scheduled to take place next week in Alberta?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, that whole process with that particular company was done through a public process where they did come up with the best bid and the best plan. They helped design the process, and now they are running the auction. It's straightforward. It's out in the open. Go talk to them.

Again, you know, I have to remind this hon. member that they may not have confidence in the Alberta deregulation process, but your own company does. EPCOR, which they own, which he understands – he was involved with it, Mr. Speaker – is building, they will announce tomorrow, a 400 megawatt plant. Maybe they should be talking to them. Maybe the ND leaders and also the Liberals should be talking to EPCOR, your own company. Maybe you should . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. minister, having been in the House for the same number of years as the chair, you will remember that you address your answers through the chair, and don't engage in lively side conversations.

MR. MASON: Any power company, whether it's public or private, knows when it can make a killing, Mr. Speaker.

To the minister: why does the government continue to defend a deregulation scheme in which there are huge financial incentives for energy companies to engage in price collusion to drive up prices while there is no one responsible for ensuring reliability of supply or protecting consumer interests?

2:30

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, there is a very serious allegation here. There has been one allegation which appropriately is being investigated by the Competition Bureau, but for this hon. member to make that kind of allegation in the House and to seek the sanction and protection of this Legislature, I don't think is showing much courage. I would challenge him to go outside and make the same statement and name the companies.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

Public Consultation on Future Fiscal Policy

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Premier and the Provincial Treasurer announced a public consultation questionnaire that I have with me that is being sent out to Alberta households next week. My questions today are for the Provincial Treasurer. My question through the chair to the Treasurer is: what is the intent and the purpose of this questionnaire, that's called It's Your Money: Speak Out; We're Listening, and how is this going to impact potential government policy?

DR. WEST: Well, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this is to go to Albertans, whose money it is, now that they have choices and to ask them what they would like to do when the time comes when there is no provincial debt in the province of Alberta. As a result of the cyclical nature of revenues that come in through resource industries, we are going to ask them their choices, what they would like to do with their savings or the overage at that time.

The reason for this, too, is because we've always asked Albertans what they want to do. In '92-93 they told us to set the record straight, to balance our budgets, and to pay off the debt. Albertans knew that debt in the province of Alberta equated to paying high interest costs, which removes the flexibility to provide programming in the province of Alberta. It is a privilege for this government to go to the people, who they have answered to over the last 10 years, and ask them what they should do with their money.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Again, we seem to be livening up the issue of asking questions back and forth, rhetorical and otherwise, while there is one person making a question and there's only one that's being recognized other than in the last exchange with the Provincial Treasurer. Even though this chair's hearing is faulty, he could determine at least 10 or 15 people asking questions or purporting to answer them. Please, let us have one question at a time by that member that's recognized and a minister of the Crown answering one at a time.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

Public Consultation on Future Fiscal Policy

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental. Of course, we in this Assembly all recognize the importance of what Albertans say in their individual constituencies. My question is to the Treasurer in this way. Who's going to be analyzing the data that we collect on this, and most importantly will the results be reported back to this Assembly?

DR. WEST: In the department of Treasury, Mr. Speaker, we have a statistics unit that is arm's length and works and gives us advice back on such, I guess, focus groups that we're going to have in going forward with this pamphlet. They will report to us approximately by December, and by the end of January we should have compiled that information and then will bring it back in a form so that Albertans will know what they have said.

One of the things that the opposition here doesn't like is talk about this, because it exemplifies the policies of this government which we have had the task of taking forward in the last decade, the ones that Albertans asked us to do almost 10 years ago. They said that we didn't need to make the cuts that we did or restructure this government, that with oil prices and gas prices this would have happened any way. If we'd followed their path in '92-93 and we had just frozen the budget and raised it according to population and inflation, we'd have been $50 billion in debt today.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Final supplemental. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Treasurer: when Albertans speak and we collect the data that comes back to Treasury, my question then would be this: is the Provincial Treasurer prepared to act on what Albertans are going to say?

DR. WEST: One of the things that this will do will be to indicate in the strongest way to Albertans that they do have choices. They will give us their assessment of those choices, but they will know that the decisions we make in the future will be prudent decisions based on the revenues of the day.

There is one thing that Albertans know. They know how to cut their coat according to their cloth, because they've had to do that several times over the last two decades. They know that you must be fiscally responsible. So after they have given us their choices, we will measure that against the economy of the day, next year, the year after, what oil revenues are, gas revenues, and then we will apply their wishes prudently to future budgets and plans of this province.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has promised Albertans that electricity prices would go down under his scheme. Now, that promise as of today has been broken. The Premier promised Albertans that his government was finished with the Swan Hills special waste treatment plant. That promise has clearly been broken as well. About the only promise that the Premier can now keep is to put Alberta taxpayers back into the business of hazardous waste treatment through some sort of secret, I guess, cabinet room deal. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier confirm that it will cost taxpayers up to $5 million per year to take over ownership of the Swan Hills plant and to contract with Bovar or some other third party to operate that facility?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I can't confirm that. As I say, we're trying to find a solution to this problem. Clearly, Bovar has said that it wants out of the operation of the plant, and we're exploring other opportunities at this particular time.

Again, I remind the hon. member of the remarks of his leader when she was minister of health. She saw nothing wrong with the plant then and talked about the plant operating as a utility and the great job that it did to destroy dangerous, dead drugs in this province. I can't figure out what is so wrong with the plant now and what was so right with the plant then.

MR. SAPERS: It's a shame that the Premier's living in the past, Mr. Speaker. Albertans want some answers now.

Will the Premier confirm that it will cost taxpayers a minimum of $2 million per year to enter into an arrangement where the government would guarantee that certain waste streams will continue to be disposed of at the Swan Hills plant?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I can neither confirm nor deny it at this particular time, because we do not have firm offers from the two companies that are genuinely interested in taking over the plant as to what the operating arrangements might or might not be. Once those details have been worked out and once we set up a proposal – and I don't know if that will come about, but I suspect there might be a request for proposals. Once that has been finalized, then all the details surrounding the deal will come out at that time, but we're nowhere near that stage at this particular point.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you. Given that the Premier refuses to confirm the details of the discussions going on between representatives of his government and the plant operators, will he at least agree to table in this Legislative Assembly the cost/benefit analysis that has been prepared by his government on the various options for the continued operation of Swan Hills so taxpayers know what they're on the hook for?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, when that information is available I would be very happy to table it, but we are not yet at that stage. I can confirm that two companies have approached the government. I've been involved in discussions with these two companies. Both are French operations with huge Canadian and American and international connections in the whole business of waste management, generally, but both with tremendous expertise in hazardous waste. We have said to these two companies: "Give us a proposal. Give us a detailed proposal as to how you would want to operate these plants." To my knowledge we have not yet received those proposals.

The Minister of Environment is not with us today, Mr. Speaker. I don't know if his department has received those proposals or not, but once we make a final decision, we'll be glad to share it with the opposition and all Albertans.

Affordable Housing

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, homelessness is a serious concern in many communities, including my own constituency. Now that we are in the winter season, it is most important that we help these people. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. What is your ministry doing to help these people?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, Alberta Community Development is taking the lead role to co-ordinate the government's response to homelessness in our communities, and a number of things are happening.

First of all, I have met in the past few months with the federal minister responsible for homelessness. We both agree that the solutions are best generated at a community level. As a result of that, I've met with the mayors of cities in the province – the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Red Deer, Calgary, and Edmonton – and they are in the process of doing community plans. Some have been completed that will be acceptable to both the federal government, to the federal people, to access funding and to ourselves. We have also committed to supply $3 million a year for this year plus another two years to deal with the problem.

MRS. JABLONSKI: My first supplemental is also to the Minister of Community Development. Now that we have communities planning and developing local solutions, how soon can they expect to see these funds?

MR. WOLOSZYN: Mr. Speaker, I know that Calgary and Edmonton have completed their community plans. We have made an initial installment of $250,000 to Calgary. That will be followed shortly with the remaining $750,000. Also, the city of Edmonton will be receiving a million dollars to deal with this problem fairly shortly.

I'd like to point out that there are also a number of other ministries within the government that provide a variety of supports to the less fortunate members of our society. I think Human Resources and Employment, Children's Services, Health and Wellness, AADAC, and the Mental Health Board do a fine job. So we're all working together to ensure that we can do as much as we can for these unfortunate folks.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Final supplemental. The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is again to the Minister of Community Development. Aside from homelessness there is a concern about the lack of affordable housing. Can the minister tell this Assembly what his ministry is doing to help this situation?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSZYN: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Community Development, myself, is also responsible for the other end of it. We have increased the rent supplement program by some $2.3 million this year. What that will do – and that's part of the supplemental requisitions, which we were criticized for, and it came as an emergency motion – is add 500 more housing units to take some of the pressure off to hopefully accommodate as many people as we possibly can. Some of the funding will also be directed to transitional housing as well as to emergency shelters.

I must stress that our priority is and remains dealing with and helping families and individuals who are most in need, and we'll ensure that they will make it through the winter as best as possible.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Treated Pine Shakes

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Consumers in this province are sick and tired of the government withholding information from them. My questions are to the Premier. Why did the government withhold test results in 1999 indicating significant noncompliance with the standards referenced in the Alberta building code for the treated pine shakes? Why was this withheld from Alberta consumers and homeowners?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't take that as factual, that we are withholding information from consumers. Unfortunately, the minister responsible for this particular issue, again, is not with us, but I will take the question under notice. Perhaps the Minister of Government Services can shed some light on this information. I really don't know, but I'll ask her if she cares to supplement.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, what I will say is that this is before the courts, as the hon. member knows. There have been hundreds of requests through freedom of information on data from the government. I presume that anything that can be provided has, in fact, been provided to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Again, any further information will have to come from the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. MacDONALD: Again to the Premier. Given that the treated pine shakes case is not yet before the courts, why did top-level department of labour officials keep test results on the treated pine shakes from the Building Technical Council, which is the organization that's responsible to Alberta homeowners for the Alberta building code?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I understand now that the hon. member is alluding to treated pine shakes as opposed to untreated pine shakes, a subject which is indeed before the courts.

Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, I do not have the answer. I don't know his assertion to be factual, but I will take the question under notice and have the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs address it when he returns.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. MacDONALD: Excuse me.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Do you have another one?

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, please.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Sorry. I marked you down as having three.

MR. MacDONALD: Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The Speaker was just a little too eager and marked a third one off, and I apologize.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is also to the Premier. Who in the government instructed the top-level government officials in the department of labour to withhold this vital information from the Building Technical Council, which is responsible for the Alberta building code? Who did it?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, I don't know that statement to be factual or true. This is a matter for the appropriate minister to deal with, and I'll take the question under notice and refer it to the appropriate minister, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, for an answer upon his return.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Currie Barracks

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my capacity as the Premier's representative on the intergovernmental liaison committee for the development of CFB Calgary, I'll be meeting with my counterparts on December 1. Further, on December 5 Calgary's city council will be holding its public hearings on the development of the former base. Given that one of the significant issues that is outstanding is the question of public ownership and access to the historic parade square, my questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Will the minister clarify the intent of the historic designation of the parade square to provide an open, publicly accessible area which is vitally linked to ceremony, history, and the memories of a great number of Albertans?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSZYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The province has given the Currie barracks the highest level of historic preservation and protection that it can under the legislation. The provincial historic resources designation of the Currie barracks is made up of 10 structures. We also have the parade square designated.

I might stress that a designation does not ensure that a resource will be used for a specific purpose. However, changes to the parade square or any other designated resource can be made only by the approval of the Minister of Community Development.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental: with the designation of public buildings surrounding the parade square is it the intent of the minister to keep the parade square open to the public?

2:50

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. WOLOSZYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The city of Calgary planning department has developed a plan which would see that the large portion of the parade square would become a public park. I have not looked at these plans in detail, but I must stress two things. One, the historic designation does not necessarily make the resource to be used for a specific purpose. At the same time, we do have the authority to ensure that the parameters of the intent are followed.

I'm looking forward to seeing what the city of Calgary comes up with, to seeing if in fact we can ensure that the public does have access to this area.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question. Given that the federal government donated CFB Downsview in the city of Toronto for a parkland, at no cost to the citizens of Toronto, will the minister undertake to pursue a similar donation from the federal government for the remaining two acres, a small two acres not included in the municipal reserve, to complete the historic preservation of the parade square and to allow full public access?

MR. WOLOSZYN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right on. When it comes to eastern Canada, the federal government chooses to give things away willy-nilly. When it comes to western Canada, it appears that the federal government wants to give all their resources to the Canada Lands Company. The Canada Lands Company is an arm of the federal government, and yes, we will be asking for some co-operation from them. I would hope that they are more benevolent than the federal government, which cut Edmonton and Calgary out of the mix, if you will, in terms of giving us what I think we properly deserve, a large tract of it.

I'm hoping that the city of Calgary, the Canada Lands Company, the community, as well as officials from my department can work out a solution to this. Yes, we will be asking for a little bit of consideration, that I think both Edmonton and Calgary so rightly deserve. We have been so unfairly shut out by the change of these guards.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Health Information Legislation

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since October 1, 1995, in this province we've had a law that protects the privacy and protects the confidentiality of information that the government collects about Albertans. We know that privacy is important to Albertans, but since 1995 the government has refused to apply those rules to the most personal of all information, the most sensitive of all information, our health information. My question now is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will he confirm this afternoon that the announced date for proclamation of Bill 40, the Health Information Act, has been scrapped, that in fact the bill will not now be proclaimed on December 15, 2000?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, a number of concerns were raised by groups with respect to the implementation of the Health Information Act. It will precipitate a delay of the proclamation, but that proclamation will proceed early in the new year.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, my follow-up question would be to the hon. minister. Well, why is it that the regional health authorities, that have gone to an enormous amount of time and effort, commitment of resources to prepare for a December 15 start-up date, have been left twisting in the wind and have not been given any certainty in terms of when that act will be rolled out and applied to their operations?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, upon my review of this legislation with various stakeholder groups I think some legitimate concerns were raised with respect to implementation. I've had discussions with the Privacy Commissioner, and we will be proceeding with this legislation. It will come shortly.

However, in order to overcome some of those hurdles expressed by groups like the Alberta Medical Association, the police chiefs, the United Nurses of Alberta, and the College of Pharmacists, a short delay will be required in order that all those groups can also be prepared for the new legislation.

MR. DICKSON: My final question, Mr. Speaker. Given the recent Supreme Court of Canada decision that says that privacy is now a protected right under sections 7 and 8 of the Charter, does the minister anticipate seeking a reference in the Alberta Court of Appeal as to the constitutionality of Bill 40 pursuant to the provisions of the Alberta Judicature Act?

MR. MAR: No, Mr. Speaker.

head: Members' Statements

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We'll have members' statements in 30 seconds, when we'll hear from Edmonton-Ellerslie and Calgary-Currie.

Protection of the Environment

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about the importance of effective government regulations and the importance of enforcing those regulations in protecting Alberta's environment. We have a government that talks about environmental sustainability, but what they mean is sustainability of the economic environment. They are not talking about the importance of protecting the quality of our air and water. They are not talking about forward-thinking ecosystem management for our forests. They are not talking about responsible investment in new energy technologies.

What they are talking about, Mr. Speaker, are business deals that provide economic benefits for a few but do little to ensure the preservation of our habitat and our health. In Alberta the environment has always kept behind business interests.

The regulations regarding intensive livestock operations have been drafted, but the government is ignoring the three years of hard work by the industry, community groups, and environmentalists. They refuse to pass more regulations, regardless of the need. Instead, they choose to do more studies with industry stakeholders. Effective technology exists to treat hazardous waste at the source. But what is this government doing? They ponder how to continue propping up the Swan Hills plant, a plant that may have had a chance at success if major sources of hazardous waste were not excluded by government regulation.

In the ongoing saga of our rivers again we have a warning for children and pregnant women to not eat certain types of fish. In the Cold Lake arsenic hearings monitoring arsenic levels is left to the responsibility of individual well owners.

When will this government take responsibility for ensuring the health and well-being of Albertans and our ecosystem before problems occur? Effective government regulation does not have to mean more regulations. It means eliminating unnecessary and archaic regulations and judiciously putting in place and monitoring regulations that enhance our ability to be sustainable in the long term and to protect the public interest.

The Alberta advantage is being squandered every time the government promotes industrial development without regard for the environment. Let's create a vision where bottom-line profits are not the answer to every question.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Alberta Film Commission

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 23 of this year the Alberta Film Commission appointed its new CEO and president, Paul Rayman. I'd like to take this opportunity to take a few minutes and introduce his presence to the film industry to the Chamber. The board of directors is pleased to announce his official appointment.

Mr. Rayman has worked in the film industry and the television industry as a location manager and has worked on a number of feature films including Honey, I Shrank the Kids, Destiny Ridge, Alive, and Wild America. He has assumed his position immediately and, in fact, within 48 hours of being appointed was in California meeting with film officials in that state.

We'd also like to take this opportunity to thank Murray Ord for his leadership over the last four and a half years and the work that he has done to expand the current status of our Film Commission to a full-service, production-oriented commission. Mr. Speaker, he has been instrumental in promoting this province as one of the finest film locations of the nation and as a source of highly skilled technical and talented producers. The commission also became a not-for-profit company in May of 1999 under his leadership.

For the information of this House the total production dollars of activity in Alberta were up to $272 million in the year 1999, and of that number $148 million remained in the province.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to also bring attention to last weekend. We celebrated the annual 2000 Alberta film industry wrap party. This is the fund-raiser that we use within the industry in order to recognize and honour the work that's been done by the film community and also to support our not-for-profit organization. The proceeds go directly to the Alberta Film Commission in its ongoing marketing efforts to generate more film production in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the board and the Premier's liaison to the Alberta Film Commission I want to welcome Paul Rayman to the Alberta film family and encourage all constituents and all members of the Legislature to contact him and tell him how important the film industry is to their constituency.

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. Actually, I was tempted to say that while we anxiously await the return of the Government House Leader's assistant, I had thought to myself that we should postpone the business of the House until he recovers and safely returns to the House. In any event, we wish him well and good health.

I'd ask the Deputy Government House Leader to advise as to the course of business we will see in this Assembly next week. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, let me recognize the kind remarks of the hon. member across the way. We've already conveyed our own caucus's feelings and expressions of gratitude to David Gillies for all the work that he has done, and we are wishing him a very speedy recovery. I also sent him a copy of the Order Paper, which he could read in the hospital, because I know that he's missing all the action here very much.

Now, getting back to projected government business. On November 27 in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders we will have third reading of bills 3 and 27. Then we'll go into Committee of the Whole, where we'll deal with bills 29 and 20; then second reading of bills 22 and 30; and then as per the Order Paper. On the evening of November 27 under Government Bills and Orders, Committee of the Whole, bills 29 and 20, then second reading of bills 22 and 30, and as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, November 28, Mr. Speaker, later in the afternoon at 4:30 under Government Bills and Orders third reading of bills 29 and 20 and as per the Order Paper. That evening we will have third reading of bills 29 and 20 and then Committee of the Whole on bills 22 and 30.

On Wednesday evening third reading of bills 29, 20, 22, and 30 and as per the Order Paper.

Then on Thursday afternoon we'll have third reading of the remaining third readings and then as per the Order Paper.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The chair believes there were at least four points of order. The first two were by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, then the Leader of the Opposition, and the fourth one, that the chair caught, was again Calgary-Buffalo.

So, presumably in order, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

MR. DICKSON: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. I think it was the first set of questions and the first supplemental question posed by the Leader of the Official Opposition. You will recall, sir, that she said "given that" and then proceeded with her question, and there was an intervention by the Speaker.

Under Standing Order 13(2), Mr. Speaker, I would be mindful of what the Speaker said on February 25, 1998, when he noted that (a) the Leader of the Official Opposition has some additional latitude in the initial set of questions and (b) starting a preamble to a supplementary question with "given that" was quite acceptable. In other words, it's not a preamble, but it's an integral part of the question.

So I just wanted to be clear, Mr. Speaker, with your intervention early on whether that meant we were departing from the direction we got from the Speaker on February 25, 1998, and the Hansard reference. It'd be page 556, for the assistance of the table and the Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From our perspective on this side of the House your ruling was absolutely correct. All too often the opposition structures questions in such a way so as not to offend the technical interpretation of the preamble prohibitions but still offend the spirit of the same. I rely on Beauchesne 409(2), where it states very clearly, "A preamble need not exceed one carefully drawn sentence." Then, as you yourself indicated, "A long preamble on a long question takes an unfair share of time and provokes the same sort of reply."

I also refer to Beauchesne 410(8): "Preambles to questions should be brief and supplementary questions require no preambles."

I might also like to point out a couple of other issues arising from this discussion. Mr. Speaker, I again refer you to Beauchesne 410(8), where it states that "supplementary questions should flow from the answers of Ministers." We know that never happens because, of course, the opposition doesn't listen to the answers, so that's a little tough to comply with.

I'd also like to finally refer to . . . [interjection] Excuse me, hon. member. I do have the floor, and I'd like to continue.

I'd like to refer you also to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, pages 426 and 427, where it states very clearly, "Furthermore, a question should not . . . make a charge by way of a preamble to a question." Unfortunately, every day, day in and day out, the opposition offends that rule, and I think it's about time that the chair admonish the hon. Leader of the Opposition for doing so.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader has brought to attention the second question arising out of the first question. The Speaker would confess that he did not hear the trigger word "given" and thought it might be an idea, since parliamentarians frequently like to have their way when a new person is in the chair, to try and set a tone that maybe we could be careful on the preambles and careful on the answers. That was the attempt that was put forth.

I'd also remind the House leaders that in April they signed a document, an agreement among the House leaders.

- (4) A Member asking a question shall, in the discretion of the Speaker, be allowed a succinct preamble, a main question and two supplementary questions to which there shall be no preamble. Any Member who, in the discretion of the Speaker, abuses the opportunity to give a preamble shall be called to order.

There was more in that.

If I understood the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, he was asking for an explanation, and that's what I was attempting to do. The hon. member did get part of the second question preamble in nevertheless, but it was trying to set a tone for the rest of the day. How successful that was only others can judge.

Does that answer your explanation question?

MR. DICKSON: Yes. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. The second point of order.

Point of Order

Oral Question Period Rules

MR. DICKSON: The second point of order arose from the second set of questions. The citation, of course, is Beauchesne 408(2). Just quickly, the Premier went on at length attacking the use of the word "measly," and that word was never spoken by the Leader of the Official Opposition, so I think it offends 408(2).

Would it be efficient, sir, if I also quickly address my comments to the other points of order now? [interjections] Well, no, no. Then obviously the Government House Leader has a chance to respond. I'm happy to deal with them severally, and you can rule on each one if you wish.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Because there were four different interventions, it would be helpful for the chair, anyway, to deal with them individually.

MR. DICKSON: Fine. That's fine.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on the second point of order.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm looking at 408(2), "Answers to questions should be as brief as possible, should deal with the matter raised, and should not provoke debate." The hon. member is suggesting that the Premier's paraphrasing of the hon. Leader of the Opposition's question by using the term "measly" was inappropriate. I believe that when answering questions, ministers and the Premier are certainly entitled to answer in any way they see fit. In fact, the convention and a rule of this House is that they actually don't even have to answer the question. Nevertheless, every day, day in and day out, we do answer those questions to the best of our abilities. So there certainly is no point of order.

While the member is referring to 408(2), "Answers to questions should be as brief as possible," I would like to refer you again to 409(2), "The question must be brief." Then there are comments regarding a preamble not exceeding "one carefully drawn sentence."

So, again, all too often the opposition sets themselves up in the way that they ask the questions, and this is simply another example of that. It really is another example of, I think, the hon. Opposition House Leader doing his best to simply clarify a position as opposed to really having a true point of order.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Well, if I understand the point made by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, you quote the word "measly," that was in the answer, and this was not in the question that the Leader of the Opposition had asked.

MR. DICKSON: It was a purported quote, and I'm saying that in fact the word was never used by the Leader of the Opposition.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Well, it really becomes an awkward thing for the chair to follow every nuance of (a) the questions and (b) the answers. I would look at 409(2), which I think the hon. Deputy Government House Leader mentions, but also if we could look at 417, it reminds us that questions should be short and so should the answers.

I think the more that's in the preamble begs the more that's in the question. Sometimes we lose sight of what the question really is and, therefore, what the answer really is. When we have so much in the preamble, that seems to oblige the responding minister to try and answer them all, and if they don't answer them all, the end question perhaps could be forgiven. If there was one succinct question, as it suggests, then we might have one succinct answer.

Point of Order
Factual Accuracy

MR. DICKSON: The next one I'll just speak to briefly on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition, if I might, Mr. Speaker.

The Premier at pains in responding to I think it was the third set of questions of the Leader of the Opposition made a purported quote from 1990. It's the same citation in Beauchesne, so you don't have to look at a different section of the text. I'm referring to the same citation. The issue is the $100 million expansion of the Swan Hills plant, which, as the record clearly shows, happened long, long after the Leader of the Official Opposition left cabinet and left government. She clearly cannot be tagged with the responsibility in any part for that $100 million boondoggle, I'd characterize it, which had to do with the expansion of the Swan Hills plant.

That happened long after the Leader of the Opposition had left cabinet. That's the point I wanted to make on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition.

MR. HAVELOCK: Again, I appreciate the hon. member's attempts to defend his leader. That's part of his job. Nevertheless, a simple point the Premier was making, Mr. Speaker, is that at the time the Swan Hills discussion was taking place and Bovar, generally, the hon. Leader of the Opposition did fully support the project. She fully supported construction of a facility to destroy hazardous waste within this province. That's the point the Premier was making. It's accurate. No point of order.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I think the point really was a point of clarification. The hon. Opposition House Leader has offered a point of view, and the Deputy Government House Leader has offered an opposing point of view, truly a difference between members and, at best, a point of clarification, should it be called that.

We have one more, I think. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Point of Order
Exhibits

MR. DICKSON: We do indeed, and this can be dealt with very quickly. The authority is Beauchesne 504 and the ruling given by the Speaker on May 6, 1999, at page 1533 in Hansard. It has to do with exhibits. I was struck by two things. In the exchange between Fort McMurray and the Provincial Treasurer, while the TV cameras were running, both questioner and answerer made a point of – a brochure becomes a prop when people stand up in terms of displaying the latest publication. The government has an $8 million Public Affairs Bureau. They don't need to use valuable question period time to promote publications of the government of the province.

The other point would be this, Mr. Speaker. If the minister wants to put out a ministerial statement, there's a different place in the program to do that rather than using part of our 50 minutes in question period.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on the point.

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, two points, Mr. Speaker. One, with respect to the hon. member's last remarks he is implying that the issue that was being discussed is not important. He's implying that it's not something that should be raised in question period but that the more appropriate avenue is to use a ministerial statement. That underscores why the hon. member and those other hon. members across the way will never form government, because it is never, never frivolous to seek the input of Albertans. The sooner they learn that, the better off they'll be.

The other point I'd like to make, Mr. Speaker, is with respect to the use of props. Let's keep in mind that not too long ago the hon. Leader of the Opposition in this House was standing up with blank papers and representing that they contained something which they did not.

So until we see better behaviour on your side of the House, don't question what happens over here.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Well, in reply to the last assertion by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader . . . [interjection] I think, hon. Minister of Innovation and Science, two wrongs do not make anything right. So if it's wrong for them, it's also wrong for the other side.

To the extent that people have been using this and stretching it – I think this has happened on a number of occasions – I would say to both sides of the House, whether they're tabling a calendar or extolling the virtues of one of their publications, that it is not proper. Hopefully all hon. members can honour that, that we don't use exhibits, however tempting it might be to do so.

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate February 28: Mrs. McClellan]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to give my inaugural address. It's called a maiden speech; is it? [interjection] That's why I prefer inaugural.

I'd certainly like to thank the House for setting aside the time for me and the Member for Red Deer-North to speak today.

MR. HAVELOCK: It's really for her, but we have to include you.

MR. MASON: But you had to include me, and I do appreciate the rules sometimes.

Mr. Speaker, on June 12 the residents of Edmonton-Highlands placed their trust in me by electing me as their Member of this Legislative Assembly. I would like to thank everybody who took part in that exercise in democracy, including the people that supported and worked for other candidates. I think that it's a very important part of our democracy, and everybody that participates in an election makes a significant contribution to our democracy.

It's certainly a privilege to represent Edmonton-Highlands in this Assembly. My family and I have lived in the Edmonton-Highlands constituency for over 20 years. In fact, we have lived in the neighbourhood of Highlands, which is located right at the heart of the provincial riding.

The Edmonton-Highlands constituency is one of the most ethnically diverse constituencies in Alberta. This ethnic diversity contributes immensely to the quality of life and economic well-being of the Highlands community. On the western edge of the riding are the inner-city communities of Boyle Street and McCauley. In recent years there has been a large influx of people from Vietnam, Hong Kong, China, and other countries. These newer Canadians not only reside in these neighbourhoods, but they also contribute to their economic revitalization. One only has to drive up 97th Street north from downtown to see clear evidence of this.

Little Italy is located in the heart of the McCauley neighbourhood. The Member for St. Albert yesterday paid tribute to Frank Spinelli, the owner of the Italian Centre supermarket on 95th Street, who passed away after a courageous battle with cancer. Frank Spinelli was not only a successful business owner. He was also an outstanding member of the Italian community and the McCauley neighbourhood. I, too, pass along my sincere condolences to the Spinelli family.

The river valley community of Riverdale has its own rich history, with its eclectic mixture of residents and strong sense of community. Apparently Riverdale also includes the odd left-wing nut.

Moving east, there are the communities of Parkdale, Cromdale, and Bellevue. These are communities that have been incredibly resilient, especially in having to fight for their very right to exist given the expansion-minded neighbour Edmonton Northlands.

Then there's my home neighbourhood of Highlands, with its tree-lined streets, its proximity to the river valley, and its outstanding schools and recreation facilities. I might be a bit biased here, Mr. Speaker, but I don't think there's any better neighbourhood in Edmonton in which to live and raise a family.

Further north is the Montrose neighbourhood, with its tree-lined streets and mature homes. There are a significant number of residents in these communities of Portuguese, Italian, and other origins. East of 50th Street are the Beacon Heights and Rundle Heights neighbourhoods in Beverly, which have their own rich history starting with coal mining in the early days of this century, and they have also strong Ukrainian and strong Dutch communities in them.

When I contested the Edmonton-Highlands election, I ran on some key issues that matter to my constituents. Statistics Canada data says that the riding of Edmonton-Highlands has on average the second lowest family income in the province, ahead of only the Edmonton-Norwood riding. The Edmonton-Highlands riding has an unemployment rate twice the provincial average and a seniors population that is 60 percent higher than average.

Residents of Edmonton-Highlands are incredibly hardworking people. They may not always be rewarded for their efforts with high incomes, but their ingenuity and resourcefulness are second to none.

Most of my constituents subscribe to the philosophy that government can and does play a useful role in their lives. They see the value in a strong public health care system. They objected in large numbers to Bill 11, which we believe is a blueprint for expanding private, for-profit health care in Alberta. I made a commitment during that by-election to repeal Bill 11. While I was only able to table a bill to repeal Bill 11 this session, it's a promise I intend to keep, even if it has to wait until after the next provincial election, Mr. Speaker.

In fact, being a newly elected MLA in an opposition caucus of two has been a bit of an eye-opener. There are no majority votes in our caucus. They're either unanimous or split. In fact, I begin to wonder whether as a result of Alberta's long history of one-party rule the invaluable role of a political opposition is not fully appreciated.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to be able today to quote a Conservative to the members opposite, so I did a little bit of research, and I'd like to quote the words of Conservative Prime Minister John G. Diefenbaker, who, unlike the members across the way, had the opportunity to see the role of an opposition party from both sides of the House. Mr. Diefenbaker said:

The opposition that fulfills its functions makes as important a contribution to the preservation of the parliamentary system as the government of the day . . . If Parliament is to be preserved as a living institution, the opposition must fearlessly perform its functions . . . The reading of history proves that freedom always dies when criticism ends.

That's the end of the quote.

He also said something else, Mr. Speaker, which I like a little bit more. It's a little shorter. "It's the duty of the opposition to defeat the government." The duty.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very passionate about the need to strengthen and sustain our public health care system. Despite the fact that politicians of all political stripes like to pay lip service to medicare, I remind members of this House that it was the CCF that brought medicare into being in this country, and we believe that it's up to us, that the burden falls on us to be its most outspoken defenders.

During the by-election I promised to do what I could to fight high natural gas and electricity prices. We made that an issue, and we were pleased that shortly after we raised that issue in the Edmonton-Highlands by-election, Mr. Speaker, the government announced its rebate program. Now, that rebate program is certainly not what we were looking for, but we are quite satisfied that it was the issue that we raised in that by-election that convinced the government they needed to appear to do something about high energy prices. It's the prices of gas and power that have more than quadrupled in the past five years while family incomes have stagnated. The government's response of sending rebate cheques only treats the symptoms of this problem and doesn't really deal with the real issue, which is the rising prices themselves.

I campaigned against the government's unfair tax policies, particularly the flax tax. The net result of the government changes is that a proportionately larger share of taxes will be paid by average Albertans, including many of my constituents, and a proportionately smaller share will be paid by those who need tax relief the least. Large, profitable corporations will get a tax cut of 50 percent. High-income earners will get tax cuts of over 20 percent, Mr. Speaker, while many middle-income earners will get cuts of only a few dollars. That's not fair.

We also need, I think, to work to make our labour laws fairer and more equitable. We need to increase the minimum wage to at least

$7 per hour, with graduated increases thereafter. Government needs to be much more proactive in developing safe and secure affordable housing. We need to give tuition relief to postsecondary students. Yes, while doing all of these things, we still need to be careful with taxpayer dollars, just as my constituents are careful with their household dollars.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to take the whole amount of time, but I do want to talk about one of the major issues that convinced me to make the leap from municipal politics into provincial politics. I have and continue to have the utmost respect for the importance of municipal government in our country and in our province. I believe that it's a form of government that is a little more practical than we find here sometimes and which allows people of all political persuasions to work together for the betterment of their constituents.

The issue that I really want to address while I'm here in this House is the question of poverty in our province. Poverty in this province is about 17 percent, according to the figures that I quoted in my speech last night. In Edmonton it's nearly 20 percent, and in my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands it is nearly 25 percent, nearly 1 in 4. I believe that this government, like provincial governments across the land, can either take steps to alleviate it and reduce that number or take steps, which they have done, to increase that number. Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that even as the economy expands and people are doing better, the number of people living in poverty still is tending to rise. There's something wrong with that.

Mr. Speaker, I deal in my constituency with many people who are dependent on programs from the Alberta government, whether it be social assistance or AISH or WCB or student assistance. They come and seek assistance from me in my constituency office. I can tell you that the rates they are expected to live on are a scandal. They are a scandal. There's no other word for it. These people are forced to live in abject poverty. There's a book that came out about a year ago by Mel Hurtig, a distinguished Edmonton author and publisher, called Pay the Rent or Feed the Kids. [interjection] You know, you ought to read his book. The hon. member ought to read that book, because it's a real eye-opener.

3:30

The other thing that I find, Mr. Speaker, is that people, often of limited education, who are dependent on these sorts of government programs are put into a real maze. There are so many catches, catch-22s built into the system. If you're on this program, you can't do this. If you get a little bit of money over here, you're cut off this. It is so complex and so unfair that it really ought to be incumbent on the government to seriously review that entire maze of contradictory regulations, that just traps people in poverty.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

I know, Madam Speaker, that the government wants to get people out of poverty. That's what they say. Yet built into so many of these programs are traps that keep people dependent on government programs, and I really think the government should seriously take a look at that. I know that there are members on the other side, both in cabinet and in the caucus, that do want to do something about this. I will make the undertaking that if the government does do something that actually benefits people who are poor in this province, they will get no criticism from me. They'll get praise from me. I know that there are some people out there of goodwill across the way, and they need to be supported. I'll support them if they're willing to take that issue on. It's very important. I for my part will do what I can to bring these things to the government's attention.

I know that one of the things I've been doing is getting out to different parts of the province and learning a little bit about other parts of the province and learning, particularly, about the lives of people who don't live in Edmonton, who live in rural areas, and trying to learn a little bit about agriculture. I think it would be of benefit for many members opposite if they want to come on a tour of my riding or sit in my constituency office for an hour and find out what the lives of people are like in the inner city of Edmonton. I think if they did do that . . . [interjection] I'll make that offer specifically, Madam Speaker, to that minister over there to come on a tour with me of Boyle Street and McCauley and sit in my constituency office. I'm quite sure that that minister has not, or he wouldn't be speaking the way he is. It's important. Those are real living and breathing human beings, Madam Speaker, and they deserve a better shake than they've gotten from this government.

In conclusion, I'm very honoured to have been elected in the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands. I've suggested that with an election imminent and my by-election just past, perhaps I should get a bye from this next election. I'm informed that that is contrary to the law, but I just don't think it's fair, Madam Speaker. [interjections] I know when not to step into a trap.

With that, I will take my place and thank the Assembly for their kind patience in listening to me.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure and an honour to rise in the House today and acknowledge the privilege and responsibility I have been given to represent the constituency of Red Deer-North in this Chamber. My constituents understand the need to make wise and careful decisions. I'm sure that they would be pleased to have this Assembly "approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the Government."

I am also very pleased and honoured to have this opportunity to present my maiden speech. I am the second person to represent Red Deer-North. I've been told many times that I have big shoes to fill. Madam Speaker, it is my intention to fill those shoes and to leave them one size bigger. Mr. Stockwell Day, now leader of the Canadian Alliance, served his constituents and all Albertans well. As a good servant of Alberta and Canada he has taken his dynamic leadership to the federal level, where he could become the next Prime Minister of Canada. He will show how the Alberta advantage can become the Canadian advantage.

I want to sincerely thank the people of Red Deer-North for giving me the opportunity to serve them as a member of the Alberta Legislature. Their friendly handshakes and warm smiles encouraged and energized me as I went door-to-door to meet them and discuss their concerns. I also want to especially thank the many wonderful volunteers who helped me, including all the members of caucus who took the time to go door-to-door with me. I would also like to thank the members of my family, who had faith and confidence in me, especially my husband, Bob. I would also like to thank two volunteers who were at my side every day and every night throughout the campaign, Cheryl Davis and Darin Doel.

As the representative for Red Deer-North I will serve my constituents to the best of my ability with all that is good and honest. During the past week in the House I have watched and listened carefully. I've heard and seen many things. I have heard a wise and patient Speaker of the House encourage each member to remember that honesty, integrity, and decorum play a major role in the MLA job description. Thank you, Madam Speaker, for your wisdom, dedication, and encouragement.

I have watched and listened as our Premier tackled difficult questions in the House. I watched and listened as our Premier took the time to visit Michener Centre, the first Premier to visit since 1974, and to listen to a resident of Michener tell him that he had done a good job and that he had worked hard. I watched as the Premier talked to him and told him that, yes, he had done a good job. Thank you, Mr. Premier, for listening to these very special people.

I've watched and listened carefully to the ministers as they answer and explain the government's position on health care, energy, education, justice, children's services, labour, infrastructure, et cetera. Thank you for the long hours of dedication that it takes to develop good government policy.

I have watched and listened as the hon. members of the opposition have debated and challenged the government's business plan and fiscal policies. Although some people may think that their sole duty is to criticize the government, I have witnessed at times sincerity and good intentions.

I have witnessed a near miracle when the entire Assembly came together to pass Bill 26, the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act. I saw emotion in the faces of my colleagues on both sides of the floor, and I knew that deep down inside we are all concerned about the same things: freedom and democracy. It is only in true democracy that we can achieve true freedom.

Bill 26 reminds us that in one of the world's most horrific genocides, the Jewish people suffered terribly, as did the Ukrainians, the Polish, and many others. I am here today in this beautiful country of Canada because of just such a genocide. It was the first genocide of the 20th century when the Turks massacred the Armenians, and my grandparents were forced to flee to Canada. My grandfather had survived the Armenian massacre only because of the grace of God. He had been awake in the middle of the night and had felt and heard the heavy pounding of horses' hooves in the distance. He climbed to the top of a tree so that he could see what was going on. Before he had a chance to react, the courtyard of his village was filled with Turkish soldiers, who did not waste any time in massacring the entire village of his family and friends. He was the only survivor.

As my grandfather watched in horror, he saw the soldiers hang his young cousins upside down from trees. He saw the soldiers cut off their kneecaps and then light fires underneath them. I said to my grandmother that my grandfather must have had nightmares for years. She looked at me and said, "He still jumps in the night."

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Despite the horror that was inflicted upon the Armenians by the Turks, my grandparents never taught hatred of the Turkish people. This was because my grandmother's life was saved and she was raised by a Turkish family. They were neighbours and friends, and when it came time for her family to run for their lives, the Turkish friends offered to keep Mariam. She was too little, and she would not be quiet in hiding. They would say that she was their daughter, and when the war was over, her family could come back and get her. My grandmother's family never came back. Her Turkish family raised her with love, and they became her brothers and sisters.

Mr. Speaker, this is a story of hope and love. When we say "never again," we give it real meaning by making our province and our country strong and free. Good business plans and sound fiscal policies will help to keep Alberta strong and free.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to tell you a little bit about Red Deer. I've always said that Red Deer is the best place in the world to live. After all, where else can you find two NHL teams, two CFL teams, two international airports, two Jubilee Auditoriums, spectacular mountains, and beautiful lakes, all within an hour and a half drive? My husband used to say that a traffic jam in Red Deer was more than 10 cars at a stoplight. Red Deer is growing so fast that the constant flow of traffic on the main road always looks like rush hour.

Red Deer-North is a community of approximately 30,000 people. The small businesses in Red Deer-North serve the oil field, construction companies, manufacturing companies, and farmers. The shopping is expanding beyond our two shopping malls and the downtown areas as major players such as Costco, Staples, Leon's Furniture, Wal-Mart, Home Depot, and Zellers, where the lowest price is the law, compete for the market share of the people of Red Deer and central Alberta.

Red Deer-North looks forward to the government of Alberta maintaining a strong and vibrant environment to help the people of Alberta to prosper. Red Deer-North has a need for affordable housing. The fast growth of Red Deer and the demand for these homes leaves little supply.

We have a number of single-parent families in Red Deer-North who have told me that it is difficult right now for them to go it alone, and they are thankful for day care and rent subsidies.

Red Deer-North has some very exciting manufacturing plants. Travelaire Canada builds beautiful trailers that compete with American products. Our fibreglass manufacturing company makes many of the FRP exterior parts for these trailers. Superior Emergency builds some of the best fire trucks in North America. We have Parkland Industries, Quinn Pumps, Collicutt Hanover, Washuk manufacturing, and many more. There are also a large number of small business people. These innovative entrepreneurs help to create the jobs that give us security.

The people of Red Deer-North want safe communities, where they can raise their families without fear, and the seniors of Red Deer-North want a safe community as well. Mr. Speaker, the most important building block of any society is the family. We need to make sure that our business plans and fiscal policies help families to be strong and united. We need to encourage respect and love for all members of our families so that we might learn how to respect and help others.

In the last six weeks I have experienced the greatness of our beautiful city of Red Deer. I've had the honour and the privilege of handing out Rutherford scholarships to the students of Lindsay Thurber high school. That evening I watched as over 300 students received awards in many different areas of achievement. I found this to be very exciting. I participated in the hall of fame ceremonies where three internationally renowned former students of Lindsay Thurber were inducted into the hall of fame.

The awards and fame didn't stop there. I attended the Chamber of Commerce awards night as five of our most successful businesses won awards. We also celebrated the achievement of our Chamber of Commerce manager, Jan Fisher, who was awarded the Canadian manager of the year award.

I was so proud of all our award winners that you would have thought I was their mother. Mr. Speaker, the city of Edmonton may be the City of Champions, but Red Deer is the city of winners.

The city of Red Deer keeps growing and growing. I know that the hon. Member for Red Deer-South is as proud as I am of our beautiful city. The Minister of Learning called him a pain in the neck because he persisted until Red Deer College was given a much-needed grant for expansion. Red Deer College was originally designed for 2,500 students. It now serves 5,000 students. All of Red Deer is thankful for the efforts of the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

In the past six weeks I've also attended the Millennium Centre grand opening. This is a beautiful modern office complex in downtown Red Deer. I attended the grand opening of Safety City, that will serve to teach our children safe habits on the street and on the farm. Hundreds of volunteers gave their time and money to make this project a reality. The province was also a proud contributor to this worthy project. We have just opened the Excel gymnastics club, which is the most modern club in Alberta. The province contributed to this project as well. This club is part of the brand-new Collicutt Centre, where all types of recreational activity will find their home.

The Kerry Wood Nature Centre just opened a new addition so that children of all ages can study, learn, and enjoy the wonders of nature. The Westerner association has added a new midsized building called the harvest centre, and it was not too long ago that the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame was opened on the outskirts of Red Deer on highway 2. Soon we will be developing the top floor of the Red Deer regional hospital, where we will have more beds and nursing care for our people.

Mr. Speaker, these are new and wonderful achievements that help Red Deer to grow. Many of them could not have been accomplished without the tenacious and persistent work of hundreds of volunteers. In fact, Red Deer is called the city of volunteers. Our volunteers contribute to the quality of life in Red Deer. They help to make it a better place to live, as do all our areas of recreation. Our park system is fantastic. The Waskasoo park system has many miles of beautiful biking and hiking trails that link historic and nature sites to parks and other recreation areas.

Every one of these projects is the result of someone's dreams. With hard work, tenacity, innovation, and courageous, persistent fund-raising each one of these dreams became a reality. Red Deer and indeed Alberta are made stronger each time a dream is realized. Without good business plans and solid fiscal policies that create a thriving economy and dynamic environment, these dreams could not come true.

Mr. Speaker, it was just over a year ago that I went to Kobe, Japan, to represent the Pacific Northwest region of International Training in Communication at the international speech contest. In my speech I searched for a hero. In my desperate search I quote Bonnie Tyler's award-winning song Holding Out for a Hero, which says:

Where have all the good men gone
And where are all the gods?
Where's the street-wise Hercules
To fight the rising odds?
Isn't there a white knight upon a fiery steed?
Late at night I toss and turn and dream of what I need
I need a hero.

Mr. Speaker, I couldn't find a hero in Bill Clinton, who didn't even know the definition of sex. I couldn't find a hero in Jean Chretien, who had to finish a ski trip and could not attend the funeral of King Hussein of Jordan, one of the greatest Middle East peace-makers in history. I could not find a hero in Boris Yeltsin, who was in and out of hospital for his illnesses and addictions. I could not find a hero in the Olympic Committee, that would allow corruption and greed to control them.

I looked throughout history and around the world to find a hero, and there are many: Abraham Lincoln, Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Winston Churchill, Martin Luther King, Jr., Mother Teresa, Sadako Sasaki of Hiroshima, Nelson Mandela. In all these heroes I did not find my hero. But when I looked around, I found that my hero was in that very room. When you take the time to listen to people and their concerns, when you can give them a hug to celebrate their victories or share their sorrows, when you kneel down to wipe a tear from a child's eye, when you comfort the sick, and when you visit the elderly, then you are my hero.

Mr. Speaker, this room is full of heroes and our communities are full of heroes. The members of this Legislature are heroes when they show concern for our children by providing good education and passing legislation that protects them from predators, when they show their compassion for seniors who need caring support, when they encourage affordable housing for those who need shelter, when they provide a vision that protects our health care for the next generation, when they seek to protect our environment, and when they stand firm on a policy of fiscal responsibility. It takes heroes to make the tough choices to protect the future and it takes heroes to stand on guard for all Albertans.

Where have all the good men and women gone? Well, they're right here among us. I am honoured to be among these heroes of Alberta. I am privileged to represent the people of Red Deer-North. I am proud to be part of the Alberta advantage, and I will serve the people of Red Deer-North and of Alberta to the best of my ability and with all my heart.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. members from Edmonton-Highlands and Red Deer-North may be my political adversaries, but they are also honoured colleagues, and I think we have seen that demonstrated in their maiden addresses to this Assembly. On behalf of the Official Opposition caucus I want to thank them for their heartfelt words.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity, as well, to participate in the debate on Motion 15. Motion 15 reads: "Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government." It should come as no surprise to you that I will not be supporting that motion.

The government of Alberta has a responsibility to more than just the bottom line, particularly in the definition of bottom line that this government embraces, which is one of simply dollars and cents. There is little recognition of the social discord, the social disharmony that has happened as a result of this government's rather ruthless pursuit of its more ideologically driven policies.

If you look at the second-quarter fiscal update, which was released on November 14, and you turn to page 1, which is where you would think the government would put the most important information that it wished Albertans to know, in fact under the caption of Highlights, Mr. Speaker, which indicates of course that this is what the government wants people to pay particular attention to, we see that the very first highlighted bullet is that Alberta will be allocating over and above the budget an additional amount "towards repaying Alberta's accumulated debt." Now, I don't take issue with debt repayment. In fact, I think it was irresponsible of the Conservative government to get Albertans into that particular debt load situation to begin with. The whole time I've been in this Legislature, I've been talking about fiscal responsibility and, in fact, insisting that the government live up to its obligations.

I find it curious that a government that talks about people and prosperity would say, as the most important issue to highlight, that what we're going to do with this blessing of riches which we have is accelerate the debt repayment. Now, why do I find that so troubling? Well, I find that troubling because it shows where this government is focusing their attention. You could look at some of the other highlights as well. The second highlight talks about debt repayment. The third highlight talks about tax cuts.

This government seems to have forgotten that it has an obligation to do more than balance the budget. The balanced budget is simply an achievement that allows you to then do other things. A balanced budget is not the sum total of the reason for a government to pursue fiscal policies. In this province of Alberta, with all of the riches that we have, in one of the most robust economies on the face of the planet, why don't we see a government that actually has a vision that does serve people, that recognizes that what we're talking about is much more than a balanced budget, much more than just a corporate bottom line? Why don't we see in fact some statements by this government that would be truly visionary, some performance measures to accompany those three-year business plans which would be so bold as to propose that there will be no homelessness in Alberta due to shelter allowances not keeping up with rental market conditions? Why isn't that a goal in the business plan of the minister of human resources?

Why is it that we don't see the Minister of Learning have a performance measure that says that in Alberta we will have the most affordable tuition fees in Canada? Why don't we see that as a goal? Why don't we see the Minister of Health and Wellness or his associate put into their business plan that Alberta will boast the shortest wait lists in Canada for surgeries? Why don't we see the minister of environmental protection include a business plan that says that we will have the highest standards in the country for air and water quality? Why don't we see the Minister of Learning talk about a classroom size performance measure that recognizes that a low student/teacher ratio is one of the best ways to guarantee the quality of the educational experience for the students? Why don't we have a performance measure that talks about the lowest student/teacher ratios?

Mr. Speaker, we have a government that seems to recognize the cost of things but doesn't recognize the value of things. We have a government that says that we will put effort into making sure we're ahead of Ontario when it comes to tax reduction, but we won't put any effort into making sure we're ahead of some of the poorest jurisdictions on this continent when it comes to actual dollars spent on classroom resources. Why is that?

Then the government wants us to unanimously endorse their general fiscal policies. Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not the job of this Legislature to pat the government on the back. The job of this Legislature is to hold the government accountable. I don't think the government has been doing a very good job of being accountable, and it's not just my opinion.

If we take a look at what the Auditor General has had to say about deficiencies in government financial management practices in just the last couple of years, I think it speaks for itself. Mr. Speaker, for example, the Auditor General has said that feedback from standing policy committees "relating to the content or format of business plans is minimal." Again, the Auditor General:

In the Budget 99 cycle, information on Alberta's economic outlook for factors such as population, unemployment rate, exchange rate, and interest rates were not provided to Ministries until October 1998, several months after some Ministries began their business planning.

Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General said in his '99-2000 annual report:

In Budget 99, core businesses are still defined variously in terms of goals, strategies, activities, or performance criteria. Strategies are sometimes defined as desired results rather than broad actions to achieve them. Goals are sometimes defined in terms of activities rather than end results.

No wonder this government presents a confused policy picture to Albertans. They can't get it straight. They talk a good game about openness and accountability.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

They talk about business planning, but we don't really see the evidence of the benefit of real business plans. In fact, well over 200 performance measures have been missed by this government. Performance measures are changed year to year. Performance measures are not always measured on an annual basis, and performance measures simply disappear when the results are too embarrassing for the government to report. That doesn't show openness or accountability or integrity, and it certainly doesn't show good management.

Madam Speaker, let me continue to quote the Auditor General:

In our review of the Ministry business plans in Budget 99, we found that over half the Ministries had at least one goal that did not have a performance measure associated with it. Overall, 24% of all goals in Ministry business plans did not have a performance measure. In addition, in many business plans where performance measures were included, the linkage between the goals and the performance measures was not apparent.

Certainly nothing to be proud of and no reason at all why this Legislative Assembly should approve Motion 15.

Madam Speaker, the Auditor General continued in his last report:

Our review of Budget 99 found that 82% of the performance measures had targets. However, two-thirds of Ministries had at least one performance measure that lacked [any] target.

The Auditor General goes on to say:

We have found that the results analyses of most ministries, made public in September 1999, did not discuss the reasons for variances between planned and actual performance and did not integrate financial and non-financial performance.

We can only be left to conclude that the government is either unaware or unwilling to tell the whole story. Now, it could be that they're unaware. It could be that the Auditor General is right. It could be that there is no linkage between the money that's being spent and the outcomes, that the performance measures are either invalid or inappropriate. It could very well be that the government is simply unable to do what it says it set out to do. It could be that they're unaware of the problems. It could be that they are in denial. It could be that they're just old and tired and think that all of this accountability stuff is a bunch of bother and that if they close their eyes and click their heels together, they can make it all go away and they'll end up back at home in their own bed and nobody will be looking over their shoulder.

It could be that this government just simply has ceased to care about being accountable to Albertans, that they somehow believe they have a divine right to govern and that Albertans will tolerate their incompetence because, after all, there is no alternative. Well, that kind of arrogant attitude on the part of the government will not serve them well, and it certainly doesn't serve the people of Alberta very well.

Now, over the years the Liberal Official Opposition in this province have provided many, many, many constructive recommendations to government to improve the budgeting and the accountability process. We've talked about changing the Public Accounts process. Why don't we have a Public Accounts review of the potential impact on the government of Alberta of the diminishing nonrenewable resources? There will come a point in this province when we will no longer be able to rely on the oil sands or on the conventional crude reserves or on natural gas for the billions of dollars that those resources now provide to the Treasury. Why don't we have a committee of this government looking into that and reviewing the implications of that and planning for that all-too-near future? Why don't we have an all-party process in terms of prebudget study, public consultation? Why don't we ever have the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations meet in this province?

The Alberta Liberals believe that what we do here is of importance, and the most important element of what we do here is that it is done in public, that it's done in full view of the taxpayer. We have talked about many initiatives which would open up the process, but instead of an honest review of those suggestions, we've seen the government continue to tighten things up. The former Treasurer, who now wants to be the Prime Minister of this country – when he was House leader, we had him retool the budget process so that subcommittees of supply were struck. The subcommittees of supply would be reviewing multiple departments of government at the very same time, therefore denying individual members of this Assembly the ability to participate fully in the budget debate, because you can't be in two places at once. The government had the audacity to say: oh well, this is going to open up the process. Well, in fact what it did is it made it harder, made it more obscure, made it more difficult for members of this Assembly to hold the government accountable in the budget process.

Madam Speaker, we find it very difficult to match the words of this government with their deeds. We see huge gaps between what they say and what they do. We see hypocrisy in their statements about accountability and fiscal responsibility. We see an indifference to the real concerns of Albertans, probably most dramatically evidenced when Albertans all over this province told the government not to pursue their privatization of health care scheme, to drop Bill 11, and this government's response was to call those Albertans names and dismiss and diminish them.

For all of these reasons, I can't support Motion 15. I would be surprised if most private members really could in their heart of hearts, and I know that no member of the Official Opposition can.

Madam Speaker, my time is running short. I understand that this motion will continue on the Order Paper. I've been asked by the Government House Leader to adjourn debate, and I will do so at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

MR. HAVELOCK: Madam Speaker, what I would like to do, if I could, is rearrange the order this afternoon a little bit and simply go to third reading of Bill 28 at this time.

head: Government Bills and Orders
head: Third Reading

Bill 28
Appropriation (Supplementary
Supply) Act, 2000 (No. 2)

MR. HAVELOCK: On behalf of the Treasurer I'd like to move third reading of Bill 28.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to speak to the supplementary estimates at third reading. The last time I spoke to the supplementary estimates, in Committee of the Whole, I had reviewed the requirements for supplementary estimates as they're laid out in Beauchesne. I'd like to return to that theme and look at just three ministries. The reasons for supplementary estimates are outlined by Beauchesne, and two of them seem to be applicable to three of the departments that I'd like to talk about: Children's Services, Health and Wellness, and Infrastructure.

Beauchesne says that one of the reasons that you have a supplementary estimate is that there's a need to further grant moneys for an existing service or to add money to a vote for a new service that's being put in place. That's extending the purposes of a vote. It would seem on the surface that that would be the reasons for some of the sums that we see in those three departments, but that kind of superficial look is not really borne out when you look at what the Auditor General has said about those departments.

I'd like to look at Children's Services first, because we have before us a request for $46.372 million by the Ministry of Children's Services for budgeted increases in the child welfare caseloads and the handicapped children's services caseloads, to address the recommendations of the Children's Forum and the Task Force on Children at Risk report, program enhancements related to the development of a risk assessment and reduction model, and improved permanency planning for children in the care of the child and family services authorities. Additionally, there are moneys for contracted agencies and service providers to support employee compensation adjustments, employee compensation costs with respect to staff seconded to child and family services authorities, and to assist youth in the transition from government care to independent living.

Those are the reasons for the supplementary supply requisition being in front of us this afternoon, but if you look at what the Auditor General says, the reasons may be more related to inadequate planning than they are to the provision of additional services. I refer the Assembly to page 70. The Auditor General, referring to Children's Services, says:

The Department is responsible to forecast the cost of children's services in order to provide a budget proposal. However, the Department does not have the system it needs to adequately forecast these costs.

In the margin he has made the same comment, and I asked in Public Accounts if any reason had been given for the lack of any forecasting model. The Auditor General said no, that there was no reason given. It makes sense that if the department can't adequately forecast their costs, then this is going to happen year after year. There's no provision in their budgeting process to ascertain what the costs might be. So we could expect with this department, as is the case now with Health and Wellness, that we're going to be back here year after year with requests for supplementary supply, and that isn't consistent with the reasons that are given in Beauchesne. It's a result of inadequate planning at the department level.

The Auditor General devotes quite a lot of space to Children's Services in the report and talks about the actual funding formula that's used to allocate resources and talks about it being a "population needs-based model" that is adjusted as the department moves through the year and has experience with programs. Again, it says that that's needed and that the funding formula needs to be enhanced. So two crucial junctures where the department is putting together its budget: the population funding formula and the adjustments they make to that and then the lack of a model for predicting and managing costs. The department is in the unenviable position of not being able to accurately put forward a budget. Again, that's why we're back here with supplementary supply.

The Auditor General also referred to the department not having information on whether the cost of support services is reasonable.

Therefore, the Department is unable to determine whether or not the funds were spent economically.

So the Auditor General points to a series of deficiencies at the budgeting level in the Department of Children's Services that can only lead to the department being here with a request in excess of $46 million. I think that when those requests come, Madam

Speaker, they should be looked at very seriously, and every effort should be made to make sure that we're not here again next year with another supplementary request because of inadequate planning and not because of changing circumstances.

The second department that I'd like to talk about in terms of the planning – and again the words are not mine but the words of the Auditor General. Health and Wellness has a request for $293.593 million. On page 132 of the Auditor General's report he talks about the department and the number of supplemental requests, the number of postbudget announcements that that department has made. He says:

While budgeting should accommodate some flexibility, for the past two completed fiscal years the health budget has increased in total more from additional subsequent interim funding than from the annual budgeting process. Between January 1998 and May 2000, more than 25 additional funding decisions were announced that affected health system operations.

Later on the same page he goes on to say:

While subsequent additional funding may provide relief from immediate budget pressures, it is not conducive to good budget management since repetition may create the expectation of continuing amounts in addition to planned annual budget increases.

So the Auditor General is saying that this is going to happen time and time again. They don't plan adequately in the first place, and they come before the Assembly and have to request money time and time again. The record of 25 different announcements seems to be one that should cause some alarm across the way in terms of how effective the budget planning is, a second example in these budget estimates, I think, of where the planning at budget time has not served the government or the people of this province very well.

I have as my third example the Infrastructure department, Madam Speaker. The request there is for $419 million. The Auditor General again has made comment about that. A couple of things are disturbing in the Auditor General's comments. On page 185 the Auditor General says:

The Ministry also requires information on strategic service delivery options and forecasted needs to develop strategic long-term capital plans. Such information would include strategic policy changes, options, and priorities as well as forecasted needs based on economic analysis and projected demographic data. In the absence of this information, there is a risk that the government will not have the most cost-effective program delivery methods nor will it optimize the allocation of resources to the acquisition, preservation and maintenance of capital assets.

So there's no plan. There's no long-term plan in the Infrastructure department. As a result, you'll continue to see requests for supplementary supply.

In other parts of the report there are even more alarming warnings from the Auditor General. He goes on to say:

In addition, we noted opportunities for improvement in linking the information on strategic education program delivery, as developed by Learning, to the capital plans for school facilities.

So what he was saying was that here they have the Department of Learning setting goals and establishing priorities and the Department of Infrastructure, which is supposed to serve the Learning department and provide facilities that match the priorities of the department, not talking to each other or at least not sharing information to the extent that there's any assurance that the money is being wisely spent.

I heard a previous speaker from the government side try to explain away the supplementary supply by the fact that there had been windfall resource revenues, that that was what allowed this supply motion to come forward. But if you go back to what the Auditor General said, at least in three departments that seems hard to justify. In fact, if the kind of planning that one might expect would have been done in those departments, we wouldn't have been here with supply.

With those comments, Madam Speaker, I would conclude. I must admit that I find it difficult to be critical of moneys that I think are needed. I guess my quarrel is with the way in which those moneys are requisitioned from this Legislature.

Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm mindful that it's Thursday afternoon, the second week of session, and the impetus for members to be thinking about other things at this point in the day or perhaps closing their eyelids is pretty strong. So I guess I'm contemplating whether or not I'm going to be able to keep people awake or keep them in their seats at this point.

You know, we're also this afternoon, in the context of discussing this expenditure of money in supplementary supply, on the eve of a federal election. Quite humorously, I woke up the other morning and thought perhaps I'd slept through our own provincial election call. Our provincial Premier was on the radio personally attacking the Prime Minister about a particular issue, and I thought that maybe in fact I'd slept through our own election call and we were in the midst of our own election campaign. I'm not sure I've ever heard a provincial Premier talk so often, make so many public statements in the context of a federal election.

It has been, Madam Speaker, in many other respects a very exciting campaign. I mean, we've even had the perpetually tanned leader of the Reform Party here many times in the province, particularly here in Edmonton, making comments about his vision for the health care system, his vision for the justice system, and many of those visions didn't entirely equate with the reality of things here in Alberta or the history here in Alberta under his leadership.

Now, let me relate these things to supplementary supply this afternoon. We, I think, make it a sport here in Alberta to take some shots at the federal government at least once a week if not every day. In a federal election campaign it seems to be every day. One of the things I think the federal government needs to be commended on is that they really know how to write a budget. They put forward, Madam Speaker, a budget that contains an estimate of what the expenditures will be. Granted there may be areas where people think they should have spent more money or perhaps they should have spent less money, but the budget is there. In contrast, in Alberta we really have two budget processes. We go through the big hoopla in February, generally in February every year, where the Provincial Treasurer has his podium and makes his sermon, or I should say his Budget Address, and that's put forward to the public as being the provincial budget. There's all kinds of media coverage and the rotunda's full of press, but, in reality, as we see here today, there's really a second budget. These supplementary estimates constitute a second budget. We're talking about the expenditure of money. We're being asked to approve $979 million. To me that's certainly more than a slight underestimation of expenses. It's certainly more than "Oops; I overspent." That's a significant amount of money.

So while the provincial government likes to attempt to point out that the federal government is full of flaws and the leadership is not up to their standard, really, Madam Speaker, here's a perfect example where all is not what meets the eye in Alberta. We have a government that has adopted a process of bringing forward a budget in February, and then from February to November they pretty much spend as they please, whether or not that's within the budget.

In my term of office every year – I believe I'm correct – we've seen supplementary estimates in this same range if not consecutively higher every year. Why is that? Because the government has had an agenda politically to try and underestimate expenditures, to ratchet down expenditures in this province so that they could profess that we're a trim, lean, deficit/debt-fighting machine, open for business; we're going to give tax cuts. All of that is being done in a manner, Madam Speaker, that really lulls or perhaps may even to some degree mislead Albertans into thinking: okay; what we're spending in February is what we spend. Well, that's not the case.

In large part because of a number of factors, this debate this afternoon and the contents of this bill will most likely not be covered to a large degree, and that's unfortunate. It undermines democracy. It undermines the budget process, because really the money we're talking about this afternoon comes out of the public's pocket in Alberta. It comes out of Albertans' pockets, and they have a right to know that there's a backdoor way of spending in this province that is called supplementary estimates.

That being said, there are some very legitimate expenditures contained within these estimates. But why weren't they included in the budget in February? The caseload growth in child welfare, as an example, was well on its way in February of 2000. Did we incorporate money to fund for sufficient staff and compensation to cover that? No. Similarly, we knew waiting lists in February of 2000 were very much an issue in the public's mind. Why wasn't the money incorporated at that time? There are a number of expenditures that talk about replacing medical equipment and funding additional MRI machines. These are all things, really, which accumulated because the government has not accounted for these types of expenditures in their budgets every year. That's one of the issues that the Auditor General is pointing out. Our budgeting process is becoming less than honest. That's perhaps the best way to frame it without being unparliamentary or inflammatory, Madam Speaker.

I actually find some humour in listening to the federal election campaign and the leader of the Reform Party professing to be this prodigal son of sorts, a tanned one at that, and that somehow Alberta has just got this all figured out. Madam Speaker, as we know, in this province the reality is really quite different.

I can't imagine budgeting at a federal level in the manner in which we are doing our budgeting here now. We might want to hypothesize a bit about how this government would rally if the federal government took this type of approach to the budgeting process. I somehow think we'd be hearing a lot of voices rising on the other side if that were the case. There are other ways in which this supplementary supply also relates to the whole federal election campaign, and that's through federal programs.

Madam Speaker, I'm going to be talking about several different ministries in my debate at third reading, but one of the things that I was very disappointed was not contained within the Children's Services estimates was provision for the claw-back of the child benefit to be removed. I have spoken about this before in the House, that we have a policy in this government that when a family receives the children's benefit, they subsequently have that same amount clawed back by the provincial government from their welfare payments. There's really no relief in sight, it appears, in that respect.

In a similar vein, we do not see any substantive relief for Albertans who are living on a fixed income with respect to rent relief, and this is something that I've been receiving calls and letters about in my constituency office for at least a year. Again, the official government line appears to be: well, in a growing economy, rent will rise. Along with that, of course, we know electricity is rising and utility costs are rising because of the government's botched deregulation plan. We see our municipal taxes rising because of the government's cuts to municipalities. Really, Madam Speaker, what choice do municipalities have? What choice do Albertans living on a fixed income have? I'm not entirely submitting that we should be going through this process to this degree at this stage and time, but if we're in the process of allocating additional pockets of money, then why aren't these equally important issues on the table?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

We also have heard much over the course of the last two years about the increase in tuition in this province. We hear it from every facet of the province, both undergraduate and graduate students. Alberta now is leading the country, really, in their lack of respect for postsecondary education and their unwillingness to do something about the rate at which tuition has increased in Alberta during their term of office. The average debt, which has been shared with us this week in a series of meetings that CAUS has had with members of the Assembly, is approximately $18,600. We see very limited avenues for students to access student loans; again, a very limited number of scholarships. All of these additional things that I talked about – electricity increases, utility increases, rent increases – affect students. And on top of that, Mr. Speaker, they have to shoulder a very high rate of tuition.

Now, I believe also that we are the only province in the country that has not done something, either freezing or capping or reducing tuition. Every other province in Canada, I believe, has announced that they have in fact heard from students the burden they're incurring through their postsecondary education, and those governments have responded and done something about that. But we certainly don't see anything in supplementary supply that is going to bring any relief in the short term.

Speaking of disrespect, we went through a process again in March of this year of asking a series of questions to a number of departments. All of my colleagues participated in the designated supply subcommittees, asking questions of departments relative to their budget allocations. I sat on a number of those committees. One in particular that I sat on and asked a number of questions about was the department of health. Mr. Speaker, it's funny that we would go through that process of asking those questions and never get a response. It may have been an oversight, but I believe that it's been pointed out, prior to Thursday afternoon on the second week of session, and we still have no replies to those questions. So here we're being asked again to approve the supplementary estimates when in fact those questions that we raised about the legitimacy of the allocations in the initial budget have not been responded to.

That again speaks to this government's definition of respect, their definition of respect when it comes to the Official Opposition, when it comes to the taxpayers. They are of the belief that they own the primary right to communicate to the public of this province, whether it's about tax dollars, budgets, supplementary estimates, or even, Mr. Speaker, about how they should vote in a federal election campaign. That's the sad reality.

So as agonizing as it is, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to restate some of the questions, that I think were very important questions that were raised in March of 2000 in the context of the primary health budget, that were not responded to this afternoon. Some of those questions related to the health surveillance branch Trends report. We have been attempting to obtain an updated copy of that report since the spring at least. I believe the last edition was out in May of '99, and we were told at one point, in fact, that the updated version of the surveillance report would be out sometime around May of 2000.

Now, for the public's interest, the surveillance report is really a series of indicators, where the government was monitoring the health of Alberta from an environmental standpoint, from factors such as the incidence of asthma, the incidence of birth defects, the health of our water, the incidence of teenage pregnancies, of infant mortality, those types of things. So that would have been very relevant this afternoon, to have been able to look at that and say: well, where we have a high incidence of low birth weight babies – which in fact was the case in 1999; I believe Calgary led the country – what has the government done, what has the department of health done with respect to that in the last year, and what allocations are within the budget to address that? But that report has been withheld, Mr. Speaker. We've not seen it tabled in this Assembly, although it's my understanding it is completed. I believe, pessimistic as it is, it's really so that that information wasn't available to be able to debate during the context of the supplementary supply estimates.

When we look specifically at some of the allocations under Health and Wellness in the supplementary estimates today, we see $10 million for the increased cost of drug benefits. Really no explanation to any degree, Mr. Speaker, about what in fact is contained within that increase and what the breakdown was of those costs. It has been predicted, at least in my tenure within the health sector, for some time, several years, that pharmaceutical costs were going to increase in this country as a result of the patent protection that was afforded to name-brand pharmaceutical companies by a prior federal government, a Conservative government in fact, led by Prime Minister Mulroney.

I can't believe that my time is over. I really think the mood is right, Mr. Speaker, that I could get unanimous consent to continue.

[Unanimous consent denied]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure standing in this Assembly most of the time, but while we're standing up here speaking on this bill, Bill 28, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2000 (No. 2), my question is: would we be back in this fall session if it weren't for this bill? Why are we here? Bill 28.

The Legislative Assembly is being asked to approve an additional $979.321 million in supplementary supply in the 2000-2001 fiscal year from the general revenue fund. Of the $979.321 million in new spending being requested as supplementary supply, $978.276 million is for additional operating and capital expenses for government ministries, with the remaining $1.045 million in funding for the office of the Auditor General; $968.994 million is in operating expenses; as well, the remaining $10.327 million is for capital expenditures.

You know, Mr. Speaker, it's called planning on the fly, especially on the eve of the election coming up. It's not enough for this government to miss their budget estimate and their target by very close to a billion dollars. I do believe that if we look back over the last few years, the previous Treasurer, Mr. Day, in 1997-98 was $474 million under budget. In '98-99 the same past Treasurer was $429 million out of whack. Last year he was $1.324 billion out. The effect of this is that now we have a supplementary request for almost a billion dollars again. Since 1992 this government has replayed their spin so often, the spin being overspending by the previous government, overspending by the previous members, and a lot of these same members sit within this government. The thing that I think a lot of the members that are still around really forgot is to keep the "Progressive" in front of the Conservative side of their name. It's interesting that the present Treasurer has done a lot of grandstanding, along with a lot of rhetoric about the accountability and fiscal responsiveness that he has brought to Alberta over the last year since he has become minister. He's gone down a different road, though, in the last year, and that is to spend, spend, spend.

You know, I'll bring up something in Hansard from February 28, 1994. This seems to be what happens quite often in the last while, bringing up a past Hansard. The now Treasurer, was quoted as saying, "I told people I was fed up with bureaucracy, overspending by governments." And now, guess what? He's back to spend, spend, spend. Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm really left scratching my head.

The hon. Minister of Government Services stands up, stating at long length that she sits on the priorities and budget committee. Well, they must always be napping while some planning or budgeting into the next year is being discussed. If I was looking at an agenda saying that another billion dollars was to be brought up to answer for and commit to moneys already handed out and promised, I think I would wake up pretty quickly.

The supplementary requests cover different ministries – Health, Environment, Community Development, Infrastructure, Justice, and Municipal Affairs – and now we're being asked for more money for the Auditor General. Mr. Speaker, I want to take a look at what this means in the context of the overall budget and financial integrity of the provincial government of Alberta. Shall we think of things to look at? Let's take a look at the supplementary supply bill as it relates to the second-quarter fiscal update that the Treasurer just released on November 14, far earlier than it has ever been released before. We can only conclude that the reason why the Treasurer was so anxious to rush this report into the public domain was to try to deflect attention away from the issues that are really troubling Albertans right now: the waits in health care, the overcrowded classrooms their children are facing, how thin their wallets are getting when they have to fill up their car at the gas pump, the rising prices on electrical bills, and the heating costs which are going through the roof.

Mr. Speaker, the other item that was brought forward today, Bill 30: is that a reflection on the fact that there might be a majority government next week that doesn't reflect what they have in their own flat tax?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a look at what it means with other items. This is to actually talk more and more around why the Alberta Liberals cannot support this latest installment of supplementary estimates without some explanation of what this new spending will contribute to meeting defined outcomes and performance criteria such as reducing health care waiting lists, opening hospital beds, and reducing student classroom sizes. Although we recognize that funding is needed in these areas, we have serious concerns about the supplementary supply, symptomatic of lack of planning, which I referred to before as planning on the fly.

The Provincial Treasurer will have brought in this huge sum of $979.3 million in supplementary supply during nine months as Provincial Treasurer. By contrast, past Treasurer Dick Johnston brought in $2.124 billion in special warrants in six years as Provincial Treasurer. Jim Dinning brought in $611.257 million in supplementary supply during four years as Provincial Treasurer. The Provincial Treasurer has brought in more in supplementary supply in 2000-2001 than did Mr. Dinning or Mr. Johnston, and in that one year through supplementary supply the Provincial Treasurer has brought in the second largest spending bill, $979.3 million, more than any Provincial Treasurer since 1986.

Over the past year in this House I've asked questions around the money going to Alberta Hospital Edmonton versus Alberta Hospital Ponoka, being called all kinds of names in the House, whereas if you try to get that question answered outside the House, you never get an answer.

As I look through different spending and tax announcements subsequent to Budget 2000, we look at dollars that were projected for reducing waiting time for open-heart surgery, joint replacement, other elective surgeries, MRIs, and cancer treatment. This is very, very important. I don't think there's anybody on this side, anybody in Alberta who would ever deny the fact that we have long waiting lists. But I really believe that instead of throwing money after money, we have to start building a plan in these areas, and six years of destroying doesn't reflect back into building again. I do know that we're living in a world of high technology. The fact is that MRIs have just come in in the last few years. But when we start having this amount of human infrastructure loss in our medical facilities as well as our cancer clinics, we do have to start looking in the mirror and wondering what went wrong.

We look at long-term and home care. Now, I look at what happened to our education system here. Years ago, in the 1980s, my wife, being a nurse, was told that within the next few years there would be a lot more home care. People that were registered nurses would have to be going back and finishing their degree so they could be working in the field. Well, we haven't got there yet. We haven't got the numbers we need out there in the field.

In my constituency, where you've got Alberta Hospital, the downloading has actually resulted in removing patients from the actual institute over the last few years. I'm not saying there's anything wrong with that except for the fact that we do not have the care in the community that we should have to help them. If I could afford two staff in my office all the time – the trick that we use is that when there are two of us, there's a tapping effect. The next person runs over, looks at the phone and the number, and then we call the hot line that we have to Alberta Hospital to make sure that we get help out there right away.

School construction and repairs, the dollars that went to that. Well, I look at the nonanswer that we got from the Infrastructure minister in question period yesterday and the thoughts of some standing committee that feels that you have to have full occupancy of schools in cities like Edmonton and Calgary. That is totally a myth. It's wrong thinking. I've stood in here and talked about it before. In the inner city it's very important that we have kids that can walk to school because their parents aren't necessarily awake or capable of getting them there; they do not have cars. So if the occupancy of an inner-city school is 60 percent, I feel that is a figure that can be worked with.

Then you work out from there. You work out to the next ring of the circle, and you look at 75 percent. Then you get out into constituencies like I have, and for the most part I'm 150 percent overoccupied. I have the rural school of Horse Hill that is underoccupied, but they fall back into the equation of the ring that should be 75 percent. So if we have to wait in our city and in constituencies on the outer perimeter of our city with this type of attitude, that before we can trigger schools – I think the next generation of kids is going to be raised being bused into the city, because I've got schools, as I mentioned before, that are a hundred percent over. They're crowded. I've got new areas that are being built where parents are calling continuously about where their children are being bused to. I won't name names of schools, because they've still got fantastic teachers and they're very good schools. By all accounts, they are inner-city schools that they're going to.

The next item – I keep looking at different parts of where the money went to – is funding of long-term care facilities. This is something that's really interesting: how long it took for the Broda report to get off the shelf and be something that was actually looked at. Mr. Speaker, we will have to start planning very quickly, because not only are there a number of us in here that are getting closer to the time of retiring, but we'll be retiring into places where we can have care. Ninety percent of Albertans are still in their homes. That goes back to the fact of what I was saying about home care, not only in mental health care but in long-term care, making sure that we do keep people in their residences as long as we can. People are actually able to stay in their homes a lot longer because of all the different technologies and health systems we have, better heating, eating habits, and so on.

Now, that takes me to the questions and concerns that a lot of people have called into the constituency offices about in the last few weeks as they're getting their new gas bills and electrical bills. Their question is: am I to think that by paying my electrical and gas bills, I'm not going to be able to buy the fruit, the pears and everything, that keeps me healthy the other way? It already is being talked about, and I'm talking to people that probably never voted in my direction before but are really starting to think that way now.

A new area in a new ministry was the Task Force on Children at Risk. We knew this was coming. We knew something had to be done, and I'm very thankful to the minister that has taken this position. But is it quick enough, fast enough? Where was the planning over the last few years?

Another area is community mental health and eating disorders. I just mention that both in the case of home care workers and the fact of the expenses that are affecting people on a fixed income and low income.

Senior housing, lodges: $10 million, coming out of the Broda report presumably. It didn't need a report that took two years to do to find out that a lot of these figures needed to be spent. When we're talking in fast form, talking about how quickly we need to spend $1 billion, it seems to take a lot to pull $10 million out to work on some of these items.

One of the last items I want to talk about is the fact of education property tax and the cap and a committee that tinkers, a government that tinkers without coming out and being progressive and listening to their partners; that is, the AAMD and C, the AUMA, and the School Boards Association. I know the AAMD and C, even at their last week's conference, was still talking a hundred percent. Well, the other two sides weren't there, but they are talking 75 to 80 percent. I believe it is time that we moved forward on items like that and quit tinkering and showing, for great effect and everything, that a $135 million cap is the only way that we're out to plan.

Why is this government operating on three-month plans when the Government Accountability Act talks about three-year plans? When I first got elected, every time I stood up here and talked on the budget, I said: "Where is the three-year plan? Where is the five-year plan?" Municipalities out there, the backbone of our province, have always had to work on a three-year or five-year plan, even when they had been downloaded on extensively by both the province as well as by the federal government.

Municipal governments, as I mentioned before, are the backbone of Alberta society. You know, we all live and raise our families in our communities, and our communities are very important. If we don't keep an overall plan moving all the time instead of onetime dollars, Mr. Speaker, where are we going with this? The quality of life within our communities is dependent upon the availability of local infrastructure.

With that, I'm going to take my leave, Mr. Speaker. But I am very concerned that we come back every few months, and all we talk about is supplements to the previous budget. Where's the plan? Where's that three-year plan, the five-year plan that we should actually have as a province as well as asking the municipalities to stay that way?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, November 27, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/11/27

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Though we as legislators of this great province and its people are taken from the common people and selected by You to be architects of our history, give us wisdom and understanding to do Your will in all we do. Amen.

Hon. members, would you please remain standing so that we might participate in the singing of our national anthem.

HON. MEMBERS:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MR. DUCHARME: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly Mr. Ernie Isley. Mr. Isley served as the MLA for the Bonnyville constituency from 1979 to 1993. He served as minister of manpower from 1982 to 1986, minister of public works from 1986 to 1989, and minister of agriculture from 1989 to 1993. Mr. Isley is seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to present two petitions today. The first petition is signed by 18 residents from my constituency of Calgary-Cross, and the second is signed by 20 RNs from Calgary, for a total of 38 names. Both petitions ask the Legislative Assembly to allow health professionals to opt out of medical procedures for reasons of conscience.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to present a petition signed by 19 Edmontonians opposed to the Liberal Bill 211, which would require any tax increase to be subject to a provincewide referendum.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table four petitions containing 185 names from the constituencies of Calgary-Egmont, Calgary-Foothills, and Calgary-North West, as well as 1,451 names from Edmonton constituencies and also 25 names of doctors and dentists and 16 names of medical students from the University of Alberta. The petitions are urging the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Alberta human rights act to allow health professionals to opt out of those procedures that "offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred."

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented last week on November 21 be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request that the petitions I presented on November 21 and 22 be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to allow Alberta health professionals to opt out of those medical procedures that offend a tenet of their religion, or their belief that human life is sacred.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 10 of the Government Accountability Act I'm tabling five copies of the annual report of the government of Alberta. It's for fiscal year 1999-2000, from April 1 '99, to March 31, 2000. This contains the consolidated financial statements highlighting a record $2.7 billion debt payment, one which we will beat this year.

Secondly, pursuant to section 14 of the same act I will now table the annual report of the ministry of Treasury.

As well, on behalf of the Premier I wish to table the Executive Council annual report.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling the annual reports on behalf of the following ministers and ministries again as required in section 14 of the Government Accountability Act: Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, Children's Services, Community Development, Economic Development, Environment, Gaming, Government Services, Health and Wellness, Human Resources and Employment, Infrastructure, Innovation and Science, International and Intergovernmental Relations, Justice and Attorney General, Learning, Municipal Affairs, and Resource Development. The appropriate copies have been delivered to the Clerk's office; they're too voluminous to bring into the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the '99-2000 annual report on freedom of information and protection of privacy.

I have one more, Mr. Speaker. I'd also like to table with the Assembly five copies of the annual reports of Municipal Affairs' delegated administrative organizations. The organizations include the Alberta Boilers Safety Association, the Alberta Elevating Devices and Amusement Rides Safety Association, the Petroleum Tank Management Association of Alberta, the Alberta Propane Vehicle Administration Organization, and the authorized accredited agencies.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly today five copies of the annual review of the Alberta Racing Corporation for the year ended December 31, 1999, and five copies of the 1999 annual report of the Alberta Gaming Industry Association.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I have four tablings today. My first tabling includes documents from the Alberta Federation of REAs Ltd. These documents summarize the REAs' concerns and recommendations regarding the staggering electricity price increases. Expected price increases range from 85 to 150 percent in the year 2001 when compared to the year 2000.

The second tabling is a copy of a letter from Lance Lamond, a member of the board of Poverty in Action, expressing serious concern with the escalating energy costs facing many hardworking Albertans, forcing them to become homeless.

The third tabling is a letter from J. Faminoff of Calgary to the Premier asking the Premier to answer the questions posed to him by the opposition on electricity deregulation and private MRIs and to stop ducking the issues.

My fourth tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from a past member of the Liberal Party expressing her opposition to the Liberal private member's Bill 211.

1:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is five copies of the Edmonton public school board's newsletter, The Compass, featuring an article on microsociety, which is a program that first started in one of the schools in Edmonton-Centre, and that is Oliver school.

The second tabling is a letter from a constituent, Christopher Rivet, who is very concerned with what's expected to happen under the government's electrical deregulation, pointing out that he is currently living on AISH and cannot afford new increases in electricity on the income that he has.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would table five copies of a press release of the Graduate Students' Association of the University of Alberta released at noontime entitled Alberta Students Ask Province for a Mere 1/280th of the $5.6 Billion Surplus, part of their program to have tuition capped at a 2 percent increase.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling this afternoon. It is a document that I have received through freedom of information from the Department of Municipal Affairs. It is an e-mail between top-level officials of the Department of Labour in February of 1999 where there is a discussion to keep test results on treated pine shakes confidential from the Building Technical Council.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to table two letters from seniors in my constituency. In the first one the writer has asked that I withhold her name because she is a recipient of AISH benefits, and she has provided for the government's information an accounting of how those benefits are spent and how the increase in electricity, utility, heat, and shelter costs are going to leave her in a deficit position every month.

The second letter is also from a senior who is 83 years old. She has written to me expressing her concern about the lack of support for health care for seniors and particularly the lack of coverage for major dental expenses for seniors living on fixed incomes.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the chair would like to table five copies of a memorandum from the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek requesting that Bill 210, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2000, be brought to the Committee of the Whole on Wednesday, November 29, 2000.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister for Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly an awesome group of students from Archbishop Jordan high school. Accompanying them as part of the group is somebody who normally is a page in this Assembly, and his name is Brent Shewchuk, but today he is one of the members of the ABJ school along with their teacher, Jim Ryan, and 27 other students. I would ask that they rise now so that we may give them the warm traditional welcome.

MR. DUCHARME: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through to members of this Assembly a friend from the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency, Lise Langridge. Lise is accompanied today by her aunt Jean McNally from Edmonton. I'd ask both ladies to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 16 and 17 St. Thomas More Catholic junior high school in Edmonton hosted a very successful youth justice conference. More than 400 students from the 18 Catholic and public junior high and senior high schools in Edmonton attended Caring for Our Communities: Student Youth Justice. They took part in workshops dealing with everything from bullying to alcohol and drug abuse to the youth justice system. The conference was organized as a joint effort between Alberta Justice and St. Thomas More. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the people who organized this very successful event: Dr. Doug Nelson, the principal of St. Thomas More; teachers Mrs. Terry Volk and Ms Michelle Marlen from St. Thomas More; and from Alberta Justice, young offenders branch, the executive director, Kevin O'Brien, and assistant director, Paulette Rodziewicz. I'd like to invite these hardworking people who organized such a successful conference to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and introduce through you to members of the Assembly 43 students from Malmo elementary school. They're accompanied by teachers Joan MacDonald and Eileen George. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure this afternoon to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 26 students from Queen Elizabeth high school. They are visiting the Assembly today. They're all taking part in a social studies class. They are accompanied by their teacher, Ms Scaddan, and also by grandparent helper Mrs. Thorsen. With your permission I'd ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislature two Banff-Cochrane constituents from the wonderful community of Bragg Creek. They are Shauna Hay and her daughter Keira Hay. Keira is a grade 6 student who is home schooled by her mother, and they're both visiting the Legislature today for the very first time. If I could please ask them to stand in the members' gallery and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electric Utilities Deregulation

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's electricity deregulation program, becoming known as the KEP, is causing skyrocketing electricity bills for consumers across the province. Last week we brought forward the samples of ATCO's increases in the coming year. On Friday EPCOR filed information with the Energy and Utilities Board on the regulated rate option showing electricity rates will go up for consumers in southern Alberta under the KEP even with the rebate applied, and I'm happy to table those copies. My first question is to the Premier. How does the Premier explain the fact that a southern Alberta residential consumer served by EPCOR will experience a $24.69 per month, or 37 percent, increase in their power bill under the KEP even when the $20 rebate has been applied?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, the leader of the Liberal opposition is making some assumptions. The application is now before the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, and there will be an adjudication of that. To make that assumption at this particular time is wrong, and it's awfully presumptuous on the part of the leader of the Liberal opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure where the Premier is at if he's not even knowing what EPCOR is saying in terms of their billing.

Let's see if we can get his attention with irrigation services. Will the Premier admit that an irrigation service being served by EPCOR in southern Alberta will experience a $308 increase in their bill, or 52 percent, under the KEP with numbers filed with the EUB right now even when the rebate is applied?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, it hasn't been determined relative to the $800 million rebate that will be applied as to how much will go to various irrigation districts. Again, this matter is before the AEUB, as the leader of the Liberal opposition pointed out, and I think it's presumptuous of her to make those statements considering there hasn't been a ruling yet.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What instructions has the Premier given to his intervenor at the EUB hearings with respect to consumers, or is the intervention merely window dressing to cover up the fact that these massive electricity prices are coming under his KEP?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I've given no instructions whatsoever, but this matter is with the Department of Resource Development, and if the minister can shed some light on the matter, I'll ask him to do so.

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, on this particular issue, because it is before the board, we'll have to wait until the decision is made.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Rural Electricity Costs

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More and more Albertans are speaking out against the Premier's electricity deregulation plan. Last week we heard about the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties and the problems which are resulting from inadequate supply to meet rising demand and skyrocketing prices for consumers. Last week the Alberta Federation of Rural Electrification Associations sent in a November 23 report to the government. It said: "The current structure is the result of five years of turmoil and uncertainty," – this is from the Alberta Federation of REAs – "and will now result in electricity rates skyrocketing. This current structure is unacceptable." My question is to the Premier. Does the Premier agree with the Alberta Federation of Rural Electrification Associations when they say that his electricity restructuring has contributed to skyrocketing electricity prices in Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that all the groups mentioned by the leader of the Liberal opposition were involved in discussions and were involved in the design of the deregulation process.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, they may well have been, but they've now caught up with the reality of it.

Can the Premier or perhaps his minister of agriculture explain what happened during their meeting with the REAs November 23, last Thursday, and what kinds of discussions might have occurred at that time?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that that question was directed to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, there was a very good discussion. The REAs brought forward a number of their concerns. As I understand it, the Department of Resource Development is currently looking at the issues that they raised.

MRS. MacBETH: So can we get an answer please to the question: why is the Premier refusing to listen to the concerns of the Alberta Federation of REAs, to the AAMD and C when they say in their documents, in their resolutions that we have tight supply and rising prices and it is unacceptable to the people of rural Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: We are listening, Mr. Speaker. The leader of the Liberal opposition is absolutely right; there is tight supply. But there's also unprecedented economic growth in this province. That is one of the contributing factors.

I'd like to point out that we have put in place a very generous program which will be monitored to see if more can be done relative to . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: You broke it. Fifty six percent increase for irrigation customers.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, can I answer the question? There's an $800 million program to accommodate at this particular time farm communities based on consumption. There's an energy rebate program. Cheques are being received as I speak, $150 by each household. There's a $20 automatic reduction in electricity bills that will take place as of January 1, 2001. I don't know of any other jurisdiction in Canada that has gone to the lengths that this government has to alleviate as best as possible the rising cost of electricity.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Electricity Auction

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 29 this government will sell the regeneration capacity of Genesee, Milner, Sheerness, and Clover Bar PPAs under a one-year contract in a desperate attempt to cover up its mismanagement and bungling of the electricity deregulation plan. It's obvious this government is trying to buy time in order to panic sell at this reaction and take money out of the pockets of consumers through the sale of this higher cost power in order to give them the onetime generous rebate just in time for an election call. Will the Premier confirm that the sale of the unsold higher cost PPAs under one-year contracts will result in higher costs for consumers?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. Minister of Resource Development respond, but in answer to the prelude or the ramblings, I guess, of the hon. member, if this hon. member does not like the rebate before an election or after an election, I can say one thing to him: hand it back.

I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the original plan was to sell the balance of the PPAs that were unsold. We've always indicated that the money belongs to the consumers. Therefore, once the sale is completed, we will of course be laying out a plan as to how we may return those dollars that belong to the consumers out there.

This plan has been ongoing for a long time, and the opposition members also had an opportunity to participate through the debates. In the 1998 amendment to the Alberta utilities act, a number of these members supported the concept of deregulation. In fact, the date 2001 was established at the time, and you will see some support from the opposition.

MR. WHITE: Is it the Premier's position to allow bidders to recover their investments now that he's disagreeing with the comments made earlier by the Minister of Resource Development when he said that higher proceeds from an auction will mean that consumers will have to pay more in electricity rates?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've always indicated that when a sale goes on, it's open to the market and that the market will determine what is reasonable out there by the people bidding. Therefore, we don't establish in advance what we feel the ultimate sale will bring. We assume it'll be good dollars that we can return to the consumer.

One of the things I'd like to clarify again, Mr. Speaker, is that there are over 1 million residential households that can remain under the regulated rate option for up to five years. Another 124,000 commercial, industrial, and municipal consumers can stay under the regulated option for another three years. In fact, EPCOR in Edmonton, which is your organization, will have 274,000 consumers which are regulated by the city of Edmonton which you can be directly involved in. If you were concerned about the consumers in Alberta and the city of Edmonton, you would be out there in front of the council.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, work with me. Go through the chair. Okay? Thank you.

MR. WHITE: In that the costs of this power production are already known to the government and the Premier, can the Premier now tell the Assembly: how much will this reaction have to raise in order for the government to rebate anything at all to the citizens of Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it's an option, and I don't know for sure, but perhaps the hon. Minister of Resource Development can comment further.

MR. CARDINAL: We're always optimistic that processes like this will be successful, and you will see that the deregulation process will be successful.

We've always indicated also that we will be returning – as soon as the sale is completed, we will assess, analyze the outcome, and determine what formula to apply in order to return those dollars back to the consumers where they belong, Mr. Speaker. But to determine two or three days before the sale is completed what will be returned is foolish. Only the opposition that would do that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. deputy leader of the third party.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday the Alberta Federation of REAs met with the government's own rural caucus. At that meeting the federation pointed out that its rural members are facing electricity rate increases in 2001 of between 85 and 150 percent even after accounting for the government's electricity rebate. The REAs lay the blame for these punishing cost increases squarely on this government's bungling of electricity industry restructuring. My question is to the Premier. Why is the government refusing to listen to stakeholders like the Alberta Federation of REAs, who blame the government's so-called deregulation for skyrocketing electricity rates, choosing instead to engage in a strategy of wilful denial?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is no strategy of wilful denial, and as the hon. minister has pointed out, people can stay and farm communities can stay in a regulated environment. As I've pointed out before, there are a number of contributing factors that are involved relative to rising electricity rates. One is the phenomenal growth and the very bright and very positive economic climate that exists in this province.

Relative to the REAs, I understand that they were involved in the process leading to deregulation as was the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, as was the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, Mr. Speaker.

Relative to the discussions that took place with the REAs, I'll have the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development respond.

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, the federation has a number of concerns relative to the contracts and how they're being administered. As the Premier and the Minister of Resource Development have very clearly pointed out, those issues are before the EUB at the present time. They also had some concern about the fact that there was a differential depending on the type of user. Once again, that's a discussion that's going before the EUB. There was concern about the deferral account and how that was going to be addressed. Once again, that is before the EUB. So there are some things that the department and the EUB will be dealing with that I hope will alleviate the concerns raised by the rural electrification associations.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, how can the Premier continue to defend the indefensible proposition that deregulation is not to blame for skyrocketing electricity costs when the Federation of REAs, the Industrial Power Consumers, the Consumers' Coalition of Alberta, and every other stakeholder says that deregulation and nothing else is to blame?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that statement simply is not true. Coming from this hon. member, I find it really quite surprising that he would be opposed to deregulation when the company EPCOR, a board on which he served, was strongly in favour of the program.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, can the Premier confirm that the minister met recently with the mayor of Edmonton to ask him to pressure EPCOR to reduce its request for an increase in electricity prices, requests that they had made under the rules and conditions created by this government?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if the hon. minister met with the mayor, but I think it would have been a wise and prudent thing for the minister to do so, if in fact he did, because our obligation as a government is to protect the consumer and to use all devices available to us to protect the consumer. But I will have the hon. minister respond.

MR. CARDINAL: It is normal for a minister of the resource industry who is in charge of northern development, the forestry and energy sectors, which is very, very important to Edmonton, to sit down with the mayor of Edmonton to discuss a number of issues, and, yes, we did talk about the high cost of natural gas, the high cost of electricity, Mr. Speaker. If the leaders of the Liberal opposition and the NDs were responsible citizens of Edmonton, they would be doing the same thing exactly. In fact, if the leader of the Liberals was responsible, she'd be out there every day in front of the council telling them about the high prices. They do regulate those prices.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Resource Development. Given that electricity deregulation is due to come into effect on January 1, 2001, and many people are uncomfortable with making a decision of choice as to who would be their provider, my question to the minister is: can he tell us what the options are that individuals have in their choice come January 1, 2001?

MR. CARDINAL: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, consumers will have a choice of options as to who they want to purchase electricity from. In addition to that and probably the most important option that consumers have – again I've mentioned that over 1 million residences have this option where they can remain under the existing supplier for up to five years, and that is regulated. In fact, another 124,000 commercial, industrial, and farm commercial consumers also have another three years to stay under that option. When the consumers are good and ready, they can make that change.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, then, my question to the same minister: can the minister explain how choice comes into play when there's apparently only one provider, as is the case in St. Albert?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, all consumers in the future will have a choice between the regulated rate option and also the competitive rate, like I said earlier. In fact, both EPCOR and Enmax have already said that they would be aggressively competing out there across the province, and they're already both licensed to participate and provide services in a competitive process. As a government, of course, we will monitor the competition, and we expect the companies to adopt competitive principles as they move forward.

Mr. Speaker, again I'd just like to indicate that the services EPCOR provides, for an example, in Edmonton and surrounding area – they are regulated, and the city, again, determines as to how changes will take place. I would advise the member that whenever the opportunity arises, if that situation is there, she would be able to go to the city to make sure the issue is addressed.

MRS. O'NEILL: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. The minister has spoken about two providers, but my question is: is the consumer going to be protected against fly-by-night electricity retailers?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, like I've said before, EPCOR, Enmax, and other companies are very credible companies, and they're far from being fly-by-night operators. They do very well: well organized and business oriented. Of course, our top priority continues to be consumer protection while we provide a choice for people and top quality services at lower prices in the future.

I would ask the Minister of Government Services to supplement in that particular area.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I'd be pleased to supplement the answer. I think it's a very good question. Consumers should feel confident of the protection that is awarded to them through the Fair Trading Act, that protects them against unscrupulous marketers. In this act we have some very tough but very fair rules.

Marketers of electricity will have to post a million-dollar performance bond and will have to be licensed on an annual basis. Any violation of the Fair Trading Act will lead to prosecution and removal of their activities within the province. That, I think, clearly was demonstrated last year, when we had some difficulty with some natural gas marketers and we had to take some very strong positions and actually remove some from the province because they were not operating in an ethical fashion.

Again, as my hon. colleague the Minister of Resource Development has said, consumers will have the option to stay with their existing supplier or to make choices to go with a new one, and that will apply to the residents of St. Albert as well as the rest of the province.

Special Waste Treatment Centre

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Speaker, on November 14 Bovar reported a net loss of nearly one and a half million dollars so far this fiscal year. Bovar says that the ongoing inability to generate a positive cash flow has resulted in their decision to provide the province of Alberta with its notice of intention to cease all core operations at the Swan Hills waste treatment centre effective December 31, 2000. Under a July 12, 1996, agreement between the government of Alberta and Bovar, taxpayers are eligible to share in the net income of Swan Hills. Given that agreement, will the Premier confirm that taxpayers received just $23,600 back on their $441 million dollar investment in Swan Hills? That would be a rate of return of just .0000535 percent. Would the Premier confirm that?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if that figure is true or not, and I'll have the hon. Minister of Environment respond.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that thousands and thousands of tonnes of toxic material have been destroyed as a result of that plant being in operation. There is a price for garbage. Whether that waste is household waste or hazardous waste, there is a price to get rid of garbage. Thank God for that plant, a plant that was praised, by the way, by the leader of the Liberal opposition when she was minister of health, especially as it related to the tonnes and tonnes of dead drugs that have been destroyed at the plant.

Relative to the actual figure, Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly check on the particular figures quoted by the member across the way, but the point here is that the government has never claimed that Bovar would be a major profit-making entity in this province. Its goal, its purpose from the very beginning was to provide for the disposal of hazardous wastes in this province, which it has done very, very effectively. At the time, while we hoped that the plant would be profitable, we also acknowledged that there would possibly be losses and costs. The overall goal, which I hope the members across the way and the opposition would share, is that we provide for the safest possible disposal of hazardous wastes in the interests of a safe environment, a healthy environment here in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister of environmental protection just contradicted what the Premier said on July 28, 1995, when he said that the plant was entering into its commercial phase – that means making money, Mr. Minister. As a result of the net loss that Bovar has recorded so far this year, will the Premier admit that taxpayers will not receive one cent of profit, not one penny more this year in spite of the agreement that was signed by the government on the commercial phase of the operation?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, you don't need to be a rocket scientist to figure out that if there's no profit, there's no return. I mean, even the finance critic for the Liberals can figure that out.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I say that there is a cost to garbage, whether that garbage is hazardous or nonhazardous. There is a cost. Because of that plant, we were able to make this province PCB free and free of other toxics. We're able now to at least address to some degree the whole situation of orphan sites where terrible toxic pollution has occurred.

I would remind the hon. member that his leader some years ago had nothing but praise for that plant.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They've spent over $2,000 a tonne to process it, well above the market rate. They keep on throwing good money after bad.

Mr. Speaker, given that the Auditor General is not able to audit the operations of the Swan Hills special waste treatment plant, will the Premier commit to a full independent audit by an out-of-province auditor before his government commits one more penny of taxpayers' money to the Swan Hills plant?

MR. KLEIN: No. I'm not going to commit to anything at this particular time. Mr. Speaker, as we speak, there are some options that are being actively considered relative to the ongoing operation of that plant.

You know, I would ask the hon. member – and perhaps he can reply at some future date – what would he have the province do with this waste? Mr. Speaker, I go back to the days when I was minister of the environment, and we had the situation in St-Basile-le-Grand, where the Quebec government I believe spent something like $50 million to try to ship PCB waste to Wales only to have the longshoremens there refuse to unload it. It was sent all the way back only to have the longshoremens in Quebec refuse to unload it. Finally, in the middle of the night the captain dumped his load. I believe it was in the constituency of the then prime minister, Brian Mulroney. Quebec ended up with the waste, and they were $50 million lighter. Is that the kind of action he would have the province take?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Highway Maintenance Contracts

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Department of Infrastructure announced the new highway maintenance contracts for southern Alberta. The only surprise there was the significant savings for taxpayers regarding highway maintenance. My questions are all to the Minister of Infrastructure. Could the minister give Alberta taxpayers some details regarding the newly signed contracts? Are there indeed some savings, and if so, how much?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back in 1996, when this government went to outsourcing all of the engineering and many of the maintenance contracts across the province, we saw some savings at that particular time, but since 1996 contractors have garnered more experience, are more knowledgeable in ways of saving money. I'm pleased to announce that since our last tendering we've seen over a 35 percent reduction in the latest tenders coming forward on highway maintenance, which moves it from about $5,800 per kilometre per year down to about $3,800.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Yes. Further to that question, could the minister elaborate on how the savings were indeed realized? Was it strictly as a result of the bidding process, or were there other factors?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, first of all, our staff, working very closely with the contractors, re-engineered the maintenance contract process. We also looked at redesigning the tendering process. As a result, at the end of the day we had much better results on the overall tendering process by a number of contractors. I think, as well, that a contributing fact was the economies of scale. All of the secondary highways that we assumed control and jurisdiction over added to the pool of highways to be maintained, and of course more highways to maintain, better use of the current equipment and much more value for the dollar.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again: given that some of the unsuccessful bidders and current contractors have investment in equipment and buildings and commitments to employees, what will happen to their interests and the employees?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, what we have indicated very clearly to all of the unsuccessful bidders on the contracts is that we will meet with them, discuss where perhaps they could improve the bidding process. There's another batch of tenders coming forward on highway maintenance in the province, and we'd like to have everyone have a good chance at that particular process.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc.

Cancer Treatment

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Early diagnosis and treatment of cancer is crucial. The Minister of Health and Wellness stated in this Assembly that patients referred by their doctor to see an oncologist will in fact see an oncologist in a week or less. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that Mr. Andresson went for prostate tests in April, had a biopsy in May, was diagnosed with prostate cancer in early June but did not see an oncologist until late July, how can the minister claim patients referred by their doctor to see an oncologist will do so in a week or less?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I think it's well known in this Assembly that it's not my practice to comment on specific cases that are brought to the attention, and I think people understand the reason why that is so.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I can say that in answering the question about oncologists and the treatment of cancer – and let me say, first of all, that I do agree with the hon. member when she says that early detection and treatment is important. The Alberta Cancer Board had indicated to me earlier that there were waiting lists that were getting unacceptable earlier on this year but that they have used the money appropriately that the province has put in to dealing with waiting lists in cancer and a number of other areas and that they have currently brought it down. I can't speak to what the length of time for waiting may have been earlier this year, but currently I'm advised by the Alberta Cancer Board that from the time a physician assesses you and says that you need to see an oncologist, you will see one within a week or less.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the minister also stated in this Assembly that the average wait for cancer treatment following an appointment with an oncologist is four weeks, can he explain why Mr. Andresson then waited six months?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the answer remains the same. I won't comment on a specific case, but I stand by my earlier comments made in this House that the time for actually receiving treatment has been dramatically reduced this year. I think the hon. member will forgive me if I don't remember the exact figures. It depends on the type of cancer you have. Some cancer treatments you will receive within two weeks, and for other types of cancer it may be four weeks, but the times have been reduced dramatically from where they were earlier this year.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you. To the same minister: will the minister offer an apology to Mr. Andresson and his family for the hardship this government's mismanaged health policy has forced them to endure?

MR. MAR: I'm not familiar with the specifics of this individual case. However, if the individual would want to send me correspondence, I would be happy to deal with him on that basis. This is not the time or the place to be offering such comments, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Climate Change

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is directed to the Minister of Environment. Albertans have a vested individual interest in climate change, both in terms of the environment and the economy. I understand that the Minister of Environment attended the international climate change meetings in The Hague, Netherlands, last week. Would the minister please update the House as to Alberta's involvement at the international level?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think that before responding directly to the question, I'd just like to agree with the member's preamble, and that is that we certainly as a government in Alberta recognize the priority that the people in this province place upon a clean environment and upon the implications of climate change. For that reason, we have in this province very stringent standards with respect to emissions. It compares very favourably with other parts of the world. We do put an emphasis on protecting the environment.

In terms of the recently completed, completed I have to admit without any overall conclusion – in terms of the recent conclusion of the conference at The Hague we were involved with the Canadian delegation. We made representation with respect to the advantages here in Alberta of having a number of very clean energy sources, particularly natural gas, and the way that should be represented and given credit for in international negotiations. We also talked in terms of how we should be positioning ourselves as a province within the overall Canadian negotiating position with respect to climate change. I think a very important factor was the report, not only from ourselves in Alberta but from other provinces across Canada, which indicated the various measures across this nation which indicate that Canadians and their governments are taking climate change very seriously and taking measures to mitigate against deterioration in terms of the overall atmosphere worldwide.

We worked, Mr. Speaker, with the Canadian delegation. We, I think, tried our best to represent Alberta's interests and to co-operate with our other provinces and territories in putting forward Canada's position.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second and final question is also to the Minister of Environment. I'd like to know what assurance we have that Alberta is doing all it can to address the issue of climate change?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have in this province, as I said, established a very rigorous set of regulations and requirements as far as emissions are concerned. Secondly, we have established in this province an agency which is an arm's-length, independent entity which involves industry representatives and environmental group representatives called Climate Change Central. We're looking to that particular group to partner with agencies and organizations involved and interested in this whole matter and to provide recommendations and plans and initiatives for the province to go further with what I think is already a good environmental record.

So I think the important thing here is that while the discussions at The Hague did not reach any positive conclusion – and I understand that there's a further conference planned six months hence in Bonn to follow up on those deliberations – it does not mean in any way, Mr. Speaker, that here in Alberta we are standing still with respect to our overall commitment to making sure that we have a clean environment here, that we are not major contributors to the negative aspect of climate change. We will continue to work in that direction, which is I think the responsible thing to do.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Prostate Cancer Screening

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Breast cancer is a serious illness facing countless Alberta women. Vocal opposition from the Liberal caucus and women across the province convinced this government to reverse its plan to stop annual mammograms. My questions today are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that prostate cancer is one of the most common types of cancers afflicting Alberta men, why would this government not want annual prostate cancer screening tests for men?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're always looking at ways of delivering a health care system that can provide solid service to Albertans and is cost-effective. It strikes me that the area of annual prostate examinations may be one of those areas where it makes sense for us to cover it, an effort to spend money in order to save money in the long run. So I will say this: I do encourage men to ask their physicians for a prostate examination.

The issue of PSA tests, I am advised – and I don't know as much about this as many physicians will. I'm advised that it is not a perfect test and that there is no substitute for a rectal examination. That is something that men perhaps over the age of 35 should be asking their physicians for, and there's nothing that precludes men from getting that done on an annual basis.

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, given that prostate screening will save incalculable human suffering and taxpayer dollars through early detection and prevention, why will this government not fund prostate screening tests for men?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know how the second question really differs from the first one. I can only say again that men can get an annual examination for prostate cancer, and I would encourage them to do so.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government finally did the right thing for breast cancer screening. Will the minister now do the right thing for men and fund annual prostate cancer screening?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated, such an examination is available to men. They need only ask their physician for that examination, and it will be done.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. On October 1, 1999, the government announced changes to the assured income for the severely handicapped program including an increase in benefits. Will the government be increasing benefits again this fall to reflect higher living costs?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, yes, as a matter of fact, we did increase the benefits last fall. We moved the AISH benefit from $832 up to $855. I want to notify the member, however, that we will not be increasing the rates this fall. We are helping AISH clients, though, to try to meet increased utility costs. One of the ways we'll be doing that, of course, is by ensuring that they receive their full AISH benefits and also receive the full energy refund and rebate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Can AISH clients rely on other sources of income to meet their needs, or does this government expect them to live on this amount?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, clients can actually go out and earn additional income over and above, of course, their AISH benefits. We have a program in place, then, that would allow them to earn $200. There would be no deduction. If they earn beyond that, then we start to take some benefit off.

In terms of net earnings – I believe these calculations would be correct – a single client could earn up to $1,332 a month and still receive at least a dollar in AISH benefit. Of course, the magic of that is that they would then be able to retain their medical coverage card. A couple or a single parent could have up to, again on a net basis, $1,907 a month and still be eligible.

Clients, of course, are eligible for other sorts of income including GST rebates. Their families are eligible for the Canada child tax benefit. I think it needs to be pointed out that many AISH clients are in either subsidized housing or group homes or community housing. Some of them qualify for PDD assistance. We have made AISH more flexible. We're extending medical benefits for clients who work, and of course we've gone to introducing a rapid reinstatement for clients who need to return to AISH after a term in the workforce.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the government be increasing the $200 amount clients can earn before there is an effect on their AISH benefits?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, we're looking at that in our examination, but I do have to point out to the hon. member that each increase in that exemption increases the cost of the AISH program. Next year we're expecting the AISH budget to increase significantly because of rising caseloads. It's not within our current budget to increase this exemption, but we want to keep focused on flexibility, and really we want to be out there supporting the clients.

We really believe in the AISH program. We think the reforms that went through on October 1 of 1999 were reforms that were taking this program in the right direction, and of course we want to support it, then, as best we can.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's latest annual report shows that approximately 25,000 people were receiving assured income for the severely disabled, or AISH. The insignificant increase of $27 does not begin to cover increases for rent, electricity, gas, and services, downloaded to the people accessing social housing. My questions are to the minister of human resources. When this province has billions of dollars in surplus, why does this government pursue regressive social policies that commit people with disabilities to a continual cycle of poverty?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, I don't accept the question in its tone or even in the construction of it. The fact of the matter is – and the hon. member knows this – that when you compare the social programs that exist in this province because of proper fiscal management and proper caring for the resources, we do have the ability, then, to put safety nets in place. I would also remind the hon. member that we're in a situation that where AISH clients are on assistance, we'll do the best we can for them, but the important thing is to find ways to support those that are actually in the workplace.

MR. GIBBONS: When is this government going to provide sufficient support for AISH recipients so they can cover rising costs associated with skyrocketing rents, electricity, gas, and food costs?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, we're working on that now, Mr. Speaker, and we continue to work on it. We're monitoring the situation. We're moving to market-basket measurements at some time in the future. We'll be keeping our eye on this, and we'll be doing what we can for those people that truly need our assistance.

MR. GIBBONS: My last question is to the same minister. Will this government index AISH payments to the cost of living?

MR. DUNFORD: We have no plans at this time. Cost of living is a measurement that many organizations use, but it can be criticized I think for the fact that it just looks at an average Canadian, and whether an average Canadian exists or not, we're not sure. I think market-basket measurement will be the answer.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, 30 seconds from now I will call on the first of seven hon. members to participate.

Hon. members, might I recognize you first for your very attentive concern with decorum today. Much appreciated by the chair.

Jan Fisher

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, today I wish to recognize Jan Fisher for her excellent work at the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce. Jan has been the executive director of the Red Deer chamber since 1997. Under her guidance the Red Deer chamber was honoured as Alberta's chamber of the year in 1999, and this year Jan was awarded the Canadian Chamber of Commerce manager of the year award.

While Jan would be quick to give credit to the board and her staff, she in fact has provided remarkable and energetic leadership and is fully deserving of the award. It is people like Jan who make Red Deer such a great place to live and to do business.

Along with my colleague from Red Deer-North and on behalf of all Red Deer citizens we want to congratulate you for a job well done. We are proud of you, Jan.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

St. Albert Family Violence Program

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to take this opportunity to recognize the St. Albert Stop Abuse in Families Society. SAIF, under the leadership of Ireen Slater, has helped many, many families in St. Albert and area for over 10 years. Women and men find help in times of crisis and are helped as they make changes in their lives. The advocacy work may be in finding a new place to live, getting help through the justice system, or getting support through family counseling.

SAIF is involved in outreach and educational programs as well. The domestic violence rates have actually dropped in St. Albert, and I feel a large part of that is a tribute to the people involved with SAIF, a group of people who continue to make our world more peaceful, more loving, more whole.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Partners for Youth Program

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize a unique organization that straddles the constituencies of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and Edmonton-Highlands. That organization is Partners for Youth, east end, which began some years ago.

Consisting of some 41 representatives – namely, politicians, service clubs, agencies, Catholic and public schools, police, et cetera – they meet on a regular basis to discuss problems related to youth in northeast Edmonton. The Abbottsfield area is known as an underprivileged neighbourhood, inhabited by numerous low-income families with all the problems common to families living in poverty, but the community is improving, Mr. Speaker, due to the efforts of Partners for Youth and the many volunteers.

Thank you, Partners for Youth, for bringing new hope to those in need. Keep up the good work.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Fire Services Exemplary Service Award

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to rise and recognize 199 Albertans who today received the fire services exemplary service medal. A number of my fellow colleagues were present this morning at the ceremonies in Edmonton, which were presided over by the hon. Lieutenant Governor, Lois Hole. A similar ceremony was held recently in Calgary.

The fire services exemplary service medal honours members of Canada's fire service, members who daily are called upon to risk their own lives in order to save our homes, our places of work, and in some instances our lives. The firefighters honoured today have devoted a major part of their adult lives, some up to 40 years, to a lifetime calling which demands courage and dedication not only from the firefighters but also their families.

I have the honour of knowing many Edmonton firefighters personally, and to all of them as well as all of Alberta's full-time and volunteer members of Alberta's fire service, thank you for a job well done.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Student Youth Justice Conference

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to recognize the efforts of a dedicated group of professionals that work in one of our schools. St. Thomas More Catholic junior high school in Edmonton hosted the Caring for Our Communities: Student Youth Justice conference on November 16 and 17, 2000. More than 400 students from 18 Edmonton Catholic and public junior and senior high schools attended. Conference workshops dealt with a wide variety of youth justice issues, presented by people involved directly in the justice system: lawyers, police, and even offenders. Topics included the Young Offenders Act, probation, restorative justice, alcohol and drug abuse, bullying, and gangs.

The conference was spearheaded by Dr. Doug Nelson, the principal of St. Thomas More Catholic junior high school. Teachers Mrs. Terry Volk and Ms Michelle Marlen assisted with the organization. Staff from the Alberta Justice department's young offender branch also played a significant role in making the conference a reality.

The efforts of teachers and school administrators outside of their normal roles and duties often go unnoticed, and I'd like to extend the appreciation of all Alberta citizens to those who made this Caring for Our Communities student youth justice conference a very valuable learning experience for everyone involved.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Esther Honens Piano Competition

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This last Saturday, November 25, saw a terrific event in the city of Calgary. This was the awarding of prizes and the gala performance at the third Esther Honens Calgary international piano competition, a competition held in this province every four years. This involved 27 young concert pianists from 14 different nations coming to the city of Calgary, and I can tell you that certainly on the basis of my attendance at the event on November 25, the Jack Singer Concert Hall was truly a magical place as we listened to the five finalists.

John Roberts, the chairman of the jury of Esther Honens, described Esther Honens as one of the most important competitions of its kind in the world. I'm delighted to report that Katherine Chi, born in Calgary, was named – and this is the first ever Canadian named – as the first laureate of the Esther Honens piano competition. There was special recognition of Jenny Belzberg. I want to thank Andrew Raeburn, the artistic director, and the board for a wonderful event.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Olds Branch of Royal Canadian Legion

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to congratulate members of the Olds branch No. 105 of the Royal Canadian Legion on their 70th anniversary in celebration of a proud history of service and community spirit. I'd also especially like to congratulate those members who were recognized with various awards of merit, including those who received certificates of appreciation and long-service pins and medals.

Olds branch No. 105 was constituted in 1930 and has a primary purpose to provide care and assistance to unfortunate veterans and to aid widows and orphans of servicemen. A second purpose and more so of today is in the area of social and community life. Since 1942 the branch has been the sponsoring body of the Olds No. 185 squadron of air cadets and over the years has been involved in a number of activities, such as armistice services, parades, dances, poppy and wreath sales, sporting events, community events, and various children's and seniors' programs. Every year the branch donates to some 25 groups and organizations, with donations reaching figures as high as $120,000 per year.

I offer my thanks and gratitude to all Olds Legion members, both past and present, for their tremendous contributions to the community over the years of dedicated service. They are an inspiration to all.

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2000 (No. 2)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move Bill 27, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2000 (No. 2), for second reading.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I just take this opportunity to put on the record our understanding, as always, of a convention which has proven, I think, particularly useful in the Assembly – and that is miscellaneous statutes – and point out again that we appreciate the basis on which these statutes always come forward, which is that the opportunity is given to the opposition well in advance of its introduction in the Assembly. If there are items in the bill that the opposition has any concerns with, then they're removed from the bill, so when it gets to this stage, in fact we're satisfied, as an opposition, that these are remedial provisions that warrant acceptance.

That's the reason why you will not see debate on Bill 27 and why the opposition typically consents to additional readings being done. I just thank again, as is usually the case, Mr. Peter Pagano, the Legislative Counsel for the Department of Justice, and the Minister of Justice for ensuring that once again we're provided with miscellaneous statutes in ample time, and then the opposition is happy to cooperate to expedite its passage through the Assembly.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the committee to order, please.

Bill 27
Miscellaneous Statutes
Amendment Act, 2000 (No. 2)

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill?

[The clauses of Bill 27 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 29
Protection of Children Involved
in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. Let me make a couple of comments before I deal with some amendments that the opposition intends to propose.

Let's be very clear. My caucus colleagues have instructed me that they support Bill 29 and that they'd like to see expedited passage of it. That's because I think my colleagues think that we have an enormous responsibility as a province to protect vulnerable citizens, and scarcely anybody is more vulnerable than those 12-, 13-, 14-, 15-year-old children that we find on the streets of the communities of this province, mainly in Edmonton and Calgary – but it's not unique to the bigger centres – children prostituting themselves. Whether it's survival sex, whether these are children that are already vulnerable because they've had to leave dangerous situations, sometimes their own homes, suffice it to say that they are in distress, they are in trouble, and we have a huge responsibility as a province to support those children.

Now, having said that, Judge Karen Jordan of the Calgary youth and family court this summer gave some very clear direction to the court. What we have is, as I think has been said before, something of a dialogue between the Legislature and the court. The court has a responsibility to protect the rights of individuals, and that means children as well as adults. The court, in this case Judge Jordan, gave a very clear direction that there was a clear gap or lack of procedural safeguards for young children and the two young women in particular in the case that came before her. She gave some indication to the government in terms of some of the things that had to be done. So we're encouraged that the government has tacitly acknowledged that the first bill lacked those procedural safeguards, and they've now attempted to remedy that gap in the legislation.

Now, Madam Chairman, we have tried as an opposition – and I think we signaled almost immediately what some of our concern areas were with the bill. Just before I deal with the amendments, I'm still waiting for the Minister of Justice to tell us why, in the case in front of Judge Jordan, the agents for the Minister of Justice and Attorney General made no submissions, offered no evidence on the application of section 1 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. What we know is that Judge Jordan found – and I went through the other day, and I won't repeat them all at second reading – that there were some issues and some elements of the act that in her belief and in her judgment offended sections 7 and 8 of the Charter.

What was interesting was that the Minister of Justice's agent, who was there, offered argument and submissions on section 7, section 8, and section 10 of the Charter but offered, apparently, no submission on section 1. Section 1 is the saving feature. I mean, this is the unique Canadian feature that doesn't exist in the U.S. Bill of Rights. In fact, as a consequence the courts in the U.S. and the U.S. Supreme Court have had to try and develop, in an awkward sort of way, a balancing mechanism in their jurisprudence.

In Canada when we drafted the Charter, I thought it was quite a clever idea to acknowledge that rights are about balance, and there aren't absolute rights. It was a question of finding some way that those rights, like in sections 3 and 4 and 7 and 8 and 9 and 10, would be balanced so that in some appropriate cases we would say that there is a larger societal interest which overwhelms the individual right.

But why is it, Madam Chairman, that I raised it in second reading and I still haven't got an explanation in terms of why the province didn't address section 1? The opportunity was there for this province to come in and say: there are some limits that can be justified in a free and democratic society, and this would be one of them. In comments made by the Minister of Children's Services and the Minister of Justice to the media outside this Assembly, you know, they made the case about the greater societal interest in protecting children, but I don't understand why those submissions were not part of the presentation in front of the youth and family court judge. Now, it's just a strange thing to me that that wasn't addressed.

There were some things that I also found in going through the judgment that haven't been answered with the kind of certainty I would have expected. I'm mindful here of not wanting to go through the judgment item by item, but I take it that one of the judge's concerns was that you will have some children who would not be brought in front of a judge in terms of the 72-hour detention, and she found that troubling and in fact something that offended the Charter. As I read Judge Jordan's decision, clearly what she's signaling in every case where a child is apprehended: the child should be brought in front of a judge.

Now, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Children's Services have argued: "Well, that's simply too onerous. We're not going to be able to do that." That's why I'm suggesting a middle course, which would be to say: okay; maybe it's not necessary that every child that's apprehended without a court order . . . Let me make a clear distinction. Where children have been apprehended pursuant to a court order, these comments do not apply, because then there is the judicial scrutiny. But in those cases where there's an apprehension, where it's not pursuant to a court order, I'm proposing an amendment which I think is a responsible one. What it does is require that duty counsel would have to see that child.

I know there are some people here who understand what duty counsel is. I tabled the other day the manual, Madam Chairman, and I'll bet that you were probably one of the first ones down to that excellent Legislature Library to see what Calgary-Buffalo was talking about and to see what was in this. We have an established system of duty counsel, that works very well. My proposal was: why wouldn't we ensure that as soon as reasonably practicable, a child has an opportunity not just to read a poster on a wall saying, "If you want a lawyer, phone legal aid," but that a duty counsel would meet with the child in question and be able to give some advice, answer questions the child may have? I think this is an issue that's significant.

Now, there were two responses I noted in the Edmonton Journal the other day. One was that the Minister of Children's Services noted that when children come into the protective custody they're often on drugs, they're often totally incapable of understanding or speaking with anybody for a period of time.

I accept that, Madam Chairman. I accept that, but that's not a reason why we wouldn't ensure that they have legal advice as soon as reasonably practicable.

I understand that when some 15-, 16-year-old young woman who is whacked-out on drugs is brought into a protective facility, she's not cogent and not able to take legal advice, but at some point she becomes coherent and able to discuss her situation. All we'd ask is at that time there be that opportunity for the provision of counsel.

So to the Minister of Children's Services that's my answer: that we would deal with that by not requiring an arbitrary time limit for people to be able to see a lawyer, that it would be when they were coherent and able to converse with a lawyer, that that's when a lawyer be made available to them. Just to talk to a lawyer doesn't mean you're going to court. Madam Chairman, I'm sure you know that sometimes 15 minutes of legal advice can head off applications and all kinds of other material. It may be that the young woman in question has no intention and no interest in going to court, but at least we've provided her with some base information.

You know, I'm going to invite my friend from Calgary-Glenmore here in a minute to participate in this debate and my colleague from Calgary-Lougheed, because we have people who understand that we don't need to be threatened with a provision of some legal advice. Do we? It's not in some way undermining the system to answer some questions by a lawyer and for the lawyer to offer some advice to the young person. Isn't that really what we want? If we're exercising our parens patriae jurisdiction with a piece of legislation like this, then it's incumbent on us to make sure that that child is not left simply to her own devices. That's irresponsible.

You know, I've often said the respect I have for the Minister of Justice, but I must say that I was very, very troubled when I read in the Edmonton Journal the minister saying that the government wants "to use the resources that are available to help the kids" and worries that additional money spent on lawyers could divert from that. Now, that may not be an accurate quote, but surely to goodness the minister knows that for a few measly hundred dollars for duty counsel to be able to see a young person for 15 or 20 minutes, you know, I would think that the Minister of Justice would understand more than anyone in this Chamber why that would be a good investment of dollars.

I can see already that I'm probably going to run out of time before I have a chance to finish making all the points I want to, and I've got some amendments coming in too. I know I've got some colleagues that will offer at least a couple of comments, while I catch my breath, Madam Chairman, as I run out of time.

The first amendment, when it comes forward, is going to deal with the provision of duty counsel. I can't imagine any reason why any member would be opposed to that. I can't imagine the Minister of Justice – I'm sure he has been misquoted. I'm sure he would not begrudge the very modest, modest dollars available to pay for a half hour of legal advice. I can't for a moment believe that he doesn't understand why that would be important to do.

Now, the second amendment has to do with accountability. Judge Jordan in her decision had a bunch of very good questions, and in the 52 pages of her judgment, as you take it off the Internet, she posed a number of specific questions. This is a paraphrase. She said that these were things the government had no answer for. These were things that the government, apparently on the face of it, wasn't able to answer. I have to come back when I have that in front of me.

Well, here are the questions. They're on page 7 of the judgment. I knew I'd find them. Here is what she said.

There is no provision for determining the efficacy of the legislation. The Director would have the public believe that because hundreds of apprehensions are accomplished in a given period the Act is achieving its stated goal of protecting children. Yet we are left not knowing anything, except by way of anecdotal evidence, of the lives of the children after their periods of confinement are completed. How many accept the services offered? How many return to the same lifestyle? How many gradually escape from that world? Are those numbers any different from the numbers where the prostitutes have not been apprehended and confined but have moved onto a more conventional lifestyle? How many children who have been apprehended and confined are subsequently beaten by their pimps? Are those numbers any different from the beatings endured by girls in the trade who have never been apprehended?

She goes on. I mean, I'm not going to read all the questions, but she asks legitimate questions.

So we have to build in, in my respectful submission, Madam Chairman, some vehicle, some device to be able to assess whether the bill is doing what we all hope it will do. Now, I would think the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek – and I haven't had a chance to show her the version of the amendment, which I think Parliamentary Counsel is signing off as we speak. I'd ask her and I'd ask the Minister of Justice this: what would be the problem with requiring the Children's Advocate office on an annual basis to report on the operation of the act? You know, it's good from a couple of points, I'd expect, and the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek maybe can signal to me if this would be an amendment that she would find acceptable. What it does is it allows the focus not to be lost. It means that at least once a year we as legislators have to sort of take account of what's happening with the children on the streets of our communities. What possible reason would anybody have for resisting that? So I'm interested in that.

If you had that kind of a reporting mechanism, we would know the answers to some of the other questions asked by Judge Jordan. For example, are there beatings by pimps which take place to encourage the girls to replace the income that was lost during the time of confinement? What attempts are being made to determine whether under-age prostitutes are actually leaving the trade or merely working in trick pads?

Then I just go on to raise the final question raised by Judge Jordan.

The questions go on and on, but the Government of Alberta has not made a commitment to provide us with answers even though the liberty of children is being curtailed.

Well, Madam Chairman, this is the opportunity for government to provide those answers, and should they fail to do so, then the next best thing is at least to require the Children's Advocate report on an annual basis on the operation of the act.

If the Minister of Justice or the bill's sponsor have any issues with these amendments I'm attempting to outline, I hope they'd indicate so. I'd just say that I hope the Minister of Justice and the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek understand we've had a very short time to deal with the bill. We've signaled in a general kind of way the kinds of amendments that we're putting forward. We have been working with Parliamentary Counsel as diligently as we can to get those amendments done. We will send them over to the bill's sponsor and the Children's Services minister and the Justice minister as soon as we get them, but it's not for lack of diligence on our side that we're trying to get them on the table. I don't want anybody to think that there's some surprise strategy here. We're bringing these things forward and trying to do it with as much dispatch as we can, because, as I've said, my colleagues want to see this bill passed, but they also want to make sure that there are some good amendments made to the bill.

Now, Madam Chairman, in fact the paper is still warm. This is the next best thing to Christmas morning. I open the envelope, and what's been delivered to my desk but a big stack of amendments we're putting forward. To economize on time, what we're going to do is: I've put all of the amendments together in one package. I'm going to propose that we debate them and vote them severally, but they're together in one package for the ease of members' reference. If I can get a page while I'm speaking, we can take these amendments to the table and then ask that this be marked as amendment A1 and then distributed to members.

This might be a good time, if I quickly read into the record while it's being distributed. We have the initial of Parliamentary Counsel on the second page, in the lower right-hand corner, and hopefully you've received the original of the two-page amendment. [Mr. Dickson's speaking time expired] Okay. Well, somebody else will carry on, Madam Chairman.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks very much, Madam Chairman. I understand that the amendments haven't been moved. I'll leave it to my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo to actually move the amendments.

I'll take an opportunity to speak briefly to the bill in committee. Perhaps I'll leave my comments on the amendments until they're actually formally moved.

You know, there are a couple of experiences in my past that encourage me to see this bill and these amendments passed quickly. When I was in high school back in Burnaby, British Columbia, I went to school with a group of sisters. The oldest sister had actually dropped out of high school and then went on to try to find employment, and I was a classmate of one of the younger sisters. In any case, the older sister decided that the straight life at the time wasn't appropriate for her, and she ended up working first as an escort and then as a call girl and eventually ended up as a street prostitute. This was devastating to the family.

As I knew her two younger sisters very well, I kept in touch over the years. She ended up having a baby boy, and it wasn't clear who the father was at the time. In any case, when she was pregnant, her pimp moved her to Calgary, where she ended up giving birth to the baby boy and subsequently began, almost immediately after giving birth, going back to being a prostitute. The pimp had her working in Grande Prairie. The pimp had her working in Red Deer. The pimp had her working in Calgary and Edmonton. As time progressed, the pimp ended up being somewhat responsible for child care for this infant, and, Madam Chairman, one of the saddest things that I can imagine happened. The pimp ended up beating that baby to death with a coat hanger. In a very sick irony, I was employed at the time working for the John Howard Society up in Grande Prairie, and guess what? That pimp was going to fall onto my caseload. Of course, my sense of professionalism at the time made me declare the conflict of interest and to not have to deal with that particular offender.

Now, there is another experience that I've had, which was a more positive experience, that encourages me to see this bill pass and this program be operated in such a way that is consistent with the Charter as well as the needs of the young people affected. That is the experience I had in the early 1990s of serving on the Mayor's Task Force on Safer Cities here in the city of Edmonton, being the vice-chairman of that, and also being involved in the Action Group on Prostitution here in the city of Edmonton. That was a very interesting experience. I ended up doing a lot of research on things like massage parlors and escort agencies in understanding how they worked, and it got to the point actually where I was getting mail at home from the various lonely hearts clubs out there wanting to know whether or not I wanted to be matched up with somebody. This was a great source of dinner conversation between myself and my wife as these pieces of correspondence would find their way into my mailbox.

All joking aside, it was an additional eye-opener. As much as I thought I was familiar with the seamier side of the sex trade in this province, that was a real eye-opener, and the reason why it was such an eye-opener is because it showed me how closely these criminal enterprises operated as legitimate enterprises and how they mirrored what legitimate enterprises did and how they were using the same language and were using the same methods to further what in fact was criminal enterprise as those pursued by legitimate businesses. I struggled during that time to try to come up with some interventions that didn't require law reform. Because the regulation of prostitution is a Criminal Code matter and then we have some licensing and bylaw issues, which are municipal matters, there didn't seem to be much that the province could do.

Then we hit upon this notion that maybe the province could get more aggressive in the application of the child welfare legislation that was in place at the time. I remember convening a meeting of all the key stakeholders from the various government departments, whether it was education, child welfare, health, social services, justice, solicitor general, brought them all together and went around the table. We were discussing this notion that maybe we could do something to protect children by more aggressively using parts of the Child Welfare Act, even to the point of apprehending children because they were at risk, at danger. To a person – to a person – as we went around that table, we were told as a group that, no, there was really nothing that could be done, that it either wouldn't be legal or wouldn't be fair or wouldn't be right, that that was not the purpose of the law.

It is encouraging to me that we've begun to think outside of that particular set of constraints, and this is why, when this legislation was originally presented as Bill 1, I was in favour of it, with cautions: that it be done correctly, that it be done with respect to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and that we not set ourselves up for failure by failing to pay attention to those very real and very legitimate needs to make sure that individual rights are protected to the degree that they can be in law.

So we get to committee stage on this bill – and I am in favour of the bill – and those two sets of experiences are very influential in my thinking, but I also know that the bill is still not perfect. Maybe it's too much to ask for. Maybe this is not the place where we will find perfection, coming out of this Chamber, and maybe it's always the pursuit of doing it the best and doing it right that we should be aiming towards.

I know that my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo has thought carefully about some of the deficiencies in the bill, and the one in particular that I'm concerned about is the lack of legal representation. Now, I know that that amendment hasn't been moved yet, so perhaps I should save my comments for when they would be most appropriate, and that would be speaking to the amendment. But I don't mind foreshadowing at all in terms of saying how committed I am (a) to making this legislation workable and (b) to ensuring that the individual rights of the young people who will be most directly impacted are protected.

One of the ways we can do that is to guarantee that they have access to counsel at the earliest possible stage. The amendment that will be forthcoming that would provide for duty counsel is, I think, an important amendment and one that only enhances the bill, does nothing to detract from it. So I look forward to having that amendment formally moved, and then I will rejoin the debate to express more clearly why it is that I think it's so important.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Madam Chairman, thank you very much. I appreciate the comments of my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora, who in fact has had a lot of experience in terms of trying to work with children and adults with problems both on the part of the criminal justice system and beyond.

Madam Chairman, what I'd like to do is this. I think all members have now seen the amendment, and my proposal would be this. It's in four different sections: A, B, C, D. My proposal would be to start with amendment A. I'd move amendment A. I'd ask that that be marked A1, and I'll just read it into the record. Section 3(c) is amended in the proposed section 2(13) by adding "and" at the end of clause (b), by striking out clauses (d) and (e), and by adding the following after the proposed subsection (13):

(13.1) A director must ensure that a child, with respect to whom a show cause hearing is to be held under subsection (12), consults a lawyer as soon as is practicable after being provided the information prescribed in subsection (13).

That is what I'm putting forward and asking that that be amendment A1. If I might, I'd like to offer some commentary with respect to why I respectfully suggest that this amendment is important.

I think that Judge Jordan in her very thoughtful decision – and you know, I encourage people to take the time to read the 24 pages. It's not difficult to read, and despite some ill-informed criticism I've heard in the media and elsewhere, I think when you read through the judgment, it's hard to take issue with her major findings. One of her concerns was when she talked about section 8. She talked about some of the provisions that exist in other places in terms of procedural safeguards. She said in her judgment, "For reasons which were never explained these procedural safeguards are not incorporated in the Act." She went on to say, "Are young prostitutes not worthy of the same safeguards as children who are conduct disordered, drug addicted or perhaps mentally ill?" That's really what happens here. With this legislation you have young people who are apprehended and detained, and we're effectively saying that they will not have the same protection, the same procedural safeguards that mentally ill persons have when they're picked up, that drug-addicted persons have, that conduct-disordered people have.

You know, in our haste to assist young people in distress and in trouble, let's make sure that we don't compound the damage and the injury to these young people by taking away their ability to be treated with respect. In my own experience as a lawyer doing a lot of family law work and working in family and youth court, you have children who have not been treated with respect, and we shouldn't be surprised that they become disrespectful. I'm not saying that that's the only factor, but how many times in youth and family court have people said: "Where were the parents? What were the parents doing that these children would grow up with the attitudes and the behaviour that they display?"

So what we're doing with this amendment, effectively, is this. In those cases where a child is apprehended without the benefit of a court order, where a court orders the apprehension, this amendment wouldn't apply because the court has reviewed it. But in other cases where there's an apprehension pursuant to an order, the requirement would be that the director must ensure that where there's going to be a show cause hearing, the child "consults a lawyer."

I mean, that could be by telephone. I got a copy of the duty counsel manual and tabled it. One of the things it provides for:

In March of 1990, pursuant to the Brydges decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, the Legal Aid Society of Alberta [instituted] a program which provides free telephone advice to accused upon arrest or detention.

It would be entirely foreseeable that this could be a telephone consultation. I think where young people are concerned, that's not as satisfactory as some experience-trained lawyer being able to do it on a face-to-face basis, but in emergency cases that telephone consultation is certainly preferable to no consultation at all.

The amendment goes on to say: "as soon as is practicable after being provided the information prescribed in subsection (13)." My initial thought had been to say that it should be mandatory within 24 hours, but as I thought about it, if you do have a child who is whacked-out on drugs, that's probably not very feasible. So what we do is we trust the judgment of the director and the judgment of the professional staff, who say that "as soon as is practicable" presumably means when that child is mentally competent to be able to understand the issue and to deal with it. It would seem to me, as I thought about it, that this actually gives a significant amount of responsibility to the director.

I'd just say specifically to the Minister of Children's Services, because I've probably not been very clear in my rambling, that what I've put forward is a series of amendments, and the first amendment

I've moved is the one entitled A. It's the one that would require that the director would have to ensure that a child "consults a lawyer as soon as is practicable after being provided the information prescribed in subsection (13)." This doesn't mean that every child apprehended without a prior court order is going to go to court, so in some respects this probably doesn't go as far as I understand Judge Jordan would like to see it taken. But in my discussions with people involved in this area – and it's been limited because of the short time – people think that this might be more flexible and might be more workable.

3:30

For example, one of the questions raised by Judge Jordan was when she talked about the application of section 9. Section 9 of the Charter is the one that provides that "everyone has the right not be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned." Madam Chairman, she said in respect to that:

What of the poor child who is wrongfully apprehended but has no opportunity to convince a judge that the apprehension, although well intentioned, was not justified in law? If she was wrongfully detained by a police officer or officer in charge following a police investigation concerning a criminal offence she would be taken before a justice to determine the question of release. Is her right to be secure against arbitrary detention which may result from the application of this Act to be ignored because she is a child, or because we are willing to sacrifice her constitutional rights so as to be able to protect another child?

I think the judge made a further telling point when she said:

What could be more arbitrary than a review of the apprehension of some girls and not of others? The government has argued that there is a criterion which establishes when a show cause application is required and that this removes the element of arbitrariness. They have never explained . . .

And the Minister of Justice may have to be held accountable for this. . . why there is no necessity for a hearing following every apprehension, a hearing similar in form and content to those required by the judicial interim release provisions of the Criminal Code.

Now, I've heard the Minister of Justice say: "Let's not treat this as criminal legislation. This is a different thing altogether. This isn't a criminal proceeding." He's absolutely right. But you know something? We're still taking away the most powerful right that anybody has. It's the right to be free. Detention has been seen as perhaps the most serious violation of all human rights: detention and depriving somebody of the freedom to go where they want to go or do what they're going to do. This is a huge element. Whether it's a piece of criminal legislation or social welfare legislation, it can't be done casually. It can't be done without some procedural safeguards.

As I pointed out a moment ago, these young girls picked up under this act as amended will have less rights than somebody who is mentally ill, fewer rights than somebody who is drug addicted under other pieces of legislation that would also affect a young person. I don't think that's what the government wants to do. I know it's not what the Minister of Children's Services wants to do.

Incidentally, I take this opportunity to applaud her for the funding announcement last week. I asked questions about that, because when the announcement of the amendment package to the bill came forward, people said: "Fine. But longer detention is going to mean that significantly more resources are going to be required." So I applaud the announcement of the Minister of Children's Services. I must say that I've been pleasantly surprised by the alacrity with which government is moving on this issue. They deserve full credit for that. I guess I'd just like the package to be not sullied in any way or tainted because we've not just gone that small further step of providing some adequate procedural safeguards.

There may be other people that wish to participate in the debate around this, and I think we want to consider what Judge Jordan said when she talked about this.

I can see no down side however, other than the expenditure of resources, to requiring that any child who is apprehended be taken before a judge or justice of the peace within 24 hours of apprehension for the purpose of having her detention reviewed in the same fashion that an accused in a criminal matter who is detained by a police officer and not released must be taken before a justice of the peace for the purpose of a judicial interim release hearing pursuant to S. 503 of the Criminal Code.

She goes on to say:

It would be possible to carry out such a review by the use of teleconference facilities such as already approved in the Act and in the Child Welfare Act.

I'm not going as far as Judge Jordan is suggesting. I'm simply saying in a much more modest way: let's make sure these children have an opportunity to talk to a lawyer. The Minister of Children's Services will note that we've not put in a time limit, so there's no arbitrary requirement that the child has to speak to duty counsel within 24 hours or 18 hours, and that's because the minister has convinced me that there will be some children who, because they're whacked-out on drugs or whatever, aren't able to meaningfully dialogue with a lawyer. So it would be in the judgment of the director when that child is competent to engage in that kind of consultation. There's nothing here, Madam Minister, through the chair, that would prohibit a telephone conversation, so it wouldn't mean necessarily that there would have to be the physical presence of a lawyer to give that advice.

I may be criticized for diluting this amendment too far. There may be judges who think that the Official Opposition isn't doing an adequate job of insisting on rigorous tests, and I guess my only answer is that I'm a bit of a pragmatist, Madam Chairman. I'd really like to see these amendments adopted. That's why I've tried to respond to the comments made by the Minister of Children's Services and the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and the Minister of Justice and tried to go for what I thought was a reasonable compromise, although I acknowledge that maybe a court hearing in every case is the best thing. At least I would feel a degree of comfort that every child at least would have a core level of protection.

So those are the comments I wanted to make with respect to the amendment. Now, I know the amendment has just been circulated a few moments ago – and I explained earlier that it's because I just got it from Parliamentary Counsel – but I'm hopeful that we'd get some reaction from the bill's sponsor, from the Minister of Justice, and from the Minister of Children's Services. There are other things I could say, but I think I've been accused before of gilding the lily or talking myself out of a good amendment. I know that lawyers in Edson, Alberta, would be happy to see this amendment come forward and would think it is a responsible one.

I'm going to sit down and allow some reaction from the government to this specific amendment, A1, and then may have some other things to say, depending on what sort of reaction we hear from the government.

Thanks, Madam Chairman.

MR. SAPERS: I'll hesitate to begin my comments if the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Children's Services was going to join the debate.

MS EVANS: Madam Chairman, I would invite also my colleague the Minister of Justice to comment, but could I just clarify if the full extent of these amendments is being considered at this time, or is it simply section A?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: It's strictly section A that has been deemed A1. We're dealing with that one.

MS EVANS: Madam Chairman, we really believe that currently we have the opportunity for legal representation built not only within the amendments to Bill 29 that have come forward, but when a police officer apprehends a child, the officer immediately explains why the child was apprehended and tells the child that he or she has a right to a lawyer. So right off the bat when the child is apprehended, they are told about that.

When the director first confines the child, the social worker notices the child, and the reason for the apprehension is given right away. The notice is given, their right to counsel, the time and date of court, and that was something I mentioned quite succinctly in my opening statements on this bill. The court application is also served to the child. So if the child is under the influence of drugs or alcohol and incapable of understanding the information, the worker is expected to give this information to the child again as soon as the child is capable of understanding it.

I think, simply put, without digressing further, I'm not quite clear why the addition of this proposed subsection (13.1) would be any better than what currently exists in Bill 29 as presented. We believe that the child can access any service, particularly including legal counsel, and wherever possible we make everything available for them to make sure they get that additional help.

So at this time, Madam Chairman, it would be the position of the Minister of Children's Services, which I represent, that this is unnecessary, that it in fact is already fully embodied in the bill and its intent.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks very much. I appreciate those comments from the minister. There's a tremendous body of experience, though, in working with young people which would indicate that as true as it is that a young person may be advised that they can consult a lawyer, there is tremendous evidence that that doesn't happen. If you want to look at what happens within the existing process when a young person is charged with an offence and they're given that advice that they can consult a lawyer, it is not uncommon at all that if a young person is going to be receiving legal-aid counsel, the first lawyer they talk to is duty counsel at the time of first appearance in court.

Often it's not even duty counsel. In the case of many aboriginals it's a native court worker who asks for an adjournment in the proceedings so that the young person involved actually can sit down and talk to counsel and instruct counsel and receive advice. Even in the circumstances, through the chair to the minister, where a young person is charged with an offence and will in fact be going to court, which is, I know, different from the circumstances that we're dealing with in this legislation, those young people don't always get the benefit of legal advice, and if they do, it's not until the very, very last minute. Even at that point it usually requires the intervention of another adult on their behalf to ensure that their right to counsel is properly exercised.

So I would ask the minister and perhaps the Minister of Justice to consider this and to look at the reality of what actually happens to young people when they're going through these processes, whether they be as a result of a criminal charge or a child welfare apprehension. The access to counsel becomes very, very important because usually there is not an adult who this young person has a trusting relationship with. I mean, think about it for a minute. We're talking about mostly young women but also some young men who are prostituting themselves on our streets. If they had healthy and supportive relationships with adults, they probably wouldn't be in those circumstances.

All we know is that something in their life has led them to that point. They've now been apprehended. That apprehension may, in fact, be a lifesaving event. It may be the best thing that would have happened to them, but in order for that to be fully realized, they need the advice of a neutral and professional and competent adult. There are many other things that would be going on in the life of the young person. They could have outstanding criminal charges. They may or may not be involved with a pimp or another criminal organization. There may or may not be legal issues to do with the adults that should have custody or do have custody over them.

The opportunity to consult with a lawyer to be reassured about some procedural issues, to receive the benefit of an understanding of the law and how it's being applied, to be able to deal with some of those other conflicting or complex issues that they're dealing with outside of the apprehension I believe is an absolute necessity and not a necessity that will be met simply because at the time of apprehension a peace officer advises that a person is being apprehended pursuant to the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act. That in and of itself does not mean that that person will exercise the right to counsel or that even if they choose to, even if they try to, because of the pressures on legal aid, pressures that have been well documented so many times, they will be able to get the benefit of legal counsel.

So what we are doing in this amendment is simply adding a burden on the state that I don't think is unwarranted, considering that we are dealing with the deprivation of liberty of one of the state's citizens. We are putting a burden on the state to make sure that that young person, that child, does in fact receive the benefit of what the minister was referring to when the minister said that they're advised that they can seek legal counsel. We are now putting forward a mechanism where they will be able to be assured of that ability to get legal counsel.

Clearly, based on the minister's comments, there is no disagreement about the importance of legal counsel. What there appears to be is a bit of a disagreement about whether the current law goes far enough, and the suggestion coming from the Official Opposition is that the law will be enhanced in such a way through this amendment as to give fullness to what the minister is saying in terms of a child's ability to seek counsel. I hope that the minister won't just dismiss this and will understand the real difference between simply being advised that counsel should be sought and putting in place a mechanism to ensure that counsel is consulted.

Thank you.

MR. DICKSON: Madam Chairman, it seems, if I understood the Minister of Children's Services, that what she has said is that there's no additional measure of protection for a child between having a poster on the wall in the safe house or somebody handing to the child and telling the child, "Here's the phone number of legal aid if you want some legal advice," no difference between that and a living, breathing person trained in the law sitting down with the young person and saying: "I'm not here representing the department, the director, or any other person. I'm simply here to assist you. What questions have you got? I can give you some information." The minister, effectively, says that she sees no difference between the two.

Well, I guess two things keep going through my mind. At some point don't we have to get past the disconnect? If the children are so vulnerable, so confused, so needy that we pick them up off a street and take them in the back of a police cruiser or the social worker's car in the first place, do we not at least have to have some question whether those children are able to make sound, wise, prudent decisions about whether they need a court hearing or whether or not they should talk to a lawyer?

You know, I'm a parent, and my wife and I are fortunate that our daughter hasn't provided some of the huge challenges many other parents deal with. But, you know, my experience as a parent tells me that 11- and 12- and 13- or 14-year-old children don't always know what they want. Sometimes the thing that's clearly in their best interest just sort of passes by them. We're talking about young women, in my experience, many of whom are very cynical. Many of these children have been abused by their own parents or caregivers. I remember the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek talking about this, that many teen prostitutes have experienced abuse at the hands of people who were supposed to protect them and shield them.

I have great respect for this minister, and I believe absolutely that she wants to do the right thing. But is her experience so different from mine? She thinks these young people have all these problems on the street and we apprehend them, but a matter of hours later now these children can be left to make a very serious, a very important decision just by giving them some raw information.

My experience – and, you know, what do we ever reflect here but our own experiences? My experience professionally as a lawyer and as a parent and as whatever else tells me that children that are confused don't always act in their self-interest, that they make dumb decisions, and sometimes they make no decisions. Just to sort of say, "Well, tough; that's it; no difference; we've given them some core information," I can't imagine that members would think that was good enough.

I think there's a difference between the passivity that government seems to recommend. I mean, we have a statute which is hugely interventionist. It is absolutely interventionist. We've gone outside the Child Welfare Act because we said that the welfare act didn't provide for enough intervention opportunity. Then when it comes to this other area, we suddenly adopt this amazing state of passivity, and we don't seem to care very much about what assistance this child gets. Madam Chairman, I can't understand that. I have a lot of problems with that.

For example, maybe the Minister of Justice can tell us. If he looks at the duty counsel manual produced by the Legal Aid Society, which he largely funds through his department, and if he looks at page 5 of 41 where we talk about why we have duty counsel in youth court and we go through the reasons – I can paraphrase by saying: because the same young person that's in the protective safe house and is confused and troubled could just as easily be in youth court at the other end of town, and there the Minister of Justice is suddenly really concerned.

It's unlikely that the child is going to lose their freedom, so the penalties typically meted out in youth and family court are far less onerous and far less major. I mean, we're not likely going to see a lot of these young people going into CYOC or EYOC, yet they get access to a lawyer. It's guaranteed. It's paid for. The Minister of Justice is responsible for that program. Why is it, Madam Chairman, that the Minister of Justice thinks those children in youth court need some counsel and some advice and he provides it by funding the duty counsel program there, but these young girls and, I suppose, men who are looking at being taken off the street and detained for a number of days don't need duty counsel? They get the poster. So you've got the A treatment over here for some young people, and you've got the C treatment over here for some other young people. I have a real problem with that.

It's not good enough for the Minister of Justice to say that one is criminal and the other is social intervention. In both cases you're talking about depriving a young person of their liberty. I say again: how do you protect young people by not respecting them and by abusing their freedom? That's, I'm afraid, what we potentially do.

So I'm not sure what else I can say. We've heard the position of government. All I can say is that I expect many Albertans are going to be reading Hansard, are going to be following this because they're interested in children.

This is a pilot project. I think the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has pushed this thing, so with her pushing and with the support of the Minister of Children's Services we are leaders in this country in protecting children on the streets. But let's recognize that as we lead, that also means that people look to us as a model. I don't want people to look at this province and say: they've done a great job in terms of resources and other assistance to vulnerable young children, but in some key areas they blew it. I think by not actively ensuring a measure of protection for those young people and suddenly going completely passive when it really counts, we look like we're not really on top of this thing and we really aren't as knowledgeable about this area as our advocates would have Canadians believe.

It's an amendment that I think is consistent with what the Justice minister, through his department and through his duty counsel program in youth court, represents. It is a modest, modest, modest way of trying to respond to some of the concerns raised by the youth and family court, and for government to give the legislative straight-arm to what I think is a pretty constructive opposition amendment is extremely disappointing.

Madam Chairman, those are the comments I wanted to make. Thanks very much.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

MR. DICKSON: Madam Chairman, I take it that we weren't persuasive and the amendment didn't carry. So I'd move on to amendment B. Or did you want to call this A2?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We'll call that one A2.

MR. DICKSON: It would be amendment B on the paper that has been distributed to members.

This in effect is virtually the same as the last amendment. It just kicks in at a different part of the process, but once again it requires an act of intervention through the duty counsel program consistent with what we do with youth court, just at a different part, because we're here amending the proposed section 2.1. I'll just read it in so that it's part of the record, Madam Chairman. I'm moving amendment A2. Section 4 is amended in the proposed section 2.1,

- a) in subsection (1) by adding "and" at the end of clause (a),
- b) by striking out clauses (c) and (d), and
- c) by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) A director must ensure that a child, who is confined to a protective safe house under section 3(1)(b)(iii), consults a lawyer as soon as is practicable after being provided the information prescribed in subsection (1).

So that's amendment A2, Madam Chairman, and all of the comments and arguments I made before, if members would allow, I'd just repeat and incorporate by reference in support of this amendment. It's the same one again, and for all of those social workers and child advocates and child support agencies I just say: let's show that we understand that vulnerable, confused children don't stop being vulnerable and confused once they come into custody under this act. You know, one lawyer who works a lot with teens in trouble made the point to me that for some of these kids we're talking about, this isn't a matter of days or hours. This may be months and years in terms of the reclamation project. The Deputy Minister of Health and Wellness knows that. When we talk about population health and we talk about how we make children healthy, this is a component of that.

So we might look at it this way. Members that voted hastily on the last amendment, A1, now have had an opportunity to reflect on that a little bit, and this is actually their chance – there is nothing to be ashamed of – to say: we made a mistake on that first vote, but we're going to try and remedy it here on amendment A2. So I encourage members to think about what happened on that first one and not forfeit the leadership this province has provided by going backwards, as we would with the passive system the government contends.

I commend the amendment, and I look forward to any other discussion or any other response. Maybe we'll get a response from one of the government ministers responsible or perhaps the bill's sponsor. I'd look forward to that comment.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. I'm deeply disappointed in the response to amendment A1 and hoping that perhaps we'll get a different response but not really naively believing that we will. I'm particularly concerned that we didn't hear anything at all from the Minister of Justice in regard to these amendments. It is his department that will be picking up the cost, I'm assuming, through the legal aid scheme for the provision of duty counsel in some form to these young people.

What I heard the Minister of Children's Services say is that there is an opportunity for young people to be advised that they have the right to seek counsel and therefore we've done enough. Then I heard my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo say: well, how could it be enough when we're dealing with the deprivation of liberty of these young people? Considering that this is an act that goes directly into the lives of these people and is very interventionist, why would we stop short of doing everything we could that's in the best interest of the child? I didn't hear an answer to that.

I'm only assuming that the government's response to these amendments comes about for one or two reasons. The first reason would be that it's a fiscal issue, that it's just too much money, that we simply couldn't afford to provide legal advice to these young people. Well, if that were the argument, we all know that that would be poppycock.

First of all, any members of the legal profession that are present in this Chamber I think would be the first to acknowledge that the legal aid tariff for duty counsel is not all that pricey. It doesn't put a lot of money in the pockets of lawyers; it doesn't cost that much. Secondly, of course, the province is in a very healthy financial position. Thirdly, the commitment has been made of millions and millions and millions of new dollars to help provide services for these people on the welfare side. So the government has already made a financial contribution and a financial commitment, which I'm in favour of. But it would not be unwarranted to say that perhaps some of that money can be spent making sure that the legal rights of these people are protected as well. So any arguments to do with affordability would be spurious arguments. They wouldn't be arguments that we'd have to take seriously for the reasons I've just enumerated, and I could go on to mention some others.

The other reason that I can think of why the government might not want to approve these amendments would have to do with the general tone and tenor of the government when it comes to issues dealing with the legal community, particularly with lawyers. This is a government that has had a feud with members of the bar for years. Perhaps we're just seeing another volley in that exchange being fired right now, that this is something that would somehow be of a business interest to lawyers, and this government has it made it clear that they don't like providing business opportunities to lawyers, so they are going to be opposed to this amendment.

Of course, if that's the reason the government is rejecting this, then I guess I would just respectfully suggest that they should pick another issue in which they could further their war of words with the legal profession. This one is just too important. This one is just too critical to the well-being of young people, and young people should not be caught in the cross fire between the government and members of the bar in this province.

It could be, Madam Chairman, that I'm entirely wrong, that the government is rejecting this amendment for a reason that has nothing to do with their apparent disregard for the legal community and has nothing to do with fiscal issues. If that's the case, if I'm entirely wrong – and I have never been more sincere in what I'm about to say – I would hope that somebody from the government would stand up and tell me that I'm wrong and then explain to this Assembly why it is that they are unwilling to provide a mechanism to ensure legal counsel is provided to these young people whose lives are already so delicately hanging in the balance.

I would appreciate some further commentary from the Minister of Children's Services because I know how important this is to her. Perhaps the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, the sponsor of the bill, could talk about, from her own experience, what the downside of providing legal counsel could be, if there is one. Maybe we'll finally hear from the Minister of Justice regarding how this may or may not impact the administration of justice in this province. In the absence of a clear and compelling reason not to support this amendment, I would hope that members supporting the government will put aside their partisan interests and do the right thing for young people in this province.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I was not going to enter debate on this particular issue, but I have to do so just because of the opportunity afforded to stand in my place and tell Edmonton-Glenora that he is in fact entirely wrong in the matters that he raised in debate.

In fact, one of the rationales for not accepting an amendment of this nature goes back to the whole concept or philosophy of drafting legislation. Some people draft legislation and put absolutely everything into it, codify everything. That would be the French Civil Code approach to drafting legislation. In common law the process that we normally use in the parliamentary democracy is to draft framework legislation and allow the rules to be developed under that framework legislation.

It's not necessary to put the minutiae into the legislation. Now, when I say "minutiae," I'm not suggesting for a moment that the right of a child to have a review of their confinement is minutiae, but the process by which they get access to those rights certainly can be more flexible than having it outlined and embedded in the act itself. So the bill as it is currently proposed sets out that children must be advised of their right to counsel and given the means by which to access that counsel.

That does not preclude the putting in place of a duty counsel system or providing coverage through a family law project of the Legal Aid Society or providing legal advice in some other manner. It doesn't preclude it at all. But the question here is: does it need to be embedded in statute to ensure that children have their rights? I suggest that it's not necessary, and that's why this amendment need not be supported and probably should not be supported.

The arguments that are being put up about the deprivation of liberty lead one to conclude that people are looking at this act from the wrong direction. This act is not about the deprivation of a child's liberty. This is about the protection of a child from people who are abusing them and providing a safe environment for those children for a period of time in which they can be detoxified, can be given a good meal, a good rest, and an opportunity for some counseling in a circumstance where they will not be harassed by the pressures of the street or by the pimps and the abusers that have been abusing them.

This is not criminal legislation. This is not about treating children as criminals and making sure that they have access to a lawyer because their rights of liberty are going to be deprived. This is not about children who are picked up because they're in a confused state and then expected to make adult decisions.

This is about a situation where children are picked up because they are being abused, because they are at the perils of the street. They're being picked up in a parental manner and provided with an opportunity to get a good meal, to get a good rest, to get away from the drug culture, which most of them have been subverted to, to get away from the perverts that are degrading them, to be treated in a dignified and responsible fashion, and given an opportunity to have access to some counseling and access to some advice, which will take them off the street and set them on the right path and get them away from the hands of their abusers.

So the question, then, that's raised is one of whether or not, in so doing, we're asking them to make adult decisions. That's precisely why these amendments are before the House today, because if somebody wants to raise a suggestion that they have been inappropriately apprehended and confined – and it's the confinement that we're speaking of – they should have the right to raise that issue, obviously. If they're in a state where they're making that case, then they should have absolutely no problem availing themselves of counsel in order to do that. But if they are in a drug-induced state, if they are still suffering from deprivation, if they are confused, then it's not a question of providing them with legal advice so they can get out of that. Far better that we provide them with the counseling resources, the food, the safety, the shelter so that they can change their lives around.

I go back to the point that I started on. The reason for voting against this amendment, I would submit, is not because we are opposed to children having access to legal advice in the circumstances of their having been confined because they're being ill-treated on the streets, but rather one where it's not necessary to put this degree of detail into the statute. The statute makes clear that children have the opportunity, if they are being confined and if they disagree with their confinement, for a judicial review and access to legal counsel in order to have that happen.

MR. DICKSON: Madam Chairman, when the Minister of Justice drives home on the Whitemud freeway tonight and he sees a flashing sign on the side of the road pointing to "Photo radar 500 metres ahead," he's smart enough to know that he's going to slow down – or maybe he always drives the speed limit anyway as Minister of Justice. In fact he had a heavy foot and he was late for dinner and afflicted with a low blood sugar level and anxious to get home to enjoy dinner with his family and he got that warning that there was radar ahead, he would slow down; wouldn't he? We know he would.

The family and youth court here has put a big warning, a big sign on the side of the road. They've given notice to this government that what we all did a couple of years ago in doing the initial act was that we didn't pay enough attention to process.

Now, as I listened to the Minister of Justice speaking, I think he seems to have forgotten the reason we are here today. It's not because we got some different feedback from some frontline workers. We did indeed get that. The principal reason we're here is because a court of competent jurisdiction has determined that the Charter has been violated, at least sections 7 and 8 and 10, by the bill that we passed. That's why we're here.

Now, the amendment that we're putting forward we think, of course, advantages children, but it's also because we see our job as legislators is to try to make legislation Charter-proof. It's not by invoking section 33, the notwithstanding clause; it's understanding what the courts are telling us and then trying to craft legislation that deals with those things.

You know, one could say that the government has perhaps two options: they can listen to the arguments and try and deal with the merits of the amendments being put forward here, or they can do what they so often do, spend a ton of dough sending in lawyers from the civil section of the Department of Justice to battle this in the courts again. If I may say so – and it's certainly not all under this minister's watch – this government has a long and inglorious history of failed court challenges. So I don't know why the Minister of Justice would want to go there, but that's what he creates.

You know, when the minister talks about that we can codify so many things and he prefers and his government prefers not to codify, well, what in effect he says is: we're not going to particularize this; we're going to do something down the road. Well, you know, all the Minister of Children's Services would have to say is: "Member for Calgary-Buffalo and all colleagues, this is an announcement right now that we will implement a program and will do this immediately to ensure that every child will be seen by duty counsel. We choose not to put it in legislation, but that's a program that we're going to implement in this province." If they say that right now, I can sit down, and I'm not going to worry about the fact that the last vote failed and this one may well be heading that way with the direction of the Minister of Justice. But the minister hasn't said that.

The point is that there is a problem. It's been identified by Judge Jordan. We want to know how the government is going to solve it. We've offered a way to do it. The government's answer is no solution. Certainly I know that the lawyers in this Assembly understand the difference between the poster on the wall and actually providing a person to provide that protection.

Now, the other thing I have to observe is – and I'm not sure whether it's just late in the afternoon and whether the Minister of Justice really meant what he said. What I heard him say is that when it comes to depriving somebody of liberty, it's the motivation that really matters, not the consequences. Well, you know, in the 23 years that I practised law, my experience has been that the courts typically deal with the consequences. You may have the best motivation in the world, but if the consequences are detention without procedural safeguards, whatever your motivation, it offends the Charter and it's wrong.

What the Minister of Justice did not tell me is: why was it that when Judge Jordan rendered her decision, on page 20 she said:

When this issue was being argued, and I just say parenthetically that that was the application of section 1 of the Charter, the director maintained that the Act did not violate any section of the Charter and chose not to make any submissions on the issue. As a corollary, of course, there was no evidence called which was specifically addressed to the s. 1 inquiry to assist me in my deliberations. I am left, therefore, with only the submissions of the Applicants to consider.

Those were the two counsel for the two 17-year-old young women involved there.

So if the Minister of Justice disagrees with me that what the courts want to see is not the motivation of the Legislature but the consequences of the legislation, then why, for goodness sake, did that minister not instruct his counsel and the counsel for the director, when this thing was being argued in youth and family court, to make the section 1 arguments? The more we get into this and the more detail we review this with, you start wondering: was the Children's Services department talking to the Minister of Justice? [interjection] Oh, don't assure me that happened, because that is even scarier if I think they were. You see, I can at least sleep tonight knowing that there'll be a Liberal majority government in Ottawa and, secondly, that the right thing happened . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member.

MR. DICKSON: Oh, I'm sorry. That wasn't relevant.

Madam Chairman, I'll be able to sleep knowing at least that the two departments hadn't spoken to each other. Maybe they will now. But if indeed it's a question that the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Children's Services, their departments, have been talking to each other, we have got a significant problem.

The minister said that he wanted to see children treated in a dignified and responsible fashion. If he really believed that, then he would be supporting these amendments in a heartbeat, and we don't see that.

There are a couple of other amendments we want to deal with, but I do say that the court on the next Charter challenge is presumably going to be looking at the Hansard, the reflection of the debate, and they will note that this government was provided a way, in my respectful view, to make the legislation Charter-proof. As so many times the opposition has offered ways it could do that, we have a government that so often says: "No. We will plunge on, because we'd sooner spend all this money in the courts fighting Charter challenges than getting it right the first time."

Madam Chairman, I don't know what else we can do. So those are my comments with respect to the amendment.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I want to thank the Minister of Justice for entering the debate when he did and for setting me straight and letting my know that my cynicism wasn't justified in this case. That being said, I've taken no comfort from the minister's explanation as to why he and, I take it, by default the government that he's a part of won't be supporting these amendments. As I understand the minister – and I'll paraphrase, even though I run some risk of not getting the full weight of his words – this government doesn't believe in putting detail into legislation, that this is a framework.

Well, the minister might want then to explain to me and to other members of this Assembly why it is that we've even dealt with the amendments to the child welfare legislation as it stood. Because, of course, there were critics who said when this debate first started: "We don't have to amend the law; the law as it exists is fine. What we simply have to do is implement it differently. If we simply looked at the Child Welfare Act, we have everything we need. You don't need this flagship bill." With respect to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, she would have been well intended but wrong, given the Minister of Justice's explanation, because we only have framework legislation.

If we only had framework legislation, I guess I would have to ask the Minister of Justice why it is that he just rushed through a miscellaneous statutes amendment act that in part changed one word in the title of one government-created organization, a word that I would say was just added by another miscellaneous statute amendment previously? If this government is only dealing with framework legislation, then why is it that we busy ourselves with passing legislation that changes one word in the title? We surely wouldn't have to be bothered with that kind of minutiae, according to the Minister of Justice.

Now, the Minister of Justice, amongst all members of government, should know best that the law is about detail. The law is technical. What we are talking about is providing a procedural safeguard. That certainly doesn't dictate chapter and verse of how and when and who. It simply says that something shall happen. This is not different from so many other pieces of provincial legislation. So while my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo has made some very valid arguments and I've heard some responses from the Minister of Justice regarding why this doesn't have to happen, I'm afraid that I'm not convinced by his arguments. I did not find them compelling. In fact, frankly I found them a little bit shallow in terms of what it is we are talking about here.

I certainly don't think any member of the Official Opposition needs to be told by any member of the government that we're viewing this from the wrong perspective, that we're looking at this as legislation that takes away the liberty of young people but that we should be looking at it as legislation that is in their best interests. It is members of this caucus that have provided support to the government in doing the right thing by Alberta's children. We fully understand the importance and the perspective of this legislation. We, however, also fully appreciate the importance of individual freedoms and liberty, and we in this caucus support the Charter of Rights, not like members of the government, who have stood in their places and have said that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is the worst thing that has ever happened to Canadian society. So I really don't accept being lectured to by a member of the government when it comes to issues dealing with individual freedoms and rights.

I would ask once again that members of the government make themselves familiar with how legal advice and services are provided to people in this province and make sure that they are comfortable, that they are entirely comfortable, that a 12- or a 13-year-old girl who has just been taken off the street will have the presence of mind to note a poster in a waiting room or will reflect on the momentary comments made by a peace officer suggesting that that young woman should go and talk to a lawyer, with all of the other things, with all of the other emotions, with all of the other issues that will be going on. I think when individual members do reflect on that question, they will come to the immediate and the apparent and the correct conclusion that, no, of course that wouldn't be enough and that that young person deserves more. And since we are providing assistance to young people, since that really is what this legislation is all about, then we should go the extra mile and make sure that that assistance takes the form of access to legal advice.

Thank you, Madam Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Madam Chairman. I'd now like to move as amendment A3 that which is marked as the letter C in the two-page handout to members. I'll just read it into the record. Section 6 is amended by adding the following before the proposed section 3.1:

3.01 When any decision or order is made under sections 2 or 3, a judge of the Court, a justice of the peace or a director, as the case may be, must be satisfied that the decision or order is in the best interests of the child after considering the following factors:

- (a) the child's safety,
- (b) the child's present and future well-being,
- (c) the child's physical and emotional needs,
- (d) the child's level of development,
- (e) the child's cultural, racial, linguistic and religious heritage,
- (f) the child's views,
- (g) the effect on the child if there is a delay in making a decision, and
- (h) the importance of continuity in providing the child with services.

Madam Chairman, the reason for this amendment is that a court under Bill 29 is making very important decisions for a young person. They're making decisions in terms of potentially having a child detained for a period of time, even against that child's will. We have confinement of up to 21 days in a protective safe house, a renewal potentially for a further 21 days. These are major impacts on a child.

I quoted the other day that study that tested all Alberta laws for compliance with the UN convention on the rights of the child. The observation by the analyst, the author, was that our Child Welfare Act is the strongest piece of legislation, certainly in the province, in terms of compliance with the UN convention. If we look at that Child Welfare Act, that the Minister of Children's Services will be so familiar with, we look at section 2 and they talk about matters to be considered. It starts off:

A Court and all persons shall exercise any authority or make any decision relating to a child who is in need of protective services under this Act in the best interests of the child and in doing so shall consider the following as well as any other relevant matter.

We then have subsections (a), (b), (c), (d), all the way through to (m). So this becomes, if you will, the standard that judges and directors and social workers use in the intervention and protection of children.

Now, the government has elected or chosen here to say: we're stepping outside the Child Welfare Act; we're creating a stand-alone piece of legislation. If you do that, what you lose then are some of those other elements of the Child Welfare Act. If you look at Bill 29 and you look at the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, you know, there's nothing in here comparable to section 2 in the Child Welfare Act. When judges are making these decisions of a 21-day detention or an extension so it'll be a 42-day detention, what things do they look at? What are the criteria that are being applied? What are the tests? Unless the Minister of Justice says, "Well, Member for Calgary-Buffalo, you're being too prescriptive" – it wasn't too prescriptive to put it in the Child Welfare Act, an act that's being lauded as respecting the rights of the child.

We have nothing like that, so what this amendment attempts to do in a modest way is construct some purpose so that when the judge sits down, that judge or that director or that social worker has a number of criteria against which to test the difficult and important decisions they have to make. I think that we need this sort of direction. If we had done this simply by expanding the Child Welfare Act, this would not have in any way been deemed necessary, but we've chosen not to do that.

Members may say that there's a preamble to the mother statute, the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, and we see some vague sorts of platitudinous comments in the six clauses, I think, of the preamble. I suppose in a pinch the court might look at that and take some direction from that. They might look at the Child Welfare Act. But, you know, if you look through Bill 29, there's nothing that clearly identifies what we're trying to do. We've got judges making all these decisions, we've got directors making decisions, and there's no direction to them in terms of the kinds of things that the court is supposed to look at. Is that because we think it's so self-evident?

Well, we've already seen a very strong difference, a very marked difference between a judge and the Minister of Justice, who has said that in his view this is legislation that's for a good purpose and therefore it doesn't matter very much that there's a detention, that the purpose is a good and a sound and important one. Well, we've got a judge who answers back in that sort of important dialogue between the court and the Legislature, the executive, a judge who answers back: it does too matter, and it's important there be procedural safeguards. So it's clear that everybody doesn't see the world as the Minister of Justice does, and the very people who are applying the statute seem to have a different view of it than the Minister of Justice does. So would it not be helpful – and I say this to the Minister of Children's Services, through the chair – to set out what criteria, what factors we want the court to look at?

Now, this is an attempt to set out what we think are the – I think we've got eight factors. Maybe the Minister of Children's Services would disagree with one or two or thinks there should be some other factors. The Member for Calgary-McCall is trained as a social worker. He's dealt with the Child Welfare Act, I expect, in his earlier life, and he may have some suggestions in terms of changing some of the criteria. That's fine. Let's bring in a subamendment. Let's have the minister say what criteria they think should be applied. But with the limited resources the opposition has had and in the couple of days we've had to deal with this, we've come up with a list of proposals. I would wonder who could disagree, firstly, with setting out some criteria we would want to be considered in every single case when a judge makes an order. I don't even think the Minister of Justice would take issue with that. I haven't heard my colleague from Calgary-Glenmore take issue with that.

I mean, we probably have other people in the Assembly who, if they were concerned, I'd expect would express that concern. Who would disagree with the child's safety being a factor that would be involved in every one of those decisions? Who would disagree that the child's present and future well-being should be addressed and considered? Who would disagree that the child's physical and emotional needs would have to be looked at in every single case that comes in front of a judge, a justice of the peace, or a director?

The child's level of development. It has certainly been reported to me that many teen prostitutes, at least a significant number of them, have some cognitive or some learning disabilities. Would that not be an important thing to consider? I think I would want that addressed in every case.

The child's cultural, racial, linguistic, and religious heritage. The Minister of Justice a few minutes ago said that we must be respectful of these children, notwithstanding the fact that he won't insist that they get some legal advice. He didn't respect them that much, but he said that we must be respectful. Well, does that not also mean being respectful of their cultural heritage? If we're going to take a child, lock a child up for potentially 42 days, is it not significant we make sure that there's some sensitivity around these parts? If any members have proposals for changing any of these, please stand up and offer those reasons. I'd be happy to see that kind of debate.

"The child's views," the proposed new (f). Well, I think the Minister of Justice again said that we must respect these children. Respecting young people means listening to them and soliciting their views; doesn't it? I mean, at some point is it not essential that you not completely disempower young people, that you don't shut them out of the process? How do you craft a solution for some kid who is on the street with a host of problems without at some point talking to them and asking them for their input and their advice and their views?

The other factor was "the effect on the child if there is a delay in making a decision." Is that not important? I mean, the whole purpose of this act is speedy intervention. So is it not important to determine, if there's a delay, what prejudice there might be to the child?

Finally, "the importance of continuity in providing the child with services." Madam Chairman, if you talk to people at Wood's Homes, if you talk to people at Avenue 15, if you talk to people at the Safe House Society in Calgary and their counterparts in Edmonton and in other communities, they continually talk about children who have some series of challenges that they cope with, and then they sometimes go through eight or nine social workers and different foster parents. All the experts tell us, as if we didn't know it intuitively, that children need some consistency in care. If you keep uprooting children and substituting caregivers – I may be running out of time soon, and I know if that happens, I have some colleagues that can offer some comments until I can catch my breath and resume following through on this. But continuity of care – I'm no social worker and I've not had that experience, but people who have the kind of experience that our friend from Calgary-McCall has had tell me that it is important. If I'm wrong, I invite somebody to tell me that.

So as I look through these criteria, I've got to tell you that I think our researcher did a pretty darn good job, and I think she's come up with some pretty responsible kinds of elements, Madam Chairman. I'm certainly prepared to see debate around what those issues should be, but the two propositions are that there has to be some outline of criteria, and if it's good enough for the Child Welfare Act, it's got to be good enough for Bill 29. If people want to challenge the criteria, I'm more than open to debate those, but let's make sure we're trying to craft the best legislation we can. It's important to do that.

So, Madam Chairman, I'll take my seat and see what response we get from government to amendment A3.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: I'm going to be very brief, Madam Chairman, and just simply say that we believe – and I go back to my own personal experience relative to negotiating any type of agreement – that when you fetter any formula with additional criteria, you run the risk of not anticipating the criteria that would fit a very specific case.

The courts, we believe and have confidence, will consider each child's best interests on an individual basis. While I have looked at these amendments and contemplated what is missing, perhaps one should state that their social views are missing. But I'm more satisfied with my learned colleague who suggested that by defining what you think may well be everything, you run the huge risk of missing something else.

Bill 29 already requires – requires – that the best interests of the child be taken into account by a court before it may order a child to be further confined for up to 21 days or order an additional 21-day confinement period. So we believe that listing factors which in fact could limit the court's decision-making process in a way we may not even anticipate today is not conducive to improving the legislation.

MR. DICKSON: Madam Chairman, if that's the case, then when is the Minister of Children's Services coming into the Legislative Assembly and taking out section 2 of the Child Welfare Act, that also talks in the preamble about the best interests test but then goes on to say – so if we look for consistency from government and we're talking under Bill 29 of hopefully never more than 300 children in the course of a year, how many thousands of children do we deal with under the Child Welfare Act? There this minister's government has said that not only do we do a best interests test but must also consider:

- (a) the family is the basic unit of society and its well-being should be supported and preserved.

Are we going to take that out?

- (b) the interests of a child should be recognized and protected.

Are we going to eliminate that?

- (c) the family has the right to the least invasion of its privacy and interference with its freedom that is compatible with its own interest, the interest of the individual family members and society.

Are we going to take that out? I mean, I can go through and read out from 2(a) to 2(m).

Now, Minister of Children's Services, through the chair, you can't tell us that just saying best interests is self-evident and good enough, because we have a statute. So here's what we're doing, Madam Minister, through the chair.

We've got a Child Welfare Act that has existed and been tested and utilized by courts and social workers. It has been tested by the Alberta Civil Liberties Research Centre in the analysis entitled United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child: How Does Alberta's Legislation Measure Up? That's been done, we know what it means, and it works. I thought it worked for Alberta children. Now we have the Minister of Children's Services coming along and saying: well, really, this is very limiting. She just made an argument – I didn't find it compelling – which effectively would gut section 2 of the Child Welfare Act, because why wouldn't we just leave it at the best interests test?

Surely there's got to be some reconciliation of two absolutely contradictory positions: either we particularize these things or we could leave it at a best interests test. I'm not content just to ask the question. I'll go on and say that there are some reasons why it's not enough to leave it to best interests. "Best interests" is an amazingly broad expression, and courts have found it useful and helpful to particularize some of the things that the Legislature thinks should be considered.

I think the hon. minister has misunderstood the amendment, because what it requires is that the decision must be "in the best interests of the child after considering the following factors." It doesn't mean that any one of them overwhelms the others. It means that at the end of the day it's the good sense of the director, the good sense of the justice of the peace, the good sense of the judge. All we're doing – we're not binding anybody's hands here. I mean, we read the section. It says that these are factors we expect to be looked at.

I must say that I don't know who is providing legal advice across the way; I'm not sure who is providing advice to the Minister of Children's Services in terms of the law. I don't think she's going to bring in a bill to amend the Child Welfare Act in this session. I suspect it's not on the list. I suspect that the minister of agriculture isn't busy studying a briefing paper for the next cabinet meeting which is going to rewrite the Child Welfare Act. Well, you know, Agri-News is a pretty useful periodical. There's probably something there about children on farms in the province of Alberta too.

I learn a lot in the Assembly, and I'm prepared to learn why we should go the way the minister wants to go, but I think there has to be some attempt, some genuine attempt to say: why is it good enough for the Child Welfare Act, which affects vastly, vastly more children, and it's not good enough for children here? Well, not only do I learn a lot; I continue to be mystified with the operation of government. I just think that perhaps people have listened to the Minister of Justice and, when he talks about not codifying things, not realized that we codify all kinds of things in this province, few of them as important as children. Another way of looking at this is that if you don't codify, let's not be surprised that occasionally you get judges who view cases very differently than we would here.

This is our last chance as a Legislature before we enact a piece of legislation that's going to be used and interpreted. This is a chance to sort of send unmistakable signals about the kinds of things that we thought were important in terms of protecting vulnerable children. We've got a government that says: no, we don't want to give that kind of direction. And dollars to doughnuts, a judge is going to make a decision, some member of cabinet is going to disagree with it, and we'll see some impertinent comment in a newspaper interview about: how could a judge make a crazy decision like that? How would that be possible? Well, one of the reasons it may be possible is because when we in this Chamber had a chance to fix some things, we elected not to take advantage of it. I'd think that wouldn't be a very good excuse down the road.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

So, Mr. Chairman, as I look around and I see the rapt attention that's being paid to the arguments on both sides of this amendment, my sense is that people are anxious to vote. They're anxious to register their opinion in I guess the way it counts most, by a vote. I can think of little else I can say other than I'm very distressed at a government that is tossing out amendments, opposition amendments, without the kind of deliberative, thoughtful response that I think Alberta's children are entitled to, and that's very disappointing. In any event, I'll hear what other debate there is on this amendment and look forward to the vote.

Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

4:50

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I hesitate to enter into debate on this matter because it has had a certain amount of airing from this side. Unfortunately, it hasn't had much from the other.

I look at this particular amendment – and it's a no-cost amendment. How can one disagree with giving context to reviewing a case? I mean, this does not cost anything save and except perhaps some pride of having a government accept an amendment from an opposition. Good heavens; that could not be the case. I mean, testosterone runs on that side a little heavy, but I would not have expected it from this minister at all.

This is simply a case of just laying out some very, very simple instructions for the judge to be able to review the matter as the Legislature sees fit. Now, I fail to see where any one of these items could be offensive. These are for the child's safety. I mean, this is fundamental. This is what we all desire. If you review all of the speeches that were hitherto spoken on this matter both a year ago and most recently in this Legislature, you'll find that's precisely what we're interested in, recognizing that we're taking away a right of freedom and liberty from a person, albeit for a short period of time and for a purpose, for precisely this purpose: the safety of the child, the preservation of its well-being and physical and emotional states, and to respect the child's views.

I mean, we had earlier an amendment that was roundly defeated for financial reasons, I assume, because there was no real reason given other than something about French law and inclusion or exclusion when being explicit, which I thought would be quite reasonable. It's a sad day when an opposition cannot contribute by reason of the obstinance of a government, pure and simple obstinance. There is no reason whatever other than that it is not on the agenda, that: we didn't think of it. Well, I'm afraid this is such a horrible, horrible display of ignorance and bliss that it really, really does question the fundamental integrity of a government that does not care enough to make these kinds of inclusions in this kind of act.

It's a sad, sad day, and this member shall take his place.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, would like to stand up and support the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. I think this is a very sound improvement to this legislation, and I would urge all hon. members of the Assembly to support it.

I understand one of the hon. members of Executive Council is anxious to participate in debate, and I will cede the floor to the gentleman so he can speak. Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to say a few things. I've been listening to this amendment, and I heard the minister reply that we really don't need it, that it's obviously in there, and then my hon. colleague from Calgary-Buffalo pointed out that it's in the Child Welfare Act. So there does seem to be a conflict here. I sat back and I thought: why aren't they accepting this amendment? Have they even looked at it? It would make it a stronger piece of legislation. It would make it consistent with other legislation that deals with children.

I would like to urge all members who maybe haven't been paying total attention this afternoon to really think and consider that this will be a very good amendment. It will only make the bill stronger, it will protect children better, so I would encourage all members to support this amendment.

Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:55 p.m.]

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Before we proceed with the next amendment, may we have unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. SMITH: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to not only vote against this amendment that just occurred but also to recognize four gentlemen that I've just had a very important and enjoyable meeting with. They are representatives of the Canadian thoroughbred breeders' association and the Alberta thoroughbred breeders' association. So I would ask the Assembly to please give the warm welcome to those who have traveled from Calgary and those who are here from Edmonton: Mr. Jim Thomson, Mr. Robert Malcolm, Mr. Mike Oslanski, and Mr. Rennie Gellner. If I could ask them all to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Bill 29
Protection of Children Involved
in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2000

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. Yeah, it was fascinating to see what government members vote against. We'll see with great excitement and look forward to see what the vote will be on amendment A4.

I move the amendment, and I'll read it into the record. Section 9 is amended by adding the following after the proposed section 7.1:

7.2 The Children's Advocate must prepare and submit annual reports to the Legislative Assembly respecting the operation and administration of the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2000.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

Madam Chairman, one of the things that Judge Jordan quite properly identified is that when we passed the child prostitution bill a couple of years ago, there wasn't another act like it. Our friend from Calgary-Fish Creek was doing some pioneering work when she brought that bill in, and I'm not sure there was a bill like this anywhere before the Alberta model. I'm not sure there's any U.S. model for it, so what happened was we were breaking some new ground and as a province being innovative in terms of dealing with it.

You know, we've now had the experience of seeing this act as it's applied. Notwithstanding that, when it came in front of Judge Jordan, what happened was that we still had the judge saying – and this is after hearing the evidence that was adduced on behalf of the Minister of Children's Services and the Minister of Justice:

There is no provision for determining the efficacy of the legislation.

The Director would have the public believe that because hundreds of apprehensions are accomplished in a given period the Act is achieving its stated goal of protecting children. Yet we are left not knowing anything, except by way of anecdotal evidence, of the lives of the children after their periods of confinement are completed.

Now, Madam Chairman, the point is that some of us come to the Legislature and think that it's not good enough just to pass laws willy-nilly. Some of us believe it's important to assess whether the law is achieving its stated objective. It so happens we have a way of doing this. We have a Children's Advocate. [interjection] I know people in Calgary-Shaw are going to be interested in the contribution that their member is going to make to this particular amendment.

Madam Chairman, if I didn't say it – I can't remember. Did I ask that this be noted as A4? Thanks.

The provision of the Children's Advocate office. We do have an office in this province, and its responsibility is to report on children's services. It finds its jurisdiction, if you will, in section 2.1 of the Child Welfare Act. Section 2.1(1) allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council . . . on the recommendation of the Minister [to] appoint a Children's Advocate, who shall hold office for a term not exceeding 5 years.

Then the Children's Advocate shall do a number of things like

- (a) advise the Minister on matters relating to the welfare and interests of children . . .
- (b) receive, review and investigate complaints . . .
- (c) represent the rights, interests and viewpoints of children who receive services under this Act . . .
- (e) prepare and submit annual reports to the Minister respecting the exercise of the duties and functions of the Children's Advocate.

We're not creating any new bureaucracy. The office exists. It has a mandate which ought to encompass what happens with children under the bill we're amending today, the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act.

So what possible problem would there be? You know, goodness, there may be lots of reasons, but I just can't think of any. What would be the problem in asking the Children's Advocate every year to have a portion of their report devoted, dedicated to the administration of this act, to identify if there are some problems with it, if some things are working well? You know what it does? When the minister comes in and tables that report under Tabling Returns and Reports, it's a bit of reminder. It becomes the sessional record. The members of the media have an opportunity to review it. All MLAs have a chance to look at it. It gives us what I would think the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek would want more than anything: to ensure that this isn't sort of a one-off bill that sort of is then forgotten by legislators.

If teen prostitution is as big an issue as we've said it was when we passed the bill two years ago, if teen prostitution and the sexual exploitation of children is as big an issue as I think it is today and during this session, why would we not want to make sure this is on the agenda, that on an annual basis it comes before the Legislature? I just think that part of what we do has an educative role. Part of what we do here is to help to highlight problems in this province and highlight issue areas. I thought this amendment provides the government a chance to sort of beat its corporate chest and talk about what a great job it's doing in terms of protecting young children from the streets. It gives us as legislators a chance to say: maybe we need some additional resources in this area; maybe we need some additional programs. Maybe we need some other legislative changes to be able to protect these children better. I don't think we ever get it a hundred percent right. I'd say this with any government. I think governments always have to be on their toes and always have to be checking.

You know, I hate the analogy between governments and corporations, but corporations are always looking at a product, because if they don't find ways of making the product better, they find they will lose their market share. They continually reassess and reassess. There are some compelling reasons why with legislation you don't just do it one time and then put it on the shelf and never review it again. It's incumbent on us to look at ways that we can make this legislation stronger and make services for children stronger.

There was a wonderful conference held, Catch Them before They Fall, and my only regret is that we didn't have a Minister of Children's Services when that conference was held. I think it was about three years ago. It was chaired by Brian Edy, who is the Liberal candidate in Calgary-Buffalo. What Mr. Edy did in chairing that conference was bring in – and I wish the current Minister of Children's Services could have been at that conference – the Children's Advocate from British Columbia and the Children's Advocate from Saskatchewan. I discovered some things I didn't know before. In some other provinces the Children's Advocate has a broader mandate and can report on children in distress wherever they are, not just children in care of the province. I thought that was a good idea.

One of the things that came out of the conference was making the Children's Advocate an independent officer of the Legislative Assembly, reporting not just to the minister but reporting to all of us. I thought that was an important recommendation.

There are things we can do to make the Children's Advocate office more effective, there are things we can do to make it stronger, and there certainly are things we can do to make it more independent. We've seen a succession of Children's Advocates who have delivered reports severely critical, not of ministers but of systems, not of governments but of children being allowed to fall between the cracks, and then they've moved on. So it's a good reason why I think we need an independent Children's Advocate.
