Let's look, then, at who benefits in Bill 18 at the high-income level. Those who benefit greatly, certainly in terms of the effect on their taxes, are those in the highest income level group. That's who benefits. [interjections] As I said in question period today, 1 percent of Albertans with the highest income . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We seem to have a debate by two people who've already spoken on this amendment. So if the two front bench members on either side would desist or go out to the back chamber and carry on their debate there, we'd like to hear just from the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is difficult to speak over the voice of the minister of energy and resources.

Debate Continued

MRS. MacBETH: Anyway, as I noted in question period today, the 1 percent of Albertans with the highest income level will be getting a 28 percent tax cut while nearly 40 percent of Albertans, in that middle-income category, see only a 13 percent tax cut. So when you ask the question about who gets the greatest tax cut, well, it's those at the high-income level.

Then let's look at the combined effect of Bill 18 and Bill 19, which will follow on its heels. Of course, Bill 19 gives further benefit to the high-income group. Bill 19 gives an elimination of the 8 percent surtax, which of course only applies to the high-income level group. We will be arguing that the .5 percent deficit elimination tax that's on all taxpayers should be eliminated before yet another benefit to the highest income earners.

Now, I accept that members of the government and the Acting Provincial Treasurer – or whatever it is his office is called. I can understand that he wants to make sure that only the highest level income earners will get the greatest benefit. [interjections] He has every right to argue that, but, Mr. Speaker, what we're saying is that the middle-income group should be able to get at least as great . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer is sharing with us all kinds of information at the same time that someone else has the floor. Should there be an opportunity for you to debate this at a later time, we would certainly welcome it, but debate is not correcting everything that an hon. member is saying. Debate is where an hon. member is allowed to lay out their case, as much as we like it or don't like it, and then other people can stand up and debate that. So, hon. minister, if we could keep that in mind, that would be helpful.

The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will look forward to listening to the minister of energy and Acting Treasurer when it's his turn to speak.

MRS. MacBETH: Anyway, on the combined effect of Bill 18 and then Bill 19 coming on its heels with the elimination of the 8 percent surtax – of course, it too only applies to the highest level group.

You know, Mr. Speaker, there's been an interesting development over the past several days. The past several days have seen the Premier of our province make known his new commitment to the Canadian Alliance, and he has indicated that he is going to support the former Provincial Treasurer in his bid for the leadership of the Canadian Alliance. It's interesting, you know. There are many people that I have spoken to since that announcement was made who are people who have been members of the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta for some time and who felt hurt by the Premier's decision to now move his allegiance to the Canadian Alliance party. Many of those that I've spoken to over the last several days and who have called me have said: "You know, I may be a Progressive Conservative provincially. I'm reassessing that on the basis of how this government conducted itself on Bill 11 and some other things. But I have never been and will never be a member of the Reform Party or a member of the Canadian Alliance." They find the positions of that party to be inconsistent with the unfairness issue of the tax . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

MRS. McCLELLAN: Under Beauchesne 459, Mr. Speaker. I've been listening I think quite diligently, and this debate seems to be going off on a tack about political leadership and so on. I think that the debate on Bill 18 is important to everyone in this province, and this Legislature is dealing with it rather than with a federal leadership or who aligns with a federal party. This is a provincial Legislature. So I would simply, with greatest respect, ask the hon. member to contain her comments to Bill 18. I know I am most interested in hearing her debate and her arguments against this bill that would lower taxes for the majority of Albertans.

MR. DICKSON: I always appreciate hearing the comments from the minister of intergovernmental affairs, who is probably one of the best listeners in the entire Assembly, but I must take issue. What we have seen is a full and robust debate on an important reasoned amendment. [interjections] Well, certainly on the part of my colleagues we've seen a full and robust debate. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, I'm trying to get to the point of order. I keep on getting distracted by the help from colleagues across the Chamber.

Let me make this observation, if I might. I think that an individual . . . [interjections] Well, I'm responding to a point of order. If people don't want to hear that, you might want to consider that when you raise points of order, you provide opportunities for members to talk about the bigger question of relevance. It seems to me, with respect, that the Leader of the Official Opposition is making a number of key points that are directly salient to the question of the reasoned amendment. In fact, if you look at the reasoned amendment, we see a reference to action at the federal level.

It seems to me perfectly appropriate to recognize that we're not making tax policy or purporting to remake tax policy in a vacuum; we do it in the real world. As the former Provincial Treasurer always used to tell us, there's only one taxpayer. That means that it is perfectly relevant to look at what the impact is of federal tax legislation as well as a provincial initiative. As long as we're confronted with a single taxpayer with two tax regimes, it would be foolish of us not to discuss the impact of what's happening federally while we debate this.

I've been enjoying the debate. I look forward to the comments of the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations when she has her opportunity, and I'm hopeful we're able to get on with the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Certainly some people had been making signals to me with regard to relevance on this thing, and my invitation is to stand up if they feel that the speaker is straying from what is relevant.

All that the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo said would truly be correct. However, what the chair and, presumably, the minister heard was a discussion about the Premier's federal alliance membership and that kind of thing. One begins to wonder how that is in any way what the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo was asserting. To the extent that the federal government is involved – certainly they have the personal income tax – and there's a linkage or a delinkage and all that kind of thing, that's perfectly fine, but the chair was finding some difficulty and wondering what the relevance was about the Premier and whether he belongs to this party or that party federally. Without belabouring that point, perhaps we could return to the debate at hand.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I think the Premier's membership now in the Canadian Alliance is quite germane to the debate, because all of the leadership candidates for that party are talking about a platform of flat tax and private health care. I mean, the issues are out there. I think that while the government has tried very carefully to apportion this debate off in pieces, being Bill 11, Bill 18, Bill 19, and to some extent Bill 40 from the fall, in their totality they show the issue of fairness and the best benefit to those at the highest income level to be something that concerns us. We think that the threads of those work all the way through all of these pieces. Nonetheless, I will take your guidance, and I will just make a couple of other points about the amendment and about how we are in favour of fair tax cuts rather than the flat-tax proposals the government has come forward with.

Debate Continued

MRS. MacBETH: I think it was interesting on the weekend, as well, to see the federal Progressive Conservative Party reject the call for a flat tax, as did the province of Ontario. We have asked this government on several occasions, in question period and also earlier in second reading on this bill, for an analysis as to why they came to this conclusion. Again, the same roadblock that we hit on Bill 11, where the government refused to bring forward the reasons as to why they felt that expanding private, for-profit care was going to do anything other than benefit the very same people who will benefit under a flat-tax proposal, with the greatest benefit going to the high-income group. Those answers have not been forthcoming. The government has only talked about the tax cut, presumably because they want to cloud the issue of unfairness that flows from their flat tax. We think the amendment is very, very sound.

Mr. Speaker, I think I'm going to leave my discussion on the amendment there. I would hope that we might see some more discussion as to why the government has decided they want to build a regressive tax system in this province. It certainly isn't clear to the people of this province, nor is it clear – in fact, it's a big question – to people in the Edmonton-Highlands constituency, who have certainly raised this question with me at the doors. Now that the by-election has finally been called, now that the government has got Bill 11 shoved through, I suspect that this will be another issue that will be on the plate then.

Nonetheless, I look forward to the discussions on the bill. We will certainly be bringing forward a proposal which could see a tax cut but one that would still address the issue within a progressive tax system, which we believe is consistent with what most Albertans and most Canadians want, and that is a sharing of our resources in order that we can continue to uphold and protect and modernize our education and our health systems so they will be available for all.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to speak to this amendment at this stage of this bill. This reasoned amendment does intend to postpone the vote and for a very, very good reason. This particular jurisdiction is, to my knowledge, the only place in the western world where this is being proposed, this massive experiment. It doesn't seem to have the well-founded, documented proof that it could in fact work. I think this massive change is putting particularly the lower income earners, the lower 10 to 30 percent of wage earners, at risk. There doesn't seem to be the kind of debate that should go on across the province on this particular matter.

You'll notice that this particular change does nothing but wonderful things for those that earn $50,000 or $70,000 or $100,000 and up. They're in good stead. The lower portion – that is, the 10 to 30 percent of wage earners that I'm talking about – have an exemption level that is raised, and temporarily, yes, there is some relief, but we're talking about a massive change here, a change for a long, long time to come. There are some benefits, of course, which we'll get into a little later, but I just want to first speak of the timing of this matter.

Certainly it should be no surprise to taxpayers that this government happens to favour those that are well to do, and for a government that's been in office for almost 30 years, it's only natural that those with influence would influence the government. That goes without saying. In fact, that has been the history of elected governments for a long, long time, and it needn't be expressed any further than that. As proof of that, the very first thing the government did that in fact changed the income tax was to drop an 8 percent surcharge on the tax starting in January 1 of 2000, of this year. Who did that affect? The answer simply is those same people that this entire bill affects in a major way and to the affirmative. I mean, they get a massive, massive increase in their after-tax dollars. That's one reason one should suspect the timing of this bill.

The other reason. Look; here we have just finished, I think in the Premier's words, the largest single political fight that he has ever, ever fought, that being Bill 11. Now we have a good-news story – they're trying to paint it in that way – entirely good news. Well, it isn't all good news. In fact, it is only good news because this province can afford, by reason of higher revenues from oil and gas – it certainly isn't higher revenues from anything other than that. It certainly isn't higher revenues from the agriculture business. That certainly is not the case. It's a struggling business right at the moment. Certainly the only reason we in Alberta have this opportunity to experiment with a tax system – and I say "experiment" unguardedly – is that we do have this right that is coming up out of the ground and, in fact, the royalties that fall from that.

Let's just review, for the moment, the long-held belief that tax cuts were on the way for the citizens of Alberta and why. Back in July of last year, of '99, the Premier mused about accelerating that single-tax rate scheme from '99 to the year 2000 by means of increasing personal exemption and spousal exemption. Well, he mused about that, only mused. There was no movement at all. In November of that same year the Premier then dismissed, or at least spoke of and then dismissed, a 9-cent gasoline tax reduction.

Nothing occurred with it. The carrot is still out there on the gas rebate plan. Three days later he mused again about a reduction of it publicly, and nothing.

This member, by way of note, asked the minister in charge of that particular rebate plan if he was contemplating it. No response. This member even gave him an opportunity to show how it could be reduced, seeing as the owners of the asset, the people of Alberta, are paying. When the value of their asset goes up, the government benefits, and they are penalized at the pump. It doesn't seem to be a reasonable solution. This member offered a solution at that point. It was roundly rejected once more, in December of that year. Then just before the turn of the century our good Premier mused again about a tax reduction, this time a $100 rebate, a cash rebate, a cash payment, if you will. Did anything come of it? Absolutely nothing. That was the real flat tax. There was no tax. It was so flat that it didn't occur.

In early January the then Treasurer suggested that he as Treasurer would be considering income tax cuts in the year 2000. He must have been, because it appears that with this bill, that's going to occur. On January 17, again another reduction, but this time he was musing about the reduction of health care premiums, another tax of a different form. Then the Premier again, on January 18 of this year when speaking of the surplus, was talking about paying down the debt rather than a tax cut in the year 2000. There seemed to be a lot of changes in position at that time, always talking about a tax cut and reminding the people of Alberta that a tax cut was in the works and that they were going to be the recipients of that.

Then on January 26 there was an 18-cent reduction in the mill rate to the education property tax, a most welcome relief across the province. It sounded like a great deal of money until we found out that it's an average of a $22.50 tax cut for each homeowner. It did sound like a great deal at the time.

On February 24 the then Treasurer reannounced the 11 percent flat-tax scheme for the eighth time since the 1999 provincial budget. On February 27 the then Treasurer called on the federal government to cut taxes. You'll recall that that was just after Alberta had hurried up to file a budget and just before the federal government filed the budget there. The quote from the newspaper of the day is: "What we're saying to Mr. Martin is 'Try it - you'll like it'." Presumably he was speaking about some tax cuts, which Mr. Martin shortly thereafter did, and of course in the provincial budget for the year 2000 that did not occur. Perhaps it will occur at some time in the future, depending on the passage of this bill, of course.

Then on the same day, February 28, the Treasurer of the day said in two separate statements that the federal tax cuts don't go as far as Alberta's but that they'll be better than no tax increases. Well, that's one way of saying it, I guess. Later on in the day, when he speculated about the reductions in the 11 percent single-rate tax, he said, "Maybe if it stays up throughout the whole year, maybe we could look at an alleviation there and go to 10.5%." Here is a man that is publicly musing about a potential reduction in and a reimposition of an experimental tax rate, and it drops between 2 and 4 in the afternoon by perhaps a half percent. Well, he mused about that. He didn't say anything about it particularly.

Then we have a public story from a senior tax manager at BDO Dunwoody, who disclosed in his study that the 11 percent flat tax, combined with the federal tax cuts of the 2000 budget, would cost middle-income earners more than the current rate, which obviously must have sent the Treasurer scurrying a little, because the very next day the then minister trampled the tax cuts of the federal minister and mused further about some further changes.

It wasn't until about six or seven days later that Mr. Brad Severin showed in a subsequent report that middle-income earners in Alberta are better off with the existing tax system than they are under the 11 percent flat tax. The then Treasurer questioned those figures and said that at first glance it may appear that the accountant didn't take into account reductions in the Canada pension plan or the registered retirement savings plans. The very next day, of course, was when the minister obviously felt that some changes had to occur and, with a certain amount of bravado, had to be the lowest rate of any province in Canada, and therefore he proposed the reduction from a single rate of 11 percent to 10.5 percent.

That's the short history up to that point and where we have it today. Still all musing about a potential - the bill wasn't then introduced until a couple or three days later, when it was introduced without those changes. It was introduced as is, with the 11 percent inclusion and with the exemption rate being $11,620, as opposed to the amendments that are now in place to increase the exemption to $12,900.

Now, that seems to be a reasonable short history of the coming of this bill, and it all points to but one thing: this is a run-and-gun experiment. It's shoot from the hip. It doesn't seem to be thought out. Certainly there haven't been any documents tabled in this Legislature that would say that this is proven and has been tried and tested under any conditions in any other forum at all. Being the first does have its risks. Therefore, a good deal of time should be taken to study this matter.

Now, one would think that if a province has this kind of disposable income, to the tune of $1.32 billion, one could at least afford to open some hospital beds, as in the last debate we had, and alleviate all this pain and suffering that we heard so much about in that debate. It doesn't seem to be the case, though, and we're now looking at a massive change in taxation in the province of Alberta.

There are some upsides to this bill, of course, not necessarily the single tax rate, but certainly there's some good news, and Calgary-Currie pointed it out rather well in her description of family finance through a number of different levels. The policy change would penalize less a single-income family that wishes to raise their children on one income and have the other parent stay home and raise children on a full-time basis. That is a good start.

There are, of course, some increases in exemption rates so that the first $12,900 of income would in fact be tax free, which is a wonderful, wonderful inclusion, but one wonders if that bit of honey and the other bit of honey or the sweetness has to be tied to a single tax rate. You'd think they could be severally put, because certainly a number of the changes in the imposition of income tax in the province of Alberta can and would be supported by this opposition wholeheartedly.

The elimination of the half-percent flat tax surcharge certainly is the right thing to do, because that is the most regressive of all taxes. That's certainly a tax or an addition of a tax that has seen its day and should not be revisited at all.

The larger question, of course - the Leader of the Opposition passed over it rather quickly, but her time did not permit her to go into it a great deal - is a full and complete tax review in the province of Alberta. That would include a full and complete discussion of the relevance of user fees. It would cover the municipal tax, including business tax, which is a horribly regressive tax - you ask any small businessperson that has to live with that tax - the health care tax, and certainly consumption tax, where a ridiculous situation occurs and occurs on a regular basis when the value of an asset increases that we the people of the province of Alberta own, whether it be natural gas or a petroleum product that is made into gasoline products that go into an automobile.

When the value of that goes up, the income stream of the province of Alberta increases, and rightly so, as agent for all Albertans. The difficulty arises when that asset is then resold through the marketing system back to Albertans, and the price is up. Now, here you have the worst of, I guess, the oxymoron of having a valuable asset: the government gets richer and the folks get poorer for an asset they own. It just doesn't seem to be reasonable. When there are some suggestions as to how to equalize that balance or how to reset the balance more in favour of Albertans, we're met with stonewalling and noncommittal answers – well, maybe – even though the Premier did muse about a reduction in one of those consumption taxes more than once.

We don't ever hear of a reduction in the health care tax, and we don't hear the argument anymore, thank goodness, don't hear the argument made at all that this is some kind of a deterrent to use of the health care system. We don't hear the arguments that are made to the effect that these taxes somehow make Albertans aware of the cost of it, for we all know that this health care tax covers but a fraction of the total cost of health care, and it does cost money. It's an increased bureaucracy, and it chases the taxpayer, the lowest of taxpayers, around the country trying to collect from them with collection agencies and the like. All the nasty things that we heard most recently about the federal tax collectors – these are the same kind of folks and the same raison d'être to chase the little folks until they can't run any longer. They don't chase the big fellas because, quite frankly, it's nickels and dimes for any tax lawyer or any corporation to pay for these things.

Oh, I'm sorry. I've run out of time, sir. I shall resume this discussion some other time.

[Motion on amendment lost]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise in second reading on Bill 18, and I'm quite looking forward to proceeding with the discussion around Bill 18, which is in fact not about fairness and provides a window into this government's vision of our society. In fact, when I look at the parallels between Bill 18 and Bill 11, that we have just come out of, what we have seen is a government that is intent on having its own way, a government that does not recognize the democratic wishes of its citizens, and a government that continues to pick winners and losers. What we see, quite obviously, in the flat-tax structure that has been put forward by this government is a continuation of that picking of winners and losers, and now they are institutionalizing it into a structural change of our tax system that will continue to perpetuate that type of a vision. It's a vision that looks at who can afford a particular service, who can afford to access certain benefits that society presents that they should be able to get, and for those that can't, well, I guess it's tough luck for them.

So what we see institutionalized in Bill 18 is preferential treatment to the higher income earners and punishment to the middle-income earners. Now, to be fair, what we are seeing is the lower income earners being taken off the tax roll, and that in fact is a good thing. Frankly, you wonder why it has taken the government so long to recognize that and to approach that particular issue. But when we look at who is still left on the tax roll and we look at the percentages in the proposed amendment that will at some time in the future be proposed at the 10.5 percent, what we see is that there is a substantial differential between the middle-income earners and the upper-end income earners, and it's not just a few dollars that we're speaking about, Mr. Speaker. What we are looking at is that if an income earner is between the 30 to 50 percent tax rate, in fact their percentage is substantially less than what the percentages are in the 100,000-plus dollars tax rate. So is it fundamentally fair? I think if that question were put to Albertans at all income tax levels, the majority would respond back that, no, it is not fair.

What we also see is that Albertans and Canadians are seeing through the ploy that's being used by this government as well as other governments across Canada in terms of buying their votes. What in fact the governments are saying is: "We will reduce your taxes. We are therefore providing good government, so we hope that when it comes to election time" – and actually today we have a by-election called here in Alberta, so that particular theory will be tested in 28 days – "you will vote for us, because we will lower your taxes." What this government fails to recognize is that for the majority, when polled as to what they consider the job of government to be and what they consider the most important aspect of government provision of services to be, it's not a tax cut but is health care and education.

In fact, a February Angus Reid poll found that nearly three out of four respondents, 72 percent, believed that health care was the number one priority for government to turn their attentions to. Education spending received the support of 58 percent of those surveyed, while tax reductions garnered only 55 percent. So what we have is an ideological push and perhaps a cynical push by this government, as well, to attempt to buy votes and to try and fool Albertans that in fact they are doing this for their own good.

Now, of course Albertans want to see taxes cut in terms of having more money in their pockets, but Albertans also recognize that tax cuts don't occur in isolation and in fact recognize that there are trade-offs when a tax cut occurs. They realize that what has occurred through Bill 18 and the flat tax is once again government listening to those that have influence with government, listening to those that have access to government, like they did with Bill 11. Thousands and thousands and thousands of Albertans said very clearly: we do not want to see Bill 11. My guess is that on Bill 18 what we have is that for the majority of individuals who will be adversely affected by Bill 18, if you were to ask them on the street, "Do you think this is fair, and is this the kind of tax system you want?" they in fact would say no, and they would say no with a resounding no.

The question again arises: who has the government listened to in terms of pushing this particular bill forward? Is it only the high-income earners? Is it only the business community, not the small business community but the larger business communities? Who is it that they've listened to? My guess is that it's not the citizens in putting it forward.

In fact, over and over again we hear about this government's newfound commitment to families with one income earner. My colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar had put forward Motion 506, that read:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to demonstrate its recognition of the contribution made by parents who stay at home to care for their children by providing support equal to that received by parents choosing other child care options.

Now, if government members who have spoken in favour of Bill 18 have used the argument that it will help those parents who make the decision to have one individual stay at home to take care of their children, you would wonder how in good conscience they then could have voted against this particular motion, if in fact that were the case. My guess is that any member who speaks to the issue of stay-at-home parents and has voted against this particular motion is cynical in their promoting Bill 18 as a way of addressing that particular issue, and their sincerity is in fact to be questioned.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I have for many years kept in touch with as well as followed the Kids First organization and their goals and have followed as well the presentation that was made to the United Nations. I have yet to hear one government member that has ever been actively involved with that particular group, and I would like to know if there were any. So for them to then stand in this Legislative Assembly and say, in fact, that they support stay-at-home parents I think is very contrary to any public positions that they've taken before.

The issue with recognizing the tinkering that's going on with Bill 18. We've seen it in some other examples. One of the most recent examples – again, picking winners and losers and providing preferential treatment – that we have seen is in fact with some other tax models that have been put forward. One is in terms of the market-based assessments, and what we have now is the city of Edmonton taking out ads to indicate that the government has been unfair in their putting forward preferential tax treatment to eight communities in the province and that this is an issue that needs to be looked at. So that's one way where this government's track record on tax reform has been anything but stellar.

Another way this government could have, if they were really sincere, provided extra cash in people's pockets would have been to deal with the whole issue of user fees, which the government has been taking over a period of seven years, a lot quicker to provide for the extra cash that would've come to individuals. Now, for seven years the Official Opposition has stood in this Legislative Assembly and has said over and over and over again that in fact those user fees were a tax and they were an unfair tax. This government had refused to listen until there was a court case in Ontario that indicated that, yes, there was a problem.

So that would've been one way to deal with this issue, but now we have in front of us ideology. The Premier has called it Ralph economics, Steve economics. Recently someone said to me that this is voodoo economics because what we see is risky behaviour on the part of the government. We see a plan that's haphazard. With regards to the maintenance of deficit reduction, debt reduction, and the maintenance of essential services, government services in fact are in danger of being attacked through this single tax. Facetiously someone said to me the other day that by ensuring that this tax is not really a fair tax and knowing that it will have an effect on revenues in the next four-plus years, perhaps what this government is really trying to do is bring forward a sales tax, much like what the Canada West Foundation is proposing. I understand they're looking for an opening to put that proposal forward, and perhaps that's what the Acting Treasurer is looking at providing.

We have to ask the question: why this tax cut the way it's being proposed? We need to understand that in fact this tax rate is a moving rate, a moving rate. It's a target that can't really be pinned down because it depends on what will happen in other provinces across this country. The Premier has now made a commitment that we will have the lowest tax rate of any other province. Now, that statement in and of itself sounds very fine, but the reality is that the implications may be disastrous because the tax now won't have any linkages to our actual ability to afford to provide that tax to individuals. So the question is: what happens if at some point in time there's a downturn in the economy, if at some point in time the government projections are not accurate, if at some point in time oil and gas revenues come in at lower than what is expected and we have a deficit in the budget?

Something will have to give. It will either be the taxes or the spending on the government side. So the question the government at that point, if they're still the government at that time, would have to address is: if there has to be a cutback in the budget as projected because of this tying into providing the flat tax, what would get cut first? Would it be these new private hospitals that will be contracted with the government to provide specific services, or will it be an operating room in an existing facility? What will get cut first?

The policy, in fact, appears to be based on someone's ego as opposed to what is best for Albertans, and one of the things that we cannot support, that I cannot support is a policy that's based on some philosophy, some vision of Alberta that ensures that there's not fairness in our tax structure. You know, just to go back to the policy being based on someone's ego, what it seems to be is an ego that's not averse to gambling with our health, education, and social systems.

There are a number of myths that I'd like to dispose of in discussing this flat tax, and I will have the opportunity at some later point to do it. But there is one that I would like to get on the record, and it has to do with the myth of the brain drain. Again, in the CGA Magazine, it indicates that in every case where there have been major movements . . . in strategic sectors, especially like health, education, and basic research,

. . . it's quite clear they are due more to cutbacks in government expenditures than tax rate increases. In other words, if anything pulled the plug from the drain . . .

This is the movement of individuals out of Alberta or Canada.

. . . it was government program cuts, which reduced funding in these sectors in the '90s.

So if in fact this government wants to look at why there is a brain drain out of this province, they can look only at themselves.

Now what I'd like to do is move a motion that is an amendment to Bill 18, and what it reads is that Bill 18, Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, be not now read a second time but that the order for second reading be discharged, the bill withdrawn, and the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

This is a very good amendment that is being put forward. It is again being put forward in the spirit of ensuring that there is fairness in our tax structure, that this bill be withdrawn, something that the government did not wish to do with Bill 11 even though they knew it would harm our public health care system and harm individuals within who wish to access our public health care system at some point in time, and that the subject matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. This is a committee that is part of the democratic process, contrary to what members would think about it. In fact, this particular committee is one that should be called, and the subject matter could be discussed at length to deal with the issue of fairness in taxes.

I've outlined in the body of my speech that this particular system is a structural change that is anything but fair to the vast majority of Albertans, who are the middle-income earners. This would more than provide the opportunity for the government to look at this bill again, to maybe check their figures, because first we started with 11 percent and now we're at 10.5 percent. Who knows where we might end up in the next couple of months? The Premier himself has indicated that this is a risky venture, that it is not based on solid evidence, it would seem. This would more than provide the time for the government to have that opportunity, so the members should be thanking us for bringing forward this amendment.

I thank you very much for being able to speak to this and hope that everyone will give it some serious consideration, because in fact this is not a matter to be taken frivolously. This is a very important issue that needs some study. The interesting thing to note is that over the last year, in fact, what we have seen is the government wavering on how they would provide a tax break to Albertans. They have moved from one area to another, and what we are noticing is that their studies are anything but complete with regards to this particular area.

So what we want to know are the reasons, because I hear vociferous arguments from the government members saying that no, this is not something they would wish to support in terms of the amendment, and I find it hard to understand why they would not.

Thank you very much.

Speaker's Ruling Admissibility of Amendment

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the Assembly now has before it an amendment, and the chair would like to refer hon. members to Beauchesne 666, which certainly indicates that the amendment is in order, that it can be "referral of the subject-matter to a committee." It would further like to refer hon. members to those sections of Beauchesne 673 through to 676, dealing with referral of a subject matter to a committee. There's one statement in Beauchesne 673, "the advantage of referring the bill to a committee could be explained in the second reading stage," that would be a bit of advice with respect to debate.

Debate Continued

THE SPEAKER: The chair has already recognized the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to this amendment that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark has put forward. I've spoken to this bill before, but I must tell you that over the weekend I chatted with a few people about it. I had the opportunity at different things I was at. You know, generally I got the feeling that, yeah, I'd like to pay less taxes, but secondly, if my tax dollars were wisely spent, I wouldn't have such a problem paying taxes. They'd often comment: you know, I don't want my money going to private health care clinics; I don't want my money going to private hospitals; I want it going into the public system. So it starts a debate on the whole change in a tax system, and that is exactly what we are doing with this bill.

I have even reviewed some of the debates in Hansard. I see Calgary-Egmont had a few things to say. I was reading through some of those things, and once again what I gather from the information we have in front of us is that not enough homework has been done, and this once again seems like . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: On the amendment.

MRS. SOETAERT: I am on the amendment. The amendment is the reality that not enough homework has been done, so we should refer this to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. Quite honestly I think it's time they met, and this would be a good bill to start on, because from my understanding I don't know if they've even met before. So here would be a good place to start: right at second reading, do a little bit of homework on it, look at the implications, what regulations it will take, and whether this should continue at this stage.

So while I was speaking to people again this weekend about this tax, some of this change, some were saying: "You know what? I would like to see a fairer system." In fact, some were very wealthy people that I was speaking to. One was a single mom making a livable wage but certainly not a lucrative wage, and she herself said: "You know, I'm tired of worrying about whether I will have to pay health care premiums, whether I will have to pay for an MRI for family members as they need care. I'm tired of the whole juggling act that's being played with us. I would just like to know that my tax dollars are being spent wisely. I would like to know that everyone is being taxed fairly."

Admittedly, some people have a greater ability to pay more, and many of them do. This tax is saying that we all have the same ability to pay, and that's not true. There are some who have a greater ability to pay and are quite glad to do that as long as their tax dollars are being spent wisely, as long as they don't see things like, oh, $14 million spent on a computer system that is defunct before it's even working. So I think this whole issue of a flat tax has to be rethought, and certainly a good place to start would be at Law and Regulations.

Now, actually it's interesting. Different newspaper articles have said that this flat tax won't work. They've mentioned that it shifts the burden to the middle income, and, you know, the middle income seems to get dinged every time they turn around. The middle income is often a family. When you talk about families, they are certainly using many things more, and as a result they pay user fees more, which, I would say, is of course a form of flat tax, which the courts have already deemed are not fair.

I heard the minister say today in question period that this kind of tax will stop the brain drain. Well, in fact I know there have been studies shown that people move to an area more because of quality of life issues than anything else. They'll move here because they're looking for a strong health system, a strong education system, clean air, a good environment. Those are the reasons people will move to Canada, will move to Alberta: for quality of life issues more than anything else. So I would venture to say that is the reality, not a brain drain away because of taxes, and certainly as we get unfair taxing, we could well lose a good portion of our people or have people in the middle income slowly but surely slip into the lower income.

In fact, a little bit more on that brain drain is a study done by KPMG that said that the factors that influence high-tech workers to change jobs are a percentage increase in salary, naturally; attractiveness to a different job; "a high quality of life in the community increases its attractiveness by 33%"; proximity to family and friends increases it; a full benefits package increases it; stock options increase it; company stability increases it; and "quality of life and proximity factors account for more than 50% of the motivation to change jobs."

So those are the things that we should be looking at strengthening in this province, and you know what? After-tax income is obviously important. It is for all of us, but the net percentage increase of people who wish to change jobs and move is based on quality of life, so I can even get a copy of this and send it to the minister so it'll help him with the question period tomorrow. He might be able to give a more informed response on a little bit more information that we can send to him.

Now, people have said to me that this bill is moving towards a two-tiered tax system. Actually, it's been mentioned in the Legislature as well that it's like a two-tiered tax system, and we end up having a major structural change in the way we collect taxes with this piece of legislation. What we've got with this two-tiered system is an issue of unfairness. Because of this, I think we've got to look at: is it all important to say that we've got the lowest taxes? Maybe so. When we say lowest taxes, do we have to also mention highest costs, out-of-pocket for private health care?

The amendment, once again, is a suggestion that the subject be referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. Mr. Speaker, we missed that opportunity to send it with Bill 11. We have another opportunity here to send this to the Committee on Law and Regulations, and I think it would be an exciting time for those members to actually call a meeting and do some work on law and regulations.

I'd like to say that judging by the people I chatted with this weekend, the real concern is that a flat tax is not the fairest way we can do it. They also feel that it's a bit of damage control after Bill 11. After the trouble they have had with Bill 11, maybe if they just told everybody, "Well, we'll give you all 10 bucks or 100 bucks back in your pocket," they'd all be happy and forget Bill 11. So it's like a quick fix instead of proper tax reform.

I would encourage this government that if you want to look at proper tax reform, let's do it right. Let's not do the quick fix for political reasons. Let's do a real proper review of this. Do it properly. I would encourage people to support this amendment. Let's get that Standing Committee on Law and Regulations to work. Let's give them a purpose, because it must be embarrassing to say: yeah, I chair that committee, but we've never met. I think it's a strong point to go forward with this bill to the Law and Regulations Committee.

There's been enough concern expressed. People have said to me: let's do a proper tax reform; let's not do this piecemeal, feel-good kind of stuff. I mean, face it; the federal government came out with their tax changes, and suddenly then: oh, well, we'll change ours to 10.5 percent, then, if 11 percent doesn't work. That should give you a clue that not enough homework has been done on this bill. Not enough people have thought it through. So I look forward to debate on this. I know that members from the opposite side, including the Acting Treasurer, will want to stand up and maybe voice support of this. Maybe not, likely not, but there's always hope.

So, Mr. Speaker, with those comments about supporting this motion that we discharge it at second reading, send it to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations – a very good amendment by my hon. colleague, well thought out in concern for her constituents and, in fact, all of Albertans – I would like to put my support behind this amendment.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking to the amendment that would send the entire bill – lock, stock, and barrel – off to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. With a bill of this magnitude and the effect that this bill would have, it certainly would be reasonable to expect that a committee of this Legislature would study the bill, study the bill not just line by line but study the effect, effect by effect. Certainly with the limited amount of study this bill has apparently been put through in either the government caucus or certainly in the public realm, it would be reasonable to expect that some reasonable debate could be generated in that committee.

If that committee were a committee as many committees in other jurisdictions are, it would hear expert witnesses. They would question. They would probe. They would certainly get an interest up in the public that would be easily translated into better public knowledge through the media. The media would certainly attend such a meeting when we know for absolutely sure that this piece of legislation could and would change the face of this province and how it manages its economy through the contributions of the citizens by way of tax.

Now, having said that, considerations that I would think should be brought to the attention of that committee are the entire tax structure, not just the income tax. Income tax is but one portion of it. I spoke earlier today of business taxes, which are a horrible inhibitor for small business. It's not such a big imposition for large businesses but for small businesses, the genesis of most of the wealth creation in this province. It's an inhibitor that the municipal government applies because they simply cannot manage their budget, as it were, on the basis of property tax and property tax alone.

I recognize that property tax should have and has a reasonable place in an overall tax structure, but it should not be as dominant as it is. In fact, this member would advocate either tax points or a different structure of perhaps revenue sharing in that hill and gully rider of the up and down swings of revenue generation by way of royalties and the like could in fact be shared with the municipality.

The municipality has not a great deal of latitude in expenditures, but they all have a substantive wish list of those things that they'll get to in time. I know there are a number of hon. members in this House that served at that level of government and know that there are a great many very, very worthwhile endeavours that a municipality can and should do, whether it be in environment or whether it be in infrastructure upgrade. All of these things could be managed much better if they had more income to make these judgments, and of course then we wouldn't have the same difficulty of the municipal purse growing and shrinking at such a rate that it is exceedingly difficult to manage. Yes, you'd still have that large purse, but you'd have many more purses in the province that could expand and contract as the economy grew and then shrank over time when we rise and fall as the revenue sources in natural resources increase and decrease.

You have to recognize that the same taxpayer, each individual

Albertan, is the one that this burden falls upon. Quite frankly, it seems to this member that it would be much, much more progressive if we could take that income tax level and modify it only so slightly as to effect these other changes first. I'm thinking of the first element of business, the great unfairness to charge a health care tax. It seems that there is but one other province in the entire dominion of Canada that does charge that rate, and it seems to be totally and completely counterproductive when the entire imposition of the collection of that tax actually pays for but a small portion of the management of the health care system, particularly when there must be 10, maybe 15, maybe even as high as 20 percent of that tax as applied is the bureaucracy to apply it.

As I said earlier, the imposition of this tax goes on each and every one of us equally, which is a user fee, and it's a regressive tax. It doesn't have anything to do with ability to pay, nor does it have anything to do with the usage of the system, so it's an unattached tax, as it were. It does not have a solid reason for existence. No one certainly in this Chamber has ever been able to explain that easily to this member. Consequently I don't have any success at all explaining to members of the public why they must go through this charade of paying for part of their health care system. It certainly doesn't cut down their usage of the system, nor does it seem to have any effect whatever on expenditure levels, and it certainly doesn't have any attachment to that ability to pay.

Now, that's one element of tax that could and should be eliminated prior to any adjustment, because you still leave the poorest of the poor. Regardless of whether they pay income tax, they still have this albatross around their neck of paying this tax, and they have but another tax collector and another reason for filing again and again. Just as they're about to escape the net of the social services system, they find that now they are in the working poor, as it were, and now they have to pay. Before they pay for any food or lodging, they must pay this tithe, this rate, this imposition of tax for their health care at the same rate as the biggest financier, the hottest lawyer in town, the brain surgeon.

That does not seem to this member to be fair at all, particularly when they get behind two or three payments, and they're threatened with all manner of foul deeds perpetrated upon their financial structure. They're threatened with a bad credit rating. They're threatened with garnishee of wage. They're threatened with all of these things, and to what end? To what end? To pay some bureaucrat to chase them? I think this tax is the worst imposition of all.

We'll move on to another set of taxes that I spoke of earlier that are applied through the municipality. The small businessperson wanting to open up a hairdressing salon or a small business such as that will review the situation as to start-up costs, the first and last month's rent or damage deposit on a small facility, renovating that facility such that they can operate their business, all the signage, all of those kinds of start-up costs. Then they get hit with a tax. Then the municipality comes and says: thank you very much; now we have to apply a tax to your business because we have a need.

Now, that tax has nothing to do with ability to pay. The business right next door pays exactly the same rate presuming they pay the same lease rate, and that business may have been operating for 50 years and may have a wonderful record. It may be that that business next door is a bank, and the bank has no difficulty whatever paying this rate. But start-up costs and the next six months of having to pay that and then not paying it and having a tax imposed upon a tax is so onerous on those businesses that a lot of them go out of business. That is simply not healthy in this economy, and it certainly wouldn't be helpful for any small town to have businesses go in and out of business, and we all recognize that. The imposition of those kinds of taxes is the worst.

So when we talk about a review of the law and regulations, we talk about a full and complete review of the tax structure. That goes even to the extent of user fees. We would have liked to have had a full and complete review of those prior to the imposition in this last budget debate. That would be a fundamental inclusion, to set a philosophical framework, as it were, around the imposition of user fees.

Now, this member has no difficulty with user fees that do actually reflect the cost of doing business. Government must perform those functions that a society calls upon it for. In extra areas, in areas where special services are required, or in areas where it is not absolutely necessary that the service be provided by government to the citizens – you know, the imposition of those taxes would be reasonable. There are others, of course, that should not and would not in the normal case be applied, nor should they be applied at those rates. Quite frankly, a government is in the business of governing for all of the people, and to apply another tithe, another tax, another fee, another rate to something that should be provided as a matter of course by a government – saving all of that exchange of cash and exchange of all of that paper for billing purposes and the like seems to me to be so much more reasonable than charging every single time, particularly when you look at the administrative costs coupled with the inequity of application, of ability to pay.

We know that there are citizens in this province that do not, cannot, and will not dip into their pocket to pay for those services and do without, and that is certainly not the kind of thing that we want to perpetrate as government in the province of Alberta. There are so, so many of those taxes and the imposition of charges, and the ones that I point to most directly are those that are supplied through the – I think it's the registries that do a lot of these. Now, I recognize that the registries have costs – and they're governed by an act – in order to disseminate the information that they collect, and they also collect a fee that is commensurate with the cost of that, but what doesn't happen and hasn't happened is that the government also . . . [interjections]

Oh, yes, I recognize that. I had a lot of bobbing heads from the opposite side that were trying to indicate something, and I know not what, sir, so the translation could be difficult.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. member, that normally is not a problem. If all hon. members abide by the rules and speak through the chair, they don't see any bobbing of heads elsewhere.

MR. WHITE: I'll try to ignore the bobbing of heads across the way. It's a sign of a loose neck or a poor health care system that cannot keep his neck erect.

Continuing on, sir, with the debate of . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, Standing Order 4(1) indicates that we've now concluded the afternoon's business today. Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, if I understand this correctly, according to the Order Paper, when the House convenes tonight at 8 o'clock, it will reconvene in Committee of the Whole.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: That is correct, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Then, you will now rise till 8 o'clock, and you shall reconvene in Committee of the Whole.

Title: Monday, May 15, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/05/15

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: Good evening. I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2000

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to add my comments on Bill 16 to those on the record. This is a bill that we've been able in my constituency to do some fairly extensive consultation on. There are a number of condominium developments in Edmonton-Ellerslie, and there are some proposed in the near future as we see some major development happening right around Ellerslie Road over the next 10 to 15 years. It's something that I always run into at the doors: concerns and questions from condominium owners about their rights and what's happening in their associations. We were able to contact those people and run through the bill with them and get their comments.

Overall, Mr. Chairman, the condominium owners in my constituency felt that there was a need for this act, but they felt that it didn't completely meet their particular needs as owners. One of the points that they talked about was that purchasers want to know all plans concerning construction that would jeopardize their own property value. What we found in the past is that sometimes people have bought the condominiums, particularly prior to construction being completed on the units, and then moved in to find that there were some construction items that hadn't been completed or that were being completed differently than what they had anticipated, and they felt that sometimes those did jeopardize their own property values. They felt that information should be more explicitly available and some sort of contingency which meant that the developers would have to meet all of the criteria.

One of the ideas brought forward was that in fact the developer should have to maintain a bond for three to six months after the last piece of construction on the development so that were there any discrepancies, purchasers felt they had some recourse to have those discrepancies met. That was actually the major concern that we heard about in the area.

They also want the purchaser to be allowed to cancel the purchase agreement if not provided with full and absolute disclosure of all documents and drawings registered or proposed. That seems like common sense, Mr. Chairman. Certainly it would seem to be a possibility when people are having houses built, but it's a problem for these condo owners when things change prior to the full development being done, and then there's no way for them to get out of the arrangements.

Often we've seen cases where continued development means continued costs to the owners. Condominium owners are often first-time homeowners, and they often don't have access to a lot of resources. In some cases they are people who are purchasing the condos with the intent of renting them to other people. They are satisfied with the specs as they were when they went into the purchase and don't need or want any additional items and can't afford to pay for anything additionally.

Of course having had some experience with condominium associations myself, I know that once you've got the mortgage for the condo, even if there are substantial increases or upgrades within the association, either prior to overall completion of the construction or sometime down the road, it's very hard to go back to the bank and get refinancing at that particular time, Mr. Chairman. The mortgage companies don't seem to look very favourably upon improvements in condominiums even if they're substantive in nature. So it's a problem for them, and it's reasonable for them to want to be able to cancel the purchase agreement if they don't get all the information they need.

Another concern of theirs is that they want to ensure that a purchaser is fully aware of the conditions for canceling the purchase agreement. What they want mostly, Mr. Chairman, is for those agreements to be in plain English. Any of us who have gone through mortgage documents over the years know that they're written in legalese. They require a lawyer to interpret them, and often it's a problem for people purchasing the agreements. They don't have that kind of a background. They don't have access to the kind of dollars required to have a lawyer . . . [The chairman waited until the committee came to order]

THE CHAIRMAN: Very good. If we could keep it at that level, we might be able to hear the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. They want to make sure that they understand what the procedure is for canceling, and that hasn't always been the case in the past.

Also, it's not reasonable to expect the purchaser to examine the entire complex and often certainly not possible, particularly if there are people living in the complex at the time, but it can have an impact on the long-term viability and in fact the market value of the condominium afterwards. Here the people were particularly talking about the rot that's been found in some of the condominiums. First of all, the rot is hard to find. Secondly, it's mostly internal within the condominium units, so while you may have had an extensive investigation of the condominium unit that you're buying, you can't do that for all of the units in the complex. It's a buyer beware kind of situation right now.

We saw that huge scandal occur over condominium rot in British Columbia over the past few years. Of course, the problem is worse there because of the kind of weather they have. Being wet and muggy, the mold that caused all the lawsuits seems to grow a lot faster than what it has in Alberta, but we have that problem here. We have that problem in my constituency.

The condominium owner that I talked to didn't have it in his particular unit, but it was in the complex as a whole, and it substantially increased the costs during renovations on the outside walls of the complex, for which he was partially responsible. Had they had some sort of extensive and complete inspections done on a regular basis, this information would have been available. It should have been a part of a disclosure document. A purchaser should have been fully aware of that kind of condition, and that should be an option for canceling a purchase agreement. So not being able to examine the entire complex is certainly an issue.

Another issue: prohibit a developer from controlling a board outside of elections to the boards. This was an issue particularly in new complexes or those that aren't fully filled and where a developer still owns the title to some of the particular units. As such, they're able to have people nominated or appointed to the condominium boards. That's seen as a degree of control that isn't necessary,

Mr. Chairman, and something that they would like to see prohibited.

Another point: board members names and addresses registered with the land titles office are accurate and up to date between annual general meetings. Of course, this is a problem because sometimes you can't find those board members. If you need to have a decision made about something and you want to call a meeting of the association, then you need to be able to access these people. Often between annual meetings they move. You only have to own the condominium in order to be eligible to be a board member. You don't have to actually be resident within the unit. So we find oftentimes that condominium owners are not residents within the complex; they live elsewhere. They are difficult to track down, particularly if they've moved between annual meetings, and that can be a problem for members at large within the association. So they felt that that would be a very small thing but a necessary item to be addressed.

Another point: the validity of any act performed by a board member should be open to review. Again, it just makes common sense, Mr. Chairman, that this would happen and that the associations would have some provisions that acts performed by board members within the context of their responsibilities as board members should be open to review, but it seems that that isn't often the case. People I've spoken to felt that should be addressed.

They also felt that adequate representation of unit owners on the condominium board is essential, and we find also that that doesn't always happen. It's more than the number of units a particular person may use. What they need is an adequate cross-representation of people who actually live within the complex. Absentee owners cause problems in this instance. People who aren't on the ground all the time to see what's happening on a day-to-day basis within the complex can add to the kinds of problems that occur. I thought this was a valid point and something that could have been addressed within the context of this bill.

They also wanted to know why they couldn't include that meetings should be held in the municipality in which the units are located. Once again this is a problem, Mr. Chairman. It doesn't always happen that the actual board meetings are held in an area easy to access for general members of the complex. You'd think it would just be common sense that they'd have them in somebody's living room or in a common area if there's a common area within the complex, but it doesn't happen. Often they are outside of the region or the area, and they are difficult for members at large to get to.

They wanted to see a prohibition of developers drafting bylaws that are in their own self-interest. Why developers should be involved in the development of bylaws within a condominium association is a question anyway, Mr. Chairman, but particularly they shouldn't be able to draft them in their own self-interest. Where this particularly becomes a problem is in new complexes where there isn't a fully developed, operating board yet and units are left vacant or haven't been sold. There's that crossover time between when the units are full and the board can operate in the best interests of the unit owners and holders rather than the developers, so that's an issue that needs to be addressed.

I think it's particularly concerning that nearly every condominium owner I talked to had an issue with the developers in terms of how the initial set of bylaws gets drafted for the condominium association. Then often the people who own the units thereafter don't understand the process for revising or deleting bylaws, so those bylaws get left on the books sometimes for a long time, and down the road when large problems occur with the units, they can also become a problem.

They wanted to ensure that all condominium corporations are governed by the same minimum bylaw standards set out in section 27 of the act. It doesn't explicitly say that it's going to happen, and it's an issue. People wanted to see that that was addressed.

They wanted to clarify that capital improvements refer to items other than repairs and replacements to items that do not occur annually. So this again, although not expressed in exactly those terms, Mr. Chairman, was an issue that was raised with me time and time again. Of course, this becomes an issue for financing for the condominium association itself in terms of whether or not these items are paid for annually out of the yearly budget, which can mean a hefty sum in the monthly condominium fees, or whether they're capitalized over time and a reserve fund gets set up or you plan to do these capital items in two to five years' time so that you can establish a reserve fund so that condominium owners aren't hit with a huge bill in any given year, and it's happened often.

We've seen cases with the pine shake roofing issue where suddenly the condominium association realizes that the roofs they've got on all of these condominiums are not adequate, need to be replaced immediately. That's a huge bill, Mr. Chairman. Depending on the size of the units, we're talking close to $100,000 sometimes. Well, a bank isn't going to give anybody more money on their mortgage in order to do their roof. We've seen that. So what happens is that if there hasn't been a reserve fund set up by the association, they literally go to each unit owner and ask them to pay their share of that repair, anywhere from $2,500 to $7,000, and they've got to come up with the money right away. There are no exceptions made. So it's up to the individual owner how they access that cash, and often they simply don't have access to those kinds of resources. That's an example of why you would want to clarify the capital improvements and separate them from ordinary kinds of repairs and replacements.

They wanted to see listed that in the case of termination of the condominium status under section 52 any funds left over are to be distributed to the owners proportional to unit factor. Again, this has been an issue in some cases where there have been dollars left over. For whatever reason the condominium status has been changed, and then the moneys are seen in some people's eyes not to be properly distributed. It'd be quite easy to write that into the act and see that this is done. Now, perhaps this can be done by regulation, whatever, but it needs to be addressed. It's certainly an issue for some people in this province.

They also wanted to see that a purchaser should not be held responsible for a late filing of a notice, that the mortgage of the previous owner should be held responsible for any contributions owing from the previous owner. This gets into detail, but, Mr. Chairman, it can be quite important to these owners. I've seen lots of cases where we have young couples who are buying a property for the very first time. They're not told all of the costs to get into the association and legal fees associated with moving into the complex in the first place, so some of those bills come as a surprise. When a month after they've taken possession of their unit they get another legal bill because the previous owner didn't fully discharge all of their responsibilities prior to moving and somehow it wasn't picked up by the lawyers, it's a big surprise and not one that condominium owners are happy with. So that's something that needs to be addressed too.

Many of the people that I talked to said that the owners should also have the same rights as the mortgagee, and I think that's an interesting debate. Certainly you can see their point of view in terms of rights and obligations. We've heard previously from mortgagees saying that they should always have the first discharge and rights on properties in this case, and we see that they're protecting their dollars. One is protecting their ownership and the investment they've made, and the other one is protecting the ongoing cash flow that they're expecting to receive as a result of being a mortgage holder. So it's an interesting debate and one that needs to be addressed, I think, in this case.

To a person, everybody I talked to felt that the main purpose of having condominium legislation is for consumer protection. I think that what we see in this bill, Mr. Chairman, primarily is protection for the condominium developers and for the potential for developers in the future to develop condominiums. It doesn't necessarily address the specific rights of the condominium owners from a consumer protection perspective. Once again, I will use the example of pine shakes particularly and the mold or rot that is now being found in some of these condominium units. These people, through absolutely no fault of their own, find themselves in situations where they are facing absolutely massive repairs, repairs that cause some of them to lose their complete investment in the property and the equity that they've got, and they often have trouble discharging the mortgages because they can't find a buyer.

If I knew that a condominium unit had mold in it, for sure I wouldn't be buying a unit there. I wouldn't care if I'd already signed on the dotted line. I'd be backing out of that deal as fast as I could. What you see, then, is that the property values of these units plummet far below their original purchase prices and often far below a value where owners can recover. So you're faced with the situation where you personally cannot raise any more cash, yet you're facing a bill of $2,500 or $5,000 or $10,000 in terms of repairs needed for the facility. You can't sell the unit because people know that it's got mold in it. As a conscientious owner you feel obligated to disclose the things that are wrong with the unit. You haven't got a buyer. You can't sell it for any kind of a price at all. What do you do? Walk away from the mortgage?

Well, if you do that, your credit rating is significantly damaged, and you lose any equity that you had in the property. In addition to that, where are you going to live then? You haven't got anything in terms of equity for purchasing a new home, and you may be in a situation where you can't walk away from the mortgage because of whatever other investments or commitments you have. You're not going to want to live in the unit. To live in a unit with that mold in it is significantly a health risk, particularly a concern for anybody with a chronic health condition, for young children, or for seniors, in fact exactly the kind of individual that we often find living in these condominiums. So, Mr. Chairman, I have the greatest sympathy for these people when they say that who should have the highest degree of protection is the consumer and not necessarily the developer.

Thank you. I believe I am nearly out of time, and I'm happy to have had an opportunity to speak to this act.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Just some very brief responses to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. In this bill the concerns that I would say she has raised are addressed, and that's what this bill actually does. Let's be very clear that the bylaws for condominium associations are set by the members of the association, and they vote as to their bylaws. If there are problems with those bylaws, it's up to the owners and members of the condo association to make amendments to those bylaws. That's not a government role, because they in fact are the owners and partners in the condo complex.

Insofar as disclosures, one of the things that is good about this bill is that it does require that there be a capital upgrade or capital maintenance report done and filed with the condo association every five years. That alleviates surprises for people coming in to purchase a condo and not knowing what lays ahead insofar as capital maintenance that would be required. I think that's important. Now, then it's up to the condo association to do the scheduling and determine how in fact they're going to deal with the short-term and the long-term report as to types of capital maintenance that have to take place. That is addressed in this bill. So when someone does come to buy a condo from someone, they can look at those reports – they must be filed and readily available – and can in fact make some planning and determination as to whether this is a venture they want to enter into.

I think that some of those concerns that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie raised have really been very much addressed in this bill. What was outstanding and asked for by the condominium owners and the condominium builders was a coming together of some of these outstanding issues, and that's what this amendment act is all about. So I think that it's incumbent upon us to move forward with these amendments and get this bill in place and let the condominium associations determine their own bylaws.

The other thing that's important, Mr. Chairman, is that the reserve fund that is put in place by each condominium association is, again, determined by that association as to the amount that they will require to maintain the condominium complex based on the evaluation by a qualified person as to what type of capital will be necessary. They will make that determination, not the government.

I think there is a lot of good disclosure in this bill, and it's one that not only protects the consumer but protects the existing association and takes away the debate on whether the builder should or shouldn't have done something in the longer term, because it's clearly laid out.

So I think those issues that were raised by Edmonton-Ellerslie are in fact dealt with in this amendment, and I would encourage her, if she still has concerns, to call over to our department and go over some of these issues.

This is one of the first times that builders and buyers have come to consensus and conclusions on some of these issues, and I think we should, again, applaud them for their efforts. As the Member for Calgary-Buffalo alluded to in second reading, it's been 10 years of coming together to get to this point, and it's been done through consensus. I think that they have exhausted pretty much all the arguments on either side, and this is the position that they have asked us to put in place. They are in agreement with this program and with this legislation, and I would hope that the members opposite would support it.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. A couple of comments I want to make. One of the things I want to observe is that I represent probably one of the most condo-intense constituencies in the province. I have absolutely no doubt that no sooner will the bill be passed than I'm going to have a number of condo corporations showing up at my constituency office asking questions, offering suggestions in terms of amendments.

DR. WEST: They don't do that with the rest of us.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, I'm going to avoid being provoked or baited.

The point I wanted to make is in terms of how I deal with this as a representative for downtown Calgary, not having the benefit of being able to consult with every one of the hundreds and hundreds of condo corporations. I have, I guess, done some extrapolation from those corporations that have come to me with issues and concerns. I must tell you one of the things that I hear most often. I spoke with a woman this afternoon who lives in a building where there have been a whole series of problems. They are anxious for this legislation. In fact, she said to me: "We are holding off our general meeting. In fact, we're trying to schedule it after the legislation comes into force, because it allows our corporation and our board to do some things we couldn't do before. There's some flexibility in this bill that we need, and as our MLA, Mr. Dickson, we'd like you to do what you can to expedite passage of the bill."

Certainly I've heard from unit holders that are interested in moving forward on this. Now, I've also had the benefit of talking to some developers and some property managers. Really, we have here, if you will, three different communities of interest. You have the unit owners, and we have thousands of those people in downtown Calgary. We've got the developers, and that's an obvious interest that they have. Then we have managers. When we were dealing with this four years ago or so in the House, I'd not realized how well organized the condominium management group is. I learned a lot and I heard a lot from people while we were dealing with that bill some four years ago. So this time around I've made a point of trying to do some broader consultation with managers as well as developers and unit owners.

I think that when I look at the bill, the reason I'm supporting this bill is there are some very positive developments in it. You know, unlike bills 18 and 19, that I had a lot of difficulty with, in this bill I was able to find some really positive provisions. For example, the mandatory reserve study is an important step forward. That's been a major issue in the past when I've talked to people who have gone into buildings. There are a number of older buildings in downtown Calgary that had been condominiumized after they had existed for a while as apartment buildings. Whether it was sloppiness or not a tremendously efficient management outfit, what we had was some of those unit holders being faced with special assessments to cover capital expense. I don't think it was, in anybody's view, the most satisfactory way of dealing with it.

I like the fact that we have some increased disclosure to purchasers, and I think that's an important feature of this bill. It's another reason why I'm inclined to support it. I also like the express incorporation of provision for arbitration and mediation. That's a really important tool and something that's positive to see in this. The new, more flexible process to amend condominium plans is also, I think, a significant step forward.

We've heard a lot of talk that the developers wanted a phase-in provision for new complexes. I know it's important. For example, I had occasion to drive around with a relative recently in the Tuscany area in northwest Calgary, and there are some huge condominium projects. We're talking about projects that have 350 different units and bowling alleys and swimming pools, and as I think we get more and more seniors looking to leave single-family dwellings and move into places where they have more sociability, more amenities, this becomes more and more important. I hold no particular brief for developers, but what I recognize, because I believe in a market system, is that things that can reduce the cost to developers help to ensure that the cost of individual condominium units hopefully continues to be affordable, particularly for our parents or for seniors who are looking for the kind of accommodation that can be offered in larger condominium complexes. So I support the phasing not just because it makes life easier for developers but because I think it helps to streamline the process and it's easier in terms of cash flow for developers. My hope is that that's going to translate into affordable condominium living, particularly for seniors and for those people who are looking for that kind of accommodation.

Now, one of the things I wanted to make note of is that I've heard from some groups who wanted to see a number of different changes to the Condominium Property Act, and what I've explained to those groups and those constituents is that in a bill like this you just can't go off and bring in amendments to cover anything under the sun. To a large extent we have to deal with the bill that's in front of us, and to go out and address some of the things that people would like to see when they're not addressed in the bill, we can't do. So what I've undertaken to people who have raised that is to spend some time with the Minister of Government Services and the Member for Calgary-Bow, and I'm collecting a cumulative list. As the Minister of Government Services said sagely to me at one point – her phraseology is always more colourful than mine – if I might paraphrase, she made the observation that this is a work in progress, that just as we have seen substantial tinkering with it in the past, we will likely see further adjustment in the future. I believe that to be the case.

I don't know what the total percentage is now, but if you look at the extent to which condominiums have increased in terms of the number of condominium units – in the city of Calgary, for example, we were actually quite slow in terms of moving from getting out of those big single-family dwellings, but now we're doing it in big numbers, and I think that's significant. I think there are going to be some other changes to the legislation. To those people who have raised concerns that cannot properly be incorporated into an amendment in Bill 16, my commitment as the Calgary-Buffalo MLA is to try and find solutions and to attempt to work with the Minister of Government Services and the Member for Calgary-Bow to look for further change down the road.

Now, I had outlined some concerns before. I think at this point, because I may be losing the interest of members, I have an amendment I want to propose, and I advised the Minister of Government Services earlier about this. I forgot to advise the minister of intergovernmental affairs, who looks absolutely shocked that I would have the temerity to bring in an amendment now, but this is an old favourite. This recognizes the fact that I don't . . . [interjections] I think we'll keep members in suspense just a moment longer, Mr. Chairman. This is the one that if you look at Bill 16, what we find is that in section 6 we have a new section 14.1, and what we find there is that we have delegated lawmaking. We have section 9, which deals again with expanded roles for regulations. We've got section 11. [interjections]

I'm being encouraged. I want to specifically thank the Minister of Government Services and the minister of intergovernmental affairs for cheering me on, because a moment ago I thought interest was flagging, but I'm now encouraged and I'm buoyed to carry on right to the end of my 20 minutes and maybe beyond. So thank you, ministers. Thank you very much. My heart soars like a hawk when I see the kind of support we're getting from across the floor, and it may be that on this bill we're seeing some of that cross-Assembly support where people in their respective constituencies can come together and say: we can do a better job for condominium projects in this province.

The point I was going to make is that if you look at section 9 and section 11 and section 6, what do we find there but more regulation? Now, one of the things I find here is that a lot of my constituents, when I point this out to them, say: "So, Dickson, what's the big deal with that? What's the matter with regulations?" And then I explain to them the sorry, the tragic history in this province of how the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations has been allowed to atrophy, atrophy, ladies and gentlemen, to next to nothing. Its only existence is the fact that in – what is it? – every Thursday Hansard, when we look at the back, past the index page, there's a list of the committees, and you know, it's listed there. We have a chairman. We have a very live chairman in the Member for Banff-Cochrane. But beyond that, this is an invisible committee. This is a disappearing committee.

When I pass away and the Speaker of the day stands up in the House, when we have a moment of silence and he reads out the committees that this member served on – I'm going to have to leave a specific note: please, do not read in that I was a charter member from 1992 to the time of my passing of the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, because I just don't want to be associated with a committee that doesn't do anything, Mr. Chairman. [interjections] Well, there may be some others who want that, but for those of you who are here when I'm long gone and you do that little moment of silence, please, please, would you make sure the Speaker knows not to read out my membership on that committee.

MR. HAVELOCK: That's presupposing that he'll read about you.

MR. DICKSON: Well, that's entirely true. That may be the day the Legislature is adjourned.

Mr. Chairman, the point I want to make is this. We've got some laws and regulations here that have gotten away on us in so many statutes. This isn't the fault of the Member for Calgary-Bow. She's certainly tried, and if she had unfettered discretion, if she didn't have a cabinet that was sort of looking over her shoulder, I'll bet you dollars to doughnuts that Member for Calgary-Bow would be the first one to say: yes, Dickson, I agree; the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations should review those regulations.

Now, because she may not feel free to do that, I want to take this moment right now to move an amendment. This has been seen in the past by . . . [interjection]

The original amendment is coming to you, Mr. Chairman, on top of a pile of 89 copies of the amendment. I'm going to ask that it be distributed. Would we call this amendment A, Mr. Chairman?

THE CHAIRMAN: It's A1.

MR. DICKSON: It's A1. I'm moving this amendment on behalf of and in the name of my colleague from Edmonton-Manning. I'm moving the amendment in the name of the Member for Edmonton-Manning, but here's what the amendment would do. It would add after section 55 a section 55.1. This would add section 73.1 after section 73:

- (1) In this section, "Standing Committee" means the Standing Committee of the Legislative Assembly on Law and Regulations.
- (2) Where the Lieutenant Governor in Council proposes to make a regulation pursuant to section 73, the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall cause to be forwarded to the Standing Committee a copy of the proposed regulation.
- (3) On receipt by the Standing Committee of a copy of a proposed regulation pursuant to subsection (2), the Standing Committee shall examine the proposed regulation to ensure that
 - (a) it is consistent with the delegated authority provided in this Act,
 - (b) it is necessarily incidental to the purpose of this Act, and
 - (c) it is reasonable in terms of efficiently achieving the objective of this Act.
- (4) When the proposed regulation has been examined as required under subsection (3), the Standing Committee shall advise the Lieutenant Governor in Council that the proposed regulation has been so examined and shall indicate any matter referred to in subsection(3)(a),(b) or (c) to which, in the opinion of the Standing Committee, the attention of the Lieutenant Governor in Council should be drawn.

So that's the amendment I'm putting forward.

What I'd hope, Mr. Chairman, is that we recognize on this amendment that there's a new and compelling reason why I put this forward. There may be some members in this Assembly who are tuning me out as I speak, there may be some members who tuned me out 15 minutes ago, but the point is this, Mr. Chairman. There is a really new and fresh reason that the members have not heard before in terms of why we should look carefully at amendment A1. Members may be asking: so what is this new, fresh reason why we should support it?

Well, it's this. We have a process that started 10 years ago to update our Condominium Property Act, and four years ago the government thought they had it right. We debated that bill, and we passed it. I still clearly remember the bill being passed, and it was sort of paraded out. You know, there was a band in front and fanfare and the rest of it, and we thought this was going to become law.

What we found was that in terms of development of the regulations, the developers and the condominium property managers and the unit holders were not ad idem. They did not agree, and there were fundamental disagreements. The point, Mr. Chairman, becomes this: that consultation has demonstrated more impactively than anything else I can think of that the regulation process has got to be open. I say to the Member for Calgary-Bow and I say to the Minister of Government Services that it is not good enough to have a closed consultation around the regulations, and I make the offer I've made before. I mean, this is all we want to see. If we got this amendment, we'd be able to shut this process down and we'd be able to move on, confident that we had done something positive for the people of the province of Alberta.

So, Mr. Chairman, I want to point out with this amendment that you know what this would do? It would allow those three different constituent groups, those three different communities of interest to know that there is an open process, because the process for development of regulations now is not open. There are people in the Department of Government Services that presumably are sitting up there behind me who are shaking their heads and saying: we've done an open, open consultation. But with respect to these very capable people – and I appreciate the excellent briefing we got on this bill when it was first introduced. There were some very capable people in the department working on it. But do you know something? There is always a problem with not everyone being consulted, and I can guarantee you there will always be some stakeholders that are left out and are not included on the list.

I just think it's so important we make sure, Mr. Chairman, that what we do is have a more open process in terms of how those regulations are developed, and I think this would be a really good model to do it on. It's not good enough that we have this committee that just never meets.

I look at it this way. You know, it's great to have the Member for Calgary-Bow in the Assembly and looking particularly healthy, and I just think: what a great tribute to the Member for Calgary-Bow. It's great to have that member in the Assembly tonight, and what better gift to that Member for Calgary-Bow than gift wrapping this amendment? Let's pass it unanimously. Let's present it. I want to be able to go around and collect autographs on the side of the amendment. I want to be able to do that. We'll tie it up in a bow. I want to hand deliver it to that Member for Calgary-Bow. This could be her finest hour in this Assembly since 1989, and who, ladies and gentlemen, would deprive the Member for Calgary-Bow of that distinction tonight?

So let's work together. We have an amendment. This is not going to hurt anybody. You know, this is not painful at all. We can just as one collective mass support our colleague from Calgary-Bow, celebrate her involvement back in the Chamber this Monday evening, and then move on to the other important business of the Assembly.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman's Ruling Clarification

THE CHAIRMAN: Before we recognize the next speaker, just a clarification. Under the line where it says, "55.1 The following is added after section 73," please note that below that it should read 73.1. It goes then, "(1) In this section 'Standing Committee' means." So if you'd put that in there for greater clarification.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, I've heard many things in this Assembly, but I've never heard the proposal of a bill to prescribe to clean your arteries. I suppose anything could happen. I would like to also lend my welcome to the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow. I have to disagree with the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I really don't think Bill 16 has quite got it in it to give that particular member her strength back. Perhaps some time out of the Assembly with family, friends, some good food and sleep, all those things, might be just what the doctor ordered, but most certainly it is good to have her back in the Assembly.

The amendment before us this evening on Bill 16, the Condominium Property Amendment Act, in essence directs that after section 55 we would insert a new section that would direct this bill to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. We've seen in recent days a similar amendment proposed actually, I believe, twice. We've seen it proposed on Bill 18, and we've seen also a similar amendment proposed for discussion in this Assembly on Bill 11. It has been certainly a bit of a puzzle to me that the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations of the Legislative Assembly never meets.

What I've concluded is that instead of having this legislative committee meeting, what has happened over time is the government practice to substitute committees comprised solely of government members to review standing policy, to serve in a preliminary way for the review of legislation, to provide feedback and input into budget debates, but specifically when we talk about laws and regulations in this province, there is a parliamentary tradition that suggests that a party comprised of all members should in fact be reviewing laws, particularly those that might be seen to be contentious or where in fact the government is unable to achieve some form of consensus. Yet we see this committee not meeting. Certainly the Condominium Property Amendment Act, quite a young piece of legislation, in essence accompanied by a 10-year consultation period, would be a primary candidate for going before that committee.

It would also, I think, for those people who exist in the category that aren't completely satisfied with the bill, who don't feel that the bill has completely addressed the concerns they've raised or if particular sections they recommended have been excluded – it gives those individuals, those organizations or groups the sense that they have gone the full mile, Mr. Chairman, in undertaking all the possible mechanisms and meeting with all the authoritative groups possible. The sad fact, though, is that while this committee has its authority in statute, while it has its authority in long parliamentary traditions, in this particular province we have a government that chooses not to activate it, number one, and not to fund it, number two. In fact, this year in the Members' Services Committee we had proposed draft budgets that completely eliminated any mention of this committee from the budget statements. Of course, then when that was raised, it was inputted but with a zero budget balance.

I think the amendment before us most certainly achieves a compromise, if you will, for government. It also respects a tool that is there and that government should use when appropriate.

Now, in just recent debate I had mentioned that there were a number of outstanding concerns, and I believe the hon. minister for government affairs did respond to that. There are several individuals who have raised concerns with respect to the bill, and there has been a series of correspondence exchanged but no real resolution. Perhaps the government might find it, even as a trial, Mr. Chairman, expeditious to send this particular bill in its current state to the Law and Regulations Committee and have them meet with these individuals and see if a resolution can be achieved.

One of the other trends I've noticed during my short term in this Assembly is the fact that we quite often pass bills in a very fast fashion, and then before you know it – it won't even be a year past – there will be additional amendments brought forward either through amendment acts or through miscellaneous statutes. We find ourselves now looking at a series of amendments to the Health Professions Act, just passed last fall. We see amendments being brought forward in a number of other different areas. Given the growth in the condominium industry, the fact that is looked upon as perhaps something all of us will consider as an option for our homes as we approach retirement, I wonder if we will find ourselves in the same position, Mr. Chairman, where we will have amended the bill only to find it needing substantive amendment at some point just a short time down the road.

There hasn't been with this bill nor is it common practice for government to share in detail the impetus for why such legislation or such amendments are necessary. While to a degree the hon. minister did provide some of that clarification in her remarks, the question has to be asked: if the industry has worked without it for 10 years while we were consulting, how urgent is it that it be passed now? I certainly haven't noticed that there's any shortage of construction or any shortage of demand for condominiums, so obviously the industry is not being restrained in that respect.

One of the primary concerns we've heard repeatedly in the debate on this bill is that the bill seems to favour developers more than owners of condominiums, or perhaps the collective is favoured more than the individual. So, again, why not utilize a legislative tool that exists and refer this to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations? It just makes sense, Mr. Chairman.

I'm not going to recite in detail the concerns that were raised by many speakers around consumer protection, surrounding consultation, surrounding enforcement, concern around how the additional regulations will be drafted and what consultation will occur surrounding that.

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: There seems to be a lot of lively discussions that are not too loud, but they're just collectively loud enough to nearly drown out the hon. member. Thank goodness for the modern technology of microphones that can isolate the speakers. I wonder if we could bring the conversation level to one or two or maybe five notches lower.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, I'm not sure if it's my emergency training or the fact that I'm a mother of two children, but I can maintain my focus despite what ruckus might be going on. I know that the hon. members were completely, absolutely and completely intent on my comments on the amendment before us this evening, so I certainly don't take any offence. I know that we've been in here now almost four months, and the tendency is very strong to just need to get on with chatting and other business, et cetera.

In any event, the amendment before us is important. It's an important suggestion to heed and to hear the concerns expressed by condominium property owners and condominium associations. With that, Mr. Chairman, I feel that I've sufficiently provided my rationale for supporting the amendment, and I will take my seat.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow on amendment A1.

MRS. LAING: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the members for their kind comments. [applause] Well, thank you very much, colleagues. I appreciate that.

As it's been said, there is a very strong consensus between the stakeholders of the condominium industry and the owners and the managers, and there is some impatience to get this legislation passed. It has been over 10 years that consultations have been going on. We did the first bill on this in 1996, and at that time there was great concern about getting the consumer protection passed, because that's why there's this growing list of problems that people are meeting. That is still waiting to go, so people are getting impatient. They want to have this bill passed.

They will be independent and they will be able to make their own bylaws, and they will be able to arrange through mediation and other methods to solve their issues, so there is no need to refer it to a third body, which would again be another layer telling them what to do in their own homes. So I don't see that there's a further need for delaying it any more than now. Four years seems to be the amount of time it takes for me to get some of the housing legislation through. If you look at the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act, it took four years for it, so I think it's time. It's four years. I'm ready. That would be my gift, hon. member. So I would appreciate it if the House would defeat the amendment.

Thank you.

Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2000

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure to stand this evening and introduce some amendments to Bill 13. I believe the government amendment is being circulated as I speak, and I would like to move the amendment as a package and have it voted on under a single vote.

Speaking to the amendments, Mr. Chairman, under part A, section 1(11), what it says is:

Except as to outstanding debts to the Board or to the account of the orphan fund in respect of suspension or abandonment costs.

That comes in under section 17(3). Really, what this amendment is allowing for is for the orphan fund to collect moneys that would be outstanding, due by the company that was working the well before it was shut in. At the same time, this will allow future companies to continue on and not be burdened by outstanding debts that were created by past companies.

The second section, Mr. Chairman, really is based around the creation of a DAO that would allow the orphan fund to be managed outside and be arm's length from government. Just to give you a couple of points on that, it would be governed and controlled by the industry with nominal government representation. The EUB continues to collect and enforce funding for the orphan fund from the industry and grants the same to the arm's-length entity on an annual basis. The arm's-length entity assumes authority over orphan fund expenditures and operations. Also, the arm's-length entity would be fully accountable and transparent to industry, the EUB, and the government.

Based on those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll sit down and wait for some comments from the other side.

THE CHAIRMAN: The chair would just ask if it's agreed that we'll handle this as one amendment, as A1.

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Agreed? Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This particular piece of legislation was agreed upon quite some time ago between the member that introduced the bill and the opposition in that we recognized the initiative some 11 years ago by the industry to solve this problem of orphan or abandoned wells, wells that have no means of financial support in order to reclaim the site and put it back into an original condition and/or to refurbish the site to be a producer again. But we were stopped a little short Tuesday last when we found that there were some amendments that were being brought forward. They were not benign by any stretch of the imagination. In fact, two of them are, and they're quite reasonable.

The first, in section 17(3), was a reasonable amendment where a second party or a third party, for that matter, any subsequent parties to the original party that abandoned the site would not be then burdened with any of the previously accumulated debts. That individual corporation would take over that well as is in order to continue on with either production or reclamation of some description.

The second is an addition to section 60(b), which really is an extension of the recovery. Should any funds be recovered by one of those second or third parties that I was speaking of through either a prosecution or a negotiation or litigation with some earlier owners of the site, if any of that is recovered, then it should be promptly forwarded to the board to add back to the fund, of course, which is all reasonable. That's adjudicated and determined by the board, which is also reasonable.

The third amendment gives the opposition cause to concern itself with the matter. We had a great deal of concern at the outset with the creation of a delegated authority, because, as the House would know, a delegated authority sets the accounting completely away from the Legislature. We thought that perhaps there would be room there to move, to have the matter at least audited and filed in the Legislature under the Auditor General's auspices, and therefore some public scrutiny would be brought to bear on the accounts. Our reason for doing this is twofold. First, we're dead set against delegated authorities. They have a spotted history at best. Notably, some have been abject failures. Some of them have been performing reasonably well. This particular one gives us less concern, of course, because of the participants and the desire, but we'll get to that in a moment.

The concern that the caucus had with the delegated authority is that, setting aside these matters, in other jurisdictions this could not and would not occur. Other jurisdictions take on the reclamation of public or private lands in oil exploration, surface and subsurface, as a government responsibility, and all work would be performed under the auspices of a government either directly or through contract with the private sector. It would be enforced in law to find and prosecute those people that abandoned that well, even to the extent of personally, I'm told, in some states in the United States. However, that is not the case here.

This has been worked on by the industry and the good faith in the industry for so very long. The industry was most convincing to this member in a discussion we had Friday last such that they sought our concurrence to get on with the matter. As I understand the recent history of the fund, it was attached by Treasury in the belief that the AEUB, which was holding the fund as a reserve fund, a fund that was built up to a substantial number – I believe that in the order of $3 million was set aside as a buffer or an insurance fund, if you will, that was big enough to handle any manner of work that was taken on in that particular year of budgeting. What happened is that under the Financial Administration Act the Treasury decided that that reserve fund was not in fact a reserve fund but a surplus and therefore attached it and reduced the budget accordingly, such that I gather that in the year 1999 there were simply not enough funds available to do the work that was allotted. This, of course, angered and upset the private-sector participants, both CAPP and SEPAC. They came back with a number of solutions, none of which seemed to work out.

On Tuesday last we were instructed that some changes had to occur. Well, it's a little upsetting at the eleventh hour to find that everything we'd spoken of before on the fund was set aside. Further, I find that the Thursday prior to that is when the participants, SEPAC and CAPP, found that the solution that was in the act was not going to be able to perform as they expected. I gathered from some discussions with some members that part of the problem is one element of government having difficulty with the other element. It's the old right hand beating up the left hand, if you will, and this particular piece of legislation got caught in the middle.

Now, in the normal case we would be dead set and dig our heels in really quite deeply with a delegated authority, because we've had the experience of DAOs before and are not overly pleased with them, particularly in dealing with a reclamation matter. However, the participants in this particular DAO have absolutely nothing to gain from bending the rules or from setting the rules lighter than they might be, if you will, so as to let them off. The fact is that this DAO does not have anyone's interest other than the public good, and that was the intent at the outset of the establishing of this fund. I have been able to convince my members in caucus to be able to swallow a little and understand that this particular DAO is a reasonable compromise, even though the concept of DAOs is something foreign and alien to the wishes of our caucus.

Mr. Chairman, with that, I have nothing further to add to the amendments, save and except that we shall be supporting them as one would support a mail-order bride. We don't know what is coming. We would dearly like to have some check and balance with the Auditor General being able to review the annual report and then report those through the normal course and review of public accounts. Should that not occur, we still will support these amendments as presented to Bill 13.

Thank you, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Yeah. I had a couple of comments I wanted to make with respect to the amendments. I think a number of industry representatives in Calgary have taken time to offer me some good information on the bill and the purpose of the bill. I've learned more about the orphan fund than I ever thought possible in the last two months. I'm indebted to the industry representatives that have been kind enough to give me some good information about the bill, about the reasons for the bill. I listened to the explanation when the bill was introduced, and I've got some good advice from the Member for Edmonton-Calder, who spoke just moments ago, with respect to the reason for the bill and why it's a bill worthy of support. Now, I certainly indicated that I was prepared to support it at second reading and in fact did support it.

I must say that I experienced some frustration and some concern when I saw the amendments, particularly the one dealing with regulations. You know, I think that one of the most important things for an elected person is to be consistent. I don't think you can sort of take one position when the subject matter is X and then toss that out and then take an entirely different position because the subject matter is Y.

Just a few scant moments ago I was talking about the importance of managing regulations and the way they're made and so on. Now, there's a very large provision. I think the first two parts of the amendment package are not very controversial, but I am certainly troubled by the third element of the amendment package because what it does is it gives, again, the Lieutenant Governor in Council broad, broad regulation-making power.

Mr. Chairman, I agonized over this. I had to weigh my concerns over the way subordinate legislation is made in this province and the fact that on so many bills I've raised basically the same concern and also to recognize that we're dealing with something a little different here. In fact, from the input I received from industry, I guess what makes this quite different is that we're really not dealing with public moneys as such. These aren't tax dollars involved. This is basically an industry-funded fund. In effect, we have been able to see since I think it would have been 1994 – I'm just trying to think. In '96, when we saw the expanded scope of the orphan fund – and I remember debating that at the time – I think I learned then the fact that this is an area where the oil and gas sector in fact has shown some really responsible leadership.

Recognizing what makes this different than some of the other bills where I've opposed because of the way they dealt with regulation – in this case recognizing that the funding is basically industry-generated funding, that we have a demonstrated record, if you will, in terms of effectiveness in managing orphan wells and then since '96 the expanded scope to include abandonment of pipelines and things like that, I think we've got a meritorious record. I think the other thing is that really it's in the industries self-interest, if you will, to ensure that this thing works and it continues to work, that the orphan fund is monitored and managed carefully through its regulatory agencies.

So, on balance, after agonizing over the amendment – and just so people are clear, it's amendment B(b), which has to do with what the Lieutenant Governor may do by way of regulations. I've decided to support the bill, because I think the other circumstances outweigh it.

I do want to say that it seems to me that it's just too darn easy for government to keep on meting out greater and greater authority by way of regulation, and I keep on thinking to myself that there will come a time when Albertans stand up and say: it is no longer acceptable to make so many major decisions in secret without the benefit of any kind of formal record, to pass regulations in a way where the public has no notice or no opportunity to review them. You know, it just is unacceptable. The government may have lucked out on this one, because the set of amendments relate to an industry-financed, industry-managed fund that works well for the interests of Alberta, but I still have to say how disappointed I am that there isn't better all-party scrutiny of these regulations.

One of the things that I'd refer members to is in the Canadian Parliamentary Review, autumn of 1997. My colleague for Edmonton-Norwood excerpted a presentation she had made to, I think, a Canadian parliamentary conference in Regina, Saskatchewan, and it was titled The Delegated Administrative Organization in Alberta. As I read this analysis, once again I get indignant. Maybe I have a low indignant threshold, but I read this, and once again I think of what a poor job we do in this province in terms of subordinate lawmaking.

It goes back to the two companion bills that we looked at in the fall of 1994, when government wanted wholesale authority to create delegated administrative organizations, DAOs, and they wanted a blanket statute. It wasn't even done by sector. We were going to pass this one thing that allowed government to take any particular area of government endeavour and to turn it into a DAO. It's a problem, and I say to the members of the Assembly this evening that I hope people go through and read the problems with that, because what it does is take responsibility for subordinate lawmaking out of this Assembly and squirrels it away someplace where it becomes even less accessible.

I mean, we saw in so many ways with Bill 11 that the process of this Assembly is not seen as being accessible nor responsible to the interests of many Albertans. Yet to take it a further step away, out of this building all together and into a boardroom in a department, there are problems with that, Mr. Chairman.

Anyway, I didn't intend to go on so long, but I just wanted to advise that I have some real concerns with this. My support on Bill 13 is without prejudice. It's without prejudice to my right to come back on the next bill where I see this kind of regulation-making authority and object, and oppose it and try to amend it and do whatever I can to change it.

I know that there may be some other members that may share some of my concerns with the proposed section 66, but I've explained the reasons why on balance I will be supporting it. I sure encourage the government to do better. I know the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View will be taking that message back that government has to do better in these areas. I look forward to seeing enlightenment come to the furrowed brows of everybody in the cabinet of the province of Alberta.

Thank you very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to rise this evening to debate Bill 13, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2000. You know, as a junior legislator I always find the amendment acts and the amendment . . . Mr. Chairman, thank you. I'm definitely speaking to the amendment before us this evening.

When I find myself amending an act, I always find it useful to go to the original act to see in fact what is the breadth and theme of this piece of legislation. What powers does this statute hold in the energy sector?

I was particularly prompted to do that when I saw within the amendments this evening that it would be proposed that the Lieutenant Governor in Council would make regulations "respecting the establishment or designation of delegated authorities" and accompanying that under section 66(1)(b) "delegating to one or more delegated authorities any of the Board's powers, duties or functions under this Act or the regulations."

Now, I went back to the original act, the Oil and Gas Conservation Act. It might be useful for the purposes of our debate this evening, Mr. Chairman, to just summarize the purposes of the original act and in fact what is being delegated to unelected authorities in a variety of capacities. The original purpose of the act is "to effect the conservation of, and to prevent the waste of, the oil and gas resources of Alberta." I am summarizing, Mr. Chairman.

- (b) to secure the observance of safe and efficient practices in locating, spacing, drilling . . . and abandonment of wells and in operations for the production of oil and gas;
- (c) to provide for the economic, orderly and efficient development in the public interest of the oil and gas resources . . .
- (d) to afford each owner the opportunity of obtaining his share of the production of oil and gas from any pool;
- (e) to provide for the recording and the timely and useful dissemination of information regarding the oil and gas resources of Alberta;
- (f) to control pollution above, at or below the surface in the drilling of wells and in operations for the production of oil and gas.

Now, when I read the original amendments and the attached briefer prepared so competently by our opposition research staff, Mr. Chairman, it really changed my sense of what this was about. This is really something where the industry has demonstrated its ability to monitor, to intervene, to enforce, to regulate to a degree.

I'm sure there are Albertans who are in this field that would disagree with me, but for the purposes of debate this evening the industry has done not a bad job. The bill proposes to expand the purpose of the orphan fund to cover abandonment and reclamation of production facilities and licensing of new and existing facilities as well as extending it to other oil and gas facilities such as pipelines, gas plants, batteries, and compressor stations.

So basically from that perspective, I drew that it was going to be on the production side of things, but when you look at the original purpose of the act, it talks very, very much about provincial resources, the public interest, and the need for owners, be they perhaps individual or collective, to obtain a share of the production, to receive timely and useful information on the resources in the province.

That puts this in a bit of a different light, Mr. Chairman, because now what the amendments suggest is that the development of regulations or the fulfillment of any of the powers of the board could be extended three steps away from government, not a minister, not the cabinet, not an MLA committee, not a parliamentary committee but an unelected authority that is delegated by government to fulfill the essence of this legislation. What I'm struggling with is: how is the public interest achieved through that?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo spoke about some of the pitfalls of delegated authorities, and he mentioned the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood's paper. I'd just like to cite a section from that paper, because it's certainly the best summation of the risks of delegated authorities that I have come across in my tenure so far. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood in her paper presented to the parliamentary conference identified the pitfalls as follows. She said:

As the Auditor General of Alberta said: "Accountability is an obligation to answer for the execution of one's responsibilities." By their very nature, delegated authorities are not directly accountable to the electorate. Yet, as the Auditor General has pointed out "Accountability is necessary when responsibility is assigned or delegated . . . an effective accountability framework is required when central control is reduced or eliminated."

She further went on to identify some of the drawbacks:

- A Minister can enter into a contract or . . . agreement to delegate a . . . responsibility to a private sector corporation through a simple order-in-council.

It doesn't require an engagement of the Legislative Assembly or debate.

"There is no specification of the programs or services that could be delegated to [the] private sector," and this amendment this evening doesn't contain any specifics as to what exact regulations. It just says that a delegated authority could be empowered to make regulations or to fulfill any of the board's powers, duties, or functions.

Further identified as a pitfall: "There is no appeal mechanism" in existence. Here in the context of this proposed change, Mr. Chairman, we are talking about an industry that generates huge revenue. It also generates waste, which the province must contend with. It requires monitoring. All of these things may cause someone or a group of people to find themselves in a position that they need to appeal a decision and there is not, in fact, an appeal mechanism.

Further, it's pointed out that "the government is not liable for any action taken by a [delegated authority] that causes injury or loss." You get the sense or the spirit of where I'm going with this component of my debate, Mr. Chairman, that I have huge concerns about the further delegation of statutory responsibilities to entities that have no accountability, no mechanisms for engagement of the public, and really no mechanism that requires them on an annual basis to report to the public.

Now, to cite just from the 1999 Auditor General's report, he raised in the report in the cross-government section the fact that there were a number of problems and inconsistencies with delegated authorities. It causes me to wonder: when the government has had it pointed out to them that there's need for improvement in the functioning of delegated authorities in their reporting, in their financial statements, in the thoroughness with which they report on an annual basis, why would we be proposing a further expansion of the use of delegated authorities in the energy sector? It's certainly not a secret that energy provides a very large component of the province's revenues. Is there any risk through the delegation of authority to such entities that that revenue might be compromised at some date in the future? Would we want to compromise the province's overall financial status through some action to that effect? I think not.

The reality is that the Auditor General says:

In reviewing the annual reports of several of these entities I found considerable variation in quality. Also, I found the extent to which guidance had been [offered] by Ministries, on the content of the annual reports, varied considerably. Examples of deficiencies include the lack of comparison of budget to actual for financial information and the lack of non-financial performance information in the annual reports of accountable organizations. In short, published annual reports for some organizations are not as useful as they could be.

Or, I would say, as they should be. So I have huge concerns about the amendments proposed this evening to further remove accountability for a whole range of activities under this statute to a delegated authority.

The final area I wanted to focus on was just in fact around the authorities of the board in the original statute. Part 3, section 7, talks about the general powers of the board under the Oil and Gas Conservation Act.

The Board, with the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, may make any just and reasonable orders and directions the Board considers necessary to effect the purposes of this Act and that are not otherwise specifically authorized by this Act.

When I read under the amendment 66(1)(b) that it would be possible to delegate to one or more delegated authorities any of the Board's powers, duties or functions under this Act or the regulations in respect of suspension, abandonment and reclamation of orphan wells, facilities, facility sites and well sites, we're talking about way more than orphan wells here. We're talking about the fundamental powers and authorities within the Oil and Gas Conservation Act. Am I wrong? In essence, based on how this is written, how the regulation is written, it talks about the delegation of "the Board's powers, duties or functions under this Act," that it may be delegated to a delegated authority. That to me, Mr. Chairman, represents an engagement of the whole act, because in the original act it says that the board "may make any just and reasonable orders and directions [it] considers necessary to effect the purposes of this Act." So it's not just about orphan wells. It does, in fact, take us into a much broader area, and that I don't find supportable.

Further, the amendments talk about:

- (d) authorizing the Board or a delegated authority to disclose
 - (i) information acquired in the course of or as a result of the operations of the delegated authority,
 - (ii) information respecting the operations of the delegated authority, and
 - (iii) information respecting the officers or employees of the delegated authority.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I think what the public would say to this is: if we have a law that specifies that there would be a legally comprised board and that board would be the governing body that enacts and monitors and controls and evaluates the legislation, why would we want to remove that to delegate that function to an entity that is not known, not comprised, not described before us this evening? I don't think any reasonable Albertan would say that that's good government.

I think Albertans want to see what the hon. member is proposing. They want to see what the composition of that delegated authority is. What are the interests represented on it? How is it more effective either in efficiencies or cost-effective than the statutory board that exists within this original act? Those are the questions that I would put forward this evening as the public's representative.

I'll reserve my position at this stage. It seems to me that there's a bit of a trend happening with respect to delegated authorities. The Auditor General has clearly cautioned the government about their ability to provide accountable, informative reporting that meets their statutory obligations. So why would we want to risk the energy sector's viability, their profitability, and our own by undertaking this type of delegation, Mr. Chairman?

With those remarks, I will take my seat. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll just speak briefly to some of the comments that I heard across the way. I appreciate and I'm glad to hear that they are going to support these amendments. I'd just like to concisely say: this is the industry's money; this is not government money. That's why this is being presented as such. The industry felt it was very important that they be able to manage the money. By having it set up and structured this way, they will be able to get many more wells done, and none of the money will be rolling inside the general revenue fund, keeping the money outside, at arm's length from the government. That was very important for the industry.

The industry's been very proactive on this whole process and had set it up before and in good faith had run this. This is the legislation to follow and make it all happen and put it in good working order. I have a great deal of confidence in the industry to make this happen effectively and efficiently, and by having this process set up, they will hopefully be able to do it in an even more timely manner than they have scheduled at this time.

Based on those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll call the question.

Apprenticeship and Industry Training
Amendment Act, 2000

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, it's nice to greet you again. The problem with Bill 23 is that I had participated in the second reading debate on May 2, 2000, and in good faith had identified a number of issues. One of those issues yet again related to regulations, about subordinate law-making. What frustrates me is that that was on May 2, and here we are on May 15 and there's been no response on behalf of the government to the concerns that were raised.

As we go through the bill, section 3(c), and look at the provisions there that the Regulations Act "does not apply," I asked some questions. What part of the Regulations Act was it intended should not apply and why? You know, Mr. Chairman, you go through the list. Was it section 2 of the Regulations Act that requires filing the regulations with the registrar? Is it section 3? Section 3 requires gazetting. Is it section 5? Section 5 requires that the registrar of regulations file a monthly report.

Now, I'd almost forgotten, until I reviewed my notes, that it was the minister of intergovernmental affairs who had been the minister who spoke to this bill at second reading. Now, she did a fine job that night, and I have to say to her in the absence of anybody else: I haven't got answers to any of the questions I asked. It may be that the minister assumes that I just ask these things without ever expecting a response, but every time I ask one of these questions, raise one of these concerns, I do it genuinely hoping – not always expecting but hoping – that I'm going to get a response. Whether I'm happy with the response is irrelevant, but I want the government or a representative of the government to at least try and meet the issue, the question, the need for clarification.

So here we are 13 days later, and you know I'm sort of like a little kid at Christmas. I rush out every morning to check the fax machine: oh, no faxes. I scroll through my e-mails: "Oh, is there going to be a message from the minister of intergovernmental affairs? Calgary-Buffalo: answers to apprenticeship and industry training." It's not on my e-mail list, and it's not on the fax machine. I check my phone messages: "Is there a message from the minister's office, from an executive assistant, saying: this is the answer to those questions you asked the other day." There are messages on my machine, but none from anybody who is going to impart some wisdom about Bill 23.

So what's a fellow to do, Mr. Chairman? What's a fellow to do? You ask the questions; they're in Hansard. Well, I could ask more questions. I could repeat the questions and I could go through, but to save everybody some time, if you look at Hansard from May 2, 2000, paged 1264 right through to 1266, I go through and list a whole series of questions. Where are the answers to those questions? Absent responses, how can I in good conscience support a bill which on the face of it appears to have some very positive things, but why would it be that the building trades or any of the other trades in this province would not want that material subjected to some greater scrutiny, some more notoriety, some greater publicity? I can't think of any reasons.

I've not talked to anybody in the affected industries and trades that has a problem with making the Regulations Act apply or submitting regulations to all-party scrutiny. The people in the industry don't have a problem with it. The only people that have a problem with dealing with regulations in an aboveboard and transparent way are the members of this government opposite. It's the people sitting in the front row. It's not an industry-driven concern. Let's be absolutely clear about that. It's sort of shadow-boxing. Then you say to yourself: well, in terms of why regulations that affect in vital and important ways the trades and apprenticeship program in this province, why would the government be opposed to making the Regulations Act apply or to deal with some of those things?

I just thought of one thing while I was going through the litany of no e-mail message answers to me, no phone messages, no correspondence. It may be that my colleague for Edmonton-Gold Bar has heard some of those responses. Maybe he's heard some answers to those questions I've asked, so maybe he'll be able to share that with us.

I just say to the minister: go through those questions and tell me why it would be that we would not allow the tradespeople of this province a public record when regulations are being put forward, when they're being considered. It would be of enormous benefit to the tradespeople. I expect, for example, that the government is going out to the people in the constituency in the course of the by-election in – what's that constituency?

MR. SAPERS: Highlands.

MR. DICKSON: How could I forget? Well, the seat has been absent for such a long time that I just haven't heard reference to the seat during that time.

The Premier and his candidate are presumably going to go and talk about the great work being done by the government in this Legislative Assembly, and I suspect there are lots of tradespeople in that constituency that have an interest in what happens with the apprenticeship and industry training program. I think if the government goes out there, they may well be met with questions, people asking: why is it that you want to make changes to the apprenticeship program and do it in secret; why do you pull that big veil of secrecy over all of these programs and all these regulations? I think most people would say: we'd sooner have this information more available, more transparent.

Mr. Chairman, I don't know why government would go on and on about the review of regulations by December 2000 by industry advisory committees and key stakeholders and the public, but what you've got is a poor second in terms of regulation management and so on.

So those are some of the concerns I've got. I just can't tell you how very, very disappointed I am at the fact that the government won't respond to these questions. I just for the life of me can't figure out why government continues to give people like me a chance to talk again and again about unanswered questions. I would have thought that government would have been trying harder, particularly in the run-up to an election. We've got a by-election coming up.

You know, I remember that in 1993 the current Premier had to go out and promise a much stronger FOIP Act. He was responding to the will of Albertans at that time. They wanted more transparency in government, and it was a big issue. The Minister of Learning will remember that the government brought in Bill 60, which was a weak, weak access to information law. It was modeled on Manitoba. It would have had our ombudsman offering recommendations on FOIP complaints, with no power to make binding orders.

There's a graduate student now doing his PhD thesis on the subject of the development of the FOIP Act, and I met with this fellow the other week. One of his questions was: how did we go from Bill 60 in the spring of 1993 to Bill 18 in 1994? Do you know what the answer was? The public insisted on stronger access provision.

I suspect that in the next provincial general election, whether that comes in the fall of 2000 or the spring of 2001 or the fall of 2001, this is going to be an issue again. This is my gift to the government of the day, Mr. Chairman: they can anticipate that Albertans once again are going to start registering much higher on the demand for access. I think what you're going to find is that Albertans yet again are going to demand a greater degree of transparency and openness. Wouldn't it be a wonderful thing? I put this as positively as I can. Would it not be a wonderful thing for the Minister of Learning to be able to go around speaking in his constituency and go to meetings in Brooks and Bassano and those key communities in his constituency? You know: "This is a government that believes in accessibility, believes in accountability. This is why when we changed the rules around the apprenticeship program, we decided to make it open, we decided to make it subject to all-party review, and we decided to make it subject to the Regulations Act, so those regulations had to be gazetted." Pretty powerful stuff. This could account for another 1,000 votes. I mean, the number of people who are interested as well . . . [interjection] You know, he thinks I'm kidding, Mr. Chairman. He thinks I'm kidding.

There are some smart people in that constituency with a particular interest in secrecy in government. I know that, and I've had a chance to talk to some of them. So here's a gift I make to the Minister of Learning and to his colleague the minister of intergovernmental affairs, a gift that I hope they're going to accept graciously. The way you accept a gift is that you don't spurn it; you don't throw it out. After the guest gives you a gift, you don't open the door and throw it at them as they're going down the sidewalk to their car. You accept it. You unwrap it. You open it up. You put it out on the coffee table and invite the family in to look at the gift that you've just been given. Well, I'd hoped that it would be in the same spirit of gracious reception that the government would take these suggestions and do something with them.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've been listening to the wise remarks from the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, and I'm anxious to participate in the debate on Bill 23 at committee. Not many individuals across the province may be aware at the moment of the significance of this bill, but for well in excess of 100,000 individuals across this province, Mr. Chairman, this bill is going to have a direct impact on their ability to earn a living. I'm very pleased to see that the debate has entered the committee stage, because there are a number of questions that I have, and hopefully they will be answered in time by the hon. minister.

The Regulations Act and its application in this series of amendments was ably described by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I realize that certainly in section 9 of the current act the Regulations Act does not apply to the by-laws of a local apprenticeship committee, Mr. Chairman. In this amendment particularly the amended act has the Regulations Act not applying in a number of sectors but particularly sections 23 and 24 and 13.1. I believe this is going to allow suspicions, shall I say, to occur as this piece of legislation governs the workplace. People are not going to know, they're not going to be able to have a grasp of exactly how the apprenticeship programs are going to be administered because, simply, the minister is going to be exempt from the Regulations Act. I'm not going to spend too much time on this at the moment, because there are other issues that I want to deal with here.

For instance, in the general responsibilities of the minister, "The Regulations Act does not apply in respect of any documentation prepared by or on behalf of the Minister relating to the carrying out of any functions under this section." I would much prefer, as the hon. member said earlier, that this information be gazetted so that all interested parties, whether they be in industry, whether they be in craft unions, whether they be members of the general public, whether they be a manufacturer, for instance, a competing manufacturer or competing business interest, have access to this. Whenever we have so many exemptions, so to speak, of the Regulations Act, that causes alarm in this camp.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the whole idea of compulsory certification trades in this province is a good idea. We have the optional certification trades. We've come a long way with this process, and many government members over the years who have devised this program and have enhanced it are to be commended, but I cannot see the value of any more exemptions to compulsory certification trades. In the current act section 21 surely should be enough. We've gone along quite well. We've progressed in this province with those exemptions as they already exist, so why open the door even wider with the addition of section 22.1(1)? This is going to provide a wider scope of approval in the case of a compulsory certification trade.

We only have to look at what occurred in Swan Hills with the deficiencies in the welding that went on. This was, oddly enough, withheld from public view by the fact that the judge in this case sealed exhibits, and in the exhibits was the necessary information to determine how these welding errors or deficiencies occurred. This occurred, I remind all hon. members, with the welding trade. That is a compulsory trade, so why do we need section 22, Mr. Chairman, to revise or expand this authority that is going to allow for more deregulation or perhaps more ways for someone who is not adequately qualified to perform a compulsory trade?

Now, a better way of doing this would be to take, for instance, some of the optional certification trades and move them into the compulsory bracket. If the hon. minister could in due time explain to all members of the House how, for instance, the insurance industry feels about this – the insurance industry is underwriting policies all the time, and they're relying on the skilled craftsmen of this province. We forget about that. We forget about that all the time, and it is something I think we need to be cognizant of.

We see further on another attack on the compulsory certification trades; we see that in the amendments to section 33. Now, we're diluting the trade, and we are making, in my opinion, an error whenever we are allowing for undertakings that are going to be described as optional, that these are optional certification trades, or in essence the trade can be divided up and a group of individuals can do one part of the work. I do not see in here where they have to be qualified. Perhaps I'm wrong, but they don't have to be registered apprentices, they don't have to be individuals with other trade qualifications from other jurisdictions; they can literally be people that are just given this qualification. Now, what does that say to the people who have already worked very hard? They've gone to school. They've gone to NAIT or SAIT, for instance, and they pursued through that avenue a trade. What exactly are we telling them here, Mr. Chairman? We cannot devalue or de-skill the qualifications that people have worked very, very hard to acquire.

My major problem with this bill is that I'm not convinced this has been thought out. I know there has been an extensive consultation process and I know there's a shortage of skilled labour in this province, but this is not the proper way to deal with it, by simply amending an existing act to add more loopholes so that the compulsory certification trades can be practised by anyone.

Now, there are a lot of hon. members in the Assembly this evening, and I'm sure there's not one constituency in this province that doesn't have at least one rig welder living in it. Rig welders are skilled tradesmen, they're entrepreneurs, and above all else they're very hardworking. They will work at 30 above in Medicine Hat, and they'll work at minus 30 in High Level. Now, when they read about the changes to this legislation and what we're attempting to do to the compulsory certified trade of B-pressure welding, what are the rig welders and the pipeliners going to think about this? Are they going to wonder if maybe a pipeline company is going to apply to the minister and the minister is going to grant some sort of behind-closed-doors secret trade qualification to an individual?

AN HON. MEMBER: Oh, stuff it.

MR. MacDONALD: I can see why the hon. member is talking about stuffing it, because that's what will happen to the quality control on a pipeline, for instance, whenever you have unqualified individuals attempting to do a very skilled job.

Now, we look at this, and we look at the past reputation of this province. We look at that reputation, and it's a very fine reputation.

Welders from this province are recruited all around the world, but with this decertification or this attempt to change the qualifications of those individuals, how can we be assured that companies are going to continue to want to employ welders that have been apprenticed and trained and ticketed in this province? The rig welders are an independent lot, and I don't know what they're going to say. I don't know if the hon. minister and the staff that consulted with so many individuals have talked with the rig welders' association about this. I would be quite skeptical if they did.

Mr. Chairman, when we talk about the compulsory certification trades, we also have to talk about the automotive industry. As consumer critic I get a lot of complaints from consumers whenever they have sky-high repair bills. They come to the constituency office and say, "Mr. MacDonald, I'm not sure that auto mechanic was qualified." And I ask: "What do you mean? Please explain this." They say that that was an apprentice and they were employed on piece work. We only have to look at the regulation on automotive service technician, and there are always questions.

Certainly repairs, everyone will acknowledge, can be very costly. We look at the shop rates, and everyone realizes that apprentices need the chance to learn, but is this right? How is this act going to deal with that issue? It can't. Whenever we look at the schedules that are set up in the Employment Standards Code for the compensation of apprentices and they're working at flat rates – perhaps the hon. minister of energy and Acting Provincial Treasurer is going to take a pickup truck, for instance, to one of these individuals. It's fine, maybe, if this apprentice is checking the rad level, tightening the fan belt, maybe rotating the tires if the hon. minister has a lot of miles on his truck. But to do a complicated job – for instance, say this vehicle would have electronic ignition. Now, that individual has to be trained at that, Mr. Chairman, and he has to be trained under the guidance of a journeyman. These issues are not being addressed so far, I believe, in the debate on this bill.

I cannot accept this bill because of a number of issues, but certainly whenever we're trying to water down the compulsory trades in this province, I can't accept that, and it is my view that this is what this Bill 23 is doing. I pointed that out for all hon. members, and if I'm wrong, I will listen with a great deal of interest to members from across the way.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would like to remind all hon. members of this Assembly of what the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo said about regulations. For every reaction there is an action, and in this case I would like to present to the Assembly one amendment to deal with this issue of regulations. I think it is very necessary, after what happened in Swan Hills, that nothing regarding apprenticeship and trade certification in this province be done behind closed doors, whether it's by sealing a file or a court record or whether it's a ministerial decree by whoever is going to be Minister of Learning. This is not only for the current time but also into the future. I feel that this amendment will satisfy not only my colleagues, in particular the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, but also other hon. members from the other side of the Assembly.

I'm going to take my seat for a moment, Mr. Chairman, while the amendment is distributed to all my colleagues. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The amendment will be called A1.

Okay. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, if you would like to speak further to your amendment A1.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, Mr. Chairman. At this time I would like to move this amendment to Bill 23, Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act. It reads:

- A. Section 3(c) is amended, in the proposed section 3, by striking out subsection (3).
- B. Section 8 is amended, in the proposed section 13.1, by striking out subsection (2).
- C. Section 16 is amended by striking out clause (b).
- D. Section 17 is struck out.

Now, the reason for this – I will be very quick here, Mr. Chairman – goes back to not only what I said at the initial debate that I started at Committee of the Whole but also what the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo said not only in committee but also at second reading. This series of amendments is going to correct – it will allow in this legislation for the minister to act openly and for all the regulations or the administration of this act to be done in public.

With that, I shall cede the floor to another hon. colleague. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The Hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to just start off by talking in general about the amendment and then move to being a little bit more specific. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has read the bill, and we have communicated back and forth on several occasions. The hon. member has said that he is in favour of the bill in general.

I have a little bit of a problem with some of the wording that was used today in the hon. member's speech in that, as the hon. member knows, the trades unions, the employers, and the employees all are in agreement on this bill. This has been done over three years of consultation, and it's been done over three years of negotiating between the building unions, the trades unions, and the employers. So I really question the hon. member's expertise in bringing forward amendments when you have employers and employees who've been mulling this over for close to three years on what, I'm sure the hon. member will agree, has been a long, extensive and, without blowing my own horn, excellent consultation in the field of apprenticeship. I find his comments a little bit difficult.

However, Mr. Chairman, what I will do is first thing tomorrow relay his comments to the trades unions and to the employers, and I'll give them the chance to take a look at his comments and go from there. If they like his comments, well, they can tell me. If they don't like his comments, I surely will invite them to make representation to the hon. member about his comments, and that will be done.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has made an amendment about the Regulations Act, and what I'd like to do is explain a little bit of the rationale. The Member for Calgary-Buffalo had asked about answers to the questions. Typically, what happens is that members speak in second reading, ask questions, and they get answers in committee. This is the first time this bill has been discussed in committee, so that's why the answers are coming tonight.

First of all, on the nonapplication of the Regulations Act. Members may recall that several years ago the government of Alberta identified regulatory reform as a permanent feature of the government's ongoing efforts to improve the Alberta advantage. Government stated that only those regulations necessary to ensure protection of the public interest would be retained. Phase 2 of the industry consultation A Vision for the Future looked at ways to make the apprenticeship and industry training system more responsive to employers, employees and, most importantly, apprentices. It focused on proposals about the regulatory framework for apprenticeship and industry training. It included the board's review of regulations under the government's regulatory review project.

One of the board's – and this is the apprenticeship board I'm talking about, Mr. Chairman – recommendations coming out of that review was that the program and process detail be removed from regulation as long as the existing authority of the board and the industry advisory committees, the provincial apprenticeship committees and occupational training committees, are able to set standards and requirements that remain in legislation.

Mr. Chairman, the impact of implementing this recommendation is primarily seen in the amendments to sections 3, 33, and 37 of the act. To ensure that this detail is not placed back into regulation – I will repeat that – to ensure that this detail is not placed back into regulation, it is specified that the Regulations Act does not apply. It is referenced again in several places to clarify that the applicable documentation need not be filed as a regulation. This clarification is new, but the fact that the documentation not be filed as a regulation is not new. The board and the minister will continue to operate in the open fashion that currently prevails, and the information will continue to be widely available to all those who are interested.

The second theme raised. I beg the indulgence of the chairman perhaps a little bit on this one in that it does tie back into the amendment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had talked about standards. He talked about the high standards, so I'm assuming that some of those are in the amendments he's brought forward. First of all, program standards will continue to be set by the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board on the recommendations of the applicable industry advisory committee, as they are now. This will ensure that program standards continue to reflect industry needs.

There were also questions related to communication; for example, the information in and communication about the regulations that are in the amendment before us. The information currently in regulation and more will be readily available to the public and to employers, apprentices, journeymen, and trainees through a variety of means. Examples include publications containing boards' orders and decisions, brochures available in many government offices and labour market information centres, and electronic means such as the Internet. The Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board newsletter, which has a circulation of 60,000, is published three times a year.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that by allowing the Regulations Act not to apply, we are giving the industry, the employers, the apprentices, and the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board more authority and more power in putting forward the changes they want when it comes to apprentices.

I will say one other thing, and I think this is very, very important. The existing apprenticeship board is head and shoulders above anything else in Canada. We are by far, by far, Mr. Chairman, the best apprenticeship training province in Canada. Other provinces look to us, to the partnership we have created between employers and employees, between union and non-union shops. All these things apply. To change this act after the consultation we have done and to throw it back in the face of the unions, back in the face of the employers I think is wrong.

I think we have an extremely good act here. I would urge the members not to vote for the amendment. I think there were reasons that the hon. member brought up about the regulations. I hope I provided the answers to him about the regulations. I really feel this is a very important act. It's an act that needs to be passed. It's an act that needs to get better to allow us to get better on a very, very good system in apprenticeship.

I would urge all members to vote for the bill and against this amendment. Thank you.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, I'd just be very brief. I was going to ask for unanimous consent that if there should be a standing vote on the amendment package we're dealing with now, we'd agree that rather than the 10-minute interval provided for by Standing Order 32(2), we would have a single minute between bells.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on the amendment lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:24 p.m.]

Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate April 3: Dr. West]

AN HON. MEMBER: Question.

MR. SAPERS: Yeah, I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that the government would like to have absolutely no speakers on their tax plan bill, when I hear that call of question.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, when we last visited Bill 19, as brief as the introduction was by the Acting Provincial Treasurer, he left us with a tantalizing thought. He said in Hansard:

It's easy to put in a percent here, an 8 percent surtax on certain [tax] brackets, but it's very hard to remove them once the animal starts to feed on them. That's a good reason never to bring in a sales tax in this province until all the other taxes are gone or lowered.

I thought this was a bill about tax reduction, not about tax replacement, but as we proceed, maybe we will get a clearer picture of what the government has in mind when it comes to income tax reform in the province of Alberta.

The major objective of Bill 19 is to amend section 3.03 of the Alberta Income Tax Act to eliminate the 8 percent provincial surtax after the 1999 taxation year. Now, keep in mind that this was one of two deficit elimination taxes that were brought in by a previous Conservative government or a previous form of this Conservative government.

The 8 percent surtax applies to those Alberta tax filers who earn a taxable income above $46,450 or pay the Alberta basic tax above $3,500 annually. There are approximately 390,000 tax filers in Alberta paying this surtax. Mr. Speaker, that's about 25 percent of all taxpayers in this province that pay that surtax.

There are some other changes outlined in Bill 18: the elimination of programs that lapsed in 1986 and '88 such as the renters' assistance credit and the Alberta stock savings plan credit. The bill cleans up corporate references in the Alberta Income Tax Act such as the corporation income tax act, mutual fund corporation refunds, and the small business deduction, that are all leftovers from pre-1981 when Alberta did not collect its own corporate taxes.

Bill 18 will update changes resulting from the establishment of the Canada Customs and Revenue Agency, or the CCRA, Mr. Speaker, which just reminds me of another political issue that's going on in this country at this time, in place of Revenue Canada. It will also reinsert a definition of adjusted earned income for the purposes of administering a family employment tax credit.

So there's an interesting mix of housekeeping and substantive change in this bill, and that's a problem with the bill, Mr. Speaker. I've talked on this theme before: how the government always manages to come up with a bill that's maybe largely benign but it has one great big problem in it. In this case, the problem is the removal of the 8 percent provincial surtax before the other so-called deficit elimination tax is removed, which would be of far greater benefit to most Alberta taxpayers. Keep in mind that only 25 percent pay the 8 percent.

Now, the 8 percent provincial surtax was introduced in 1987 as a means to assist in the elimination of the then chronic provincial budget deficits. The 8 percent provincial surtax is paid by Albertans who are relatively high-income earners. In the 2000 tax year the 8 percent surtax would have generated $144 million in revenue for the provincial government.

Now, in October of 1998 the Alberta Tax Review Committee recommended the elimination of these temporary deficit elimination taxes, both the 8 percent surtax and that .5 percent flat tax that I referred to just a moment ago. In March of 1999 the Klein government announced that it would eliminate the 8 percent surtax as of July 1, 2001, as a component of a move to, at that time, an 11 percent single-rate system by January 1, 2002. The 8 percent surtax was to be reduced in half on July 1, 2000, and eliminated as of July 1, 2001. The revenue impact from the elimination of this surtax was estimated to be $36 million for the tax year ending 2001, $88 million for the tax year ending 2002, and as much as $105 million for the tax year 2002-2003.

On September 1 of 1999 the government announced that it would accelerate its tax reform plan. On July 1, 2000, the 8 percent surtax was to be cut in half and eliminated as of January 1, 2001.

On October 14, 1999, the Premier announced that the entire 8 percent surtax would now be eliminated as of January 1, 2000. The impact of the elimination of the surtax as of January 1, 2000, is estimated to cost the government $36 million in 1999-2000 and $135 million in its first full year, the tax year ending 2001.

Mr. Speaker, by my count this government milked as much mileage as they could out of this tax plan by announcing it eight separate times. It even generated front-page headlines in one of the national newspapers months after it was originally announced as yet another new initiative. This caused the phone to ring in my constituency office with people asking me: "I thought we weren't paying this tax already. Don't tell me they reintroduced it. They snuck it in, and now they're going to cancel it again?" I had to explain that, no, it was just the government playing the game that the government usually does by making not one, not two, not three but as many announcements as they could to try to convince taxpayers that by talking about tax reform and tax relief, they were actually doing something.

All the while, of course, the only real tax relief that Albertans were feeling came as a result of successive federal budgets courtesy of Jean Chretien and Paul Martin. So given that they are living in the shadow of Ottawa in this regard, it's no doubt that they felt they had to at least keep on talking about tax relief so that Albertans might be somehow distracted from the reality that they were all talk and no action.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I can very happily agree that we should be reducing, eliminating in fact, this 8 percent surtax. I understand that the cost is $144 million. I think the government can well afford that considering the revenue stream and the underestimation of revenues that come in and the fact that this government has managed to chalk up nearly a $10 billion surplus over the years since they came into power, but the difficulty I have in just giving this a wholehearted endorsement is that there is this other deficit elimination tax, this .5 percent flat tax.

Now, I can't understand why this government wants to reward the top 25 percent of Albertans who earn more than $46,450 in taxable income and ignore the $325 million that's being taken out of the pockets of the other taxpayers, the 1,562,000 hardworking Albertans that pay the .5 percent flat tax. Why is it that this government would want to reward 390,000 high-income Albertans and make the remaining one and a half million Albertans pay for it?

Mr. Speaker, we've got another bill before the House, Bill 18, which does the same thing. It advantages one group of taxpayers at the expense of another group of taxpayers, so we've got something that seems to be a pattern now. We've got a government that wants to support private health care, which of course is really only accessible to the rich. We've got a government that wants to bring in a flat tax which burdens the middle-income taxpayers disproportionately, and now they want to eliminate the 8 percent surtax, which applies only to the highest income, the top 25 percent, and the rest of Albertans will continue to pay. That doesn't make any sense to me, and apparently it didn't make any sense to the provincial government once upon a time either. Now, I would like to know what changed their minds.

It is interesting to note that when the Alberta government initially came forward with a tax cut plan back in Budget '96, the timetable was to eliminate the .5 percent flat rate tax by January 1, 1999 – well, that didn't happen – before the 8 percent surtax. The 8 percent surtax was originally to be eliminated by January 1, 2001.

Now, if I can quote from page 122 of Budget '96, which was called Reinvestment: The Tax Plan – it sounds like another one of those slasher movies – it said that "the tax plan proposes to reduce the tax burden for all Albertans starting with low to middle income working families." Mr. Speaker, what happened? Why the change of heart? Why the change of mind?

Well, apparently the Premier and his former Provincial Treasurer have forgotten about these hardworking Albertans who pay the majority of the bills in this province, the middle-income Albertans who have to pay these taxes, these deficit elimination taxes. They're the ones that pay the majority of the user fees. They're the ones that are hardest hit by the health care tax that's collected in the form of premiums. It's these hardworking Alberta families in the middle income that this government seems to have forgotten all about.

Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition supports tax cuts, but we support sustainable and fair tax cuts as part of a comprehensive package. We certainly don't support rewarding one group of taxpayers while you're punishing another group. The Official Opposition would like to see 100 percent of Albertans collectively enjoy a tax cut. That's why our submission would be to remove the .5 percent flat tax first. Now, the government seems to support this playing favourites, and that's why, I suppose, they only want to provide this income tax relief to 25 percent of Albertans by removing the 8 percent surtax.

Mr. Speaker, I have struggled to understand why the government has adopted this very strange position and, I will say, internally and consistent position. I've looked at the government's stated position on tax reform over the years. I've read the Treasury papers. I've seen the submissions made in the federal/provincial meetings. I've looked at some of the background papers written and published, for example, by the Fraser Institute or the C.D. Howe Institute, and I can't find the explanation for this.

Now, I will say that this government has a very mixed record when it comes to tax reform. We've heard the former Provincial Treasurer talk for years about tax bracket creep and bemoan the fact that tax bracket creep is not fair, but it wasn't until this year, and again following the lead of the federal government, that this government did anything about indexing brackets and eliminating tax bracket creep. Mr. Speaker, I will remind the House that between 1993 and 2000 the government will have collected in excess of $2.4 billion in cumulative personal income tax revenue from Alberta taxpayers through provincial tax bracket creep. By just not indexing to inflation, they have picked the pockets of Alberta taxpayers to the tune of more than $2.4 billion.

In 1993, the first year this government came to power with its new fiscal agenda, it raked in $201 million because of tax bracket creep. By 1996 it was up to $288 million. By 1999 it was a high of $365 million, and even with the proposed changes, Mr. Speaker, this tax year, year 2000, this government is going to take through tax bracket creep 363 million loonies out of the pockets of Alberta taxpayers. I can't understand the sort of self-righteousness this government has when it comes to its tax plan when they continue to take money in this way.

The government has nothing to brag about when it comes to user fees either, while I'm on the subject. While the government likes to say that the only way taxes are going in this province is down, the reality is that additional user fee revenue has continued to go up. Even during the period of time between that Ontario court decision, the Eurig estate decision, until the end of February of this year, the government collected an estimated $80 million in user fees that in fact would be considered today as illegal taxes. So, Mr. Speaker, this government has very little to brag about when it comes to its tax policy.

Mr. Speaker, I've asked the former Provincial Treasurer on a number of occasions to explain to me the statements and the claims made in the tax plan. For example, if you would refer to sessional paper 441/2000, which was a response to a written question as amended, not as originally put in but as amended, you will note that the written question talked about the breakdown of the fiscal impact of the $600 million provincial income tax cut under the 11% single rate proposal for years 1 through 5 inclusive . . . as cited on page 163 of [the budget document].

It also asked about what parts of the fiscal plan could be attributed to the components of the elimination of the 8% surtax, the elimination of the 0.5% flat tax, the increase in the personal and spousal exemptions . . . the increase in the personal and spousal exemptions in the 1999 federal budget, and the introduction of the 11% single rate tax.

We asked for this information to be broken down by the categories "personal income tax, corporate income tax, other direct taxes, fuel and indirect taxes, federal transfers, other transfers" and whether or not all of this had an impact on revenue recovery.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you would think any careful, thoughtful tax plan would be based on some solid homework. You would think that at a minimum this is the kind of information that would have been collected. But you would have been wrong had you held that thought in your mind, because in fact what we find from the government – and I quote from sessional paper 441/2000 – is the answer:

No information has been prepared by or for Alberta Treasury on the breakdown of the economic impacts attributable to various components of the tax plan. Thus, the overall fiscal impacts of the various components of the plan on personal income tax, corporate income tax, other direct taxes, fuel and indirect taxes, federal transfers, other transfers cannot be estimated.

Mr. Speaker, if they can't estimate the economic impacts based on these categories by this breakdown, how do they make the claims that they make in the budget document regarding feedback? How do they make the claims in the budget document not knowing whether or not this is affordable, sustainable, or appropriate?

Mr. Speaker, it's not dissimilar to the question in question period that we dealt with earlier today when it was revealed that the provincial government hasn't done capacity studies within the health care system, yet we now have a bill they've just passed through by the use of closure, Bill 11, which says that health authorities have to use existing capacity before they can contract to private clinics. The reality is that the government doesn't know what the existing capacity is, so it's sort of hollow. In fact, it's very hollow.

Now we find the same thing with their tax plan. We ask: where's the homework; where are the facts? What we get told is: trust us; we didn't do the studies; we didn't crunch the numbers; we didn't run the tests; just trust us. So what we're left with once again, Mr. Speaker, is just ideology. "We want private health care because we want it. We wanted this kind of tax plan because we want to. It doesn't matter what the facts are. Don't confuse us with the facts. They just get in the way."

Sessional paper 440/2000, which was an answer to Written Question 220 as amended, was even a more straightforward information request, Mr. Speaker. It wanted to know what information was prepared by or for Alberta Treasury on how much of the $20 million economic offset or revenue recovery projected in 2000-01 as cited on page 17 of Budget '99 . . . results from the reduction of the 8 percent surtax, and how much is from the increase in the personal and spousal exemptions contained in the 1999 federal budget?

Once again, Mr. Speaker, a very straightforward information request. How much of what the government is claiming will be an offset or a revenue recovery for the first full year of the implementation of the tax plan will be due to the elimination of this surtax or the federal tax plan? You would think they would have that, that there would be some justification for removing this 8 percent surtax before the .5 percent flat tax. So once again I waited with bated breath for the government to provide the information, the response to the question, to tell Albertans that in fact they have done the work.

MS LEIBOVICI: You could turn blue by the time you got an answer.

MR. SAPERS: Well, you're sure right, hon. member. You could hold your breath until you turned blue, but you wouldn't want to do that in the province of Alberta because you might have to pay for the health care and the ambulance ride to get there.

Mr. Speaker, what you find out is that once again the answer is that no information has been prepared by or for Alberta Treasury on how much of the economic offset or revenue recovery in 2000-2001 results from the various components of the tax plan. They haven't done the homework. How can they bring this kind of legislation forward, something that is technical, something that is specific, something that affects every Albertan, something that affects the ability of the government to carry on its core programs – how could they bring this kind of legislation forward and not have done the work? I can think of many hon. members who would never have allowed that to happen had they been the Treasurer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to stand up and speak to Bill 19, the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000, and speak to it in terms of the principles of the bill that I simply don't agree with. There are two main principles in this bill that I don't agree with, and both of them are examples of styles of how this government has managed at least since 1993.

The first style is to dangle a carrot on a stick in front of the taxpayers of Alberta by promising them that things are going to get better and that they're going to help them out, to just trust them and everything will be better. This is an example. They say they're now going to eliminate the 8 percent surtax. Well, in fact we know that carrot only works for a very small percentage of Albertans. In fact, about 25 percent of them will end up benefiting from this, and too bad for the other 75 percent out there who are listening to the promises made by this government but not seeing any substantial follow-through in terms of the delivery of real commitments and promises made repeatedly.

As my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora talked about, they've been promising this tax cut for about a year and a half, it looks like, and it's promises made in the future, because of course it won't actually occur until sometime next year, but it will never occur for 75 percent of taxpayers in this province.

That's a real issue for us, because in fact this government had other options. They could have easily taken a look at the .5 percent flat tax rate and eliminated that. What they did was put the two of them in a hat and picked one as one method of planning, and they picked the one that will assist a few people. If they didn't just pick them out of a hat, then I'm even more concerned, because what that means is that they had a huge interest in selectively benefiting high-income Albertans. I would never attribute that kind of motive to the government, except that we have seen two other examples of that in legislation that has come through this Assembly this spring, where this government has deliberately chosen to advantage a particular segment of our society, that being high-income earners. We've seen that in Bill 18, where the flat tax rate is going to substantially benefit high-income earners as compared to the rest of Albertans, and in Bill 11, where those who can access private health care will have more of a franchise than the rest of Albertans, and those who can access private health care are those with more money, those who can afford private insurance systems.

What we see here, Mr. Speaker, is actually a trilogy of bills through the Legislature this spring that will specifically advantage people who have more money than average Albertans. So 25 percent of Albertans are going to receive a significant benefit under this government's mandate this year and next year in terms of the kind of legislation we've seen come through here, and that's an issue for us. There's just no two ways about it. We'd like to see benefits. We'd like to see good health care. We'd like to see fair taxation, and we'd like to see the elimination of specific surtaxes but for the benefit of all Albertans, Mr. Speaker, not a selective few as we see this government talking about.

When you take a look at this bill, you have to think in terms of: is it really economics they're talking about, or is it politics? When you're only benefiting a select few people, then for sure it isn't economics, Mr. Speaker, unless this government is trying to save more money in the tax coffers, which is what they say they're not trying to do. So it must be politics.

Why would they deliberately be trying to afford a few taxpayers in this province a benefit that others don't get? That's a question I think we should see answered before we get out of second reading on this bill, and I'm hoping that the Acting Treasurer will address these concerns, because they are very legitimate concerns. We need those answers before we can move on, but particularly this is of concern because once again, as we saw with the other two parts of the trilogy of bad bills through the Legislature this spring, we see a bill that cannot be backed up with any substantial evidence. Let's take "substantial" out of that sentence: a bill that can be backed up by any evidence in terms of it being significantly beneficial.

My colleague from Edmonton-Glenora has repeatedly asked for documentation. He started asking for documentation to back up the Provincial Treasurer's claims when the idea for the bill was first introduced back in early 1999, evidence to support why the government would reduce the taxes of a few Albertans before cutting taxes for all Albertans, but the Treasurer, the Acting Treasurer, and the whole Treasury Department keep telling us that they haven't analyzed those economic effects, Mr. Speaker. So what's that all about? How can you bring in tax legislation when you haven't analyzed the effects?

Well, I think they have analyzed them. I just don't think they want to table them. Clearly you couldn't have a whole department punching out all these numbers on their little pocket calculators, figuring out the tax benefits down the road. It wouldn't be happening. They're analyzing them.

MR. SAPERS: They've got big computers.

MS CARLSON: Well, maybe they do. Maybe they've got very sophisticated machinery. If they have very sophisticated machinery, then for sure they've got these results. So what is it about those results that they don't want to share with Albertans? I think that's an important question to have answered.

Certainly it's a credibility stretch, Mr. Speaker, to say that they haven't done the work, so why can't we see it? Why won't they provide the documentation? We need to know the basis on which the government decided to cut the taxes for a few before cutting taxes for all if it didn't know what the economic benefits would be. I'm hoping that the Acting Provincial Treasurer will answer that question. In fact, I believe that the majority of his constituents are not going to have the benefit of this tax cut, and I'm sure they would like those answers too: why some get it and others don't and how it is that only people with money fall into the right criteria to benefit from any of the kind of legislation that this particular government is getting involved in.

Where were they going with this? What comes next, Mr. Speaker? When we see all this legislation coming forward that talks about benefiting a select few in this province, what's next? Where are they headed in the five, 10, 15 years of strategic planning that we would hope a government would be doing in terms of the direction they're heading? It's taking a look at definitely . . .

DR. OBERG: The extra taxes were put on the select few.

MS CARLSON: We hear some chattering over on the other side. I can see that the minister wants to get into the debate, and if he would like to speak, then definitely I won't be adjourning when I'm done, because we'd like to have them defend some of their positions. I particularly think they are indefensible. So we'd like to see them stand up and defend the reasons for a few getting benefits and the great majority of Albertans not benefiting from it.

Why didn't they go to the .5 percent tax reduction? They made a commitment, Mr. Speaker, that they would eliminate that debt reduction tax, which was how it was sold to the general public, when the debt was reduced. Well, we saw that happen in this province a long time ago, yet they continue to collect tax dollars off the backs of hardworking middle-income and low-income people in this province, and the first opportunity they get to bring in a tax break, they give the break to their friends. They don't give it to the low-income people and the middle-income people in this province who need it. And why is that, Mr. Speaker? We don't get any answers to that particular question, and I think that's a real problem.

We pointed out that eliminating the flat tax first in conjunction with the plan to restore excellence in all kinds of programs is what this province needs instead of pushing us to a point where we become a user-pay society, which is, I believe, in direct contradiction with the Canadian Constitution and the identity that Canadians have in terms of how it is that we expect our country to be run. We are not a user-pay society, but that's what this government is driving us to. They only like to support their friends, not support the average person in this province.

Let's take a look at doing the right thing here for a change. Let's see this government take some leadership in maintaining a Canadian identity. If there's going to be tax elimination in this Assembly, we want to see the flat tax eliminated first, not the surcharge tax. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, given those comments, I will continue, because I want the Acting Treasurer to respond to my remarks. If I'm not satisfied with the responses, which I think is quite likely, then I will be back on my feet several times in committee. So with those comments I will adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[At 11:02 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Title: Tuesday, May 16, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/05/16

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Heavenly Father, guide our thoughts, words, and deeds to be worthy of the trust our constituents have placed in us to better serve Thee through service to our province of Alberta and its people. Amen.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't quite used to your voice yet sitting in that chair, but I am pleased to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly His Excellency Colonel Kongpay. He is the high commissioner of Brunei Darussalam. Accompanying him is his wife, Mrs. Lungkau. This is the high commissioner's first official visit to Alberta since being posted to Canada in February 1998 and, in particular, his first visit to Edmonton. We are very pleased to welcome him here today.

Brunei is a 600-year-old kingdom located in south Asia. It has a population of 323,000 people who benefit from a wealth of oil and gas revenues, much like Alberta, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the people of Brunei pay no taxes whatsoever. Several students from Brunei are studying at university in Alberta. There are some at the University of Alberta, some at the University of Calgary, and we are very pleased that they have chosen Alberta for their studies.

I had the opportunity along with my hon. colleague the Minister of Environment to have lunch with the high commissioner and his wife, and it was very enjoyable. He described Brunei to us, and it sounds like it would be a wonderful place to visit. So I would encourage all my colleagues here: if you have the opportunity, by all means take the opportunity to visit Brunei. It's a wonderful country.

I'd ask that our guests arise in your gallery and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the great pleasure to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly two special guests from the Republic of Karelia in northwest Russia. Mr. Shurupov is the Minister of Economics for Karelia, while Mr. Mukhin is the Minister of State Property. The hon. ministers are visiting Alberta under the Yeltsin democracy fellowship program to examine our policies and programs pertaining to regional economic development and the privatization of government assets and services.

We had the opportunity, along with the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, of hosting our special guests at lunch today and found much in common dealing with forestry, agriculture, and of course things like fisheries and minerals.

I want to take this opportunity to once again welcome our guests to Alberta and hope that they have a very successful trip. They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got a petition to present today, and it's one that's been signed in the last couple of days in my office. There are 44 names from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, Edmonton-Norwood, and Edmonton-Manning.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two petitions today. The first one: another 43 Albertans signing the petition opposed to Bill 11, and the total number of signatures on that petition is 22,567 today.

The second petition, Mr. Speaker, is signed by 69 Albertans, and it reads:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta not to institute a flat tax because:

- it will unfairly shift the tax load from high-income earners onto middle-income Albertans;
- it will deepen the divisions between rich and poor in Alberta society; and
- it will do nothing to simplify the tax system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd request that the petition standing on the Order Paper under my name concerning the working hours after midnight now be read and received, please.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce legislation requiring a minimum of two people on shifts from dark to daylight.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that the petition with respect to public health care that I presented yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request that the petition I tabled yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

head: Notices of Motions

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that tomorrow I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 21, 23, 24, and 25.

I'm also giving notice that tomorrow I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 39, 47, and 50.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two tablings. I am tabling five copies of a response to Written Question 8, as was agreed to by this Assembly on April 5, 2000, and I'm also tabling five copies of a response to Motion for a Return 24, as agreed to by this Assembly on, again, April 5, 2000.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Resource Development.

DR. WEST: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a report titled On the Classification and Interpretation of Global Progressivity Measures. This is a report that was prepared for Alberta Treasury by a well-known individual to the members across the way, Mr. Kim Cassady, who is an adviser to the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. They developed this report, which demonstrated a measure of progressivity in the so-called single-rate tax, and it was used by the Alberta Tax Review Committee to determine the single rate of tax. I would hope that they would read this report, because it's made by one of their own advisers.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings. The first one is a letter from Claire Goertzen of Lacombe, who like thousands of other Albertans, provides documentation and factual information showing why Bill 11 will not reduce waiting lists and save tax dollars.

MR. SAPERS: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

DR. PANNU: The second one, Mr. Speaker, is an e-mail from Harry Chase of Calgary opposing the flat tax proposal.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a document entitled The Jasper Place Gateway Foundation Community Access Network, and what it describes is the community access network which has been funded by Industry Canada, which will provide community access to computer terminals and Internet access to six locations in the constituency of Edmonton-Glenora. I'm very proud of this project. Congratulations to all of those who had a hand in it.

Mr. Speaker, the second is a letter from Mr. Harry Chase of Calgary regarding Bill 18, and it describes the provincial government's flat tax proposal as: their latest exercise in greed.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a report compiled by two injured workers out of Calgary that was presented to the MLA review panel on the WCB. In this report they outline their concerns and problems with the WCB and also make a number of recommendations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was absolutely thrilled this morning to be part of McHappy Day, assisting Ronald McDonald in the promotion of children's treatment. The Alberta Shock Trauma Air Rescue Society, and the Aaron Moser foundation for spinal cord research, as well as the Alberta cord blood bank are recipients of this year's McHappy funds. I have copies of tablings to that effect.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first one is a summary of findings from the Protection for Persons in Care Act community consultation held March 15, 2000, by the Alberta Association for Community Living, Developmental Disabilities Resource Centre of Calgary, and FAIRE, Families Allied to Influence Responsible Eldercare.

The second tabling is the news release produced yesterday by physicians on behalf of 150 Calgary physicians who are speaking out on health care and the commercialization of health care in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a letter from Janice Waddell from the Social Housing Advisory Committee to the hon. Minister of Community Development requesting a meeting.

My second tabling is a response to her letter. It's action request 64788 to Ms Janice Waddell from the hon. Minister of Community Development stating that unfortunately he cannot meet with her to discuss her issues.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Forestry.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 19 bright grade 5 and grade 6 students from the Grassland school. They are accompanied by their teachers, Julie Genoud and Jeff Semenchuk, parents Casey Bizon and Shirley Nahorney, and bus driver Richard Korbut. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly 21 students from Alcoma school. These are junior high students from Rainier, Alberta. They have with them teachers Steve Mungall, Connie Waddle, and Sue Chomistek, as well as parent helpers Mike Graham, John Ovinge, Debbie Axelson, Janice Christensen, Debbie Takeda, Diedre Lindsay, Donna Bobinski, Janet Wagner, Laurie Graham, and Lorraine Payne. I would ask the Legislative Assembly to take special interest in three of these people: Mr. Mike Graham, Ms Sue Chomistek, and Ms Laurie Graham, who are son, daughter, and daughter-in-law of someone who is very close to a lot of members in this Assembly, the late Mr. Jim Graham. So I would ask you all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to Members of this Legislative Assembly 36 visitors from Viking school, of course the home of the Sutter family of Viking, Alberta. We have 29 students and seven adults. The group is accompanied by teachers Mrs. Muriel Hill and Mrs. Sharon Whitehead; parents Mrs. Charlene Peterson, Mrs. Shawna Hafso, Mrs. Patricia Bredesen, Mr. Lee Laskosky, and Mr. Brian Albrecht. They are seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you. I've got two introductions, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce Scott Hennig, a student of economics and political science and a resident of Fort Saskatchewan, and also from the school in Fort Saskatchewan, Rudolph Hennig school, named after Scott's great-grandfather, a group of grade 5/6 students accompanied by their teacher, Lynn Marshall. I'd ask Scott and the class and helpers, assistants, and parents to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure today to stand and introduce to you a constituent of Calgary-North West, Dr. Mark Genuis. He's the founder and executive director of the National Foundation for Family Research and Education. It's a privately funded national charitable foundation that works to strengthen families and their children. His research on child and adolescent development, sexual abuse of children, and juvenile delinquency has been published in a number of academic journals and books, and he is a frequent speaker at conferences, public meetings, and symposiums. He's presented his research to the International Congress of Psychology and the Canadian Psychological Association as well as to parliamentarians, policymakers, school boards, parent groups, and service clubs across Canada. He certainly has been quite a leader in a lot of this research. I'd ask him at this stage to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Proposed WCB Medical Facility

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans and Edmontonians are suspicious about prospective new private health facilities, especially in the wake of Bill 11. We are hoping that perhaps the government can shed some light on a couple of deals that are in the works where public assets are about to be leased or sold. My questions are to the Premier. Since apparently the government has conditionally sold off the Charles Camsell hospital, what are the financial and zoning conditions that have been met before the deal has been closed?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to the preamble I don't believe that Albertans and Edmontonians are suspicious. The bill has been out there for some time, and all Albertans have had an opportunity to look at the legislation which simply puts rules and regulations around clinics that already exist, including the 30 that were approved under the leader of the Liberal opposition's watch when she was the minister of health.

Relative to the specific question, Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Infrastructure respond.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We currently have a request for proposal out on the table for redeveloping the Charles Camsell site or any other ideas that might come forward with respect to further use of the particular site. As far as conditions, that would be up to the prospective individual that's making a proposal and also to the city, but currently it is zoned residential.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: First supplemental. The Leader of the opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's nice to get an answer.

This is back to the Premier. Given that the WCB is planning a new health facility at hangar 25 on city-owned property, the airport land, will the health facility be operated by a private health company, or will it be a facility owned and operated by the WCB?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's news to me, and the question is a very good one. I'm afraid I don't have the answer, but perhaps the Minister of Health and Wellness does.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of these specific plans, but I think it is extremely important to point out – and I think the Leader of the Opposition should acknowledge this – that the WCB, according to the provisions of the Canada Health Act, which is now being, I understand, overseen more by the Minister of Health, has perfect latitude to establish its own health delivery system for its own specific needs.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Second supplemental to the first question. The Leader of the Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps we can go to the minister responsible for the Workers' Compensation Board on the second supplemental. Given that the site is ideal for flying in patients, who else will the new WCB facility be able to contract with: Capital health authority, other health authorities, private business, foreign corporations? Can the minister shed some light on this?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, I think, as my colleague the Minister of Health and Wellness just described, the WCB is not under the Canada Health Act, so they have the ability, then, to provide the sort of opportunities and care that their people need. Whatever constraints the board of directors would put on the operation of that particular facility would be a consideration that would be entirely within the WCB. I, of course, would have some legislative responsibilities in terms of the act just to make sure that they were living within the legislative reasons that they're there. I think the board that has been put into place – the public, employer, and employee board – would be capable of looking after the interests of the WCB.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Bill 11 Enforcement

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Behind closed doors seems to be a way of doing business for this government. Not only have they failed to inform Albertans on the sale of public property; they've also hidden details on how to enforce Bill 11. Section 8 of the bill talks about cost-effectiveness and public benefit, but the bill is silent on how such concepts are going to be measured. My questions are to the Premier. Given that the Auditor General's report points out that over half of the regional health authorities have undisclosed expenses associated with payments to private operators, how does the government plan to determine whether there are any cost-effectiveness means in these private facilities?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to the issue of the proponent and the RHA determining cost-effectiveness and efficiency, I will have the hon. minister respond.

MR. JONSON: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the basis of this question, I think, has to be challenged a bit, and that is that the Auditor General has certainly indicated and provided advice which Alberta Health and Wellness takes seriously with respect to improving accounting procedures. But it could be implied from the question that there is no accounting with respect to RHA budget money being spent in contracts and other arrangements with private providers. In effect, we have a contract with the Alberta Medical Association, which operates a whole host of facilities such as doctors' offices and associated services. So the situation is not quite the way the hon. member portrays it.

Now, with respect to the legislation there will need to be specifics established in regulations. In terms of the cost-effectiveness they know what their current costs are for particular procedures and services, Mr. Speaker. If the proposal or the bid, so to speak, that comes in or might be put before them is more costly than what they are currently doing and does not offer any advantage in terms of additional or better service, obviously it would not be considered cost-effective by them.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: First supplemental.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would refer the minister to page 218 of the Auditor General's report, where he talks about noncompliance of facilities.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, can the minister give us any indication of how many government positions are going to be created in order to monitor and regulate these new private facilities? Is it 10 new positions? Is it a hundred? Is it 500 new positions? Is there any indication?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, generally speaking, the regional health authorities across this province have in place administrative staff which currently deal with the clinics that operate in the system. We go back many, many years. It's been well outlined in fact today by the Premier. Those teams, as far as administration and accounting are concerned, would deal with this area of contracting as they deal with contracting the area of food services and laboratory services and arrangements with the 52 surgical clinics that we have currently in the province.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, we seem to have a lively debate going back and forth. The custom of the House is that only one person stands and speaks at a time, and those that are sitting are not invited to engage in debate or in calls across the way.

I believe the Minister of Infrastructure has tried a couple of times to supplement.

MR. STELMACH: During the second question the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition made a statement that the public is not aware of what public properties are up for sale. I'd like to advise the House and all members here and Albertans that they're posted on the worldwide web. We also have ads in various papers, and we also issued a government news release. So to make an insinuation that the public is not aware of what surplus properties are available is totally wrong.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Second supplemental. Hon. leader.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Getting back to the minister of health and the issue of increased administration, how much will this whole new level of bureaucracy cost the taxpayers of Alberta, dollars that would be far better spent on health care than on administration of the Bill 11 provisions?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition is entitled to her conclusions, however erroneous she wants them to be, and I guess there's no limit to that. I do not see any major so-called layer of bureaucracy being established to let contracts. The vehicle for letting contracts in those regional health authorities – all of them have one type of contract or another – is there. Administrative costs in the regional health authorities across the province run at about 5, 5 and a half percent, which I think compares rather well with other large service organizations, and that is the situation as we see it continuing.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Third main question. The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

School Classroom Sizes

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Optimal class sizes for kindergarten to grade 3 is 17 students, as the minister of education has admitted, yet an Official Opposition survey completed by 5,100 teachers in 750 schools in 245 Alberta towns and cities revealed that 81 percent of kindergarten classes were above the recommended size, 95 percent of grade 1 classes were over the limit, 94 percent of grade 2 and 98 percent of grade 3 classes were over the recommended size. The government's Speech from the Throne promises that the Minister of Learning will work with education partners on classroom size. My questions are to the minister. Why has this government reneged and left Alberta students in such overcrowded classrooms?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much for that very important question, Mr. Speaker. First of all, there needs to be a little bit of explanation about the whole class size of 17. As I am sure the hon. member is aware, that study came out, I believe, in Cleveland or Cincinnati. The interesting part about that study was that at about 17 . . . [interjections]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Perhaps you would have a question later on Edmonton-Norwood, but right now the question is from the leader.

MS OLSEN: I'll ask my question later on, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I was speaking to you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, suggesting that if you have a question later on, we'll entertain that, but right now we wanted to hear from the Minister of Learning and the Leader of the Opposition.

The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, the study that was done – and again, I believe it was in Cleveland or Cincinnati – stated that with a class size of 17 in the K to 3 age group there were significant improvements. The interesting part about that study was that at a class size of 18, those improvements were not seen. So it seems to me that there is a difficulty when you go from 17 to 18. What is the actual variable that is there?

The other thing that I will say about the hon. Leader of the Opposition's comment that we had put it in the throne speech that we are doing something, Mr. Speaker, is that in January of this year I allocated $500,000 to the Edmonton public school board to take a look exactly at class size. They are in the midst of their program, and there have been some absolutely fascinating results. They decreased the class size in 10 high-risk schools. They decreased it to 13, 14, and 15, and in some cases 12 students.

What they are seeing is quite literally nothing short of exceptional. They're seeing something that I would never have seen. One of these issues is attendance. They are actually seeing an improved attendance, which leads to the question that someone in grade 1 is actually learning how not to go to school. Instead, because they want to go to school, because there is a decreased class size . . .

The other thing that I will say is that there has been $170 million over three years allocated to a thing called the Alberta initiative for school improvement. The school boards are quite capable of using those dollars to address class size in the K to 3 age group or in any class size. So, Mr. Speaker, $170 million starting on September 1; $500,000 as a pilot project starting on January 1.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans have heard a lot of talk from this minister, and given the government's piecemeal and experimental approach to reducing class sizes, when will parents and teachers provincewide be able to expect smaller classes?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, unlike the Liberal opposition we actually look at data. We actually look at studies and base our funding on actual studies that are out there. If they think that Cleveland is the same as Rainier, Alberta, they are sadly mistaken. There are a lot of differences there. The onus is on me as Minister of Learning to ensure that my taxpayers' dollars, that the constituency of Strathmore-Brooks taxpayers' dollars are spent in the best possible fashion. Starting September 1 the school boards have the ability to take a look at class size, so the answer to the question is September 1.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, what response does this minister have for the C.W. Sears school council in Tofield in the Vegreville-Viking riding, wherein they say that reducing class sizes to a maximum of 17 students . . . would minimize these difficulties and would lay a strong foundation for students to reach their potential and see success in the future, as does the study which the Alberta Official Opposition worked hard to do. Where's your study?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, I'll say exactly the same thing to them as I'll say to the Alcoma school, that is up there today. We are looking at it. We are actually doing scientific studies. A survey of what is happening out there based on a study in Cleveland, Ohio, is not exactly what I would call scientific evidence.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Income Tax

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The threat to shut down debate on a major policy initiative for the second time this session is exactly the kind of thing that is enraging voters in Edmonton-Highlands and throughout the province. This government is increasingly arrogant, antidemocratic, and out of touch with the concerns of ordinary Albertans. The government's regressive flat tax scheme fails the test of fundamental fairness. It represents a massive shift of the tax burden onto the shrinking middle class. My questions are to the hon. Premier. Why has the government decided to undermine fairness by giving huge tax breaks to the already very wealthy leaving only pennies for middle-income Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would hardly say that it's arrogant to introduce tax reform policy and legislation that will take 190,000 low-income Albertans completely off the provincial income tax roll. Sir, that is hardly arrogant. That is respecting and understanding the need for those Albertans to have more disposable income in their pockets rather than in the coffers of the government.

A single-parent family making $30,000 a year will get a 276 percent tax cut. A 276 percent tax cut. Mr. Speaker, alluding to the wide range of Albertans who are in the middle-income range, a single-income family making $55,000 a year will get a 41 percent provincial tax cut. That is very significant. A senior couple earning $40,000 a year will get a 57 percent provincial tax cut. That is hardly being arrogant. That is being fair to Albertans and understanding their needs.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier please tell my constituents where the $100,000 per year plus jobs are so they can go and apply for them and thereby receive some benefit from the government's flat tax scheme?

MR. KLEIN: I would be very, very happy to. I would suspect that in the riding of Edmonton-Strathcona, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of dual-income wage earners. I would suspect that some of them are university professors, and I would suspect that their combined income would be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $100,000 to $120,000, maybe $130,000. I am sure there are many of them in the hon. member's constituency. Generally speaking, in that tax bracket under the single-rate regime, under the delinking proposal to which Bill 18 alludes, that family would receive a 12 percent cut in provincial income tax.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are in fact university-age students. They can't even afford to go to university to become professors.

My last question to the Premier: is the Premier advising middle-class Albertans to start buying Lotto . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We couldn't hear the question because there seemed to be a lot of noise over on my right. I wonder if we could have the final supplemental asked again without the preamble, hon. member.

2:10 Income Tax

DR. PANNU: Thank you. Thank you kindly, Mr. Speaker. Is the Premier advising middle-class Albertans to start buying Lotto 6/49 tickets in the hope of striking it rich and thereby being able to take advantage of the government's tax breaks to the wealthy scheme?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, no, I'm not advising. That's a personal choice as to whether people wish to buy 6/49 or 7/47 tickets. All I can say is what I said previously, that a single-income family – and this is just one of the examples – making $55,000 a year will get a 41 percent provincial tax cut. That is very significant indeed.

Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to vote against taking 190,000 low-income families off the tax rolls, if he wants to vote against giving an average wage earner of $55,000 a year a 41 percent tax break, if he wants to deny a senior couple earning $40,000 a year a 57 percent provincial tax cut, then I would advise him to vote against Bill 18. His record of vote will be well noted.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Kananaskis Development

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, on an ongoing basis my constituency office actually receives more mail and phone calls or e-mail regarding environmental concerns than even health or education. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. Can you please explain the terms of reference that your department has issued to Genesis Land Development for its proposed development in the Spray Valley of Kananaskis Country?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, last year I ordered Genesis to conduct an environmental impact assessment for their proposed project in Kananaskis Country. Perhaps the best way to look at an environmental impact assessment in terms of reference is that it should be thought of as a comprehensive review of environmental and social and economic and cultural consequences that must be addressed prior to a project going ahead. There has been a very strong degree of interest expressed by the public. Over a thousand Albertans expressed their views about Genesis' proposals and made submissions for the terms of reference and their views on what should be reviewed by Genesis.

Mr. Speaker, environmental concerns that had been expressed by the public that must be addressed in the terms of reference include the potential impact of this project on wildlife, transportation routes into the Spray Valley, water quality in the Spray Lakes, and also the appropriateness of large-scale development in Kananaskis Country.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: First supplemental, Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, my second question is also to the same minister. If Genesis decides to proceed with this assessment, what role will it play in the approval process?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the environmental impact assessment, or EIA, must describe the impacts of the proposed project. In the case of the Genesis project they are proposing three things: a heli-skiing operation on Mount Sparrowhawk, a four-season resort on Tent Ridge, and a tour boat operation to operate on Spray Lake. If the EIA report identifies any adverse impacts arising from the Genesis proposal, Genesis must demonstrate how it will either eliminate or mitigate those effects.

When Genesis finishes the EIA report, it will be submitted to the Natural Resources Conservation Board for review. The EIA also requires Genesis to consult the public as part of the assessment process and to include the findings of their public input in their NRCB submission. At that point the NRCB would decide if the proposals put forward by Genesis are in the public interest.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Final supplemental, Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also to the Minister of Environment. Since the Spray Valley proposals are near the Banff national park boundary, is the federal government involved in the Genesis environmental assessment?

MR. MAR: The short answer, Mr. Speaker, is yes. The federal government has had representatives who have participated in the review of Genesis to this point and have assisted directly in helping develop the final terms of reference for the environmental impact assessment report that my department issued today. I think this has been a very co-operative model that should be used in all cases of federal and provincial joint jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, we have an agreement between the province and the federal government to co-operate in this environmental review, and we certainly intend on living up to that commitment.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Physicians' Concerns over Bill 11

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the recent debate on health care thousands of Albertans from all walks of life and many, many organizations have expressed their opposition to this government's plans for further privatization of our health care system. Yesterday over 150 Calgary physicians added their voices in the fight to defend public health care. My question this afternoon is to the Premier. Given that these doctors view with, quote, grave concern the expanding, for-profit elements in the health care system, close quote, will this government hold off on proclaiming Bill 11 until the concerns of these doctors have been identified and dealt with?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, no. The Minister of Health and Wellness plans to proceed with the College of Physicians and Surgeons and other stakeholders to go ahead and draft the regulations and have the bill proclaimed. I'm sure that he would be happy to talk to representatives of the group of doctors involved.

As I understand it, about six of these doctors attended a news conference in Calgary yesterday, and yes, one of their concerns was this so-called commercialization of health care. Another concern, of course, was that expressed by the Alberta Medical Association, and that is funding for more frontline staff and so on. That has nothing to do with Bill 11. That is a budget item, and it will be addressed in another forum. I can assure you of that.

Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that one of the doctors protesting the so-called commercialization of health care was Dr. Ron Jadusingh. Well, he might want to look in the mirror, because he's a partner with Medical Laboratory Consultants, and that's one of several private providers to the Calgary regional health authority. As a matter of fact, they do about 1 percent of the CRHA lab work. I simply point that out.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: First supplemental, Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the concerns expressed yesterday in fact reflect the same concerns raised by Dr. Brock Dundas, who is the elected president of the Calgary Regional Medical Staff Association, and given that one of the biggest concerns of these physicians is conflicts of interest that will inevitably arise due to privatization, what specific mechanisms does this government plan to install to regulate and monitor these private facilities for fraud?

MR. KLEIN: One would have to assume that these doctors have not realized that surgical clinics outside of conventional, full-scale hospitals have been operating in this province for many, many years, 30 of which were operating under the watch of the former minister of health who is now the leader of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the conflict of interest provisions it is very obvious now that this hon. member has not read the bill. The bill and the amendments to the bill allude specifically to conflict of interest guidelines, and as the regulations are developed, I think you will see very strict conflict of interest guidelines develop relative to contracting out. I will say that those guidelines did not exist before, but they – that is the Liberals – voted against even the notion of putting in conflict of interest guidelines.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, this opposition and this caucus recognize a toothless provision when we read it.

The point I'd make is this. Given that these same Calgary physicians have said that "it is vitally important that you, the taxpaying public, who may also be patients or health care providers, become involved in changes that may seriously affect you or your loved ones," will this Premier commit right now to holding free and open public consultation on the development of all of the 20-odd regulations provided for in Bill 11?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the meat and really the essence of the law is in the legislation. It's in Bill 11. If these doctors have some concerns with the guidelines as they pertain to conflict of interest, I would suggest that they immediately get in touch with the College of Physicians and Surgeons, their representative body, to discuss their concerns with the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, because this is their opportunity to provide meaningful input to the college so that indeed the guidelines that will be put in place relative to conflict of interest will have lots of teeth.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It will come as no surprise to members on this side of the House that thanks to the good policies of this government Albertans enjoy the highest after-tax incomes in Canada. However, being the best in Canada is not enough. As a recent study by Standard and Poor's concluded, the after-tax income enjoyed by Albertans is lower than the after-tax income enjoyed by people living in Alabama. That matters because Alabama is the poorest state in the United States. The richest Canadian province, Alberta, is behind the poorest state, Alabama. Unlike the United States, after-tax incomes in Canada are sliding, not rising. This means that families are finding it harder to make ends meet, harder to buy the things their children and their families need. My first question is to the Acting Provincial Treasurer. Can the Acting Treasurer explain what Alberta has done, is doing, and will be doing for hard-working families in Alberta, families who form the bedrock of our great province, to address this matter?

DR. WEST: Well, Mr. Speaker, those are sad statistics, indeed to compare Canadians and Albertans to . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Both sides, I think, are anxious to make their points of view known. We'll keep, though, with the tradition of the House that one member gets to speak at a time, and the only member right now that's been recognized to speak is the hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, this government has for a long time recognized the unfairness as it relates to taxation of people trying to raise families, whether they be a single-income earning family or a double-income earning family or a family of any combination thereof. Therefore, over the last couple of years and including now we have taken measures to level the playing field for working families as well as to lower their tax burden.

You know, for me to say that would be one thing, but to have the National Foundation for Family Research and Education executive director, Dr. Mark Genuis, say it is another thing. Today at noon he released a news release which says that there are three specific initiatives in this new tax era in Alberta that "have particular benefit for Alberta families and are cumulative in their positive effect." First, the Alberta family employment tax credit that we brought in a while back is "Canada's first refundable credit to parents of lower income." Secondly, he says that the increase in the Basic Personal Exemption and the Spousal Exemption provides significant tax relief for younger and lower-income families.

Third, the flat tax will provide real savings for all Alberta families. Now, Mr. Speaker, he says that there at least four specific . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Could you wait for the next question?
The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Those tax reductions don't come cheap. I understand that Alberta is planning to spend $1.3 billion improving the after-tax incomes of Albertans. My first supplemental is to the Acting Provincial Treasurer. Can you really afford to remove $1.3 billion from our provincial revenues?

DR. WEST: I want to assure Dr. Mark Genuis of the National Foundation for Family Research and Education that we can. He said that there are four benefits that will come from that $1.3 billion in savings. He said:

First, low-income families will be provided with a tax refund per child.

Second, lower income families will not pay provincial taxes until their annual family income reaches nearly $30,000.

Third, the lifestyle options for families are increased as tax discrimination between single and dual income families are reduced.

With that $1.3 billion we can also say that "Alberta parents will be able to provide better for their children as they will have substantially more of their own money left to them."

I'd like to table this so that everybody gets accurately what was said by the national foundation.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Final supplemental, Calgary-Mountain View, without a preamble.

MR. HLADY: Well, Mr. Speaker, can the Acting Provincial Treasurer explain the policy logic the Liberals and NDs are using to block these tax reductions?

Speaker's Ruling Seeking Opinions

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, as all hon. members well know, you're really asking for an opinion, and what the Acting Provincial Treasurer might think about why someone else – it might then be imputing false motives. I don't know what you could answer, since you've just been asked for an opinion.

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, I definitely wouldn't give a hypothetical answer on their reasoning, but I can say this. The Canadian Taxpayers' Federation has put out a news release that says: Klein's Tax Cuts a Boon to Middle Class; Bill 18 Critics Out to Lunch. They said that "middle class earners are in line for substantial tax savings." I couldn't understand why anybody would be against this.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer I think has made his point.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Justice and the Poor

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the National Council of Welfare, a citizens advisory group, released a report entitled Justice and the Poor. One of the most striking findings of this report is that the highest rate of imprisonment for failure to pay fines is right here in Alberta at 60.7 percent per 10,000 adult residents, or over 18,000 Albertans per year. Now, these are fines. By and large, a good number of these people are the poor, the illiterate, and the mentally ill. Other provinces have social programs; in Alberta they go to debtors' prison. My questions are to the Minister of Justice. Given that we have a fine-options program, can the Minister of Justice explain why Alberta's rates for imprisonment for failure to pay fines is so outrageously high?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a good question indeed. We do have fine-option programs. We do have alternatives for those people who are not able to pay fines, and one would think that they would take more opportunity of those particular programs. But we have to go on to indicate that we need more opportunities to provide for diversion from the court system for minor offences which result in fines so that people can deal with those issues by way of community service and by way of community conferencing issues and other ways of dealing with it.

It is an issue that needs to be dealt with. It's an issue that we need to be cognizant of. I think it also points to the fact that right across this country, particularly in Alberta, we have to do more to deal with the root causes of crime: alcohol addiction, drug addiction, and mental health issues.

MS OLSEN: My second question is to the same minister. Given that it costs the taxpayers about $100 a day to keep a person in jail, how long will this government think this incarceration rate is acceptable? When are you going to stop it?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, it should be clear that this government doesn't send people to jail. People are prosecuted and they go to court and the courts provide for a penalty. Usually in the case of a fine, a fine option is available. So it's not the government that is sending people to jail.

I did indicate to the hon. member that we do have to do more to find appropriate alternatives, because sending people to jail is not the way to deal with these issues. We have to find ways to get people back into the community better equipped to handle the stresses and the root causes of crime in the first place.

MS OLSEN: Given that actions speak louder than words, when will the minister ensure that the fine-options program works for everyone, including the poor, including the illiterate, and including the mentally ill? When will that happen, Mr. Minister?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're always trying to find better ways to make sure that the public of Alberta understands how the system works and understands how it should work for them. Obviously in circumstances such as are being pointed out, some people are not taking advantage of the programs that are available for them, and we'll have to do more to make sure that they're aware of those options.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Tourism Industry

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With our Canadian climate becoming more conducive to more outdoor activities and Alberta's natural heritage revealing its splendors, once again tourism will be at its peak in the cycle. My question is to the Minister of Economic Development. What are the government policies in terms of economic development with regard to tourism in our province?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We regard tourism as a critical industry within this province. It is our fourth largest sector. That recognition is evidenced by the fact that in Get Ready Alberta, the province's new economic strategy, we would like to see that sector grow from its present level of about 4.2 billion to over 6 billion by the year 2005.

Now, it's easy to say that, Mr. Speaker, but how do we achieve that? One of the ways we are approaching this is to increase the budget with respect to marketing visitor information centres, call centres, et cetera. In fact, the budget from 1998 at $8 million increased to $16 million in 1999.

That budget, as I mentioned, includes some marketing dollars. We are aggressively leveraging with the private sector. In fact, at this point in time in leveraging with Alberta-based companies, we're achieving a 2 to 1 ratio, and for companies that are located outside the province, we're actually at a 5 to 1 ratio.

We are also partnering with the private sector with respect to product development. Of course, within this province in order to increase our level of tourism, we need to provide tourists with new levels of product.

Finally, we're trying to develop a stronger relationship with the Canadian Tourism Commission, Mr. Speaker.

The bottom line is that we want Alberta to be a top-of-mind vacation destination, not only for Albertans but for Canadians and international visitors.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Supplemental, Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what are the specific programs that promote tourism among Albertans spending time and money inside Alberta?

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have an in-resident marketing program which has a budget of approximately $2 million. In fact, the question is very timely. Just this past weekend we sent to hundreds of thousands of households a little brochure – and I have one here – called Travel Alberta. It is an excellent brochure, and I'd encourage all members of the House to look at this brochure.

What we're trying to do is use this to increase interest in Albertans in other parts of the province aside from those they traditionally visit. We are also running significant TV and print promotional programs in conjunction with the release of this document. We have a new accommodation guide, a new campground guide. We have a 60-page travel planner out there.

So what we're trying to do, Mr. Speaker, is, again, encourage Albertans to see those parts of the province which they have not previously visited. In that way, we will grow the tourism industry not on a regional basis but throughout the whole province.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Final supplemental, Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what are the specific government programs to promote tourism to attract visitors from outside our province?

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's performance in attracting overseas visitors was considerably better than the national average for the first two-quarters of 1999, and these are the most up-to-date figures that I have. Unfortunately, our performance was significantly lower than the national average in attracting U.S. visitors for the same period.

That's one of the reasons why we recently launched a new Americas campaign. It's an approximately $4 million TV and print promotional campaign, and we are running that in selected states. We've tried to pick those states where we feel we'll have the greatest impact; for example, Texas, California, the Pacific Northwest. It is the largest campaign in the United States since, I think, 1988. We're trying to ensure that Americans are well aware of all we have to offer.

We are also working with the Canadian Tourism Commission in the United Kingdom and German markets. Our initial figures are very encouraging with respect to leads being generated through our advertising. We have some new initiatives in Japan with two leading travel agencies.

Mr. Speaker, it's not often I get to answer questions in the House. I don't take a lot of time, but I would like to take this opportunity to explain to members what we're doing, because it is important.

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, we have some challenges to overcome, and those challenges relate to the national parks and what the federal government is doing with respect to restricting access. We also have the challenges regarding air service and how that is impacting the availability of direct flights. We are working aggressively with other economic development and tourism ministers from across the country to address those particular issues.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Homelessness

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Community Development: when is the government's policy framework on homelessness going to be publicly released?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Mr. Speaker, that policy is available to anybody upon asking for it.

MRS. SLOAN: That answer doesn't explain why the agencies providing services to the homeless haven't seen it, Mr. Speaker.

My second question is: how much will the provincial government contribute to fund the $37 million in capital projects being initiated by the Calgary Drop In Centre and Salvation Army to address the needs of the homeless?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to let the House know that Alberta is the only province that in fact does have a policy with respect to homelessness. I was very pleased that the member did refer to Calgary, simply because Calgary and Edmonton, for that matter, are being touted in Ottawa by Minister Bradshaw, whom I had the pleasure of meeting with, the minister responsible for the homeless on a national scale, as examples of what should be done across this country. What we are doing is working with the local authorities, with the federal government in a very proactive fashion, and with the smaller agencies within these cities.

We have for the first time allocated a budget line directly at the homeless in my ministry, the idea being that this money will be accessed by the serving agencies via the bigger umbrella agencies, and in the case of Calgary, it's through the Calgary Homeless Foundation.

MRS. SLOAN: My third question, then, is to the Minister of Infrastructure. When will the government be making funding available to the Salvation Army and the Calgary Drop In Centre to fund the capital projects they've initiated for the homeless?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Community Development just answered the question. He's got the budget line in his particular budget allocation to deal and work co-operatively with all of the social housing organizations.

Of course, our Member for Calgary-Bow has done extensive work in this area, and I would encourage the hon. member to have a good look at the report and get some further information and ideas out of it.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We have three members' statements this afternoon. In 30 seconds we'll start with the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, followed by Edmonton-Glengarry, and finally Peace River.

2:40 Crime Prevention Week

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to rise today and recognize Alberta Crime Prevention Week 2000, which runs May 13 to 19. This is the ninth annual crime prevention awareness campaign that is co-ordinated by Alberta Justice with the Alberta Community Crime Prevention Association.

This past Saturday I had the opportunity to attend the Alberta Justice crime prevention awards, which were presented by the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General. These awards recognize the outstanding contribution of Alberta's volunteer crime fighters in communities across the province. The 13 recipients – seven individuals, three businesses, two police officers, and one community organization – showed that there is a part for all Albertans to play in the province's crime prevention team. By working in their communities, these recipients have created a sense of pride and ownership that has helped to reduce crime. With their community spirit and tireless efforts they have made a difference. Their achievements are proof that crime prevention programs work best when developed and implemented at the local level. In fact, community involvement is one of the best ways to eliminate crime and the social, financial, and emotional costs that go along with it.

Throughout Crime Prevention Week 2000, communities will be holding numerous events and special activities to increase awareness about how Albertans can prevent crime and make our province safer and stronger. From open houses at local police detachments and robbery awareness seminars to demonstrations on children's, seniors', and home safety, Albertans across the province will be out in force to support the week and its theme: Crime prevention – it's in your neighbourhood.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to encourage the members of the Assembly and all Albertans to participate in this special week and to help spread the word about crime prevention in Alberta.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Rendez-vous Canada 2000

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week tourism industry operators from across Canada gathered in Calgary for the industry's annual showcasing of its latest products and plans. Some 1,400 delegates came together for Rendez-vous Canada 2000 at the Round-Up centre in Stampede Park from May 6 to 10. Organizers from the Tourism Industry Association of Canada reported it to be its largest annual gathering ever.

Recognition for this outstanding event must go to dedicated individuals from the Tourism Industry Association of Canada board and the Rendez-vous Canada advisory committee. Their ideas, hard work, and dedication culminated in the creation of an event which proved to be an excellent tool for the tourism business community.

Tourism is Alberta's fourth largest industry. It produces $4.2 billion annually and employs around 100,000 Albertans. It is also an industry with a tremendous potential for growth. By 2005 tourism is expected to bring in $6 billion a year in revenue. Yet the tourism industry has been treated as a forgotten child by the Alberta government. Years of inadequate government spending, ineffective marketing by the province, and the disruptive failure of the government's Alberta Tourism Partnership Corporation experiment all took a toll on the tourism industry in this province. To quote a representative of the Calgary Convention & Visitors Bureau, there was a time when provinces around the country considered Alberta to be a leader. That's certainly not evident anymore. Tourism funding is still only a drop in the bucket compared to what competing destination provinces such as British Columbia and Ontario spend on the industry.

Today the industry is battling back from the government's mishandling of tourism and marketing. Through a great deal of hard work on the part of industry and stakeholders Alberta's tourism providers and marketers are now poised to make real inroads into making this beautiful province of ours a tourist destination of choice.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Mary Percy Jackson

MR. FRIEDEL: Mr. Speaker, on May 6, 2000, Dr. Mary Percy Jackson passed away in Manning, Alberta, at the age of 95. This was a sad loss for her family and the community, but I cannot imagine a life more fulfilled, more accomplished, and more rewarding than hers.

She came to the Peace country in 1929 from England, expecting to stay for about a year. Instead, she stayed and practised medicine for almost 50 years and raised a family that now includes great-grandchildren. Dr. Mary was a pioneer in every sense of the word as she was the only doctor in the vast north Peace for a number of years. She covered an area of more than 100 miles when the only mode of transportation was on horseback because there were no roads. Her patients included homesteaders and natives alike.

I can't possibly do justice to a proper recognition in the short time that I have available, but maybe a partial list of her many awards might help. They include the Centennial Medal of Canada, the Alberta achievement award, an honorary doctorate of laws degree from the University of Alberta, the Alberta Order of Excellence, and in 1990 an officer of the Order of Canada. That's only the short list.

Dr. Mary continued to live in Keg River after her husband died in 1979 and only moved to Manning after she was 90 years old.

I had the privilege of getting good advice from her on a number of occasions. Ironically, our last conversation was about two months ago when she called me in support of Bill 11. She said that she had seen more than 70 years of advances in medicine and health care, and it was important to always look ahead to new and innovative ideas.

In her book, The Homemade Brass Plate, she wrote: when I die, I hope I shall be able to quote Robert Louis Stevenson's Requiem.

Under the wide and starry sky,
Dig the grave and let me lie.
Glad did I live and gladly die,
And I laid me down with a will.

Dr. Mary, that epitaph and this thank you is for you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We have one point of order that I'm aware of. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Point of Order
Allegations against a Member
Reflections on Nonmembers

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am going to be referring to some words spoken by the Acting Provincial Treasurer during Routine, during tablings. I will be referring to Standing Order 23 and also recent Speaker's rulings regarding referencing people outside the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, during tablings, just minutes after Prayers, the Acting Provincial Treasurer was obviously so eager to exercise what he thought would be a got-you that in a fairly smug and arrogant way, misrepresenting a paper that was co-authored by a gentleman by the name of Kim Cassidy and then tabling it in this Assembly, as though it gave some credibility to this government's tax policy, he then sat down and from his seat, carefully avoiding his microphone, pointed directly across the aisle at this hon. member and said: tell the truth. Though he said that off microphone, clearly his voice was loud enough, I think, for all hon. members in this Assembly to hear.

There's only one reason why he would utter that phrase, tell the truth, and that would be to insinuate that this hon. member, myself, had not told the truth about that particular tax policy paper.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to ask you to call the Acting Provincial Treasurer to order for two reasons. I'm going to ask you to do two things. One, I would ask you to ask the Acting Provincial Treasurer to withdraw the allegation that I was not telling the truth. I take this very seriously. If the hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer can put on the record one example of one untrue utterance that I have made in relation to that tax policy paper, I will stand in the Assembly, I will apologize for it, and I will retract it. If he cannot do that, I would ask him to do the honourable thing and withdraw that allegation.

The second thing that I would ask you to call him to order for, Mr. Speaker, is in relation to the Speaker's rulings of late where the Speaker has gone to great lengths to talk about how we must not take advantage of individuals who are not inside the Assembly by drawing them into this debate and then misrepresenting or abusing their work and their reputation.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman in question, Mr. Cassidy, once upon a time was employed by Alberta Treasury. During that period of time he did a series of very good works for Alberta Treasury. He subsequently left Alberta Treasury. One of the papers that he co-authored found its way into publication in a very esteemed and prestigious academic journal. This happened some 10 years, I understand, give or take a couple of years, several years after it was originally authored. It is a measure of progressivity. It has been misrepresented in this House by the Acting Provincial Treasurer.

The paper in question talks about how tax plans must be revenue neutral if they are to be compared. Bill 18 is not. It talks about comparing tax plans side by side, which Bill 18 does not. And, finally, the third way in which his work has been misrepresented for partisan purposes by the Acting Provincial Treasurer was that it does not support any particular tax scheme. It certainly does not support Bill 18.

So, Mr. Speaker, those are my arguments. I do take this seriously. I will not tolerate being accused of telling an untruth in this Assembly, and I certainly will not stand by while one of my constituents is maligned in this House by the Acting Provincial Treasurer.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on the point of order.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed unfortunate when comments are tossed across the way from one member to another, usually provoked by some form of attempt at informal discussion. However, in this particular case I'm hoping that the chair will not find that there's a point of order, because I have not been able to track down in Hansard any specific comments that were recorded in this respect. I'm not taking away from the fact that there may or may not have been an exchange between the two members being discussed here. However, I certainly didn't hear any of that exchange, and I doubt that the chair would have heard it either.

As we all know, there is an amount of heckling that goes on between members in lead-ups to what would otherwise be a very productive question period that follows. I think that may well be what has happened here. As I understand it, just listening to Edmonton-Glenora, the discussion centred around Bill 18, which is on the Order Paper, as you know, and does provide a number of benefits through a lot of tax cuts that will be forthcoming, which Albertans, we believe, really do want. I would congratulate the member who is not in the House, Mr. Cassidy, for the fine work that he did in this regard, that helped lead up to this.

I happen to know Mr. Cassidy, and I do judge him to be a very nice gentleman, and I'm sure that he did his best work. However, I don't think that anyone in this House, including the Acting Provincial Treasurer, would have taken any liberties by suggesting any ill work by that gentleman. Simply perhaps a congratulatory thing and perhaps asking the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to reflect on that. However, I did not hear the exact conversation.

What I would tell you, though, Mr. Speaker, is that expressions like "tell the truth" – I have looked through Beauchesne, and I haven't found that particular phrase, unless I missed it, to be ruled unparliamentary in previous usages. In fact, under Beauchesne 485, titled Unparliamentary Language, it states:

Unparliamentary words may be brought to the attention of the House either by the Speaker or by any Member. When the question is raised by a Member it must be as a point of order and not as a question of privilege.

I'm sure that if the Speaker himself had heard something unparliamentary, he would have acted on the first part of that statement and brought the member to order himself. Not having heard that, I can understand that the chair did not stop the member's discussion at that time, if in fact that's what did occur.

The other point I would raise very quickly is Beauchesne 486(4), which reinforces what I said earlier:

Remarks which do not appear on the public record and are therefore private conversations not heard by the Chair do not invite the intervention of the Speaker, although Members have apologized for hurtful remarks uttered in such circumstances.

That having been said, I think we may well have a disagreement here over an interpretation of an allegation about certain words that may or may not have been said. In that instance, if that was the case, I'm sure the two members can sort it out.

However, it's my position that while we may have a disagreement over an allegation, that in itself does not constitute a point of order, and I would ask for your ruling in that respect.

Thank you.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, we see the member alleging that there was no comment made on the record, and then he defends it. If we go to either Beauchesne or Erskine May, we find that it is the interpretation of what is said. "Tell the truth," the tone that that was volleyed across the floor of this Legislative Assembly did have an interpretation that would fall within both of those books in terms of being unparliamentary.

There have been many cases in this Assembly when tapes have been listened to when Hansard hasn't picked up miscellaneous statements made within the Assembly, so I would ask the Speaker to review that in that context in terms of making a ruling there.

In terms of the allegations made against a person who is not a member of this Assembly and is not here to defend himself, that person being Kim Cassidy, we have had several recent experiences in this Assembly where people have had to retract remarks, apologize for them. Certainly the interpretation that the Treasurer put on those comments he made about Kim Cassidy and his work done previously in this province does need to be retracted and taken in that kind of context.

So I'm hoping, Mr. Speaker, that you will find a point of order on both counts, the "tell the truth" statement and the comments made about a person who is not in a position to defend himself in this Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Well, the chair would agree with the hon. member who did bring up the item in Beauchesne 486(4), which indicates that "private conversations not heard by the Chair do not invite the intervention of the Speaker." So I can't get into the detail of what wasn't heard, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora clearly alleged that the hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer covered up his microphone when he said whatever he said to the hon. member.

Certainly the chair did hear hon. members back and forth saying a number of things. If there was some question of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora being untruthful, that certainly would be a hurtful comment and would be worthy of retraction, but the chair can hardly intervene in that if the chair didn't hear. Certainly the chair heard noises and will have to look at the Blues, if there was a clear catch of that.

With regard to references to Mr. Cassidy, the chair will have to look at the Blues to see if there was an adverse – that seemed to come after the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora made the point of order. I would have to read the Blues to make a comment about that, if there was something untoward.

I think that probably this is much more a point of clarification than a point of order. The hon. member has clarified his point, and the chair will look at those references to Mr. Cassidy.

Employment Standards (Parental Leave)
Amendment Act, 2000

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to stand before this Assembly and present my private member's Bill 209. This bill is a result of consultation that I have conducted since the spring of 1998 relating to an issue that's close to me.

As the representative for my riding I have witnessed that working parents do not have enough time to nurture their infants, especially when the infants are not well and the parents are demanded to be at work. I also received strong support from many individuals and organizations such as the Developmental Disabilities Resource Centre of Calgary, the Calgary family day home agencies, parents as teachers programs, Adoption by Choice, the International Adoption Association, the first steps parent council of Edmonton, early prevention programs, and so on. I want to take this opportunity to table letters of support from those individuals and organizations.

This bill involves people that are very important to this Assembly and to this government. It involves Alberta's young children. What we have an opportunity to do here is ensure that many of them are better off. Bill 209 is not about benefits to parents. It is about the care for our Alberta infants.

The purpose of Bill 209 is to amend the Employment Standards Code as it relates to maternity and adoptive leave. The bill amends the code to allow for a maximum of 27 weeks of parental leave, which could be taken by either birth parents or adoptive parents. This leave could be taken by one parent or divided between both parents as they see fit. The leave must be taken consecutively and cannot be taken by more than one parent at a time. The amendment would amalgamate current provisions for maternity leave and adoption leave and bring Alberta's parental leave standards in line with other provinces.

In fact, Alberta currently has the lowest maternity and parental leave time sanctioned in the whole country. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is time to revisit the current maternity leave provisions that this province has. In fact, our current maternity leave provisions were established in the old Employment Standards Code in 1976. This is more than 25 years ago. Though many of us have utilized these provisions and they have served a purpose, a lot of time has passed. Many things have changed and so has our knowledge regarding child care and nurturing. These old provisions I speak of granted employees who had been with the same employer for a period of at least one year 18 weeks of maternity leave with at least six of those weeks following the date of delivery.

In 1988 adoptive parents were granted adoption leave as long as the adoptive parents had been with the same employers for a period of at least one year and adopted a child aged three or under, but these parents were only allocated a period of no more than eight weeks of leave from the date of custody, and only one adoptive parent was eligible for the leave.

Mr. Speaker, in fact, in 1991 our current minister of health examined this legislation. Our MLA for Ponoka-Rimbey introduced Bill 291, An Act to Amend the Employment Standards Code. The bill proposed to change the code so that employees could avail themselves of all maternity leave and parental leave available under the federal unemployment insurance program. At that time those benefits were for 27 weeks. My Bill 209 proposes the same amount of time. Another suggestion that is included is that the fathers also be allowed the opportunity to take parental leave following the birth.

Though Bill 291 died on the Order Paper, some very valuable suggestions were made. They included reducing the 18 weeks allowed for the birth mother to 17 weeks, creating an 18 consecutive weeks' parental leave period available to both parents, birth or adoptive, a requirement of four weeks' notice to an employer if an employee wished to return to work following their leave time before that leave expired, reducing the qualifying period of employment from 12 months to 13 weeks, and removing the age restriction on adoptive children so that all adoptive parents would qualify.

Mr. Speaker, in 1991 the minister of labour petitioned the chair of the social planning cabinet committee to change the code as it applied to parental leave. Changes would have followed the suggestions outlined in Bill 291. However, these recommendations were never carried out, and the issue has not been made since.

Presently, maternity and adoption benefits fall under division 7 of the Employment Standards Code of Alberta. As I have stated, while some other amendments to the code have been made, maternity leave provisions have not changed since 1976. Alberta still limits the parental leave provision to the birth mother and one adoptive parent. Inequities still exist between entitlements for birth mothers and adoptive parents even though the circumstances encountered can be similar. Concerns have been expressed by groups representing adoptive parents that they should receive the same entitlements as birth parents. These groups do not recognize any difference in need between natural and adoptive parents. We should not either, Mr. Speaker. Furthermore, when comparing other provinces to Alberta, while entitlements to maternity leave are similar, Alberta lags behind on those parental leave provisions by failing to grant leave for birth fathers. This should not be the case.

The Employment Insurance Act currently grants payment of employment insurance benefits for maternity and parental leave. The EI provides for 15 weeks of maternity leave benefits and 10 weeks of parental leave benefits, to be split between both parents and taken within the first year of the new child. In addition, it requires a waiting period of two weeks. The total leave covered for the biological mother would be 25 weeks. However, our Alberta Employment Standards Code would not provide protection for the job longer than 18 weeks, whereas a full 27 weeks would be needed to take full advantage of the EI benefit.

Mr. Speaker, that is money made available to Albertans, money that Albertans pay into EI every time they get a paycheque. Not that Albertans are into handouts, but that is money that this old piece of legislation prevents Albertans from receiving. It almost seems as of late that if there is a program that the federal government can fund that excludes Albertans, they will most certainly increase funding in that program. Knowing full well that Alberta doesn't take advantage of maternity leave at a level above 18 weeks, the federal Liberals just recently announced a plan to extend employment insurance parental benefit leave. These benefits will be extended to one year by extending parental leave provisions by 35 days and will take effect on January 1, 2001. That is another program that Albertans pay into but many can't take advantage of.

On February 28, 2000, the federal government outlined more details on how it intends to increase parental benefits to a maximum of 50 weeks of combined maternity leave, parental leave, and sickness benefits. The federal government intends to amend the Canada Labour Code so that the period for job protection under the parental leave provision will correspond to the extended employment insurance benefit. The program will also be made more accessible by decreasing insured hours required for such leave to 600 hours from 700 hours.

Changes to the federal legislation will have a great impact on what occurs in Alberta, though it certainly widens the gap between current provincial legislation and federal legislation. Mr. Speaker, Bill 209 serves to shorten that gap. I believe that one year of parental leave is excessive, but half a year, as proposed under my bill, is more reasonable, closer to that available in other provinces of Canada.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to the true beneficiaries of this bill. I want to emphasize that the true beneficiaries of this legislation are the young children of Alberta. When we debate this bill, I want all members to be clear about what is meant by parental leave. When we use the term "parental leave," I hope many of you are not thinking to yourselves: parental holiday. We would be mistaken to interpret parental leave that way, and that is not why we allow parental or maternity leave in this province, to begin with.

Parents who take maternity or parental leave are performing a valuable contribution to Alberta by helping to raise happy, well-adjusted Albertans. Many of us here in the Assembly had the benefit of being raised at least in the early years by one parent who stayed at home. That's the way it was for many of us back then. Many of us in this Assembly may believe that it is the best way to bring a child into the world. Now, we may not be authorities in the field of child care, but many of us are parents, and we know that it is a valid observation, an observation that child care experts do agree with. There are many studies and statistics that demonstrate that there is truth in this hypothesis.

Parent advocacy groups across North America have been very active in promoting early childhood involvement by both parents, particularly since dual-income households have increased in prominence. In fact, Mr. Speaker, seven out of 10 families in this country are dual-income families. Their position is supported by this commonly accepted belief that children whose parents take an active role in their early development are more socially adjusted.

Even further arguments have been made regarding the need for fathers to be as active in early parenting as mothers. Among others, Dr. Paul Amatos of the University of Nebraska demonstrated a direct relationship between children's behaviour and the amount of time and support provided not just by mothers but by fathers as well. In fact, Mr. Speaker, there are volumes of social science research that address the issues of early childhood development and the effect of a young child's environment on how the child will function in society as he or she grows up. The findings of the studies are consistent, indicating that the quality of care vis-a-vis a child's development psychologically, emotionally, and intellectually is consistently better when that care is from a parent as opposed to a paid caregiver. No matter what the facility, there is no equal to parental care in a child's formative years.

The president of the Canadian Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, Dr. Elliott Barker, has argued that nothing is more important in the world today than the nurturing that children receive in the first three years of life. For it is in these earliest years that the capacity for trust, empathy, and affection originates, and if the emotional needs of the child aren't met during these years, permanent emotional damage can occur.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are hardworking and industrious people. Some argue that this bill will somehow slow down small business in this province. I disagree. The net long-term benefit will be a positive one not just for society but for the economy.

In the year 2010 one in three Albertans are predicted to be senior citizens. This is not a bad thing, but with such a dramatically changing demographic in Alberta, it is time for us to focus on the future. Alberta's children are our future, those who are currently the most underrepresented people in our society. Mr. Speaker, I urge all the members of this Assembly to do something for them and support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, there is a question that asks, for example: how will this bill affect the workforce availability in Alberta? In 1997-1998 statistics show that there were 36,500 Alberta infants born, along with 217 adoptions. Also, I've seen from statistics that there are over 1.5 million Albertans working. So with the calculation that I attempted, I can say that in the short term it's very negligible. If all the birth mothers or birth parents take leaves of absence and all the adoptive parents take leaves of absence from work, then the implication of labour availability is less than .4 percent of the labour force in Alberta.

But looking at the long term, there's a multiplying benefit. It's often quoted from the research that $1 spent in early childhood reduces $7 in youth correction. Also, looking at the workforce, I would say that because of parental leave, we will have happier and less stressed-out working parents. That means more productivity and less social problems.

Another view of it is that if you look at 27 weeks in a human life, then I can say that relative to the number of months for human conception, which is nine months, or even looking at human life in terms of the formation age, which is 20 years, which is again looking at 1,040 weeks, and if you look at the production stage of human life, which is 45 years of working life, with all of this 27 weeks is relatively very small.

Thank you. I hope I have support from our Legislature.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand this afternoon to make a few observations in support of Bill 209, the Employment Standards (Parental Leave) Amendment Act, 2000. While supporting the bill, I think we might keep in mind how modest the proposal really is. When you think of this legislation which would increase unpaid adoption leave for an adoptive parent, which would increase unpaid maternity leave to the birth mother to 21 weeks and to an aggregate of 27 weeks of parental leave to the birth parents and contrast that to some European countries who provide a full year of pay for parents who choose to spend the first year at home with their children, then I think it starts to put this proposal in some perspective.

I think the importance of the first years of a child's life has been recognized universally, and again this is a very, very modest proposal. For those of us who have children and who have recently been associated with children . . .

MRS. SOETAERT: Like you? Are you a new grandpa?

DR. MASSEY: Yes. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, I need some relief from the heckling. I think I'll start again.

The importance of those first years, I think, is abundantly clear. The issue is not just care during the first year or first two years of life. Custodial care we can provide, but it's the formation. It's what happens to those youngsters in those first two years and especially that first year and what happens in terms of, in particular, values formation.

A number of authors and researchers have tried to identify what are the things that happen to children during those early formative years. At least one of them has tried to point out how important those first two years are in terms of a youngster gaining self-control and developing empathy. The literature has been fairly supportive that our values are rooted in those early experiences.

The notion of self-control, being able to use one's faculties and one's energies and to have those faculties and energies under control of the will, is extremely important in later life. I think there is strong support from the academic community that self-control begins right at birth and that learning self-control continues very rapidly thereafter. The notion of empathy, the ability to intellectually or imaginatively put ourselves in someone else's position, is again one of the two very basic values that are instilled in children starting at birth.

Writers have identified those two characteristics as being so important in later life. We look at the kinds of problems that we deal with in our society and how much easier it would be if we could be assured that all citizens were empathetic, could feel what other citizens feel. We're able to exercise self-control because it's in that loss of self-control that we find rooted so many of the ills that we face today. It's not just parental care, but it's parenting that we want to foster, and Bill 209 moves us a small way in that direction.

One of the other issues, of course, is the issue of child care centres. I think there's good evidence supporting the work in child care centres, but there are some qualifications. Those child care centres have to have personnel that are the very best that we can hire, the very best qualified that we can have in place, and they have to be excellent facilities that provide a physical and an emotional environment in which the kinds of values that we want instilled can be fostered. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that's not always the case today. Many centres are forced for one reason or another to hire less than qualified caregivers, and many centres are driven by motives other than the care of children. In some centres financial motives are paramount, and that's unfortunate for the children that are enrolled in those centres.

I think there's almost a universal longing for parents to spend more time with their children when they're first born. The growth is so remarkable that you don't have to be around those youngsters long before you see how important that early learning is and how rapidly that early learning takes place.

I wondered about this bill appearing as part of the employment standards. I assume that's the place where it has to be for legal means, but it seems to me that it points to the need of a family policy in the province or a policy to address the needs of children. In terms of early childhood I think many of us are still quite astounded that the kindergarten programs were cut back as they were. It seems to me that if children were dealt with from birth to early childhood in one department or under one jurisdiction, that kind of sacrificing of children wouldn't occur and the kinds of provisions we find in Bill 209 might be more extensive and might sit in context.

The former member indicated that there was a concern on the part of small businesses that this bill might somehow or other penalize them by having to provide these provisions for new parents, but I don't believe that's true. I think everyone in this society recognizes the importance of those first two years of life and certainly those very first early weeks of a child's life, the importance of having parents or adoptive parents or the individuals that are going to be raising them there full-time.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to, along with my colleagues, support Bill 209.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the short two minutes remaining I would like to encourage everyone to support this motion. Edmonton-Norwood, in fact, has a strong background in the reality of communities and what it means when schools close and businesses relocate. Certainly those of us from rural Alberta are well aware of what happens if a school closes in a community.

In fact, in the community I am from, Villeneuve, many years ago I remember when that school closed and how tough it was for that community to stay alive and revitalize once that centre of focus was gone. Certainly, I know many churches are having difficulties staying open in small rural communities as well. So this motion, I think, is a very solid motion, urging the government to look at it and see what can be done.

I think this is not only an issue in parts of larger cities where communities struggle but most certainly in rural Alberta. The places that are farther away from the main centres, I know, struggle often because of lack of population and because of distance to get programs.

So, Mr. Speaker, with those few words of, I hope, convincing encouragement I am hoping that every member here will support this motion. Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 510 lost]

511. Ms Kryczka moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to broaden the mandate of the Interdepartmental Committee on Family Violence to include elder abuse so that its functions are to educate and further raise the awareness of Albertans about this serious problem for seniors, support current government and community initiatives and support improvements on them if needed, and identify gaps in legislation and services to seniors in areas where they might be at risk and to ensure the committee has adequate resources to handle its expanded role as advocate for seniors in Alberta.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and begin debate on Motion 511. Through many different facets of my life I have become aware that elder abuse is a serious problem facing seniors. I have heard from many concerned Albertans as MLA for Calgary-West, as chair of the Seniors' Advisory Council for Alberta, and as chair of the steering committee for the governmentwide study on the impact of the aging population on government programs and services. I am also an Albertan who is deeply concerned with the plight of our seniors. What I have come to realize is the severity of this problem and the fact that a lot of Albertans aren't fully aware of the extent of its existence nor of the programs and initiatives in place to deal with it. So it is difficult to find support to improve present programs if government and the public are not fully aware of the problem that exists.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to start by sharing a few facts with everyone in this House, facts that necessitate action on our behalf now and not later. In November 1999 the long-term care review committee released a report titled Healthy Aging: New Directions for Care. In that report the committee made reference to the fact that although today people over 65 years comprise 9.8 percent of the population, by 2016 that number will rise to 14.5 percent and by 2031 to about 25 percent. So in 30 years one in four Albertans will be a senior citizen. For most of us these seniors will be our children. This is a significant number, and we as a government must ensure that we are readying ourselves now for what will be a greater number and proportion of seniors tomorrow.

If certain seniors' programs or initiatives are not working optimally now, what will happen when one in four Albertans is using them? We need to have workable policies and links to the seniors' community today so that when baby boomers, such as almost everyone in this room, become seniors, we are ready.

I think we have been doing our job for Alberta's seniors. We have among the best seniors' benefit program in the country. We have almost every department in our government liaising with seniors to create the best possible programs for them. We have a health care system that is working for our seniors, and we have countless community groups working and supporting seniors at the grassroots level. But, Mr. Speaker, I think that if there's an area where we can do more, it is responding to and fighting elder abuse.

I look at Motion 511 as one step in a much broader path of progress that needs to occur. As I realize that a motion is a good forum to get debate started, get people talking about an important issue, that is why I want to focus more right now on an overview of elder abuse.

Mr. Speaker, a frustrating characteristic about elder abuse is that it is not limited to one place or one group both from a government perspective in trying to formulate good policy and from a professional perspective in trying to educate to prevent it. What I mean is that abuse of seniors can occur in almost any setting, whether in their own home, another person's home, a seniors' lodge, or a nursing home. Abuse can happen to any senior, whether they are rich, poor, healthy, ill, male, or female. Therefore, it is very important in my comments to define as best I can what elder abuse is and to illustrate that it occurs in many forms and in many places, from private homes to public institutions.

Mr. Speaker, a good definition of elder abuse can be found with the U.S. Center for Elder Abuse. They have defined three basic categories: domestic, institutional, and self-neglect. Domestic elder abuse refers to maltreatment of an older person residing in his or her own home or the home of a caregiver. Institutional abuse refers to the maltreatment of an older person residing in a residential facility; for example, a nursing home, board and care home, foster home, or group home. Self-neglect refers to the conduct of an older person living alone which threatens his or her own health or safety.

From those categories elder abuse is also manifested in four general classes: financial, emotional, physical, and neglect. Elder abuse can occur to anyone, although elders who have mental or physical disabilities are at the greatest risk. Unfortunately, we know victims of elder abuse are most often reluctant to report offenders and are not willing to pursue a criminal investigation. That is why it is difficult to obtain reliable statistics on the occurrence of abuse in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I want to spend some time further defining these different forms of abuse because from this you'll see just how varied the abuse can be. Physical abuse is described as any action done intentionally that causes physical discomfort, pain, or injury, such as hitting or slapping or physical confinement. This is the abuse that most people think about. It is almost the classic idea of abuse, but the reality is that abuse occurs in many different forms.

Emotional abuse can range from denying access to grandchildren to not respecting a senior's privacy to words that are hurtful. Often seniors are threatened in this manner and are coerced into doing things they don't want to do.

Neglect is one of the types of abuse hardest to define. It can be on purpose or a case of not caring about a senior's well-being. Neglect can range from not giving a senior proper food or clothing to failing to provide adequate housing or health care to denial of social contacts and outings to failing to prevent physical harm in the case of disabled or physically weakened seniors.

Financial abuse is also difficult to define because it can occur in many different forms. One of the most prevalent forms is fraud. Financial abuse by means of telemarketing fraud and other scams is a very serious, extensive problem for seniors today. In Canada 40 percent of fraud victims are seniors. Losses to each victim can run from hundreds to thousands of dollars and in some cases much more. This is a serious problem that doesn't get the attention it deserves.

It is estimated that in Canada at least 4 percent of persons over the age of 65 have suffered from one or more serious forms of abuse at the hands of family members or other close contacts, such as financial, physical, mental, or even sexual abuse. The general consensus among experts is that elder abuse is largely underreported, so the figure of 4 percent is considered to be too low. Some experts report the percentage of abuse as high as 8 percent. If you take the 290,000 seniors living in Alberta in 1998 and say that 4 to 8 percent are abused, that means that 11,560 seniors to as high as 23,135 seniors are facing one form of abuse or another. Those numbers are very scary. So, Mr. Speaker, this is the situation we face in Alberta.

In illustrating some basic facts about elder abuse, I have painted a fairly bleak picture, but fortunately that is only one side of this issue. There are many very good programs and initiatives going on in this province with respect to elder abuse that we should be very proud of, with many people at the grassroots level helping countless older Albertans protect and improve their quality of life. There are volunteers and professional staff at Kerby Rotary House, a shelter for abused seniors in Calgary, or the men and women on the elder abuse early intervention team in Edmonton or numerous ministers and employees across government who have a hand in our highly regarded seniors' programs.

A groundbreaking piece of provincial legislation to protect seniors is the Protection for Persons in Care Act. The act, proclaimed January 5, 1998, addresses the abuse of vulnerable persons in government-funded facilities such as nursing homes and senior citizens' lodges. Mr. Speaker, the act makes it mandatory for anyone who has reason to believe that abuse against a client has occurred to report it. Most reports come through the protection for persons in care reporting line operated by Alberta Community Development and are investigated by the department, within whose jurisdiction the act falls.

Mr. Speaker, linked to this act is the long-standing Health Facilities Review Committee, chaired by my colleague from St. Albert, whose main purpose is to routinely review and inspect facilities and observe the manner in which they are operated. The committee also investigates complaints reported through the Protection for Persons in Care Act.

These initiatives are much needed, Mr. Speaker, and it helps ensure that Albertans living in government-funded facilities, many of whom are seniors, receive the protection they need against abuse.

But, Mr. Speaker, in regards to the Protection for Persons in Care Act, this is just a start, as many of those who were involved in the drafting, implementation, and now operation of the act realize. A multidepartmental working group has been reviewing the act, with the work split into two parts. The first part has resulted in many administrative improvements and has led to the creation of the central investigation unit. The second part, currently being reviewed, will further improve the act and may lead to the recommendation that further education and training of facility staff are necessary.

Mr. Speaker, another concern that has been expressed is that the Protection for Persons in Care Act does not address the abuse of vulnerable persons living in their own homes, in private care or family homes, or in any other facility not funded by the government and listed in the act. There is currently little specific legal protection for vulnerable persons living in private care homes, and there are currently very few specific standards or regulations relating to the care of persons in such homes.

So, Mr. Speaker, if we as a government are to encourage private homes as a viable housing option for seniors, which seems to make sense, especially in rural areas where there may not be the demand or developer interest to build a larger facility, we must ensure that there are the proper regulations and the ability to monitor private homes. Otherwise, we are creating a situation in which abuse can occur with no way to monitor the standards and to sanction those who violate them. I have heard this concern for much-needed regulations by almost all professionals working with seniors, from police officers to social agency workers.

Mr. Speaker, another example of a government initiative that is working well is this Interdepartmental Committee on Family Violence, which is housed in Children's Services. When I started my research on this topic, I was not aware of the existence nor of the excellent work this committee has done advocating for all Albertans, seniors included. I am strongly recommending that this committee be given the added responsibility to be full advocates for seniors and to expand their mandate to include elder abuse. The committee has the network of skilled professionals, well-established links to other provinces, and could be a much more effective and strong voice for seniors in Alberta.

As well, this committee works with the Protection against Family Violence Act. The act, proclaimed June 1, 1999, contains provisions permitting the police to obtain a warrant to enter a home in certain emergency situations. In other cases the most appropriate approach is one involving awareness raising, support, and counseling. Such provisions are regarded as instruments of particular use in the intervention against seniors' abuse. We as a government need to ensure that the Interdepartmental Committee on Family Violence has our full support both in spirit and in dollars.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to spend a moment discussing some of the recommendations that came out of the long-term care review, or Broda report, which I had the honour to vice-chair. Several items mentioned in this report have a direct impact on fighting elder abuse. Recommendation 31 includes introducing a new continuing care act. The new act would, among other things, "establish a mechanism for monitoring the quality of care provided in the home living stream, the supportive living stream, and the facility stream."

Recommendations 44 and 45 include "support informal caregivers" and "expand respite care," two strategies to assist in alleviating problems that can arise. Training and support groups that teach coping skills to informal caregivers and provide flexible amounts of respite care are needed. This makes sense. If caregivers are inadequately trained or lacking in support, it is easy to see how they can get stressed out or burned out and then do something they might otherwise not do, such as commit abuse.

Another very important consideration that pertains to elder abuse is taking steps to explore ethical issues. A crucial ethical imperative is truly preserving and promoting personal dignity and autonomy for the elderly. This imperative is of vital consideration. We do promote the best interests of our seniors, and we do work to improve their quality of life. Respect for seniors' dignity has to be a sincere part of our governmentwide policies.

It is very easy to sometimes forget that seniors are still vital adults capable of making their own decisions. Many, even family members, see seniors as vulnerable and therefore easy prey, and their actions are done out of disrespect. Others may be frustrated by lack of support or may not have the appropriate training and skills. Seniors themselves need to be reassured that they have the right to stand up for themselves when they are abused.

What we must do as a government, Mr. Speaker, is continue to work to ensure that the many excellent recommendations from the long-term care report are acted upon. I'm happy to say that we have already begun, for example, by adding $265.8 million to long-term care facilities and dollars for more frontline staff. The 1999-2000 health budget provided our RHAs with new funding to hire at least another additional 1,000 full-time, permanent frontline staff and a total of 2,400 over the next three years.

The Fair Trading Act, housed in Government Services, protects consumers through increased remedies and enforcement tools and tougher penalties that will discourage marketplace fraud. A key program in battling fraud is the Hang Up on Fraud campaign, that has helped consumers identify phone fraud and protect themselves from being taken advantage of by fraudulent telemarketers.

Turning to community-based initiatives, the Kerby Rotary House, which is operated by the Kerby Centre in Calgary, and the Calgary Seniors Resource Society are excellent examples. Kerby Rotary House is a multipurpose facility for abused seniors providing a wide range of counseling and information services and is dedicated to the enhancement of quality of life for older persons and the promotion of independence and dignity.

Kerby Rotary House was opened in May 1999 and is a last-resort haven for seniors in abusive situations, providing them the counseling and support they need to break out of the cycle of abuse. It is seen as a unique shelter model for all of North America. Calgaryans and Albertans should be proud of this initiative. However, Kerby Rotary House is presently not funded as a shelter, as are other shelters in the province that provide for women and children. This need must be seriously reviewed by government.

There is a similar community initiative in Edmonton, but it involves a special working relationship between the Edmonton Police Service and the community. Their mission is to prevent and respond to elder abuse by working in partnership with the community, therefore enhancing the safety and well-being of older adults. As I mentioned before, the elder abuse early intervention team is making a definite impact on fighting elder abuse. The team provides outreach, emergency response, short-term counseling, referral, and community education. I can say from personal experience and meeting the team members that they truly care about our seniors and are a valuable resource to the Edmonton seniors' community. They are battling the unwillingness of today's seniors to report abuse through laying a groundwork of trust and security.

Mr. Speaker, we must ensure as a government that these community groups have our fullest support. We pride ourselves on community-based initiatives, and these are examples of some of the best.

So I have presented an outline of elder abuse in Alberta. I won't deny that we have a problem in elder abuse, a problem that has the potential to get proportionately bigger as our population ages. As I have illustrated, many positive initiatives and programs exist that are dealing with this serious problem and must continue in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I want to wrap up my comments today with a few suggestions on where we can go from here. First and foremost, we must raise public awareness to educate Albertans, including seniors, that this problem exists, creating a climate where seniors will actually seek help for themselves when they need it. Seniors may even have to report a member of their own family. We must also educate and reinforce to people that the most vulnerable people in our society deserve to be treated with the same respect as others. Second, we must promote and support current initiatives at community and government levels. Third, we must better co-ordinate existing government and community initiatives through greater communication. Many good initiatives could be even better. Fourth, we must ensure that input from seniors is included and taken seriously in all of our proposed initiatives. They often know what works best for them, so their input is vital. Finally, we must continue to work to change the attitudes of Albertans in general towards seniors. Seniors are a valued resource to our province.

Mr. Speaker, I look at Motion 511 as one step in a process that needs to be undertaken in order to improve the situation of seniors in Alberta. I can't overemphasize the seriousness of this problem for our seniors today and tomorrow and how important it is that we have a coherent, comprehensive policy platform to address the abuse of seniors.

I thank all of my colleagues for listening to my comments, and I urge everyone to support Motion 511. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My colleague beside me is giving me a hard time about elder abuse. It's because he's older than I am.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to speak to this motion. It's difficult to talk about elder abuse because in many cases it's denied. I think back to about 25 years ago when we actually admitted that there was abuse in homes and that women needed shelters. It was hard for a society to admit and to say, "We need this kind of support in the community," but we did that, and we've made I think great strides in awareness about abuse in families and abuse towards women. Hopefully, someday we won't need shelters because it will be so unacceptable in society to abuse people and to abuse women. We're not at that stage, but we have that reality, and we're working towards it when it comes to abuse against women.

I think we're at the stage in society where we're actually admitting that there is elder abuse. That's a very hard thing for people to talk about. Number one, sometimes it's children who are abusing their parents, and it's hard because a parent doesn't want to say: my child is abusing me. So often it's hidden, I think far more than we realize. I've seen financial abuse in some families, in fact. It makes me angry. Yet I see parents handing over money for all kinds of things, and then they end up unable to stay in their homes, unable to have finer things in their life because they've once again given money to a child who treats that person as if they're an unending supply of money. I see that.

I know that the member mentioned sales campaigns. Actually, one couple that I can think of bought a $900 vacuum when they had a vacuum system within their house and then, embarrassed to tell about it, just said: no, no; that's what we wanted. That's really sad. To protect elderly people like that is a big, big undertaking. Some seniors, God bless them, are very outspoken and can speak up for themselves and make the world know what's going on in the facility that they're living in. If the food isn't good enough or if they're cold or if they aren't getting good care, they're very vocal. But there are very many who are not and who feel that if they didn't have this place to stay, they wouldn't be anywhere, so they don't dare to complain. They don't have a lot of family support and are feeling that they're a bit alone in the world and aren't vocal about concerns that they have. I have seen that happen too.

Now, I am glad the member said that this is just a small step, because it is. I mean, I support the motion. Of course I support the motion, but urging the government is a small step. I would like to see so much more done, as the member mentioned, and I'm glad she did.

Maybe the member has seen and maybe other members in this Assembly have seen the letter from the Alberta Association for Community Living, the Developmental Disabilities Resource Centre of Calgary, and FAIRE, which stands for Families Allied to Influence Responsible Eldercare. In that letter there are many concerns expressed that we should be addressing when it comes to eldercare, and certainly one of the things they talk about is the act that we have in this province, the Protection for Persons in Care Act. I know this is a motion that will go towards supporting that. Some of the real issues, though, that need to be addressed weren't addressed in the act and can't possibly be addressed in a motion. I think we certainly have to look at some of the things that have to be addressed, at more than just the motion.

Some of the things that could be addressed are the deficiencies regarding client applicability, protection, and rights. There's an issue of clients who need advocates. Nowadays I guess we call it global communication, but families are global as well, and often people do not live near their parents or grandparents. I feel very fortunate in that I live near my parents, near my husband's family, and in fact near my husband's grandparents, who are 91 and 89 and still live in their own home and do very well. But a lot of people don't have that kind of family support, so we are talking about a need for the role of advocates for seniors in different facilities. I think we have to look at the client's right to be represented by his or her family, guardian, or spokesperson.

We also have to address the issue of clients who may not want the alleged incident to be reported and maybe look at the background of why that isn't being reported, why they want it hidden. You know, there are all kinds of issues there. I think we have to address the potential jeopardy facing abused clients following disclosure, because once they do disclose what's happened, I'm sure there are issues surrounding that and feelings of guilt about what they're talking about, who they're talking about. So we have to address those things.

I think we have to require the victim and/or the victim's spokesperson to be informed of the reporting of abuse and of the recommendations made in the investigator's report. We also have to provide the abused person with legal representation, counsel, and other benefits of the law. Often in these cases we're talking about people who do not have money and cannot follow up with legal help.

I think we have to honour the abused client's constitutional right to an appeal process, and we have to articulate the interests of the abused person, which will take precedence over all other interests, and provide an abused person the opportunity to choose an informal means of resolving complaints. I think we've often seen that maybe we can resolve things without going through the court system, and I think we have to look at that.

I think sometimes we have problems in communication, as indicated by these three groups that I referred to earlier, the AACL, the Developmental Disabilities Resource Centre in Calgary, and the FAIRE organization. One of the things that is not being addressed right now in current legislation and that we should be looking at is to allow for collaborative discussion regarding the allegation or the dismissal of a complaint, the investigative procedure, or its outcome. I've seen this in some institutions, where an elderly person complains about something, feels intimidated by the person they go to with the complaint, and then as a result other people back right off. If it's an issue to all and they want to take it to the director of the institution and one person speaks up and then gets put down, everyone else backs away. We've got to realize that that's a reality, too, that we all have to address.

I think within the act that we do have to work with there's no definition of a criminal act. We also have to differentiate between an abusive act and a criminal act; clarify what is meant by "a reasonable level of safety"; clarify what is meant by "reasonable and probable grounds"; clarify what constitutes an unfounded complaint; clarify what constitutes an investigation; require that the alleged perpetrator, the victim, or the victim's family or spokesperson be informed of the reporting of the alleged abuse, the recommendations made in the investigator's report, or the minister's decision; communicate who may assume the role of investigator and the qualifications that are required; and clarify what constitutes a criminal records check.

We also need to clarify why abusive acts by persons with mental disabilities and abusive acts by persons with demential illness are treated differently under the act and to track the nature of calls received other than those that are reporting an abusive situation. And you know what? We have to monitor private caregivers. I realize that the hon. member mentioned that as well. We need to be looking at that. This motion does not address that, but we should be looking at changes in the act to continue what this small step does. It should identify who is qualified to make the decision whether or not an alleged situation is abusive and therefore will be investigated.

When we're talking about agencies, there are things that are not required yet of agencies, and we have to act upon that. I don't mean to belittle the motion. The motion is good, and it urges the government, but truly action is needed. Certainly I think that people should be aware of what the act does, and some of the suggestions by these three groups are that the act be posted in a conspicuous place in the facility and that abuse protocols, proceedings, and guiding principles be developed. I would venture to say that most agencies would willingly do that and would actually make their residents and their clients well aware of their rights and what tools they have to address issues of concern. I would say that very good agencies would do that and would gladly be an example to others, but we should enact it. We should put it in an act.

We should require agencies to be accountable for the alleged occurrence or cause of the abuse. We have to routinely assess and address risk factors that contribute to the occurrence of abuse and initiate and publicly disclose safeguard mechanisms for preventing or reducing the likelihood of abuse from occurring. Agencies should be subject to repercussions for failing to develop and implement safeguards that address the client's needs and vulnerability, should inform the abused person's family or spokesperson of the alleged incident, and should log incidents of abuse for routine assessment and documentation by the Health Facilities Review Committee. They should protect, counsel, or provide crisis care to an abused client following disclosure, accept responsibility for providing legal counsel to abused residents, and routinely educate clients, families, and staff about the act and the characteristics of an effective safeguard.

We should have policies and procedures regarding disciplinary action up to and including termination of employment of employees alleged as abusers and follow through on recommendations from the minister and address systemic issues that potentially lead to abuse such as staff ratio – we've talked about that often in here – lack of staff training around abuse, and lack of agency policies. Now, I know that many agencies and organizations are getting much better at training staff, but they often find themselves short of staff, so that reality is out there and needs to be addressed as well. We have to maintain a standard level of quality of care that might minimize abusive situations occurring.

I would like to continue on with some deficiencies regarding investigations. When we ask for investigations to occur, these people have to be trained in investigative procedures. I mean, they have to be qualified. What does it take to be a qualified investigator? The investigator should be knowledgeable in the areas of cognitive disability or demential illnesses. We should require the investigator to determine and report the underlying cause of the abuse; require the investigator to engage all involved parties in collaborative discussion; require the investigator to discuss the incident with the victim and the victim's family; stipulate a deadline for closure of investigations and ministerial decision-making; ensure a fair, thorough, and impartial investigation; and stipulate that all reports of alleged abuse be investigated.

Now, there were other deficiencies that haven't been addressed regarding consumers. The act is subject to a review process where consumer representation is absent. It fails to ensure ongoing opportunities to educate consumers about what they have at their disposal through the act and to safeguard mechanisms for preventing or reducing the likelihood of abuse occurring. It fails to ensure ongoing community consultations regarding the act's effectiveness. It fails to provide an opportunity for the presence of consumer advocacy in the life of persons in care and fails to provide consumers a mechanism to access the names of agencies involved in abuse allegations and the number of allegations reported under any given agency.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have indicated just a few of the many areas that need to be addressed when talking about persons in care, when talking about elder abuse. I know that this motion was made with the best intentions. It is a very small step. There's an opportunity to put words into action, I think, by addressing the Protection of Persons in Care Act, which to me would do far more in addressing elder abuse.

I will support the motion, but it doesn't nearly address the issues that are out there. I have suggested several things that could be changed to address that. I would encourage all members of the Assembly that when they are looking at legislation over the next however many days we sit or the next time we meet, certainly this is one act that could be addressed, that could be brought in with really strong amendments and with the ability to implement it. That would be real action put to words.

I support the motion, but I encourage action. Rather than just speaking to an issue, I think it's incumbent upon us to act. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise and speak to Motion 511, addressing the issue of elder abuse. Elder abuse is, in my view, a very serious issue, a very serious concern in our province and one that we do need to bring out from behind closed doors and talk about in public and start to deal with. In my past life as a solicitor – that's practising law, I should add – I had occasion to deal with situations where elder abuse was a significant concern. I don't often find myself agreeing with Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, but it's a concern that we do need to discuss, that we do need to bring out in the open, that we do need to have people understand happens to our neighbours, happens in our communities, happens to people that we know, and that they are scared to talk about it. They are reluctant to talk about it because in many cases it happens at the hands of family members.

We have to be careful though. Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert suggests that we should be bringing in legislation. I'm not averse to the concept that we need to strengthen some of the legislation that we have, but more important and the gist of the motion that is before the House today is the concept that we should have a working committee looking at the issue, that we should be using that mechanism to raise the profile of the issue, and that we should be using that mechanism to make it an important and a discussed issue in our communities. Legislation by itself is not the answer to everything. We may need the force of legislation at some point. We may need to improve the legislation we already have at some point.

The most important thing we could do to deal with the problem of elder abuse today, as I think we are trying to do with the issue of domestic violence today, is to bring it out into the open, to shine a light on it, to show people that it's there, that it exists, that it's not something we can pretend happens in other parts of the world or to other people. It happens now. It happens in our community. It happens to our friends and our neighbours. It's something that's insidious. It's something that doesn't get discussed and doesn't get brought out into the light of day. So I would like to congratulate the Member for Calgary-West for bringing forward this motion and for suggesting that it's an area that needs more attention. I think she's raised it in the appropriate manner, that we should "broaden the mandate of the Interdepartmental Committee on Family Violence," because elder abuse is family violence, whether it's emotional abuse or financial abuse or physical abuse, and all three of those happen in our communities today.

As an MLA and as chair of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, the Member for Calgary-West has worked hard on behalf of Alberta seniors and has helped to bring their concerns and issues to the attention of this Legislature and to the government. Again, in this manner, by bringing forward this motion, I think she is showing real leadership in bringing out an issue, Mr. Speaker, that most people don't want to talk about. They don't want to talk about it because it's something we should be ashamed of when it happens in our communities and to our friends and to our relatives.

I'm interested in this motion and in exploring increased collaboration with other departments to address elder abuse. As our Premier mentioned in his annual televised address to Albertans earlier this year, seniors are a very important part of this province. Through their wisdom and dedication and community spirit they make valuable contributions to the province, and it's indisputable that today's seniors helped to build the province and establish the wonderful quality of life that Albertans enjoy today. That's why it's such a crime when we have seniors who are scared in their own homes, seniors who are unable to let people know that they're being abused, who in some cases perhaps are even unaware of the fact that they're being abused. So we do need to find ways to deal with that issue, and the first step is really one of discussion, one of communication, one of education, one of bringing it out into the open and making sure that we talk about it and find ways to deal with it as a community.

Elder abuse, Mr. Speaker, whether it's physical, emotional, or financial, is simply unacceptable. Alberta Justice has and will continue to work with other departments to prevent elder abuse, to provide support and information to victims of elder abuse, and to prosecute where possible those who commit this terrible crime.

The whole issue of awareness and of victims' needs. We have many programs now available to help victims of violence or victims of crime, but in many cases we don't have. A question came up in question period today on an unrelated matter but in a similar context, where the programs are in place, where the programs that we need are there, but the people who need them don't take advantage of those programs. So to a great extent, again it's a question of education but also a question of providing the forum and the mechanism so that the people who need the program can take advantage of the program, because in many cases people are living in personal residences or even in institutions and are afraid to step out and let somebody know that they need that kind of help.

The current business plan for Alberta Justice and Attorney General reflects the commitment of this government to protecting, supporting, and providing information to victims of crime, and I think we have to look at that in the context of elder abuse to see how we can do a better job in that area. So again I think that the concept of making it part of the mandate of the interdepartmental committee is a very, very important one.

It's important to make Alberta seniors aware that help is available to them when they need it. As I say, we have programs right across this province for victims of crime to help victims and their families, but unfortunately in many cases we don't provide the access that's necessary to enable those who need it to be able to access the programs easily and in a manner which perhaps would calm or assuage their fear that they might have retribution if they were to take advantage of those programs.

We have a couple of very important pieces of legislation already, Mr. Speaker, and again I respond to Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, who said that we need more legislation. The Victims of Crime Act is guided by key principles that focus on the needs of the victim, principles that describe the importance of treating victims with courtesy, compassion, and respect for their privacy concerns. For victims of elder abuse or any other crime, the legislation protects them from further abuse and considers their best interests during the criminal justice process. But, again, although that legislation is there with good intention, with the tools that are necessary at that end of the program, we don't have the process which would encourage a victim of elder abuse to step forward, to come out and say: I'm being abused, and I want to use this process. We don't yet have processes in place which make many of those elders who are being abused comfortable that they can come out and access that and get that protection, so there's still work to be done.

The Protection against Family Violence Act, which came into force on June 1, 1999, is a law that gives police the power to move quickly when seniors are at risk of violence in their own home from a family member. It gives Albertans immediate protection with respect to an emergency protection order, which allows police to temporarily remove an abuser from the home. For seniors the law helps eliminate the fear that they'll have to leave their home because a family member is abusing them, and it also gives the authorities certain rights to investigate and go into a home where there's a real apprehension that there is a problem.

Again, we need to do more work to make sure that seniors and other family members are aware of these laws and are aware of the ability to use these laws when either they are being abused or when they know of someone who's being abused and who is not able to come forward and identify that they are being abused and take steps to remedy that. So we do need to make better use of that law, and we need to make better use of that law by making sure that Albertans are aware of the fact that that law is there for protection not just in domestic family violence situations but certainly in the area of elder abuse as well.

I'm quite proud of the support that the department gives to community agencies that provide crime prevention programs. The provincial crime prevention strategy announced December 1, 1999, introduced a new grant fund to further support development of community-based crime prevention initiatives. This is an area where we could get Albertans involved to find ways to do more work in the area of crime prevention, and certainly preventing elder abuse is, in my view, a very important crime prevention program. So I'm pleased that these crime prevention programs are available. I think that we have some very excellent legislation available to assist, particularly the Protection against Family Violence Act, but I am concerned that we don't go far enough in making certain that our seniors are protected from abuse, whether that abuse happens to them in an institution or whether it happens to them in their own home.

We've tried very hard to make sure that there are mechanisms in place to allow the reporting of abuse, crime prevention programs in place to encourage the reporting of abuse, and programs which would steer away from abuse. We have victims of violence programs and victims of crime programs which could be utilized. We have the Protection against Family Violence Act which could be utilized. We have many pieces of legislation in place. What we really need, Mr. Speaker, is a greater awareness, a greater understanding in our community that elder abuse is real, that it's insidious, that it's a horrendous thing to be happening. It need no longer be hidden under a bushel basket. It should be brought out into the light. It should be exposed for what it is, and we should be educating our community as to the availability of resources to deal with it. Yes, if we need to have better legislation or if we need to have better programming, if the programming that we have doesn't deal with the issues directly, then we need to examine that and come up with better ways of dealing with it.

That's not the first order of business, Mr. Speaker. It's the order of business that we need to take on after we have addressed the issue of community awareness and raised the level of intolerance in the community in the area where intolerance is appropriate, and that is in the area of elder abuse. We cannot, we should not tolerate abuse of anyone in the community, but particularly some of the types of abuse that some elders have to put up with are not acceptable.

I think that the hon. Member for Calgary-West, by bringing forward this motion at this time to encourage specifically the interdepartmental committee dealing with this issue and by leading the way to bring this out into the open and encourage that discussion, is making exactly the right move, and I would urge members to support the motion.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to vote in support of Motion 511, and that's because I think this is an area that needs to be pursued by this government. The difficulty I have with the motion is not with the subject matter, that being one of elder abuse. The only hesitation I would have in terms of voting in support of it is this. The Interdepartmental Committee on Family Violence really started out from an initiative of the office for the prevention of family violence. Before that, within the once department of the solicitor general there was a working committee looking at domestic violence issues, particularly focusing on violence against women and children, particularly violence against women and children at the hands of men.

While I acknowledge that there are several forms of violence and abuse that take place within families and that there is no form that is more or less acceptable than any other form, I must say that from my own experience working within the criminal justice system, the predominant form of violence is violence against women and children, primarily where men are the perpetrators. So I was a little disappointed when I saw the focus moving away from dealing seriously in a cross-government fashion, in a pan-government fashion, with that particular form of violence.

By now making the mandate of the Interdepartmental Committee on Family Violence include all forms of elder abuse, I'm afraid it may just serve as a means for the government to say, "Oh, yeah, we're dealing with the issue; look; we've now expanded the mandate of this particular committee," instead of being able to say: "Well, we are serious about the issue because we have committed new funding, because we have created new programs, because we have made it a core part of the business of the ministry responsible for seniors' programs. You can tell we're serious about this issue because it does in fact have a legislative framework around it."

I am very mindful of the legislation that the Minister of Justice just reiterated for the House, and I think the government is moving in the right direction in some of its crime prevention initiatives. But the problem still remains that by simply expanding the mandate of an existing interdepartmental committee, you will not be demonstrating any real, serious commitment to eradicating elder abuse. The interdepartmental committee is already well challenged and well burdened with its existing mandate.

Government programs have already been criticized for dealing inadequately with other forms of domestic violence situations. We are only slowly beginning to see government action in terms of resolving long-standing family law matters. We have not seen any real commitment in terms of expanding the role of children's service authorities or the Children's Advocate in terms of dealing with children who are at risk. We still wake up to headlines, Mr. Speaker, which in very tragic large type tell us of new tragedies dealing with women who have been abused. So I think we need to do more than simply refer this to a committee.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The time given to debate this motion has now concluded, and I must put the question on Motion 511.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 511 as amended carried unanimously]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: May we have unanimous consent to go to the next order of business rather than try and do it in one minute?

Bill Pr. 3

Westcastle Development Authority Repeal Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move second reading of Bill Pr. 3, the Westcastle Development Authority Repeal Act. The original act was put in place in about 1985 for the MD of Pincher Creek and the town of Pincher Creek to develop and go out and promote a skiing experience in the Westcastle Valley known as Westcastle ski hill. With operating the ski hill for a number of years by themselves, they have since developed an arrangement with a private corporation. The private corporation has purchased the assets of the ski hill from the Westcastle Development Authority, and they are expanding the facilities and operating the facilities as a private venture. Thus the Westcastle Development Authority no longer needs to be in place, and therefore their desire is to have it dissolved. Bill Pr. 3 gives that authority.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:30

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know we don't often speak to the private bills in the Assembly, but if I may for a few short moments just bring to light some of the things that have come up during the discussion of this bill. Some questions were asked during the committee meeting which were answered. Research was done, and in fact we had statutory declarations from two people, Mr. Norris Graham and Mr. Douglas Evans. They requested the petitioner's counsel to provide a statutory declaration from the appropriate official representing Westcastle Development Authority to confirm the status of the authority's outstanding liabilities. To their knowledge, there were none, and they signed statutory declarations to indicate that.

One thing that was not mentioned in the committee that I raise for people to consider is the now issue with the Siksika Nation, who are expressing concern about the Westcastle development and concerns around the issue of the transfer of land and their involvement in that. So I just bring that to your attention. Actually, it was an article in the Calgary Herald that brought to our attention that – in fact, the headline is "Natives threaten to seize Castle Mountain" and "Band wants traditional lands returned."

It could be a whole different area? Is that what you're indicating? Then that would give me cause for relief. I just wanted that brought up. I'm sorry; I didn't know that that wasn't a part of it. I'm glad it's not, because that would certainly be cause for concern.

With that, I appreciate the clarification from the nod by the chair. Then the concerns that were addressed had been met, so I thank you.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you. I know that this is going to occupy the minds of everyone here for a long time to come, and we should study each paragraph and clause in detail and each word, the spelling and the like. On behalf of the Member for Calgary-Glenmore I would move that the question be put on Bill Pr. 2, the William Roper Hull Child and Family Services Amendment Act, 2000.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Bill Pr. 3
Westcastle Development Authority Repeal Act

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to offer a quick comment before calling the question on this, and it deals with an item that was brought up in second reading on Bill Pr. 3 by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert. The Westcastle Development Authority Act was originally set up, as I said, to look for developers in the Westcastle ski hill. The Westcastle ski hill is not at this point in time under their authority any longer. It's in private hands, and that particular transaction went through all of the government discussions of the day here a couple of years ago.

The situation around land claims from First Nations people does not apply to this particular piece of property, but it does apply to the Special Places 2000 program. In the special places special management area that is surrounding the ski hill, there were some areas where there were some native concerns and some significant areas they were involved in, but I just want to reassure the hon. member that this particular area, where the development is and the ski hill itself is, does not include any of those concerns that were involved in the special places component.

So with that, I'd like to just say that I'd like to move that the question now be put on Bill Pr. 3, the Westcastle Development Authority Repeal Act.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few questions with regard to this bill that I'm hoping can be answered before we take the final vote on it here in committee, and I think this is the appropriate time to ask them. I've followed the development of the Westcastle ski hill and the impact it's had on the surrounding area for some time. Certainly since I have been elected, it's been an ongoing issue in the region, as the member knows, and I have some questions that perhaps you could answer for me today.

What's being done in terms of the transition between the authority and the new operators in terms of environmental impact studies or cumulative impact studies with regard to environmental issues, particularly land use and migration of species?

Before the question is called, I'm hoping that at least some preliminary answers can be put to those two questions, and upon receiving those answers, I might I have some follow-up questions, Mr. Chairman.

MR. COUTTS: I just want to make it really, really clear here that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is asking questions about the private-sector corporation development when they purchased the property and set up their development plans and expanded on the ski hill. She's asking questions about that particular property as it applies today. I think the question that she's put forward is better served as maybe a question to the Minister of Environment at another time, because her question does not involve the transaction between the Westcastle Development Authority and the MD of Pincher Creek as they set up for the private sector to take over.

This act does not monitor anything that is going on presently. That is presently being monitored by the Department of Environment and the MD of Pincher Creek. What this act does is basically just gets rid of the development authority because the property is in the hands of the private sector at this point in time.

I think her questions are better served in another venue at another time in the Assembly. Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I certainly respect the comments that the member has made with regard to my questions, but I think it is always appropriate in this Assembly for us to question any change in direction in terms of lands that provide critical habitat for species in this province. Particularly when we see an authority which is at least a quasi-public body handing over any kind of control or authority to the private sector, then these are issues that do need to be flagged and identified.

Certainly I will pursue these questions with the Minister of Environment, but I think it's important for them to be on the record at this time in terms of the significance of this area. It's in a very environmentally fragile region, and it does provide critical habitat for species at risk in this province. It is a major stumbling block to providing wildlife corridors from Yellowstone to Yukon, which is an initiative that I know the Minister of Environment is looking at supporting.

You know, we're not just talking about a ski hill here. We're talking about a massively expanded ski hill. We're talking about at least one 18-hole golf course, if not two of them, and the corresponding widening of roads and improving of roads. We're talking about significant requests being made for hotels and other kinds of accommodation in the area, including camping. We're talking about concerns that have been raised in the past about off-road vehicles in the vicinity.

This is a hugely potentially contentious environmental issue in the region. I don't think I would be doing my duty as the Environment critic in this Assembly if I didn't flag this as an issue. We're seeing this move completely into private hands. We saw a lot of the decision-making and development in that particular region happen behind closed doors in this province. It is going to be an ongoing issue. There is no doubt that it has been flagged as a contentious problem for the future in terms of environmental regions. I know that the member who introduced this bill lives in the region and has worked hard with the people who live in the area to find satisfactory resolution to some of the issues that have occurred there. However, having said that, it has addressed primarily the issues concerning development, not the issues concerning environment, in terms of what I've seen.

So I think it's very important to put these concerns on the record. We will undertake to follow them up with the Minister of Environment, but I will say on the record that every time this development touches something that happens in this Assembly, we will be speaking to it.

Reappointment of Auditor General

18. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Legislative Offices agreed to on April 19, 2000, to recommend to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor that Mr. Peter Valentine be reappointed as Auditor General for the province of Alberta.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did want to make a couple of comments on the reappointment of the Auditor General, partly because I was a member of the Legislative Offices Committee when the current Auditor General was first appointed and partly because I think the Auditor General has served the province well. I think there can be general agreement that the reports we have received have been fair and that the Auditor General has gone out of his way to make sure that any criticisms his reports contain are clear and that some direction is given in terms of solving the kinds of problems he has identified.

I think it's a difficult task that the Auditor General has, and in particular I think it's going to be even more difficult with the reorganization of the government; for instance, the incorporation of education and advanced education now into one department. As that has proceeded, trying to keep a paper trail that is easily followed is, I think, going to be a challenge for the Auditor General, and it's important of course that the Auditor General do that job well.

If there are any reservations, Mr. Speaker, I suspect they would be surrounding two incidents. One was the purchase of some new furniture when this province was undergoing the first very severe budget cuts in the early '90s, and I wondered at the wisdom of that action by the Auditor General in terms of providing leadership within government. But that aside, I guess the only other incident that comes to mind is the more recent one with the use of promotional items. I realize that that's part and parcel of some government activity, but again the wisdom of being engaged in that kind of activity, given the Auditor General's job to ride as watchdog on government spending, I think is something that could be questioned. I'm sure the Auditor General is wiser now in hindsight in terms of being involved in that kind of activity.

There's one task that the Auditor General has not undertaken, and I guess I remain curious as to why not. That is any sort of critical analysis of the management schemes adopted by the government and government departments, and I'm thinking in particular of the management scheme employed in Learning that depends on the use of key performance indicators.

It's a scheme that I don't believe the Auditor General has commented upon other than to question whether or not departments and institutions are fulfilling the mandate of such a management scheme. Given his perspective and the kind of controversy that surrounds management by objectives, which is what the key performance indicator scheme is really predicated on, I find it rather puzzling that he hasn't found it necessary to at least evaluate the usefulness of that scheme as a way of the government managing its financial affairs and having made them such an important part of the business plan. So it's a curiosity.

I suspect I should put pen to paper and ask the Auditor General directly why he hasn't found cause to comment and to analyze and maybe to point out some alternative management schemes that if the government were to adopt they might find useful.

So with those few comments I'm delighted to support the reappointment, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had an opportunity to serve on the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices as well as participate in the Public Accounts Committee, so I've had many involvements with the Auditor General. Of course, I've also made it my business to read carefully his reports every year and particularly some of his special duty reports. One that I'm intimately familiar with, of course, is the review of the circumstances surrounding the refinancing with tax backstopped dollars for West Edmonton Mall. So when I learned that the current Auditor General, Mr. Peter Valentine, was being recommended for reappointment, I thought about whether that would be a good or a bad thing.

Mr. Speaker, I have utmost respect for the office of the Auditor General and the men and women that staff it. I do share some of the quibbles of my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods, who spoke of perhaps some questionable decisions made about expenditures, but on the other hand to the best of my knowledge the Auditor General has run his office within budget in or under the line each and every year and makes spending decisions I suppose like any of us would in running an office such as that with an eye on the bottom line and trying to tease the best value out of every dollar spent.

Certainly I may not have joined him in some of the individual decisions that he made, but at the end of the day he's accountable for those, and I guess the proof is in the pudding. The committee to which he is accountable has recommended him for reappointment, and I'm sure that decision was not taken lightly. The Auditor General appointment is usually for a relatively long period of time. I understand that it could be for as long as eight years and typically five years in terms of appointment. This report, which recommends Mr. Valentine's reappointment, I believe calls for the term to be two years, and I question the wisdom of that.

The Auditor General needs to be focused on the task, not on maintaining his job, and I'm not suggesting for a minute that Mr. Valentine is not focused on his task, but this two-year appointment just makes me wonder why the change. I would like to see an Auditor General there for a long enough period of time to become intimately familiar with the breadth and the scope of government service and would like to see that any reappointment be consistent in terms of making sure that the auditor of record for the people's business is somebody who isn't going to be at some point quickly looking to move on to something else. It could be that Mr. Valentine has other plans maybe that he shared with the committee, that aren't in the report, that would explain his relatively short period of reappointment. I'm not familiar with any reasons why. I just wonder why it is that his reappointment is for such a limited period of time.

Now, on the one hand I could argue that it's a bad thing to reappoint the Auditor General for just a couple of years, but on the other hand I could argue that within two years there will no doubt be a general election, and of course I'm hoping there will be a change of government, Mr. Speaker. The new government would then have an opportunity to meet with the Auditor General. It would be at that point in time when a new government with that Auditor General would be able to make the decision whether or not Mr. Valentine was to continue, and it would be in the normal cycle of things, given that it's only a two-year reappointment. So maybe it'll be fortuitous that it's a limited reappointment.

In any case, I would hope that the Auditor General is able to pursue his work, particularly when it comes to convincing the government in regard to the need to move to consolidated budgeting. It is an ongoing and a long-standing dispute between the office of the Auditor General and government departments. I agree with the Auditor General's position. I think the government books should reflect the totality of public money expenditures, particularly since the areas that are excluded from the consolidated budgets at this point are areas that have to do with health care, K to 12 education, postsecondary education.

I don't buy the government's arguments that they would somehow be accused of micromanaging or meddling in the affairs of health authorities or school boards or postsecondary institution boards. I mean, the Minister of Learning just recently micromanaged the decision to do with French immersion in Spruce Grove and Stony Plain. So if they can reach inside those other organizations and provide the kind of direction that was apparently provided in that case, it really sounds hollow when the government says that they can't move to consolidated budgeting because they're afraid of being accused of micromanaging.

So in summary, Mr. Speaker, I support the office of the Auditor General being an independent legislative office. I have been pleased with the work that Mr. Valentine has done and the work done in his office under his direction. I would encourage the Legislative Offices Committee to carefully think about the terms of appointment, and I would encourage Mr. Valentine to continue his work in regard to consolidated budgeting and helping the government accept what I think is very sound judgment and a very sound recommendation in that regard. So I will be supporting Government Motion 18.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling Clarification

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The chair hesitates to correct the hon. member. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora did refer that the government will have to review the Auditor General's appointment or something to that effect yet later on went back and made mention of the fact that the Auditor General is in fact an officer of the Legislative Assembly and not an officer of the government. Just so that no hon. members would be confused by that.

[Government Motion 18 carried]

head: Third Reading

Bill 5 Land Titles Amendment Act, 2000

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move for third reading Bill 5, Land Titles Amendment Act, 2000.

It's had some discussion over the course of its passage through second reading and in committee, but again, for the benefit of members, it's an act which brings up to date certain items relative to the land titles system. In particular, now that we have the benefit of electronics and computers, there's no longer a need for both a north Alberta land registration district and a south Alberta land registration district. It also has the benefit, then, of changing that to a land titles office and changes the seal of office and does some other relatively administrative things.

It's a bill which will bring things up to date. It's a useful bill, and I would urge the Assembly to pass it.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to speak to the Land Titles Amendment Act, 2000, at third reading. In fact, this bill has had very little debate in this Assembly in part because we support it. Just because we support a bill doesn't mean that we shouldn't have had our questions answered throughout the course of debate. When I was reviewing what was said here in second reading and in committee, in fact we had a number of questions that never got answered. So I would like to put those questions back on the record, and I hope that someone on the government side would undertake to answer them, because they are legitimate questions and issues that we have concerns about.

One of those questions was: where's the office going to be? In what city? Now that there's only going to be one office, will it be in Edmonton or Calgary? If we could get that answered.

The question that we'd like to have some clarity on is on section 122(9).

Is this by a civil action, when a person being filed against can't borrow money or is registered from buying property because of the lien? Is there any compensation for wrongs [done] against [people]?

Another question not answered is with regard to:

Issue might be taken with the continued extension of decision-making power and further development of the bureaucracy. This person is equivalent to administration in this province. Where is the pressure coming from to extend this position? Is it from the federal level? Why is this position introduced? Is it that the deputy of administration can't handle it himself? Who has the decision-making [power]? Is this just further diluting the present position?

So those were questions that should have been answered in this particular bill. I would refer government members to page 687 in Hansard on April 3, 2000, where there is a whole series of questions that never got answered.

Now, April 3 was a long time ago, Mr. Speaker, and certainly the government had ample time to undertake finding at least some of these answers. When I talked to my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Manning, who put these comments and questions and concerns on the record, and asked him if he'd had a response outside of the Legislature, he said no.

So, you know, while we're happy to support legislation that at first blush looks like good legislation, when in fact our questions are never answered during the course of debate, we find that interesting, certainly annoying, and not what we would expect in a good faith kind of ability that we would work towards in this House.

We could stall on every single bill, Mr. Speaker, until we got the questions answered. That would certainly be a tactic that could be employed as opposition. We undertake not to do that. I hear laughter at that comment, but in fact if you take a look at the number of minutes spent on debate on this bill, in spite of the number of questions we had, they were very few in number. We are not trying to stall what looks like good legislation. We are trying to get questions answered. We are trying to pass legislation through this Assembly in a speedy fashion whenever possible and save our concerns for that legislation which we find to be quite appalling and detrimental to the people of this province.

So I am hoping that in the very near future, Mr. Speaker, we will have the answers to all of those questions previously asked by my colleague. If we don't, certainly we will be undertaking to pursue the answers to those questions in all fashions and formats available to us in this Assembly.

Title: Tuesday, May 16, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/05/16

[The Speaker in the chair]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 24 Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act, 2000

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act, 2000 for second reading and would be happy to move the same.

This government made a commitment to Albertans in 1995 to protect representative samples of Alberta's six natural regions under the special places program. This amendment will allow us to designate three heritage rangelands temporarily designated as natural areas under the special places program: first of all, Black Creek heritage rangeland natural area in the Whaleback, designated in May of 1999; secondly, Twin River heritage rangeland natural area on the Milk River, designated in December of 1999; and finally, Beaverhill heritage rangeland natural area east of Edmonton, designated in November of 1999. This amendment also will allow the designation of several other grassland candidate sites currently under review.

The amendment act before you today supports this government's commitment to local committees in Alberta's grassland region to create the heritage rangeland class. This class will enable the designation of special places in areas with grazing leases. The heritage rangeland classification will preserve and protect representative areas of Alberta's grasslands through legislation specifically designed to meet the unique management needs of these areas.

Grazing bison shaped Alberta's grasslands. Cattle have now replaced the bison in this role. In heritage rangelands cattle grazing will continue to be used as a management tool to preserve ecological integrity.

Heritage rangelands will be designated under the wilderness areas, ecological reserves, natural areas and heritage rangelands act. Grazing leases will continue to be managed under the Public Lands Act by Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. It is important to know that the rights and responsibilities of lessees under the Public Lands Act will not be affected by this amendment.

Existing industrial commitments will be honoured in heritage rangelands. However, new dispositions will only be sold with a no-surface-rights, no-surface-access addendum to prevent future surface disturbance.

Recreational use of off-highway vehicles and snowmobiles will not be permitted. OHV and snowmobile use will be permitted for management activities associated with dispositions only. Hunting and fishing will be permitted on agricultural leases with permission from the leaseholder. Hunting and fishing will continue to be managed under the Wildlife Act and Alberta fishery regulations.

Parks and protected areas are a priority for my department. I am studying the recommendations of the MLA review committee that conducted public consultations on the previous draft of the legislation. This amendment is an interim measure only. I will introduce a new parks and protected areas act, an amalgamation of two other acts and this one, in the House when the bill is complete.

Mr. Speaker, I ask members for their support for this amendment that will allow the heritage rangeland class to be created under existing legislation. This amendment will fulfill this government's commitment to leaseholders who agreed to include land under grazing leases in the special places program. It will also fulfill a promise to Albertans to preserve land from all six of Alberta's natural regions under the special places program. I ask members for support for this amendment.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real opportunity this evening to stand and speak to the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act. This, I guess, is a start or part of what we tried to do last year with the Natural Heritage Act, but this is going to effectively carve out one part of that, from what I understand, and put it into place under our current act. I think the action by the government and the minister to actually undertake to recognize that we have heritage rangelands in Alberta is a good move. The whole special areas program was designed to make sure that all of the unique ecosystems that we have in our province are recognized and protected in as close to their natural form as possible, and what we're seeing here now, the heritage range inclusion into this act, is a good step in getting that started.

The minister mentioned that the process to designate three areas as heritage rangelands has already been completed, with potentially three or four others still to come. This is, I guess, a good start. The areas they spoke about – the Black Creek, Twin River, and Beaverhill areas – do represent very unique kinds of rangelands in our province.

As I was listening to the minister, there was a question that came up. He continually referred to the idea that all of these lands were currently under grazing leases, and I would just like to have clarification on that. Is there no private property lands included in these areas at all? Also, a question is: would there be in any of the future ones? What we have to do there is look at how this kind of designation and the negotiation that has to go on with the landholders would affect the concept of private property, property rights, title, ownership, and title power or title authority as it reflects under our Land Titles Act, but if they're all grazing leases, then effectively what we can do is deal with these under the specific provisions of the government's power to renegotiate leases and to deal with the leases that are, in effect, on our public lands. So without that kind of clarification that would be something we have to look at in the sense that it might affect some of the lands that are being brought into the ones that are being considered in the future.

Mr. Speaker, with those comments I think the next thing we have to look at is how the management of these areas will be applied or controlled and regulated. One of the common concerns that we hear from a number of the grazing leaseholders is that cattle do not necessarily graze in the same way that the bison, that the minister spoke about, did during historic times, when they were running across our province in potentially the millions, and the thing that comes up there is the issue of brush control.

We've had a number of grazing lease operators, you know, in the areas along the fringe of the greenbelt talk about how the brush and the small trees are gradually encroaching onto the prairie, into the grassland areas. Historically the buffalo would winter in those fringe areas along the forested edge, the edge between the forest and the grassland, and effectively would keep the young brush and the young trees from continuing to encroach onto the grassland areas.

A number of the grazing leaseholders in those areas now have indicated that in the time that they've managed the lease, because they are not allowed to do brush control, what they're seeing are a number of areas where the small bushes, you know, the wilderness bush, and some of the smaller, more invasive trees are starting to take over their grassland areas or areas that were grassland when they began to manage those leases. So I would hope the minister would look at these kinds of broad-based control options that effectively would control and would deal with the management of that species invasion that occurs at the fringe areas between the grasslands and the tree line or the brush line.

The other thing I would like to just kind of raise as a start here in the beginning of the debate on this is that we have to look at how this is going to fit into some of the issues that are coming up. You know, last year we debated Bill 31, the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, and what we saw there was a lot of discussion about the length of leases, the ability of the government to modify leases, whether or not those leases were contracts, what concept of title or ownership and control they gave to the leaseholder. It was good to hear the minister say that in these heritage rangeland areas the grazing leaseholder would be the individual that would kind of be the gatekeeper for anyone wanting to hunt or fish or use them for other approved uses or have approved access.

One of the parts of the bill that does tie in to this is the fact that some of these grazing leases are going to be extended from 20 years to 30 years. I guess the question that I would put in that connection is: is it just the leases that are going to be associated with the heritage rangelands that will be extended to the 30-year time frame, or will it be a possibility now that we'll see all grazing leases again be a 30-year lease type negotiation? The issue there, you know, comes up in terms of, again, the debate we had last year on Bill 31.

Mr. Speaker, I can see some real merit here in trying to encourage farmers to develop heritage management systems for these rangelands, and they need to have a long enough planning horizon to put in place the appropriate grazing patterns, the appropriate management stocking rates, so what they effectively want to see is a degree of certainty that's associated with them.

The question then comes up in terms of how they'd be handled within the context of transfers. Are they going to be handled the same as the regular grazing leases, or would the heritage rangeland leases be handled differently than the regular grazing lease, both in terms of transferability and all of the accounting or the calculations that have to go along with dealing with how the leases are transferred?

I guess looking at it more from the protection perspective, as well, we see that in the bill there's a lot of discussion about how certain uses will be prohibited or else only allowed after approval of the minister, and I would like to suggest to the minister that this is a very good idea because we've got to set the outer parameters on what is required to protect these areas. Then as we look at the specific uses that a leaseholder might want to apply to that, they can look at special permission to do things a little differently. I understood the Minister of Environment saying that that would be managed under Alberta Agriculture, so for that to occur, then, I think the minister of agriculture would have to have the power and the set of guidelines to really look at any request for deviation from the restrictions on use that might arise so that the overall concept of the heritage wilderness area or the heritage rangeland concept is kept in place.

Similarly, though, Mr. Speaker, we have to look at the idea that some things did occur naturally, and we have to be in a position to accept those. I guess the one question that would come up in some of these areas is: how do you control or how would the leaseholder be able to deal with natural hazards in these areas? We see a number of cases where insects or fungus or bacterial infection of plants starts in. A normal rancher would be using some kinds of sprays to control those. Would that be permitted here to manage that? Even such things, you know, as a grassland fire: would that become a natural phenomenon, and would the fire departments be allowed to go in and fight the fire there to prevent it from spreading beyond the boundaries of the natural rangeland, or would they actually go into the rangeland and get involved in actually controlling and extinguishing a fire so that, effectively, you take away that natural perspective?

I guess these kinds of management issues have to be addressed as we look at the freedom that the leaseholder would have to manage their livestock operation within the context of those heritage rangeland areas. In the historic perspective, if a lightning strike or something started a fire in one of these areas, it would burn off, the buffalo would move off somewhere else, and so would the deer and the other wildlife, if they survived the fire. What we would end up seeing, then, is that over a period of two or three years there probably would be very little use of that area as the plant material re-established itself in the roots or from seeds that were activated by the heat or by disposition by birds that were flying over. These are the kinds of things that would start the grasslands growing in that area again.

I guess in the context of the overall management plan we have to understand how much of the natural phenomenon would be allowed to occur. You know, there was the idea that we saw in Waterton park when the federal government decided that that was going to be allowed to be a natural area, and there were two or three occasions in the last four or five years when natural events have really, if you want to call it that, laid havoc in a natural way to certain parts of the park. The visitors to the park afterwards said: "Well, this is not what we came to see. We came to see the growing, vibrant lifeblood of a natural area, not to look over and see where nature itself has devastated part of that natural area." They didn't want to see the devastation of nature. They didn't want to see the impact of infestations of insects or beetles or even the impact of fire that caught in Waterton park a couple of times. The tendency was to let the fires burn themselves out instead of trying to get in there and control them, so it ended up that they probably burned over a larger area than they would have had they been actively fought and actively managed and controlled.

So, Mr. Speaker, from that perspective I'd like to congratulate the minister for bringing this forward. It's going to alleviate some uncertainty in these areas, the three areas that have been designated – Black Creek, Twin River, and the Beaverhill area – so this, I think, is good. They do reflect very significantly different types of rangeland in our province. We see the Black Creek area down there being very able to reflect the fringe area between the green area and the prairie. Also, the area around Milk River is a very unique rangeland, where we have part of the Milk River ridge and the altitude-affected types of grasses that are growing there. Then we get out here to Beaverhill, east of Edmonton, where we see a northern type of grassland area, and this again reflects the transition between the dry prairie grasslands and the northern forested grassland area.

What we see now is that the other areas that still have to be looked at are the really dry eastern Alberta grasslands. The minister made a comment that he was looking at dealing with some designations out in the special areas, again lands that are all under public management at this time. So these are things that we have to consider and look at.

I want to say thank you to the minister for bringing this forward, because it's sure going to help to have our heritage-type ecosystems maintained so that future generations can go out into Alberta and have a view of what our province actually looked like, the kind of rangeland, the kind of ecosystem that faced our ancestors when they first came to Alberta. I guess the eventual hope would be that as these areas do become heritage, potentially some of our endangered species might be reintroduced. These are the kinds of things like the burrowing owl, that they've tried to reintroduce, and some of the others that are being removed or are being lost from Alberta's ecosystem. It would be great if we could see these kinds of species reintroduced in these natural areas where they existed in the historic, predevelopment, preintensive agriculture use of our grasslands.

So with those few comments I'd just again like to congratulate the minister and hope that we can expedite this to get it put in place.

Thank you.

8:20

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to make a few comments on Bill 24 on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. I can tell you that I'll not do the justice to the bill that she would, I'm sure.

Just a couple of comments. I'm in support, as is my hon. colleague, of this piece of legislation and what we know it to do. It takes a modified definition of the heritage rangeland from the Natural Heritage Act, that was at one point on the table, and amends it into this particular act, the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act. It increases the amount of land in the eastern part of the Whaleback and the Rocky Mountains forest reserve and increases the terms for grazing leases from 20 to 30 years.

I have to be clear about my concern in bringing in small portions of an overall framework, such as Bill 15 was. I think that the Natural Heritage Act was last session. That didn't get passed. The bill was shelved, so now we have a very small portion of that bill being brought through.

I understand there are some issues that the two ministers have to work out that they appear to be at loggerheads on. I'm sure that'll be forthcoming, but it always raises some concern when we take little snippets and don't look at a systematic approach to what we're doing. I'm not quite sure what the urgency is for this particular section. I do raise that concern, and I think it is a very legitimate concern, one that not only I have but that I know my colleagues and some of the folks in the environmental world that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie works with have. I need to put that on the record.

Bill 15 aimed to give more protection to Alberta's natural environment, and this is kind of a modified version of the definition of heritage grasslands. I'm wondering if this is going to be included, if there's going to be a broader approach in the new bill, the heritage act, when it comes forward, whenever that may be. I'm hoping that at some point through this particular process the minister can enlighten us as to that.

We did have discussions through the last session as well on the grazing leases. This particular act makes it quite clear that the heritage rangelands are to be maintained by grazing, and to facilitate this, ranchers will be traveling other than on foot. Although there are going to be restrictions on the types of vehicles that they can use, nonetheless they'll still be using motorized vehicles in these sensitive areas.

I'm wondering if these areas will be part of greenbelts for wild animals and waterways that are going to pass through them. I'm wondering, when we get to that point, if the minister can enlighten us there.

In this bill, in I believe it's section 8, when we talk about vehicles, we talk about the need for restrictions on those. Vehicles can do a lot of permanent damage to land. We've seen that in any number of backwoods areas where there's been a lot of travel. In fact, I guess over time packhorses and the like on the same trails can do damage as well. I don't know if you've been cycling out in Banff or Jasper, Mr. Speaker, but you know some of those trails get packed and get broken up or so packed and firm that they're difficult to travel on. You know, the area has been damaged by that kind of activity, and albeit I like to do that, to go out and ride in the backwoods, you can always tell the kind of damage that has occurred, and that's from a nonmotorized vehicle. [interjection] No, a bicycle. A bicycle is a vehicle, hon. member, and it's powered by legs. It has no motor, but it still does damage.

I guess what I'm getting at is that while the vehicles are supposed to stay on the roadways, I would suggest that if you have a bunch of 16, 17, 18 year olds loose on motorized vehicles and even mountain bikes, there's no way they're going to stay on the roadways. If you have older people, middle-aged people such as myself – I would stay on the roadways.

MS BLAKEMAN: You're admitting to be middle-aged?

MS OLSEN: I'm admitting to be middle-aged. I would stay on the roadways, but I know that my young son would be tempted to take on a path that may offer him a little bit more excitement than the one that he's supposed to be on.

MR. CLEGG: Bad boy.

MS OLSEN: He would be a bad boy, hon. member.

That kind of thing concerns me. I guess what I'm wondering is: what type of enforcement will be available in these areas? Is it going to be the environmental protection officers? We know that the staff there has been reduced over time. What is the availability of those particular enforcement officers that are out there looking after the parks and this particular area, the Whaleback, and that kind of thing?

It's great for us to say that you can't do something, but if we don't send the message home through some sort of enforcement tool, then the words in the act would be meaningless. So I'm wondering if the Minister of Environment is going to deal with the necessary enforcement issues in this area. I think we just have to look at the complaints we get in the parks over the summer and the young people that go out and call partying in a campsite camping, creating all sorts of excess problems for other campers and folks in the area. What we now see is having to increase the level of enforcement in the parks. I think that's an important issue, because in order to give meaningful consequences under this act and in order to have restrictions, we ought to be able to enforce those particular sections of the act.

We hear that there's the potential for no people on private property from the grazing aspect of it, the leases. Given that there was such a huge problem with the grazing leases – and if I recall, we were talking there about some of the ranchers not wanting the public accessing the grazing leases. I think the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East asked that question, and we should probably be informed by the minister if that's going to be the case. Again, I think that there are a number of issues with grazing leases and potential liabilities that exist for a rancher by having other people access the land, but I'm not sure, given that it is public land, what the consequences of the public/private fight are or will be as a result of that.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I don't think I have much more to say, and hopefully when we move on to committee, we will be able to look at this bill in a little more detail.

Thank you.

8:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 24, the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act, 2000, at second reading. Of course, at second reading we're concerned with the principles that sit beneath the bill itself and try to make sure that we understand exactly what those principles are that the bill is supporting.

I think there is fairly wide agreement that the principles embedded in Bill 24 are really worthy principles and ones that this government and other governments are struggling hard to maintain in the face of development and in the face of the assault by a variety of human forces on the environment. In particular, this bill addresses heritage rangelands and grasslands. It's interesting because the grasslands of the world are rather unique, being areas that won't support higher forms of vegetation, and obviously it's an area in this province that we have decided needs to be protected.

The first principle is that heritage rangelands and grasslands are a specific ecological type that must be protected. That principle is developed throughout the bill in a variety of ways: by restricting the kinds of activity that can take place, by restricting the kinds of human activity that can take place surrounding it and in general making sure that the areas come under a microscope in terms of the use that's made of them, and the use is severely limited.

A second principle that not only this bill but previous bills have supported is that the unique ecosystems in the province should be preserved, and of course they've identified six of them that are worthy of preservation. Again, this is consistent with worldwide efforts to preserve unique ecological areas. It's a movement that is supported by a number of special interest groups, but I think that generally the public is very supportive of the efforts to make sure those unique ecosystems are preserved and are there for future generations.

A third principle that the bill seems to rest on is that these heritage grasslands and rangelands can be protected while still being used for some human activity, in this case by ranchers. That's a principle that has been hotly debated in this province and elsewhere. Allowing any kind of human activity in some of these areas would be objected to by some citizens, but this bill takes, I think, a more realistic approach and tries to lay out the ground rules for that activity so that it can be conducted and still act in the interests of the environment by maintaining the area.

A fourth principle that is supported in the bill is that representative samples is a satisfactory method of preserving Alberta's six major natural regions. That's a rather interesting principle. It's one again that I think could be debated, that you take representative samples and instead of trying to have a general very strong environmental protection law, you ensure that specific areas continue to exist by choosing representative samples. I guess the danger in that is that the treatment of areas outside those samples might somehow or other be neglected, that it might lead to the development of an attitude that because the ecosystem is a protected area, when you encounter those characteristics outside the sample, you don't need to be as protective. I think that would be a negative in terms of choosing this method of preserving natural regions. Hopefully that won't happen, Mr. Speaker.

The context of the bill is really rather interesting. Our environment critic from Edmonton-Ellerslie has been very, very meticulous in terms of keeping track of the government's record in terms of the environment and environmental protection and has to go great lengths to make sure that the members of our caucus are apprised of what's happening. I should mention that she's recommended to us that we support and make sure this bill proceeds through the House as expeditiously as possible, and we don't in any way want to delay the bill.

She did point out in some of our discussions that it really has been hived off from the Natural Heritage Act, Bill 15. In some ways that's unfortunate. We all recall that when Bill 15 was introduced, it was heralded as the introduction of a comprehensive plan to protect the environment, and it was also heralded as a very comprehensive piece of legislation that was able to take a variety of interest groups and bring them together, that there was general agreement from those interest groups that what was being proposed in Bill 15 had been agreed upon and was going to do the job in terms of protecting the environment. Again, it's unfortunate, because I think that when you start to piecemeal it like this, you lose some of the attention that we had when Bill 15 was before the House. But whether we have a comprehensive bill or we have good pieces like this, I suppose in the end it doesn't make much difference, Mr. Speaker.

In concluding, I do support the bill and look forward to it being passed as quickly as possible. Thanks very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment to close the debate.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I've listened carefully to the comments made by members of the Assembly. I'm happy to hear the kind of positive feedback that I did, and I wish to move second reading of this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a second time]

8:40

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority Amendment Act, 2000

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you. I'm prepared to move this and listen to my colleague's concerns, and then I will certainly make some comments on closing debate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is what happens when you generally support a bill. You don't get a lot of feedback after you say: Mr. Speaker, representing the opposition, I'm here to tell you we're going to support the bill. Then you don't hear a lot, although we did ask some questions about Bill 7 in earlier forums of debate, and I hope that the minister, now that he has reserved for himself the privilege of closing debate with some pithy comments, will include within those comments some responses to questions raised in both second reading and committee.

We've talked a lot about the principle of the act and the substance of it in terms of amalgamating some various research authorities into one, but there were some specific issues to do with timing, particularly with forestry research. There were some issues about subordinate lawmaking and regulations. There were some questions regarding the role of MLAs as chairs of these committees. Nobody was questioning whether or not MLAs should be representatives on the committees, but we were wondering why the MLAs must be inserted as chairs.

Of course, this is the kind of thing that makes the public very suspicious, because of course usually with these chairmanship positions comes some extra pay, and if we're finding good, qualified, hardworking Albertans to be on these committees, maybe one of them would be in line for that kind of a stipend. In any case, Mr. Speaker, there are these questions about the role of MLAs on the committees.

I want to go back to this question of subordinate lawmaking, the regulations section, which is very broad in the bill, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say that as usual the Official Opposition always has difficulties when we see regulation sections that aren't well defined.

I hope that the minister will take the opportunity to put our minds at ease about what's going on with the regulations under the act, the timing issues, and particularly the role of MLAs. I must say that I also raised some rather technical concerns regarding intellectual property, wondering whether or not the law as amended is equal to the challenges of today's society and today's environment when it comes to intellectual property rights.

IPR is becoming very controversial, and it seems the jurisprudence changes day to day. We've got all kinds of national and international agreements and treaties. We have multinational companies funding research. We have co-operatives now between private corporations, public Crown corporations, universities, and research authorities, not just in this province but across the country and around the world, and we know there are always heated negotiations these days around who will retain the ongoing rights to the intellectual property and also really what are the definitions of intellectual property in terms of those things that are developed as a direct result of the substantive grant or the project and those things that happen sort of by the way, those eureka moments where you discover something or come across something that wasn't intended or that wasn't really the aim of the initiative to begin with.

To close my comments, Mr. Speaker, Bill 7, which deals with the forestry research institute, the energy research institute, the Alberta agricultural research institute, and the government's plan to consolidate research and to get better co-ordination is supported by the Official Opposition, but we do have these nagging concerns. We would very much appreciate the minister addressing them before we give it third and final reading.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real opportunity to stand and comment on third reading of Bill 7, the Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority Amendment Act. This is an act that puts in place the administrative unit to support the newly established heritage fund for science and technology, and this effectively will give Alberta a chance to move even farther into the forefront of advanced research and science-based research than we already are. The idea that we're going to have one authority that stands for the science-based research activities is quite an achievement.

I guess the question that comes up in the end is the allocation of priorities between the different areas. In agriculture we had the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute operating before. I was just looking today at a news release that came out from Alberta Agriculture. They were outlining about $7.4 million in research allocations for agriculture initiatives. I guess the question that would come is: as the Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority allocates the moneys out of the endowment that's been created, will agriculture, will the Alberta oil sands research authority be getting something near the same amount of money, or will it hopefully even be higher? How will those priorities be developed within the authority? How will we be sure that the issues of agriculture continue to be addressed?

In the last budget there was about $11 million allocated for expenditure by the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute. In essence, what potentially would happen is that a fifth of the potential income on an expected basis from the fund that's been endowed would be directed to agriculture just so we could keep the agriculture initiatives and the agricultural research at about the same level as we had under the annual budget funding from general revenues for the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute. So we have to look at maintaining that broad base of research in the agriculture area and in the energy area when we see the oil sands research component also rolled into the science and technology authority. These are the kind of things that I guess we'll see over the next couple of years.

I know as I've traveled around the province that the agriculture community and the energy community are really excited about this. They see it as broad based. Never mind the activities and the discussions that are going on now at Alberta's universities, where the more concept or theory based research is usually undertaken. They are really looking at this as a step that will continue to allow them to take a lead in Canada and North America and, in some cases in some science areas, around the world in being identified and recognized as some of the leading research areas. As I said, they're now really excited about the potential they'll have to deal with continuing these research areas, further focusing and concentrating their centres of excellence and dealing with the kind of base research that in the next 10 to 15 years could lead to some very exciting potential applications in the spin-off economic growth that could accrue if we can encourage those developments and those spin-off activities to take place here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I guess one of the things that I hope the Minister of Economic Development is working on with the minister of science and technology is looking at how we can encourage and make sure those kinds of commercialization activities do actually get established and that we do get our fair share of them here in Alberta. I'm not going to try and encourage them to undertake activities that would make sure we get everything here; that's not reasonable. But the creation of an environment for risk capital accumulation, whether it's equity funds or some other kind of method of developing start-up capital for these ventures, needs to be looked at. Whether or not the western Canadian Venture Exchange is going to facilitate that, these are the kind of things we have to look beyond in the next stage of capturing a lot of the benefits that are going to come from the research activity that's generated through the dollars that are managed by the Science, Research and Technology Authority.

So we have to look at that from the perspective of: where do we go? You know, it's great to say that we've got one of the best world-based research programs and research funding systems here. We have to also look, then, at how we can make that commercial and become an active part of commercialization and contribute to the economic growth of the province.

Mr. Speaker, with those few comments, I again would just like to congratulate the government on this initiative. It's put Alberta on the world map in science and technology research. It will provide us with the opportunity to attract centres of excellence research teams that are potentially world leaders. It'll also give us the chance, then, to work through and be able to develop some commercialization of these activities, which will then provide us with the diversified economy and the spin-off growth into some of the other areas as potentially our energy sector becomes less and less of a contributor to our Alberta economy over the next 20 or 30 years.

So congratulations to the minister, and congratulations to the government. Good job done.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to make a couple of comments at third reading as we re-examine the principles underlying Bill 7. Bill 7, of course, is an effort to integrate and to consolidate research initiatives, the science policy development, and to co-ordinate research funding in the province. I think it's being widely applauded both in and out of the Legislature as a very good move for the sciences and engineering in this province. I think all Albertans will applaud the effort and will await with interest the results of organizing research and policy development in this manner.

It was, of course, patterned after the medical research model that drew upon heritage trust funds for research in the medical sciences, again a very successful model. It means that some other patterns then aren't followed. It means that this kind of research effort isn't centered at a particular university or centre across the province, and that has implications for the existing institutions and research entities. It's a pattern, of course, that's being used elsewhere, although I believe it often has been used but has been housed in a specific institution, a specific university. That's different in this case. It's going to be interesting to watch how this develops.

One of the comments I would like to leave with the government, if not with this particular minister, is that there is a need, which I think has been expressed by a number of people across the province, for a similar fund in terms of the humanities and the social sciences. While everyone is applauding the move in medicine and in science and engineering, wouldn't it be exciting if we had the same research funds and policy development money available to promote philosophy and the arts and music and even drama in this province? It would be exciting.

I would conclude with that observation, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted that the bill has proceeded as quickly as it has and, as I said, will look forward, with others, to chart its progress and success.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science to close the debate.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes. I would just like to take a few minutes and answer some of the questions and comments. The members across suggested I say something pithy, but every time I try and say something pithy, the Speaker always corrects me, so I'll stay away from pithy comments and just go forward with some answers to questions.

I'd like to talk first briefly on Lethbridge-East's comments regarding agricultural research. I fully expect that we will not just maintain the status quo for agricultural research, but as we move into what I'm calling life sciences strategy, I believe there will be more money for agricultural research. There needs to be more money for agricultural research.

I see this coming from a couple of sources. I see an increase coming from out of the Innovation and Science budget. I see an increase from other private-sector companies that are interested in what's happening in Alberta. I also see it coming from the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research.

If you look at that, one of the functions of that is to support agricultural research. In fact, we have placed an agrologist on the board of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research. We have several people from rural Alberta on that board who understand agriculture, so agriculture will be an important part of that new funding board. Treasury tells me that we can spend roughly 5 percent of the endowment and maintain the value of the endowment, so we should be able to see $25 million spent this year, and as that endowment grows towards $1 billion, then we should be able to see that fund grow even higher and more money for agricultural research.

I'd like to thank the members opposite for their support of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research. It will be governed by a separate board, just as HFMR is, and it will be through the same process. That group will be funding excellence in science, and so there will obviously be in most cases more demands for money than exist. Certainly, as long as the agricultural projects go forward and the agricultural scientists go forward evidencing excellence in science, then I don't see that there will be any problem with more money going to this whole area of agriculture.

You also made some comments about commercialization of products that come out of research. We recognize this as very important, and quite frankly I have been unhappy with some of the results of the commercialization efforts in Alberta, so we have a number of independent groups trying to do this. The three main groups in Alberta are UTI, ILO, and ARC. Because all of these groups get some money from the budget of Innovation and Science, what we've encouraged them to do is to meet together and come up with policies that they can go forward with with other agencies in the province, such as Joe Lukacs' group in Calgary – and I've forgotten the name of his company that does commercialization – such as Olds College and other groups that do commercialization so that we can have a unified approach to commercialization in this province, a strategy for commercialization in this province so that these other groups don't contradict each other and work against each other.

I'd just like to comment briefly about forestry research. I've got to go quickly. I've just been told that I only have five minutes.

Forestry research was just added, and yes, we need to do more. We recognize forestry research is important, and we will be developing a strategy for forestry research just as we developed a strategy for the ICT research that we're doing in this province. I don't have time, but I can give you a number of concrete developments that have happened in this province, including the fact that Nortel announced a $55 million R and D facility in Calgary just last week as a direct result of what's happening in this province. So if we develop research strategies for the whole energy research institute, for the forestry research institute, if we do that in a strategic sense as we work through this process, then I believe that we could have similar results.

There were some comments regarding regulations. As you know, regulations are always done after the bill. I'm more than willing to work with my colleagues in the opposition on these regulations and show the regulations to them and say: what do you think? I don't have a problem with that. Colleagues on both sides have been supportive, and I intend to reciprocate in that. So regulations will be forthcoming, and I am willing to work with colleagues on both sides of the House.

There was a comment about MLAs being chairs. For MLAs we in fact were working towards co-chairs with a private-sector individual. Yes, certainly there is some stipend involved with MLAs being chairs, but there's also a stipend available to the private individuals that sit on these boards. I'm not sure what the exact figure is, but they are eligible for a stipend as well. So I don't think there's any inconsistency there with an MLA or a private-sector individual being paid some form of stipend.

Another comment on intellectual property. The intellectual property is a huge issue as we work forward into this. Right now most of the intellectual property is generated at the universities, and universities are struggling with this themselves. For instance, if you're a university professor and write a textbook, you usually don't have to pay any kind of royalties to the university. If you develop some invention or some technology that comes out of your lab, then there's some kind of discussion that happens. I'm not sure what the form of the discussion is, but there's some kind of discussion that happens that has to do with royalties or licensing fees, and the policy is not constant. It seems to be, just from watching it from the outside, that if you're a very strong negotiator as the inventor or as the developer of the technology, you come out in a better position with the university. That is, you give the university less than if you're a weak negotiator.

So intellectual property is a huge issue both in Alberta and right across the world, actually, where research is being done. We really don't have a solution to that at the present time, but there are a number of models that universities are looking at. I believe as we get this Alberta commercialization and technology network working in Alberta, then a logical flow of that will be to look more seriously at the intellectual properties.

I'd just like to say that as we go forward in the future, when all of us are finished with our political careers, whenever that might be, I think we can look back at the legacy of this Assembly and all members can be proud as they see what their children and grandchildren are doing, in my case grandchildren. All members can be proud of the accomplishments of this Assembly when it comes to both Bill 1 and this Bill 7 that we will pass tonight.

Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a third time]

Bill 10
Securities Amendment Act, 2000

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll move third reading of Bill 10.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Bill 10 is another bill that the Official Opposition has reviewed, has met with industry stakeholders on, and has agreed that the government is doing the right thing in bringing this bill forward. I'm glad that we've had a couple of these bills back-to-back in this Assembly, because I know there's been lots of grumbling lately. We heard some derisive comments earlier this afternoon when one of my colleagues said that, you know, the Official Opposition doesn't just try to be obstructionist, that we support the government when the government deserves support. We even in those cases of course will work to hold the government accountable for doing what it says it's going to do, and of course we will do that in this bill. But just to note that here we have a couple of examples of some good policy initiatives being supported, even with some questions, by the Official Opposition.

Of all the issues that I've raised, I'm hoping that when the sponsoring member moves to close debate, he'll respond to a couple of the issues that were outstanding. He did address a couple during committee, but I think he may have some more to say. But of all the issues that have been raised and are of concern, I want to go back to this theme of subordinate rule-making, regulations. It's section 35 in the bill, which changes section 196 of the existing act, to do with regulations that can be made by the Lieutenant Government in Council.

Now, we understand the flexibility that is needed by the commission, and we understand the flexibility that's needed in terms of responding quickly to the market and how the exchange has to be open to response as well. But I must say that when you have an area of law that affects so many people in such a very basic way – it affects them in their pocketbook and in their cheque book – I'd like to see more effort made, first of all, to put details in the legislation and, second of all, to have the regulations developed in the most public of all ways.

I'd quote a quick example, Mr. Speaker, of what could happen when you have subordinate lawmaking, either by ministerial order or by regulation or by delegated authority. We saw that today in question period when the Premier was questioned about 150 doctors in Calgary who were protesting the government's policies to commercialize medicine. The Premier took that opportunity to make direct reference to a Dr. Ron Jadusingh, who's a pathologist in the city of Calgary. Now, he I think in a rather uncharitable way spoke about Dr. Jadusingh and may have even suggested that Dr. Jadusingh was being hypocritical. I believe he said that he should look at himself in a mirror or words to that effect.

The point, Mr. Speaker, is that here we have an individual Albertan, a private citizen and a physician of this province, who not by his own choosing found the circumstances of his profession changed. It was government policy to eliminate fee-for-service pathologists. It was government policy that fundamentally changed Dr. Jadusingh's ability to carry on his profession. That policy was done by a combination of delegated authority through the college and the Alberta Medical Association and by ministerial order, and in doing so, they went even further. The health minister at the time issued a memo stating that private-sector pathologists must have a place in this new private/public partnership when it comes to the practice of pathology and the provision of laboratory services.

So here we have an individual Albertan who's trying to do his job. I must say, by the way, that Dr. Jadusingh is a very senior practitioner who has achieved some stature and standing in the medical profession, particularly in his specialty area. So here we have this expert Albertan whose ability to carry on his expert practice was severely curtailed by government policy. To add insult to injury, when he complains about that policy, he's ridiculed in the Assembly by none other than the Premier.

This is part of my concern when it comes to subordinate rule-making and the role of regulations in law. I fully realize that the example of a pathologist being criticized by the Premier has little to do with the regulations that may be developed under Bill 10, but it's just the most current example, Mr. Speaker, of what happens when you make these regulations and make these policy changes in secret and behind closed doors: people tend to get caught in that cross fire. I would hate to be standing in this Assembly six months or a year from now and saying: look; here we have Albertans who have lost money, who have lost their life savings, whose pensions have been put in jeopardy because there was a lack of clarity or understanding about the regulatory framework that had to do with the buying and selling of securities in this province. And I want to save the Premier the embarrassment of having to apologize for ridiculing another ordinary or extraordinary Albertan in the way that he did today.

So, Mr. Speaker, this is my concern. With all of these comments, I don't want to take away the support of myself personally and of every member of the Official Opposition for what's going on with the securities business in this province and the Canadian Venture Exchange and the leadership the Alberta Securities Commission has shown.

At the risk of this sounding almost too nice, I will once again thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for keeping me apprised of the progress of this initiative, as he has done in the past for other initiatives he's been responsible for. He and I may never agree about tax policy, Mr. Speaker, but I will say this. I do think he has the best interests of Albertans in mind, although his views on taxation may be a little misguided. But I do think he does have their best interests in mind, and he holds those beliefs sincerely. When it comes to securities, we're much more like-minded, so I want to thank him. I want to thank him for his earlier answers, and I hope he will help put my mind at ease a little bit about the very broad regulation section in Bill 10.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View to close the debate.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. I would agree with him that the example he used around health care to deal with the Securities Amendment Act is definitely a little far-fetched. I also hear the comments the member has made in regards to concerns about the regulations, and if there is ever a concern that the member has, I know the new chairman will be as open as the past chairman of securities. Anything he needs or questions raised in regards to changes, we'll make sure that we get him those answers.

I'd move the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a third time]

Bill 15

Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2000

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move Bill 15, the Business Corporations Amendment Act, for third reading.

Bill 15 is a long-overdue piece of legislation which deals with the problematic section 42 of the Business Corporations Act and removes one of the long-standing tests which has caused a problem for lawyers, accountants, and businesspeople ever since the Business Corporations Act was brought in.

I would commend the House to deal with this quickly and improve the business processes in this province by doing so.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise tonight in the Assembly to speak to Bill 15, the Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2000, at third reading. I really think this is a very good bill, and all the way through it has been presented very well.

The intent of the act is to amend one specific section, section 42, of the existing Business Corporations Act. The amendment in particular will rectify a number of problems existing with the section that are unworkable and cause Alberta business unnecessary expense and delays on certain transactions.

As I talked to friends that are lawyers, and as we did review and meet and talk with a number of people with the Alberta Law Reform Institute, the Law Society of Alberta, the Institute of Chartered Accountants, and the Canadian Bar Association in both Edmonton and Calgary, we were brought up to speed very quickly on this. Thanks to the Member for Calgary-North West and the department.

I feel that we have gone through this one very speedily. Actually, a couple of times I did mention to the member that this should have been a bill that was presented on some of those nights that we were in here so long on Bill 11, and we would have shown how fast a bill could actually go through.

We did point out in second reading, Mr. Speaker, concerns we had in section 42(2), and at a follow-up meeting with the hon. Member for Calgary-North West and Bob Foord from the government department, we agreed to amendments before they even came in here. I'd like to thank the stakeholders who reviewed the amendments and spoke very freely with the Official Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, this is a solution that will be workable for businesses. As I mentioned before, just because it's a business-proposed amendment doesn't mean that we'll be against it if it's presented and it's a good amendment. So at this time the Official Opposition are happy to vote with the government in the passage of this bill at third reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a third time]

Bill 13

Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2000

MR. HLADY: I move third reading of Bill 13.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora ceding to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you. We have a little power in the back row here. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I feel good about that now.

I rise tonight to speak to this bill. I have yet to be able to add any comments. I want to make it clear from the outset that I am supporting this bill, but I do have some concerns. I think they were registered by some of my colleagues at Committee of the Whole, but given my strong belief that delegated administrative organizations have to have a very strong framework, I feel that I need to speak to that issue.

From the outset we know that this particular bill extends the orphan well program to include other oil and gas facilities such as pipeline, gas plants, batteries, or compressor stations. I had the opportunity to work for a large Alberta energy company from '89 to '92, and I must say that knowing there is a reclamation process in place is very important given that some of these sites are just tremendously large and the environment is vulnerable as a result of these particular sites, as is in some areas the safety of Albertans.

It expands the purpose of the orphan fund to cover the abandonment and reclamation of most production facilities and provides for licensing of all new and existing facilities. It imposes responsibilities for abandonment on parties responsible for facilities and pipelines, and it regulates the transfer of licences for facilities and pipelines to prevent dumping and to collect security deposits if licences are transferred to high-risk companies. Now, from the outset we also know that the industry feels they have a need to be able to use these funds and have some form of control over them. As it stands right now, they don't have that direct access to the funds. So I think this is a good step.

It's not to say that I don't support delegated administrative organizations, but I want to talk a little bit about the framework that I see as necessary. I recognize that this offers up a very narrow portion of what the industry does and how they're governed and regulated under this particular act. I also recognize that this is the industry's money. The funding sources come from an annual levy paid by the industry, and that's based on the number of inactive wells that each operator has. It is the main revenue source for the orphan well fund. There's also a substantial fee of $10,000 for first-time licensees, and of course the other revenue generated is through interest on this fund. We know that the industry would like to be able to use the surplus from this fund as well in their particular industry.

Just to outline a couple of things I would like to see. I bring this into this debate, recognizing the narrowness of this particular amendment and recognizing that if there were other ways, the industry may have opted for avenues other than a delegated administrative organization. What I view as a good, sound framework is the preparation of a delegated administrative profile to assess whether a particular program, service, or activity is a candidate for delegation to an NGO. Well, we already know that the EUB is arm's length. This is going to take it, I guess, one arm further, if you will. Nonetheless, we need to look at the profile to be able to say that this fits with the expectations we have.

The profile would examine such issues as market strength – well, that's not necessarily an issue here when we're talking about abandoned well sites – political resistance, cost efficiency, quality of service, legal barriers, risk, resource monitoring and control. Those I think are still components of a DAO particular to this piece of legislation.

Conducting a detailed cost-benefit analysis outlining the cost savings and benefits that would be achieved by delegating the program and a clear rationale as to how delivery could be improved through the delegation – I think that particular issue is still top of the mind here. We do know that the industry looks after their own wells, that they are looking at reclamation in other areas, but we have to again be clear that we're providing rationale as to how delivery could be improved through this delegation. So is the orphan well fund going to operate better as a result of this particular legislation?

Once we make a decision, is that decision in support of the delegated administrative organization, a particular program, service, or activity based on economic criteria? The implementation of a full public tender process is required to encourage competition. Well, we're not really doing that here, because, like I say, this is very narrow, but we do know that the monopoly over the money exists within the industry. It's there. It's essentially their money, but again we need to clearly state performance standards and allow for effective follow-up monitoring by the government and the Legislature. That's the more particular issue that I would be concerned about.

As well, the notion of performance requirements and follow-up monitoring procedures. We need to be looking at the annual reports, one of which I happen to have here, business plans, and audits. The Auditor General has often made comments on the lack of monitoring. Because DAOs are one step further away from government, the entity can operate as it wishes. I know there was consideration for this, and I'm hoping that we can see this down the road, that the Auditor General's office has some way to deal with the DAOs in terms of monitoring what's going on. That's the process of accountability that I would like to see with this particular bill. I don't think that's out of line with the needs of Albertans. Albertans need to know that a cleanup has occurred and that there are no environmental risks, that there's no cost cutting on the cleanup as a result of trying to save money on a reclamation, and that it's done with the intent of having an environmentally friendly area afterwards. I think that's an issue.

I guess the other thing that would help this is that CAPP, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, supports this bill, and certainly, as I said, we do, but I think they've got a lot of work to do in terms of the education process for Albertans. Many people would not know that there is an abandoned well program that would allow and ensure their site cleanup and that they don't have toxic chemicals sitting in old abandoned pipelines, those kinds of things. The industry really is attempting to take some control and ensure that these sites are meeting the needs of Albertans in the cleanup.

I would like to see more work done in the education of Albertans in this regard. I think it would serve the industry very well. It certainly would enlighten us and give us some understanding of exactly what they're doing. I know that the oil and gas industry is participating and attempting to participate in making the environment and any environmental decisions they have to make in the best interests of Albertans. They're trying to reduce the environmental impact that their industry causes in special places areas and protected areas.

We see that conflict going on right now between the Environment minister and the energy minister. I think there is a balance. It's not all one or the other. There is a way to come to the middle and resolve this. I know that the hon. Minister of Justice would be a great mediator and that he could help that process out a bit, because he's a great promoter of mediation. I think there is a middle ground that he could come to between these two ministers. In fact, the industry is looking for some direction and guidance and says: "Yeah, we'll get out of these protected areas. It may not be overnight, but let's work on some guidelines to do that." They're attempting to move forward in good faith. So maybe we can dig the energy minister's heels out of the ground and come to some form of compromise.

What happens when you see that kind of conflict is that it's actually a bad image for the industry, because the industry's message is not getting out. I think that if we're to say there's a balance, then let's reach that balance and let's show Albertans we're capable of doing that. Certainly as this government moves forward, it absolutely must assure Albertans that they're looking after and taking environmental protection very seriously. I'm expecting some leadership to happen from the government in that respect.

As I say, I support this bill. Kudos to the industry for expanding their actual program. It's not just orphaned wells now, as I said.

AN HON. MEMBER: Orson Welles?

MS OLSEN: Not Orson Welles. Orphaned wells. I'm getting some help, Mr. Speaker, from one of my colleagues. I know they shouldn't be helping me. It's been a war of words.

I was going to make this one comment. I was going to give the industry full marks for the use of acronyms. When we look at the orphan fund annual report, we see that there's FAC, CAPP, EUB, SEPAC, AFRD, AENV, and so on. They're great for acronyms. I thought we were bad in policing, but they've got us beat, Mr.

Speaker. We have an English teacher here who maybe can give them a hand. That would be the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

As I say, I support this bill, but I have reservations about delegated administrative organizations. I know we have addressed that issue, and industry is sensitive to that. I think that if there were a way other than a DAO, they would go down that path. With that I'll take my seat and see if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora can master some acronyms.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. This bill troubles me really only for the reason of the amendments that were brought in. My colleague for Edmonton-Norwood just spoke at some length regarding the fears of delegated administration, and I must say that when I first read the bill and understood the intent behind the bill and heard from the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, amongst others, about their urging for the bill, I was immediately in favour of it. Then when I saw the amendments, I thought: why are they going down this road again; why is the government doing this?

We've just had some discussion, as you know, about subordinate lawmaking and regulations, and this is in many regards even worse, because you're one step further removed, and you've got all the concerns about the role of the legislative officers – the Ombudsman, the Privacy Commissioner, the Ethics Commissioner, and the Auditor General – as it pertains to meeting Albertans' expectations to the same extent that they would be met were these same functions not delegated to another authority. So I will incorporate by reference those comments and concerns that Edmonton-Norwood just presented to the Assembly.

I don't want to take much time speaking to Bill 13, Mr. Speaker, but I do want to acknowledge the oil and gas industry for their diligence in pursuing this particular initiative over the last few years and for their fortitude, because really it was industry that led the government on this matter, not the other way around. Earlier today we gave second reading to what was described as an interim environmental protection bill, a bill that would deal with the protection of some heritage grasslands. The government seems to be ever so cautious when it comes to environmental issues. I would be happy to see the government be a little more bold and take a little bit more leadership in this regard, but as we are dealing with Bill 13 at the moment, it is the industry that demonstrated the leadership. The government demonstrated its ability and willingness to follow, and I suppose they should be commended for that.

I will be supporting Bill 13 at this stage and again pass along my thanks to the industry for identifying this issue, identifying some means to deal with it, and convincing the government to put the solution into law.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, to close the debate.

MR. HLADY: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a third time]

Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2000

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

MRS. LAING: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 16 will provide much-needed legislation for the rapidly growing condominium industry. It provides commonsense guidelines which go a long way to meet the needs of the industry and also provide much-needed consumer protection.

Mr. Speaker, the amendments in Bill 16 were developed through consensus by a very dedicated group of stakeholders, and I would like to express my appreciation for the work done by these stakeholders, who are very interested in seeing this become law. I would also like to thank Frances Cruden from the Department of Government Services, who has played a major role in the drafting and refining of the legislation. She also made herself available to answer questions of Albertans and to discuss it with our loyal opposition.

Thanks also to the Minister of Government Services for her assistance in taking the bill through second reading and Committee of the Whole. Last but not least, I would like to thank the Liberal critics who deserve much thanks for their co-operation in the support of Bill 16.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move third reading of Bill 16, the Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2000.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to have the opportunity to speak to Bill 16, the Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2000, in third reading. I hope I have this quote right, but I'm pretty sure I remember it as: politics is the art of compromise. I think this particularly applies to . . .

MS OLSEN: Except on Bill 11.

MS BLAKEMAN: I've just been upstaged by one of my colleagues. I'll try to carry on.

I think that really applies to Bill 16. I mean, we have four very specific interest groups or stakeholders. Stakeholders is probably the best choice of words, because they have significant financial interests in how this legislation lays out the rules and regulations of how condominiums operate, the developing, the purchasing, and the living in them. The four groups, of course, would be the developers; the property management companies, which in many cases are hired by the boards to take care of business around the condominium – and often a property management company will act as the local resident managers rather than having a local resident manager – the board of directors, or the corporation as it often appears in the legal language; and the owners themselves.

There can be and have been conflicting interests around this act. I make no secret of the concerns I have brought forward on behalf of the owners, because frankly, as far as I know, it's mostly the owners that I'm representing in Edmonton-Centre. We have a very large number of condominiums there, mostly because they're in high-rises, so you've got a high concentration of people in a very small area.

It's been interesting as we've gone through the process of this legislation. I've talked to a lot of people now in Edmonton-Centre that live in condominiums, and one of the points that was raised is that when there's a difficulty that arises out of the legislation that causes conflict in the condominium, the owners are very reluctant – and this is what I sensed over and over again – to make a big deal, to start a fight, to make a big ballyhoo about something, because as one fellow put it: it creates disharmony in my home. And he's right. I can imagine that if you're having an argument with somebody on the board of directors and then you have to get on the elevator every morning and look at this person, it does create an uncomfortable attitude. I'm very sympathetic to that.

We all understand what the rules are for single-property ownership. You're responsible for everything. You're responsible to save money to fix your roof or not, as you choose. But we don't have enough history with condominiums and with that kind of communal but separate living to have ironed out all the possible situations that arise that affect people.

It certainly was high time that we had an update of legislation. I think the act that we're operating under currently is from 1980. There was consultation and a bill brought forward and indeed passed, an amendment act, in 1996 which was never proclaimed, and then we have this amendment act 2000, which is in fact amending the '96 act, which in turn amended the 1980 act.

This has been a long time in coming, and while I have the opportunity, I'll put in a plug for a regular sunset clause. Given the number of new issues that come up fairly quickly in today's world, I think it would have been a good idea to put a sunset clause into this legislation. It's not there, but perhaps I can get the recorders of all this to diarize and maybe in five years' time or even three years' time have another look at the legislation.

My concern about this act is that it be as balanced, as fair, and as equitable to all those parties as possible. I am not able to overcome my belief that this is still not balanced for the owners, so we will keep working on this.

I note that the Member for Calgary-Bow mentioned the consultation and thanked all those that were involved. When I first spoke to this bill, I was perhaps a bit harsh on the Condominium Institute group, which had in fact been invited by the minister and had participated in consultations prior to the legislation being introduced. They were very quick to contact me and come in and meet with me and give me their briefing book and try and reassure me about some of the issues I had raised. A number of the issues I had raised had come through an association called the Condominium Advocate Association, which, I think, only represents owners. The other groups have represented a combination of developers, property managers, board members, and some owners, and I was concerned that this group in fact hadn't been consulted before the legislation. Happily, they have finally been able to meet with a department representative.

I just want to set the record straight here. I know there were comments made in the Assembly that the Condominium Advocate Association had been approached and had refused to come in and meet with departmental staff. In fact, I think the very day that was being said, they had finalized a meeting date with the ministerial staff, so to say that they were not interested in coming in to meet is unfair. In fact, they were negotiating to do that. They did meet with the ministerial staff today. Unfortunately, that was after Committee of the Whole was past, and therefore their suggestions were not able to be incorporated or brought forward through an amendment. That's certainly disappointing to that group.

Also, in working with them, we discovered, as we know in this Assembly, that when an amendment act comes forward, we're really only free to be discussing and proposing further amendments to the sections in the original bill that have been opened up by the amending act. A number of the concerns that were brought forward by the Condominium Advocate Association were on sections from the '96 act that were not being amended, so they were sort of out of luck on that.

Now, the outcome of the meeting, as I understand it – and I have to admit that I didn't get a very lengthy briefing on it – was that a lot of their concerns, they were told, would be dealt with in regulations. As always, I have a deep concern about that. From my experience in this Assembly there's an awful lot that is put over. Important decisions and definitions and how things are going to operate are put into regulations. Well, those regulations are developed behind closed doors. They don't have the scrutiny of the Assembly. They're not recorded in Hansard for easier access for people to read the debate and understand the various sides of the argument that are being put forward.

I have also had both personal experience and have heard from community members that it's very hard to find regulations to things. Where do you start looking? I don't know if they're available through www.assembly.ab.ca, but in some cases they're not. So in this case may I urge the government to please post those regulations on the web site and not make it difficult for people to get hold of these, because this is the nitty-gritty, this is the how of how the whole piece of legislation is supposed to work. To somehow be tricky about it and say, "Oh, well, phone the Queen's Printer" or "You have to go there directly" or "No cheques, no Visa; it's got to be a money order or cash" – I mean, there are all these obstacles put in the way of people trying to get information that really affects their most intimate daily lives. This is how they live and where they live.

I know that the opposition brought forward what has become our standard amendment, to refer the regulations to the all-party Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, and in what has become a common occurrence, it was defeated. Nonetheless, I still think that is a very useful parliamentary process that is not taken advantage of by this Assembly. Again, that would put the comments in Hansard. It would give time for people to circulate the information back to their constituents and get feedback and bring that forward, and it makes it wide open to any stakeholder that's interested rather than just those that are invited.

I just wanted to put a couple of things on the record, unresolved issues. I think there is still an issue around the "common property" definition. It does appear exclusively in section 11, not at the front of the bill, which would make it apply to the entire bill. I'm still not clear about why that choice was made, but it was made. We have examples of where that is causing problems now, and that's why I'm interested in the sunset clause as well or at least an agreed-upon or committed-to review within a few years to see whether this has in fact turned out that way. Some of the examples around the common property are a number of the condominiums or the developers that set them up. In fact, there is no common property. Any common property like a party room or something like that is often designated as belonging to the corporation, and therefore it's not common property anymore.

When you get to things like municipal property taxes, transfer leasing, insurance coverage, exclusive use, you're out of luck, because what's in there designated for the way common property is to be dealt with, what the common property is, what people would generally assume it to be, has been called something else, and therefore none of these things apply. So I think we really need to work on that and tighten that one up.

You know, the developers risk their money in the beginning to build the condominiums or convert them, and thank God for that. They deserve the credit for taking the risk. The Alberta economy runs on that sort of entrepreneurship, and I applaud it. But in the end the owners and the boards of directors are left, and 10, 15, 20 years down the line that's who's dealing with the issues that arise around this. That's why I am so adamant that the legislation work for those owners and for the boards of directors, because that's who deals with it. Once the developer has pulled up stakes and has completed their part of the bargain, they're gone. They have no more involvement with this, but the owners certainly do, which is why I keep raising their issues.

I have heard stories and haven't been able to confirm them – and I'll admit that on the record – around the issue of the trust money being set aside. Now, if the owners have to set aside money, why aren't the developers having to set aside money? Again, that's something I want watched over the next three years or five years. I think three years is a more suitable time for it. As I say, I have heard but have not been able to confirm that developers in fact have walked away from completing the common areas, and there doesn't seem to be any way to reach back and deal with that for the developers.

Another issue that I think is ineffective in the way the legislation has passed and in the form it is in is around condominium fees. I know that even members of this Assembly are condominium owners, most of them in my riding of Edmonton-Centre.

MRS. SOETAERT: They have a good MLA.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes, they do.

You know, the way this is set up is that the developers write the first set of bylaws to get the whole condominium corporation going, and at this point the condominium fees are going to be set by bylaw, so we have the developers, in effect, setting those condo fees. I think that's an area we're going to have to watch. Further down the line I think the effect of it will be that the board of directors of the condominium corporation, who administer and enforce those bylaws, can pick and choose who pays what. That may well lead to quite a few problems if you've got a family with six kids and a single senior. Are you going to start charging them different rates for garbage pickup? Well, I can tell you that in the city of Edmonton we've gone that route and it's misery, so I think that's something we really have to watch for.

Once again, user-friendly language. As I've said before, this is a bill that people really need to be able to understand easily. They need to be able to understand the regulations easily. They've got to have fast access to both these things, and they've got to be easy to understand. There's some wild and wonderful legalese that comes out of this document. I know it's complicated, and I know we're dealing with very fine details of law on this, but boy, we have to get average people to be able to understand this. We will alleviate a lot of the problems that arise, because it is misunderstandings that cause a lot of this.

As I've pointed out a number of times in this third reading, I think we really have to be vigilant to ensure protection for the owners. As I said, they're the people that are left with the final effect of the changes that are being instituted in this amendment act, 2000. I want to see this be the best bill, and if we have to bring it back again in another couple of years, I'm more than willing to do that and to work with the government – in a few years I suppose I might be on the other side; I'd be working with myself – to make this the best possible legislation and protection for all those stakeholders that are involved in this. So a somewhat disappointing process, but hopefully there have been some things improved. I appreciate the Member for Calgary-Bow's kind words and was impressed with her acknowledging the people and staff that she worked with on the bill.

I've come to almost the end of my time. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to third reading of the Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2000. I'm not sure if others wish to speak to it.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise at third reading to speak to the Condominium Property Amendment Act.

Over the last little while I've had some correspondence from constituents who have concerns with regard to this particular piece of legislation. Though I recognize it has been long in the making and that in fact it is an amendment to a piece of legislation that perhaps is becoming old in terms of the way it deals with condominiums across this province, the reality still remains that there is a group called the Condominium Advocate Association which has prepared significant amendments to Bill 16 in its current form. It is disturbing to hear that the meeting was held this morning, and here we are at third reading. So, in effect, their concerns were not really taken into account.

Now, in my particular constituency I have a large number of condominiums that are appearing. It seems that almost daily there's a new building that goes up. So for my constituents this is a major concern. In fact, when we look at what some of the movement is of the government with regards to aging in place and assisted living concepts, what we are seeing now are condominium projects that are geared exactly towards a population that becomes more vulnerable as they become sicker.

I can think of one letter on my desk right now where the family was promised that there would be a long-term care centre attached to the condominium. Due to lack of funding by the regional health authority the long-term care beds have not materialized. The reason that the condominium was purchased was because there would be very little upheaval to the parents as they required more and more nursing care. Now we have a situation with a couple who are in their 80s. The wife is blind, and the husband has advanced dementia, and there's no place for them to go. They've been waiting for three years as the situation has gotten progressively worse, and still there is no spot for this particular couple to stay together and to follow through with a promise that had been made to them when they purchased their condominium.

So we know that things are moving in this province in a direction that I don't necessarily agree with. If there is going to be more and more onus put on individuals, then there has to be more consumer protection provided within the pieces of legislation that we see in front of us, consumer protection with regards to private health care, profiteers who will be knocking on the doors to ensure that they can have their profit margins looked after but not necessarily the needs of the individuals who are spending their hard-earned dollars on promises that may not materialize.

I think, too, of another case of an individual in my riding who has had a paper bag hanging from his ceiling in his condominium unit for over two and a half years now because it leaks. So he's brought the pictures to me, and he's gone to his association. He was actually on the board of the association at one point, and he could not get this fixed.

If we are looking at ensuring that there are needs addressed for condominium owners, then that is what I believe the thrust of this particular amendment should have been. When I looked through the Condominium Advocate Association report, that does not seem to be the direction that was taken with regards to putting forward the amendments.

Now, we have the promise waved in front of us that, yes, the regulations will take care of some of the issues, and perhaps that is possible. What disturbs me is that when I look at some of the letters in support of the bill, there seems to be a misunderstanding that government bills are looked at every two years. I don't know if there's been a promise made by the department to certain individuals to gain their support, that what is required is for the bill to be passed in its current form and we'll take care of any concerns you have in the next year or so, because that is what the government policy is, that in fact acts are reviewed every two years. That is not the case. I wish to put on the public record that there are no sunset provisions in this legislation that I am aware of.

When we look at the regulations, this in fact would be a prime area to have that committee we keep talking about that every other jurisdiction across Canada has put in place, has recognized is part of the democratic process, and is not running scared: an all-party committee to look at laws and regulations. When we have organizations that are not satisfied and have a list of 29 pages – this was not a one- or two-page analysis that the Condominium Advocate Association put forward – of issues that were outstanding and I understand have not been addressed fully, to be patted on the head by the government and told that it will be taken care of at some point in the future I quite frankly don't think is good enough.

So on behalf of the constituents that have taken the time to let me know of their concerns and on behalf of the Condominium Advocate Association, which has also copied all the MLAs, as a matter of fact, on their concerns, I would like to state that I will keep a close eye on the regulation-making process and would advise all members who have condominiums within their constituencies to also watch whether those particular concerns of condominium owners are being addressed through the regulation process. I would hope that the government does have the courage to put forward the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations so we can ensure that in fact we have an open process of the development of regulations with regards to the Condominium Property Amendment Act.

Thank you for the opportunity to address some of those concerns.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow to close the debate.

MRS. LAING: I'd like to thank all members for their participation in the debate. As you know, regulations are also going to be done with stakeholders having a large part in the consultation, and they will be shared so that people have an opportunity to look at them. So I'd like to encourage all of you to support the bill.

Thank you. Call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a third time]

Bill 17

Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2000

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move Bill 17, Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2000, for third reading.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a chance to just conclude on the options that are available by changing the laws under the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2000. This bill effectively is one of the cases where we've seen legislation that has come before the House, been passed, and then we go back and just try and clarify it and make sure that it does what we wanted, where we have to make kind of grammatical changes in the bill as we find out that the actual interpretation of sections when we try to implement them doesn't really carry through with what was intended. I think what we need to do is just recognize the fact that all of us, as we begin to work hard on these, read them and read them and read them, and finally we're reading what we want to be written there even though it's not quite what shows up when the words are read by somebody else. I think that's the case that we're seeing here.

So it's great that the government brought forward this amendment, and we'll clarify how this really is going to work and how the relationship between the different entities that are going to be required to report will be reflected either by designation through the regulations or through co-operative agreements between data collection and data holding agencies. I think this will be welcomed by all of those that are involved in the credit reporting and will clarify what they can and cannot do as they work with each other and as they work with arm's-length agencies.

I think the government is making this bill more operational, and we should all support this amendment. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a third time]

Bill 23

Apprenticeship and Industry Training Amendment Act, 2000

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move third reading of Bill 23.

This bill quite simply will make apprenticeship and industry training much easier. It'll simplify it, and it will make it much more effective. An already good system will become that much better.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to raise a few other continuing concerns around Bill 23. Now, we're in third reading, so really I'm limited to speaking about the anticipated effect of the legislation. I understand that there was a motion put forward by the Official Opposition last night which was defeated. The effect of the bill would have been stronger with that amendment, but I will accept that it was defeated.

My concern around the effect of Bill 23, the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Amendment Act, 2000, is that this is what really protects the workers and also protects the public. We need our workers to be working in an atmosphere that is safe to them and is cognizant of the difficulties that can arise.

We've all had workers in our offices or from our life previous to being elected who, you know, were asked to work and the conditions weren't safe but would they lose their job? All of those kinds of things. That's why it's important to have a really strong apprenticeship program where you do have a journeyman or a master working with the apprentice to train them on exactly how to do things, to be aware of all the other components of the job and the occupational health and safety parts of it.

It's also important that we have our apprentices well trained because they build buildings and bridges and important parts of the world around us which we as the public need to know are well built. We can all think of those examples where a bolt was loose in a bridge. Those great big concrete siding panels were on a building at the university when I was there, and they kept sort of falling off. You know, it's that kind of thing that's of concern to the public, and we want to know that our workers are trained to do the work properly and safely. So it really affects both of those parties.

Part of what I understand is now possible to put in place – and there are the usual ins and outs and provisos in the legislation. I understand that this would most likely come into play in areas outside of major urban centres, and that's a situation where you have someone who is a journeyman in a trade who can now be allowed through what's proposed in this act to also do other trades. Certainly I can see where that might be wished for sometimes in rural areas where you may not have access to a steamfitter and a boilermaker and a plumber and a gas fitter and a welder, and all different ones. If you had a journeyman gas fitter, well, you know if he could weld, then why can't we just call him a welder as well and let him do the welding stuff out there?

MRS. SOETAERT: And do it very well.

MS BLAKEMAN: Some of them I'm sure can, but there's a concern there. My concern is always for the safety of the worker and the safety of the public.

I'm recalling that during second reading my colleague from Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert told of a little lesson she'd learned.

MRS. SOETAERT: My husband learned it too.

MS BLAKEMAN: And her husband learned it too. They were trying to do something themselves and ended up with . . .

MRS. SOETAERT: One stove not working.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes.

. . . one stove not working, one stove working, and had to bring in a real professional to figure it all out.

That is my concern with this. I believe in being flexible and anticipating the modern world we live in, but I still have concerns about this. I'm worried about what kind of tests or what kind of proof a tradesperson could be asked to put forward if they're going to be asking for this sort of general description or be allowed to work in a second trade when they hold journeyman status in a different trade.

As I mentioned during the debate on the condominium act, I think it's important in this rapidly changing world for us to be willing to monitor things really carefully, changes that we're putting into legislation. I hope that the ministry is looking to monitor that change in particular very carefully, because I don't know that it's appropriate. I'm choosing my words carefully here because it may well turn out that this was a great idea, but it doesn't ring true to me. It doesn't make easy sense to me that because you're a journeyman certified in one trade, gosh, you can be okayed by the minister or his designate to do it in another trade. That's simplifying what's being put forward in this bill, but essentially that is it, and I think that subverts the apprenticeship formula we've worked under for a long, long time, and not only here in Alberta. I mean, the whole idea of learning a trade and coming up as an apprentice to someone goes back to the Middle Ages and beyond. So it's a caution I'm putting forward when I look to the effect of this bill, but it is a real caution that I do have.

There's nothing to stop individuals, if they want to hold a ticket in more than one trade, from getting it in more than one trade. As I said, my father had tickets in five trades, and he was a master in three of them. My brother is a journeyman ironworker and is now working on his welding ticket as well, so it certainly can be done.

It does require effort from the individual, but I don't see that that's any different than someone getting a bachelor of arts and then going back and getting their master's in arts. If you're really interested, you know, go and get your BEd or your bachelor of science or whatever else.

I believe in that education and I really believe in the value of that training. I have real reservations about being able to say, "Well, it's convenient, so we'll just wave the magic wand and say, 'Go ahead.' We'll call you the additional trade as well as the one that you've actually apprenticed in and come up through."

That was the point that I wanted to raise in this bill. I know that my colleagues have spoken long and often on this, people with more experience in this area than I have. I know that in fact my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar is a tradesperson, and I hope he's going to be able to give us a few words on this bill. [interjection] Yes, he is quite a wise man, and I know he would give us more wisdom.

I'm just quickly reviewing my notes. That's right. When I had spoken on second reading, I was talking about a de-skilling of the workforce, and it was my suspicion that that's what this bill was about. I was heckled loudly for wondering aloud about that sort of thing, but in fact when you consider the remarks that I just made about certifying someone in a second trade, that is de-skilling because it's saying that you don't have to go through that apprenticeship stream and do the time and walk the talk to get that distinction.

I know there were concerns that were brought forward by some of the unions. I've read through the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board backgrounders with sort of a question-and-answer thing about were people consulted, and they seem to have been. I always find when this legislation comes forward here – I know the government feels legislation doesn't move through quickly enough, but I've got to tell you that in my office I get people phoning up, often after the bill is passed or when it's in third reading, and going: well, why didn't I know about this, and why can't I get a chance to speak to it? That is about consultation, and it's about the widest possible dissemination of information that these changes are being considered. You can learn a lot by test-driving ideas on people that you know up front are not going to like them. I've often taken proposals and ideas to people that I know are going to object to them, because I get really good information and usually straight from the hip, which is often the most helpful way and certainly gets rid of any misunderstandings.

So those are the remarks that I – oh, sorry. There was one more thing, about crane operators, because I have a friend – now, you'll all chuckle, because he's an old snowmobiling buddy. I'm sorry; he's not old. We have snowmobiled together for a long time. It was in this Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board question-and-answer document, and I know that they – yeah, it's about boom trucks, working on boom trucks.

DR. MASSEY: I think you're making this hard on Hansard.

MS BLAKEMAN: I'm sorry. I'm making it hard on Hansard.

You know, there was a perfect example of how important – I'm looping back to where I started here, so it's a nice closer. He was one of the best crane operators in western Canada, I think, and was severely injured in operating a crane and will never work in that industry again. So there's a worker injured, and I'm not clear on the whole story because I just heard it very briefly, but I think there was also injury to property. Those were the two things I was talking about, where equipment malfunctions or where buildings that have been built by trades workers could come apart and injure other people. Those are the things we should be most concerned about here as legislators. We're the ones that are supposed to be making sure that the best possible guidelines are laid out for this.

Sorry to make this so difficult for Hansard as I mused aloud, but I did want to acknowledge that that had certainly been the experience of my friend, and I wanted to bring it up and underline how important safety is to all of us.

With those few words I will take my seat, having spoken in third reading. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm anxious to rise at third reading. I have a few remarks, reluctantly, at this time regarding Bill 23 and what it doesn't and what it does do. After hearing various voices from all across this province regarding this initiative, I can certainly see where some individuals are excited about supporting this legislation, but I can also see where there are many reasons for reservations and many reasons for caution, and I cannot in all conscience support this legislative proposal.

At the same time, I would like to congratulate the hon. minister and his staff. They have had a wide-ranging consultation process, but I'm not convinced, if I look at the history of this province, that this is a good piece of legislation. I can only think, for instance, of the tower crane in Calgary. In the downtown section of Calgary unfortunately a counterweight plummeted off the back of that crane right to 4th Avenue I think. It narrowly missed a mother and her child in a pram, and that was the fortunate part of this incident, that there was no loss of life involved.

Whenever we consider this and we consider the time and attention to detail that's necessary whenever the tower crane is initially set up or erected, we have to have full confidence in the individuals who are not only doing those operations but also guiding them. That is one incident, Mr. Speaker, that tells me that we have to hold on here, and we cannot allow any dilution or watering down of our trades, whether they be compulsory trades or whether they be optional trades. In fact, I would like to see a lot of the optional trades moved into the compulsory certification column. Certainly I would like to see carpenters, for one, moved into the category of a compulsory trade, but who's to say if that will ever happen?

Also, in Calgary two years ago I questioned the minister of advanced education at that time regarding this specific issue. That was that unqualified individuals were employed in fabrication shops in the steel industry in Calgary, and they had welding tickets, tickets to be fitters. It didn't say for what, whether it was pipes or plate or structural, but they were fitters, and this was brought to my attention. I brought this forward to question period, and the answer I received was that these tickets were used simply as a means of identification, but all hon. members of this Assembly know that there was work going on in that shop and someone was doing it. I don't know how the client or the purchaser of the steel products in that shop felt when they realized that unqualified workers were involved in the process.

This is a very, very serious issue, and there are no amendments to the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act that are specifically going to deal with an issue such as this. What this bill does in section 22 and further on, unfortunately, in section 33 of the amendments is allow this sort of activity not only to continue but in my view to continue on a grander scale. We have to ask ourselves the question: who benefits? Who is going to benefit from this activity? In the long run it is my view that no one will.

Now, we look at some of the compulsory trades. I spoke about welding last evening, and I realize that many of the rig welders across the province when they get word of this are not going to be happy. I don't have any view or vision of them coming and circling the Assembly, but they are going to be very concerned when they realize that their trade – and Alberta welders are famous for their proficiency and their expertise – is being watered down.

Now, at this time I would like to speak about the electricians and how this legislation will affect them. The electrical industry certainly has changed. There are industrial plants, there are companies, there are corporations that feel that they should have their own electrician, an exclusive company electrician, not accredited by the province or by the Minister of Learning's department but by their own department of learning, if I can use that term, Mr. Speaker. But if we were to allow corporations to regulate or monitor their own training programs for electricians, well, that would be fine if it was specific to occupational health and safety training or upgrading on specific equipment, for instance, that was to be used in part of their process or their process stream and it was unique equipment, but there have to be, I believe, provincewide standards.

Now, if we allow corporations to train, for instance, their own electricians and if that person, he or she, is working there for 10 years and has, for instance, an ABC refining company electrical certification in their pocket and if for corporate downsizing or any other reason they decide to leave that company, leave that job, that trade certificate is not worth the paper it's printed on. This is one of the concerns I have.

Now, the electrical trade is always changing. It's changing very rapidly. I acknowledge that. There always has to be upgrading. But whenever we look at the development of, for instance, tech cable and we look at oil installations and industrial installations across the province, this is also very much like Meccano. There are a whole series of trays erected. They're going in this direction, and they're going in that direction, and they are to hold – I'm sure all hon. members are familiar with this – the black cables that are in various diameters. With the development of these tech cables, they're very flexible and they're fireproof. They're very safe. Some of them can be designed for underground use. They save a lot of installation time.

What companies have done in the past, Mr. Speaker, is take young people off the street and employ them to be cable-pullers. They're gathering their hours for their apprenticeship in this way. Let's say that we pay them $10 an hour, and then these young people get enough time and their schooling in, and they go to second year. They're second-year apprentices now. Companies have been known to hire another group of first-year apprentices, and the individuals who are in second year, because they're going to make maybe $12 per hour, for instance, are unemployed because they have been replaced by a cheaper supply of labour. They have difficulty getting their apprenticeships and training completed. For instance, some people can become journeymen and have great difficulty terminating a junction box because they have all their specific training on one task, and that is distributing tech cable in these trays.

If we look at the amendments to section 33 here and we look at "with respect to a compulsory certification trade, [and the establishment of] one or more specific undertakings or a portion of those undertakings," this is where this whole idea of an optional certification trade comes into play. What's to stop a large electrical contractor from requesting this? Perhaps we're going to have trade-specific details relating to termination at junction boxes. It could be any number of things, but I do not believe that this is in the best interests of the electrical contractors or the electricians.

Now, that is a specific example, Mr. Speaker, but we need to ensure – and there's a price involved in this; there's a shortage of skilled tradesmen in this province as there is – that there are always young people entering the trade or the profession. We need to ensure that standards are there. This bill erodes those standards in my view.

When we look at the age of the workforce, we need to encourage young people to enter the trades. Many people do not realize that they can make a very good living for themselves in the trades, and we need to encourage people. They need to have the confidence that if they make the time and the effort and the commitment to attend either NAIT or SAIT or whether they want to learn on the job and write their ticket off, that ticket is going to mean something.

It is going to mean something not only the day that they proudly get it with the hon. Minister of Learning's signature on it, but five and six years down the road that that certificate's value is not going to be eroded because of some ministerial decree or a company over here now that is permitted to operate outside the board, to have input with the minister or other organizations or associations or persons. This could be Merit Contractors, Christian Labour Association of Canada contractors who believe that this whole idea of a union contract with different crafts having different organizations or multicraft sites is not efficient. It's not the way they would like to see a workplace organized. They have the view that one hon. member, for instance, could maybe do carpenter work in the morning and do electrical work in the afternoon. Maybe the next day the cement truck is coming in, and he or she could possibly be the cement finisher. This concept is not in the best interests of this province or the industries that we're so proud of.

We look at the governments of this province in the past and what they did to enhance and promote the trades and apprenticeships and the regulations, the whole governance. All hon. members of this Assembly will acknowledge that part of this so-called Alberta advantage is that many individuals, thousands upon thousands, can pull out of their pocket a ticket with the hon. Minister of Learning's signature on it and probably get a job in a foreign country because it will say Alberta on that ticket. I'm not convinced that this will be the way of the future, because there are just too many loopholes in this legislation to allow for the erosion of our trade programs. If it's good enough for one group of individuals that they should attend school or they should work in a specific shop to learn the scale, then it should be good enough for everyone. There should be no shortcuts.

We look at some of the things that have happened in this province with faulty workmanship. I will bring to the attention of all hon. members of this Assembly again the accident that happened in Swan Hills. As a result of that accident, there are PCBs, furans, dioxins all scattered for who knows how far in a radius around the plant and into the food chain. This was caused by faulty welding on a repair job. Unfortunately, we can't get to the bottom of this because the exhibits have been sealed from public view by the judge. If we could only look at the blueprints, if we could only look and find out who the contractor was, who the welders were, what certification they held, what sort of testing was conducted before, during, and after the job, we could get to the bottom of this and ensure that it doesn't happen again. The tower crane accident in Calgary. Hub Oil, the unfortunate accident last summer, which I understand is still under investigation.

We look at the province and the further development of the tar sands and what that means to people who hold trade certificates. It's a future for them. We need to ensure that the training they receive is going to be protected so that, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview would say, not every Tom, Dick, and Harry can suddenly become a B welder or an electrician or an autobody mechanic.

I spoke a little bit about that last night and the frustration that people have whenever they come into the constituency office and say: I paid the journeyman rate, and it was an apprentice at piece-work working on my car. They were disappointed in that. They said: what can you do? There's basically very little that can be done, because there is no enforcement of what we have already, and I think we're diluting it even further.

When we look at steamfitters, when we look at plumbers, we never think of how much work they do and what it means to society or the community. We look at operators of cranes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre brought this up. We must ensure that we have a well-scaled, adequately trained workforce. We cannot do it by eroding away the standards that already exist and have been put in place by previous governments, and I believe that's what we're doing with this Bill 23. That is the reason why I cannot support this bill. I hope over time, Mr. Speaker, that I'm proven wrong and that my concerns about this bill are not justified. But at this time, after consulting with many individuals, unfortunately I cannot support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I thank all hon. members of this Assembly for listening to my remarks, and once again I would in closing like to commend the hon. Minister of Learning and his department, but I cannot accept this. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning to close debate.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to say that this bill has been the result of three years of consultation. It has been the result of a truce between the employers and the employees, and realistically I feel and the employers and employees, the unions, and the apprentices all feel that this will lead to positive results for the apprenticeship and training industry.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the question be called.

Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate May 15: Ms Carlson]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to participate in the debate at second reading of Bill 19, the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act. This bill has a very simple and straightforward premise: lowering taxes for Albertans. The backbone of this bill is to remove the surtax which was placed on Albertans some number of years ago to deal with the then deficit, and as has been pointed out many times over the last five years, the deficit is gone. We've dealt with the net debt. We're now paying off the supported debt of the province, and it's long overdue that the surtax be removed.

The bill is as simple as that, Mr. Speaker. It doesn't require a lot of debate, but we hear again that the Liberal opposition is opposed to lowering taxes for Albertans, is opposed to Bill 18, is opposed to Bill 19, and that they will be standing in front of those bills and doing everything they can to stop passage of those bills on a timely basis so that Albertans can be secure in the knowledge that their taxes are going to go down.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 19 should be debated and should be debated fully. However, I don't believe that the people of Alberta will be well served by reasoned amendments or referral amendments or those sorts of amendments, so I would move that pursuant to Standing Order 47(1) the question now be put.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand and speak to Bill 19, the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000, even if Standing Order 47(1) has been put forward.

As the Acting Treasurer presented this Bill 19 on April 3, 2000, he started out by saying that it's a milestone as a net debt is disappearing. He also alluded that it leads to elimination of the 8 percent deficit elimination surtax. This tax was imposed by the same government that he came into in 1986. The day this was brought forward in 1987, he actually sat with the government of the day when this was involved. It was brought forward as a temporary measure – and we are now sitting in May 2000 – for Albertans with incomes greater than $44,000. In today's dollars that's equivalent to $47,000.

Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition believes in tax reduction. They absolutely do. If the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud wants to reflect or wants to have the spin out there that we don't, it is an absolute falsehood. I believe in tax reduction, but I personally believe there should be a fair and equitable tax reduction so that all Albertans are involved in this. You know, we look at this, and all Albertans made a sacrifice to eliminate the government's deficit. That started in 1987. Then in 1992 all Albertans were involved in this debt reduction to the point where a lot of people were really quite hurt in their jobs, whether they had had the job for years or whatever. They deserve to have a little bit more communication on this one. Why should many Albertan families have to wait in line while a select few chosen by the Premier of this government get the benefit first? On the issues of tax cuts, fairness, and equity, as I mentioned before, this government has failed to deliver the goods.

Our caucus, the Official Opposition, has proposed that Albertans receive a tax cut simultaneously. This is why we have been calling for elimination of the .5 percent flat tax first, which would provide tax relief to all Albertans, before the elimination of the surtax, which provides tax relief to only a select few Albertans. This government has shortchanged Albertan families by its decision to eliminate the 8 percent surtax first. Two-income families with children and earning $75,000 or less per year receive little or no tax relief under the government's tax scheme.

The government's tax scheme is nothing more than a political game of picking and choosing those Albertans who should benefit from tax cuts first. Government shouldn't be involved in the business of picking winners with the tax system. We are seeing this in all the bills that have actually been put forward in the last while, and this is anywhere from Bill 40 to Bill 11, Bill 18, and Bill 19. The politics that are being played out on these are really concerning. As a person who has always stood on my own and never actually been pushed by any political swing, I find the politics of this really, really concerning. I would like everybody to remember the history. There have been many skirmishes and wars when the church and state throughout the world have gotten involved in politics. That's why it's a major thing that I really think we should be looking at.

You know, the 8 percent surtax applies to taxpayers with a taxable income of $46,450 and above. Of nearly 835,000 one-income and two-income families in Alberta, 685,000, or 82 percent, are two-income earners. According to Statistics Canada, 72 percent of families in Alberta earned less than $75,000 in income during 1997. The average income of Albertan families was $58,562 in 1997. Calculations prepared by ourselves, the Official Opposition, show that a two-income family earning $75,000, with two children, with an income split of 50-50 or 60-40 would receive no tax reductions under this provincial government scheme. A two-income family at $75,000 with two children and with an income split of 70-30 would receive a tax cut of just $13 per year, or 4 cents per day, from elimination of the surtax.

Mr. Speaker, remember that this goes back to a temporary tax at a time right after the second major crash that happened in this province in Alberta's economy due to the fact of the oil prices dropping out in the 1982 crash. Things started to build toward 1985, and then the crash came in late 1987. Remember that this came as a result of the Treasurer's party, that he was with. They just couldn't get around the fact that they couldn't buy themselves out of recession. But, you know, they weren't the only ones. This happened all over the world. Everybody tried to buy themselves out of the problems of spending, and really we have lived to see the day when 1992 came.

You know, in the 1990s things were progressively getting better in the economy, but it's taken till 2000 to eliminate this tax. We're fortunate that we live in such a great province with revenue coming in from energy production, especially when the world prices are high. When it's high, we can spend and should be able to invest towards our health, education, infrastructure, and social services. [interjections] I know that I'm getting comments about agriculture, and I'm not discounting the fact that agriculture is a very big part of this province. I will not say anything bad at all about agriculture. It is part of our economy.

When the price dropped in oil and gas and when we saw what happened a year ago at $10 to $12 a barrel, how did we respond? I want to note that the time to plan properly is when times are good. We should be planning now, not experimenting, and I don't mean only by putting money back in at the time of elections, as in the past, for example. We're looking at infrastructure and building hospitals throughout the province. I also am hearing rumours and some comments that were made at Capital health a week ago from people within this Chamber saying that there's going to be big money spent in the next while on infrastructure toward health and education. Well, let's go a little bit slower. Let's plan this time. Let's make sure everything is going to be working right.

It goes back to the comments saying that the Official Opposition doesn't believe in tax breaks. Well, we do. It's interesting that this one would be beneficial if instead of going at the surtax, we looked at the .5 percent. It's interesting listening to the Treasurer about all the breaks offered now. For example, families' employment tax credits, which give breaks of up to $1,000 to low- and middle-income families; cutting tax rates from 45 and a half percent to 44 percent; a 65 percent cut for single-income families having two children and earning $30,000 per year.

I can remember in 1992-93 when this government started playing a one-string guitar. I keep commenting about that, because when all you're doing is looking at reducing and cutting and dismantling, is that governing? Outside of the fact that it has spread through the western world to point fingers at health as being a major problem and pointing fingers at government as being the other major problem with overspending, I think you have to reflect on what has actually happened. Yes, we've reduced the debt, but by reducing the debt, we also let 10,000 people go from our health system.

The Municipal Affairs department, where I'm the shadow critic, went from 2,200 or 2,400 employees down to 700. Then there are the rumours out there – I have a lot of government workers that live in my constituency – about the new corporation board. A month ago a number of concerned people in my constituency talked about it. Now all of a sudden the rumour coming back to them is that there is going to be no reduction when this comes in, not until after the next election anyway.

Why is the government only looking at the top 25 percent of Albertans, earning above $46,450 in taxable income? In 1987 this same government brought in the surtax against the same percentage of Albertans. Why the double standard? Mr. Speaker, as we look at this, I question why the government chose to eliminate the 8 percent surtax, which applies to only 390,000 Alberta taxpayers, ahead of the .5 percent flat tax, which applies to over 1,562,000 taxpayers.

It's interesting to note that when the Alberta government originally came forward with the tax cut plan in the 1996 budget, the timetable was to eliminate the .5 percent flat tax by January 1, 1999, before this 8 percent surtax, which was going to be eliminated by January 1, 2001. I'd like to support our solution that a tax cut be directed to 100 percent of Albertans, while the Premier's government supports a tax cut for only 25 percent of Albertans, using the 8 percent surtax.

The elimination of the 8 percent surtax is typical of this government's incremental approach to tax policy. The government had a choice to do what was fair and equitable – eliminate the .5 percent flat tax, which was paid by nearly all Albertans – or do what was politically expedient by giving a tax cut to a select few Albertans, eliminating the 8 percent surtax. We talked about it politically, and as I mentioned before, the politics of this are really making me scratch my head.

The Premier and the former Provincial Treasurer broke their promise to provide tax cuts for all in the event of a higher than anticipated surplus in 1999-2000. "What we want to do is make sure that those who can least afford to pay . . . get the first break": this was an actual quote in the Calgary Herald from the Premier.

"Certainly our priority is for low-income earners, and there are ways that can be addressed": this was another quote in the Calgary Herald, July 28, 1999, by the former Treasurer.

Of the nearly 835,000 one- and two-income earning families in Alberta, 685,000, or 82 percent, are two-income earners. This is according to Statistics Canada. Who benefits from the elimination of the 8 percent surtax? Well, the real issue is: who does not benefit from the elimination of the 8 percent surtax?

A family of four who are headed by two public servants, one earning $60,000 and the other earning $40,000, will save $56, or 15 cents per day, from the elimination of the surtax. They don't benefit from this. A two-income family earning $75,000 and with two children, where the income is split 50-50, will save zero dollars per year from the elimination of the surtax. Is that a savings to them? A single nurse in Lloydminster who earns $40,000 will save zero percent per year from the elimination of the surtax. Well, I wonder if the Treasurer is actually looking at his own constituency and the people who work there.

We could go down and talk about seniors and the normal Albertans. We as the Official Opposition believe that all Albertans deserve a tax cut now. Done the way that is presented by this particular Bill 19, it is not fair and equitable to all Albertans. It's no different than the comments on what we're trying to get at in Bill 18. If it's not fair and equitable, why are we doing it? If we're doing it just for those that we know can put into the slush fund of the next election, that is not fair to the biggest percentage of Albertans.

Albertans really want to trust the bills that are coming out. As a normal Albertan reads the papers, I hope they do read beyond the headlines of the clippings. There are a few reporters that are actually reporting this right. The fact is that few Albertans are involved in this. All Albertans made sacrifices to eliminate the government's deficit, as I mentioned before, and that is really, really an interesting item. The same Albertans that did tighten the belt and did sacrifice are not being listened to.

We can talk about Bill 11 and the amount of phone calls we all had. Now, I'm maybe a little bit different. I do mix and shake with a lot of people that are probably in the tax bracket where they would love it if this would go through. They also would love to see Bill 18 go through, but as I talk to them and start talking different percentages and different ways we can present this – and hopefully the government is listening to some of the concerns we do have and some of the statements – we will be going a lot further than we are right now with it.

Mr. Speaker, this is probably an interesting one to throw out there and have in Hansard. A single senior earning $40,000 receives no tax reduction from the elimination of the 8 percent surtax in 2000 but would have received a $184 tax cut from the elimination of the .5 percent flat-rate tax. Now, if we're saying that we haven't been putting different bills forward and everything that was going on against the seniors, maybe this should actually be thought out and brought out, because if this is going to be leading into the next provincial election and this gets to the doors, my constituency probably isn't any different from the rest of the people in here, and there are a number of people that are seniors.

I love knocking on doors when it comes to seniors because I talk their language. Whether they're a staunch Reform or Alliance person or a staunch Conservative for a number of years, they actually are well deserving of a good debate. Last night alone in the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands it was fun knocking on doors. That's a great constituency if you want to get out on a nice evening and really talk about what's been happening.

You know, I could go on for quite a while, but I know there are a lot of members in here that would like to speak on it, so I'm going to sit down and listen to other members.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, I don't for one minute profess to be any kind of tax wizard. In fact, I have probably as much difficulty as many Canadians and certainly Albertans understanding the tax process. So I buy a tax program and plug in my numbers, and it's really easy for me to come up with my tax return. It's probably done in about an hour and a half. It's great.

I guess I have some concerns about this whole issue of visiting or looking at changing the tax structure and looking at these little incremental things that the government's doing and calling it tax reform. It's kind of scary that that's what we're hearing, because tax reform is going to take a long time. It's going to take a lot of discussion on how we reach an equitable system for all Canadians. I'm not talking about the flat tax, because I don't for one minute believe that's fair and equitable.

Taxpayers deserve a tax cut and should get a tax cut. So I have no problem eliminating the 8 percent surtax, Mr. Speaker. It's a great start, but as I said, it should be a full process, a follow-through process on tax reform. If we're only talking about giving a little bit of a tax break, then I can support this.

What about the flat tax? As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has said, the .5 percent flat tax is the real tax break, because that would be for all Albertans, not just 25 percent of Albertans. Wouldn't it have been nice for the hon. Treasurer to have said: "Hey, you know what? We said that we want all Albertans to have a tax break, not just those in excess of $45,000" or whatever that threshold is. It would have been really great if he had said: "So what I'm going to do is eliminate the .5 percent flat tax rate." That was a rate that was brought in as a deficit reduction rate, a rate that was brought in to assist the government in achieving some economics at the time.

Year after year we have budget surpluses, and we have the Premier and the Treasurer beating their chests about the great job they've done and that now it's time to give Albertans a bit of a break. Well, we've got a great economy right now, and I guess what scares me about this step in a tax reduction package is that because of the volatility of our economy, Mr. Speaker, we can afford to give a little bit of a tax break right now, but taking away the 8 percent, which would have been better if it had been the .5 percent flat tax rate, for all Albertans, not just those in the upper income brackets, is acceptable. I would call it a treat right now because I don't see it as a big tax break. In fact, this government is very good at tax tinkering. They're the tinkers of tax, if you will.

We know that when you build a house, you don't build it by: "Well, let's see, we'll put the roof up; well, we've got no walls. Let me see. We're going to tinker a little bit with putting in half the basement." You know, the house just wouldn't work. In fact, it would collapse if you could even get the walls up. So we need a systematic approach to what we're doing, and that's not what I see here. I see kind of like the goody bag. We're just going to reach in the goody bag: oops, here's the tax reduction. But it's just a small amount, and it means little to those people in tax brackets under $40,000.

Now, the hon. Treasurer will stand up and say to me: yeah, but we've given a tax break to all Albertans with our flat tax.

MR. DICKSON: Is that the Acting Treasurer or the old Treasurer?

MS OLSEN: That's the older guy, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, I think it is. The older Treasurer. I thought he would have some wisdom, you know, being an older fellow, but we're not quite there yet.

However, as I've said before, Mr. Speaker, three goals to a tax system. Simplicity: we could achieve that. Fairness and equity can't be achieved by the way this government is reducing taxes. It just isn't in the cards. Growth: there isn't a whole lot of, I guess, disposable income freed up as a result of this government's tax reductions. I think my colleague had made some comments about some of the particular reductions. We see that some people are getting nothing in their pocket, others are getting a wee, wee bit of a tax break, and then those in the upper-income bracket are getting a little bit more but really not that significant. In fact, I would venture to say that with the current system we have right now – and in fact I can speak to this. With the number of deductions that are actually available in the system right now, many people can get a bit of a tax return that's a little more substantial than the tinkering dollars they're getting out of this type of tax break.

So while I say very clearly, Mr. Speaker, that I'm not opposed to tax breaks, or if you will, I'm not opposed to the Provincial Treasurer stopping tax creeps . . . [interjection] I didn't say, hon. member, that he was a tax creep. I said: stopping tax creeps. I guess the government would be considered tax creeps, wouldn't they?

I guess my issue is that if you're going to have a break, if you want to have a change in the structure, then do that. Look at the entire structure, because if you bring in, say, a flat tax – the only thing we're doing with this current Treasurer, the old guy, and then the middle-aged fellow that's left the Treasurer's post is giving a portion of a flat tax change here. If we were to have a true flat tax system, then we would have no other deductions available to us, and that's not what we're seeing here. If we were to have a true flat tax system, business and corporate taxes would be included in that process, and if they had to pay – what is it? – that 10 percent, would they kind of jump out of their skin at that? Would they think that might be a little bit too much? So I think that's not fair. There's no fairness in this whole flat tax process, and I would strongly suggest that Canadians and Albertans do deserve a change or at least a tax reduction.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the federal government in its wisdom was able to give all of us a bit of tax break, in fact a bigger tax break, and we play the tax catch-up game here. That's tax catch-up, not tax ketchup. I get a little worried that the provincial government is going to run out of taxes to cut in playing this game. [interjection]

Well, then, you know, I would wonder how goods and services are paid for in a fair and equitable system. In a fair and equitable and progressive system, we have a vertical and horizontal tax structure, and that allows for citizens to be taxed in a fair and equitable way. So we'll end up with this big tax fight, and the next thing you know, we're going to have to be careful about the economy, because you can only have these . . . [interjection]

The hon. minister over there, that chap from Cypress-Medicine Hat, says: we'll never have to worry about the economy. But you know what, Mr. Speaker? It's pretty volatile, and you know what? We don't want the government to be tax creeps. I wouldn't want that hon. minister to be a tax creep. I want him to be able to give tax cuts. So if we don't keep our eye on the economy and watch how the revenue is generated and how it's coming into the province, at some point we may end up having to take that tax break away.

You know, this government has been in that trouble before. In the late '80s and the early '90s we know what trouble this government was in. We don't want to see that happen again, Mr. Speaker, so good, prudent fiscal management would be a part of that but also not offering the world without knowing what's going to happen down the road and being able to save for that rainy day, because we know that there isn't a stabilization fund that exists in this government's economic policy. Then, you know, I'm not so sure that we have that room to move for that rainy day.

There are a number of considerations. This is not an easy discussion. It's not an easy debate. I'm going to support, of course, the removal of the 8 percent tax rate for those in the upper-income bracket. What I don't want to see, Mr. Speaker, is an increase in user fees. Just because we have this 8 percent surtax gone and then fairly quickly, I hope, the .5 percent flat tax rate going, I don't want to see an increase in user fees to make it up on the other side, because then I think the government would be cheating Albertans. I don't want to see this government cheating, and I don't want to see this government being called tax creeps.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will cede the floor to my colleagues.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have never heard so many specious arguments about giving Albertans tax cuts. To prevent us hearing any more of this foolishness at this time of night, I would like to move that we adjourn debate on this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I debated long and hard as to whether we should go home, but no standing vote, so I couldn't change our mind on that. I would move that we now adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[At 11:30 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 17, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/05/17

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Dear God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Thy guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition on behalf of Albertans from the following communities: Calmar, Stony Plain, St. Albert, Edmonton, Legal, Fort McMurray, Leduc, Lac La Biche, Calgary, De Winton, Okotoks, and Rocky Mountain House. The citizens are concerned. They write:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to be able to present to the Assembly this afternoon a petition signed by 94 Albertans residing in Calgary and Edmonton. These 94 Albertans petition the Assembly "to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and present a petition signed by 120 Calgarians who are asking the Assembly "to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

MR. GIBBONS: I'd ask that the petition with respect to public health care that I presented yesterday from Edmonton-Manning, Edmonton-Clareview, and Edmonton-Norwood be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise and request that the petitions I presented yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta not to institute a flat tax because:

- it will unfairly shift the tax load from high-income earners onto middle-income Albertans;
- it will deepen the divisions between rich and poor in Alberta society; and
- it will do nothing to simplify the tax system.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm giving oral notice today of a motion to stop the opposition filibuster on a significant tax cut for Albertans. The motion reads: "Be it resolved that debate on second reading of Bill 18, Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, shall not be further adjourned."

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of the Alberta government's mission report from my participation in last year's Team Canada mission to Japan and my subsequent visit to China.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I would like to table today the required copies of Dr. Robert Shapiro's report titled Why Fairness Matters: Progressive Versus Flat Taxes. It amazes me that the Liberals always refer to this report in antagonism to the single-rate tax. After reading this report, it follows three tests that we used: increased simplicity, increased economic growth, and increased equity, and it meets all those tests.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like also to table a news release from the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, a federation that looks at all taxes across Canada. It's headed up by saying: Klein's Tax Cuts a Boon to Middle-Class; Bill 18 Critics Out to Lunch.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, in Shapiro's paper his conclusion is progressivity wins. But that's okay.

I would like to table the appropriate number of copies to the hon. Member from Calgary-Egmont from Mr. Kim Cassidy in which Mr. Cassidy calls upon the Member for Calgary-Egmont to apologize for his mischaracterization of the work that he did when he was an employee of Alberta Treasury. Mr. Speaker, I'm certain a similar letter will come to the Provincial Treasurer if he keeps this up.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a document that I would suggest is required reading for every Canadian legislator. It's the annual report for 1999-2000 that was released yesterday by Mr. Bruce Phillips, the Canadian Privacy Commissioner, with some terrific commentary on Bill 40 and a host of other provincial government initiatives.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of a letter and a comprehensive review of the Genesis Spray Lakes area development done by Robin White. As a result of this review, Robin is totally opposed to the project.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of the program for a very significant event that occurred right here on the Legislature Grounds this morning. It was a statue unveiling ceremony of Lord Strathcona by Her Excellency the Right Honourable Adrienne Clarkson.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got three tablings, three documents. The first is a note from Ontario Hansard, Finance Committee's Pre-Budget Hearings, February 1, 2000, where Mr. Ernie Eves gives reasons why a flat tax is the route that they want to reject in favour of progressivity.

The second document, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from Alison Longson of Calgary expressing concern over the Genesis Land Corporation proposal for Spray Lakes.

The third is an e-mail letter from Trevor Nickel of Sherwood Park, and it's critical of the government's health care policy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. LANGEVIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Allan Shenfield, who is seated in your gallery this afternoon.

Mr. Shenfield was first appointed as returning officer for the electoral division of Stony Plain in 1973 and has served in that position for six consecutive elections. He has also been the municipal returning officer for Parkland county for 35 years. Mr. Shenfield initiated a farm family award in this province, and he is an honorary life director for the Alberta Association of Agricultural Societies. He is also very active in the 4-H movement and has been inducted into the 4-H Hall of Fame. The Shenfield Civic Centre in Spruce Grove is named after Allan for his contribution to the community. He has served on numerous provincial and local boards and committees, and he resides within the Hon. Stan Woloshyn's constituency of Stony Plain. Stan would have had lunch with him today, but he was welcoming the Governor General at the Provincial Museum at noon.

Today Allan is accompanied by our Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Brian Fjeldheim. I would like to ask them both to please rise and receive a warm welcome from the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions this afternoon. First, I would like to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 35 individuals from Idylwyld elementary school. The group visiting today is comprised of three adults, including Mrs. Cooper, the teacher, accompanied by Miss Sauer and Mrs. Voaklander. The 32 students who are visiting today are in one of the schools that has in combination with another school from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's constituency the concept of sharing a principal. They are visiting the Legislative Assembly as part of their course. They're in the public gallery. I would now ask that they rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly this afternoon is of two individuals that I'm proud to represent in this Assembly. They are Al and Edna Sempovich. They are constituents, of course, of Edmonton-Gold Bar. They are very active not only in their retirement years, but they were owners of a grocery store, the Gold Bar IGA in Edmonton-Gold Bar. I would now ask them to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly 23 grade 5 and 6 students from Rutherford school in my constituency. They are accompanied by Mrs. Kathleen Maser, their teacher, and by Mrs. Patricia Hage and Mrs. Joan Popp. I had the pleasure of reading to this group several months ago, and I found these students very, very attentive and able listeners. I would ask all of them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 18 visitors from the Round Hill school. They are seated in the members' gallery. The group includes teachers Mrs. Maxine Sych and Mr. Dan Adrian. I would ask the Assembly to extend to them a traditional warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you 52 bright, enthusiastic young students from the Lacombe Christian school in Lacombe in my constituency. Accompanying the students are teachers Mr. VanDoesburg and Miss Vande Kraats, with parent helpers Mrs. Ekkel, Mrs. Steeneveld, Mrs. Vanderwekken, Mrs. Stikker-Breemhaar, Mrs. Brink, Mrs. Vink, Mrs. Kamps, Mrs. Weenink, Mrs. Schakel, and Mrs. Dereg. They're seated in both galleries. I would ask the students if they would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you a group of students that will be here between 2 and 2:30. I would like people to know that I have 34 visitors from Millgrove school in Spruce Grove. They are with their teachers, Mrs. Pat O'Callaghan and Mrs. Deb Schellenberger, and parent helpers Mrs. Donna Fillion and Mrs. Susan Park. They've had a wonderful tour, and they will see us later in the Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the other members of the Legislature a young student from John Paul II school in Stony Plain. She was here today on a job shadow, and part of her responsibilities was to help me welcome Her Excellency the Right Honourable Adrienne Clarkson to the Provincial Museum to view the Lord Strathcona regiment exhibit at the museum. I'd now ask Katlin-Kit Haley to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you today a constituent of mine but also a true friend of the city of Lethbridge and of course a true friend of the Member for Lethbridge-East and myself. We would like to introduce Mayor David Carpenter, city of Lethbridge. I believe he's in the public gallery.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The St. Albert Kinsmen Rainmaker Rodeo is coming to town, and today the Kinsmen had the media kickoff. We have two members, Kinsman Greg Amyotte and K-40 member Bill Hite. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Medical Diagnostic Services

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For the first time in Alberta's history people will be able to jump the queue by paying for a CAT scan at the Meadowlark MRI centre. CAT or CT scans are used in diagnosing cancer, tumors, osteoporosis, and heart disease. In their letter to doctors advertising their new services, which I'm pleased to table, the private operators advertise that pricing is structured to promote affordability:

Brain	$200
Spine	$300
Body or Chest	$325.

Visa, MasterCard's welcome. My questions are to the Premier. Given that Albertans can wait for up to three months for a CAT scan in the public system but can pay out-of-pocket to have one done the next day at the Meadowlark MRI centre, can the Premier please explain the reason for the queue-jumping that he's allowing?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this is hardly queue-jumping. I think it applies to all diagnostic services, as it relates to MRIs, as it relates to CAT scans. If something is prescribed by a physician and is deemed to be medically necessary, that person will get the necessary diagnosis, whether it be a CAT scan or an MRI or an X ray or whatever other diagnostic procedure is required. If a person is perfectly healthy and says to a group of diagnostic experts, technicians, and physicians, "Lookit; I just want to come in and get my head checked out or my leg or my arm," then why would the system pay for it? Why would the system pay for it if there's nothing medically wrong. They would have the public pay for a procedure that is not medically necessary.

If the leader of the Liberal opposition wants any further clarification, I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Premier would like to explain for someone awaiting a brain scan, a CT scan, why they have to wait as long as they do and that it's not medically necessary.

You know, this is the little health care insurance card. Can the Premier . . .

THE SPEAKER: I recognized the hon. leader for a question.

MRS. MacBETH: Okay. Mr. Speaker, can the Premier explain why an Alberta health care insurance card is now not fully covering medically necessary CT and MRI scans?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, if it isn't right now, I'm really quite surprised, because if it's medically necessary and it's prescribed by a doctor, then it is covered.

I know that anytime I've had an X ray or when I had pneumonia some years ago and it was prescribed, I had the CAT scan. You know, this was before I was the Premier, just to make sure that there was no preference, but it was necessary because I had very serious pneumonia, and I got a CAT scan. It was medically prescribed.

Again, I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, certainly this diagnostic technique is covered, is paid for by Alberta health care. The health card works for medically required diagnostic services.

I would also like to remind the members across the way that through our specific announcement with respect to a major, major expansion of MRI capacity in this province along with very significant dollars that we have put into purchasing additional equipment, we are responding to the need for additional diagnostic equipment across this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When a patient receives a medically necessary service in the private sector, why do they now have to take their Visa or their Interac card along with them?

MR. KLEIN: That statement is totally, absolutely false, untrue, fraudulent, and misleading. Mr. Speaker, this is what the Liberals have been up to all along. I will explain one more time to the people of this province. No use explaining to the Liberals because they either don't know, won't understand, refuse to understand, or are intent on continuing with their malicious campaign of misinformation. To all Albertans: all you need for any medically necessary and required diagnostic procedure is your Alberta health care card.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Protection of Privacy

MRS. MacBETH: We'll send him the bills, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, Canada's Privacy Commissioner in his latest report is very critical of the creation of a data profile by the federal government department of Human Resources Development Canada. This appears to fly in the face of past promises to Canadians that government would not gather and organize different kinds of information about citizens without their knowledge and without their consent. My questions are to the Premier. Does this province provide personal information to the federal government about Albertans without their consent?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, before I answer, the leader of the Liberal opposition said that she'll send me the bill. Well, I challenge her that if she goes in for a diagnostic service that is medically prescribed and she sends the bill, I'll tell you that that is something I'll be taking up with the College of Physicians and Surgeons. So I challenge her. If she has a medically required procedure and it's prescribed, then I challenge her to send me the bill. She won't, because there won't be a bill.

Relative to the question, which by the way is a good question, as a matter of fact I was going to ask the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs whether or not we are required to be part of that insidious federal Liberal government scheme.

THE SPEAKER: I take it now that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs is supplementing the answer?

MR. KLEIN: Yes.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Mr. Speaker, the freedom of information and privacy bill is one that has been debated and discussed at some length. As a matter of fact, all parties were part of the process, the discussion and the development of this particular bill.

I think it's important that in the discussion and development of this bill there were some exceptions, there were some rules that indeed allowed for exceptions for releasing information. I think it's critical that we understand that mandatory exceptions prevent the release of information that would harm the business interests of third parties. There is a mandatory exception that stops the release of personal information that would cause an unreasonable invasion of personal privacy. Mandatory exceptions protect cabinet deliberations where the policy is still in the formative stage. This discretionary exception protects advice from officials. Indeed, discretionary exceptions recognize legal privilege and protect confidentially between lawyers and their clients.

These were all exceptions that were put in place with approval and agreement actually. The Liberals agreed with this, so I find it strange that if there were any consequential discussions regarding this, the Liberals find difficulty with this overall process.

MRS. MacBETH: So I take it that the answer is yes, it does provide information to the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, what conditions has this government put on the pass-through of information from Alberta to the federal government on things like student loans, social assistance, and maintenance enforcement? What conditions?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, here is a good question. It's a discussion I wanted to have with the hon. minister. Maybe he has the answer now, and I'll ask him to reply.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Mr. Speaker, I've laid out the exceptions. Indeed, we need to know the exact details of what it is that the hon. Leader of the Opposition is voicing, but we do have the exceptions and other than those exceptions information is of course made accessible. I've laid out the details of the exceptions. If it's the pleasure of the House for me to repeat them, I will do that. But unless it fits under the exceptions of this particular area, that information is available.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, this minister is the custodian of that personal information. How will this minister assure Albertans that their personal information will not be used without their consent?

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Mr. Speaker, it's important to recognize that we abide by the legislation, the legislation that was built in this House, and ultimately it was at the agreement of all of the participants in this Legislature that this legislation was developed. Consequently, it is our fullest intention to abide by the legislation as it was presented unless there are amendments, and if there are amendments to this legislation, then there will be changes made.

THE SPEAKER: Third main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Homelessness

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The book No Fixed Address profiles the deplorable condition of the homeless in Calgary. People in Calgary are living in shanties built in public parks with no food and are eating by trapping wildlife and pets. Calgary is a tragic tale of two cities in one, for the prosperous and for the poor. My questions are to the Premier. Given that this government claims to have a policy on homelessness, what is this policy doing to put the Calgary homeless into homes and food in their stomachs?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, in society there are those who fall through the cracks. That is unfortunate. I'm sure that if the Calgary Homeless Foundation and all of the wonderful agencies that are working to accommodate the homeless in Calgary were made aware of the situation, they would certainly be there to help.

I think it's shameful, quite frankly it's disgraceful that the leader of the Liberal opposition would allude to the situation and the efforts that are being made in Calgary in such a derogatory way, Mr. Speaker. This is probably one of the most aggressive municipalities in the country relative to addressing the needs and the plight of the homeless.

The Calgary Homeless Foundation, as I understand it, was one of the first agencies and might still be one of the first agencies of its kind to co-ordinate all of the activities of the homeless in Calgary. They've got In from the Cold, where I understand that something like 53 churches now have opened their church basements to accommodate those on an overnight stay, and they're fed a good breakfast and a good lunch. As well, we have agencies like the Mustard Seed society. We have agencies like the Calgary Drop-In Centre, Mr. Speaker.

There are numerous agencies doing a wonderful job to address the needs of the homeless in the city of Calgary, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that those agencies, along with the Calgary Homeless Foundation, are now looking at the situation to which the leader of the Liberal opposition alludes.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, No Fixed Address is a fund-raising project of the Calgary Drop-In Centre. The question is: what is the government doing? What funds is the government giving to commit to the very critical shortage of housing for the homeless in Calgary?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I will have the hon. Minister of Community Development respond, but I can tell you that the Calgary Homeless Foundation got off the ground with a very substantial amount of seed money from the government of the province of Alberta. I'll have the hon. minister respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important to point out that there are the homeless ones which our policy addresses. There's also another category of homeless which are in transition from not being able to have a roof over their head immediately to being able to have, if you will, some ongoing shelter.

With respect to the homeless situation in Calgary there are currently meetings going on between the provincial government, the federal government, the city government, and about 100 agencies within that to address the plan in a concerted effort. This is not a new knee-jerk reaction. It has been going on.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that both in Edmonton and in Calgary throughout the past winter we monitored the situation very, very closely. There were not any people left out in the cold. Everybody was provided with shelter when needed. We'll continue to do so.

We will continue to work and to provide funds for the homeless both in Calgary and Edmonton and any other area of the province that so requires. However, we will do it with a concerted plan, not chucking money in every willy-nilly direction. We're going to ensure that it goes to where it goes.

AN HON. MEMBER: Where's your policy?

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Well, if you would read it, you would know what's in it.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, would the Premier agree that his government has compounded the homelessness issue by failing to provide adequate programs to address mental illness and people being discharged from mental institutions, addictions support through AADAC, and family violence issues?

MR. KLEIN: The answer to that question, Mr. Speaker, is no.

Since the leader of the Liberal opposition raised the issue, I will have the appropriate ministers respond as to what we are doing to address these situations.

MR. JONSON: First of all, very succinctly, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the mentally ill we have added significantly to the funding for community mental health services in Calgary. We have strengthened the crisis intervention capability and will be doing more work there. Action is being taken in that particular area of the member's question.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. SMITH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an excellent opportunity to address what the Alberta lottery fund does with respect to the questions from the Leader of the Opposition. In fact, if the member would go to www.aglc.gov.ab.ca, she would see that last year the Calgary Homeless Foundation received over $2 million from the Alberta lottery fund. If you would look under Children's Services in the Alberta lottery fund, which is fully disclosed in the financial statement, you would see that in 2000-2001 the fetal alcohol initiative is $1 million; 1999-2000, $1 million; permanency planning for children in care, $200,000.

Mr. Speaker, over 60 percent of the Alberta lottery fund is dictated towards health, education, and infrastructure. It's very clear that this government supports the initiatives that Albertans find important to them at the time they want to have the money to solve the issues that are in question.

THE SPEAKER: The Acting Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Yes, I'd like to supplement this too. Bill 18 brings in an increased personal exemption which will take many of the working poor off the tax rolls completely. Minimum wage earners in the province of Alberta, those working 2,000 hours a year or less, will pay no income tax in the province of Alberta, but they still have to pay federal tax.

THE SPEAKER: We'll have one more. The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, in terms of the homeless in Calgary but also here in Edmonton, I think it would be important for especially the opposition to be aware that we've actually upped it to $10 million.

THE SPEAKER: A question was asked. A response has been recognized. The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment to sum up.

MR. DUNFORD: What we've done to address this issue, Mr. Speaker, is to up the funding for homelessness from our department to $10 million this current fiscal year.

THE SPEAKER: Thank you very much.

The hon. leader of the third party.

Income Tax

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Whatever one thinks of the Mike Harris Tories in Ontario – and I'm definitely not a fan – at least when it comes to tax cutting, they are fair to all income groups, unlike the Tory government here in Alberta. I quote briefly from an Ontario Hansard document tabled earlier. In it Treasurer Ernie Eves explained why Ontario rejected a flat tax. He said, "It's not a very progressive way of taxing people. Obviously, those people who make more in society should pay more in terms of a higher rate." My questions are to the Premier. In developing its own personal income tax policy why doesn't the government of Alberta accept and emulate Mr. Eves' position that people who make more money should pay tax at a higher rate than people who make less money?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, they do. It will always be that way, whether it's under a progressive tax system that promotes bracket creep – that's the most insidious way, that's where you start to absolutely pay an unfair share because of working hard and striving to earn more.

Mr. Speaker, a single-rate system still will require people in higher income brackets to pay more taxes. It's as simple as that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How can the government justify imposing an unfair flat tax of 10.5 percent while their Ontario cousins are maintaining progressivity by bringing in five tax brackets ranging from six to 17 percent?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, after Bill 18 is passed and once the tax is implemented, I would be more than happy as the Premier of this province to stand up along with my colleagues and compare any day the personal taxes being paid across the board by the citizens of Alberta and the citizens of Ontario.

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, in Ontario with their five brackets the poor people are still paying taxes. We're going to take 190,000 off. This hon. member misleads Albertans by standing up and taking small snapshots of one tax plan versus another. The other day he said that a person making $1.9 million was going to save $70,000, but he forgot to tell the people that that individual pays $773,000 in income tax.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] Now Albertans are finding out what this bill is about.

THE SPEAKER: The floor has been given to the hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the government refusing to back away from its unfair and regressive flat tax policy because doing so would be politically damaging to the Reform Alliance leadership candidate endorsed by the Premier? If not, what other explanation could there be?

THE SPEAKER: Party politics doesn't come into the question period.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

2:10 Public-sector Workplace Stress

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent study of 1,500 people including 140 in Alberta found that 68 percent of Alberta's public-sector workers feel stressed, listing workload and the ability to meet their financial needs as the primary causes. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. What is the minister going to do about this?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've received some information about the survey, but it's difficult for me to comment right now on its accuracy. The member in his preamble did point out that out of a survey of 1,500 with only 140 from Alberta – there really is quite a large margin of error in that kind of documentation. As I understand it, the margin of error would be in the order of 8 percent, so I suppose it's questionable.

The one thing, of course, that we don't know is: of the 140 people that were interviewed from Alberta, how many were actually public-sector workers? I understand that there are roughly 183,000 public-sector workers in Alberta. This, of course, includes federal, provincial, municipal, health care, education, and advanced education. I think we would need a number within that survey of more than a thousand before I start to knee-jerk to any results that are indicated.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: does the minister have any other studies that would refute or substantiate the findings of this study?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, it's always dangerous to get involved in dueling studies; I understand that. But we recently did a survey of 3,585 government workers, so we believe we have some statistical credibility with that type of survey. This was done last November and also again in January, and we were showing an employee satisfaction level of something like 80 percent. By the way, Mr.

Speaker, this was a dramatic increase from a survey of 1997. In fact, we went from a satisfaction level of 67 percent up to 80. The Globe and Mail recently reported on Edmonton-based PCL contractors as one of the best of 35 companies in Canada to work for, and their survey found again an 80 percent satisfaction level. So we have a pretty good track record, but we want to do better.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental to the same minister: would the minister please respond to the causes of stress in the workplace?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, I think the survey probably indicated some of those. Of course, we have workload; we have concerns about the relationship between work and family.

Mr. Speaker, if public-sector workers in Alberta are actually feeling more stressed, maybe it's because there's more going on in Alberta. We've talked at length in this Assembly about the Alberta advantage. We know that our economy leads the nation. We know that there are all kinds of people coming to our province. Of course, they're not bringing the roads with them; they're not bringing their hospitals and their schools. So I suspect there is a higher workload.

I noticed that a representative of the United Nurses of Alberta said that at least in their area people were dissatisfied with the incredible workload and the failure of things to change. Well, I would point out that Bill 11 was an attempt to do that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We know that this government loves to experiment rather than plan. First it was with health care, and now it's with tax collection. Can the Premier explain how the government knows there will be a benefit to Albertans from its planned flat tax when the real Treasurer admitted in answers to written questions to the opposition that there has been no study to confirm the spin-off benefits boasted in the 2000 budget?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the leader of the Liberal opposition is insulting the intelligence of many public service professionals who work in the department of Treasury, one of whom now works for the Liberal Party and was one of the authors of one of the reports that laid the foundation for the introduction of the single-rate tax system. There was a tremendous amount of work done on this particular proposal, which now is in the form of legislation, by literally hundreds of dedicated, educated, and committed public service employees in the department of Treasury. This hon. member should know all about that, because at one time she was the executive assistant to the Provincial Treasurer.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, how does the Premier explain the government's failure to study the impact of its tax plan as revealed in the answers to written questions 217, 218, 220, 226, 227, 231, and 232, which said that there was no information available? Is it arrogance, or is it indifference?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we do not try to confuse the issue with baffleleg like the Liberals. If the hon. member wants to know the impact in simple terms, terms that even she can understand, I'll have the hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer explain.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, is the real reason the Premier has invoked closure on Bill 18 and Bill 19 because they can't defend their flat tax policy?

MR. KLEIN: Oh, no. Oh, no, Mr. Speaker. The media asked me if we can end the debate on this issue, and I indicated that we do indeed have the technology, and we're not afraid to use it in this particular case. Not afraid at all. No hesitation whatsoever. I think it is the right thing to do, to get 192,000 low-income Albertans off the provincial tax roll altogether, to give very, very significant tax breaks on a provincial basis to mid-income wage earners, to give tax breaks to seniors.

Mr. Speaker, the people of this province want to see that kind of legislation go through, and they don't want to see senseless filibustering by the Liberal Party to keep the money out of their pockets. They should be ashamed of themselves.

Speaker's Ruling Improper Questions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. May I refer you please to Beauchesne 428(r): "A question . . . must not . . . refer to debate or answers to questions of the current Session."

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

National Parks Policy

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been questioned by numerous tourism operators in Jasper national park about what is happening in the park with their industry on the ever changing policies. My first question is to the Minister of Economic Development. In light of the fact that the federal government has recently introduced a new National Parks Act which has many residents and business owners in my constituency concerned, what are the government's concerns with regards to this specific legislation called Bill C-27?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is concerned from two perspectives, the first being the content of the legislation itself and the second the manner of imposition of the legislation. I'd like to deal with the content, if I might.

The legislation itself creates a great deal of uncertainty not only for business owners but for residents within the parks by virtue of the fact that the legislation is significantly increasing the authority of the federal minister and the federal cabinet to, for example, terminate leases without due process or compensation.

We also have the issue regarding self-determination. For the past number of years there has been some movement on the part of the federal government to allow communities within the national parks to have some degree of autonomy and local government. Unfortunately, the legislation is taking a step back, and we're looking at there being some very significant restrictions in that regard.

Another issue for us is the lack of a balanced approach, Mr. Speaker. For us ecological integrity is very important, but what is also important for us is that there is access and use of those parks for the taxpayer and for tourists. We don't see that balance being maintained.

Mr. Speaker, the national parks in Alberta comprise about 60 percent of the national parks in the country, and therefore for us it is a very important issue. In fact the majority of national park visitation takes place in Alberta.

So I guess to sum it up, it's a concern not only for this government; it's also a concern for tourism operators both nationally and within Alberta, for the residents living within those parks, and also for the general public at large. We feel there has not been meaningful consultation on this particular issue.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question: given that these are reasonable concerns, can the Minister of Economic Development please tell us what this government is doing to address its concerns with regards to Bill C-27?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I just indicated, this government believes in a balanced approach with respect to the national parks. That is why we recently adopted four principles pertaining to those parks. Those principles relate to the parks being affordable and accessible, not only again to Albertans but to Canadians and international visitors, also that the ecological vitality of those parks be maintained, that the parks continue to be the cornerstone of the tourism industry, which they are at this point in time, and, as I indicated earlier, that those Albertans living within the parks have some degree of self-determination.

Mr. Speaker, I have during the past month asked the federal minister, Ms Copps, repeatedly for meetings not only to discuss Bill C-27 but also to try and develop an approach which would facilitate meaningful input on this bill from not only Albertans but also the tourism sector and this government. We're also quite prepared to discuss opportunities to develop co-operative research on the impact that human use and access is having on the parks.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we recently had a federal/provincial/territorial meeting in Calgary on May 8 and 9. The national parks issue was discussed at length. In fact, I'm happy to say that the ministers from across the country unanimously endorsed Alberta's position with respect to the national parks. Really all we're trying to do at this point in time is get to the table and have some legitimate input and have an opportunity for input into what is happening in Ottawa with respect to the legislation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question: in light of what the Minister of Economic Development has told us, how will federal Bill C-27 impact tourism in the national parks?

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's going to have a very significant impact, and I'd like to briefly outline for the House how important the national parks are and tourism is generally to this province.

As many of you know, tourism is the fourth largest sector in this province. It generates approximately $4 billion per year in revenues. We are attempting through the new economic strategy which was released by this government, entitled Get Ready Alberta, to see those revenues increase to $6 billion by our centenary in 2005.

The mountain national parks themselves, Mr. Speaker, account for about 20 percent of our total tourism revenues. In fact, the expenditures by visitors to our national parks were about $950 million in 1999, and when you add in the spin-off benefits to the rest of the province, they exceed one billion dollars. For the ski areas themselves this amount is about $329 million.

Part of our strategy in working with the federal government is trying to promote the national parks as all-season parks. We're very concerned that some of the restrictions and regulations being proposed by the federal government will have a very significant impact on seasons beyond the traditional summer season.

So our concern, Mr. Speaker, is that while we want to, as I indicated earlier, maintain the ecological viability and vitality of those parks, we nevertheless have to recognize that there are businesses there, that there are people living there, that there are facilities there which people from not only Canada but throughout the world use and appreciate. So we're trying to again find that balanced approach to ensure that we do not unduly impact what is a very vibrant sector of our economy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 12 of this year the Premier said:

I can guarantee you . . . if a doctor prescribes an MRI, that will be paid for by the publicly funded health care system whether it's in a hospital . . . or whether it's in a private clinic. It will be paid for if it is prescribed.

This afternoon we heard the Premier say that in fact he would pay for any MRIs that were performed in private clinics and that the Official Opposition should send him the bill. I have in front of me a letter from a Mrs. Hooper actually to the Member for St. Albert requesting $475 from this government for her husband's MRI test. My questions are to the minister of health. Will he confirm the statements made by the Premier this afternoon and on April 12 that he will pay for that MRI?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly confirm that an MRI that is prescribed as being medically necessary, Mr. Speaker, will be provided and paid for through the publicly owned and operated MRIs, which I've mentioned we are expanding in number considerably, or in those cases where there is an MRI under contract to a regional health authority, it will be paid for there too. Physicians that I'm aware of do indicate that MRIs are required, and they do direct them to those publicly funded and supported sources.

MS LEIBOVICI: I'll ask the question again, Mr. Speaker. If a patient has a referral from a doctor in this province, will the Alberta health care insurance plan pay for a medically required MRI whether it is in the public sector or in one of the private clinics?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it's the same question, so I will give the same answer. I think that's probably appropriate.

The physician of course selects and recommends the proper diagnostic procedure, and if it is an MRI which is within a hospital setting, publicly owned, publicly operated, it will of course be paid for. If it is an MRI that is under contract to provide services to a regional health authority, it will certainly be paid for there too.

MS LEIBOVICI: As there are only two MRIs in this province that are under contract with a regional health authority, is the minister of health now contradicting the Premier of this province, who said this afternoon as well as on April 12:

I can guarantee you . . . if a doctor prescribes an MRI, that will be paid for by the publicly funded health care system whether it's in a hospital or . . . in a private clinic.

The Premier put no conditions on that statement whatsoever.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I have outlined the situation. I think it parallels and is exactly what the Premier said.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Beverage Container Recycling

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's beverage manufacturers, consumers, and retailers have shown great support and responsibility for beverage container recycling as evidenced by the success of container recycling programs throughout this province. The recycling system is user pay. Consumers are encouraged to return their containers through a deposit and refund system, but the actual cost of recycling is borne by manufacturers, retailers, and consumers. It is my understanding, however, that there is still an area where government and therefore all taxpayers are subsidizing the cost of bottle recycling. My question is to the Minister of Gaming. Can the minister indicate, if indeed his department continues to subsidize the cost of recycling liquor bottles?

2:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. SMITH: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's this kind of keen scrutiny of costs and spending by governments that would make this individual member an ideal candidate for the national presence, so you can see that there's certainly that kind of emphasis there. As a matter of fact, she would represent my constituency, so I would support her.

With respect to the question cost savings always continue in a good government. In fact, we continue to look at cost efficiencies, a continuous improvement program.

The member is absolutely correct. The AGLC is currently and has been for some time subsidizing the cost of recycling wine, spirit, cooler, and cider containers. As the previous Minister of Environment and the present Minister of Environment have done – they say that this in fact is not a correct practice, that in fact those who use the product should pay for the product. I think that's a reasonable philosophy to follow, and for that reason we are going to save 3.3 million Canadian dollars each year in changing this program.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister indicate if he has plans to end this taxpayer subsidy of bottle recycling and have liquor and wine bottle recycling paid for by those who sell and consume the product, as is the case with other beverage containers?

MR. SMITH: Well, absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I mean, any taxpayer subsidies where taxpayer's subsidies don't belong has always been a watchword of this government, and it continues. In fact, we will announce today that this subsidy will end June 30 of this year. After that date, recycling costs for spirit, wine, cider, and cooler containers will be managed like beer and other beverage containers. The cost of recycling the container will be included in the wholesale price of the product. This will save more than $3 million per year for taxpayers and will ensure that those who manufacture and those who sell and consume alcohol products are paying the cost of recycling the containers as opposed to the cost being covered by taxpayers on a broad cycle base.

MRS. BURGNER: Mr. Speaker, my third question to the same minister. My constituents are very supportive of recycling. Can the minister please indicate how this change in policy can be expected to affect consumers?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact I grew up collecting bottles. It's something that I think young people across Alberta have done, I'm sure at Barrhead-Westlock. I know I started collecting bottles in Swan Hills. As a matter of fact, I was able to buy my first share of stock. This practice is going to continue in Alberta. Albertans will have the responsibility of being able to collect and return.

For example, the cost of what we used to know as a 26, 750 millilitres, will increase by about 6 cents, and the wholesale price of a plastic liquor container will increase by about 3 cents. Then it will be up to manufacturers, retailers, and those in the private sector, just as there are private liquor stores, to determine how the small increases in cost will be incorporated into the price of their products.

Pricing, marketing practices, business practices are not the issue of the regulator. The regulator regulates the substance.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Long-term Care

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Broda report on long-term care was due to the minister in November of 1999. Almost half a year later we are still waiting for all its recommendations to be approved. In the meantime, seniors like those in Shepherd's Care Kensington Village wait for long-term care beds. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister explain the delays in approving the requests for Shepherd's Care in having their temporarily funded 19 long-term care beds changed to permanent?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'd just like to comment on the preamble to the member's question. We have certainly taken a number of initiatives with respect to long-term care and assisted living and the overall home care and aging in place initiatives that are outlined in the Broda report. The member across the way may recall that we committed significant capital dollars sometime ago, in this case to the Capital regional health authority, to enter into plans and arrangements for expanding long-term care capacity in this province. Prior to that, the Capital regional health authority had also received financial assistance in terms of opening about 200 beds in long-term care in the General hospital.

Now, with respect to the additional 200 beds that they are planning plus some assisted living accommodation in the Capital region, this was done through a process of requesting proposals, Mr. Speaker. It's my understanding that after looking over a number of excellent proposals, the Capital regional health authority has approved at least two or three projects, as I recall, and those projects are going ahead. There's a very significant follow-up on that aspect of the Broda report in the capital plan of Alberta Health and Wellness and the capital plan of the regional health authority here in Edmonton.

MR. WHITE: Mr. Speaker, in that the minister has answered all the questions as to capital needs of long-term care, I must remind the minister that this is not capital. This is operating. These beds exist. I will ask the minister again: will the temporarily funded beds, the 19 beds that exist today, be funded permanently in the Shepherd's Care centre?

MR. JONSON: I would like to add to the member's question. As he well knows, the Capital regional health authority is in charge of administering long-term care within the region. They did receive a significant global increase in funding this year in their budget, and there was additional money targeted to the long-term care area. If I recall correctly, it was some 15 million or 20 millions of dollars across the province, which would work out to probably about $6 million here in Edmonton. That goes into the operating base on top of the general increase in funding for the Capital region. I expect that as they have in the past, the Capital region will use that money wisely in the area intended. In terms of the specific allocations across their region, Mr. Speaker, that is something that is managed by the Capital health authority.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, sir. Given that the budget as outlined will not cover all of the current needs, how is the minister going to answer those seniors like the seniors in the Shepherd's Care centre now waiting for beds who are waiting for additional beds that are not available today?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the answer is very simply that Alberta Health and Wellness on behalf of the provincial government and the people of Alberta is making very significant additional commitments of funds to the whole area of long-term care both in operational terms and in capital terms. We are following through on the majority of recommendations of the Broda report particularly as it applies to getting the needed long-term beds in place and also, as the Broda report recommends, promoting and fostering through support of home care and contracts the development and expansion of assisted living facilities. That is going, I think, very well. There are many projects under way there, and we're acting upon the need that is there.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in a few seconds we'll call upon the first of seven members to participate in Recognitions today. Before that, I would just like to advise all members of the House that the applause and the recognition they gave a little earlier to a school group introduced by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert — they are now in the House.

2000 Ship for World Youth

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through the generosity of the government of Japan nine young Canadians will participate in the 2000 Ship for World Youth program. For two full months this fall 120 Japanese and 146 youths from 16 nations around the world will live together on the Nippon Maru as she sails through the Pacific Ocean. Sailing from Tokyo, its ports of call will include Vladivostok, Honolulu, Tahiti, Fiji, New Zealand, and Singapore.

The Ship for World Youth is sponsored by the Japanese government to promote international understanding and friendship between youths from Japan and around the world. On board the delegates will attend seminars and lectures by Japanese university professors, and they will also have a chance to lead seminars on topics related to their own country. Young people from across Canada are now being recruited by the Canadian Federation of Students on behalf of the departments of Foreign Affairs and International Trade.

I would like to thank the Japanese government for this wonderful opportunity for Canadian youth. Information about previous trips can be viewed on the Internet at www.swytravels.com. Applications must be received by June 16, and they are available at www.swap.ca. This is a wonderful opportunity for our Alberta youth to consider.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: I can't resist. I sincerely hope I'm not too old.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Al and Edna Sempovich

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to recognize Al and Edna Sempovich of Edmonton-Gold Bar this afternoon. Mr. Sempovich was born and raised in Alberta, and he and Edna have lived in Edmonton since 1960. Al was the owner/manager of Gold Bar IGA for 12 years. He was a scoutmaster of the 3rd Oilfield troop and is a lifetime member of the Leduc/Devon Oilfield Historical Society.

I would like to emphasize that Al and Edna are also vigorous supporters of a strong public health care system in this province. They have written letters to both the Prime Minister and the Premier and attended rallies and town hall meetings to fight the looming demise of our health care system. Al and Edna, who have three children, three grandchildren and two great-grandchildren, are fighting not only for the future of everyone in the province regarding health care, but they're also fighting for the future of their own family.

I would like to recognize their efforts and commend them to all hon. members of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Calgary and District Heritage Fair

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our country's heritage is one of our most important assets. It tells us who we are, where we came from, and what influences shaped our development as a nation. It ties one generation to another. It is with great pleasure that I rise today to recognize the Calgary and District Heritage Fair, held last Saturday in Calgary. This fair was organized to help students in grades 4 to 9 learn more about their Canadian heritage.

Students participating in the event presented to a panel of judges an individual heritage project which was based on discovery and celebration of their ancestry, diversity, and culture. Judges included politicians from all levels of government, including many of my Calgary colleagues, as well as community members and heritage officials. I'm pleased to recognize the many volunteers who gave freely of their time and to acknowledge the many students who worked so hard to present such outstanding displays. They are to be congratulated for their efforts.

I encourage all members of this Assembly to participate in future heritage activities with their constituents and to recognize the strength that our heritage brings to this province and to our nation.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

One Child, Our Future

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in the Legislature and recognize the efforts of Eastwood elementary school, the choir, and its remarkable principal, Linda Love-Walsh.

The Edmonton school district was looking for ways to commemorate the millennium, and Linda came up with the idea of writing a song for her students to sing. The song, called One Child, Our Future, talks about the fact that no matter what circumstances a child is born under, he or she has the potential to be a world leader. Linda says that's why all children need to be nurtured.

The music teacher at Kirkness school, Johan Brinkman, arranged the music, and a group of public school teachers formed a band called Men in Black and A Lady. The band along with the school choir will record a CD of the song next week, and the CD will go on sale at the school for a minimum price. This, Mr. Speaker, is an example of how hard our school professionals work, and I want to congratulate Linda, her colleagues, and her choir for a great job.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

Fort McMurray Oil Barons

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise as MLA for Fort McMurray, the oil sands capital of the world, and offer my congratulations to the Fort McMurray Oil Barons junior A hockey team on winning the Royal Bank Cup – in a storybook ending in front of thousands of hometown fans they defeated the Ontario Sabre Cats 2 to 1 – to the players, coaches, staff, directors, and 650 volunteers, corporate and local sponsors, the AJHL, and CHA. The Fort McMurray team truly does live up to our slogan. We do have the energy. Congratulations to all involved.

To conclude, as CFRN sports anchor Peter Loubardias appropriately said on national television: not only did Fort McMurray host a national championship; they won it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Riaz Choudhry

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a former city of Edmonton public servant and now a prominent businessman, Riaz Choudhry. Mr. Choudhry's personal integrity and his commitment to public service, professionalism, and primacy of public interest are exemplary.

He helped the Edmonton taxpayers save $5 million when in July '91 he advised the city council and the media that a $17 million sewer tunnel was not needed. The project was stopped but not before $12 million had already been spent. Nevertheless, for blowing the whistle, he was fired from his job as a senior drainage engineer, embroiling him in a lengthy and costly legal battle with the city. As a result, Mr. Choudhry was forced to spend his time and thousands of dollars to clear his name. Recently Mr. Choudhry was finally vindicated in a settlement reached between him and the city of Edmonton.

I applaud Mr. Choudhry for his courage to speak out in support of the public interest and for faithfully serving Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

2001 World Championships in Athletics

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton is the first city in North America to host the World Championships in Athletics. The event is expected to bring more than 3,000 athletes, coaches, and officials from more than 200 countries to Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, to compete in 24 men's and 22 women's athletic events. Hundreds of thousands of spectators will watch the events live at Commonwealth Stadium.

I'm proud to say that running concurrently with the athletics competition will be the Festival of the Worlds, an arts and cultural celebration which will feature local, national, and international artists performing throughout the capital region.

As a board member of the 2001 World Championships in Athletics I'm very pleased to say that on May 14 young Canadian athletes competed in Calgary and joined hundreds of thousands of youngsters from over 150 countries competing for a chance to attend the eighth IAAF World Championships in Athletics in Edmonton on August 3 through 12, 2001. The fifth edition of this will bring youngsters together, and I'm pleased to say that this is the way that the IAA wants to encourage young amateur athletes.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on a point of order.

Point of Order Reflections on Nonmembers

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is the second time in as many days that I've had to rise on a similar point of order, and I'm rising under Standing Order 23, particularly 23(1), and also your ruling regarding referring to people outside the Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, during question period the Premier, the leader of the government, mentioned without directly referencing him by name – certainly the implication was clear because he was speaking about a paper co-authored by Cassidy, Ruggeri, and Van Wart, a paper titled On the Classification and Interpretation of Global Progressivity Measures, a paper which is now marked as sessional paper 957/2000. It was tabled by the Acting Provincial Treasurer yesterday. In referencing that paper and the work done by one of the three authors, Mr. Cassidy, the Premier said that he, Mr. Cassidy, “now works for the Liberal Party.”

Of course, this is the second time, as I've said, that a member of Executive Council has been requested to apologize and to be called to order for misrepresenting both the work and the deeds of Mr. Cassidy, who of course is not a member of this Assembly and cannot defend himself.

Mr. Cassidy – and you'll be particularly interested in this, Mr. Speaker – is an employee of the Legislative Assembly as he is employed working in my constituency office. He's not an employee of the Liberal Party in Alberta and, to the best of my knowledge, has never been an employee of the Liberal Party.

Yesterday the Speaker made a point of clarification when I was speaking to a government motion regarding the reappointment of the Auditor General and inadvertently said that the Auditor General was hired by the government. Of course, the Auditor General is a legislative officer, and the Speaker quite correctly straightened that out for me. I would expect that the same should happen here.

What was more troubling than the Premier's misrepresentation of Mr. Cassidy and his place of employment was when the Minister of Government Services – and I've heard other members of Executive Council subsequently – then said, “Well, what's the difference?” as though it was the same thing to work for a political party in this province and to work for the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Certainly members of the Liberal Party and the Official Opposition don't confuse the two. We know, of course, that the government has pressed civil servants into service during campaigns. We've had that discussion before, Mr. Speaker, but we understand the distinction and think it's important. I expect that you would think it would be important, and I would ask you to call the Premier to order.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, hardly a point of order. I think the hon. member doth protest too much. Clearly, people who work within our constituency offices are employed by the Legislature and not employed by a political party. That's clear, and we appreciate that and certainly appreciate the clarification from the hon. member across the way as to what the exact employment status of the individual referred to is. It's clear as well, of course, that the people who support us in our constituency offices work for us as members and work to get our messages out to our constituents and to hear messages from our constituents, and to that extent they're not anywhere nearly as nonpartisan as perhaps an officer of the Legislature like the Auditor General might be.

But even that being the case, I had a brief discussion with the hon. Premier earlier this afternoon, and he's authorized me to say that if in any way the suggestion that the character of the individual referred to was besmirched or his integrity called into question by alleging that he worked for the Liberal Party, we sincerely apologize to that member for any acrimony that he might suffer publicly by having been associated with the Liberal Party in that context, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, the chair believes he heard a withdrawal of the statement.

The statement itself. The hon. leader of the government said:

Mr. Speaker, the leader of the Liberal opposition is insulting the intelligence of many public service professionals who work in the department of Treasury, one of whom now works for the Liberal Party and was one of the authors of one of the reports that laid the foundation for the introduction of the single-rate tax system.

Needless to say, it would be unknown to the chair whom these individuals were referring to, and now it seems that in this exchange that has happened.

Clearly, there was no attack or criticism of any individual with respect to that, and certainly care has now been given to indicate that the individual in question, whose name has now been identified, is under contract to the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta and as such must be nonpartisan. Must be nonpartisan. The chair would take great, great, great governance with hon. members if the chair, who happens to be the Speaker and the key administrator for the Legislative Assembly Office, were to find that employees in constituency offices were anything but nonpartisan. Great care should be taken by hon. members in ensuring that their employees are nonpartisan.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it's my pleasure to move that Written Questions appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 21, 23, 24, and 25.

[Motion carried]

Hospital Closures

Q21. Ms Leibovici moved that the following question be accepted.

How many hospital beds have been closed in the province from January 1, 1993, to January 1, 2000, how many nurses have lost their jobs due to those closures, and how many doctors have lost their jobs due to those closures?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reason for this written question is very simple. We have over the last number of years heard conflicting figures as to what the number of hospital beds were in the province at a certain point in time and are right now. There has been much controversy around the fact that the amount of hospital beds per 1,000 population is insufficient to meet the needs.

In addition, we have heard much about there not being enough nurses and doctors available to provide services. One of the questions that has never really been answered by this government is: how many nurses directly lost their positions as a result of the closures that we saw in '93, '94, and over a period of time, actually, and how many of the doctors either lost their jobs or, perhaps, have left as a result of the closures and the disregard that this government has had for the health care professionals?

So that is some of the reasoning behind the written question, and I hope for a favourable response.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness I'm pleased to indicate that we'll accept the question.

In providing my own comments and not the minister's comments with respect to the acceptance of the question, I would be certain to assure Albertans and the members opposite that many hospital beds have been closed in this province not due to government cutbacks, as has been alleged over and over again by members of the opposition, but because of changes in health care service delivery.

I know from my experience as a member of the University of Alberta hospitals board that when we were moving many surgeries from inpatient surgeries and inpatient procedures, which sometimes required three, four, five, or six days of stay, to a day-surgery basis, wards were closed, and nurses were laid off as a result of that.

So just to put the question and answer into context, the Minister of Health and Wellness has indicated that he will be accepting the question and will provide the response requested, but one should not expect, then, the Liberal opposition to bring forward the numbers in the responses that are being given and to use that as a suggestion that that all happened as a result of changes in funding. Technology, changes in service delivery, changes in drugs, and many, many other things have impacted the health care system over the last 10 years.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MR. DICKSON: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to speak. In fact, I had not intended to do so until I heard the provocative comments of the Government House Leader, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. You know, if he thinks that the government of the province of Alberta, with which I completely disassociate myself, chopped those beds in the Calgary health region because of new technology, that is nonsense.

You know, it would do for all members to remember that the city of Calgary, or Calgary region 4, has grown by 116,000 new people – 116,000 new people – since this government started closing hospitals.

MR. DOERKSEN: Good economic policy.

MR. DICKSON: No, but here's what we have. We now have, by the government's own numbers, 68 more acute care beds, they argue. In fact, if members look at the Calgary regional health authority business plan, 2000-2003, what you will find is that the region now claims that we have 1,816 staffed hospital beds. In 1994-1995 we had 1,748 staffed hospital beds. So we've got an increase, by my math, of 68 beds. If you looked at any statistics in terms of beds per 1,000 population, what you'd find is that in Calgary the bed supply is critically deficient. This is a sure rebuttal, I guess. If the Minister of Justice thinks that Albertans should not read anything, if they think this was all just a question of new technology and less invasive kinds of surgery that accounted for this, it's just not so.

In fact, while I'm speaking about the loss of hospital beds, members might also refer to page 32 in the same document. What you find referenced there is that we have 30 people on any given day waiting for access to acute care hospitals. We have 300 people in the community waiting for a bed. We've got 30 people in the community urgently requiring a long-term care bed. So, I mean, we have major concerns.

If you look at page 37 of the report, Mr. Speaker – and I'll be happy to table the report, but I assume the government has access to it because it's their stepchild, the CRHA. We talk about on page 37, and I quote: the extremely high occupancy rate in medical beds means that some medical patients are cared for in surgical beds. Close quote. It goes on to say: the utilization of improvement projects will help to move the number of postponements due to capacity problems towards zero by 2003.

So it's interesting that the CRHA doesn't have a lot of historical information. There's material there they don't like to talk about, so we simply talk about where things are now. I mean, the point is that by their own report we've got some serious problems in these areas. I think that a standard acute care hospital would have normally about 350 hospital beds, plus or minus. Then we lost the Grace hospital. We lost the Holy Cross in beautiful downtown Calgary-Buffalo.

MRS. NELSON: I was born there.

MR. DICKSON: My daughter was born there as well, Minister of Government Services.

Then, in fact, it seems to me that we lost – I think we had about 800; the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View would know better than I – 700 or 800 beds in the General hospital. [interjection] I think the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View is giving me some advice, but I can't hear all of it. She may want to participate in this discussion.

I think the point is this: we had three hospitals that closed, a substantial number of beds lost, this huge population growth. All in all, just a major problem. We need the statistics, Mr. Speaker, to get at the full dimensions of the problems. [interjections] I'm cautioned by members opposite that I will be talking us out of a positive response to the written question.

As I say again in my own defence, if the Minister of Justice had not made his observation, I would have been happy to move to the vote, but I wanted to clarify those comments and encourage all members, every member, to read the 2000-2003 business plan for the CRHA. The statistics in there are scary.

Thank you.

made by the minister in fact reflects the wishes of his colleagues, we are going to have to have some explanation in terms of why this is important.

The issue is one of "the number of aboriginal children . . . from permanent guardianship status to adoption in the fiscal year of 1998-1999." There had been a policy review report on aboriginal adoptions due in February of 1998. There had been, in fact, some excellent questions asked by Calgary-Glenmore in May of 1999 to, I think it was, the then minister of family and social services around the adoption process and then also some questions asked in the House on May 11, 1999, with respect to that. There has been work done in and around the First Nations children discussion paper on permanency planning, which was released in May of 1999.

That's some of the background that my colleague for Edmonton-Riverview had asked me to impart to the Assembly. I wanted to make those observations, as she had asked me to do. So those are the comments I wanted to make on this Written Question 23.

Thank you very much.

[Written Question 23 lost]

Student Loan Defaults

Q24. Mrs. Soetaert moved on behalf of Mrs. Sloan that the following question be accepted.

What is the breakdown of student loan default rates for each calendar year from January 1, 1993, to December 31, 1999, broken down according to learning institution?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you. Madam Speaker, you know, I am one of great hope. Last week I had such luck with these written questions and written motions that I'm ever so hopeful today as I move the Member for Edmonton-Riverview's question, which I think is a very credible written question.

You know what? The only thing that concerns me in this question is that I heard the government whip from the other side say: I'm not going to give them anything today. But that would be petty and childish when we are talking about very credible questions from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

In fact, why shouldn't we be tracking performance records of student loans? Are there delinquent payments? Have we got trouble out there? What institutions have the biggest problems? Are banks having problems collecting, and are students having problems paying? This kind of information is something that would be appreciated by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, especially since a great deal of the university activity belongs to her constituency. So I look forward to a positive response to this question.

Thank you.

MR. SMITH: I'm rising to speak against acceptance of the question, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I think you're just one moment premature there, hon. minister. We have to make a determination. Thank you.

MR. HANCOCK: With some trepidation about it, Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Learning I would like to accept the question. Before there's any further debate from members opposite or from members on our side, perhaps I could indicate that I have the answers to the questions here and would be more than happy to table them on behalf of the Minister of Learning once the House has dealt with the question.

The only thing I would indicate in accepting the question is that the question asks for the "loan default rates for each calendar year from January 1, 1993, to December 31, 1999." Of course, the rates are based on school years rather than calendar years. It should be pointed out that you only get a default rate two years after a person has graduated, so there are no default rates for the '97-98 and '98-99 periods. But subject to those qualifications and not moving an amendment, because I think those are fairly clear, the Minister of Learning is prepared to accept the question and has provided me with the answers.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair would just want to mention, hon. House leader, that you should table that after the vote has been taken.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's interesting that the House leader is indicating acceptance, yet at that same time the minister of lotteries has indicated that there is just the opposite opinion coming. So we know, given the history of the last two written questions that have come forward, that there is some kind of a game happening here right now. I'm not quite sure what it is, but the net effect of the game is that because of the petulance of the government members, in fact, one of their own members will not have the opportunity this afternoon to have his private member's bill debated. It is a shame that's going to occur, and I'm really heartbroken, because it's a really good bill in that that particular bill is one that I put forward in this Legislative Assembly in '93-94.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, we're dealing with Written Question 24.

MS LEIBOVICI: Absolutely. I'm just, you know, indicating how unfortunate it is that we won't be able to get to that private member's bill and all because of government members' petulance.

Now, this is a very, very good written question that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview has put forward, and because of all the turmoil that was occurring, I couldn't quite catch everything that the Government House Leader had indicated, but it sounds to me as if one of his reasons for not providing the information was because the default period will occur much later.

I am assuming, given what the minister of lotteries has indicated, that this will not be accepted, but one of the pieces of information that I think is quite useful for everyone is to see what has happened from the time when the banking institutions took over this particular program. That is the reason the question is being asked, specifically with regards to '97-98 to this point in time.

We know that the burden on university students is quite high with regards to student loans, and the default rates are something that would be of use to see what the impact of the student loan program right now is on students throughout this province.

So I am very hopeful, as the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert had indicated at the beginning of her request for this written question, that we will hear and receive the information. However, given the situation, the tone of this afternoon, it seems to be quite up in the air, Madam Speaker, as to what will and will not occur. So it's very important that the Official Opposition put their reasons out as to why in fact these written questions are very important for public information. It will be interesting to hear the minister's reasons for not providing this information to the public, and I'm looking forward to hearing those reasons with great anticipation.

Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. SMITH: Well, thank you so much, Madam Speaker. Usually when I hear questions or debates about ministrations of government, particularly from the Leader of the Opposition, I am not convinced, but when I hear the person who finished close to the top three in the leadership campaign, her articulate and persuasive arguments of why people should do this and why people should do that, I think they, of course, would have been much better served by making a different choice of a leader. If I were to have been so unfortunate as to have owned a Liberal membership during that time, I would have voted for that member, and I think it's important that that should go on record.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, I'd like to remind you, too, that we are dealing with a written question here.

MR. SMITH: With respect to Written Question 24, which is an important question, because I am very fortunate and privileged to represent the University of Calgary in the constituency of Calgary-Varsity. Because this is a party of free votes and because this is a party of individual opinion and because it's a party responsible to their constituents, I think it's important that I stand and speak against this question for the very reasons that the member put forward as to acceptance. In fact, it is these written questions that do waste the time of the House, that prevent private members from expressing their feelings.

If, in fact, they would have written a letter to the Minister of Learning and just said, "You know what? We need this information. It's public information. Can you help us assemble it? Can we create a feeling of accord and bonhomie?" then we'd be able to do this. Instead, Madam Speaker, they take valuable, valuable time of the House. They put forward questions that are of a political bent, designed to ferret out information that is already a matter of public record.

In fact, as the Minister of Learning has pointed out very, very clearly, the issue in Alberta is a question not of tuition but of debt. When I look at my own personal experiences at the University of Calgary, which I'm fortunate enough to be a graduate of, my student loan bill in 1971 was equivalent to what starting salaries are today. So, in fact, they've done a good job in managing this.

In fact, the default rate is of concern. You know, banks handle the issue at 5 percent over prime. There have been a number of monetary discussions around this.

This evidence is clearly in the public record. The question is nothing more than vexatious, frivolous, and designed to waste the time of this House and this government, as the Liberals proved so very adept at in the filibustering of Bill 11, in the wasteful time of Bill 11 debate, and in fact now they're going forward in Bill 18.

Madam Speaker, I think we have no alternative, and I'm appealing to my members here, the people here, to reject this question and move forward to the private members' business of the day.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Madam Speaker, my comments will be brief, but I do want to support my colleague who just spoke. Frankly, I'm very disappointed in some comments that are coming from the other side, because I think the problem with the responses in these arises from the debate or the discussion, which shouldn't be a debate, or when the opposition are trying to make their case for acceptance. I think they can be made in a way that isn't provocative and that doesn't cause people to be inflamed by their discussions. When you talk about petulance and behaviour, I think a mirror would be in order for some of the members.

When you talk about the time that written questions such as this one, which is an important question, take away from private members' debate, I would remind members that a simple letter to a minister will afford that information. I can speak with, I think, some certainty in this area. I don't believe that a member from the opposite benches has ever requested information from my office in a dozen years and not received all of the information that I could possibly provide for them and as promptly as I could. I think that is a courteous way to behave towards members of the Legislature in this House, and maybe the opposition could take that into mind rather than having the opportunity to stand up and make what I thought were rather insulting comments.

I would want to accept this question because I think the information is important. However, I can't because of a procedural matter. One, I think that the member who asked this question with that much interest in the question should have understood that these are not calendar years. They are school years. Most people understand that a university student goes to school on a year, and if you've ever applied for a student loan or assisted one of your constituents with their application, which I think every one of us has, you understand that it is on a school year or a term that they're attending.

The second thing is that as there is not information for the latter part of it because, as most people do understand as well if they've ever had somebody associated with a student loan, default does not occur, cannot even occur till after two years, it is my view that this question possibly should have been amended. I would leave that to the better minds in this House. In my experience, questions that are accepted in their form are accepted in totality, and if there is something that has to be changed in the question, it's done in the form of an amended question.

I think the Minister of Learning has offered the information in a good spirit, but because of the comments and the arguments I've made, I'm afraid I'll have to ask, maybe implore my colleagues not to accept this question.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert to close debate.

MRS. SOETAERT: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm ever the hopeful one, because I always ask politely and nicely. [interjection] The minister said that he has the answers right there. You know, in rural Alberta we wouldn't call it a spitting contest, but it'd be darn close. I guess what this government wants – now, I've heard that different ministers reply promptly and give us all the information. You know what? Some do. Some do not.

AN HON. MEMBER: Name them.

MRS. SOETAERT: Be careful, because I may name them.

Interestingly enough, Madam Speaker, there are times when we don't get that information, so we go this legitimate, parliamentary route and ask these very legitimate questions. But unless we grovel nicely, oh, that great big government in the sky won't give us what we want. So you know what? We may be in a spitting contest this afternoon, which is very childish. It's very childish on their part. I'm very disappointed in a childish government who just, you know, can't give a decent answer to a very decent question. Very humbly, humbly groveling – no, I can't grovel to this government. I'm sorry; I can't.

MS LEIBOVICI: Nor will we be blackmailed.

MRS. SOETAERT: And you know what? I won't be blackmailed into groveling either.

This is a legitimate question. The minister is waving the answers, but you know what? He's going to table them anyway, because he's promised that to the Speaker. [interjections] Oh, yes, he did. It's in Hansard. But broken promises, well, we're used to that from this government.

Madam Speaker, I am so glad that they accepted this question, and I wait with great anticipation . . . [interjections] Oh, one person said that they'd accept, but the rest have now encouraged the others to not accept. So we are in a spitting contest. Isn't that childish? Well, I'm disappointed in a childish government. [interjections] Well, actually they're spitting between themselves, because some are saying, "I have the information, and I'm going to give it to you," and some say, "Don't give it to them." Well, those schoolyard days should be long gone in this Assembly, but they're not.

Madam Speaker, I'm sorry that the government is acting so childish today, but I am hopeful – I am a person of great hope – that we will get the answers to those questions, because the minister said that we would. I have faith in him once in a while.

Thank you.

[Written Question 24 lost]

Aboriginal Adoptions

Q25. Mr. Dickson moved on behalf of Mrs. Sloan that the following question be accepted.

What negotiations has the government been involved in regarding the status of aboriginal adoptions, and what reasons have been identified as a result of these negotiations for the lack of placements approved by aboriginal bands in the fiscal year 1999-2000?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffero on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. There are perhaps a number of observations I wanted to make, but I think I will wait until I see what response we get from the government first.

Thank you.

4:10

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I will call on a respondent, who's going to be the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I guess we'll take another try at this. On behalf of the Minister of Children's Services the government will accept this written question.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd just like members of this Assembly to know that this is really important information to me personally. I have four nieces and nephews who are of aboriginal descent, and they are part of our family because of adoption. So this is a huge issue for a lot of people, and I truly appreciate the information coming from the member.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffero to close debate.

MR. DICKSON: Well, you know, what I wanted to say firstly was that a minute ago I felt like it was my mother speaking to me. When we heard the minister of intergovernmental affairs, I felt like I was sort of getting tuned up by my mother, but as always, it was done very nicely and done very gently.

The observation I wanted to make is this. We try and evaluate now, when a minister stands up, whether in fact he speaks for his caucus or for the other minister or only for himself. You know, I'd say to the minister of intergovernmental affairs that if you go back to the second question, Written Question 23, I thought I'd asked for it pretty nicely. I thought I'd avoided provocation, avoided hyperbole, avoided rhetoric, and I thought I'd made it clear. I'd undertaken to put some things on the record on behalf of a colleague, and I was discharging that responsibility. So I can only conclude that some of us have a reputation for being provocative, and when we stand in our place, regardless of what words we utter, the designation attaches.

But there's another important principle involved here, and it simply comes down to this, Madam Speaker. There may be members who think that when opposition people ask these questions, we're not respectful enough, not polite enough. You know, I think the point we sometimes miss is that it's Albertans who deserve the information. We're simply the agent for a lot of men and women and groups and sectors in this province.

MR. SMITH: You're not though.

MR. DICKSON: Well, we think there's an agency relationship, and we take that responsibility seriously. When we ask for information, for the most part it's because groups have raised it with us, and it's typically in response.

You know, the minister of intergovernmental affairs has set a stellar example for her colleagues in terms of her responsiveness.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Careful. They'll all hate me.

MR. DICKSON: Well, I don't want to besmirch your reputation, but I want to acknowledge that there are some government . . . [interjections] Well, in the next provincial general election I'll write a little endorsement on her election brochure: former Drumheller native says this is . . .

MRS. SOETAERT: Gary, control yourself.

MR. DICKSON: Oh, I'm sorry. I'm being reined in.

Anyway, the point I simply wanted to make, in as nonprovocative a fashion as I could possibly do it, is that Albertans often look for information. They don't always get it from departments. This is a forum to do it where you don't have to pay the $25 FOIP application fee. You don't have to go through a 30-day process.

In our caucus – and I think I speak for my caucus when I say this – we think it's important that we should be able to make some comments in terms of supporting a written question or a motion for a return. We're now in the position, of course, where we can't take a minister as speaking for his caucus because we've seen on a number of these that the caucus votes one way and the minister represents a different course of conduct.

So those are the points I wanted to make with respect to the written question that's before us, Madam Speaker. I don't think I've been provocative, and I think I've been neutral. I'd fight to the death – if not to the death, at least to the end of the session – for the right to be able to make observations like that, and I think my colleagues would feel the same.

Thank you very much.

[Written Question 25 carried]

head: Motions for Returns

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of motions 39, 47, and 50.

[Motion carried]

Treasury Branches Report

M39. Mr. Dickson moved on behalf of Mr. Sapers that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the October 31, 1997, document prepared by or for Alberta Treasury entitled Alberta Treasury Branches: Process, Environmental Scan, Possible Government Objectives, and Alternative Business Outcomes.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Madam Speaker, I'm responding on behalf of the Acting Treasurer, and it is with regret that we have to reject this motion. I don't think it is a big surprise to the opposition that this motion is being rejected, because it requests information that Treasury did not release under a freedom of information request on the grounds that it contained advice from officials and information that could cause commercial harm to Alberta Treasury Branches.

Further, it's to my surprise that the opposition is pursuing this when Treasury's position was upheld by the Information and Privacy Commissioner, an officer of this Assembly. Why would there be an expectation that this material would be available when it was rejected on those very sound grounds in the first place? Alberta Treasury Branch is an important financial institution in Alberta, and we certainly cannot risk their financial position simply to satisfy the curiosity of the opposition.

So it is with those comments, Madam Speaker, that I regret that we must reject this motion.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to close debate.

MR. DICKSON: Madam Speaker, I'm not sure. As I listened closely to the minister of intergovernmental affairs, it sounded to me like there were two different exceptions under the FOIP Act. She was talking about section 23 as advice from officials, and if that's the one she was referring to – and that's what it sounded like – that is a discretionary exception. What that means is that the department is not statutorily bound to withhold or forbear from responding to our request. The minister can say yea or nay, and the Minister of Municipal Affairs can confirm that section 23 is a discretionary exception, that it is not mandatory. What that means is simply this. It's not good enough and simply does not wash to say that because the FOIP Act wouldn't require the release, therefore we're not giving it.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Come on, Gary. I gave the reasons.

MR. DICKSON: Well, what we heard was first a mention of section 23. Now, if it's section 15, that wasn't mentioned, but it would be helpful if the minister would tell us specifically what the provision is, because I didn't see the original FOIP request and I don't remember the commissioner's order on this. Section 15 just talks about "disclosure harmful to business interests of a third party." Now, that's mandatory, and I don't know if that's the basis on which the matter was provided. The matter might be this, though, that section 15 does not apply if the third party consents to the disclosure.

As Mr. Justice Cairns of the Court of Queen's Bench said in the inquiry that took place in the spring of 1996-97, if the third party consents to the disclosure, then section 15 doesn't apply. What that presupposes is that the department would go to the third party and would say: "We have got a request for information from the opposition. Do you consent or object to the release of the information?" If the third party said, "We object," then the government could reasonably – and I hope the Minister of Municipal Affairs will correct me if I misrepresent what the provision of the FOIP Act is. In that case, that would be the end of it. But I listened carefully and I did not hear the minister say that the third party was asked, pursuant to section 15(3)(a), whether they would consent to the disclosure and what the response was.

So here's what we're left with. I come back and say again that if within all of the elements of section 15 you can't bring yourself – the only other reason I heard was section 23. Section 23 is discretionary, so then the minister would somehow have to make the case that there's some compelling public reason why this wouldn't happen. I don't know what that compelling public reason would be, so I'm hoping the Minister of Municipal Affairs can clarify this, because it seems to me that there's a significant issue there.

I'd just address for a moment the public policy perspective. Why would we ask for this? Because there continues to be a great deal of concern, particularly in rural Alberta, in small communities around this province, in terms of the future of the Treasury Branches. There has been so much discussion. It may even be an issue in Calgary-Varsity. There has been so much discussion around this, and I think some of the source documents should be made available to Albertans. You know, too often they're not. So, Madam Speaker, we'd like some explanation in terms of why we couldn't access it.

That's the public policy reason. Those are the reasons why I think the FOIP Act would not apply. I think we need some further explanation, because on the face of it Albertans are being denied access to some information which I think (a) they're interested in and (b) they're entitled to have. I think before government withholds information, we should have a high threshold test.

I guess the other thing that I'd just say is . . .

MR. SMITH: Gary, we're rejecting it. Sit down. It's over. You're not going to win big. Let it go.

MR. DICKSON: You know, I don't remember the minister being as persuasive in the Tuxis and Older Boys Parliament in 1966. He may have been just as persuasive then, and I've just got a short memory and don't remember it. I marvel at the persuasive abilities he brings to the floor of the Assembly, but I'm just a particularly thick member and I don't always get the nuances. [interjections] But now I'm going to sit down because I'm getting some motherly advice, and I've finished saying what I was going to say.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I'm sorry, hon. minister, but the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo did close debate, so I can't recognize you. [interjections] Once he's closed debate, I have to now ask the question.

Capital Planning by Government Departments

M47. Mr. Dickson moved on behalf of Mr. Sapers that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all reports, studies, and background documents prepared by or for Alberta Treasury for the period March 1, 1999, to April 13, 2000, concerning corporate capital plans developed by government departments.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Madam Speaker, I'm pleased to respond on behalf of the Acting Treasurer. Again, I don't think the opposition will be surprised that the government has to reject this motion. It requests information that Treasury did not release under a freedom of information request on the grounds that it contained cabinet and Treasury Board confidences, advice from officials, and information that could cause harm to a public body. Treasury's decision was not in this case appealed.

The corporate planning initiative resulted from a review, with assistance from the private sector, of how to strengthen the priority-setting process for infrastructure spending. The capital spending priorities of government departments are assessed using consistent criteria to ensure that available dollars are allocated appropriately. The final decisions by the government on capital priorities are reflected in the three-year business and budget plans that are published each year.

So, again, with regret we have to reject this motion.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo wish to conclude debate?

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm disappointed to hear it, but let me start off by saying that I appreciate the identification of the specific exceptions, because the minister has identified some mandatory exceptions and that's clarification we didn't have in one of the earlier ones. That's helpful.

Let me make this observation though. As the Premier said in that memorable video he did when the FOIP Act first came out on October 1, 1995 – he did that voice-over thing to welcome Albertans to the new age of accessibility in the province. In that spirit I'd think that creative people in government would be able to take a request like this and say: yes, some of the information can't be disclosed because there are some prohibitions in the FOIP Act, but there's some of that information that can be taken out. I mean, if the specific document cannot be done, you could do a summary of the document. You could do a summary of the document that's not going to disclose deep, dark cabinet secrets.

I think there's a host of ways that creative men and women could find to be able to provide some of this information. If I were to see that, firstly I would be encouraged because it showed my government was creative, and it would show that they're trying as hard as they can to share information with Albertans.

The die is cast on Motion for a Return 47, but I make the observation and I guess extend the challenge to all cabinet ministers that it would be a wonderful and maybe a wondrous thing to see cabinet ministers say, "You know, we can't give you the specific document you've requested, but with a little imagination we think probably the kinds of materials, statistics, options you're looking for we can put together, and here's a summary," or whatever. I'm trying to remember the Harry Truman quote about doing the right thing, that half the people will be impressed and the other people would just be so astonished that they'd be speechless. I can't remember the rest of it. That might well happen, and after this afternoon maybe that would be a worthwhile result. The government might like to see a speechless opposition.

So I extend that challenge and hope that some cabinet ministers will choose to try and meet the challenge. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

Maintenance Enforcement Program

M50. Mrs. Soetaert moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of any document for the redevelopment of mainframe technology for the maintenance enforcement program.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Centre I would like to very persuasively move Motion for a Return 50. I know that everyone in this Assembly certainly deals with maintenance enforcement in their constituency offices, and the more efficient we can be, the better we serve many, many families in this province. So I am hoping for a positive response to that motion.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader as respondent.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would be pleased to accept the motion if it were amended and thus am moving an amendment that Motion for a Return 50 be amended by striking out "any document for the redevelopment of mainframe technology for the maintenance enforcement program" and substituting "the request for quotation for preparation of a business plan for the redevelopment of mainframe technology for the maintenance enforcement program." So the amended Motion for a Return 50 will read as follows:

... that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the request for quotation for preparation of a business plan for the redevelopment of mainframe technology for the maintenance enforcement program.

Easy for me to say.

Basically, the member who sponsored the motion has been advised by my office of the proposed amendment. I'm not sure if she was also advised, though she should have been, of the reason for the amendment. The reason for the amendment is that the current mainframe technology is about 14 years old, I am advised. It's unlikely the program would be able to locate all documentation that dealt in any way with system redevelopment over the 14-year period. In addition, most of the documentation would not be helpful.

We're in the process, as I've responded in terms of previous requests relating to information on the maintenance enforcement program, of redeveloping the mainframe technology, with a target date of 2003. Preliminary to redevelopment, we've undertaken a review of the business processes. Currently available is the request for quotation for this review. The strategy to update the mainframe technology will be outlined in a document called maintenance enforcement program: business process review phase, which has not yet been completed but which was asked for by another name in an earlier written question. At that time I believe I indicated to the hon. member that when that document was ready, it would be made available.

The question in the format that it's asked would require research of a lot of old documents which wouldn't, in our view, be relevant to the information she is seeking. But we're more than happy to share the information relating to the development of the processes and improvement of the business technology and therefore at this time would be more than happy to provide copies of the documents which we believe are relevant. If that doesn't satisfy the question, I'd be more than happy to meet with the member or have her raise issues relating to what types of information she needs in that regard and see if we can provide it.

MR. DICKSON: You know, the minister cannot be faulted for his response. It was full, he gave us lots of information, and I believe he's trying to set this thing up, but I have to ask the question. On October 6, 1998, we had government responding to the MLA review on maintenance enforcement and access. I think it was the Member for Calgary-Lougheed who did some work on that, did an excellent report. We've got the response of October 6, 1998, and I take it that what the minister is saying – unfortunately, he has to carry the can for his predecessor. Maybe it's fortuitous that both of those gentlemen are in the Assembly.

If we look back to October 6, 1998, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed and her group said and identified the need to review current communication technology and what had to be done. It's all set out in the report. Recommendations 36, 10, 11, 37, and 38 all relate to this. How can it be that in a period of 19 months we're only now doing a request for proposal? I mean, I thank the minister for giving us what he can provide, but for all of those people who phoned my office and I expect every MLA's office concerned about delays and inefficiencies with maintenance enforcement, how can it be that we're still fiddling with this now and are only at the request for proposal stage? One would hope, given the importance of the issue and the excellent report from Calgary-Lougheed, that we'd be a lot further down the road.

I know some of my colleagues share that concern. This is a huge issue with people trying to get the maintenance enforcement program working for them. In too many cases it is not, and now to find out that the only document that exists is a request for a quotation sounds to me like: what have we been doing? Surely it doesn't take 19 months to develop a request for a proposal; does it? So I think there's a heck of a lot of women in this province and children, for that matter, who have got a huge interest in this, and I think there has to be some further explanation in terms of why we're not further along.

I hope that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed is going to stand up and enter this debate and share some of her observations in terms of the importance. In that powerful report written by that review, there was some urgency – was there not? – around fixing some of these problems. In Calgary-Fish Creek I know there are people that want to see responses in terms of maintenance enforcement too.

Anyway, those are those questions I wanted to ask, and I hope we're going to get some answers to that, because so far we haven't heard an explanation around that.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, it's unusual for me to respond to a cheap shot; nevertheless, I think I'm going to in this case, Madam Speaker. I know it's really out of character for me to do so, just as it's out of character for the hon. member to say such a thing. Nevertheless, I'm well aware of this issue. In fact, the hon. member, never having been in government, really doesn't appreciate that you advance projects on the basis of the resources that may be available at any particular given time. I know that my successor the Minister of Justice has been pushing this project forward, just as we pushed it forward as much as we could when I happened to occupy that position.

It shouldn't be surprising, though, to the hon. member that it does take a significant period of time to develop an RFP for something as complex as a new mainframe system. This is a challenge that government encounters all the time, because of course technology is advancing and changing so rapidly that you want to make sure you don't bring in something that, quite frankly, a year or two later happens to be out of date.

I guess what I'd also like to mention, though, is that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed did bring forward a very good report, and I can remember very specifically our government enacting a number of those recommendations quite quickly. The hon. member should be fully aware of that. So this one happened to be one that took a little bit longer and, again, I know that the hon. member meant nothing by the statement that he made, because he is usually honourable.

In any event, I felt compelled to at least respond to that, because I didn't feel it was entirely fair or warranted. Thank you.

DR. NICOL: Madam Speaker, just a question on the comments just made by the minister, in the sense that as I read the amendment, what they're providing is actually a copy of a request for quotation for preparation of a business plan, not even a request for a proposal for the redevelopment of the mainframe. So this is actually even one step earlier, further into the infancy of this project than what would appear by saying that it was a request for a quotation. Is that the actual document that you're planning to deliver, the request for quotation for preparation of a business plan? So you're just now starting to develop a program that would in essence put in place the definition of the needs for a computer system and the kind of process that would be undertaken to actually develop and implement the purchase, upgrade, and redevelopment of that mainframe. I would like to have that clarified.

Thank you.

MRS. NELSON: Well, Madam Speaker, let's be abundantly clear. When you're looking at a system redesign and one that is as large as this one, the project has to be scoped out well in advance before any kind of RFP process can take place.

We have gone into a process of co-ordination of technology development in this government, and we co-ordinate it now through one central area so we have compatibility between the various systems that are in place. It's very important to have a business plan on how we bring a critical path together for the scoping out of that technology. This amendment is clearly looking at the business plan relative to the mainframe for this particular project. [interjections] The minister was telling me about other things, but my focus is on the co-ordinated planning for the IT development for the government, and we all know that in the past that hasn't been the case. There's been incompatibility between systems, and that has to be put forward in a business plan. My colleague the Minister of Innovation and Science leads the department that does that co-ordination, and they're doing a fine job. That's part of the reorganization process that we went through last year when we reorganized government to make sure we do have that.

Now, insofar as the maintenance enforcement program that we know today, it has been upgraded and it has been improved upon, because as most of us know from the calls we've had in the office, there has been some satisfaction that has come through that system in doing some tracking. But quite clearly I would be very opposed if a minister came to the Treasury Board table that I sit at and asked for funds to do a project where there wasn't a full scoping out of the plan laid out on the table and a business planning process in place that would come forward. I would reject that as a member of Treasury Board because you're buying a pig in a poke, and I'd like to see the plan scoped out fully and a business planning process with a critical path attached to it before I would accept it at the Treasury Board table.

So I think the amendment that the hon. minister has put forward is very clear and is the right type of amendment to have. I would hope that the opposition would accept that.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Actually, they just confirmed what the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East asked: where are you at? They're only at the business plan stage. We're not even at the tendering process. We haven't got the technology up. You're still looking at a business plan to go forward on this.

So this is really, really backwards. It's quite a long while in the making, over 19 months just to say, "We're going to give you a business plan," which is fine. I'm glad the process is there, and they're going to take the proper steps so we don't end up with some technology like the Calgary regional health authority who just blew millions of dollars.

MR. BONNER: Fourteen, I think.

MRS. SOETAERT: Fourteen million dollars.

MRS. NELSON: Colleen, did you listen?

MRS. SOETAERT: I was listening to you. The reality is that you're at the business plan stage. That's great, but it's a long time in coming, especially when we realize how important this is to our constituents.

The former Minister of Justice said that it takes a long time and it's a matter of priorities and money. Well, I would venture to say that families and children should be a priority, and if this will help make their lives better and children avoid living in poverty in some cases and some families getting back on their feet, then I would venture to say that this should be a priority. I appreciate the amendment because you can only give us the information you have. I guess we assumed that you would be further along in the process, and you're not. So we will accept what you have.

You know, people wonder why we do these written questions. I bet now this might get the wheels turning a little faster, because they don't want to see this written question next time we sit in here: "What? You haven't gone any further than getting the business plan?" So I thank the minister for his ability to give the information that he does have, but hopefully the wheels will get turning and we can have a little bit more action on this.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

[Motion on amendment carried]

MR. DICKSON: Do I get a chance to speak on the amended motion?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, you had the opportunity to rise, and you didn't.

MR. DICKSON: We voted on the amendment, with respect.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Now we do go back to the motion as amended.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much. All I wanted to do was apologize to the minister of tourism, because when I made my reference earlier, I didn't know what the explanation was in terms of why there'd been no progress. I appreciate his candour in terms of telling us that it was a government decision and a resource allocation decision, and that's why they haven't moved on it. We didn't know that before. It's still a completely disappointing result, but I appreciate the clarification.

I didn't want to suggest in any way that the former Minister of Justice had done something untoward except that he was the minister at the time and the one with responsibility. In fact, it's ironic that he should be involved in the discussion this afternoon because of the very substantial role he played and the leadership he provided in the freedom of information and protection of privacy law we have in the province.

I want all of his 63 colleagues to know that when the fate of FOIP was hanging in the balance, it was the Member for Calgary-Shaw and now minister who was able to persuade the Premier's office that we had to follow the B.C. model. I gave a speech just last week, in fact, where I singled out the Member for Calgary-Shaw, the minister, as probably the father of the very act that the Minister of Municipal Affairs now has the pleasure of administering in the province. So I'm happy to have the chance to apologize to that minister and look forward to the vote on the amended motion.

Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Are you ready for the question?

MR. HANCOCK: Just a second.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair has asked for clarification. Unfortunately, you were the mover of the amendment, so you are not able to speak.

Does the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert wish to close the debate?

MRS. SOETAERT: No. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 50 as amended carried]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: I think, given the hectic pace of the afternoon, that it might be appropriate to ask for the House to consider calling it 5:30 and that when we reconvene at 8 p.m., we do so in committee.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly agree with the motion?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? Carried.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:13 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 17, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/05/17

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the committee to order, please.

Bill 24

Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act, 2000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Madam Chairman. It's a real privilege again this evening to speak to Bill 24, the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act. This bill, as I said last night, is very timely in the sense that it's going to provide us an opportunity to protect the affected heritage rangelands in Alberta. As the minister explained, there are going to be three of them done currently, and there will be three others that will be negotiated and designated. As I understand it, these are all going to be developed and put in place in the context of lands that are currently under public management, so there will be no impact on private titleholders.

What we've got is a real opportunity to participate in our commitment as a province to the concept of the special areas preservation of natural and heritage ecological systems. This does fit in very well in the context of that commitment that we made a few years ago. We have to keep progressing on it, and I congratulate the government for taking this step now to incorporate our heritage rangelands into this program.

The interesting part of it is that I think the three areas they've already designated, as I said last night, are really quite unique, quite identifiable only in Alberta in the context of what is being done about the rangelands. The main issue here again, as I said, is to get the three current areas in. The Black Creek area is out in the Whaleback. This is a really unique kind of grazing area that was run mostly, as I understand it, as a winter grazing area for bison, buffalo, and pre-European involvement. The Twin River area is, from what I understand, near the Milk River ridge or part of the Milk River ridge, which again is a very unique kind of ecosystem because of the altitude and being kind of encompassed by a lowland area. So we've got a very unique, quite productive grazing area that's in that area around Milk River. The third one the minister notified us yesterday was going to be designated is the Beaverhill area east of Edmonton. Here we've got, as I said, the transition area between prairie grasslands and the grazing areas that were put in as we move into the forested and the treed part of the province.

What in essence we have are really two wintering areas for the bison and one summer grazing area. What is left now and that I hope does show up in the three other areas that are to be designated would be the true shortgrass prairie that's in eastern and southern Alberta and then kind of the transition grassland areas that are more in the dark brown soil zone areas. So those kind of divide it up.

Some specific comments on the bill and how it is going to be applied. I think what we need to do is look at some of the conditions that are being put on the particular operation of these heritage rangelands in the sense that what we're going to see is as close as possible a management situation that will provide that ecology the opportunity to respond as much as possible to the natural or presettlement way it was operated.

So we see some really good controls on the access by motorized vehicles, the access for non livestock type activities, nongrazing activities. The idea that we see in sections of the bill, like in section 8, where they're talking about the limitations that are being put on that, will control the kind of thing that can be conducted there. I guess it would be an addition to section 8, what is now section 9 in Bill 24, where we look at the idea that there's going to be a really strict control on off-road travel.

The minister also retains within this context the right to, under special circumstances or for special conditions, allow for the off right-of-way type of travel by motor vehicles. You know, this reflects the need that we have for appropriate management of those grazing areas within the context of a modern grazing management scenario. We wouldn't want to have a rancher, a leaseholder with their cattle out there and needing to have access to those animals and no way to get to them with a motor vehicle. So with the idea that the minister can make special provisions for extenuating circumstances, we can see that what we'll have is a chance for the leaseholder, within the context of that good management scenario, be able to effectively get access to the areas where their animals are.

I didn't see anywhere in the bill where there would be a provision for any kind of water management within the heritage rangeland area. Would the grazing leaseholder be able to, effectively, put in dugouts, put in wells, do things that would allow their animals to have access to water? Madam Chairman, I say that in the context as much for the areas that haven't been designated yet as for the areas that have been. You know, the area of the Whaleback and the area of the Milk River ridge have natural water areas, natural seeps, but if we get up into the area that we were talking about east of Edmonton or into some of the shortgrass areas that have yet to be designated and have yet to be picked out, what we're going to find is that these areas probably are not going to be large enough in size to allow for the presettlement type grazing patterns that went on where the animals effectively moved through them as they moved from one river to another in east-central Alberta to water at the rivers, and in the meantime they went between.

I don't see in the bill where any kind of designation for these water areas might be appropriate. I know that even in the special areas parts of Alberta where there are grazing leaseholders, they are allowed, effectively, to create dugouts or to put in wells to pump water for animals on either the community pastures or on their direct grazing lease. So I guess what we'd have to do is watch and see, as these management plans are developed, whether or not we can actually have this kind of activity defined. How will we be able to go about preventing the damage that would occur from the animals constantly coming to that one part of the heritage area where we're going to see the concentration that wouldn't have occurred in those rangeland areas in a presettlement type grazing pattern, where the bison, as I said, except in a rainy season or spring, would move right through and graze on their way between water sources? So what we have to do is make sure that those kinds of things are there.

The other thing that's interesting is the restrictions that are noted in the context of the bill, where there are limitations on hunting and fishing, that kind of thing, that would go on there, the normal recreation type activities. The minister last night said that hunting and fishing would be done by permission of the grazing leaseholder, yet from that perspective we'd have to be able to make sure that certain methods are developed to prevent the development of a common right-of-way to a hunting or a fishing facility. The whole idea that they're talking about fishing facilities or fishing opportunities would indicate that in some of these areas the natural water systems would be available. I guess the thing is that we want to make sure that we look at these in the context of how the bill will be able to provide a management system.

I don't see within the context of the bill, at least not in the part that we see in Bill 24, a true outline of how those management plans will be developed. The idea that these would probably be part of any grazing lease agreement that would be drawn up between a leaseholder and the Crown, as representing the public, would have to be handled a little bit differently than our normal grazing lease procedures in the sense that we'd have to make sure that these kinds of management plans and the kind of controlled-grazing status of that lease area would have to be managed.

I think we want to make sure that that gets more clearly defined here in the sense that the farmer or the grazing leaseholder has to be sure that they understand what they're getting themselves involved in, what they're going to be dealing with in the context of being able to operate a competitive cattle operation in the sense that if there are going to be restrictions put on it, then we'll have to see a lower lease/rental rate, or if they're going to be allowed to be commercially competitive, then the same kind of rental agreements can be developed that are there for the standard leaseholders.

I guess the other thing that we don't see in here is the option for any kind of nongrazing development. I hope that within the context of this bill the fact that it's not mentioned means that it's not going to be allowed in these areas. Will we be able to be in a position to make sure, even if there are current activities going on, how they will be handled or how they will be phased out so that we can have a true heritage rangeland environment created?

I guess the last comments that I'd like to make would relate to the issues that are outlined in section 15(2)(b)(1.1) in the sense that here the minister is going to be able to develop a lease that, effectively, will run "not exceeding 30 years." This creates a long-term stability, but it also creates a situation where the only option we have to make sure that the management plans are being followed, that any changes that we see being relevant and being important to the management of that heritage rangeland – they can only be renegotiated on a 30-year basis. I would like to see that when they get down to the option under subclause 1.1 (b), where they say "to include other terms and conditions," a clear definition be included there that will allow the public and the grazing leaseholder to fully understand what options are available to alter the lease, to change the lease, and whether or not that's going to require any kind of payment in lieu of lost productivity so the operation of that grazing lease can be handled in a well-managed and a direct-managed way.

We don't want to have to see the kind of debate, the kind of uncertainty, and the kind of hostility, in some ways, that was created last year when we had the debate going on on Bill 31, which effectively saw the government legislating changes in contracts that didn't have to happen. We could have been dealing with those changes in contract by dealing with them at the appropriate time, when the termination of that lease occurred or when conditions in the lease were such that they triggered or warranted a renegotiation and a redefinition, like the kind of activities that would be available, to allow for changing the relationship between the public and that leaseholder.

So this is the issue that I think we want to look at. The thing that I guess is most important, Madam Chairman, is that within these operating conditions and the regulations that are going to be developed by the minister we end up with a sound management plan where the public feels that, yes, they are going to have a heritage rangeland protected by this act, yet the individuals or the businesses that have participated in this program by taking out the leases to graze these rangelands will feel that they're being treated fairly and that they're being given an opportunity to provide both for their own economic well-being but also to contribute to the heritage of our province and to allow our future generations to see the kind of Alberta that was here when, for a lot of us, our parents or grandparents chose to settle here in this province.

Madam Chairman, with those few comments I'll reserve anything else that I have to say until we have the specific amendments that may be brought forward or else when we get to third reading. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Madam Chairman. Having had an opportunity last evening to speak to the principles of Bill 24, the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act, 2000, I'm pleased to have an opportunity at the Committee of the Whole stage to look at some of the sections of the bill in more depth.

What I took the opportunity to do, Madam Chairman, was to take Bill 24 and compare the provisions we have in Bill 24 with provisions that other governments across the country have in similar acts. In particular, I looked at the British Columbia act and the act in Newfoundland, which are different in a number of ways from what we do in Alberta in the act before us now.

The Committee of the Whole of course is a chance where we get to look at the individual provisions of the bill, and I thought I would just go through some of them rather quickly. Some of them are rather obvious and don't deserve that much attention.

Section 1 states, obviously, that this is an amendment to the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Act. Section 2 changes the name of the act, and those are sort of house-keeping items.

Section 3 is an important part of the act, and that's the section that now has a "whereas" clause and gives us a bit of a preamble about the desirability to protect heritage rangelands and their grassland ecology. We've had occasion to comment on prior legislation, Madam Chairman, about the need for solid preambles. Preambles I think are important to lay readers and to people who are generally interested but may be unsophisticated in a particular area of interest. This is an area where I think there is broad public interest, the preservation of our natural heritage. It's a bill that demands a preamble that explains in fairly succinct language what the provisions of the bill are all about, so I'm pleased that there is a preamble, a "whereas" clause that sets out the goal of the bill in straightforward language.

It's important, because grasslands are not just valued here. I was looking at some of the material on world grasslands, and I recall from some of my high school and early university geography the notion that there are three major types of grassland in the world: the tropical or savanna grasslands, which are really very, very long grasses, three and a half to 12 feet high, found in South America and other parts of the world; the prairie grasslands, as we know them, which are deep-rooted grasses; and then the steppe grasslands, of course the most famous being the steppes of Russia, and we have some of those grasslands, too, in North America. The grasslands are of great economic value to the people where they are located. In Alberta's case they are of both economic and ecological interest, and it's very appropriate that this act is here and addressed specifically to the preservation of our grasslands.

Section 4 is a necessary part of the act, where it adds the heritage rangeland to the definitions and gives us a full definition under 3.2. Heritage rangeland means land designated as a heritage rangeland under section 3.2. So the definitions I think are again a necessary part of a bill like this.

Section 5 is housekeeping. It strikes a reference to a previously repealed section.

Section 6 states that the Lieutenant Governor may designate the kind of activity that can be used to maintain the grassland ecology. It's an important section because this is a provision in the bill that allows economic activity to continue on a heritage rangeland. That's a provision that is different than some of the acts elsewhere on the continent, although Colorado, I note, has a similar provision where the grasslands there are used for similar kinds of activities as we use them for here. But there are jurisdictions where once an area has been designated, all kinds of economic activity are discontinued and disallowed by law.

Section 7 again is cleaning up the act to make provision for heritage rangeland.

Section 8 gives some fairly definitive restrictions, and it includes our heritage rangelands in those areas where people are not allowed to deposit litter except in places that are provided for that litter. Animal and plant life cannot be removed unless there is a prior approval by the minister. There can be no construction or improvements made upon the land without, again, the approval of the minister. And then a general provision that nothing will be done or should be undertaken by an individual that will alter or disturb the surface of the area.

Those are important provisions in the act, Madam Chairman, and it's interesting that in our act and in our province we have chosen to make the authority over this land the minister, and the minister is responsible for the enforcing of these restrictions. In other areas there have been committees or commissions or multiperson bodies appointed that not only help monitor the use of designated reserves such as these but are also bodies that citizens can approach to have new areas designated. As I read through the details of the bill, it was one of the things that I wondered if the minister and his department had considered as the bill was being crafted, the mechanism by which new areas could be designated. It seemed to me that having a body that is somewhat independent of the minister and the department itself that could monitor these areas and would be available for proposals for new areas is an idea that's worth exploring.

Section 8 also makes it clear that the heritage rangelands are not included in areas that have restrictions where you can't travel on foot, where you can't hunt or trap, where you can't fish, where you can't land an aircraft, where you can't use a pack animal or motorized vehicle or light or maintain an open fire. It's quite clear by these provisions that the rangelands are to be maintained by grazing. To facilitate this, those individuals involved in grazing activity obviously are going to have to be able to move around on the landscape. So the kinds of restrictions that might otherwise apply or apply to other ecological areas are not seen to be appropriate here. That's the provisions in this section of the bill. Section 8 makes this clear. Waterways are obviously going to pass through them, and there are going to be greenbelts for animals. There have to be exceptions, of course, for hunting and fishing activity that would occur in these areas, and that's what section 8 of the bill enables.

Again going back to those individuals, ranchers, who are actually using the rangeland for economic purposes, they're going to have to be able to graze animals, horses and pack animals, to move around to conduct the activity that they're involved in.

Section 9 of the bill gives the restrictions, specifically those that will apply to heritage rangelands. The roads that are rights-of-way or allowances and which are bordered continuously or discontinuously on both sides of a heritage rangeland are included in this section. The minister, of course, again in this section may by order make any restrictions on fires in a rangeland. Those fire restrictions are normally put in place, of course, during high-risk times of the year, when dry seasons are being experienced.

It's in section 8 that we also have the restrictions on off-highway vehicles and motorized vehicles that are not to be operated in the heritage rangelands except on the right-of-way or undeveloped road allowances. It's recognized in this section that vehicles do the most permanent damage to the grassland area, Madam Chairman. Even though vehicles are supposed to stay on the road, it would be interesting to know what kind of enforcement will be available in these areas, and that question I think applies to a number of the other restrictions in the act. These are vast areas in many cases, and the monitoring of them is going to be an interesting exercise. Some of the ranching operations of course do require the use of aircraft. Again, it would be only possible to operate those aircraft with the minister's approval.

Section 10 is an amendment to section 9 and gives exceptions to the limits from section 8. It really exempts equipment or transportation that is owned by the Crown if it has ministerial approval, or if it's owned by the owner of a disposition or a fur-trapping licence, then this section allows for equipment and transportation to be used by those individuals.

Section 11 adds "heritage rangeland" to the list. If a person damages by an action and that action doesn't have approval of the minister, then that person is guilty of an offence.

The following section, section 12, adds "heritage rangeland" to the areas in which the minister may restrict travel.

Section 13, references sections.

Section 14 includes "heritage rangelands" now in areas in which the Lieutenant Governor in Council "may make regulations respecting the administration, management, operation and utilization." It's really a section that allows the government to make the rules and regulations governing the administration and how the activity in the rangelands will be monitored and conducted. It's that section that we, I think in the past, have always believed should be the section where the Committee on Law and Regulations could make a contribution to the improvement of legislation in the province and would, I think, provide valuable advice to the government in determining the kinds of rules and regulations that will govern rangeland operations.

Section 15 is an amendment that amends the Forest Reserves Act to include more land in the eastern Whaleback of the Rocky Mountain forest reserve. It expands that area. Section 15 also talks about the permits to be issued by the government for the grazing of livestock in forest reserves, and interestingly the word "annual" has been removed, so one assumes that they are now going to be multiyear permits, not yearly. The section also increases the lease on public lands in heritage rangeland from "a term not exceeding 20 years" to "a term not exceeding 30 years." So I guess some questions in terms of section 15. Why have these two provisions in terms of permits and leases been changed? What was the rationale for making the changes? It would be interesting to hear from the government before the bill passes out of the committee stage exactly why those changes were made.

I've gone quickly through some of the specific provisions of the bill, Madam Chairman. I'm sure there's much more that could be said about it, but I look forward as the issues that have been raised are addressed by the government.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. It's a pleasure this evening to rise and make a few comments on Bill 24, the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act, 2000. This is a bill that I certainly support, and I would urge all members of this Assembly to support this bill.

This is a bill that does voice the broad public concerns of our grassland ecosystems here in the province. What it also does is add lands to the eastern part of the Whaleback. Again, as we see with the great influx of people into our province, the demands on the wilderness areas in this province continue to grow, and as we have encroachment into these areas, whether it be by four-wheel drives, all-terrain vehicles, off-highway vehicles, just the fact that people are getting out into the wilderness more, we do require some type of protection for these areas.

Again, Madam Chairman, when we talk about the ecosystems in these particular areas, we have to realize that these are very, very sensitive areas as well. Right now they are very productive areas as far as grasslands go, and we certainly hope that these grasslands will be protected, that these grasslands will be available not only for wild game in the area but also for grazing of cattle and for the ranching industry here in the province.

What this act does, Madam Chairman, is that for the first time the heritage of Alberta's grasslands will be protected by legislation specifically designed to meet the unique management needs of this particular ecosystem.

As well, what we find in this legislation is that the classification finalizes the Alberta government's commitment to the Black Creek heritage rangeland in the eastern half of the Whaleback and that this new category will provide for the specific management requirements of grasslands. Historically in the province, Madam Chairman, grazing bison helped to shape Alberta's grasslands. Of course, it is because of these huge herds that once roamed a large portion of the province that we did have our prairies remaining as they were, as grasslands. The heritage rangeland classification provides for the continued use of cattle grazing to preserve the ecological integrity of these areas.

Now, again, another reason that I think it's vitally important that we do look at how sensitive these areas are is because of the changing conditions that we do have in Alberta. It was just this past week that we did have a report where it was felt that many of the major glaciers in the province are receding at such a rate that they will be gone in the next 20 to 50 years. When we look at this particular bill, it does make provisions for the leases to ranchers, to people that wish to graze their cattle in these areas. These would be extended from 20 years to 30 years. I think that when we are looking at the impact of our freshwater supply from the runoff of the glaciers, particularly in all those areas that rely on that runoff on the east of the Rockies, then it is a very good thing that we do have a provision whereby in another 30 years, when these leases do expire, we will be able to have a look at what the impact of our receding glaciers has been and how the supply of freshwater from these glaciers is going to impact these particular sensitive areas in our province.

Now, the act is quite clear that the heritage rangelands are to be maintained by grazing, and to facilitate this, Madam Chairman, ranchers would have restrictions on how they can travel. These restrictions are outlined extremely well in section 9. What it says here is that vehicles are going to be restricted because they can do permanent damage to a grassland area. I look particularly at what has happened in Jasper national park.

Now, up until the '60s and '70s residents of the park had a tremendous amount of freedom in the park in which they could drive their vehicles in these areas, Madam Chairman. With those rules that they created then, the damage that they did to the system there is still there, so I think that when we start looking here at this particular bill and the restrictions that they have put on the vehicles traveling in these grassland areas, this is a very strong part of this bill, and it is good to see.

So in section 8.1(3) I do like the fact that vehicles have been restricted and that there will be enforcement on people who do not observe the rules governing these areas. As well, I would wait to see if in fact in this particular act there are going to be penalties for those that do not follow these restrictions.

I also see in here under 8.1(4) that people will not have the right to take off or land aircraft in a heritage rangeland except, of course, in the case of "an emergency or as authorized by the Minister." I think this is another strong part of this particular act and one that will definitely help in strengthening the act.

Now, then, as well, Madam Chairman, when we look at other sections of this act, we see that there are areas that have been set aside that would likely be part of greenbelts for wild animals, and waterways are going to pass through them, so that does explain the exceptions to hunting and fishing in those areas. When we do look at particularly the hunting in these areas, this does not appear to be supported by the general public. Certainly these types of activities do lead to reduced opportunities for the public to have wildlife viewing opportunities. So again this would be a major addition to the bill. As well, what would happen here is that this would avoid the conflicts with other recreational activities in that public safety and protection in the protected areas are very good reasons and the reasons cited as to why hunting should not be allowed.

There certainly is some opposition to this particular part, but in the stakeholder consultations I do see that one of the recommendations was that the committee felt that on balance the proposed policy position in respect to recreational hunting was reasonable and should continue.

As we look through the bill, I think another section that is a very good part of this bill is section 10, and this section, Madam Chairman, gives exemption to the limits from section 8 in that "equipment or means of transportation" that is owned by the Crown is exempt as is the ministerially approved equipment which is owned by the holder of a disposition or a fur-trapping licence.

Under section 11 heritage rangeland is included in the listed areas where if a person damages by an action and the action does not have ministerial authorization, that person is guilty of an offence. Again, Madam Chairman, under this section if somebody is guilty of that offence, I would like to see how the penalties for that violation would be spelled out at some point.

Under section 12, Madam Chairman, heritage rangeland is part of the list of areas in which the minister may restrict travel. Again what I do like is that we have identified a person who is going to be responsible and will be able to limit the amount of travel through these areas.

Under section 14 heritage rangeland is included in the list of areas in which “the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations respecting the administration, management, operation and utilization” in these areas. Again, this is another piece of the act that does make this a good act. It does put in the provisions that we would like to see to protect Alberta’s grassland heritage. As the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East said, certainly we do want to protect these areas. They are areas that are sensitive. They are areas that are very vulnerable. Therefore, Madam Chairman, I certainly would like to see these continue.

I recall what my mother told me about when she arrived in this province in 1902 and they homesteaded in the Viking area, where I’m sure the hon. Minister of Gaming has spent much time in oil exploration and whatever. Unfortunately, they chose a piece of property where there wasn’t any oil or gas. My mother told me a very interesting story when I took her back. She was in her late 80’s at this particular point, and we went back to Viking and went to find the homestead. One of her big complaints at that time was that she couldn’t recognize where it was. I said: “Well, what has changed so much since the time you first homesteaded here in the early 1900’s?” and she said, “There are so many trees now. When we homesteaded here in the early 1900s, there were no trees.”

I do like the provisions that have been put in here. I do like the fact that these provisions will protect our heritage grasslands. With those few comments, Madam Chairman, I would like to cede my position to some other member here in the Assembly and listen to further debate on Bill 24.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Madam Chairman, thank you very much for acknowledging this member. I think I’ve made the observation before in speaking to different elements of environmental protection, different statutes, different bills, that I’ve always been struck in my constituency with the very high level of concern, attention, and awareness around environmental issues. I’ve often thought Calgary-Buffalo, which is perhaps the most inner city and the most urban of all 83 constituencies, is one where environment and environmental concerns consistently rank in the top three areas about which I receive letters, phone calls, visits, and that sort of thing.

It may be that so many Calgarians have the opportunity of checking out the mountains every morning when we drive to work. Is this not a Calgary thing to do? The observation you make to whomever is in the car with you is whether there is more snow or less snow on the mountains. I don’t know whether it makes any sense, but I find myself doing it, and I know lots of other people do it. Anyway, it’s that proximity to the spectacular beauty of the mountains that makes it so important.

You know, Barry Commoner, the American biologist and educator, said one time:

Both the environmental and population crises are the largely unintended result of the exploitation of technological, economic, and political power. Their solutions must also be found in the same difficult arena. This task is unprecedented in human history, in its size, complexity and urgency.

I think what Mr. Commoner said probably resonates with all of us. Whether you’re in Calgary-Varsity or whether you’re in Duchess or Bassano or Drumheller or Hanna, Alberta, I think this is something that just people intuitively know and understand.

I was very interested when I saw Bill 24 in terms of the difference between Bill 15 and Bill 24. I give full credit to the Minister of Environment, who apparently went through a very arduous process within his caucus and his cabinet in the bill review process to be able to bring this very modest piece of proposed legislation forward. And it is modest. It certainly doesn’t have the breadth of Bill 15. Neither does it have so many of the problems that we’d identified in Bill 15, the areas that were left to ministerial discretion, left to regulation, and that sort of thing.

I think Barry Commoner, that American environmentalist and biologist, would probably vote yes to Bill 24, and Calgary-Buffalo is going to vote yes to Bill 24 as well.

I do want to say, though: what happened to the rest of Bill 15? Although we were unhappy with a number of elements and certainly much of the bigger community was concerned about that, Madam Chairman, why is it that we don’t see a more ambitious bill than this one?

Sometimes our criticism is that the bills are too ambitious, but sometimes we see a bill like this one, and we’d say that we could have done a lot more. So we wonder what sort of problems there are. You know, when my relatives in Medicine Hat and down in the Cypress Hills registered their concern around the environment and environmental protection, I think they were hoping that government would be able to bring in something that was more ambitious.

Now, what we’ve got with respect to Bill 24 is something that’s focused really – I mean, there are two parts of the province that are directly affected. We’ve got the eastern part of the Whaleback, and goodness knows it is important, and it’s a wonderful thing to see additional land added to that. The other thing it does – and let’s be very clear about this Madam Chairman, very clear indeed – is provide more protection for the grassland ecosystem. You know, that’s a concern as we start getting out particularly into the eastern part of the province. That’s the entire Palliser Triangle, the area explored by John Palliser more than 100 years ago. That is an important ecosystem, and it’s significant that government is moving to deal with it and providing a degree of protection.

I think it’s interesting that in section 8 the heritage rangeland is included in the areas that have the restrictions about depositing litter, about removing plant or animal life or constructing or adding improvements or doing anything, Madam Chairman, as I understand it, that would alter or disturb the surface in those grassland ecosystems.

We’ve got some exceptions to hunting and fishing. I was listening carefully to my colleague for Edmonton-Mill Woods, who always shows me the dazzling breadth of his knowledge and his experience. I don’t know when he found time to read and learn as much when he was writing all those books, but every time he offers commentary in this House . . .

MRS. McCLELLAN: When he was teaching all those students.

MR. DICKSON: And teaching those students, minister of intergovernmental affairs.

Every time that member speaks, I find it illuminating. I find that he provides all of us with information and perspective we didn’t have before.

MR. SMITH: If only we could say the same thing about you, Gary. If we could just say the same thing about you. I’d love to. Make we say that.

MR. DICKSON: Madam Chairman, the Minister of Gaming makes an offer that he knows I couldn’t possibly comply with. He imposes an impossible condition, so I want to move on.

I'm almost, unless I'm provoked, about to wind up uncharacteristically brief comments, and that's simply because this is a good bill. It's a bill I support. I'm encouraging my caucus colleagues to support it, and I know they've received some excellent advice from Edmonton-Ellerslie to the same effect. I think this is a bill we can put forward.

You know, I must say that I'm always sort of fascinated with the process of things, and I wonder if the Minister of Gaming at some point would tell us, you know, the proverbial fly on the wall, about those cabinet meetings when we saw the rustling of the titans of absolute unfettered free enterprise exploitation of the wilds and the Minister of Environment, that Minister of Environment whom I will always remember. I have this mental picture. He'd only been Minister of Environment for a scant couple of weeks, and there he was in hip waders on the front page of all the newspapers and on all the TV stations. He was standing in a stream. I think the mayor was there too, but I always remember the Minister of Environment standing there in his hip waders in this stream somewhere in the Nose Creek area. He just looked so joyful. I haven't seen him looking so happy since he was doing his Elvis Presley imitation at the Chinese New Year's banquet. He was obviously enjoying his portfolio, and I think he's demonstrated a really keen concern to do what is possible with that important portfolio.

I wish that minister well. I congratulate him on bringing Bill 24 through. I express my disappointment that it's not more ambitious. Finally, I want to challenge him to address some of those other issues we were teased with in Bill 15 but to bring them back in a way that respects the substantial feedback he's received from conservation groups, from environmental groups. Those people have a tremendous body of knowledge and some wonderful commentary, expertise, and perspective to share with all of us.

I hope all members are going to support Bill 24 and we'll see its speedy passage through this Legislative Assembly. Thank you very much, Madam Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Madam Chairman. I wasn't going to speak to this bill actually, because I think my colleagues have done a good job of doing the clause-by-clause commentary, but then I remembered that I had a letter from a constituent who had asked me to bring up his concerns if we saw environmental legislation brought forward in this session.

Now, it's interesting that in my riding of Edmonton-Centre, which, as you know, is an urban riding, in the centre of the city, environment consistently comes in as the number four concern of residents. They're talking about environmental protection, protection of the parks and the wilderness areas, and they're very supportive of any protection the government is willing to offer through legislation for the areas we have and also additional designation of areas that would fall under protection. The flip side of that is that I often get commentary about the need to work very carefully in partnership with forestry companies and oil and gas leasing activities and other activities that might be taking place in designated areas.

I note, with some disappointment but with understanding, that snowmobiling will not be allowed in these rangeland areas. As a snowmobiler I'm able to ride on less and less of the areas in Alberta, but I understand the need for this here. I understand that the recommendation has come forward from environmental groups and professors and experts in the area of environmental protection, and I will respect that. I'm a responsible snowmobiler.

I have just one quick question to ask. Was there any consultation at all with any established snowmobiling associations like the Alberta Snowmobile Association? Perhaps the minister can make note of that question and respond to me at some time.

Now, what this constituent, Rob Stefaniuk, had contacted me about. If new legislation was brought in around wilderness protection areas or a new version of the environmental protection bill we had last year, he was most concerned that serious consideration be given to allowing the inclusion of paragliding and hang gliding. He's quite specific there in that he is speaking about nonmotorized, foot-launched flight, which is pretty specific. I think it's really clear what he's looking for. I did notice in this bill that it was talking about aviation being restricted but that the minister could make allowances or allow certain people to do so, by permit I presume. So this is a question being put to the minister: if there has been consideration given to whether paragliding and hang gliding would be allowed in these rangeland heritage preservation areas.

I notice there's not a lot being allowed in these areas. I understand from the visits I've made to southern Alberta how ecologically fragile this kind of land can be and that not a lot is being allowed here, but I do note that hunting and fishing are. As a sidebar, I'm sure that my father, the hunter and fisherman, will be very glad to hear that, as he does participate in those activities in the areas that are being mentioned here. I would be interested in whether the hang gliding and paragliding are going to be allowed in that they don't have that much of an impact. They are foot propelled, and certainly my constituent, Mr. Stefaniuk, does feel that the aviation restrictions are excessively wide. Now, he was speaking specifically about the Alberta Provincial Parks Act, and he recognizes that they're designed to control the operation of motorized aircraft. Well, his is not motorized. His question is: why can't they allow this? He's really looking for very specific language to be used, because in some of the existing legislation the language is broad enough, he feels – and I agree – that they restrict the relatively low-impact activities of his sport.

I'm glad that I was able to have this opportunity to just put the concerns of my constituent on the record and put them forward to the minister for an answer and also for consideration. It may well not be appropriate given that we are speaking specifically about rangeland heritage areas. Certainly when we do have an environmental protection bill back in front of us at some point, perhaps in a fall sitting, we would be able to look into this in more depth.

So that was the one issue I wanted to raise around this bill at this time, and I appreciate the opportunity to get those comments on the record. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Madam Chairman. During my period of time here as a representative of the riding of, first, Edmonton-Whitemud and then Edmonton-Rutherford, an area of the city where we have people that are very informed, citizens that are very, very aware, over the years I've had a great number of people come to me and talk to me about various environmental concerns. There is a real, real passion amongst most people to preserve our wilderness areas, to preserve the beauty of the province. Let's put it that way. We saw what happened in Ontario with Premier Harris, and it was very unusual in the province of Ontario. It wasn't expected to be done by that Premier, but it was done. When he laid down the designations of a number of areas, it was extremely well received.

Now, we had some difficulties when Bill 15 was coming forward. The environmentalists had some difficulties with it. This caucus had some difficulties with it. It was very, very wide in scope, much wider of course than Bill 24. When I remember Bill 15, the environmentalists were speaking out. They were communicating with us. They were making it very clear that the bill was not acceptable to them. I know that in the past there has been reference made to them or some of them have been labeled as tree huggers, and I don't regard them as tree huggers. I regard them as activists, to a degree, but they're activists with a conscience. They're environmentally concerned. They are concerned about the quality of land, air, and water not only for ourselves but are concerned about the type of environment we leave behind for our children, our grandchildren, for future generations.

When we talk in terms of the benefit of Bill 24, we see it as a positive bill. We see it as one of those bills that this caucus has no hesitation in supporting because it is to the benefit of Albertans. One may argue that it's not as wide in scope as it should be, but hopefully the Minister of Environment and the minister responsible for energy can sort of get their act together and come to some agreement as to where environmental protection is going to end up in this particular province.

I recognize the economic benefits from the position of the one minister, but I recognize, too, the overall importance of protection of the environment. Once the environment is allowed to be destroyed, you can't redo it. If you look at Edmonton, for example, if we were to allow massive development throughout the entire river valley or allow a freeway through the MacKinnon ravine, once it's done, you can't take it away. You can't say: well, we've changed our mind, and we're going to convert it back to its original area. In very few cases can that be done.

I'd just make reference here to the committee that had been established, the MLA review committee, if I recall correctly, and to some of the concerns and recommendations that were raised at that particular time on the balance in terms of hunting in parks and protected areas. If most Albertans were asked if hunting should be allowed in parks and protected areas, my feeling would be such that the majority would say no, that we have to allow that wilderness to remain in the state it's in. But you've got to find that balance. You have to recognize certain realities in life. I know I've heard the argument on countless occasions that you shouldn't touch these natural areas at all, that you shouldn't touch green areas, that they should be left as is. The difficulty is that if you can't incorporate a balance of recreational opportunities along with the preservation of those designated areas, you in effect can deprive a lot of people of having the opportunity to use those particular areas.

For somebody like myself having to use a wheelchair, in some of these areas like the river valley, for example, if there were no trails, concrete or asphalt trails, whatever, that are deliberately constructed to provide access for persons on bicycles, persons in wheelchairs and such, it would deny those people the opportunity of using that protected green area. The same holds true for the use of recreational vehicles. Again, most Albertans would say: well, recreational vehicles in those areas is not desirable. I think the thing we have to look at is: is there a balance? Is there some limited use of recreational vehicles that in fact can allow some Albertans to utilize those green areas even further?

Madam Chairman, one of my great experiences that I can recall a number of years ago was in Kananaskis Country. Probably most of us have visited Kananaskis Country at one time or another. One of the things the government did, quite a remarkable, positive thing the government did, in the development of Kananaskis Park was to develop, if I remember right, the William Watson Lodge. It's a special facility for persons with disabilities. It allowed me and my spouse, my son, my daughter-in-law, and our three grandchildren to all occupy accessible facilities for a period of time at a very, very reasonable cost. In fact, the price was bargain basement. It was three bucks a night, if you want to know. Now, that's pretty good for a whole group of us. In any case, they had trails there that were poured asphalt. It really gave us the opportunity to utilize, to see that beautiful, magnificent country we have down there. In any case, I'm going to . . . [interjection] I'm speaking. Please.

In any case, Madam Chairman, I'm going to conclude, and I'm going to conclude on the note that I do support this bill. I would hope all Members of the Legislative Assembly would support this bill because it is a good bill, it's a positive bill. It's a very, very good bill.

Thank you.

Bill 19 Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000

Mr. Hancock moved that pursuant to Standing Order 47 the previous question be now put.

[Adjourned debate May 16: Dr. Taylor]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to speak in principle in second reading for Bill 19, the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000. Off the top, I'd like to say that in principle I am in favour of what's being proposed in this bill, although I'm aware that after only two speakers we had the near-closure guillotine use of Standing Order 47(1) to preclude us bringing in any motions in second reading on this bill. But I am in favour of what's being proposed here. There are a lot of numbers being bandied about these days – 8 percent, .5 percent, 11 percent, 10 and a half percent – but essentially we're talking about a tax break or a removal of a surtax for Albertans. I just have two concerns that I'd like to briefly discuss here while we're in the stage of second reading.

My first concern is the omission that has occurred with this bill in that it is reducing the high-income surtax, which really does not apply to all Albertans that are paying a surtax. It applies to about 25 percent of the taxpayers who, indeed, had been levied with this high-income surtax back in the mid-80s when the deficit and the corresponding debt were mounting. You know, there's always a hitch in this. Nothing's ever straightforward here. As I considered Bill 19 and reviewed it and did some research on it, you know, I have to say – and I'll come back to this later. But I do see Bill 19 and Bill 18 going hand in hand, because I think it's about an overall policy, an economic policy and an ideology that's being put forward by the government.

What I noticed specifically is that when the government originally came forward with this tax cut plan in '96, the timetable was to eliminate the .5 percent, the half-percent surtax that had been levied on all taxpayers. Now, the timetable was to eliminate that half a percent surtax prior to eliminating the 8 percent on high-income earners, yet when it actually came forward, that's been reversed. We've heard nothing about the half a percent surtax, which would really put money back in everybody's pockets. No sign of that, no talk of that, but we do have the high-income surtax being withdrawn with this Bill 19. There's even a quote from Budget '96, Reinvestment: The Tax Plan, that says that "the tax plan proposes to reduce the tax burden for all Albertans starting with low to middle income working families." Great.

So there seems to have been a plan put forward in '96, and here we are, four years later, and I don't know what's happened to that plan. Now we have the order of things reversed without an explanation coming from the government about why that plan that was put forward in '96 is not being followed. I, of course, would always prefer to see a more equitable arrangement. I would prefer to see all taxpaying Albertans being acknowledged for their contribution to reducing the deficit and the debt in this province. I'd prefer to see them all being acknowledged prior to any specified group. So I do have a question about what happened to the plan. I have listened, I have reviewed Hansard, but I haven't seen an explanation for why the plan that was put forward in '96 isn't being followed. And I do make the point that the half-percent flat rate would be more equitable to all Albertans.

In understanding and reviewing how this government has dealt with their economic policy, I search for an overall and understandable plan to be able to explain to my constituents why these choices are being made, and I am constantly thwarted in my attempts to do that because there isn't a logical flow to what is going on here.

I note that the Premier in a Calgary Herald article in the summer of '99 said: what we want to do is make sure that those who can least afford to pay tax get the first break. So as recently as less than a year ago there was obviously still an intent to remove the .5 percent surtax first. What happened in the intervening 10 months? Another quote, also from the summer of '99, from the then Provincial Treasurer: certainly our priority is for low-income earners, and there are ways that that can be addressed. So what happened in the intervening time?

I think every taxpayer did make sacrifices to reduce the debt, and I'm wondering why only a chosen few winners get the payoff, the payday when it comes to this. I've often spoken of the number of senior citizens that live in Edmonton-Centre, and I have to point out that most of those seniors would be on the loser list if we are following the government's picking winners and losers scenario here, because those seniors, most of them, have incomes under the magic $46,450. Now, that $46,450 was the level above which individuals were paying the 8 percent and below which they weren't, but they would have been paying the .5 percent. Who has a pension or fixed income that's under $46,000? Well, a lot of the people that live in Edmonton-Centre. These are retired nurses, retired teachers, administrators. Interestingly, a number of people that worked on the railroad have pensions that are below that level. They're not benefiting from the removal of this 8 percent high-income surtax, so I guess they could be considered on the losing side of this.

So that's my first and primary concern about what's being proposed here, and as I said, I do support in principle what's being done. I think it's perfectly appropriate that since the government, certainly with enormous help from the people, has gotten rid of the deficit and is reducing the debt, those people should have these surtaxes removed.

My second concern is the larger ideology that is behind these changes in the tax structure, the changes in the economic policy and ideology that I see the government playing with. I spoke before about the plan and then not seeing the plan implemented, so is there a plan?

Essentially we collect taxes to pay for programs and services that the government offers. I have to admit that in Edmonton-Centre I have not received any correspondence from anyone demanding that they get a tax cut, and I've reviewed sort of the last six months' worth of correspondence from people. Sorry; the one exception to that is the senior citizens who are quite adamant in continuing to raise the point that they have never recouped the 5 percent cut they endured through the cuts to their programs and services. That 5 percent, they feel, has never been restored to them. So that's the only kind of feedback I'm getting from constituents about a tax cut or restoring funding to somebody.

Let me go back to the idea that we collect taxes to pay for programs and services, and do we have enough money to offer the programs and services that the people are wanting? Certainly we have in Alberta a cyclical economy. Where is the plan? I'm looking for the plan that shows that we are coping with and we are expecting that rise and fall.

We hear talk about removal of this 8 percent high-income surtax. As I mentioned, there was talk in the '96 plan and since then of removing the half-percent flat tax that was a debt reduction tax. We're hearing about an entirely new tax scheme which is a flat tax scheme at 11 percent, or I gather the government is now going to propose 10 and a half percent.

How does this all work into adequate provision of programs and services? We're hearing from the education sector that there is a need for consistent, sustainable long-term funding there. We're hearing in health care that there is a need for sustainable, understandable, long-term funding there. We've heard a lot of talk recently about the lack of funding for maintenance in infrastructure. What about the funding that's required for the seniors where they're able to do it?

You know, I have a seniors' centre in my constituency that is offering great work to the community and is now facing a real problem because their rent has gone from $1,100 to $4,300 a month. They do a lot of work for the Capital health authority with referrals.

They don't get paid to do that, and they don't get any funding to provide this service, which is a wellness, prevention service.

MS LEIBOVICI: It keeps people out of the hospital.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, there's no question that it keeps people out of the hospital.

Where are we with programs and services for social and low-income housing? What about child poverty?

You see, when we talk about tax cuts, it's really not a spending issue. It is, as has been pointed out to me most adamantly today, a matter of not collecting that money. If we're not collecting it, then how do we expect to be able to put these moneys that are being requested from these different sectors back in?

You know, when we're into the theory and practice of taxation and spending, I'm not seeing the energy and the commitment from this government. I'm not seeing that willingness and that energy and that commitment to plan. I'm not seeing it to invest in designated sectors like youth or seniors. I'm not seeing it to be that commitment to prevention, whether it be for poverty or homelessness or disease or ill health. You know, the government has made it very clear that they don't want to be in this Legislature. I'm speaking now with that guillotine of Standing Order 47(1) over my head. It seems they want to do as little as possible and do it behind closed doors at their own time.

For these problems that we see before us that I hear from people in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre, we're not seeing the plan. We're not seeing the energy. We're not seeing the political will to move this forward. When you do see something coming forward like this idea in Bill 19, the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000, of withdrawing that 8 percent high-income surtax, it doesn't follow with any other plan that we've had put before us. We don't see the plan.

What we do see is short-term sort of patches. Even the language that the government is using is about short-term fixes. They talk about pressure points and addressing pressure points. Well, that doesn't bring to mind any image of a long-range flow with the milestones that they're going to hit at every point to move things forward. That talks about: "Oh, oh. This water main has burst over here, so we'll run over, and we'll slap something on it. Maybe we'll have to cut a section out of the pipe and reweld it, and that'll fix that pressure point. Oh, this one's starting to bulge over here. We'll rush over here and deal with that." So I'm looking and failing to see, because the government is not providing it, quite frankly.

It is piecemeal. It is jumping around. There is no explanation for the choices that are being made here. When we ask questions in this Chamber, what we often see back is a rebuke, is abusiveness, is name calling. Well, frankly, sticks and bones can break my bones, but names are never going to harm me. I can stand here and take the abuse and heckling that happens, but I am still looking for the plan, and I'm not seeing it. We're all looking for it.

So those were the comments, the two concerns that I wanted to raise around this bill. I'll make it clear one more time. In principle I am in favour of this bill. I think it's perfectly appropriate if the deficit has been addressed. If the very reason for instituting this high-income surtax was a deficit reduction surtax and that deficit has been addressed, it is exactly right that it should be removed. My concern is that this is not following the plan the government put forward with much touting, much paperwork, and much spending of the famous Public Affairs budget, and there's been no explanation as to why that plan is now abandoned or not being followed through with.

My second concern is the larger economic policy or, to be more specific, ideology that I see not being put forward by this government. Those are the two concerns that I wanted to raise around this bill. I'm very glad to have had the opportunity to get my few words in before that guillotine falls on our heads again over here. The government seems in an awful rush to get out of here without providing very much explanation about why. So I'm glad I got this opportunity to speak tonight, and I will cede the floor to one of my colleagues who I know wants to speak to second reading.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I've been given the opportunity to make some comments on Bill 19, which of course in a way is a companion bill to Bill 18. I use the term companion bill because if you look at the basic principle behind Bill 19 as well as Bill 18, the main principle is to provide a tax benefit, but in both cases the greatest, the most significant tax benefit is to those people that make the most dollars.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we talk in terms of taxation, people are sick and tired of having to pay the increasing tax that has occurred over the years in several provinces. Maybe B.C. is an exception. It doesn't seem to have come to grips with dealing with its budget in terms of trying to balance it. What happened here in Alberta is not so different from what we saw happen in New Brunswick and Saskatchewan and Ontario. We see it happening in the federal government, where the current federal Treasurer, the Hon. Paul Martin, has also recognized that Canadians are crying out for some form of tax relief.

I think we all accept the fact that Albertans deserve to get – I shouldn't say get some of their tax dollars back, because we're not really giving it back.

MS BLAKEMAN: Just not taking it anymore.

MR. WICKMAN: Exactly. It's not ours to just take as we see fit.

In other words, what we're saying is that we have to find a mechanism to reduce the burden on Albertans when it comes to paying tax. So it's not an expenditure in that sense. One could argue that it's a loss of revenue. I tend to see it as providing a benefit to Albertans; in other words, recognizing that Albertans have gone through some hardships and seen the deficit fought and seen the accumulated debt go down over a period of time. We've seen provincial employee and private sector cutbacks in salaries and such, and we saw a period of time in the '70s and the early '80s of dramatic increases in taxation with all levels of government.

So the basic question, I guess, that has to be addressed right off the bat: would I as an elected representative oppose a tax reduction? No, certainly not. I'd have to be foolish to go to my constituents and say, "Sorry; there's an opportunity to reduce the burden on you, but I'm going to oppose it because I don't believe in tax cuts." They wouldn't even wait until the next election. They'd get a petition and throw me out right now.

MS LEIBOVICI: Where do I sign?

MR. WICKMAN: My colleague here from Edmonton-Meadowlark wants to be the first one to sign that petition.

MS LEIBOVICI: No, not that. I like you. I want it clear on the record: I think you're a wonderful MLA.

MR. WICKMAN: So, Mr. Speaker, we recognize that Albertans are entitled to that tax reduction. Call it a break. Call it whatever. It's a question of how it's done. Let's talk in terms of fair is fair. Let's talk in terms of who deserves the greatest benefit.

I recognize some of the arguments that will be put forward by proponents of Bill 19 and also Bill 18. Let's talk about Bill 19 in particular. It is a start. There is no question about it. It's the very, very first indication of recognizing the need for less pressure on taxpayers to foot the programs that are currently being footed, and this of course is retroactive to January 1, 2000, whereas Bill 18 doesn't kick in until next year. So this becomes the first significant tax reform that will be of benefit to some Albertans. You see, that's the key: of benefit to some Albertans. It's not widespread. It's just to those selected few in a category that represents possibly 25 percent of the income earners throughout the province.

Now, when we talk in terms of fair being fair, there are two surcharges on provincial taxation. One is the 8 percent that kicks in over the $46,460, I believe it is, or maybe $46,450; somewhere in that ballpark between $46,000 and $47,000. One is taxed 8 percent provincially on any income over that. However, there's the other surtax, the .5 percent that applies virtually to all Albertans. There are some exceptions. The very, very low income, of course, don't have to pay that surtax because when you do, if your income is low enough, the Alberta portion of your tax return is offset by that particular credit that you get.

So it doesn't apply to all Albertans, but the elimination of the .5 percent surtax would benefit the vast majority of Albertans. The vast majority. Maybe it's 90 percent, maybe 85 percent; I'm not sure of the actual percentage. But it would benefit, I would say, at least three times as many people as the elimination of the 8 percent surtax. The thing is that it would benefit those people that are in a position that they're in the greatest need of that benefit because, of course, they're the lower income and they don't have that disposable income that those earning $50,000 or $70,000 a year or more will have.

So the question I would have to pose, that I would ask the minister to respond to when we have this particular bill go into committee stage is: why not first eliminate the .5 percent surtax? Eliminate that first. Make that retroactive to January 1, 2000. Then 85 percent of Albertans would be saying: "Great; the government is giving us some benefit right off the bat. They're recognizing that we're the ones that need the benefit right off the bat." But no, they've chosen to go in the other direction. We could eliminate the 8 percent at a further time, stage it in.

I recognize that the 8 percent surtax was put into place, I believe in 1987, with the understanding that it was there to fight the deficit. But the deficit was eliminated quite some time ago. The argument can no longer be used that during the last two or three years or whatever that 8 percent was used to offset the deficit, because the deficit was eliminated. One could argue that it goes towards the accumulated debt. Nevertheless, the reduction in taxation we see in terms of dollars is – what? – $130 million roughly. I believe it's in that ballpark, that benefit, that portion of Albertans.

Now, one of the arguments that the proponents of this scheme may put forward is that, well, it's going to reduce the so-called brain drain into the states. In other words, if those at the higher end of the income earning potential get the bigger break, then of course there is going to be an enticement for them to stay here in Alberta, stay here in Canada, whatever the case may be. But I think there's a lot more involved than an 8 percent surtax when a person makes a decision whether they want to remain in Canada or go to the United States.

There are aspects of the United States that are not nearly as conducive to quality of life as here in Canada. I've always held that the United States is a nice place to visit, but my roots are here in Canada, and there's no way that I would ever, ever consider leaving Canada to move to the United States, even if there were no taxes there, even if taxes were eliminated totally. So I kind of reject that argument.

Now, there may be a small number of people that are so motivated by the dollar that just for the sake of saving some dollars in taxation, they're prepared to give up the lifestyle that they would have here in the province of Alberta. Some will do it. I feel sorry for those people, Mr. Speaker. I feel sorry for people who will give up the lifestyle we have here to move to some American city for the sake of having a few extra dollars in their pocket. I could not do that myself.

Let's take a look at some stats here, some background. The 8 percent provincial surtax was introduced by the government, as I mentioned earlier, in the budget of '87 as a means to assist in the elimination of the provincial budget deficit. Now, if we look at the figures, the 8 percent, yeah, it does apply to Albertans earnings $46,450 in taxable income or paying Alberta's basic tax of above $3,500. Those are the two options or the two categories on the Alberta portion of your tax return.

When we look at the year 2000, the 8 percent surtax generates $144 million in revenue for the provincial government. Again that term "generates revenue" is used. I don't see it sort of as revenue; I see it as $144 million of money in Albertans' pockets that was not taken from them, that we're not forcing them to pay over.

When we look at October 1998, when we had the Alberta Tax Review Committee come up with its recommendations, they did in fact recommend the elimination of the temporary deficit elimination tax, the surtax, to be followed by the .5 percent flat rate tax, it's called. Yeah, that did occur.

We saw a number of government statements that followed that certain things were going to happen at a certain given time, but the world price of oil – we all know what the world price of oil is. I stopped at the gas pumps on the way here. They jumped it 4 cents a litre overnight. That's because of the world price.

MS LEIBOVICI: Because of the long weekend.

MR. WICKMAN: The long weekend coming up too, yeah.

So the money just keeps pouring in, pouring in as far as the government is concerned.

The Premier has had the opportunity to take some initiatives and say: we're going to advance this whole tax reform structure; we're going to put things in place a lot sooner than we originally had anticipated. That's good that they did that. However, in terms of the priorities I still don't understand for the life of me why they chose as a priority to give the immediate benefit, the first benefit to the highest earners in the province. I don't understand that.

I know that in my constituency, a middle-class neighbourhood, a good number of the people will benefit in fact by Bill 19. I recognize that. Despite that I still have to say: fair is fair. To me Bill 19 is not fair. I know it's going to benefit my neighbors. I do their income tax for them; I know it's going to benefit them. They're going to say: "You're my representative. Why can't you support this particular bill?" Well, I have to respond, and say: well, it may benefit you, but three blocks down from where I live, where we have a subsidized housing project, is it going to benefit those people? Who needs the greater benefit? The people living in that subsidized housing project or my neighbour who has a cottage out at the lake, who has a trailer, who has a truck, and all those little toys in life that a lot of people can't afford?

So I can justify my decision not to support this bill on the basis that it is not a fair bill. I don't oppose a tax cut, and I make that very clear. I want that recorded in Hansard in capital letters: I do not oppose a tax break. In fact I support a tax break. Again I would think every member in this House would support a reduction in the amount of burden that we impose on those people that chose to put us here in the Legislative Assembly.

Let's look at some of the references that have been made in the past. On July 27, 1999, in the Calgary Herald the Premier of the province is quoted as saying: what we want to do is make sure that those who can least afford to pay tax get the first break. You see, that's exactly what I'm saying, and that's what the Premier said on July 27, 1999. What changed between now and then I don't know, but I agree fully with that statement. What we want to do is make sure that those who can least afford to pay tax get the first break.

Then we go to a statement by the former Provincial Treasurer, who of course we know has some other priorities right now that he's dealing with. He was talking in terms of priorities on July 28, 1999, a day after the Premier made his statement. The former Treasurer states: certainly our priority is for low-income earners, and there are ways that can be addressed. Well, to me when we talk in terms of priority for low-income earners, it's not the elimination of the surtax that benefits the 25 percent of Albertans who make the most money. Those are not the low-income earners. The low-income earners of course are the other 75 percent and starting to go down from there.

But the government took the expedient way by eliminating the 8 percent surtax. We saw the different scenarios, the concept of a tax rebate like Premier Mike Harris did in Ontario, which doesn't have annual implications. It's a one-shot implication. That was talked about. It never happened. There were comments made that it would be too complicated to provide some benefit to Albertans in that fashion. However, the province of Ontario I guess didn't find it that complicated. I'm not sure if they're better at their organizational skills or exactly what it is, but obviously Ontario has shown that that could have worked.

Now, we also saw kicked around the idea of the reduction or elimination of the tax at the pumps, the gasoline tax. For a while Albertans were expecting some immediate relief, seeing a reduction in the tax imposed on gas. However, the Acting Provincial Treasurer, who was at that time responding as the minister of energy said: we'll do it; as long as the federal government commits to doing it, we'll match them. Because the federal government decides they're going to do something or not isn't a sound basis for the provincial government making a decision. If it were, the government would not be considering Bill 18, for example, because I'm sure that in Ottawa the masters down there do not endorse what is happening with the delinking of taxation by the province of Alberta.

Although I agree with the concept of delinking, I'm sure that the federal government would not support the concept of a flat tax. If the government were to listen and follow the federal government, well, they wouldn't be proceeding with this type of taxation reform. They would be sitting down with their federal counterparts and working out a strategy. Paul Martin would be the man to do it with, because Paul Martin has a different view of tax reform than we see this government having. So that's the way it should have been done.

Now, what amount of money would the elimination of the .5 percent flat tax cost? If I recall, off the top of my head the loss of dollars coming into the coffers would be a bit more than the elimination of the surtax.

I want to give now some specific examples in terms of who benefits from Bill 19 and who doesn't benefit. Let's look here, for example. A typical cabinet minister earning roughly $75,000 in taxable income would save $249 a year as a result of Bill 19. A cabinet minister earning $75,000 in a one-income family with two children would save $206 a year. A deputy minister earning $100,000 a year in taxable income would save $495 per year because of the elimination of the 8 percent surtax, or the approval of Bill 19.

Let's look at some of the people who don't benefit. Let's look at the – I won't say the real people of Alberta. I'll say the average person, the blue-collar workers who go out and work hour after hour. They work overtime, whatever, to try and make ends meet, just to provide a reasonable standard of living for their family. Even an extra $25 a month may mean a lot to those people. A family of four, headed by two public servants, one earning $60,000 and the other earning $40,000 – in other words, two incomes in that one family – will save $56 per year, or 15 cents a day, because the income supports are considered as separate.

A two-income family earning $75,000 with two children where the income is split 50-50 will save zero per year. A single nurse in a place like Lloydminster, for example, who earns $40,000 will save zero percent as a result of the elimination of the surtax. We can look at a farmer in Lethbridge, for example, where my colleague to the right comes from. A family in Lethbridge with one spouse earning $55,000 as, let's say, a law enforcement officer and the other staying home with their three children, a priority in that particular household, would save just $16 per year, or 4 cents per day. Four cents per day would be their savings.

A senior citizen in Calgary who has $30,000 of taxable income coming in will save zero dollars per year. A senior couple in Edmonton earning $55,000 will save just $48 a year.

On that note, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege again to rise and speak to Bill 19, the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000. This is an interesting bill in the sense that it combines a couple of housekeeping things with a major change in taxation that's going to be applied in a retroactive way to the first of January 2000. At least if I read the words in the act correctly, they say that at the end of the 1999 tax year the 8 percent surtax will be removed.

Mr. Speaker, this is one of the bills now that we've had to handle in context with a whole series of different kinds of debates that are going on, different kinds of relationships, and I guess what we need to do is make sure that when we talk about how we're going to deal with adjusting and balancing the surplus that's in the Alberta budget, the way we have to approach it is how to look at what we're doing and who the recipients are of the benefits from what we're going to do in that.

We've already heard tonight a number of members talk about how this is a change in priority for tax relief for Albertans in the sense that a year ago they were promising tax relief to be spread equally among all Albertans to start with and then they would deal with the specific taxes. Well, what they've done with this bill now is they've effectively transferred the initial tax relief to those that are subject to the 8 percent surtax; in other words, Albertans that are making an income over $46,450. So this effectively has given the tax break to about 25 percent of Albertans as opposed to the potential to be applied to all tax filers if they would have gone to the original plan of the government and eliminated the .5 percent surtax before they went to the 8 percent high-income surtax.

I guess when I try to discuss this with constituents, one of the things that comes up is: well, you know, we hear this, or we've read that. What we've got to start doing is recognizing that we are here as legislators representing our community to try and put in place a set of rules that will govern how we on behalf of our constituents, on behalf of Albertans, put in place programs that will provide the services those Albertans want. What we have to look at are some of the definitional problems and some of the issues that come up when we start talking about things that mean something a little bit different to other people, depending upon who they've heard it from or how they've heard it or in what context they've heard it.

One of the things that struck me when we started this debate the other day: one of the members stood and said that we're going to spend $1.4 billion on tax relief. Mr. Speaker, I would challenge that to be an inappropriate statement in the sense that we do not spend money in the form of tax relief. If we want to balance a budget, what we effectively do is ask Albertans not to contribute quite as much to our general revenue fund, so we then have less to allocate to the decisions we're making on their behalf. This is kind of an issue of: what constitutes the ownership? How do we define the ownership of the dollars that are in the general revenue fund? I guess in my mind those dollars belong to Albertans. We don't get to take those dollars and spend them by giving them back to them. What we're doing is saying: we're not going to collect that many dollars from you next year or this year.

So essentially we are failing to justify to them the concept that each year, when we do the budget process, we effectively go through a process of saying: you as Albertans have asked for a certain level of service from the public, and it's going to cost this much; that means we're going to ask you to pay these taxes. Now, that's how I believe the tax system should work. As legislators on their behalf we should be making sure those dollars are spent as effectively and efficiently and as equitably as possible. We shouldn't be asking Albertans to contribute any more to our general revenue fund than what they effectively see as the appropriate level of service they require.

What I'm getting at in that discussion is the fact that I challenge this idea that we can spend money out of general revenue on a tax cut. What we do is give up asking for money into the general revenue when we give a tax cut. These dollars belong to Albertans; they don't belong to us. We can't spend them. What we do is give them the opportunity not to have to contribute in tax. So that's one of the things a number of my constituents have raised and we have to deal with when we try and talk about when they hear somebody say: hey, we're going to spend $1.4 billion on tax cuts. No, no. What we're doing is giving relief from asking Albertans for $1.4 billion. Essentially these are their dollars. They're not our dollars.

The other thing we have to deal with is this multiple jurisdiction kind of issue that comes up. I think we saw an example of that this afternoon in the sense that we as legislators in this House are only responsible for the taxes that are collected and distributed under the jurisdiction of our constitutional mandate. What happens at the federal level and what happens at the local municipal level: Albertans have to take those issues up with their respective elected officials at those levels. We cannot set tax policy at the federal level. We cannot set tax policy at the local level. That is up to the elected officials at those levels.

So what we have to do when we're talking about how changes in our tax structure or tax rate and tax level affect Albertans or ask Albertans to contribute, we have to deal with only the part of the tax that we are responsible for. The fact is that we have had in the past a linked taxing system with the federal government, so if the federal government changed their tax process or their tax rates so they were collecting a different level of tax, it automatically passed through and changed our level of revenue.

Well, the good thing about this whole discussion we're having on tax reform right now, including Bill 18 and Bill 19, is that Bill 18 is going to get rid of that kind of federal interference in our taxation system and our revenue collection in Alberta. We're going to be able to establish a direct link between Albertans and the decisions we make here in this House. We're not going to have to be at the mercy, if we might say it, of actions taken at the federal level, and this creates a much better taxation system, a much more accountable taxation system, where we can go out to Albertans and say: this was the decision we made; it was directly made on your behalf, and this is how it's going to work. We don't have to deal with: well, gee, the federal government changed taxes, so now we have to make decisions differently because they've affected our revenue.

What we've got to do is be accountable in those ways in the sense that we're going to look at making sure the definition we use in our discussion about taxation is consistent and is pointed in the sense that it deals with the issues we have under our control and that we can help Albertans to understand why we're making the decisions the way we are.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I went through that just to deal with some of the problems that come up when we try to talk about the concepts or the change in revenue collection that's reflected in Bill 19 in the sense that, as I said at the start, only about 25 percent of Albertans are going to be affected by the elimination of the 8 percent high-income surtax. Yet when we're talking about how we deal with the issues of equity and fairness within our taxation system, we should be able to have information that we can take out to Albertans and say: look, this is why we're making the decision to create a tax change that affects only some Albertans. What we've got now is Bill 19 effectively only providing a 1999 tax year change for persons with incomes over – what did I say it was? – $46,540.

What we're going to have to do is go out to our constituents and say: this is the reason why we chose on your behalf to change the relative weights of taxation, the relative burden of taxation, the relative share of taxation, however you want to interpret what we're doing when we ask Albertans to contribute through their taxes. We have to be able to justify to them that this is effectively creating an equitable affair and an adequate taxation system to provide the services they see fit for their perception of the province of Alberta.

As I look at the whole idea of the transition we've been through, bringing fiscal responsibility to the province, I guess what we've done is really changed some of the economic opportunity and economic burden faced by Albertans by eliminating a number of the support programs, the programs that provide assistance to persons with lower incomes. Effectively, if we were going to come to a situation where we had surplus dollars that we didn't need to contribute to our expenditures, then we should go back and say: who is it that we should allow not to contribute quite so much?

The idea that we are going to make a choice and say that only persons with incomes over $46,000 will be the ones who get a tax benefit I think essentially creates a real distribution issue in terms of the beneficiaries of that tax cut in the sense of what we see in the context of the shift in burden that we've created, the shift in the cost of living that we've created by cutting back on government programs. A number of those cutbacks were very justifiable, others not so. The issue we have to deal with, then, is that if we're going to provide economic opportunity to Albertans, which group should get it?

I guess in my context and that of the constituents I talk to, a lot of them, even some with incomes that are at a level where the 8 percent surtax actually takes some of their money, feel we have to be looking at: how are we helping Albertans at the lower income levels? We should be dealing with making sure they get a fair chance in our province before we really deal with tax cuts at the upper end of the income level. I use “upper end” only in the context, you know, that this was defined as a high-income surtax and applicable only to the persons at what was to be defined as a high income in the context of that taxation policy.

We have to kind of question: what would have been more appropriate? That, Mr. Speaker, is why, as I started the discussion, I suggested I was much more impressed by the decision that was made a couple of years ago when we said that when the time comes that we don't need the revenues, the first priority has to be to make sure everybody gets a little bit of tax relief. In those discussions on the business plan, we were talking at the time about making sure that the .5 percent surtax would be the one that would be reduced first, and then we would deal with the 8 percent high-income surtax later.

AN HON. MEMBER: Everybody is getting some.

DR. NICOL: The member across the way says everybody is going to get a tax cut. Yes, that's true, Mr. Speaker, in the context of Bill 18 and Bill 19 put together. In the context of what we're talking about tonight in Bill 19, only the persons who are paying into the 8 percent surtax are going to get a tax cut. So not everybody is getting a tax cut out of the process of this bill. Only the people who are being asked to contribute to our general revenue through the imposition of the 8 percent high-income surtax are affected by this piece of legislation. If we put it with Bill 18, then we're talking about a whole different scenario.

I think this is one of the things I started my discussion with in the sense that when we're talking about the legislative responsibilities we have in this House, we've got to make sure that when we're talking about one piece of legislation, we're not trying to confuse Albertans by superimposing on top of it something else. If the government wanted these two handled together, they should have introduced them as one piece of legislation and dealt with an overall review of our taxation. It would have been just as easy to put Bill 19's conditions into Bill 18 and make it retroactive, just like they have it here in this piece of legislation. Then we could deal with this as a package, not as individual pieces of legislation.

We have to look at it from that perspective when we start talking about: how is it we want to present our information to Albertans? I think if we're going to talk only about Bill 19 – and that's what we're doing tonight – we have to talk about it in the context of: what is the impact of this piece of legislation in the context of the criteria of fairness and equity and adequate revenue generation for Albertans so that we can provide as their legislators the services Albertans need?

Now, Mr. Speaker, just in conclusion, I think I want to reiterate some of the things we said at the start. It's our responsibility as legislators to make sure that we consult with Albertans about the kind of services we are going to provide on their behalf, whether it's health care, whether it's education, whether it's infrastructure, whether it's social programs, whether it's any kind of program they want. We then have to figure out the most effective way to provide that, effective being quality of service at as reasonable and cost-effective means as possible. Then what we have to do is go back and say: all right; now, what is the appropriate way to collect the dollars that are needed to fund that?

If we're going to say that the reason we want to go and look at implementing Bill 19 before we do Bill 18 – which is effectively what we're doing by having this one effective in the 2000 tax year and Bill 18 effective for the 2001 tax year – is because we're saying that this has to be our priority, that we're choosing to make sure that the people with incomes over $46,000 get the tax break before all Albertans do, then this is the kind of legislation we want to support. But if we feel that all Albertans should have gotten the tax break at the same time, then what we should be doing is looking at potential modifications to Bill 18 so we can deal with an appropriate and fair level of taxation for all Albertans in a way that they contribute to the services provided in a way that's socially fair, and then we should drop this bill.

Mr. Speaker, on that basis I think I've kind of covered the issues I wanted to talk about. I think I've clarified my point in the sense that because this only deals with a tax break for what are defined by the bill to be high-income Albertans, then I don't think it's the kind of decision we want to make on behalf of Albertans at this point in our adjustment of fiscal responsibility and accountability to those citizens. So I would like to say that I don't plan to support this bill.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to see you in the chair. I know this is of particular interest to you.

There's been some confusion put about – and I would be tempted to say it might be malicious misinformation spread by the government – that the Alberta Liberal opposition is opposed to tax cuts. One of the things the government has been saying is that we're opposed to tax cuts because we have been debating with some vigour both the bill before us, Bill 19, and Bill 18, even to the extent that the Premier seems to be unaware of his own promises made in previous budget documents, particularly Budget 1996, where the government made it very clear that they were going to remove both of the so-called deficit elimination taxes.

Now, since this government has been in power, there has been $9.5 billion, more or less, accumulated in surpluses. [interjection] Absolutely, Minister of Gaming, you should applaud for that. So we've got this $9.5 billion of accumulated surpluses, if you total it up at the end of every year, yet the government has continued to collect these so-called deficit elimination taxes for all these years. They keep on reaching into taxpayers' pockets and pulling out one loonie at a time and justify it by calling it a deficit elimination tax, and on the other hand they've been chalking up these huge surpluses.

So if there is any political party represented in this Legislative Assembly that seems to be opposed to tax cuts, it would have to be the political party that forms the government, Mr. Speaker, because while they have been talking a lot about tax cuts, all they've been doing is talking and not delivering. Meanwhile, it's been the Official Opposition that's been saying since the 1993 election: let's get serious about meaningful and sustainable and fair tax reform, delivering tax cuts across the board, and making sure we get value for every tax dollar that's spent. I remember the late Laurence Decore standing and talking about value-for-money audits, a concept this government still will not endorse. Clearly, just to set the record straight, there is in fact a group of MLAs in this Assembly who are opposed to meaningful tax cuts, and they all belong to the governing caucus.

So, Mr. Speaker, why is it that we are questioning Bill 19? Well, we're questioning Bill 19 because it is again an example of how this government picks winners and losers within the tax system. It again is an example of the government playing favourites with taxpayers' money. In 1996 in the budget document the government said that we're going to make sure we provide tax relief to low-income and middle-income Albertans first. They pledged to remove the deficit elimination tax that's paid by over one and a half million taxpayers first, but when it actually comes to crunch time, what does the government do? They remove the deficit elimination tax that caters to only those at the higher income level. They go to eliminate the tax which, when you compound it with the tax cut to the high-income earners that would be found in Bill 18, represents an embarrassing windfall for the wealthy at the expense of the middle-income earners.

Mr. Speaker, that is why we are questioning Bill 19. It's not because we are opposed to tax cuts. It is because we're opposed to this government picking favourites. We think that while the government may be comfortable in the oak-paneled inner sanctum of the corporate elite of this province and promising favours and tax relief to the men and women who populate those corridors, the Liberal opposition would like to make sure that tax relief is, first and foremost, fundamentally fair. This of course means that we would provide tax relief to the whole spectrum of Alberta taxpayers, not just those at the very top end, and we wouldn't try any game of smoke and mirrors by talking about those who pay hardly any tax, if any at all, on the low end. What we would be doing is guaranteeing that all the taxpayers right across the spectrum receive fair and sustainable tax relief. It's very clear that that is what the difficulty is with Bill 19.

Now, maybe the government would like to accept some helpful suggestions. Maybe they would like to go back to keeping their 1996 pledge, and maybe they want to remove that other deficit elimination tax first. Maybe they will go back to their pledge and they will provide meaningful and sustainable tax relief to low-income and middle-income Albertans first. You know, if they want some suggestions, maybe when this bill gets into committee, we can provide them with those suggestions. Of course, we would do that in a way that is linked to Bill 18, because these are sisters. These bills are joined at the hip, certainly not at the head. Because these bills are joined at the hip, you have to read them together to understand the implications for the distribution of effects on both the economy of Alberta and the tax filers in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I know that you've read a recent academic paper on the distributive effects of various forms of progressive income tax systems, so I think you'll agree with me that the major conclusion in that paper was that you cannot take a single simple measure and then extrapolate from that its impact across the board. You have to look at the interaction effect of all these measures, particularly if you're not dealing with any particular tax regime that would be revenue neutral. I know you derive that from your reading of the paper.

So I would argue that what we are faced with is a government that kind of got caught in a squeeze. When the hardworking men and women in Alberta Treasury were given the task of finding some solutions to the tax problem the government found itself in, they came up with the flat tax, probably under direct instruction from political masters. They then came up with a plan that they thought they could afford. The only reasonable explanation I can find is that the government felt it couldn't afford to follow through on its commitment to remove the deficit elimination tax for the one and a half million Alberta tax filers, where the government collects over $340 million. They only thought they could afford to remove the high-income surtax, which affects less than 400,000 Albertans, because it only generates about $140 million or $145 million worth of tax revenue.

They probably just made a cold, calculated decision that because we're not confident in our own budget projections and because we don't want to get boxed in by what Ottawa might do and because we might want to have a tax goodie to throw out at the last minute on the eve of another election, I think we'll just forget about our commitment and just flip it around and reduce the cheaper tax first. That's a pretty cynical policy for the government to adopt, Mr. Speaker, and that's another reason why I find it very difficult to support the government in this particular initiative.

Mr. Speaker, another point I want to raise – and to me it gives evidence of the fact that the government is finding it very, very difficult to defend their tax policy – is that we had, to my memory, the unprecedented experience of the government using a time allocation device, a guillotine on debate, after only two speakers from the Official Opposition. You had the spectacle of the Government House Leader rising last night at around 11 o'clock and saying that the government is impatient with debate, that we don't want to hear anything about our tax plan, that we don't want to hear how to make it better, so we're going to move that the motion not be further adjourned. I think this is other evidence of how defensive the government is and what shaky ground they're on when it comes to their tax policy.

Clearly, they are not equal to the task of defending their own initiative, and I guess I have to give them credit for that. At least they've recognized it for what it is, a house of cards. Of course, rather than defend it, they want to try to run away from it. Well, as the Official Opposition, part of our job is to make the government accountable for its actions and for its policies, so we will be here to ensure that we do make them accountable. We will continue the debate on these ill-conceived tax bills until the government listens. Of course, there are many Albertans out there who say, "Well, the government is simply too arrogant to listen," and the evidence they point to, of course, is what's just happened with Bill 11.

I have talked to dozens and dozens of constituents just over the last couple of days about tax policy, and they all say: well, wouldn't it just be a waste of effort and energy to try to get a positive message into the head of, between the ears of this government? I mean, look at how they just were dismissive about all the debate and discussion and evidence on Bill 11. All they did was ridiculed, called names, pointed fingers, had tantrums. They did everything but act like a responsive and caring, compassionate government. So what makes you think, they said to me, that they would listen to you or to us when it comes to tax policy? I said: well, you know, I am a Liberal, so that means I'm forever optimistic. I said that I will carry their message into this Assembly and deliver that message. I will stand with my colleagues to keep delivering that message, with the slim hope that it will begin to get through, that it will sink in.

Even though with their smugness and their arrogance the government may look like they're resisting the message, I know that they listen. I know that when they go back to their offices and reflect on the debate and read the Hansard and listen to their bureaucrats, those messages get in. They kind of slump their shoulders and hang their heads and say: "Yeah, I know, but what can we do about it? We've already invested a whole bunch of political capital going in this direction, so wouldn't we just look foolish, like we were losing face?" Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you right now that no member of the Official Opposition will lord it over them at all. We won't hold it over their heads. We won't rub their faces in it if they back down. We will be gracious. We will accept their admission that they were incorrect and their willingness to change course as a sign of strength, not as a sign of weakness. That's, again, why we will continue to carry the debate on this tax policy.

Mr. Speaker, what we have with Bill 19 is a bill that could be very good. It could have been a bill that this government brought forward and said: "We're going to stop picking your pockets, taxpayers. We've eliminated that deficit. We no longer need the deficit elimination taxes, and we're going to get rid of them posthaste. We're going to get rid of them both, we're going to get rid of them now, and we're going to say that we're sorry we've been wrongfully collecting them for these past few years." Instead, what they did was decide to cater to very few at the expense of very many, and that is something a Liberal will never support.

So I would ask the government to take a good, long look at their policy, to consider that there are ways to fix this. They can get out of it, and the way to get out of it is to provide the broad-based tax relief they've been promising but not delivering. They can start doing that.

In fact, I won't even rush to introduce an amendment. I will wait in committee for the government, for the Acting Provincial Treasurer – I know it's only a part-time job for him – to stand in this Assembly and bring in the amendment himself. Mr. Speaker, we won't even try to take credit. We'll just quietly nod and get on with the debate. That would be a way of this government providing some evidence that they are willing to keep their word when it comes to their tax pledges.

Bill 19 is one of those bills that the government would love to sell out there as the Official Opposition being opposed to because we're opposed to tax cuts. Nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. Any member who says that is telling an untruth. It's as clear as that. I know that outside the Assembly I could say that they were lying; inside the Assembly I can't. But it's very clear that the Official Opposition is not opposed to tax cuts. What we are in favour of are fair and sustainable tax cuts as part of a comprehensive plan.

We've talked about what the elements of that comprehensive plan would be, and it starts with fairness to all taxpayers and starts with eliminating both of these deficit elimination taxes. Then we can get on to talking about how to maintain progressivity in an income tax system that is delinked and indexed and fair and sustainable, Mr. Speaker. Then we can get on with the corporate tax review, we can get on with the user fee review, and we can provide some real relief to Albertans because, after all, they deserve it.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will keep my comments quite brief. I was a little surprised with the comments from Edmonton-Centre and Lethbridge-East as to concerns over the reduction of taxes for Albertans. The concept of reducing taxes has been one that this government has had in place since 1993. We made that commitment as a result of a fiscal plan that we took to the people. We said that once we start to eliminate the deficit and pay off our debt, we would like to see taxes go only in one direction, and that is down. We've kept that promise. We've been careful, because we recognized that there were core programs that governments were responsible for. We've changed our government, restructured it and remodeled it to deliver what we thought were the core programs of government.

I would refer hon. members to the budget document that was passed in this Legislature, in particular to page 11 of the fiscal plan, which clearly shows, Mr. Speaker, that in the last six years by sticking to a fiscal plan – albeit one that has been difficult for all Albertans, and all Albertans had to commit to the plan – we were able to pay off enough debt to free up from our debt servicing costs over $700 million on an annual basis. Part of that fiscal plan we laid out was that as we paid off the debt, the interest expense that was saved from paying down debt would go back into Albertans' hands. We've kept that commitment. I would refer hon. members to the previous page, where we talked about what was called net debt and how it was important to pay that off quickly and get it out of the way, along with clearing off the deficit.

It gave me some concern, Mr. Speaker, to hear the Member for Edmonton-Glenora talk about surpluses. I've said this in this House many times: you cannot have a surplus when you have a debt. You can have additional operating revenues that come in, but you can't have surplus when you have debt. That is a misnomer that is quite often used and mixed. So I would ask . . . [interjections] If you would quit interrupting, you might learn something.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, debate is through the chair, not across the aisle.

Hon. Minister.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to also refer the hon. member to another section in the budget document, again on page 38, that clearly shows how by sticking to this fiscal plan, our debt servicing costs have been able to be decreased over a number of years. It's critically important that we pay attention to that line to see the decrease in that debt servicing cost, because that frees up those dollars that would be going into an almost unconscionable place for a government, into debt servicing.

There is a diagram in the budget document that is also very, very important for all members to use, and I hope you distribute it to your constituents, because I think it's a picture that is easily read and viewed by anyone which clearly shows that the fourth largest expenditure of the government is interest expense on debt. That's pretty frightening when you think of the core responsibilities of government, to think that we had got into a position where we were having to have our fourth largest expenditure go to debt servicing. With the fiscal plan that's been laid out, we're able to bring that down. That's critically important not only for us as we sit in this Legislature and debate but, more importantly, for the generation coming up. I'm sure a lot of you in this Assembly came in here to do a job so that our kids would not have to bear the burden of the past and would not have to carry around their neck the albatross of paying for fiscal mistakes that were made by the government which would not give them the opportunity to make clear choices and have the ability to make those choices.

Now, the first step in Bill 19 is to remove what we can afford to do this year and still keep in mind that debt repayment and lowering that interest expense we have to do in a systematic way. It's easy for the opposition to say: well, do it all. Well, great. They would. They don't have to stand up and back up a fiscal plan. We passed this fiscal plan in this House, and I have to say, Mr. Speaker, a $16 billion budget that question period after question period after question period I heard very little about. And $16 billion for a population of less than 3 million people is a lot of money. It's a lot of money.

So when we get into a position like in Bill 19, where we are actually giving the people back their money and not asking them to contribute this money any longer because we have reworked the framework of what are core programs of government and what are not, I can't imagine why anyone on either side of this House could be in a negative position on this bill. Bill 18 goes the next step. It gives the other balance of the flat tax. So why would anybody be objecting to this? Why? Because they don't read the budget documents, Mr. Speaker. They don't read the budget documents, and they don't care. If we were to go and try to do all of this in one year, then (a) we would not be able to pay down the debt requirements we have, (b) we would have to choose whether we pull it out of the programming, and (c) would we have to hold off paying it off and freeing up interest expense? Where would the money come from?

Mr. Speaker, I think it's important, and I'm just a little disappointed, quite frankly, in the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, who has been one of the finance critics, to not pick up on the fact that this fiscal plan has been clearly laid out step by step. Personally, and speaking for any MLA in here, I'd like to see it all gone at once, all of the tax burden that's been put on, all of the tax burden that was put on, some of it in 1986 and '87, to attack the deficit which, quite frankly, kept growing. This fiscal plan that our government has put in place is to deal with that. It is to deal with that, and it is to deal with it always keeping in mind the core programs that government has to service.

Those things such as health and education and social programs have to be dealt with. They can't be left aside, so you can't do it all in one year. You can't take the chance. Remember always that when we're dealing with our budget, we have to come up with quarterly reports. We have to make sure that we have the dollars to service those core programs throughout the year. That's why we do quarterly reviews. I think, quite frankly, that this is really one part of the tax reduction.

The second part comes in Bill 18. You have the 8 percent coming off here, the .5 percent coming off in Bill 18 under section 4, so if hon. members want to deal with them at the same time, that's fine. But clearly I think it's a misnomer to say that we're not dealing with getting rid of the flat tax and the surtax that was put in place for deficit elimination, because in fact we are. It may be in two different bills and it may be a year apart, but we're doing it according to the fiscal plans that we were able to lay out, the fiscal plans that see the interest expense that we're paying coming down and being freed up to provide extra program spending plus reductions in taxes.

It's not a difficult thing to deal with. It's quite straightforward, so I really wish they would focus on that. Actually, when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora says that we're spreading rumors that the Liberals don't like tax reductions, well, quite frankly, to fight against this bill, that's the case. That is the case. If you can't take the heat, then support the bill, get onside with it, and get involved in this.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, sir. [interjections] Be gentlemanly. In reply to the member opposite, it was a stunning dissertation of why it wasn't good to be Liberal. Look. Here it is. She went on endlessly about . . . [interjection] Speaking through you, sir. Yes, of course.

She went on endlessly about how this wonderful government did all this budgeting. It was this government in 1996 – this government, not previous governments but this government – that said: we will eliminate this flat tax of half a percent. That was then. This is now. Now they've put it off for another couple of years. This particular elimination eliminates a tax on 1.5 million Albertans. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I know the night is young, but the sound is not beautiful when we have a whole bunch of people who are trying to enter into the debate at the same time. We're trying to orchestrate this so that only one hon. member speaks at a time. So those other people who are so eager to get into the debate, please send me your names and I'll put you down on the list, but right now we have Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, sir. I must compliment the Minister of Government Services, though, because she did exactly as you wished, sir. She did stand in her place and enter debate, unlike many of the others opposite that just grumble and make all kinds of noise and do not add to the debate one iota.

DR. TAYLOR: You're standing up, and you're not adding to the debate.

MR. WHITE: I can't let that go by at all, sir. To call a member standing in place not adding to debate when that member hasn't got off his cheeks for years . . . He's sitting down there playing . . . He's the only guy who has to have extra trousers on the butt because he wears them out.

Sir, I will continue in my debate. [interjections] Yes, of course. He's making noises from the bottom of his seat. Yes. However, sir, I shall continue on with lively debate on the elimination of the flat tax.

MR. WHITE: Yes, this member supports the elimination of the flat tax. The member supported the elimination of the flat tax back in '96, because the reason for the imposition of the tax was clear. It was to reduce the deficit. There was no deficit in '96, and now what do they want to do? They want . . . [interjections]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, you're obviously just really stirring up quite a few people on this side as well as on your own side. I wonder if we could just cool it, hon. Minister of Government Services, Edmonton-Glenora, and others, please.

Edmonton-Calder, through the chair.

MR. WHITE: Through the chair, sir. I shall do my best. I seem to be stirring a lot of concern over there, but my colleague to the right here is taking it all in and dutifully recording it on his electronic device here, you see. He's such a good fellow. He'll come back and retort with equal fervour in a while, I'm sure.

But the elimination of this was managed and stage-managed, and it really does not look good on this government when you have the amount of money that's rolling in in revenue resources and you continue to punish Albertans with this flat tax right from the lowest of the low, those that do not pay tax today, to the highest. This flat tax covers all bases and should have been eliminated the day this government went into a surplus position after a great deal of the debt had been worked down.

MR. BONNER: Lance, it's a surtax, not a flat tax.

MR. WHITE: Oh, it's a flat tax. It's clearly a .5 flat tax.

This .5 percent flat tax should be eliminated and should be eliminated first. The surtax is on those wealthy of us that can afford these things. Now, elimination of that tax because of the way it's imposed is a reasonable position too, but as my colleague for Edmonton-Glenora was pointing out, you cannot have an elimination of one tax. You can't examine one part of an income tax act without examining the whole act, because the effect on the taxpayer is compounded by these two acts, and you can't read them in isolation. The difficulty with eliminating the surtax first is that it gives the largesse of the province of Alberta to all of those that, in this member's view, do not need it first. There are a great many of others that need it first, and the elimination of the .5 flat tax would be the right thing to do and the right thing to do first.

Now, managing an economy is not an easy task. This member certainly would agree with that. It does take a certain amount of foresight, shall we say, in order to understand that income is not flat in this province. Our income varies as the wind. The price of conventional crude oil is back up to pretty close to $30 U.S. today. How can one predict those kinds of increases? There is a difficulty in dealing with Bills 18 and 19 together in that you cannot really, truly plan for what could happen eight or 10 years down the road.

I would think that a government should be looking at the potential of a major loss of this oil revenue and plan for that day such that it wouldn't be quite so easily – if you're dealing with the elimination of a surtax and the imposition of a flat tax, you're putting a major burden on the lower and middle-income, generators of most of the tax revenue in this province. To deal with them in isolation is folly. If you do have a downturn, where is the problem going to occur? You're not going to be able to instantly revert to a proper progressive tax, which is a reasonable position, but certainly you should be able to put these elements together in order to deal with them at one time.

The elimination of this tax is a reasonable position but not in isolation, and this member would like to see it held over until such time as the benefits have reached all. The elements of this bill are relatively simple. Unfortunately, they should all be combined in one proper examination of the entire taxation. This member believes that municipal taxation is woefully overcharged to this point, and it would be much, much better to do that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words about Bill 19, the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000. I looked back at some of the comments made by the Provincial Treasurer in Budget 2000, New Century: Bold Plans. This was presented in the Assembly on February 24. In that document the Provincial Treasurer established a number of principles that he thought should govern tax changes in the province. I think some of the principles that he enunciated at that time were sound principles, and I think it's disappointing that the government has chosen not to follow the principles the Provincial Treasurer set out at that time.

One of the very first things the Treasurer said in speaking about taxes was: "Albertans insisted that a new tax plan must be sensitive to the needs of low-income Albertans, those who were struggling to get their start in the world." I think that's the disappointment with Bill 19. It ignores those very Albertans that the Provincial Treasurer was talking about. The low-income Albertans are the ones that Bill 19 is choosing not to deal with, and I think that's unfortunate.

The second principle the Provincial Treasurer indicated in that speech was that "the next thing Albertans said was there had to be fairness in the system." I think fairness in the system is what all of the debate on Bill 19 and certainly the debate on Bill 18 has been around. It's been around that whole principle that the Provincial Treasurer set forth in that document, that principle of fairness. It's a characteristic identified not just by the Provincial Treasurer, but I think in almost any treatise on taxes the principle of fairness is one that's reiterated time and time again. The tax system has to be fair.

It's that unfairness in Bill 19 to low-income Albertans when the government clearly had other choices that it could have made that I think is at the root of some of the dissatisfaction with the bill and why it's being criticized so roundly. Fairness would have meant that all Albertans would have received a tax break. Bill 19 has chosen to select a group of Albertans who financially are already in a favoured position and give them some additional income, give them back some of their income. That is unfair. If you're looking at any kind of justice, the notion that all Albertans should be treated the same I think would be paramount in that kind of consideration. So it's the fairness issue that has the opposition, in particular, upset about Bill 19.

Another principle. I thought it was a curious one for the Provincial Treasurer to outline. He indicated that "Albertans said that a new taxation system had to be honest." Well, I find that a curious statement to come from a Provincial Treasurer. It never occurred to me that we would have anything else but an honest system. Yet you have to ask the question: is it the best action to remove the 8 percent surcharge on those high-income Albertans and ignore the lower income Albertans? Now, that may not be dishonest, but again I think it's certainly questionable.

A further premise that the Provincial Treasurer outlined was that "Albertans also reflected what's in their nature when telling us that a tax system needs to be not only honest, but also transparent, and understandable." That's a good premise on which to build tax reform. I think it's going to be abundantly apparent from what is before us that one group of Albertans is being favoured over another. Again, it seems to contradict the kinds of principles that the Provincial Treasurer set forth.

I want to spend a few minutes, if I might, Mr. Speaker, looking at some of the reasoning behind the tax cuts. One of the things that has always disturbed me about the tax cut rhetoric is that it's always taken out of context of what the tax system is attempting to do. It was brought home to me in the health care debate when my constituents, when surveyed and asked if they would rather have a tax cut or have the health care system improved, chose the health care system by a vast majority. I think that's been consistent in surveys taken across the province. When asked what the government should do and to rank support for education, support for health care, or introduction of a tax cut, Albertans have chosen to have more investment in services.

I've always been curious. It seemed to me that the government was on this tax route regardless of what was happening in the province and that this is what was going to occur. I looked at the reasons given for the cuts before us, and none of the reasons seem to talk about our common goals as citizens in terms of looking after each other, our common goals as citizens in terms of creating the kind of community that would be a rich community in which our children would be raised. Instead, I heard most of the arguments being economic arguments. One, I thought, had been dismissed years ago, the Thatcher/Reagan theory of trickle-down economics. I thought it had been discredited. Lo and behold, it's used as part of the rhetoric to support Bill 19 and Bill 18. It's really quite astounding, I find, Mr. Speaker, that that would be the reason put forth.

Now, there were others. Some of the others were that it would attract more people to the province – well, attracting others to the province I guess is a good goal – and that it would stop the brain drain. Really, again I find that an argument that seems so baseless. I look at the opportunities for the graduate students that I worked with at the University of Alberta, and when they were seeking positions upon graduation, they looked for communities, first of all, where there was a strong academic climate, universities and colleges and institutes with strong research bases. They looked for communities where there were good schools for their children and their families, and they looked to communities where there was health care. They looked to communities where there were amenities, where the cultural climate was one that was supported through the arts. They looked for communities where there were recreational opportunities for themselves and their families.

AN HON. MEMBER: Environmental concerns.

DR. MASSEY: Yes, they looked for communities that were environmentally attractive and communities that were safe.

Certainly I think taxes may have entered into their decision, but I think it would have been ranked very low. That action of my graduate students was confirmed by a former governor of Utah a number of years ago when he spoke in this city and indicated that what they had used to attract people to that state had been the cultural amenities, the kind of educational facilities that they had there. Those were the factors in people relocating. So I find the brain drain arguments rather spurious.

Some of the reasons behind the action the government has taken don't seem to make sense. Bill 19 is predicated on the notion, again, that tax reform can take place in a piecemeal, tinkering fashion rather than a comprehensive look. I think the Member for Lethbridge-East indicated that at least bills 18 and 19 should have been combined in one bill if that was the intent. The premise seems to be that wealthy Albertans are the most deserving of an immediate tax break. It seems that this is one of those bills that ends up, again, picking winners and losers in the province, and the losers are those middle-income taxpayers.

I think that's unfortunate, because this was a great opportunity, Mr. Speaker, for tax reform in this province to be done from the ground up and done right, and the government finds itself in a position where that kind of planning and that kind of follow-up legislation would have been possible. It was an opportunity to look at the entire tax system and make sure that the entire system, because we're only dealing with one portion of the taxes that Albertans are required to pay, was fair, that the proposals that were put forward were equitable, that Albertans could rest assured that they were all being treated the same by their government. Again, one of the arguments – and I agree – was an opportunity to simplify, to make easy the tax system, and that is an opportunity lost, I think, Mr. Speaker, with the introduction of bills 19 and 18.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude and look forward to the comments of other members. The notion, again, of not collecting from Albertans more than is required for the kinds of services we want to provide I think is a sane notion and it's one that all Albertans would support and certainly one that the opposition would support.

Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this evening to talk to Bill 19, the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act.

MR. DICKSON: It's a pleasure to listen to you.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you for those kind words.

One of the things that I find most interesting in listening to the discussions that we've had here tonight and in fact on other nights as well when Bill 19 was dealt with and its companion bill, Bill 18, is the attempt by the government to say that Official Opposition members are against the tax cut, even though we are very clearly on the record as saying that it would be foolhardy for us to be against a tax cut. But it would be just as foolhardy for us to give a rubber stamp to a tax cut that is unfair, and in fact that is what we're seeing in both Bill 18 and Bill 19.

I listened with interest to the Minister of Government Services to try and understand what her logic was with regards to the argument that there is no surplus if we have a debt. I guess the converse of that, then, is that there is no debt, and therefore there is a surplus. Yet when I look at the same document that she had referred to, which was Budget 2000: New Century, Bold Plans – this is an official government of Alberta document, so there is no need to table it. On pages 10 and 11 it very clearly says, "Repaying debt and investing in the future." It says, "Net debt paid off in 1999" and that paying off the remaining debt is going to occur by the year 2025. So in fact, hon. members, we do have, in accordance with the government's own plan, an "accumulated debt retirement schedule" that will take us to the next 25 years.

It's also my understanding that because of the surplus – and perhaps the government has another word for it; perhaps it's the interest savings on the debt servicing costs; perhaps that's what they would prefer to call it – there has been additional moneys provided for health and education and some of the other services. The reality is that a government in the collection of taxes from its taxpayers then makes a decision. It makes a decision as to how much to collect. It makes a decision as to how to collect, and it also then makes a decision as to what to spend if in fact they collect too much. So the decision that this government has made is to therefore slow down the debt repayment schedule in order to provide a tax break, and they have in fact reversed a stand that they took in 1987, which was the 8 percent provincial surtax which was introduced by this government.

I know we've heard lots of stories about: that was then, and this is now. Well then the government of the time appeared to believe that in fact it was the higher income earners that should bear the burden of helping to eliminate the deficit. Now what the government appears to believe is that the elimination of that – it's a higher priority to provide a tax break to the higher income earner while all those other people who helped to eliminate the deficit through cutbacks, through rollbacks, through layoffs now will not get a tax cut. That, to my mind, is unfair.

It is unfair to the public servants in this province. It is unfair to all of those individuals in this province who are lower wage earners, is unfair to the individuals in this province who've had to for many years live with a minimum wage that was below the minimum wage of any province in this country. It is unfair to those individuals . . .

MR. SMITH: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

MR. SMITH: Thank you very much. Under 23(h),(i), and (j), imputes false motives. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the minimum wage at the time that the member refers to was not the lowest in Canada on a net basis, and at no time did anybody in Alberta pay tax on earning the minimum wage, like they did in other Liberal government provinces.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, I don't think that's a point of order because I did not hear any motives being attributed to any particular member. I think the hon. minister has clarified something, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark can now continue.

Thank you.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you very much. In fact, at $5 an hour I believe we were the lowest per hour wage in the country.

MR. SMITH: Not after tax. You know that.

MS LEIBOVICI: I said the minimum wage per hour, and that was at $5.

AN HON. MEMBER: After tax.

MS LEIBOVICI: I never said after tax. That's what you said, and if in fact the hon. minister wishes to engage in debate . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: That's exactly what happens when debate happens across the aisle, so please speak through the chair. Thank you.

MS LEIBOVICI: Absolutely. Thank you, and I will look forward to the rationalization by the minister, especially about the individual who was at that $5 an hour minimum wage, part-time, no benefits and how it would make a whole lot of difference to him whether that $5 was before tax or after tax. The actual fact was that at $5 an hour any of those individuals had a hard time making ends meet.

So the reality is that we are looking at a government that has changed its philosophy, where it recognized that those who are at the higher income tax brackets could in fact undertake the burden, if we want to call it that, of an 8 percent surtax a lot easier than those who were at the lower tax brackets.

Now, the question, then, is: why has the government chosen to eliminate the 8 percent provincial surtax first? The question is: who benefits from the elimination of the 8 percent surtax? The issue, as well, is why in fact should lower income earners have to wait a year for a tax break?

There are judgments that are made on a decision such as that. It is the government that decides the policy. It is the government that decides the impact of its legislation and should know what the impact of its legislation is. It's the government that decides the issue of fairness and equity in the structure of a new tax policy, which is what we are seeing put before us in both Bill 19 and Bill 18.

So the government has made some clear choices in terms of when they're cutting taxes and who will benefit initially from those tax cuts. You almost wonder cynically if this government has been looking at an election later on this year. They might have looked at the voter turnout and made a determination who to provide the tax break to based on who generally comes out to vote and decided at that point who would benefit from a tax break.

Now, one of the interesting things, as well, that we've heard over and over again is that the surtax will in fact benefit income earners over $46,450, I believe it is, but as we indicated, it benefits unequally, because the more you earn, the more you have to have the surtax eliminated from.

Now, one of the interesting things is that high-income earners can shelter their dollars a whole lot easier than middle to lower income earners. There are numerous ways that high-income earners can shelter their dollars, so in fact they may not be taxed on the actual amount they earn. So that's a very interesting distinction to make, to show how, in fact, it becomes even more unfair.

We do know that when the government originally came forward with its tax plan in '96, the timetable was to eliminate the .5 percent flat tax rate by January 1, 1999, before the 8 percent surtax, which was to be eliminated by January 1, 2001. In the words of Budget '96: Reinvestment, "The tax plan proposes to reduce the tax burden for all Albertans starting with low to middle income working families." So that was the original intent of the government.

Somehow between 1996 and the year 2000 what we are in fact seeing is a shift away from that, a shift towards more of a seat-of-the-pants approach to tax policy-making. Even as late as 1999 what the Premier had said is: what we want to do is make sure that those who can least afford to pay tax get the first break. So the question is: why do those individuals who are below the $46,000 mark or just marginally above – let's say between the $46,000 mark and the $60,000 mark – not get the same kinds of benefits as someone who's earning $100,000?

Again, as we had in the Bill 11 debate, as we've had in a lot of debates in this Legislative Assembly over the last little while, the biggest question that never gets answered is: who benefits and why? Why are these decisions being made? Who has the ear of government? Where are the studies and the evidence that say that this is the way to go, that this in fact will promote economic growth, that this in fact will bring more prosperity to the province? Where is that evidence? Other than some confusing statements by the Minister of Government Services and interjections by the Minister of Gaming to try and substantiate a position, there is no evidence.

Now, when we look at the benefits question in dealing with tax structure, it's very easy to plug in the figures and figure out who benefits and who does not benefit. As the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford indicated, when you look at an individual who earns $100,000 a year in taxable income, what that individual will save per year from the elimination of the 8 percent surtax is $495. However, when you look at a single senior in Calgary who has $30,000 in income, that individual will save a big, fat doughnut hole; in other words, zero. The senior in Calgary who has $30,000 in income gets zero from this plan this year. A senior couple in Edmonton who has income of $55,000 will receive $48 for the year. That's 13 cents per day from the elimination of this surtax.

I know the Acting Provincial Treasurer is very fond of throwing out figures of how in fact people will be saving lots of money from their dollars. I for one support the fact that individuals will never say no to having more dollars in their pocket. In fact, I for one would like it put on the record that I'm very upset about the way our gas prices have increased in the last week just to take advantage of the long weekend. I think that that is wrong, and if this government were sincerely interested in looking at out-of-pocket costs to Albertans, one of the ways they would do that is to look at what is happening with gasoline prices in this province right now just to take advantage of the long weekend.

Now, if we look at the elimination of the surtax again and what will occur and who benefits, let's look at Calgary teachers. You have a family of two, two Calgary teachers. Most people in this room would think: ah, they're in the high-income earning brackets. Well, let's say that each teacher earns about $40,000 a year, even $45,000 a year. Do you know how much they will get from the elimination of the surtax? You got it. A big, fat doughnut hole again. Zero. They will get zero.

So do we believe that all Albertans deserve a tax cut? Sure. We also know that there will be trade-offs as a result of all Albertans receiving a tax cut, but we also believe that there needs to be fairness and equity in the tax policy, and we need to stop picking and choosing and dividing Albertans in this province. We have seen that for the last seven years. We continue to see it entrenched now in policy and in structural policy that deals with issues like taxes. What is happening is that the systems are changing so that there are systemic changes that will be very, very hard to reverse. We're seeing that in health. We're seeing it in education. We're seeing it in the tax structure. We've seen it in social services.

These are systemic changes that have long-term effects on Albertans, and by those systemic changes what is happening is that some people will have advantages and some will not. The winners and losers in this province will become very clear, and they're becoming clearer daily. An example in Calgary – we brought it up in question period – are the homeless who had set up a shantytown, something that would have been unheard of seven years ago. A shantytown in Alberta would have been unheard of. Having individuals eating dogs and cats in this province would have been unheard of seven years ago, and now it seems to be accepted. If that's not a systemic change in our social structures, I don't know what is. That is what has happened as a result of the policies of this government over the last seven years.

Here we're being asked, in a sense blackmailed, by being told: well, the Official Opposition doesn't believe in a tax cut. Well, that's not true. What is and should be on the record is that we believe in fairness and equity in the tax structures, that we don't believe in picking and choosing, and that if there is going to be a tax cut for individuals, it should be across the board and it should be for everyone this year. If you can't do it for everyone this year, then you might have to wait. But the reality is: why should you exclude individuals below the $46,000 mark? That includes a lot of individuals in this province.

Actually, I can give you the actual figure of how many people will be excluded and how many will benefit from the 8 percent surtax. I think it's somewhere around 395,000 Albertans – I'm just finding it here. Three hundred and ninety thousand Alberta taxpayers will benefit as a result of eliminating the 8 percent surtax. Had the government gone along with their original proposal of eliminating the .5 percent flat tax rate, it would have applied to 1,562,000 Albertans. That's a whole lot of difference, Mr. Speaker.

The question is: why is that not being eliminated this year? If in fact, as I indicated, there are trade-offs to occur, if in fact a trade-off is that the government cannot afford the tax break this year, because that's what the Minister of Government Services seems to be indicating, then perhaps they should not have accelerated their tax program – the promise had not been for this year; it had been for next year – and not provided the tax cut. That perhaps just provides fuel to my argument that this tax cut is a cynical tax cut to set up for an election this fall, and that is the reason we're seeing the 8 percent surtax elimination as opposed to a fair tax cut that would be equitable across all sectors so that in fact you could do it.

I am very clear in the position that the Official Opposition has, which says that we support the idea of a tax cut but that it needs to be fair, it needs to be equitable, and, yes, it needs to be affordable. If the minister is now suggesting that it is not affordable, then perhaps the minister and the cabinet need to rethink their position on this, and it is a good thing that we as the Official Opposition have indicated that this bill could potentially be a problem.

With those words I thank you very much for the opportunity of being able to explain what the position is.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise this evening to speak to Bill 19, the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000. I do look forward to this opportunity to make a few comments on this particular bill, particularly in light of all the debate that has occurred here this evening. I've enjoyed many, many of the comments that have been made, but there is no doubt that this is a companion bill to Bill 18.

It seems to me that what this bill does in so many ways is reflect the corporate agenda of this particular province. When we look at taxes, we've always thought that taxes were levied on those who had the ability to pay. Certainly those people in the lower income brackets do not have that ability to pay. When we are introducing a bill into this Assembly, why are those people that don't have the ability to pay the last ones to receive benefits from this particular bill?

The words that we've heard constantly this evening as we've debated this bill are those principles of fairness and equity. These are principles that should favour all Albertans when we are looking at tax breaks, not those who are in the upper 25 percent.

As was pointed out earlier, as well, Mr. Speaker, we are the custodians in this particular place of taxpayer dollars. We are the ones that were given the responsibility of how to spend those dollars. We were the ones, those members who were in this House, that were not good custodians of those dollars, and that deficit and debt were run up and up and up. When we look at those things, then certainly the people that paid the biggest price were those lower income earners. What we hope will happen now that we are in a favourable financial situation is that we will spend their money wisely. Those people did pay a price. All Albertans paid a price to get our financial business in order. We do have to look at what is happening.

Now, then, when we look at the people that are going to be hit hardest again by not receiving a tax break, these are the people who see that today because of inflation the prime rate has risen. As of today they are paying half of a percent higher on any loans they have.

Earlier this year when we had the great debate on Bill 11, many Albertans indicated in polls that they would rather see money go into providing proper publicly funded health care for all Albertans than have a tax break. Again, this is one of those areas, Mr. Speaker, where all Albertans do benefit.

As well, as was just mentioned by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, again we have this constant problem where we have holiday weekends coming up throughout the year and we can be guaranteed of a jump in the price of gasoline. Now, this isn't the only jump in the price of gasoline. It wasn't too many months ago when we were paying 45 cents a litre for gasoline. Certainly the jump in prices at the pumps impacts those people in the lower income brackets.

I look forward, Mr. Speaker, to what is going to happen this summer, when we have deregulation in the power industry. Every indication is that those prices are going to rise too. Therefore, the expenses for all Albertans are again going to increase, but they are going to impact those lower wage income earners more than they will those at the other end.

When we do look as well, Mr. Speaker, at who in this rich province of ours has the greatest ability to use the resources that we do have in this province, it certainly is those at the upper end. They are the ones that make the financial gains by using so many of the riches that we have here. One of the ways we can benefit those lower income people is to give them their tax break first, and we are saving that to the last.

Those are a number of the points that I want to make in my introductory remarks here.

Now, as well I think it's important at this time, when we're discussing and debating Bill 19 here, that we look at the background. How did we get to this point? To start that off, the 8 percent provincial surtax was introduced by the government in Budget '87 as a means to assist in the elimination of the provincial budget deficit. Again, that was a time, Mr. Speaker, when we had a very cyclical type of economy. We still do, but we certainly haven't had the price of Texas crude drop to $10 a barrel. I think if that were to happen today, we wouldn't be seeing Bill 18 and Bill 19. We would be in a position where we would not be looking at this type of taxation policy.

As well, when we look at the history of what happened with these two, the surtax and the flat tax, the 8 percent provincial surtax is paid by Albertans earning over $46,450 in taxable income or paying Alberta basic tax of above $3,500. Again, these are the top 25 percent of those paying taxes here in the province. In the 2000 tax year, Mr. Speaker, the 8 percent surtax would have generated $144 million in revenues for the provincial government. When we are looking at a surplus in the neighbourhood of $3 billion, it does make you ask the question: are we in fact collecting too many tax dollars?

Now, even with that surplus, we have to realize that we are servicing our debt. We are paying the interest, and we are paying down this debt. So how quickly do we want to do that? Do we equate this to a home mortgage where we shove all our resources into that home mortgage and don't think about things like food for the table, clothes, whatever else? Of course not. All of this has to be done. It has to be balanced, and it has to be balanced in time. Again, I don't think we have done the proper job here over time in handling taxpayers' money.

As well, when we look at the background here, Mr. Speaker, in March of 1999 this government announced it would eliminate the 8 percent surtax as of July 1, 2001, as a component of the move to an 11 percent single-rate system by January 1, 2002. The 8 percent surtax was to be reduced by half on July 1, 2000, and eliminated as of July 1, 2001. The revenue impact from the elimination of the 8 percent surtax was estimated at $36 million in 2000-2001, $88 million in 2001-2002, and $105 million in 2002-2003. Again, we did have the figures here, so there was no reason why we had to do this flip-flop where we had not told all Albertans, who had had a .5 percent flat tax rate placed on them, why that was not given back to them first before the 8 percent surtax was given to the top 25 percent of the income earners here in this province.

Now, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford said, I certainly don't want anyone to misconstrue that I don't support tax breaks for people in this province. I certainly do, and I certainly think that as of right now we are in a position where we can give Albertans a tax break. But I also support and strongly support the other members of my caucus, who have indicated that that tax break should go to the lower income bracket.

MR. DICKSON: Solidarity.

MR. BONNER: Definitely. Solidarity.

Now, then, we do have to question the government as to why they would choose to eliminate this 8 percent surtax, which applies to only 390,000 Albertans, ahead of the .5 flat tax rate, which applies to over a million and a half taxpayers in this province. So, again, we do want to support those Albertans who need this money most.

It is also interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that when the Alberta government originally came forward with a tax cut plan in Budget '96, the timetable was to eliminate the .5 percent flat tax rate by January 1 of 1999, before the 8 percent surtax, which was to be eliminated by January 1, 2001. Now all of this has been pushed up. Again, it has been reversed, and it is very difficult, I think, for most Albertans to understand why this would happen in this particular way.

That brings us now to the point where we find ourselves with this bill. This bill, Mr. Speaker, combines some housekeeping with this major change, and we will be giving the 8 percent surtax back to the top 25 percent before we remove the .5 percent flat tax. As was very well pointed out by the Member for Lethbridge-East, what we have to do here is balance this surplus. We are certainly gathering far too much money for what our needs are right now, and that money should be put back into the hands of Albertans. As well, our priority right now is that we would be putting these surtaxes and these flat taxes in to certainly help eliminate the deficit, and that has been done for some time. What we have done here is effectively given the greatest tax break again to those people who have the ability to pay, and that is certainly not the order in which I would have liked to have seen this legislation go.

Now, then, as well, when we go back to our constituencies – and I know that when I go back to Edmonton-Glengarry, the majority of my constituents certainly are not going to fit into that 25 percent. There are not going to be too many people in Edmonton-Glengarry that have a taxable income which is over $46,450. We will have some of course, but the majority of people don't.

We have quite a number of seniors in Edmonton-Glengarry as well, Mr. Speaker, and those are people that retired on a fixed income. They retired at a time when this government treated Alberta's seniors very well. When we look at the number of universal programs that have been wiped out in this province that were in favour of seniors, they again are people that are going to be hurt most by this particular bill. [interjection] Well, certainly, because these people are not going to get that little bit of tax break they would have gotten by removing that .5 percent flat tax first. So they are going to have to wait for their money again, and they're going to wait for these empty promises.

It reminds me very much, as well, of how the Premier promised Alberta seniors that because of changes in federal income tax, the $14 million they were going to be taxed extra would be returned to them. Now, then, we've been waiting over four years for this, and these people now have in the neighbourhood of $56 million, which had been promised to them by the Premier, yet they have not had that money returned to them. So, again, I think we're going to be looking here, Mr. Speaker, at the same situation where maybe this .5 percent flat tax is one of those that's going to be forgotten for the average Albertan as well.

I certainly did enjoy this opportunity this evening to make a few comments on this bill. I certainly would hope that as we move down the line, the government, whoever it may be, would certainly do a better job of balancing its budget, that we will sort out what our needs are and adjust the budget the way it should be, that we would be collecting those dollars that are necessary and certainly not extra dollars, because as has been pointed out by many different speakers this evening, those dollars do belong to Albertans. If we are going to be giving relief to Albertans, let's give it to those Albertans that deserve it the most. I will rephrase that, Mr. Speaker. All Albertans deserve a break, but some of them need it more than others, so let's give it to those that need it the most. I want to reiterate that all Albertans do deserve a tax break.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that what I don't like about this particular bill is that it is not a fair and equitable bill. It does not deal with those principles that favour all Albertans. It favours a few Albertans. It, again, is picking winners and losers. I would certainly have liked to have seen the .5 percent flat tax removed first, before the 8 percent surtax.

I thank you very much for this opportunity to speak to Bill 19, and I look forward to other comments of the members of this Assembly. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, it's with some trepidation that I stand to speak. I know that I'm the only thing standing between all these weary members and being able to go home. I understand that we are close to the vote, but also there's a significant responsibility that goes with that. Now, there may be government members who are going to participate in the debate, and I'm sure we'll hear some good analysis from them, but if there were not, I guess I'm going to have the chance to make the last opposition observations on it.

Now, I thought about just incorporating by reference all the excellent analysis we've heard from my colleagues tonight. I thought of doing that, but then it struck me that there are a couple of points I want to add, I guess, in terms of my own perspective and my own constituency.

I'm mindful of Edmund Burke, the Irish-born British statesman, who wrote in 1774 . . . [interjections] I'm glad we have members that are interested in what Edmund Burke had to say. He made an observation, and I'm mindful of this when we wrestle with these difficult bills 18 and 19. This is actually in sympathy to the Acting Provincial Treasurer. His comment was: "To tax and to please, no more than to love and to be wise, is not given to men." It does strike me that we should have some sympathy for the Provincial Treasurer because there will always be somebody unhappy with any tax system we devise. I recognize there may be some on the government side who say that we expect too much of government, that we impose too high or too onerous a standard when government starts tinkering with the tax system. So I'm mindful of that, but not to the point where I'd be dissuaded from offering some commentary.

In my constituency of Calgary-Buffalo, you know, Mr. Speaker, there are 19,000 constituents who live in low-income households, many of them seniors, a lot of single mothers, a lot of recent immigrants who are coping with lots of challenges in terms of language barriers and cultural barriers and all those kinds of things. I always start off, when I see a bill, wondering how it's going to impact my constituents. The reality is that Bill 19 is not going to make life significantly different or better for any of my constituents.

One thing I want to deal with straight off, though, is that there are some beneficial things in the bill, and I've not heard very much attention paid to that. Now, it may have been because we saw a form of closure brought in after only two speakers at second reading. I just want to say that as much respect as I have for the Government House Leader and his judicious use of the arsenal of powerful tools that a majority government can have – I want to make a specific reference to the Deputy Government House Leader.

There may be some in the Assembly who were not here this afternoon when not only did I apologize to the member for a comment I made – I want to say now to members who weren't here this afternoon that that minister responsible for tourism, that Deputy Government House Leader, and I want the Minister of Municipal Affairs to remember this, is the one responsible for the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act we have in this province. It is terrific. So I'm glad he's here and participating in the debate. I hope I've said enough that he'll allow me to move on now to deal with the bill at hand.

I was talking about my 19,000 low-income constituents who are not going to benefit by this bill. There are some positive things in here. I think the elimination of programs that had lapsed in 1986 to 1988, the renter's assistance credit and the stock savings plan credit, makes sense. Take those out. Cleaning up corporate references, whether it's mutual fund corporation refunds, a small business deduction. This relates to a time Alberta didn't collect its own corporate taxes. So it makes sense. That's the nature of cleaning up, and that's a positive thing to do.

Updating changes in terms of Canada Customs, some of the changes that have happened there. I mean, that's important. That's being done. Putting in the definition of adjusted earned income was necessary for the family employment tax credit, and it's good to see that in there.

I have some other concerns. Really what we deal with in this bill is the 8 percent surtax being eliminated for the benefit of 25 percent of Albertans, and those of course are those Albertans earning in excess of $46,450. As I understand it, the best estimate is that about 390,000 Albertans would benefit from the elimination of the 8 percent surtax. As I've listened, I'm not sure I've heard anybody say that shouldn't happen. I'm not sure I've heard anybody say that they are going to be voting against the bill, that they have a problem.

I heard a lot of concern around the sequencing, a lot of concern about how we establish a kind of fairness. As I look at 18 and 19, I've actually been in the process of posting to my web site my comments on the bill because you get constituents that always want more information and sometimes it's not available. [interjections] Well, the wonderful thing about the public library system is that even my low-income constituents can go down to the Castell library. They have a wonderful facility there for people who don't have their own computer to be able to access. Whether it's my web site or the government web site, they're able to do those things. [interjections]

I think the gaming minister is getting cranky, Mr. Speaker, and I think he's urging me to get to the gist of my message. I'm trying hard to do that.

MR. MAGNUS: Is there a point, Gary?

MR. DICKSON: Well, that may be in the eye of the beholder, Calgary-North Hill. You may never be satisfied that there's an adequate point to this.

I want to offer constructive commentary. We have two bills that are in front of us, 18 and 19, and they really are a package. What I'm typing on my web site, what I'm going to post to it is that I think I have a responsibility as an MLA to offer a constructive suggestion, a change in terms of what things can be done differently. My proposal is this. I think there's some benefit in looking at tax reduction, but it's clear to me that what's in front of us in the 18 and 19 package doesn't do the job. So I've got a proposal to the government members.

What if we were to say that what we'd do is take taxpayers earning up to $13,569 and, say, zero provincial income tax, recognizing, as the government has done, that you've got a pool of people at the bottom who ought to be exempted? That makes sense. My suggestion would be similar. We take those earning $13,569 or less and pay zero provincial income tax. Then what my suggestion would be: you take those people in the category between . . . [interjection] Well, hang on, Minister of Government Services. I always hear government members saying, "Tell us what your alternatives are," and I'm trying to put forward an alternative. So you take those people between $13,569 and $99,999 and assess a 10 percent rate, and you take those people with incomes in excess of $100,000 and say: let's have a 12 percent tax rate.

Now, what's interesting is that in terms of all these rates, what it starts to do is recognize that progressive taxation is an important element of our system historically, but what we're suggesting is a thing that provides tax . . . [interjection] No; my suggestion provides, in fact, proportionate tax relief. So those people who aren't over $100,000, who aren't high-income earners, also would get a substantial benefit. I put that forward as a suggestion, and I'm soliciting feedback from constituents.

I think it's much fairer than what the bills 18 and 19 package gives us. It has the advantage of preserving a kind of progressive, graduated system, and it provides fairer treatment to middle-income Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the problem I've got with the 18 and 19 package is that this looks like something that was written by my constituents who live in the half million dollar condominiums in Eau Claire. It doesn't look like something that was written by the much bigger majority of my constituents who are living in the belt line in those walk-up apartments. I think we have to come up with a system that's going to be fair to those people too.

So my proposal – and I'm no tax expert, but in terms of the material I've read through and looked at . . . [interjection] Well, okay, and I don't know how many people in this Assembly are tax experts, but I do take seriously the responsibility, if I don't like something the government is doing, to offer a better alternative. I'm hoping we will hear some commentary. I hope people will tell me if there's a better way of doing this than that. I think this is a better system, and I think it's one that's much fairer.

What's interesting with that is that if you went with a zero, 10, 12 kind of structure, what you have are the greatest cuts for middle-income taxpayers. Anyway, I think it will be for others to judge whether that has merit, but I wish the Acting Provincial Treasurer would take a look at that proposal.

The other thing I find a bit confusing in the way government has approached this is that if you go back to March of 1999, we had the announcement that the government was going to eliminate the 8 percent surtax as of July 1, 2001; then on September 1, 1999, the announcement that we were going to see an acceleration of the tax reform plan, and then it was going to have a bifurcated impact. On July 1, 2000, it was going to be cut in half, the balance on January 1, 2001. We were going to see a proposal at one point to eliminate the .5 percent flat rate of tax by January 1, 1999. That was going to be two years before the 8 percent surtax was eliminated. Now what's happened . . .

It's great to get waves of encouragement. Thank you very much. I think we should have a charades tournament. I think what we'll do is we'll pick a team from the opposition, a team from the government, and I want to nominate the Minister of Gaming and the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations for the government team, because . . . Okay, Mr. Speaker. I'm just trying to wind up. I think we've got a sequencing problem with this.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, in your encouragements to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to hurry up, you in fact spread out the process even longer. The reason for the intervention is that it's impolite and unparliamentary to keep yattering on while the hon. member is giving us his words of wisdom. Could we have a pleasant listening group while the hon. member concludes his remarks?

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. It is all my fault. I accept full responsibility for the act of intervention opposite.

I do want to put on the record my concern that we had the Premier and the former Provincial Treasurer tell us, when they were talking about tax cuts in the event of a higher than anticipated surplus in 1999-2000, that, quote, what we want to do is make sure that those who can least afford to pay tax get the first break, close quote. That was the Premier on July 27, 1999, in the Calgary Herald. We had the former Provincial Treasurer, now on leave of absence, say on July 20, 1999, in the Calgary Herald that, quote, certainly our priority is for low-income earners, and there are ways that can be addressed, close quote. Well, I think with this bill we see that in fact low-income earners have not been a priority of the government. In terms of the sequencing, that has not been the priority, and in fact it's a much lower priority for the government.

There is no benefit under this bill to a Calgary senior who is living in Calgary-Buffalo who earns $30,000 a year. There's no benefit to a family of four if you've got both parents who are, say, teachers each earning $40,000, no benefit to them. You know, I'm sorry that the government moved from what they had talked about before in terms of the proper sequencing.

Is that reason to vote against the bill? No, I don't think so. I have misgivings with the way the government has approached this. I'd like the government to consider the alternative I put forward and, if not, to come back and tell us why not. There may be some members who try and suggest that this is a question of the Liberals being opposed to tax cuts and that the Liberals are somehow impeding or standing in the way of Albertans being able to get that kind of relief. That would be nonsense, Mr. Speaker. You know that, and I think Albertans understand that as well. We've certainly heard this evening constructive suggestions from the opposition that would also provide tax relief to Albertans but do it in a way that's fair to middle-income filers. Wouldn't that be the Alberta way? Wouldn't that be the way this government should move?

So I hope the cabinet ministers are going to share that with the Acting Provincial Treasurer, the former Provincial Treasurer, and the Premier so they can take a look at how we can fine-tune this bill and how we can make the adjustments. I think the Treasury Department, the last time I looked, had about 760 employees. I don't have the benefit of that sort of research, so when I do my . . .

MRS. McCLELLAN: Allan Rock's got 6,000, and it doesn't help him.

MR. DICKSON: You know, Mr. Speaker, every time I go to wind up and I want to conclude, then the minister opposite wants to take me off on another side path.

My observation is this. I don't have access to the 730 calculators and 767 employees, so I'd like to challenge any members who have an accounting background and my MLA from Calgary-North West to tell me why that proposal that I've posited would not be fair, would not be more equitable, would not be a tax cut that makes more sense. We have here an experienced and well-respected member of the accounting profession, who also happens to moonlight here as a member of the Assembly. He's got that kind of expertise. He would be able to share that with us. I want to specifically encourage him to look at that analysis, and maybe we'd be able to table it in the Assembly so members can see it. If this thing doesn't work, then let's tell it.

This is like an auctioneer. Hearing no more interventions from the minister of intergovernmental affairs, I'm going to wrap up my comments and look forward to what's coming at the next stage.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Are you ready for the question on the motion that the question be now put as proposed by the hon. Government House Leader?

[Motion carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Pursuant to Standing Order 47(2) and Beauchesne 521(2) I must now put the question on the original question.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a second time]

[At 12:03 a.m. on Thursday the Assembly adjourned to 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 18, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/05/18

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Lord, renew us with Your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service of the people of this great province. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by 105 Albertans from Rocky Mountain House, Eckville, Westlock, Red Deer, Calgary, Sherwood Park, Stony Plain, Bon Accord, Edmonton, including the constituency of Beverly-Clareview, all urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining [the] public health care [system]."

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I now request that the petition regarding saving public health care that I presented yesterday be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

MR. DICKSON: May I ask that the petition I presented the other day be now read and received, please.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again with regret I'm compelled by the fact that the opposition continues to object to the passage of tax reductions for Albertans to give notice that I will move:

Be it resolved that further consideration of any or all of the resolutions, clauses, sections, or titles of Bill 19, Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000, shall, when called, be the first business of the committee and shall not be further postponed.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In continuation of the support of the tax cuts that we have brought in, I would like to table copies of a news release by the chartered accountants of Alberta that supports tax bill amendments and bills 18 and 19 in the province of Alberta. I do believe there are close to 7,000 chartered accountants in the province of Alberta. I think that's pretty remarkable support.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to file with the Assembly today a document submitted to the co-chairs of the Ministerial Council on Social Policy Reform and Renewal entitled A Framework to Improve the Social Union for Canadians: Mobility Provisions. This meets our commitments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to table responses to written questions 23 and 25 with the appropriate number of copies. They address, first of all, the number of aboriginal children who moved from permanent guardianship status to adoption in the fiscal year '98-99 and also relative to negotiations the government has been involved in regarding the status of aboriginal adoptions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table at this stage a summary of debate times on Bill 11 broken down by each of the reading stages and indication of different caucuses and the amount of time speaking in debate.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to table the draft homelessness framework, the only draft that I believe has been in circulation, released by Alberta Community Development, family and special purpose housing, provided to the charette here in Edmonton yesterday.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a copy of a very substantial academic work by Professor Mel McMillan from the department of economics at the University of Alberta titled Alberta's Single Rate Tax: Implications and Alternatives, which of course finds fault with this unfair flat tax and proposes several progressive alternatives.

Mr. Speaker, the second tabling I have is a single page report really for the benefit of the Minister of Government Services. It's titled Acting Provincial Treasurer, Steve West on the Budget Surplus. It reads: "'The Budget 2000 came out showing a surplus of $713 million. Let's just say that (figure . . .) will be low.'" (May 17, 2000)." I hope the minister was paying attention.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of correspondence from Dr. Ron Jadusingh to the Premier of Alberta in which Dr. Jadusingh demands that the Premier withdraw his comments, apologize for maligning his reputation, and stop confusing Albertans about the differences between private, for-profit, and commercialized health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Yes. Mr. Speaker, thank you. I'm pleased to table, first of all, a news release by the Official Opposition which provides a model for a fair and progressive tax plan and gives a fair tax cut to all Albertans, a 0-10-12 plan as opposed to a 10.5 plan.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter which I have been asked to table from a gentleman, Corey Anderson, from Barrhead, Alberta, with regard to Bill 11 in which he asks for an explanation as to "why the government is not listening to the people and is forcing this issue through even though there is a strong voice of opposition."

My third tabling is from a woman by the name of Charlene Hooper from St. Albert, Alberta, who describes a billing for an MRI privately provided to her husband even though she has in fact a doctor's prescription for such an MRI and encloses the bill which she has sent along to the Premier and the MLA for St. Albert to pay following the Premier's words yesterday.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you. I have a report to submit to the Minister of Learning. It's a report on schools in Edmonton-Meadowlark outlining the results of meetings that I've had with 11 schools within my constituency. I've documented the concerns and hopes of administrators, teachers, and parents with regard to a wide range of issues including class size, funding, special-needs children, school resources, professional development, school facilities, and teaching.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling in the form of copies of a letter by Bryan Quinn from St. Albert. Mr. Quinn argues that the government's tax reduction proposal will shift the relative burden of taxation to middle-class and upper middle-class Albertans, and he is seeking a postponement of the final decision of the Assembly on this bill so that Albertans have a chance to debate it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the requisite number of copies of my responses to questions raised at the supply subcommittee on Environment, which took place on 20 March year 2000.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of the Joint Recommendations on Issues of Curriculum Change from the Capital region school boards, April 2000. In this particular document the district recommends that the approval of the TI-89 and TI-92 graphing calculators be rescinded because of the advantage it offers those students in that horrid math program they go through.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly nine STEP students who are working with the Legislative Assembly for the summer months. Seated in your gallery this afternoon, Mr.

Speaker, are Susan Karpa, Helen Park, Brian Storseth, Tiffany Ferguson, Terris Schultz, Ana Velado-Quezada, Adam Kozakiewicz, Mai Dong, and Isabelle Guay. I'd ask them to please rise now and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Chairman of Committees.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you two Lacombe residents that I have had the privilege of knowing for a very long time. They have a very special interest in being with us today as they are related to our very capable David Gillies, executive assistant to the Government House Leader. I would proudly ask Jean Stock and her husband, Noel, seated in your gallery, to stand. We will give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have a very pleasurable job today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two individuals that are visiting our province and have been here for some time. They're Rotary exchange students, one in Lloydminster. Jacob Eliasson is a grade 12 student. He was eight months at the comprehensive high school in Lloydminster, and he's heading back to Sweden in July. The other is Mel Hall. She's a grade 12 student from New Zealand. She's been four months at J.R. Robson in Vermilion, but she'll be staying through till January 2001. She was excited with the snow we had here, so she wanted to stay right through and see some more of it. Both are very intelligent, very respectable people. You can tell that they have all the pins of Canada on their Rotary vests. I would ask them to stand in the members' gallery and receive the warm welcome of this House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have a distinct pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly Fay Turpin's class from NorQuest College west. They are English as a Second Language students. There are 13 of them from all over the world. They've come to this country to enjoy the freedoms and learn the language and our culture here. I would like to invite them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly to Alberta and to Canada.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to be able to introduce on behalf of my colleague from Calgary-North Hill a group of 33 students from Webber Academy and their teachers, Miss Janice Chan, Ms Janis Bekar, and parent helpers Mr. Ed Chwyl, Mrs. Sheila Cook, Ms Janet Gamble, and Mr. Wes Goretsky. I believe they're seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that they rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure on behalf of the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mrs. Margaret Doige, Mrs. Kim Currington, and 10 home schooled students from the Parkland home educators. They are in the public gallery. With permission I would ask that they stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Medical Diagnostic Services

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier said that for diagnostic services delivered privately, and I quote, what would be totally unfair is if a person paid and then used that diagnostic material to get earlier treatment in the public sector. Well, it's time for this government to open its eyes, because of course that is exactly what has been happening in Alberta for several years now. Albertans are able to pay privately for medically necessary MRIs and now CT scans in order to jump to the head of the queue in the public system. My questions are to the Acting Premier. Can the Acting Premier explain to Albertans why this government is allowing queue-jumping to occur for medically necessary diagnostic services like CT and MRI scans?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the minister of health may wish to supplement my answer, but I would just remind the members of this House and all Albertans that are tuned in to our question period that we in fact spent several weeks and hours debating a bill called Bill 11. One of the specifics of Bill 11 was to stop queue-jumping, and I hope everyone in this House and everyone watching remembers that the Liberals voted against that bill.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that queue-jumping for medically necessary diagnostic services has been occurring for several years, MRIs and now CAT scans, can the Acting Premier tell Albertans why they didn't include that queue-jumping in Bill 11? It's not included.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member across the way has a great deal, in fact a vast amount of information on private clinics because of course she was the minister of health when some 30 of them were in place. I have asked myself that question many times: why were guidelines not put in place at that time? However, what this government did do in consultation with provinces across this country, with the federal government, and with the College of Physicians and Surgeons is ensure that Bill 11 did in fact include queue-jumping.

In the area of diagnostics, Mr. Speaker – and again the associate minister of health may wish to comment on this – and the area of MRIs I think the hon. member is fully aware that if a physician prescribes an MRI, it is paid for under the system through the services that are provided in the system to cover that. If a person chooses to go outside the system to have a private MRI, it is not currently paid for.

The Premier has stated unequivocally, Mr. Speaker, that he is very concerned about this issue, and he has indeed asked the Minister and the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness to review this and to ensure that people are not receiving faster treatment through purchasing diagnostic or any other services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to table an indication about the private MRIs not being in operation prior to May of 1993.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier said yesterday that paying for medically necessary diagnostic services such as MRIs and CT scans was, quote, unfair if delivered in the private sector – we've now got the third version from the Acting Premier – will the Acting Premier now provide instructions to Albertans as to how they might be reimbursed for the medically necessary MRIs and CT scans that they have paid for out of their own pockets?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I could take far more time than this question period allows getting into the debate on the preamble to that question. Suffice it to say that the die was cast, and it took this government to put some regulations and guidelines around the operation of private clinics.

However, that was then and this is now. I think that if the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition would listen, she would hear one more time that if a person chooses to take their prescription for an MRI outside of the public system and pay for it, that I guess is their prerogative. If they take their prescription for an MRI and have it provided under the public system, they do not pay for that today.

What we are concerned about, Mr. Speaker – and the Premier has indicated this – is that if someone is taking that prescription outside to a private clinic, it then affords them the opportunity to receive faster service. That is the concern.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Private Health Care Facility Fees

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, there seem to be some major contradictions on the front bench. Let's go to some more contradictions between ministers. On May 11 the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness said, and I quote: we are not paying out of the public purse any facility fees; those are disallowed, end quote. However, on November 19 of last year, 1999, the minister of health said in regard to who pays for facility fees that, quote, the public system does, the regional health authority funded by the provincial government, end quote. Can the minister give a simple answer to a simple question? Are facility fees included in the contracts between private operators and regional health authorities?

THE SPEAKER: The Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted to speak to this so that we can perhaps try and once again clear this up. The term "facility fees" has to be first of all distinguished from and differentiated from "facility services." Now, there are no facility fees that are being charged to Alberta patients for insured surgical services, whether they are delivered inside a public hospital or they are delivered inside a private clinic. Those were outlawed, and as a result facility fees are no longer allowed to be charged and neither do we reimburse for that.

However, what the hon. Leader of the Opposition is trying to get at, I think, is what are called facility services, which are spelled out and defined in Bill 11. I could give you the entire list of facility services; it would take several minutes. They are defined in Bill 11, and they exist under separate contracts.

There are two types of contracts, Mr. Speaker. The one that covers any kind of facility services exists between an RHA and the particular facility providing those facility services. There are other services, fee-for-schedules, for example, that are negotiated with the Alberta Medical Association, which is between Alberta Health and Wellness and the doctors directly, in conjunction with all of these other negotiations that I've mentioned.

So the physician performing insured surgical services will continue to be paid the set amount for each surgery, and that amount will be the same if it's provided in a public hospital or if it's provided in a surgical setting. I hope that clears that up for the hon. Leader of the Opposition. We do not have those facility fees; we have facility services.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister could answer this question. What percentage of the existing contracts, say, for the ophthalmology clinics that were taken over by the province – the province picked up the facility fees – is being paid by the provincial government?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, I'll have to take that question under advisement because I do not have the exact statistics. If she had told me she wanted some specific numbers, I would happily have looked them up for her. If she'll accept, I will provide a written response when I get the information.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, now that the minister has admitted that there is in fact payment of facility fees in private facilities by the regional health authorities, can he please tell us why he's contradicting the minister of health? [interjections]

MR. ZWOZDESKY: I'm sorry; there was so much interference from her own members that I didn't quite get the question.

I don't believe I admitted to anything. I said that I would look up the information, and I'd be happy to provide it. If such information exists, I'll be happy to provide it. I quite frankly do not know, and that's why I've taken it under advisement.

THE SPEAKER: Third main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Income Tax

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta is all alone in its push for a flat tax that disadvantages the middle-income group. Will the Acting Provincial Treasurer explain why he remains so bullheaded in his efforts to push through a flat tax in Alberta when every other province in Canada has abandoned the idea?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, that's not true. In fact, there are individuals in Paul Martin's office working on a study right now and certain recommendations to Mr. Martin, and as soon as I have the fullness of that information, I'll put it here in the Assembly. Newfoundland is looking at this right now, and a graduated type similar tax in Saskatchewan is being looked at.

The reason we're putting it in is because it's a progressive type of tax which does not penalize people for working harder in this province. It takes 190,000 people off the tax roll completely. Those 190,000 will still pay federal tax, and a lot of those people can't afford to pay that tax.

This stops the brain drain. It is an attempt at all the studies that said that if you tax people with a disincentive the more money they make, they'll go to the United States or someplace else where they can work hard and not pay that type of devastation.

It also stops bracket creep. This single tax sets it up so that indexed against inflation, people's growth in their incomes will not be destroyed by inflation.

One other thing they're missing is that the single rate of tax cannot be discussed without discussing what we've done with the spousal allowances. We've increased the personal deduction and spousal allowance to $12,900 and inflation-proofed them. Coupled with the single rate of tax, that makes it the most progressive tax in Canada.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that a flat tax is not the only way to remove low-income Albertans from the tax rolls, why does the Acting Treasurer insist on imposing an unfair burden and transferring that burden to middle-income taxpayers?

DR. WEST: Well, that's just not true. I just tabled the chartered accountants news release that has done studies on this. With the changes that we made to the percentage from 11 to 10 and a half and raising the spousal allowance and personal deduction to $12,900, it does not disadvantage the middle-income earners.

Once again, I don't know why the opposition wants to tax those people not making very much money. They want to tax those 190,000 to 200,000 people that we're taking off the rolls.

Number one, we just don't stand here and brag about what we would do in the future; we do it. In 1997 and '98 we passed an employment tax credit that went through to people working hard that had families, and some people are getting those cheques in the mail today. When this plan comes in, many, many of those that are right around the $30,000 or $26,500 trying to support two children, married with one income will be getting a cheque back from the government instead of paying some $300 or $400 tax.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's try it again. Will the Acting Provincial Treasurer explain why he wants a regressive and unfair flat tax and not a progressive and fair tax cut, as we have proposed, giving the same benefit to the lower income families and individuals as this minister? Why won't he listen to the Liberals' fair tax cut for the reallocation of his tax cut dollars?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, now, this is very, very entertaining for the people of Alberta, because when we introduced Bill 18, they didn't come forth with some funny graph that they've just put out mimicking the one we have by just changing some of the figures. They said that we should lower the 44 percent tax down to 40 percent and mark time with the three different brackets that the federal government had. Now they've changed their mind completely, and they've come in with this mug's game of trying to jump on our bandwagon.

Let's look at another remarkable hypocrisy. Last week they were saying that people making over $70,000 were the wealthy people that were getting a break. Now in theirs they take it up to a $100,000. I wish they'd get their facts straight and their principles straight.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Health Care Funding

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The timing of today's announcement of extra money that the government has always had in its pocket to address waiting lists is suspicious to say the least, coming as it does in the aftermath of Bill 11's approval. The government is obviously eager to demonstrate the success of its foolish privatization experiments. However, Albertans said loud and clear during the Bill 11 debate that they want extra funding dollars used to strengthen the public health care system. My questions are to the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the minister give a clear undertaking to this House that every single cent of the extra funding will be used to strengthen the public health care system rather than being drained away by commercial interests looking to cash in on the Bill 11 gold rush?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for that question. I want to make it very clear that today's announcement by the hon. minister of health is actually part of our overall six-point plan that was released way back in January or February of this year. That's number one.

Number two, I think it has to be pointed out that the bulk of the announcements coming out today and tomorrow and perhaps over the next couple of days result partly from the injection of money from the federal government through the Canada health and social transfer payment and their budget, which actually came out after our budget. We didn't know how much exactly we'd be getting from the feds at the time of concluding our budget. We had some approximate numbers that we were hoping for, but now that we know there are a significant number of dollars, approximately 98 million coming from the Canada health and social transfer through their budget, we're announcing a number of procedures that will help reduce waiting times for things like heart surgeries, joint replacements, and cancer treatments. It will reduce waiting lists for MRIs and other procedures. We're also going to be looking at including in that a number of other recruitment procedures that will help get us the diagnostic technicians, the therapists, the doctors, the nurses, and so on that all make our health care system work.

In answer to his question about the money that is coming, yes, whatever moneys we get specifically for health care do go specifically to health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the government plan to increase MRI capacity by hiring additional staff and extending service hours in public hospitals or by contracting out to more expensive, less efficient, private-sector MRI clinics?

THE SPEAKER: The Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just before I get into the specifics there, I want to point out that at the moment we have approximately seven of these machines; in fact, it's exactly seven. We have four more coming onstream, which will take us up to 11 over the next little while, and that will give us the highest per capita MRI capacity anywhere in Canada. Part of that will come out of this money. We need to remember that we're doing about 33,000 of these MRI type scans at the moment.

With the additional 26 placements at the postsecondary level we will be training more people to look after these machines, but I think the hon. member has to recognize that technicians that are required for operating MRIs do have to have a prior degree before they go on to the special training. They would require an RN degree or a related MRI type of diagnostic degree to go on to receive the extra training. So it's a two-step process that is required here, Mr. Speaker.

I do know that with the addition of the four new machines we announced a short while ago, we hope to increase our capacity by a further 28,000 procedures over and above the 33,000 we currently do, and that should significantly alleviate the waiting lists and bring about the needed changes that we're looking for. I know that a lot of that will be done right within our public hospitals system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister categorically refuses to answer my question. Let me try once again. What good does it do to put more funding into health care in the name of reducing wait lists when the minister refuses to guarantee that these precious dollars won't be siphoned into the back pockets of investors rather than going into frontline staffing?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that of the new MRIs we've just announced, two are for Edmonton. They will go into the centres that need them, and I expect those to be public hospitals. The same will happen in Calgary. Those will go into centres where they are needed there. That's over and above the other ones that are contemplated for Grande Prairie and Medicine Hat, over and above the one that already exists in Red Deer.

Along with that, there will obviously have to be additional money for the start-up costs, for the room facilitation. You don't just buy an MRI, and then drop it at the front door. You have to prepare a special room for it. Soundproofing is important. These are very complicated, state-of-the-art pieces of equipment that take a lot of ingenuity to install and equally so to operate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government believes that lowering taxes will immediately increase the standard of living for all Albertans and will also attract investment and economic activity into the province, which will further raise the standard of living of Albertans. This has been the agenda of this government since day one, yet our critics continue to accuse us of having no plan. My first question is to the Acting Provincial Treasurer. Can he explain what studies exist that support this government's tax plan?

DR. WEST: Well, Mr. Speaker, I understand that some of the debate on Bill 19 has taken the course that we were flying by the whims of our pants as far as forming tax policy, but I would like to say that over the many years that we've been here, we have been doing a tremendous amount of studies. We've brought them forth in various documents, and we also have a lot of support on the outside. I have studies done by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business that support this, by Dr. Ken McKenzie, the University of Calgary paper. I tabled yesterday the Shapiro paper which supports that. Kim Cassady, one of their advisers, had done a report for the department of Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, we have a committee that went throughout the province, and this is the final report and recommendations of the Alberta Tax Review Committee. It's for their perusal; they can look at it. Some 80,000 Albertans sent in their recommendations as well as those that attended it.

I would also like to point out that we talked about this ad nauseam when we did the new tax plan for Albertans in Budget '99, and I would like them to take this forward and look at it. I would also like to table Budget: New Century, Bold Plans, 2000, the Alberta Tax Advantage, and in this are a tremendous amount of tables and talk about the tax plan.

I can continue and will continue as we move forward this session to bring all the material I can so that those people across the way can understand that removing $1.3 billion off the tax rolls in this province, 20 percent of the personal income tax, is something that Albertans are demanding and want.

MRS. BURGNER: Mr. Speaker, do these studies indicate that when profits increase as a result of general, across-the-board tax reductions so do real wages and economic activity?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, this is one of the commonly asked questions. How do you know that if you lower taxes, there's any benefit to a society? We have done a study that I'd like to table again today: Economic Impacts of Alberta Tax Review Committee Proposal. It demonstrated that when we were at the 11 percent and the $11,600 personal deduction, we would probably see about 1,700 new jobs over five years and about .8 percent growth in our GDP. Since we have gone to 10 and a half and we are now at $12,900 in personal and spousal deductions, that will raise to about 1 and a half percent GDP growth in five years as well as about 30,000 new jobs.

I would also like to point out that there isn't anybody who does a study that doesn't know that taxes are devastating. In fact, just today it was said that the Chretien Liberals came to power in '93, and the average family taxes have ballooned from $13,937 to $18,146.

The unfortunate thing, as I hear the chatter from across the way, is that the only legislative experience of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition in this House was raising taxes. She never had any legislative experience deducting them. [interjections] Now, Mr. Speaker, she points her finger and says: well, you were there when the taxes were raised. But at least I stuck around long enough to lower them.

Mr. Speaker, I would like the Minister of Economic Development to supplement on the advantages of a tax reduction if he wants to.

THE SPEAKER: It's okay. We're going to move on here. We've spent a lot of time on this one series of questions.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we have heard a lot in the past few days about middle-income earners carrying an unfair burden vis-a-vis rich Albertans, can the Acting Provincial Treasurer explain to my constituents how this plan is fair to lower income, middle-income, and even upper income Albertans?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, I mean, the facts are on the table. If it's for lower income people, we're going to take 190,000 off the rolls, and as the population increases and this program goes through, it'll be more than 190,000 over the next five years. As far as middle-income, there's one thing about it. It is a progressive tax, but everybody is treated fairly, depending on the incentive to work hard, do better, get an education, and go forward.

Counter to what was said yesterday by the second party that's in this room, from the Ontario budget and Mr. Eves, that under our tax system – you do; the more you make the more you pay. But, in fact, the more you make the higher percentage you pay because you do not pay any tax on the first $12,900. So it is a progressive tax, number one.

To indicate how those middle income and upper income would be treated, a single individual earning $20,000 will pay 3.1 percent of his income on tax, a single individual earning $30,000 will pay 5 percent of his income on tax, a single individual earning $55,000 will pay 6.2 percent of his income on tax, and a single individual earning $100,000 will pay 7 and a half percent of his income on tax. No matter how you define that, that's progressivity. That is not a flat tax. That's a single rate of tax applied against different rates of income without a penalty.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Protection of Privacy

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in this Assembly I tabled the 1999-2000 annual report for Canada's Privacy Commissioner, Mr. Bruce Phillips. That Privacy Commissioner had been very critical of Bill 40, the Alberta Health Information Act, and he noted in his report that Bill 40 allows any custodian to develop a family or genetic history for any purpose at all, without asking patients for their consent or even informing them of this practice.

Further, he goes on to say, "This sort of unbridled tracking of personal information is particularly disturbing." My questions are to the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness this afternoon. What steps will this minister take to respond to the forceful criticisms of Mr. Phillips, Canada's Privacy Commissioner?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we've all been somewhat alarmed by what it is that's going on in Ottawa with respect to concerns we all have regarding our personal privacy and the guarding of information. That's why when we released Bill 40 here – that's our Health Information Act – and discussed and debated it and so on last fall, we were very clear in what we wanted included within Bill 40 that would put in place very strong, very clear guidelines that protect the personal health information of our Alberta citizens.

Among the key features, just for the members' review, we know now under Bill 40 that individuals must give consent before identifiable health information can be used for purposes other than that for which it was collected. So if anyone is using that information for a purpose other than that for which it was collected and if anyone is using that information without the express written consent of Albertans, I think we do have a concern, and I think we'll have to talk to Ottawa very strongly about those concerns.

MR. DICKSON: Well, I want to encourage the minister to look in the mirror, Mr. Speaker.

I want to ask this minister: will he confirm that the serious problems that have been identified by Canada's Privacy Commissioner in his latest annual report will be addressed by this government either through amendment of Bill 40 – bring it back in, and let's try again to fix it – or through substantial changes to the regulations now being circulated?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, I don't have nor have I seen the particular document the member is referring to. If there is some report out there, then he could perhaps send it across, and I'd be very happy to review it.

There will be an opportunity for this kind of discussion when the provincial health ministers and the territorial health ministers next meet with the federal Health minister. I can assure the member that I will raise this concern and this question to find out exactly what Ottawa is getting to here: how can we better protect the provision and the protection of sensitive health information here; how can we ensure that it's only being used and collected for the purposes for which it was designed and ensure that that consent is there in writing from the patients providing it?

Nonetheless, if the member would kindly provide me with that document, I'll respond to it when I next meet with my federal counterparts.

MR. DICKSON: Well, my final question is this Mr. Speaker: given that the criticism of Mr. Phillips, the national Privacy Commissioner, parallels the concerns raised by this caucus when we were fighting against closure on Bill 40 last December, will this minister commit that the Liberal opposition will be consulted on those regulations under Bill 40 before they become law?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know what new concerns the Official Opposition has, but I'd be quite pleased and I'd be quite open to receiving any comments that the member has. I can promise him that I will take those into the discussions.

I believe that we also have a Privacy Commissioner here that would be concerned about some of those comments and some of those allegations that are being made, and perhaps we should have him do a second review of that bill to ensure that everything is the way it's supposed to be and that there are no abuses taking place. If there are, I certainly will be concerned as will the minister of health, and I'm sure, too, others will.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I still have quite a list of hon. members who would like to raise a question today, so might I just ask for a little more brevity, please?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Foster Parent Program

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not so long ago some Metis children committed suicide because they could not overcome the linguistic and cultural problems faced while under foster care. Since then, we have tried to improve our child welfare system to ensure that we can provide a real family environment for those children who are in the custody of our government. However, as I speak, some of the native and ethnic children who are under government care continue to face the same problems that occurred 40 years ago. My questions today are to the Minister of Children's Services. When ethnic and native children who are under the temporary guardianship of your department talk to their biological parents on the phone, are they permitted to speak in their mother tongue?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am always pleased when members in this House demonstrate concern about children who are in the child welfare system.

Mr. Speaker, it would be useful to review the terms of a temporary guardianship order. When a temporary guardianship order is obtained, the child welfare director or their designates have appealed to the court and obtained a judgment for that order, and the best interests of the child are paramount. So in almost every instance we have an opportunity to provide that continuing communication based on that order. There may be extenuating circumstances when the judge will order differently, but overall under the temporary guardianship order every effort is made to make sure that the best interests of the child are obtained.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental question is also to the same minister. Does your department have a policy which forces the children and their biological parents to communicate only in English even though they don't have sufficient knowledge of that language?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, absolutely not. May I stress again the importance of the best interests of the child.

The purpose of a temporary guardianship order is to enable ultimately family reunification. So there is again, considering carefully each individual case, an opportunity for the child welfare worker, for those that are in direct contact with the family workers to consider all aspects of the situation and to work very carefully to make sure that culture is respected, language is respected, and all other circumstances.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the bottom line is the best interests of the child.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the same minister. I'm glad to hear that you don't have such a policy, but if in fact evidence proved that any staff in your department had followed such a policy, what disciplinary action would you take against them?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, should in fact an hon. member or any member of the community feel that there has been some miscommunication, some impediment that is certainly undue, they can petition the minister to conduct some investigation.

Recently, as the hon. member is aware, I have conducted two investigations on the same circumstance on his behalf. He could go further to the Human Rights Commission and have a review conducted there. But, Mr. Speaker, in the matter of a recent discussion the investigator that had been selected and approved by the hon. member found that the intervention of the child and family services authority has been outstanding, is in compliance with all policies which reflect the very high standard of social work practice, and provides culturally appropriate services to the parents.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Wainwright.

MS LEBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 19, 1999, the minister of health said in regards to who pays for facility fees that the public system does; the regional health authority is funded by the provincial government. My question is to the minister of health. Can he confirm once and for all whether facility fees – and we're not talking about facility services – are part of the contracts with private surgical clinics?

MR. JONSON: Well, first of all, I think we need to remember the history of this particular issue. You would recall, Mr. Speaker, that going back a number of years to the time that the hon. Leader of the Opposition was minister of health, private clinics operated in this province. Let's take the example of eye clinics, which were allowed for a period of time to charge facility fees – that was the terminology that was used at that particular time – directly to patients for their services. That went on for a while.

We as a province were penalized by the federal government eventually for allowing those facility fees to be charged directly to patients and the government moved to provide that insured services had to be provided under contract with regional health authorities, Mr. Speaker. Under those arrangements which we have in place today, the physician is paid according to the Alberta Medical Association agreement for his particular professional services, and the regional health authority contracts with the provider for certain facility services. An amount is arrived at. That is the amount paid under the contract.

That is the way the system operates today, Mr. Speaker, and that's the history of the use of these terms.

MS LEIBOVICI: That would hold for facility services.

Can the minister, then, tell us what is the percentage of the payment of the existing contracts for those facility fees/facility services?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the member posing the question well knows, it depends of course upon the particular procedure or procedures and services that are being contracted for. It would vary from perhaps surgery dealing with removal of lesions and external bodies, so to speak, to cataract surgery, and there would be a variable amount arrived at according to the agreement between the regional health authority which would be negotiated and would be agreed to by each side for the provision of those facility services.

MS LEIBOVICI: Well, the minister still doesn't get it. What is the extra amount that the public purse is paying to the private facilities for performing surgical services? Those are the facility fees. Your associate minister indicated that he would table it. Will you back that up and table what the extra amount is, what the facility fee is that is being paid?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, there is no extra amount being paid in that sense. This is a contractual relationship just as the regional health authorities have contractual relationships for food services, for diagnostic services. An amount as far as what is provided and paid to the contractor for facility services is arrived at, and our indication across the system is that they are very comparable to costs elsewhere.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Gas Pipeline Crossing Rights

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. In the early 1980s the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops negotiated master crossing agreements with the two national railways. Lump sum consideration was paid in return for crossing rights in perpetuity. Now that some of the lines have been sold to short line operators, these lines fall under provincial jurisdiction. Can the minister explain why it is that some gas co-ops have been invoiced for crossing rights, which is contrary to the master agreement signed years ago?

MR. STELMACH: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is referring to master agreements that were signed by the two major railways a number of years ago in perpetuity. However, since some of those rail lines were of course sold to other companies, those companies weren't aware of those agreements that were signed by the two railway companies.

Since the Railway Act now is in our jurisdiction and since the two national railways sold some of their rail lines to smaller, independent companies, all of the regulations will be developed by our department. We will take into consideration the position of the Federation of Gas Co-ops in not only developing those regulations but communicating all of those regulations to all of the other co-ops that might have to cross right-of-ways in the province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you. Can the minister confirm that the regulations that he is developing for the new Railway Act will prevent compensation being paid to the new short lines by the gas co-ops where there are no costs incurred by the railways?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, it makes sense to me. If there are no costs incurred by the railway company, why should the gas co-op have to pay additional fees? That's the premise on which I'm going to be approaching the formation of these regulations.

MR. FISCHER: Will the Federation of Gas Co-ops be consulted on the development of these regulations?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, we definitely will be consulting with the Federation of Gas Co-ops. In fact, we'll be meeting with them very shortly to discuss a number of topics that the federation has put forward. Certainly one of them is railway crossings, and we definitely will be consulting with them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Alberta Hospital Sewage Lagoon

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In July of last year construction began on a sewage lagoon at Alberta Hospital Ponoka. That lagoon was located on the site of a previous garbage dump on the banks of the Battle River upstream from the town of Ponoka. When the contractor requested the results of the environmental impact assessment, he was told that it was not prepared and that he should proceed with work and that he would be given it later. The contractor then shut down the work on the site for a number of reasons including health and environmental concerns and then was ordered back to work or held in breach of contract by the department. My questions today are to the Minister of Health and Wellness in his position as minister and not his position as MLA, sir. When the department of health was made aware of the health and environmental concerns of the garbage dump, why did it order the contractor to keep working rather than stop work and consult the Department of Environment?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm aware of the construction of the lagoon, much needed in terms of ensuring proper services to the hospital and provision for the safe disposal of wastewater. I'm also aware that there is a contractual dispute, but beyond that I'm not party to it. I could request that perhaps the Minister of Infrastructure may want to comment on this, because it does fall under his administration.

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, I'll take that question under advisement and get the full details. I'm not quite sure where the dispute may be at this particular point, and I don't want to make any statements with respect to the dispute without having all the information at hand.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, sir. Why did the department of health order the garbage that was buried to another site on hospital grounds instead of following the advice of a professional or, as is lawful, the Department of Environment's recommendations?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to just put on record that certainly I will review the matter with the Minister of Infrastructure. I do not, however, knowing the record of questions across the way, accept the contentions that the hon. member is making. We will certainly review the matter and check on those allegations, but I do not think they should be accepted as fact at this point in time.

MR. WHITE: Will either minister commit to a full environmental assessment that'll be made public for an approved garbage dump at Alberta Hospital Ponoka to ensure the public health of all Ponoka and area residents so that the waste can be treated in a proper facility?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Health and Wellness I certainly commit to making sure that environmental safety standards are followed. Once again I'm certainly making a commitment to what is very important here, and that is that sites be properly handled. But again I would reserve my comments in the sense that I do think the nature of the statements in the question have to also be checked as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Forest Management

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Associate Minister of Forestry. Alberta's forests are very important to our province's economy. They provide revenue, jobs, economic development in many communities, a number of them in my own riding. Yesterday evening I caught the end of an economic development workshop pertaining to the forestry industry but unfortunately not enough of it to hear all of the feedback. I was wondering if the minister could tell us briefly either from the workshop or from existing strategy what the ministry is doing specifically to ensure that our forest resources meet the demand of long-term development.

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, that's a good question. Forestry does continue to play a very important role in our overall diversification plan in Alberta. In fact, next to the oil and gas industry and agriculture it creates most jobs. Over 50,000 jobs are created directly, indirectly, and induced in that industry with a revenue of over $8.4 billion.

Mr. Speaker, the roundtable we had yesterday was attended by 10 major forestry companies that are very active in Alberta plus representatives from various departments of our government including Economic Development, Environment, International and Intergovernmental Relations, Innovation and Science, Community Development, Treasury, and also Resource Development. These issues and many other issues were discussed by the participants at the conference. One thing that was a common theme from the industry stakeholders was that Alberta definitely is a great place to do business in the forestry industry. In fact, the participants encouraged us to continue building on the Alberta advantage, and we sure will.

The participants also, of course, recognized the need for a long-term strategy in forestry. This group will partner with Resource Development in developing a new framework policy in the development of the industry for Alberta. So, Mr. Speaker, we are definitely on the right track, a very positive meeting.

MR. FRIEDEL: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Since the existing forestry operations have increased efficiency and could use more timber supply along with new interests also competing for these limited resources, I wonder if the minister could tell us: is there an allocation strategy to ensure long-term supply sustainability?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Forestry.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As most of you are aware I believe, Alberta is nearing full allocation of its resource that's available totally on an annual allowable cut. The demands from industry and the capacity always exceed what we have to offer, but we have a sustained-yield policy that will never, never allow cutting beyond what the forests will grow. Therefore, we are very safe in ensuring that there is long-term viability in that industry.

In fact, our government is presently doing an analysis of the forest resource out there. Once this review is completed later on this year, we will be in a better position to be able to determine how we'll handle future allocations. There are strong indications that if there is a resource that becomes available, we may look at reallocating that resource to existing industries, which would enhance their operations and create more jobs.

MR. FRIEDEL: Again to the Associate Minister of Forestry, Mr. Speaker: does Alberta Resource Development have any plans to actively – and I emphasize the word “actively” – encourage value-added processes and secondary manufacturing in the wood products industry?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Forestry.

MR. CARDINAL: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This was another topic that was discussed quite thoroughly at the roundtable discussions with the forest industry representatives. They are interested in partnering with our government in various ways, involving again Economic Development, the Alberta Forest Products Association, the private industry, and government, to ensure that we move towards value adding. I believe the policy of our government in the overall diversification plan is to go into value adding as part of our overall plan. In fact, in the recent reallocation of timber resources that came available in north-central Alberta, the two major companies that were successful in accessing the timber were in the area of value added, so it's a good move.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now we'll call upon the first of three hon. members to participate in Members' Statements, but in the interim might we revert to Introduction of Guests?

2:40

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Yes. Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to introduce a group of people from the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta who have been and are very instrumental in helping the government of Alberta with their tax plans. They have provided government with valuable input on tax policies through the Alberta Tax Review Committee, and we're looking forward to their additional expert opinions with the Business Tax Review Committee, that's in process now. They have shown their support for Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. I would like them to stand as I indicate their names. They're in the members' gallery, and I'll introduce them to the Assembly: Steve Glover, executive director; Bob Young, president; Brad Severin, member; and Marie Iwanow, communications director. They are standing now, and I would ask them to receive the warm welcome of this House.

First Lutheran Church 100th Anniversary

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The First Lutheran church in Calgary-West, known as a community of joy, is celebrating 100 years of Christian ministry this year. Recently I was involved in a weekend of special events. Hundreds of enthusiastic families, relatives, friends, and special guests participated in celebrating the great heritage of First Lutheran church in Calgary.

Officially organized in 1900 with a confirmed membership of 10, they purchased for $1,000 from the First Baptist church a little white wooden church on the corner of 6th Avenue and 2nd Street. In 1950 First Lutheran observed their 50th anniversary. To everyone's surprise Premier Ernest Manning accepted an invitation to speak from the pulpit and used John 2:5 as his text: whatsoever he saith unto you, do it.

First Lutheran church has been in its third and present location since 1982 in the Strathcona community of Calgary-West. During the 1990s First Lutheran embarked on an important three-year fund-raising campaign, called Vision 2000: Imagine Tomorrow. The goal was achieved, evidenced by the completion of an extensive, approximately three-quarters of a million dollar expansion in 1998. The new sanctuary seats approximately 450 people.

I was honoured to bring greetings from the province at the Sunday services to recognize this great institution, which serves so well the spiritual and personal needs of its community members with programs for all ages, from young children to seniors. It is so important that we take time from our very busy lives to appreciate our history, to reminisce, and to value our achievements. That weekend was a truly joyful time.

To Pastor Remo Madsen and the congregation of First Lutheran church, the challenge now will be tomorrow, to carry on, reaching beyond 100. My congratulations to you for being such a strength and helping to build a stronger spiritual community in Calgary-West.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Protection of Privacy

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I had the opportunity to table in this Assembly a copy of the 1999-2000 annual report of Mr. Bruce Phillips, Canada's Privacy Commissioner. The report is voluminous, but there is revealing and important information in the 150 pages.

Much of the media focus in the last two days has been on the now infamous longitudinal labour force file kept by HRDC in Ottawa. You know, I encourage people to read the many other concerns that certainly deserve our attention and remedial action. The Privacy Commissioner documents the misuse of the social insurance number, which has become, in his words, an "internal passport" without which we are nobody."

Now, there is some good advice here for members of this Assembly and for Albertans as we contemplate section 21 of Bill 40, the Health Information Act, and the requirement to produce our personal health number to anybody authorized by regulation. We know how regulations are made in secret in this province. There is no prohibition. There is no sanction. This was one of the concerns that Mr. Phillips identified in his report.

In the health sector he notes: "Patients' privacy is steadily eroding in the name of health research, ready access to personal information and administrative efficiency." Have we not seen that borne out in the debate around Bill 40?

In his report he highlights problems with surveillance in public places and work sites, actually a problem that a Liberal private member's bill twice introduced in this Assembly would have remedied: "The 1999 study [confirms] that Canadians are also becoming more sophisticated" in the area of privacy protection. Fifty-five percent of Canadians "believe that governments collect more information than they need to provide services.

I want to thank Mr. Phillips for his national leadership. This report ought to be required reading for every Alberta legislator.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Native and Ethnic Foster Children

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not long ago many native children were taken from their families and put in foster homes where the language and culture were totally different. Most of these children were forced to westernize. Some were successful; others were not. Some even committed suicide because they could not overcome the language and cultural barriers they were living with.

Many studies have been done on this issue. We have all learned from this painful experience. As a society we pledged to never repeat these mistakes. Unfortunately, as we speak, some of the native and ethnic children who are in our child welfare system still face the same problems which occurred 40 years ago. They are still being placed in foster homes which have a totally different language and culture. Some of the child welfare authorities still believe that they need to westernize these children. They force the children and their biological parents to communicate with each other in English only, even though they do not have sufficient knowledge of the language to communicate effectively. This concerns me, and it should concern all of us.

When official reviews are launched, these bureaucrats can hide behind the Child Welfare Act and cover their improper actions under the mask of confidentiality, but they should know that Alberta today is totally different than Alberta 40 years ago. The mistakes of the past cannot and must not be repeated.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'll call the committee to order. Just for the people that are seated in the gallery, the committee stage is more informal than the other stages of the bill. This particular stage is to look at the bill clause by clause, hopefully, section by section. People are allowed to move about freely and also have a beverage.

Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Madam Chairman. The government has used closure now at both stages of Bill 19. That really surprises me, because when I review the Hansard of the comments made by members of the Liberal opposition, what I see is almost in every case – well, I think without exception every member of the Liberal opposition is talking about why it is important to provide fair and sustainable tax cuts to Albertans and is questioning the government about why it has backtracked, reneged on its 1996 budget commitment to remove first the flat tax, which affects the majority of Albertans, instead of moving on the 8 percent surtax, which only affects a minority of tax filers.

It is really quite astounding that the government would try to twist that kind of commentary into a suggestion that members of the Liberal opposition are against providing tax cuts. In fact, we've been saying for quite some time, Madam Chairman, that the government of Alberta ought to get on with cutting the flat tax and providing some relief. I will mention at this point that that's in stark contrast to the New Democrats. Their former leader had published an article in the Edmonton Sun on January 27, 1996, where she was calling for the creation of yet a new flat tax. I guess that's for another debate at another time.

I will remind the House that on July 27, 1999, the Alberta Liberal opposition caucus issued a press release that was titled Albertans Want Tax Relief Now, Not Trial Balloons. What it talked about was the fact that this government and the Treasurer of the day were using the weasel words "maybe" and "possibly" there would be some tax reform. What we were suggesting back in July of 1999 was that the government should quickly move on the recommendations that it had received and eliminate both the 8 percent surtax and the .5

percent flat tax. The government had said that it was going to eliminate that .5 percent tax first. We think that it could have been done this year. We think the plan can be accelerated. We think that's affordable.

Madam Chairman, if you take a look at the numbers, what you find is that what we're really talking about is making a decision between saving some 390,000 tax filers the equivalent of around $144 million or saving some 1.5 thousand, 1.6 thousand tax filers the equivalent of about $325 million or $330 million. Because the government has said that it "possibly" might, "maybe" could accelerate the removal of the .5 percent flat tax anyway, possibly by moving it up by six months, we may only be talking about that change representing about half of that $340 million or $350 million figure. We may only be talking about a timing issue of about six months. Of course, by doing that, we would be able to hold the government to its often repeated commitment to provide tax cuts to low-income Albertans and middle-income Albertans first.

If I can refer you to July 27, 1999, where the Premier was quoted in response to the press release from the Official Opposition that I just referenced: "What we want to do is make sure that those who can least afford to pay tax get the first break." That would be consistent with the pledge made in 1996 but inconsistent with Bill 19.

The former Treasurer – I'm referring to the one that's still a member of the Assembly – said on July 28, 1999, one day later: "Certainly our priority is for low-income earners, and there are ways that can be addressed." Now, that would again be keeping with the commitment made in 1996 but contrary to Bill 19.

Then once again, the Premier, speaking yet a day later, still trying to do some damage control as to why the government was not putting action behind its words on tax relief, was quoted in the Calgary Herald. On July 29, 1999, the Premier made the following comment:

Certainly, there are two components I would like to accelerate. Certainly, the raising of the basic [exemption] for lower-income families . . . But, certainly, if there's anything that can be accelerated, we can accelerate the surtax that was put on back in the 1980s to eliminate the deficit.

So, Madam Chairman, the government has this legacy of making promises about tax relief and then failing to carry them through, and the Official Opposition has been trying for some time to get the government to keep its word and provide the often talked about tax relief.

Now, Bill 19, as we have heard in second reading, is a bill where the principle is to eliminate at least one of the deficit elimination taxes. We think it would be better if the bill eliminated if not the tax that is broad-based first, then certainly both at the same time. This is no longer a question of whether it should happen. It's really a matter of when it will happen.

I note from reading today's newspaper that the Acting Provincial Treasurer was speculating on the size of the surplus. Contrary to the comments of the Minister of Government Services where she denied that there's any surplus – and I don't know how she can make that statement and keep a straight face, but she did deny that there was a surplus – today we find that the Acting Provincial Treasurer is talking that the surplus will certainly exceed the $713 million that was in the budget. Of course, we think it will exceed that by several times. With the state of the economy, with the diversification, with the oil and gas sector being as robust as it is, and with other sectors of our economy clicking along, it's clear that the revenue projections in Budget 2000 are low. It's clear that the gaming revenues projected are low. It's clear that the income tax and corporate tax projections are low. So the surplus at the end of the year is going to be many, many times the $713 million that's in the budget.

So with all of that in mind, Madam Chairman, with all of the government's faults and criticism in mind about what it is that the Official Opposition has been opposing or supporting, with the government's own misinformation about the state of the economy and the lowballing of the budget in Budget 2000, and with the government's oft-stated commitments to remove the deficit elimination taxes and provide tax benefits to the low- and middle-income earners first, what I would like to do at this point in time is move an amendment to Bill 19. What I'll do is have this circulated and pause for just a moment while the pages are handing out the amendment.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are you rising, hon. member?

MR. HANCOCK: I am.

MR. SAPERS: I'm only pausing.

MR. HANCOCK: You're only pausing? Oh.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Yes. We're just allowing a few minutes for the pages to distribute the amendment.

Go ahead, hon. member.

3:00

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very, very much, Madam Chairman. What I will do now is move my amendment and read it formally into the record. I move that Bill 19 be amended as follows. Section 5 is struck out and the following is substituted:

5 Section 3.03 is amended by adding the following after subsection (2):

(3) This section applies to the 1987 and subsequent taxation years, up to and including the final taxation year to which section 3.04 applies prior to its repeal.

The object of this amendment is to ensure that when this government moves to eliminate the 8 percent surtax, which will provide a tax benefit to all those tax filers that have taxable income of approximately over $49,000 a year – when they go to eliminate that, at the very same time they will be eliminating the .5 percent flat tax that . . . [interjection] Well, Madam Chairman, across the floor we're having some chatter from the Government House Leader that is suggesting that that is not what this says.

If the Government House Leader will go back and read the bill, I think what he'll find is that there are some procedural idiosyncracies, that I know you're aware of. The Official Opposition is not permitted to amend a section of an existing statute that isn't on the table in the form of an amending bill. You see, we can't amend the section directly. We have to amend it by reference. Of course we've worked closely with Parliamentary Counsel to ensure that the wording of this amendment will achieve the object, which is to tie the two deficit elimination taxes together and make sure that they are both eliminated at the same time. The amendment is very clear: "up to and including the final taxation year to which section 3.04 applies." Section 3.04 is the section . . . [interjection] No, no, no.

Madam Chairman, I apologize that I'm not speaking through you. So I will make my comments to you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Yes, I would suggest you do that, hon. member.

MR. SAPERS: The object of this amendment is very clear. Because it's this current taxation year which is the final year that the government intends to have the collection of the 8 percent surtax, we would have this also be the final taxation year that the government would be able to pick the pockets of Alberta taxpayers for that .5 percent flat tax as well.

As I was saying earlier, Madam Chairman, the acceleration of the plan the government has spoken of – they've speculated about it. They have suggested that perhaps Alberta taxpayers will get this kind of a break, but they have never followed through. So if the government is serious about its words, that they want to provide this tax relief to Albertans, and if they are serious in their comments that they can no longer justify having the deficit elimination taxes, then I think it's about time that they quickly put, I guess, taxpayers' money where the government's mouth is and accept this amendment.

If the Government House Leader suggests that the wording doesn't achieve the purpose, then I would expect the Government House Leader to suggest a subamendment. I would hate to see the Government House Leader take advantage of the rules which prevent us from directly amending a section to argue against an amendment when the intent and the purpose are clear. I am very confident in the amendment, as I am confident in Parliamentary Counsel.

I can anticipate what the Government House Leader's argument may be, but I think he will do a great disservice to this debate if he should try to argue that there is a wording issue here. It is the intent which merits the debate, Madam Chairman, and if the Government House Leader wants to suggest wording that would be even clearer, then he's certainly welcome to do that.

I would like the discussion to be centred around the notion of eliminating the deficit elimination taxes because they can no longer be justified and, in the government's own words, they will deliver much-needed tax relief to Alberta taxpayers.

With those comments, Madam Chairman, I look forward to hearing the government's response to see whether or not they are willing to do as they've always claimed they would do; that is, provide this immediate tax relief to all Alberta taxpayers.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Chairman. When I was rising before, it was going to be my simple purpose to adjourn debate in committee for the moment and ask that we rise and report progress, but I'm delighted, before I do that, to comment on this wonderful amendment that's being brought forward. In fact, I think we should probably adjourn the session completely and go home so that we have the summer to explain to Albertans what the Liberal opposition is about and how the Liberal opposition wants to help them leave their money with the government for yet another year. That is the effect of the amendment that's being brought forward.

The amendment says:

This section applies to the 1987 and subsequent taxation years, up to and including the final taxation year to which section 3.04 applies prior to its repeal.

Of course, one of the main purposes of Bill 19 is the current section as it's in the bill, unamended, which is to say that the surtax would end in the 1999 tax year. It wouldn't apply past the 1999 tax year so that in the year 2000 Albertans are enjoying tax relief. This 8 percent surtax is off in the year 2000. That's what was announced and that's what is happening, and Albertans are enjoying that tax relief as we speak, Madam Chairman. Albertans are currently enjoying it. [interjection]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HANCOCK: Edmonton-Glenora doesn't understand.

Albertans are enjoying the tax relief which has been announced by this government and which is to be given legislative sanction by Bill 19 and which this government is very eager to pass so that it can be in law what is already in policy and already in effect, that Albertans get to enjoy their own money for a year because we were able to accelerate the relief from the 8 percent surtax for the full 2000 tax year, which, I should remind the hon. member, was brought in back in the days when there was a deficit, was brought in to tackle the deficit.

Those members opposite are so keen to talk about the progressive tax system and people paying their share, but what they fail to realize is that the surtax was tacked on to higher income earners. I'm not going to say high-income earners, because it started, as I understand it, at around the $42,000 level, which is not by any measure a high-income earner these days. People earning over $40,000 were paying this extra 8 percent so that Alberta could get out of the deficit. That was Albertans pulling together to defeat the insidious deficit, which was caused, I might say, by the Liberal federal government bringing in a national energy policy and destroying the oil industry and destroying our royalty revenue stream.

So that's what happened. It drove the price of oil down, destroyed Alberta's energy sector for a period of time, and resulted in a huge deficit. Turning that around was a very, very massive job, which had to be undertaken and was undertaken with the support of Albertans saying that, yes, that was the priority. Albertans were asked and Albertans did participate and gave to deal with the deficit dog and the debt. This government said: Albertans are overtaxed. [interjections] Edmonton-Mill Woods says that they're overtaxed, and he's right. This government is trying to do something about it this year.

Then what happens? Madam Chairman, this is just too priceless. Edmonton-Glenora brings in an amendment that says: we don't want to take the surtax off this year; we want to take it off next year.

MR. SAPERS: That's not what it says.

MR. HANCOCK: That's exactly what it says. It says: "the final taxation year to which section 3.04 applies prior to its repeal." Well, when is 3.04 going to be repealed? Bill 18 repeals section 3.04 effective the taxation year 2001, next year. So what this amendment has the effect of doing is postponing to next year the reduction in taxes to Albertans. That's exactly what it does.

The only thing in Bill 19, Madam Chairman, which takes the tax section off is section 5 of Bill 19, which says that "section 3.03 is amended . . . applies to the 1987 and subsequent taxation years, up to and including the 1999 taxation year." Okay? [interjections]

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. There's one person and one person only that has the floor. We still have approximately two hours and 15 minutes here, and we are going to see some decorum.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Debate Continued

MR. HANCOCK: What they have done is said that they want section 3.03 to be extended to the year in which 3.04 is repealed. Well, the year in which 3.04 is repealed is in Bill 18. It's next year. They don't want the surtax to come off until that's repealed. They don't want the surtax to come off until next year.

MR. WICKMAN: David, you're so wrong.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, I'd love to hear where I'm wrong on this.

MR. SAPERS: Are you adjourning debate?

MR. HANCOCK: I am.

You'll have all weekend to research it. It's pretty clear to me on a straight reading of it. If I'm wrong, I'll apologize. I don't want Albertans to have to wait an extra year for their 8 percent surtax to come off. I don't think Albertans want to wait. None of the members of our caucus want Albertans to have to wait until next year. So if I'm wrong on this interpretation, I'd love to hear the explanation, and I'll look forward to it after they've done their research over the weekend.

Madam Chairman, I would move that we now adjourn debate and the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. SEVERTSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following: Bill 19. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: It's so ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 24

Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act, 2000

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes. Madam Speaker, I do believe that it would be in order to have the bill on the table for debate, so I would like to move on behalf of the Minister of Environment that Bill 24, the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act, 2000, be read a third time.

It's a very important bill, Madam Speaker. As we've discussed in second reading and in committee, it brings the heritage rangeland concept into the sphere so that we can move ahead with the designation of heritage rangelands which have been identified for that designation in an appropriate manner.

I think those in the House that have spoken to date have agreed that that's an appropriate thing to do and that it should be done on a timely basis. Regardless of what might come down the road, this isn't something that's necessary to move on now. The people of Alberta will know that heritage rangelands will be part of and appropriately designated under the special areas process, and we can move ahead with those designations without waiting for any other or future discussion as to the appropriate statutory arrangements.

With those words I would ask the House for support at third reading of Bill 24.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to add my comments at third reading of Bill 24, the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act, 2000. There is no doubt that we will be supporting this bill, as small as the amendment is, in terms of addressing some of the environmental needs and concerns in this province, but I think it's important to put on the record that this bill would have never seen the light of day had the government supported environmental protection as a cornerstone of their policies.

It's interesting to have the Government House Leader at this particular point in time stand up and move third reading and talk about how important this bill is and how all of the debate has been in support of it, when in fact during second reading and in the committee stage the only people commenting on this bill were Official Opposition members. The environmental protection minister made a few very short opening comments on the bill during those other two stages. In fact, not a single government member got up and spoke for or against this bill. Interestingly enough, none of the very legitimate questions and concerns that some of my colleagues had with regard to this piece of legislation have been addressed in any capacity. So it's interesting to note that the Government House Leader would now state that this is an important bill.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Madam Speaker. Under 23(h), (i), (j). The hon. member indicated that no government member got up and spoke to the bill. Of course the only way you get a bill on the floor of the House is to have it moved, and it was moved by the hon. Minister of Environment for first reading, which of course doesn't have debate attached to it but does have a short introduction which outlines the importance of the bill. Then in second reading the hon. minister put his reasons on the table.

It would be important to point out to the House, because it hasn't been pointed out in the past, that members on this side don't feel the necessity for successive numbers of people to get up and say the same things. When you have a bill of this nature, which is self-explanatory on the face of it, and the Minister of Environment puts the case for it, there is not a need for a large number of subsequent members to get up.

My point of order is that there has been support for the bill from the government side in debate. The Minister of Environment moved it and made an eloquent speech, as I recall, when he did so. So it wouldn't be appropriate to say that no government member participated in debate. In fact, I just participated in the debate not that long ago and said what an important bill it is. Now, I didn't feel the need to get into specifics, because of course there were no amendments in committee and we're talking about the principle of the bill. The principle of the bill is very sound, and I think I expressed that. So two government members spoke in favour of this bill.

It's unfortunate the hon. member hasn't had responses to her questions, but I'm sure that if she had sincere questions, she could call the Minister of Environment, who, I know, would have been pleased to discuss them with her and probably will discuss them with her, notwithstanding that we're in third reading at this stage.

I thought it important to rise on the point of order and point out that two members had spoken to the bill. With a bill of this nature, which everybody has agreed so far is necessary, that's an allegation which shouldn't be left unchallenged.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On the point of order.

MS CARLSON: On the point of order, Madam Speaker. Once again it's very unfortunate that the Government House Leader was not paying attention, because had he been paying attention, he would have heard that what I said was: except for a few short introductory remarks by both himself and the Minister of Environment. So there is no point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair will say that I have noted this afternoon that we're getting very much on a personal basis in some of this debate and discussion. I think it behooves us to rise above that. I realize that this is Thursday afternoon at 3:20. It's been a long week. However, we have before us third reading of Bill 24. I don't think we need to discuss at length who has or hasn't been up debating this bill. The intent of third reading is to debate the overall principles involved in the bill, and I would ask that we get to the bill, not to individuals, not to who's done what. Let's talk about what is before us, and that is Bill 24. I would say that for the rest of the afternoon, please.

Go ahead, hon. member, on the bill.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On the bill and speaking in general to the principles of it. If it were in fact, as has been alleged, an important bill, we would have seen great support coming forward, so I think that is . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Don't test my patience, hon. member. On the bill.

MS CARLSON: I am on the bill, Madam Speaker, and I am on the principle of the bill and how important this bill should be to Albertans. [interjection] It is not out of order to make those comments.

On the bill. We should have seen legislation brought back into this Legislature that addressed the overall issues, needs, and concerns of Albertans with regard to the environment. Instead, what we see here is a very small piecemeal type of legislation addressing a very selected need in this province, not at all the comprehensive legislation that was committed to in terms of the reintroduction of Bill 15, the Natural Heritage Act. Why didn't we see that legislation in this Assembly, Madam Speaker?

The first bill as it came in was poorly written, was immensely flawed. The Minister of Environment then spent nearly a year with the MLA committee in consultation with a number of groups – environmentalists, industry, citizens at large – and they made a number of excellent recommendations that the Minister of Environment committed to bring back into this Legislature to be discussed and debated. Instead, what we see is some sort of a fight happening over on the government side, where that legislation was stalled. It did not come back into this Legislature, and that's a real pity, Madam Speaker, because that would have been excellent legislation to discuss. It certainly would have brought in a number of issues that were important to be debated. Instead, we see piecemeal legislation once again, which tells you what kind of a priority this government pays to environmental protection in this province.

We see only one small piece of legislation being brought in, the very bare minimum of what the Department of Environment needs at this point in time to be able to carry on with their work. We're happy to support this very small piece, but it calls into question all of those other issues that weren't addressed.

Also, I have to put on the record that when the government knows going in on a piece of legislation that we are going to support it, when we're up front with them, when we come in here – we support it even before our questions are answered – then we ask the questions in debate on the floor of the Legislature, Madam Speaker, we would expect those questions to be answered, and we expect them to be answered on the floor of the Legislature, because that's the format in which they are asked.

We heard some earlier comments today that I could write letters, that the answers are sure to be forthcoming, but in fact that was not the request that was made. Those questions easily could have been answered during the course of the different stages of debate. I have waited until third reading to find out what kind of a response we were going to get, and what we got was absolutely no response, Madam Speaker. That, in my belief, is a disrespect for this Assembly and a disrespect for the hard work that's gone into taking a look at this legislation, talking to a variety of user groups around the province and finding out what it is that should be addressed before the legislation passes. Now we're going to see the legislation pass this afternoon, and we don't have those very important questions answered.

So for the record, Madam Speaker, I'm going to go through the debate and group the questions in such a way that it will be very easy for the Minister of Environment to answer them, and we expect answers on this legislation. That is the bare minimum of what should have been provided and which has not.

I will start with the Member for Lethbridge-East, who asked a question about private property lands not being included in this particular legislation as compared to the grazing leases that are. He's wanting to know if there would be any future private property lands included in this. So I think that's an important question. The Member for Lethbridge-East is the agriculture critic, is in contact with those grazing leaseholders at all times, and they want to know if this legislation only deals with them or people at large, so if we could get an answer to that question.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I have someone standing, I would assume, on a point of order. The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

MRS. NELSON: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). I've been listening intently to the hon. member opposite asserting that questions haven't been answered, and I'll reflect back. This seems to be a standard from this hon. member. On Tuesday of this week in the third reading discussions of Bill 5, the Land Titles Amendment Act, the same hue and cry speech was given, and as a matter of fact what was said was not accurate. The questions that had been raised by the members opposite had in fact been fully answered and sent to those members directly after the debate at committee and had been answered by the sponsor of the bill. So I would caution the hon. member to please check and find out, because I can tell you, just having had four bills go through this Legislature, that questions have indeed been answered, and I believe my colleagues in cabinet have been moving questions and answers to them very quickly, albeit she may not have received them from her colleagues. I would suggest she check that before she makes the assertion that questions have not been answered on these bills before they've been moved forward.

MS CARLSON: Madam Speaker, on the point of order. The questions asked here have not been answered either in Hansard or in written form by the Minister of Environment between Tuesday evening and Wednesday evening of this week, when this bill was up for debate.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Well, hon. member, I go back to what I just said a few minutes ago. If we could talk about what is actually within the bill, the bill that I have here, the bill that each of you has at your desk. If you wish to question the ministry, I would suggest that you do so. However, we are at the third reading stage. We are proceeding with the overall principles of the bill, having come through second reading and Committee of the Whole. I would ask that you take those concerns and possibly write a letter or make a telephone call, or that is something you can utilize question period for, but I would ask now that we get on with what we have in front of us: what is included, what we have been concerned about during the last two stages of this bill. Let's talk about that, please.

MS CARLSON: A point of clarification, Madam Speaker. Are you telling me, then, that in third reading, the final stage of this bill, the last opportunity we have to ask questions affecting the principle of the bill that haven't been answered, questions are not specifically allowed?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: What I'm saying, hon. member, is that I've listened to your debate. The first part was focusing on who hadn't stood up in the various stages of this bill to debate it, and now we're into asking questions that are over and above, or go beyond, what exactly is involved in Bill 24. As chairman of this particular stage, sitting here in the chair, I'm trying to focus you back to what I have in front of me here, Bill 24, so that we can proceed in a timely fashion with some good debate.

Now, let's get back on Bill 24.

Point of Order Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

MS CARLSON: A point of clarification, Madam Speaker, with respect.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: There's no more clarification, member. Let's just get on with the debate.

MS CARLSON: I stand on Standing Order 13(2) and ask for a ruling from the chair.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Excuse me?

MS CARLSON: Under Standing Order 13(2) I believe it's allowable for me to stand and ask a question of the chair.

MRS. NELSON: Are you challenging the chair?

MS CARLSON: I'm not challenging the chair. I'm respectfully asking a question of clarification.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: That's fine, hon. member. Go ahead.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My question would be this. The questions that I have are not outside the scope of this bill. They're specifically asking for clarification in terms of the interpretation of how this bill will be applied. That is the extent that I am pursuing here. I'm certainly not trying to go outside the mandate of the bill. We do have a number of very legitimate questions that a very legitimate number of users are wanting answers to.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair just listened intently a few minutes ago when an hon. minister of the Crown rose and suggested that you seek answers to those questions and that possibly those answers have come your way. I'm not here to debate whether in fact that is so.

This is Thursday afternoon. It has been a long week. I would ask that we look at what is before us in the debate and the various sections and that we talk on what is being changed in this act as far as the amendments.

I certainly know, hon. member, that you are very, very capable of seeking answers to questions that go above and beyond what is in this piece of legislation. I'm not sitting here trying to give you a rough time. I'm trying to do what I think is best, and that's get on with the debate that is at hand.

Now, the first part of your debate, as I said, was talking about who had or hadn't been up to speak to this bill. Now we are talking about questions that you want answers for that go above and beyond what is written in this piece of legislation. So I would ask if you could please ensure that your remarks in the remaining few minutes that you have left in your time deal with the amendment as presented in Bill 24 in the third reading stage. This is not second reading. This is not first reading. This is not committee. We are in third reading.

I would also say that we have a lot of business to deal with this afternoon. I think we should try to focus on what we are supposed to do in this House, and that is, we are debating an amendment that is contained in legislation being Bill 24. Possibly, hon. member, if you were to finish your debate, there might be other members of this Assembly that would get up and answer your questions.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I certainly hope so. I will continue with the questions that hopefully fall specifically within your very narrow definition of those that are applicable to this particular bill. I certainly hope that my questions will be answered, given the co-operation on this side of the House with regard to this particular bill.

This is my first opportunity to speak to this bill, and I'm quite happy to be speaking to the principles of this particular legislation.

MRS. NELSON: Where were you?

MS CARLSON: Well, you can be guaranteed that the next time one of these bills comes up, you won't be getting that kind of co-operation.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

MS CARLSON: Sorry, Madam Speaker. I was provoked by the minister.

We have, still, a number of outstanding questions with regard to this bill, and some of them are with regard to the grazing leaseholders, which are directly affected in this particular instance, Madam Speaker, and I am hoping that those questions get answered. Some of those are talking about how natural hazards will be dealt with in the areas with grazing leaseholders.

Another one that hasn't been addressed yet, which I think is important to talk about, is: with the restrictions for the vehicles and horses on these grazing leases, should a grazing leaseholder have a problem with their cattle where they need to bring a veterinarian out or they have to remove some of the cattle from the lease and take them someplace else, is there some sort of a permitting process that they can go through in order to remove the affected livestock? This restriction is somewhat restrictive in that area too. While we are glad to see these restrictions come in these wilderness areas and specifically are very supportive of the list that is in the bill in terms of limited access, I think there are occasions when exceptions need to be made, and I would think that access to livestock and maintaining the health of those livestock for these grazing leaseholders would be of importance. So we would like to see how that is addressed.

Interestingly enough, in the restrictions that are listed, Madam Speaker, we don't see any restrictions here specifically for mountain bikes. How is that going to be dealt with in this regard? We know that one or two mountain bikes in an area don't do much ecological damage, but a number of them in a repetitive fashion certainly do. They can certainly do as much damage as horses, as a comparison, so we want to know why those weren't included in this list and if there's some specific address that's going to be made to the wilderness areas.

Another question I have is with regard to the education process, Madam Speaker. This hasn't been addressed anywhere in the comments. We would like to know how this information from this particular bill will be passed on to both general users of these grazing leases and specifically to the leaseholders. As we heard comments this afternoon, this is an interim measure prior to more comprehensive legislation coming through, which we certainly hope comes through in the spring, but in the short term people need to know what the rules are, because there are some pretty significant changes in terms of restrictions. So how are they going to let people know how they're going to access those areas?

My colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford in his comments yesterday talked about access for people with disabilities. I think that's a very interesting point that was brought up, and I would certainly like to see if the Minister of Environment has any works in place with that.

My colleague from Edmonton-Norwood talked about the enforcement. Given the restrictions, what are they going to do with enforcement? She probably didn't realize that the number of conservation officers is being increased both this year and next year, and we'd like to applaud the department in that regard. Certainly if I've heard one complaint since the cutbacks happened in '93 in Environment, it's been that the number of staff on the ground have been cut back far too far, and certainly the wildlife officers and park rangers come under that mandate. While we're not completely supportive of their conversion to conservation officers, it is a step in the right direction to see those numbers increased. Are we going to see a heavier concentration in these wilderness areas to begin with? As we're coming into the busy season in these areas now, we would like to know specifically how these restrictions are going to be enforced and applied in this regard. So if we could have those comments, I would appreciate that.

Given that we haven't seen Bill 15, the Natural Heritage Act, it is good to see at least this amendment come forward, where the three heritage rangelands are designated as natural areas. Since Bill 15 was introduced, we've heard feedback from the community and particularly from those people who work within the department about the necessity of some kind of protection occurring for these heritage rangelands. There's no doubt that the department couldn't go forward in terms of completing their tasks and properly taking care of these areas without some kind of protection. So while it's very unfortunate that we don't see more comprehensive legislation, it is at least nice to see that we've got a temporary stopgap measure that can be put in place until we can get legislation passed, which is important.

The minister in his opening comments talked about the new dispositions only being sold with the nonsurface rights, no service access addendum to prevent future surface disturbances. Certainly we support that for any new dispositions. It's a step in the right direction, and we hope that this is fleshed out in a little more detail and a little more comprehensively in the new bill that we see in the spring.

He talked about existing industrial commitments being honoured in these rangelands. I would like to know if there was ever any discussion here in terms of phasing out those dispositions over time. Some information about that, the pros and cons of it as seen from his department's perspective, would be important for us to know. Once again, we understand that this is the basis of the most contentious issue stalling the original bill from coming back now. We don't need to know about that debate going on, but certainly in terms of the department's position on phasing out, we would like to have a little bit more information on this. I would like that in writing as soon as possible, if the minister could address that.

We're happy to see that in these wilderness areas the recreational use of highway vehicles and snowmobiles will not be permitted except in special circumstances, where they'll be needed to conduct the business, enforcement, or whatever within the department. So that's a good move. We would like to see that extended to areas beyond wilderness areas. I would certainly be interested in the minister's comments in terms of how that is progressing.

It's good to see that hunting and fishing will continue to be managed under the Wildlife Act and Alberta fisheries regulations. We would expect nothing less there. We would like to know what specific steps are being taken in fisheries in these particular areas. We all know that fisheries is in a great deal of trouble in this province at this particular time. The steps that the department has taken to revitalize fisheries and fishing as an industry in the province haven't worked very well. We would like to know specifically what they're going to be doing in these particular areas.

The minister then talked about the parks and protected areas being a priority for his department. We need to see it as more than that, Madam Speaker. We need to see it as being a priority of the entire cabinet, as a pillar of this government's policies. I would like him to address that.

We know that he's been studying the recommendations of the MLA review committee. He said in his comments that now he's conducting public consultations on the previous draft of the legislation. We'd like to know what that's about, because we understood that review was done and completed. Does this mean new consultations are occurring? If so, what's the format they're going forward in, and how are people and directly affected groups going to be included in that process? So if he could comment on that in accordance with the comments he made in his initial remarks. We would like to know what's happening with that.

You know, people in the province thought the process was over with once the MLA recommendations came out, yet in this particular bill we see only two pages of those recommendations being addressed, which is unfortunate because they were pretty good recommendations. I thought the committee did a pretty good job of bringing together a diverse number of views and finding some common ground that we could move forward on in terms of environmental protection.

Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the committee for their hard work. I know that they spent the summer and the fall working pretty hard on this and came up with excellent recommendations. It's a tough job to do. You have environmentalists who want to see complete protection of areas, and you have industries who want to have access to the grounds. Even though, as I see in this province, industry is becoming much more environmentally aware and conscious over time – and that's excellent – and they're willing to come to the table and find solutions, it's still not that easy to find common ground, Madam Speaker. The committee did a pretty good job of that, and they need to be thanked for that.

I certainly hope that every recommendation that was in this report is addressed soon. The few that were addressed in this particular bill are a step in the right direction, but they're a baby step, Madam Speaker, and this government has a long way to go in order to do what the minister in his opening comments said, and that is fulfill their promise to Albertans to preserve land from all of Alberta's natural regions under the special places program.

So, you know, it's a step in the right direction, but there's still a long way to go, and there are all kinds of outstanding issues in environment, not the least of which is the size of these lands that are being protected in terms of them being large enough to preserve the integrity of the biodiversity in the regions. That is a question that isn't addressed in this particular bill in terms of the grasslands, which is what the bill specifically addresses. There aren't many grasslands left in this province that would be suitable for protection that aren't already under cultivation, so the question still remains: are they big enough to provide the kind of diversity that is required here?

There was also the issue brought up by the Member for Lethbridge-East in terms of brush control, that I think is a very interesting question. In order to maintain grasslands in a traditional sense, the buffalo were very helpful in terms of keeping the small trees and saplings broken down and maintaining the integrity of the grasslands. We don't have that kind of ability now. Cattle don't have the same impact on the land, and if that isn't controlled or maintained in some fashion, we will see those grasslands eventually evolving into more wooded areas. So in terms of the mandate of this bill and the focus on maintaining the grasslands, I'm wondering if the minister could address those questions?

Thank you for the opportunity to comment at third reading. As far as this bill goes, it's a good bill.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Madam Speaker, thank you for your permission to rise this afternoon and speak to Bill 24, the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act. I have just a few comments with respect to the bill this afternoon. The first is with respect to the definition of "heritage rangeland." As I was reading the past debates on this bill and then perusing the bill itself, I actually saw that that definition was a key part of this amendment bill. When I looked, then, for the definition, I found it puzzling that it said that "heritage rangeland" means land designated as a heritage rangeland under section 3.2." That really doesn't describe what a heritage rangeland is or what it is comprised of or what qualifications it must meet to achieve that designation.

I suppose we could say for purposes of debate that rangeland might be assumed to be grassland. I know there's rangeland in Alberta that isn't entirely comprised of grassland, so it puzzled me that that definition was so vaguely described and that in fact it really only incorporated the designation by the ministry. It did not provide what criteria or what qualifications an area of land must meet in order to be considered heritage rangeland. For the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, having been raised on the farm and being very familiar with different types of land utilized in the agriculture process, I think it's a fair question to say that we should be embodying in legislation exactly what type of land falls under this type of designation, not simply that it is receiving that designation from the ministry.

Now, the other points that I would like to raise this afternoon, Madam Speaker, relate to the issues of protection. This bill falls, as do a number of bills, under the jurisdiction of the minister of environmental protection. We in the Official Opposition are most supportive of having our special places areas in Alberta that have particular environmental importance achieve designation, but it goes beyond that. It also goes to the heart of what that designation means and what that designation entitles those lands to receive in the way of protection from the minister and from the ministry of environmental protection.

I raise this point because I have had cause in this session to review in detail the Auditor General's remarks relative to the department of environmental protection. This year he contained four reservations in his report on the ministry of environmental protection, and they were quite serious concerns, Madam Speaker. In a general sense are we assured that we are actually protecting not only heritage rangelands but the other aspects of Alberta that have environmental significance? Are we actually able to assure Albertans that those areas are receiving protection, given the reservations the Auditor General made?

I would just like to cite from his report. On page 265 he contains a general reservation that speaks to the fact that there were many ministries with assets, liabilities, revenues and expenses for which the management of the Ministries are accountable, including performance measurement and financial management responsibilities. The reservations alert readers that the related financial statements are not complete and accurate.

That applied to the department of environmental protection.

Further, on page 263 he talks about associated risks including "business decisions being made based on incomplete and/or incorrect financial information," thereby saying that in fact the ministry had not accurately accounted for the cost of doing business, the cost of providing environmental protection. That concern flows through the entire section on environmental protection contained in the Auditor General's report this year, and it is particularly highlighted in the area of fire fighting. Now, if we want to achieve protection for heritage rangelands, Madam Speaker, it would seem to me that we need to be providing more than a simple designation.

Given the substantive reservations that the Auditor General raised with respect to the province's ability to be at the ready and provide fire-fighting capabilities across the province, I'm not sure, Madam Speaker, that the designation of being a heritage rangeland really achieves any type of protection at all. What the Auditor General said was that given the lessons of the 1998 fire, which, he acknowledges, was one of the most extreme in our history, that season tested all aspects of the ministry of environmental protection's operations and highlighted several areas that could be improved. For example, the 1998 fire season was expected to be severe, yet fire stations were not fully manned before major fires broke out. Fire fighting teams were not manned and ready at the beginning of the season. Arrangements for infrastructure such as transportation, base camps, and equipment were not in place at the beginning of the fire year.

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, the chair is hoping here that in dealing with the Auditor General's report, you are somehow very quickly going to tie it into third reading of Bill 24. I mean, I did chastise another member speaking here a few minutes ago, and I would have to say that we are not dealing today with the Auditor General's report but in fact third reading of Bill 24.

MRS. SLOAN: I'll work harder to make it clearer, Madam Speaker. In a nutshell, it really is: why provide the designation if you are not ensuring that all of the ministry's programs are at the ready to guarantee that protection? What in fact does the protection of being designated a heritage rangeland actually mean? Certainly, given the reservations in the Auditor General's report, it doesn't mean that we're ready to protect those rangelands from fire. That is clear. It is so clear that last year we lost, according to his calculations, 734,815 hectares of Alberta's timber. That's from 1998.

My point, Madam Speaker, is that the designation doesn't achieve protection. Albertans should not be assuming or confident or secure that because the part of the Whaleback which is carved out and mentioned for this designation in the bill and which is so important to Alberta's environment and so special – really it's not afforded the security and protection that perhaps some might think it is because it has received a designation as a heritage rangeland.

I'd just like to complete my arguments on that particular point by saying that one of the other concerns is that the department consistently has underbudgeted fire-fighting costs. As an example, prior to '94 the budget was at approximately $12 million per year. At that time the average fire season cost was about $50 million, so four times more than what the department was budgeting. That started a practice where the department would adopt special warrants to cover that overexpenditure. Well, the recommendations, the suggestions that have been made, the concerns that have been pointed out to them are that in fact it is not financially prudent to be doing that and that the Legislative Assembly should be engaged in approving the budgets for fire fighting.

Now, I may have missed that in the budget this year, Madam Speaker. I may stand to be corrected, but I don't recall that we substantially debated fire-fighting costs. I do recall, in fact, that because of the way in which the budget debates were structured this year, I had to be in the Children's Services estimates when those for environmental protection were occurring. Despite the fact that I wanted to be at that debate, I could not be because I was the primary critic responsible for Children's Services.

Bill 24, in my mind, is a step, but it is a token step. It gives a designation, but in no way does it guarantee that Environment is at the ready with comprehensive and funded programs to ensure protection. That's my second main point and concern this afternoon, Madam Speaker, with this bill. Perhaps, though, in good faith the minister has, in anticipation of this bill being passed, in fact given the priority designations and given the direction that the concerns I'm raising this afternoon will be addressed in detail. I want to believe that he views these issues and the protection of these areas as being as important as I do and that he in fact has undertaken those steps.

This is my final point of concern with respect to the bill, Madam Speaker. How will the minister guarantee that all of those individuals, those citizens who have a relationship with these designated areas or heritage rangelands, will be treated fairly and equitably with respect to the application of this legislation? Now, that could apply in a number of circumstances, whether they're private landowners, whether they hold a government grazing lease, but the general principle behind my point this afternoon is: how will the minister guarantee that they are fairly and equitably treated under the application of this law? I hope that that will be provided for at some point in the further debate of this bill.

Just one further point. I have a concern about the carving out of the Whaleback. The designation and protection required for that area have been debated in this House on previous occasions. I don't understand the rationale of why we would choose to carve out a piece of that special environmental place for protection. There may be drilling and energy concerns that have caused that to occur. I haven't heard that or read that in the previous debates. I would very much like to hear why the minister felt it acceptable to carve out protection in the section that is referenced, section 15(1)(a)(2) of the bill.

With those comments, Madam Speaker, I'm satisfied that the minister will respond accordingly and completely to those areas, and I look forward to hearing his comments and remarks this afternoon.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd just like to spend a minute or so on Bill 24 and hopefully add some positive news to all the work that's being done on the heritage rangelands concept and as it is now applied officially in legislation.

First of all, I'd like to congratulate the minister for bringing this forward. It's very timely. We've been waiting for heritage rangeland to be put into legislation for almost four years now, and I'd like to congratulate the minister for bringing it forward and making the amendments in the proper place.

These amendments and the heritage rangeland concept will allow certain species – and I hope the opposition members that were speaking are listening, because all of their questions can be wrapped up into a couple of little phrases here. What this will allow is for certain species of grass and certain unique landscapes that are in our public lands and in our grasslands areas to be set aside under special management plans. These special management plans will be developed by people within the public lands department and in cooperation with our environmental protection stakeholders, and the leaseholders will also be involved in helping to put together these management plans along with some municipal representatives and members at large.

These local committees have been working for quite some time, and they've been working together diligently. Some of them have come up with the concept of heritage rangeland, and they have put a lot of volunteer work into the whole idea that good stewardship of unique landscapes and species of grass deserves to be rewarded, deserves to be put into place so that generations from now we can see cattle as part of the management system of these particular areas. This legislation will allow us to make sure that that will definitely be in place.

I just want to be specific here. The two specific areas that have come up that are ready for this legislation and ready for the management teams to be put in place are the Bob Creek ranch area and the Twin River area. To those folks that have been working on this heritage rangeland concept and have been very, very patient with us, I want to say thank you for that patience and thank you for trusting this government to come forward with legislation that will allow the heritage rangeland to be put in place. I am going to say to those folks that we won't let you down when it comes to putting in the management teams and the management plans. As a matter of fact, public lands and environmental protection people are already working on this to make sure that their particular species of grass and their unique landscapes will be preserved.

I also want to say that there are some local committees out there who have put a lot of work into the heritage rangeland concept and have come up with their own ideas of how heritage rangeland can apply to their specific needs. They have put their whole plan in abeyance based on the fact that they would like to see what the legislation looks like before they move on. They're eager to get on to working with their management plans, but they just wanted to see what the legislation looks like. Now that this legislation will get third reading today, under the special places program I can go out there confidently to those folks that are waiting to see something specific, put this legislation in front of them, and say, "Okay, folks; here's where we're going with this," and allow them to get on with putting forward their management plans for their areas.

So, Madam Speaker, I would just like to say to the Official Opposition – they're looking for details. Well, the details will come in the management plans that will be developed by department people from agriculture and environmental protection, from the leaseholders themselves, the grass roots, the people that have operated these lands so efficiently and so effectively for the last hundred years, plus from municipal representatives and members of the community at large. Not only will these management plans be worked on, but they will be updated for years to come to make sure that these lands are kept preserved for good agricultural production.

With that, Madam Speaker, I'd again just like to congratulate the minister of environmental protection for bringing this forward so that we can move on and do some really good things for our public lands in this province.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment to close debate.

MR. MAR: Madam Speaker, thank you very much. I wish to thank all hon. members for their engagement on this particular matter. I've not yet had the opportunity to review Hansard for all of the questions that were asked both at the committee stage, last evening, and also this afternoon. However, it is my undertaking to review those and respond to questions which were asked.

I wish to move third reading of this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 18 Alberta Personal Income Tax Act

Ms Leibovici moved that the motion for second reading be amended to read that Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, be not now read a second time but that the order for second reading be discharged, the bill withdrawn, and the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

[Debate adjourned May 15: Mr. White speaking]

19. Mrs. Nelson on behalf of Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that debate on second reading of Bill 18, Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, shall not be further adjourned.

[Government Motion 19 carried]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thanks, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 18. I do think it's a mistake for the government to invoke closure on this tax bill. I've had many questions, and I actually have to say that I've quite enjoyed researching the variety of opinions surrounding the tax system and the flat tax concept. Of course, we know it has been alive in many jurisdictions for many years, but Alberta is really the first jurisdiction to proceed with its implementation. It's regretful that we have to do so before we've had a full course of debate on this bill.

I also have to, at the outset, give credit and acknowledgment to the Legislature Library staff, who have compiled quite an extraordinary reference document surrounding tax reform and flat tax. I found that document of tremendous benefit to me in reviewing it, and there will be a number of citations I make this afternoon that actually come from that Legislature Library reference document.

I don't profess to be a taxation expert. I most certainly pay my taxes every year, as required. Some of the basic questions that come to mind and that citizens have asked me with respect to this bill are: does it mean we're going to have to file two income taxes, and if we delink ourselves from the federal system, does it mean that we will have to file a second tax return to the provincial government? I had not had a chance to raise that, and I don't believe it has been raised as a question in the debate thus far. I can tell you that . . .

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Just one moment, hon. member, if you don't mind. I would draw to your attention as well as to the attention of the other members of the Assembly that basically before us right now we are dealing with an amendment as brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark in second reading proposing that the bill be withdrawn and to refer the subject matter to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. We are back on that particular debate within this bill.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you for that clarification, Madam Speaker.

MRS. SLOAN: I believe that the referral of the bill to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations is a prudent one for consideration. I think there are implications with respect to the imposition of a flat tax structure that the public needs to have an opportunity to be engaged in and debate. Of course, we know that we've had significant focus and concern raised around Bill 11 and the province's reforms to the health care system. That has distracted people, to a degree, from what is being now proposed for changes to the tax system, so I think that having an opportunity for the bill to go to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations would be very prudent, because citizens want to have an opportunity to go forward and to provide that input.

I would say, from my reading of the literature, that the opinions on a flat tax are as varied as they are on private health care, and I'd like to provide a sampling of those this afternoon, starting with a Gallup poll titled Canadians Divided on Merits of Flat Tax. I'm just summarizing, Madam Speaker, the findings of this Gallup poll.

A new Gallup Poll on the idea of a flat tax indicates that Canadians are quite evenly divided on its merits. Forty-three percent (43%) favour the idea of a 20% flat tax . . .

Of course, that is much higher than the provincial designation of 11 percent.

. . . compared to 49% who are opposed and 9% who hold no opinion . . .

Among Canadians aged 40 to 49, support for the idea of a flat tax stands at 52%, the highest level for any age group. This support falls off to roughly 42% among Canadians under the age of 40 and those between 50 and 64, and drops off further to 33% among Canadians age 65 and over.

One half (50%) of Canadians with annual household incomes of $40,000 and over would favour a flat tax regime, significantly higher than any other income group.

Finally and perhaps not surprisingly, 49 percent of male Canadians are in favour of a flat tax system, which is higher, quite significantly higher, than the 37 percent of female Canadians who hold that view. Quite interesting findings and by no means a unanimous endorsement or unanimous support for this type of regime, and that's why I think this afternoon we should be engaging in and permitting a full process of debate on this proposal.

Further, I found an article written by Bob Dale in the Briar Patch quite interesting. The article is titled "Flat Tax Primer: a flat tax is great – if you're a millionaire or a bank. But what about the rest of us?" He points out the following flaws with the flat tax regime.

With respect to tax fairness the author says:

Large corporations, higher-income earners, and particular types of income such as capital gains and dividends get special treatment under the Income Tax Act. Flat tax supporters say that under their system, there will be far fairer treatment for everyone . . . They even promise fairer treatment for lower-income earners, through exempting income below a certain level from the tax.

Sounds good? In reality, the flat tax would be even more unfair than the current system in several ways.

1. Avoiding "double taxation"

According to supporters of the flat tax, when an investor buys stock in a company, his or her income is taxed twice, once at the time it is earned . . . and secondly at the time the person earns income from the stock . . . Some flat tax supporters even say that there is also a third tax: on the capital gain when the stock is sold . . .

This argument is based on the proposition that certain types of income just shouldn't be taxed at all. As such, it carries the preferential tax provisions inherent in our current tax system – where certain types of income are taxed at lower rates (and which, at last count, deprived federal and provincial treasuries of some $3 billion per year) – to the extreme.

Think about this: Just who earns the vast majority of the interest, dividend and capital gain income that would no longer be taxed under a flat tax system?

A very good question.

He also points out the fact that flat tax promoters say that it will put money in our pockets.

Flat tax supporters say taxes are too high as a result of government spending. They say this creates a powerful disincentive for individuals and businesses, who are discouraged from working as hard as they might (individuals) or operating as effectively as they could (businesses). They also say this encourages people to participate in the so-called "underground economy" to hide their earnings . . .

In short, flat tax supporters play on people's desire to keep more of their hard-earned money, without giving fair recognition to the importance of the programs and services governments provide to all citizens, or to the role governments have in increasing Canadians' standard of living.

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, the chair is going to interrupt you again. As I said a few minutes ago, we have an amendment before us. We are dealing with an amendment moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. It is referred to as a referral amendment, whereby it proposes that this bill be withdrawn and the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. That is the amendment that is before the House.

MRS. SLOAN: I am completely mindful of that, Madam Speaker. What I am trying to demonstrate is that our population is completely divided on the proposition of a flat tax, and therefore the amendment is most certainly in order and most certainly should be passed to allow Albertans the opportunity to really scrutinize what benefits will be there. What I'm trying to provide this afternoon is a cross section, both pros and cons, of how the flat tax regime is viewed. As I've been citing from the article written by Bob Dale, he feels that there are many flaws and raises many cautions. I think it's prudent to enter those into the debate and on the record this afternoon to inform Albertans about what risks are held with a flat tax proposal.

MRS. SLOAN: So in terms of just completing the section on putting more money into our pockets, the author says:

A 1995 study by the National Union of Public and General Employees found that although our tax system is generally progressive, it would be a lot more progressive if those with higher incomes weren't eligible for all the tax breaks they currently get on particular types of income. If this happened, up to $4 billion in additional annual income taxes would be generated [at the federal level].

He goes on to two other points, Madam Speaker. I leave it to interested citizens or members that are interested to further explore the "proportionate, not progressive" arguments and the "cutting off the undeserving" sections of Mr. Dale's article.

I also want to cite from an article that I also found quite informative. It was published in the Fraser Forum in February of 1999, and the author was Mary-Anne Sillamaa, who has a PhD in economics from McMaster University. Madam Speaker, I will just briefly cite from this article evaluating Alberta's flat tax proposal titled Flatten the Tax, Fatten the Revenues? She starts out by giving a summation of Alberta's proposal and then says:

This looks very appealing. But is there a downside from a loss of government programs due to reduced tax revenues for the provincial government? The Tax Review Committee estimates a revenue loss of $500 million.

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, does that particular article refer to the amendment that we're dealing with now, where you want the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations?

MRS. SLOAN: Well, I most certainly think, Madam Speaker, that if the Fraser Forum is pointing out that there are some contradictions in terms of the benefits of a flat tax proposal, perhaps the Law and Regulations Committee might be able to further evaluate the merits of it being implemented.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair must deal with what is before the Assembly. We have an amendment, referred to as a referral amendment, that specifically talks about this bill being withdrawn and referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. The debate, in accordance with that amendment as brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, should reflect that particular subject matter.

MRS. SLOAN: I'm mindful, Madam Speaker, that the government has also introduced closure on this bill, so we are not going to get an opportunity again to debate it in this House past this point.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, I would point out to you that if this amendment is dealt with, then debate continues on the motion for second reading.

MRS. SLOAN: Right.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: So let us deal with the amendment that's before us.

MRS. SLOAN: I'm not disagreeing with you, and I won't read further from that article if it's aggravating to the Assembly to hear it. In any event, I've read into the record the title and author, and I know that interested citizens might also find that one of interest.

MRS. SLOAN: The Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives has also lent some analysis to the proposal of a flat tax. We have, I think, the benefit of having such an institution in our country, and in their July and August issue in 1999 in an article titled None of the Arguments for a Flat Tax Can Be Supported, they talked about the fact that if a flat tax reduces the rates paid by the rich, and exempts the very poor . . . the relative percentage of taxes paid by the middle class must go up, even if taxes are reduced. This is elementary mathematics.

Flat taxes have political appeal only because flat-taxers misleadingly [make] the case for flat taxes with the case for broadening the tax base, reducing taxes, simplifying the tax system, and closing loopholes . . . so that the rich pay at least some tax. In all of these respects, the rhetorical appeal of flat taxes is misleading.

In selling flat taxes as if it were a populist idea that deserves the support of the middle-class, and in attempting to capitalize on populist discontent with the tax system, flat-taxers are being deceitful.

They make a number of . . . claims. First, they argue that a flat tax rate will greatly simplify the income tax by making it easier to understand, more convenient . . . and less expensive . . . They also argue that a flat tax rate will substantially reduce tax avoidance and evasion.

They go through and make a number of other observations with respect to the flat taxers' marketing regime. They go on further to say:

In spite of the apparent urgency of simplifying the tax system, however, the proposition that flattening the tax rates will do so is patent nonsense. None of the difficulties of understanding the Act, the mistakes that professionals make in filing returns, the wrong answers that Revenue Canada agents give in answering taxpayers' questions over the telephone, or the headaches involved in filling out a tax return, has to do with the applying the tax rates.

One of the things the government didn't bring forward in the budget nor have brought forward in any aspect of this debate is what administrative enhancements will be required in Treasury to incorporate this changeover. We are going to have to have our own fully staffed department for the filing of provincial returns. Perhaps they'd like to make that submission and proposal to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. That way the public would clearly know how much it is going to cost us to file our tax returns provincially, Madam Speaker.

That is what we are going to be doing with the flat tax proposal, and most certainly there are public implications to that. There are budget implications and there are policy implications, all of which should go to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations for review so we fully disclose to Albertans exactly what are the benefits, what are the costs, and what are the shortfalls that a flat tax regime will result in in Alberta. That is key, and it's key to the amendment this afternoon.

I'd like to summarize by just further citing from the policy alternatives article a citation relative to the myth of reduced tax evasion.

A claim frequently made to justify flat tax rates is that lowering income rates will lead to less tax evasion. This argument is particularly popular in the business press. In the heady days of supply-side economics, it was often suggested that cutting marginal tax rates could be revenue neutral, partly because lower marginal rates would lead to greater reporting of income.

The argument has a particularly peculiar ring to it when it is made by the rich themselves or their representatives. It hints of political blackmail. In effect, they are arguing that their taxes should be reduced because, if they are required to pay the [same] amount the democratic majority deem to be their fair share, they will subvert the political will by engaging in criminal activity.

A very valid point.

In any event, even accepting that the argument is made in good faith, the claim that evasion can be reduced by flattening the tax rate is clearly [false].

Again, an excellent article for those interested in truly examining this regime, Madam Speaker, which can be read and accessed through the Legislature Library.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Now, there are a number of other studies, and the final one I'd like to refer to this afternoon – well, actually there are a couple that I'll mention. I was particularly interested in the book published by an elected member of our federal House, Dennis Mills, who has really gone to quite extraordinary efforts to advance the single tax proposal system. I did have an opportunity to look at both his book and report titled The Single Tax, a proposal for tax reform. The book was published in 1990, I guess I would say, Mr. Speaker, and while I'm certainly not an advocate nor am I convinced that the flat tax proposal is a prudent one for Alberta to proceed with, I was quite impressed by the efforts that this hon. member has gone to to advance this concept.

I can't say that I have seen this kind of documentation on another issue perhaps to this degree from an hon. member of the federal House, and really he's to be commended. He obviously believes very strongly in reform and in the flat tax system, and while I don't agree with him on its benefits, I think his efforts are to be commended. For those that want further ammunition about why a flat tax system is good, then certainly Dennis Mills' publications are good reading.

The last sort of section of comments, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to make – and I did raise these earlier in debate – are with respect to the Auditor General's concerns surrounding a number of miscalculations or an underrepresentation of expenditures that occurred across quite a number of ministries. It probably would even be safe to say that a majority of ministries in the last fiscal year that was audited had underestimated revenues and therefore received from the Auditor General reservations about that. Now, I haven't seen any accounting by the government as to what the impact of this regime will be on revenues. I'd be most encouraging to the hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer to provide that. I think there have been some different variations, because what has been provided in the Fraser Institute study says $500 million, and I'm not sure if the Acting Provincial Treasurer's estimates were in fact that high. But in that earlier citation that I read, the estimates were around $500 million.

That may be very straightforward, and certainly in the era of this government having surpluses that reach the degree of $3 billion or $4 billion, that can be accommodated, but that may not be the case in the future, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, I state my reservations and opposition to Bill 18 and my support for the amendment before us.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're sort of operating under the gun here, all too familiar in this Assembly, as this section of the debate is under the gun of closure. We're dealing with an amendment that would refer Bill 18 to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, and I would like to have my comments heard and recorded in Hansard as evidence for that referral motion. There is tremendous controversy surrounding the content of Bill 18 and the merits or the lack of merits of a single-rate or a flat tax. I will be making some reference to that controversy, all, as I say, in support of the amendment, which I will ultimately be voting in favour of.

Earlier today we had an example of some of the controversy. The Acting Provincial Treasurer tabled a report that says that Bill 18 and the flat tax would be a good thing. Then I had an opportunity to table a report by Professor McMillan that says that the single-rate tax wouldn't be such a good thing. We have dueling experts and expertise on this matter, Mr. Speaker. It's very clear that there is one thing that's agreed on by all parties, and that is that the effects of a flat tax are always to disproportionately affect taxpayers at the margins, at both ends, and to then clump up taxes paid into the middle. Another thing that's agreed to by people on both sides of the flat tax argument is that unless you modify a flat tax by some form of exemptions or other limitations, it will always reinforce unfairness.

Now, I have found it very interesting in this debate as it has progressed that the government is no longer referring to Bill 18 as a flat tax bill. The language that was used early on by the then Treasurer, by the Acting Treasurer, by the Premier, and by others was that there is a flat tax. There's a certain ideology that's attached to a flat tax, and it seems that that ideology has been adopted by the newest federal political party on the scene, as they are pursuing still the language and the rhetoric of a flat tax. Interestingly, the government of Alberta has stopped talking about Bill 18 and defending a flat tax and has started talking about Bill 18 by saying that it's progressive.

In fact, I think I heard the words from the Acting Provincial Treasurer today – and I can always review Hansard – to the effect that it's the most progressive of all. I find that very interesting, because of course what it is sort of a halfway flat tax. I will admit that it's probably better described as a single-rate tax. That being said, it still has many of the dangers that have been pointed out and,

I would say, most properly pointed out by my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview in many of the studies that she cited.

Mr. Speaker, it's very clear that the government itself is somehow apprehensive about going down this path. When the Acting Provincial Treasurer stood in the Assembly earlier and said that the Official Opposition didn't have a clear picture of its own taxation policy and referred to something that frankly I wasn't aware of, it struck me that the Acting Provincial Treasurer could very well have been speaking about the provincial government in not being clear about its tax policy.

If we go back to Budget '96, we see some very clear statements. We see statements made about how the deficit elimination taxes are going to be handled. We see statements about delinking, and as we progress through budget years '97, '98, '99, we see that elements of the tax plan continue to be reintroduced and massaged. But the bottom line is that the government has flip-flopped in terms of the deficit elimination taxes, where they were going to remove the .5 percent flat tax or the 8 percent surcharge first. The government has flip-flopped and changed its mind on where the personal exemption levels should be set. The government has changed its mind in terms of whether it should be an 11 percent flat tax or a 10.5 percent flat tax. The government keeps on changing its mind on whether it's going to issue rebate cheques or whether it's going to do something about the fuel taxes that Albertans pay at the gas pumps.

So if there has been any flip-flopping and casting about for exactly the right thing to say and do according to the wind, it would be on the part of the government, which seems to be very uncertain about the direction it wants to take its tax policy. That disturbs me, because we would expect far more certainty from the government. I'll say this, Mr. Speaker: tax policy is very complicated. Sometimes a mistake will be made in a calculation here or there, or you'll take a look at one set of numbers and be able to come up with several different interpretations, but clearly the government has had this in mind as one of its objectives for long enough that you would expect them to get it right.

There was another issue that came up earlier today that I think is relevant to the referral motion on Bill 18, Mr. Speaker, and that's this. Earlier in this session Written Question 219 was debated and then eventually responded to in the House. What Written Question 219 asked for was:

What information has been prepared by or for Alberta Treasury on how much of the $35 million economic offset or revenue recovery projected in 2001-02, as cited on page 17 of Budget 1999: Government of Alberta Fiscal Plan, results from the reduction of the 8% surtax, from the increase in the personal and spousal exemptions in the 1999 federal budget, from the reduction of the 0.5% flat tax, from the increase in the personal and spousal exemptions to $11,620, and from the introduction of the 11 percent single rate tax?

That was all a direct quote from sessional paper 439/2000.

Mr. Speaker, the answer starts off with the words:

No information has been prepared by or for Alberta Treasury on how much of the economic offset or revenue recovery in 2001-02 results from the various components of the tax plan.

As striking as that admission may be, it was further heightened in my mind because the Acting Treasurer tabled a paper today that he said was a study of the economic offset prepared as a result of the work done by the Alberta Tax Review Commission. Now, if I've missed something, I would invite the Acting Provincial Treasurer to stand up and let me know.

DR. WEST: Time frame. What was the time frame?

MR. SAPERS: The Treasurer is inappropriately interjecting, Mr. Speaker, but what he's saying is: what was the time frame? Well, the written question is very clear. It simply says: what information has been prepared regarding the economic offset? It's not limited to a time frame, and the answer is equally clear. It says that "no information has been prepared by or for Alberta Treasury."

I would like to know, when that question was answered, why we weren't advised of the paper which the Acting Provincial Treasurer tabled today. If he's going to say, "Well, it's because it's a brand-new paper; we didn't know about it, and we didn't have it before," I guess that's an argument he can make, but it would seem to me that that's an argument that would hold much water, Mr. Speaker.

Here we have another example of not being able to get straight answers to straightforward questions, of the government withholding information that's relevant to the debate and to this proposed restructuring of the tax plan of Alberta. Again, it's more information, more evidence, Mr. Speaker, as to why Bill 18 should not be read a second time and why the whole subject matter ought to be referred to a standing committee, an all-party committee of the Legislature that can take a look at all of these matters and hold the government accountable for how it deals with information requests, particularly regarding tax plans, which affect every Albertan in their pocketbook.

Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of other areas I would appreciate the government clearing up. Also earlier today the Acting Provincial Treasurer, in response to a question asked by one of his colleagues about what reports would bolster the government's arguments about a flat tax, said that one of the reports that would support the government was a report written by Robert Shapiro in 1996 titled Why Fairness Matters: Progressive Versus Flat Taxes. The Acting Provincial Treasurer has not once but now twice indicated that Shapiro's work would lend credibility to the government's arguments that a single-rate tax would be the right way to go. But what Shapiro argues in his paper is for progressivity, and in fact on page 14 he makes the very simple statement that "ultimately, progressive taxation has the better of the argument." It goes on to say that flat taxers may make a moral argument, but progressive taxers are right.

So here we have again the Acting Provincial Treasurer standing up and arguing that this study, the Shapiro study, would support the government, when it doesn't. It's not the first time that we've seen reports – I remember the then minister of education, who's now the Minister of Health and Wellness, standing up and tabling a whole series of kindergarten reports and saying that they would support the government. Of course, when we reviewed those reports, they didn't. So this isn't the first time the government has done this.

Mr. Speaker, again the Treasurer also talked about the Cassidy/Ruggeri/Van Wart report. It doesn't add any support to the government's argument whatsoever. The report done by three people who at the time were employed by Alberta Treasury very clearly says that the only basis of comparison is if they're revenue neutral, and Bill 18 does not propose a revenue-neutral tax plan. The only basis of comparison would be if all elements were the same, and even then it's only qualified in terms of what they were doing, because what their study was trying to accomplish was to provide an index for measures of progressivity.

So, Mr. Speaker, they don't support a single-rate tax. In fact, they go out of their way to say that they would not be supporting any one particular kind of tax scheme over another. All you have to do is look at the conclusion, where it says – and I quote – that it is not obvious that a measure that attempts to isolate the distributional implications of a tax function independently of income distribution provides a meaningful index of the impact of the tax function on social welfare. End quote.

Mr. Speaker, all you have to do is read the conclusion. Again, I just question why the government would rather offhandedly reference this report and that report and other reports and give the impression that their position is being supported when in fact there are different conclusions being drawn in the studies.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope there has been enough discussion on Bill 18 in the Assembly at this point that it's very clear that Alberta Liberals are not opposed to tax cuts nor are Alberta Liberals opposed to tax reform.

MR. LUND: Your leader has never, ever, ever, ever put one in.

MR. SAPERS: I just thought I'd wait, Mr. Speaker, because I didn't know whether the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development was going to rise on a point of order or why he was making noise.

Mr. Speaker, it's very clear that members of the Official Opposition are not opposed to changing the tax system and are not opposed to tax cuts. In fact, we've been arguing for several years that there should be tax relief. It was Alberta Liberals who first raised the issue of removing the so-called deficit elimination taxes. It was Alberta Liberals who talked about the problems with bracket creep and urged this government to index brackets long before they took up the battle cry of bracket creep and indexation.

We have been searching for alternatives that would allow us to maintain a progressive system that would allow tax fairness, would allow a distribution of tax cuts across all categories of income earners in this province. Yes, we had looked at what would happen if you changed the rate but stayed linked to Ottawa. We looked at what the effect would be if you delinked and didn't change the rates. We looked at moving to a five- or a six-rate system. Mr. Speaker, we also wanted to include in our tax plan some simplicity, some predictability. We did not want to be sort of at the end of the line once Ottawa decided to do something, so we believe that the unlinking process is a good one to go through. Of course, any Alberta Liberal tax plan would be indexed to protect taxpayers against bracket creep.

So, Mr. Speaker, what we finally came up with is an alternative to this government's version of a flat tax. That would be a tax that is progressive, that still eliminates the lowest income earners from the tax rolls, that has a zero rate for those income earners, and that maintains the high personal exemption, but it has two or three very important differences from the government plans.

Number one, it is a truly progressive system. It would call for a 10 percent rate for the majority of income earners and tax filers in Alberta and then a 12 percent rate for those very few at the very top of the scale, who would get the benefit of the 10 percent rate on the first approximately $100,000 of their income anyway, Mr. Speaker.

Another major difference between our plan and the government's plan is that it does not shift the burden in a disproportionate way to the middle-income earners. It would also allow Alberta to stay competitive, to be able to still claim that it has a very attractive low tax environment, but it gets rid of the lack of fairness that's in the government's proposal.

Mr. Speaker, there are many, many reasons why we would want to see Bill 18 referred out of this debate and into the committee. One is because of the confusion that's been created in the minds of Albertans because of the government's misinformation and misrepresentation of academic work.

Number two is because there are alternatives that are not being well examined. There's the Alberta Liberal fair tax alternative proposal, which was released today. There are the alternatives suggested by Professor McMillan in his paper which I tabled today titled Alberta's Single Rate Tax: Implications and Alternatives.

Another reason why, Mr. Speaker, is because ultimately a flat tax policy is an unfair policy. We believe that the more the public has a chance to become familiar with the government's plans for taxation, the more they will realize that it's an unfair policy, and the government will be convinced as well that it has been going down the wrong path. There would be no harm in the government recognizing that they need to now put their words of support for progressivity into action, and they could certainly amend Bill 18, because it's very comprehensive, to institute a middle rate for the middle-income bracket.

Mr. Speaker, just before I conclude, let me say that we've had the experience here of having both the government's tax bills, 19 and 18, under closure. I have introduced an amendment to Bill 19 which would cause both deficit elimination taxes to be removed at the same time in the current taxation year. Because of the fact that we're under closure on Bill 19 and we would have no other opportunity, that amendment had to be brought in. If Bill 18 progresses through the Assembly, if this referral motion should fail, then of course we'll be looking at subsequent amendments to Bill 18, because there is a section in Bill 18 which directly relates to the amendments in Bill 19. But it's simply a matter of procedure, a matter of timing, and a matter of sequencing in terms of how these amendments have to be brought in.

I hope the government won't use the quirks of the House and their own scheduling as any way to sidetrack the argument and to suggest that the Liberal opposition wants Alberta taxpayers to keep on paying those deficit elimination taxes, because we don't – it's clear that we want to put an end to that now – or that somehow they're going to suggest that we want to be unfair to one group of taxpayers or another. Of course, Mr. Speaker, obviously our proposal seeks, as its very purpose, fairness in the tax system.

Mr. Speaker, with those comments I look forward to the rest of the debate. I hope that all members now recognize the dangers of proceeding with Bill 18 as it has been put forward by the government and will support this referral motion so that we can have more study, so that we can come to the place and time when we can put forward a tax plan that will be fair, that can be unanimously supported, and that would be the best social policy for Alberta and the best fiscal policy for all taxpayers.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of the referral motion, which is asking that Bill 18 be withdrawn and the subject matter reviewed by the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. There's no doubt that the existing taxation system, the personal income tax system, needs improvement. There's lots of room to improve it. There's room to provide relief from tax to low-income Albertans, and there's a need to make sure that indexation to inflation is in place. So I'm simply arguing that the particular change they propose in Bill 18 is not the way to go. This is not to say that changes in the income tax system are not needed or required.

If we refer the bill to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, it provides Albertans an opportunity to engage each other in debate more thoroughly on a bill that will have serious and long-range ramifications for income distribution in this province, for the structure of income equality in the province, and for the revenues of the province. So certainly the bill is important. It's very, very important. It deserves more attention than has been received at this stage in the current session, so it would indeed be advisable to refer it for more thorough study, as this referral motion suggests. Such a referral is obviously justified for all kinds of reasons, including because the principles underlying the bill are fundamentally and fatally flawed, as many citizens tell us.

I'll put on record the thoughts of one ordinary citizen, whose letter I tabled in the House this afternoon, his arguments as to why he thinks that we, this Assembly, and Albertans need more time to consider this bill. There's no opportunity at this point to review these principles at second reading, particularly with the hammer of closure hanging over our heads.

Bill 18 is seen by Albertans as unfair. The unfairness of the flat tax contained in Bill 18 is summed up well in the following quote from Professor Melville McMillan of the department of economics at the University of Alberta. Dr. McMillan was writing in an article which appeared earlier this year in the Parkland Post. I quote:

Alberta's proposed single rate tax will shift a greater share of the tax burden to the middle income groups. This consequence is not advertised by the Alberta government, nor by its Tax Review Committee report. Indeed, this result is masked by the plans for a simultaneous reduction in incomes taxes. As a result, the significant shift in tax structure [as opposed to amounts of tax] has not been well recognized or debated.

While this expert, Dr. McMillan, makes this observation, we of course had the other day Dr. McKenzie visiting here from the University of Calgary, who holds the opposite view but not quite. Even Dr. McKenzie has not denied that a flat tax shifts the tax load onto middle-class income earners. He just tried to justify why this shift is justifiable, rather than saying it won't happen. In spite of this difference of opinion among experts and concern among Albertans, the government continues to deny that this shift is taking place.

More recently, as a matter of fact yesterday, I received another paper, also prepared by Dr. McMillan, and its title is Alberta's Single Rate Tax: Implications and Alternatives. The numerous graphs and tables in this paper all show the same thing, that tax relief to those with higher incomes comes at the expense of middle-income earners. It's a lengthy paper, carefully researched, with about 10 different tables presenting convincing data to this effect.

In selling Bill 18, the government has made much of the fact that the increase in basic exemptions would take a large number of low-income Albertans off the tax rolls completely. That may well be true – and we would certainly be happy to see that happen – but other questions remain. Why would you help low-income earners, hurt middle-income earners, and give entirely unjustified gifts from the public purse to those who are already the most wealthy?

The other day the Acting Provincial Treasurer took exception when I pointed out that a certain well-known citizen of this province who made $1.9 million in salary and bonuses last year would pay $71,000 less provincial income tax should the government's flat tax scheme be implemented. I want to make it very clear that I'm not in any way casting aspersions on this individual. This is an example of the unfairness of the tax system that's being proposed.

However, I really question the fairness of someone with a $1.9 million taxable income having their provincial income tax bill cut by 26 percent while the typical middle-income family in Alberta will see at best a 10 percent tax cut and a typical middle-income single Albertan may see a tax cut of only 4 percent.

Last week the government announced some changes to supposedly ensure that all Albertans, regardless of income, at least saved a few dollars on taxes. That's exactly what we are talking about: a few pennies, maybe a dollar or two a day for singles or families in the middle-income groups, whereas those with incomes above $100,000 reap multi-thousand dollar tax savings.

The flat tax set out in Bill 18 is unfair to middle-income Albertans no matter what the rate is or what the level of personal exemption is. You only need to do some simple arithmetic to determine why this is the case. Under the existing income tax system the provincial tax rate on the first $30,000 of taxable income is 7.48 percent. This is 37 percent lower than the 10.5 percent flat tax as proposed in Bill 18.

The 2000 federal budget was not particularly progressive when it comes to taxation; however, the tax reduction in the federal budget was at least more evenly directed to all income groups, exposing once and for all the aggressive nature of the changes to the personal income tax system contained in Bill 18. The tax reductions announced in this year's federal budget were across the board, unlike the tax relief in Bill 18, which focuses tax relief exclusively on those with yearly incomes above $100,000 and provides little or at best token relief to middle-income earners.

In light of these facts it should surprise no one that those with annual incomes between $30,000 and $100,000 per year would be much better off under the existing progressive tax system than they would be under the radical neoconservative changes proposed in Bill 18.

I want to briefly quote from a March 15, 2000, Edmonton Journal editorial that aptly sums up the dilemma the Conservative government finds itself in.

Paul Martin didn't set out to expose Alberta's flat tax as the shallow and regressive idea it is, but he has.

With his new budget, the federal finance minister has underlined the fundamental flaw of the idea – that it shifts the tax burden away from the high-income people and onto middle-income people . . .

Paul Martin has stolen all the good that might have been delivered by Treasurer Stockwell Day's plan, and discarded the bad. His federal budget provides tax cuts and ends bracket creep, but it leaves in place the three-bracket tax system, so the tax system remains progressive.

If Alberta had left its provincial income tax rate pegged to the federal rate, our provincial taxes would be diving in tandem with that federal tax cut. Instead, we have a government scrambling to find a flat-tax rate that will camouflage the fact that the new system hurts middle-income people.

How much does a flat tax hurt middle-class people, Mr. Speaker? The answer is a whole lot. For example, a single income earner making $30,000 per year will save only $106. A single income earner making $250,000 will save almost $8,000 under the flat tax scheme. Even worse, a single income earner making $30,000 will save only 6 percent on their taxes, whereas someone making $250,000 will save 24 percent.

The situation with families isn't much better. A middle-income family making $75,000 will save about $400 on their provincial income tax bill. A high-income family making $250,000 will save $6,300. In percentage terms the middle-income family will save about 8 percent on their income tax bill, whereas the high-income family saves about 21 percent.

Prior to reducing the provincial tax rate to 10.5 percent, some middle-income Albertans would have actually ended up paying more under the government's flat tax proposal. It must be pointed out that in order for middle-income earners to get even a few pennies in tax relief, the government had to cut personal income taxes by 25 percent. This translates into $1.3 billion of government revenues. Can Alberta really afford a tax cut of this magnitude without threatening health care, education, and other important government services, especially in the event of an economic downturn? These are serious questions, and they must be addressed by this committee if this House votes to support the referral motion before it. I really wonder whether the move to further tax cuts was carefully studied and considered or whether it was simply a knee-jerk reaction to the fact that the flat tax will hurt middle-income Albertans in the absence of huge tax cuts.

The Conservative government should admit the obvious: the former Treasurer's looney flat tax idea deserves to be consigned to the political graveyard of dumb ideas. However, true to form, the government is choosing to whistle in the graveyard instead. The Tories have come up with an even loonier idea of hitching both our tax rate and our personal exemption levels to track tax changes by the federal government, a kind of floating flat tax. That appears to be the logic behind the announced increase of the basic exemptions and the reduction in the tax rate. There is no logic other than this.

I thought the whole idea of delinking from the federal tax system was to free ourselves from the vagaries of tax changes in Ottawa. Now we seem to be reversing course and hitching ourselves back onto the federal tax system. What's missing is the obvious solution of scrapping the former Treasurer's looney flat tax and ensuring that Alberta's personal income tax system is at least as progressive as the current system.

There are a number of provinces across the country that are planning to move toward tax on income; however, not one other than Alberta is bringing in a flat tax. Even in Mike Harris's Ontario there's no flat tax. In fact, Ontario will have five tax brackets, ranging from 6.2 percent for those with low taxable incomes all the way up to 17.4 percent for those with very high incomes, and this is a recognition of the progressive model of taxation that has been prevalent in this country for the last 50 years.

No wonder the government has brought down the hammer of closure on Bill 18. It's only a matter of time before middle-class Albertans wake up to the fact that they are not being treated fairly by the changes proposed in Bill 18. One of those middle-class Albertans from whose letter I want to quote, Mr. Speaker, is Bryan Quinn of St. Albert. Mr. Quinn says:

I'm strongly opposed to your flat tax proposal because it is a grossly unfair way to redistribute $1.3 billion. Unequivocally, it increases the relative burden of taxation for the middle and upper-middle class [that is] (individuals earning, say, between $30,000 to $90,000). It is the excessive benefits bestowed upon the most wealthy in Alberta that clearly brands this a vulgarly regressive scheme! Yes, raise the threshold amount: indeed, the poorest and most needy among us should not pay any provincial tax whatsoever; but please scrap the flat tax element of Bill 18! Instead, a better formula must be devised primarily to lessen the squeeze on the middle class (the backbone of our tax base).

Whatever you do: don't rush this by ramming it through the Legislature! Can't you see the benefit of allowing true and real involvement and input from all levels of society so we all can share in its ownership? [And here he says] Mrs. O'Neill and Mr. Klein, don't sell out your constituents again! Can't you see you are being duped once more by certain greedy, self-serving Alberta millionaires who have your ear? These people are advising you poorly! Why do you "hear" only them? You are losing touch with the average citizen!

I think Mr. Quinn does indeed speak for the average Alberta citizen.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I close. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: A point of order?

Point of Order
Referring to Members by Name

MS HALEY: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It was just that he is referring to the Premier and a member of this caucus by their name. I think that's inappropriate.

AN HON. MEMBER: But he was quoting.

MS HALEY: Well, when you're in here, I believe the rules are that you do not refer to them by their names but in fact by their constituencies, hon. member. The last time I checked, that was the rule.

MS CARLSON: Your citation?

MS HALEY: I can't remember.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party on this point of order.

5:10

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I was reading a letter, and I was simply quoting from the letter, but I'm certainly open to your advice on the matter. As I understand it, quoting is permissible, addressing members by name is not.

Thank you.

MRS. O'NEILL: I'd like to speak to the point of order, because the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is quoting from a letter, but he did not say: quote, unquote. So quite frankly I think there is a very valid point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader of the third party, you have the document in front of you. Would you do the appropriate thing?

DR. PANNU: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I did start by using the word "quote." I may have missed concluding it with "unquote." I tried to close in response to the Government House Leader or the whip making the point. So I do apologize for not saying "unquote."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. Thank you. That ends that point of order, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has also concluded his debate.

Do I now recognize the hon. Minister of Gaming?

MR. SMITH: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise today to speak to the amendment on Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, and also I guess to stand and have an opportunity to debunk much of the socialist hack that we've heard throughout this debate and throughout other debates.

I have long since been proud to be born in this province and to be part of a province that values the entrepreneurial spirit, values a government that is a noninterventionist government, values a government that tries to eliminate regulations and is a government that is transparent, that is open, and that has actually made tremendous progress since 1993, but in particular, Mr. Speaker, since 1995, when we were the first government of any substance, of any size to run a deficit-free budget. I think that's critical, because from that platform we were able to move forward with repaying debt, which then gives you the strength to manage not only your finances but then start to eliminate your revenue side from the very taxpayers that give it to you; in other words, to start to be noninterventionist in their tax lives.

I think we have seen in this province, more than any other province in Canada, more than any other jurisdiction in North America a real commitment to people to do a couple of things. One is to pay less money for the amount of government they're getting. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I think it was Will Rogers, a famous American philosopher, who once said: just be thankful you're not getting all the government you're paying for.

Well, what we're trying to do in this administration is to deliver value and to deliver more government for less money, more government of what people talk about is important to them: the ability to understand how their government works; the ability to interact with their government; the ability to have fewer and fewer regulations; a government that wants to talk specifically in time frames such as Bill 19 points out, that the amendment as forwarded does not point out. The amendment that's here talks to a final taxation year to which section 3.04 applies prior to its repeal.

We've said in the bill, Mr. Speaker, that this is the 1999 taxation year, so we're giving rock-solid commitments. We're able to put together through a long process of good consultation from across Alberta, talking to people who get up every morning after 5 o'clock and are putting on everything from coveralls to blue suits to go out and earn money, because generally there's an economic maxim that everybody works to maximize profits to work in their own economic self-interest. What we want to be able to do is to allow them to maximize those profits by getting out of their pocket more and more, not having tax day being some day in July or the end of June but to try to move it up to reasonable times and to be able to let people take those dollars that used to be required to run a more expensive government, a more interventionist government but, through savings and through good fortune and through participation by Albertans, an ability to have a government that is cheaper. That's exactly the genesis of the Income Tax Amendment Act, and that's the genesis of the whole flat tax or single-rate tax proposal.

I've always felt, Mr. Speaker, that in the economy of Canada, in the rules and regulations of Canada you should be able to fill out your own income tax. It should not have to go to a professional, to an accountant, to somewhere where you have to pay somebody to give money to the government. I mean, if the government wants this form of taxation, why doesn't it make it easy? Why doesn't it make it understandable? Why doesn't it make it as simple as calculating a handicap or a golf score? I know it would be absolutely as straightforward and transparent and honest as any good golf handicap would be.

Why should a bricklayer have to pay an accountant to fill out income tax? Why can't a bricklayer who has worked hard and made $60,000, $70,000, $80,000, or $40,000, whatever the salary range may be, Mr. Speaker – why isn't that individual able to take his or her own tax form and fill it out in a reasonable fashion? Something that's facile, that's easy to understand, that's quick to complete, and where he doesn't have to worry about those famous words: the government is trying to cheat me out of something, quote, unquote. This government is not trying to cheat anybody out of anything. This government wants to deliver good, good government for the least cost, and I think that's a very good and strong objective.

We have to continue to change. There are external pressures that you can see with the development of the act or the development of Bill 18, and you can even see with the futility of the amendment that we're responding to external forces. You know, no man is an island, as is commonly said, and Alberta is not alone in trying to vie and compete for the best brains, the best businesses, the best citizens. Through a single-rate tax act those people who have those kinds of skills, lend those faculties to Alberta, are the people that have said, "I would like to be able to understand my own income tax act. I would like to be able to fill that document out by myself without having to worry about interference from an accountant or another individual that will cost me even more money to do something that should be simply done and quickly completed."

That's why, Mr. Speaker, I think that to respond to the dynamics of the international marketplace, now when you see the Financial Times in London, when you see the Wall Street Journal and they talk about Alberta, they talk about Alberta as being at the vanguard, being at the leading and the cutting edge of delivering a government that is conducive to attracting the best brains, that is conducive to keeping the best brains, that is conducive to maximizing its industrial strength and competitiveness, and for us actually to be an island of entrepreneurialism in a sea of socialism.

I think that's one of the great difficulties working as a provincial jurisdiction in this country, because with the malaise that the federal Liberals – and you can see so much similarity between the federal Liberal's mind-set and what we're hearing from the opposition. You know, Mr. Speaker, it's really, really a hard effort to continue to break through the socialist bonds that sit and fetter the tremendous potential in the economy of Alberta today. I think that we've got to continue to set the stage by putting forward these symbols, these opportunities, and this ability for people to capitalize on the very strengths that sit here in this great province today.

One of the major tax concessions delivered in the period from 1993 to '97, Mr. Speaker, was the provincial portion of the machinery and equipment tax. That tax amounted to about $160 million. There was great concern at the time that there would not be an opportunity to recoup those gains through facility expansion, through plant expansion, through building at the Carolines of the world, through building at the Joffres of the world, to be building the Syncrudes and the Suncors in Fort McMurray, the plants in Grande Prairie, the potato plants, the bud the spuds down in Taber. I mean, I think it's an absolutely terrific story what's happened.

So there was great fear and trepidation as we again walked into unexplored territory. At that time, the government struck a challenge to industry that said: we'll deliver if you deliver. At that point, as we know from all the studies that you see from the learned individuals from the University of Calgary, an excellent institution, to other work done by notaries around Alberta, there is really one fundamental fuel for economic growth. It's a four-letter word, Mr. Speaker. In the socialist world they don't like these kinds of four-letter words. That four-letter word is cash, money, long green. Without money nothing happens. Governments don't manufacture money; governments spend money. The only wise thing Pierre Elliott Trudeau ever said that I can remember was that governments don't have money; people have money. That's where governments get the money, from the people.

So by reducing this taxation, Mr. Speaker, and by eliminating the machinery and equipment tax, as a percentage of the investment that was gained in Alberta, today, one, there is no machinery and equipment tax for the provincial portion in Alberta. Secondly, there has been for the last five years anywhere from $30 billion to $45 billion worth of capital projects in play, ready to go, being invested, money being deployed in the province of Alberta, not in the city of Calgary, which doesn't produce one barrel of oil, doesn't have one cow, doesn't do anything with respect to the agricultural market, not in Edmonton, which is the seat of the capital of government. In fact, that investment is taking place Alberta-wide. As I've just recounted, it's taking place from Grande Prairie, Paddle Prairie, Rainbow Lake to Empress, Manyberries, Rocky Mountain House. I mean, the names and the level of investment are really endless. The McCain's investment in Taber is a wonderful story.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that what you see occurring throughout Alberta is a very strong message to all Albertans that, one, you can go to a world-class educational institution in this province after you've finished high school – a NAIT, a SAIT, a University of Calgary, a University of Alberta, a University of Lethbridge, one of the 26 postsecondary institutions in this land – and you can get a world-class education. Then you can return to Wabasca, to Smoky Lake, and then, Mr. Speaker, you can get world-class wages using your world-class education in a world-class industry.

It's this type of world-class income tax administration, it's this kind of world-class Bill 18, Bill 19, it's this kind of world-class government that allows that to occur. We've always said that we are not the initiators, but we do try very, very diligently to create the environment that allows people to succeed. Also, it allows people to fail. But they get the choice. It's not like a Liberal administration; it's not like an NDP administration, where you don't have choices, where government by taking so much money away from you starts to eliminate choice.

MR. LUND: Look at B.C.

MR. SMITH: I think a number of people from B.C. are looking at us. They're looking at us with envy, Mr. Speaker, because this is a government, this is an administration that has said clearly in a three-year business plan, goal 6, "Alberta will have a prosperous economy." That's why, Mr. Speaker, you have a Bill 18 and a Bill 19, the Income Tax Amendment Act. We will continue to promote the Alberta advantage, Mr. Speaker.

It says that we will undertake a business tax review to ensure business taxes are competitive. That's being done, and this single rate of taxation is a manifestation of good-thinking Albertans coming together in an Alberta tax review scenario and environment and being able to speak their minds and being able to say: "I believe very strongly in the Alberta advantage. I want to participate in it. I want to be able to help." By saying that, they want us to deliver a single rate of taxation that is easy to understand, reasonable, takes 192,000 people off the tax roll, and delivers $1.3 billion in taxation savings.

I can appreciate, Mr. Speaker, how members of the Liberal opposition and in fact the leader of the Liberal opposition would be opposed to this and would spend a great deal of House time debating this issue and being unsure and not wanting to take a step and saying: "Well, what will happen? We don't know. We're not sure." But, you know, there isn't one individual over there – and I'm particularly addressing this to the leader of the opposition party – that has any experience lowering taxes. That individual's total political experience has been focused on raising taxation, on increasing government spending. That paradigm is gone. The series of assumptions are changing. We are on the move.

It was Will Rogers, that very same Will Rogers, who said: even a dead man can keep up if you're going downriver. Well, they're trying hard to be either dead people or to keep on going downriver. But I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when you make the turn and you go upriver, that's when the oaring gets hard.

I think this has done a very, very laudable job of listening to Albertans' very concerns, of continuing to create the environment that attracts good people. As a matter of fact, when I think of the good people that are here looking at the amendment of Bill 19, looking at Bill 18, looking at the single rate of taxation, they are very much reflective of the Alberta advantage: trained professionals from all walks of life who have given up substantial amounts of money and in fact will be giving up more money to stay in here and serve Albertans in the Legislature. For that reason alone, I think you can see the commitment and the forthright, open, transparent approach that this government has taken to deliver a single rate of taxation to Albertans to be the first of so many things in this great dominion, Mr. Speaker.

Let's hope that this idea of single-rate taxation catches fire like a prairie grass wildfire, not one that is preset, like in Los Alamos, Mexico, by government but one that catches its own spark and one that grows its own direction by spreading the entrepreneurial spirit throughout Canada, to realize that Canada trades and has fabulous opportunities with the largest economic engine in the world. For us to be able to take advantage of that, this is but one component in the building block matrix of the Alberta advantage that starts to deliver real benefits to real Albertans.

You know, Mr. Speaker, we'll stay here until 12, 1 a.m., 2 a.m., 3 a.m. We'll see protesters fall from the walls. Close. We'll see opposition go. But, you know, Mr. Speaker, this is something that has to be done for the benefit of all Albertans, whether they're making minimum wage or whether they're making $100,000. It has to be done at a commitment level that can only be supported by Albertans. We want the opportunity to be able to leave this area and go out, speak with Albertans and talk about the real benefits of single-rate taxation and to take those chances and see a world-class educated individual working in a world-class industry making a world-class salary.

You know, Mr. Speaker, that might be at a banknote company in Barrhead. That might be at a plant in Leduc. It might be in Fort Saskatchewan. It can be just about anywhere in this great province, because this province is robust and bursting at the seams with opportunity. We need to give people the tools that allow them to succeed. That is why a single rate of taxation, Bill 18 and Bill 19, the parlance of this Assembly, has to be passed, has to be put forward.

We have to and we're obligated to, Mr. Speaker, go up and deliver that message and deliver it with conviction, with promise, with faith. The hope for a better tomorrow, the hope for more money in your pay packet, the hope for opportunity: that is what makes Albertans drill, that's what makes Albertans perform to an absolute maximum participation rate in the labour force. In fact, taking a look at the unemployment rate, we have continually had the first or second or third highest disposable level of income in Canada. We have had the most people participating in the labour force. In fact, the most number of men and women available for work are working in Alberta, the highest level of participation rate. We continually deliver in Alberta the highest employments rate.

Now I know the people want me to go on, but I can only stop and wish to go forward and support this bill for all Albertans, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, with unanimous consent. I'll ask the question. Is unanimous consent being provided by the members to the hon. Minister of Gaming to continue?

[Unanimous consent denied]

THE SPEAKER: That's very clear.

Due notice having been given by the hon. Government House Leader under Standing Order 21 and pursuant to Government Motion 19, agreed to earlier this afternoon, under Standing Order 21(2) I must now put the question on the amendment to the motion for second reading of Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, to withdraw the bill and refer the subject matter to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to table today containing quite a number of names from Calgary and Edmonton, including the riding of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. The petition urges "the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining the public health care system."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege today to submit a petition on behalf of 1,242 Albertans. This petition is asking the government to look at the possibility of requiring "a minimum of two people on shifts from dark to daylight." This brings a total of about 6,000 that we've submitted in this form, and there have been about 7,000 or so compiled that were in a form that was not presentable to the Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present to the Assembly today on behalf of 182 Albertans. They are from Calgary, Winfield, Leduc, Fort Saskatchewan, Edmonton, Sherwood Park, Kinuso, and Driftpile. These Albertans "urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a petition today signed by 253 Albertans opposed to the proposed development of the Spray Valley and asking that a wildland provincial park be created which protects all of the undeveloped parts of Kananaskis and Spray valleys.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I tabled last week now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise and request that the petition I presented on May 17, Wednesday of last week, be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned, petition the [Legislative] assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to give notice of the following motion:

Be it resolved that further consideration of any or all of the resolutions, clauses, sections, or titles of Bill 18, Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, shall, when called, be the first business of the committee and shall not be further postponed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that tomorrow I will move that Written Question 22, which is the last written question appearing on the Order Paper, be called.

I'm also giving notice that there are no motions for returns left appearing on the Order Paper.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 25

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2000

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, I beg leave to introduce a bill being the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2000.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table today five copies of a news release dated today regarding amendments to Bill 18 which will lower the single rate of tax to 10 and a half percent and raise the basic spousal exemptions to $12,900. Included also in this is a comparison between the interprovincial tax and health care insurance premiums across Canada. It shows a distinct Alberta advantage in all categories, and this one outlines fuel tax, payroll tax, tobacco taxes, provincial income tax, and a sales tax. I'd like to table that today so hon. members may peruse that.

The other thing I'd like to table is a letter put out by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business supporting the single rate of tax. It says:

A reduced rate, combined with higher personal and spousal [exemption thresholds] will ensure that all taxpayers receive a reduction in their personal income tax burden.

With it is a chart showing that when they surveyed Canadian Federation of Independent Business members across Canada, 80.6 percent agreed with the single rate of tax.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to table five copies of answers to Written Question 24. This is a little bit out of the ordinary as Written Question 24 was voted down because 1997-98 and '98-99 figures are not available due to the fact that students do not default for two years. However, in keeping with the open and honest government we are, I will give them the information that we have.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased also to table the requisite five copies of Motion for a Return 10. This was backup information that was reflected in the budget with the $54 million reduction in fees and services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table five copies of You Bet I Care, a Canadian-wide study on wages, working conditions, and practices in child care centres, the most comprehensive study undertaken on the status of employees and centres offering child care in our country's history. It notably points out that Alberta leads the country with the highest turnover rate of all provinces at 44.8 percent of their employees choosing to leave this sector.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I have four tablings this afternoon. The first is an Official Opposition amendment to Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. The effect of this amendment would be to put into law that whenever the federal tax rate changed, Albertans would have to get the full impact and the full benefit of that federal tax reduction.

Mr. Speaker, the second amendment I have is also a Liberal opposition amendment to Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. The effect of this amendment would be to ensure that the many, many, many regulations, the fine print, the detail in that tax act get referred to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations as soon as possible.

Finally, the third amendment that I have is a Liberal opposition amendment to Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. It is dated April 3, 2000, and it amends section 89(3) of the act to ensure that both the so-called deficit elimination taxes are removed in the same year, that being at the end of the 1999 taxation year.

My last tabling is the appropriate number of copies of a letter to Premier Klein from Jeanette Blond, who is very upset with the government's move towards private health care.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege today to table five copies of a letter from Deborah Dore. She's the lady that's behind the petitions dealing with workplace safety and staffing after hours. In the letter she points out the facts that if panic buttons are put in place, this just encourages robbers to be more aggressive, if security cameras are in place, all it does is encourage them to cover up, but if there are two or more people on staff, they usually walk by and try someplace else for a hold-up. So I'd like to table this letter where she reveals that information.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is from KIDSAFE Connection. It's a letter as well as a report asking for continued advocacy for strong childhood injury prevention and the implementation of bike helmet legislation in Alberta.

The second is an additional 74 responses to the Meadowlark Memo I sent out. The questionnaire responses that I received back indicated that 90.5 percent were against for-profit hospitals in the province of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's a letter from Helen Connolly, a grade 9 student in Lethbridge, asking that the government protect public health care and not allow businesses to make profit from health care.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of two tablings today. The first is from George Dlak of Canmore, and the second is from Richard Collier of Calgary. Both of them are opposed to the proposed Genesis development in the Spray Lakes area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of the Canadian Hockey Association's 83rd annual general meeting, which was hosted this past weekend here in Edmonton.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

MRS. SLOAN: I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, to rise this afternoon to introduce Mr. Raymond Gariepy, who is seated in the Speaker's gallery. Mr. Gariepy is the father of Antoine Gariepy, a legislative page in our Assembly and a Edmonton-Riverview constituent. He is the editor of the Alberta Teachers' Association newspaper and magazine, one of the most informative and interesting publications I've had occasion to read in my term of office as an MLA. I would ask Mr. Garipey to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted today to introduce a group of 20 students from the Parkland Immanuel school in the constituency of Edmonton-McClung. The students are accompanied by their principal, Mr. Rainier Van Delft, and Ms Marjorie Helder, their teacher. As well, Sandra Dykstra is the bus driver for the group. I would ask them to rise and receive the customary welcome of the Alberta Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure today to introduce to you and to the Assembly a majority of the Grande Cache council that were here with their administrator to speak with ministers about Grande Cache. As I introduce them today I would like them to stand, and then I would like the Assembly to give them a great welcome. The first one is Deputy Mayor Rene Moulun, councillor Gerry Verstraten, Gordon Frentz, Bernard Zeller, Gerry LeBlanc, and the administrator, Duane Dukart.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 49 students from Caledonia Park school in Leduc. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Paula Foley and Mrs. Brenda Schwer and by parent helpers, Mrs. Tracy Fitzner and Mrs. Dawn Lackie. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure today that I introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Laurena Byciuk. Laurena is a summer student in my office of Calgary-West, and she's also a constituent of mine. Laurena has just completed her first year of Mount Royal College, and she's in the interior design program. I would ask my guest to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to our Assembly members Ms Camille Ries. Camille has just joined my constituency office for the summer months through an excellent program, the STEP students' program of the government. Camille is a Calgarian, graduated from Mount Royal College, and is also studying at the U of C in political science. She has been very active in community-oriented work. I would like to ask Camille to rise and receive the warm welcome from the members.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure today to stand and introduce Aaron Roth. Aaron is a fourth-year student at the University of Lethbridge in political science, and he's also spending the summer as my STEP student in the office. This is the second year he's worked in my office in the summer, and it's a real reflection of the good quality students that come out of the University of Lethbridge.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two guests in the gallery today, and it's my pleasure to introduce them to you and through you to all members of the Assembly. The first guest is Mr. Jean-Marc Tremblay, who is joining my constituency office for the second summer in a row. He came back, and I appreciate that more than he'll know. He's employed under the STEP program, and he's bringing his considerable expertise and skills to the job.

With Mr. Tremblay is Mr. Kim Cassady, a former employee of Alberta Treasury, who is currently employed with the Legislative Assembly and manages the constituency office of Edmonton-Glenora. I think Mr. Cassady is still waiting to hear from Calgary-Egmont about those remarks.

In any case I would have Mr. Cassady and Mr. Tremblay please rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly David Linden and Anita vanderLeek and their six children: Lacey, Dania, Melissa, Brenton, Jevin, and Keisha. They are seated in the members' gallery and are my constituents from Bon Accord. It was Mr. Linden's last day with CKUA on Friday, May 19, and I would like to wish Dave good luck and best wishes in his new endeavours. At this time I would like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two guests to introduce this afternoon. Mrs. Edith Rafter, who is from Surrey, B.C., is the proud grandmother of Jason Cassady, who will be graduating from Ross Shep high school this week. She's accompanied by her daughter Pat Cassady, who is my constituency manager. So if they would both please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Andrew Hymes of Camrose. Andrew is working as an assistant in my constituency office in Camrose for the summer, and he is taking the day to become more familiar with the work of an MLA here at the Legislature. He is a graduate of the U of A in political science. He's in the members' gallery, and I'd like to ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Workforce Labour Dispute

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here we go again. This government has inflicted needless suffering and uncertainty and upheaval on Albertans and their families through mismanagement of public health care: unplanned slashing and cutting, underfunded regional health authorities, narrowly averted strikes in 1997 and 1999, Bill 37, Bill 11 rammed through. And now this: 10,000 health care workers who feel they have few choices left. Surgeries have been canceled, patients discharged prematurely, psychiatric patients sent home without needed support, and once again the government has thrown our health care system into chaos. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What contingency plans has the government put in place to avoid more uncertainty and upheaval for Albertans and their families?

MR. JONSON: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to point out, contrary to the impression that the Leader of the Official Opposition leaves, that the government of Alberta has funded the health care system of this province very well. We are ranked in the country as the highest per capita on an age-adjusted basis, and we are following up with placing funds that are available into high-priority areas.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the bargaining process, which I believe is being referred to, that is proceeding according to the bargaining structures of this province. We of course want very, very much to avoid any job action which would disrupt the system. Alberta Health and Wellness has been working with the regional health authorities and the Provincial Mental Health Board to every degree possible to put in place measures which will put the priority of the patient first and to provide continuing care as well as is possible.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that this crisis was foreseeable and avoidable since the 1999 health workforce study clearly warned of the crisis in workforce members, what discussions and real negotiations have taken place over the past year before government decided to roll the dice with our health care system?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of initiatives of government which relate to this particular area. We made announcements a year and a half ago with respect to our focus and resources being placed in terms of adding individuals to the health workforce in this province. In credit to the health care system those targets have been met today.

Also, in conjunction with Alberta Learning we have been expanding places in terms of preparation programs for health professionals and health workers, Mr. Speaker.

Overall, as I've indicated, we have been directing considerable additional funding to the health care system, Mr. Speaker.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that this government hand-picks and underfunds the regional health authorities as it sets health policy for this province, when will the government admit that its own mismanagement exists and assume a leadership role in addressing the multitude of issues in the health workforce?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated, we have a strategy. We have worked on the preparation of health care workers on that particular side of the needs of the system, and along with that we have been focusing on the importance of adding health care workers and professionals to the workforce. To the end of the last budget year over 1,200 additional nurses and LPNs and other workers in the system were added. That target was met.

With respect to looking to the future, of course we are preparing further. In this year's current budget and business plan we've added, for instance, internships with respect to the medical faculty. Alberta Learning has just recently announced additional places for the years ahead with respect to the health workforce.

Mr. Speaker, I think the record would show that in the negotiations that have taken place with other unions in the health sector – for instance, the United Nurses of Alberta – we were able to work through with the leadership of the regional health authorities doing the actually bargaining of course to a successful settlement there. Before that, the agreement with the Alberta Medical Association was reached.

I think that their agreements compare very favourably with other parts of Canada, and it shows the priority we're putting on health care.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Diagnostic Services

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On April 12 the Premier said in this Assembly:

If a doctor prescribes an MRI, that will be paid for by the publicly funded health care system whether it's in a hospital, Mr. Speaker, or whether it's in a private clinic.

He repeated a similar message in this Assembly on May 17, but, lo and behold, on May 18 the Acting Premier admitted: "If a person chooses to go outside the system to have a private MRI, it is not currently paid for." This sort of double-talk leaves Albertans wondering just how much they can do to stop the queue-jumping that this government allows in Alberta. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given the Premier's promise that medically necessary MRIs would be paid for whether done in private clinics or public hospitals, why are people paying privately for medically necessary diagnostic services in this province?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to indicate once again to the hon. leader across the way that the situation is that an individual recommended for an MRI in this province has that MRI available to them either through an MRI machine and team which is owned directly and operated directly by a regional health authority or through an MRI service which is under contract to a regional health authority in the province.

I would also like to indicate that once again we've put a considerable priority on expanding our diagnostic capacity in the province. We have added or will be adding MRIs in the Calgary regional health authority, the Capital health authority, the Chinook health authority, the Palliser health authority, the Red Deer regional health authority, the Mistahia health authority, and when our overall plan is implemented, we will have the highest rate of MRI scans available per person in this country. Further, Mr. Speaker, recently we announced a considerable amount of additional money for capital equipment, and this will certainly address other areas of the diagnostic system such as the high volume of CAT scans that we have needed in this province.

So I think the policy is quite clear, and certainly the government's commitment on a financial basis to this area of service is very well demonstrated.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, in case anyone missed it, the minister just contradicted the Premier.

Given that the Premier has said, "If it's medically necessary and it's prescribed by a doctor, then it is covered," can the minister please explain why on this request form from the Meadowlark MRI and CT centre, a doctor's referral and a signature are needed for a CAT scan, yet Albertans are still required to pay out of their pocket for that service?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the service is provided, as I said, directly through diagnostic treatment or services which are owned and operated directly by the regional health authorities and also in those cases in which the regional health authority has a contract with a private provider. With respect to those particular services all a person has to do is use their health care card, and the service is paid for and provided.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, will this minister commit today to stopping citizens from having to jump the queue by paying privately for medically necessary diagnostic services? What part of it doesn't he understand?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is quite interesting, because the hon. leader is reverting to her policy which has been somewhat submerged recently whereby you would allow a completely parallel private health care system to exist in this province.

With respect to diagnostic services, the MRIs for instance, I have outlined the approach that is taken there. They are paid for either in the public system that operates it directly or through the public system under contract to MRI services.

Timber Permit Bidding Process

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, a group of wood products companies has been charged, pleaded guilty, and convicted of rigging bids to buy timber lots. One of the companies was Shake Masters Manufacturing Inc., a rather familiar name for thousands of Alberta families with rotting pine shake roofs. During the course of a 1996 timber permit auction this government accepted bids of 63 cents per cubic metre for timber permits worth an average of $20.55 per cubic metre. My first question is to the minister of environmental protection. Why did the Alberta land and forest service accept bids for public resources at 3 cents on the dollar?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'll be happy to review that particular circumstance and take this question under advice.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Was it just negligence that the land and forest service gave away public resources at fire sale prices, or was it government policy to intentionally subsidize these companies by accepting low bids?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, my response is the same.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government lost over $316,000 in this one auction alone, can the minister advise the House exactly how much was lost or given away through these fixed auctions?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, my response remains the same.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week for the first time our Premier popped his head out of the sand long enough to finally recognize what the rest of us have known for years: Albertans aren't paying $500 or more for a private MRI to get a cheap thrill;

Albertans are paying big bucks for private MRIs to get a faster diagnosis and thereby to jump the treatment queue. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why has the government allowed a private MRI industry to develop which mainly exists to allow patients who can afford to pay for MRIs to receive medically required surgery or treatment ahead of those who can't?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. leader of the third party well knows, the matter of diagnostic services where the actual service or scan, if I can use that term, is being provided by a team of technicians – and we're talking about a particular specific procedure. This is outside the parameters and controls of the Canada Health Act. It is possible all across this country for those types of facilities to be operated. That is the situation in the country, and that does exist in other locations besides Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Queue-breaking is also a normal situation in the province. That's why I asked the question.

My second question to the minister: what monitoring does the government do to ensure that those who pay privately for MRIs don't use the diagnoses to get faster access to medically required surgery or treatment?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the control or the management with respect to waiting lists for any particular treatment or service in this province is primarily by physicians in conjunction with the administration of regional health authorities. Doctors make those decisions in a professional manner, as I understand it, and of course, physicians overall in the province are responsible with respect to ethical practices to the College of Physicians and Surgeons and their legislation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: if the government has no criteria to determine which MRIs are medically required, how will the minister be able to determine whether the CRHA is only paying for medically required MRIs in its contracts with the two Calgary private MRI clinics?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, government does not establish the criteria by which physicians practise medicine from a professional standpoint. Certainly government has a responsibility for the overall health care system, and I think that in keeping with what is generally the practice across this country, a great deal of the decision-making with respect to setting the priority for patients within the system is determined by the physicians in charge. As I've said before, the legislative structure that we have in the province which allows for that is the legislation which establishes and provides for various responsibilities being taken by the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Health Workforce Training

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our health care system has been experiencing an increased demand for nurses and other health care professionals. Those training in Alberta to become nurses can take the one-year licensed practical nurse, LPN, program, or the diploma or the degree registered nurse, RN, programs. However, nursing students who wish to transfer from the LPN to the RN programs find that they receive little or no credit towards the RN programs, which means that it takes longer for them to graduate and start contributing to the health care system. My first question is to the Minister of Learning. Why are there restrictions on transferability?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is an issue that the LPN association has brought up with me on several occasions. As you look back on the history of LPNs and RNs, what you find is that the two training programs were significantly different. As you see the sphere of procedures that each one can do starting to become closer and closer, I think this is something that we have to look at, that we have to change. We have to get LPN and RN to have at least some degree of transferability.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is the minister doing to address the issue of transferability?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I alluded to in the first part of my answer, I feel that this is something that's very important. We are certainly looking at it. As a matter of fact, in Grande Prairie there was recently a bridging program between LPNs and RNs. This, unfortunately, was discontinued because of lack of numbers.

We are now sitting down in Alberta Learning with the associations as well as with Grant MacEwan College to see if we can come up with something that can improve the transferability between LPN and RN. Will the transferability be one year for one year? I don't think so, Mr. Speaker, but certainly we can get it a lot better than it is right now.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, again to the Minister of Learning: what is the Alberta government doing to address the demand for more health care professionals?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government takes the health care workers and health care professionals extremely importantly. As I've stated a couple of other times in this Assembly, health care professionals and health care workers are the number one priority for the access fund in the year 2001. We have put a lot more spaces out there. There are roughly 200 to 300 more that are coming in, and it is something that we are continually looking at.

I will comment, though, specifically on one issue, and that is the issue of physicians. Earlier on in this session the opposition tabled reports from the famous Barer/Stoddart health care economists. Well, Barer/Stoddart were the ones who recommended that there be a 10 percent decrease in the number of physicians across Canada. Mr. Speaker, we have now learned, we have now seen the craziness of that, and indeed we are suffering the consequences of that. Yet these are the health care economists that the opposition chooses to use.

Mr. Speaker, we take health care professionals extremely importantly, and we are looking at putting significantly more out, and we'll be doing that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Timber Permit Bidding Process

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A July 4, 1994, report called A Review of the Timber Permit Program was prepared for the Northern Alberta Development Council. On page 33 the report recommends that rates charged for Crown timber permit sales should be comparable to that charged for other dispositions in Alberta.

Severely restricting the available bidders on permits will result in cooperation (collusion) amongst the bidders and consequently in a poor return to the province on the sale of permits.

My questions are to the minister of environmental protection. Why did the province persist in a bidding system that invited collusion even when the province had been warned against such a system?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, in answer to a previous question asked by the hon. leader of the opposition, I gave a response that I would take this question under notice, and I intend on doing the same.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that one of the objectives of the commercial use of the permit program was to prepare and "provide a fair return to the province on the sale of timber," is receiving 63 cents for something that is worth over $20 what this government considers a fair return for Alberta taxpayers?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the question remains the same; the response remains the same.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another question for the minister of environmental protection: did this government ignore the recommendations of its own report because a policy decision had been made by this government that they would use public money and assets to prop up, subsidize, and promote pine shake manufacturers?

MR. MAR: The response is the same, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Career and Technology Studies Funding

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently had the opportunity to visit McCoy high school in Medicine Hat and observe their CTS classes. For those of us who didn't go to school in the last five years, CTS is career and technology studies, and it's what we used to refer to in my day in high school as home economics and shop classes and typing and business skills, those types of classes, although they're significantly different in this day and age. One of the issues that was discussed between myself, the teacher, and the principal was the difficulty that CTS classes pose from an administration point of view because they are completed in modules and funded only after students have completed individual modules. My questions today are to the Minister of Learning. Why is this course funded significantly differently than every other course that's offered in high schools?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The reason CTS courses are funded on a per credit enrollment is that these courses are taken over a period of time. You have some students that have the ability to take the course very, very quickly. You have some students that will take it over perhaps one year or even two years. The school jurisdictions are given an advance based on last year's credit enrollment.

Interestingly, Mr. Speaker, I as well have heard a lot of negativity about this type of funding, but we did do a funding review back in the spring of 1999, and at that time the people from around the province said that they wanted the CEUs on the CTS to stay the same. It is something that we do need to take a look at though.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given the statement of the minister, would the minister, then, explain some of the alternatives that have been proposed to replace this type of funding?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the learning system it is very hard to look at one aspect of the learning system in isolation. We are presently undertaking to look at all the funding in education. We are attempting to make it as easy as possible and as simple as possible. We do not want teachers, we do not want administrators spending a lot of time filling out paperwork when their jobs are actually to be in the classroom.

Mr. Speaker, we are currently undertaking a review of the funding formula, and we will be looking at the outcomes. CTS and the whole CEU issue will certainly be one that is looked at under this new committee.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I had a good conversation with the teacher and the principal that day in the school, they had some pretty good ideas for alternatives. My question is: would the minister be prepared to entertain alternatives at this point?

DR. OBERG: Yes, absolutely, Mr. Speaker. We are constantly looking at ways to improve the education system, to improve the learning environment for the student, and it would be absolutely ludicrous of me if a good idea came forward not to listen to it. So I would invite the hon. member to pass on to the teacher and principal that if they have ideas, bring them forward, and we certainly will look at them, because if we can find a better way we will institute it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

Protection of Privacy

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Premier was critical of the federal government for building a national data bank without the consent of individual Canadians. He went so far as to call it an "insidious . . . scheme." But even as the Premier attacks Ottawa over that particular issue of privacy, we see in this province the Department of Government Services developing with seven other departments a, quote, gateway to a wide range of government services including consumer information, registration information, licensing information, and other government services, close quote. This will involve linking other government bodies that provide registration/licensing information services, and it will keep a log on every single call made by a citizen to a department of the government of the province of Alberta. To the minister responsible in this province for the protection of our privacy, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what steps has this minister taken to ensure that the data collection project of the Department of Government Services will not mean a centralized data bank with all kinds of personal information about individual Albertans?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member is referring to the central data bank that the federal government has in place. We have no process whatsoever that leads to this type of process, and at this stage there is none contemplated. Ultimately, we do not have any intention of setting up a central database.

It's interesting to note that the agreements, Mr. Speaker, with the federal government are largely there to help people. They're there to expedite those people who may be in need. Ultimately, the process has to be designed so it is there and available to those people that are in need, and to deny those people the information would hardly be right and hardly be the proper thing to do.

MR. DICKSON: I thought I just heard Jane Stewart speaking, Mr. Speaker.

My follow-up question will go to the Minister of Government Services. My question is this: will the data from the single centralized call centre be linked in any way to the registration data bank?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The gateway project is one that is to provide services to Albertans so that when they inquire about information on government programs, they in fact have somebody that actually picks up the phone and answers the question for them. The way this project is envisioned and has been recommended is that general information, which is probably about 80 percent of the calls that come through to government offices – where do I get to get a health care card from; where do I get a fishing licence from; how do I access tourism information? That kind of data that comes through is answered immediately, and people in the province of Alberta have access to information from government readily available to them.

Now, the key to this project that I think is fundamental – and maybe the hon. member opposite didn't quite understand that – is that if the person requires information that pertains to them on a personal or confidential level, the linkage will be right back to the various departments. We will not be moving people from 19 departments into one central area. They will be linked, and the person is transferred immediately into that area so that their information and the confidentiality is there. The information on that . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, the yapping that's going on next door is unbelievable.

We're trying to explain that we do not have a comparable database as has been explained by the federal government. Personal information that goes back to the various departments will in fact stay there. It will not be part of a call centre environment. The people using the call centre will be asking for information from the government in a general sense. They may even be relieved to know that there'll actually be a person that will pick up the phone and give them the information when they call in. So I'd ask the hon. member not to confuse the two areas.

Other information that we do have in various departments: of course we are subject to the FOIP legislation that the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo is abundantly knowledgeable on.

MR. DICKSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, my follow-up question is right back to the same minister. Why should Albertans be any more comfortable with your Department of Government Services controlling large amounts of data about them – remember, we're talking about 12 million registry transactions every single year – than they are with what we discovered with the federal government and the department of HRDC?

MRS. NELSON: Because, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the information that we have has been very, very clearly identified in the various aspects. In land titles we have people's names and addresses and the legal descriptions of the property involved. You could access information as to who holds the mortgage on a piece of property. That is available through our land registries. Under our vital statistics we have, naturally, people's names and addresses, place of birth, marital status. We have under motor vehicles, again, names and addresses, date of birth, height, weight, phone numbers.

This type of information is not the type of information that has been criticized for being available, like income tax information, health information. Those are not part of this system at all. There is not a central database in this government. The information that is on taxation information is in a different area. The information that is on health is in a different area. It is not part of this system.

Always keep in mind that we are governed under the most rigorous freedom of information and privacy act in this country, and you know that, Calgary-Buffalo. You know that. You were part of the team that put that together. It has been reviewed by our Ethics Commissioner and Privacy Commissioner, and he has assured us that our FOIP legislation is intact and is securing Alberta's information.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Food Regulations Review

MR. TANNAS: Thank you. My questions today are to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. The department's current food regulations review seems to have looked at the farmers' markets in Alberta and is considering regulatory changes which may require prepared foods to be done only out of approved kitchens. Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness: will these proposed changes adversely impact the traditional church tea and bake sales, pie sales, and other food-related church activities, all of these items being prepared in the kitchens of congregational members?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think that in the whole matter of food inspection/farmers' markets we need to just review for a moment a bit of the background to farmers' markets in this province. As I recall, they began in the 1970s. The whole concept of the farmers' market was one whereby locally grown and developed or processed food products would be sold in a farmers' market. They would come from the immediate area. They would be provided by the farms and community members. That is the way the whole farmers' market movement, if you can call it that, in the province began.

The number of farmers' markets has gone from the initial number of 16 to I think today we have well over a hundred farmers' markets operating across the province. The whole idea was to provide a retail outlet from the farms directly to the consumer, and there were seen to be many advantages with that. When sold, the fresh produce of course provided an additional source of income to farm families across the province. This has been the situation for a number of years, Mr. Speaker.

The process that is in place is that there are certain basic requirements that farmers' markets have to meet when they're established under the auspices of Alberta Agriculture, and upon meeting those basic requirements established by Alberta Health and Wellness, approval is given to the market.

Now, the situation we have today . . .

THE SPEAKER: Thank you very much, hon. minister, but brevity is very important here too.

The hon. Member for Highwood.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary is again to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the proposed changes adversely impact the turkey suppers that are major fundraisers for many communities all across this province and for the churches across the province?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, there are issues with respect to farmers' markets particularly as they apply to the regional farmers' market now changing rather dramatically to being in some cases markets which have, you might say, traveling food suppliers both in terms of immediate consumption and in terms of purchase going around the province. It's become in many cases a much more provincewide commercial operation, and the current discussion about regulations deals with that particular development as far as farmers' markets and possibly the need for more regulation of farmers' markets with respect to that new expansion of the farmers' market concept.

With respect to the teas and the suppers, Mr. Speaker, I do not anticipate that there'll be any major change with respect to regulations in that area, and in fact that is not our focus whenever it is that we change regulations in this particular area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary is again to the Minister of Health and Wellness. While I'm encouraged by his last comments, I wonder if the proposed changes will adversely impact school councils, lodges, fish and game associations, Girl Guides, Boy Scouts, churches, and so on that have potluck suppers which are again prepared in nonapproved kitchens.

MR. JONSON: No, Mr. Speaker, at least as far as one can predict the discussion in this area. There are some emerging issues with respect to regulation of farmers' markets. I've tried to indicate that they are focusing, in my judgment, at this particular point in time on what might be called the commercial, the larger, as I said, moving food outlets that are becoming a part of farmers' markets across the province but not the local types of events that the member is referring to.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Fairview Hospital X-ray Machine

MS LEBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On May 10, when the Official Opposition asked about the high levels of radiation that the X-ray machine in Fairview was emitting, the Premier said:

When did this leader of the Liberal opposition learn about this situation? Has she been keeping it under her hat . . . They have no concern whatsoever [about] public safety.

Now, what I find extremely odd is that the Mistahia health region made a request to this government which was turned down in March for special funds in order to replace their X-ray machine. So this government has known for a long time about the problems with the X-ray machine in Fairview. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that the X-ray machine in Fairview has been emitting harmful levels of radiation for over four years, can the minister explain to those patients why he has exposed them to this health risk for such a long period of time?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, funds have been provided at an increased rate for the purchase of capital equipment to regional health authorities across the province. The regional health authorities make decisions as to what pieces of equipment need to be replaced within their region, whether it's an X-ray machine or a fluoro machine or some other piece of needed equipment. The health authority of the Mistahia region has had funds on a fair and equitable basis compared to other regional health authorities in the province.

Now, with respect to the X-ray machine in Fairview, Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that the machine has been tested or examined with respect to emissions. To this particular point in time the emissions from the machine have been within acceptable levels. As with these situations the regional health authorities do monitor the situation, and as I understand it, at the moment they have shut down the machine for repairs or for replacement.

MS LEIBOVICI: Well, can the minister explain why he turned down the request from the Mistahia regional health authority for special funds to replace the X-ray machine in March, and why he continues to drag his heels at the expense of the health of people in that region?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have been committing millions of dollars to health care equipment in this province. Certainly the regional health authority and its administration are in the best position to judge the needs of the region. It is not a case where you apply, particularly when we're dealing with fairly basic equipment, above and beyond the money you're already getting for a particular machine.

Yes, we do fund directly for diagnostic tools such as an MRI because this is an extremely expensive diagnostic tool, often requiring renovations to a building, but in terms of the overall funding of equipment, the Mistahia region has been fairly dealt with according to our overall formula for providing equipment. Alberta Health and Wellness does not buy every, you know, wheelchair and every X-ray machine and every fluoro machine and every dialysis unit.

MS LEIBOVICI: Given that both patient safety as well as worker safety is at risk, will the minister make a commitment right here and now that he will provide the funding to replace that X-ray machine in Fairview immediately?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, it's my understanding that the regional health authority has been carefully monitoring the emissions and the performance of that particular machine, and given that within the last few days an announcement of tens of millions of dollars in addition to our current commitment to capital equipment across this province has been added, I think the health authority in the Mistahia region has the resources if it is deemed to be needed to replace this X-ray machine.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

North/South Trade Corridor

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canamex highway corridor is a major commitment of this government and is essential for the future economic prosperity of our province as we manufacture and trade more and more goods internationally, particularly into the United States. To the Minister of Infrastructure: what is the status of the construction on this massive project, and is his department on schedule?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canamex highway, as the hon. member refers to, is the north/south trade corridor that will be four-laned from just north of Grande Prairie all the way down to the Coutts/Montana border. It's about a 1,200 kilometre stretch of highway, roughly $1.4 billion, $1.5 billion in budget, and it's currently on schedule to be completed in 2007.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Given that I think everyone in this province has noticed the substantial increase in the volumes of traffic on that road, being the north/south corridor, is the minister looking at any measures that would alleviate traffic congestion on those routes?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we are. We're looking at a number of different options. One, of course, is reviewing the report that's looking at productivity safety and also different vehicle combination widths and dimensions. We're awaiting the results. That may be one way of reducing the total number of vehicles on the highway.

There is, I admit, some concern about larger vehicles. Some of the public may be concerned with the size of those vehicles, so we're keeping all of those various opinions, looking at and assessing them, and we'll be bringing forward to the standing policy committee our recommendations soon.

MR. COUTTS: My final supplemental. The Pacific Northwest Economic Region has been dealing with harmonization for quite some time, particularly using the Alberta model. What is the minister doing on behalf of Alberta's trucking industry to achieve consistent size and weight limits between all states along the corridor?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, trying to streamline the regulations with respect to vehicle weight and dimensions has been a long-standing goal of both the ministries of Infrastructure and also of Agriculture. The maximum size of load limit, of course, becomes the common denominator. If I recall correctly, California is about 80,000 pounds. We're at 125,000 licenced pounds. If we're going to be trucking any of our goods down to California, we can only load at 80,000 pounds. As a result, that greatly increases the cost of getting the goods there.

We're working with the governors of the western states, especially along the interstates, and trying to streamline those regulations as quickly as possible. As well, we're going to have visitations here this week from a mission from Idaho, and that's a very important topic of discussion.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Pine Shake Roofs on Schools

DR. MASSEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Greater St. Albert Catholic school board will be forced to spend a quarter of a million dollars replacing the roofs on l'ecole Marguerite d'Youville, and l'ecole Marie Poburan schools. These schools have pine shake roofs that are now rotting. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure. Given that the pine shakes were developed, approved, and promoted by the government, will the Greater St. Albert Catholic board be granted an extra $250,000 to replace these rotting pine shake roofs?

2:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm quite sure the hon. member across is well aware of the funding formulas for not only school modernization and rejuvenation but also the building quality restoration program.

DR. MASSEY: Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the Minister of Learning. When this government claims that as much money should go to instruction as possible, why is it forcing the St. Albert Catholic board to divert funds away from the classroom to correct a problem created by this government?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, I will defer that one to the Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member across the way knows, there are very specific formulas in place as to how much money can be diverted from instruction over to capital needs. However, in this particular case all boards are fully aware of the funding structure in place. There's over $40 million in building quality restoration. There's another $70 million in modernization and building rejuvenation, plus another $40 million to possibly as high as $50 million in new capital construction.

DR. MASSEY: I'll try again. Mr. Speaker, this question is to the Minister of Gaming. Given that community halls are eligible for lottery dollars to replace their rotting pine shake roofs, can school fund-raising councils apply for lottery funds to do the same?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, the details of the community facility enhancement program are clear. The member himself uses those agreements. As this House well knows, the decisions of the community lottery boards, the sum of $50 million this year and 52 and a half million dollars, are up to the individuals, those good community members, unlike those represented by the interests of the opposition, those members representing community interests to make those community-based decisions.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now we'll call upon the first of three hon. members to participate in Members' Statements today, but in the interim will you join me in wishing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre a happy birthday.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Trans Canada Trail

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With distinct pleasure I rise to speak about an historic event that I attended in my home city of Calgary on Saturday, May 13. It is also an historic event for our province, when the water from the Arctic north met the water from the Pacific west. The water is now being brought east to Ottawa to join with the water from the Atlantic.

I want to congratulate the Alberta Trailnet organization, the national relay team, the Trans Canada Trail Foundation, and especially the local organizers of the Calgary 2000 society and the Sien Lok Society. I would like to ask the Assembly to recognize all volunteers, sponsors, and participants, just to name a few: Darryl Barber, Carol and Larry Ryder, Carol Dougall, Ray Lee, Debra Wong, Olympic gold medalist Ken Read, Paralympics gold medalist Renee Del Colle, Lois Budgeon, Norma Wilson, Joanne Paulenko, Betty Ann Graves, Stew Senger, and so on.

It is an honour to play a role in the world's longest relay. The Trans Canada Trail of over 16,000 kilometres symbolizes a spirit of unity for Albertans and our Canadian communities.

The government of Alberta through our Minister of Community Development has contributed about $1.1 million to the Trans Canada Trail building effort inside Alberta and an operating grant of $50,000 annually for the Alberta Trailnet organization. Albertans will continue to measure their quality of life and the strength of their community in terms of clean air and water, outdoor activity, diversity of land and species as well as economic prosperity. The Trans Canada Trail offers Albertans another source of outdoor activity that will allow us to see more of our beautiful country. I'm very pleased to note that the Alberta government continues to ensure the opportunity for Albertans to enjoy our unique natural environment. Budget 2000 provided $14.4 million additional funding to help ensure that our natural environment can continue to be a source of pride and enjoyment for Albertans for generations to come.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Organic Egg Farming

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week while I was in the Legislative Assembly, my constituency office was literally inundated with calls from concerned constituents with respect to the possible destruction and loss of a number of organic eggs that are sold through a health food store in Calgary-Buffalo. Since that time I've had a chance to do some investigation with respect to some of the problems that are confronting one producer in Alberta in particular who produces free-range eggs.

Poplar Bluff Farm, a small organic operation, it turns out, has something like double the quota of 300 laying hens and therefore runs afoul of the existing regulations. That would be the egg producing and marketing regulation under the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act. One of the things that my office has determined in the course of our investigation is that there is a strong argument that has been made that organic egg farming, because it appeals to a very distinct and separate market from the balance of the market for eggs, should be regulated separately from conventional farming with a separate quota under the control of the Canadian Organic Advisory Board.

Now, there are some delays, apparently, in doing this, and I wanted to challenge the minister of agricultural services in terms of what leadership he and his department can provide to ensure that those Calgarians, those Albertans, indeed, who particularly seek out organic eggs will be able to do so without impaired access. I think this can be done, from what I'm told, without interfering with the very elaborate marketing structure that we otherwise currently have for eggs. It's been a concern, and I simply want to relay this message to the minister of agricultural services, and I look forward to his response.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Hull Child and Family Services

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to rise to recognize the very important work of Hull Child and Family Services, located in my constituency of Calgary-Lougheed. Hull Child and Family Services is an intensive, comprehensive treatment centre that provides specialized therapy, counseling, and education to many of the most needy children and their families in southern Alberta. These children need help for the most serious of disorders, including extreme emotional disturbances and behavioural disorders. For most of these children Hull home represents their last chance.

Hull home was created because William Roper Hull, a very successful Calgary businessman and philanthropist who died in 1925, left the bulk of his estate to create a home for needy children. A private act, the William Roper Hull act, was passed in 1954, and Hull home opened in 1962. For more than 40 years Hull home has served children in need not only in Calgary but right across Alberta. Through the years Hull home has changed and grown to meet the changing needs of children and families.

It evolved from two cottages in 1962, which provided residential care to 17 boys, and it now provides a broad spectrum of specialized services to over 500 troubled children and families at any given time in a number of different settings, from residential treatment to group homes to foster care homes to in-home treatment programs to schools and other community-based programs in an endeavour to bring its individualized support programs directly to children and families. This past February 1 I was pleased to attend the opening of the newly expanded and renovated secure treatment facility, which is the only one of its kind in southern Alberta and serves those children who are at extreme risk.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask all members of this Assembly to join me in paying tribute to the important work that Hull Child and Family Services provides.

Bill 209 Employment Standards (Parental Leave) Amendment Act, 2000

[Debate adjourned May 16: Dr. Massey speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have a few comments that I'd like to make before concluding my comments about Bill 209, and those comments focus on a concern I had as I read the bill. In particular it was reinforced when I read the communication put out by the Member for Calgary-Fort, and that is my concern about the balance of input into Bill 209.

The member, I think, has put out what was intended to be information in a question-and-answer form, and I think it's a good form for information of this type, but as I went through the publication and did a rough tally, eight of the 14 questions are used to try to allay fears from the business community. Certainly, the business community has a large stake in the provisions of Bill 209, but this seems to me to be an inordinate amount of influence for one of the stakeholder groups to have in the formation of a bill such as 209.

So eight of them are focusing on assuring businesses, and it indicates especially that small business employer groups' views were taken into account when the bill was crafted. There are words used throughout those questions that are addressed to the business community that minimize the impact of the bill, that try to assure them that it will only come into effect if the employee exercises it. The whole language of those eight questions is designed to tell business that this is really a small move, that it's not important, and I wonder if that should be the focus.

I looked again at those questions and answers, and two more of the 14 focus on government in terms of revisions of the code and whether Bill 209 is consistent with other actions and recommendations from other reports that the government had commissioned or been involved in.

So here we have 10 of the 14 questions and answers focusing on things other than what is central about Bill 209, and that is the formative years in a child's life. I would have felt much more comfortable that all of the stakeholders had been heard and that all of the stakeholders were really represented in the provisions of Bill 209 if the same kind of assurance that the business community got was offered to those in the community who work in the interests of young children.

I don't see that balance here. I don't see the assurances to those people who work with young children in terms of provisions of day care. I don't see the assurance in this bill in terms of what kinds of things are happening to children zero to two years of age. I think that's unfortunate, and it really does cause me some unease. While I intend to support the bill, it's not without some misgivings that there is still a large group who has not been heard from, and had they had more of an influence, this bill might be quite different.

I go back to the comments that I made in the previous debate on 209. When we compare this bill and what is happening in terms of public policy in this area elsewhere in the world, it is a very, very modest piece of legislation, and I think we want to keep that in mind, Mr. Speaker, that this is not earthshaking. It's needed, but it is very modest, and one would hope that it might be followed by a more comprehensive look and something that addresses the needs of these young children even to a greater extent than the provisions of Bill 209.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'd conclude. Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today to rise and speak in favour of private member's Bill 209. As a father I find it very critical that this government does what it has in its power to help families and improve the well-being of children in this province. Private member's Bill 209, presented by my colleague from Calgary-Fort, is a small step toward improving the lives of many of Alberta's children. By allowing a parent or both parents just a little more time with their children, we will help ensure that these children grow up to be well-adjusted adults.

Mr. Speaker, in fact, longer leaves are in line with this government's intervention programs that would see mothers spending more time with a newborn. There is currently a volume of scientific evidence that suggests that children who have more direct contact with parents in their early years turn out to be better adjusted and healthier adults.

Madam Speaker, parental advocacy groups across North America have been very active in promoting early childhood involvement by both parents, particularly since dual-income households have increased in prominence. Their position is supported by the commonly accepted belief that children whose parents take an active role in their early development are more socially adjusted. Even further arguments have been made regarding the need for fathers to be as active in early parenting as mothers. Some studies have demonstrated a direct relationship between children's behaviour and the amount of time and support provided by not just mothers but fathers as well. In fact, there are volumes of social science research that address the issue of early childhood development and the effect of a young child's environment on how that child will function in society as he or she grows up.

The findings of these studies are consistent, indicating that the quality of a child's development psychologically, emotionally, and intellectually is consistently better when that care is from a parent as opposed to a paid caregiver. Madam Speaker, research indicates that no matter what the facility, there is no equal for parental care in a child's formative years.

The president of the Canadian Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, Dr. Elliott Barker, has argued that nothing is more important in the world today than the nurturing that children receive in the first three years of life, for it is in these earliest years that the capacity for trust, empathy, and affection originate, and if the emotional needs of the child are not met during these years, permanent emotional damage can occur.

It seems from the evidence that extending parental leave is a desirable option for this province. The question is: will the cost of this program be passed on to small employers in this province? Of course not, Madam Speaker. There will be no added cost to employers in the province of Alberta. The only sacrifice employers will face is that they will be required to hold an employee's position for an additional length of time. In some cases this could be up to nine weeks more than the current 18 weeks granted by the Alberta labour code. This is not paid leave. Any payment an employee receives will be from the federal government employment insurance program, a program that Albertans have already paid into, a program that every other jurisdiction in this country allows their parents to take advantage of for at least 25 weeks. In utilizing this program, Albertans will simply be reclaiming what is their own.

Madam Speaker, other jurisdictions in Canada have more generous leave time for parents. This legislation aims to bring Alberta in line with the national average. New Brunswick, the Northwest Territories, and Yukon offer 17 weeks of maternity leave, which must be scheduled prior to the expected date of delivery. In addition, 12 weeks of parental or adoptive leave are subsequently provided. This is leave which may be used by either parent so long as both parents are not away from work at the same time. Ontario offers 17 weeks of maternity leave and 18 weeks of parental or adoptive leave.

Quebec has the most generous leave of all jurisdictions. They offer 18 weeks of maternity leave and up to 52 weeks of parental leave. Quebec was the first province to introduce maternity and parental leave provisions into their employment standards act. Moreover, Madam Speaker, the province has been successful in pressuring the federal government to extend EI coverage beyond the current 27 weeks.

It is clear that these provisions provide greater support for families in Canada than the provisions in this province. In Alberta employees who have been with the same employer for a period of at least one year receive 18 weeks of maternity leave with at least six weeks of those weeks following the date of delivery.

Madam Speaker, the other day I came across an article on a report by Save the Children. The report concluded that the rich countries may not be the best at taking care of their mothers and, in turn, their children. The report ranked Canada ninth in the world when it came to the well-being of the children. I looked into this and found that many of the countries that outranked Canada had longer leaves for new parents. Many of these countries were European countries. In Europe women generally receive a well-paid leave. In Norway, for example, mothers can take 42 weeks parental leave at full wage or 52 weeks at 80 percent of their wage.

Madam Speaker, in a recent report by the Canadian Policy Research Networks Canada was found to lag in support of families. Canadian children entering the 21st century are at risk of falling further behind their European counterparts in terms of outside support for the family. According to this new international study, an Ottawa-based think tank calls for a revolution in government and private-sector assistance in areas such as parental leave, child care allowances, tax breaks, and income support. The report recommended that Canada adopt policies similar to France, the Netherlands, Germany, Sweden, and Norway.

To sum up, private member's Bill 209 is not recommending that we extend maternity/paternity leave for parents to one year. That in my view would be excessive, but, Madam Speaker, it is asking that we extend leave for parents to bring it in line with the national average, and it is asking that we do that for the welfare of our children.

Furthermore, the amendment would amalgamate current provisions for maternity leave and adoption leave; that is, it would provide adoptive parents with the same amount of parental leave as a biological parent. This is certainly a positive initiative that would reinforce the notion that the parenting responsibility of adopted parents is equal to that of biological parents.

I urge all my colleagues to support this bill. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased this afternoon to rise in the debate of Bill 209, Employment Standards (Parental Leave) Amendment Act. I have several questions with respect to the provisos in this bill. The proposal, as I read it, would be that under the Employment Standards Code any employee in the province who had been employed for at least 12 consecutive months could apply to their employer for parental leave without pay. Regrettably, the act does not stipulate whether this coverage would apply to those employees that are employed on a part-time contract or a casual basis. In this respect, 12 consecutive months, they may very well be in the capacity of a part-time employee or a contract employee or a casual employee but not in fact have worked consecutively in each month. So that application in this bill, in my mind, is in question.

The other matter that I would like to raise is that there are no provisos as to how this would apply to or assist those parents in the province who are single parents. In essence, if it is an unpaid leave, I would suspect that most single parents in the province would not be able to access it, nor would there be any benefit per se in accessing it, if they had to sacrifice their salary in order to do so. If they stay home with their child but are forced to go on social assistance for that period of time, how much further ahead is the child and the family unit? I would suggest, Madam Speaker, not much.

In essence, what this bill proposes to do is to create a contradictory double standard, that dual-parent families in this province would in essence be able to access this parental leave provision in supplement to the maternity leave provisions that exist today but single parents most likely would not.

Also, the proposal this afternoon flies in the face of the current policies and programs that exist in this government relative to the treatment of new mothers and new infants in the social welfare program. We continue to have it as a practice that mothers who are receiving social assistance are forced to return to work when their child is two months of age, and in essence if we're saying on one hand as a government that we should provide a 27-week leave for parenting of children, why is that same program and accessibility of leave not accessible to those individuals who are parents and receiving social assistance?

My other questions relate to the period of time, particularly to clause 47, where it says:

Either or both parents may take parental leave with respect to the birth or adoption of a child, but the aggregate amount of leave . . . from employment that may be taken by 2 parents shall not exceed 27 weeks.

In essence, we're saying that the maximum leave would be just over six months and that two parents could not plan so that perhaps the mother takes the first six and the father applies to take the second six months. In my mind, Madam Speaker, it completely flies in the face of all the documented research and findings that we should be placing emphasis on, creating stability and creating routine and continuity for at least the first three years of a child's life, yet the bill that is before us this afternoon says that simply 27 weeks is good enough and that if one parent applies under the Employment Standards Code, even if the other parent is employed by a completely different firm or public-sector institution, that parent can't apply for leave. I'm wondering if that's even verging on discriminatory, because in my mind each of those individuals is a parent. Each should have equal status and equal treatment under the law. They should be treated no differently.

So I don't find clause 47 understandable or supportable or defensible under the laws that we have, under the research and documentation that has been compiled across the globe on the first three years of a child's life, and in the context of government practice in this province elsewhere. It's just simply not supportable and does not make sense.

The other reality that we face with this bill is that while in principle it may be attempting to implement a particularly supportable concept, it doesn't address the underfunding of children and family services that exists in this province and has existed in this province for some time. Even in my term of office we have seen huge cuts to the social services sector. Those have impacted most certainly single parents, most certainly families, and most certainly children receiving services under child welfare or social assistance.

We have seen a complete elimination of the operating allowance for day cares and, in the face of several documentations being tabled in the House this session, Madam Speaker, no actions to address the enormous inequities: the workload, the deplorable wages that people who are in the service of caring for children in this province receive. We see no government action in those particular areas, so it's very hard to take with any degree of seriousness a private bill for parental leave when such realities exist.

We are also mindful, reading from the government's own children's summit report, that what people in the field, the stakeholders, what families and parents told this government is that you need a comprehensive plan for the future of Alberta's children. It needs to be multifaceted. It needs to address a number of theme areas, which were identified in the report that was released, the Children's Forum being held in October of 1999, the forum report being released in February of this year. Albertans said that it's not a piecemeal approach that's required here, Madam Speaker. It's a comprehensive, multifaceted, long-term plan of action that's necessary.

I think it's warranted this afternoon to actually read into the record some of the key areas that were raised in the themes relative to the Children's Forum to put this bill in context. One particular theme spoke about actively leading in health and wellness promotion and the identification of four categories of health concerns: healthy families, mental health, sexual health, and nutrition. There was mentioned in that discussion the use or implementation of a particular children's screening tool. It was recommended quite broadly that that screening tool be implemented by government – and I'm just attempting to find that exact recommendation in the report – to examine all of the program and service areas providing services to children, Madam Speaker.

Let me just read from the particular section on health promotion. This is page 12 of the Children's Forum report.

A major gap in current services for children exists in the identification of children-at-risk in . . . early years, before they arrive at school. It was acknowledged that the identification of risks and funding for the treatment of their causes are much more effective, cost-efficient, and less traumatic emotionally, when performed at an early age as opposed to later in . . . life.

On the same page, Madam Speaker, it was identified that there were three funding-related issues that required addressment.

1) the need for long-term, sustained funding for community-based agencies; 2) the need for equitable funding among rural areas and urban centres; 3) the need for appropriate funding levels to ensure all the needs of children are met, i.e. prevention and early intervention.

So while there is obviously some credit warranted to the hon. member who has sponsored this as a private member's bill, it just in no way, shape, or form, Madam Speaker, goes far enough to address the multitude of issues and the multitude of problems that have arisen from government cuts to social welfare programs in this province over the last decade. That is simply the reality.

Just getting back to my points. The Children's Forum report talked specifically about the health issues facing children and talked about wanting to ensure that there was a program for comprehensive early intervention. Now, while parental leave might contribute in some form to that, again it seems that the patchwork system that is proposed with this bill really wouldn't be equitably applied. Again reading from the Children's Forum report, it was recommended on page 39 that assessment techniques and prevention programs be implemented to assess and address risk factors that are related to drug abuse. Prevention and early intervention programs will be designed for parents to teach their children about substances and decision making.

It was further recommended that government commit to an early intervention focus in all service areas/ministries, and still maintain and build on existing early intervention programs.

It was further recommended that

- eligibility for day care subsidy and compliance be expanded;
- there be enforcement of minimum standards for day care;
- there be more Head Start Programs in more communities;
- parental leave provisions be increased.

In a small respect, Madam Speaker, the bill may give some rise to addressing that recommendation. However, as I pointed out, it is selective in its design, because single parents most certainly would not in my mind be able to access this type of leave and actually be in a position economically to care for their children.

As well, I wanted to point out to the hon. member that in reading the bill, I think there was a bit of a misprint on page 1 of the explanatory notes under section 4, which is citing sections 45 to 50. As they presently read, section 46(1) does not appear to have been fully transcribed in the bill. In fact, there's an obvious gap in the bill at 46(1), where it reads, "The maternity leave to which a pregnant employee is entitled is," and then that's not continued. On the next page it goes on to a completely new section. That, I think, could serve to misinform or mislead Albertans about what provisions actually exist. I'm not sure we're in a position to make any changes, but the hon. member may wish to in fact copy that page and send it around to hon. members so that we actually have an accurate reflection of what the original provisions say.

I think that personally, in my experience as a parent, the concept of parental leave is a good one. It is certainly something that the government should consider as one aspect of a plan or vision relative to the provision of services to children and families in this province. It has to warrant more priority, though, than a private member's bill, in my opinion. We heard in the 2000 Speech from the Throne and in the budget debates and we're currently hearing in this Assembly in question period that children are a priority of this government. We have not seen, in reality, a comprehensive action plan on the children's summit report. Since that report was released, we've had the Task Force on Children at Risk report released, and that has not been accompanied by any commitments of funding. So as I stand here this afternoon, as much as I would like to sincerely support this private member's bill, it just does not compensate, Madam Speaker, for the lack of action in a wide range of other government areas.

I have had parents, as well, of handicapped and disabled children, quite a number of them, come and talk to me about the inequities in the provision of services to their children relative to both the provision of services in schools as well as provision of service in the health care system. Long ago – I think it's going on two years ago – we had the promise of this government that there was going to be a comprehensive approach to the provision of services to children. We had the student health initiative announced. We had the ministerial task force on children's services. I'm not sure if I have the title completely accurate on that. It was intended to bring together the ministries of Education, Health, Children's Services, and Justice, providing for maintenance enforcement – I think I'm naming the majority of them – and try to provide a concrete approach to reduce the number of hoops, if you will, the maze that parents and families needing services from these ministries would have to go through to access them.

The reality, Madam Speaker, is that really the system hasn't changed. The barriers and hoops that parents of disabled children and handicapped children in this province must go through to access comprehensive, acceptable levels of support for their children are extensive. It's exhausting for them, and it's exhausting for those of us that are attempting to advocate on their behalf to see them through that maze. The reality is that children don't wait. We often talk in this province about the future. In fact, the government sold its whole deficit elimination and debt reduction plan on not wanting to cast off our debt onto our grandchildren. Well, the reality is that we are in the process of creating a human deficit in this province that far exceeds the fiscal one this government purports to have eliminated.

That is occurring because we have also deemed that tax reduction and tax reform are the two top priorities for implementation in this session and in this government's term of office. We don't see an accompanying emphasis, despite the Premier waxing on about this in the Speech from the Throne – he said that children were the first priority. We have seen nowhere near the commitments in principle or in funding coming to children that the government has made on tax reform.

So, Madam Speaker, the bill before us this afternoon is a token one. I respect the hon. member's sponsoring it, but I cannot support it. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

MR. SHARIFF: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure to stand in the Assembly and participate in this debate. I would first of all like to congratulate the Member for Calgary-Fort for bringing this legislation forward.

Recently I had the honour of sitting on the Premier's Task Force on Children at Risk. The role of the task force was to take a look at issues facing children at risk, including but not limited to those who are at risk of developing violent behaviour. Our task was to search for ways of working together to make sure that Alberta's children are healthy, happy, safe, secure, and ready for whatever their futures might hold. The report, appropriately titled Start Young, Start Now, emphasized the importance of starting before problems become apparent. The recommendations recognize that first and foremost parents have responsibility for their children and for ensuring that they have a healthy, safe, and positive start in their lives. In other words, parents come first.

Madam Speaker, to that end I agree with this bill in principle, but I do have some concerns about the effect of this legislation. There are more stakeholders in this debate than parents and children. The vital stakeholders that seem to be missing in this debate are the small businesses of Alberta. One of the issues that needs to be addressed is what impact this legislation will have on small business, a sector that is vital to the economy in this province and a sector that is vital to the Alberta advantage. My main difficulty with this private member's bill is that we have yet to see any comments from the business community in Alberta. We need more consultation before we enact legislation that could affect the business community in this way. We must truly take into consideration all the viewpoints of businesses in this province. Should such a consultation occur and should the business sector support it, then I would be happy to vote for this bill. However, until that occurs, we must put this bill aside. I encourage the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort to initiate such a consultation and include all those who are affected and impacted by such a bill.

I also want to commend him for bringing forward a bill that would have helped parents spend more time with their children. It is certainly a noble intent. However, Madam Speaker, at this particular point in time I am not willing to lend my support to the bill. I look forward to more consultation with the Alberta business sector, and at that point in time I would be willing to lend my support to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort. I hope he goes through with the consultation. I hope he takes this as a major initiative to include as many stakeholders as possible. When the results are in and I see the outcome, I may be convinced. I hope that at that point, with the new information that will be presented to us, we will all be able to make a much more informed decision.

With that, Madam Speaker, I'll take my chair. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks. I realize I only have a few minutes before we hit the cutoff for debate in this area today. I've listened to the debate thus far on this, and what strikes me is that it's the old argument: is the glass half full or half empty? Is this bill going far enough? Is a little step a good step and should be followed through, or is it so deficient, taken in the context of all the other things, that it should be dropped? We've just heard from another member saying that the businesses haven't been consulted. Well, I don't know that, but I'll take his word for it.

You know, I do see this as a small token, a small step forward, but it is to me significant that this is coming forward as a private member's bill, which is a traditional sort of finger-in-the-air testing ground for ideas the government might want to consider. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview spoke at some length and brought forward a number of other issues that have been suggested as part of a larger, sustainable program for children in this province, and I have to agree. Over and over again I see this kind of hit-and-miss, piecemeal approach to dealing with a group of people or part of a life stage where we as legislators need to be looking at whether we can offer assistance or not to uphold it. I mean, as an activist I have to say that I really like the concept of balance and fairness that's being introduced here, particularly around the inclusion of adoptive parents.

I see that the Speaker is rising and I'm about to be cut off. I look forward to continuing this debate the next time it's up.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Thank you, hon. member. I hesitate to interrupt you, but the time limit for consideration of this item has expired.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Low-cost Housing

512. Mrs. Laing moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to encourage municipal governments to investigate ways of adding low-cost housing units through changes in zoning bylaws to allow alternate housing units such as secondary suites and room-and-board housing in residential neighbourhoods.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

MRS. LAING: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My reason for bringing forward this motion is simple: within many rural and urban centres low-cost rental accommodation is becoming very scarce. The economic success that Alberta has enjoyed over the past few years has produced many rewards. We are fortunate to have a strong and healthy economy. Our real GDP growth in 1999 is estimated to have been 2.9 percent. This growth is expected to reach 4.5 percent in 2000, which is higher than the expected national average of 3.1 percent. Our diversified economy is more stable and less reliant on one sector, which minimizes the impact that fluctuating commodity prices have on our economic well-being. People are moving to Alberta from across Canada in search of jobs, and they are finding them. In 1999 Alberta's employment rate was one of the lowest in Canada, and we saw the creation of 35,000 new jobs. Currently 1.5 million Albertans are employed, which is the highest employment rate in Canada. But this success has brought a few challenges, one of which is the availability of suitable low-cost rental accommodation.

Across Alberta vacancy rates have dropped significantly in the past few years. In 1993 Calgary had a 5.9 percent apartment vacancy rate. In 1999 that rate had dropped to 2.8 percent. Calgary is not alone. In 1992 Grande Prairie had a 9.4 percent vacancy rate, and we've seen that rate drop to 3.6 percent during this last year. Fort McMurray has also seen a similar trend, dropping from 17.2 percent in 1990 to .7 percent in 1999. Lethbridge has experienced a vacancy rate of .9 percent, and Medicine Hat has a 1.1 percent rate. Red Deer has a .9 percent rate, and Brooks has a 1.8 percent rate. Madam Speaker, these are just a few examples, but they serve to illustrate the point that rental accommodation is becoming difficult to find in Alberta.

A lack in supply has caused rents to increase, often beyond affordability. While it enjoyed the lowest vacancy rate in Canada in 1998, Calgary's rents have also increased by 12 percent, with a one-bedroom apartment averaging $574 per month, which may not sound like much unless you're a single person, a single parent, or a senior on a fixed income. Many low-income Albertans must look for rental rates from $250 to $350 per month.

In Calgary homeless shelters are housing people who have jobs but cannot find an apartment or cannot afford the going rate. Compounding this problem is the fact that municipally owned social housing units are having a difficult time accommodating the number of people in need of housing. This situation poses a whole series of difficult and complex questions. It is not the role of the homeless shelter to provide accommodation for low-income Albertans. Madam Speaker, this would not be the best use of this limited and valuable resource. At present the homeless shelters are stretched to the limit in their attempt to aid the street people who are either abused, mentally ill, drug dependent, or destitute.

I do not want to sound too negative. The increased demand for rental accommodation has brought with it many positive benefits. It has ignited an urban renewal in downtown Calgary that's seen centrally located areas redeveloped with upscale apartments and condominiums. We are seeing loft apartments. These districts are now safer than they once were. They contribute in a positive way to the municipal tax base and have injected vitality and community spirit into the inner city, but the unfortunate by-product has been that this revitalization has displaced many lower income renters and reduced the amount of available low-income rental housing. Where, then, do these displaced individuals go? Somehow provision must be made to ensure that they have reasonable access to housing that fits within their budget.

Madam Speaker, Motion 512 is an attempt to address this challenge. Our government can help by proactively working with the municipal governments to find solutions to the shortage of low-cost rental accommodation. Governments can help create the environment where the construction of housing and low-cost housing alternatives such as secondary suites is encouraged. This is the key. All levels of government must work together on this issue, and it's not the exclusive domain or responsibility of only one level of government.

Thankfully, Madam Speaker, those of us in this Chamber have never experienced homelessness. Having said this, I would also suggest that many of us have experienced times in our lives when we had to live on a low income and had to struggle to make ends meet. Imagine how each of us would have felt if we were forced to move from our accommodation solely because the landlord had decided that he was going to make it into an upscale condominium and we could no longer afford the rent. Add to this a zero vacancy rate, and I think you would agree that it would be a very unwelcome and unpleasant experience to have to move.

We want people to move to Alberta to find jobs, to find a place to live, to pay taxes, and to become contributors to the Alberta advantage. We do not want some Albertans to have to leave because they cannot find a place to live. This type of departure would soon have a negative effect on our buoyant economy. Shelter is not only a basic human need; it's a basic human right. No able-bodied person who's a productive member of our society should be left homeless due to a lack of available rental accommodation.

Madam Speaker, I know that this is a difficult problem, one in which there are no easy answers, but I believe that secondary suites and boarding houses could help to form part of the solution, and that's why I've brought forth this motion. Some of us probably know someone with a basement suite, or a secondary suite as they're now called, in their home. In renting out their suite, homeowners are able to earn extra income towards their own mortgage, and in doing so, they also provide an affordable, low-cost alternative rental accommodation to lower income Albertans.

Many of us at one period of time in our lives have had the experience of renting a secondary suite, either as a university or college student or after leaving our parental home to enter the workforce and start a new life. Even today the basement suite is a common form of accommodation for many university students. But the reality, Madam Speaker, is that many of these basement or secondary suites are now illegal. Over the years implementation of municipal bylaws and changes to the Alberta building code have placed more and more stringent rules on secondary suites. While these changes were well intentioned and directed towards ensuring the safety and well-being of all occupants in a residential building, they have made many suites illegal.

To be considered legal in Edmonton, for example, a secondary suite must be constructed with a separate entrance, a separate forced-air heating system, additional fire wall separation, meet a specific basement ceiling height, and provide for one on-site parking stall. These restrictions make the development of a secondary suite costly for the homeowner and, as a result, difficult to justify economically. While ensuring that a suite meets the minimum height seems reasonable, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation estimates that it can cost upwards of $40,000 to achieve the proper ceiling height in many of our post World War II homes. As a result, the added cost of developing a secondary suite means that the homeowner often decides that meeting the stringent requirements is too costly.

In cases where they decide to go ahead with the development, the costs associated are passed on to the tenants, which impacts on the affordability of the suite. Alternatively, a homeowner may choose to go ahead with developing the suite illegally, potentially placing the safety and health of all occupants of the house in jeopardy. Regardless of the outcome, the net result is that there is no net positive benefit for the rental market. Either the potential rental suite is not developed, or it is developed but is too costly to rent, or it is developed illegally and could be a potential health hazard.

Madam Speaker, existing suites are also subject to the same conditions. If existing suites are found to be illegal, the homeowner has the option of correcting it until it conforms or be faced with the prospect of being forced to remove the suite altogether. As a result, the illegal suites remain illegal, the potential suites are not developed, and the demand for affordable rental accommodation remains high. I believe that ensuring that health and safety are maintained is paramount for any community, but I also believe that secondary suites can play a very positive role in addressing the critical lack of affordable rental accommodation across Alberta.

In Calgary estimates suggest that roughly 183,000 properties zoned as either R1 or R2 could be easily developed into suites. Just think: if only 1 percent of these properties were developed, that would put 1,830 low-cost rental units on the market. In my mind, this would be a good beginning and go a long way to help alleviate some of the pressures Calgary is currently experiencing.

How do we make this a reality? Where do we have to start? Well, in 1998 the city of St. Albert and the towns of Gibbons, Devon, and Morinville undertook a study of the issue of secondary suites within their communities. In their findings or recommendations they found that municipalities, if serious about introducing secondary suites into the rental mix within their communities, have a wide array of options that they could consider. In conjunction with revisiting their bylaws on secondary suite development, municipalities and the provincial government need to work together to re-examine the Alberta building code so that it makes sense. Strict adherence to the building code requirements in Alberta makes secondary suite development, especially in older, single-family homes, difficult and expensive. Municipalities and the Alberta government need to identify more pragmatic safety standards for secondary suites.

One particular option should be to try to better balance the goal of providing affordable housing through the legalization of secondary suites with ensuring that a lower but still acceptable standard of health and safety requirements is met. Another option would be to streamline the permit approval and the inspection and enforcement process, thereby making it less costly and easier for a homeowner to legalize their suite. Finally, municipalities could examine the possibility of providing an incentive to homeowners in the form of a special property tax exemption in exchange for registration and legalization of the suite. One thing is clear. Restrictions and regulations of secondary suites must be eased so that suites can be introduced into the rental market in as inexpensive, equitable, and simple a fashion as possible for the homeowner and the municipality.

Madam Speaker, in the course of preparing this motion, I researched how other jurisdictions regulate secondary suites. I found that in many jurisdictions they play a productive part in the rental market. Probably the best example is British Columbia. In conjunction with the British Columbia government amending the B.C. building code, the cities of Vancouver, New Westminster, and North Vancouver altered their municipal bylaws to permit the existence of secondary suites.

More specifically, the city of Vancouver regulates suites through conditional use. This means that they are permitted only in certain communities, and it also allows illegal suites to be phased out over a limited period of time. The city of New Westminster allows suites in all low-density residential areas through a density bonus system. This system allows a homeowner to construct an additional dwelling unit in exchange for adhering to detailed design and landscaping guidelines in conjunction with applying a restrictive covenant to the title of the property. Finally, the district of North Vancouver, while requiring certain criteria to be met – it must not be larger than 40 percent of the primary dwelling, must provide an off-street parking stall, and must meet provincial building code standards – is the least restrictive and allows suites in all low-density residential districts as a permitted use. These jurisdictions show that an inexpensive, equitable, and simple method based on certainty for both the homeowner and the municipality can be achieved, allowing secondary suites to become part of the rental marketplace.

At this point I'd like to acknowledge that some innovative work is being done in Alberta on a pilot project basis. In McKenzie Towne in Calgary and Terwillegar Towne in Edmonton a special zoning bylaw has been implemented to allow new homeowners the opportunity to build suites above their garage. These suites can then be used by the homeowner as a granny flat for their parents, as a guest suite, or as rental accommodation. Unfortunately, the costs of developing these upscale suites, in addition to the cost of developing a new home, have deterred many homeowners from using the special bylaw exemption.

More needs to be done, and Motion 512 is an attempt at the beginning. The provincial government needs to work with all levels of government to encourage municipalities to find low-cost housing alternatives for low-income Albertans. Secondary suites offer a good inventory of potential rental accommodation. It's a quick, easy, and abundant solution. I personally know of many seniors who would love to rent their basement suite to a young couple or to a young person. The benefits to both are numerous. Perhaps in exchange for performing various duties and chores around the yard or the house, the seniors could offer their renters a lower rent. The senior homeowner benefits by being able to stay in their home and feeling secure, and they are also out of the long-term care system. The renter benefits by having access to a safe, clean, and affordable rental accommodation.

Secondary suites could also allow seniors who want to be close to their families that option. While maintaining some of their independence through their own apartment, seniors would be able to be close to their loved ones and enjoy their golden years, confident that the love, support, and care they need is nearby. Families could also benefit greatly. With their grandparents very close by, grandchildren would grow up benefiting from the wisdom and knowledge that only age can bring.

Madam Speaker, secondary suites and room-and-board housing are excellent resources to help meet the housing needs of many Albertans, and I would urge all members of this Assembly to support Motion 512.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This Motion 512 raises and addresses a really important issue. I've said to my colleagues numerous times that in Calgary-Buffalo, which is really the heart of that city, right downtown – those nine communities make up the inner-city part of Calgary – access to safe, affordable housing is the single biggest issue. I hear more about that from constituents than any other single issue, and that's been constant. That's been for at least the last three years. That continues to be . . . [interjection] Even more than organic eggs, hon. member.

It is a really significant problem, and I think it's clear that the Member for Calgary-Bow has decided that rather than address this huge range of challenges, issues, and problems, she's going to sever out one item and focus on that. I have great respect for the Member for Calgary-Bow. I get to as many of the conferences and sessions dealing with homelessness in Calgary as I can, and the Member for Calgary-Bow is at almost every one of these and often in a leadership position, so I acknowledge her work not just currently but over a period of time in terms of dealing with social housing. Having said that, I must say that I experience some frustration when I look at the motion. [interjections] Madam Speaker, I think I'm starting to lose. It shows you how fragile cross-party support is. In a minute and a half it starts dissipating.

Here is my concern. Madam Speaker, the concern I have is this. When I go to something like the Homelessness in Calgary search conference 2, which was held March 24 and March 25 in the city of Calgary – and the Member for Calgary-Bow was there – or to the one that I think was two years ago, looking at solutions, and I look at the list of identified problems and those long lists of prospective solutions, you know what happens? You go to one of these conferences, and they sort of identify a range of issues. They get people identifying which are the priority areas, and they go off and work in those areas. I think of the issues that are identified. To focus on this one seems curious, because it's not anywhere near the top of the list. In fact, it's well, well down the list.

The other thing. I look at the reports from the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, the Municipal Government Perspective on Housing, which I'd tabled a couple of months ago. I look at the report, actually, under that member's name, Community Action Plan, that was produced May 25, 1998. I look at the range of strategies and solutions. Why is it that the member has picked the one we have no legislative competence to deal with? You know, if you look at the motion, what it talks about is: "encourage municipal governments to investigate ways of adding low-cost housing units through changes in zoning bylaws." Well, you know that's the one thing we are not legislatively competent to deal with. That's the municipalities. As a result of changes to the Municipal Government Act, the municipalities have even more latitude, flexibility, and scope than they had before. So why would we focus our time in this Assembly on telling municipalities how to do their handling of the zoning differently?

I can tell you that not only the Member for Calgary-Bow has been at many of these meetings. Bob Hawkesworth, an alderman, co-chairs many of these things and is also at these conferences. I sat beside Joe Ceci, another alderman, at the last conference in Calgary in March. There's plenty of representation. Judy Bader from the city of Calgary attends these things, and Kay Wong. I mean, there's huge involvement by the city. Why don't we let the people from the municipal level of government solve the municipal jurisdictional issues? Why wouldn't we focus in this Assembly on the kinds of things that only the province can deal with?

I don't disagree that there's potential in terms of converting some of those single-family dwellings into multiple-family dwellings. I will concede that it might help to ameliorate the acute housing condition in cities like Calgary if we were able to have some secondary suites and room-and-board housing, but I'm going to suggest that maybe what we do is focus on what we have exclusive legislative competence to deal with.

You know, when you go through one of these sessions, like the Member for Calgary-Bow and I have been able to do, and you go through a needs analysis and identification of issues, what you quickly find out – people come up with action plans. What do we talk about? We talk about creating legislation, regulations, and policies supportive in developing low-cost rental housing. Certainly an element of this is municipal regulations, and that's exactly what the Member for Calgary-Bow has identified.

But if we go on a little further, why don't we talk about the things that only the provincial Legislature can deal with? The Alberta building code is something that we have authority to deal with. Although it was mentioned by the member, it's not what she has identified in her motion. She's still talking about zoning bylaws. I fully support looking at the Alberta building code to see how we can accommodate that.

These are the items identified in the Community Action Plan developed by the Homeless Initiative Ad Hoc Steering Committee in Calgary, May 25, 1998. I think the Member for Calgary-Bow would agree that when we attended that one in March, many of the same themes continued. It's not like we're developing new perspectives on the problems so much; it's a question of trying to focus on some of the ones that have been often mentioned.

Some of the other things we need are to "establish funding mechanisms/resources for development of low cost rental housing." This has to do with property tax reductions for multi-residential complexes; GST credits; interest subsidies to reduce mortgage costs; Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation, AMFC, financing; capital sharing programs.

One of the great ironies is that this province, in their cost-cutting mode, savagely laid off every piece of publicly owned property they could find in the city of Calgary to sell, divest, dispose of. You know, when I went to a housing conference in Edmonton – I think it was two years ago . . .

MRS. SLOAN: Symposium.

MR. DICKSON: Symposium. Thank you, Edmonton-Riverview.

The interesting thing is that that was the time there was an outright crisis in Calgary. Edmonton was a long way from that, but this is where the provincial government, the then Minister of Municipal Affairs, decided to hold the housing conference, here. What I remember at the time was a lot of talk about joint ventures, and the minister will remember that. But, you know, the question is: what does the province put in as a partner? Well, one of the things they could put in is raw land, one of the things the province had owned. If we hadn't been so darn preoccupied with divesting this land and putting some dollars in the general revenue fund, we might have thought a little further and said, "Why don't we retain some of this land?" and then been able to enter into creative kinds of joint venture agreements with developers, that would help boost the supply of affordable land. I've never understood that.

We've got other kinds of things that have been identified. You know, the federal government came along. Claudette Bradshaw, after her two trips to Alberta and her report, did exactly what Art Smith and John Currie and the Calgary Housing Authority wanted: to come up with a funding envelope with $750 million and, most importantly, to allow local creativity to determine how that funding was going to be applied. We're still waiting, Madam Speaker, to know exactly what the provincial contribution to that is going to be. Somebody suggested to me the last time we talked about this that we still haven't heard about federal government money in terms of federal government cheques being cut. I acknowledge that that may be a problem as well, but I think there's a lack of leadership we continue to see from the province, and most of the energy that I see around addressing homelessness is coming from the municipalities.

There's no municipality in Canada that's more proactive than the city of Calgary is. You know, it's not elected government that's providing the leadership. It's the Salvation Army. It's the Mustard Seed. It's Derm Baldwin, the drop-in centre. It's those agencies and that enormous synergy that's coming together that's frankly, I think, challenging governments to try and keep up, and I want to tell you, Madam Speaker, that I don't think we're doing that.

If you go through and look at the priority things we ought to be dealing with and have legislative competence to deal with, why wouldn't we consider one of the things that always comes up when I go to one of these sessions? People want to talk about what are generally identified as inadequate support systems. Supports for independence doesn't adequately meet the cost for that young single mother with two children trying to find an affordable place to live in Calgary. People on AISH in downtown Calgary have an enormous problem trying to live on the AISH pension, the assured income for the severely handicapped. Mental health issues: we don't have enough mental health beds, never mind mental health community placements. Who has responsibility for that? The province of Alberta does, one hundred percent.

You know, I say to the Member for Calgary-Bow, through the chair: this member is, I think, universally respected in this Chamber, and I regret that she has not brought forward a motion that would allow us to trade on her goodwill and start addressing some of those issues about mental health dollars, mental health beds, mental health services. Why aren't we debating instead about increases to supports for independence for that young mother who comes toting a couple of children to my constituency office on a Friday afternoon, desperate for a place to live because she's been evicted in a mix-up with her landlord in the last place, so that this sort of crisis doesn't have to happen as frequently as it does in Calgary?

I think as you go through the list of things that are identified in terms of addictions programs, AADAC is a provincially funded agency. We have responsibility for that. We're talking about what AADAC would do differently.

Why aren't we addressing the fact that the 8th & 8th clinic in downtown Calgary went almost two years before we started to see the mental health services that had been promised as part of the initial package when the people in the inner city were presented with a proposal to shut down the excellent psychiatric facilities at both the Holy Cross and then the forensic mental health centre at the General hospital and the mental health beds there? We lost those, and there was inadequate access downtown.

What people talk about at these conferences, and this represents not just – you've got a couple of MLAs, a couple of aldermen. You've got people from serving agencies. You also have people who are part of the homeless community or the housing-in-crisis community, and they talk about meaningful education and training opportunities. Those of us who have the opportunity to work in inner-city areas – I suspect my colleague from Edmonton-Centre has similar experience – have lots of problems with people who are told that there are retraining and employment opportunities. They go down and they go through the government-sanctioned programs and spend the better part of a week learning how to write a resume when really what they're looking for is some marketable job skills. So we're not adequately addressing that need. That's provincially financed. That's one hundred percent the responsibility of provincial legislators.

The whole notion of supports for independence. Here's page 46 of the Strategic Direction from the Community Action Plan. This was the one that the Member for Calgary-Bow was co-chair of. We need to

- establish higher rates for Supports for Independence (SFI) and Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped (AISH).

- Link benefit rates to cost of living changes.

- Develop a set of regional allowances that reflect market rates for decent, safe, suitable housing on the open market.

- Designate additional facilities for hard-to-house individuals who would then receive additional support benefits . . .

- Increase earnings exemptions for benefit recipients from $115 to $225 per month per household.

- Implement a more flexible policy for allocation of employment related expenses.

- Promote incentives which create employment opportunities.

Transportation is a huge issue in terms of those people who are in a housing crisis. Now what we have – if you happen to know aldermen in the city of Calgary, they get a batch of free transit passes and they'll share those, but the transit passes go to only a fraction of the people that need transportation to be able to get to job interviews and try to find employment.

I know the Member for Calgary-Bow – this isn't for her benefit because she knows all this stuff. She authored the report. My question is why we have arguably the weakest residential tenancy legislation in the country. You know, I've had so many workshops in my constituency. I've gone to more apartment buildings than I can think of to meet with residents when they're upset about a rent increase. Many of these people come from other jurisdictions, and I'm trying to explain to them that in Alberta, as long as you don't raise the rent more than twice in a calendar year, you can raise it 40 percent each time.

We've seen in Calgary, with a huge number of units being condominiumized and a lot of units just being taken out of circulation, lots of people being displaced. We don't have, at least in my view, adequate tenancy protection. Now, that's a provincial responsibility. We're the only ones that can change that. The city council can't do anything about that. The federal government can't do anything about it. Why aren't we talking about that? Why aren't we addressing that? You know, I look through the government's legislative program. We're getting to the end of the spring session, maybe not as early as some would like and maybe too early for some of us, but we're getting to the end. I'm looking through the program, and I'm not seeing a lot of legislative initiative. I don't see any legislative initiative that's going to address the housing problem for people living in my constituency.

Part of the problem now is seniors, because our income threshold levels are too low for the Alberta seniors' benefit program. That's been apparent since the program first came in, and the government's answer is: you put a little more dough in the special assistance fund. You know, Madam Speaker, that's not working. It's not working. What happens is that the cutoff point where we start to see the peel back on the Alberta seniors' benefit is just unrealistically low, and that becomes a really significant problem.

Now, Madam Speaker, I could go on. The reports I've got in front of me are voluminous, but I'd refer members – if you look, there's a particularly good one, the municipal government perspective on housing put out by the Federation of Calgary – of Canadian Municipalities. Calgary has not yet taken over the country; it's only a notion some of us have.

The Community Action Plan put out by an ad hoc steering committee in Calgary is excellent. I encourage people to read the government of Canada news release that came out December 17, 1999, that talks about a number of the things that Claudette Bradshaw has identified as things that have to be done. There are some excellent Community Action Plan bulletins put out by the city of Calgary and the Calgary Homeless Foundation. Most of all, I encourage members to go down and talk to John Currie, the chair of the Calgary Homeless Foundation, and look at A Vision for Calgary: Social Housing, the plan prepared by the Calgary Regional Planning Committee, January 2000, because we have in this material a host of things that we can do that would provide more information.

Then we have the most curious document of all, and that's the government of Alberta report of Community Development on family and special purpose housing. This is a report called Policy Framework: Homelessness. In contrast to the other ones that are meaty, that are detailed, that are substantial, this thing is light in weight and it's empty in content. This is not my idea of leadership.

So can we not redirect the energy, the excellent efforts of the Member for Calgary-Bow in the areas where we're actually going to be able to make a meaningful difference, within the legislative competence of the province?

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I have to respond most specifically to the previous speaker from Calgary-Buffalo. Contrary to what he thinks, there's more to Alberta than Calgary, and many of us have some interest in how programs are delivered. As he was berating the initiative proposed here by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow with respect to this motion, I was reminded of a situation that happened when I was teaching years ago.

A student came into my class and said that she was interested in collecting some toiletries for a women's shelter downtown in the city where I was teaching. She took the suggestion to her homeroom teacher, and her homeroom teacher berated her for not looking after the needs that were within the jurisdiction of the school, so by the time she was finished, she was most discouraged about any initiative that she had proposed. I daresay that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo has done just exactly that with his derision of this motion, because I think it is an initiative that has great value. I had to say that, simply because while his concerns are legitimate about other issues, I feel that this particular motion does address a particular issue that I find in my own community as well. So I'm pleased to rise this afternoon, Madam Speaker, and to speak in support of Motion 512, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

The intention of Motion 512 is "to encourage municipal governments to investigate ways of adding low-cost housing units . . . such as secondary suites and room-and-board housing in residential neighbourhoods." I emphasize the words "to encourage municipalities," because I believe our role from the provincial perspective is to work in partnership with municipalities in the work they are engaged in. We have the same constituents whom we are here to serve.

Madam Speaker, this is an excellent idea, one that I wholeheartedly support. It is also a timely motion that raises several important issues for our government, for municipal governments, and I say for the people of Alberta. Shelter is a fundamental human need. For lower income Albertans, finding adequate low-cost housing that fits within their limited budget has become increasingly more of a challenge in recent years. While our economy is strong and unemployment is the lowest it has been in many, many years, more and more people are moving to Alberta every year. Some have their jobs transferred from other parts of Canada, and others come in search of work or a better life for their families. These positive benefits are what our strong economy has produced.

As more and more people have moved to Alberta and entered the workforce, rental vacancies across the province have dropped significantly in the past few years. Cities like Fort McMurray, Sylvan Lake, Lethbridge, High River, Brooks, Red Deer, and Canmore have next to zero vacancy rates. Calgary and Edmonton are experiencing some of the lowest vacancy rates in the past 10 years. Once affordable housing has become unaffordable for some. Rents have increased in areas that were traditionally considered to be low-cost housing in Calgary, with much of it being converted to higher income, upscale housing. In the process lower income renters have been displaced and because of the low vacancy rates have had a difficult time finding housing.

This past January I had the opportunity to review some of the information put together by the city of St. Albert on poverty within our community. The data, among many other things, provides insight into the challenges that many lower income Albertans face. For example, in 1996 the average Alberta income was $58,000, and the average income for low-income or poor families was $14,500.

In St. Albert the average family income was $70,000, while the average income among poor families was $16,697. The average shelter cost for poor people in Alberta was found to be about $555, while it was found to be $675, or $8,100 per year, in St. Albert. So after paying rent in St. Albert, a lone-parent family earning minimum wage has $534 left over to spend on food, clothing, and other necessities. The study also found that 66 percent of renters spent 30 percent or more of household income on shelter costs.

Madam Speaker, clearly, access to alternative low-cost housing would make a difference to these low-income families. I see Motion 512 as a positive first step, an initial attempt to address the present lack of affordable housing in Alberta. I hope the discussion that we have in this House can help contribute towards that situation.

Having said this, I know a solution to this problem will not be easy. All levels of government – federal, provincial, and municipal – need to work together if progress is to be made. We will need to work with municipalities to find ways to remove impediments to development and unnecessary regulation that restricts the ability of a homeowner to convert home spaces into suites. Above all else, municipalities must ensure that their zoning bylaws permit a full range of housing alternatives that make economic sense from one end of the spectrum to the other.

I, too, receive phone calls in my constituency office from individuals who want to address this issue of housing and in particular low-income housing. I don't know about others, but certainly the information, the data, and the anecdotal situations that are relayed to me in my constituency office I share with my local municipality.

Currently within Alberta, municipal bylaws make it next to impossible for homeowners to develop a secondary suite within their dwellings. Minimum and maximum size and height restrictions often exceed most typical post World War II homes. Estimates by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation suggest that bringing the ceiling height in a post World War II home into compliance can cost upwards of $40,000. As a result, the cost of compliance to municipal bylaws either causes a homeowner not to develop a secondary suite, or if they proceed with the development, all associated costs are then passed on to the renter, thereby reducing the affordability of the accommodation.

Madam Speaker, municipalities need to examine their zoning bylaws to ensure that they make sense and reflect the realities of the rental market. With the knowledge that it costs upward of $40,000 to bring a ceiling height into compliance, perhaps we should rethink that height restriction and enact a height restriction that is more in line with average ceiling height in most postwar homes. To do so would not only make it easier to develop new suites, but it would make it easier for existing illegal suites to be legalized.

In the face of rental pressures such as those we're experiencing in our province today, people should not have to worry about whether they are breaking the law when they could be making a positive contribution by making their suite available to someone in need of adequate shelter. There are many examples of how secondary suites can play a positive role in the rental market. They offer young Albertans an affordable low-cost alternative. Young families could utilize them as nanny suites, allowing their childcare provider to live with them full-time. First-time homeowners could use rental income to meet their mortgage payments, perhaps in the process paying their mortgage down quicker.

I also remember a time when secondary suites, or granny flats as we used to call them, were a common feature in most houses in my neighbourhood. Granny flats provided seniors the chance to live close to family and loved ones in a safe and secure environment while maintaining a degree of their personal independence. With their families close by in case of emergency, seniors were also afforded the chance to see their grandchildren on a daily basis and to play a more active role in their lives. Over the years this kind of housing situation has faded, but with Motion 512, which I believe is an excellent initiative, we have a chance to revisit the usefulness of a granny-flat type situation. As we look at the demographics of our population, it becomes evident that it may be a housing alternative that may gain popular appeal, prompted by desire or necessity.

MRS. SLOAN: Granny?

MRS. O'NEILL: We did call them granny flats, and in fact in the real estate industry we still refer to them as that, although the demographics and the sandwich-family situation we encounter is something that we are speaking about, certainly for those who are legitimately concerned about how to find low-cost affordable housing.

As is widely known, over the next 20 or 30 years the total population and the age composition of Albertans will change dramatically. By 2028 our population will be almost 4 million people, and the baby-boom generation will range between 62 to 82 years of age. To accommodate this population, estimates suggest that an additional 600,000 dwellings will need to be added to Alberta's housing inventory. Apartments will need to increase by 59 percent, or roughly 110,000 units, of which 49 percent will be rentals.

Since low-income Albertans are more likely to rent and with the baby-boom generation making the transition to a fixed income while moving out of their homes into retirement accommodation, secondary suites would make a positive contribution to ensuring that adequate and I'd say cost-efficient housing is available. Instead of building new housing, existing structures could be converted to accommodate these needs and the needs of individuals who are looking for independent living within the context of a larger household. Instead of vacating their homes, baby boomers could convert their basement into a secondary suite either for themselves, for their children, for individual students, or for individual adults who wish to maintain their own accommodation. Lower income Albertans would also have access to safe, affordable housing that is centrally located and accessible.

Motion 512 offers us this opportunity to meet some of the many challenges – granted, the very legitimate challenges – that we're facing today in the rental housing market. It does not address all of them, but it does respond to what I hear in my constituency from a number of people who want to live in suites and to live in legitimate suites within current households. It's also, I believe, a very forward-thinking proposal that provides us with the added flexibility to meet probable future needs. As the demographics of our population change, we will be able to meet these changes.

Madam Speaker, I support Motion 512. It is one initiative meant to address ways in which we can look to accommodating, literally in our current housing, that kind of accommodation that individuals are looking for. I would suggest that the negative attitude I am hearing from across the floor be tempered, because quite frankly this is a very positive initiative that is being taken by the Member for Calgary-Bow.

Thank you.

4:20

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Madam Speaker. Once again I'm just under the time line here, and I'm aware that Edmonton-Riverview very much wanted to say a few words, so I will try and condense my 20 minutes down to 10. I'm speaking to Motion 512, which, paraphrasing it, is essentially recommending that municipal governments allow for additional low-cost housing units by changing municipal zoning bylaws to allow things like nanny suites and basement suites and other kinds of alternate low-cost housing.

Certainly housing is a real issue in Edmonton-Centre. We have mostly apartments there, and a lot of them have been converted to condominiums, which has taken a large number of units out of the rental market. With the rental market in Alberta heating up overall, there has now been a move by owners of apartment buildings to upgrade and put some money into them and then re-rent their apartments at a higher rate. They've spent a lot of years bidding their time with the lower rates. Now they're able to charge higher rents and of course would like to do so, but that has caused a lot of hardship. We have fewer units available both through the converting to condominiums and also with the rising rental market.

Also, the issues of individuals. I mean, we have some people working at minimum wage here, and as we know, unless you're working two or three minimum-wage jobs, you're not making enough money to keep body and soul together. There are a number of people in Edmonton-Centre on social assistance or AISH, assured income for the severely handicapped, or on disability pensions from workers' compensation. By far the largest group of individuals is seniors who are on fixed incomes, many of them at the minimum level, with old age security and the guaranteed income supplement and in some cases the Alberta seniors' benefit, because many of them in fact didn't have an opportunity to contribute to the Canada pension plan and therefore can't pull from it or don't get very much coming back from it. So homelessness is a real issue in Edmonton-Centre.

How can that be addressed? There's one project I want to highlight very briefly, and that's the Arts Habitat project in downtown Edmonton. Now, the city of Edmonton really took strong initiatives here in trying to create more housing units in downtown Edmonton some time ago and offered a variety of initiatives, including a cash incentive to developers that were creating new units. Now, I'll admit up front that those are mostly units that were sold, condominiums in essence, but there also was at the same time a project called ArtsHab, which is a partnership between the provincial government, the business sector, and the municipality, with a lot of other support agencies lending support around this.

What they did was use a building that was owned by the private sector that they were having trouble renting. It had been empty for a long time, and nothing much was happening with it. Working with some grants they received from the provincial government and assistance through zoning bylaws and I think a bit of money from the municipal government plus a lot of donated goods and services from the retail sector, they were able to take the entire top floor of a warehouse-type building and create 12 live/work spaces for artists right in downtown Edmonton. That was 12 new spaces, and that's definitely low-cost housing. Artists, as many in here should know, do not make a large income.

This was a really innovative partnership and one I'd like to see continue and develop more spaces. I think that kind of three-way or more than three-way partnership between levels of government, the private sector, and the voluntary sector can address a lot of problems and bring a lot of expertise into the arena that is dealing with issues of low vacancy rates, homelessness, how much money people have to pay, a thriving economy. All of those issues have to be dealt with. You can't just hive off one little section of it.

So I recommend strongly that this government take seriously the issue of housing, the availability of low-cost and social housing, particularly as it applies to seniors who wish to be independent. I understand exactly what the Member for Calgary-Bow has done in recommending that the municipalities look – it's a very specific thing that she's recommending. I know it would be of assistance if it's carried through.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 73(1) regarding bills receiving three separate readings on different days to accommodate second reading consideration for Bill 25 on the same day as its introduction.

Bill 25

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2000

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice it's my pleasure to move Bill 25, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2000, for second reading.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks, Madam Speaker. A couple of observations. Bill 25 by convention is a bill that's dealt with in a unique fashion in the sense that the bill is put to the opposition in draft form with the invitation to review it, and if there are any matters in it that we take issue with, those items are excised, or removed, from the bill. We followed that protocol again this year.

The criteria used by the opposition have been whether it's contentious, whether it's opposed by anybody who would be affected by the legislation. This year we've actually done better than past years in the sense that government ministers have provided – I'm not sure I can say in each and every case but in most of the major cases the opposition appreciates that we've had more opportunity to review the elements of the miscellaneous statutes bill than has typically been the case before. I want to specifically thank the Minister of Justice, the Government House Leader, and those cabinet ministers who in fact shared with us in a very timely way what they're proposing to do by way of miscellaneous statutes.

Now, there are some items that are not going forward in the bill, and I'd simply say to those people interested in those amendments that are not included in here that it doesn't always mean that the opposition would oppose them coming forward in a stand-alone bill but that some things are more appropriately dealt with in a separate bill and not lumped in. One of the problems with miscellaneous statutes is that a lot of Albertans don't pay any attention to this. The problem is that when you have a dozen different elements to it, it doesn't attract the attention that it does when it comes in with a separate bill title and so on. So I wanted to make that observation.

I want to specifically thank Peter Pagano, the Chief Legislative Counsel for the Department of Justice, who once again in his usual courteous and competent fashion has worked with the opposition in terms of identifying issues and concerns and taking steps to find answers where we have had questions and to address the concerns that Albertans have raised and reflected through the opposition. I say, as I do every year when I look at miscellaneous statutes, that this comes closer to being a model of constructive lawmaking. You know, it wouldn't hurt to extend some of this sense of co-operation, the early viewing in draft form, with the opposition. It can work. Every year miscellaneous statutes is an example of that.

The only other thing I'd just like to do on behalf of my colleagues is thank the stakeholders, the people directly affected – for example, the Law Society; the different health organizations, health disciplines, and health professions that have provided some great briefings to members of my caucus; the Alberta College of Art & Design – groups that have gone to some lengths to ensure that all legislators in both the government caucus and the opposition caucus were informed in terms of what was proposed and why. It made it easy, I think, for my colleagues to support those changes.

So with that I look forward to the vote on Bill 25, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2000. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I also would like to make just a few comments with respect to the miscellaneous statutes this year, particularly in relation to two sections, the sections relating to the Child and Family Services Authorities Act and the Health Professions Act.

The proposed amendments to the Child and Family Services Authorities Act relate to the provision of financial assistance for the care of children who are not living with their parents or guardians and who are not in need of protective services under the Child Welfare Act. In the discussions which I had with the Ministry of Children's Services relative to this change, the commitment was given that the provision of this program in a comprehensive and accessible form would be maintained by the child and family services authorities, as this amendment in essence delegates that responsibility to the services authorities to provide.

Utilization of this program or authorization of access to this program has been declining in recent years under this government's tenure. We have not been able to identify completely the reasons for that, whether they are policy reasons. From indications in other levels it would seem that the number of children that may be in a position to require this assistance is on the increase. In this respect I am taking the authorities at their word that these programs will continue to be offered to children in need and am therefore supporting the incorporation of this amendment in the act.

My comments relative to the Health Professions Act. As all members will recall, we just debated this legislation not even a year ago in this Assembly. I find it frustrating and to a degree insulting that legislation that is of such a substantive nature would be brought forward, crammed through a session of debate, and then subsequent to that, Madam Speaker, we find ourselves with quite extensive changes being brought forward in miscellaneous statutes. Now, at the same time, we're having regulations being written for that particular piece of legislation. It's quite a large process, requiring the commitment and efforts and resources from a number of organizations to do that.

Really, I think the public in a large part is kept in the dark when the construction of regulations and legislation is approached in such a fragmented way. So I would encourage and support the government to attempt to be more comprehensive to reduce their utilization of miscellaneous statutes and try, when legislation is in its initial stages of construction, to incorporate as many of the provisions required as possible.

With those thoughts, Madam Speaker, I'm prepared to conclude my comments. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, do you wish to conclude debate?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Yeah, I would agree with calling the question at this stage. I have no concluding comments.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 18

Alberta Personal Income Tax Act

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill?

The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Yes, Madam Chairman. I'd like to make a few comments to the committee on Bill 18, a bill that will certainly be well received by the people of Alberta over the next couple of years.

It's time, Madam Chairman, to stop posturing. It's time to stop punishing Albertans for having a good education, for getting a better job, for taking the initiative to get ahead. It's time to stop taxing thousands and thousands of Albertans on lower incomes that shouldn't be taxed. It's time to stop cheating working single parents with a family or double-parent incomes, time to stop punishing them for making choices on how they raise their children. It's time to delink from the federal government. It's time to stop bracket creep. It's time to stop the brain drain and get on with building Alberta. It's time to make Bill 18 law.

There's no downside to this bill. There are no trade-offs. There's no bad with this good. It's all upside, all good news for everyone. Albertans at every income level will pay less personal income tax under Bill 18. Just as the Liberals suspected, there are a few exceptions, 190,000 of them to be exact; 190,000 Albertans will not pay provincial income tax. That will grow. That's the estimate on the '99 census, but as the province grows, those numbers will go up. Because of Bill 18 approximately 190,000 lower income Albertans will not have their personal provincial income tax reduced; their taxes will be eliminated altogether.

In Alberta we believe that there is enough of a burden on people with modest incomes who are working so hard to provide for themselves and their families. They don't need the burden of income tax on top of everything else. Unfortunately, this concept is still relatively foreign at the federal level. Albertans, like all Canadians, must pay about two-thirds, 62 percent, of their taxes to the federal government.

On the bright side Bill 18 will mean a lot to all kinds of Alberta families. All families will be taxed equitably, regardless of whether one or both parents work. Under the current system the spousal exemption is far lower than the basic personal exemption, and the effect is that one-worker families pay more tax. That's not fair. Bill 18 raises the spousal exemption to the same level as the basic personal exemption, so two families with the same income will be taxed approximately the same amount, even though family A has only one income earner and family B has two. The playing field will be leveled.

MRS. SLOAN: For single parents too?

DR. WEST: Single parents, as somebody said over here, will be able to use their first child as their spousal deduction.

Switching from brackets to a single rate and indexing the system adds full inflation-proofing. Cost-of-living raises, which are used to offset inflation, will no longer push people into higher brackets, where the extra cash is taxed at a higher rate. So the cost-of-living raise can finally be used to its fullest extent in fighting inflation. Indexing the basic and spousal exemptions will be particularly beneficial to low- and middle-income earners such as seniors on fixed incomes. The savings from inflation-proofing account for a greater proportion of their income than those with higher incomes, but higher income earners will also benefit.

As you know, Bill 18 means a single rate, no brackets, and without brackets there can be no bracket creep. All taxpayers, including higher income earners, will be taxed by Alberta at the same rate. They will no longer have to worry about the shrinking value of their next dollar. The Alberta tax man won't be taking more and more of every dollar they earn.

In Ontario they've made tax changes, too, but instead of eliminating brackets, they've just played around with them. They still have five brackets. Once Bill 18 becomes law, the same senior manager making $90,300 will pay about $540 less in taxes if he works in Alberta than he would if he worked in Ontario. So it's safe to say that they won't be leaving Alberta to go to Ontario. Far from losing people here, you must understand, Alberta's population has grown a great deal. Last year enough people moved to Alberta from other provinces to fill a city the size of Spruce Grove. This is how the Alberta advantage works in Canada, and now Bill 18 will also help us plug the brain drain, those people that are going to the United States to escape the heavy taxation in Canada.

The single rate means that those who work harder will be allowed to get ahead, and they won't have to go to the States to do that, as I said. When workers and businesspeople get the rewards they deserve, they work harder. When they work harder, they stimulate the economy, and when the economy is stimulated, it creates more opportunities for hard workers. It's the upward spiral to prosperity. The benefits seem to grow exponentially at a certain point. That is good news for Alberta's economy, and what is good news for the economy is good news for everybody else. Remember that the studies showed that by bringing in this single rate and removing $1.3 billion from the tax levels, we will see probably in the next five years 30,000 new jobs with this economic growth and probably 1 and a half percent in GDP growth just because of this tax cut.

Madam Chairman, I'd like to introduce at this time some amendments to Bill 18. I would like those distributed at the present time. These amendments I would like considered as a package. There are two parts. I would like them considered as a package, A and B put together. As these are being distributed, I'll continue. These are simple amendments. They will remove the 11 percent single rate and replace it with 10 and a half percent and will also take the allowances, the spousal allowance and the individual allowance, from $11,620 to $12,900.

At a single rate of 10.5 with increased basic and spousal exemptions, a two-income, two-children family earning $40,000 will pay about $261 in provincial tax, or .7 percent of their income. These examples I'm going to use show the progressivity of this tax rather than, as some have said in this House, that it's regressive. The same family that I just talked about, a two-income, two-children family earning $100,000, will pay almost 23 times as much in income taxes, or 6 percent of their income, 23 times that of the lower income person. The family at $250,000 will pay about 83 times as much, or $21,615, in provincial income taxes, which is 8 and a half percent of their income. Those that say that this is not a progressive tax are out to lunch.

Now, we've made two adjustments in these amendments. We lowered the single rate to 10 and a half from 11 percent, and we increased the exemptions further, from $11,620 to $12,900. What does this mean? This represents a 78 percent increase from the current basic exemption of $7,231 – can you imagine: a 78 percent increase – and a whopping 110 percent increase over the current spousal exemption of $6,140. As in the original plan, with these amendments the exemptions are indexed so that taxable income doesn't grow faster than inflation.

Everyone will save on this. It will no longer be a tax on tax. It's a tax on income. Senior citizens, single-parent families, two-parent families, single Albertans, businesspeople, and workers in every section of the economy will benefit from this. These savings will also cut across all levels of income. Low-income earners will save, high-income earners will save, and the middle class will also see significant savings. Remember, of course, that 72 percent of the people in the province of Alberta live in a family environment, raising children and working to the end of seeing a better life; single people in the province paying taxes, about 22 percent. Altogether we will cut $1.3 billion in savings for Albertans. That's a lot of money, no matter what you say.

There are two ways that this will come into place. The first will be in the '99-2000 budget. Right now a part of this is the 8 percent surtax being dealt with, the deficit elimination tax, which accounts for about $852 million. The additional $431 million is money not spent yet or even earmarked for other purposes. We're confident that we don't need this fund for ongoing programming, but it will kick in January 1, 2000. At that same time the .5 percent surtax that was in before will be incorporated in the $1.3 billion. This year, right now, about $144 million, or the 8 percent surtax that was put in place for deficit elimination, is being removed as we speak.

Now, I think there will be a lot of debate on this over the period of time, but what I would like to do now, if the House will indulge, is to give you some living examples of how people are going to save under this program. I would like, as I go through them, for people to reflect on their own families and people that they know throughout the province, whether they be seniors or whether they be low-income families. Just perhaps close your eyes and start dreaming of what this actually means to somebody that's not making the salaries that are being made by people in this Assembly but people that are on low-income supporting two children.

Ron has been working as a staff reporter for the Edmonton Journal for the past eight years. He earns $50,816 in salary and taxable benefits and contributes $1,560 to the company's pension plan. His wife, Elaine, is a part-time cashier at Safeway making $12,000 a year. Together they have a three-year-old daughter, Erin, and claim $5,400 in child care expenses. This family will see their taxes reduced by over $1,100 between '99 and the year 2001.

Doug and Shannon are married with two children. Shannon stays at home with the kids. Doug works as a manual labourer in Grande Prairie. He is struggling to support his family on $26,700 per year. In 1999 Doug paid $1,065 in provincial income tax. This government did not think this was fair, so I'm proud to say that Doug and Shannon will not pay any provincial income tax in 2001. In fact, as a result of the Alberta family employment tax credit, that was brought in in 1997, they will receive a cheque of $932 from this government. That's a net position change of $1,932.

Jordan just graduated from college, and he is now a risk management software developer with a major Calgary company. Jordan's starting salary was $46,000 per year, but he also earned a $5,000 bonus for his work on an important project. The company where Jordan works gives all of their employees a full-benefits package. In 2001 Jordan will pay $3,851 in provincial income tax, a total savings of $563.

Alex is a 75-year-old who earns $3,000 per year from his art hobby, $16,000 in a private pension income, and receives old age security. Alex also has a medical expense of $3,500 per year. As a result of moving to a single-rate tax, Alex will pay $460 less in 2001 than he paid in 1999.

Reuben is an accountant at a Medicine Hat accounting firm earning $54,000 per year. He has a 17-year-old daughter. He earned $2,600 from his investments and contributed $10,000 to his RRSPs and had half his Alberta health insurance premiums paid by the company where he works. In 1999 Reuben paid $3,342 in provincial income tax. In 2001 Reuben will pay only $1,972 in provincial income tax. He saves $1,370.

Hal is a manager at a data service company. He earns $74,000 a year and contributes $870 per month towards an RRSP. His wife, Linda, stays at home with their two children: Matt, who is 17, and Jodie, who is 19 and attends the University of Calgary. Jodie transfers his tuition and his education amounts to his father. In 1999 Hal paid $5,178 in provincial income tax, but in 2001 Hal will pay only $3,290, a savings of $1,888. If you don't think that's significant when you're trying to send two children to university, then you don't know much about economy.

Ely is assistant manager at a farm equipment distribution company earning $36,000 per year. He contributes $170 per month to the pension plan where he works. In 1999 Ely paid $2,221 in provincial income tax. In 2001 this will be reduced by $247.

Tasha is a single parent. Here you are. You asked about a single parent. Listen up. She has $400 per year in child care expenses for her nine-year-old son, Tim. Tasha is a librarian in Red Deer earning $41,000 per year and contributes $1,917 to the pension fund of the library where she works. In addition, the library pays half of her Alberta health care premium. In 1999 Tasha paid $2,397 in provincial income tax. In 2001 she will pay only $1,256, a savings – and here's a single mother raising her nine-year-old son – of $1,141.

Caroline works as an agricultural loans officer in Lethbridge. Her husband, George, is an assistant warden at the local correctional facility. Their combined income is $111,305, including $1,305 in taxable benefits. He contributes $4,200 to a government pension plan and supplements with an $800 annual RRSP contribution. She contributes a total of $5,900 in pensions and RRSPs. They have three children, aged 10, 12, and 13, and claim $2,800 in child care expenses. In 1999 this family paid $8,016 in provincial income tax. In 2001 they will pay $7,031, a savings of $985. That is significantly less savings than the single parent with her nine-year-old son. You don't think this is a progressive-type tax? Then you're not reading the facts.

Now, I have a couple more minutes. I would like to go to some senior examples, some new ones that we have. Gordon is an 86 year old living in a house in Onoway. He makes $18,500 per year in a private pension income and receives old age security. In 1999 Gordon paid $1,033 in provincial income tax. In 2001 he'll pay $644, a savings of $380. Many seniors used to write me and complain if there was a cheque difference of $3 between our supplement and when we deducted off the feds, so $380 is a lot to Gordon.

Andreas is an 84-year-old senior living in a seniors' home in Banff. It is very expensive in Banff. He has a private pension income of $28,000 per year and receives old age security. Andreas has medical expenses of $2,440. In 1999 Andreas paid $1,897 in provincial income tax. He will only pay $1,590 in 2001.

Doreen is a 78-year-old senior living in her own house in Fairview. Doreen has $24,000 in private pension income and receives old age security. She makes $500 in donations and has a $1,500 medical expense. In 2001 Doreen will pay $1,134 in provincial tax, a total of $272 less than she paid in 1999. These are significant savings for people who are on these types of fixed incomes.

Now, Madam Chairman, I could go on. There are hundreds of examples, but I want to say that in a little while we'll be putting up on the web site of Treasury a calculator that can be used by Albertans if they come in on our web site. They'll be able to punch in all their own figures, their contributions, and their deductions, and then they'll be able to figure out for themselves their own tax. I'm looking forward to what Albertans think once they see that.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Before I welcome debate from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, we will deem this amendment A1.

Go ahead, Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. It certainly is time indeed that there was some really meaningful tax reform in this province, that we stopped posturing, that we stopped pretending, that we stopped simply talking about tax reform and got on with it.

Madam Chairman, during second reading debate on Bill 18 many members of the Official Opposition put on record in some detail the difficulties with the flat tax, with the single-rate tax. It is just self-evident that if you have a single-rate tax, you will provide some relief to people at the bottom end of the taxpaying scale. You will provide considerable relief to the people at the top end of the taxpaying scale, and as a result of providing that benefit to those individuals at the end points, you must, by definition, be shifting the burden into the middle. We made many, many examples and put that on the record many times.

Madam Chairman, what I find remarkable about what we just heard is that this government is no longer talking about the miracle that a single-rate tax is in their own minds. Instead of them defending their flat tax, which we believe of course is not defensible, they have now been saying that this is absolutely a progressive tax. Talk about through-the-looking-glass tax policy. They've turned around, changed their tune, because they know that their arguments about the flat tax are built on a house of cards. They are trying to borrow the language and the arguments of progressivity to sell what is essentially a bad deal for middle-income Albertans.

Now, with all of the other examples that the Provincial Treasurer just provided, he didn't, for example, talk about a cabinet minister named Steve, who's earning $101,943 a year, who will get by the year 2004 a 20.1 percent tax cut. However, a clerk working in that cabinet minister's department, who may be earning $45,000 a year, will receive a tax cut of only 10.6 percent. So Steve saves over $2,300 on his $101,000 income, but those employees who slaved for Steve will save barely $400, Madam Chairman. So that is what we have as a difference, as a stark contrast in this government.

This government's definition of fair is that those who make the most should also save the most, and they're doing it, not only through their flat tax but through their selective tax reduction on the deficit elimination taxes. They're doing it on the fuel rebate calculation based on property value taxes. So, Madam Chairman, they've certainly made their choices that this government wants to make friends with the wealthiest Albertans. Those of us who live in the day-to-day world will have to go elsewhere looking for tax relief.

Even the news release, Madam Chairman, that the government handed out earlier today, where they bragged that there is some considerable benefit to the amendments that were just tabled, if you read the small print – and it's always about small print with this government – you read that the calculations are based on information available as of May 16, they claim. So I wonder whether or not these calculations presented are as accurate as some of the defences made in Bill 11. Do the calculations presented in today's news release, for example, fully factor in the changes in Saskatchewan? I don't think they do on my initial calculation.

Many other provinces have gone through the exercise of getting rid of bracket creep and of delinking. You don't have to impose a single rate which hurts the middle-income taxpayer in order to do that. Ontario was able to delink and index. Saskatchewan has as well.

For example, in Saskatchewan the 2000 budget calls for tax brackets of $35,000, between $35,000 and $100,000, and over $100,000 with rates of 11, 13, and 15 percent respectively. The personal exemptions and spousal exemptions are increased, and they are also introducing a new child exemption credit at 11 percent of up to $2,500 per child. All of that is being done, Madam Chairman, to accomplish the same purposes that this government claims they can only accomplish with a single rate, and I ask again whether or not the information in this press release tells the whole story or whether it shaves the truth, as we so often see from this particular government.

There are other alternatives, Madam Chairman. For example, the Alberta Liberals put out an alternative model showing that you can have multiple progressive rates with a high personal exemption and give a much flatter tax saving distribution, and you could change those rates. For example, if you take a look at an alternative that was proposed by Professor McMillan from the University of Alberta, he suggests, for example, that with increased personal exemptions and income tax bracket rates set at $37,146 and $74,305, by the year 2001 you could have tax rates in Alberta set out at 7.07 percent, 9.98 percent, and 12.05 percent and provide, once again, a much fairer distribution of those tax savings. So it is very clear that there are a number of alternatives, and we don't have to buy into this flat tax or this single-rate rhetoric that we hear coming from the government.

I'm happy to see that the government has taken some action to take full advantage of the federal tax reforms. It's clearly not enough, but Albertans will at least get some benefit from the federal tax cuts as a result of what this government is proposing, but there is a better way to provide these same benefits, Madam Chairman.

Before I move on in my debate, I have to ask the Acting Provincial Treasurer another question. In his rather grand style while he was introducing his amendments, he mentioned studies. He said that studies will indicate that there will be some 30,000 jobs created as a result of these tax cuts and, I believe he said, a 1.5 percent growth in the GDP attributed solely to this tax policy package. Well, I would like to challenge that Provincial Treasurer to table those studies in the Assembly. We'd like to see all of the evidence. [interjections] Now, he is saying that he did, but of course when you read those studies, that's not what they say. That's not what they say at all.

So, Madam Chairman, I would like to see this Acting Treasurer table the studies, bring them into the House, or stop referring to them. What we do know is that after answering written question after written question after written question after written question, the government answered all of these tax inquiry questions with the same phrase: Alberta Treasury did not do the studies. They haven't done the homework, and we've already made that point in debate on both Bill 18 and Bill 19. So I wish the Acting Treasurer would stop making these references to studies without producing the evidence, because it certainly provides a weak argument on his behalf.

Fundamental tax reform involves three separate questions: what should the tax base be; how should tax rates be structured; and to what extent should social policy be managed through the tax system? Now, the answer to each of these questions, Madam Chairman, runs along a continuum or a spectrum with progressive income taxes at one end of that spectrum and a flat tax at the other end, and it's clear that this government has put ideology ahead of any kind of thoughtful analysis of how to structure taxes for the maximum benefit of the taxpayers.

Madam Chairman, what I am concerned about in Bill 18 and with the amendment that is before us is that it provides a disproportionate benefit to higher income Albertans. Now, before any member of the government caucus jumps to their feet and says, "Well, that's because the Official Opposition somehow aren't in favour of Albertans creating wealth or amassing personal wealth" or before any of them stand on their feet and say, "Oh, well, the Alberta Liberals are against tax cuts," let me take care of those two concerns right now. The Alberta Liberal Party is the only party that consistently has stood for individual achievement and for fairness in how our society receives a benefit from that achievement. This is not just my analysis, but it's the analysis of those who have studied politics in this province for at least the last three decades.

There is not a single member of this opposition caucus who is against individual enterprise and all of the benefits of the free enterprise system. There is not a single member of this caucus who is against meaningful tax reform. We just want it to be fundamentally fair as its very root value.

The difficulty with the government's analysis is that it has totally forgotten that there are the poor amongst us. In the midst of all of this plenty, in the midst of all of the wealth, in the midst of all of the economic achievement in this province there are still the poor, and there are the working poor. There are families living in conditions that are abhorrent, and, Madam Chairman, this tax policy does very little.

Those Albertans who are at the very bottom end of the scale can be given a benefit without imposing this single rate. First of all, you can do selective tax reduction on their behalf. Second of all, they already pay very little income tax. Thirdly, they can receive a benefit from having income thresholds at the bottom of the lowest tax bracket set accordingly. So there are many ways to deal with the plight of the working poor in terms of where this government says it would like to take them, which is to remove them from the tax rolls entirely.

I'm afraid that that's not really their goal. I'm afraid that they're using that as a smoke screen to achieve what they really want to achieve, and that is providing this huge windfall for the wealthiest Albertans, not really the benefit that they're claiming it's providing to those who are at the bottom end of the income curve.

That bottom end does exist. If you take a look at the percentage of poor Canadians, it's higher today than it was 20 years ago. It was at 16 percent in the year 1980. It's at 17 and a half percent this year. Madam Chairman, the number of low-income persons in Canada has grown to more than 5.2 million Canadians who now live below the low-income line. That's a figure that's more than ever before. Even in the depths of recessions in this country, we have never seen numbers of those living in poverty as we do today.

The six-year average percentage of the population below the United Nations income poverty line has grown in Canada to the point where it's 11.7 percent. Madam Chairman, that is more living below the poverty line in Canada than in Poland or Spain or Hungary or Italy, a rather staggering comparison. Yet we have a government that wants to craft tax policy to cater to the rich and not address this inequality.

Before anybody starts pointing their finger and yelling, "Oh, that's just socialism," let me say this: any tax policy is about the redistribution of wealth, whether it be a single-rate tax or any other kind of tax. This government like every other government is into this redistribution of wealth, and it really, then, becomes a matter of deciding how fair you want to make that redistribution and who it is that you are going to favour.

Tax policy does by definition cater to some more than it does to others. I submit that the fairest decision to make given that calculation is to make sure you provide the majority of benefit to the majority of people. That to me makes a lot more sense than imposing a flat tax that picks winners at the highest end.

The incidence of low family income has grown to 13.8 percent amongst Canadian households as of 1997. Family poverty rates actually fell between the years '84 and '89, but they've climbed back to levels higher than even 20 years ago. In the city of Calgary let's take a look at the number of poor families living in very poor neighbourhoods. In Calgary in 1980 6.4 percent of families were living in neighbourhoods considered very poor. That number by '95 had grown to 8.7 percent.

In Edmonton it's a much more dramatic difference. In 1980 4.1 percent of families were living in neighbourhoods considered very poor. By 1995 unbelievably that figure has grown to 18.8 percent, yet this government wants to continue picking favourites at the high end instead of addressing some of these very fundamental issues of people living in poverty right in our midst, just blocks from this legislative Chamber.

The National Council of Welfare has listed the number of poor families living in Canada. Looking at their annual figures, in 1980 it was less than 850,000, about 830,000 Canadian families coast to coast; by 1997 that figure had grown to over a million, 1,175,160 families living in poverty.

The policy analyst Richard Shillington of Ottawa has taken a look at some of the rhetoric which has been supporting ideologies of flat tax and trickle-down economics. One of the things that he said, as quoted by Mel Hurtig in his book called Pay the Rent or Feed the Kids, is as follows:

A close look at how the Fraser Institute assesses "basic needs" is chilling. A chapter devoted to costing the body's minimum caloric requirements estimates the weekly cost of food for an elderly woman at about $22, including 14 servings of fruit assumed to cost about $2.60.

Nothing is allocated for children's toys, books, writing materials or anything not considered to be a physical necessity . . . No money is provided for school supplies.

Then Shillington goes on to make a judgment as to why the Fraser Institute and those others who embrace this rigid, right-wing ideology come to these kinds of conclusions. They say, as referred to in Hurtig's book:

The debate over the measurement of poverty is part of the attack of the right on the social programs that have defined us as Canadians and distinguished us from the Darwinian country to the south. The measure of poverty is a measure of society and of ourselves.

Poverty in a wealthy society calls for a response; a call that the siren voices of the Fraser Institute for lower taxes and less government don't want to hear.

Madam Chairman, I think this government would like to make sure that this debate gets as little airtime as possible. We have been under closure at every stage of this bill, and I expect it to be under closure in the remaining stage as well. We have seen the government manipulate the time clock so that it's brought in at committee for the first time with government amendments on the floor, no other time to debate clause by clause until this amendment is dealt with, until after 5 o'clock, when we are forced by the clock to adjourn by 5:30 p.m., just a couple of minutes from now.

There is no doubt this government will continue to use time allocation and other manipulation to limit debate so that Albertans will not learn the true impact and the true problems with this policy until it is too late. This government would like to pretend that just because there aren't hundreds, if not thousands of Albertans clamouring on the steps of the Legislature to get in, somehow this issue hasn't captured the public's attention. But I can tell you, Madam Chairman, that this issue has captured the public's attention. Their interest is continuing to grow, and they're becoming increasingly disturbed by what they find out about this government's tax plans for them.

Let's take a look at child poverty rates since the federal government decided that it wanted to eliminate child poverty, when they made that decision back in 1989. Child poverty rates, by the way, since 1989 have grown in this country from 15.3 percent to 19.8 percent. Those children living in poverty of course live in families that are living in poverty with mostly people marginally employed or only seasonally employed. Between 1989 and 1997 the number of poor children in Canada has increased by over 37 percent while the total number of children in Canada increased by only 6 percent. This is an indictment of government tax policy, Madam Chairman.

In 1996 there were 730,000 poor children in two-parent families compared with 673,000 poor children in single-parent families headed by women.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 23, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/05/23

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: Good evening. I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 18

Alberta Personal Income Tax Act

THE CHAIRMAN: Any further questions, comments, amendments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: You saw me out of the corner of your eye, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: I surely did.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just before the clock ran out prior to 5:30 this afternoon, I was making comment about children and families living in poverty and relating the picture in the face of poverty to the rationale for fair tax policy. The argument, of course, is that Bill 18 is not fair tax policy, in fact very unfair, very biased towards one category of income tax filers and against another and that it's not saved, it's not rescued by the amendments that are before us.

The amendment bringing the rate down to 10.5 percent and increasing the personal exemption to $12,900 is really just the government's attempt to diminish the negative impact that it felt from being quite frankly outdone by the federal government in its last budget and the tax reforms that have come courtesy of the federal Liberal government in Ottawa. If the government had stuck to its original flat tax plan, many categories of income tax payers in Alberta would have ended up paying much more under the Klein proposal than they would have if they had just left things alone.

So what we now have is a not too well camouflaged attempt on the part of the provincial government to save face and try to pretend that its goal all along was to bring tax relief when really all it wanted to do was bring about a change in the structure and how it collected tax. So this amendment, as I say, really doesn't do much. It's fairly transparent; you can see right through it. You can see that what the government was trying to do was just make themselves look better as they play catch-up with the federal government.

I think where I left off in my comments this afternoon was just making the point that even though there is a myth or it's popular to believe that most impoverished children are living in single-parent households, most particularly those households where a mother is the single parent, the reality is that there are nearly three-quarters of a million poor children living in two-parent families, 730,000 living in two-parent families as opposed to about 673,000 living in families where the head of the household is a single woman. So most of the children living in poverty, in fact, are living in two-parent families. Again, Mr. Chairman, the tax policy that's being proposed by this government will do nothing to bring relief to that particular situation.

Mr. Chairman, the working poor in this country have not been the beneficiaries of a coherent tax policy, and this is not just at the provincial level. I will say that the federal government over the last couple of decades has some making up to do as well. It was particularly bad for families and poor children during the Mulroney era, and the federal Liberals, I think, could be more aggressive, but that notwithstanding it is the provincial government policy which is really the focus of our discussion tonight.

I will say that great claims have been made about job creation and unemployment in Alberta. It's interesting to note that the unemployment rate continues to go down but that child poverty remains relatively constant. In Canada, for example, in 1994 the child poverty rate stood at 19.5 percent of all children, one in five approximately. The unemployment rate was about 10.4 percent.

Now, the unemployment rate has come down. By 1997 the unemployment rate had dropped more than a full point – it was down to 9.2 percent – but child poverty, Mr. Chairman, had remained relatively constant. It did go up a little bit; it was at 19.8 percent. In fact, if you look at the distribution between 1991 and 1997, the child poverty rate barely fluctuated at all whereas the unemployment rate, as I've said, has continued to go right down.

Mr. Chairman, as you begin to delve a little deeper into the reasons why this government based on its ideology may be favouring the wealthy with tax policy and ignoring the rest, I think you have to understand that this government has worshiped at the idol of a couple of other trickle-down theorists, in particular in the United Kingdom and in the United States of America. What we know is that many of the Reagan and Thatcher policies have been reversed by their respective governments that are currently in place. Nonetheless, it seems that this particular government of Alberta is stuck a little bit in the past and wants to try to repeat some of the experimentation that was done in those other jurisdictions.

John Kettle, in the Globe and Mail on November 9, 1998, put it this way. He said:

Since the Reagan and Thatcher years, the ideal of a more equitable economy – one that spreads wealth more evenly throughout society – has lost its popularity. We live in an age of economic Darwinism, where the survival of the financially fittest is the religion.

Mr. Chairman, I don't think that describes the kind of society that a responsible government would want to try to build. However, it seems to describe the kind of society that a government that's more concerned about power than policy would be interested in pursuing.

Mr. Chairman, well-known economist John Kenneth Galbraith in his most recent book entitled The Good Society wrote the following:

The good society does not seek equality in the distribution of income. Equality is not consistent with either human nature or the character and motivation of the modern economic system. As all know, people differ radically in their commitment to making money and also in their competence in doing so . . . However, this does not lessen the need for a clear view of the forces controlling the distribution of income and of factors forming attitudes thereon.

Mr. Chairman, the government in Alberta seems to have not paid any attention to that last caution as written by Galbraith. This government doesn't have a clear view of the forces controlling the distribution of income, and they seem to care less. It seems to me that what this government focuses on is how to maintain the status quo. Putting it in a popular way, it seems that the government of Alberta would be very happy to see the rich getting richer and the poor staying that way.

I think that tax policy, as I've said before, at its very heart must be fair, and since all tax policy does talk about the redistribution of wealth, why would we continue to reinforce inequities and inequalities when we have an opportunity to make positive changes in the lives of the vast majority of people instead of only paying attention of the needs of the very few?

Every year the United Nations compiles a report called the Human Development Report. The 1997 edition of that report looked at the richest 20 percent and the poorest 20 percent of the population in all developed nations. As Mel Hurtig writes in his book Pay the Rent or Feed the Kids:

In terms of the gap between the two, Canada has a worse record in distribution of income than, among others, France, Norway, Netherlands, Japan, Finland, New Zealand, Sweden, Spain, Belgium, Australia, United Kingdom, Germany, Denmark, Italy, and Israel. Only in the United States and Switzerland was there a wider gap.

Mr. Chairman, when I read that, I didn't believe it, and I went and pulled a copy of the UN report, and I confirmed their findings in my own mind. I find it to be quite shocking that not only is this distribution between the rich and the poor, the gap, tremendously broad; the chasm is growing wider almost day by day.

It's immediately apparent in Alberta, Mr. Chairman, when you look at some of the expansion in the local economies in places like Grande Prairie or Fort McMurray or even Calgary and Edmonton. You don't have to drive very far, you don't have to walk very far through neighbourhoods to see examples of great wealth, almost bordering on lavish wealth, and then you can just look over your shoulder, and you can see staggering poverty.

I say staggering poverty quite on purpose. I was amazed at my last visit in Calgary in particular, Mr. Chairman, to actually see a scene that the last time I saw it was walking about eight blocks away from the White House in Washington, D.C., where I saw a young couple and a child who couldn't have been more than two years old actually sleeping under plastic in sleeping bags on the air vent of a building. I never thought that I would see that in Calgary, and on my last visit to Calgary as I was walking between some downtown buildings, I saw a young couple – now, they didn't have a baby with them; they had a dog – in what looked like almost a semipermanent residence in a little space between two buildings and one of those dumpsters, and there was a piece of plastic that had been spread across so that they actually had a bit of a windbreak as well. I thought I wouldn't see that. In any case, Mr. Chairman, it exists.

The UN report that I referenced just a minute ago in commenting on this disparity in wealth and the economic theory which suggested – I think it was Kennedy who said, "A rising tide lifts all the boats." Well, the UN report in commenting on that said:

A rising tide of wealth is supposed to lift all boats. The yachts and ocean liners are indeed rising . . . but the rafts and rowboats are taking on water and some are sinking fast.

I think that describes the worry that I have as well.

Over the past two decades Canada's GDP has tripled. Despite this growth in our real economic output, during this same period child, individual, and family poverty have increased substantially.

There is an economist by the name of Ross Finnie at the Queen's University school of social policy. He completed a study in July of 1997 on the subject of poverty for Human Resources Development Canada. He found in his study:

There is now substantial empirical evidence that suggests that there has been an increase in earnings inequality in Canada . . . Those at the upper end of the earnings distribution [are] doing relatively better than before, those at the bottom faring more poorly, and [there has been] a general "hollowing out" of the middle.

Furthermore, the widening of the distribution of earnings has occurred as average earnings levels have remained effectively stagnant, meaning that those in the lowest reaches of the distribution appear not only to be doing relatively worse than previously, but have in some cases experienced absolute declines as well.

Mr. Chairman, to relate that back to the amendment that's before us, if you read any of the studies, even the ones that have been tabled by the Acting Provincial Treasurer, for example the Shapiro study, all the credible work that's been done on single-rate or flat taxes leads to one conclusion. These are the studies that are either for or against single-rate tax schemes. They lead to the same conclusion, that any single-rate pushes the tax burden into the middle.

Now, some economists will say, "Well, that's okay," and other economists will say that it's not. I tend to agree with that second group. But no matter what, those for and those against the single-rate or flat taxes make that same observation. Of course, when you know that the tax burden gets pushed into the middle and then you match that up with this finding that those in the middle have had their earnings, in the words of this author, "hollowed out" or become stagnant, then you know that you're doing a great disservice to the bulk of income earners and taxpayers in this province.

Mr. Chairman, another study in terms of determining the gap between the rich and the poor is to look at income before transfers and payments and the income share that is shared out across the population distribution. If you break that distribution into quintiles, what you find is that as of 1996 the top 20 percent of income earners received over 71 times the market income of the lowest 20 percent, a staggering distribution again lending credibility to the finding of the United Nations that ranked Canada so poorly in terms of the income distribution gap.

Over the time period between 1980 and 1996, 80 percent of Canadian families lost market income in real terms, if you adjust for 1996 dollars, while the top 20 percent gained. Mr. Chairman, what we're seeing is a picture of wealthy Canadians doing quite well, thank you very much, and getting wealthier as time goes on. This is in spite of some of the rhetoric we have heard that there must be tax relief for the rich or else their capital will take flight, that there must be tax relief for the rich or else they will stop investing, that there must be tax relief for the wealthiest or else they won't be productive. That just doesn't seem to be the case at all, at least not according to any of the credible statistics that we've seen. I'll just repeat this. The 20 percent, those in the top quintile of income earning in terms of families, not just individuals but families, actually had a gain in terms of market income and market share, and the other 80 percent of Canadians had a decline over the same time period. It would be responsible, I think, of the Acting Provincial Treasurer to try to back up some of his claims about brain drain and productivity and capital flight and investment, because what we can see is that there is another picture.

Mr. Chairman, I have, I guess, just a couple of minutes left this time around, and I'm going to take an opportunity, obviously, to come back and talk more about the nature of poverty, the distribution of wealth, and the impact that tax policy has. Maybe I'll end with this particular point. It was made by an employee of Stats Canada who in a 1997 article wrote:

The real earnings of lower-paid males fell by 13 per cent over the 1980s and by 9 per cent between the mid-1980s and mid-1990s, while the earnings of higher-paid males rose over the same period.

That was an article published by Garnett Picot in Canadian Business Economics, in the fall 1997 edition. I think that article has summed up well the point I'm making about the growing gap in income distribution.

Mr. Chairman, I know that you're about to ring the bell. I will try to make one further point while we're still on the clock.

According to Statistics Canada in the following year, in 1998, the poorest of the poor, the lowest decile, the lowest 10 percent, lost the most, while the top earners gained the most. In fact, there was an 11.4 percent decrease in terms of real annual earnings in the lowest decile while there was a real gain of 5.5 percent in the top.

Mr. Chairman, the statistics are almost endless in terms of making the point that in spite of everything we've heard about the damage that tax policy has done to the real income and earning potentials of wealthy Canadians, the facts are that they continue to do very well. Now, I'm not arguing for the status quo. I'm not suggesting there shouldn't be tax reform. In fact, I think I've made it very clear in my earlier comments on both this bill and on its sister bill, Bill 19, that I am all in favour of meaningful and sustainable tax reform and tax relief. I just don't want to see that relief come only to those who are already doing very well in this economy and at the expense of the hopes and dreams and the opportunities of those who are not gaining the same advantages. This familiar pattern of the rich getting richer and the poor staying the same is something we should be trying to do something about instead of trying to entrench even deeper.

So I will pass the floor at that point, and when I have an opportunity to rise again, I will continue dealing with income distribution and the effect that it has on the life of Canadians and the impact that tax policy can have to help address some of these inequalities.

Thank you.

8:20

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford . . . Sorry. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. I just had three people standing there, which is the point that we've made before. When you have a bunch of people standing, it is hard to find someone who may be wishing to speak. So my apologies, Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We've spoken time and time again about the Alberta advantage. We have promoted it. We have gone to great lengths to create an economic climate that would attract the best and the brightest minds, industries, and individuals that will contribute to that advantage. In fact, we are attracting people from higher tax provinces all over Canada. However, the problem is that we are in the global economy. We cannot afford to stay put within our province, our borders. We are in competition with places like the United States for these people. High taxes and bracket creep are things that are not only punishing these people but punishing Canada as a whole, because we're losing these talented people to places like the United States of America. We can't do anything about the two-thirds of income taxes that go to the federal government, but we can do something about the Alberta income taxes.

You know, in my constituency there's a fellow who has really done well for himself in his life despite the fact that he came from very poor roots. I mean, scraping up a coin for a telephone call would be an issue to him, but he worked hard and opened a business. He had his fair share of tough times and close calls, as anyone who has started a business probably knows. But now things are really taking off, and he's making a lot of money for himself and his family. On top of his success, his wife has had a raise, and now they have extra cash to do things they haven't been able to afford before.

So, as you can imagine, this man came to me after tax season last year with quite a bit to say about what he's paying. His concern is, I'm sure, the same as we've heard from a lot of people, that a huge chunk of what they've worked hard for goes straight to the federal and the provincial governments, and a lot of this is because bracket creep pushed him into a higher tax bracket. He wonders why he would bother to stay here when he can go to places like Texas and keep more of the money he actually makes.

A common argument is that people should stay in Canada because of the quality of life here. You know, the extra money that knowledgeable workers saved in taxes in the United States can go a long way to buying the quality of life they enjoy there. That's the reality. When you lose a huge amount of money that you pay directly to the government, you consider your quality of life in terms of money that you'd be able to keep in your pocket and what you could do with all that extra cash.

So Bill 18 will do a lot not only to attract people to this province but to keep them here. It unhooks from the federal system to a single-tax rate at 10.5 percent.

AN HON. MEMBER: How much?

MR. CAO: At 10.5 percent, a low one. It eliminates bracket creep. That's the most important thing. Now, I know that the argument across the way is that it benefits those at higher income tax levels. Well, it doesn't benefit this income group exclusively, but I don't see why we would make sure we exclude them. Tax expressed as a percentage of income is not the whole picture. The amount of tax payment is the bottom line.

The fact is that the highest earning 1 percent of tax filers pay 21 percent of the total taxes. The highest earning 5 percent of tax filers pay 40 percent of the total taxes. The highest earning 10 percent of tax filers pay 52 percent of total taxes. Those are some pretty eye-opening numbers. What's more, these are often the people who have the greatest ability to find jobs south of the border if they find that it works better for them financially.

So these people pay all this money in taxes, and on top of it all the current system punishes them for their hard work by pushing them into higher tax brackets. The more they make, whether it's because they get a raise for their hard work or earn more because their business is finally taking off or have to work a whole bunch of overtime to please their new boss, the fact is that the tax man comes in and takes more.

So what happens in our global economy freedom? People leave. Why stay in a country where government actually prevents you from getting ahead in life? Why do this when right south of the border is a country where they can take home more of their hard-earned cash to their families? This is the brain drain we've been trying hard to stem. We pay to train these people, educate them, create a mass of skilled and intelligent people who can help to create a strong and vibrant economy, and then we put them into a tax system which drives them to the United States or to other countries. So we never actually reap the benefits of the training skills we've provided for them.

Bill 18 is going to create a tax climate that will really be an incentive to keep these people here as well as attract other highly skilled people to this province. That's the Alberta advantage we're really trying to create, and for that I thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We have the amendment in front of us that deals with the two aspects relating to Bill 18, the increase in the personal exemption and the reduction in the flat tax from 11 percent to 10.5 percent. Let's take a look at the two components of that amendment.

The increase in the personal exemption to $12,900: that's good. I applaud that. I applaud any increase in the personal exemption because what it does is give benefit to the people that need the greatest benefit of all. When we talk in terms of the various income categories in Alberta, nobody deserves a bigger break than those at the lower end. The increase in the personal exemption in itself, of course, does benefit those people, and the federal treasurer, Paul Martin, in his budget recognized that. He increased the personal exemption and eliminated the sin of bracket-creep taxation. So in effect the provincial government really had no alternative but to make the adjustments to Bill 18 because of what the federal government had done when Paul Martin brought down his budget.

If we go back to February of this year, when the federal treasurer announced when he was going to be bringing down the budget, of course there was a scramble on the government side. They wanted to get out their so-called good news first, so they wanted to jump the gun. Well, they jumped the gun. They made their announcement, but in the process they ended up kind of looking a little foolish in the sense that suddenly they realized, after Paul Martin did his thing, that they had not gone far enough, so they were forced to take measures. In effect, as much as I applaud the increase in the personal exemption, if the government is insistent on a flat tax – and it appears obvious that they're going to ram this through – then I guess the lower that flat tax is, the better it is for Albertans from that point of view, but it's still wrong. It still makes it very, very wrong. It makes it wrong because the whole principle behind Bill 18 is so unfair.

When we look at fairness and we look at what the amendments as applied in Bill 18 accomplish in terms of the 10.5 percent flat tax in particular, we look at those that are going to gain the greatest benefit. Now, the former speaker brought some stats to our attention about a certain percentage of income earners paying a certain percentage of the overall tax burden, and that's true. It's very true. It's no different than when you own a half-million-dollar house; you're going to pay a great deal more property tax than the guy who owns a $100,000 house, and that's only fair. You know, we're in this society, we're in this system where we recognize we have an obligation, a responsibility to share the wealth, to spread the wealth out somewhat because we can't allow a small number of people to control a growing amount of that wealth that is there. That is happening now.

By using those same stats, I guess we can turn them around. We can turn around and say: well, Bill 18 with the amendments is going to benefit to the greatest extent 1 percent of the population, that 1 percent, of course, that pay the highest level of taxation in the province because of the amount of income they receive, some of it because they have worked hard, some of it because they've been a student, some of it because they've had opportunities that a lot of other Albertans unfortunately didn't have. I know we can preach and say that in Alberta everybody has the opportunity to achieve the greatest of success, but everybody can't be out there making an income of $200,000, $300,000 a year because you have to have the middle-income people. You have to have your firefighters, you have to have your policemen, you have to have your health care workers, you have to have your teachers. These are the middle-income earners. This is the bulk of the population in terms of the majority.

We see the struggles that are going on at the present time in terms of the process of collective bargaining. Why do we see the possibility of a strike pending that could possibly be considered illegal? It's because we have a group of people, thousands of people who feel they are not getting their fair share of the wealth, that they are not getting their fair share in terms of the amounts they pay in taxation and such. Bill 18 does very, very little for them. Bill 18 does very little in terms of increasing their disposable income.

When we talk in terms of the Alberta advantage, certainly there are advantages in Alberta to some people, particularly those that have a great deal of wealth, those that run the industries, those that have businesses and such with the lower levels of taxation. Of course that's an advantage to them, but the Alberta government has a tendency to cater to an extremely large extent to providing that so-called Alberta advantage to a select few, almost a chosen few. Unfortunately, all Albertans don't get to share in that prosperity of what's being called the Alberta advantage.

We can look at the increased disposable incomes that result from

Bill 18 and Bill 19. We can look at the increased disposable incomes that result from any reduction in taxation, and that part of it is good, because the less money that government is taking out of the pockets of taxpayers, the more disposable income there is for those that do pay the taxes. But why should that increased disposable income under Bill 18, even with the amendments, be so disproportionate in the sense that those who already have a great deal of disposable income end up having a great deal more disposable income than somebody making $35,000, $40,000, $45,000 a year who is trying to get by meeting their monthly mortgage payments, possibly a car payment, raising children that are involved in sporting activities, who have very little in terms of a disposable income, very little that isn't committed towards monthly obligations in the form of mortgage payments, rents, and other payments, putting bread on the table, and so on and so forth?

So a tax break of a substantial nature to those of middle income would increase the disposable income in that category substantially, and they in effect would turn around like any other group and spend those dollars, creating a spin-off in terms of enhancing the economy. That's the benefit of any reduction in taxation. That's the benefit of leaving more dollars in the pockets of the taxpayers. That's the benefit of doing it.

In fairness to the majority of Albertans it's important that we look first of all at providing the greatest benefit to the lowest income, who are crying for a break, who desperately need a break. Next to that we can look at middle income, where we recognize that they may have sufficient dollars in most cases, with some struggling, to meet their monthly obligations or responsibilities but not have the disposable income to take a vacation throughout Alberta even, the case may be, taking a couple of weeks off work and just traveling throughout the province. Those people would love to have an increased disposable income that they could turn around and inject back into the economy by buying some of the things in life that make life just a bit more pleasant.

So the government is right in taking initiatives that would reduce the amount of taxation that we expect Albertans to pay, to increase the amount of disposable income that is available to Albertans, generally speaking. The last speaker again made some references to people saying: "Well, I've achieved success. I make a good income. I run a business. If I'm going to be taxed at that level, why should I stay in this country? Why should I stay here when there are greener pastures just south of the border?" Well, I've said this before and I'll say it again: I don't believe that simply because you might get a lower level of taxation in the United States, that makes those pastures that much greener.

I've had the opportunity in the past to travel the east coast: New York City, Philadelphia, Atlantic City, that whole area. In Washington, D.C., touring the White House was great, but we also drove in a part of even Washington, D.C. where, when we looked at the houses in there, it was unbelievable that people have to live in those kind of conditions.

We looked in New York. You'd have one section of New York, and I don't know if the Donald Trumps lived there or who lived there, but limousines were parked all over, illegally parked wherever. Three blocks away you saw slum housing that was so deplorable it appeared it was a city that was bombed out. That's the type of income distribution you tend to have in the States. That's the type of lifestyle that one has to look at and say: do I want to exchange the lifestyle I have here in the province of Alberta, without question the best province in Canada, Canada of course being the most desirable country, and do I want to give that up to go and live in a city like New York, like Washington or Los Angeles, where you have that quality of life that some people have to experience? And the fear. In New York City and in Washington I have to admit there were times I actually feared for my safety.

I remember a former alderman, councillor Ron Hayter, in Washington. He's walking down the street, he turns around, and a fellow has a gun poked in his back: give me your wallet. Certainly that can happen here in Edmonton, but not to the same degree. Never in Edmonton have I ever feared for my safety when I've been out on the streets. In the United States it's a different story.

So I reject the argument that money in itself contributes to the brain drain. I think there are other things. Possibly some people are so caught up in the dollar that nothing else matters to them except how many dollars they can accumulate.

When we talk in terms of and look at the amendments and we look at how it affects Bill 18 and the whole principles behind Bill 18, what it lacks is fairness. It lacks equity in terms of recognizing that there are the lower income, there are the middle income, and there are the higher income, the wealthy. It fails to recognize that. If it does recognize it, it just blatantly ignores the fact that there is a middle class out there. Statements are made that, well, it's a tax cut for everybody. Certainly it's a tax cut for everybody, but the tax cut for the middle income is so insignificant in terms of the others that it's deplorable, from my point of view.

In terms of trying to sell what government is doing, government actually has a very, very easy job in putting their spin on it. You know, it's very easy to go out there and say, "Well, we're going to give everybody a tax break," without going into details, just "Everybody's going to get a tax break." That to a degree is true, making that statement, if you just say: we're going to give everybody a tax break. When you talk in terms of the flat tax, to a lot of people the flat tax sounds like almost a romantic method of taxation in the sense that people have the perception that what a flat tax does is it allows you to just fill out one form, maybe four lines when it comes to income tax: gross income, deduct a flat tax of 10.5 percent, whatever, net taxable at a certain rate, and, bango, your return is done. Of course, we know that's not the case.

We know that, if anything, the end result of these changes will make taxation more complex to the average Albertan in the sense that you'll be delinked. You'll be delinked from the feds, so you'll be filing two returns. You'll be filing your return to the federal government and you'll be filing your return to the provincial government like a corporation or a business does now, and at the same time you're still going to have all those deductions to take into consideration, your charitable deduction and so on and so forth. So it doesn't make it simpler, but in selling it from the government's point of view certainly it appears to be a lot easier to put a spin on than, say, their Bill 11 was.

In this caucus we look at it from the point of view that our position may be harder to sell to the public, it may be tougher to put that so-called political spin on, but let's forget the spin for a minute. Let's forget the political implications. Let's look at what's right. Let's look at what's fair to Albertans. And there I have to say, Mr. Chairman, that in terms of taxation the amendments the Member for Edmonton-Glenora will be bringing forward that have been tabled – at least some of them have now been tabled – will demonstrate how the Liberal way is that much fairer to all taxpayers in that it recognizes that the bulk of the population, the bulk of those who pay our salaries, for example, come from that middle income. There's absolutely no question about that.

So the amendments as proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, which put the tax cuts in a system that is progressive, provides that fairness that is lacking in Bill 18 even with these amendments. If the amendments proposed by the Liberal caucus were incorporated into Bill 18, Albertans would have cause to rejoice. Even those of that so-called higher income, the 1 percent or 5 percent of the population, whatever stats were used, a lot of those people wouldn't begrudge the fact that they're not getting the type of break they would get under the existing Bill 18. They would recognize that the Liberal proposal that puts more disposable income in the hands of . . .

Chairman's Ruling Relevance

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member. Hon. member, just so that we're all on the same wavelength, we are discussing the amendment that is proposed by the hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer, not by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. We've not yet had his amendments.

Debate Continued

MR. WICKMAN: Yes. I simply referred to his amendment – and thank you for the opportunity of clearing that up – because he did table it this afternoon. And for all of you in the House here that want to see them, he did table them this afternoon. He tabled them this afternoon, so they are now part of the record. I use that, Mr. Chairman, as a comparison of this way of doing it versus that way of doing it, because as I've tried to state all along, the idea of having a progressive series of taxation percentages with an increased personal exemption is fairer to most Albertans.

Now, I want to look at some comparisons here under the 10.5 percent flat tax, taking us to the year 2004, but most of this will be achieved before the year 2004, of course, because of the government's announcement that they're stepping up all the action on that. I should also mention that when we look at Bill 18 and the amendment, the reduction to 10.5 percent in the flat tax, the benefit that I've spoken of that the higher income get: couple that with the vast benefit they're going to get from the passage of Bill 19, which appears is going to be passed because closure has been moved and so on and so forth. Those in those income brackets get the double bonanza.

When you're over $46,500 a year of taxable income, you get double the windfall. You get the windfall of getting the greatest benefit from the flat tax plus the elimination of the 8 percent surtax. So they've got it both ways. Certainly that category of taxpayers will be very, very beholden to this government, and maybe that's what this government is looking at. Maybe they're saying: these are the people that have money in their pockets and that can afford to give us consideration come fund-raising time.

When I talk in terms of the advantage of having increased disposable income for those in the middle income, that even benefits, Mr. Chairman, a vast majority of those with the higher income because a vast majority of those with the higher income are businesspeople. A lot of them derive their revenue from businesses that they have. The previous speaker spoke of a constituent of his who had set up a business and worked hard in that. They benefit because the middle income now with this additional disposable income are going to go out and spend it. They're going to go out and buy maybe a different car, creating more wealth for that higher income person that owns that dealership, or they may go out and buy an RV, a recreational vehicle, a snowmobile. In any case, when they turn around and spend these disposable dollars, they are benefiting the people that own those particular companies, who see increased profits. They, of course, with increased profits have increased revenue.

Now, I want to do a comparison on the calculation under the 10.5

percent amendment that we have in front of us. Let's take, for example, a person earning approximately $115,000 a year. Their break will be $2,812 dollars, or a 21 percent cut in provincial taxes. Let's look at somebody making roughly $100,000. [Mr. Wickman's speaking time expired] Is that it already? I'm just starting to roll.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure for me to have the opportunity to discuss some of the issues relating to Bill 18 this evening, particularly the consultation process for this bill, which will lay the foundation for the bold new tax system that Albertans have long been waiting for.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Good speech.

MR. HLADY: Thank you to the members, who I know will be supporting this bill when we do get a chance to vote on it.

Bill 18 answers a call from Albertans for lower taxes. In fact, the demand for tax cuts is a call that politicians have been hearing all over the country. People have begun to see more and more of their hard-earned money being paid out in a complex tax system that is used to finance government waste, overspending, and mismanagement. Mr. Chairman, now we have the opportunity to move to a single-rate tax system. This system benefits those who desire simplicity in their tax system. It is a relief for those who want their tax system to be fair, and it will benefit all those Albertans who have the foresight to see that marginal tax rates are an essential part of our ability to attract and retain skilled labour.

This new tax plan is the result of one of the widest consultation processes we've seen in this province. We wanted our plan to be truly responsive to the needs of Albertans, and we knew that the only way to do that was to ask them what they thought. In February of 1998 we started the process with the creation of the Tax Review Committee. As you know, Mr. Chairman, this committee went through the province getting the views of Albertans firsthand. They took the time to really sift through all the rhetoric so that they could figure out what was at the root of the issue.

They figured out that there were four issues that needed to be addressed here. One, bracket creep, or the invisible tax that creates a greater burden on taxpayers through inflation by pushing people into a higher tax bracket. Two, the deficit elimination taxes, which understandably frustrated Albertans. They were instituted as a temporary measure. Albertans paid them even though they kept seeing the deficit rise, and once we eliminated the deficit, the taxes remained. Three, taxation of one- and two-income families. Many people felt it was unfair that the tax system favoured two-income families and that it actually was a disservice to those who chose to have one parent stay at home. This issue, incidentally, is one that we're addressing by unhooking from the federal system. Four, and finally, the burden of the multibracket system. Albertans said they wanted us to undo our ties to the federal tax rate structure and move to a single rate.

So we asked the committee to dig through the dirt and to find out what we needed to do about our taxes, and they came up with this report. After this process we wanted to make sure that these tax concerns were representative of the majority of Albertans, so we asked them. A survey went out to every Alberta household, Mr. Chairman, not just any multiple choice kind of survey but one where Albertans had to take the time to write what they really thought.

Well over 80,000 Albertans told us exactly what they thought.

They wanted lower taxes. They wanted a fair tax system, and they wanted to eliminate bracket creep. They wanted us to reform the system so that it works better for them. This new tax plan was the result of these consultations and the efforts of numerous MLAs and tax experts. We studied the results, analyzed the numbers, and designed an effective and efficient new system.

So here we are with a bill in place which will address those concerns Albertans have had about their taxes. Not only that, but it's a sustainable, long-term solution that will benefit Albertans directly by allowing them to keep more of their money. This is especially true for those 190,000 low-income earners, who will pay no provincial income tax, though they still pay the taxes demanded by the federal government. That extra money means a great deal to them, Mr. Chairman.

You know, it was once said that we ought to have a tax system which looks like someone designed it on purpose. We've come up with a design, and our purpose is to let Albertans lead us in what they want their tax structure to look like and to make sure that they pay low taxes.

Now, as we all know, we're going to keep reviewing these numbers to make sure that one of the basic intents behind Bill 18, to ensure that Albertans pay low taxes, is carried through. We have said that we will pass the federal savings on to Albertans when the new single-rate system is implemented next year. So we consulted, planned, and designed a new tax plan, which we now see here before us in Bill 18. This is a groundbreaking plan, Mr. Chairman, and it has been a model for the rest of this country. I think it will give Albertans what they have asked for in terms of a simple, fair, and understandable tax plan that will ultimately see their taxes lowered.

I think another group, Mr. Chairman, that certainly is going to enjoy the lower taxes are students and graduates, and I'd like to spend a little time talking about that. Our students certainly want to stay in this province, and they want to be able to grow and have their families here as their families before them were. There's no question that we will grow. Our economy will continue to diversify. We will start more businesses, a lot in the technology sector, the economy of the future. We will find ways to make new and existing Alberta businesses and industry more productive, and we will make the most of new technologies. We will undertake a variety of other activities, all aimed at making the future a good place for everyone who lives here.

When I say "we," I mean we as Albertans, and that includes us as politicians. It even includes the Liberals. It also includes corporate Alberta, the oil patch, all our educational institutions, and many others too. But much of the responsibility for the future rests on the shoulders of our young people. It's an awesome responsibility, and we as politicians believe that they should get as much support as possible to be effective in the future. They are, after all, building our future as well as their own.

Mr. Chairman, I'm proud to say that Bill 18 is designed to help all Albertans, including our young people. You don't have to just take my word to believe it. Everyone is starting to sit up and take notice of what we're doing here. For example, tax watchdog Mitchel Gray from the Canadian Taxpayers Federation is on record as saying, "This is a tax cut for all Albertans. Everyone will get a break: rich, poor, and middle class alike." And it's true. From this we want young people with entry-level incomes to see that even though they don't yet make the big salaries of more established professionals, they are just as important. We don't want to wait until they make the big bucks before we recognize them. Bill 18 will remove traditional tax disincentives so that these people can get on with building a future for themselves that we can all enjoy.

When it becomes law, Bill 18 will increase the basic personal exemptions by 78 percent, to $12,900 from the current $7,231. That means that these young people as well as everyone else will pay no personal provincial income tax at all on the first $12,900 they make. This makes a big difference to the new graduate just starting out or the student who works part-time to offset the costs of education, Mr. Chairman. In fact, even those who work full-time, earning minimum wage – that's 2,000 hours a year – simply won't pay any Alberta income taxes at all. However, they'd still owe the federal government about $650.

Most of the people here today can probably still remember what it's like when you're getting started, just getting your feet wet, when you've landed the job but all you've got in your closet is the suit that you wore to your high school graduation and you've come to think about Kraft dinner as two of the four major food groups. Even a bit of extra cash is going to make a difference in these folks' lives. I do remember the peanut butter and crackers days, Lipton's chicken noodle soup. They were good times. So Bill 18 certainly helps them in the beginning.

Then, as they progress, the new tax system makes it easier for them to go forward. As we have all heard, Bill 18 introduces the single-rate tax, and that means no tax brackets. So raises and increments will not push new workers into higher brackets, where they pay a greater proportion of what they make to the tax man. Instead, they will be allowed to keep more of what they earn. I have seen how a little extra can make a big difference, not just in terms of its purchasing power but also as an incentive to work harder and to stay in Alberta, which is the basic of what we want to achieve. If they get both the breaks and the opportunities here, the States won't look nearly so attractive to these young workers who have the opportunity to move in the new economy anywhere they want in the world.

All this extra work gives the province momentum and bodes well for our economy, very well. By 2006 Alberta's GDP is expected to increase 1.5 percentage points more than it would have without Bill 18, Mr. Chairman. That translates into almost $2 billion more in our economy than we could have expected without any changes to our personal income tax system, and those are conservative figures. By no coincidence the increased economic activity will mean more jobs in the province, about 30,000 more jobs by 2006, based on just doing what we're doing in Bill 18. So young people graduating from high school, college, and university will find more opportunities to put their hard work to use.

It only makes sense, Mr. Chairman. If we're banking on these people to use their smarts to build us a great future, shouldn't we give them the opportunity to hit the ground running? I don't think there's a person in the House today who would dream of holding them back. Why should we have a tax system that does? Bill 18 is designed to take them forward, so let's get on with it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm delighted to be able to rise. In fact, I'm glad to follow our friend for Calgary-Mountain View because he's brought some things to mind that I'd not been thinking of. I'm going to come back to those in a moment, but I want to start off by saying that I'm glad that we've finally seen the amendment package A1. The reason is that I feel so often like we're engaged in a form of shadowboxing. You know, the government doesn't actually put in front of us what they say they're going to take us to. They sort of tease us by telling us there may be some things coming. So I'm glad that finally the Acting Provincial Treasurer has brought in those amendments, amendments A1-A and A1-B. Now that we've got it, we see that, yes, finally the government has acknowledged that they have to back up.

It just shows again how foolish it was for the government to rush ahead to bring in the budget but a mere week after the throne speech. At the time we said: well, is it that big a deal to try and scoop Paul Martin? Well, they thought so at the time. The Provincial Treasurer thought so at the time.

So it perhaps goes to demonstrate that although alacrity is not always in the lexicon of elected people and Mackenzie King showed that you can be successful by being anything but, there are some problems with moving too quickly, Mr. Chairman, and when you're dealing with something as important as taxes, it makes some sense to spend time understanding what the impact is going to be of prospective federal changes and to factor those in. We didn't do that, and that's why we've seen the fumbling and scrambling that now brings us here to deal with these amendments.

How much neater it would have been if the government could have held off, waited for the federal government budget, and then we would have known exactly what we were dealing with. It just goes to show, Mr. Chairman, that the notion that my tax cuts are bigger than your tax cuts is really pretty juvenile and not something that we'd want our Provincial Treasurer to aspire to.

I wanted to make another point. I'm delighted that we had a long weekend, because I had a chance to post a new section to my web site. It's an analysis of Bills 18 and 19, the government flat tax proposal. I was anxious to do that, because as members may recall, I have a question that I put on the web site every two weeks, and the question that's been on there since we saw the end of Bill 11 is: what do people think about a flat tax? We're polling people, and hopefully by Thursday I'll be able to have the updated results of people who visit the poll site.

I'd also posted something of an analysis I've done. I think I saw some members wincing when I said that, and I acknowledge that I'm no economist. One economics course in university hardly qualifies me to do comprehensive tax analysis, but you know the good thing is that thanks to the great folks in the Legislature Library and the good work done by Liberal researchers and our colleague here for Edmonton-Glenora, I was able to bring together some information that I thought my constituents would want to see and want to have.

The other thing I just wanted to share, Mr. Chairman, is that between 5:30 and 8 o'clock, I had a chance to do some door-knocking. I had a chance to go into the Edmonton-Highlands constituency, and it was actually quite overwhelming. I guess I was there about 45, 50 minutes on the doors in that constituency, and certainly there were some who wanted to talk about health care and Bill 11, but there were a surprising number of people who wanted to talk about tax reform. They wanted to talk about: what's this government's flat taxing all about? I think it's fair to say that to a man or a woman when I put to them the government's notion of a flat tax – and I did some comparison and contrast with the Alberta Liberal fair tax proposal. You know what? In every single case people preferred the fair tax to the flat tax.

You might say that that was a prompted survey, and there would be some truth to that, Mr. Chairman. But these were insightful people I was talking to in the Edmonton-Highlands constituency, and they seemed actually quite conversant with the problems with the flat tax. It didn't take very much clarification to have them understand the value of a zero, 10, 12 fair tax Liberal alternative to the one that we see in Bill 18 with the amendment in front of us.

I'd just share with members that I encourage others to go into Edmonton-Highlands. It's a great opportunity to field-test it. If this government thinks they've got a winner going into the next provincial general election, I invite them and indeed I challenge them to field-test their proposal at the doors of Edmonton-Highlands, because I think they may be in for quite a surprise. You know that $8 million budget that the provincial Public Affairs Bureau has? It's not going to be enough to convince these good people that the flat tax is fair. It doesn't in any way advantage the people living in Edmonton-Highlands.

The concern I continue to have – and some of this I had highlighted the other day. This was before we'd seen the amendment. Now that we have the amendment in front of us, A1-A and A1-B, it confirms for all time – and Edmonton-Glenora may have a different thought on this. This was probably the last chance for the government to recognize that we have to move to a progressive tax system and one with some additional levels.

I sort of thought that maybe with this amendment what we'd see would be something that would pick up on the Liberal fair tax alternative. It would pick up on the, I think, insightful analysis that's been done by Edmonton-Glenora and the Leader of the Opposition and others. It was with an enormous sense of disappointment when with trembling hands I turned over the amendment as it was delivered efficiently by the page and realized that we're still stuck with this funny tax masquerading as a flat tax. It's not even in any pure sense a flat tax.

The other comment I wanted to make is that as we listened to the Acting Provincial Treasurer in his proselytizing mode, he now is starting to use the language of the opposition. When have we seen this before? We have the Acting Provincial Treasurer, who complicit with his government has been touting a flat tax. That's what they've talked about. That's what they've boasted about. That's what the Premier, I think, talked about probably in his fireside chat. We go back and look at budget process. We're talking about a single-rate system and colloquially refer to it as a flat tax.

Well, what the government does is discover as they get into this that Albertans don't like a flat tax. The more they find out about the flat tax, the more they don't like it. So what happens is that the government decides that we have to start shifting ground here. You wish they would use this sort of flexibility when it comes to Bill 11, when it comes to other things, but the flexibility really only goes to how they remassage the message and how they adjust, adapt, change, reframe the message. They don't change the substance one iota, but the message changes in some fashion.

So now what we've got is Bill 18. With this amendment, A1, both parts, we're not so much dealing with a flat tax. If people had a chance to read Dennis Mills' book – Dennis Mills is the Ontario Liberal Member of Parliament who in fact had written a book a number of years ago about a flat tax, a single-rate tax system. Bills 18 and 19 represent something very different from all of those proposals. It means that now we start to see the ground shifting, the government trying to change the message. The next thing is: when will they start changing the substance, or will they at all? Will we end up as we saw on Bill 11, where they refused to do that all together?

What one woman said at the doors in the by-election this evening was: why is the government so concerned with people who make over $100,000 a year? In fact, her comment to me was: most everybody who lives in this area earns between $30,000 and $70,000. Now, I'd mentioned that frame to her earlier, and she thought that most of her neighbours were in that particular frame. I think that what she liked about the Liberal alternative in terms of moving to a 10 percent tax rate for those middle-income earners is that it represents a significantly fair break for them. It means a larger tax cut for them. And you know what? Those people think that that's a fair and appropriate way to go.

As I look at the two amendments, I go back to what the Premier is quoted as saying in a July 27, 1999, Calgary Herald story: "What we want to do is make sure that those who can least afford to pay tax get the first break." We heard the former Provincial Treasurer say, "Certainly our priority is for low-income earners, and there are ways that can be addressed." That was the Calgary Herald, July 28, 1999.

Well, Mr. Chairman, what happened? What happened to those comments? What happened to those implicit promises, those representations made by the former Provincial Treasurer and by the Premier on, you know, July 27 and July 28, 1999? What's changed? Why has government lost its focus on moving in those respects? It's very disappointing that we don't see that.

It's interesting to me also when I look at the amendment package that the Mike Harris government that has been so quick to clone and replicate a number of the things that have happened in Alberta – and we can argue about why they would be dumb enough in Ontario to make some of the same mistakes we have in Alberta, but that's another question, Mr. Chairman. Surely what's interesting is that when Mike Eves, the Provincial Treasurer in the province of Ontario, who, for a Conservative, is actually quite a wiley politician . . .

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. DUNFORD: It's Ernie. Mike Eaves is a hockey player.

MR. DICKSON: Ernie Eves. I'm sorry. I'm sorry. Mike Eaves is the hockey player. Well, I understand Ernie Eves is a pretty good puck-handler too, Mr. Chairman, and does really well with the heavy traffic in the crease. I'm indebted to the minister of human resources for setting me straight on that.

You know, I think Mr. Eves is a pretty savvy guy. He's been around for a long time. He's been a provincial legislator. He's well respected inside and outside Queen's Park and environs, and Ernie Eves decided that the flat tax wouldn't work in Ontario and chose not to go down that road. I know that this government likes to cast itself as a trailblazer, but you would think that from time to time you'd check the rear view mirror; wouldn't you, Mr. Chairman? Wouldn't you want to just sort of look over your shoulder and see whether anybody's following you? In some caucuses it's necessary to look over your shoulder as a matter of personal safety.

Anyway, the point, Mr. Chairman, I was just making is that I think there may be something constructive there in terms of seeing that Ontario isn't going down there. So what happens is that when I hear this government say, "Well, you know we're on the right course," then I say: well, why is it that the only other people who want to go down this road are the Republican Party in the United States, and Steve Forbes, the former Republican president-wannabe? Why are those the people championing this, and government after government after government that's looked at it has decided that this is not the road they want to pursue?

The other comment I'd want to make is that when I heard the Provincial Treasurer – and this might seem to be off track, Mr. Chairman; I'll caution you now. In fact, it was the Acting Provincial Treasurer who raised it when he was speaking in introducing his amendment. He talked about the Robert Shapiro article. This is the one entitled Why Fairness Matters: Progressive Versus Flat Taxes. I go back and refer to Dr. Shapiro's test for a tax system promoting three goals: simplicity, growth, and equity.

I think what you find as you look at this bill – if this amendment goes through, here's what we've got. Simplicity is not afforded by this change in terms of a change from where we are right now. This is not in fact a true flat tax. You still have a host of exemptions and provisions that undermine any notion of simplicity.

I think it was Dr. Shapiro who made the point that in a country like Canada and certainly in a province like Alberta there is more opportunity here for people, smart people, capable people, with substantial capital than many other jurisdictions to be able to take some seed capital and prosper. There are a lot of nations where you wouldn't have that opportunity, either because of excessive regulation or because of a host of other constraints and considerations. The concern, though, is that in a province like this you would have terrific, terrific opportunity to expand your initial capital, your seed money. Part of the quid pro quo we pay for that is a progressive tax system, and I've always been proud of a progressive tax system, like I used to be proud of a strong public health care system.

Mr. Chairman, the feedback I'm getting in my constituency office – I've had a couple of people who have opposed my stand on Bill 18 and Bill 19, but those are the same people that opposed my stand on Bill 11. The vast majority of people have expressed opposition to bills 18 and 19 in their current form. Everybody would like to see a tax break, but they'll be darned if they want to see people at the top income end enjoying a differential advantage in terms of a tax break, and that's really what this package is going to provide.

Mr. Chairman, I know there are others that will want to participate in the debate. I'm looking forward to being able to table in the Legislature the response I get to my web site. In the first week of May I think there were 570-odd responses to the Bill 11 question, and in the month of April we had about 2,500 responses on the web site to another question on Bill 11.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: This is Bill 18.

MR. DICKSON: Right, but I'm venturing a suggestion, Mr. Minister of Municipal Affairs, that we're going to see some big numbers posted on the web site in terms of people registering their comments on bills 18 and 19. I want that Minister of Municipal Affairs to be the first one. In fact, when I get that, I'm going to get it printed off the computer. We're going to get it polished up. Maybe we can put it in something with a bit of a border and with a big seal on the bottom, and I want to come in and specifically present that certificate showing what those Calgary Buffalos think about bills 18 and 19, and I want to share it with the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: We're going to do that after the election.

MR. DICKSON: Well, that's right. We'll be too busy in the by-election, but after June 12 I want to bring it.

If one MLA can do that kind of a survey on an issue like 18 and 19, why doesn't the provincial government do it? Why doesn't the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Minister of Innovation and Science, using the expertise of the chief information counsel and the chief information officer, come out with a proposal so that citizens will be able to register their concerns? [Mr. Dickson's speaking time expired] And I hadn't even got to Calgary-Mountain View's comments, but I'll get to that later.

Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a great pleasure to rise again, because Bill 18 has so many great news stories in it. You just can't say it all in 20 minutes. There is so much good news out of this, and Albertans are so happy that we're doing this.

Mr. Chairman, the reason I've been looking forward to this is that really Bill 18 does something for low-income Albertans, and I think it's important to acknowledge that. There is much talk from the opposition that Alberta's new tax plan benefits high-income earners. Well, this is true. This government won't deny or apologize for that, but the Liberals always seem to stop right there.

This bill will also benefit middle-income earners. We're talking benefits to the tune of $612 in savings for a two-income family earning $55,000 with two children or a savings of $1,206 for a one-income family earning $40,000 with two children. But the fact is: Alberta's new tax plan goes even further, and that's something the critics don't like to mention, Mr. Chairman. Bill 18 frees 190,000 low-income Albertans from provincial taxes completely. I'll say that again. Mr. Chairman, 190,000 low-income Albertans off the provincial tax rolls. That's something the federal Liberals can't boast about, but given their record, it may be something they'll copy in their next budget and try to take the credit for inventing. For the sake of other Canadians I hope they can actually do that. Low-income Albertans deserve a break. They may be students trying to get through school. They may be young and just entering the workforce. They may be single parents, and Bill 18 will help them all.

Let's look at a part-time student, Mr. Chairman. With Alberta's new tax plan even if a student is working full-time at McDonald's earning minimum wage, she won't pay any provincial tax. Now let's look at an Albertan entering the workforce. If she earned $20,000, she would save $386 from 1999. However, her federal tax bill would look scary. In 2001 families with two children who earn less than $33,400 will pay no provincial income tax at all. For these families the refundable Alberta family employment tax credit will exceed Alberta tax payable. Unfortunately, the federal Liberal taxes account for two-thirds of the tax bill. We would love to be able to announce that these low-income Albertans won't be paying any income tax at all, but we will have to wait until the federal Liberals find room in their budget to help the families the same way we are trying to help them here in Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, the opposition has suggested that health care premiums should be eliminated instead of moving to a single tax rate. They suggest that that would provide greater relief to low-income Albertans. However, there are several problems with this approach. First, low-income Albertans already receive a generous subsidy to help pay for health care premiums. Many of these Albertans would receive no benefit from the elimination of the premium.

Seniors also receive generous relief on premiums. In fact, Mr. Chairman, less than one-third of seniors pay full premiums, and seniors start paying income tax at a lower income level than they start paying health premiums. Therefore, low-income seniors would benefit more from tax reductions.

Finally, the benefit for many working Albertans would be minimal. Many employers pay part or all of their employees' health care premiums. A reduction or elimination of premiums would not be completely reflected in Albertans' pay stubs, but it would contribute nicely to a company's bottom line.

So that's why getting rid of health care premiums is not the best solution. Bill 18 is the best way to help ease financial burdens on Albertans.

With Alberta's new tax plan a single person making $20,000 will get a 38 percent tax cut. A single senior making $20,000 will receive a 62 percent tax cut. With those kinds of tax cuts a single person could have some car repairs done or purchase a couple of month's worth of groceries, and a senior could pay a month's rent and buy an annual bus pass or have some house repairs done or, just imagine, not have to worry about where their money will come from in case an emergency arises, Mr. Chairman. As I said, Alberta's new tax plan helps middle- and high-income earners, but most importantly it helps the people who need it the most, and that's why we should be supporting Bill 18.

Another area that I'd like work on, Mr. Chairman – and it's very important to mention all of the wonderful, good things that will come out of passing Bill 18 – is dealing with and around overtime and people who've been working really hard. I can only imagine the envy that other provinces feel as this debate is going on here in Alberta, but a strong fiscal plan has given us the ability to introduce groundbreaking tax reform and tax cuts of over 20 percent. Yes, that's what I said. We'll take 20 percent, or $1.3 billion, less from Albertans' bank accounts next year.

I think one thing that we can all agree on is the benefit to low-income Albertans. Nearly 200,000 Albertans will be removed from the rolls, but I think the biggest problem that the critics have with the single tax rate is that high-income earners will also be winners. I have a hard time seeing why they oppose this though, Mr. Chairman. Just because someone earns more than their neighbour doesn't mean that he or she is a bad person. Why should they be punished for working harder?

High taxes don't create any incentive to work that extra hour of overtime or take that course you need for a promotion. High taxes often defer people from bettering themselves at work, because the more you earn, the more government takes in taxes. It is a fact that high taxes stifle an individual's enthusiasm.

Mr. Chairman, I know that when my wife is working at the hospital in Calgary, the natural practice for all of the nurses that were needed and were putting in overtime hours – rather than taking the money in pay, because it moved them into a higher tax bracket, they would take the time off. It made no sense for them to take the money because of the high taxes they'd have to pay. This will allow them to work hard, take their money, and enjoy the extra hard work they've had rather than just taking the time off and at least give them a healthy alternative.

We believe in encouraging creativity and enthusiasm in a different way here in Alberta, Mr. Chairman. We think government should get out of people's private lives and out of people's bank accounts. We think that if government backs off, then people will have more room to grow and more freedom to choose. Bill 18 will give Albertans more freedom. By removing tax brackets, Albertans will have the freedom to choose to work harder. They will also have the freedom to choose how they will spend the money that they will save by not paying the same amount of taxes. They won't be punished with higher taxes for getting a raise. There's nothing more discouraging than getting a raise and having it taxed away because your raise puts you in a higher tax bracket.

Low taxes are not only good for individuals and families, Mr. Chairman; they're also good for the economy. When individuals are allowed to grow, the economy grows with them. When individuals are feeling financially confident, the economy reflects that confidence. The Liberal opposition has suggested that we can't afford the kind of tax cuts that we are giving. Well, I think we can't afford not to give them.

The $1.3 billion tax cut that we are giving to Albertans is affordable. Alberta Treasury estimates the new tax plan will increase economic growth. With the new tax cuts five years after the tax plan is implemented, Alberta's gross domestic product is expected to increase by about 1 and a half percent, or $1.9 billion larger. Roughly 30,000 new jobs will be created, and increased economic activity will generate enough increased tax revenue to offset the 40 percent of the direct cost of the tax cut.

It's important to keep in mind that these numbers are based on the initial estimate of a $500 million tax reduction. Now that we are giving a $1.3 billion tax cut to Albertans, the economic impact will be much greater. This is good news. However, we need to always keep in mind the purpose of this bill: to introduce tax reform and give every Albertan a tax cut. Do the Liberals really want to see those who are in the lowest tax bracket – let's say a young couple expecting their first child – struggle to make ends meet? I know about that. With a new baby in their future they may be inclined to try to earn a little extra money to cover the additional costs of raising a family, but with the current system those extra hours push this family into the middle tax bracket with a higher rate. The only result is that one of them is away from home working longer hours without much financial gain. Bill 18 will end this penalty, Mr. Chairman. I honestly think the Liberals don't want to see that.

What about someone who is already in the middle income tax bracket? What if he or she works hard and gets a raise? Is it all right to tax away the extra money he or she earns? Where do the critics draw the line? Who do they choose to be winners and losers? Bill 18 will not punish these Albertans either.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

Mr. Chairman, it's time for some real tax reform. It's time we stop punishing hardworking Albertans by reducing any incentive to work, save, and invest, and it's time we let Albertans keep more of their own money.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to stand this evening and make a few comments in regards to amendment package A1 in regards to Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. Again we have a bill that's being presented here in the Legislature, a bill that requires amendments. Again it's a bill that was certainly brought in with great haste. The whole idea of our budget being brought in was because we wanted to get ahead of the federal Liberals, and without realizing that whatever changes they had in their tax system, it would certainly impact everything that we did here.

So here we are, looking at two amendments, one to reduce the flat tax from 11 percent to 10.5 percent and a second to increase the personal exemption from $11,620 to $12,900. When I look at this, Mr. Chairman, I certainly could never oppose a tax break for Albertans, and I think it is a great benefit for those 190,000 low-income Albertans that won't pay any provincial tax. This is a break that is going to those that need it most, but they are not the only ones receiving a great tax break in this whole scheme of things.

It was quite interesting this evening. Before I came down, I attended the by-election forum that was put on by three social studies students at Eastglen composite high school. I was amazed, as I was meeting and greeting people coming to the forum, at just how well informed they are in regards to Bill 18 and Bill 19. It was amazing how they sought out the MLAs that were there and got their points of view on it.

I know many of them had expressed an interest in speaking to some government MLAs, and they were very disappointed when they didn't get this opportunity. Certainly we didn't see one there, and if there was one there, then I would apologize to that person. But here we are, in a by-election where of course the record of this particular government is going to be examined. We're into a by-election where they are going to be looking at Bill 18 and the amendments made to it here, and people didn't have the opportunity to quiz those government members on it. So the real test of this legislation is certainly going to be reflected to some degree in the by-election.

Now, then, we look at what happened with the federal budget. There was such a rush here to bring this in, to bring in changes in Alberta, to bring in this flat tax system that no thought was given to what would happen if indeed the feds altered theirs, and they did. They brought in a tax reduction. They brought in a tax reduction that was certainly fair to all segments of society, to all taxpayers, and I must commend them for that. I think what became evident very, very clearly, when we looked at Bill 18 and Bill 19, is that other people as well got tremendous benefits from these two bills, and those were the people at the upper end. So again we had the tax burden being placed on the middle class.

Now, I was certainly very happy to see that there was a great deal of consultation that went into this particular bill and these amendments. Certainly all Canadians, not only Albertans but all Canadians, have been waiting for some type of tax reform in this country, a tax reform that is fair and equitable. We are elected here to represent the views of our constituents, and certainly in all these consultations I don't think there would have been any Albertans in the other two groups, the middle income and the lower income, that told this government: well, let's give the biggest tax break to those people who can afford to pay it most.

I think that somewhere between those consultations and the drafting of this bill something went awry. I also think we saw the same thing with Bill 19, when of course the flat tax, the .5 percent, was scheduled to be eliminated before the 8 percent surtax. Once again – surprise, surprise – when the bill came out, it was not reflected in the bill, but the 8 percent surtax they were going to be wiping out of that was going to be implemented first, once again a benefit to those people who have the greatest ability to pay.

Now, then, this bill and its amendments certainly don't meet the wishes of the majority of taxpayers in this province. Again, I like the fact that it does give a break to those people who are on the lower end and who will certainly benefit from those. I also think back to a visit we made to the Mennonite Centre, Mr. Chairman. They do a tremendous amount of work with new Canadians. They gave us an example of where two new Canadians, man and wife, were working at minimum wage, and even with those dollars those people were living below the poverty line. So certainly they need every break they can get, but they need a tax system in this province that is going to be fair and equitable.

It seems to me, when I read Bill 18 and the amendments here, that this is not a bill that's going to be fulfilling the public good, but it fulfills the corporate agenda of this province. When we look at that, we do see the implications of what has happened. Where we have – and all studies indicate that we have – a greater spread between the wealthy and the poor in this province, we also find that both those divisions are increasing in size and we are getting a shrinking middle class, yet the middle class by this bill are being asked to carry the load of tax reform. Once again, this is not legislation that is for the people's good. It is legislation which will benefit the haves more than the have-nots. So what we have to do here in this province, Mr. Chairman, is certainly look at this whole idea. We don't have any trouble generating wealth in this rich province. What we have to do is redistribute that wealth, and this bill will certainly not aid the middle class in that regard.

We have certainly talked about the expansion of our economy here in Alberta. It is a very good economy, it is a strong economy, and it is growing. We have to hope this economy will continue to grow, but we do have a cyclical economy in this particular province, and we do have times when of course we have to put more burden on the taxpayer. We saw that before, when we had the implementation of the .5 percent flat tax as well as the 8 percent surtax. But what has happened here in these booming times? The poor in this province have not benefited. We do have a tremendous number of homeless people, particularly in our urban centres and our major cities of Calgary and Edmonton, and there is staggering poverty.

When I toured the Mustard Seed centre in Calgary and other places in Calgary where the homeless were, I was quite amazed at how similar this situation was to one I witnessed down in California about 10 years ago. We were down in the inner city of Los Angeles on a beautiful summer day with many homeless around. We saw people walk down the sidewalk, and there was a sardine can sitting on the stone fence. One of the homeless picked it up and drank the juice out of it. This is a can that had been sitting out in the sun, and I would imagine that person had food poisoning from that experience.

Every report here in Alberta, Mr. Chairman, indicates that the amount of poverty for children and families in this province is also on the rise, and certainly this particular bill will be a little bit of a break for them initially. But also when I look at this particular bill, we have to look down the road and say: what is going to happen when this great economy that we have going in this province right now hits hard times? We know that's going to happen. So if we project what impact this is going to have down the road . . . [interjections]

MR. SMITH: Billy, you're doing a great job.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Member for Calgary-Varsity. I just have a few more comments I'd like to make.

MR. SMITH: They'd better be better than the last ones.

MR. BONNER: They're excellent comments.

MR. SMITH: Well, we'll be the judge of that.

MR. BONNER: They would even fit in with your philosophy of things.

MR. SMITH: Oh, so you're saying you're ready to convert, take the pledge?

THE CHAIRMAN: Order.

MR. BONNER: Mr. Chairman, just finishing off my comments here. When our economy falls on hard times, as it will and it always has in the history of this province, then who is initially going to be impacted the most when we do have tax changes? Of course, this is going to be the middle class, upon whom the burden of the tax load was placed with this particular bill.

So, Mr. Chairman, in closing I must say that I cannot support these amendments at this time, and I look forward to further debate by other members of the Assembly. Thank you very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's such a good-news story again that I just had to stand up and cover a few more points on this particular bill, because it is such a great bill. There are some aspects of Bill 18 that make Alberta's tax system different than any other in Canada. It's true. The most obvious one is the introduction of the single-rate tax, but I'd like to focus on something that doesn't get much attention. I'd like to focus on the fairness to families that the changes to our tax system will bring.

Bill 18 dramatically reduces the difference in the way one-income and two-income families are treated by the tax system. [interjections] You bet, and having the lower tax rate that's being introduced in the amendment makes this even a better bill.

You see, Mr. Chairman, under the current system there are different amounts for the basic and spousal exemptions. Right now the basic personal exemption is $7,231 and the spousal exemption is $6,140. This doesn't make much difference to a dual-income family because both earners claim the basic exemption. However, it does make a difference to a single-income family – and this is where the unfairness is – because the one earner claims the personal exemption and the lower amount of the spousal exemption. Another reason one-income families pay more is that their incomes get pushed into higher tax brackets sooner, so more of their incomes are taxed at higher rates.

When we move to the new system, both the basic and spousal exemptions will be the same, $12,900. Also, with a single-rate system there is no higher bracket to be pushed into. It doesn't matter whether it is the income of a single-income family or a dual-income family; income is taxed at 10 and a half percent, not the 11 percent that was in the original. So under the current system a single-income family with two children and earning $55,000 a year paid $3,349 in provincial taxes in 1999, while a two-income family with two children and earning the same amount paid $2,479. That's a difference of $870. Now, Mr. Chairman, when our new system comes into place in eight months, a single-income family will pay $1,968, while the two-income family will pay $1,867. That's a difference of about $100. Both families get a sizable tax break, and the difference in what they pay is dramatically reduced.

Just as we believe that Albertans should not be punished for choosing to work harder, we also believe that the family shouldn't be punished for choosing to have one parent stay at home. While this is a step in the right direction in reducing the income tax difference between one- and two-income families, Mr. Chairman, it only applies to the provincial portion. Again, federal taxes account for over 60 percent of the income tax bill.

There is something else to consider. According to a paper done by the C.D. Howe Institute, in many cases one-income families make less than two-income families. This makes sense since families with two income earners can make a lot more money. Their figures show that 80 percent of high-income families were dual income earners, and over half of all low-income families had one income earner.

Mr. Chairman, this is a fairer tax system because it provides great relief to low-income Albertans. By addressing this issue, we've also made sure that the new tax system helps those who are often the most vulnerable: single-parent families. Single parents can claim the spousal exemption for one of their children, providing the same level of savings enjoyed by a two-parent single-income family. A single-parent family making $30,000 will receive a 276 percent tax cut. How can they get a 276 percent tax cut, Mr. Chairman? Well, it happens because this family that used to pay $397 will now have their taxes reduced to zero and then get more through the Alberta family employment tax credit. These single parents are among the 190,000 Albertans who no longer have to pay provincial income taxes. As I mentioned earlier, this unfortunately doesn't apply to the federal income taxes.

However, Mr. Chairman, with Bill 18 a single-income family with two kids earning $30,000 will save $1,096 from 1999, and $1,096 can go pretty far if you think about it. They could replace their hot-water tank, buy some new shoes for the kids, order some pizzas, rent a couple of movies, have a good time. It's a lot of money for a family with a low income. But the best thing is that they can spend it on whatever they want, and it's their own priorities. It's not for us to decide.

This government believes that the best way to help families is to leave more money in their hands at the end of the day. That's why we've been cutting taxes for years. Alberta is well ahead of most of the provinces in providing tax relief. The early elimination of the surtax on January 1 this year is great news for middle- and upper-income Albertans, but it is not the first tax break given to Albertans. In 1997, Mr. Chairman, we introduced the Alberta family employment tax credit, which gives tax breaks to low- and middle-income earners. In 1998 we cut the tax rate from 45.5 percent of federal tax to 44 percent, and we doubled the Alberta family employment tax credit.

MR. FISCHER: Is this a Conservative government?

MR. HLADY: Cutting taxes. Pretty good, huh?

In Budget '99 we introduced this new tax plan. Bill 18, Mr. Chairman, is important for Alberta's ongoing tax reform. It's important that we unhook from the federal system so that we can change the basic and spousal exemption amounts. If we hadn't unhooked from the federal system, we would not have been able to address the fairness issues such as the difference paid by one- and two-income families. In fact, these families would be worse off if we simply passed through the federal reductions. With Bill 18 all single-earner and single-parent families, whether they make $30,000 or $100,000, are substantially better off under the single tax rate.

One other area that's really important as well, Mr. Chairman, is bracket creep. I mentioned it a little bit earlier, but I'd like to get into a little more detail on bracket creep here. Everywhere in this province Albertans are trying to get ahead, working hard trying to create wealth for themselves and for their families, hoping to have more cash available to spend and maybe even a bit to save for a rainy day. They've worked to take part in the Alberta advantage that we speak so often about. With the amendment that we having coming in here, going from the 11 percent to the 10.5 percent, they're going to save even more.

The problem is that since 1986 our tax system has not kept up with inflation. This problem, otherwise known as bracket creep, has meant that the tax system has not contributed to that advantage. Before 1986 our tax system was fully indexed to inflation. If the cost of living went up, the tax system reflected those changes, for example by increasing basic exemptions. But the federal government decided it needed more cash, and rather than legislating a tax hike, they took the side door. They decided that in the future they would only index the tax system if prices rose by more than 3 percent. This is called partial indexation.

Say you've got a guy who tries to make a better life for himself. He wants more money so he can maybe buy a house, save a little for his future, do something for his children, do things he's always wanted to do. So he finds a job where he works harder than he's ever worked until he finally gets a raise. Logically, Mr. Chairman, you'd think he'd be better off. I mean, he's making more money, so theoretically you'd assume he'd have more to spend on groceries or to pay off his bills or whatever. The fact is that the tax man takes the better part of that extra money.

On top of all this, when his wages have gone up just to reflect the fact that things cost more, a cost of living adjustment, the result is that he ends up getting pushed into a higher tax bracket even though his wages only went up enough to cover the increasing costs of things that he had to buy anyway. So really it's possible that this man is not much better off or possibly even worse. It's crazy. It's as if the government is saying: "You've got a lot of extra cash. You're going to have to give us more because you can afford it now."

Forget that everything costs more and that he's been working hard to get more income so that he can afford those things and maybe set a little aside for the future. None of that matters under the old system. We've been punishing those who work hard trying to get ahead and create more wealth for themselves with a tax system that creeps into their pockets and steals their hard-earned money when they're not looking. It's not only regressive; it's downright dishonest. It's about time we did something about it.

When you design policies as a government, the true test is to figure out a way to create systems that will benefit the most people as well as benefit those who need it the most. The great thing about the system we've created under Bill 18 is that it will do both, Mr. Chairman. Everyone will pay fewer taxes with this new amendment, which sets the flat tax at 10.5 percent and raises the spousal exemptions from $6,140 to $12,900 and the personal exemptions from $7,231 to $12,900. An additional 190,000 low-income Albertans will pay absolutely no provincial income tax under this new system. Now half of Albertans who file personal income tax returns will not pay Alberta income tax.

That's a wonderful thing. How can you beat that? Everyone has more cash in their pockets, and almost 200,000 of the people who need it the most won't have to pay any provincial taxes. That's a really important point because lower income Canadians are punished the worst with bracket creep. The value of the credits these people rely on erodes because of inflation so that they end up paying more money to the government. Many low-income Canadians have moved from a situation of paying no tax to paying tax even though the only increases they have seen have been to keep up with inflation.

It's just not fair, and that's why we are not only indexing our tax system but massively increasing personal and spousal deductions to make up for lost ground. We thought it was wrong that low-income Albertans were paying taxes, and we fixed the problem. Often it's money that could go towards rent, food, bills, new shoes, or whatever else they need. Money is tight at these lower incomes and every penny counts for them. Not only does bracket creep rob the rich; it takes money from the pockets of some of the Albertans who need it the most.

Bill 18 and its new amendments will make the system fair. It will relieve a huge amount of tax pressure from the people of this province and will make sure we're actually contributing to the Alberta advantage that we've always been talking about. This is a tax plan that has become the model for the rest of the country. I should point out that it's really great to see that Ottawa has finally opened their eyes to this problem and decided to follow our lead in eliminating bracket creep.

I really think we're doing a lot to create advantage for Albertans through Bill 18, Mr. Chairman, and I'm proud to be a part of the Assembly that has had the opportunity to do it. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I really appreciate the vigour with which Calgary-Mountain View is engaging in debate tonight. I think this has to represent a personal best on his part: three separate efforts in committee on the same bill. I'm not talking about in the same legislative session; I'm just talking on the same bill, on the same amendment. It's got to represent a personal best. Very impressive.

One of the concerns I have is that the amendment talks about how the government wants to collect taxes based on a single rate of 10.5 percent, but to listen to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, you would think the government really believes that all taxes, all taxation is a form of punishment. I'm going to go way out on a limb here and take a real political risk and say that I don't think all taxation is punishment.

You know, I don't know anybody that's particularly glad to turn over part of their hard-earned income to the tax man, but I do know lots of people that enjoy public education and public health care. They enjoy those public institutions that give us peace and security and justice. They enjoy the roads, they enjoy the parks, and they enjoy environmental protection. Mr. Chairman, generally speaking, I think most Canadians agree that taxes are the price you pay for the kind of society you want to build and you want to live in, so I don't think all taxation is punishment, and I don't think most Albertans or most Canadians are opposed to paying fair taxes.

You know, I've seen those bumper stickers that say: all taxes are theft. Now, I suppose there might be one or two people out there that believe that all taxes are theft, and they're probably the same people that don't put their money in the bank, because they don't trust it, so they keep it in a sock under their pillow. They're probably the same people that have another bumper sticker that says: this truck protected by Smith & Wesson. They probably have another sign on the door that talks about all the people they never want to see visit them, and they probably don't mind living that kind of imprisoned life. For the most part, Mr. Chairman, I think Canadians are far more fair-minded about taxation policy than Calgary-Mountain View would have us believe.

Earlier I was talking about the difference between the rich and the poor in this country and the growing gap, particularly here in Alberta. What we know is that this gap can be measured in so many different ways. If you take a look at chief executive officer compensation, for example, there was a survey done in 1977. It looked at 100 CEOs. Pay particular attention to this: the average compensation in 1997 for this group of 100 CEOs of large corporations was $3.45 million annually. That was the average compensation. For comparison purposes, just to put that in perspective, according to Stats Canada, for 1997, the same year the average CEO compensation was almost three and a half million, the average Canadian worker earned $31,100, less than one one-hundredth of the CEOs' average.

Now, CEO compensation also has grown by an alarming rate, while year over year the average worker's income in this country has only grown by about 2 percent since 1996. So again, Mr. Chairman, the argument of some who would have us believe that all the wealthy are packing their bags and going elsewhere because they're not doing very well in this country would be misinforming us.

Let's take a look at the argument that we have to provide greater tax advantages to the wealthy than to anybody else because if we don't, they will take their capital and go elsewhere. Well, I would like to know where all these very fine businessmen and businesswomen would go, because in fact if you take a look at the average percentage of return on capital between 1970 and 1979, do you know that Canada is second only to Japan in terms of the average rate of return on capital for that period of time? Fifteen percent compared to 17.9 percent. The United States was only at 14 percent. Investments made in this country did better than almost anywhere else in the world during that time period.

If that's the case, then why is it that there are those out there trying to get us to believe that tax policy is the only way we can stop this capital flight? Mr. Chairman, it doesn't make any sense to me. I would hope that the next time Calgary-Mountain View stands in his place, maybe he will tell us what studies he has to back up his assertion that Bill 18 is the answer to this problem which we haven't been able to nail down yet.

If we take a look at the rates of return on capital for the period between 1980 to 1998, again we see the same experience as what happened in the '70s. If you take a look, first of all, at the '80s, you find that the total return for the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, OECD, countries, the rate of capital on average in let's say 1985 was 14.2 percent. By 1989 it was 15.5 percent. Not bad, but take a look at Canada's history: 19.2 percent in '85, 19.3 percent in '89, again leading most of the developed world. This is contrary to the cry that we hear so much that corporate Canada has not been doing very well. Corporate Canada can always do better; there's always room for improvement. Yes, carefully crafted policy can help, but they have been doing very well.

Let's take a look at the 1990s. Again, let's compare Canada to the United States. In 1990 the rate of return was 17.1 percent in the United States. For the G-7 it was 15.5 percent. In Canada it was 17.8, leading the G-7, leading the United States. In 1995 18.3 percent was the rate of return for the United States, 16.1 percent for the G-7, 19.3 percent for Canada, leading once again. By 1998 the United States had managed to attract a rate of return of 18 and a half percent, the G-7 countries 16.4 percent. Canada's performance continued to be stable and above the average at 19.2 percent, Mr. Chairman. These are figures that we don't hear much from the disciples of Reagan and Thatcher economics, not a headline that we're likely to see in any of the Hollinger papers or in the headline of the National Post either. The fact is that the numbers don't lie.

In 1996 15 OECD countries had a higher percentage of tax revenue compared to GDP than Canada. By 1999 Canada will have dropped even further down the list, and because of the strength of the federal economy, the management of the federal budget, and the surplus that is projected over the next decade, that ranking will even become greater, Mr. Chairman. It will have dropped even further down the list.

Tax revenue as a percentage of GDP in Canada right now is about 38 percent, and we expect that to fall by at least a full third. Now, Canada is in the middle of the pack on that measure. It doesn't lead, but it certainly doesn't follow. Again, it's comparable to Germany, the United Kingdom, Hungary. The economies of Greece, Norway, Poland, Italy, the Netherlands, Austria, Luxembourg, France, Belgium, et cetera, all do far worse on that measure, and really we're not dramatically different from other economies that we're often compared to such as Australia or even once again the United States.

So, Mr. Chairman, it's clear that tax policy has a huge impact on the individual lives of wage-earning Canadians. We know from the statistics, we know from the evidence that there is this growing gap, and we know or we should know that when we have an opportunity through tax policy to do something about ameliorating the conditions of the very poor, we should make that a priority instead of first paying our attention to the circumstances of the very rich. That's not socialism; that's just fairness. That's not saying that we don't want to make sure that everybody can do as well as possible and leverage everybody's advantage to the maximum. It just means that we don't want to pick winners and losers. We believe fundamentally on this side of the House in equality of opportunity, not of outcome, making sure that people get the same breaks at the same time. We don't want to keep on reinforcing all of the distortions that are currently in our system.

Mr. Chairman, earlier today during the Routine I had an opportunity to table three amendments in the Assembly. I tabled one amendment which, as I said during tabling, would refer the detail of this bill to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. I tabled another amendment which would ensure that there was complete flow through to the Alberta taxpayer for any of the benefits of federal tax reform, because in this delinking we're afraid that the provincial government won't rush to pass along tax savings to Albertans as a result of the very aggressive tax reform and tax reductions being done at the federal level.

The third amendment that I tabled is one that I was hoping we would be able to get to in debate, Mr. Chairman. I've been informed that that's likely not to happen, and I don't know why it is that the government would want to stop debate on this. While we were dealing with Bill 19, there's an amendment currently that's on the floor to be debated. The idea behind the amendment is to synchronize the removal of both the deficit elimination taxes, but in order for that amendment to be effective, we would have to further amend Bill 18 to amend section 89(3) to ensure that the deficit elimination tax is removed in the 1999 taxation year not the year 2000 taxation year.

Now, the government seems to be wanting to frustrate our attempt to get this amendment onto the floor of the Assembly so we can debate it. All I can think is that this government wants to maintain this .5 percent flat tax that over one and a half income tax payers have to pay for an extra year. Why they want to continue to pick the pockets of taxpayers to the tune of some $350 million is beyond me, particularly when we listen to the arguments put forward by Calgary-Mountain View about how this government wants to rush to remove these hurtful and regressive forms of taxation.

So we're in a real quandary here because the government is really controlling the agenda. They're watching the clock, and they're sort of manipulating things around the fact that they would like not to have an opportunity for the House to vote on these Liberal amendments which are needed in order to synchronize the changes in Bill 19.

At some point we'll have to vote on the government amendment, and I think what's likely after that is that the government will probably not bring back Bill 18 until they can control the clock again through the use of closure. So Albertans may never have the benefit of this amendment proposed by the Liberal opposition. So when we get to Bill 19, the government wants to continue gloating that somehow it has found an error in the logic of what it is the Official Opposition is trying to do.

I just hope that the government doesn't continue to think so little of Albertans that they won't be able to quickly see through that kind of tactic and understand it for the cynical bit of politics that it is, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me that what we have is a striking example of this government being petty and playing politics while at the same time they want to put themselves up on this tax-cut pedestal and pretend that what they're really doing is in the best interest of everyone. Of course, all they're trying to accomplish now is something that's in the best interests of themselves. Their policy will not well serve Albertans, and this particular strategy about trying to block debate will not well serve Albertans otherwise.

Mr. Chairman, I fear that if I were to yield the floor and allow this government amendment to come to a vote, the result would be that immediately the government would adjourn, and we would never be able to move on. So I'm not inclined to do that at this point. I think I will just simply continue describing the difficulties I have with the current government policy even as the proposed amendments would have impact on it.

There was a paper presented in 1998 by The Urban Institute in Washington, D.C. and authored by Eugene Steuerle. The title of his paper is The Simple Arithmetic of Flat Taxes. The title of that paper really struck me, because I've always been frankly a little bit intimidated by tax policy. You know, when you read all the tax acts and you sit down with your accountants and you sit down with lawyers and you try to understand the whole myriad of Revenue Canada rulings and all the interpretation bulletins, I've always found it to be very complex. I have to clear my mind. I have to focus. I have to have, you know, the lights on high and the music down low, and I have to be able to really pay attention. I have to really be able to focus in to make sure that I understand it and that I get everything lined up properly.

Then it struck me that when this government comes through with a flat tax proposal, what they're trying to do is find a very simple solution to a very complex problem. There's a saying I heard once. You know, it's like one of those Murphy's laws: for every complex problem there is a simple solution, and it's always wrong. I think that's what we've got here.

We've got a very complex situation with tax policy. We've spent hours so far in debate explaining the interaction of tax policy on social policy and on the economy and the fiscal dividends and the economic dividends. You know that if you change one variable it affects so many other variables, so there's nothing simple about tax policy. So when I read this, The Simple Arithmetic of Flat Taxes, I thought: that describes this government to a tee. You know, simple thought, a simple process; let's try to boil this down to something that's so simple that it becomes almost meaningless.

So instead of working hard, rolling up their sleeves, you know, breaking a sweat on their brows, really paying attention to the detail, what this government has done instead is say: "Well, you know what? We'll just package up a simple idea with some political rhetoric, and we'll try to sell it to Albertans because we don't have much respect for Albertans." Now, this is what I imagine was going on in the government's mind, simply saying: well, you know, I think that Albertans won't question us, because after all we're the government.

What we know, Mr. Chairman, particularly with the experience on Bill 11 is that the government doesn't have that kind of trust or support from Albertans. Albertans are far more sophisticated than this government has given them credit for. Albertans are far more on the ball when it comes to the harmful impacts of social policy, in particular tax policy.

So this government may think that they can pull the wool over the eyes of the voters in this province, and they may be arrogant enough to think that they can get away with it because of the way they ramrodded through Bill 11, but I'm here to tell you along with my colleagues in the Liberal opposition that that's not the message that we're getting. It's not the message we're getting on the doorsteps in the Edmonton-Highlands by-election. It's certainly not the message we're getting on our fax machines and in our phone calls and in our letters. It just makes me want to scream out sometimes, Mr. Chairman, when I think that this government is really that out of touch, yet they still think they have the moral authority to continue to govern and just to push through whatever initiative they want.

In any case, all of that sort of came to mind when I read this title The Simple Arithmetic of Flat Taxes. But the Steuerle article has an interesting quote, and I'd like to share it with you, Mr. Chairman. What he says is:

The simple arithmetic of tax reform reveals that there is no free ride. Improvements in fairness and simplification are possible, but they require not a wave of the hand, but step by step examination of almost every government program in the tax code or in the expenditure system. This is very hard work, it doesn't promise that everyone will be a winner when the legislation is finally drafted, and it can't be done without employing some basic arithmetic.

Mr. Chairman, this government has been trying to use the approach of simple answers to complex problems since 1993, when the Treasurer of the day, Jim Dinning, said in a public forum in Red Deer that there's a smart way and a dumb way to cut budgets, and he prefers the dumb way: just cut. You know, he wasn't kidding, and it set the tone for what this government has done. That very same individual, who is now the chairman of the Calgary regional health authority, talking about what's gone wrong in health, said: we'd rather experiment than plan. It's unbelievable. So when he's Provincial Treasurer in 1993 to when he's the servant of the government in the year 2000 in the Calgary regional health authority, the same attitude is prevalent.

There is no reward for that kind of simple thinking, for that kind of laziness. There is a reward for hard work. There is a reward for paying attention. There is a reward for planning. We should not let this government get away with that kind of laissez-faire attitude particularly when it comes to the hard-earned money of the men and the women we were elected to represent. I think that this government should be embarrassed by the direction they're going with tax reform, Mr. Chairman, and I look forward to my next opportunity to pursue that particular thought.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think we've heard a number of comments tonight about government not allowing things to come to the table and rambling debate on things that aren't on the table. The fact of the matter is that we're on an amendment to Bill 18, and that amendment is a very good amendment. Bill 18, as it was brought forward, dealt with the circumstances that we had planned for, fully anticipating that the federal government might bring some amendments to their budget based on the input which has been made by Alberta from time to time and over the years that they should reindex, that they should be cutting taxes, that they should do a number of things. It was anticipated that if they did in fact cut taxes, there would need to be amendments to this bill in order to make sure that those tax cuts were passed through.

So the amendment is a good amendment. It moves from the 11 percent rate, which was originally proposed in the policy, to 10.5 percent, and it raises the personal exemption that was proposed from $11,620 to $12,900. And those are important. The dual change is very important, because what it does, as has been said in this House before, is remove 195,000 Albertans from the tax rolls. There can be nothing fairer, Mr. Chairman, than removing low-income Albertans from the tax rolls, and this amendment does that.

It's a very fair process, because what it does as well is lower the single rate to 10.5 percent. Now, I like to talk about this as a two-rate tax system. There is zero percent tax for those who earn at a rate at which they wouldn't be taxed because of the personal exemption. We shouldn't forget in this discussion that of course spousal exemptions are going up significantly, so both a taxpayer and a taxpayer's spouse, if they're not an income earner, have the same exemptions. So this is a very fair process to families. All of the existing tax credits remain, so income earners in the middle-income range have the benefit of all of the tax exemptions and the tax credits that they've had before.

It's a very, very fair process, and coupled with the progressive tax rate system that the federal government still maintains in terms of the multirate structure, the combination of the two gives Alberta the best possible tax position for small business to operate, for the economy to operate, for money to be returned to taxpayers' pockets so that it can be recirculated through the economy, and in general it makes a very, very strong Alberta advantage gain. So, Mr. Chairman, I think this is a very, very good amendment.

Now, Edmonton-Glenora was purporting to speak to this amendment but in fact tried to speak to other amendments which they haven't brought forward yet but tabled in the House today. What they're trying to do is suggest that by amending Bill 19, which comes up for debate later on, we can move to next year the removal of the surtax that comes off this year under Bill 19 and then amend Bill 18 to bring it back into this year. Well, that's about as ad hoc tax planning as any that they accuse the government of doing.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, that over a year ago Albertans were promised that the surtax would come off this year and that the delinking would happen next year. That's when we can delink; that's when we will delink at the earliest possible opportunity. That's what's appropriate. That's good planning. That's not the ad hockery that the Liberals would have us engage in now, by a simple twist of the wrist move it back a tax year, which can't be done because you can't bring this in without delinking from the federal government. So it's just inappropriate for the Liberals to suggest that we have kept them off the debate floor when they could have allowed a vote at any time on this.

Mr. Chairman, at this point in time we do have to debate other business of the House, so I would move that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on Bill 18. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed?

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would at this time ask for unanimous consent of the House to abridge the Standing Orders such that if any other votes are taken on Bill 19 before the committee adjourns that the bells ring for the normal 10 minutes for the first vote and thereafter be abridged to one minute.

[Unanimous consent granted]

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay. We have Bill 19, then, under way, and we have amendment A1, as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Chairman, thank you. We had a very interesting circumstance last week, before the May long weekend, when I'm sure the government was hoping that the minds of Albertans would be paid to the burgeoning spring and the warmth of the sun and the blue skies that most of us enjoyed in this province. I think the government was hoping that nobody would notice what stunt the government pulled. You know what? They noticed, and I heard about it. People were actually outraged that the government would take the opportunity to pull the kind of stunt that they did in terms of the time allocation on these tax bills.

We have Bill 18 and we have Bill 19. Really, this is a total restructuring of the way taxes are collected in this province. There's really no reason why bills 18 and 19 couldn't have been done together in one bill except the government wasn't sure what it wanted to do in terms of tax strategy when it came to the fine details.

See, in 1996 the government had said that they were going to eliminate the .5 percent tax that all Alberta taxpayers pay. Then they changed their mind because they thought they couldn't afford it. So in 1999, when they published the budget for 2000, they did a full reversal, and they said: no; we're only going to get rid of the high-income surtax, the 8 percent that about 390,000 Albertans pay, and maybe nobody will notice. So because they did that reversal of policy, they really had to do two separate bills, because Bill 18, which totally redrafts the tax act for Alberta – it's called the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act – has in it a section that talks specifically about one of the deficit elimination taxes. Bill 19 amends one of the sections that would be in Bill 18.

As I was describing before, because of the intricacies of parliamentary procedure in the opposition we're not allowed to amend a section of a bill that's not in the original bill. So this is why we come to an amendment such as the amendment before us, which is amending section 3.03, to talk about the flat tax being withdrawn in the same year as to which section 3.04 applies, which of course is the section 3.04 that's in Bill 18.

Now, when I moved this, I made it very clear that the intent of this and the only reason why we couldn't do it directly was because, as I say, of these intricacies of parliamentary procedure, but the intent clearly is to ensure that the government can't pick winners and losers with their tax reforms, that they would remove both of these so-called deficit elimination taxes at the same time next year; in other words, for the 2000 tax year.

Now, the Government House Leader, like a kid trapped in a candy store, ringing his hands and jumping with glee, went: "My goodness, my goodness," or words to that effect. I think he said: this is delicious, so exactly like a child in a candy store. He said: this is delicious; the Official Opposition has made a mistake. Now, I can understand his delight, because of course the Official Opposition does not make mistakes. So I can understand his delight when he thought he had found an error. He couldn't contain himself. In fact, I have never seen the Government House Leader more animated.

My colleague the Official Opposition House Leader, who wasn't present to see the performance, read Hansard this morning and called me and said: Sapers, what did you do to Hancock? That's what he said. It's a quote, Mr. Chairman. "What did you do to him? He was so animated, it literally jumped off the page at me." He could tell. He could see the gleam in his eye. His cheeks got rosy. He was light on his feet, and the reason why is because, again, he thought he had found a mistake.

Now, the mistake, of course, is his. The issue is that the government controls the timing on when bills are introduced, and they can control that in a thousand different ways, as we've seen over the course of just this very day, so the timing is not of the Official Opposition's choosing. What we can do is bring honest and accountable opposition into this Legislative Assembly to make sure that the government can't just run roughshod over the people of this province. So we introduced an amendment to Bill 19, this amendment which will see to it that the .5 percent flat tax is removed at the same time so that average Albertans don't take it in the neck, Mr. Chairman, because this government wants to play favourites.

Now, of course, you have to read this together with one of those amendments that I tabled earlier today during the Routine, particularly the amendment on Bill 18 that would amend section 89(3).

MR. DICKSON: That's the Liberal fair tax tax?

MR. SAPERS: It is in fact, Calgary-Buffalo, all part of the Liberal fair tax package, in fact truly for the first time since 1993 what would really be an Alberta advantage. The Liberal opposition has come forward with the beginnings of tax reform that will be fair, will be fundamental, will be focused, will be comprehensive, and will be sustainable, all admirable goals, none of which the government initiatives can achieve.

MR. DICKSON: You should be selling this in West Edmonton Mall gift shops.

MR. SAPERS: Well, I fully expect the Harris Conservatives to pick up on this Liberal package and bring it into Ontario, and then maybe once Mr. Harris adopts our plan, the current Premier will see that, since he's always so nervous about what it is that Ontario is doing. He'll look back there across the Canadian Shield, and he'll see what it is that's going on in Ontario and say: well, we can't let Harris out tax reform us. He'll bring the Liberal package back into Alberta – and that would be okay with me if that happened, Mr. Chairman – and then they would implement what would be truly fundamental and fair and comprehensive and sustainable tax reform. If that's the way it has to go, you know, maybe what I'll do is air express this package of amendments over to Mike Harris.

Maybe I should send it to Tom Long too, because, you see, when he puts it on the agenda for the Canadian Alliance, maybe the former Provincial Treasurer will see it as well and think: oh, my goodness, somebody else has a better idea; I'd better appropriate it for myself. Then maybe we'll see it fed back into the system that way as well, because we know full well that those characters don't have any qualms at all about appropriating the good ideas of others. So we would give them this good idea because we know it's the right thing to do.

The bottom line here, Mr. Chairman, is that contrary to what the Government House Leader would have Albertans believe, that the Bill 19 amendment that's before us is out of sequence or prolonging the collection of this so-called deficit elimination tax, this tax that was brought in in 1987 – and I believe the deficit was gone by '94 or '95. Budget '96 was the first budget without a deficit. Actually, I believe that was about a year after Saskatchewan eliminated theirs. So the Alberta claims about, you know, whose budget was balanced first are probably a little exaggerated, but that's okay. I'm still proud to be an Albertan. It's just the government I take issue with, Mr. Chairman.

In any case, we have the budget balanced, the deficit gone, but this government has for years and years and years proceeded to collect these so-called deficit elimination taxes, which were only supposed to be temporary. What we want to do is eliminate them both, and we want to eliminate them both as soon as possible. The soonest we can do that, of course, would be the very next taxation year. So that's the impact of these amendments.

I want the hundreds of Albertans in the galleries with us tonight and I want all of the men and women who will be reading Hansard and those tuned in on the worldwide web on real-time audio, listening right now, because I know my son is – and, Jeremy, it's time for bed – to all understand that these two amendments have to be read together. You have to take a look at this, because, as I said, Bill 18 is a comprehensive rewrite of the Alberta tax legislation. It has a section in it that relates to one of the deficit elimination taxes. Bill 19, which is really an amending act to the new Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, talks to another deficit elimination tax. You have to read them both together. It's been approved by Parliamentary Counsel, and it's the only way that we can bring this measure of fairness to Albertans.

So if I have to say it again so it's crystal clear, I will. What this will do, in effect, is make sure that at the very next opportunity, the next taxation year, when Albertans sit down to fill out their tax returns for the income they've earned this year, they will be able to save themselves from paying not just that 8 percent surcharge that the government wants to just forgive for the highest income earners in the province; they would also be saved from paying the .5 percent flat tax, which generates about $340 million worth of revenue, projected on an annual basis, and which is paid by over 1.5 million tax filers. That's over $340 million and probably closer to $350 million this year, and with the growth in this province it might even be closer to 1.6 million Alberta tax filers.

In any case, the majority of taxpayers, almost every single one of them, will pay the .5 percent. Only those at the higher income level pay the surcharge. We don't think that's fair. We don't think the wealthy deserve yet another break on top of all of the goodies that this government already provides for them. We want to make sure that this tax reform advantages the widest variety of Albertans. That's why we brought in this amendment. That's why I would urge this government to vote in favour of it.

Please, I would say to my colleagues in the Legislative Assembly, don't take notice of the gleeful musings of the Government House Leader when he suggests that the Official Opposition would have Albertans paying this tax for an extra year. That is nonsense. In fact, it's more than nonsense. It's bull droppings, Mr. Chairman. Of course, the evidence of that is that amendment A1 to 19 is the companion or, as my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo says, the Siamese twin to this amendment for Bill 18, which I have already spoken to.

It could not have been made simpler. This is deadly simple. This could not have been made simpler. The only way it could have been made simpler is if the government had kept its word in 1996 and eliminated that .5 percent tax first so that when they rewrote the tax act in Bill 18, we wouldn't have had this mismatch between which deficit elimination tax was going to go first. It would have been made simpler if the government hadn't broken its promise. But since, you know, this government has a habit of not keeping its word, we have to do what we can, given the rules of procedure, to hold this government accountable. So here we have these two amendments, which really must be read side by side so that all Albertans will get the full appreciation that it is the goal of the Official Opposition to remove not just the 8 percent surcharge but the .5 percent flat tax as well and to do that as quickly as possible.

I don't know, Mr. Chairman, how much more needs to be said at this point in time. It seems to me that it couldn't be clearer; it couldn't be simpler; it couldn't be more fair or fundamental. I will yield momentarily to see whether or not my arguments have caused a tax epiphany on the part of government members, and they will quickly accept this amendment as the one that makes sense. Of course, if they haven't come to that realization, Mr. Chairman . . .

Chairman's Ruling Speaking Twice in a Debate

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. member made reference to something that's not possible. Once the closure motion is on, you get to speak once; okay?

MR. SAPERS: You're right. Thanks. My colleagues, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay; fair enough. Good. I just didn't want you to sit down thinking that you were going to be able to come up, and you're not.

10:50

MR. SAPERS: No. And of course it's sad that we're under that duress at this point in the debate, Mr. Chairman. I was inspired by Calgary-Mountain View rising not once, not twice, but three times during the amendment on Bill 18, and I would have appreciated being able to speak as many times at least on my own amendment on this very important matter. But because the government is using the heavy hand of closure and clubbing democratic debate once again to a close in the Chamber, I won't be able to do that. But I know my colleagues will carry on the debate.

The thought that I was trying to complete was that I would yield the floor to the government to see whether or not they had seen the error of their ways. Of course, I don't expect an apology or any act of contrition from the Government House Leader, but you know I would expect him at least to be silent while his colleagues stand and say: well, gee, you know, this amendment to Bill 19 really does make sense. Then, as I say, we'll hear from my colleagues as well.

Debate Continued

MR. SAPERS: So, Mr. Chairman, thank you for making sure that I was correct in the impact of closure. As I conclude, I will simply reiterate that the government's plan is to remove the 8 percent surcharge first. This is a surcharge that's paid by less than 400,000 high-income Albertans. The Liberal amendment would cause the removal of the .5 percent flat tax, which is paid by all Alberta tax filers. We don't think it's fair to reward the wealthy first, particularly at the expense of those who aren't, so we would like to see both of these deficit elimination taxes gone, gone, gone, and our amendments, read together, would accomplish exactly that.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise today to speak to Bill 19 and to the amendments before us. In effect, you know, the amendment is literally just repealing the opportunity for the government to accomplish its purpose in Bill 19 of repealing the 8 percent surtax. [interjections] Would you like that more clearly?

AN HON. MEMBER: Yes, please.

MR. MELCHIN: Okay. Let me say that again. This amendment would defeat the main purpose of Bill 19 by preventing the opportunity of getting rid of the 8 percent surtax.

Certainly I can't see anybody around here that would be thrilled to see that we leave an 8 percent surtax in place. I don't hear anyone saying that there was any complaining or worry on behalf of the wealthy that this temporary measure in 1987 was introduced as a surtax to fight the deficit, a deficit elimination tax. I don't ever hear the complaint that it's easy enough to put on this temporary measure with the promise that it be temporary and that at some stage when deficits were eliminated, the 8 percent surtax would be eliminated. I can't see that we would have anything but an obligation as a government. That's why this bill has been brought before us. Now that the deficits have been eliminated, we also must honour the obligation and promise that was made in previous years that this surtax would be eliminated.

It's a great thing for all Albertans that we would be able to demonstrate to them not just who benefits but certainly that we show that we fulfill obligations and promises of the past governments. The wealthy, too, will not then be said to be fighting a surtax or deficit which no longer exists. The province has had already a few years in which we've had opportunity to apply our annual surpluses towards that debt, the net debt now being eliminated and therefore no deficit or debt remaining as obligations or as rationale for retaining this.

Section 3(3), if it were amended, literally would just leave the rest of the bill to housekeeping amendments. Even those remaining housekeeping amendments are important as they are since this act will continue forward. Even with the introduction of Bill 18 and with the acceptance of that act this bill doesn't end with the new income tax act being put in place. This act will have to remain in force for years to come. As you know, when anyone files an income tax return, they go back for a period of years through assessments, up to seven years. When they go back and audit the returns of the past years, this act will still be in force and apply to those applicable years. So as we go forward, there will be a number of things in this act, in cleaning up, that no longer apply in the old act as minor amendments. Certainly the renters' assistance tax credit, one of those, has not been in place since 1986.

Another amendment we're seeing that will be brought forward in this bill that continues forward with it is the repeal of the reference to the liability of corporations for Alberta income tax. Most of these things I guess could continue, but since this act will have a life for years yet to come, we may as well see that clarification is brought to it. The foreign tax credit likewise removes reference to corporations in the calculation of the Alberta foreign tax credit. It's no longer needed since this is dealing with personal income tax, and the corporate reference no longer has application.

The critical part of this, the elimination of the surtax of 8 percent, the basic tax in excess of $3,500 is the main element and purpose for which this act is being brought forward at this stage. Now, we have certainly heard arguments to the effect that it will only benefit a certain portion of the public, and it is true that this surtax does apply to incomes above a threshold of $47,000 today, but it's not true that there hasn't already been an application or introductions in the existing Income Tax Act that would benefit all Albertans.

In 1997 there was the introduction of the Alberta family employment tax credit. This credit gives a tax break of up to $1,000 to lower and middle-income families. So already we see that not just the wealthy have benefited in this regard, but certainly to the lower and the middle-income families the enrichment of the Alberta family employment tax credit has already been introduced back in 1997. That was the first one that was chosen to be changed and improved prior to any removal of surtaxes.

They talk about maybe choosing the flat tax at a half percent, and that certainly is an important part of our revisions in the new Alberta Income Tax Act. It's in Bill 18 that that surtax will be eliminated also in 2001. Yet all Albertans benefited in 1998, when we cut the tax rate from 45 and a half percent to 44 percent. All Albertans benefited from this: the low certainly, the middle-income class – they are the greatest numbers of Albertans paying income tax, so as a class in itself they have benefited substantially – and certainly so would the wealthy. The combined impact of those moves meant a 65 percent cut for a single-income family with two children earning $30,000 per year.

Now, personal income tax will be paid under the new Alberta Personal Income Tax Act beginning in 2001. However, as I'd mentioned previously, the Alberta Income Tax Act is going to remain in place for seven to 10 years for administrative purposes.

In 1999 because our existing income tax was tied to the federal, we did match all the federal increases in the basic and spousal exemptions. Those enriched exemptions have benefited all classes of taxpayers, not just the wealthy. We have seen three different measures that have benefited the low and middle and all income taxpayers prior to even removing the supposed advantage for just the wealthy.

We do see at this stage even with the recent federal income tax announcements for this year that those savings have been passed on. As the federal rates have come down and the indexation has improved, those get matched automatically for 1999 and the year 2000 with our existing income tax system.

So all Albertans have benefited substantially and will continue to do so. We would have liked to have and could have potentially introduced the new act earlier, but to delink from the federal government, there is a time requirement to adjust and change methodologies and systems and for notice periods that we were required to give to the federal government. In that light, 2001 was the first year that we were able to make the broad, sweeping changes in our Income Tax Act. But with the opportunity to remove them and, I would say, to go back to the original promise to Albertans, we said that when the time came, when the deficit was eliminated, these surtaxes would be eliminated, that they, too, would be taken off the books.

As a symbolic gesture to even the lowest income taxpayers, those that may not even be on the tax rolls, I think it's critical that they see they have a government that when there's a promise given, when there's a tax raised for the purposes intended and that purpose is accomplished, when that date arrives, the end of that tax also happens. It's too easy for governments to lay in place income taxes or any other forms of revenue collection with a stated purpose or for a period of time. We've already, just by the discussion here, found out how difficult it is to remove such a temporary measure.

We all know that income taxes were introduced in this country as a temporary measure back in World War I to pay for the war measures and those expenditures for the war, and we also find that we fight a different battle today with the surtax. It was implemented for a different purpose, a different cause, and that certainly was to pay for the debts and the accumulated expenditures we hadn't paid for in previous years. We had to find a means to pay for those services which we received. Yet now when the day has come that we try to eliminate such a surtax or such a tax, we find nothing but complaint that maybe not all Albertans but maybe those who are in the wealthy class for whom this was just a temporary measure – it is not harming anybody by removing the tax, but it certainly is benefiting those to whom the promise was made, and that applies to all Albertans.

In fact, in 1986 and '87, when that was applied, there were many Albertans who would have been in the low-income stages at that time in their life and who could be and probably are in the upper-income aspects of it today, so it was never intended that you wouldn't have an opportunity to become one of the wealthy. In Canada this isn't exactly a wealthy measure; we're only talking $47,000. If this is the wealthy class, the average income in my own constituency I know is certainly well above that measure, so I've got to look to all the people of my constituency whom I represent. The average family household incomes are above that measure. That's the average. So we have certain members here even in this whom I represent. For his own purposes we have to see that this is given for his benefit, and for that aspect I'm pleased to see that we can deliver on that promise. I would say that not just in my area but throughout Alberta the average family income is above this threshold, and there are a substantial number that will benefit by it.

No one has ever said that you shouldn't seek to benefit, to work hard to improve your industry and opportunity to earn greater income. This would only be a better incentive to show to the rest of Albertans that though they may not be in that income tax bracket today, they too would have the opportunity to retain more of their dollars, that that extra incremental time they spend, the effort they push, the risk they might take might be rewarded, that they might have an opportunity to keep it in their own pockets.

I'm pleased to see not that we would support the amendment to get rid of that but that we would deliver on a promise that the surtax, this 8 percent surtax, be eliminated effective January 1, 2000, this year. Also, it will be, I would say, an exciting day in January of 2001 when we can eliminate the other surtax and completely modify the Income Tax Act.

For this purpose, Mr. Chairman, I would certainly plead with all my colleagues and those in the opposition that they give serious reconsideration to supporting Bill 19 in its present form, that the surtax along with the minor amendments to it be fully accepted as implemented, and that we fulfill the promises made back in the previous years.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise tonight to speak in favour of the amendment, and listening to the speaker before me, it almost sounded as if he, too, were speaking in favour of the amendment, so it will be interesting to see where he stands when it comes to the standing vote.

The reality is that we are talking about a government plan which will, in removing the 8 percent surcharge, affect about 400,000 Albertans. Our amendment, when looked at in conjunction with Bill 18, will look at positively affecting all taxpayers within this province, so there's a real difference as to what we have put forward with regards to amendments to the tax system within this province. We believe that the system needs to be a whole lot fairer, and that is one of the reasons this amendment is now on the floor of this Assembly, to ensure that in fact that will happen.

You know, right now I'm looking at a letter I've received from a constituent with regards to PDD and the unfairness in the way that individual is being requested to look after her son and pay substantial out-of-pocket costs for ensuring that her son receives the kind of support he could not receive from an agency. Those costs that she's looking at paying out of pocket are over $1,000 a month. That's just one instance of where I look at what the real concerns of Albertans are with regards to a whole host of programs. Whether it is within PDD, whether it is the out-of-pocket costs they're paying for MRIs and now CAT scans, whether it is the so-called new initiative by the government with regards to aging in place, the fact is that what we are going to see is increased out-of-pocket costs to Albertans.

We have in front of us a tax plan that in effect will differentially reward people in different income brackets within Alberta, so what we see again is a government that very much plays favourites and very much ensures that those who have the ability to pay out of pocket for different support services will have better access to those services and better treatment than those who cannot. So it's almost a double whammy that people in the middle to lower income brackets are going to be dealt when Bill 18 and Bill 19 are passed.

I say "when" because in fact this government has brought closure in on Bill 18 and is bringing closure in on Bill 19, and whether Bill 19 is passed in the spring session or in perhaps the upcoming fall session of this Legislative Assembly, it seems this government is bound and determined to pass it. If in fact they don't pass Bill 19 in the spring session, then perhaps there's a message there that the Liberal opposition has been right in terms of what they have been saying with regards to the discrepancies in the effects of Bill 19.

You know, I look at what's happened over the last seven years and many, many years ago – many years ago: just six or seven years ago – when the government talked about the fact that their cuts were going to do wonderful things for this province. They were going to improve the health care system, improve the education system, and improve the delivery of social services and the social services net. I said at that point that the emperor had no clothes and that in fact the Klein-speak we were hearing from the government and the government members was nothing but that in effect when they said one thing, in actual fact something else happened.

We saw a lot of that occur in the Bill 11 debate. When it became very clear that what they were talking about was private, for-profit hospitals, the government would say: no, that is not the case; they are surgical clinics. Well, the only people that were being fooled were the government members, who in actual fact seemed to have undertaken Klein-speak as part of their lingo. They must have a dictionary somewhere in their back pocket that indicates what exactly is meant when the Premier says one thing but in fact it's something else.

Lately we've had the Premier talk about Bill 18 and Bill 19 in terms of Ralph economics, and in fact what we have in front of us is Ralph economics. Again we see a black-is-white scenario where the government members come into the Legislative Assembly – and now it's more of an Alice in Wonderland experience, I find, in here – they sit in their seats, and all of a sudden reality seems to disappear. We're in a topsy-turvy world where the figures that are in front of the government members mean absolutely nothing. The fact that the tax breaks that are provided are much less for the lower income and middle-income levels than the upper-income levels doesn't seem to have any impact. In fact, the government members will stand in their places and say that that is not the case.

Though sometimes figures can lie and we see that on some occasions, in this particular case when we look for the so-called benefits to the middle- and low-income earners, we see that they are not there. They are in fact an adverse benefit, if we want to call it that, when you look at all the other out-of-pocket costs that are provided for by various Albertans as a result of varying needs in providing for themselves and their families.

So what we have is the amendment that will attempt again, as the Official Opposition tried to on a number of occasions – there's an old saying about trying to make lemonade out of lemons. This is one such situation, where we are trying to amend a particular bill that is in fact an amending act to another bill that substantially changes the tax structure. We'd try to incorporate a measure of fairness within both those bills so that all income earners can in fact appreciate the same kinds of savings and benefits that at this point only the higher income earners will be able to appreciate.

Now, in the by-election that is occurring at this point in time, this is an issue that is brought up at the doors as well as the Bill 11 issue. I had the opportunity to go out just prior to the session at 8 o'clock tonight and do a little bit of door-knocking, and I intend to do some more over the next few days. People understand this issue much as they understood the issue of private, for-profit hospitals. Even though this government with the Klein-speak didn't understand, they understood. Albertans and the people in Edmonton-Highlands understood that that in fact was happening. In the Ralph economics people just as much understand that they are going to feel the brunt of a tax policy that does not look at what their real needs are and does not take into account the number of hours, the hard work, all the effort they have put into their workweek.

So I would hope that it isn't a deep tunnel government members enter into when they come through the portals of this Legislative Assembly and that they don't think of this Assembly as a wonderland where realities do not come into play but that in fact they keep their minds open to what the facts are, and the facts are in front of them. The Treasury critic at any point in time I'm sure would be more than willing to sit down with any of the government members and go over, tax point by tax point and income level by income level, what the tax breaks are that are provided in our proposal versus what the proposal is by the Acting Treasurer. There is in fact no real rush to push either one of these bills forward at this point in time, because if the department were looking at implementing, which I understand they are, for the next tax year some of this new tax policy, they would have enough lead time to do it in August or September or October, which, again, would coincide with the fall session, which would allow the government and the Acting Treasurer time to really get a good grasp of his portfolio.

I think that's probably what's required right now to see the folly of the suggestion that was put, you know, perhaps in haste by the former Treasurer as he was heading out on the campaign trail. We know that he has used this flat tax policy as part of the campaign for the CCRA party, but unfortunately I don't think he had quite enough time to really look at the full implication. As the Member for Calgary-Buffalo has so aptly pointed out, as he often does during my debates, the former Treasurer was just so busy packing his bags and thinking about that new place in Ottawa that he was going to be moving into, he really didn't have the time to spend, as is required, to ensure that this would in fact be of benefit to everyone in Alberta.

So we're looking at a tax policy that is a fundamental shift and change, perhaps not a change with regards to government policy, that has in the past shown that this government is not averse to exposing and exploiting the differences amongst people within this province and has set in place actually a systemic change – and I talked about that a little bit in my discussion on Bill 18 – in the role of government and in the way government approaches social and policy changes in this province and has shifted the whole viewpoint of society from a more collective one to a more individualistic one, where survival of the fittest is almost the mode of operating. That I think is a discussion that needs to be much broader not only within this Assembly but perhaps on a campaign trail.

Perhaps a general election is what we are also looking at in the fall. That would be a good idea in terms of putting forward this tax policy as well as Bill 11, which hopefully will not be proclaimed before that general election so that in fact people can have that broader discussion as to what is the viewpoint of society, that is required in this province. For sure the Edmonton-Highlands by-election is the one that is the field test, where some of this will be tested out. I think it's very important that everyone has the full benefit of the discussion outside the confines of these four walls.

Again, if I can urge all the government members to come out of that wonderland hole, which they seem to be submerged in within this Assembly, to look at the actual facts and figures that are in front of them, to make sure they are representing the wishes of their constituents. It's not just good enough to say that you are getting a tax break. I think you need to explain what exactly that tax break means and what the premise of it is. In fact, I think you need to almost go back one step to the fact that this is not a savings that's being provided by the government to its citizens. It's actually a noncollection that needs to occur, and that's where the savings I guess are generated from in actual fact. It is a government policy decision that's made as to how much to collect and then in effect what services not to provide.

Those are some of the parameters I think the discussion has to be formulated and based upon, and that's a broader discussion that needs to be put out to Albertans at large. Again, I don't know that there has been a lot of consultation. It would be interesting to hear what consultation has occurred by the government members that has led them to this decision that this is in fact the structural change that is most advantageous to all Albertans and would be supported by most Albertans. My guess is much as I am finding in Edmonton-Highlands and with others I speak with, that in actual fact people are very aware of the disadvantages provided by this particular tax scheme and that given a choice, they would probably look at a progressive tax system that is much fairer and more along the lines of what we have presented as a potential solution to the unfairness within the current flat tax scheme proposed by this government, that that is something that needs to be discussed.

I think that hand in hand with that discussion, however, before we rush headlong into how much can we give away in terms of taxes, what needs to be looked at is: what exactly are the services that Albertans would like to have, and what are the services that government should be providing? That is a part of the discussion that we have not heard, so we do not know what the impact will be if in fact there is a downturn in the economy and what ends up happening is that there are not sufficient dollars provided in the budget for some of the essential services we have decided should be provided, like health care and education. In fact, what may well happen is that some of those essential services might not be provided because there have been some contractual obligations entered into with private contractors that need to be provided before some essential services.

I just wanted to do a quote about Aberhart, that someone had asked me to quote a while ago, and it is as follows:

If we stood in a pulpit, and there, with our hand on the Bible, solemnly declared that ours were the only party which had a "plan" for the political and economic ills of our province; that our plan alone and none other would work; that our plan was the "economy of God"; that it was "absolutely guaranteed"; and then after stalling around for eighteen months doing nothing, we confessed that we had never had a plan at all, would you say that we were honest and sincere or "crazy in the head"?

When I look at some of what the government has done over the last few years, especially with regards to health care, where they have over and over again said they had a plan and then they had no plan, I think that some of the politics that were occurring around the time of Aberhart in fact may be seen again in Alberta right now. I thought that was an interesting quote given that it was done almost to the day, May 28, 1937. So that was about 63 years ago, that particular quote. Sometimes history does repeat itself in terms of some of the situations that occur. We will, I guess, see whether history will bear itself out in terms of the upcoming election as to whether people will forget some of the actions of this government or whether in fact they will remember. My guess is that at this point they will remember.

There was one other item I wanted to bring forward in my discussion, and that was with regards to the argument of the brain drain. Again, I had mentioned it a little bit earlier. In fact that brain drain was caused by the cutbacks by this government.

Thank you very much.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I know this is in committee, so a number of us will get a chance to speak to this yet. I'll be brief because I know my colleague for Lethbridge-East wanted to chat as well.

I'm just going to make the observation that I listened to the Member for Calgary-North West when he spoke, and two things struck me about his comments. The first one is that he certainly has some professional expertise that most of the rest of us do not bring to this Assembly. The second one: it's always refreshing to see a government member stand up without notes and simply talk about what he believes and what he knows and what he understands, that sort of thing. It's actually quite refreshing. When you see people reading speeches, you never know who's written the speech, and you assume it's some gnome. There are 700 people, I think, working for the Provincial Treasurer, 713 employees. How many of them are cranking out speeches for government members to use in debate?

Anyway, my only observation was that the Member for Calgary-North West clearly knew what he was talking about in making his points.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The thing I listened for, though, because I always pay careful attention to what the Member for Calgary-North West says, was some explanation in terms of why we couldn't deal with the 1.6 million tax filers and why we only focus on the 390,000 tax filers who will benefit from the elimination of the 8 percent high-income surtax. By my calculations I think about 1.6 million tax filers would benefit from the .5 flat tax. So it just strikes me as really problematic that when the Member for Calgary-North West had a chance to make the case and explain why this amendment that's being introduced by my colleague for Edmonton-Glenora wouldn't work, he didn't explain, at least to my recollection and my hearing, why we couldn't and shouldn't do both at the same time.

There are some questions in terms of parity and some questions in terms of fairness and questions in terms of equity. There is a cost difference. It would be about $325 million, I'm advised by Edmonton-Glenora, to provide the elimination of the .5 flat tax, whereas it's only $144 million for the 390,000 tax filers who would benefit from the elimination of the 8 percent surtax. You know, I think the Member for Calgary-North West believes strongly in commitments being honoured and undertakings being discharged. I'd say to that member: I agree, and that's why I'm puzzled why we're not doing what the Premier said he would do. I had a note; gosh, I must have misplaced it yet again. Oh, here it is. [interjections] Well, I wanted to make sure I quoted the Premier correctly. I didn't want to do an ad libing.

Here's the Premier, July 27, 1999, in the Calgary Herald: "What we want to do is make sure that those who can least afford to pay tax get the first break." Not the second break, not the sequential break, not the last break, but the first break. Then we have the former Provincial Treasurer saying on July 28, 1999, in the Calgary Herald: "Certainly our priority is for low-income earners, and there are ways that can be addressed."

So what happened between those comments in the summer of 1999 and the bills we see in front of us? In fact what the amendment introduced by my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora does is simply honour the pledge that the Premier made, that the former Provincial Treasurer made on July 27 and July 28, 1999, respectively. Who would oppose that? [interjections] No. In fact, members, I'm insisting that we do what the Premier said he wanted to do in July of 1999 and what the Provincial Treasurer said he wanted to do in July of 1999. I'm sure the people in Calgary-Varsity would like to see this government deliver on what the Premier and the former Provincial Treasurer promised. Isn't that the point of the exercise? I think so, Mr. Chairman. The Minister of Gaming may have some other explanation to offer.

If the government cannot afford the $325 million that would be lost by moving immediately to eliminate the .5 percent flat tax, let's see that case. Let's have the case laid out for Albertans to see, to review, to analyze, and to assess. I have not heard that argument being made. Frankly, I suspect that with respect to the oil and gas prices being high, the kind of revenues we're seeing, the Minister of Gaming is bringing money in by the Brinks truck. You imagine sort of a cavalcade of armored trucks from Calgary to Edmonton bringing in the gaming revenue. It continues to flow. The dough continues to come, and maybe the Minister of Gaming is going to take credit for the fact that we're awash in gaming revenue.

It seems to me that the money is there to in fact be able to accomplish this. To those who say, "Well, it's easy for the opposition to talk about this additional sum of $325 million," it's true. We don't have the 700-odd employees from the Treasury Department to run a gazillion projections and estimates, so we put forward suggestions and challenge the government to offer concrete reasons why we couldn't do those things. Absent those kinds of concrete, compelling reasons, we have to assume that the opposition idea is probably a pretty good one.

As I say, I know that I have colleagues who want to speak to it as well, but I'd just make the observation that I think this amendment is important. I think it's a positive one. I'd like to see the commitment made by the Premier kept. I think my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora explained very well the question raised by the Government House Leader the other day and established that this is not some kind of reverse sequence thing, that 18 and 19 are the Siamese twins of legislation, and that one has to look at the amendments put forward by the opposition on both bills to be able to understand the cumulative impact. I thought that was explained well by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

On this one, Mr. Chairman – and I say this quite sincerely – I'm looking for support from government members for this amendment, because to vote against this surely leaves the Premier and our Canadian Alliance leader wanna-be way out at the end of the plank and sawing it off behind them, and I can't believe that members of the government caucus would want to do that. I think they'd want to ensure that the promises made and the undertakings given by those two gentlemen would in fact be honoured by the government.

As I say, I'm going to be happy to report when I get some more response to my web site on the question posed around the government's tax proposal, on whether Albertans favour the government flat tax proposal and package over the Alberta Liberal fair tax proposal.

So those are the comments I wanted to make, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a real pleasure to get up this evening and speak to the amendment on the floor to Bill 19. This is, effectively, going to change the direction or change the ordering of the operation of the bill with its impact on the relationship between the 8 percent surtax and the .5 percent flat tax. What it'll do, effectively, is tie together some of the actions of bills 18 and 19 in a little different way than they have been under the government proposal.

Mr. Chairman, we see on so many occasions the debate that comes up around these bills dealing with what's fair, what's equitable, what's right, and how the product that we're going to end up with, a different taxation structure and a different taxation regime, relates to the relative fairness and the relative change from the taxation levels that we see with today's current mix of different taxes in terms of the income tax, the flat tax, the surtax, the exemptions, and all of those kinds of things added together. I guess the thing we have to look at that when we put all of these taxes together is: what is the impact that that has on the individuals in Alberta that are paying the tax, that are paying their money into the general revenue fund to support the legislative programs that the citizens of the province are asking for from their government? I think we have to look at differentiating the concept of the taxpayers and the citizens, because it's kind of two different functions. In one they're representing the funding agency for public programs, and as citizens they're representing the consumers of those public programs. We have to have that balance between the two of them.

We keep hearing the discussion about how there's going to be a significant change under the combined new program that will effectively make sure that there's an increased number of Albertans that are not subject to any taxation at all by increasing the basic level of exemption to the $13,560 range, this kind of approach. We're also seeing within the combination of these two bills a structural change from a program which has historically been a taxation on individuals to where we're now going to see a movement towards more of a taxation structure based on family status. Basically, instead of becoming an individual taxation system, this is now becoming a family taxation system, because we're increasing the exemptions for spousal exemptions as well to try and compensate for the idea of a stay-at-home spouse that is not bringing an income into the household.

So essentially what we're seeing there is that kind of a structural change, and this amendment effectively says: let's look at how that is put together and how it's phased in and structured as we move from the current system to this proposed new absolute level of taxation over that two-year period of the two bills and the two different focuses. What we'll see, then, is effectively some kind of change in that obligation as taxpayers to fund the programs of our citizens.

Then what we're going to see also is a relative change in the weights of those taxations within the context of the group of Albertans who are going to be asked to pay and who fund our programs. The current program essentially has a phased-in, linked program with the federal government. I don't think anybody is arguing with the idea that we need to move away from that tax-on-tax system to a tax-on-income system. That, I think, has to be looked at in this whole package as being a very positive step, but as we look at it from the perspective of Bill 19 and the amendment that we're dealing with, it looks at how that .5 percent flat tax relates to the 8 percent surtax and the relative timing of the citizens receiving benefits from our legislative change.

Mr. Chairman, even prior to getting elected to this House, I was among some of the more fortunate in the province to have an income that was significantly above the average of the province. You know, I always felt that that created in me not only a very privileged situation where I had a lot of public input into my education, but because of my parents' commitment, because of this provincial commitment to fund such great universities, I was given the opportunity to go out and effectively create for myself an opportunity to earn an above-average income. That in itself also creates a sense of obligation to make sure that what I give back to society is in proportion to the commitment that society has made to me. By that means I see nothing wrong with someone in my position, who is earning a higher income, being asked to pay a proportionately higher rate of taxation on that higher level of income.

Now, we all recognize that when we have that stepped-rate taxation system, on the first part of the taxable income I pay the same as every Albertan. On the second group I pay the same as every Albertan in there. So the higher rate of taxation only occurs on the marginal level of taxation, above the step points. We hear all kinds of debate about whether or not this in essence is fair in the sense of bracket creep. As inflation pushes our wages up to keep our spending power in line with our income, is it fair that we have bracket creep? Is the way to get rid of that to do away with the steps? No, Mr. Chairman. The way to get rid of that is to index the steps.

This is the approach that the federal government has taken, and that in essence eliminates the concept of bracket creep as well so that you don't get faced with this whole concept that you get an increase in income and that income is only enough to cover the amount of cost of living that you have to spend to stay at the same point. Well, we can do away with that by having indexed values on the brackets that we use to reflect the relative rates of tax payable.

Now, in the end, Mr. Chairman, when we look at how we put that whole new package together, effectively the government with the combination of bills 18 and 19 has defined a totally different type of structure. How do we get there? The amendment that's on the floor right now basically is saying that it's more important for us, within the context of public decision-makers, to make sure that the broad spectrum of all Albertans who are paying taxes get some benefit; in other words, the elimination of the .5 percent flat tax before we eliminate the 8 percent surtax on the top taxed Albertans.

I think that one thing we have to look at is: how do we go about reflecting our commitment as Albertans to make sure that the people who could use those dollars the wisest to support themselves, to increase their well-being, get those dollars first? I think that by supporting this amendment, we're effectively saying, "Let's make sure it is every Albertan," because every Albertan is subject to the .5 percent flat tax and because every Albertan, no matter which bracket their income puts them into, is paying that .5 percent on each of those dollars that is taxable. If we support this amendment, what we're going to say is that it's important that they all get that benefit before we give it just to the people who are being taxed the 8 percent surtax. I think that what we have to do is look at that from the perspective of what's fair and what's equitable.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just as a comment before we kind of close time on this. The Government House Leader challenged me a minute ago: can't you say something positive about this bill? Well, Mr. Chairman, I think one of the things is that we can look at this bill and say: yes, there are some positive things in it. If we look at section 2, effectively it brings the language of the tax act in line with the changes in the structure of the federal government by eliminating the deputy minister of national revenue and taxation and substituting that with the commissioner of Customs and Revenue. This brings it in line with the new chief administrator of the federal taxation system. So what we're doing in essence is creating the same kind of terminology in both of our tax acts. Again, another very positive thing about this.

I just want to remind the Government House Leader that I've now said that there are two things that are really good about these tax packages, so I'm not totally negative about it. It's just a matter of whether or not we deal with it from the perspective of what's fair, how it works, who we give the benefits to, and in what order those benefits are provided to Albertans.

In that overall context I think it's important that we look at how to measure that fairness. We've heard some of the members previously talk about the whole idea of how to kind of make Albertans feel that their additional income isn't being taxed to the point that they are not getting ahead. Well, because of the fact that each of our steps is taxed at the common level, when you're dealing with a percentage tax increase, Mr. Chairman, it's not feasible or not possible under that kind of a calculation to in essence have to pay more in increased taxes when you earn more money. That just doesn't work, because we're only paying the increased rate on the dollars that are included in the income range that fall into that higher bracket.

Even if we do end up with an inflationary loss of purchasing power because the next year we're spending our higher income, unless we're falling behind the raise income being less than the consumer price index, then what we'll see is that every Albertan, no matter how it works, will have more dollars to spend as long as their income is rising faster than that consumer price index.

So it doesn't matter how they fit into these tax brackets, because they're all treated the same, their purchasing power is the same, and we end up dealing in the context of the purchasing power of those dollars being a factor of that consumer price index change and the new bracket that we're falling into in terms of the bracket and the change that occurs there. It just doesn't work out in any way that you could put those together where you'll actually end up with reduced take-home pay.

So the effect here is then to make sure that we do have equity in the system. We've heard a number of comments from some of my colleagues tonight already that have talked about the Premier's earlier commitments to make sure that the initial tax breaks are enjoyed by all Albertans. We want to make sure that that follows through when we're dealing with the additional debt or deficit elimination taxes that were imposed in conjunction with the focus of the taxes that were now to end in the 1999 tax year and that were originally imposed, I think it was, in 1987.

That's the kind of time frame that we're looking at. We want to make sure as we start to eliminate those that they're done in the same spirit with which they were put in, in the sense that the broad-based benefit goes to all Albertans before the specific benefit goes just to the high-income Albertans.

So if we can look at it from the perspective of that kind of a relationship with the amendment that we have on the floor to Bill 19, it's a matter of making sure that we end up with a degree of directional fairness and targeted tax benefit going to the Albertans, Mr. Chairman, that I sense a lot of people feel should be given the ability to increase their spending power before those of us that fall into the very fortunate categories of being included in the higher income categories of Albertans and not having to deal with the issue of: what are the implications of this in the context of changes in social responsibility and the changes that may have to be incorporated to make sure that all Albertans have a base level of economic well-being, that whole concept of economic well-being and how it relates to social justice? I think the taxation system has to become a real important part of our decision-making there, because as we look at what constitutes social justice for all, it's a matter of: how do we deal with making sure that that fairness exists?

One of the things that I haven't mentioned yet tonight, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that as we increase our incomes, we get to take more and more of those incomes in value and in measure that are not included in the taxable income calculation on our tax forms. So, in essence, the higher income that we earn the less of the total income we actually get taxed on. By having a higher taxation rate with those higher income levels, what we're saying is: in order to create consistency in the calculation of our taxable income, we know that the people at the higher end are not reporting some of those incomes. Because of the way we measure it, we will in effect use the higher rate to get a little bit of tax off those incomes that we didn't ask them to disclose. I've talked about those previously, Mr. Chairman, things like stock option incomes, equity earnings, and we've talked about some of the profit share systems that are out there. Those kinds of things don't all get reported when we fill out our federal income tax and report that taxable income, which our new tax-income calculation is going to use.

We have to look at it from the perspective of: do we call it fair when we say that because you've got a higher income, you don't have to pay any tax on some of your income, but if you're at a low income and all you've got is a wage income and possibly a savings account that gives you an interest income, then you have to pay tax on all of that income? That, in essence, creates an inequity in the system, which in my perspective and under my measurement of social justice is less fair than trying to say that we've got to do away with the concept of bracket creep and the idea of how that relates to the whole system of taxation and that fairness in that whole system.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, before we have to be called to vote on this, I think it's important that we recognize that Albertans need tax relief. We have to provide more money back to the citizens and the taxpayers of Alberta so they can in essence have more money in their pockets to spend. We've consistently run a surplus in the budgets of this province over the last three or four years, and it's time now that we recognize that some of that should fall back to the citizens of this province so that they can make decisions on their own how their dollars are spent rather than us making those decisions on how their dollars are spent because they've given it to the general revenue fund through taxation. If we want to talk about how that relates back to some concept of social justice as well, we have to say, you know: "What is the relevant benefit of paying off the debt, giving tax relief? Who are the beneficiaries if we pay off the debt, and who are the beneficiaries if we give tax relief?"

Mr. Chairman, economists all know that when you fund programs on borrowing, what you're doing is you're living today off tomorrow's income. In essence, what we're asking is for the future generations to pay for us to have a good living today. I could put together a really strong argument that instead of giving tax relief right now, what we should be doing is paying down the debt so that the next generations don't have to fund the benefits that we're getting this generation. Well, I also think it's very fair at this point, because of the rate that we have and the surplus that we have, that we do get a balance here so that a lot of us can also enjoy some of the tax relief and can create the fairness that's necessary to have Alberta the best place to live in this country.

THE CHAIRMAN: The Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to offer a few comments in support of Bill 19. While I realize that we are on the amendment as provided by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, I realize too that a wide range of latitude has been offered to previous speakers. In that respect, I just want to make a couple of brief comments that I think should be reiterated.

First of all, for people who will be reading this later, I just want to make it very clear that Bill 19 ushers in the elimination of the 8 percent deficit elimination surtax. As I was reading up on the history of this particular surtax, which we are now attempting to eliminate through Bill 19, I noted that it was brought in as a temporary tax approximately 12 or 13 years ago. I was reminded, in conversation with the hon. Minister of Innovation and Science here beside me, that back when income taxes first started in this country, they were in fact tied to that issue of being supposedly temporary, surrounding the war effort almost a century ago, and we still have them. However, in this case, what we're talking about is the 8 percent deficit elimination surtax, that was only brought in about 13 or so years ago. It's time now for us to remove that particular tax.

I think it responds well to what Albertans have requested and demanded, and I fail to see how the amendment that has been proposed by Edmonton-Glenora helps further that particular aim. I've read this amendment through as it applies to section 3.04, and I don't think that in all good conscience it helps accomplish the purpose for which the bulk of the bill is actually designed.

We're often told that there's not enough being done, Mr. Chairman, to provide breaks to the middle class. Well, this particular deficit elimination surtax will in fact do that. It will benefit the middle-income earners, and I think all members of the House know that. We know that the broader picture of deficits is that they were eliminated several years ago. We know that we have a law that prohibits further deficits from ever starting up. Our net debt has been retired. We're on a good track toward reducing the matured or the secured debt, perhaps in record time as well. All things being equal, with the economy being as buoyant as it is – and we have no reason to see any immediate downturn in that – I think we will see a much quicker retirement of the matured debt as well. That leaves more money in Albertans' pockets, and at the same time it also allows us to look at more important investments in other areas.

So while the economy is strong, it's nice to know that we are leading the nation yet again. A lot of different provinces are talking about eliminating taxes or reducing them, and for many provinces unfortunately that is nothing more than a wish list. In this province we are making good on that commitment. I think all of us, particularly during 1993 through 1997, did a lot of talking about how to get rid of deficits. We all certainly campaigned on it, and we all supported the need for the elimination of the deficit. Now we're getting rid of part two, you might say, which is the 8 percent deficit elimination surtax as it applies particularly to the middle class.

Mr. Chairman, this bill should be read in tandem with Bill 18, of course, which talks a great deal about the single-rate tax, which is also of benefit to Albertans. We're reducing taxes in many ways, and I think you'll continue to see that kind of strong reinforcement of Albertans' wishes by our government. I cannot support the amendment as brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. I'm sure he put a lot of thought into it, and I'm sure that his researcher did as well, but I fail to see how it would actually accomplish the main purpose that is behind this bill.

So with those few comments, Mr. Chairman, I would urge our members to look carefully at this bill and to find it in their good wisdom to support Bill 19. I will take my chair.

THE CHAIRMAN: Due notice having been given by the hon. Date: 00/05/24

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Legislature Mrs. Guadalupe Albert, Mexican consul general for western Canada based in Vancouver. This is the consul general's first official visit to our province, and we're pleased to welcome her here today.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's relationship with Mexico has grown tremendously in recent years in areas ranging from trade to educational partnerships. We have watched with great interest the impressive growth of the Mexican economy in the last few years. This visit is an excellent opportunity for us to explore ways to build on our relationship and to discuss areas where we can work together.

The consul general is seated in the Speaker's gallery. I would ask that she now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Governor Dirk Kempthorne of the state of Idaho and his wife, Patricia Kempthorne. They are leading a delegation from the beautiful state of Idaho and are meeting with various members of government throughout this province. Accompanying the governor is Mr. Pat Takasugi, director of the Idaho state Department of Agriculture. The governor and his delegation are traveling across western Canada this week, and we're pleased to have the opportunity of welcoming them to Alberta.

The meetings that we had this morning were an excellent time for learning more about each other and discussing ways of building a lasting friendship between Alberta and Idaho. Later this week the governor will be signing a co-operation agreement with our Premier, committing Alberta and Idaho to work together in many areas.

At this time I'm very honoured to ask the guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a visitor to our province here today, Senator Ray Powers of the U.S. state of Colorado. Senator Powers is the president of the Council of State Governments-West, known as CSG-West, a fine organization of which the province of Alberta has just become a member. Senator Powers is here to take a look at Alberta as an opportunity for future meetings for this great organization of the Council of State Governments. He is seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. I ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm giving oral notice today of the following motion: "Be it resolved that debate on third reading of Bill 18, Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, shall not be further adjourned."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After the daily Routine today I will move the following Standing Order 30 motion standing in my name on the Order Paper:

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, what steps must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system resulting from the strike of over 10,000 health care providers.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to table five copies of an article that ran in the Edmonton Journal today called Nobel Economist Supports Flat Tax. Robert Mundell is a 1999 Nobel laureate, and he is a world-recognized economist. He said that the single-rate income tax is a very good idea that makes the economy more efficient. I would like to also table with this five copies of his bio. This will show that he is an extraordinary Canadian, and his work is very, very impressive.

I'd like to table six copies of the 1999 annual report for the provincial judges and masters in chambers pension plan as required by section 5 of the provincial judges and masters in chambers pension plan regulation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table with the House today six copies of my response to the MLA for Edmonton-Mill Woods regarding his question raised during the Committee of Supply meeting dealing with the 2000-2001 estimates for Alberta Economic Development.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to table five copies of the annual report of the Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta, April 1999 to March 2000. This is the first annual report published by the CISA. It has some very interesting information, statistics, and data about organized crime and serious crime in the province of Alberta and what the government is doing about it with the co-operation of police services in the province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had opportunity to review Hansard and review the questions asked yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and I table five copies of my response to the questions related to timber auctions that were taken under advice yesterday. The two members opposite insinuated that my department staff were somehow involved in unlawful activity, and the record will show that those allegations are unfounded. If I were them, I'd feel like a schlemiel.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, today it is my privilege to table a letter being sent to Ronald Joyce, chair of the Tim Horton Children's Foundation, with special thanks to Tony Mardel of the Tim Horton store in Sherwood Park. Six thousand underprivileged, economically disadvantaged children went to the Tim Horton camp last year as a result of $2.75 million worth of contributions by Canadians to this most worthwhile cause. I'm sure colleagues on both sides of the House are participating today as we honour their efforts.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unlike the Acting Provincial Treasurer and in keeping with your ruling I won't be tabling any newspaper articles, but I will be tabling an article written by Mr. Bill Daly, BCom, MBA. It's an analysis of Alberta's flat tax for the year 2001. Of course, it's saying that Alberta's flat tax doesn't start until 2001 and big savings will only come to those who earn over $70,000 a year. I'll stack up that Albertan's credentials against yours anytime.

Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of other tablings. First, letters from Mr. Gordon Inglis and Mr. E. Faszler, both of my constituency. They're writing the Prime Minister of Canada imploring him to please assist in the fight of Albertans to save public health care in this province.

Finally, I just had the opportunity to attend the annual general meeting of the Edmonton Community Foundation. I table the appropriate copies of their report. They are celebrating this year the disbursement after 10 years of $20 million in community funding.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a single tabling. This is a letter from the Alberta Historical Preservation & Rebuilding Society to all Calgary MLAs urging us to push the government to reconsider its decision regarding the Lougheed Building/Grand Theatre and designate it as an historic site under the provincial Historical Resources Act.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of two tablings today. The first is from Aileen Pelzer of Calgary. The second is from Donna Brunsdale of Calgary. Both of these people are opposed to the proposed Genesis land corporation development in the Spray Valley in Kananaskis.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly representatives of the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Alberta, May being MS awareness month. Seated in your gallery I would like to introduce Howard Riddel, executive director, Edmonton chapter; Jane Styles, board member, Edmonton chapter; Pam Seto, vice-president of development, Alberta division; Glen Lavold, board member, Alberta division; Josee Pinsonneault, special projects co-ordinator, Alberta division; and David Kravinchuk, events co-ordinator, Alberta division. I would ask them to rise so that we can give them the traditional warm welcome of this Chamber and thank them for the carnations that we're wearing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my esteemed pleasure to introduce to you and through you this afternoon to the members of this Assembly Kim Hoang, vivacious wife of our colleague representing Calgary-Fort – she's able to be here today because now she's embarking on a new phase in her life, I understand, which is retirement – and Marie Martin, the very capable and gracious Edmonton leg. assistant to both the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort and myself. Would these honourable guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the privilege of having two introductions today. My first is an individual who is seated in your gallery, Representative Max Black of the great state of Idaho. Representative Black is also the president of an organization that this Assembly really knows a tremendous amount about, and that's the Pacific Northwest Economic Region. He is the president and is doing a tremendous job of continuing cross-border relations and regional collaboration. We appreciate Representative Black for everything he's doing for that organization and for trade in the Pacific northwest. I ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

My second introduction. I'd like to introduce Deborah Daoust. She's a deputy program manager and political and economic relations and public affairs officer for the Canadian consulate general's office in Seattle. She is seated in the members' gallery. I ask her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all of my colleagues in the Legislative Assembly two guests that are joining us, I believe, for the first time. First I would like to introduce friend and neighbour Sabine MacLeod, who is visiting to see why it is that I'm away from home so much so she can report to my wife, Shannon. Accompanying Sabine is Tina Vogt. Now, Tina is completing a year of studies at Jasper Place high school. She is doing a year of studies and visiting from Germany. She decided that the best way to learn English was to come and immerse herself in it, and she's doing an outstanding job. Unfortunately, we'll be bidding her farewell all too soon. I would invite all members to welcome them in the Chamber. I'd ask them to stand and receive that welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly some more good friends. They've all been coming in from the United States on different airplanes, and the different airplanes have been arriving at different times. We're certainly glad that they're here to be introduced in the Legislature today. I'd like to introduce Representative Jeff Morris from the United States, from Washington. Jeff is an executive member of the Pacific Northwest Region and vice-president of the organization. He has been involved with that organization since 1993, and because of PNWER he has ended up being a good friend to Alberta. They're here for some meetings today. I would ask Jeff to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Also seated in your gallery today is the executive director of the Pacific Northwest Economic Region, Mr. Matt Morrison, who is no stranger to Alberta and to this Assembly. Matt, I wonder if you would please rise and receive that same welcome.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. LANGEVIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Debra Lozinski from Lac La Biche. Debra is the reeve of Lakeland county. She's seated in the visitors' gallery today. I'd like to ask Debra to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Workforce Labour Dispute

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It appears that the upheaval and uncertainty in our health care system is never-ending. First Bill 11 was rammed through this Legislature, and now over 10,000 health care workers have walked off the job across Alberta. According to recent reports licensed practical nurses in Alberta are amongst the lowest paid in Canada. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given the sacrifices made by health care workers over the past eight years, how does this government justify paying them the seventh lowest wages in the country?

MR. JONSON: With respect to the question, as the hon. leader across the way knows, we are at a very critical point in ongoing negotiations. We have a strike occurring currently. The regional health authorities and the provincial Mental Health Board have been bargaining diligently, Mr. Speaker. We hope that the parties will come together to bargain further. There are, as published, very significant dollars being offered by the employers.

This question is really not appropriate at this time, Mr. Speaker, when we want the two sides to come back together and negotiate a settlement.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that the inflation rate in Alberta is expected to be over 3 percent a year, how does this minister justify offering wage increases that can't even keep pace with inflation?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, my mathematics in terms of what is reported as being the last offer of the employer does go somewhat higher than the rate of inflation.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that this government has recently rewarded pay raises of 8 percent to executive assistants of ministers, how can this minister justify offering raises of only 3 percent to auxiliary care nurses?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm personally not aware of any raises that are 8 percent, and that is a process not handled by the Minister of Health and Wellness.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just one year ago a massive strike by nurses in this province was narrowly averted. At that time the Official Opposition calculated that the cost to the taxpayer of airlifting patients would have been at least $2.4 million per day, or about $35 million for a two week strike. My questions are again to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister tell us which provinces or states the government plans to airlift patients to for medical care?

MR. JONSON: When one has a labour dispute, Mr. Speaker, it is the responsibility of Alberta Health and Wellness and the minister, along with the regional health authorities and in this case the provincial Mental Health Board, to make sure that every possible effort is provided for the care and safety and treatment of people in the care of the health care system.

There has been contingency planning done. In terms of this particular situation there are no plans to fly people to the United States or out of province, but if it comes to a situation where an individual's life and health is in danger, we will do it.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, fine, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister please provide us with an estimate on how much the government's contingency plan for the strike might cost Albertans?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member well knows, we have no way of knowing how long this labour dispute, this strike, will continue. We have no solid indication as to what workers will or will not cross picket lines. We have organized ourselves so that we are monitoring the situation very, very carefully. Our top priority is the health and safety of patients in the care of the system.

We will take appropriate action in terms of the cost, Mr. Speaker.

There is obviously no way of quoting an exact figure at this particular point in time.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that licensed practical nurses in Alberta rank seventh in the country in wages, wouldn't that money and human energy be better spent at the negotiating table bringing an end to this strike?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think there are a couple of things to point out. First of all, the labour dispute certainly has two sides to it. There's some responsibility with respect to the leadership of the unions involved.

In terms of the process we as Alberta Health and Wellness are certainly wanting, and I'm sure more directly the Department of Human Resources and Employment, to bring the parties back together to arrive at a settlement. That is what we have as our overall goal.

I do not quite gather what the position of the members across the way is, but it seems to me that they do not really respect the bargaining process, the fact that there are two sides that have to come together here, Mr. Speaker. They want to come down on one side.

THE SPEAKER: Third main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Calgary Laboratory Services

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The University of Calgary recently announced plans to build a research transition facility on their education reserve land. Although the university is calling it a research transition facility, almost 85 percent of the building is being leased to a commercial venture, Calgary Lab Services. While upgraded laboratory facilities are long overdue, residents in the area such as those from the University Heights Community Association are concerned that public land intended for the University of Calgary expansion is being used for a commercial facility. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister explain why a facility, 85 percent of which is going to be used for commercial purposes, is being built with public money?

MR. JONSON: As I understand it, Mr. Speaker – and I can only speak generally of the specific plans of the Calgary regional health authority – it is on public land held by the regional health authority. It is a building that will be owned by the regional health authority. It may have a tenant that is the lab services which operate under the publicly funded, publicly administered system of the Calgary health authority under contract. The proximity to what is probably the largest facility in Calgary which provides service to Calgarians would seem to be a logical advantage of locating the lab there. I understand that they will be negotiating as part of their contract reasonable income to the regional health authority for the use of that property. Also, it should not be missed that the regional health authority is in conjunction with the university going to be developing quite a bit of needed research space.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given the very vigorous opposition to this proposal within the community, is the government going to deal with those serious concerns or ignore them and push ahead?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have not heard of any vigorous opposition. I will certainly look into it, but I don't just automatically accept the contention in the leader's question. They have been misleading before, and I would want to check on it.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that according to the University Heights Community Association web site, and I quote, a multinational medical services company, MDS, has expressed interest in buying out the CRHA, end quote, what assurances can this minister give that once the laboratory has been set up, it won't simply be turned over to private companies for pennies on the dollar as happened with the Holy Cross hospital?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again it appears that with respect to this particular question one individual with a concern is being quoted; so be it. The disposal of land which is the property of the regional health authority requires government approval. Certainly we would want that property to stay as part of the overall holdings of the Calgary regional health authority.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary Herald, then Brewers' Distributor, and now health care workers. Alberta's unfair labour laws are the political equivalent of a loaded gun pointed at the heads of Alberta workers. So is Bill 11, which is a framework for contracting out and privatizing our public health care system. My question is to the minister of human resources, who is responsible for labour relations as well. When is the government going to realize that its own unfair labour laws are directly responsible for the growing crisis in labour relations in this province?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we probably need to bring this into perspective just a little bit in the sense that even the other night at a standing policy committee we had a presentation from the Alberta Federation of Labour, and even they talked about the excellent record of labour relations in this particular province. Now, we can show the member the numbers if we want, but in Alberta we have an excellent, excellent record. We have an environment where employers and representatives of employees can sit at a table and can negotiate agreements. We have a playing field that we believe is level.

Yes, at various times we have pressures from employer groups and employee groups for changes to the particular labour legislation, but to me, as we talk in this Assembly time after time, the proof is in the eating of the pudding, and the fact is that the statistics are very, very good.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is it going to take for this government to recognize that legislating away the collective bargaining rights of health care workers does nothing, solves nothing, and instead contributes to a bitter and acrimonious labour relations atmosphere within the health care sector?

MR. DUNFORD: You know, we just went through a session both inside this Assembly and outside of this building with some folks called the Friends of Medicare, and I believe that the party that the hon. member represents had something to do with that particular issue. Now to raise a question like that in this Assembly today, entirely forgetting about the innocent third party in all of this situation – Mr. Speaker, let me remind you of who the innocent . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: The floor has been given to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Continue.

MR. DUNFORD: And let me remind you, Mr. Speaker, who the innocent third party is: the patients that are in care and of course their families that are trying to provide for them.

Here we have a situation where these people require essential services, and I believe that it was proper for the government of the day to establish, then, that those services were in fact essential and thus remove the legal right to strike. Mr. Speaker, let me remind all of the people here today that this is an illegal strike that is under way.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why doesn't the government abandon contracting out our public health care system through reckless legislation like Bill 11 and instead focus on improving working conditions and job security in public hospitals and facilities?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, contractual relationships have been a part of the health care system of this province and other provinces throughout history, certainly since the time that we have as governments across Canada taken over the provision of public health care services. I'm sure that the member across the way, if he would move from his doctrinaire philosophy to reality – I don't think he would want to suggest that we should cancel the contracts with the Bethany Group, that we should cancel the contracts for long-term care with the Good Samaritans. I don't think he would suggest that we should cancel the contracts, eliminate them with respect to the laboratory services across this province, which are in a good part provided very well by the private sector, unless he really, really is tied to an absolute doctrine that says that nothing in the health care system can be owned or operated under contract by the private sector.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

Domestic Abuse in the Military

MS PAUL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On May 9 a study entitled Report on the Canadian Forces' Response to Woman Abuse in Military Families was released to the public. The study does not claim that domestic violence is more prevalent in the military than in the civilian communities but does state that it is a serious problem handled in a manner unique to the military way of life. There is little doubt that the military culture as well as factors such as posttraumatic stress play a significant role in domestic abuse in the military. According to the report, victims are reluctant to seek assistance from military support services and may not be aware of resources available within their immediate communities. Further, domestic abuse is processed by the civilian court. The report indicates that if charges are laid through the civil police, the military may not be informed and that if the military police respond, the civilian police may not be called in. My first question is to the Minister of Justice. Will the minister encourage the police departments in areas adjacent to military bases to develop a policy of communication regarding incidents of domestic abuse so that all relevant authorities, civilian and military, are informed when charges are laid?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.
2:10

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we do have a policy of encouraging police forces to work together in this province. I tabled today the annual report of the CISA, which is one area in which police forces across the province have been co-operating and sharing information on a very effective basis.

It's certainly the policy of this government that police forces combating crime, whether it's organized crime or domestic violence, should be sharing information when it's appropriate to do so.

MS PAUL: My first supplementary is to the Minister of Children's Services. In view of the chronic shortage of funds in women's shelters will the minister make immediate funding available earmarked specifically to advertise shelters in the vicinity of Canadian forces bases so that victims of abuse can be aware that help is available?

MS EVANS: Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the need for women's shelters that the hon. member opposite has identified is an important one. In light of the comments I will take a very careful look at how one advertises shelters. For the protection of those involved, those who have been recipients of abuse, there are some real questions about how you promote that service, but we will make sure that if there are services available, the law enforcement authorities and others who would provide guidance to women to seek that type of shelter with their children would be aware of those opportunities.

MS PAUL: My second supplementary is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Would the minister advise us of any specialized support services that are available to members of the Canadian forces reserves and their families to deal with posttraumatic stress following extended peacekeeping deployments in war zones once these reservists are released from active duty?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, in the Capital region I am pleased to say that there is a good working relationship between the Namao base personnel and their medical staff and the Capital regional health authority. In fact, we're fortunate enough to have doctors, for instance, that work at the St. Albert hospital and keep up their skills, and they're providing a co-operative arrangement or service to the Capital region. That, as I understand it, would apply with respect to other services such as situations which involve a stressful situation that has been reported.

However, Mr. Speaker, I do think there's one point to be emphasized here, and that is that given the nature of the armed forces, the mandate under which they operate, and their necessary independence or separation governance-wise from the province, I think we do have to keep in mind that the initiative and leadership to make sure these types of co-operative arrangements are arrived at and the services are available to their personnel does have to come from the armed forces themselves.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Diabetes Research

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It was reported this week across Canada, the United States, and for that matter the world that the University of Alberta research team made a major breakthrough in the fight against diabetes. Dr. James Shapiro and his team of researchers are to be commended when they injected insulin-producing cells from donor pancreases into eight patients and put them on this immune suppressing drug. These eight Canadians with chronic type 1 diabetes are now reported to be living free of having to use insulin. My question is to the Minister of Innovation and Science. What does this medical research breakthrough mean for Albertans who have this chronic disease and use our health care system?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, it means that these scientists are doing some of the best research in the world in diabetes. It also means that we will go down in history not just for our fiscal agenda in Alberta but also for our excellent scientific research. Alberta is the place to do science.

It also points out the importance of partnerships, Mr. Speaker, between universities, the private sector, and the government. It also means that we have eight individuals in Alberta, some of whom were taking up to 15 shots of insulin a day, who no longer have to do that. This gives hope to the 200,000 diabetics in Canada alone, plus there are over 15 million diabetics in the world.

If I could just say a personal note, Mr. Speaker, we have a person in our family who we consider our daughter and who lived with us for a number of years. In her late teenage years she came down with type 1 diabetes, and this provides hope for Jennifer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister advise members of this Assembly as to whether any research dollars were provided by this government to support this medical breakthrough at the University of Alberta?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, as you know, Mr. Speaker, and the Assembly knows, we have a fund, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, which is now over a billion dollars. It supports research off the interest from the trust fund. In this area alone over the last number of years it has provided over $18 million for diabetic research.

We have to recognize that when we do that, the $18 million, that brings in at least $2 and up to $4 for every dollar that's invested from Alberta. If you take even the minimum figure, that means that over the last number of years over $30 million has been invested in Alberta based on our investment in the HFMR.

It shows again, Mr. Speaker, that if the government takes the lead and steps up to the table, exciting things can happen.

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, my final supplemental to the same minister: are there any other government programs and research funds available for science and research of this important initiative to help expedite this type of brilliant science that's going on in Alberta?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, there are a number of programs. In fact, we announced this weekend a combination of two programs inside my department that will result in a $30 million investment in a couple of areas: in research infrastructure, in technology transfer, and in science and technology promotion and awareness.

Also, Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, we've announced a $500 million trust fund that is available. We expect the interest from that could be up to $25 million this year alone to invest in science and research. That fund will grow to a billion dollars by 2005 and perhaps, if I'm lucky with my budget, even earlier.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Due to this government's cutbacks, mismanagement, and lack of planning in health care, we now have the largest strike of health care workers in this province. Two of the issues on the bargaining table are inappropriate staffing levels and contracting out. Yet in 1999 an Alberta Health report indicated that workforce issues were serious and that there were serious problems with regards to training, recruitment, and retention of health care professionals in this province. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. My first question is: given that health workforce shortages are both a national issue as well as a key issue in this strike, can the minister tell us whether the Premier has put the issue of workforce shortages in health care on the table at the Premiers' Conference? [interjections]

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think the members across the way are just jealous because on this side of the House we have a very strong leader who represents the interests of the province.

Mr. Speaker, as I understand the proceedings at the Premiers' Conference, there are a number of topics to be covered. Certainly the matter of health care is one of the major ones. I understand that the Premier and I expect other Premiers will be putting forward a very strong case for the restoration of Canada health and social transfer moneys to the provinces across this country. That is certainly going to be one of the major priorities.

Within that context I know that the Premiers have discussed prior to this, quite frankly, the needs within the health care system, the need for hiring additional frontline staff, which we have done in this province with the significant dollars we've reinvested, the need to look at adding to the overall health workforce, be we talking about nurses or radiation technologists, as examples. This is certainly a priority, and we have already acted in that area, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Learning may want to supplement, but we have added to our capacity in that particular area.

Under the leadership of our Premier, Mr. Speaker, we have already taken major steps to address this issue, and I'm sure that the Premier is sharing our experiences with other Premiers.

MS LEIBOVICI: Well, Mr. Speaker, strong leaders take responsibility, so can the minister or anyone on the front benches indicate why the Premier isn't here to deal with the issue at hand, a real crisis in health care in this province today?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know members on this side of the House know and I can assure the members on the other side that the Premier is very much concerned by the situation here. He is in regular contact with his office.

He has a very important task, as I've said, to represent this province at that conference, particularly as it applies to health, particularly as it applies to their Liberal cousins in Ottawa coming through with their proper share of funding for health care in this country.

MS LEIBOVICI: Nothing like an absentee Premier.

Given that Bill 11 will encourage greater contracting out in our health care system, what assurances . . .

Speaker's Ruling Referring to the Absence of a Member

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members and hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, I mean, it's nationally known that there's a conference of the leaders of government in another place. To refer to members absent from the House is inappropriate under our rules. I don't know why you'd do that. Why don't you just get on with the question?

Health Workforce Labour Dispute

MS LEIBOVICI: Given that Bill 11 will encourage greater contracting out in our health care system, what assurances will the minister give health care workers with respect to job security?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as I have . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I don't know about you, but I always found it rather interesting to listen to the Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, due to the strength of the economy and due to, I think, the sound financial management of the government, we do have increased funds available. Health has been given a priority by this government, and within that overall health funding the training and engagement of health care workers is a priority. That's demonstrated in the increased number of physicians, the increased number of nurses, the increased number of LPNs, the increased number of other frontline workers, support workers in this province. It's through having the resources, managing them well, directing them to the front line that job security is assured to individuals.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Tax Policy for Seniors

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my work with seniors some of the most frequently asked questions are around our tax policy for seniors. My first question is to the Minister of Community Development. Why do seniors, most of whom live on fixed incomes, even though the majority are at the middle and higher income levels, have to pay taxes, especially education tax?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to education tax it's historically been the case in this province that property taxes do support education, and I think that's the proper way to go. Whether or not you have children in the schools at a particular time that you're paying tax is not relevant.

With respect to the overall picture of senior support I might point out that in 1994 this government took the initiative to streamline seniors' benefits and to focus them on the people in need. So to be quite specific, seniors who are needy do get a cash allowance under Alberta's seniors' benefit program that is directed to help them with their overall expenses. To give you an example of how this works, Alberta has the highest threshold for this support, which means that seniors in this province get the support quicker than anywhere else.

We have a variety of categories to ensure that their needs are met. For example, with respect to a homeowner senior who is under the threshold or a senior couple who are under the threshold of the $26,000, depending on where they are, they could receive a maximum benefit of some $3,200 annually. So, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate that although it's not earmarked as a specific program, their needs are taken into consideration.

Also, we do have something called a special needs program, which people who are in dire straits could apply for, and this could help. That program goes to a maximum of some $5,000 per year in addition to anything that the ASB would provide to the seniors.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the hon. Acting Treasurer. Can you explain this government's new tax policy with regard to low- and middle-income seniors?

DR. WEST: Yes, Mr. Speaker. They will benefit from this new tax plan, the single-rate plan. For example, an individual senior that makes $12,000 from a private pension plan and also receives the old age security would have paid in 1999 roughly $335 in tax. With the new plan, the single-rate tax, that senior will not pay any tax in the year 2001 and also will still receive the seniors' benefit package from Alberta.

They're also going to benefit from sharing in the elimination of bracket creep. They will benefit from indexing the basic and spousal exemptions to the Alberta consumer price index, and they will also benefit from indexing the age amount and the pension amount.

Finally, they are going to benefit from the increase to the age and pension credits, which will take the amount multiplied by 10.5 percent instead of 7.5 percent, and they will be indexed for inflation. So provincial participation in both these credits will increase by 30 percent.

I might also add that a great deal of the seniors will be in those 190,000-plus Albertans that won't be paying any provincial income tax.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, a significant portion of a senior's income can come through dividends on investments. The dividend tax credit is therefore important to seniors. My last question is again to the Acting Treasurer. Will this credit disappear under the new system?

DR. WEST: The simple answer is no. The province will continue to provide a dividend tax credit. In fact, the value of the credit will increase slightly under this new policy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Timber Permit Bidding Process

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we revealed that the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench had found one of this government's business partners guilty of bid-rigging and collusion, with timber permits worth up to $30 per cubic metre being sold for 63 cents per cubic metre. This government as a matter of policy has propped up and subsidized the pine shake industry and specific firms like Shake Masters Manufacturing Inc. In fact, our freedom of information request contained a January 1994 Economic Development and Tourism, forest industry development branch memo discussing Shake Masters that reads, "When we provide financial assistance, we should perhaps have a basic criteria that the mill have a sustainable wood supply." My first question is to the minister of environmental protection. Did the government turn a blind eye to timber permit bid-rigging to ensure a sustainable wood supply?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, first, by way of correction the proper name of the department is the Ministry of Environment, not environmental protection, and the short answer to his question is no.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question, then, is to the Minister of Economic Development. Given that Shake Masters had received $59,000 in Department of Economic Development grants and at least $630,000 in Alberta Opportunity Company loans and loan guarantees, did the government turn a blind eye to timber permit bid-rigging so that Shake Masters could keep servicing its taxpayer backed loans?

MR. HAVELOCK: Mr. Speaker, the department did not turn a blind eye to anything, and I'd like to clarify for the House that any loan or grant coming from AOC is made independent of this government and after a thorough examination of the application.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, finally to the Minister of Justice. Given that this document tabled earlier in the Assembly said that, quote, land and forest service was the victim of a crime, has the minister attempted to recover any of the money owed to taxpayers of this province because of this bid-rigging, and has he ordered an investigation into other possible cases of collusion in the forest permit auctions? Does he have any idea how far this rot has spread?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's absolutely ludicrous for that member to suggest that any department in this government or any member of this government would turn a blind eye to any criminal activity, and I can categorically say that this government does not turn a blind eye to criminal activity of any sort in this province.

MR. CARDINAL: As the Associate Minister of Forestry, I'd like to – the three questions impact the forest industry in Alberta, and we wouldn't want to leave a negativity toward that industry, because it is a major industry. It's over $8.3 billion and has over 50,000 jobs, and a lot of them are in your riding, Mr. Speaker.

In relation to the dues, there are a number of ways timber is allocated. There is the forest management agreement process. There is the quota process. There is the miscellaneous timber use program, which handles commercial timber permits, local timber permits, and farmers' permits. So there are a number of ways of allocating the timber, and all the processes are above board.

In relation to the province receiving income from timber dues, et cetera, Mr. Speaker, $3.4 billion of the $8.4 billion is included in, for example, stumpage charges at $92 million, property taxes to municipalities of $81 million, provide provincial income tax of $224 million and provincial corporate income tax at $166 million. So the province is recovering the dollars that are required. We have one of the best forest industry programs in North America, and it's something to be proud of, not run down.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Maintenance Enforcement Program

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In June of 1998 the MLA review of the maintenance enforcement program presented its report to the Minister of Justice. The report contained 41 recommendations to improve all aspects of the maintenance enforcement program. I chaired that review along with the members from Bonnyville-Cold Lake and Red Deer-South. We were very pleased that the government accepted all of our recommendations and that many of those were implemented early on. In fact, legislation was passed last spring giving the program many more enforcement options. However, not all of the recommendations required legislation, and I am hoping that there is a will in Justice to continue implementing the recommendations of the report. My questions this afternoon are to the Minister of Justice. Mr. Minister, what, if any, recent changes have been made to the maintenance enforcement program to increase the effectiveness of the program as called for by our report?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very good question, because of course maintenance enforcement remains a priority for Justice. Improving the program in terms of both its ability to collect on behalf of Albertans who need that assistance as well as providing customer service to both the debtors and those who are entitled to receive the collection is an important priority.

Recent additions to the program have been the new Justice web site, which became available in April of this year. As part of the site, clients and employees have access to program forms and information on various topics including collection forms and various collection actions on the web site.

Other changes recently made include amendments that allow the program to request debtor locations, asset and employment from employers, trade unions, and financial institutions. Advertising for debtors is now possible. The program can cancel drivers' licences. There's more power to get collections when debtors hide assets in third party locations. Debtors can be reported to the credit bureau. All of this is very important, Mr. Speaker.

I should mention that a member of the opposition recently asked for a response on the mainframe program. When I indicated that the new mainframe for the computer system for the program was in the process of development, the suggestion was made in this House that the program isn't working. I want to assure all members of this House that the program is working very well.

The improvements that have been put in place as a result of the MLA task force have been very effective. For example, there were 43,250 active files last year. This year there are 42,000 clients on file. Collections last year were in the amount of $122 million. This year they're up to $126 million. The program is working. It's working for Albertans, and it's getting money into the hands of people who are taking care of children in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that both customer service and customer satisfaction were a major focus of the report recommendations, I'm wondering what changes from a customer service perspective are being planned, if any, and when can we expect to see them?

THE SPEAKER: The Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope that we're seeing those changes as we speak. It's certainly been one of our priorities to make the program more customer service oriented, to make sure that there's good interaction between those who need to have service and those who are giving the service. They've been asked to be a lot more customer friendly and are being a lot more customer friendly.

It's a difficult job, Mr. Speaker, that the people involved in maintenance enforcement have, because they're dealing always with either people who don't want to pay or people who are not getting the money they're entitled to. In both cases, the people that they're dealing with can have a great deal of anxiety, and that can be a great problem.

So we have improved staff training. We've increased staff for customer service. We have new and revamped information registration application forms and educational material. We have a new 24-hour interactive voice response phone system. We have dedicated complaint and troubleshooting specialists. We have increased staff training. [interjections] The one thing we don't have is brevity. We take as much time as is necessary to deal with customer complaints and customer service in maintenance enforcement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. Another focus of the report recommendations was the need to deal with chronic defaulters and others that are difficult to collect from. I'm wondering what the department is doing to solve these cases.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we did form a special investigation unit within the maintenance enforcement program, and that unit is starting to produce results. In fact, in a recent story in the Edmonton Sun a lady was profiled who just received a cheque from her ex-husband for over $20,000. This chronic defaulter had evaded the collection process for over 12 years. Thanks to Bill 16 of last year, the recommendations of the MLA committee, and dedicated staff, we were able to help this family with financial help.

The special investigations unit, Mr. Speaker, is currently working on 224 out of 480 cases that have been red-flagged for their review, and I hope to be able to report significant results in the near future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Sleep Apnea Treatment in Lethbridge

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The administration and staff at the Lethbridge sleep disorder clinic truly believe that they have a level 1 clinic. Their technicians are trained to the level of all other clinics in Alberta. The administrators and staff have the background and training. The physicians have the residency requirements. Their communication with Alberta Health and Wellness has indicated that they've met all the criteria for level 1 clinic status. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is it that's holding up the funding for this clinic so southern Alberta residents can get access to sleep disorder diagnosis?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I must give a brief history with respect to sleep apnea treatment in the province. It is certainly not a new condition, but it's fairly new in terms of our ability to diagnose it and to treat it and to categorize the different levels, as they refer to them, of people suffering from sleep apnea. Up to this point in time the overall approach of the province in terms of evaluation and categorization of cases and determination of what treatment should be provided, through our discussions with the medical fraternity and to some degree with our provincewide services committee, has been at the centre in Calgary.

With respect to the manner in which other centres might be approved, Mr. Speaker, we want to consult with that clinic and we want to consult with the College of Physicians and Surgeons. We do not accredit these types of clinics without the leadership and involvement of the college.

This is something, I know, that is being pursued by the Lethbridge regional health authority and the physicians there. I know it is being given consideration, but I do not have a specific date or time that I can give the hon. member as to that being done.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The pilot project that the minister talked about began in Edmonton and Calgary. It's expanded now to the point where there are three centres in Calgary, the Children's hospital and also in a private clinic. Why is it that this private clinic is being funded when the Lethbridge publicly funded, publicly administered system cannot get authorization?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the member is quite aware, the development of the team of sleep apnea professionals in Lethbridge is quite a new development as far as Lethbridge is concerned. It does mean that it has to go through a review process. It has to be accredited.

With respect to funding, the Lethbridge regional health authority has received a significant increase in funding this year. They will have to make decisions about how they allocate the resources. But, quite frankly, if it is deemed to be in the interests of the people in the area and if it's viable and accredited to the proper standards, certainly it is something that should be considered for approval.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, when the people in Lethbridge or southern Alberta go to this clinic and get their diagnosis, they have to pay for their machine themselves. The people going to the clinics in Calgary or Edmonton get it paid for by the government through Alberta Aids to Daily Living. Why is it that we don't have the same treatment for southern Alberta residents that the rest of Albertans get when they go to a clinic that has all of the same standards, the same technicians, the same physicians, the same qualifications. They're not treated the same. Why is it?

MR. JONSON: Well, on that particular point, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the clinics across this province that are accredited and approved as sleep apnea clinics do provide what are referred to as level 1 machines. Coverage, however, is not provided should a patient be using these machines for the other degrees of sleep apnea. That is the way that I understand the system operates in the province.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of seven hon. members to participate in Recognitions today.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Multiple Sclerosis Society

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canada has one of the highest rates of multiple sclerosis in the world. Alberta has the highest prevalence in all of Canada. This debilitating, chronic disorder attacks the central nervous system. MS causes a range of symptoms: from speech impairment, vision loss, numbness, loss of balance to extreme fatigue and sometimes paralysis. The cause is unknown, its course unpredictable, and its cure is as yet undiscovered, although great strides have been made recently in regards to some exciting new drug therapies.

The MS Society of Alberta is strong. Many individuals willingly volunteer their time and energy towards service programs, fund-raising events, and public awareness campaigns. Many such events have been held across the province this month: bike tours, walking tours, and of course the annual MS Carnation Campaign, where dollars raised could well blossom into a cure.

I encourage members of this Assembly and indeed, Mr. Speaker, all Albertans to support the good work and activities of the MS Society of Alberta. Only by working together can needed research continue and a cause and cure be found.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Oliver School Centre for Children

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to recognize the 20th anniversary of the Oliver School Centre for Children in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre. Currently serving children from 13 months to six years of age, OSCC also offers a Head Start program for 64 families free of charge and also offers the same program to others for a reasonable fee. Early intervention services for an additional 16 at-risk children and their families in a satellite program is offered in Calder, and the classroom on wheels, the COW, goes into four low-income housing areas to set up a classroom and reaches out to those families traditionally more difficult to draw out.

We've often heard in this House how important schools and children are to the community, and Oliver school and the Centre for Children is located in the centre of the constituency of Edmonton-Centre. This is entirely apt given the centre's long and very active advocacy role and their work to embrace the ethnic, physical, and economic diversity of the families they serve.

I first heard of the centre when I was with the Advisory Council on Women's Issues, and I'd like to thank Avril Pike and the centre staff for information, explanation, and insight into services for children.

Twenty years. Very well done.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Northeast Calgary Culture of Co-operation

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to recognize our northeast Calgary communities which have commemorated the International Year for the Culture of Peace by sponsoring a culture of co-operation event. Students from 12 northeast Calgary schools and a number of youth groups showed their pride in our communities by submitting posters and commercials that highlight what co-operation means to them.

The awards and prizes will be presented this Saturday, May 27, during a community festival at Sunridge Mall, and the poster winners will have their work displayed in a 2001 calendar with proceeds from sales going toward student fund-raising. Other community participation will also be recognized, including a community day of co-operation which promoted environmental cleanup in our area.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity as well to thank the city of Calgary's community and neighbourhood services branch and our northeast businesses and community groups that made the culture of co-operation event possible. It is their goodwill that has recognized and promoted the spirit and pride of our young people living and working in northeast Calgary.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

2:50 Edmonton-Meadowlark Education Issues

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to recognize the teachers, administrators, and parents of schools in my constituency. Over the past eight months I surveyed 11 schools, spoke with administrators, teachers, and parents, and learned a great deal. I took note of their dedication and tenacity as they strived to do their best and their frustration by the lack of resources to make it happen. They all expressed concern about a wide range of issues, including class size, funding, special-needs children, school resources, professional development for teachers, school facilities, and teaching.

We all know that education is the key to the future of our children and that this key should never be lost or misplaced. The report I presented in the Legislative Assembly highlights those concerns and presents some of the observations and conclusions that were made during the process. I hope that this report is informative and helps to address some of the issues with regards to education in Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mary Selby

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize Calgary philanthropist Mary Selby, who passed away March 24 at the age of 62. Mary, who described herself as a professional volunteer, served as a member of the University of Calgary senate for six years, as representative from the senate to the board of governors since 1997, and recently as vice-chair of the senate's executive committee.

I knew Mary as a senate colleague prior to my becoming an MLA and heartily agree that she had many special qualities, as expressed recently by Chancellor Jack Perraton and the university president, Terry White. Mary was truly a very special person who was a great friend to the University of Calgary. For Terry White, Mary Selby made a difference for many on campus, and she will be missed.

Mary was exceptionally active in the Calgary community, such as with the Junior League, the Boys and Girls Clubs, the Avenue 15 society, the Alberta Children's hospital aid society, the Fort Calgary Preservation Society, and Christ Church in Elbow Park.

Although Mary left this life and her loving family much too early, she has left them, her friends at the University of Calgary, and the Calgary community a remarkable legacy of great achievements and memories.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Shane and Evan Chrapko

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to recognize today two brothers from Two Hills, Alberta, who have recently received international recognition for their development of the software known as DocSpace. The software is a unique technology that permits movement of gigantic files with ultratight security.

Shane and Evan Chrapko developed DocSpace using basic skills learned from their parents, working with them on the farm they grew up on. Their parents, Elizabeth and Victor Chrapko, who farm in the Two Hills area, are to be recognized as well for providing their children with those skills. Evan, Shane, and their parents will be celebrating their remarkable accomplishments in a Chrapko homecoming event in Two Hills this June.

I'm honoured to recognize Evan and Shane for their hard work, commitment, enterprise, and success and their parents, Elizabeth and Victor, for raising them with the particular strengths which have made their achievements possible.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Leonard Blumenthal

MRS. LAING: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure today to recognize Leonard Blumenthal on the awarding of his honorary degree, doctor of laws, by the University of Lethbridge this Saturday. Leonard Blumenthal is the former CEO of AADAC. He worked in the addiction field for 32 years with AADAC, and his innovative leadership brought many changes in treatment of addiction throughout Canada. Under Leonard's leadership AADAC won 25 national and international awards of excellence. Leonard was instrumental in the formation of aboriginal-staffed addiction counseling, training, and programming. Leonard represented Alberta and Canada on many international bodies and also at the United Nations. Retired now, he is a member of the Capital health authority, once again lending his expertise to the improvement of community health.

On behalf of the present chair for AADAC, the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, myself, and the members of this Assembly congratulations to Leonard Blumenthal for this well-deserved honour and recognition of the significant contribution he has made to all Albertans.

Thank you.

head: Emergency Debate

Health Workforce Labour Dispute

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition on an application for a Standing Order 30 request. Hon. members, just please refer to your Standing Orders 30(1) and 30(2). Standing Order 30(2) says:

The member may briefly state the arguments in favour of the request for leave and the Speaker may allow such debate as he considers relevant to the question of urgency of debate and shall then rule on whether or not the request for leave is in order.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Your office was given notice pursuant to Standing Order 30(1) of my intention to "request leave to move to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance." Earlier this afternoon I gave notice of my intention to move the following motion standing in my name:

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, what steps must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system resulting from the strike of 10,000 health care providers.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to briefly state the arguments in favour of my request for leave. I know that several of my colleagues have a couple of minutes of discussion as well that they wish to put forward to speak to this matter of urgent public importance.

This morning at 7 Albertans awoke to the reality of an illegal strike in our province. Mr. Speaker, we have been very clear in our position on this matter, that we don't condone an illegal strike. However, we believe that government as the employer has to accept some responsibility for having pushed these people to the breaking point and the urgency which that creates within our public health care system.

The labour action that we are seeing today is the result of a very poisoned environment, a work atmosphere that has been created by the government certainly over the last eight years but most specifically in the last four, which I wish to speak to on the urgency issue. First of all, this is the fourth time in four years that the government has brought the health care system to the brink. At each point in the last four years it seems to have become a spring ritual in this province. We have our health care providers, either our nurses or our auxiliary health care providers, at the point of a stressful work environment for which this government must take the majority of the responsibility. It is indeed urgent, Mr. Speaker.

After years of unplanned cuts to budget and staff, the majority of whom or at least a fair component of which are women; avoidance of the real issues that plague the workplace in our health care system, issues which were identified last March in Alberta Health's Current and Emerging Health Workforce Issues, an Alberta questionnaire findings final report, issues that identified the three top issues overall affecting the health workforce and overall . . .

Speaker's Ruling Speaking to Urgency

THE SPEAKER: Please, hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Some suggestions provided by the chair with respect to this. We're talking about urgency, the need for urgency. It's not a time to debate, pending a resolution of this question, but why? What's the urgency? That's the key.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, the urgency of the matter is that government has not acted and has led us to the point where we are today facing an illegal strike and walkout by 10,000 health care workers in this province.

The government talks a good story, but they don't act even on their own words and recommendations of their own reports. In terms of their own words, words which workers took to heart and thought there may well be some action from this government, if we look to Strengthening the Alberta Advantage, it said, "In Alberta and across Canada, some of our best and brightest young talents are moving out of the country for better jobs and better advantages." Mr. Speaker, that includes our health care workers. Promises like the one contained in the throne speech, where it says, "Developing a well-trained and highly educated workforce," and the government will continue to create a positive and stable labour climate that fosters one of the highest productivity rates and most impressive workplace safety records in Canada.

Here we are with 10,000 of our health care workers out on strike illegally, but with reason, because of the level of frustration that they have been led to by the government.

3:00

Mr. Speaker, the urgency of the question and the one that is on Albertans' minds today is: what is this government going to do in order to resolve the issues that are at the bargaining table in this strike and the issues that this government has ignored that have led to workers in this province walking off the job? It is not a time for the flexing of muscles and entrenching of positions. It is not about threats of back-to-work legislation and compulsory arbitration, both of which incite argument and anger. What is needed, what is urgent is a signal from this government, as the employer, of what they are going to do to get resolution to the issues that are on that table. It's not just words. It's not just making promises and fancy government documents. It is in fact action that we seek. Enough is enough is the message of this strike, and Albertans need to know what this government's plan is to get the system under control, to get the issues before the bargaining table resolved, and to get our health care workers paid and working at a level that respects their competence in the workplace.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment on the Standing Order 30 application.

MR. DUNFORD: Yes, and briefly to urgency. As the hon. member herself indicated to you, Mr. Speaker, the strike is illegal. Therefore, there are a couple of fields, then, that come into play. One, of course, is from the labour relations side, and the other of course is then on the legal side.

I would want to have the Speaker know and understand prior to making a decision on this, as to the matter of urgency, that from the labour relations side as we speak this afternoon, mediators are in place and are continuing to try to get the parties back together at the table to get them into collective bargaining negotiations once again with the hope that what we will have at the end of the day is a signed memorandum of agreement between the two parties.

As far as the other matters are concerned, in respect to the illegality of the strike, it is my understanding, again as we speak and as has been continuing through the day, that the employer groups that are represented in this particular dispute have been exercising their particular rights under current legislation and regulation in the courts to deal with the matter of the illegality.

So my submission to you, Mr. Speaker, is that on the matter of urgency those things that can be done and should be done during the time of an illegal strike are in fact being done.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on this Standing Order 30 application. Urgency is the key.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to impress upon you the validity of the Standing Order 30 under the name of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. I'm asking that you rule that the matter is indeed urgent and that it is consistent with the requirements of the Standing Order rules.

For the record I would like to read this into the debate of the Assembly at this time: "Be it resolved that the Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss . . ."

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please sit down. All hon. members have the Standing Orders. It's not required to read them into the record. They're public.

MR. MacDONALD: Okay. Thank you. Excuse me, Mr. Speaker.

I'm guided today in my remarks about the urgency of this motion by two very important authorities that govern the proceedings of this House. I'm referring in my arguments to Beauchesne 387, 389, and 390 and, of course, our own Standing Order 30. Beauchesne 390 states:

"Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules . . . do not permit the subject to be brought on [earlier].

Of course, Standing Order 30 spends a great deal of time dealing with the issue.

Now, when we think of urgency, we think of an emergency debate, but does an emergency debate not entail any or all decisions that have occurred in any number of years with the Assembly? The question itself is specific, but this question requires urgent debate.

There are two issues that come out whenever we think about and talk about the question of urgency. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung spoke earlier that we have over 10,000 health care workers in this province in at least 159 facilities all across this province. There is not a constituency in this Assembly. Every MLA should be concerned about this, because this job action affects everyone in this province. These 10,000 workers are licensed practical nurses, nursing attendants, personal caregivers, psychiatric nurses, support staff. This is a matter of great urgency.

We look at the Labour Relations Code. There are questions outstanding to the whole job action that has occurred. This needs to be discussed this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. Does the government intend to exercise particular remedies that are available under Alberta's Labour Relations Code? If so, what remedies and when?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes?

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, may I draw your attention again to the motion put forward by the hon. Leader of the Opposition. It says: "What steps must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system resulting from the strike of 10,000 health care providers?" The operative words are "what steps must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system." It's nothing to do with any other administrative body, legislative body, tribunal, or anything else. That's the motion.

Debate Continued

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is going to be considerable harm done when we consider what's going on at the Ponoka hospital, for instance. Plans are to make room for 45 of the patients in Edmonton, here in the city, but this will not work. This will not work because there is no room in the city. How are we going to be able to safely discharge these individuals? All of these matters relate to the urgency of this motion. Not only does it affect, for instance, the constituency of Edmonton-Manning; it also affects the constituency of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Sure, some hon. members of this House can shrug their shoulders and say that this is not an urgent debate. It certainly is, Mr. Speaker. We think of what's happened since 7 o'clock this morning, how this job action has progressed, how this job action has progressed since 1:30, whenever we resumed sitting this afternoon.

We think of Calgary. Emergency wards are screening admissions and having to turn away 25 percent of the people. This is a crisis. It is a crisis. In Calgary the regional health authority is already planning to move patients to facilities outside the province. Families and patients that have planned with their health care providers for months to access the specialized services that are only available in Calgary and Edmonton are now throwing months of planning out the window. These families come from Little Bow. They come from Peace River. They come from Cold Lake. They come from Whitecourt. They come from Sangudo. They come from Medicine Hat. They come from Bonnyville and Barrhead. All of these families are affected by this job action.

Now, whenever we are talking about urgency, we must deal within the administrative competence of this government. The government appoints the regional health authorities and the mental health boards. The government provides the funds. The government shapes labour climate and codes . . .

THE SPEAKER: Thank you very much, hon. member. [interjection] Please. That's enough.

I'll recognize one additional hon. member from the opposition side on this point after I hear from the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness on this point.

MR. JONSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to briefly comment with respect to this particular motion. I think it is essential that the bargaining process be re-established and proceed. I do not think it is necessary to comment on what is an established process, one which the employers and the Department of Human Resources and Employment are working very hard to resolve.

I would like to just indicate that there are a number of important initiatives related to the concerns that have been raised across the way, Mr. Speaker, already under way and already showing results. First of all, the government has reinvested significant dollars in health, but specifically we have targeted with those dollars the hiring of additional frontline staff, which complements the needs of the system and particularly the working situation as far as employees are concerned.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, we have worked with Professions and Occupations through our overall health workforce planning activity to make sure that they are involved, that they are consulted in terms of planning for the needs and the numbers in our health workforce.

Thirdly, I think very important to this issue, a great deal of work, Mr. Speaker, has gone on with respect to the development and the passage in this House of the health professions legislation, which has been a tremendous accomplishment in terms of bringing into one legislative framework on a more or less equal basis the different professions and occupations and defining their professional responsibilities. That has been, I think, a great achievement in terms of recognizing the talents and the capabilities of the various occupations and professions.

The health workforce is increasingly involved in our planning activities, our consultative activities in this province. So that recognition of our health workforce and its valuing is something that is being attended to, Mr. Speaker, and I think we need to recognize that, and we have a bargaining situation in which there is the mechanism in place to settle it and to deal with it.

THE SPEAKER: I'm going to consult with the House leader of the Official Opposition. We've heard two members from the Official Opposition with respect to this. It is a motion of the Leader of the Official Opposition, and I said that I would only recognize one more. I take it the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo is choosing not to participate in this?

MR. DICKSON: That's quite correct, sir. I'd ask if my colleague would be able to participate. She's prepared to do so.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark with the condition already provided by the chair in terms of the brevity and urgency. It's not a debate.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, believe that the matter before us is in fact a matter of clear urgency and meets all the requirements set out in the sections which have been outlined by the leader and by the labour critic. In accordance with Beauchesne 387, the question of what steps must be taken to prevent further harm to the citizens of this province by the government's mismanagement of the public health care system is specific, requires . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please sit down. You know, this is driving me nuts. That's not what your hon. leader's motion says. [interjection] No, it doesn't.

MS LEIBOVICI: It's specific and requires urgent consideration. It is within the administrative competence of the government and is needed because there's been no other reasonable opportunity for debate in this Legislative Assembly. What we are saying is that there's a requirement for debate in this Assembly because there have been no other opportunities to deal with the substance of the problem; that is, "what steps must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system." What we have not heard, even in the responses from either the minister of human resources or the minister of health . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please. You're dealing with the chair. Nobody else is responding. This is a decision of the chair. That's who will make the decision. So stay on brevity and urgency.

MS LEIBOVICI: In fact, what is required is a debate around the issues of "what steps must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system," steps such as looking at a fair, level playing field with regards to negotiations, issues of fair compensation, issues of contracting out, issues of training and retention. These are steps that must be taken with regards to the strike that is now occurring by the 10,000 health care providers within this province.

We need to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss this matter. The reason that it is of urgent public importance should be obvious to all Members of this Legislative Assembly. We have numerous patients and prospective patients who have been either discharged early from health care facilities or not admitted for planned operations that were to occur. We have in fact numerous cases of individuals who have been affected by the impending strike as well as now by the strike. The issue of urgent public importance should be self-evident to everyone within this Legislative Assembly.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The motion is neither urgent nor appropriate at this point in time. It's not appropriate because we're in the middle of some very significant and tenuous negotiations. When I say we, I'm not talking about the government.

I'm talking about the employers, and the employers are the 17 health regions across the province. They're at the table. The mediators are . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Government House Leader, please. The purpose of a Standing Order 30 recognition is to convince the chair of the merit of the vote. [interjection] Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes.

THE SPEAKER: You're recognized.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: For what?

MR. MacDONALD: I can continue with . . .

THE SPEAKER: No. Please sit down. You know, what is really amazing about this place is that it's easier to talk your way out of it than ever talk your way into it.

Standing Order 30 deals with urgency and brevity, and the chair will do the right thing according to the rules.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you can talk your way right out of this place with no great difficulty.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question of the illegal strike which is in place is no doubt important to Albertans. The question is: is it urgent that we have a debate about it in the House today? Is it an urgent issue which would suggest that we adjourn the business of the House to deal with that issue? I would suggest to you that it's not urgent for these reasons. We've spent the last six months talking about health care policy, which is within the administrative competence of the provincial government. We have talked about health over the course of the month of April almost to the exclusion of all other topics. We've talked about health care and health care policy in question period for the last two months that this House has been in session.

What's happened today is that there has been an illegal strike. Others may want to call it a job action or try and ride the fence, but it is an illegal strike. The reason why it's inappropriate for us to discuss that in the House this afternoon is because it's important that the employers and the employees get together and come together to a reasonable conclusion of this, a reasonable settlement of the issue, and get back to work. That's not the government of Alberta. The employers are the 17 health regions. There are court actions in place both by the unions and by the employers to deal with various aspects of this issue. Those are in front of the courts today.

On the whole question of whether we should be discussing the possible resolution of the strike, we should not be engaging in collective bargaining in this House. We should be leaving the collective bargaining to the people at the table. We should be dealing with and trying to resolve this matter rather than trying to make political statements out of an unfortunate situation. The health authorities across the province have contingency plans in place to deal with the innocent third parties who are suffering because of this illegal job action, and it needs to be dealt with in that context.

Mr. Speaker, is it urgent for us to have a debate in this House today? No, it's not urgent for us to have a debate in this House today. It's not because the issue isn't important and not because it isn't of public interest but because it would have the possibility of disrupting the normal conclusion and the immediate and speedy conclusion of collective bargaining so that we can get this issue dealt with in an appropriate manner.

THE SPEAKER: The Standing Order 30 application is a very serious application in the sense that it basically says that the ordinary business of the House, which is announced days before, should now be abandoned. It means that in its place a certain other order of business should take place. In the case of the agenda for Wednesday afternoon, there's considerable private members' business that has been scheduled, announced. It is not taken lightly by this chairperson. Under 30(3) it says, "Shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed?" If in essence the chair basically suggests that the debate will go forward, it means that a number of private members who've worked very, very hard in putting business before this Assembly will find that their efforts will be postponed. That's why it is not taken lightly. The chair has indicated time and time again that he would always, always fall back in support of the private member and ensure that his or her motivations and desires and objectives are met.

Now, the chair has listened very carefully to the arguments put forward with respect to this issue of urgency of debate on this application, which basically says to adjourn the ordinary business of the House, brought forward by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Firstly, I would like to indicate that the chair did receive notice that this application was made earlier this morning, received in the Speaker's office at 10 a.m. In essence, notice was given, and it certainly has met the requirements of Standing Order 30(1). A particular version arrived at 11 o'clock. Consultation was then provided with the House leader of the Official Opposition with respect to certain wordings, and when the Routine was addressed this afternoon, the motion that was actually addressed in the House by the Leader of the Official Opposition was significantly different from the proposed motion earlier this morning, but that still meets the requirements and meets the conditions that the chair had asked with respect to this matter.

On the issue of the urgency of debate. Very simply, there is only one argument: is there another opportunity to debate this issue? Quite frankly, according to the Order Paper there is no other opportunity for this matter to be debated. The chair indicated a little earlier that it's easier to talk your way out of this place than to talk your way into it. In essence, if one would look at the rules and look at the precedents and come up with a one-line argument, that's all that's really required. It's not a debate with respect to this matter.

In the chair's view the criteria for the matter constituting "a genuine emergency," as required under section 30(7)(a), are met. While the chair is not bound by previous decisions on these applications, it is worth noting that on April 30, 1990, the former Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, Mrs. Hewes, brought an application under the Standing Order with respect to a threatened strike by social workers. It was ruled out of order on that day as being hypothetical. The next day, after the strike had started, she brought a similar application, which was found to be in order, and the question was put to the Assembly.

The chair would also note that there may be comments that will be made, subject to the ruling that will come up within a minute or two, that some of these matters are sub judice. There are some aspects of this issue that may be subject to this rule, but the wording of the motion is "what steps must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system resulting from the strike of 10,000 health care providers," which would not necessarily violate the sub judice rule.

I want to reiterate that while the chair is not bound by previous rulings with respect to these applications, in the brief time available the chair did come across a 1980 ruling by Speaker Amerongen on an application under what was then Standing Order 29 on a request by the late Mr. Notley on April 23 of that year relating to a strike involving the United Nurses of Alberta. In ruling that the request for leave was in order, Speaker Amerongen cautioned members that certain aspects of the issue were before the courts, and he stated at page 534 of Alberta Hansard for that day:

I would respectfully ask all hon. members to try to keep in mind the question which is before the courts and to stay away from that question completely in discussing the topic under debate.

He also said:

There is one other aspect to it which I think is also not generally understood. It applies not only to this resolution but to other motions for emergency debate. It's this: in discussing the motion, I hear hon. members – especially the hon. Member for Spirit River-Fairview – saying there should be some initiative taken in this Assembly; that it should accept fully its responsibility. I'm sure all members agree those are two desirable things.

I'm going to give a ruling on this. The ruling is that the request for leave to adjourn the ordinary business of this Assembly to discuss a matter of public importance is in order. Before putting it to a vote pursuant to subsection (3), the chair would remind members that the debate under Standing Order 30 "does not entail any decision of the Assembly."

The chair now puts the question. Shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed? All those in favour, please say aye.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE SPEAKER: Opposed, please say no.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

[Several members rose]

THE SPEAKER: Please remain standing.

Hon. members, Standing Order 30(4) says:

If objection is taken to the question, "shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed?" the Speaker shall request those members who support the motion to rise in their places, and

(a) if 15 or more members rise accordingly, the Speaker shall call upon the member who asked for leave.

More than 15 did rise, and the Speaker will very shortly call on the Leader of the Official Opposition, who will abide by Standing Order 30(5):

If the Assembly determines to set aside the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss the matter of urgent public importance, each member who wishes to speak in the discussion shall be limited to 10 minutes . . .

Ten minutes. That applies to all members.

. . . and the debate will conclude

(a) when all members who wish to take part have spoken, or
(b) at the normal hour of adjournment in the afternoon on that day, whichever is first.

The normal hour of adjournment this afternoon is 5:30.

(6) An emergency debate does not entail any decision of the Assembly.

The motion, again, is the following:

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, what steps must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system resulting from the strike of 10,000 health care providers.

The operative words for this debate are "what steps must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system resulting."

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your guidance and your decision here today. I would like to address the issue of what steps must be taken to prevent harm. I come to this debate with some experience in the area of strikes in the public health care sector. While I was never a minister of health while a strike took place in the public health care system in this province, for which I am very grateful, I was a minister who followed up on a strike, one of the most crippling public health care strikes in the province, which took place in 1988 with respect to nurses in the province.

Mr. Speaker, when I took over as minister of health, it was clear that the atmosphere was poisoned in the province with respect to issues which nurses felt were essential to be addressed, issues which flowed from the government's decision in 1982 to remove the right of nurses to strike. It was exceedingly important to set up an environment in which the issues could be addressed and where nurses would feel that their value and their important role, in fact their essential role in protecting public health care were addressed. There were some very concrete steps taken at that time, and I think it's important to put some of those on the record, because it is some of those steps, which were later dropped, which have led us to this environment here today on May 24, 2000, in this province.

3:30

First of all, one of the biggest issues on the table was the issue of stress within the workplace. What was undertaken first and foremost as part of a plan was to create what was called the nursing initiative, which was to bring together representatives of the professional body of nurses in our province, the AARN, and other professional bodies as well as the labour and union representatives of nurses, UNA and SNA, which existed at that time, together with people from the public health care sector to look at what were the things that needed to be done to address the issues confronting nurses in their daily workplace. It was an unprecedented step, Mr. Speaker, and a very important combining of both the labour and the professional representation of nurses to address issues of public policy, a model which has been lost in this province over the last several years.

Another very concrete step that was taken was to have a nursing consultant brought in as a new position within the department of health. There had always been a medical consultant in the department of health; however, there had never been a nursing consultant. That, too, was one of the recommendations arising out of the strike and consultations with nurses subsequent to that strike.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Thirdly, one of the major factors of stress within the workplace for nurses was the lack of opportunity to upgrade their educational knowledge, their educational support for new technologies that were coming onstream, new treatments, new clarification for procedures, something which is a reality in health care. There needs to be an opportunity for nurses and other health care professionals to stay current. So educational leave days were clearly part of that.

Those were just some of the opportunities, Mr. Speaker, that were built into this poisoned poststrike atmosphere which led to some very constructive suggestions as the nursing initiative got under way. I can tell members that really for the first two years of the nursing initiative it was about people beginning to trust that there would in fact be some positive results if recommendations were made. It took two years to establish that trust, and the subsequent two years were an opportunity to put some of those recommendations into action. The process was as important as any response or action that came subsequent to that process.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, many of those initiatives, in fact I believe all of the three that I have now spoken to, were removed during the cuts of both budget and staff in the early 1990s under this government when it took over. So when we talk about the germ of today's action being seeded or being put in place early in the '90s as the cuts took hold, it is in fact a very real example of what did happen. As we come to today, what are the concrete steps that need to be taking place?

In the meantime, the government appointed regional health authorities, their own agents within the health care system. So for the Government House Leader to stand and say: we're not talking about the government here; we're talking about the employer – the two are in fact the same when we have regional health authorities appointed by this government. They cannot, as they appear to be trying to do, distance themselves from the strike as if it's taking place on some outside planet rather than accept the responsibility for having drawn workers, pushed workers to the point where they will leave the most important thing they have to do, and that is to provide care for the very patients that they have trained for and worked for all their lives.

The issues here are what steps need to be taken by this government to get a resolution to this strike, which is in fact in the greatest public interest and the most urgent public interest in the province. I would say that the first step that needs to be taken is that the government needs to assume the leadership role, assume the responsibility which they have been given, having been elected as the government in this province, but also the responsibility for having made themselves the employer in this case.

I think there are many issues on the wage side, some of which were raised today in question period. I won't repeat them, but there are issues far beyond simply the issue of wages which need to be addressed. The first is: what steps has the government taken to address the quality of the workplace issues which they identified in their own report last spring? Last spring there was a threatened job action by our nurses. Last spring there was a report outlining all of the issues, which I referred to in making the motion this afternoon. Here we are one spring later, the fourth spring in a row where these alternating years of job actions have come up. I think workers are finally saying: "We've had it. We need to have this government listen to the issues that we have been trying to express for so long, and we continue to be ignored."

No one condones an illegal strike. That's why this is such an urgent issue, Mr. Speaker. Certainly we in the Official Opposition do not condone an illegal strike, but what's missing is the government taking some responsibility for the strike having come to this point and for the issues behind the reasons that it's become so heated.

In addition to addressing quality of workplace issues, the second issue is to address the question of concrete steps that are being taken on the recruitment and the retention and supply of nursing personnel: RNs, LPNs, auxiliary help workers, and others. What steps are being taken to address those shortages? We asked a question today in question period, because of the Premier being in attendance at the Western Premiers' Conference, whether or not these issues of workplace retention and recruitment were being addressed by other western Premiers, who are obviously facing the same issues. We didn't get an answer to that question, Mr. Speaker. We asked it as a very responsible one and one that we think Albertans need some answers on.

Mr. Speaker, what step needs to be taken is that this government needs to signal that they are prepared to start addressing some of the issues that have been identified by nurses. Those are the key issues within this strike, and we will look forward to hearing what steps government intends to take.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In speaking to the motion and particularly to the steps that “must be taken to prevent harm,” which is part of the motion, I think it’s imperative that again we all understand and acknowledge that the strike of the 10,000 health care providers is an illegal strike. Now, 24 hours ago there was a table, as we refer to it, an employer, and a group of employees that actually did have the right to strike, but it was the view of the government and of this minister that it was prudent and necessary to establish a disputes inquiry board so that we could try to effect a settlement at that particular table, which, for the benefit of the members, was the mental health group.

Now, unfortunately for the situation, the disputes inquiry board never had an opportunity to engage with either the employer or the employees group. Under the particular rules, even though the employees involved had an opportunity to go on a legal strike and actually had given notice, once a disputes inquiry board is put into place, a strike or lockout cannot occur. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, what happened this morning at 7 o’clock was that when that group decided to participate in this job action, they in fact no longer had a legal basis. They were now out on strike on an illegal basis. So there should be no confusion here in this Assembly or amongst the citizens of Alberta that all workers that are currently out on strike are participating in an illegal strike.

So it would seem to me that the most important step we could take, then, in trying to prevent harm to the public health care system is of course to get the people back to work. What is being forgotten here, it seems, in the debate that I’ve heard this afternoon from opposition members – not once has there been any indication of concern raised about the innocent third party to this particular situation. Mr. Speaker, the innocent third parties here are those people and of course their families who in fact need the care and attention of the health care providers in this province.

In any discussion of the steps, opposition members can go on and on and on about what should have been or could have been, but the key here is: what is best right now, today, for that health care system? That, of course, is for the union to cease and desist immediately their participation in an illegal strike. It’s now just before 4 o’clock. I don’t know the particular shift schedules that are involved, but if the afternoon shift would show up for work, then the urgency and a lot of the concern about harm to the public health care system of course would be taken care of. Now, this would not remove the responsibility of the employer or the union to arrive at a negotiated settlement. To that end it is the hope of this government that that will be the final result, that there will be a negotiated settlement between the parties involved in these disputes at these four particular tables.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, as a person that has spent some 25 years involved, quite intimately at times, in the field of labour relations, that the best settlements are the ones that are arrived at by the parties negotiating with each other at the particular table. Settlements imposed by an outside force – and in this case, of course, it would have to be the government through its implementation of arbitration proceedings – are satisfactory in the sense that it resolves the particular situation, that there is now a contract in place, but people have to live with that particular contract, then, for the period of whatever that agreement is. The particular one we’re talking about here today is two years, so for two years people would have to live with an imposed settlement.

Now, one of the steps, if we have to somewhere down the line through the means that we have in current legislation and regulations, would be to have an imposed settlement. But my wish today, Mr. Speaker – and I’m speaking, I believe, on behalf of all the government members – is that it is our desire that the parties take the step of returning to the bargaining table, with the support of mediators provided by this government, and that we in fact arrive at a settlement. If it is too naive to think that the afternoon shift can show up for work, certainly the coming night shift would be able to, and we would have this situation behind us.

Again, I want to use what portion of time I have and say that the innocent third party here has to be taken into consideration. It is and should be the first priority of this government. It should be the first priority of the employers involved in this dispute, and it should be the first priority of the union that’s involved in this dispute. It has to be the first priority of those wonderful health care providers that provide for the care and attention of our loved ones that happen to be in a situation where they do need our support and our care. Mr. Speaker, there’s one step that resolves that immediately, and that is of course the return to work.

The employer, of course, is doing what they can, given the tools that they have in their tool kit, through current legislation and regulation. They have gone to the Labour Relations Board, as required. They’ve asked for, applied for a cease and desist order. They received approval on that cease and desist order. They have taken that order, and they’ve gone to the courts. The courts have approved that cease and desist order to the point of even serving notice on the president of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, who of course is the bargaining agent involved in all four tables that are currently under way. So the employer in this particular case, given the illegal strike that is currently taking place, is taking the steps that they have to in order to bring resolution and an end to this illegal strike.

Mr. Speaker, when we talk to the motion, when we talk about steps to prevent harm to the public health care system, just once today – just once – I would like to hear a member of the opposition stand up, rather than saying mealy-mouthed and wishy-washy, “We don’t condone an illegal strike, however, but, whatever,” and in clear terms just have the courage to say that your number one concern is the innocent third parties that are involved here and that you along with the government call upon this union to immediately cease and desist this illegal work action. Do you have the courage to do that? I hope so.

MRS. SLOAN: I’m more than happy this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, to rise and assume the challenge that the minister of human resources has put out. Let me clearly state for the record that I am in this House because as a registered nurse in the system between 1993 and 1997 I saw the degree to which this government was prepared to sacrifice public safety in waging their war on reducing the deficit. That is what drove me to be in this Assembly.

Now, let’s also be clear this afternoon that LPNs and other health workforce employees do not want to strike, nor do they as a profession defy the law lightly. But nurses, technicians, aides, and support staff are committed first and foremost to their patients, Mr. Speaker, to the public that they serve on a daily basis. The reality that they have lived with since at least 1993 is that they cannot provide safe care that is in compliance with their standards of practice and their code of ethics. We need a plan in this province, a comprehensive plan, and we need steps to achieve that. That has been dramatically and starkly absent in this government’s agenda as long as I’ve been in this Assembly.

These employees work every day in an understaffed environment where the acuity of patients has risen dramatically. They have more responsibilities with less supports, and most of all, Mr. Speaker, they work in an environment where they are undervalued and not respected. And this government, by ignoring and ducking these issues not only at this table with AUPE but at previous tables with registered nurses and with laundry workers in this province in the health care system, have compounded the problem that we face today.

The public will ask: what is the government's plan, what is their agenda, and why do we seem to have this repetitive cycle of strikes?

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, I thought you were setting up for getting to the steps. The Speaker has indicated on a number of occasions and I will repeat that what we're talking about is the motion of the hon. member's own leader: "what steps must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system resulting from the strike." That's what we're on, if we could remember that.

Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Well, let's start, Mr. Speaker, by stopping posturing. Let's stop posturing on the government side of the House. Let's stop posturing with the appointed regional health authorities. The posturing is absolutely intolerable. In response the union postures, and meanwhile the public is not receiving care. They are not receiving care because we do not have an overall comprehensive plan for the delivery of safe health care in this province. We do not.

As referenced by the Leader of the Official Opposition this afternoon, in 1999 the minister of health, his department, commissioned a report conducted by regional health authorities on what the issues were in the health workforce. They came back with a comprehensive report containing recommendations and summaries of what needed to be addressed, and we have not seen a stitch of action on that report in over a year's time, despite the fact that in repetitive government documents and the Speech from the Throne we hear again and again how committed this government is to the health workforce.

Well, these employees and the public are looking for concrete action, Mr. Speaker, and not at a time of crisis. They're looking for a government that's prepared to take on this challenge and put out a plan, commit themselves to it, and get it working. We need strategies in the workforce in the healthcare system that will rebuild relationships that have been damaged over the last eight years, strategies that will instill value and respect for these professionals and the job that they do on a daily basis. The public unquestionably values these employees, yet when it comes time to negotiate their collective agreement, they come to a table where they are scorned and ridiculed, and their proposals are dismissed by the government's appointed authorities. That is just not acceptable. What it is is a misstep.

As I indicated earlier, the time for posturing and the old traditional confrontational collective bargaining is long since past. The public recognizes that we have issues in the public health care system. The last thing we need is job action, yet the government seems to want to resort to letting that happen every time, and the public keep asking: why is that the case? Well, what I have seen, what has been demonstrated to me is that this government has a desire to de-skill, to ratchet down the health workforce, and in essence what they have done over the course of the last eight years has stimulated that happening.

The health workforce rebalancing project and the health professions legislation were all constructed to create a melting pot, if you will, to remove the definitions of work. What does that achieve? Well, it achieves a reason for the government to collapse bargaining units under the Labour Relations Code. And what does that achieve, Mr. Speaker? It allows, then, a collapsing of the collective agreements and a collapsing of the gap and a reducing of the salaries paid. It's common knowledge that there is a variance between the hourly wage of a registered nurse and a licensed practical nurse of somewhere around $8 to $10. If the bargaining units are collapsed, what does that allow the government or its appointed authorities to do? It allows them to try and amalgamate those collective agreements and achieve savings.

We know that the Department of Learning has been in discussions with previously the provincial Council of Licensed Practical Nurses, now called the College of Licensed Practical Nurses, and they have been discussing increasing the curriculum seats for licensed practical nurses at a rate of approximately 400 new seats. This is in contrast with the request made by the faculties of nursing for approximately a 60-seat increase in their curriculums, which to this point in time has been refused by government. So on one hand we have the government all the while acknowledging that LPNs are a cheaper form of classification. They're willing to contemplate increasing their seats in the colleges and training facilities across the province by about 400 and thereby reshift, if you will, the provision of nursing care in this province to a classification which at this point in time is less costly. That, Mr. Speaker, really speaks to what the agenda in fact is, a way of de-skilling and reducing costs in the health care system.

To summarize, we need a comprehensive plan in this province to address the critical and growing nursing shortage, addressing both licensed practical nurses and registered nurses and psychiatric nurses, something that has been raised multiple times, but we have yet to see any concrete action to address it. Most certainly, this strike that the province is now facing is another symptom of problems that riddle the system, and the only way in which we're going to get on with addressing them is for the government to assume their leadership role.

The other step that the government might contemplate taking sooner rather than later is instituting accountable and responsible governance in the health care system. We've seen reports this spring where some regional health authorities are now spending up to 40 percent of their budgets on administrative costs, and there is nothing, Mr. Speaker, that outrages frontline employees more than to see exorbitant amounts of money spent on bureaucracy while they're existing at the front line on a shoestring. If this government truly values the delivery of safe patient care in this province, they would re-examine where they're putting their money. That clearly is out of step at the moment with the principles and the policies that the hon. minister of health and the minister of human resources have continually spoken about. The front line is dramatically underfunded, while increasing amounts of money are being poured into the bureaucracy, 17 unelected bureaucracies that were created by this government around the province.

We also know that as a result of all of these things, the work environments in health care have not become healthy at all, and that has contributed to the government and their authorities paying out increasing amounts of money for sick leave and stress leave for the health workforce. That was clearly known when I was in the field in 1997, yet we again do not see any concrete steps to address that problem. Those are the types of things that need to be done.

A strike unquestionably is risky for the public, for the government, for the system as a whole. Also, Mr. Speaker, it wastes valuable time and money, both of which should be focused on strengthening the system for the future. The public health care system in this province needs strong leadership from its government, and, most importantly, it needs the collective energy and commitment of government and health care professionals to construct its future. The government has a responsibility to configure and facilitate the environment to achieve that, and I would be most supportive of efforts and steps that would construct that reality.

Thank you very much.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to first of all just outline, I think, the very significant steps, processes, and activities that the government does have in place with respect to recognizing and involving the professions and occupations in this province that participate in delivering health care. I think I touched on it briefly in my earlier remarks, but one of the major, major initiatives – and the government provided leadership here, particularly the work of the Member for Medicine Hat as chair of the committee that worked long and hard on providing the health professions legislation in this province.

One of the most important challenges that we have in the health care system is to bring understanding and respect and similar rules and similar privileges to the professions and occupations within their various scopes of practice. This has been a major, major initiative, I think, in terms of recognizing not just the doctors and not just the nurses but the licensed practical nurses, the dietitians, the other people who are part of the health care team in this province. I think that as that legislation is more fully implemented, it will have major benefits for the health care system, something that as far as I know has not been undertaken or moved this far in any other province in Canada.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, we have an initiative under way and have in place an overall approach to workforce planning in terms of the numbers and the locations with respect to the overall health care workforce. There is representation in that overall planning activity at Alberta Health and Wellness from those people who are representative of those in the field, so to speak, as frontline staff. Here we are looking at the future needs of the health care system in terms of, first of all, education and training opportunities and of course also relating those to the projected needs of the system. As well, when we're doing that, we look at the professional development needs, a term we use in education, with respect to our overall approach to workforce planning.

Connected to the workforce planning initiative, Mr. Speaker, it's been demonstrated now in two consecutive budgets and government business plans through Alberta Learning that we are significantly following up on our workforce planning, that we are significantly increasing the education opportunities in our postsecondary institutions for the health workforce in this province. Yes, certainly we need to plan for the future. We need to plan for the added numbers, and we also need to plan for the retirements which will no doubt occur. But this is a recognition, I think, of the value of the people in the workforce: the need to plan for proper training opportunities there.

Then in the last budgets, Mr. Speaker, we do recognize that as our population grows, as the province through its good financial management and its strong economy is able to reinvest significantly in health care – we've put a priority on hiring more frontline staff. In the last business plan that was completed, we in fact exceeded our target of adding, as I recall we said, 1,200. The number was somewhere in the neighbourhood of 1,300 or 1,400. Those people who came into the workforce were in different categories, different occupations and professions, but certainly they included, for instance, the licensed practical nurses that have been referred to here this afternoon. So we do recognize the need there, we are taking action on it, and we are producing results.

With respect to the overall area of professional development opportunities within the regional health authorities – and I think I'm somewhat familiar with all of them now – there is a dedication of time for different professional development activities. Certainly when it's a matter of new equipment, new procedures, and in some cases new drugs, there is the flexibility and the opportunity within the system to prepare people to use them, whether it's new equipment or a new treatment procedure. That is something that certainly we as a provincial government, through Alberta Health and Wellness, recognize has to be there.

While the health care system I recognize is a very complex one and there's a great deal of meeting and planning and this sort of thing, I really challenge the statement from across the way that our overall administrative costs have risen compared to the overall dedication of money to the health care system. Our figures show consistently over the last three or four years that the administrative costs of regional health authorities are typically 5.5 percent, a little higher in smaller regional health authorities where you don't have the same economy of scale. Nevertheless, that is, I think, a reasonable proportion and does not indicate that administration is taking away from resources going to overall staffing.

In addition to formal training, in addition to broad professional development opportunities and those which are specific to certain changes within the system, we also have to recognize that all of our workers should have those types of opportunities, particularly when we are talking about changes which are occurring in the system. I think a good example is that, as has recently been announced, we have reinvested significant dollars into the whole area of long-term care. We do need and have dedicated some of those funds to upgrading, if you can use that term – I would term it occupational professional development – and providing time and opportunities at the long-term care centres or at the community colleges, whatever works out in particular parts of the province, for additional education and updating on the best approaches and practices with respect to the care of our seniors, Mr. Speaker.

So I think it is demonstrated that we do value our health workforce. We are, as resources are available, expanding it, Mr. Speaker. We do recognize the need for opportunities for professional and occupational education and improvement. That, I think, is very much part of our priorities in terms of the health workforce.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that overall we've demonstrated that we are making health care a priority for this government, because it is a priority with Albertans. The budget recognizes that we want to improve and expand the health care system, but we want it to go into the services that are needed for the population of this province.

I certainly respect the bargaining process, Mr. Speaker. I think it should be followed through on in the way it is set up to and intended to. We certainly are taking very, very seriously our responsibility to provide for the proper climate and the proper resources in the health care system. Nevertheless, there is legislation which provides a legal process by which collective agreements can be arrived at. I have had experience on both sides of the overall collective bargaining process. It does work. There is a process here, and the fact of the matter is that that process should be used and adhered to and we should not be faced with illegal job action.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak to the motion before us. Earlier today, during the question period, I did draw the attention of the House and the minister of health and the minister of labour to the real crisis that we find ourselves in. I'm gratified that the Speaker this afternoon recognized the gravity of the situation, the urgent public importance of the crisis, and the steps we need to take to ensure that for not just one group but for the health care system altogether, with all the participants involved in it – patients, families, health care workers, and the system as a whole – the harm that could result as a result of this strike is prevented.

It is true that 10,000 health care workers in this province are on strike. It is true that the strike is illegal. In fact, that very fact, recognizing that 10,000 Albertans – and these are not rich and powerful Albertans. These are mostly women. I was at the University hospital site at noon today, and about 99 percent of these workers who are on strike are women. The fact that they have taken such a huge risk to go on strike shows the degree and the depth of the frustration and discontent that is there at their place of work, discontent and frustration that they experience on a daily basis. That is why they have decided to go on this illegal strike. All the consequences that can follow from this are well known to them, yet they have made their decision.

That's why this Assembly needs to pay special attention to the conditions that prevail in our hospitals, in our health care facilities and how those conditions need to be addressed if we are to fully and successfully address the issue of what steps need to be taken. Steps that need to be taken have to be in relation to the conditions that created the situation that we find ourselves in, conditions which result in actions which could irretrievably damage the health care system.

So rather than putting the blame, as I found in a news release that just came to me this afternoon from the Provincial Health Authorities of Alberta – it's a news release that is strident, that is intransigent in tone. It's a news release that tries to place blame on the workers, on the employees, the representatives of whom this association is trying to bargain with. I think it's that poisoned environment, this polarized work situation in the health care workplaces that has to be addressed if the system is to be protected from the harm that may result from the strike that started this morning at 7 o'clock. So the conditions at the workplace, the ability of the professional workers to respect both their professional ethics and obligations to the patient as well as their obligations to the contract to which they're a party can be maintained, those are the kinds of conditions we need to address.

The health care workplace is not an ordinary workplace. It's a workplace where the health interests of real human beings are taken care of, where care is provided, and the quality of that care must be as high as we possibly can guarantee. We all know that it cannot happen if you have a workforce that's overworked, if you have a workplace that's understaffed, if you have employees who are discontented, who are unhappy with the way they're being treated, with the way they're being rewarded, with the way they're being recognized for the value of the work that they provide.

It's not enough to say that these are essential workers. That's a legal definition. Sure, they're essential workers, and because they are essential, therefore, according to the laws of this province – and this is one of the few provinces, by the way, Mr. Speaker, which has this complete ban on essential workers' ability to strike. Although I heard the minister of health talking about how he respects collective bargaining, at the same time I didn't hear him say that he regrets the fact that in this province we have a law which bans completely, under any circumstances, health care workers from going on strike. In fact, taking away the right to strike is striking at the very roots of the collective bargaining process.

We know that this law which bans essential workers, health care workers from striking hasn't worked. From '89 on we have fairly good cumulative experience which shows that it doesn't work. In fact, it polarizes the situation. It leads to illegal strikes. This is the fourth time that this has happened in this province, so why don't we learn something from it?

I was accused by the minister of health this afternoon of being doctrinaire. Now, I want to ask the Assembly, I want to ask you, Mr. Speaker: who is being doctrinaire? Doctrinaires are people who don't learn from their own experience, who don't respect the actual results of their policies and actions, learn from those actions, and change those actions if necessary. So what we need to do is to focus on taking measures now that will help us protect the system from any further wrong.

What kind of harm will result, Mr. Speaker, if we don't deal with the strike effectively now? If we don't resolve it amicably, if we don't bring about some sort of conciliation among parties, the first harm that will result to the system is in the form of disaffected workers who will have no commitment to the workplace. They will at the earliest opportunity want to leave the place. The so-called brain drain, workers running away from our hospitals and from our health care facilities, is a problem already. This is happening under conditions in which already there is a nursing shortage, a health care worker shortage in the province.

The most serious harm to the system could result from workers who are dissatisfied, workers who are not valued for what they do, workers who are banned from striking, workers who are threatened with their rights being taken away. That will result in further harm to the system. So what we need to do as an Assembly is make sure that those conditions don't prevail, conditions that create that kind of discontent and disaffection with the work situation.

We also, Mr. Speaker, in the longer run need to do something to repeal this law which takes away the right to strike of these workers. It doesn't work. Let's find some other ways. Let's put our heads together and see if we can find some way that will help us deal with situations or stalemates in bargaining in places where health care is provided. Banning strikes is not the answer. It doesn't work. It has failed completely. Let's learn from this evidence.

What we know in the short run, Mr. Speaker, is to ask the minister of health and the minister of labour to take the responsibility for the conditions that prevail in the workplace in our health care system. This government's own policies, own actions have created those conditions. Unless that responsibility is first acknowledged – that, yes, we are responsible for part of the problem, for most of the problem – no action will follow. The first action is for the government to recognize that it is responsible for the conditions of crisis that presently we find occurring in the system. Having done that, then of course the two ministers must say: "From today on we'll take a proactive role. We won't just let labour relations apparatus kick in. We won't let courts decide. That will not decide the matter. What's needed is a concerted political action." That action is missing. That will be missing at the moment.

So what we need to hear from the minister of labour and from the minister of health to resolve this strike so that the system is prevented from being harmed is the following. They will call on both parties today, now, to come to the table. Two ministers will be available; they will make sure that the negotiations go on and the parties don't leave the table until a settlement is reached. That's what's needed, a proactive government committed to defusing this very, very difficult and conflictual situation. That's the only way we can prevent the harm that may result to the system if this strike goes on.

I was listening to the minister of health. He talks about professional development opportunities that RHAs are beginning to provide. To me, that doesn't hold any water. The real issues are of job security, of wages, of casualization of work. So I say: let's take both the short-term action and long-term action.

Thank you.

4:20

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take a little bit of time this afternoon to respond to the resolution that is before the House. First of all, though, I would like to preface my remarks by commenting on the fact that I believe and I know my colleagues believe that the professionalism and the attention to task and the skills that licensed practical nurses are capable of performing and indeed do perform on their jobsite and in their workplace are very much appreciated. I'd also like to take this opportunity to commend the upgrading, the increased skill sets they have received, the further depth of their training that has most recently given them the opportunity to expand their scope of practice.

However, that's not what we are talking about today. In fact, I think the time that we spend here in the Legislature is not an issue of looking back in the past to see what people did that they thought was best, what people think they could have done in the past, nor of chastising government or those responsible in the health regions for actions that have been taken. Instead, we have in front of us a resolution that says that we should discuss and be discussing "what steps must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system resulting from the strike," this illegal strike which we are indeed in the midst of.

This illegal strike is the result of a labour dispute, and if we are going to speak to the urgency of the issue, because we have suspended the regular Orders of the Day in this Assembly, then I feel we speak directly to what is the point at hand. If we are to say what steps are going to be taken, I cannot stress more accurately and more directly what the minister has spoken of with respect to how we should look to the parties getting back to the table. That is the best way, the only way that this illegal strike action can be terminated.

I believe that you respond to a direct situation at hand by suggesting what can be done immediately, and for that reason I think that we here in the Assembly are not in a position to address a labour dispute. We either respect the process or we don't respect the process, and the process that is before us is that we have two parties in a situation of dispute . . .

MRS. SLOAN: A 5 percent rollback didn't respect the process.

MR. SMITH: Negotiated. Negotiated.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, hon. Minister of Gaming, if you wish an opportunity, one has already taken it and doesn't get a second opportunity; the other has yet to do so. Right now we do have the hon. Member for St. Albert, and following that, other hon. members will have their chance.

St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, I do believe there is a process we should be respecting. The process is that there have been negotiations going on, and what we see right now are those people who are responsible for their own actions and have therefore chosen to go on strike, and that we have to hold them accountable for. If people choose to go on strike, on an illegal strike, then we here in this Legislature have the responsibility to suggest that they do what the process warrants they are able to do, and that is to have them come back to the table and to discuss the issue.

We are not here to resolve a labour dispute. This Chamber is not meant to do that, nor are we mandated to do that. Instead, we have laws. We have a situation in place where we have mandated those who are responsible to represent their organizations, if you will, or the employer and the employees' associations in this case, and we should be looking for them to return to engage in the action that the system has designated they should be doing.

I'd also like to take a moment here to reflect on the fact that I have never believed that responsible people use other innocent people to achieve their own end. However admirable it is that individuals who are employees in these various groups and who are represented at the table by their negotiating . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We're on the resolution.

MRS. O'NEILL: Okay: taking steps. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize.

The steps that we are looking for them to take and we would hope they would take and we would use the opportunity in this Chamber to encourage them to take would be to return to the table so that they can specifically address and negotiate across the table the agreement that they so desire. However, in taking those steps, I do not feel that others should use innocent third parties, particularly in this case those individuals who are fragile, who are sick, who are vulnerable within our community, use them or put them at risk by therefore engaging in an illegal strike.

So the steps that have to be taken are for their leaders to return to the table. I've said it often. I'd like to say it one more time. Unless we here in this Chamber respect the agreed upon process, then we, in suggesting that other steps be taken, are stepping outside of what was originally agreed to.

Therefore, I make my case, finally, in repetition by saying that our voice should only be to say: let those parties who are engaged in the negotiations return for the benefit of those who are the employees, for the benefit of those who are the employers, but, most importantly, with respect for those who are the individuals who we trust are to be cared for within the health facilities in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief, but I'll be to the point. I have a lot of different facilities in my constituency that are being affected by this today. We have St. Michael's extended care. I have the Alberta Hospital Edmonton, and I have lots of constituents that work in the hospitals in Edmonton.

This is a very concerning thing. I'm not saying that I condone illegal strikes, but I do feel that there is a negotiation that should be done here. We've been witnessing over the last week or so that there's been a lot of finger-pointing. There's been a lot of playing games in the media, and the fact is that both sides should be negotiating with the responsibilities they carry forward to the table. This government is passing the buck to the 17 health regions, and we should be doing it right here out of Alberta Health.

This government has the responsibility as the employer to these people out on strike today. Whether we want to keep saying that it's an illegal strike, it is that they are not working today, and we have people in our facilities that we should have back working, taking care of patients.

We have people that really have lost hope. They have no other recourse but to walk out to show that they should be able to negotiate at the table. We have a government in place that for the last many years has just totally had no concern and wants to union break.

I have never had a union back me up; I've always been out there on my own. But the fact is that I do know that we'd be still back in the 1974 dark ages in the health system if there weren't unions. They have supported their people. There are negotiations that have been done over the years on bad working conditions, bad management skills of the people being put in charge of them. At the same time, without saying that I'm totally a huge union supporter, I do believe that there's a place for them.

What we seem to have lost, in all these years of downloading and trying to point the finger at health as being the only problem why the provinces and the country have gone into debt, is the fact that health is the major thing. We brought it up in Bill 11. Very important debates were put forward on how important the workers are, how important the health system is, and how there's been a void in the system over the last number of years, a void of lack of training, a void of lack of people. We should be looking at the LPNs and their training system of cross-training, going in and being the OR techs working in the ORs today. There's been lots of good training toward a system. But at the same time, how do we regain the void that we've had of the lack of nurses, the lack of staff: 10,000 health workers let go in a matter of three and a half, four years, 8,200 nurses.

They're out there for a reason. They're out there because they have in desperation depended on their union to bring something forward to them. I feel that this is a very important motion that we should be looking at, pointing out that we as governing representatives of this province have to recognize that we have to get them back to the table, that we have to get them back to negotiating. We have to let a system play out that does not have the dollars and cents and the power that we have behind our public affairs in this province to defeat people's will so that they're going to accept anything.

So for those constituents I have, with St. Michael's and Alberta Hospital Edmonton in my constituency, this is such an important issue that I do hope that every representative in this Assembly will talk of the importance of this today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important to talk about what steps could be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system resulting from the strike of 10,000 health care providers, and I think it's been pointed out by some of my colleagues that the most important step that could be taken is for the illegal strike to end and to end now.

In saying that, I'm not putting any blame or pointing any fingers at anybody in terms of who's at fault. I'm just re-emphasizing that there's a reason it's illegal to strike in certain essential occupations and certain essential places. Providing health care services to Albertans is a very, very important business, a very, very important service, and it's something which has been deemed essential. There are innocent third parties who get hurt in the process, so it's been determined in the past that having strikes in this particular area of service is not appropriate. That's why strikes are illegal. To condone illegal strikes by using any other title such as "job action" or any other euphemism to soften it or to use any statement that says, "I don't condone illegal strikes but," is gilding the lily.

The bottom line is that the best thing anyone can do to prevent harm to the health care system resulting from this strike is for the illegal strikers to go back to work, to solve the problems at the bargaining table in good faith when negotiating between employer and employee, and if they need outside help, to call upon the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to appoint mediators or to provide for arbitrators or to provide for that outside assistance so that the people who are involved in this illegal job action, this illegal strike, can get back to serving Albertans in the way in which that service is so necessary. That is the single most important step which could be taken to prevent any harm to the public health care system.

One of the things that's been left out but is implicit in this motion is what steps need to be taken to prevent harm to individual Albertans who are in need of quality health care from service providers when those health care workers withdraw their services. So it's concomitant to say that they need to go back to work now, provide services, and let the bargaining agents, the union and the employers, go to the table and do their job and get a settlement in place that makes this system work. The government is not at the table. The government is not the employer in this case, but the government could play a role, if necessary, in providing mediation or arbitration at appropriate times.

I've listened to some of the comments that have been made this afternoon; for example, Edmonton-Riverview talking about a desire to de-skill or to ratchet down. That's absolutely opposite to what this government promotes. What this government has been promoting is more education for doctors, more educational opportunities for nurses, more educational opportunities for technicians, more educational opportunities for health care workers. That's what this government has been supporting. That's what the Minister of Health and Wellness has announced additional resources for, and that's where we're going here.

There's a more important discussion which should be happening which we don't seem to get to because we deal with health care discussions on an emotional level rather than getting down and talking about the real issues. This is something that I think the Member for Edmonton-Riverview would agree with me on.

MRS. SLOAN: I wouldn't go that far, David. Don't be too sure.

MR. HANCOCK: I think she would.

Health care workers should be allowed to work to the level of their education and their expertise. That would really help the health care system. In this discussion about health care, if we could go above and beyond, think outside the box a little bit and start talking about how every player in the system can maximize their potential, can use the skills that they have, use the education and resources that they have, use the experience that they have, and take responsibility for the work that they're doing, we could really do some good work in the health care system. We need to be working together, Mr. Speaker. We need to be taking those steps to work together as health care professionals, as health care workers, as government, as health authorities to achieve that kind of an end. True health care reform: that's what we need to achieve, and we'll build that by health care workers and employers and government sitting down in a spirit of goodwill, working together to achieve that kind of reform.

MRS. SLOAN: I had to run for election before you listened to me.

MR. HANCOCK: I'm not listening to you now.

Edmonton-Riverview thinks I'm listening to her. I listen to my constituents, and I bring their views to the attention of this House, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The chair really shouldn't have to remind the hon. Government House Leader that all his comments and so on should be addressed through the chair.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, I try to do that to make sure that the views of Edmonton-Whitemud are represented in this constituency and through the chair to the members of this House.

I'm talking about how we deal with the necessary steps to prevent harm to the health care system from this type of illegal action. It's not pointing fingers. It's not suggesting that people aren't doing their job to say that we have determined in this province that it's important that health care services be delivered to those who need them, that health care workers provide those services, that if there's job action that needs to be taken, that job action should be taken in an appropriate and legal manner. The dispute should be resolved at the bargaining table, and the dispute should be resolved by working in co-operation.

One of my experiences, Mr. Speaker, was as a member of the University Hospitals Board before I was elected to this House. During the time I was there, we were involved in a reorganization project. It was a massive project; it was a very interesting project. It took a couple of years to do. One of the most interesting aspects of that project was that we had committees which examined every single thing that happened in that hospital to determine whether it needed to be done; whether it needed to be done there; if so, who it should be done by; and what sort of resource pool was needed.

MRS. SLOAN: Led by an American consultant.

MR. HANCOCK: Edmonton-Riverview says that it was led by an American consultant, Mr. Speaker, but in fact it wasn't. There was an American consultant who did some of the data gathering for us, but it was led by people in the hospital. It was led by a board champion and an executive champion and some of the workers there. In fact, there were over 600 workers at the University hospital involved in various committees doing that examination.

I was getting to the point, Mr. Speaker, before I was so rudely interrupted by Edmonton-Riverview, to say that it was a very, very worthwhile experience because everybody sat down at the same table, whether it was a heart surgeon or a nurse or a plumber or a member of the board or a member of the executive team, and talked about how we could do health care reform within the context of the service delivery in that hospital.

That's the type of co-operation, the type of work that needs to happen to develop the health care system of the future. That's the type of thing that we need to do, not de-skilling – nobody's into de-skilling; certainly this government's not into de-skilling – but letting health care workers work to the level of their skill and encouraging the breakdown of the barriers which prohibit that, to get the professions to the table and say: we don't need to protect our areas of practice and be limited in terms of what we allow people to do. What we should do is look at what they can do, what they're equipped to do, what they're trained to do, what services they can provide to the system and let them work to that level and let them take responsibility for working to that level. If we did that, there would be a whole lot more job satisfaction at every level in the system, and we wouldn't have issues of money taking such a high priority in people's level of concern.

So, Mr. Speaker, there are some steps that can be taken over the long term to make sure that the jobs that our professional health care deliverers in this province do are respected, are recognized as being important. In fact, they're recognized as being essential. We know that they do good work. We know that they're working very, very hard for Albertans, but we also know that it's inappropriate to have illegal action. We as a House should be encouraging them to go back to work, to go back to the table and have full and complete discussions and resolve the issues there for the benefit of all Albertans, certainly for the benefit of those Albertans who are sick and in need of care.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the short time available to each member to participate, I wanted to make a couple of points. It seems to me that in terms of steps that must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system, we have two kinds of relief. We have some long-term strategies, and we have some immediate questions that have to be resolved. Let me deal with some of the immediate questions initially. I guess I'm struck by the fact that here we are in the fourth kind of crisis like this when it comes to health care workers in this province.

[Mr. Herard in the chair]

I understand that in Calgary, although obviously I haven't been there today, we've got the Peter Lougheed, the Rockyview, the Colonel Belcher veterans care centre in my constituency, the Fanning centre, and the Bethany care centre that are all affected. All of the patients and residents of those different facilities are presumably hugely interested in what this government is doing in terms of immediate steps.

I guess one of the things I'd like to know and haven't heard – I want to know that there is a concrete plan on the part of the government to deal with this. I want to know whether the government has the current intention of invoking division 18 of the Labour Relations Code. Sections 110 and 111 set out a range of remedies for the government of the province of Alberta. Is there a current plan to invoke either of those sections under division 18 emergencies? When the minister of human resources and the minister of health spoke very defensively, I didn't hear them offer crisp, specific indications in terms of what kinds of remedies the government is currently contemplating to protect the health of my constituents and Calgaryans in the city of Calgary. So is division 18 going to be invoked by the government? Is there a current contemplation of that?

Division 19 of the Labour Relations Code . . . [interjection] I'm interested in asking public policy questions, and since the Speaker has shown the wisdom of (a) acknowledging that there's a crisis in terms of the provision of health care in this province and (b) that it is important to be able to have this sort of debate . . .

MR. HANCOCK: A point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order
Factual Accuracy

MR. HANCOCK: Yes. Mr. Speaker, under 23(h), (i), and (j). The hon. member just indicated that the Speaker acknowledged that there was a crisis in health care in this province. In fact, anyone who was here in the House would know that the Speaker came nowhere close to doing that. His ruling was that this was a question which allowed for an urgent debate because, as he put it, as I recall, there was no other opportunity for debate of this issue. It would be a total mischaracterization of the Speaker's comments to suggest that he indicated that there was a crisis in health care in this province. In fact, he said no such thing, and the hon. Opposition House Leader should be asked to correct himself on that point because he would clearly be putting the Speaker in a position of taking a public policy position instead of being a referee in the House.

MR. DICKSON: I very much appreciate the intervention of the Government House Leader. I should have made it much clearer that it was a paraphrase and my interpretation of the ruling of the Speaker. Clearly, the Speaker did not indicate that there was a crisis, so I stand corrected, and I appreciate the Government House Leader drawing that to my attention.

Debate Continued

MR. DICKSON: The concern I wanted to raise while we're dealing with specific steps that could be taken, that ought to be taken – we have division 18 of the Labour Relations Code dealing with emergencies. We have division 19, sections 112, 113, and 114, dealing with measures during illegal strike or illegal lockout. I'd like to know the current contemplation of the government with respect to that array of remedies, what the government has proposed to do with respect to using those remedies under the Labour Relations Code.

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, I'm having some difficulty following this, because it would seem to me that the questions you're asking are in the nature of speculation rather than debating the question we have before us.

It seems to me that when parties are involved in negotiation, it probably is not appropriate to speculate on sections of the labour code when in fact we don't know what may be taking place in those negotiations. I think those kinds of questions are completely hypothetical, and we should stick to what we're dealing with here, which is: how do we deal with this question?

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I know that you certainly wouldn't want to enter into debate on the motion that's in front of us, and certainly I always take the chair's direction with respect to the Standing Orders. But with the greatest respect, it seems to me that when we're talking about "what steps must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system," how could those steps not include the existing labour legislation?

There is an element of hypothesis to everything we debate, because without knowing what the action plan of the government is, we can only offer suggestions and ask questions. I know that you want to avoid entering into debate, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I guess if you phrase it in a way that says: here, based on what I see in the labour code, this is what I suggest we could do. But if you're standing there asking the government, "Are you going to invoke section this or section that?" I'm sorry, but that to me is out of order.

MR. DICKSON: Under 13(2), Mr. Speaker, if you might advise on what basis and what the authority is that a question posed as I posed it, in rhetorical fashion, would be out of order under the Standing Orders, I invite your clarification on that.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Okay. Steps that "must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system resulting from the strike of 10,000 health care providers" is what we're talking about. This is my view, but I think if in fact you're asking questions of the government with respect to, "Are you going to invoke this section?" – I believe you quoted 18 and maybe 19; I'm not sure which at this point – that's entirely different than standing in your place and saying: I think you should do that. That in fact is something that could be taken as a step, as you suggest. To me, asking the question gets dangerously close to getting involved in the process.

So I would just caution you to try and avoid getting involved in the process of labour negotiations, because that's happening somewhere, I suppose, in this city or some other city in this province right now. I'm just very concerned that we get involved in that process.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, thank you, of course, for your intervention. It was good to hear your concerns about what might happen with those kinds of questions. I'll try and couch my comments in a way that is satisfactory to the chair.

MR. DICKSON: I would think there is a kind of imbalance that exists in the House always, in every debate. I don't have available to me the resources of the minister of human resources. I'm not a member of cabinet. So when we talk about what the steps are that "must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system," that would presumably involve a full and robust consideration of the complete range of remedies. I'm mindful that the Speaker earlier cautioned us that there are some matters that may be before the courts, and certainly it would be important to avoid speaking on those matters. [interjection] I want to, but I've just got lots of comments.

Part of my debate, Mr. Speaker, is going to be in the nature of asking some questions, because that's typically the way I debate in this Assembly. I'm happy to offer suggestions when I can, but I'm not going to suggest that I've got all the answers, because there are lots of people far more knowledgeable than I am. As an elected representative part of my job is to amplify questions and concerns I hear from constituents, and that's what I'm trying to do to the best of my ability.

In any event, I've identified some sections in the provincial statute, the Labour Relations Code. I've asked the question, and perhaps in the course of debate we'll hear other reasons. You may, when you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, be able to offer some comments in your other capacity in terms of what steps you think should be taken.

In the meantime, I'd go on and say that I understand that at 2:30 this afternoon there was a media availability at the University of Alberta hospital here in Edmonton. Just in terms of showing the size of the steps that must be taken, it's useful to recognize – and this is what's at risk in Edmonton, I'm advised – that 250 patients are affected across the Capital region's six hospitals, with a few urgent or emergency cases proceeding at each site if necessary. All patients in the Capital health region scheduled for surgery on Thursday are now being notified that those procedures are canceled. The only exceptions are urgent cardiac, cancer, and transplant surgeries and special cases such as patients already in transit. So what we've got at risk there are some 1,400 patients in Capital region hospitals, which is a significant number out of the 1,911 hospital beds in the entire region.

I understand that some CUPE support staff joined the AUPE strike this morning at the Misericordia, at the Sturgeon community hospital and health centre, and the Leduc community hospital and health centre. Then I understand that this afternoon CUPE staff returned to the Misericordia, Sturgeon, and Leduc hospitals. So we have a great deal of activity going on, and one would have hoped that the most basic step would be the government of the province of Alberta coming out and outlining with some specificity the plan they have to deal with the immediate crisis. We don't hear that.

It's of particular concern to me that the government has taken very much a hands-off position, and this brings us to one of the great ironies here. We have these 17 regional health authorities with what I'd describe as questionable legitimacy. You know, the regional health authority boards are not elected; they're not elected by anyone. These are the people that are negotiating presumably on behalf of the interests of the people in my hometown of Calgary or in Edmonton or Leduc or any other city, but they have no elected mandate, and it strikes me that that's a huge difficulty right off the bat.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to add my few thoughts on the motion that's in front of us, and I see what's in front of us broken down into three components. Let me say first of all that I'm very, very pleased with the recognition by the Speaker that he did in fact deem this motion worthy of emergency debate this afternoon, because I could not agree with him more on that particular ruling. I see this broken down . . . [interjection] She's gone to beat your candidate in Edmonton-Highlands, and three to one she waxes her.

Mr. Speaker, I see this motion broken down into three components. First of all – and pardon me, Member for Edmonton-Whitemud – we have to ask ourselves: why this job action? Why has this job action been taken? Secondly, what's the impact of this job action? What are the consequences? Thirdly, what steps have to be taken to prevent this type of scenario from happening in the first place or happening again in the future? Those are the three components I feel have to be addressed.

Mr. Speaker, just a bit of my background when it comes to union involvement. Back in the early '70s when I worked for the University of Alberta Students' Union, because we were distinct from the academic and nonacademic staff, we organized and formed a union, the students' union staff, 40 of us, under CUPE, and I became its first president. I realized at that particular time just how difficult it was from the employee's point of view, the upper hand that the employer had when it came to negotiations. Under our collective agreement and the authority given to us, we did have the right to take strike action, something that we don't see in this current situation. So I do have some feel for labour negotiations and such.

Now, why has this particular job action been taken? Well, I guess we could go back and one could say that the whole question of the restructuring that took place with the health care system when we turned over the authority of the health care system to nonelected people – the government gave up its responsibility and said: we no longer want to be responsible for administering . . .

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I'm sorry to interrupt. I listened very carefully. You mentioned there were three issues that you wanted to deal with. However, we really only have one before us, and that is: "what steps must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system resulting from [this] strike." I don't see the other two, but I'm hearing you go through a number of things that have been debated before. I would like you to stay with the steps, please.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Speaker, thank you for your excellent guidance there. I was simply trying to sort of paint a picture as to the frustration being felt by those that are participating in what is happening out there so that I can point out the urgency of the situation, how critical it is, and what steps have to be taken to try and correct the situation.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Speaker, let me just say from my experience, having been in the hospital for 10 weeks a couple of years ago, that I saw the frustration these health care workers underwent. I saw just how hard they had to work, and I saw the frustration they faced. I saw their need to have respect, to have dignity, and to be given fair compensation. The lack of those three components is what has driven us to the situation we're in today, what I call a very, very critical situation, that is in fact very harmful, that has great potential harm to the public at large.

Just how large is that potential harm? First of all, we're looking at a total of 10,000 health care workers that are involved potentially, the largest strike in the history of the AUPE, the largest union in Alberta. We're looking at 5,700 licensed practical nurses and nursing aides at 120 hospitals that are potentially affected. We're looking at 1,900 psychiatric aides and support staff at Alberta Mental Health Board facilities. We're looking at 1,300 LPNs, nursing attendants, and personal support workers at 11 long-term continuing care centres including the Capital Care Group, St. Michael's in Edmonton, at Dr. Vernon Fanning Centre and Bethany Care Centre in Calgary.

We're looking at 1,800 technicians, housekeeping, and maintenance staff at the University and Glenrose hospitals. We're looking at 159 health care facilities potentially involved including approved hospitals, 70 clinics, long-term care facilities, and Alberta Hospital Edmonton and Alberta Hospital Ponoka. We're looking at those affected in this particular area: the University hospital, the Royal Alex, the Misericordia, the Mill Woods centre, the Northeast centre, the long-term Capital Care Group, St. Michael's. In Calgary we're looking at the Peter Lougheed, the Rockyview, the Colonel Belcher Veteran's Care Centre, the Dr. Vernon Fanning Centre, the Bethany Care Centre.

We can see the potential in terms of harm that this can have to the health care system in this province, the impact it can have in terms of harm to patients, to hundreds, thousands of Albertans that are affected by what's happening out there. We're going to see postponement of surgery that would otherwise go ahead. Now, if that is not creating a harmful situation, I don't know what is.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The government has to recognize that we're into a critical situation. It's a desperate situation. There's absolutely no question about that. How is that dispute resolved at this particular point? Well, one of the difficulties that those workers face is that it's a one-sided coin in that the negotiating process, the negotiating tools weigh in favour of the employer. Once employees are denied that basic right to withdraw their services – and when they withdraw their services, it's deemed by some as being illegal, but they're driven to that particular situation because the recourses that should be there aren't there for those workers, Mr. Speaker.

So that's the difficulty. That's the frustration they face, and they recognize it's one-sided. They recognize that they have the disadvantage when it comes to that whole negotiating process. If we go back in history to the 1989-1993 term, the leader of the Liberal opposition at that time introduced a bill that would give health care workers with the exception of essential services the right to withdraw their services. If the health care workers had that tool, the negotiations would be a lot more meaningful.

I would venture to say, Mr. Speaker, that if they were given that right when they deserved to be given that right, we would not be in the situation we're in today. We're in the situation we're in today because of desperation by over 10,000 workers that are crying out for respect, that are crying out for dignity, that are crying out for fair treatment. They look at the various mechanisms that are available to them to try and achieve those objectives. All they have to do is look at what's happening in Ontario, look at what's happening in B.C., where their counterparts are paid over $20 an hour, 33 and a third percent more than they're paid here. They look at the fact that they're the seventh lowest paid in terms of any province throughout Canada. They look at what they're offered, a 3 percent increase in the immediate, which – what? – meets inflation, barely meets inflation, doesn't meet inflation? It's an insult to them. It's an insult to their dignity. It's an insult to their respect, and it's an insult to their cry for fair treatment.

Mr. Speaker, we have an obligation as elected representatives to protect Alberta workers, and these are Alberta workers. These are Alberta workers that are now driven to the point where they have to negotiate with a body of nonelected people that should be elected. At least one-third should be elected and should have been some time ago. They're driven to that point of negotiating with nonelected people that find themselves being nonaccountable to the electorate, being nonaccountable to Albertans.

If the power, if the final decision-making was in the hands of the Legislative Assembly, was in the hands of the minister – and he does have some steps he can take; there's no question about that – I think it would be a different story. I think we would be flooded with dozens of calls, hundreds of calls, and suddenly the elected representatives would stop and say: "Hey, we have a problem here. We have our constituents asking for our help."

How can an Albertan phone a member of the Edmonton regional health authority, the Calgary regional health authority, any regional health authority, and say: "Look; I'm insisting that you do right. I'm insisting that you do this"? What leverage do they have? They can't turn around and say, "You don't get my vote next time if you don't do that; you have an obligation to represent me," because we don't, technically speaking, have that particular obligation laid out.

Mr. Speaker, because I know there are others in this caucus that want to speak, I'm going to conclude.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MRS. LAING: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The steps that need to be taken are those necessary to get the negotiation teams back to the table. The participants need to be encouraged to resume talking. It is only through meeting face to face and addressing the issues that a resolution can be found. This is the process that currently is in place.

I can vouch personally that contrary to some people's view, our health system is providing excellent care in the acute care system through the skilled professionals who are employed in that system. Today there are more provincewide services such as heart surgeries, more renal dialysis, more orthopedic procedures being done.

The Minister of Health and Wellness has announced more resources to purchase additional and newer technology to provide even better health care. The Minister of Learning has taken the step of announcing an increase in the number of health care professional spaces through the opening for training and education. The Broda committee recommendations for long-term care are now being put into place, and the minister announced $20 million yesterday to expand long-term care and home care. This brings to $40 million over the last two years dedicated to enhancing the services provided to our most vulnerable citizens in long-term care and home care.

Last November $265.8 million was placed in the system for an additional 658 long-term beds and 1,325 replacement beds. Another step was the $4 million put in place to provide the drug Aricept for the growing number of persons suffering from Alzheimer's disease.

Another step will be the implementation of a health services utilization commission, which will monitor and assess the system's performance and recommend improvements. Recently both the Calgary regional health authority and the Capital health authority have set up local utilization units dedicated to improvements in their systems with an emphasis on continuous improvement.

Another important step in continuous improvement is through the use of pilot projects to investigate new ways of doing things and to test innovative ideas. For example, a primary care model to improve access to physicians and to help reduce pressure on emergency wards has been developed in Calgary and is showing much promise. It also relies very heavily on interpersonal co-operation and skill, building a team.

The access to MRI procedures is being expanded to reduce the waiting lists, as the role for this technology has grown considerably in the past few years.

These are just some of the steps undertaken by the government to meet the needs of an ever evolving health care system. As one of the few persons in this Assembly who has truly been in a legal strike, I can testify that any strike causes deep wounds that take many years to heal. I would recommend very strongly to the bargaining team to resume their negotiations and to find the solutions which address the needs of the workers and those under their care.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

5:10

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon. I, too, like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, would like to recognize the wisdom of the chair in permitting this emergency debate this afternoon, because it truly is an emergency.

MR. SMITH: So what are you going to do about it?

MR. MacDONALD: Now, we've had in the last four years a strike . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. minister has not yet had his chance to speak, although he all too often enters into debate when it's not really his turn. It is right now the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and if the hon. member would speak through the chair and not to anyone who inappropriately makes comments, that would be helpful to the process.

Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, I realize that with this emergency the mismanagement of the government has been front and centre. In 1998, when this job action occurred, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity in question period said to this Assembly that, yes, this is a good idea, and the idea was to streamline the bargaining process. This would be the first step, but unfortunately we're in the situation we are this afternoon because the bargaining process was not streamlined.

The hon. member in his capacity as minister of labour failed to streamline the process. This was recognized by the minister of health in March of last year in the Current and Emerging Health Workforce Issues in Alberta. We're asking what steps can be taken to protect our public health care system. Well, the first step would be for the hon. members across the way to read their own reports.

We talk about current shortages of licensed practical nurses. This is a crisis in this province. It's a crisis across the country. We're not looking at the factors here. If we want to take a step in protecting our public health care system from job action, we have to recognize that a shortage exists. We have to recognize that we have to have compensation packages. We just can't throw pennies and expect people to work. These individuals that are currently getting dust on their shoes in 159 different locations across the province are the people who held the system together up until now, despite all odds. Through their efforts and through their hard work they have kept the system together, and what do we do? We have a collective bargaining process that obviously does not work.

Now, the object of collective bargaining is a collective agreement between the union and the employer. The best collective agreement that can be reached is one that's agreed to freely and without hesitation by both parties. When we have this idea of compulsory arbitration, when we have this idea that there's no balance in the system – and that exists in the entire labour movement in this province. [interjections] People can aah and they can ooh, Mr. Speaker, but we've had four disruptions in the last four years. Something is not working here, and it just astonishes me that we continue with the same rhetoric from the hon. members across the way.

The government appoints the regional health authorities and the Mental Health Board. These appointments are selective. They're not elected, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo stated. The government is providing the funds. The government shapes the labour climate and the code. I can't get into the code at this time, but one more step that we could take to prevent harm to the public health care system is to explore why the shortage in health care professionals exists in this province. We could look at the poor practice of labour relations in this province.

There's almost a contemptuous attitude. We look at what the selected regional health authorities have to say about the increasing labour relations difficulties. Well, today it's come to a boil. We have other unions that are willing to stand beside AUPE, and this certainly is a crisis.

The regional health authorities would like their government to do the following: identify or consult with the department of labour to streamline certificates and bargaining processes. This gets back to what I said earlier in the exchange in question period going back two years. I'm convinced that if the streamlining in the bargaining process had taken place, we wouldn't be having this emergency debate this afternoon. That's one step.

Another step would be – and this is from the selected regional health authorities – to partner with other health authorities and other government agencies to facilitate changes to labour relations legislation. Well, to me that is an admittance that the current system is not working. That's another step that can be taken to protect our public health care system.

Another step, interestingly, would be the lobbying of the Provincial Health Authorities of Alberta Act. Now, that is interesting. That's an interesting concept. Eight regional health authorities of the 17, Mr. Speaker, think that there should be changes to the labour relations legislation. They know that this system is not working, and they're getting blamed for this while the government claims they're an innocent party or they're bystanders. We all know that that is not true.

Now, we look at other steps that could be taken, and, Mr. Speaker, we have to look at stabilizing the workforce. After all the cuts that have been made and all the accusations that have been made, when we're looking at steps that can be taken to protect the public health care system, the first thing we have to do is recognize the contributions that the people who are getting dust on their shoes this afternoon make to the public health care system in this province. That is not being done. We need to recognize that last year, in 1999, the average collective bargaining agreement negotiated in this province was a 4 percent increase in wages. Now, perhaps we need to look at this. It's fine for other individuals including ourselves to receive wage increases. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity is smiling over there, and I'm sure he's contemplating ways that he's going to spend his increase.

Mr. Speaker, we have to stabilize the workforce, and that is one of the most important steps that this government can take. They can provide adequate compensation to all the groups that are out on strike. Now, none other than the Calgary Herald, which has its own labour troubles, is talking of early intervention in agreements concerning the number of issues subject to binding arbitration. Well, this is one of their comments going back to '97, and I think I should make this available reading to all hon. members across the House, because this could be another step. This could be a small step taken. There are a series of steps we can take. There are baby steps, there are tiny steps, there are small steps, and then there are strides. Binding arbitration would be a small step.

Now, I'm very disappointed that my time is out, Mr. Speaker, because I had a lot to say on this issue. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, normally when we stand in our places and start a speech here, we say that we're very pleased to speak to an issue or whatever. On this issue in particular I would have to say that that certainly isn't the case. The seriousness of this issue itself: when we're talking about essential workers who have walked out of the job, the only word that comes to my mind is reckless.

We're talking about an awful lot of issues here that deal with a great many different aspects of health care. Specifically today, though, we're here to debate an illegal strike and the steps that must be taken to prevent harm to the public health care system. Unfortunately, this illegal strike not only harms the patients; it harms the employees specifically. And it harms the system for a whole variety of reasons that we've heard about for the last two hours in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker.

It is not this Assembly's job or responsibility to negotiate contracts, to point fingers, as we've seen here today. There is a time and a place for negotiation, and this is simply not it. If we began to do that in this Assembly, we would in fact have to do it for every profession in Alberta, and the minister of human resources would probably stick up for me if I said that there were probably a thousand different professions in this province that are negotiating throughout any given year. The provincial government is certainly part and parcel of that process, and as I say, it's just not possible for us to do the negotiations in this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, on the issue itself and talking about preventing harm to the system, this government has brought in a very comprehensive six-point plan over the last year to in fact help the system: to get rid of waiting lists, to do a variety of things. In fact, our budget from 1998-99, at $4.83 billion, to this year, '00 to '01, is $5.65 billion. It's about an $849 million increase. Over the next couple of years to the year '02-03, in fact our budget is forecast to be 6 and a quarter billion dollars. At a certain point in time it just can't keep running out of control. It is not a bottomless pit when we're talking about taxpayers' money.

Very, very recently – I think it was just earlier this week, actually within about the last 10 days – this government announced a plan to in fact help the health care system in a variety of ways that we're doing in consultation with and with the participation of the federal government. It was just announced that 178 million more dollars that was not in the budget and the numbers I just mentioned would be spent on a variety of things to in fact help the public system. We're talking about joint replacements, heart surgeries, radiation therapies for cancer, increasing the capacity, if you like, for dialysis patients, which is very important and frankly is personally very close to my heart. We're talking about another $54 million of that $178 million that will be used to replace aging medical equipment and purchase new technology.

We're talking about – and I believe the announcements have been made over about the past three months – eight new MRIs, I believe the number is: four for the two major centres of Edmonton and Calgary at a cost, I might add, of 2 and a half million dollars a machine, as well as another four that have been announced for some of the smaller centres like Red Deer, like Grande Prairie. We're bringing them in as fast as we can. They are a very expensive piece of equipment, and quite simply put, it will help the system somewhat.

We're increasing the access to the MRIs and a variety of other diagnostic tools within the system. In point of fact, within the budget announcements that were made at the start of this session, we talked about hiring 2,500 more health care workers. As I understand it, some 1,300 of those health care workers have in fact been hired. These are nurses, doctors, LPNs, a variety of professions that work within our health care system.

Our budgets simply keep going up day by day but with a purpose, and that purpose is of course to increase the capacity of the system. I might add that increasing the capacity will decrease the workload on those people that are currently doing the various jobs within the hospital. I mean, the system is a very complex system, Mr. Speaker, and there are no simple solutions. There are no simple answers to our difficulties in the health care system.

I feel sorry for the workers, Mr. Speaker. A very good friend of mine is currently in the Foothills hospital in Calgary. Not only is he in the Foothills hospital for very serious surgery, which he just had a few days ago – I most recently talked to him after 1 o'clock this afternoon – but interestingly this gentleman is a 30-year LPN within the same hospital where he's had his surgery in the last little while. You know, I've known this gentleman for a very long time; as I said, he's a very close friend. They don't in fact as LPNs, or auxiliary nurses if you want to use that term, make an awful lot of money, but again the negotiation should not happen within the public forum. It should happen in a legal fashion.

I spent about 20 years of my life as an air traffic controller and frankly was deemed an essential employee for most of that period of time. There were periods of time within the system when we didn't like the negotiations as they were proceeding, when we wanted more money, and I think this argument is simply about money.

As I say, we've done an awful lot of things to improve the system, and most of them are very, very recent, and talking to my friend who happens to be in the hospital and will be there for at least another few days as far as I know, it strikes me that as an LPN – I asked him the question: would you walk out on an illegal strike? He had a great deal of difficulty answering that question, Mr. Speaker, for the very simple reason that he hasn't got a lot of money, and he's never had a lot of money. But when you look at the system itself and what we're doing to promote good health care in this province – and as I say, part of the overall plan is the six-point plan, including Bill 11 – I think that we're making progress and we're headed in the right direction.

For a worker to walk out on an illegal strike and to ignore the law of the land, whether they like it or not – I mean, nobody likes to get a speeding ticket. Nobody likes to do anything that is in fact going to break the law, and I'm sure that these workers don't either. What this whole thing has done, through the advice of the executive on the various unions, is take the workers right out of the system, and it has impacted patients, as I said before, to a very great extent. I heard a story this morning about a particular patient who, if they had their surgery today as opposed to six months from now, would not in fact need a colostomy bag. Now, I'm not a doctor, and I don't understand exactly what that means, but as a patient I would be very, very concerned.

Patients within our hospital system, Mr. Speaker, have got to feel a little bit of angst when they're going into a hospital. All the uncertainty that this illegal strike – and I keep mentioning "illegal" – has caused has created a great deal of angst for those people. The question, then, when you're trying to make the system follow along in various steps, if you like, to prevent the public health care system from falling apart becomes – frankly we need these workers. We can't simply just turn our heads, and the workers can't, no more than I could as an air traffic controller, walk out on the system that pays their salaries and that depends on them to provide good support and good health care to a patient.

Within the steps that we have taken over the last period of time – as I say, we've gone up from $4.83 billion to $6.25 billion over a very short period of time. It's time these people simply got back to work and provided a good health care system.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 24, 2000 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 00/05/24
 [Mr. Renner in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Please be seated.
 The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: I'm hoping, Mr. Speaker, that I could ask for unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

MRS. GORDON: Thank you. I would like to introduce to you and through you some distinguished guests that are with us tonight that are related to a person who spends a great deal of time in this Assembly, and that is our senior Parliamentary Counsel, Rob Reynolds. I would like to introduce his wife, Ritu Khullar, his son, Samir Reynolds, and his sister who's visiting from Burnaby, B.C., Valerie Wehrle. Samir is two years old and very pleased to see his dad tonight. They are seated in the public gallery so they can see daddy better. Please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Government Bills and Orders
 head: Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 25

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

MR. DICKSON: I think it would be a bad precedent if we had a bill go through that nobody said anything to, so I just wanted to acknowledge once again the terrific co-operation we received from the various departments that put forward legislative amendments and indicate my wholehearted support for miscellaneous statutes. It's always a treat to be part of a bill where you think everybody is going to vote with you, Madam Chairman. I just wanted to sort of be on the record that I was voting that way too.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. I just wanted to comment on the one section in which the Motion Picture Development Act is repealed. I had been in touch with some very active members of the film industry in Alberta to double-check as to whether they had strong feelings about this, and the response was no. The people I spoke to weren't that interested in returning to this, so they didn't object to the AMPDC being disbanded. They were quite happy with being housed under the Alberta Foundation for the Arts with the grants program there and just wanted to underline with me the importance of that program to them and that they didn't want to be moved around anywhere else at this point. It is working fine for them.

That's really the part of the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment

Act, 2000, appearing before us as Bill 25, that was of most interest to my portfolio and to the sector groups that I represent. So I just wanted to go on record with that, and having made those few remarks, I will resume my seat.

Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 25 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.
 The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 25.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 25.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
 head: Third Reading

Bill 19

Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the Provincial Treasurer and all those seeking lower taxes in the province of Alberta, I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 19.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise at third reading to debate Bill 19, the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000, a bill which in effect proposes to eliminate the 8 percent surtax effective at the end of the 1999 taxation year. I find myself at this stage of the debate perhaps to a degree repeating comments previously made but questions which with all due respect haven't been answered.

One of my questions really relates to how a government can implement the elimination of any kind of statutory obligation before they've changed the legislation. I think that in principle this bill really sets a precedent to that effect. The surtax was a legislated, statutory obligation that this government made and committed itself to in 1987. I found myself as I was preparing for the debate wanting to look back at what rationale was presented at that point in time for the surtax, and I got quite a surprise when I looked at Hansard for March 20, 1987, because what I read – and I'd like to read a bit of it into the record from that debate – is very, very repetitious of what I've been hearing in the House over the course of the last month or so as we've debated bills 18 and 19.

We've come over a decade; 1987 is the year in which this surtax was originally introduced. It's now over a decade later, and the government is still professing to need to undertake these types of tax reforms for the very same reasons the government used a decade ago. So reading from Hansard on March 20, 1987 – and at that time the hon. Treasurer was Mr. Dick Johnston, and he said the following in the context of the budget that year:

This year's budget will require adjustments not only to expenditures but also to revenue. Our objective is to provide a balance between expenditure reduction and taxation increases. Over the last several years Albertans have enjoyed by far the lowest overall tax rate of any province.

This province was boasting of that over a decade ago.

Further, he went on to say:

We are now in a situation where our current revenue sources and tax rates are not generating enough revenue to fund even our reduced expenditure base. In this budget, Mr. Speaker, I'm asking Albertans to pay more through taxes so that we can maintain the quality of our programs . . . First, Alberta's tax load should remain the lowest of any province; second, the burden of tax increases should be shared between businesses and individuals; and third, low-income groups should be protected.

Really no different than the arguments being made today for the proposed flat tax and the elimination of the surtax contained within bills 18 and 19.

Mr. Johnston went on to say:

For more than a decade Alberta has had the lowest personal income tax rate of all the provinces. Given this available tax room, we will increase the rate by three points to 46.5 percent of basic federal tax effective the 1987 taxation year. This will remain the lowest basic tax rate of any province. As well, we are introducing a temporary high-income surtax of 8 percent to ensure that Albertans with the ability to pay will make a relatively greater contribution.

Now, there's a bit of a contradiction, I think, in principles. We still have the same party in power, but the philosophy of the Conservative Party at that point in time was that the higher income earners have an inherent ability to make a greater contribution. The premise that exists today with the proposed elimination of this tax and the combined proposal by government to implement a flat tax is that in fact the higher income earners should get a bigger break; that's really what it comes down to. The higher income earners are going to get a double whammy, a very nice fat Christmas present from this government, Madam Speaker, Christmas in July perhaps, with the combined effects of the elimination of the surtax and the implementation of the flat tax.

Now, I just want to conclude from Mr. Johnston's debate by citing the following, which was the conclusion of his remarks for the budget that year:

Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I have outlined for this Legislative Assembly and for Alberta a fiscal plan which will set us on a new course towards the opportunities ahead. Alberta faces many new challenges, and we must all rise to the occasion. We must discard many of the solutions from the past and think anew and act anew.

We must be determined in our resolve to eliminate the deficit in an orderly way over the next four years.

I'd just make the following observation. This government has taken and marketed it that the elimination of the deficit was their idea, and in fact under the leadership of Don Getty the previous government was talking about that in 1987.

To quote again from Mr. Johnston's remarks:

Fiscal responsibility means making tough choices, and this government is prepared to act . . . Our overall expenditure plan for '87-88 will provide Albertans with the most comprehensive services available in Canada at levels of funding still among the highest of any province.

Now, in contrast, Madam Speaker, we have not seen in this debate any discussion or willingness by this government to talk about the impacts on revenue through the proposed elimination of the surtax or the piggybacking of the flat tax bill, and that troubles me a great deal. Yes, Alberta is in a very healthy economic and fiscal position at this point in time, but we really have no way of predicting what lies ahead for the province. Economically, in terms of our public programs, our population, and the needs of that population, even what sorts of disasters, whether they be stock market or environmentally based, natural in origin, we have no way of predicting revenue. Yes, it's perhaps very, very easy as legislators to say in times of plenty that we should forge ahead with what are viewed by some as risky proposals to reconstruct, to modify, to fundamentally change the system of tax collection, to eliminate a surtax which, granted, has had a life span of over a decade. In anyone's mind, in a logical mind, is it really a good time to be thinking of making these reforms when we're rolling in the dough, Madam Speaker? Would we be as confident if we were in a position of oil and gas prices perhaps not being as strong, the economy not being quite as brisk, and Alberta exports not being strong? Would we be as confident that these types of reforms are in the best interests of the province? Would we not see a government bringing forward more analysis and more concrete demonstration that these changes will not negatively impact the revenue side of government's finances and their accompanying responsibility to provide comprehensive, accessible programs for all Albertans regardless of what their income status may be?

The cynical and paranoid might say: well, maybe the government is actually planning that there's going to be a day when they're not going to be able to provide. In fact, maybe they even want to construct a day when they will be in a fiscal position where they cannot provide as much funding for public programs, because that fits very well with their ideology that the private sector, that the market has a role to play in absolutely every facet of the society and provincial business.

We've seen almost all of our core public programs subjected to some degree of contracting out, to privatization. Social services was first on the list with huge cuts in the early '90s, followed by health care, followed by the education sector. If you look at these things on a macro scale and you accompany those changes, Bill 11 amongst them, to allow the private sector now a formal, legal foothold in the delivery of health care, bills 18 and 19 really make a lot of sense. Now what the government is able to say, perhaps not today but at some point in the future, is that they will not have the same degree of taxation flexibility. If it impacts the revenues to the degree that they do not have the same amount of money to provide provincial programs, it'll be a case, Madam Speaker, of saying: well, that's why the private sector is there; that's why the reforms were made in the '90s to allow the private sector to deliver that responsibility.

To a degree we see the same theme in the increasing responsibilities placed on communities, placed on municipalities, and placed on citizens, Madam Speaker. I have spoken in this Assembly before about the level of fund-raising expected now in our education system. I have dutifully worked the casinos, worked the bingos, all of these things, to subsidize provincial funding. That in my mind is only going to become worse as this government proceeds with their reforms of the tax system and perhaps a sad day when the province is not in quite so healthy an economic position.

The reality is that I've been out at the doors in Edmonton-Riverview. I can tell this government directly that from the conversations I have had with my constituents, tax relief and tax cuts are not a priority, clearly not a priority. I can tell you what's a priority. People are very concerned about the state of our public health care system. They are equally concerned about the state of our public education system, and they don't particularly have a high degree of trust in what this government's agenda is relative to tax reform. They see too much politicking, too much posturing, too readily willing to condemn the federal government.

I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that the constituents in Edmonton-Riverview have a high degree of respect for the federal government, the institution that it is, and the function it serves in binding us as a democratic country that is very well respected around the world for the multiple roles we play. So this government need be mindful that when they pounce on the federal government or condemn the federal government in a multitude of ways, the public hears those condemnations, and many of them don't appreciate it. They see that there's a lot more at stake. There's a lot more at stake.

Now, the other thing that I've had some fun contemplating is how this is going to be implemented. It's really difficult to not discuss bills 18 and 19 together, because they're going to be occurring simultaneously. I as a middle-income earner, Madam Speaker, wonder how it is that those of us that find ourselves in the middle-income bracket don't get the same degree of a break that the high-income earners will. The elimination of the surtax, from my particular vantage point or income standpoint, isn't going to mean a thing, because I'm not really in a bracket that it would apply to.

Further to that, I'd like to come right back to what I said in the beginning, and that is that I would like to be assured that the government has a plan, some type of stabilization plan, so that when the annual budget surplus is not in the neighbourhood of $800 million or whatever it currently is sitting at, they have a way for making up the shortfall. Now, in fact, the Official Opposition has long advocated for – and this was way before my time in this Assembly – a stabilization fund that should be introduced and implemented in a healthy fiscal time such as we are in now. That stabilization fund would act as a buffer, Madam Speaker, so that in years when oil prices are not quite as healthy and the government isn't rolling in a multimillion-dollar surplus, the stabilization fund would be there as a safety net, if you will. So we have a plan. To those members who scoff and say, "Well, you don't have a vision," we've been advocating that for some time.

The other question that we need to ask is: why is it that the government chose to eliminate the surtax instead of eliminating Alberta health care premiums? If they truly wanted to provide to Albertans a reform that would benefit across the board, why would we not have considered eliminating the health care premiums? I think it's a logical question, and I'd invite the government members to stand up and give me an answer to that question. To me that's far more fair, far more equitable, and in essence has the ability to touch people of all walks of life and of all professions. But that is not before us in the form of legislation this evening. Regrettably, that's not the case. We find ourselves in a difficult position.

One of the other questions that I have asked myself with the elimination of the surtax is: what options really exist for the government when revenues fall? Well, given the Deficit Elimination Act and the Fiscal Responsibility Act and now the elimination of the surtax, really the only option the government has is to cut programs. Am I wrong? [interjection] Well, I would invite the hon. member across the way to tell me what the other options are. I don't see any. Perhaps they might be contemplating at some future stage the introduction of a sales tax as something the Conservatives want to support. I mean, really, where are they taking us with this proposed elimination?

We've seen a lot of reforms instituted over the course of the last few years, Madam Speaker. It seems to me that the alternatives for future governments in this province are getting less and less, and that's a concern. I have tremendous faith, given all the interjections this evening, that there are government members on the other side that are really chomping at the bit, if you will, to get up and answer some of these questions and to provide a comprehensive analysis of the impact this will have on revenue and how they propose to compensate for that. I will look forward very much to seeing those things.

Just as I conclude, Madam Speaker, I must mention again the fact that the Auditor General has said in his report this year that almost every ministry has underaccounted the cost of doing business in their ministry; in essence, the fudging of numbers. [interjection] I can refer the hon. Minister of Justice exactly to the pages in the Auditor General's report where he makes those – in fact, I referred to them in earlier stages of the debates on bills 18 and 19. If this government is in fact fudging the financial cost of doing business, how am I as an elected representative in a position to truly be able to know what revenue is required in order to provide comprehensive programs? That is my dilemma.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just a few words on Bill 19. I've spoken on Bill 19 before and just wanted to get on the record again by indicating that while a number of members of the opposition seem to be concerned about the plan, there has been a very clearly enunciated plan over time. That plan involves leaving some Albertans' money in their own pockets, a very essential part of the plan. As the economy of this great province improves and grows and as we find that the economic situation of this province is the best in the country and as people have some certainty about their job situation and look forward with confidence to the future, one of the elements of the government's plan is to make sure that they get to keep some of the rewards, some of the profits of their own labours. So the reduction of taxes is an important part of an overall plan.

Yes, we have to fund those essential public services of health care and education, and we have to fund them at appropriate levels, and we're doing that. Yes, we have to build infrastructure, because as the economy of this province grows, more and more people come to this province, and the population growth, the business growth require more infrastructure. So we have to build schools, and we have to build hospitals, and we have to build roads, and there's a plan for that.

But part of the plan is to leave some of Albertans' money in their own pockets, and they deserve it. After all the years of fighting that deficit, they deserve to have a break. Removing the surtax is a good first step this year and, companioned with Bill 18, changing the process next year so that every Albertan will have the benefit of a strong tax break and will be able to participate in the rewards offered by a strong economy with strong jobs. So that's very, very important.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview strayed off onto the Auditor General's report and started talking about fudging numbers.

Of course, she's absolutely erroneous in that. There's been no question of fudging numbers. There's obvious disagreement in terms of how you account, but what she's talking about is that Infrastructure accounts for the accommodation provided for most departments of government, rather than it being accounted for in the books of the government. It is being accounted for. It's being accounted for to the public. It's being accounted for in Infrastructure and not necessarily in the departments. That's the ongoing discussion that is being had with the Auditor General in that respect. [interjections] Edmonton-Riverview seems to not realize that her time is up, Madam Speaker, and her time is indeed up. Rather than belabour some of these points, because she's clearly not listening, I would move that pursuant to Standing Order 47 the question now be put.

8:30

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, listening to the Government House Leader make his observations, I'm starting to feel a little nostalgic. We're now at the tail end of the spring session of 2000.

AN HON. MEMBER: No. No, we're not.

MR. DICKSON: Well, there may be some that are planning on staying longer, but the writing is on the wall and we start to wind down. Somehow as we wander off to our summer retreats and our backyards and pick up those things like barbecuing and lawn mowing, some of us may miss the advice we get from across the hall. You know, it's just not the same thing, having somebody in your family offering advice, as it is to hear commentary from the members opposite. I'm already starting to grieve that a little bit. So let me dry my eyes and soldier on to make the following observations.

As we start to see the end of an old friend – and that's really what Bill 19 has been – a couple of observations. There's been a lot of talk about, you know, too much talk on this bill. Of course we heard just a moment ago the Government House Leader, even before we've heard very much commentary at third reading – I've got lots of colleagues that have come tonight prepared to speak to third reading and looking forward to it. Some of them may want to move considered amendments. That opportunity is being foreclosed now by the action of the minister of justice.

How much time have we spent on this bill? By my calculation the Liberal opposition for about four hours of debate has raised questions about the sequencing of the elimination of the 8 percent high-income surtax, why that would happen before the .5 percent flat tax would come off, I think pretty good questions.

I've heard no opposition members quibble about the housecleaning elements of Bill 19. I think there's darn near unanimity in terms of the need to change the reference to the renter's assistance tax credit, and certainly the repeal of the reference to the liability of corporations for Alberta income tax is appropriate, and removing reference to corporations in the calculation of foreign tax credit: those are things that to the best of my hearing the opposition has supported. Our focus has been on the inappropriateness of giving a break to high-income earners before you give it to low-income earners when the Premier and the former Provincial Treasurer told us the low-income earners were going to be first. When my MLA for Calgary-North West the other day made his presentation, he talked at page 1,744 of Hansard – this has been a long session, Madam Speaker. Imagine; almost 1,750 pages of pearls of wisdom that have been presented in the Assembly night after night.

AN HON. MEMBER: Not exactly.

MR. DICKSON: Well, I guess it's in the eye of the beholder, member.

My MLA for Calgary-North West was talking about honouring "the obligation and promise that was made in previous years that this surtax would be eliminated." Well, I'm all for honouring promises, but I'm also concerned about the promise made by the Premier in July of 1999, the promise made by the Provincial Treasurer in 1999. Those promises have not been honoured. If they had, we wouldn't be dealing with the elimination of the high-income surtax first.

In any event, in terms of debate we've had four hours of debate on this bill by the Liberal opposition, plus or minus, and some of the government members to their credit – I mentioned Calgary-North West – have gotten up and shared some elements of debate. We've had about three-quarters of an hour from government members. I guess I'd just say: is there anybody that thinks that's excessive? We could poll people this evening – well, Madam Speaker, you wouldn't want us to do that, but maybe we could do it sort of figuratively if not literally – whether people really think that four and three-quarter hours is too much debate. So I want to raise that concern.

Now, the other thing is that I've had some good advice in preparing for debate on this bill. I posted a question on my web site on May 18, www.garydickson.ab.ca, and I asked my constituents whether they support (a) "a progressive tax system with high income earners paying at a higher rate" or (b) "a flat tax system with all taxpayers paying at the same rate regardless of income." Do you know what's interesting? The result: 63 percent supported a progressive tax system and 38 percent supported the flat tax system propounded by the government. Do you know what's interesting? That was 324 visits to the web site between May 18 and May 23.

Now, I suspect they weren't all Calgary-Buffalo residents. I suspect some of them may be in Calgary-Lougheed or perhaps Calgary-Foothills or Calgary-Nose Creek. Some of those people may live there. You don't know exactly where people are from when they visit your web site. It's interesting that 63 percent of those 324 presumably Albertans registered that they support a progressive tax system. So that was, I thought, powerful instruction at least to me to find some way of reflecting that in debate.

Here we are at third reading on a bill which is part of a package. I make the observation Edmonton-Riverview just did a few minutes ago, that the government had alternatives in terms of if you want to do good fiscal planning, why wouldn't you go with the Liberal idea of establishing a stabilization fund so that in years when oil and gas revenues are high, there would be an accrual of dollars? Then when times are leaner, there would be a means of flattening out and mitigating some of the volatility on our income side. I'm not sure that I've ever heard a good reason why the government has never accepted that Liberal suggestion.

We've made a suggestion in terms of eliminating health care insurance premiums. You want to give a $700 million break to Albertans? You know, that's a very effective way of doing it in a way that's going to help people in low-income and middle-income situations. But the government hasn't done that. They've decided to do this. So I do have that concern in terms of the sequencing.

You know, I regret that the Government House Leader has taken steps to close off debate yet again. Every time, it seems to me, the Government House Leader protests that he doesn't like doing it, yet he has developed a wicked habit of simply cutting off debate. You know, I don't think the Government House Leader wants that to be his legacy in this place when he's done a lot of other positive things. [interjection] Miscellaneous statutes: how would we have that without the work of the minister?

In any event, I think I've made the other points on numerous occasions, and I suppose I'll be listening carefully to probably protracted debate.

The one other comment I might make for constituents who may wonder why I would consider supporting Bill 19 even with my objections and concerns and my position in terms of Bill 18 is that I'm very concerned with the issue of sufficiency of dollars for our core programs. It seems to me that all this business in terms of tax cuts has to be very clearly predicated on having surplus dollars.

The other point – and I make this as a question to anybody in government that can provide me with an answer. The other day the former Provincial Treasurer, and I guess we can call him that, said in front of a national audience several times that he thinks people attending private schools are in some fashion – this is a kind of double taxation, and he thinks tax dollars should go to pay for all private schooling. You know, you have to ask: if Bill 19 and Bill 18 go through, where the heck is the money coming from?

If that's a view that's shared by government members – and I can't fairly present it as such, but here is a man who had the trust of the Premier. He was made Treasurer, and he presumably has the continuing trust of all those members who have rushed out to buy Alliance memberships and are zipping down to Ottawa to attend conventions and supporting the cause there. It's a pretty scary prospect that we would see full funding of religious schools. It's just a breathtaking kind of statement. Presumably he thought about it before he said it, so I have to speculate that if he's unsuccessful in the federal arena and he comes back to this place . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming on a point of order.

Point of Order Questioning a Member

MR. SMITH: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. Under Beauchesne 333. The member is sounding so completely aghast at the concept of funding private schools fully, and I'd like to ask him if he is in fact opposed to the funding of private schools.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: He'd like to ask the hon. member a question. Will you entertain a question?

Debate Continued

MR. DICKSON: I would never refuse a question in debate. I am absolutely opposed to full taxpayer funding of private schools. I've always been opposed, long before I became an MLA, and as long as I'm a taxpayer, I'm opposed. The reasons are many. Public schools are something that all of us in the community have a stake in, and that's the absolute best forum where we teach young people how to get along. That's in fact the currency of a civil society, of a democratic society. The kind of balkanization, fragmentation that would result from full funding of private schools would take us a huge way backwards.

Surely the Minister of Gaming knows that we're currently the only province in Canada that provides the high level of support that we do. So I oppose the report of your caucus committee, chaired by the Member for Calgary-Glenmore, and will continue to oppose it. What's more, I'll put that up on my web site when the House ends. That's a good question. I'm going to invite the people in Calgary-Varsity to tune in and tell me what they think, because the people I talk to there are as opposed to full government funding for private schools as I am.

So those are the comments I wanted to make. I'm looking forward to what I expect will be a long evening of vigorous debate, and we'll see what other commentary is offered.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, the chair was just going to interject a few minutes ago and ask if we could come back to what's before the Assembly, and that's Bill 19, which is the Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act.

Hon. Minister of Gaming, do you wish to conclude debate on behalf of the hon. Acting Treasurer?

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I can only say that it's actually another flagship day in Alberta. There have been so many of these since June 15, 1993, and I think this ability to be able to deliver to taxpayers a substantial savings in the tax roles which then increases disposable income – certainly from the perspective of my portfolio when I look at the Calgary Flames and the Edmonton Oilers, professional franchises that are struggling, with $1.3 billion more in the disposal income, Madam Speaker, through the passage of Bill 19 and Bill 18, then perhaps Albertans can make choices through the individual use of those dollars that they will have at their disposal, and that in turn can help stimulate the economy to even greater levels of economic development, job creation, and a real sign of government that delivers maximum value for the dollars received.

So with those very few and short and concise closing remarks, it's been a privilege to be able to stand on bills that save taxpayers money.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a third time]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We will now resume debate on the amendment in committee.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I sort of want to take off from where I left the other day. I was trying to make the point at that particular time what welcome news it is, in terms of having a tax cut. All Albertans welcome a tax cut. Well, most Albertans. [interjection] No. You're right. I'm correcting myself. There are some.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview raises a valid point, because in my constituency I would find some people, too, that would say, "Well, we're prepared to bypass, to forgo a tax cut provided we're assured that those dollars will go to beef up the health care system, beef up the educational system, and beef up social service programs and such." But assuming that I'm now speaking on behalf of my constituents that do welcome a tax cut, they welcome a tax cut, but they welcome a tax cut from the point of view of having a tax cut that is fair, that is based on fairness.

I was trying to point out the other day that we have a situation where now, with the passage of Bill 19, we sort of have a double whammy in terms of the greatest benefit being to those people that make the greatest amounts of money. I want to give some examples. I had just started to give some examples the other night when my time ran out.

Let's say the lower income. We all concede right off the bat that there is a benefit to them. It's a welcome benefit to them, and I truly, truly welcome that benefit because they're the ones that really deserve it. But let's go up from there.

Let's start at a level of $35,000. With a taxable income of $35,000 we would see a reduction in the provincial tax under the 10.5 percent Klein flat tax, and in the year 2004 we would see a savings of $248.78, which percentage-wise amounts to 10 percent.

Now, if we look at $60,000, we see a savings of $755.34, which is the same as a 13.4 percent reduction, so it becomes consistent already that you notice those figures going up.

When we go to $80,000, there's a savings of $1,511.50, or a reduction of 17.8 percent. In other words, the reduction certainly is greater, but at the same time the corresponding percentage in terms of the reduction becomes very, very noticeable.

Let's look at $100,000. At $100,000 the savings is $2,267.52, or a reduction of 20 percent in provincial tax.

We go to $150,000 and it becomes $4,158.06, or 22.5 percent.

We then go to $200,000. Note this figure. The reduction becomes $12,450.47, or a reduction percentage-wise of 38.9 percent.

The highest example I'm going to give you is a quarter million dollars, and we do have a substantial number of people in this province that have a taxable income of a quarter million dollars. Now, these figures are going to show in the provincial tax in the year

2004 under the 10.5 percent scheme – and this isn't counting the little additional benefits under Bill 19 a person would receive – a savings of $19,093.57, or 43.5 percentage-wise in terms of a reduction.

So I've taken it from a taxable income of $35,000 with a reduction of 10 percent to a quarter million dollars with a reduction of 43.5 percent. That clearly illustrates where the government priority is in terms of tax reduction and which income levels of people they are attempting to cater to. And that's been the point, Madam Chairman, that this caucus has attempted to make all along, right from the very start. We understand the pressures the government faces in terms of a tax reduction. We've tried to argue that the tax reduction is one thing, but the fairness of the tax reduction becomes another thing.

The government likes to throw that spin out there that everybody gets a cut; everybody gets a tax cut. Certainly everybody gets a tax cut, but would you prefer a tax cut of 10 percent as opposed to 43.5 percent? Wouldn't we all love to see a tax reduction of 43.5 percent in our provincial income tax by the year 2004? I'm certain we would, and I have to stress again that that is the argument we've been making and that's the reason we've been consistently opposing Bill 18 and why we under no circumstances can find Bill 18 acceptable in its present form. Now, there are amendments that are forthcoming, when our Member for Edmonton-Glenora gets here, that will make Bill 18 a passable bill, an acceptable bill, a bill that most Albertans, those Albertans that do want to see a bit of a tax cut, would then rejoice about.

Okay. I've presented the arguments on the question of the inequality or the unfairness – let's put it that way – of the spread in the benefits of the tax cut. I want to now take us to some of the other provinces, and let's look at what's happening in some of the other provinces in terms of the basic principle of taxation done on a progressive basis. It's a basic principle: taxation on a progressive basis. Look at B.C. You have a zero to $30,000 income; you have a tax rate of 8.4 percent on the income. Over $85,000, when you go to that extreme, you're at 19.7 percent. So you see that it's roughly 240 percent higher percentage-wise in that particular category than for somebody making $30,000 a year.

Now, the member on the other side here, the hon. minister, is giving me those little comments that B.C. is not the appropriate government to go to because of course it is a New Democrat government, and I can understand that from her point of view she may feel that's a very, very unfair comparison.

So let me go to Ontario. Ontario is the opposite, of course, of a provincial government governed by a New Democratic Party. They're a party governed by the Conservatives, very much like the government here in the province of Alberta. But even in the province of Ontario in their wisdom, compared to the province of Alberta, their tax structure for up to $30,000 a year is 6.2 percent. That's 6.2 percent. From $30,000 to $60,000 it's 9.24 percent, and at $60,000 and over it's 11.16 percent. So there again we're seeing close to a 200 percent difference in terms of the percentage; in other words, a doubling. Because you're making $60,000 as opposed to $30,000, your percentage rate of taxation is doubled. That is a progressive tax, and that's a government that prides themselves on being Progressive Conservatives, like the government of Alberta, yet the government of Alberta chooses not to go for a progressive type of taxation.

We can look at New Brunswick. Again a similar scenario. In New Brunswick, if I recall correctly, we have a young fellow there governing that province by the name of Lord, a very young fellow, a Conservative. There we see a progressive rate going from $30,000 at 10.2 percent to over $59,180 at 17.4 percent. Again, pretty close to double that percentage rate.

I can look at Saskatchewan: the same thing. I can look at Manitoba: the same thing. The one that sticks out like a sore thumb is Alberta, which will then read: all income classes at 10.5 percent. So you see that the provincial government here is going totally against the grain from what all other provinces have done. Why have they chosen to provide such a substantial benefit to fewer than 25 percent of the population at the expense of 75 percent? I don't understand that.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview made some good points here about door-knocking and how not everybody favours a tax cut. The government, of course, likes to talk about their great tax cut and what they've achieved, but let's also look at some figures here. On growth in taxes under the premiership of the current Premier and – well, you can't say the Acting Provincial Treasurer because he's only been acting for a period of time. But let's just say that under this particular government we see here – now, this is between '92-93 and the current year; in other words, in that period of time that the current Premier has been leading the Conservative Party.

Here we're going to see tax increases. Increases from user fees and charges amount to $26 million. The increase in the health care premiums amounts to $248 million. The personal income tax, the bracket creep in that cumulative period of time amounts to $2.044 billion. The education property tax increase is $42 million. The Alberta .5 percent flat rate tax creep is $95 million, and the 8 percent surtax creep, which of course is being eliminated, is $79 million. So in that period of time of eight years we have seen total increases of $2.534 billion in revenue through taxation, whether you call it a user fee or direct taxation or an education tax or a health care premium or whatever. That's a little over 2 and a quarter billion dollars.

Now we look at tax cuts. The reduction in the personal income tax rate, when one does their income tax return, from 45.5 percent to 44 percent has netted a reduction or a cut of $123 million. The Alberta family employment tax credit: a benefit of $78 million. The provincial property tax on residential and farm property: $87 million. The provincial property tax on business properties: $50 million. The machinery and equipment tax: $178 million. Aviation fuel tax: $29 million. Railway fuel tax: $13 million. The elimination of the 8 percent surtax will amount to $162 million, and then elimination of the .5 percent flat rate tax, when that takes place next year, will be $325 million. The move to the flat rate tax is another $300 million. That's a total cut of $1.345 billion, or a real tax increase of $1.189 billion over that period of time. So it's a fallacy to feel that Albertans have more dollars in their pockets, talking on a global or cumulative basis including the total population.

Looking at a study here that was done by Brad Severin, BDO Dunwoody, using the 10.5 percent flat tax as compared to the federal system – this is now talking in the immediate; this isn't the year 2004 – it points out that at $15,000 you have a savings of $430. The optimum disadvantage – let's put it that way – is at $30,424; your tax saving is $41.48. At $100,000 your tax saving is $1,292.45. Now, this is not done by the caucus research staff. This is done by a very, very credible chartered accounting firm, and it points out very clearly that the middle income, at that $30,000 level, gets the very, very least benefit. So the government is correct when the government says that everybody gets a tax cut. Certainly everybody gets a tax cut, but under this flat tax proposal it's clear from the documentation and from the studies that have been done that the benefit is going to favour those who have the higher incomes.

Now, we look at the proposals that have been tabled in the House here that we saw the Member for Edmonton-Glenora table the other day and which hopefully will be given the opportunity to be introduced as amendments. We're dealing now with the current amendments, of course: the reduction of the 11 percent to 10.5 percent and the increase in the personal exemption to $12,900. Under the proposal put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, we're going to see a progressive tax reduction program, and it's going to be delinked from the federal government. I believe most members, if not all members, in the House do believe in delinking.

The current Acting Treasurer has taken objection to some of the figures and questioned the calculations of the Liberal opposition. We're not saying that this thing is carved in stone the way it is. We recognize being in opposition that we can't implement it. We can just hope that the government has the wisdom to take the good ideas that come from this side of the House and incorporate them in proper form in a piece of legislation, but this is just to sort of present a model.

The model, of course, is what we call a progressive tax reduction program, where we see taxpayers earning up to a certain level paying zero percent provincial income tax. That's consistent with what the provincial government is proposing because of the increase in the personal exemption and such. Up to a certain level, $13,600 roughly, there will be no provincial tax payable. I guess all members of the House here sort of nod their heads in agreement that that part of it is acceptable, even to those that earn a lot of money. They say: well, the people at the lower end of it do deserve a break. So that's a break that I think we can all applaud.

We then go to the next category that would take it up to just under $100,000 and see a percentage of 10 percent and then those earning over $100,000 paying 12 percent. Even at those particular rates of 10 and 12 percent there are still substantial savings and substantial reductions to those people that do make over $100,000 a year. What it does, because of the 2 percent additional amount in the percentage basis over those in the middle, is it allows some of those savings or reductions that otherwise would be shifted from the higher income to the middle class, and it would present, I think, a much, much more fair picture. Albertans would say, "This is great that the government is recognizing that those of us in the middle income have been hit over the years" and seem to be constantly hit.

For middle-income earners their income is high enough that they don't qualify for programs that may be out there. Seniors that may be middle income, because of their income, no longer get the universal benefits provincially that they once used to get. So clearly in recent years we have seen the direction taken where more and more of the burden is placed on the middle income, and we see the lower income, and rightfully so, see more and more programs coming their way, like the employment tax. That's fine, but there are still a lot of areas that should be beefed up as well for people in those income levels.

Again, then, we see that those that have the higher incomes have the advantage of being able to take advantage of tax shelters, are able to set up corporations, businesses where income can be split with spouses and such. In other words, they're in a position where they can afford to hire the expertise, the most knowledgeable as to how to minimize or reduce your tax that you'd otherwise find that one has to pay, that's payable against yourself. We've all heard the stories of people making $100,000, $200,000, or a quarter million dollars a year that haven't had to pay income tax because they've been able to utilize write-offs by hiring the necessary expertise. That's the higher income category of people, Madam Chairman, that Bill 18, along with Bill 19 of course, is going to favour. That's where I have the real, real difficulty with it.

I don't really question the motives of the former Treasurer, because I'm not really sure when he had sort of made up his mind that he was going to head off to greener pastures. But it's sort of ironic, I guess – maybe one could call it a coincidence in timing – that under his ministry as the Provincial Treasurer that the talk of the various types of tax reductions started to come forward, like the reduction in the gas tax, the $100 rebate, this and this and this, and then finally settling on what we call the flat tax.

It is so similar from what I can understand – and I can't say that I'm an expert on the policies of the former Reform Party, which is now called the Alliance Party, but it's a bit of a coincidence that we see the philosophy of that particular party, from what I can gather, being very, very similar to what the Provincial Treasurer was proposing in this House at that particular time and managed to convince his colleagues to go ahead with even though he'd no longer be here.

On that note I'll conclude then, Madam Chairman. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Madam Chairman. It is a pleasure for me to join the debate on the amendment to Bill 18 that is in front of us. This amendment is a very simple amendment. It proposes to reduce the flat tax rate from 11 percent to 10.5 percent and to also bring in the flat tax so that all Albertans can benefit from it.

Let me begin by saying that the flat tax system that we're bringing in already builds in protection for the poor and the people who have low incomes. We have already raised the personal exemption to the point where thousands of Albertans who are paying tax today will not have to pay provincial tax anymore, 190,000 people to be exact.

Not only that, Madam Chairman; I have heard so many arguments today coming from the opposition about the need to tax the wealthy, the rich people. This is the same argument that I have heard from many Communist countries before. The socialist point of view, you know, always assumes that somehow by destroying the rich, the wealthy, the most hardworking individuals in our society, we can achieve equality, and that's the wrong way to achieve equality.

You have two ways of achieving equality. One is to bring all the people up and try to give them the opportunity to become the best that they can be. The other way is to drag everybody down through the mud and make sure everybody suffers equally. I come from a society where it was a crime to work hard, where it was a crime to build something for your family and for yourself, and the people that are speaking on the opposition side do not know how lucky they are, because they never had to go through that. To see this kind of social engineering, to see this kind of idealism sneaking into this Legislature and becoming, you know, something that we are trying to achieve, I think, is incredible.

On the other hand, looking back on the situation like we have here in Canada, a lot of people have complained lately about a brain drain that's happening to Canada. Many of our brightest, most intelligent, most capable people are going down south, because the tax system down there is more competitive. That is the reality, and if we are losing these people, very soon we will lose the competitive edge of our technology, of our industry, and then there goes the high lifestyle that we enjoy today.

Somehow people think that the rich people or the hardworking people will just roll over and play dead when you impose taxes that unfairly penalize them for working hard. I'll tell you that those people will move, and very soon we will be left with industry that doesn't have the kind of competent people to run it, and that's why I don't know why we attack or try to bring some kind of aggressive tax on the people who are hardworking individuals, who are trying to build something for themselves and their families.

Let me set the facts straight. This proposal will cut the total amount of taxable money by over $1 billion. That money will be left in the pockets of Albertans, and that's the kind of money that people can do a lot of things with. They can build their house. They can save for their children's education. All of those nice things can happen tomorrow. It can happen starting January 1, but these people are standing between the people and that tax cut of over a billion dollars.

No matter how you spin it, I don't think their constituents are going to be very happy about it. Why? Because this is the first opportunity that this government is able to bring a real meaningful tax cut to the people, and what do the opposition say? The first thing they do is try to stop us from doing that. Sometimes I think the opposition ends up in a difficult position. They have to criticize everything the government does, but I cannot see how they can win when they fight the government's attempt to reduce the tax burden on Albertans. I really encourage all of you to take a hard look at the proposal that we have in front of us and vote for your constituents, vote for the kind of tax break that your constituents have been asking for for many years.

Also, some of the opposition members say that the motive of this government is to reward the rich friends that we have. How do you define rich? Is a family making $100,000 rich? Is that a rich family by your definition?

My daughter just turned one year old, and I intend to do everything I can to make sure that she obtains a university education. I will do everything I can to ensure that she has a bright future in front of her. Those people over there somehow think that is a crime, that when people work hard and when people improve themselves and are able to get a good education, they should be penalized. I don't think so. [interjection]

I see the Member for Edmonton-Riverview is trying to debate from her chair. You know, with this kind of philosophy I'm not surprised at all that when you ran for the leadership of the opposition, you could only bring out less than 600 people in the entire province to vote for you. You know, that was a shame. I brought out 985 to vote for me just in the nomination in my riding. Okay? You had the entire province to play with, and then you brought out less than 600 people. I'm not surprised at all, Madam Chairman.

The people of Alberta are very intelligent. They are capable of telling black from white, and no matter how you spin it, you are dragging your feet on meaningful tax reform. Not only can the average Albertan see the logic, but this is the kind of tax system that encourages people to strive for the best that they can, to achieve the dreams that they want to achieve.

For people to say, "Wow, the middle-income people are the people who are paying the price for this proposal" is totally wrong. This proposal that we have also gives the family with one income earner the choice. It equalizes the playing field. It allows the people to make the choice of whether they want to have a double income or a single income, and that's very meaningful. That is very significant, because we are living in a society where the government has been intruding enough in people's lives, and it's time we give the people that choice, the choice that they can make for themselves and their families.

Now, going to the middle-income family, I challenge anybody over there who can present a calculation that those sort of people are worse off under our proposal today compared to the way we used to do it. It is very, very simple. The Premier already made the commitment in this House that we are committed to making sure that Alberta's tax system remains the lowest in Canada. There's nothing that can be more simple and nothing that can be more straightforward than that, and that's a very, very honourable commitment, and this proposal is doing exactly that.

Now, we are given a choice. We can stay here and listen to the opposition and debate this thing until midnight and maybe come back tomorrow and come back next week and waste thousands and thousands of dollars of taxpayers' money. Or we can say: let's vote for a tax system that does not penalize hardworking people, a tax system that inspires Albertans to strive for their best, a tax system that will stop the brain drain to the U.S., a tax system that will bring back hope, a tax system that will give our children a fighting chance in an increasingly competitive global market. Then vote for this amendment. Vote for this bill, because that's the right thing to do.

People are asking: how do I know this? Well, you can look at Alberta. For the last seven years, despite the opposition trying to paint a negative picture of this province, we didn't attract many people moving from the U.S. to Canada, but within Canada you can see a net flow of people coming from all parts of Canada to Alberta. Every year we attract hundreds of thousands more people from all over the country to Alberta.

Why is it? You know, the first thing that comes to mind when you ask those people is that they think Alberta has the best environment in terms of taxation. We have the lowest taxes in the country, and young people can find jobs here in Alberta. Businesses want to move to Alberta because they can set up shop, and they don't have to pay the heavy tax that they have to pay in other jurisdictions. With jobs to attract young people, you will attract the educated people to come to Alberta to raise families, to have children, and just to enjoy our province.

Chairman's Ruling Relevance

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, the chair is just going to interrupt a minute. We're in committee stage, and we do have an amendment before the house. It is deemed A1. The first part amends from 11 percent to 10.5 percent. The next part of the amendment deals with the $11,620 to $12,900. Can we talk a little bit about this?

MR. PHAM: Madam Chairman, I'm right on top of it. I'm trying to explain to the opposition why these amendments are so important, why we have to reduce it from 11 percent to 10.5 percent. Somehow I keep hearing them oppose this amendment. This is so frustrating to me, because I cannot figure out why. Maybe after my speech tonight, they can change their minds. I am hoping. I'm counting on that.

I understand that it may be frustrating to you because you agree with me, but some of the opposition members do not. So give me some time, and maybe I can convince them to vote for this thing before midnight. You never know.

Debate Continued

MR. PHAM: Anyway, coming back to this amendment. You can see that it was very, very clear. It is an honest attempt. It is the reward that all Albertans have been waiting for for the past seven years. Since we were elected in 1993, we have asked Albertans to make a lot of sacrifices. We have done a lot to control our spending, and we got our financial house in order. Now is the time to allow Albertans to enjoy some of the benefits that we have all worked together to achieve.

So don't stand in the way of progress. Don't stand in the way of a massive tax cut for Albertans. Vote for this bill. Vote for the future of all our children.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Madam Chairman, thank you very much. It's a real pleasure to get up this evening again to speak to the issues of what constitutes fair taxation and what constitutes an appropriate level of taxation.

We're looking at an amendment to Bill 18 that's going to effectively try to redistribute the benefits of the tax breaks that are given from Bill 18 to fit in with the promises made by the Premier prior to the federal budget. So they're now going to change the exemption rate and the base level of taxation from 11 percent to 10.5 percent so they can continue to carry through with the commitment that under their structural change in taxation, they're going to be able to offer every Albertan a reduction in tax.

Madam Chairman, we keep hearing references to what constitutes fair, what constitutes the idea of a competitive tax structure. We heard the previous speaker talk about progressive taxes being a disincentive. One of the most interesting things that has happened today was the Acting Provincial Treasurer's tabling in the procedure early in the afternoon. He tabled a document that was a news article carried through whatever INF is and put into the Edmonton Journal. What it is is a commentary by Nobel prize winning economist Robert Mundell where he's talking about the relative effects of taxation and the income distribution effects of taxation.

At that time the Acting Provincial Treasurer made a comment that Dr. Mundell thinks the flat tax rates are a very good idea. Well, Madam Chairman, that, in essence, when you read the document and read what he's saying, basically is the end point in his argument. If you read the biography of Dr. Mundell – I will as an economist recognize Dr. Mundell also as a very knowledgeable person, a person who deserved the Nobel prize that he won. He's probably one of the fathers of the open economy on a worldwide basis that we're moving to.

His whole premise is based around the idea that in order to have a functioning open economy you have to have four different components. The first of them is the idea of perfect capital mobility. Okay. That I think we have now basically achieved with a lot of our international trade agreements. Very few people really consider that to be advantageous to Alberta, because we are a resource-rich province where those resources in their primary state are not mobile. We have to create the environment that will provide investors with the incentive to put their dollars here in Alberta, develop those resources here in Alberta, and export final product.

The second component of that Mundell model that he's talking about when he was relating to this competitive position is the idea that we have to have floating exchange rates. This, in essence, controls the movement of money and the relative pricing of money when we do our investments between different countries.

The next part of his model, which, Madam Chairman, is probably the least well developed to date in our open economy initiatives, is labour mobility. We already have a very serious problem even within countries to promote and to encourage labour mobility to fit the type of model that Dr. Mundell proposed.

The final component of his model is the fact that we have to also have the ability for our resources to move so that our goods and factors can be available where the production combination can be best put together.

So the idea, then, is we look at this model that Dr. Mundell has put together – it has been on numerous different occasions referred to as the Mundell-Fleming model for open economies. What it basically boils down to is that it is based on the concept of relative advantage and the marginal theories of economics.

What we heard previously from the member opposite, from Calgary-Montrose I think it was – he was talking about a system of economics and a system of decision-making that is totally based on average calculations. Madam Chairman, that kind of economic analysis and that kind of economic thought died in the 1800s. The concepts of marginal decision-making are the standard concepts of economic theory now, and we have to look at it in the context of how Dr. Mundell talks about the single tax, the appropriate tax rate, and the advantages of the lowered level of progressivity, and that's how he talks about this report as he gets further into it.

Almost everybody starts off their presentations with kind of the end point in their discussion, and then they build up to it. Well, in this article Dr. Mundell is quoted as saying that a progressive tax system is put on for redistributing income from rich people to poor people and if you go too far in that direction, you chase the rich . . . out.

Everybody recognizes that. Individuals look at their ability to earn an income based on their social decision-making and their ability to earn an income. Family, environment, opportunity create a balance, which, when put with your ability to earn an income, makes your choice as to whether or not you're going to move to a different area on the basis of tax rates.

What happens is that further down in his interview, he talks about the real issue being the movement in the direction of less progressivity, not necessarily the establishment of an absolute flat tax rate. His comparison is that in the U.S. the top tax rate used to be 70 percent. Reagan reduced that to about 28 percent. Under Clinton it's now been pushed back up to about 40 percent. He talks about the state taxes then adding as much as 8 percent more to it. So the marginal tax rate in the U.S. at the top level is about 48 percent.

He also then talks about the top federal tax rate in Canada being 30 percent with provincial income taxes adding 15 percent for a 45 percent marginal tax rate. According to Mundell, we already have the most competitive marginal tax rate in North America, and Alberta has a lower than average Canadian tax rate, so we're actually below that.

In essence, we already have all of the advantages that Mundell was talking about in his article. We don't have to go farther, and we do get the advantages that he talks about in this article of the ability to use the tax rate and the tax system to redistribute income to promote social and cultural identity. These are the kinds of things that he's talking about here, and it is inappropriate for the issues that come about when we talk about how to deal with the interpretation of these articles. They have to be dealt with in totality.

Madam Chairman, what we're ending up with here is the issue of who gets the benefit from a tax cut. Bill 18 is promoting a total structural change in tax, and what we've talked about here on a number of occasions is whether or not income, even as reported by Mundell, is effectively a tax on the kind of reward for labour, if you want to put it that way, or whether it's a tax on the total return on your decision-making activities.

Now, if we're going to deal with it from the perspective of the second type of model, where we're looking at the economics of making decisions on our taxation based on that, then we would have to dissociate from the federal government, because we couldn't use the taxable income component that's calculated in that federal government tax form because it doesn't represent the total return of an individual from their participation in that open economy that Mundell is talking about. He's talking about the ability of an economy to generate income flows and create wealth as the capitalized value of those income flows.

We have to make sure that if we're going to deal with the kind of relative advantage that Dr. Mundell is talking about, we use the same definitions, and to do that, we have to make sure that when we're talking about these kinds of marginal issues, we don't confuse them with the average decision-making criteria that we heard espoused previously. That kind of thing is not the way economic theory is moving. It's not consistent discussion with the open economic systems that I think everybody who now believes in a progressive economy actually supports. It's just a matter of how you define the relative effects and the relative role of government.

We talk also about the idea of: how do we deal with taxation, and what is the role of taxation? In the context of a true open economy government would play a very minimal role in how we deal with the control of and the interference with the economic system. Madam Chairman, we as a society have chosen that not to be the kind of economic system we want. We already have a whole cupboard full of legislation that influences how that economic system works.

We create laws that effectively create a capitalized value. We create laws that prohibit uses. We create laws that in essence create an add-on cost. We create other laws that effectively alter the ownership of and the right to use those kinds of resources. As we get to those, we have to look at how that income that we generate through those tax revenues contributes to our ability to compete in the other legal jurisdictions within that open economy. According to Mundell, the person the Acting Provincial Treasurer said was describing the kind of economic system we should have in this province, we already are at a position where our economic decision factors give Alberta a competitive advantage. We don't have to deal with it from the perspective of moving farther, moving to an absolute, which he defined as a single-rate tax.

The idea that we've also heard discussed on a number of occasions is: well, a single-rate tax is still a progressive tax because you have the initial exemption rate, which we'll now, I think, be establishing at about $13,560, so that if you're below that, you won't be paying any provincial tax and that as you start to pay more, you gradually have a marginal tax rate that approaches 10 percent. But as we generate more income, we also begin to exclude income from the taxable income calculation on that tax form. So in essence what we're doing is hiding income as we get to a level of income that we don't have to have a report made of that income. What we're doing is having a declining tax rate.

This proposal that we're talking about tonight in this amendment is going to move that declining tax rate farther down in the tax scale so that individuals who are subject to taxation will effectively be given an advantage at a lower level of income, where their tax rate on their total resource earnings will be declining. Effectively what we're saying here is that our tax system is not a tax system on total resource earnings. What it is is a tax system on reportable earnings.

I guess we have to look, then, at whether or not that's the kind of tax system that's valid within the context of our comparative advantage when we deal with the open economy. Well, Madam Chairman, we cannot – and I emphasize cannot – develop a tax system that measures and adds into taxable income all of the nonreportable incomes to create a true flat tax. The administrative cost of that, the amount of Big Brother looking over your shoulder attitude or requirements that would be needed to enforce it, just creates a society that I don't think anybody supports.

In essence what we need to do, then, is build in a proxy system. Many of our economic systems are based on the idea of legislation to create proxy systems in lieu of the marketplace operating. What we do is create a proxy system to have tax contributions that reflect the hidden incomes of persons with the ability to get a greater resource return. So in essence what we're doing, then, is having a stepped-up tax rate.

Canada has one of the lowest step-tax rates in the world. I think we're second. The U.S. has two. We have three. Well, if you want to include the zero tax rate at the bottom, we have four. So in essence what we've got, then, is a four-step system. Those steps are probably not set at the appropriate level yet, but that's because we've not had them indexed for the last number of years, and earnings have accelerated and we've ended up with bracket creep.

What we need to do is readjust those brackets in line with an appropriate level of targeted income redistribution and then let them be put in place. I would suggest possibly two brackets plus the zero; no more than three brackets plus the zero. We could probably account for all of the options that are associated with increasing income resource earnings and the ability to contribute and support the kind of society we want through a progressive tax system.

So what we want to do, then, is look at it from the point of view of: is it fair? Is it 11 percent, or is it 10 and a half percent? That is kind of covering up the true aspect of the debate that has to go on when we're changing the fundamental structure of our tax system. We talk about fairness. We talk about the disadvantage to earn. As long as we are in a competitive advantage situation, if our tax system is the lowest, even at the marginal rates, we are the area that has the competitive advantage and we won't have to worry about the brain drain and the exodus and the transfer of high-value labour out of our province.

Those are the kinds of issues that we have to start addressing here instead of some of the debate that we've heard, where we're talking about: well, you don't support a tax break. Everybody deserves to pay the lowest amount of tax possible, and that level is determined by the kind of social programs, the kind of income transfer programs that we as a society collectively decide we want to operate through our legislative process.

We have seen a large number of legislative initiatives come through this House sponsored by the government that would in essence and do create wealth initiatives and wealth concentration factors for persons with certain resources or certain wealth-holding activities. We don't have those same kinds of debates about those in terms of whether or not they're equitable or whether or not they're fair. They are judged in terms of their competitiveness with other jurisdictions, and we have to look at them from the perspective of whether or not our legislation creates, maintains, and supports our competitive advantage. I would suggest that moving to this flat tax at either 11 or 10 and a half percent is a significant overreaction to the concepts that are talked about by Mundell and his colleagues when they talk about the advantages of an open-economy model.

Madam Chairman, I support the open-economy model, but I also support an economic system in our province that has a social conscience. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Madam Chairman. I'm rising to speak on the amendment – I'm assuming it's called A1 – which is changing it from an 11 percent flat tax to a 10 and a half percent flat tax and raising the personal exemption to $12,900. It's always interesting following the Member for Lethbridge-East. I always learn something new about economics.

You know, when I look at whether this amendment is going to make a difference as to whether I support Bill 18 or not, I don't think so, but let me work through some of the issues that have come up for me. Part of my concern is around this government's practice of mushroom economics. I mean, we've heard of trickle-down economics and Reaganomics and voodoo economics. This is mushroom economics, because it seems that everything is developed behind closed doors in the dark, and the support for it is never to see the light of day.

[Mr. Renner in the chair]

I note that the opposition put forward a number of written questions in this spring session asking about the background information or what kind of information was prepared by or for Alberta Treasury on the economic impact, on revenue recovery: all kinds of questions about what was behind the development of this. The answers keep coming back: no information has been prepared by or for Alberta Treasury. Here's another one: no information has been prepared by or for Alberta Treasury on how much of the economic offset or revenue recovery results from various components of the tax plan. There's another one and another one and another one and another one. Yeah, there's about half a dozen of them here.

So every time we asked for information about what would have made them decide on this, there was no answer. I guess it leads me to believe that there was no work done there. When we ask to see their calculations on how they're coming up with all of the stories that are being put forward by the Acting Provincial Treasurer about so-and-so and their lovely family getting such and such of a tax break, those calculations are not forthcoming either. So I think it is mushroom economics.

Now, while this debate has been before the House, I have had the opportunity to listen to people in Edmonton-Centre, and I have to say that very, very few – I think there are two – have been asking, clamoring for a tax break. Most people are pretty frank in saying that they're willing to pay taxes for services. Certainly people's memories here are casting back and going: look, just a few years ago we were asked to tighten our belt and pay surtaxes and cut back on all kinds of things in order to maintain our services. Well, as we know, the services weren't maintained; they were cut. People are saying to me: well, you know, for the $100 or $200 I'm going to get back out of this, I'd rather that money was invested into the system, particularly into the health care system. That's the one that comes up the most often.

So people are not asking for a tax break. They are asking for adequate and sustainable funding for education. You know, we're still looking for enough funding dollars for mild and moderate special needs, for example. We only have the high special needs that are funded. And, yes, the cap has been lifted there, but people are still really affected by this, particularly in my constituency, because as it was explained to me, there tends to be a fringe of people. When there are special needs offered, for example, then you get a number of other people that are moving into the neighbourhood to take advantage of that, but they're not covered by the funding.

So, you know, are people saying to me, "Oh, we desperately want a tax break here"? No. They're talking to me about funding for a mild and moderate special need. They're talking about funding for the health care system. Right now we're dealing with a strike with health care workers who are asking for a raise, and the reason they're out on a strike right now is, no, there isn't the money to give it to them. Well, people that are talking to me are saying: we'd rather see that money going into the health care system or into social services.

I have a lot of people with mental health illness in Edmonton-Centre or who are on AISH because of a physical disability. Given the housing allowance rates that are offered under those programs, it's impossible for them to find a reasonable place to stay, a safe place, a place with some dignity to it. We all hear about the downloading on the municipalities. Well, maybe the money should be going to the municipalities rather than downloading on them. I just don't have people phoning me demanding a tax break. I do have them phoning me and asking when these areas are going to be adequately funded and on a sustainable level. People don't want to be on this trampoline of good times and bad times. In the good times they get a tax break, and in the bad times they get their programs and services taken away.

People are also asking about the impact on the revenues and the management of the budget in the province. We do have a cyclical economy here. We don't seem to be able to not have it, and everyone else recognizes that. Why is there no discussion of addressing that, of having a cushion in place, or as the opposition has suggested, a stabilization plan or a stabilization fund to carry us through those times when the economy has a downturn?

Certainly one of the things we noticed from having programs cut in a downturn is the impact that has on the infrastructure, on the maintenance. Those are the first things that get cut, that kind of ongoing regular attention being paid. That gets taken away, and then we have a huge problem with roads and buildings and all kinds of infrastructure. Will this amendment, which is cutting the flat tax from 11 percent to 10.5, make any difference on that? No. I still maintain that this is like Robin Hood's evil twin brother. We have robbery from the middle class to pay for the wealthy. That just strikes me as bizarre, but it doesn't seem to strike the hon. members opposite in the same way.

It's interesting. This government isn't motivated by any other small percentage group to bring in special laws. What we're talking about is that the people that are really going to benefit from this are the top 1 to 3 percent of the income earners in Alberta. They're the ones that are really going to benefit from this. But, you know, could we get the government to do legislation on behalf of the 52 percent of the population that are women? No. Could we get the government to bring in legislation for children in poverty? No. But here we have a flat tax scheme being brought in to benefit the top 1 to 2 percent. For no other sector of individuals in Alberta would we have the government willing to go to such lengths to satisfy a very small percentage of people, but that's exactly what's going on here.

The whole concept that I hear discussed, that somehow people who save money on taxes will reinvest it into the economy and this fires up the economy, that the money circulates around – well, I think that's probably true for those in the middle and even lower income. Their money does circulate around; it does stay here. But I don't see that happening for the wealthy elite. Their money doesn't stay here. Certainly the investment of money goes offshore. It doesn't stay in Alberta. It's not invested here. It leaves the province. So that money is not recirculated through this economy.

Even when we look at purchasing, I think the purchasing from that group goes elsewhere. Certainly they're not stampeding around Alberta or using passport Alberta or vacationing at Sylvan Lake. They're taking their vacations well outside of Alberta, so there goes that tourism money. It's not being spent here; it's leaving the province.

You know, they're looking at special purchases. That isn't happening here in Alberta. Those special purchases are being made in other places. Maybe the goods are actually being brought here, and some money might be made through a custom or import tax, but that isn't coming into the province. So I don't see how that argument goes around here. That money is not circulated in Alberta. It's not spent here; it doesn't stay here. It scoots out of this province as fast as its little legs will carry it.

There's also the argument: well, you know, we need to leave more money in people's pockets. Well, if that were true, then we'd be looking at cutting user fees, which are coming out of everybody's pockets. That would make a real immediate contribution to the change that people had in their pockets. What have we still got here? Eleven hundred or thirteen hundred different user fees, which this government was promising to do away with or at least look at. We haven't heard anything about that. They're pretty fond of their user fees.

Now I hear there's speculation from the Acting Provincial Treasurer about a sales tax. Well, there's another regressive tax that impacts more harshly on the middle and lower income earners and has much less effect on the higher income earners.

How about getting rid of health care premiums? Boy, that would put some cash back in people's pockets. That would be a real meaningful thing to do, but I don't hear any talk about that. Now, there is something that would have benefited a lot of people right across income levels, but no talk about getting rid of health care premiums. No. We want to do a flat tax, which is going to far and away benefit the higher income earners.

Here's another way to look at this: time is money. A lot of people today would far prefer to have the time. So if we had more money being invested in health care or education, then maybe families would have more time because they'd be working fewer bingos to raise money for their school. Or maybe families would have more time because they'd be doing fewer casinos in support of whatever health agency is important to them, or raising money for the northern Alberta children's hospital or the Stollery centre or any of those various charities that you hear are desperately trying to raise money for health research or health purposes in this day and age.

Maybe if some of this investment was going on and these programs were being adequately funded through funds raised through taxes rather than trying to cut them, we'd have people that could spend less of their time selling raffle tickets to pay for their kids to learn leadership and team skills through sports or culture. How about support for the libraries and the museums? So time is also money here, and that's another way that people in Alberta could really be benefiting, but there's no discussion of that.

One of the things I think about the flat tax is that a true flat tax presumes that no other taxes or credits or deductions are in play. In fact, we pay a lot of different taxes. We pay municipal property taxes, education tax, business or corporate taxes, oil and gas royalties, stumpage fees in forestry. We pay gas taxes. We pay licences, all kinds of them. There are municipal licences, provincial licences, federal licences. All kinds of money is being paid out in licences. We've got import duties and customs. We've got machinery taxes. We've even got environmental taxes, like the bottle deposits and the tire deposits. So it's interesting that they want to bring this scheme in called the flat tax, but they're not getting rid of any of the other taxes that people are paying, and they're now talking about a sales tax on top of everything.

Right from the beginning I've maintained that this Bill 18 and its companion piece, Bill 19, is about a flat tax scheme which really benefits the highest income earners in Alberta, but this has to be sold to the voter base, which is the middle-income people. How does this happen? How do you convince people to accept a new tax scheme, an entirely different tax scheme? Well, I think the first thing you do is call it something else. You don't talk about the fact that it's an entirely new tax scheme. You talk about it as a tax cut. You just call it something else and keep selling it as something else. The second thing you do is take the poor off the tax rolls so that the government isn't seen as taking advantage of the poor and really slamming them.

The third thing you do is set the tax rate low enough so there is an initial tax cut. It's like a loss leader in the store. You know, in order to get people to come into the store, you set the price of something really cheap so lots of people come in to buy it. Then they're in the store and you've got them. They'll spend money on other things while they're in the store. That's exactly what's happening here. That's what all this dickering is about. That's exactly what this amendment is about. It's about setting that tax rate low enough that people will actually get a tax cut. Given that the people on the higher end, the highest income earners, are the ones that are benefiting the most, you've got to keep dropping that rate so that actually the folks in the middle class are going to get some kind of tax cut, period.

So that's what's really happening here. It's a whole different tax scheme, but it's being sold as a tax cut. But that tax cut may not be there forever. Next year we could have a downturn, and that tax rate starts to just go right back up again. And who is really going to pay? Who's the one that's really going to be hit on that? It's the middle-income earners.

I think that whether this is 11 percent or 10 and a half percent, it's still a flat tax scheme. I think it will harm Albertans. It will particularly harm the people I represent, who are mostly middle-income earners and working low income, and I can't support that. Could I support a fair tax cut that has an accountability factor in it for some sort of stabilization for the downturns in the economy? Yes, indeed, I could. Do I think there should be a fairer tax cut, that the taxes should be as low as possible and still be able to sustain the economy and the programs and services that we want? Absolutely. Do I object to raising the personal exemption? No, I'm fine with that. I think that's perfectly fair, especially to those that are lower-income earners.

So it's not that I'm against anything this government is ever going to propose. I look at the different pieces. I break it down and think: is this going to work the best for the people in Edmonton-Centre? There's very little in this scheme that is being put forward by the government that's going to work for the folks in Edmonton-Centre. Can I be tagged with: well, I don't want any kind of tax break for people? No, I've never said that. If it's fair and if it's going to allow the budget to work on a sustainable level, it's fine by me. It's more than fine by me; I'd support it. But that's not what's being contemplated here.

I still find it really interesting that most of this scheme is being brought in to benefit a very small percentage of high-income earners. This government would not bring in any other kind of legislation, no matter how desperately needed, if we were talking about that low a percentage of people in any other group for any other reason.

So with those comments, I appreciate the opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole to this amendment on Bill 18, and I look forward to continued debate on it.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Leduc.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Madam Chairman. The proposed amendment to Bill 18 is good news for all Albertans. I can only imagine the envy that other provinces feel as this debate is going on, but a strong fiscal plan has given us the ability to introduce groundbreaking tax reform and tax cuts of over 20 percent. Yes, that's what I said. We'll take 20 percent, or $1.3 billion, less from Albertans' bank accounts.

I think one thing we can all agree on is the benefit to low-income Albertans. Nearly 200,000 Albertans will be removed from the provincial tax rolls. Unfortunately, this only takes care of the provincial taxes. The federal bill still accounts for two-thirds of income taxes. However, there's no denying that low-income Albertans are winners with this bill. There's a little more difficulty getting the opposition to acknowledge that middle-income earners are also winners. Since they, too, will receive a tax break, I don't see how they are losing.

I think the biggest problem the critics have with the single tax rate is that high-income earners will also be winners. I have a hard time seeing why they oppose this. Just because someone earns more than his neighbour doesn't mean that he or she is a bad person. Why should they be punished for working harder?

High taxes don't create any incentive to work that extra hour of overtime or take that course you need for a promotion. High taxes often deter people from bettering themselves at work, because the more you earn, the more the government takes in taxes. It is a fact that high taxes stifle an individual's enthusiasm.

We believe in encouraging creativity and enthusiasm in a different way here in Alberta. We think government should get out of people's private lives and out of people's bank accounts. We think that if government backs off, then people will have more room to grow and more freedom to choose. Bill 18 will give Albertans more freedom. By removing tax brackets, Albertans will have the freedom to choose to work harder. They will also have the freedom to choose how they will spend the money they will save on taxes. They won't be punished with higher taxes for getting a raise. There's nothing more discouraging than getting a raise and having it taxed away because your raise puts you in a higher tax bracket.

Low taxes are not only good for individuals and families in Alberta; they are good for the economy. When individuals are allowed to grow, the economy grows with them. When individuals are feeling financially confident, the economy reflects that confidence. The opposition has suggested that we can't afford the kind of tax cuts we are giving. I think we can't afford not to give them. The $1.3 billion tax cut that we are giving to Albertans is affordable. Alberta Treasury estimates the new tax plan will increase economic growth. With the new tax cuts, five years after the tax plan is implemented, Alberta's gross domestic product is expected to be about 1.5 percent, or $1.9 billion, larger. Roughly 30,000 new jobs will be created, and increased economic activity will generate enough increased tax revenue to offset 40 percent of the direct cost of the tax cut.

It's important to keep in mind that these numbers are based on the initial estimate of a $500 million tax reduction. Now that we are giving a $1.3 billion tax cut to Albertans, the economic impact will be much greater. This is good news. However, we need to always keep in mind the purpose of this bill: to introduce tax reform and give every Albertan a tax cut. Does the opposition really want to see those who are in the lowest tax bracket – let's say a young couple expecting their first child – struggle to make ends meet? With a new baby in their future they may be inclined to try to earn a little extra money to cover the additional costs of raising a family, but with the current system those extra hours push this family into the middle tax bracket with a higher rate, and the only result is that one of them is away from home working longer hours without much financial gain. Bill 18 and the proposed amendment will end this penalty. I honestly don't think the opposition wants to see that.

What about someone who is already in the middle-income tax bracket? What if he or she works hard and gets a raise? Is it all right to tax away the extra money he or she earns? Where do the critics draw the line? Why do they choose to be winners or losers? The bill and the amendment that is proposed for us will not punish these Albertans either.

Madam Chairman, it's time for some real tax reform. It's time we stop punishing hardworking Albertans by reducing any incentive to work, save, and invest, and it's time we let Albertans keep more of their own money.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words about the government amendment to Bill 18, which proposes to strike out the 11 percent and to substitute 10.5 percent and to strike out $11,620 and substitute $12,900 when those amounts appear in the legislation.

It was Voltaire, Madam Chairman, who said that "in general, the art of government consists in taking as much money as possible from one class of citizens to give to the other." That's what Bill 18, regardless of the amendments, does: it takes money from one group of citizens and puts it in the hands of another group. That quote from Voltaire was in the mid-1700s. It was true then and is true today and is exemplified by the impact Bill 18 is going to have on the tax system in this province.

In looking at the amendments, the question has to be asked: do the amendments change Bill 18 in any substantial way? The answer to that is found in re-examining the principles, the big three principles that are usually expected to govern the tax system. Of course, the first and probably one of the most important principles is tax equity. The amendments are such that the same kind of criticisms that were leveled at the original bill remain: that the amendments in no way make a difference in terms of the inequities that were found in the original bill. In fact, they probably make them a little worse.

The foundation of a tax system is supposed to be its progressivity. In spite of the claims of the Acting Provincial Treasurer, the flat tax scheme in front of us moves Alberta towards a less progressive tax system, and that's a violation of the equity principle. It's long been recognized that the tax system is a mechanism for the fair and equitable redistribution of wealth. The provisions in Bill 18 add to the unfairness in terms of the distribution of wealth in the province, favouring those people who already enjoy a favored position in the province. So the notion of the violation of the equity principle embedded in Bill 18 is in no way changed by bringing forward these amendments.

The principle of neutrality is another principle that has been questioned in terms of Bill 18. Neutrality is wrapped up in the notion that tax incentives or tax changes should in no way cause individuals to modify their behaviour and that a neutral tax change would not affect existing relationships. Well, that neutrality principle has been violated in Bill 18 because existing relationships are changed. The middle class will pick up a larger burden of the tax bill in the province, and those in the upper-income brackets will have their tax burden reduced. So it does change the relationship between groups, and that was a relationship that was already strained in many ways.

The attack on the middle class is one that I think has been chronicled elsewhere, but there's a feeling by middle-class Albertans that they are under attack, that they're being asked to pay more and more of the tax load, that they're being asked to take more of the burden of keeping our institutions and government services operating than is really their fair share. Even though they get a cut, even though their total tax bill will be reduced in some instances, that ratio is disturbed, and again they are left paying more than they might otherwise have were a different tax scheme put forward by the government.

One of the sort of side effects of this kind of scheme put forward by the government is one I heard from one of my constituents who, in talking about the proposal, said: "What would you expect? The middle class always gets shafted in any kind of change." Really, one of the side effects of this legislation is that it's going to add to that cynicism at a time when I think that's unfortunate. There was an opportunity, when the government found itself in a desirable financial system, to put forward real tax reform that would lead to fairness and that could leave all Albertans feeling like they were treated fairly. The claims by government members that the middle class should be thankful because they got a tax cut too, even though it wasn't as big as for those who are earning high incomes, and that somehow or other they should be pleased because they got some money is quite an astounding claim to be heard in this Legislature.

So for two of the three huge tax principles, equity and neutrality, the violation of those principles remains unchanged by the amendments before us. The third principle, which is the principle the government has promoted most heartily, is simplicity. Certainly the movement to a flat tax is simple. It makes calculations easier but comes to us in this bill at quite a price, and it's a price some Albertans are unwilling to pay. The tension between those principles I think is still here in Bill 18. I suspect in many ways almost any tax proposal registers some tension among those principles, but this flat tax is clearly one that on principle alone should be closely questioned.

One of the other comments I wanted to make, Madam Chairman, was on the reasons that have been given by the government for this particular tax reduction. Again, the amendments have done nothing to change those reasons or to make them any stronger, but the reasons we hear in the Chamber continue to be similar. When those flat tax proposals in the States were first made public, one of the political leaders there labeled the proposals as voodoo economics, and that label has stuck and has been associated with the kinds of economics of the Reagan era and the Thatcher era in Britain and the notion of trickle-down economics.

We've heard this time and time again in this Legislature in spite of it being discredited everywhere else, and I guess it's not surprising, given this tax proposal, that we would hear that kind of argument. The notion that citizens with more money in their pockets, even the small amounts this tax break will make available, are going to invest more and spend more, thereby creating more wealth and more jobs, has pretty well been discredited. That was south of the border and in Britain, and it's probably even more so in this country and in our province, where so much of income is placed into equity. That whole notion, as I indicated, is one that upon being investigated just does not hold water, although it's one we hear time and time again from government members.

One of the other arguments – and I mentioned this before in talking about the bill because I heard it again from a government member this evening – is that this tax scheme is going to prevent the brain drain. I find it quite astounding that we have government members truly believing that it's this kind of a tax measure that's going to keep Albertans and Canadians here and prevent the movement of citizens south of the border. That's just not true.

Any kind of in-depth look at the brain drain indicates that people move to a new community for a lot of reasons. Scholars and researchers looking for places to establish themselves are lured to those places for a variety of reasons, and offering the modest tax break to the middle incomes that this amendment puts forward is not going to attract them. They are attracted by the kind of research facility, the kind of research climate. They're attracted by the amenities that are available in a community for their families: the kind of recreation, the kind of cultural and educational facilities that are available for them and their families. They're attracted by safe communities. They're attracted by housing that's readily available. Certainly taxes are a part of the mix that goes into their decision-making, but to claim that somehow or other this Bill 18 and the amendments are going to halt the brain drain I think is really stretching it and pushing it to its limits.

The other myth I heard perpetuated this evening is that this amendment will give the rich the tax break they need so they'll work harder. Again, I think that's just what I called it. It's a myth. I don't recall being able to read any studies that indicated that that was the truth, that somehow or other the more money you had the harder you worked. I just don't believe that's true, and I think it would be a hard sell for some of the very hardworking, low-income constituents that I serve to indicate to them that that was the reason why they work hard. So it's a myth, and it's one that I find quite astounding that we have perpetuated in the Assembly.

One of the other comments that I would like to make, Madam Chairman, is that the Acting Provincial Treasurer has drawn on some legitimization in the last number of days, in particular the chartered accountants in the province. He purported to have a letter from them endorsing the tax bill. He had filed the work of a scholar who indicated, he purported, that he supported his tax proposal and these amendments.

I find it curious, to say the least, that he would draw upon those two groups and their support and yet was so brutally dismissive of the 100,000 Albertans who signed petitions opposing Bill 11. They were cast aside as special interest groups, as belonging to unions, as being people who are only interested in protecting their jobs, that same kind of dismissal of the 25,000 parents across the province who signed petitions in support of extra funding for school. They, too, were dismissed.

So the Provincial Treasurer draws on a very narrow group and seems to give them great credence when that group supports the government's position and seems very willing to dismiss the hundreds of thousands of Albertans who let their voice be known on issues when it's contrary to government policy and legislation.

The results of this legislation I think the Member for Lethbridge-East has already indicated this evening, that it's a movement towards less progressivity in the tax system, and I think he made the arguments fairly strongly earlier this evening in support of that proposition.

Bill 18 and these amendments are really a Trojan horse bill under the guise of a tax cut, under the pretense that people – well, not a pretense. They will get a tax cut. There is a major shift in terms of tax liability to the middle class. Some calculations have been made that by 2004 under the current system, the middle class would be in a much similar position as they are under the proposal before us. We'll look back at these changes in the future, Madam Chairman, and realize just what has been done to the tax system. I'm sure there's going to be a government down the road that will take the needed action to rectify the errors that are being made and the unfair changes to the tax system that will be a result of the provisions of Bill 18.

So with those comments, Madam Chairman, I'd like to conclude and look forward to further debate on Bill 18.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Madam Chairman. On the amendments to Bill 18. In the discussions about our future and the future of our economy we talk a lot about how as a province we want to grow, and there is no question that we will grow. Our economy will continue to diversify. We will start more businesses. We will find ways to make new and existing Alberta businesses and industry more productive. We will make the most of the new technologies, and we will undertake a variety of other activities, all aimed at making the future a good place for everyone who lives here.

When I say we, I mean Albertans, and that includes us as politicians. It also includes corporate Alberta, the oil patch, all of our educational institutions, and many others too, but much of the responsibility for the future rests on the shoulders of our young people. It's an awesome responsibility, and we as politicians believe they should get as much support as possible. They are after all building our future as well as their own.

Madam Chairman, I'm proud to say that Bill 18 is designed to help all Albertans, including our young people, and you don't have just my word on it. Everyone is starting to sit up and take notice. For example, tax watchdog Mitchel Gray from the Canadian Taxpayers Federation is on record as saying: this is a tax cut for all Albertans; everyone will get a break: rich, poor, and the middle-class alike. And it's true.

From this, we want our young people with entry-level incomes to see that even though they don't make the big salaries of more established professionals, they are just as important. We don't wait until they make the big bucks before recognizing them. Bill 18 will remove traditional tax disincentives so that these people can get on with building a future we can all enjoy.

When it becomes law, Bill 18 will increase the basic personal exemption by 78 percent, to $12,900 from the current $7,231. That means that these young people as well as everyone else will pay no personal provincial income tax at all on the first $12,900 they make. This makes a big difference to the new graduate just starting out or the student who works part-time to offset the costs of education. In fact, even those who work full-time earning minimum wage – and that's about 2,000 hours a year – simply won't pay any Alberta income taxes at all. However, they'd still owe the federal government about $650. Most of the people here today can probably still remember what it's like when you're getting started or getting your feet wet, when you've landed a job but all you've got in your closet is the suit that you wore to your high school graduation and you've come to think about Kraft dinner as two of the four major food groups. Even a bit of extra cash is going to make a difference in the lives of these folks. So Bill 18 helps them in the beginning. Then as they progress, the new tax system makes it easier for them to go forward.

As we have all heard, Bill 18 introduces a single tax rate, and that means no tax brackets, so raises and increments will not push new workers into higher brackets where they pay a greater proportion of what they make to the tax man. Instead, they will be allowed to keep more of what they earn, and I have seen how a little extra can make a big difference, not just in terms of its purchasing power but also as an incentive to work harder and to stay in Alberta. If they get both the breaks and the opportunities here, the States won't look nearly so attractive to these young workers.

All this extra work gives the province momentum and bodes well for our economy. Very well, I might say. By 2006 Alberta's GDP is expected to increase by 1.5 percentage points more than it would have without Bill 18. That translates into almost $2 billion more in our economy than we would expect without any changes to our personal income tax system. By no coincidence the increased economic activity will mean more jobs in the province, about 30,000 more by the year 2006 than we could have expected otherwise. So young people graduating from high school, college, and university will find more opportunities to put their hard work to use.

It only makes sense, Madam Chairman, that if we're banking on these people to use their smarts to build us a great future, shouldn't we give them the opportunity to hit the ground running? I don't think there's a person in the House today who would dream of holding them back, and I would also say probably the opposition as well. Why should we have a tax system that does? Bill 18 is designed to take them forward, so let's get on with it and support Bill 18.

Thank you, Madam Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: I'm here. Thank you, Madam Chairman. Once again it's a pleasure to address this August body, particularly when some of them are listening. [interjection] A flat tax, not a single tax: that's just for sales, and we all know that, so let's deal with what we have in this Bill 18.

It is clearly a flat tax, and there are a lot of myths surrounding it. But let's ask some fundamental questions, the whys and the wheres. Where are we going with this flat tax? I read with interest the Alberta Tax Review Committee's report, such as it is, and it wasn't hard to figure out where they were going, when they plainly were stopping at a flat tax as an interim measure so that we can go from a tax on tax, which our current system is in relation to the federal tax, to a tax on income, which this bill goes to, to a final destination as a tax-on-consumption, which would be a new VAT, as it is described in England, a value-added tax, or a PST, as it is described in so many other provinces, and to eliminate the income tax.

Now, in theory that sounds to be a reasonable objective, because it's clear that leaving hard-earned funds in the pocket of a consumer regardless of what income rate they are has some attractions in that you can say to a citizen at whatever income level: we're going to leave the cash you've earned in your jeans until such time as you decide to expend that, and then we're going to tax you on that. Well, in theory it works rather well for all income groups if all of those funds that were income were expended. That, of course, is certainly not the case, because a good deal of those that have their staples covered, their barbell, their nut, the amount that it costs them to live, rather early, those in the high-income brackets, have a great deal left over then to invest, if you will, or to further cause more income generation.

For that group and for the middle income that are striving for that and the higher income, it works quite well. Unfortunately, it does not work all that well for a great deal of our society, those that are expending all of their funds just to keep their wheels turning. So they end up in a neutral position, or at the very end of the lower scale they end up in a negative position, because all of their funds are expended for those fundamental elements that now cost them considerably more. Those people are in fact pushed through the cracks, and we end up with this horrible social problem at the lower end of the scale, which all of the trickle-down theories will not and cannot account for.

Now, I would assume that these people that wrote this report were of good intention, but they're all from the higher end of the scale. Regardless of how you cut it, if you're designing a system which you live in, you have some kind of fiduciary interest in this. Although you try to set that aside as much as you can, you still do. If these people assume that if you take care of those that are the generators of capital investment, do in fact do that, and that those at the bottom end of the scale will always be there, as many of these people assume, then I suppose you do and should come up with these conclusions.

I would move on to the second question. Why are we going to this? Now, you'll hear the proponents of the flat tax talk about it being simpler, being much more fair. You'll hear them talk about the potential reduction in evasion and illegal avoidance of tax, and you'll hear them speak of that all-encompassing phrase of economic prosperity, that it will foster that.

Well, let's deal with simpler first. True, it would be simple if in fact the flat tax did away with all exemptions, with the personal exemption or spousal exemptions or RSPs or any kind of tax incentive such as we have in the oil and gas business, which have in most cases served this province rather well. Yes, if you did away with all of that lot, it could be simpler. I mean, wouldn't it be wonderful, an ideal situation to be able to file a two-sentence income statement and be able to have your tax calculated by long multiplication, if you will, and be able to say: okay; that's my commitment to society.

Well, of course, we know that is not about to occur for all of the complexities of the society that have been built since 1917, when income tax was instigated. There are so many social concerns and business concerns. That kind of simple formula would work if in fact we were dealing with an entire income generation from the province totally and completely unrelated to the federal scene. Now, this is but one province with 10 percent of the population. This tail is not going to wag the dog sufficiently to change all that there is in the federal government. So for two reasons: one, is that all of those other incentives that are rightfully included currently in the tax system are there for a good reason, and secondly, the federal scene is not going to be changed by one province. So let's dispel that argument of it being simple.

Fairness. I dealt with fairness, and the same arguments apply as when I dealt earlier with moving through the flat tax into a PST or a VST, and those arguments still apply. These cuts would and could be fair quite easily. This province is currently fat with cash and could have given, even with the current tax system, just the elimination of that which was eliminated currently in Bill 19, the 8 percent surtax and the pure flat tax that's applied for elimination of deficit of .5 tax over all income. If you eliminate those two, that's a good start. Then just take that which is currently being filed and the current method as being filed with the tax on tax and lower that. But, no, this bill goes beyond that. It moves and shifts the burden of the tax from the high income to the middle income. It certainly does move some of the lower income off the tax rolls, which is a very, very good end into and unto itself, but it doesn't mask the major shift.

Those that are proposing this flat tax are arguing that it's a break for everyone. Well, that being the case, there's no argument there. Of course, we can see that. But in that tax break for everyone we've got this massive shift going on that doesn't seem to hit the street well. It certainly hasn't been through the entire business community as yet. I spent some time in the last couple of days asking, and it certainly hasn't and will not and may never get to really where the folks are. That comes from some discussions earlier in the evening at the doors in Edmonton-Highlands.

People are not terribly keen on listening to politicians a great deal, and they certainly only read that which is printed in the newspaper in sort of a catch it if you can and read between the lines or read the headlines and understand what's going on here. They certainly aren't aware that the shift is occurring.

Let's for a moment assume that the expenditures of this government were fixed and that this government had already taken the current tax-on-tax rate down from 44 and a half percent to 38 or 39 or 36 percent, and then applied this flat tax over the course of maybe two years. It would be painfully obvious, then, that with the move from one tax system to another the burden would be shifted. It would clearly be shown very easily that the tax burden for the middle income would be increased. Because this government happens to be in the unique position of having this large bucket of cash, it's able to give everyone this break. It's unfortunate from my point of view but it's fortunate from the government's point of view that the middle income will not really recognize that the higher income are getting the lion's share of the largesse of the government, and it's a shame.

I should quote a very good line from a journal article that was repeated by the good offices of the library. It was in November of '98, and it is a report on the Alberta Tax Review Committee and their recommendations. There's one chap there, a Mr. Donald, from Parkland Industries.

In North America, flat tax proposals have foundered for decades on the popular belief that the rich should pay a bigger percentage of their fortunes toward the public good. This argument is not so much wrong as oversimplified, says Mr. Donald.

He goes on to say in another quote:

The fairness of our plan lies in raising the personal exemption. The lower your income, the more that exemption means to you as a percentage of your income. For the wealthy, it's almost no help at all.

Well, that gives you one of the mind-sets that does two things. One, it totally and completely ignores that middle income that pays the bulk of the tax. Now, an exemption for those people, as the gentleman clearly pointed out – at the higher income it means much less than at the middle income. But in a flat tax rate that person's income and their expenditure rate versus a higher income and their expenditure rate to function in this world and do all of the necessities of eating and housing and transportation and all of that lot are a much greater percentage. If that's taxed at the same rate, it's clearly obvious to anyone that the burden is going to be shifted there, and therefore in this member's view it's woefully unfair.

Moving on to another popular misconception that's touted by a lot of flat tax proposers, that evasion of tax or cheating, if you will, is less likely to occur on this simple application of tax. Well, in writing after writing after writing there is no substantiated proof of that at all, although quite frankly I don't know how you would substantiate that. But it is clearly the opinion of most economists that that does not occur, because the evasion is based on an assumption that that which is paid by an individual in the way of tax to further the coffers of the government is misspent. Those funds are expended rather poorly.

Now, it matters little whether you're paying a little or a lot if you're of that opinion that then evasion comes rather easily or if it's easy to convince oneself that cheating is a reasonable thing to do because the money is going to this big black hole or is being expended in a manner that certainly doesn't help that person in their life trying to further their ends, as it were. So let's set that one aside. We're dealing with only a provincial tax, and we're not dealing with the overall big nut of the federal income tax. Let's set that argument aside as being mostly a federal argument, but it certainly doesn't hold water in the provincial scene.

[Mr. Herard in the chair]

The last argument that you hear all the time and you hear in this Chamber particularly is economic prosperity, the theory that all wealth is created by this trickle down: if you have the higher end of the income levels that have these extra funds, they invest. Now, I don't know how a brand-new Mercedes every year is investing. I fail to see how the purchase of another three vacations on a yacht furthers the ends of Albertans. I don't know how that end of the expenditure works out. So let's assume that that's a very small percentage of that high end of the income scale that does expend that way. Just set that one aside for awhile.

How does it fit that investing from that group is any better than investing from the middle-income group? I for one don't understand it at all, because the middle-income group, as most of those that are assembled here and certainly the staff are – that's their end too. I mean, they're looking to as early as possible pay off their mortgage and set their children off on a decent course by paying for their education and all that lot and get a position where they can take the disposable income that they do have after covering all the expenses of the day and say: "Now, how do I build my nest-egg beyond that RRSP that I've been contributing to, beyond the company plan? How do I do that?"

Their end is the same as the higher end except that their urgency is a little more – well, I shouldn't say that their urgency is a little more urgent, but I guess that's what it is. They're now at this end of the boomers, and they're looking at that retirement out there. So they really, really do want to put this money to good use and do a fairly good job of investing and managing it such that it will cause growth for themselves and therefore for the economy.

The higher end of course don't have that concern so much. Why should they be concerned about retirement? Their retirement was covered long, long ago. They have that kind of an income that it certainly doesn't concern them, the waning of the later years when their income level from active employment will drop dramatically. So why would we want to put those funds out there? That leaves me a little bit dry.

There are a number of quotes which I can't quite locate at the moment, but I should like to come back a little later to speak of those quotes. John Kenneth Galbraith, of course, delivered a great number of them that specifically related to the trickle-down theory, and a number of others really did not subscribe to that theory, that sort of the supply side of the economy.

Here we are. John Kenneth Galbraith said: it's a relatively sophisticated form of fraud. That's from an article that Hansard will undoubtedly ask me about, so I should probably quote the author right off the top. It's Neil Brooks in an article in the July-August 1999 issue of the CCP Monitor. I should also like to read into the record a Nobel laureate for economics, James Tobin, that termed it, and I quote: snake oil. It's an easy way of selling the flat tax. There's another quote, too, by the famous George Bush, when he referred to this variation of the supply side theory as voodoo economics.

No, don't tell me that the time allotted for the speech has come and gone. It's unfortunate. I'll have to resume my dissertations on the economic prosperities a little later, the voodoo economics of this government.

Thank you kindly for the time allotted, Mr. Chairman. I will take my seat now.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a good opportunity to spend a little bit of time talking about Bill 18 here. We find ourselves at third reading. I spoke briefly to this bill earlier and talked about my view of the continuing progressivity of the bill, so I'm not going to get into that kind of detail. I would like to spend just a little bit of time talking in general terms about tax policy, what I think should be reflected in tax policy and how this bill in fact fits my idea of what tax policy is all about.

We've got before us Bill 18 and an amendment to that bill that deals with the specific rates. I think it's important that we talk about the specific rates, but I also think that it's important that we have the context in which those rates are going to be applied. When any government is talking about collecting taxes, the reason that taxes are collected is because there are a number of services that the public expects government to provide, so the only way that governments have to provide those services is through some form of taxation.

We in Alberta and in most of the western world have various forms of taxation. Some of it is in the form of corporate tax. Some of it is in the form of personal income tax. We also in Alberta are very fortunate to have a significant revenue stream from royalties on natural resources. So government, I think, has to constantly keep in mind that we want to be as equitable as possible. We want to ensure that we collect only the amount of taxes that are necessary to provide the services that we see as being core services of government.

Tonight we're discussing the whole area of personal income taxes. Traditionally what has taken place not only in Alberta but across Canada is that the federal government has for all intents and purposes established the tax policies for the entire country. The federal government brings down a budget, establishes a tax rate, and then the provinces have traditionally added their taxes onto the established policies of the federal government in the form of provincial taxes being a percentage of the federal tax.

So what this bill does is significant in two ways. First of all, we split ourselves off. We remove ourselves from the necessity of being dependent upon the policy of the federal government. Instead of having a tax on tax, we have the fortunate position of being able to determine our own tax policy within this province.

The other thing that we do, probably the most significant change that Albertans will see, is that we have discussed repeatedly ways of having a more equitable tax, because traditionally in Alberta and in fact in Canada, Mr. Chairman, we have had multiple rates of taxation. After an individual calculates his or her taxable income, then there are graduating rates of tax, some of which apply to lower incomes, and then as your income passes one point, you get into another tax bracket, and so on. That is what all of us have experienced who have been in a position of working for wages or perhaps even being self-employed, working hard, working extra hard, either working overtime or receiving some kind of a bonus from a client or from an employer.

I know all of us have been in that situation where you feel so good about what you have been able to accomplish. You've received a bonus, be it a $100 bonus or a $500 bonus or a $1,000 bonus, and lo and behold at the end of the month, when you get your final paycheque, you look at it and you find out it's hardly any larger than what it had been the previous month. You wonder: "What's going on here? How can this be that I worked all these hours of overtime or became eligible and received a fairly significant bonus, and then it all seems to be headed down the pipe to the tax man in Ottawa?"

Well, the reason for that is that by receiving that particular overtime or that bonus, in many cases we have crossed that threshold into another tax bracket. So instead of paying 20 percent of our income in taxes, that one extra few hours of overtime has taken us into the next tax bracket, and that tax bracket may well be 30 or 40 percent. I don't want to get into all of the specific numbers, but we've all been there, and I know that you've been there, Mr. Chairman. How disappointing it is to work so hard to earn additional dollars and then at the end of the month find that they've all found their way to places other than your own pocket.

Well, what Bill 18 is proposing to do and what this amendment will accomplish is that rather than having all of that money heading down to Ottawa, a significant portion of that money is going to stay in my pocket, is going to stay in your pocket, Mr. Chairman, and it's going to stay in the pockets of Albertans. In fact, $1.3 billion in the next tax year is going to be staying in the pockets of Albertans. It's not going into the Provincial Treasurer's domain. It's going to be staying within the pockets of Albertans.

The reason it's going to be doing that, Mr. Chairman, is that instead of having progressively larger and larger tax bites coming out of everyone's paycheque, we are going to be establishing a single rate of taxation. We will know from this time forward that the taxes that we pay when we get that $100 bonus will be, as is determined by the amendment that is before us, 10 and a half percent. So if I get that $100 bonus, I know that I'm going to have to pay $10.50 in taxes and the other $89.50 is going into my pocket. There will be no surprises, no surprises at all, except of course that we don't have control in this province over what the federal government will continue to do.

Although there has been some movement in Ottawa recently, the $10.50 that goes to the Provincial Treasurer in Alberta will also be augmented by a significant amount of taxes that go to Ottawa. We'll deal with that as citizens of Canada when we next get involved in federal elections, because I'm sure that federal politicians will see what has gone on in Alberta and I'm sure will be able to offer the citizens of Alberta and the citizens of Canada some choice when it comes to taxation policy. All we can deal with here tonight is the taxation policy with respect to Alberta.

So what we have done now is established a single rate, and that single rate is 10 and a half percent. But we've taken it one step further. I talked about the fact that taxation policy needs to be fair. It needs to be equitable, but it also needs to be fair. It also has to recognize that there is some reality in this world. The reality is that like running a business, where you have fixed costs and variable costs depending upon the nature of your business, as individuals we have a certain amount of fixed costs and a certain amount of variable costs. We have tried to establish an amount of money that would relatively equate to fixed costs. It depends upon the size of your family, and it depends upon your economic circumstances.

What this bill does - and it's also included in the amendment that's before the House right now, Mr. Chairman - is establish a baseline. It says that if your income is less than $12,900, then you will pay no tax. So it says, in essence, that we recognize that there are some fixed costs that should be recognized, and for an individual it's $12,900. If you have a household, two adults living in the home, you would have double that, $25,800. We also recognize that if there are children involved in your household, there needs to be some additional personal exemptions for those.

So with a process of personal exemptions in place, a family of four - be it traditional, a husband, wife, and two kids, or be it a single mother and three kids - essentially will have the first 30,000-plus dollars tax free for provincial tax purposes. Those are the fixed costs that I talked about. What this government is recognizing is that there are some costs associated with maintaining a household in this province, and we have said that the government should not be drawing its pound of flesh out of those fixed costs that are involved in the household. But after that, then, we all recognize that it's necessary for those individuals who have the wherewithal, who can afford it, to contribute to the well-being of society in general. We all feel that we've been elected to come here to the Legislature in Edmonton to approve spending and establish policies that are for the good of all Albertans. In order to do that, one of the sources of revenue that we have is personal income tax.

We said that as of the proclamation of this legislation before us taking effect in the tax year 2001, all income will be subject to a provincial tax of 10 and a half percent. So when I get that bonus or when you get that bonus, Mr. Chairman, or my constituents back in Medicine Hat, where there's a lot of work to be had right now and a lot of overtime to be had – when the weather is good and when the sun is shining, there's a lot of work that can be done – that money is not being taken away in an unfair, inequitable way. There will be one flat tax and one single rate of taxation, and that will be 10 and a half percent.

As a result of that, the bottom line of all of this is not only will we have a fairer system of taxation, not only will there be approximately $1.3 billion left in the pockets of Albertans so that they can determine how best to spend it and not leave it up to the politicians here in the Legislature, but there will be approximately 190,000 Albertans removed from the tax rolls because of the increase in personal exemptions. The most important thing is that every Albertan will share to some degree in the savings.

Whenever you redesign a tax system or any way of divvying up something that is based on some kind of a formula – after all, income taxes are simply a series of formulas – if you're going to redesign how you collect those taxes or how you allocate that revenue stream to government, one would often assume that if you're going to take something that is not equitable and create something that is more equitable, one would almost come to the natural assumption that some people are going to end up paying less and other people are going to end up paying more. That's how averages work. But the beautiful thing about what we're discussing here tonight is that as a result of reducing the single rate of taxation to 10 and a half percent, as a result of establishing a personal exemption at $12,900, every taxpayer in the province of Alberta benefits. I think that's the key. That's what Albertans elected us to do. That's certainly what the people in Medicine Hat elected this member to do: to ensure that taxes are reduced in a fair and equitable manner and that the savings from those taxes can be shared by all Albertans.

So, Madam Chairman, I think that that pretty much concludes my comments on this bill. I encourage all members to support this amendment, and I look forward to further discussion as we proceed into third reading.

11:20

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Okay. We will be dealing with the amendments. We deemed the amendment A1 yesterday, and there are parts A and B. Do you wish to deal with it as one amendment, or do you wish to deal with it separately?

HON. MEMBERS: As one.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks very much, Madam Chairman, and with apologies to the Government House Leader. I appreciate the opportunity, as limited as it is, to continue my debate on Bill 18 in committee.

I think that it's important for the record to show what's happened. Because of the use of closure the Official Opposition are limited in terms of how many times they can speak in committee. Normally, of course, in committee you can have a real debate. You can go back and forth. You can ask questions. You can expect responses. It's the time, really, when a lot of the work of this Assembly gets done. In other Legislatures and other parliaments what happens is there is usually all-party prestudy of a bill. The committee process works in a much different way. We've even had some examples in this Legislature where, depending on the cabinet minister involved, they've actually engaged their counterpart critic, their shadow minister, in a real debate. I've had the opportunity to work with a couple of ministers on that basis where you can put real input into a bill and help craft a good piece of legislation.

Now, let's contrast that to what's gone on with Bill 18. When it comes to tax policy, this government doesn't want any dissent, they don't want any criticism, and they don't want any real debate. What they do is bring in closure and introduce their own amendment, which they needed to do because they messed up with the original drafting of the bill because they were too anxious to score brownie points ahead of the federal budget. Then they try to manipulate the clock so that we can't have this normal discourse, this normal back and forth, and they really shortchange taxpayers. That's particularly important at this point in time, because this is, after all, a tax bill, and this is going to make a fundamental change in the way that taxes are collected. It's going to make a fundamental change in who pays the taxes, and as we've said so many times, it's going to be fundamentally unfair.

One of the things that's particularly unfair about the government's whole tax initiative is the way that time after time after time it rewards the wealthy. Now, earlier in debate I pointed out both in Bill 18 and Bill 19 this disparity between the rich and the poor, and I have to continue to scratch my head as to why this government wants to continue to exacerbate that disparity. In Bill 19 debate this government actually, unbelievably, defeated the first amendment, which would have led to the synchronized elimination of both of the so-called deficit elimination taxes. This government actually wants to continue to pick the pockets of Alberta taxpayers by collecting these deficit elimination taxes, which of course aren't needed to correct the deficit anymore because we don't have a deficit. We haven't had one in the province since '96.

I know that the Acting Provincial Treasurer and the Minister of Government Services have a disagreement about whether or not there's still a debt in the province. The Minister of Government Services says that there can't be a surplus because we still have this net debt, but the Acting Provincial Treasurer was talking to the media the other day and bragging that the projected surplus in the budget is going to be even higher than the $713 million that was projected. So I would hope that they'll have a cabinet meeting one of these days and will actually sit down and decide whether or not there's a debt or a surplus or what it is. I think Albertans would be very interested to know if in fact this government is no longer projecting a surplus. I wonder what that would mean in terms of the economic cushion that was built into the budget. It could just be a matter of convenience, you know. Never let the facts get in the way of government initiative; right?

While the government moved against the amendment on Bill 19, they used the artifice, they used the construct, they used the excuse that the reason they weren't going to support the amendment on Bill 19 was because, in their minds, it would somehow extend the powers of the province to continue to collect this so-called deficit elimination tax. Well, there is a section in Bill 18 which has to be amended to make our amendment on Bill 19 fully implementable. To operationalize the amendment to Bill 19, you would have to also deal with the proposed section 89(3) in Bill 18. The current tax act talks about a "flat rate tax payable under this Act for a taxation year by an individual," and for the years 1988 and subsequent that flat tax is .5 percent. Now, we've talked about this flat tax for a fair bit. We know that all Alberta tax filers have to pay this flat tax. It doesn't matter where you are in the income spectrum. The government of Alberta wanted to reach once more into your pocket, take some of your hard-earned cash out of your pocket, and pay off the debt.

In 1996 the government promised they were going to eliminate that tax, but then they changed their mind in 1999. In fact, they broke their promise. Now, we want to help the government keep their word, so in order to help them keep their word, we'd like to put them back on track. In order to do that, we have to now move a subsequent amendment to Bill 18. So wait for it, hon. Government House Leader and Minister of Justice and Attorney General for all of Alberta. I want you to hear this first, and I want you to be absolutely clear what's happening here.

Bill 18 as currently worded refers to that .5 percent flat tax in a section that reads as follows: Section 3.04(1)(b) and 2(d) are amended by striking out "and subsequent taxation years" and substituting "to 2000 taxation years." We would like to see that changed. What all of that means is that this government would continue collecting that tax. We don't want to see Albertans have to pay one more penny of that unfair tax for one extra day, so we would like to see it removed now so that they don't have to pay it starting in the current taxation year. In order to accomplish that, as I said, in spite of the government voting against the required amendment in Bill 19, we can give them one more shot to do the right thing.

So I would like to move that Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, be amended as follows: that section 89(3) be amended by striking out "to 2000 taxation years" and substituting "to 1999 taxation years." That's my amendment. I understand it's being distributed right now. Should I continue or should I pause, Madam Chairman? I'm seeking your direction.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We will deem this amendment A2.

MR. SAPERS: Well, I think it's actually A1, but I know for the record we have to call it A2, so that would be okay. We can call this amendment A2. So number two and trying harder.

Madam Chairman, it was very difficult for me to explain what it was that the Government House Leader was on about. You know, I had the opportunity earlier tonight to do some campaigning in the Edmonton-Highlands area. We're in the middle of this by-election. You know, people want to talk about lots of things during this by-election. They want to talk about the government's dismal record when it comes to health care, of course. They want to talk about the mismanagement of our public institutions, whether it be public education or other public institutions.

They are also very alive to this government's plans for their tax dollars and how the government plans to extract those tax dollars. I kind of test drove the government's position with a few voters up in Edmonton-Highlands earlier today. I said: so how do you feel about continuing to pay that .5 percent flat tax, that surcharge that you get hit with? They said: well, I'm not sure what you mean; could you explain a little bit? I said: you know when you fill out your Alberta tax payable calculation, when you fill out that form and right at the end of it you have to multiply whatever it is you owe to the Provincial Treasurer by .5 percent. They said: yeah. I said: well, you know, that was supposed to be a temporary tax, a surcharge. They said: yeah. I said: it was brought in in 1987 by then Premier Getty. They said: yeah, and we had a big deficit then. I said: right, but we don't have a deficit now. And they seemed to know what the Minister of Government Services doesn't know. They answered by saying: well, that's right; we have a big surplus now.

I said: that's right; we have a big surplus, so how do you feel about paying that tax? They said: okay; now we understand the question. We, of course, don't feel very good about paying that tax. We think it's sort of highway robbery. Why would we have to pay this extra tax?

I said: well, I can't answer that question. Do you know that there's another surtax? They said: what's that one all about? I said: well, if you earned taxable income that was a little bit higher, you'd have to pay an 8 percent tax on top of it all, another surcharge. They said: really? I said: yeah. They said: well, good news that we're not in that income tax bracket. I said: yeah, but you know what? For the people that are in that income tax bracket, the government has decided they're going to remove that special tax. They're going to stop picking their pockets.

They said: well, why would they do that? Why would they do favours for the rich? Why would they do that? Why aren't they going to do me a favour? What has this government done for me? I said: I can't answer that question. I can't explain the government's strategy.

Earlier today in question period we had some puffball question asked to the Acting Provincial Treasurer allowing him an opportunity to stand up once again and try to sell the government's flat tax plan. He talked again about how this government wants to bring real relief to low- and middle-income Albertans, and I'm scratching my head because there's such a gap between words and deeds. We have the Acting Provincial Treasurer saying we want to do something for low- and middle-income Albertans, but we have the government voting against amendments that would remove this unjustifiable, this unsupportable so-called deficit elimination tax.

The government can't argue that they can't afford it. This amendment would in essence accelerate their tax plan by about six months. It might mean a loss of $100 million to $150 million to the provincial Treasury, but that pales in comparison to the fact that oil is still so much higher and gas is still so much higher than what we had predicted it to be. For every dollar of increase in oil, we're up $130 million or $140 million in the provincial Treasury, so we've already taken care of the offset. It certainly would be affordable to remove this deficit elimination tax now, and it is indefensible to say that we're going to remove the one for the wealthiest Albertans first and leave the one that the rest of us have to pay.

I hope the Minister of Justice and Attorney General is now crystal clear what the intent of the Official Opposition is. It is Alberta Liberals who want to bring some tax relief to low- and middle-income Albertans. It is Alberta Liberals who would like to hold the government accountable for their 1996 election pledge and their 1996 budget promise. It is Alberta Liberals who are actually trying to keep the government's feet to the fire on their pledges to do something meaningful when it comes to the pocketbook and the bank account of those Albertans who, quite frankly, struggle between paycheques and sometimes find themselves with a little bit of month left over when the paycheque has run out.

It may not sound like a lot of money to this government that likes to talk in terms of lots of zeros and billions and millions and all their wealthy friends in the boardrooms. It may not seem like a lot of money, but from my perspective I think of the voters I met tonight in Edmonton-Highlands; I think of the men and women I spoke to on the picket lines around a couple of health care institutions. I can say to them: "Would you rather save a few dollars? Would you rather have that money back, or would you rather put that money in the pockets of the Acting Provincial Treasurer?" And they look at me in disbelief that I don't know the answer to that question. Of course they would like to have that money back in their own pockets. They would like to be able to use that money to help feed their family and to help pay for their mortgage or their rent. They'd like to have that money back so maybe they could even enjoy a little bit of recreation or leisure, and they don't think they have to give that money to the Provincial Treasurer.

I am asking my colleagues in this Assembly to take a good look at this amendment to clearly understand what it will accomplish, and for those of you who are my Conservative colleagues I would say this. Your government has made the pledge. Your government has taken this pledge to deliver some relief to low- and middle-income Albertans. They've said they were going to do it. They've said they were going to do it in this House. They've said they were going to do it in their budget documents. They've said they were going to do it in speeches. They've said they were going to do it in press releases. This will give you an opportunity to tell the government, to tell the cabinet that you would like them to keep that pledge, that you'd like them to keep that promise.

So I would ask for some nonpartisan consideration of this amendment. It is clear what it tries to do. It does not fundamentally alter the intent or the principles behind Bill 18. We still have lots of arguments in terms of the flat tax. We still have lots of arguments in terms of how this government has confused tax reform with tax relief. We still have lots of other issues with government tax policy, but on this one little narrow issue we can certainly join together and bring some needed relief to low- and middle-income Albertans.

Madam Chairman, I need to ask your advice about something. My amendment is on the floor. It's a motion that's on the floor. I'm anticipating that even though my arguments have been as persuasive and as powerful as I know how to make them, they may not carry the day. We may be faced with having to have a recorded vote. Standing Orders of course provide for a recorded vote requiring a 10-minute division, 10-minute bells. We could, by unanimous consent, reduce that time. Is it possible to ask for unanimous consent prior to calling the question on my amendment?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Certainly.

MR. SAPERS: Well, I would make this request then. If there's not clearly unanimous support to bring this kind of tax relief to Albertans, if there's a necessity to go to a recorded vote, I would ask unanimous consent that the time between bells be reduced to one minute.

[Unanimous consent granted]

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much. I'm hoping we won't have to go there. I appreciate the co-operation, but just in case.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: One clarification, hon. member, that the chair should ask. Will that be division bells all the way through?

MR. SAPERS: Well, just on this. We may have to seek unanimous consent again.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: You were just speaking about the amendment?

MR. SAPERS: Just on this amendment.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Okay. I should clarify that. That was on the amendment.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you. Thanks for that clarification.

Madam Chairman, I don't have a lot to add. I think the amendment speaks for itself, the intent speaks for itself. I don't want to repeat myself. I don't appreciate redundancy in the Chamber. There may be other speakers on this amendment; we'll see. But I'll let those comments stand, and I look forward to the vote.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Well, thank you, Madam Chairman. I don't intend to speak very long on this, but I would like to know if in fact I can get some clarification on this amendment, because one of the issues that had to be dealt with was the fact that many of the tax changes that were being proposed were being done in the time frame they were being done because the federal government required up to a year to program the changes in their computer. So to me the obvious question with respect to this amendment is: is it even possible to do this with respect to what may be possible to do on the federal side with respect to the year that it takes to do this? It's just really a question of clarification more than anything.

11:40

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks. I appreciate the opportunity to just clarify that.

Well, you know, I understand there are several agreements. There's the master TCA, the tax collection agreement, and there are the ongoing negotiations in terms of delinking and the printing of the new forms and all that. But to the hon. member who just asked the question, it's a legitimate concern. However, it's easily addressed. You see, the government of Alberta has already moved to accelerate parts of their tax plan. They've already moved to accelerate the part that removes the 8 percent surtax that the higher income earners pay. Certainly if they could move to do that, it would be a simple matter of just putting in one more line of code or one more calculation in the cell of the spreadsheet to also make a similar amendment in any of the computer programs for the .5 percent flat tax as well. If they could accelerate one without incurring those technical difficulties, it is beyond a doubt a fact that they could accelerate the other and bypass the same technical difficulties. So I'm certain it doesn't really pose much of a serious problem for all the good minds that work in the federal and provincial revenue departments.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A2 lost]

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I really appreciate that. Now, we're back just talking on the bill; right? There is nothing else on here? There are no amendments? Thank you.

Madam Chairman, I did want to talk a fair bit about seniors this evening. Our deputy whips know how important it is that seniors are benefitting from Bill 18 as well.

AN HON. MEMBER: They built this country.

MR. HLADY: They built this country and they built this province, hon. member.

Before I get into that, I just want to mention a little history in regards to the Leader of the Official Opposition and some comments that have been mentioned. It was a few years ago. There were some comments made in regard to the need to reduce taxes. I'm quoting from the Edmonton Journal. She mentioned: if we are going to reduce taxes, we have to reduce spending first. That was the comment the Leader of the Official Opposition had made a few years ago. When she made those comments, that was fair.

Today where would we be looking at doing those cuts from our spending? Where would she suggest we cut today? Would she suggest that we cut in the area of health or education? Why would you possibly want to see us doing that? Madam Chairman, over the last number of years we've gone through a process. We've got our spending under control, and now we're getting our taxes under control by reducing taxes and making it a much more friendly environment for all people to enjoy a health tax environment.

Getting back to seniors, Madam Chairman, we've been hearing a great deal in this Assembly about all the different groups of Albertans who see changes under Bill 18 – the high-income earners, the low-income Albertans, those who are single, those families where one parent stays at home or both work – but I really think it's important to address how these changes will affect the seniors that we were just speaking about. The seniors did build this province. They made it what we have today, and we should be respecting them by allowing them to have more free income to make things happen for themselves.

More than any other group of Albertans, I'd say seniors have a unique perspective on this province and the way it's run. They've helped Alberta grow into the vibrant province we enjoy today. They've seen its challenges and changes over the years, and they've seen how the various policies, various governments have created and affected things. That includes the high taxes we've been subject to. I'm sure seniors would agree that it is time they tasted some of the rewards for their hard work over the many years. Bill 18 and the new single-rate tax will do this for them.

You know, Madam Chairman, seniors, too, have paid a lot of taxes over the years. No one can deny that they've contributed, so there is no reason why they shouldn't see a break now. They should have some of their hard-earned cash back in their pockets today. Seniors will no longer be penalized by bracket creep. They will benefit from indexing the basic and spousal exemptions to the Alberta consumer price index like other Albertans, but they will also benefit from indexing the age amount and the pension amount. This means that seniors won't see their taxes increase over time simply because their fixed incomes increase by the amount of inflation.

Under Bill 18, with the new amendment that will move the single rate to 10 and a half percent, Madam Chairman, and raise the basic and spousal exemption to $12,900, seniors are going to save in all income brackets just as all Albertans will save under this plan. For example, a single senior making $20,000 will see a 62 percent tax cut. A senior couple earning $40,000 will see a 57 percent tax cut. These are just a couple of examples, but you can see that we're not talking about small numbers here. We're not talking about pennies. These people are going to save some pretty significant amounts of money.

This is especially important for most seniors, many of whom are on fixed incomes. Any amount of money they can save is money they need for their priorities in their lives today, whether it's fixing up their homes they've lived in for many, many years or whether it's being able to buy more food, fixing up their car. They may want to go on a trip somewhere. Whatever they need, Madam Chairman, this allows them to have more flexibility to take that money.

I'd say that most of the people in this Assembly today still have their parents and grandparents around and have a chance to experience the wonderful thing it is to have that family. Family is a very, very important part of life in Alberta. Giving our family members, our friends, and our friends' family members a chance to have more and do more is the thing that we should be doing. It's the right thing to do, Madam Chairman.

You know, last year the United Nations declared the year as the International Year of Older Persons. The theme they chose was Towards a Society for All Ages. Of course, 1999 is now over, but I think this theme is something we should really continue to try and foster in this province. We should work towards a society that benefits all ages and all age groups, just as we should work towards a tax system that benefits all age groups and income levels.

You know, as a government we are well aware of the contributions our seniors have made, and we have really done some great things in terms of seniors' programs, especially lower income seniors. We've done what we can to make sure seniors have a comfortable life, and it especially applies to seniors who need the extra help. We introduced the Alberta seniors' benefit, with increased benefits for low-income seniors, and the special needs assistance programs for times of extreme need. In Budget 2000 we added a 10 percent cost of living adjustment for seniors' benefits. This is something that we heard when we were out talking to the seniors. We knew what they were looking for, they needed some more, and therefore we increased the benefit.

Now, Madam Chairman, we've recreated our tax system through Bill 18 so that all Albertans will benefit, including seniors. For a long time there has been talk about what more we can do for seniors, especially considering our aging population. I really think this is going to be a great benefit for seniors because it puts more money back into the pockets of Albertans, including each and every senior citizen.

Governments around the country have been receiving the call for lower taxes. We're doing something about it here, Madam Chairman. We know the pressures that we're seeing happening as we see a wonderful leadership race happening across this country. It's going to be exciting because I think we're seeing the pressure put on the federal government in Ottawa that there is a demand from Canadians across this country to see lower taxes.

This pressure will only continue over time, and as we see the changing economy happening and things moving along, I think that by the fall, with the predictions of a potential federal election, there's going to be a real race, a race between the federal Liberals and the future parties that are chasing this. It will be an economic picture, pushing for lower taxes across this country.

AN HON. MEMBER: Is this relevant?

MR. HLADY: Sure it is. This is relevant, Madam Chairman, and the reason it is relevant is because we're talking about lowering taxes, lowering taxes in this province and lowering taxes in this country. Taxes need to be lowered in this country because in this bill the most we can affect is about a third of the tax position for Albertans. The federal government controls two-thirds of that. Hopefully Ottawa is listening to the debate that's going on here in Alberta and realizing the importance of lower taxes to be fair to the rest of Canadians across the country. We're doing the best we can for Albertans here.

MR. SAPERS: But, Mark, you don't want to be fair with the flat tax, and you don't want to be fair with the surcharge.

MR. HLADY: The flat tax is the fairest form of tax, Madam Chairman, and it's a wonderful thing. It's the best thing we could possibly have out there. The opposition continues to come at it and say that it's not fair. It's the fairest form of tax because the harder you work and the more money you make, the more taxes you pay, but you aren't penalized incrementally for working harder and making it not worthwhile.

In the examples I used yesterday when I spoke to this, Madam Chairman, were nurses working inside our hospitals today. They're putting time in and overtime in. What they're doing is making more money, but they're not making more money because they get moved up into higher tax brackets. That's the wrong thing to be doing. It's no reason to take their money. What they end up doing is having to take time off because it doesn't make sense to take the money and use it for their families. It's the wrong way to be doing things. The flat tax makes it fair. It allows them to keep more money, decide what they want to do, and have more money in their pockets at the end of the day. That's why this is the way to go.

Madam Chairman, governments around the country have been receiving the call for the lower taxes, as I was just explaining. Here in Alberta we've not only heard this call; we've taken decisive action to do something about it. We've created a new tax plan that the rest of the country has definitely taken notice of. When Ottawa followed our lead – partially; we'd like to see them go a lot further – we re-examined that plan to make sure every single Albertan is still receiving the benefits.

We had originally set our flat tax plan at 11 percent, but when Ottawa came out with their new budget, and they had looked at it and had changed their tax plan, it was important that we brought our tax plan down a little lower so that it would be fairer for all Albertans. We didn't want to see anyone not receiving a good benefit from the changes.

Madam Chairman, again coming back to some comments that I hear around the room, I think in the race between certain parties out there federally we're going to see more pressure coming and pushing down the level of taxes at a federal level. That will benefit not only Albertans but all Canadians. Speaking for Albertans, that will only allow this economy to be stimulated more. We'll see more jobs created here. We'll see more wonderful things happening in every sector of the economy.

The technology sector is very acutely aware of the need to have lower taxes. We see the brain drain happening. We see people going down to the U.S. We know that they'd be moving this way if we saw the lower tax rates, making it more advantageous for these workers to be here. To continue on in regards to that, I know that the Minister of Innovation and Science has been working very hard on creating a technology sector that would be very willing to see the lower tax rates, because they know that we can see this part of the economy be what it can be. In the past year we've seen $135 million invested in technology in this province. That's a very, very small number as an industry. The industry needs to be looking at a billion dollars a year in this province, and that's something we've been working towards. With the lower tax rates we're going to be able to see this sector grow, and we're going to see people attracted from all over North America.

Madam Chairman, I'm looking forward to seeing this bill come into effect because I know that all Albertans are going to benefit from it. Even the Liberals are going to benefit from it, so this is a really great thing.

Thank you, Madam Chairman.

12:00

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: It is after midnight, so due notice having been given by the hon. Government House Leader under Standing Order 21 and pursuant to Government Motion 21, agreed to May 24, 2000, under Standing Order 21(2), which states that all questions must be decided in order to conclude the debate on Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill 18, Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, I must now put the following questions to you.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following: Bill 18. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
head: Third Reading

Bill 18
Alberta Personal Income Tax Act

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is certainly a privilege to be able to move Bill 18 for third reading on behalf of the Provincial Treasurer.

With this step, with this third reading of the bill and hopefully final passage, perhaps even tonight . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: A valiant try.

MR. HANCOCK: Madam Speaker, you're always thinking I'm joking about these things. With the possibility of passing Bill 18 into law very soon, Albertans are taking one step closer to tax freedom, one step closer to being delinked from the insidious federal tax process, one step closer to really having some tax relief finally in Alberta.

What I would really like to know but I guess I'll never know is whether if this House in committee had supported the amendment brought forward by Edmonton-Glenora, that would have been enough to bring the Liberals onside to supporting true tax reform or after supporting that amendment and adding that amendment to the bill, whether that would have been the lever which would put them over the top and into tax reform and into supporting Albertans' tax freedom, moving up our tax freedom day so that Albertans can keep money in their pockets, so that Albertans can continue to grow with the economy, can continue to improve with the economic growth of this province.

Madam Speaker, as has been said in this House – and I don't want to belabour it, but it bears saying at least one more time – with Bill 18 every person in this province will benefit. Albertans at every income level will pay less income tax because of Bill 18. One hundred and ninety thousand Albertans will be relieved from the burden of paying a provincial tax.

Bill 18 is a long and complex bill, but it boils down to some very important concepts. One hundred and ninety thousand Albertans will no longer pay provincial tax. Why? Because the personal exemption is being raised to $12,900. As important as that, the spousal exemption is being raised to the same amount as the personal exemption, which is very important for families in this province. It's very high. It's going to take 190,000 Albertans – did I say that already? – off the tax rolls.

So it's hard to believe that the Alberta Liberals would oppose such an important bill. It's hard to believe that the Alberta Liberals would want Albertans to pay more tax. It proves once again that they share the same skin as their federal cousins. The idea is to tax Albertans to death. [interjections] I'm being encouraged to continue.

Madam Speaker, I just wanted to say one more time what an important bill this is. Originally the personal exemption level was to go to $11,620, but with the amendment passed in committee, $12,900 is the personal exemption, $12,900 as a spousal exemption. Can you imagine what that will mean to single-income families in this province, to low-income earners in this province? That is going to mean a huge and immediate tax break.

So in combination with Bill 19, which passed third reading earlier this evening, and now with Bill 18 coming into effect, Albertans at low income, middle income, and high income are going to have the real advantage, the Alberta advantage. They're going to be in the best position of anybody in this country with respect to tax. They are going to maintain that tax advantage. They're going to have the benefits of their hard work. They're going to have the benefits of the economic activity that's happened in this province. The brain drain is in reverse. The brains are going to be coming back, because this is and it's going to be and remain the best province in the best country in the world to live.

So, Madam Speaker, I think every member in this House should support Bill 18. I can't understand why the Liberals would oppose it. They should be onboard with it. They should vote for it tonight, but I know they don't want to vote for it tonight. They want to have one last opportunity to show Albertans they're not in favour of tax cuts. They want to speak on it longer to tell Albertans why they shouldn't get tax breaks and why they shouldn't have the best tax advantage in the world.

So, Madam Speaker, in order to accommodate that, I'm going to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 18.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[At 12:19 a.m. on Thursday the Assembly adjourned to 1:30 p.m.]

I've had a wonderful visit with the group. We welcome them to Edmonton and to Alberta.

They are accompanied by the assistant to Mr. Gibbons, our MLA for Edmonton-Manning, Mrs. Loreen Kabanuk. I would ask that the Senator and the honoured guests in your gallery please rise and receive the customary warm welcome of the Alberta Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by 154 people from Grande Prairie, Sexsmith, Fairview, Didsbury, and Edmonton. This will bring the total to almost 74,000 people who have signed a similar petition saying:

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am tabling a petition bearing a total of 330 signatures calling upon the Legislative Assembly to maintain Kananaskis Country in a natural state, to deny development approval for the projects proposed for that region, and to create a wildland park in the Spray and Kananaskis valleys.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would present a petition signed by 162 citizens from Edmonton, Spruce Grove, St. Albert, Calgary, Turner Valley, Red Deer, Cold Lake, Sherwood Park, Vegreville, and Millet urging the government to allocate funding "specifically to Speech-Language Pathology and Occupational Therapies based on children's needs."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Calgary Herald strike is 200 days old, and on this day I'm pleased to present a petition to the Assembly signed by 394 Albertans. The petition reads as follows: "We, the undersigned, petition the assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Anybody interested in obtaining copies can obtain them by calling 422-1095.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to table the requisite number of copies, being five, of information on the compliance inspection program developed by Alberta Environment to ensure that companies comply with our environmental legislation.

MRS. LAING: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague for Calgary-West I would like to table five copies of 13 letters and e-mail from constituents of Calgary-West regarding the need to address low wages of child care workers in day care centres in Calgary.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to table my letter to the Prime Minister of Canada reflecting concerns for my Vietnam-born constituents and expressing my strong feelings against the deplorable hasty execution of a Vietnam-born Canadian citizen sentenced and held in a Vietnamese prison, especially in light of an amnesty granted a few days later on the 25th anniversary of the end of the Vietnam war. In the letter I also strongly object to any kind of illegal activity inside, between countries, and any business operation that would bring social harm to Canada, Vietnam, or any other country.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of a spreadsheet which compares the Tory flat tax proposal with the Liberal tax proposal, which almost looks like a flat tax, with a truly progressive tax proposal that's prepared by the New Democrats.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the required number of copies of two letters today. The first is from Robbin Yager of Calgary; the second, from Evelyn Otte of Calgary. Both parties are opposed to the proposed Spray Lakes development by Genesis Land Development Corporation.

DR. MASSEY: Mr. Speaker, with permission I table five copies of the fee schedule that students and schools must pay to access practice copies of the achievement and diploma exams by the Department of Learning.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a letter written by Mr. Paul Cetinski to the Premier regarding his questioning of the credibility of certain comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview regarding his position on Bill 11. It goes on to question the government's position on free votes and the protection of public health care.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

1:40

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I am pleased to table a report from the web master of www.garydickson.ab.ca that shows that in the period of May 18 to May 23 there were 324 visits, and 63 percent registered their support for a progressive tax system and not a flat tax system.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have an article here from the Sunday Times, a British newspaper, sent to me by Senator Nick Taylor, which outlines again the dangers towards one's health care in terms of a private health care system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of Health Matters, a negotiations update issued today, May 25, 2000, by AUPE. These employees are Alberta's working people, and they are the salt of the earth and deserve a fair settlement from this government.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first is from the British Medical Journal entitled Decentralised Health Care in Canada. It indicates that "the rise of for-profit organizations . . . may further threaten access to care and service . . . as money goes to profit-taking rather than health services."

The second is an article also out of the journal. It's entitled Quality of Care in Investor-Owned vs Not-for-Profit HMOs. It indicates that "compared with not-for-profit HMOs, investor-owned plans had lower rates for all 14 quality-of-care indicators."

My third is a compilation of three documents put out by the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, Health Matters and On the Line, indicating the inequities in pay as well as the reasons for the current strike.

Thank you very much.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to all members two gentlemen who have given long and loyal service to this Assembly who are retiring from their service to you and to all who enter this Chamber. After lengthy careers in the Edmonton Police Service Mr. Cliff Tetzlaff and Mr. Cliff Chapman came to the Legislative Assembly security staff in 1990. Both have demonstrated diplomacy, tact, and good humour, coupled with a smile and a fair but firm approach, which has made them liked and respected by all members and staff.

Mr. Speaker, on this their last day with us we thank them for their devoted service to this parliament and wish them well in their retirement. Cliff Tetzlaff and Cliff Chapman are seated in your gallery. I'd now ask them to rise and receive the grateful thanks of this House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always a great thrill to introduce students that come and visit the Legislature. I don't very often have that pleasure and that thrill, but today I'm absolutely delighted to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 41 students from Isabelle Sellon school in the beautiful Crowsnest Pass. These students are here today to observe and to participate in Alberta's government. They are accompanied on this long trip by two teachers, Mrs. Gail Ancelet and Miss Debbie McKinlay, along with five parent helpers: Mrs. Bonnie Dingreville, Mrs. Elaine Zaitsoff, Mrs. Anna Oliveri, Mrs. Sonya Coccioloni, and Miss Chelsea Somerville. They are seated in the members' gallery. I ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the ESL 3000 group from my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. With us today are 14 students and their supervisor, Penny Deonarain. These students are in the international program at the University of Alberta and are here as part of a study program to learn English as a second language. Many already have degrees in their particular field of study. They come to Alberta and Edmonton from Mexico, Japan, Korea, and many other countries. They're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three introductions today. First, I'd like to introduce a person seated in the members' gallery, a person that's very well known to the agriculture community in the province of Alberta, Mr. Phil Hyde. He's the person working for Agricore in the corporate affairs division and traveling extensively throughout the province of Alberta. I'd ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Speaker, the second group of visitors that I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly are 24 visitors from Two Hills high school. The grade 10 students are accompanied today by Ms April Dery, bus driver Bill, and most importantly, perhaps his last visit to this Assembly as principal of Two Hills high school, Mr. Ron Rudkowsky, who will be retiring at the end of this school term, leaving behind him a tremendous legacy of not only good principalship but also an excellent person in both communities of Willingdon and Two Hills. We wish him all the best from the Assembly. I'd ask them to rise in the public gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My last introduction, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two constituents who are seated in the members' gallery, Mrs. Bev Homeniuk and Shauna Bennett. Shauna is a second-year business administration student at NAIT and will be spending the summer in our constituency office as our STEP student. Shauna is very fortunate to have as her mentor and role model Bev Homeniuk. Bev has been managing our Vegreville-Viking constituency office since I entered politics in 1993. She's a very valuable member of our team and provides a tremendous service to my constituents and, quite frankly, no doubt makes me look better than I actually am. I would ask Shauna and Bev to please rise in the members' gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Dr. Eugene Meehan, QC, president of the Canadian Bar Association. Dr. Meehan's time here in Alberta was spent from 1978 through 1986 as a professor of law at the University of Alberta, where I attended and took classes from him. I am most grateful for the instruction that he has given me in the past and continues to give me now. I ask that he now rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly today a group of hardworking members of AUPE local 42, mental health therapists and support staff, all of whom provide much-valued service to people in their care with exceptional commitment and skill. They're all seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Workforce Labour Dispute

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's words to the other western first ministers were: go home; mind your own business; look at your own legislation and stay out of ours. [interjections] It's interesting to see the government members respond and clap for that. Apparently the Premier wants the same level of input from first ministers that he wanted from Albertans. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister tell us exactly what is so important in Manitoba that the Premier is not dealing with the largest single strike in the history of this province?

1:50

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the Premier of this province is fulfilling his duties as leader of this government at an important conference with other Premiers. I can assure you that he has been in very regular contact with both Alberta Health and Wellness and Human Resources and Employment. Both of us as ministers have been in regular contact with his office. He is certainly concerned about the bargaining and labour action and is working in concert with everyone to bring this labour dispute to a successful conclusion.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the reason the Premier has apparently washed his hands of this strike because he has given up on public health care in this province?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think this is hardly the case. The Premier has led in terms of making health a priority of this government. We have committed a great deal of additional funding to the health care system. Most recently we have made a number of additional announcements. We have matched basically the money that came in a very disappointing amount from the federal government and added that to the funding for the health care system to address waiting lists and other issues within the health care system. The government is, as I said, making health care its top priority, and it's demonstrating that through the commitment of resources and through the taking of major initiatives to continue to improve the system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Yes. I'd just like to supplement. Certainly the negotiations have been going on almost steadily since Monday. The parties to the dispute have been basically on 24-hour shifts, but more importantly so have the mediators and the staff from Human Resources and Employment.

I want to assure everyone that the Premier and the Premier's office have been kept up to date and current on all matters, and we have had discussions with the Premier at numerous times about this particular issue. Under the government system powers are delegated to ministers. It's our responsibility to take care of these situations and of course to keep the Premier advised.

THE SPEAKER: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the real reason why this Premier ignored Albertans' input on Bill 11 because he's decided to now promote private health care throughout this province?

MR. JONSON: No, Mr. Speaker. We very clearly stand for a publicly funded and publicly administered health care system in this province. We are providing resources, putting more focus on the overall welfare of that particular system than I think any other province in Canada at this point in time. We are certainly committed to having the best possible health care system in the country, and that is being demonstrated by action.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: My questions are also to the Minister of Health and Wellness, Mr. Speaker. Given that some of the Albertans affected by the strike have been working for 10 to 15 years and are still receiving entry-level wages, where is the incentive for these people to stay in this profession and for others to even enter it?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the course of negotiations the relative position of different occupational groups in the health care system is being addressed in terms of the negotiations. The health authorities have been open to reasonable adjustments in that particular area, and as the Leader of the Opposition across the way certainly knows having been involved in wage settlements and so forth, it is impossible for me to get into the details of those negotiations and not advisable here in the Assembly. So those types of questions, I suppose, can be answered.

But quite clearly, Mr. Speaker, we have made the area of health care a priority. We want to be fair to the people working within the health care system, and we are. There is a process of negotiation that has to be respected.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that this minister said yesterday that "we are significantly increasing the education opportunities in our postsecondary institutions for the health workforce in this province," why would these newly trained workers stay in Alberta when they can receive better wages and more respect in other provinces and countries?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I will use an example which is not under negotiations currently but was not that long ago in negotiations. Let's take the nursing profession in this province. We have not that long ago concluded a comprehensive agreement with nurses in this province. Their ranking in terms of pay scale, as I recall, is about second in this country only to Ontario.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, if you look at the other costs that people have to pay, such as taxes, I think you'd find that the take-home pay of, for instance, nurses is right at the top of the remuneration in this country. So that hardly, I think, indicates that we are not providing an attractive environment from a financial standpoint here in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can this minister explain what the government's rationale is for LPNs, licensed practical nurses, in long-term care being offered less than licensed practical nurses in acute care?

MR. JONSON: Well, the provincial government is not the direct negotiator here, as the member well knows. I can recall back at the time that she was minister of health in this province her making statements to the health authorities or their equivalent at that time that they could not expect any additional funding; they would have to work out their own labour agreements with nurses and other practitioners. That's on the record, Mr. Speaker. I can certainly prove that.

So I think, Mr. Speaker, that there is a process of negotiation that has to be respected. It's my understanding that the whole issue of differentials relative to the positions on the grid is being addressed.

THE SPEAKER: Third main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

School Classroom Sizes

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to my questions on May 16 the Minister of Learning claimed that schools could address their class size problems through the Alberta initiative for school improvement program. Teachers and administrators have expressed concern about the minister's response. While over $170 million available through the initiative for school improvement program sounds like a lot, when distributed over three years and the total student population in this province, school board officials and principals will end up with maybe $130 per student per year extra. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Will the minister confirm that under the Alberta initiative for school improvement program a school would have to have a population of at least 400 students to add just one new teaching position to that school?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta initiative for school improvement is a program that will be putting $66 million per year into the school boards. It is up to the school boards to make a decision as to where this money is spent. This is not money that is spent equally in every school. It is up to the school boards as to where the importance of that particular school board lies. It's up to the school boards to put that money where they feel it is important.

Mr. Speaker, when I became minister, flexibility was something that the school boards wanted. They wanted the ability to address funds, to put money where they felt the important needs were. This is a program that has been universally accepted and that has been universally met with great approval from all school boards and teachers.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, how are smaller schools, especially elementary schools, most of which are well under the 400 mark, to reduce their class sizes given that the initiative for school improvement program clearly is inadequate for these smaller schools? Where is their flexibility?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. Leader of the Opposition is not listening. The funding is given to the school boards so that the school boards can allocate the funding where they feel it is important in their school jurisdiction. A lot of the school boards feel that it is important to put this money in one particular area. Sixty-six million dollars, $170 million over three years is a lot of dollars.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, since giving private schools money from the Alberta initiative for school improvement would mean even less money for the public school system to reduce their class sizes, will the government be giving the private schools the benefit of the Alberta initiative for school improvement funds?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, again, it is very unfortunate that the hon. Leader of the Opposition does not read press releases, does not read any of these things. If she did, if she had the privilege to read the actual communique, she would realize that $66 million was given to the public school system and an extra $2 million was given to the private schools so that they, too, could take a look at pilot projects that would improve education in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last few days this government's policy to completely ban the strikes in Alberta hospitals has once again been shown to accomplish nothing other than to add to the bitterness and acrimony in health care labour relations. You can demonize trade unions, which this government does as often as it can, and trivialize their efforts to seek fairness for workers, but you cannot change the fact that this government's policies are to blame for the current state of affairs in the health care sector. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister please explain how or why it is fair that low-paid health care providers like LPNs and psychiatric care aides have seen their pay go up by a minuscule 5 percent over the last eight years, while the pay of senior officials in the minister's department has gone up by at least 40 percent, eight times as much? Would you please explain that?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, we are in a position right now where negotiations, I expect, will resume with respect to the overall labour issue facing the province. I would like to refer the question to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment in terms of the particular stage that the bargaining is at. But we do have a set of labour laws which I think are as fair and reasonable as any province. We are following through as a government on bargaining in the context of that structure.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how can the government, on one hand, claim that it's doing all it can to resolve the current labour dispute while simultaneously preparing to proclaim Bill 11, which sets out a blueprint for contracting out more health care services to non-union private-sector providers and employers?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think, first of all, that with respect to collective bargaining this has taken place in this province last year and the year before in the different sectors of health care and education and industry. It goes on every year in this province, and this is another very important round of bargaining that is taking place. It has no particular relationship to Bill 11, although the member is trying to drag this in.

I would remind the hon. member that the provisions of Bill 11 set out some very important criteria for regional health authorities to consider when they are looking at awarding contracts. One of them is that there be an overall cost benefit to the system. I don't think that can be argued with. We do want an efficient system.

Secondly, there are a number of other criteria with respect to the openness of contracts and so forth, Mr. Speaker, which provide I think a very open and criteria-based system for awarding contracts.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Will the minister commit to repealing section 94 of the Labour Relations Code, which creates an unhealthy labour relations atmosphere in the health care sector, and instead appoint a representative and independent panel to review the circumstances under which health care workers should be allowed to legally strike?

MR. DUNFORD: Absolutely not will I repeal the section that the member has advised. Again in this Assembly today we have yet to hear about the innocent third party. There is no concern being expressed on the part of any of the opposition members. We have people that are in care that need attention. Their families are being put through a series of situations. They are worried about their loved ones.

This is an illegal strike. The people that are involved in providing these services are important to the system. They are not only important to the system, they have been deemed to be essential to the system. As an essential service they do not have the right to strike. The strike that is ongoing at the present time is an illegal strike.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to supplement the answers that have been given to questions raised by the Leader of the Official Opposition and the third party. There was reference made as to . . .

Speaker's Ruling Supplementary Responses

THE SPEAKER: Please, hon. minister. Right now we have a question that is a supplemental question from the hon. leader of the third party. We've missed the time to supplement another question. Please proceed.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the context of the question raised by the leader of the third party I wanted to clarify one thing as to this government's concern over the situation right now. Our Premier, unlike what was mentioned earlier, is in fact still at the Premiers' meetings in Manitoba. The Premiers have been meeting today. In fact, they've just broken. They've been meeting today with governors from the United States and will be staying there for the rest of the day to do a commemorative ceremony.

I want to make sure that this Assembly is very much aware that our Premier has been in constant contact with our ministers on this issue and has sent out a message to encourage everyone back to the bargaining table. So please rest assured that our Premier is very much involved in this and is encouraging people to get to the table quickly.

THE SPEAKER: The Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Francophone Education in Calgary

MRS. LAING: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A new Francophone education authority will be in place in Calgary in September 2000. Catholic Francophone parents in Calgary wish to remain under the Calgary separate school board's jurisdiction to ensure that a curriculum reflecting their beliefs is offered to their children. Currently there are 501 Francophone children enrolled for September 2000 with the Catholic board in Calgary. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Why can't these parents' wishes be met under the new regional Francophone board's mandate?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that excellent question. What the parents in the Calgary Catholic school board are asking for is both Francophone and Catholic education.

2:10

Mr. Speaker, what I'd like to do today is quote from canon law, which Bishop Henry from Calgary sent to me.

1 A catholic school is understood to be one which is under the control of the competent ecclesiastical authority or a public ecclesiastical juridical person, or one which in a written document is acknowledged as catholic by the ecclesiastical authority.

2 Formation and education in a catholic school must be based on the principles of a catholic doctrine, and teachers must be outstanding in true doctrine and uprightness of life.

And 3, which is probably the most important, is

No school, even if it is in fact catholic, may bear the title 'catholic school' except by the consent of the local ecclesiastical authority.

That is canon 803.

Mr. Speaker, what this means is that unless the bishop in Calgary, the ecclesiastical authority, authorizes the Francophone school to indeed be a Catholic school, these children cannot have a Catholic education unless they are under the Calgary Catholic school authority.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

MRS. LAING: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the minister again. Why hasn't the Calgary separate board, as it represents a large number of Francophone families, been part of the consultation process to develop the new Francophone curriculum for this September?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, this is the interesting enigma about this issue. I will now quote from the Constitution. Section 23 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms states that the right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of a province

- (a) applies wherever in the province the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision to them out of public funds of minority language instruction; and
- (b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.

Mr. Speaker, more important is that section 23 has been interpreted by the Supreme Court of Canada on three occasions. The key to this interpretation in Alberta is that when a Francophone authority is established to serve an attendance area, as it has been for Calgary, the responsibility to offer a Francophone program that satisfies section 23 of the Charter of Rights can be exercised only by that authority, because it is the board elected by Francophone electors. So according to the interpretation of the Supreme Court only the Francophone authority in southern Alberta can supply a Francophone education. The Calgary Catholic can supply a French language education but not a Francophone education.

MRS. LAING: My last supplemental, Mr. Speaker, is also to the Minister of Learning. Is it possible to allocate one of the newly identified surplus Calgary public school board schools for the regional Francophone board to use?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Certainly it is possible to do that. As a matter of fact, in Calgary the Calgary public has successfully negotiated a transfer of one school to the new Francophone authority. This is the Francophone school that the Calgary public was running before, and that has been transferred over.

The issue in this debate is over the Francophone and catholicity of the school jurisdictions. As in my response to the previous two questions, the issue is around catholicity of these schools and whether or not the Francophone authority can adequately provide a Catholic education to its students.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Student Achievement Practice Tests

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Much importance is accorded by the government to student performance on achievement and diploma examinations. Access to old exams for practice purposes was available free on the Internet until recently, when a user fee was imposed. My question to the Learning minister: what additional funding will be provided to schools to cover the cost of accessing the practice achievement examinations?

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The practice achievement tests are available on the Internet. If the teachers want the practice tests, they are available for a cost of roughly $3 to $4, which covers the copyright costs of those practice achievement tests.

DR. MASSEY: How is the government ensuring that these exams are available to all Albertans, not just parents and schools with money?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, I believe I just said that they are available over the Internet and that the majority of areas in this province have the ability to access the Internet. If the teachers do not have the ability to access the Internet, it is available in hard copy, as I stated, for $3 to $4, which does cover the copyright costs.

DR. MASSEY: Mr. Speaker, given that the exam questions are created and compiled by the government of Alberta and licensed to a private company, how much is the government going to make on the new user fees?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, absolutely nothing. It covers the copyright costs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Air Canada/Canadian Airlines Merger

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the recent merger of Air Canada and Canadian Airlines I'm hearing and reading more and more about problems with regards to access to airlines, capacity, reduced flights, and increased fares. In light of this very apparent problem, especially in the high tourism season in Alberta, my question is to the Minister of Economic Development. Can the minister explain if this merger is having a direct impact on the economy of our province?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure to move from a discussion of both canon and copyright laws to the laws of aeronautics.

My answer to the hon. member is simply yes, this merger is having a very negative impact on Alberta as it is elsewhere across the country. Overall capacity has been reduced, making it difficult for passengers to book both inbound and outbound flights from and to Alberta. This is not the message we want to be delivering to both the business community and certainly the tourists who are looking at booking flights during our upcoming high season.

I'd like to very quickly provide the House with some numbers from April, the first month the two airlines operated on a combined schedule. Air Canada's traffic jumped by 23 percent, but concurrent with that it added only 15 percent capacity. In Calgary, Mr. Speaker, Vancouver to Calgary flights, for example, are down to 10 from 22 per day, and Toronto to Calgary flights are down from 20 a day to 15, and for Calgary and Edmonton there's been a reduction in capacity of 23 percent and 14 percent respectively.

We have concerns in the long run, Mr. Speaker, that reduced competition and reduced capacity will lead to higher fares and certainly have a negative impact on our economy not only from a business perspective but also from a tourism perspective.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Given this negative impact, what does the Minister of Economic Development plan to do now in this near-monopoly situation?

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, at the recent provincial/territorial meeting there was unanimous agreement that competition within and access to airline services on a regional, national, and international basis in the short term was critical to not only providing but improving levels of service to tourists and international business travelers. All ministers will be having follow-up discussions in the near future and will be conveying that position to the relevant federal ministers.

Also, Mr. Speaker, we're going to hold the federal government to its word. It has created an airline ombudsman, and that individual is to report to the Minister of Transport regularly regarding difficulties and questions that arise as a result of the consolidation that has taken place in the industry. Also, the federal Competition Bureau is to have increased power to prevent anticompetitive behaviour when it suspects Air Canada of acting as a monopoly, and we will certainly be monitoring the activities of that bureau very closely.

Just the other day I had the opportunity to meet with the Minister of Industry, Mr. John Manley, and we expressed our concern regarding the present status of airline services in this country at that time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the federal Minister of Transport has suggested that if significant competition doesn't emerge within Canada itself, he'll look at allowing foreign carriers to compete domestically, does the minister endorse this concept?

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, if it would result in increased capacity and lower fares for both tourists, international travelers, in fact all travelers, then certainly, yes, we would endorse that. Alberta is an open and free market, and we encourage competition in all sectors.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we are already hearing complaints from some international carriers who feel the merger and the corresponding federal legislation will cost them passengers and result in increased fares from reduced competition. For example, Air Canada recently increased its charge to one international carrier for the Halifax-Toronto portion of a Halifax-Toronto-London flight from $793 to $2,323.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Oh, no.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes, it did happen. That's an increase of $1,530.

It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that laws exist in virtually every other country that require local carriers to offer passengers of their international competitors fares comparable to those they offer their own customers. Now, I'm not suggesting that we put in place that legislation at this point in time. Nevertheless, if this trend does continue, perhaps the better solution is to simply open up the field to international competition, and let them compete on a fair and equal basis with Air Canada.

Personal Income Tax

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Speaker, in 1996 in the budget the government promised to get rid of one of two deficit elimination taxes: the .5 percent personal income flat tax that it had originally imposed on Albertan taxpayers back in 1987 to help eliminate the deficit. Well, the deficit is gone. Thanks to strong petrochemical markets, the innovation and the hard work of Alberta's private sector, and windfall gambling profits, this province hasn't had a deficit for several years now, yet all Albertans remain burdened with the .5 percent personal income flat tax that seems to be favoured by this government even though the government has rushed to remove the high-income surtax, an action that'll benefit so very few. My questions are to the Acting Treasurer. Will the Acting Treasurer explain to the low- and middle-income taxpayers of this province why the removal of the provincial surtax, which benefits just high-income earners, was more important than removing the provincial income flat tax, which would have benefited all Albertans?

DR. WEST: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. First of all, we had a challenge back in '92-'93 to remove $3.4 billion from overspending in this government, and we worked hard to do that. During that period of time, we had made a commitment that this 8 percent surtax, which was for deficit elimination, would be removed. So in due course, after we had balanced the budget, paid off the net debt, and now are working on our first mortgage in the province of Alberta – and I would say that when the figures come out in a month or so, we will take the next part of the mortgage down significantly, probably making a five-year payment in one.

As we looked at our budgets going from the time that we had come in with seven balanced budgets plus surpluses, we said: first of all, let's look at the social programs that we have in the province. So we brought in a budget last year that acknowledged a 21 percent increase in health care, and since then we've also acknowledged that we will be putting back some $178 million into up-front needs in waiting lists and in retraining people and in doing other things.

In education we said that we would work on 2,500 new teaching positions and assistants as well as increasing the budget there. I think it's some 18 percent over three years. At the same time, we looked at children's services. We looked at the law and order programs, protecting the environment. Agriculture: we brought out a program because the federal government stopped at our border.

After we got through all of that we said: now that we've got our house in order and we've addressed the services, we're going to start taking out the commitment in those taxes. First, the 8 percent surtax . . .

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me try to focus the Acting Provincial Treasurer's attention. Why has the government rejected Alberta Liberal amendments to both bills 18 and 19 that would have eliminated this extra tax on Albertans, especially in light of the huge budget surplus which the Treasurer is already talking about? Why did you eliminate the high-income tax first?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, what they've done here the last couple of weeks is try to insinuate to Albertans that there is something wrong with a single rate of tax. They have also come in and said: we'd do a better job by bringing the .5 percent out first, then taking the 8 percent surtax out. Well, Mr. Speaker, that's just a mug's game.

The other thing that has become evident in this whole process is that they don't understand the tax system. They've misled Albertans. They do know that the .5 percent is part of the $1.3 billion and starts falling off on January 1, 2001. The 8 percent surtax they know is coming off this year. The blended between the 8 percent, the .5 percent, and going to a single rate will take $1.3 billion out of the tax system. They don't even like the single rate of tax.

Now, here's a glowing irregularity in their projections so that people understand what they do know about taxation. They had come out and said: you know, what we would do is that people up to $100,000 would have a 10 percent single tax, and anybody making $100,000 would be taxed 12 percent on all of it. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has said: yes, we would tax the first $100,000 at 10 percent and anything over that at 12 percent.

Speaker's Ruling

Brevity

Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Thank you very much, hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer. This only begets a problem. Brevity is important. The purpose of question period is not to extend the debate. This afternoon on the Order Paper I do believe there is third reading of a particular personal income tax bill, and we're now involved in a debate in the question period. The dilemma here is that I have a whole series of private members who still have questions.

So if you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, have a very brief question which leads to a very brief response from, I presume, the hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer, then we'll allow the next one. But anything more than that, I'm cutting the questioner off before the question ever gets to the responder, because I've got other private members who have important business too.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm with you.

Personal Income Tax

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Speaker, why does the government still want the money generated from the .5 percent personal income flat tax to be in the pockets of the Acting Provincial Treasurer instead of in the pocketbooks of Albertans? Why is that?

DR. WEST: Well, all I can continue is the answer I was giving about how they do not understand the tax system to start with.

Now, I was saying that the person from Edmonton-Glenora here had said at one point in time in Hansard: no, no, we didn't mean to take 12 percent on the whole $100,000; we were going to take 10 percent on the first and 12 percent after. But that's not what the Leader of the Opposition had said in bringing forth their tax plan.

So what that means, assuming that this is really the way the Liberals intend the system to work, is that a tax filer with a $99,999 income would pay $8,643 in tax while a filer with an income of $100,000 – that's $1 more of income – would pay $10,372. So by making $1 more, that poor taxpayer would pay $1,729 more in tax. One dollar more. Do they understand this tax system at all?

THE SPEAKER: I'd really do a courtesy to both the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora and the hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer. I'm actually going to send you copies of the Blues in anticipation of further debate on this matter later on in the afternoon.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Midwifery Services

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. I am told, Mr. Minister, that registered midwives are frustrated. Ontario and British Columbia midwifery services are publicly funded. Alberta midwives are leaving this province to practise where their client base does not have to pay out of pocket for midwifery services. Why is Alberta dragging their heels? When is Alberta going to ensure that we thus fund midwifery services?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that I'd just like to point out – and this goes back to the point at which we worked to have midwifery licensed in this province. I remember a presentation being made to the health standing policy committee. It was a public presentation as I recall. The question was asked of the spokesperson for the midwives: do you expect to be established on a fee-for-service basis such as doctors are? The answer was a categorical no. She said: we're here to make the case for the licensing of midwives. And that has occurred.

The second point I'd like to make is that birthing services are covered, Mr. Speaker, through the physicians and through the hospitals and regional health authorities of this province. So it should be very clear that we are honouring the public nature and public funding of those services.

We have, however, as a department taken the lead, and we have over the past two or three years put over a million dollars into projects across the province where we are encouraging RHAs to look at and to work with midwives and to integrate their services into those of the regional health authorities and their hospitals and other facilities.

So we are encouraging this to become part of the system, but we're doing it through a process of projects showing that the relationships can be developed and that it will in fact work.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Minister, in light of what you just said, is it not a two-tiered system when physician-attended child birth services are funded, yet midwife-attended services are paid for by the client?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, we're not looking for opinions here.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to point out, as I did, I think, in my first answer, and just emphasize that birthing services to mother and child are covered, are insured in accordance with the Canada Health Act. The delivery approach for those particular services is through the physicians and through the regional health authorities and public health services of this province. So that is certainly provided.

The issue here is the need – and we are working on this, and we are committing dollars to this – to work the midwives into the overall health care team within the health care system through the regional health authorities. We have pilot projects going. We have made awards through the innovation fund to projects across the province to show that this will in fact work.

MRS. GORDON: Mr. Minister, are you or is the Alberta government aware of the number of registered midwives that are indeed leaving this province? What can be done to halt this trend?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not have any specific figures. As I've indicated, we are both through direct funding by Alberta Health to regional health authorities and through recent awards that have been made, one for the whole area of northern Alberta, another in the WestView regional health authority, through the innovation fund – pilot projects where the use of midwife services will be integrated into regional health authorities are going forward, and it is our hope that these projects will prove to be successful and will be copied in other parts of the province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mental Health Services

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The crisis in mental health care caused by this government began long before the strike of the provincial Mental Health Board workers. With Alberta's growing population there is and there will continue to be a growing demand for mental health services, yet numerous mental health advocates' reports point to the fact that this government's community support for mental patients is either inadequate or nonexistent.

To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that community mental health services are just as important as institutional resources, why have so many resources gone to the institutions while community mental health services and agencies go without?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, that is about the third time the hon. members across the way have asked the same question, so I'll have to give the same answer.

First of all, over the last three to four years – and it's illustrated in the budget figures going back to I think about '95, '96 – we have doubled our overall commitment in the budget to the whole area of community mental health in this province. We have certainly increased institutional care by a very, very small percentage compared to that.

The other thing is that I maintain and I think it is still a valid point that we do need hospital care for the mentally ill in this province, and that has to be maintained. But there has been no bed expansion as far as the hospitals are concerned. In fact, there's been somewhat of a reduction.

Now, the other thing, Mr. Speaker, is that there are a number of additional initiatives under way with respect to community-based mental health care. We have worked very closely with the school health initiative. A very important component of that particular initiative through Alberta Learning is to provide mental health services as well as physical health services. We have recently announced an expansion of the overall sleep apnea treatment program. I could go on through a list of other initiatives where we are demonstrating our expansion and improvement of community-based mental health.

MR. GIBBONS: To the same minister: given that this government failed to increase support for community mental health services, will the demonstration project for community mental health at the Edmonton Northeast health centre have the resources it needs to continue?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, the basis for the hon. member's question is inaccurate, but I would like to point out that as far as I know, the mental health services that are associated with the Northeast primary care clinic and project are continuing.

MR. GIBBONS: They end at the end of May.

Given that the existing community mental health services were insufficient to cope with the prestrike demand, who is looking after the patients being discharged from provincial Mental Health Board facilities during the strike?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Human Resources and Employment I think stated so directly, we do have a strike situation, and there are innocent third parties involved in this overall action. The regional health authorities and the provincial Mental Health Board are coping with the situation as best they can. But the fact of the matter is that the people are not on the job doing the work as far as community mental health is concerned in many cases, and that is the reality of this type of bargaining situation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Environmental Laws Compliance

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard about Alberta's tough environmental standards and laws, but recently we've heard allegations of lack of enforcement. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Can the minister inform the House about what actions he is taking to ensure industry, municipalities, and others comply with the environmental protection and enhancement legislation?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of the Environment. [interjections] The hon. Minister of Environment has been recognized.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last year we've undertaken a number of different initiatives that will improve Environment's ability to both monitor and enforce compliance. Earlier this afternoon I tabled a brochure on the compliance inspection program. This program is helping to ensure that our facilities are meeting the requirements of their approvals under the legislation.

The focus of the program is on unannounced inspections, which can include all the aspects of a facility's approval. The inspections concentrate on ensuring that the holders of environmental approvals are operating within their approvals and also within the law, and areas of noncompliance are subject to strict enforcement actions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Can he give us some idea of how successful the compliance inspection program has been?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, during the fiscal year ended 31 March 2000 we conducted over 800 proactive compliance inspections. These covered industrial facilities, municipal facilities, and also waste management facilities in the province. To date over 90 percent of areas of noncompliance that we identified had been corrected quickly and effectively. I'd like to point out that many consisted simply of minor administrative issues that might relate to things such as record-keeping and proper signage. These matters were identified in writing for the industries and facilities involved and in most cases were corrected within 30 days of being identified.

2:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is also to the Minister of Environment. Can the minister describe for the House how effective he has been in following up areas of significant noncompliance?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, for more serious issues such as waste storage limits or storage methods and improper operation of pollution control equipment, they do require further action and investigation. But I believe our program has been well received by the majority of facilities that have been inspected and is a good indication of the commitment that industry and local government have to this notion of shared responsibility.

Investigations and the resulting enforcement actions have been enhanced under the act. In the past fiscal year actions that have been taken range from things as simple as a warning letter to administrative penalties, enforcement actions, environmental protection orders, tickets, and in the most serious of cases prosecutions. Mr. Speaker, these numbers of enforcement actions indicate that we are being vigorous in applying our compliance program, and the numbers confirm this government's commitment to active protection of the environment of the province.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now we will call upon the first of three hon. members to participate in Members' Statements today.

Responsible Citizenship in Calgary-McCall

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, I left my home in Tanzania, East Africa, and immigrated to Canada some 25 years ago to become a Canadian. I came to respect what this country offered me and my family. I've always believed that Canada is the best place in the world to live, and this has been confirmed by the United Nations for the past six years.

In my earlier days I was involved with a group called Society for Promoting Responsible Citizenship. The society's primary goal was to help new Canadians understand the value of being responsible Canadians. Since my election in 1995 I've always promoted initiatives that help diverse ethnic communities live side by side as responsible citizens.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, my riding is one of the most diverse constituencies in Alberta. Many refer to it as the United Nations of Alberta. Regrettably, on February 12, 2000, my constituency was subjected to the worst kind of Third World tactic, denying people the opportunity to exercise their democratic rights by such actions as intimidation, blocking access, personal threats, et cetera. For a moment I thought I was living in Little India. Unfortunately, I was the victim and lost my nomination.

Today may be the last opportunity I can have in this Assembly to recognize and thank the residents of Calgary-McCall for their support and for giving me the opportunity to serve them. I also want to thank my colleagues, staff, and yourself for your continued support. In particular, I want to thank those who stood by me and who did not condone the unfortunate Third World tactics used on February 12, 2000.

Mr. Speaker, I will always reject, resist, and speak against those who attempt to turn northeast Calgary into Little India.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Spring Session Overview

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As this session comes to a close, I rise today to make a few closing comments on the results of our deliberations. Never before has it become so apparent that a government has completely lost touch with the citizens it claims to represent. When a government must resort to the heavy and authoritarian hand of closure to push through legislation that is overwhelmingly opposed by the population, the government has lost touch with its citizens. When a government must again resort to closure to push through unfair and expensive tax reforms, it has lost touch with its citizens.

As I was campaigning on the doorsteps of Edmonton-Highlands, I noticed two things. First, Albertans are feeling frustrated that their government is just not listening, despite the fact that the citizens have raised loud voices. Second, Albertans value the unique and principled positions put forward by me and my party. It's been a great privilege to take over from Pam Barrett and lead the New Democrats in this Legislature and to put forward the distinct positions of Alberta New Democrats.

Where the Tories have come up with a flat tax, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party has come up with an almost flat tax that's more expensive, more confusing, and riddled with mistakes. Where the Tories have allowed private, for-profit hospitals to dip into the public system, the Liberals have advocated allowing private, for-profit hospitals to exist alongside public ones. Where we have argued that schools and hospitals need more attention than do tax cuts, the Liberals have put forward a private member's bill that would threaten stable funding for social programs by subjecting tax increases to a provincewide referendum. The New Democrats have real alternatives, consistent alternatives, and effective alternatives for the concerns Albertans have today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Representation in St. Albert

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recognition of the opportunity accorded to me as a Member of the Legislative Assembly, I rise to speak today of my understanding of the trust that the voters of the constituency of St. Albert placed in me. It is a trust that I hold as sacred. It is also a trust that I take seriously. I believe it is my responsibility to listen carefully to the voice of my electorate.

The challenge in that latter sentence lies in the recognition that not all my constituents want the same legislation. That is where the challenge exists. I believe it is my responsibility to reconcile many viewpoints into what is the best for all. When the situation is such that public opinion is polarized, the challenge requires even more serious discernment. As a government member of this Assembly I believe I have been entrusted with the responsibility to shape, to evaluate, and to strengthen the legislative position that is most appropriate in the interests of Albertans.

While I am speaking of trust, I want to take this opportunity to say openly that while others can say what they think, they cannot tell me what they think I think. So I wish to conclude my few remarks today by saying this. I trust that the people of St. Albert do know that their government MLA represents their best interests. This representation is informed and solid. It is neither blind nor weak.

head: Projected Government Business

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed with a heavy, heavy heart that I stand to ask, perhaps for the last time, pursuant to Standing Order 7(5) what we might anticipate for next week.

Thanks very much.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I think the anticipation of the hon. member is correct. By way of notice to the Assembly I wish to advise that when the Assembly adjourns past the anticipated hour of 5:30 p.m. today, dealing with third reading of Bill 18, it's the government's intention to adjourn pursuant to Government Motion 5, agreed to by this House on March 7, 2000.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 25

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2000

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move Bill 25, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2000, for third reading.

I would only add by way of comment in so moving that I appreciate the comments made by the members of the opposition in second reading and Committee of the Whole, wherein they acknowledged the sincere effort that's been made by members of this government to discuss those items which are included in the statute, and that we've had a very productive way of dealing with those issues and getting the miscellaneous statutes before the House.

2:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. House leader of the Official Opposition.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is the last opportunity to comment on the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, and I wanted to get up quickly before one of my colleagues did, frankly, simply to confirm the support of the Liberal caucus for the miscellaneous statutes and to acknowledge the changes in terms of children's services and the changes to the Colleges Act. This is a positive thing.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Alberta College of Art and Design is one of only four institutions in Canada providing the kind of instruction that it does. It now will have the opportunity to confer not only a bachelor of fine arts, which was the case before, but will be able to confer a degree of design. This is something that the Alberta College of Art and Design has looked for for some time. The college is excited about being able to confer a degree that appropriately designates the kind of instruction, the kind of training and education that its graduates have had. It will likely enhance the employment prospects for graduates, so the Liberal opposition was happy to support that.

There are changes to the Election Act which hopefully will facilitate the provision of data and information in anticipation of provincial elections.

The Legal Profession Act represents a number of changes that have had substantial input from the self-governing profession, the Law Society of Alberta. Those changes for the most part give the governance and those charged with the governance of the Law Society of Alberta some additional flexibility.

One of the things I might mark is that I'm proud of the legal profession. Whenever there has been conflict in terms of the changes between the interests of an individual practitioner and the interests of the community, the Law Society has very clearly decided in a way that's reflected in the statute to put a higher emphasis on the protection of the public. That's a significant type of decision to have been made by the Law Society benchers. I think it's significant that self-governing professions recognize that first and foremost their responsibility is not to further the interests of their individual members, but when it comes certainly to the legal profession, it is to enhance the public interest. So I'm proud of the stand taken by the legal profession in that respect.

The changes to the Pharmaceutical Profession Act are minor indeed.

The Motion Picture Development Act section repeals the act, when the corporation ceased to exist January 1.

The Social Work Profession Act recognizes the Alberta College of Social Workers. This is something the social workers in the province have wanted.

The Health Professions Act. Although the changes are numerous, for the most part it clarifies wording, corrects and updates references.

The Child and Family Services Authorities Act. There's been certainly significant input from agencies and professionals involved in the field, and that represents a salutary step as well.

So for all of those reasons I know that every one of my colleagues, as far afield as Edmonton-Meadowlark and as close as Edmonton-Glenora, is happy to support the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act. [interjection] While I have this mandate and this express authority from the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, I want to say again that we're happy to vote in support of the miscellaneous statutes. We only look forward to the time when legislation is designed so darned efficiently that we can reduce the multiple subsequent amendments.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a third time]

Bill 18
Alberta Personal Income Tax Act

[Adjourned debate May 24: Mr. Hancock]

22. Mrs. Nelson moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:

[Government Motion 22 carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members are quite aware that there are things that happen outside this House and Assembly, and in a few hours we're all going to reacquaint ourselves with that fact. There are some things that are happening in Canada, and it may change the membership that is in this House. So I'd like to call on the hon. Member for Red Deer-North. This may be my last time as Speaker to call on him.

MR. DAY: Mr. Speaker, thank you so much for the opportunity to spend a few moments to address Bill 18, and also in the context of what you were saying, that should events unfold the way that I hope they do, this in fact may be my last time in this hallowed Assembly, and I say that with sincerity.

Just taking the next couple of minutes to address, first of all, Bill 18 itself. I can tell you that across the country, not just in this province, everywhere I go people are talking about a sense that there is going to be a new age of respect for taxpayers and for hardworking people. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, they are looking forward to that possibility at the federal level with great anticipation, and Alberta has set the tone for that level of respect. We are going to see the possibility of ushering in at the federal level as well as the provincial level a brand-new approach of respect to hardworking people. So it's with great satisfaction that I can give my unquestionable support to Bill 18, to seeing it become a reality.

Over the last 10 years we have seen in Canada, when we look at personal income taxes, that Canadians have a sense that they're not getting ahead, and this would include Albertans at times. In fact, they have not been. In the United States the after-tax real income growth in the last 10 years has been on average 18 percent, and in Canada it has been minus 2. Those who feel they've been spinning their wheels have indeed been spinning their wheels.

A presentation to the federal government, related to some of the principles that we're talking about with Bill 18, indicated very clearly that an average family making approximately $40,000 a year with two dependents, taking the average cost of living, weighing that in across the country and averaging it out, would in fact at the end of the year have to borrow $640 to be able to make ends meet, and that is not the way that governments should be treating hardworking families and hardworking individuals. So all the concepts and principles that are articulated so clearly in Bill 18 are heartily endorsed not just by myself but I believe by a majority of Albertans and by Canadians from coast to coast.

We are ushering in a new era in the 21st century, Mr. Speaker, a new era of respect that is going to see an invigorated economy, that is going to see the ability of our young people, should they want to stay in Alberta, should they want to stay in Canada – they will be able to. If our young people want to go anywhere in the world to pursue their hopes and their dreams, they should be able to do that, but the fact is that young people and entrepreneurs and hardworking people today as I speak are feeling compelled to leave because of excessive taxation. That is a shame, and that is a national tragedy. This bill and this approach and the principles in this bill will address that and will allow for Canadians to see this country to be the great beacon of hope and the great beacon of opportunity that it has been through most of the 20th century, moving into the 21st century. So I can give my hearty endorsement to this bill and to the principles endorsed here.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, before I sit down, that after 14 years in this Assembly I think I share the reflections of a person of a far greater stature than myself, one Winston Churchill, who commented on democracy and reflected that it is not always a pretty business, that it has its problems and it has its difficulties. Certainly as we think back over time and the deliberations in this Chamber, we know it has not always been pretty and it has not always been without its difficulties, but democracy is of prime consideration in my heart and in the hearts of Albertans, and in this place democracy has been served over the years and will continue to be.

I'm so honoured to have had the opportunity to work with colleagues of the stature of the people that are in this particular Assembly, with the people who serve us in this Assembly, and I can even say with the opposition, who serve well as critics. They serve the role well and from time to time have offered advice which has been taken by this member and by others. The people of Alberta will continue to be served as long as we recognize that with all its shortcomings, with all its difficulties and challenges, with all the times when we temporarily lose respect for one another in our deliberations, sometimes verbally, we will continue to fly that flag of democracy, a flag which will be flown with pride, a flag which we will continue to rally to protect if it ever comes under duress and one under which I have been honoured and proud to have been a member for the last 14 years.

With that, I conclude my remarks on this sunny Thursday afternoon. Good afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, and we thank you for your patience.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

MR. SMITH: Is this your exit speech?

MR. DICKSON: I'm encouraged to deliver my final speech in the Assembly as well, but no. Hon. members will simply have to reserve that treat for perhaps a later date.

Let me start off by wishing the Member for Red Deer-North every success in his chase for the leadership of the hard right in the dominion of Canada. We're all watching with keen interest, because there clearly are a number of Albertans and there clearly are a number of Canadians that subscribe to the views that this member genuinely believes and I think has been quite consistent to during his time in the Legislative Assembly. So we'll all be watching with keen fascination as he progresses.

I want to right now offer to this Member for Red Deer-North whatever assistance he would like in learning the opportunities of serving as an opposition legislator. On behalf of a party that for 74 years has honed its skills in opposition, has developed its technique in terms of penetrating examination in question period and rigorous scrutiny in the tough challenge of budget estimates, I want to be able to share whatever expertise we've been able to acquire collectively, and I say this on behalf of my caucus. There are opportunities that this member has never been able to have in opposition. He will revel. I am confident that he will revel, as we revel, in the excitement of serving in the role of Official Opposition.

Now, let me make this observation, Mr. Speaker. It was rich with irony that the Member for Red Deer-North stood up and made his ode to democracy. He may not have been listening when his seatmate just moments before stood up to invoke closure yet again in this Legislative Assembly. It's interesting to be able to invoke Winston Churchill and his leadership and support and promotion of debate in the House of Commons in Westminster – you know, the use of closure there has been treated sparingly. It's been treated as the absolutely massive weapon that it is. But in this Legislative Assembly in the course of just the last three months at least four times closure has been invoked, and as many times we've seen a form of closure in terms of: that the previous question be now put.

I'd have to say that the last three months have witnessed probably the most sustained and ferocious assault on democracy that we've ever seen in the province of Alberta. We've seen it in this Assembly. We've seen it in the attempt with that $8 million budget Public Affairs Bureau to influence public opinion, to close off public debate. I think what we have seen is an anatomy of a kind of thought control. Sometimes I think of the movie Stepford Wives, you know, that a government would want to program its citizens, as we saw in that classic movie, to be able to accept uncritically the things that that $8 million Public Affairs Bureau churns out.

Albertans are smarter than that. In fact, when our colleague from Red Deer-North talks about what Albertans support, I'm not sure he's checked in at www.garydickson.ab.ca recently. I know he has a web site, and I know he would be interested in visiting mine. In fact, maybe we could establish hot links. We probably appeal to different constituencies, but if he checks my web site, he'd find that there's a bit of an explanation about the tax issue that "is very much in the news." I've asked people visiting my web site to identify whether they support (a) "a progressive tax system with high income earners paying at a higher rate" or (b) "a flat tax system with all taxpayers paying at the same rate regardless of income."

Now, there were 324 visits to that web site between May 18 and May 23, 2000. You know what's interesting? Of 324 visits 63 percent of the people who visited the web site opted not for the flat tax but for the progressive tax. Of the 324 63 percent identified an interest in and support for a progressive tax system. For all I know, these are all people in Red Deer that are visiting the web site to register their concern. They may be from other Calgary constituencies. I don't know exactly where they're from. But it's interesting that in that short period of time, from the 18th to the 23rd, 63 percent in fact disagree with the former Provincial Treasurer, the Member for Red Deer-North, and say: he doesn't speak for us.

I'd like to say that far beyond that small sampling of opinion, I as a native Albertan think most Albertans intuitively understand that a flat tax system is an unfair tax system. I'm proud to be part of a caucus that at least joined debate on the issue of tax reform and came forward with a constructive alternative. I've always had some misgivings when people talk about tax reform, because it seems to me that it's sometimes code for starting to reduce your support for a strong public health care system or support for public education or support for necessary social services, the kinds of things that make our communities strong and vital, that recognize that everybody doesn't start at an equal place. That's the mythology of the hard right. That's the mythology that everybody starts in exactly the same position and that if you just work hard enough, you too can be a millionaire and be paying the high-income surtax. Well, the reality, Mr. Speaker, as you well know, is that it's something far, far different than that.

When I talk to constituents, it's on the basis that tax cuts only make sense if there's adequate funding of your public health care system, of your public education system, of postsecondary education institutions. I remind people again that if you rank the 25 largest universities in Canada, salaries at the University of Calgary, in the city that many of us here are from, place that institution about 23 out of 25. There continues to be a disconnection where the mission of the Minister of Innovation and Science is to have those high-skill, high-tech, high-paying jobs in the province, yet we continue to see underfunding of postsecondary education, underfunding of public education, and the evidence on the streets of the cities of this province tells us there is clearly underfunding in public health care. You know, tax cuts have to be in the context of adequate funding in those other areas.

My difficulty is: is it not sort of a huge paradox that we have 10,000 health care workers, some of the lowest paid anywhere in Canada for the work they do, who have taken to the streets of this province as we debate giving more dough back to people who are already high-income earners? It just seems to me that every sort of fairness bone in my body starts quivering when I start thinking that we're not reflecting some of the reality that we deal with in our communities and in our constituencies and right around this province.

I preface my comments about Bill 18 with the very strong caveat that any kind of tax reform has to assume adequate funding of core services and cannot be used and must not be used as an excuse to then start further cutting funding or restricting funding to those core services with the view that we just develop more private alternatives. That's not the answer Albertans want. If this government thinks that they are onto something hot, something flashy and important with this bill, I think they are as sadly mistaken as they were on Bill 11. They will find, when they run into that brick wall, that somewhere along the way the political antennae of the current government has become kind of frayed and fuzzy and is just not picking up the vibrations, not picking up that undercurrent of tension that most of my colleagues see when we go to meetings and talk to folks and read the e-mails. Members in government may be able to discount that and say that those people just don't understand. I mean, it's the same message as with Bill 11 – right? – that people just don't understand the bill: just read the bill and you'll find the answer. Well, the more people find out about these things, the more unhappy they are.

If there was any advantage, I suppose, to Bill 11, it was that it forced people to stand up and fight for public health care. In the same way, I predict that with Bill 18, with somewhat of a delayed impact because we didn't have the four-month run-up to it like we did on private health care, you're going to see Albertans vote yet again with their feet, with their voices, with their ability to communicate. They're going to stand up and they're going to register their opposition to a flat tax that supports and buys into that mythology that everybody starts from an equal place. Most Albertans, at least in my experience, are fair, and the fairness becomes an ethic, becomes a principle which they think is more important than just about anything else. Bill 18 is not about fairness. It's about differential advantage to people who already start off with a significant advantage.

It amazes me that members of the Canadian Alliance and the hard right, as I call that group of Canadians, are able to mesmerize themselves with their own mythology. I guess if you construct a bit of a cocoon and you ensure that you're simply getting magnified back your own image, it's easy to delude yourself, but my prediction is that it is a delusion and that most Albertans don't want to go where this government is forcing them to go and where it is coercively taking them.

[The Speaker in the chair]

You know, I've got a lot of colleagues who want to speak this afternoon, and I'm just going to wrap up my comments. There has been, I think, lots of detailed assessment looking at the impacts and the numbers if you are going to have tax reform. I think the Liberal opposition has addressed that. We've put forward a fair tax alternative to the flat tax. It's one that recognizes progressivity as an essential element of tax.

It strikes me that the Official Opposition does not have the benefit of the 700-odd employees in Treasury. It's fine for the Provincial Treasurer to rhapsodically jump up and down and point out things he may quibble over in the opposition alternative. I haven't seen the studies, Mr. Speaker, done by the Treasury Department because that's the sort of thing that's never shared with legislators. Heck, we only represent the 3 million people in this province; let's keep it a closely held cabinet secret. We've not seen those alternative studies that look at what sort of impacts it would have if you were going to do a tax cut that mirrored the kind of zero, 10, 12 Liberal alternative.

It's too bad, because I think those 700-odd employees in the Treasury Department work for all Albertans, not just for the government of the day and the hard right philosophy that infuses this whole Bill 18 and Bill 19 package.

The case for progressive taxation has been argued, I think, so well by my colleagues. I'm proud of the comments I've read on the part of my colleagues. As we've discussed before, you look at Robert Shapiro's article Why Fairness Matters: Progressive versus Flat Tax. If there's any member that has not availed himself or herself of the Legislature Library bibliography – and credit to the people in our library system. My colleague from Edmonton-Riverview alerted me to that amazing array of studies, analyses, textbooks. I certainly haven't read them all. I've skimmed a few, and it confirms again, just as we saw in the case of Bill 11, that the overwhelming body of empirical data, evidence, and learned literature makes the case that public health care is more efficient, more effective, less costly, and more comprehensive. In the same way is there not the same kind of overwhelming preponderance of evidence in this case that shows that a progressive tax system is fairer, more effective, and so on? You know, we have an interesting parallel in terms of the way we've seen these two government initiatives treated.

3:30

I guess I'd just make this comment. You never know. This may be my last time in the Legislature if in fact there's an election before the next sitting of the Legislature. That's a possibility. You never know who the electors are going to favour and who they will not. It seems to me that in that election Albertans are going to be presented with a very, very stark choice, a very clear alternative. In fact, I've done for my own amusement, Mr. Speaker, a little bar graph that shows speaking times of what's gone on with the 24 bills that we've dealt with in the Legislative Assembly. You see the big spikes. You know, it's bills 11, 18, and 19. I think that here are two issues where you have this absolute collision between, in this case, the Liberal opposition in its support for a strong, adequately financed public health care system and the government, and we know what their alternative is: private clinics, private hospitals, and a pile of dough going to the shareholders and directors of private health corporations.

When it comes to tax, we have a stark alternative. We have a government that thinks a flat tax is absolutely the ultimate model, the one that they salivate over and can't wait to see in place. The Liberal alternative is one that respects a progressive tax formula, that recognizes that people who start off with substantial capital have the opportunity to prosper in this province more perhaps than anywhere else in Canada and that part of the cost of that opportunity is paying a surcharge, if you will, paying tax at a higher rate.

I know lots of high-income earners who recognize the merit and the value in that and who don't begrudge paying tax at a higher rate. I mean, none of us particularly likes paying tax, but as Reverend Bill Phipps, the moderator of the United Church and a constituent of mine in Calgary-Buffalo, has said publicly, taxes are never necessarily a pleasant thing, but they serve an absolutely essential purpose. I mean, it's through taxes that we fund our public systems. It's through taxes that we ensure that the gap between the rich and the poor is not aggravated and doesn't become exaggerated. You know, to any of us who've had the chance to go into those nations where they don't have the kind of social support networks and who've seen the huge contrast between those that have and those that do not, you know that it makes for the most unstable kind of nation. The most stable countries in the world are those that find ways with strong social programs to be able to moderate those differences.

DR. MASSEY: What about compassion?

MR. DICKSON: My colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods talks about compassion. Well, compassion is part of the Canadian character. It's certainly part of the Alberta character. Look at Alberta history. It was all about compassion. It was all about a spirit of community. It was all about a sense of sharing. That's been sorely tested with Bill 11. Bill 11 did it, but Bill 18 is doing it as well.

So when we vote on this, let's be really clear what we're voting on. This is one of those defining and dividing issues. I vote with my colleagues with great enthusiasm because I'm proud of the position that my caucus has taken, and it's one, I think, that's reflective of where most Albertans are. Those who think otherwise will have their time of reckoning in front of the electors of this province, and I look forward to that with a sense of confidence. I think that on this issue, as with Bill 11, the gap between the governed and the governors has become a chasm, and I think that's going to be evident when the votes are counted after that next election.

Those are the comments I wanted to make at this time on this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon and make a few comments with respect to Bill 18 in third reading. I've talked to a large number of people with respect to tax since coming to this Assembly in '97, and all of those people, to a person, have indicated that they feel they pay too much tax, excessive tax. I have talked to people with respect to Bill 18 specifically, and every person I have talked to has been supportive of this bill and what it accomplishes, which is a tax reduction for all Albertans.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has indicated that the Liberal opposition criticism of this bill has had a delayed impact. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that in fact it has no impact whatsoever, for as of this morning my office had received no criticism of any form whatsoever with respect to this government's proposals with respect to the reduction of income tax as reflected in Bill 18. In fact, I can go further and say that I've had no discussion with anyone about a so-called Liberal tax policy, and perhaps that's because it's newly minted and hasn't had an opportunity to be fairly tested in the public. But the fact is that I have had no such discussion, so I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has some significant work ahead of him, notwithstanding his web site.

MR. DICKSON: At www.garydickson.ab.ca.

MR. STEVENS: Well, thank you very much, member. We wanted to get that on there again to assist you, and that's why I responded.

In this particular seat I've had an opportunity to listen more closely to the Liberals, and what I've heard generally is a lot of criticism: criticism that health is underfunded and mismanaged and in crisis, criticism that education is underfunded, mismanaged, and in crisis, criticism that social services are underfunded, mismanaged, and in crisis. In fact, I'd say that one can go through each and every department or ministry of this government and have the same criticism heaped upon that department by these Liberals. It's a litany of complaint, a litany of negativity, so it should be no surprise to anyone that the opposition in this particular case has decided to be critical of Bill 18 and this government's initiative to reduce the income tax that is paid by all Albertans.

It makes you wonder, given the complaints and criticism of mismanagement, underfunding, and whatnot across the board, why some 55,000 new Albertans migrated to this province in the past year or so, which is about the largest migration to a province since Statistics Canada has been keeping these records. Now, I don't know why they did that. Perhaps they weren't listening to the Liberals.

MR. SMITH: They made a point of not listening to the Liberals.

MR. STEVENS: They made a point of not listening to the Liberals. That could be it.

What Bill 18 does, Mr. Speaker, is provide 190,000 low-income Albertans with the incredible advantage of no longer paying any income tax. Now, in questions and debates the opposition often says: what, government, are you doing to address the issue of poverty? Well, the fact is that this government does a lot of things. It has initiatives in Community Development and Learning and Children's Services and Health and in other areas, but what we have here is an addition to that list, and that is ensuring that 190,000 low-income Albertans will no longer be paying income tax. In other words, it will leave more money in their pockets.

Now, I think what's interesting is to compare how this tax policy as reflected in Bill 18 compares to that of other provinces, in particular our socialist neighbours. I think it would be also of interest to see how this tax policy as reflected in Bill 18 compares to the Liberal federal government tax policy. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 18 will reflect very well indeed.

Dealing firstly with the provincial comparison. Two days ago, on May 23, the Acting Provincial Treasurer tabled a document in this Assembly which set out some comparisons. It was titled Interprovincial Tax and Health Care Insurance Premium Comparison, 2001. There were certain assumptions in there and certain numbers provided, and I think it's worth while underscoring what some of those comparisons indicate.

Taking a one-income family with two children that has $30,000 of employment income and taking into account the family tax credit here in Alberta, there in fact is a payment of $699 to that particular family. When looking at B.C., we have a provincial income tax payment of $272. In Saskatchewan there is an income tax payment of $876 and in Manitoba a tax payment of some $575. When one takes into account the list of taxes and premiums which are considered in the comparison, the differential between Alberta and B.C. is $1,901, between Alberta and Saskatchewan $1,727, and between Alberta and Manitoba $1,980. Those differentials, of course, all reflect the Alberta advantage from a tax perspective. So when we're talking about low-income people and comparing that issue relative to the provinces immediately around us, Alberta does very well indeed, as reflected in the policy in Bill 18.

Now, looking for a moment at the federal side of things, we have a situation where many, indeed probably most of the 190,000 low-income Albertans will continue to pay federal income tax when they will not be paying provincial income tax. I'd like to give you some examples, but before I do, what I want to mention is that there's always some reluctance to give out federal income tax numbers, because the feds base things on assumptions. Some of the assumptions that have to be used here are as follows: an inflation rate of 1.8 percent; a Canada pension plan rate of 4.3 percent, with an upper threshold of $38,100 and a lower threshold of $3,500; and an employment insurance rate of 2.9 percent, with an upper threshold of $39,000.

Now, using these assumptions, in the year 2001 we have the following examples. A single-income earner with $12,500 in income will pay Alberta provincial income tax of . . .

MR. HIERATH: Zero.

MR. STEVENS: Zero. You're absolutely right. And federal income tax of $757.

A single-income family with $27,000 in income and two children will pay Alberta provincial income tax of zero and federal income tax of $1,999.

The next example is a two-income family with $27,000 in income. That family will pay Alberta provincial income tax of zero and federal income tax of $1,831.

The next example is a single senior with $17,130 in old age security and private pension income. They will pay Alberta provincial income tax of zero but federal income tax of $880.

Now, I think these particular examples and facts should be remembered by all members of this Assembly and in fact by all Albertans when they are engaging in a discussion regarding tax fairness as reflected in tax policy.

Now, I'd like to make a few comments with respect to the importance of Bill 18 for all Albertans, and that particular discussion centres around the debate regarding the problems of brain drain, standard of living, and productivity as reflected in Canada as a whole and necessarily impacting on Alberta.

It's important to provide some of the factual background with respect to that. According to Industry Canada, Canada's standard of living has increased by 7 percent since 1987, while the United States' standard of living has increased by 17 percent. However, Canada has not always lagged so distant behind the Americans. In the immediate postwar period Canada had the second highest productivity level to the United States within the OECD. The OECD claims that if Canada continues on the growth trend that it is now on, our per capita GDP will drop from 10 percent above the OECD average – that's 10 percent above the average – to 15 percent below the average within 20 years. It has been predicted that within that same period five of the G-7 nations will be from Asia, despite the economic turmoil of 1998.

It's also important to note that within Canada, Alberta and Ontario have the highest productivity, well above the national average, but these two provinces are considerably below the U.S. average. On a measurement scale with the Canadian average productivity at 100, the U.S. measures on that scale at 118.4 while Alberta and Ontario are at 107.6 and 105.8 respectively. In other words, Alberta, which does the best of all provinces, is still 10 points below the American average.

The last factor that I wish to refer to is that if Canada's productivity had grown at the same rate as the United States' since 1979, then Canadians' real income today would be more than $7,000 a year higher per person. That's since 1979, over the last 20 years or so.

So the issue with respect to the problem is: what direction should this government take to improve our standard of living, to stop the brain drain, and to increase our productivity? Now, admittedly this is a complex issue. Tax cuts alone cannot stimulate the economy and improve productivity. There are other issues that are as important or perhaps more important in certain circumstances such as investment in human capital, research and development, and increased trade, all of which must be part of the standard of living solution. But tax cuts play a significant role. For example, John Roth, who is the CEO of Nortel Networks, believes that the key is to cut personal income taxes so that the number of high-tech jobs being created in Canada will not shrink and in fact will increase.

Obviously this government wants to improve the standard of living of Albertans, and to date we have created jobs, full-time ones, that are predominantly concentrated in growing economic sectors. This government has allowed for the right economic environment by allowing small and medium-sized businesses to keep more of what they make so that they have the resources to grow and hire more staff and produce more goods, but this challenge is an ongoing one because this challenge is a global challenge.

What Bill 18 does in relation to the issues of standard of living and productivity is as follows. It will improve the standard of living of all Albertans. Why is that? Each and every Albertan will have more money in their pocket because each and every Albertan will be paying less Alberta income tax. Secondly, it will improve the rewards for hardworking Albertans. It will create incentive. Thirdly, it will improve the ability of small business to grow and hire more staff and produce more goods, which will address in part the productivity issue, and it is an important part of the policy to retain and attract talented and knowledgeable people to Alberta.

At the beginning of this new century and this new millennium, Alberta is on a strong foundation. We have a balanced budget, a top education system, probably the best health system in Canada, an economy growing in the right direction, and, with Bill 18, a personal tax system that benefits all Albertans and which strengthens the Alberta advantage.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 18 is in its third reading, but debating a bill which fundamentally structures Alberta's personal income tax system with the hammer of closure looming over our heads is an irresponsible way to develop public policy. It is irresponsible, and it is undemocratic. It's unfortunately all too typical of a government which during this entire spring session has shown itself to be increasingly remote from Albertans.

Bill 18, as amended, increases personal and spousal exemptions to $12,900, and I support that. It also lowers the tax rate by half a point, to 10.5 percent. However, even these changes, while sacrificing yet another half-billion dollars in personal income tax revenue, do nothing to address the fundamental unfairness of the flat tax proposal and now the bill, which will become law within an hour or so.

Bill 18, as amended, will have the combined effect to reduce personal income taxes by some 25 percent, or $1.3 billion. That is personal income tax revenue. After years of earning billions of dollars in surpluses with little or no tax relief, the government suddenly decided to forgo $1.3 billion in revenues in one fell swoop. The question that must be posed is whether we can afford to forgo this amount of revenue without risking the province's financial bottom line or risking the sustainability of funding for vital services like health care and education.

It's not many years ago, Mr. Speaker, that the former Treasurer of this province made an assertion that Alberta doesn't have a revenue problem; it has a spending problem. With these cuts, without asking serious questions, it will put us again in a situation where we indeed may have a revenue problem. With revenues cut and our health care and education requiring increased spending to make up the shortfalls and the damage that has been done to those institutions over the years because of thoughtless cuts, what we need to do is to ask serious questions before proceeding down this road, but there's no evidence that that's been done. Where are the studies to back up the proposition that we can prudently forgo such large revenue amounts? Can we always count on $30 per barrel oil or sky-high natural gas prices? Should we solely be focusing on reducing personal income taxes, or are there other alternatives for government revenue sources that should be reduced? For example, health care premiums or user fees of all sorts.

I'm disappointed that such major changes to tax policy are being made without any answers to these questions. We appear to be basing our tax policy on the political needs of this government and on the political aspirations of our Provincial Treasurer, on leave, and not on solid analysis and solid evidence. These massive personal income tax cuts appear designed to curry favour with the voters at election time with little thought to their long-term consequences for popular institutions such as health and education.

There's also no reason why the personal and spousal exemptions could not be increased, thereby helping low-income earners while keeping the rest of the tax system progressive, thereby not providing unjustified tax breaks to only the wealthiest Albertans. That's what this proposal does.

The alternative to the proposal, presented by the Official Opposition party, does certainly introduce another tax bracket, the 10 and 12 model, but there again this proposal is flawed. It has some incredible anomalies there that cannot be explained as we apply this model to people who move from the $99,999 to just $100,000 income bracket. So whichever plan you take, the first or the second, there are problems with them which must be addressed before we really move towards passing a bill like this one.

We New Democrats are not opposed to increasing personal and spousal exemptions, as I said before, as a way of getting low-income Albertans off the provincial tax rolls. Let there be no doubt about this. However, there's no good reason why the rest of the tax system can't stay progressive, with those making higher incomes paying tax at a higher rate. For example, instead of having a 10.5 percent tax rate for all taxpayers, why not have three tax brackets? Say, 7 percent on the first $30,000 of taxable income, 10.5 percent on the next $30,000, and 14 percent thereafter. This approach would generate roughly the same amount of revenue but much more fairly than will be the case under the government's single-rate system or the Official Opposition's proposal.

Every single taxpayer would save money under this three tax bracket approach when their 2001 tax bill is compared to their tax bill in '99. Even the wealthiest Albertans would benefit by having their top marginal tax rate cut from 14.28 percent, which is presently the case, to a straight 14 percent. However, a progressive tax structure such as the one I'm proposing would prevent a situation whereby the wealthiest Albertans receive tens of thousand of dollars in tax cuts while middle-income Albertans save only a few dollars on their tax bill.

Contrary to the claims being made by the government or by their soul mates, such as right-wing think tanks like the Fraser Institute, there's no evidence to support the contention that flat taxes such as those set out in the government's Bill 18 make the tax system either simpler or more efficient. Complexity in the tax system results from the deductions and credits that go into the calculation of taxable income, not from having more than one tax bracket.

In terms of efficiency there's no evidence that unfair flat tax systems are any more economically efficient than multibracket, progressive tax systems. For example, despite its costly and inefficient health care system, on the whole the United States is considered by some to have the most efficient economy in the world. However, on average the United States has a more progressive tax system structure than Canada does. For example, at the federal level the U.S. has five tax brackets, ranging from 15 to 39.6 percent, compared to three federal tax brackets in Canada, ranging from 17 to 29 percent. At the state level California, which is anything but an economic basket case, has six tax brackets. The state of Montana on our southern border – some of the officials from this state were introduced to us yesterday from your gallery, Mr. Speaker – has 10 tax brackets.

The government has provided little or no evidence that directing tax cuts at high-income earners will generate any more economic activity than directing tax cuts towards middle-income Albertans. In fact, there is much evidence to suggest the opposite to be the case. Tax cuts directed at low- and middle-income earners will generate more economic activity than tax cuts directed at the wealthy. That's because the wealthy will likely invest their tax savings in GICs or mutual funds, including foreign content ones, offshore investments, and offshore vacations in interesting places. Meanwhile, middle-income earners are likely to spend their savings on things at home that more directly lead to local job creation; that is, buying goods and services. In other words, our economy is likely to get a bigger bang for the buck by directing tax cuts at lower and middle-income earners than at high-income earners.

Prior to the implementation of a 10.5 percent tax rate, as the amended Bill 18 proposes to do, Alberta already had the lowest top marginal tax rates in Canada. The approval of the government's Bill 18 will turn this gap into a gulf. What possible justification can there be for the province of Alberta having a top tax rate of 10.5 percent when the next lowest province, Ontario, has a top tax rate of 17.4 percent?

Bill 18 will truly turn this province into a tax haven for the wealthy. However, by the same token, the shifting of the tax load may well result in the flight of middle-class taxpayers like tradespeople, nurses, and high-tech workers, who are much better off under the progressive tax systems of Ontario or the U.S. than they will be under this province's flat tax.

The so-called flight of these workers has been I think wrongly and erroneously attributed to taxes alone, I must add. An exceedingly well-researched, book-length study published last year by David Livingstone of the University of Toronto draws attention to the growing gap between the educational qualifications, on the one hand, and the kinds of jobs that young Canadians can get. That growing gap between educational qualifications and the kinds of jobs people can get is what may be driving many young Canadians and Albertans across the border, where they can find jobs that match their excellent qualifications. We haven't paid any attention to that side before, simply assuming that it's the tax rate that drives people in or out of our province and following this foolish line of unexamined argument.

In fact, the government's flat tax rate as set out in Bill 18 is such a bad idea that it leads me to question the real agenda behind it. Today I read in the newspapers again a reference to Dr. Ken McKenzie, a U of C professor of economics who is serving as an adviser, I guess, to the government of Alberta on taxation policy. He seems to be endorsing moving to a sales tax model and abandoning taxing personal incomes as a model to generate public revenues. So is that the agenda? Will the government, as soon as we pass this bill here today – or when we vote on it and it is passed – begin to in fact shift towards a policy which introduces a sales tax as an alternative to income tax? Is that how Albertans are going to stop paying any income tax in the next few years, as the former Treasurer suggested is likely to happen? I think the government needs to come clean on this and tell Albertans what its real agenda is.

I find it most interesting that some of the strongest advocates of the flat tax on personal income advocate the eventual replacement of personal income taxes with a broadly based sales tax. After Albertans get used to paying a single rate of tax on their personal income, it is not as big a step to get Albertans to accept a single-rate consumption tax.

I point, in addition to the statements made by Dr. McKenzie, to an article that recently appeared in the Edmonton Journal. The article points out that the Canada West Foundation, which has worked closely with the Conservative government on a number of sensitive issues, is studying the possibility of a sales tax as an alternative to income tax. The foundation's executive director, Dr. Roger Gibbins, is quoted as saying that the flat tax paves the way for a debate on sales tax. Gibbins is quoted as saying: we are going to suggest that a consumption tax may replace a flat tax altogether; end of quote.

In summing up the reasons why he strongly opposed Bill 11, I will quote from an excellent paper written by Dr. Melville McMillan of the department of economics at the University of Alberta. This paper, entitled Alberta's Single Rate Tax: Implications and Alternatives, was tabled earlier in this Assembly. Dr. McMillan writes:

Alberta taxpayers' disposable income will benefit from the planned income tax reductions. Few would argue with the merits of focusing significant gains on low income taxpayers. Questionable, however, is the planned single rate which will afford absolutely and relatively large tax reductions to high income taxpayers. Middle income taxpayers gain less from the tax reduction and end up paying a larger share of the Alberta tax burden. Nor is there evidence of offsetting gains unavailable from a more distributional neutral tax reduction. Interestingly, in contrast to the Alberta move to advantage high income earners, the Federal and Ontario governments' efforts towards tax reduction have not moved nearly so much in that direction . . . Unfortunately, the shift of the Alberta income tax burden to the large middle class has been obscured by the Provincial Government which has emphasized tax reductions instead. Consequently, the question of the change in the distribution of the tax burden is not being debated as thoroughly as the issue deserves.

The government's move to force this seriously flawed and wrongheaded bill through this Legislature with the heavy hammer of closure is ill advised. Even at this 11th hour I urge the government to reconsider this foolish and regressive plan which favours the wealthy at the expense of the large middle class. In fact, as I look across the way at my colleagues on the other side of the House, I ask myself the question: why is the Conservative government championing a discredited flat tax that benefits mainly the wealthy when every other government in the country is focusing tax relief on the middle class? After all, it was middle-class taxpayers who bore the brunt of the tax increases that were used to balance budgets.

First Bill 11 and now Bill 18: two pieces of legislation forced through this Assembly that benefit the very few at the expense of the many. This government appears to be losing touch with the concerns of grassroots Albertans. As I campaign in the Edmonton-Highlands by-election, the anger directed against this government and against the Premier is palpable. Albertans see this government and the Premier as increasingly arrogant and out of touch with their concerns. No wonder the Premier dare not knock on doors in the Edmonton-Highlands by-election.

Through the passage of Bill 18 the government is shafting middle-class workers, especially single people and two-income families. Last time I checked the stats, there were three times as many two-parent families where both parents work compared to two-parent families where only one of the parents works.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge the government members to carefully consider what they are about to do. Maybe the tax cuts embedded in Bill 18 are deep enough to hide the fundamental unfairness of the flat tax. Then, again, maybe they won't. I for one look forward to taking the debate over the flat tax out from under the dome and to the taxpayers of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to close by drawing the attention of your end of the House to a statement taken from a paper presented by Trevor Harrison at the University of Alberta. He is addressing questions as to the reason for reducing taxes. I quote him here. He says: it's highly questionable that people move here to Alberta only because of lower taxes. Taxes are the only stable source of funds the provincial government has, because royalties are cyclical, and the cyclical nature of the economy is as certain as the sunrise every morning. The government is really living on the knife-edge by giving up tax room. If public health care and education are going to be maintained, you are going to have to come to terms with where you're going to get the money.

That's the money that's being risked by this tax cut, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

4:10

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to speak one more time on this bill at third reading. I want to start off by making a couple of corrections to the hon. leader of the third party. He talked about an agenda where there may be the introduction of the concept of a sales tax in this province, and I'd like to refer him to the agenda that is here from this government.

We actually passed – and I'll remind him – the Alberta Taxpayer Protection Act so that any government in the future would have to go to the people and ask under referendum if they wanted their provincial government to in fact put in place a sales tax. I daresay that the answer quite clearly would be no. I would ask hon. members to refer to that act, because the position of our government has been that there will not be a sales tax in this province, and that has been made abundantly clear a number of times. So, please, refer to that act. We haven't talked about it for a while, but it is the law, so we have to always remind ourselves of what protection is in place.

Mr. Speaker, taxes are not nice, not at any stage. Nobody enjoys paying taxes. Whether it's a provincial tax, a municipal tax, an education tax, or a federal government tax, no one enjoys paying taxes. Typically we all complain when we file our tax returns, because it's a shock when you get to the end of April and you realize what has been taken out of your disposable income to support programs by the local municipality, the province, or the federal government. We all value those programs, we all say we want to have those programs, but the shock comes when we realize how much those programs actually cost. And all members are quite right: taxation dollars are a major source of revenue for any government at any level. Believe you me, the more dollars that come in, the more governments will spend. It's just the culture. It's the Canadian way.

I think what we have tried to do in our government and under our Premier's leadership is to identify what the government should be doing, where the government should be spending and, more importantly, where it should not, and what kind of a scheme we can put in a fiscal framework that allows for the government to do the core programs it should be doing and to leave the things it shouldn't be doing to other sources.

We've heard some talk today about the concern that tax reductions could lead to a shortage of funds because of the vulnerability of resource revenues. We've all seen those vulnerabilities, and we've gone through some pretty rough times in the past when we've seen as much as $10 per barrel shifts in crude oil and the impact it's had. You know, sometimes what happens – and I remember the 1980s. I was in the oil patch when things dropped 50 percent overnight, from $30 a barrel to $15 and all the way down to $9, and I saw what happened. It's amazing how the industry has learned an awful lot of things from that experience.

Also, the government has learned. The government back in the '80s had a theory that government should be involved in diversifying the economy. Well, that's not really the role of government. What the role of the government probably should have been – and you learn through hindsight. Hindsight is always 20/20 vision. What the government should have learned was that it was really a framework that was necessary so that the private sector could diversify the economy if it made sense.

Fortunately, we have been through a process for the last seven years where the private sector has taken that up. Yes, we are reliant upon the oil and gas revenues, but we also have a diversified economy that the private sector made. The private sector came in and became a partner in providing an economic stability in this province that has not ever been found before. In fact, you can't find it across Canada or anywhere else. I think Albertans should be very proud of that diversification and economic development that occurred by the private sector, not by the government but by the private sector, and that came as a result of a framework that was conducive to that kind of development and diversification taking place.

The other thing I heard was that there is a vulnerability with tax revenues. If in fact the economy is not healthy, if people are not corporately making a profit, taxes are not paid. You only pay a tax on profit, and if people are not employed, they're not paying tax. You must have a framework that is working together, where you have economic prosperity, economic development, high employment rates, new creativity, new capital investment. That provides the cycle of flow of dollars through the system.

So what does that all mean to Bill 18? Well, Bill 18 from my view is dealing with the reality of – we were stuck in a groove in Alberta where we were piggybacking on a federal tax system. We had tax on tax, and to delink ourselves from that system, we had to come forward with another framework that would not penalize Albertans again with tax on tax, where you had a thing that was called bracket creep, where you had shifts from a federal government that would penalize the Alberta provincial tax base.

Bill 18 does the delinking. It puts us into a position where we have a single tax rate, and by having a single tax rate, we are able to look at our personal exemption side of the equation also. By moving the personal exemption side to be equal between a spouse and a person, we have in fact recognized that there were some discriminatory practices in place between married couples, quite frankly. So that is dealt with. By going to a single tax rate, we have been able to move away from the tax-on-tax system to a more tax-on-income system, which is a purer tax base.

The amendments that were brought forward recognizing the shift down to the single tax rate of 10.5 percent ensure that Albertans will have a tax relief in the year 2001. I want to just use a couple of examples. I know the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore used some. For a single person we have an example of a lady who is a janitor in Strathmore earning $27,650 a year. Half of her health care premiums are paid by her company, and in 2002 she will pay $1,391 in provincial tax. That's $208 less than what she paid in 1999. So here is a single person earning money, having tax premiums, and she will see a reduction.

Ted is a journeyman who is an autobody mechanic working in rural Alberta. He earns $38,000 a year and has half of his health care premiums paid by his company. In 1999 Ted paid $2,720 in provincial income tax. In the year 2001 he will pay $2,405, a savings of $315. These are actual real-life examples of where people had peculiarities.

Single-income families. Shelley is an occupational therapist in Calgary, while her husband stays at home with her son, Jeff. Shelley earns $41,400 a year. In 1999 Shelley paid $2,672 in provincial income tax. In the year 2001 under the single tax rate she will pay $1,384, a saving of over $1,280.

Carlos is a construction superintendent working in Edmonton. His wife, Natalie, is a homemaker. Carlos earns $60,500 in salary and taxable benefits. In addition, Carlos earns $750 from his investment income and makes an RRSP contribution of $4,500. In 1999 Carlos paid $4,563 in provincial taxes. In the year 2001 he will pay $2,995, a provincial tax saving of $1,568.

Mr. Speaker, the point of this is to indicate that Albertans will receive a benefit from a single tax rate. The Member for Calgary-Glenmore talked about the people that will pay no tax at all. The way that calculation comes about, if you refer to your tax return, is that the tax is based on taxable income on the tax return, line 260; that times 10.5 percent. You go down then to the tax credit area, you take line 338, and you multiply that by 10.5 percent. You subtract that from line 260, and you end up with a number as to what your taxable income will be. Now, with the increase in the personal exemptions you have the opportunity to have your income come down to zero taxable income, because you combine the two exemptions and take the 10.5 percent.

This tax act is long overdue. There's been a fair bit of debate on it, talking about what it means to Albertans, but quite frankly I think it's time that we had a delinking from the federal system so that we are able to give back to Albertans some of their money. Yes, we have to be careful to ensure that the core programs of government are still funded and affordable. Quite frankly, if we could do more, I think everyone in this House would applaud that, but we also have to be careful. Even your own leader recognized that if we're going to reduce taxes, we have to reduce spending first. You can't do both. You can't do it all.

It would be nice to say that we could be, like some jurisdictions, tax free. That's not reality. It's not feasible. Because we have programs that are offered for the public good, we have to make sure that the core programs that are essential to Albertans, such as our health and education and social programs and our infrastructure, are maintained and can be afforded by the government they elect. So this act I believe is positive for people.

I'll leave people with this thought. I've talked with my constituents, and if you think back – and all of us in here are old enough to think back to the early 1980s. You ask people: how much disposable income did you have back in 1980 or '81 compared to what you have today? And it's amazing, Mr. Speaker, when you really add it up, when you think of how costs have spiraled and how people have worked very hard. Their taxes have gone up, but their purchasing power has gone down. This is one way to give money back to the people who put it in the pot, the taxpayers, the shareholders whom we work for, so that they can make decisions as to what they're going to do with their money. Moving it through the economy is healthy for the economy. We can go through all kinds of economic studies to talk about the impact when it takes basic economics 201 to figure out that dollars flowing through the economy is a healthy environment. Even the opposition can understand that.

So I would ask the opposition: let's not play politics with people's funds. Let's make sure we join together and support this bill and give back to Albertans their money, because they deserve it and we are now in a fiscal position in this province where we are able to move forward with some of these tax cuts. We can't do it all.

MRS. SLOAN: You can't pay our health care workers a fair wage?

MRS. NELSON: We can't do it all, Mr. Speaker, but there is a right balance there, and this whole concept is striking that balance.

The hon. member from Riverbend is yapping about health care workers. They will receive . . .

MR. HANCOCK: Riverview.

MRS. NELSON: Well, whatever. Edmonton-Riverview, not Riverbend.

They will benefit from this tax bill the same as everyone else, Mr. Speaker. Quite frankly, I'm sure they will be delighted to see this bill go forward, and I would hope that the opposition would not play politics on this and would do the right thing and support Albertans receiving some of their money back.

Those are my comments. Thank you.

head: Statement by the Speaker

Introductions of School Groups

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie in just a moment, but I'm going to take extraordinary leave to deal with the privilege, essentially, of members and the privilege of the House. Just bear with me for a moment or two.

An hon. member has advised that a regrettable incident occurred in the Assembly earlier today, and I want to have these comments placed in the record for the integrity of the Assembly and the integrity of the hon. member. Earlier this afternoon a group of schoolchildren from Paddle Prairie was in the Legislative Assembly for a field trip, and the hon. member, in this case the hon. Member for Peace River, had originally planned to meet the group at noon for a photo. Unfortunately, because of parliamentary responsibility he had to send regrets at the last moment.

The group of children was not scheduled to be in the Assembly, but as does happen periodically, some of these changes do occur with tour guides, and the group was admitted into the gallery during the question period. The hon. Member for Peace River constituency unfortunately was not informed that they were in the Assembly. Of course, other members of the Assembly were introducing school groups, and needless to say, the hon. member felt a little embarrassed by the fact that he had no notice that his group was there. That is unfortunate and should not have happened.

The correct procedure, of course, is that the tour guides associated with the Office of the Legislative Assembly should have provided a normal notice to be placed on the desk of the hon. member so that the hon. member would have been in a position to introduce these children.

I raise this now because it has happened in the past that an hon. member may be away or out of the Assembly at a certain time when his school group does come in, and the office of the Speaker does receive letters from those individuals, who are teachers and educators and others, saying: wow, how is it that one group gets introduced and another group does not?

There's absolutely no reason for the hon. Member for Peace River to feel embarrassed about this today. He may feel angry, and he should take out his anger on the Speaker for failing to fulfill the proper mandates which are associated with this. But the Speaker would like to convey to the hon. Member for Peace River that this should not have happened, that this was an oversight, and that the chair itself will convey a letter of information to the teacher and the school group in Paddle Prairie saying that it was regrettable and that hopefully sometime soon they will be able to see the smiling face of the hon. Member for Peace River and they will continue forward in a good, harmonious relationship.

So there is an apology extended to the hon. Member for Peace River, as there will be an apology extended to the teacher and the school group from Paddle Prairie.

MR. FRIEDEL: May I just say thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 18

Alberta Personal Income Tax Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to take this opportunity to address Bill 18, the flat tax bill, in its final stage of third reading, when we have a last chance to review the bill in its final form before it's passed, unfortunately under the threat of closure, the reality of closure, which will be occurring one hour from this point in time. The government has once again thrown about its weight in deciding that it knows what's best for Albertans, in fact stifling debate on this particular bill, one that is very important to the future of Albertans, I believe, and one that will be changing the entire basis of how democratic decisions are made in this province and the reasons why we make those decisions.

Initially I would like to refer to the comments made by the Provincial Treasurer earlier this afternoon when he talked about this bill. He introduced it by saying that this would be bringing about a new age of "respect for taxpayers and hardworking people" and that Alberta "has set the tone" for establishing that respect. I don't think "respect" would be the correct word to use here, Mr. Speaker. The manner in which this legislation is being approached in not respectful of the Canadian identity or Canadian process. A flat tax shows disrespect for what has historically been the essence of being Canadian, Mr. Speaker. So I am deeply concerned about his comments and the context in which he is promoting his own personal ideology.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

He talked about the hopes and dreams of young people being enhanced by the flat tax. Well, nothing could be further from the truth. The hopes and dreams of young Albertans is enhanced by those young people having an equal opportunity to succeed, by choosing to provide the kinds of benefits they need to have, equal representation or the closest thing to equal representation that we can provide to them in this society. We need to present to these young people a kind of society that is rich in more than just money. This government has been obsessed with the ideology of money, when in fact what makes us rich are the kinds of services, the kinds of integrity we have, and the kind of equal opportunity we provide to everyone in this society.

4:30

How do we do that? We do that through a progressive tax base, Mr. Speaker, one that is representative in terms of providing for the needs of the people, and by not unduly burdening one sector of society with an inordinate burden of tax. In this case, this particular bill will place a heavier burden on middle-class taxpayers than it does on anybody else, not on those who have already succeeded in our society and who don't need a helping hand but on those particular people who are trying to provide an environment that is better for their children and for their grandchildren in the future.

We provide equality by providing high levels of services, by doing things like Head Start programs, by providing a high level of access to education and a high level of education itself, and by providing health care. Those things are funded through a progressive tax base in a way that is fair, based on each individual's ability to pay, Mr. Speaker. I would like to talk about that in terms of the Canadian identity that we have established within the framework of comments made on April 13 of this year by John Ralston Saul, who is a well-known author in Canada and a philosopher who has addressed this issue I think quite deliberately and in a manner which bears paying attention to by all of us, particularly by those legislators who would want to now change the manner in which we approach providing services in this society.

He talks about how our culture and our society and our country and therefore our provinces became rich because we chose to make ourselves a certain kind of society. And that kind of society has to do with egalitarianism and democracy and out of that came the conscious ability to construct prosperity.

That's by giving people equal opportunities and chances to move forward.

The opposite of that kind of society, which people who have built this country and legislators who came after those initial builders made a conscious choice to follow the path of, is a society that focuses on self-interest. Self-interest would dictate that those who want services pay for them as they need them and there is no extra money for anybody else, that in essence they're paying for only themselves and there's nothing to share around. That would be a self-serving kind of society that we would move to, and it's one that we have deliberately moved away from.

Other societies have pursued that. We see that very much in the American style of democracy, where it's each for his own and very little is provided in the way of public services. We can see that. Tax rates are uniformly lower there, and a great deal of attention is placed on financial success and not other kinds of success, things like giving a helping hand to those who don't start out as fortunate as some of the rest of us.

If we take a look at the history of Canada, Mr. Speaker, we will see that the founders of this country were highly concerned about providing an egalitarian kind of society where the wealth was shared amongst all, not in terms of money but in terms of the kinds of opportunities and services that were provided. If we were to look back at what Robert Baldwin had to say in the early 1800s, we would see that one of the things he stated was that we're "so fortunate as to belong to the favoured class," those of us who have money, that we "could not be so narrowminded and so blind to [our] own interests as to object to being taxed to effect great and important projects." I think that's an interesting statement that stands today, Mr. Speaker, and one that we need to examine.

It is not what was being promoted by either the Provincial Treasurer this afternoon or the Acting Provincial Treasurer in terms of his response to questions. They clearly came out on the side of the individual, that those who are so gifted in life through their own talents or through place and birth should also be gifted in terms of lower tax rates. I don't understand the logic in that when you compare that to helping society out on their own. This country was not built on that narrowminded kind of thinking, and I think this is a time for us to reflect on that.

If we take a look at Louis LaFontaine, also in the 1850s, he also supported social equality as a binding cornerstone of the kind of Constitution and equality and windows for opportunity for Canadians in this country, Mr. Speaker. It's time for us to take a look back at that, because a flat tax changes those dynamics. It's something for us to reflect on at the very final stages of this particular legislation.

Do we want a privileged caste in this society, Mr. Speaker, or do we want opportunities for all? Do we sacrifice political liberty if we give unfair advantage to a specific class in our society that can in fact afford to pay and who I believe and who many of these original founders of Canada as a country believed had a responsibility to pay their fair share? A progressive tax means that those who can afford to pay do pay their fair share. The kind of progressive system that we have had enhances and reinforces our sense of community in terms of our responsibilities for our neighbours rather than taking the point of view that this government has taken, where you pit one group against the other, one neighbour against the other, one class of people against the other, those who are high-income earners and those who are not.

It's a completely different perspective that we're taking a look at. We're taking a look at ensuring the maintenance of a sense of a community, the sense that basic education, basic health care rights, basic access to other kinds of services this government provides are fundamental rights of Canadians, and they're paid for by somebody. In this case they're paid for on a proportionate basis in a progressive tax form.

Do we need tax reform? Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. There isn't a person in this Legislature that wouldn't agree with that. We need fair taxation. That means an end to such things as user fees, which are arbitrary and regressive taxes. It means an overhaul of the tax system in a manner that treats everybody in a fair manner.

A good start to that is the Alberta Liberals' proposal of a zero, 10, and 12 tax base, where low-income earners don't pay any provincial tax, middle-income earners pay a 10 percent fee, and high-income earners pay a 12 percent fee. I have yet to meet a single person in that high-income bracket who does not think that that is a fair burden for them to take on. They have more disposable income. They are prepared to take their fair share of that burden. I think this government is selling that group of people short by thinking that they do not have that kind of responsibility and that they do not endorse the Canadian philosophy in terms of how we want to manage our country and provide services.

This government would promote individualism, where people simply have the right to walk away and go wherever they choose and not help out their neighbour. That's not how this country was built, and it is not what gave many of their ancestors the opportunities to move forward in terms of the place they had in society and their countries of origin. I think it's important that people reflect on that kind of a background and think that if we were in the kind of society that only promoted individualism and former caste systems in terms of those who have and those who have not, we would see that many of the people in this room here today would not be here, Mr. Speaker, if we lived in a different country with a different system.

I don't see anything wrong with the kind of system that we had where there is a belief in inclusiveness and the idea that it's important to promote ideas that are not based on self-interest. We have to remember those kinds of things. If we were to take a look back through Macdonald's and Cartier's statements made as founding members of this country, we would see that they also supported an egalitarian kind of system.

We do hear arguments against paying for public services. If you take a look at those historically, Mr. Speaker, you will see that they're based on antidemocratic, colonial beliefs, where the caste system was important. I don't think that that's what Canadians are all about. We can see from my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo's survey that he took off the Internet that 63 percent of Albertans who responded also do not think that antidemocratic, colonial beliefs are the way we want to go in this particular society when we talk about a fair tax system.

I would like to quote from John Ralston Saul's paper where he said that "there has always been and there will always be opposition from those who can pay; it's perfectly normal." He says that with money in his pockets he has "no desire to take it out of his pocket. It's nothing wrong; there's nothing evil about not wanting to hand over [your] money." We've seen this government enforce that. He says that it's just always been that way but that if you're conscious about it, you realize that you don't want to hand over the money. He says that you have to convince those who have the money that it's their duty to pay, and you have to have regulations to make sure they do that. He also says that inevitably people with money will prefer a two-tiered system because it's easier and it's cheaper for them and it costs them less and that they'll just pay for their own kids' services and needs and look after themselves.

There's nothing surprising in that. In fact, we've heard that exact argument from this government at every stage of debate on this bill. That's the kind of government and taxation policy that they would support, where they just want to look after their own and nobody else.

Mr. Speaker, he says that "the public good demands more from us." I agree with that statement, and 63 percent of the people who responded to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo's question also believe that the public good demands more from us. It demands even more financially from those who are able to pay a larger part. People who are able to pay a larger part support that belief. They are perfectly willing to pay their part, provided they understand the role that they're playing in society.

Something we have to reflect on at this point in time when we're talking about changing the kind of tax base that we have had in this province is: do people want to provide for the public good? It is the Canadian way to do that, Mr. Speaker. It is the Canadian way to ensure that we have a basic level of public services, more than a basic level of public services when it comes to education and health care.

We've seen that in more aspects than just tax dollars in this particular province, Mr. Speaker. We see it in the kinds of charitable contributions people make. We see it in the kinds of volunteer time that people contribute throughout this province, and we see large portions of that time coming from people who are in a higher tax bracket and who can afford to pay more. On the whole, when people think about the common good and the greater good of our society, they are quite prepared to pay for that privilege, and that's what happens in a progressive tax system. We can ensure that we provide a fair level of service or a better level of service, one that can be globally competitive for all, where we don't unfairly give a tax advantage to a particular class of people who do not need the advantage. I think that's something that's important to see.

Those who are high-income earners do have an advantage in this society in terms of influencing legislation. Because they have more disposable income, they can influence legislation at many different kinds of levels: direct donations, lobbying. They have time to hire people to lobby or directly influence. We've seen a lot of that happen here. The middle class have a hard time just surviving: getting the kids through school, getting a little retirement money put aside, paying off the mortgage, taking care of the neighbours. They don't have the same kinds of access to lobbying efforts that we see from those who have wealth, yet we see that most of those who have wealth do not unfairly use that privilege, Mr. Speaker. We see that most who have that wealth are quite prepared to work for the greater good.

But not this government. They want to support those people who have already got that benefit in society, and that's the choice they've made: not to support a real sense of community, not to support the traditions of this country, not to support an egalitarian society, and not to support those young people that the Provincial Treasurer spoke about earlier in his comments in terms of having equal opportunity. If we don't ensure that we have an adequate tax base in this province to provide essential services like kindergarten programs, which this government felt were disposable, like Head Start programs, like access to public education and to advanced education, then we are not providing any kind of an egalitarian society for those young people who are coming up. That is a real shame, Mr. Speaker, and it's where we're headed with this particular bill.

A flat tax bill is more than just the introduction of a new tax system. It's an introduction of a new way of thinking for this province, one where we focus on the needs of the individual – of me, myself, and I – and forget about the responsibility we have to take care of our neighbour, to provide a helping hand when necessary and a hand up whenever we can. We forget about those kinds of principles. We move into a conquer and divide kind of society, and I do not want to be a part of it.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to be able to rise in the Assembly and address Bill 18 in third reading. I have listened carefully to the opposition protest both Bill 18 and Bill 19, both of which will see Albertans pay less provincial income tax in the future. I admit to some surprise that the Liberals would have protested this tax cut. I do sometimes forget, however, the fundamental philosophical difference between Conservative, Liberal, and ND minds. Conservatives actually believe that the money belongs to the people and that government has a responsibility to return that which is taken in excess of what is needed to deliver the programs the people have asked us to deliver.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I should not be surprised about how provincial Liberals feel about tax cuts in light of what their federal cousins have done to Albertans and, indeed, to all Canadians over the years. Since the Chretien Liberals came to power in 1993, the average family taxes have ballooned from $13,937 a year to $18,146. [interjection]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood is invited to join the debate at the appropriate time, and this is not the appropriate time. We have recognized Airdrie-Rocky View.

Debate Continued

MS HALEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since 1989 the amount of money individuals paid to government, including income taxes, Canada pension plan, and employment insurance premiums, has climbed by 54 percent. Over the same period pretax income has risen only 32 percent. Thus the burden is growing 1.7 times faster than the ability of the payer to pay.

There is no surprise that low-income families find themselves sinking into debt. This fact was reported to the federal cabinet prior to their throne speech this year. While I am pleased that the federal government has responded even in a small way to the growing tax burden that we all find ourselves under with some movement on bracket creep over the next four to five years, the federal progressive tax will see low-income families paying taxes while borrowing money to make it through the year. That, Mr. Speaker, is unacceptable.

In response to that, Bill 18 has been developed. It will see over 190,000 low-income families and individuals come right off the Alberta provincial tax rolls. I call that a good thing, Mr. Speaker, truly part of the Alberta advantage, an Alberta advantage that extends to all people of this province no matter their age, their income, or their status.

The federal Liberal cousins to our own Liberals here claim that their government policy helps low-income families, yet according to news reports done by the family institutes, this is not true. Federal income tax policy in fact pushes people into debt, and the benefits from government policy won't change that.

MS OLSEN: That is Stockwell's statement.

MS HALEY: Actually, no, Edmonton-Norwood. It's my speech. I just wrote it. If you don't like it, you can get up and refute it later; okay?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Through the chair, please.

MS HALEY: Well, I'm trying, Mr. Speaker.

Proof of this is in the growth of household debt. The Vanier Institute of the Family says that we have more household debt than disposable income. In the mid-1960s in Canada total liabilities were 72 percent of disposable income. In 1993 it saw us as a nation pass the 100 percent mark, so more than 100 percent of our annual disposable income is now owed. Today, in the year 2000, we are at 114 percent of our disposable income. Mr. Speaker, is this because Canadians and Albertans don't work hard enough? Is it because we just blow off our paycheques on frivolous things? Actually, I don't think we do. I think the problem is that we're being severely overtaxed by all three levels of government.

Here in Alberta we're trying to recognize the reality that Albertans deserve to keep more of their own income. Bill 18 allows Albertans to do just that. The opposition would have you believe that having a single rate of tax is a bad thing, yet here's the thing, Mr. Speaker. Back in the 1960s right here in Canada, across the entire country, the tax rate was 8 percent, 8 percent for everybody regardless of their income level. It was good enough back when John Diefenbaker was the Prime Minister of this very great nation, and since then we could have used a few more John Diefenbakers. Governments here and all across Canada, wanting to be all things to all people all of the time, started creating programs and more programs and more programs. And what do you know? These programs all have to be paid for.

So how do you pay for them? Well, you pay for them with more and more taxes, more and higher taxes that have to be collected. The 8 percent tax applied to everyone, not just to one group of people. So how do you get more money, Mr. Speaker? Well, you slide the rates up. But you could have done it at just 8 percent or 10 percent or 12 percent for everybody. No. There was a whole new insidious method that was developed because the higher income people here are less than the majority of people in the country.

So you split the tax rates. You go into progressive tax systems. Here for this group you have a high rate of 27 percent. Then for this group over here you've got a high rate of 51 percent. Then provincial governments all across the country just latched onto whatever that rate was and said: "We'll take 40, 50, or 52 percent of whatever they're getting. Oh, that's not enough. Let's slap some surtaxes on top."

All the while that's not enough. Taxes go up and up and up, and it's not enough. Let's spend more money than we have. That was the next great theme for 25 years in this country, spending more than we had. So on top of having almost the highest taxes in the world – only five countries have higher taxes than we do – we spent more money than we had even at the high tax rates.

So we go along with this, and here are some interesting numbers. In 1970 as a nation we owed $17 billion. In 1993, just 23 years later, we owed $466 billion. Today, in the year 2000, our country is $584 billion in debt. Interest has grown from $1.8 billion in 1970 to $39 billion in 1993 to $45 billion in 1998, or $1,500 for every man, woman, and child that live in this country. That's just interest. That's not the debt. This interest has to be paid each and every year without fail. You can defer the bulk of your payment on your total debt, but you cannot defer your interest. Twenty-seven percent of federal revenues goes to pay interest. So here we are as Albertans paying federal income tax, and 27 percent of it is not creating one job, not creating one program. It is only going to interest, and the majority of that isn't even being paid inside our own country because we borrowed off international markets. So we're getting it coming and we're getting it going.

Meanwhile, the same federal government has cut transfer payments. Here in Alberta we're trying to make things work. We've managed through the Alberta advantage to increase the size of our economy, which has benefited all Albertans, including the federal government, who have managed to increase their take of what they get out of Alberta, but all of this was done at the cost of an onerous tax system. We're accused by the Liberals of doing this on the backs of middle-income people or of favouring one group over another. Mr. Speaker, we're working very hard to treat everyone the same, everyone except the low-income earners in this province, who will pay nothing in provincial taxes.

I don't understand why the Liberals are not standing up and criticizing the federal government, who does nothing but take more from us and give less and less back on an annual basis. Well, from a philosophical base, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals are now saying that we are driven by the hard right, yet they sit there and vote against a tax cut for Albertans in a country that is the fifth-highest taxed country in the world. How much tax is enough?

Thirty years ago in Canada we were a prosperous nation. We had low taxes and an excellent standard of living, and the federal government – by the way, massively Liberal for the last 30 years – has borrowed us into one of the highest taxed nations in the world. Their share of the interest bill is killing our low or middle income, and you guys sit there and cheer. Sounds about right.

Which brings us back, Mr. Speaker – Alberta was at some point following that lead, and the Alberta government was spending 20 percent more than they had in revenues each and every year for years. You'd know about this because your leader was one of the people that helped do this.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The tax-and-spend philosophy was deeply entrenched in all governments in this entire country, and in 1993 we broke that mold here in Alberta. Alberta has no more deficits. We have our debt coming down and under control. We have very good programs for the people of this province, and, where possible, money is spent on onetime programs to improve the infrastructure of our province and continue to build on the Alberta advantage.

It's time for Albertans as individuals to reap some of the benefits of our growing and very dynamic economy, and by next year, when the new tax bill finally takes hold and Albertans get a chance to take advantage of this – for example, if you earn an employment income of $30,000 or are a one-income family with two children, in Alberta your total provincial tax bill, including income tax, health care premium, payroll taxes, fuel taxes, tobacco/alcohol taxes, will be $533. You might want to compare that to people who live in Newfoundland, who will be paying $3,911. It's fairly steep for a low-income family.

An employment income of $55,000 for a two-income family with two children in the same basket of taxes will be $3,234 here in Alberta. It will be $6,583 in Newfoundland, $6,906 in Quebec, and $5,396 in Manitoba. On an employment income of $100,000 for a two-income family with two children, in Alberta your total tax bill will be $7,347, compared to Newfoundland at the other end of the country at $13,294, $17,574 in Quebec, $10,851 in Nova Scotia, $12,465 in Manitoba. It doesn't sound like a real bad deal for Albertans to me.

On top of that, we now have the Canadian Federation of Independent Business saying that this is a good thing; 80 percent of them are supporting it. We've got places like the National Foundation for Family Research and Education supporting it. We've actually got real-live constituents supporting it.

You know, when I ran in 1993, there were a few things that I wanted to do. I wanted our deficit to be gone. I wanted our debt to come down and be paid off, and I wanted taxes to be fair for everybody. This bill goes a long way towards making the tax system fair for all Albertans.

I am, for one, truly excited by the changes that we are making. I believe it will benefit all of us and not only through lower taxes but also in our ability to attract and keep some of our very mobile, very well educated, very much in demand population. I want Alberta to be a place to come to for people like doctors, people who are involved in our knowledge-based industries, which is truly the place where we want to position Alberta. We don't want it to be a place that people leave because we are no longer tax competitive with the rest of the world. We pay 20 percent more in income taxes in Canada than they do in the United States, and this is not that far across that border.

I know a lot of young people who have left my constituency and this province to work in the United States. I don't blame them for going, but I think it's a terrible loss for all of us, and one of the reasons that they don't come back is because they have a superior tax system. They feel they're overtaxed in the United States; well, we're taxed a 20 percent difference, Bill. You might want to keep that number in mind.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I'm absolutely delighted to support Bill 18, and I truly look forward to its full implementation next year.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member who was just speaking, the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View, was absolutely right: there are some fundamental differences between the way that Liberals think and Conservatives think. I guess Conservatives confuse fairness with saneness, and Liberals know that fairness is all about equality and equity. You know, those are pretty important philosophical differences, pretty important differences in terms of philosophy.

As I was listening to the government supporters support this bill over this debate that's been under the gun of closure all the way through, including these dying minutes of the debate, it occurred to me that listening to the government trying to sell their flat tax plan is like when you go into a discount clothing store and somebody tries to sell you a one-size-fits-all T-shirt. We all know the problem with one size fits all is that really one size fits none, and that's exactly what we have with this flat tax. We have a simple approach, somebody trying to sell the idea of one size fits all when really what we need is some tailored tax policy so that it will truly fit people at various levels of income throughout our society.

You can try and point fingers at the federal government and you can try to pretend that you're disassociated from previous provincial governments, but the reality is that in the last number of years certain things have taken place. Over 30 years of Conservative governance – and I use that word advisedly; it is more like Conservative dominance – in the province of Alberta we went from a province with no debt to a province with a huge debt. We went from a province that was spending as it went to a province that was spending 20 percent more every year than it took in in revenue. This all happened under a Conservative government, Mr. Speaker.

Then in 1993 we had an election where the province was taken from tax-and-spend Tories to tax-and-cut Tories, and then they made a big deal out of balancing the budget, meanwhile trying to pretend that they were responsible for the economic diversification and for the robust economy that Alberta has enjoyed, particularly as a result of what's been going on in technology and in the petrochemical sectors.

Now, at the same time that was happening, for several years we had a Conservative government in Ottawa. We had a Conservative government that ballooned the debt – and I hear the Minister of Justice applauding the federal government of Brian Mulroney that ballooned the debt – that brought in GST, that taxed Canadians like they've never been taxed before, that left an incredible mess that thank goodness the federal Liberals under Jean Chretien have been equal to the task of managing. Then, to add insult to injury, we have people standing up in this Assembly on the one hand, like the Minister of Government Services, saying, "Let's stop playing politics," and then you have individuals like the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View saying that PCs, Progressive Conservatives, believe that tax money belongs to people. But of course what she forgets is that this government has the legacy of saying no, that the money must belong to shopping malls and the money must belong to waste management disposal plants and the money must belong to MagCan and to billions of dollars worth of handouts to corporations that have failed.

So, really, when you talk about rhetoric, I agree with the Minister of Government Services. We should put politics aside, and we should get rid of the rhetoric. We certainly don't need to listen to the self-serving commentary about who it is that believes who controls the money. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the money belongs to the taxpayers, and we are their servants when we go to spend the money.

But I am getting a little bit tired of the hypocrisy. I'm getting tired of listening to the New Democrats say, "Oh, we can't have a flat tax," when the former leader of the New Democrats wrote an article that was published in the Edmonton Sun back in January of 1996 where she said: you know, what Canada needs is a flat tax. The New Democrats say, "Oh, we want tax fairness," but they are the party that said: let's triple the deficit elimination tax that the high-income earners pay. They wanted to bring it up to, I think, over 20 percent at one point in time.

So we've got hypocrisy coming at us from the left. We've got hypocrisy coming at us from the right. The government is saying, "We want to do the right thing for low- and middle-income taxpayers," but they've had an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to eliminate the .5 percent flat tax that would bring $360 million worth of tax relief to every Alberta taxpayer, shared savings all the way across the spectrum. You know what? They say: "No, we can't do it. We can't do it because we can't afford it."

They can't afford to bring that level of relief in, but on the other hand they're talking about how they want to be thanked for bringing in $1.3 billion worth of tax cuts on the other side. Talk about a mixed message and confusion. It must happen when you have part-time people in the job, Mr. Speaker. We've got this hypocrisy coming at us from the right. We've gone from tax creeps to tax hypocrites, and I don't think Albertans are being very well served by that.

Now, earlier today we heard a very moderate – and I'm pleased to acknowledge it – presentation by the former Provincial Treasurer, who dropped in to say hi and to let us know how things are going. I appreciated the opportunity to see him, and I appreciated the opportunity to listen to him. Obviously, I think the experience that he is gaining on the national stage has tempered him in his approach, and it was a pleasure, actually, to listen to him making comments. Frankly, I disagreed with his conclusions, but I must say that I thought well of the manner in which he presented those arguments. So while his ideology I still think is just way off-kilter and leaning far too far to the right, I must say that he's found a more palatable way of presenting it.

During that presentation it made me think of a recent Stats Canada study which found – and this is unbelievable, Mr. Speaker. Statistics Canada found that, contrary to popular belief, if you take a look at the middle of the middle-income earners in this country and the middle of the middle-income earners in the United States of America and you control for things like health care expenses – in other words, you look at total family income and you look at all the measures of central tendency to determine who's really in the middle in terms of family income on this side of the border and on the south side of the border – and you control for health care expenses so that you don't even have health care expenses to throw the argument off-kilter one way or the other, because we know of course that in the United States health care takes up a far greater degree of individuals' disposable income than it does in Canada, unbelievably what this very scientific study found is that those middle-income families in Canada had more disposable income. In spite of all the rhetoric we hear about the tax disadvantage, Canadians actually had more money in their jeans at the end of the day.

Now, this is something that you don't hear coming from the right wing, that's trying to sell this nonsense that it's just taxes that have caused the brain drain. It's not just taxes, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we've got an example going on in this province right at this very minute of what really causes the brain drain, and if you read the same newspapers that I read this morning, you saw the stories about the medical professionals, the nurses and the doctors, who are leaving this country in increasing numbers. The reason why is because, particularly in this province, those men and women aren't respected for the contributions that they make. Their working conditions are abysmal and getting worse, and the pay scale for many of them is at or near the bottom of the rung. Those are the kinds of issues that drive people away from this province and this country. It's not just this simple straight-line logic that the government would have us buy into, which says: oh, well, we taxed them too much. That doesn't seem to hold up very well in the light of day.

The provincial Premier, in between his arguments that he gets into with his colleague Premiers, has gone on record as saying that Albertans are going to be saving on average $1,500 in income tax as a result of Bill 18. You know, Mr. Speaker, that's simply not the case, because the average Albertan doesn't make a taxable income of $125,000. That's how much you'd have to make in order to get the benefit at the level that the Premier has been talking about, and that's if you factor in the spousal exemption and you factor in the average tax credits that Albertans typically take advantage of. So there have been some very misleading statements made about who it is that's going to save what.

Now, the Alberta tax changes won't take effect until next January, yet for two years in a row this government has been announcing and reannouncing – and I think it was up to 14 separate announcements – tax relief and tax changes, but for 24 months they took no action. Then they start taking some action, and then they only take action with a combination of the flat tax and the removal of the 8 percent surcharge, action that basically only caters to the wealthy.

You know, they say that these are temporary taxes and they're anxious to see them removed, but it reminds me of a quote by C.D. Howe – who I'm sure isn't a philosophical hero of several members of the government – when he was minister of trade and commerce in the '50s. He said, "There is nothing more permanent than a temporary government building – unless it's a temporary tax." That must be a sentiment that the Acting Provincial Treasurer ascribes to, because he stood not once but twice in this Assembly in the past couple of days to protect the government's ability to keep on collecting that .5 percent flat tax so he can continue to take out of the pockets of Albertans over $300 million and put it into his pockets, Mr. Speaker, metaphorically speaking of course: not into his own pockets but shared on behalf of his colleagues in cabinet.

Now, federal tax changes for the year 2000 will reduce the amount of tax payable for a spectrum of Albertans, and I do applaud that; that is good. But it's the distribution that's the problem. Now, the federal government seemed to be able to figure it out. They went to the middle bracket and decreased the middle bracket . . .

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer on a point of order.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

DR. WEST: Yes. Under 23(h), (i), and (j), on trying to inflame this Assembly with some of his rhetoric. He has insinuated by his comments that I as Acting Treasurer stood in this Assembly to defend the right to keep the .5 percent flat tax, that was put in some years ago. He said on two occasions that I defended it, yet I've stood up here and defended Bill 18 that incorporates .5 percent and its removal January 1, 2001. Then he comes and insinuates in his debate the opposite. I think he should retract that, because he's famous for dropping innuendos in here to send out there to the public of Alberta something that was not the intention of another hon. member in this Assembly.

MR. SAPERS: I'd be happy just to hear your ruling so that I can carry on with my debate, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. member, if one hon. member says that another hon. member said something and the hon. member who is the subject of it stands up and says, "No, I never said that," then it's really incumbent on the person who first threw the ball to make a response.

So the ruling is what? I have to accept the word of an hon. member, and in this case if the hon. member says, "I never said that," I have to accept that word. That certainly takes precedence over somebody else who says: well, no; you said that. The only person who knows what they said is the author. So in this case I have to accept the word of the hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer. I would ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to be careful to not give statements to other hon. members when they stand up and say: no, I never said that.

I don't know if that clarifies anything, but please proceed.

MR. SAPERS: It's as clear as the government's tax policy, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

Debate Continued

MR. SAPERS: I just don't want to waste any time. You know, I sat and I listened to the rhetorical statements from so many government members today without interfering, but you know, when the Acting Provincial Treasurer gets his skin a little bit ruffled, he has to stand up and try to disrupt debate. Well, that's fine. He can go ahead and do that. The record will show, Mr. Speaker, how he voted on the amendments that would have removed the .5 percent tax. The record clearly shows that he voted twice against Liberal amendments that would have saved Alberta taxpayers real money, would have put money back in their pockets in this next tax year, and he voted to keep that money coming out of their pockets and into his treasury. So that's what the record shows, and if he wants to say that's a distortion, he can try to sell that outside the Chamber, because the reality is that this government talks a good game about tax reform, but all it is is talk.

Now, the federal government, as I said, managed to figure it out right. They attacked those middle tax brackets and they brought them down. The Ontario government seems to have figured it out right. Look at what the Ontario government did, their philosophical cousins. They said: look; we're going to reject the flat tax because it doesn't work for people. What they said is: we're going to have a progressive system; we're going to have rates at 6.2 percent, 9.24 percent, 11.16 percent. It's still deindexed, it's still delinked, and it's fair, Mr. Speaker. They understand it. They've done the same thing in Saskatchewan.

So if the folks in Ontario, who this province loves to emulate so much, have figured it out and if even those socialists in Saskatchewan have figured it out – and I know that some members of this government actually have roots back there and have spoken proudly of them – if they figured it out, why is it that this government can't figure it out?

Why is it that British Columbia, which wants to go to tax on income and delink, stays with a progressive rate? Why is it that Saskatchewan, which is delinked and wants to go to tax on income, has opted for a progressive system? Why is it that Manitoba, which wants to delink, stays with a progressive system? Why is it in Ontario? Why is it in New Brunswick? Why is it in Prince Edward Island? Why is it in Nova Scotia? Why has every one of these jurisdictions made the decision to delink, to index, to protect from bracket creep? Yet they figured out a way to keep the system progressive and fair. Why is it that those governments have figured it out and our government hasn't? It's just ideology. They're blinded by their own ideology, and it's not good enough for Alberta. It's not good enough for the taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, the actual CPI increase for the year ended September 30, 1999, was 2.7 percent. That's almost twice the rate that's used in several clauses of the government's legislation. Why is it that they've made that miscalculation? What is it that they're trying to manipulate? Why is it that when the federal government has said that the most important thing is to take a look at both moderating the tax rates for the middle income and then providing incentives for investment through reducing the dividend tax payable, this government says: what we have to do to stimulate the same kind of supposed growth in the economy is only provide major relief at the top end?

Mr. Speaker, why is it that there are different calculations? Why is it that Albertans at the $30,000 level overall may only receive savings of about $40 or $45 and at the $40,000 level maybe about $95 dollars? Why is that? Why is it that this government continues to favour those who give political donations in the province but not to other charities?

If they're talking about meaningful tax reform, there is so much more that they could have done. In fact, this tax budget reminds me very much of a former Prime Minister when he made the following statement. He . . .

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under 23(h), (i), and (j). It's unfortunate that in the dying minutes of this portion of the session I have to rise to ask the hon. member to retract the comment that he just made. This government and these members do not favour people who give political contributions. It's a mean and unrealistic and unfair slur on the character of every member of this House to make those kinds of allegations in a speech, and he should be asked to withdraw that allegation.

MR. SAPERS: I have no idea what he's referring to. I'm talking about the tax credit you get for political contributions. Now, if he's feeling that sensitive, you know, maybe he doth protest too much. I wasn't suggesting that the government pays more attention to those who give them political donations. That would be the party, Mr. Speaker. I clearly said government.

I don't know what that Government House Leader is on about. I'm talking about tax policy. I'm talking about the government. Government tax policy clearly provides a maximum tax advantage to people who give a $100 political donation. You get a far better tax advantage than if you give $100 to the United Way. That's the point I'm making. So if he can't understand the difference between the Progressive Conservative Party, of which he is a proud member, and the government of Alberta, then that's his problem, but I certainly don't have anything to apologize for, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: So I take it, hon. member, that you are saying that you did not provide any slur on any hon. member with respect to advocating favours for contributions.

MR. SAPERS: No. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

You know, these childish interruptions from the members of the government's front bench are getting to be very, very annoying.

Debate Continued

MR. SAPERS: What I was getting on to, Mr. Speaker, is that this government's defence of its tax policy does remind me of a former Prime Minister of Canada when he said, "I think it really was a mukluk budget – it was luck for the privileged few and muck for the rest of us." Those are the words of the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau when he was Leader of the Official Opposition campaigning against the Conservative budget of John Crosbie. Of course, that was the budget back in 1980 that paved the way for so many of the problems that the federal Liberals eventually had to go and clean up.

As a result of Bill 18 Alberta tax filers in the lowest 52 percent of the income scale, those earning between zero and $30,000, will get an average annual tax reduction of $673 under this government's tax plan. Six hundred and seventy-three dollars. Alberta tax filers in the middle 39 percent of the income scale, between $30,000 and $70,000, will get an average annual tax reduction of $554. But wait for it. The top 4 percent of Alberta tax filers, in the income scale of $100,000 and over, those six-figure income earners, will get an average tax reduction of $5,404 under the government's tax plan. The very top 1 percent, the wealthiest Albertans, those tax filers whose income is above $150,000, will get an average tax reduction of nearly $11,000. Nearly $11,000. And this government confuses that with fairness. That is something that I will never support.

Mr. Speaker, not only did this government vote against an amendment which would have saved Alberta taxpayers that $344 million to $355 million in terms of the .5 percent flat tax; this government also once again, on one of the most comprehensive tax reforms that this province has ever seen, Bill 18, totally redoing the Alberta personal income tax regime, voted against referring the regulations of that very complicated area of law to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations. They still want to be able to meet behind closed doors in cabinet, in secret, with no sunshine creeping in because the blinds on the windows will be drawn, and they want to be able to come up with their secretive tax plans as to how they're going to continue to be able to pick the pockets of these hardworking Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, at least the former Provincial Treasurer had it right when he used to wear that lapel pin about the sweat-soaked loonies. At least he seemed to be knowledgeable and seemed to be aware of the fact that it's real Albertans that provide real money, and it's the sweat of their brow that funds this government's proclivities.

Now, they want to keep it secret. Because of their time allocation manipulation, because we now have a Government House Leader who I think holds the record for closure, the new captain of closure, because of that kind of manipulation, we couldn't even get that amendment on the floor. They were careful to make sure that we couldn't even get that amendment on the floor.

Not only wouldn't they allow that amendment, Mr. Speaker – this is the one that should really, really irritate Albertans, and I know that it will. We've heard all the rhetoric about pointing fingers at the federal government. Because of the federal government's projected surpluses, because it's used 42 percent of its economic surplus for tax relief where this government's only used 12, because of its aggressive moves on tax reform, the federal government is going to continue to bring real tax relief – real tax relief – to the middle-income Canadians and the middle-income Albertans.

Now, Mr. Speaker . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Government House Leader, I take it this is a point of order.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

MR. HANCOCK: It is indeed. I deliberated before raising it, Mr. Speaker, but I can't let it go unchallenged. Under 23 (h), (i), and (j), a definite attempt to besmirch this individual member's character by calling this member the king of closure or whatever the term was he used. In fact, it is a matter of public record that the federal Liberal government passed the record for closure by invoking closure and time allocations 67 times. On some occasions – and I can provide the information if the House would like to have it – they invoked closure and had a vote before there had been any more than one hour of discussion on the bill, and I don't believe that's ever happened in this House.

So they should look in the skin of their federal cousins for who's using closure the most, and the record will clearly show that closure has been used in the federal House by the federal Liberal government much, much more often, with more frequency and with less ability to debate bills than ever in this House.

MR. SAPERS: On this point of order, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry. I didn't call him the king; I called him the captain. But, of course, if he says that he's not the king, then he's just the prince of closure. He's number two but trying harder. So I withdraw that.

Debate Continued

MR. SAPERS: Now, let me please continue, Mr. Speaker, because we are under the threat of closure in the princely way in which it's been brought upon us, and I think I have less than four minutes left before the clock will expire and Albertans will be the recipients of this ill-conceived, unfair, biased, and bad law. So I hope that members of the government, as sensitive as they are, as much as their bubbles have been burst, as much as their thin skins have been irritated, will let me continue in the next couple of minutes uninterrupted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the provincial Liberals under the leadership of the Member for Edmonton-McClung . . . Mr. Speaker, that can't be my time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak to Bill 18. I have certainly been looking forward to speaking on Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. The reason I've been looking forward to this is because this bill really does something to help my low-income constituents and Albertans, and I think it's important to acknowledge this.

There is much talk from the opposition that Alberta's new tax plan benefits high-income earners. This is true. This government won't deny or apologize for that. But the Liberals always seem to stop there. This bill will also benefit middle-income earners. They are talking benefits to the tune of $612 in savings for a two-income family earning $55,000 with two children or savings of $1,206 for a one-income family earning $40,000 with two children, and I have many such families in my constituency, Mr. Speaker.

The fact is that Alberta's new tax plan goes even further, and that's something the critics don't like to mention. Bill 18 frees 190,000 low-income Albertans from provincial taxes. I'll say that again, Mr. Speaker: 190,000 low-income Albertans freed from provincial taxes. But given their record, it may be something they copy in their next budget and try to take credit for inventing, and for the sake of other Canadians, I can only hope they do so.

Low-income Albertans deserve a break. They may be students trying to get through school. They may be young or just entering the workforce. They may be single parents. Bill 18 will benefit each and every one of them.

Let's look at a part-time student. With Alberta's new tax plan, even if a student is working full-time at McDonald's earning minimum wage, he or she won't pay any provincial tax. Now, let's look at an Albertan entering the workforce. If he or she earned $20,000, they would save $386 from 1999. However, this federal tax bill will look . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, we now have a point of order from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Point of Order
Questioning a Member

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, under Beauchesne 333 would the member entertain a short question?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, you need only say yes or no.

MR. YANKOWSKY: No, I will not at this time.

Debate Continued

MR. YANKOWSKY: In 2001, families with two children who earn less than $33,400 will pay no provincial income tax. For these families the refundable Alberta family employment tax credit will exceed Alberta tax payable. Unfortunately, the federal Liberal taxes account for two-thirds of the tax bill. We would love to be able to announce that these low-income Albertans won't be paying any income tax at all, but we will have to wait until the federal Liberals find room in their budget to help these families.

5:30

Mr. Speaker, the opposition has suggested that health care premiums should be eliminated instead of moving to a single-rate tax. They suggest that would provide greater relief to low-income Albertans. However, there are several problems with this approach. First, low-income Albertans already receive generous subsidies to help pay for health care premiums. Many of these Albertans would receive no benefit from the elimination of this premium.

Seniors also receive generous relief on premiums. In fact, less than one-third of seniors pay full premiums. Seniors start paying income tax at a lower income level than they start paying health care premiums. Therefore, low-income seniors would benefit more from tax reductions.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on and on, but I just want to say that Alberta's new tax plan helps middle- and high-income Albertans, but most importantly it helps those that need it most. That's why we should all support Bill 18.

THE SPEAKER: Due notice having been given by the hon.

Government House Leader under Standing Order 21 and pursuant to Government Motion 22, agreed to earlier this afternoon, under Standing Order 21(2) I must now put the question on the motion for third reading of Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act.

Presentation to the Assembly of Mr. Brian Mason Member for Edmonton-Highlands

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I would now invite the hon. leader of the New Democrats to proceed to the bar of the Chamber.

Hon. members, I have received from the Chief Electoral Officer of Alberta the report of the returning officer for the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands containing the results of the by-election that was conducted on June 12, 2000. The report states that a by-election was conducted in the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands, and the said report further shows that Brian Mason was duly elected as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Sergeant-at-Arms.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Dr. Pannu escorted Mr. Mason to the Mace]

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to you Brian Mason, the new Member for Edmonton-Highlands, who has taken the oath as member of this House, has inscribed the roll, and now claims the right to take his seat.

THE SPEAKER: Let the hon. member take his seat.

Presentation to the Assembly of Mrs. Mary Anne Jablonski Member for Red-Deer North

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I would now invite the hon. Premier to proceed to the bar of the Chamber.

Hon. members, I have also received from the Chief Electoral Officer of Alberta the report of the returning officer for the constituency of Red Deer-North containing the results of the by-election conducted on September 25, 2000, which states that a by-election was conducted in the constituency of Red Deer-North. The said report further shows that Mary Anne Jablonski was duly elected as the Member for Red Deer-North.

Sergeant-at-Arms.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Mr. Klein escorted Mrs. Jablonski to the Mace]

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to you Mary Anne Jablonski, the new Member for Red Deer-North, who has taken the oath as a member of this House, has inscribed the roll, and now claims the right to take her seat.

THE SPEAKER: Let the hon. member take her seat.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Jorge Sobisch, governor of the province of Neuquen in Argentina, and his wife, Liliana Planas de Sobisch. They are seated in the Speaker's gallery. Welcome also to Pedro Salvatore, the former governor of Neuquen, and to the other members of the governor's delegation who are seated in the members' gallery.

1:40

The governor and his delegation have come to our province to explore areas where Alberta and Neuquen can work together. The governor signed co-operation agreements this morning with the government of Alberta and yesterday with the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology. During his stay he'll also meet with Calgary business leaders and visit the Royal Tyrrell Museum of Paleontology. With our shared interests in oil and gas, education, agriculture, cattle, forestry, and paleontology there are a number of excellent opportunities for co-operation between Alberta and Neuquen. I'm looking forward to discussing these opportunities and to furthering the friendship between our two provinces when I meet with the governor later this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition from citizens concerned with mature women's health and osteoporosis in particular. These are citizens of Edmonton, Sherwood Park, and St. Albert.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions to present today. The first is 1,060 signatures from individuals in Calgary and Lethbridge. This petition is asking that the Legislature pass a Tara McDonald law that will require two people on shift from dark to daylight.

The second petition, Mr. Speaker, is from 9,390 Albertans from Calgary, Lethbridge, Taber, a number of other points in southern Alberta, and from Edmonton, Leduc, High Prairie, and Fort McMurray. So you can see this one comes from a broad spectrum across the province. This one is also in connection with the employer's responsibility for employee safety, and it petitions the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce legislation requiring a minimum of two people on shifts from dark to daylight. Employers must be responsible for their employees' safety!

They are seeking to ask the Legislature to pass a Tara McDonald law to protect employees' lives.

Mr. Speaker, that's a total of 10,450 signatures from Albertans that are concerned about the safety of individuals working after hours.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that tomorrow I will move that the sole written question appearing on today's Order Paper, that being Written Question 22, be addressed.

Tomorrow I will also be moving that written questions and motions for returns appearing on Wednesday's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I propose to present the following motion to the Assembly today at the conclusion of the daily business of the House. That motion says:

Be it resolved that the Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of this Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the government's mismanagement of the deregulation of electricity markets in Alberta resulting in inadequate supply to meet the rising demand and skyrocketing prices for consumers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice that pursuant to Standing Order 40 I will move the following emergency resolution.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly, in light of skyrocketing electricity costs which are punishing consumers and disrupting the Alberta economy, urges the government to call an independent public inquiry into why the deregulation process has failed so badly and put all electricity deregulation on hold until the inquiry reports.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like today to provide five copies of a document entitled Working Alone Safely. I'd like to point out that this report has been prepared for Tara McDonald and other workers who have died or been injured on the job.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Resource Development.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to file a number of documents associated with the restructuring of the Alberta electricity industry. To start with, one is the independent Market Surveillance Administrator Report on Power Pool of Alberta Prices for summer 2000, released October 13, 2000. It tells Albertans about the record-high natural gas prices, high demand for electricity in other jurisdictions and at home, and other factors which led to rate increases in electricity last summer.

The second report I'd like to file, Mr. Speaker, is Alberta Connects, and that is appearing in a newspaper across Alberta this week. It tells Albertans about the government's proactive steps to shield Albertans from rising energy costs through the energy tax refund and electricity auction rebate.

The third item I'd like to file, Mr. Speaker, is the government's 10-point action plan announced on November 3, 2000. It will ensure a reliable electricity supply and competitive marketplace until the full benefits of restructuring are felt in the market.

The fourth item is the U.S. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission report of November 1, 2000, on California's wholesale electricity market structure. It identifies problems due to the rules under which trading takes place in the jurisdiction and offers suggestions for correcting them.

The fifth is the 10 electricity documents and brochures which reflect the government's diligent efforts to inform Albertans about how to make informed decisions in Alberta's competitive electricity marketplace. The documents, Mr. Speaker, are, one, Helping You Plug into Alberta's New Electric Industry; two, How to Shop for Electricity; three, Alberta's New Electric Industry, Opportunities for Small Industrial & Commercial Consumers; four, Alberta's New Electric Industry, Opportunities for Rural Electrification Associations; five, New Power Generation in Alberta, a guide to bringing new electric generation on stream; six, Power of Competition, a guide to Alberta's new competitive electric industry structure; seven, Power of Choice, a guide to help consumers better understand customer choice in Alberta's new restructured, competitive electricity industry; eight, A Vision for Alberta's Electric Industry, Looking Ahead to 2005; nine, Generation of Electric Power from Solution Gas Otherwise Flared; and a fact sheet about Alberta's electrical industry.

I would like to also table two letters of October 15 and November 9, 2000, from Mr. John Davies of the Lethbridge Iron Works Company Limited raising some concerns about electricity deregulation, which are being addressed through the government's 10-point plan.

Finally, the Industrial Association of Southern Alberta letter of November 4, 2000, commends the government for allowing industries to bid on unsold power purchase arrangements and for the 10-point plan.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table six copies each of three reports that I've brought forward today, the second quarter reports showing the results of the Alberta economy. The first is the fiscal update, the second is the activity report for the second quarter, and the third is the heritage fund second quarter report. This report, again, puts in place the 4 and a half billion dollar debt payment in the province of Alberta, which will release and bring down our interest payments to $700 million. It also ensures within there priority spending that will be discussed here during this session as well as a return to Albertans of some $485 million through tax concessions, rebates, and property tax reductions, Alberta crop insurance premiums for farmer reductions. Of course, starting on January 1 a reduction to 10 and a half percent single rate of tax will see another 190,000 Albertans off the tax rolls to go along with the 1 million tax filers in the province of Alberta that don't pay any provincial income tax.

1:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rather than the hidden agenda which this government has about more two-tiered health care in Alberta, I want to share with Albertans a preview of the first bill that we will present to this Legislature as the government that we will form after the next provincial election. There's a clear commitment in this bill to repeal and scrap Bill 11 and replace it with legislation that truly protects and strengthens and sustains our public health care system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first one is a document published by the Institute for Research on Public Policy entitled Flat and Dual Tax Plans Not Likely to Have the Desired Effect on the Tax System or the Economy.

The second document I'm pleased to table is the latest report on the question on this MLA's web site; 12,712 people responded. Absolutely nobody thought Alberta should proceed with deregulation, 62 percent of the respondents thought it was important to freeze the process until we take steps to better protect the consumer, and 38 percent felt Alberta should return to a regulated electrical utility system.

Thanks very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I have two tablings today. The first is from a senior in Calgary who has written to me about the effect rising rent and utility increases have on her and her husband's ability to live on a fixed income. They are receiving AISH and Canada pension plan.

My second tabling is copies of a profile piece entitled Painting Peace, which I received at the youth forum held by the government in Edmonton and other communities last week. It profiles a poster project that is being conducted in partnership by people from Alberta, Change for Children, which is an Edmonton-based organization, and groups in El Salvador and Nicaragua. They are attempting to draw attention through their art to issues of human rights, social justice, peace, and sustainable development.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling this afternoon. It's a letter from the federal Minister of Health to the provincial minister of health indicating that the practice of insured persons purchasing medically necessary MRI services is a Canada Health Act concern which can result in queue-jumping not only for this service but for follow-up treatment in the public health system.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table five copies of a letter from an Edmonton ophthalmologist. The letter was written October 1 to the Minister of Health and Wellness and protests the decision of the minister to approve the expansion of contracting out of cataract surgeries in the Capital health region.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would table five copies of Sharing Knowledge, Shaping the Future, an occasional publication of the Alberta Graduate Council, indicating that tuition in Alberta has risen over 208 percent since 1990 and that Alberta is near the bottom of the list in provincial funding of postsecondary students.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of copies of a letter that I received from Versacold. This is a company that has operations in Calgary, Edmonton, and Lethbridge. They are very concerned that their electric bill has gone from $2.7 million to over $5.5 million, and they're afraid that the so-called Alberta advantage no longer exists in this province.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, as required by section 35(1.1) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, I table in the House a list of the registered candidates for the Edmonton-Highlands by-election of June 12, 2000, together with their chief financial officers, who failed to file a financial statement with the office of the Chief Electoral Officer on or before October 12, 2000. This report is submitted pursuant to section 35(1.1) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act.

As well, pursuant to section 44(1) of the Conflicts of Interest Act, chapter C-22.1 of the 1991 Statutes of Alberta, I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Ethics Commissioner. This report covers the period April 1, 1999, to March 31, 2000.

I'm also pleased to table copies of the financial statements as at March 31, 1999, of the office of the Ethics Commissioner. A copy of these reports was distributed to members on October 30, 2000.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to the Assembly on your behalf the family of the late former member Mr. Bryce Stringam. His daughter Mrs. Ann Tingle is accompanied by Mr. Morgan Tingle, grandson. They are seated in your gallery, and I would ask them both to rise and receive the warm, traditional welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly a very dedicated, hardworking woman from Lethbridge. Her name is Deb Dore. For the information of all of the people here in the Assembly Deb is the mother of Tara Anne McDonald. It is through her efforts and, I think, her efforts alone that the Working Alone Safely examination was undertaken, which culminated in the reports that were filed earlier today. So I'd ask Deb Dore to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and to other members of the Assembly the council of the M.D. of Greenview: a very special person and a very visionary reeve, Tony Yelenik; his fellow councillors Wayne Drysdale, Charlie Cramer; and the CEO of Greenview, Gordon Frank. They're seated in the members' and public galleries, and I'd ask them now to rise and receive the usual warm and cordial welcome of this Assembly.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a wonderful group of young people from the Independent Order of Foresters Youth Club in Calgary. Through IOOF these young people are getting to see the value and the importance of community involvement and community service. They've all been involved in some form of community service or another. They raised funds throughout the summer so that they could visit us here in the Legislature and see the various sights around the city. They're seated in the public gallery, and I would ask you to join me in offering them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

MR. TRYNCHY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you a group of grade 6 students from Grasmere school in Alberta Beach. They're here to study the workings of the Legislature. I made a commitment to them that when they get back home to write me a letter, which I'll respond to, and tell me what they thought and ask the questions that they have no answers for. They're seated in the public gallery. They're here with their teacher, Mrs. Sharon Hansen; the bus driver, Jim Hansen; and some parents. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: That's very nice, hon. member, but you forgot to introduce the most important person in your life, your very distinguished wife, the honourable Mrs. Lorraine Trynchy, who happens to be sitting in the Speaker's gallery.

MR. TRYNCHY: Mr. Speaker, she advised me not to introduce her. She wanted you to do it, so thank you.

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly Robert David Jablonski. Mr. Jablonski is the owner of a fibreglass manufacturing company in Red Deer. He's the proud father of three children and the proud grandfather of one granddaughter, but more importantly he's the proud husband of my new colleague for Red Deer-North, who has joined us in the Assembly today. I would ask Mr. Jablonski to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly somebody that has been very special in my life for the last 14 years as a secretary and one most dedicated and loyal individual in my constituency, both in Vermillion-Viking and Vermillion-Lloydminster. Mrs. Lynne Little has served with distinction. Perhaps we don't have too much longer to serve together, but I wanted to take this opportunity publicly to thank her for that tremendous work. Would you please stand in the members' gallery and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly and a thanks for dedication to democracy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I have three introductions to do today. The first is a group of students, 72 of them, from Bertha Kennedy school in my constituency. They're here with their teachers, Miss Michelle Terrasi, Mrs. Fiona McManus, Mrs. Colleen Diedrichs, and parent helpers Mrs. Sheryl Lobsinger, Mrs. Marie Waters, Mrs. Sandy Deleeuw, Mr. Ron Kreski, Mrs. Karen Fowler, Mrs. Susan Manchak, and Mr. Charles Tutty. They, I believe, are in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

I also have the introduction of a group of students who are in the education program at Yellowhead Tribal Council. They are people here from the Sunchild reserve, the Alexander and Enoch bands, and they are here with their director, Anna Demchuk. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the next group is about to come in, and I won't have an opportunity to introduce them after. So if I may, I would like to introduce 56 students from Archbishop MacDonald high school, and they are here with their teachers, Mrs. Jane Warren and Mrs. Phyllis Schumacher. They will read their introduction in Hansard, and they are looking forward to a great question period.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly 45 students and five adults from Fraser elementary school in the constituency of Edmonton-Manning. Accompanying the two grade 6 classes are their teachers, Mr. Dennis Hennig and Mr. Hiob. The parents accompanying them are Mrs. Steel, Mrs. Robinson, and Staff Sergeant Ewatski. Staff Sergeant Ewatski also doubles as their DARE instructor, and he just came back from instructing a DARE program in New Brunswick. They're going to be in the public gallery just as I speak, and with your permission I'd like them to be introduced and welcomed to the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the pleasure of introducing to you and to all members of the Assembly two individuals who represent the community of mobility disability. The major disability, of course, is that they are not mobile. In spite of their own disability, being in wheelchairs, Donna Martyn and Larry Pempeit are examples of persons with disabilities who spend numerous hours in encouraging and inspiring others to make Alberta a better place to live for all of us and advocating on behalf of those Albertans who suffer from this disability. They are seated in the public gallery. I would ask all members of the Assembly to give them a warm welcome.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all my new colleagues in the Legislative Assembly three very important people in my life. They are my wife, Kärin Olson; my father, Robert Mason; and my stepmother, Kay Guthrie. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

MR. HIERATH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a lady that has worked very hard in my constituency office for the last seven and a half years in Taber. She is seated in the members' gallery. I would like Angela Wolgen to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electric Utilities Deregulation

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the spring session of this Legislature this Premier rammed through private health care legislation despite being opposed by the majority of Albertans, who will be living with the consequences of that legislation for years to come unless, of course, there is a change in government. In much the same way, five years ago this Premier rammed through his electricity deregulation scheme over the voices of opposition from both inside and outside this Legislature. Albertans are now living with the consequences of higher prices and threatened supply. On May 12, 1999, this Premier said, and I quote, that competition in electricity markets always means lower prices for consumers, end quote. My question is: why did this Premier deliberately misinform Albertans when he said that prices would go down under his deregulation scheme when in fact they have risen and will continue to rise for the foreseeable future?

MR. KLEIN: Well, you know, first of all, Mr. Speaker, the leader of the Liberal opposition is living in two futures. One will never come to fruition, and that is the future of a Liberal government in this province. It will never happen. That's one future. She's also living in another future that hasn't arrived yet. She's living in the future of a deregulated electricity environment. It has not happened. We are still, as we sit here today in this Legislative Assembly, under a regulated environment, and the price of electricity is going up. Under a deregulated scenario when those 1,400 megawatts of power come onstream, when there's additional transportation capacity, the prices will come down.

Mr. Speaker, this hon. member, the leader of the Liberal opposition, I'm sure is a proponent of competitiveness, of free enterprise. If she's not, then stand up and say so now. Tell all Albertans. Is she a socialist, or is she a free enterpriser? If she's a free enterpriser, then she will agree wholeheartedly with our plan to bring about competition and fair pricing in the electrical market scenario.

If the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition wants to know more factual information, I'll have the hon. Minister of Resource Development respond.

2:10

THE SPEAKER: I think that's okay, sir. We've now spent three minutes on that one.

Supplemental, please.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, there's no competition when three producers are protected.

What plan does this government have to deal with the anger that Alberta consumers are feeling towards this government over rising prices, whether they be residential, commercial, or industrial users?

MR. KLEIN: We have done as no other jurisdiction has done. We have put in place relative to rising gasoline and home heating fuel costs a $300 rebate. Now, Mr. Speaker, I heard the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert . . . [interjections] Well, you can't help but hear her.

Talking about this rebate, I asked her very politely: if she doesn't like the rebate, will she return it? She says: "No. I'm going to spend it." Right? A $300 rebate, Mr. Speaker. Twenty dollars per month will come off everyone's electricity bill starting January 1. Plus almost $800 million has gone to businesses, farm communities, schools, hospitals, institutions to help offset the rising cost of electricity.

That, Mr. Speaker, is what we have done. We have done more than any other jurisdiction perhaps in North America, and they don't like it. They don't like it.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that a key component of the Alberta advantage is access to cheap, reliable electricity supply, why is this Premier squandering this key benefit to Alberta citizens and businesses?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the statement made by the leader of the Liberal opposition relative to “cheap” couldn’t be further from the truth. That is false, false, false, false. That is a false statement, because the price of electricity throughout North America, throughout the world is at an all-time high. This is not a situation that is peculiar to Alberta.

If the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition wants some facts, some real facts rather than pulling cheap political rhetoric, I’ll have the hon. Minister of Resource Development respond.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In relation to the whole issue of electrical deregulation and pricing, I think it’s only fair to Albertans that we clarify the issue of some of the processes that are in place. For example, when deregulation kicks in starting January 1, 2001 – 85 percent of the people connected to the Alberta electrical system are residential and residential farm consumers. That’s over 1 million people. Those individuals will not have to make any changes for up to five years. They will remain under the regulated system. That’s 1 million residents who will remain under the regulated system for five years. In addition to that, they’ll have a choice if they want to change.

THE SPEAKER: Thank you, hon. minister, for that brief supplemental to that.

Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The Klein electricity program – and actually interestingly it can be shortened to the KEP – comes into effect in 47 days, but already Albertans know that they have fewer dollars in their jeans as a result. Wholesale prices for electricity have risen from an average of $14 per megawatt hour in 1996, before the KEP, to $118 per megawatt hour so far this year, in 2000. My question is to the Premier. What guarantee can the Premier give that this eightfold increase won’t be passed on to consumers?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again the leader of the Liberal opposition is living in the future, and she’s talking about something that has not yet occurred. These price increases have all occurred over the past year in a totally one hundred percent regulated environment. I would ask this leader of the Liberal opposition to be honest with Albertans and tell them that we are still in a regulated environment. Quite clearly and very deliberately and very maliciously, I might add, this leader of the Liberal opposition is trying to imply that we are in a deregulated environment at this particular point and that deregulation, which has not occurred, is somehow contributing to rising electricity prices. I will say again just to set the record straight and to be truthful that we are in a regulated environment as I speak today, and the price of electricity is going up under a regulated environment.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier admit that Albertans are facing higher electricity prices today because of his own bungling and mismanagement that led to uncertainty in the marketplace and a resultant short supply of power today?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, no. There has been no bungling on my part or on the part of the former minister of energy or the current Minister of Resource Development. I would invite the leader of the Liberal opposition to talk to the president of TransAlta Utilities. [interjections] Well, any other utility. Right here in the city of Edmonton I would invite the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition to state to the president of EPCOR, a good Edmonton company whereby the city of Edmonton reaps the profits under a regulated environment, and any of those people, the experts – we’re not talking about people in the Liberal caucus because they sure are not experts; we’re talking about experts in the electricity industry – will tell the hon. member about the anomalies that are now taking place that are contributing to an increase in power rates under a regulated environment.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that the cost of producing power remains virtually identical to the cost in the pre-KEP days yet the wholesale selling price has increased eightfold, can this Premier explain to this House and to Albertans how his electricity scheme has allowed this exorbitant overcharging for our power to occur?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there has been an examination of this particular matter. It was done by the market surveillance administrator. The hon. Minister of Resource Development tabled his report today. I would invite the leader of the Liberal opposition to read that report, and she might learn something from that report as to what is really contributing to high power rates not only in Alberta but indeed in virtually every jurisdiction on the North American continent and perhaps throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, I’ll have the hon. minister supplement if he wishes.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In relation to the power rates and natural gas rates to the consumer we did a review of the November 1999 to April 2000 natural gas and electricity rates and found that the average rate on a monthly bill in Alberta was $151. During November 2000 to April 2001 we’re expecting that price to go up to $251 per month, but when you consider the rebates provided at this time – they amount to $100. Therefore, the bill actually will be less this coming winter to the consumer out there than it was last year.

Now, we’ve always said that we’ll keep monitoring the situation and making adjustments accordingly.

THE SPEAKER: Third main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

2:20

Private MRI Clinics

MRS. MacBETH: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Actually, Mr. Speaker, we’ve got lots more questions on electricity, but since the Premier appears to be shorting out, we’ll switch topics here.

Last May the Premier . . . [interjections] They’re touchy. We know it.

Last May, Mr. Speaker, the Premier wouldn’t admit that it was possible to jump the queue in Alberta by paying for a medically necessary MRI at a private clinic. My questions are back to the Premier. Will the Premier confirm that one of his first acts as Premier of this province was to approve and introduce and allow private MRI clinics?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I’m going to put it right back across the alley. The first private MRI clinic that was licensed in this province was licensed by the leader of the Liberal opposition when she was minister of health.

MRS. MacBETH: Point of order.

MR. KLEIN: The name of that clinic was Elliott Fong Wallace, EFW Radiology. Mr. Speaker, this leader of the Liberal opposition was the person who licensed the very first private MRI clinic in this province.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, either this Premier isn't telling the truth or his former minister isn't, because MRI clinics were not in operation in this province prior to May of 1993.

THE SPEAKER: I've recognized a point of order. We'll deal with the point of order at the conclusion of question period. Right now the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has the floor to deal with a supplemental to her third question.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier confirm that he has in fact shortchanged the public system in order to create a climate where Albertans are either forced to or can go to a private MRI clinic and jump the queue for medical treatment in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond, but before I do that, I want to point out that this province leads all other provinces in Canada in terms of publicly funded MRIs. We now have seven in hospitals. Six more are on their way. And, yes, private MRIs are used under very special circumstances to even further alleviate waiting lists.

I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, this Legislative Assembly is steeped in history, and one of the historical notes that I wish to point out is that this desk was previously occupied by the former minister of health who is now the Leader of the Opposition. I find many things in this desk from time to time. I quote from Hansard, July 2, 1992, page 1746.

The private sector does in fact have a role if it can prove that it is efficient, that it's operating fairly, and that it's meeting the responsibility of our health sector to provide access to health services.

Not my words, the words of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, we have done tremendous things with respect to MRIs. As the Premier indicated, we have seven MRIs in the public system currently. We are bringing six more on board. We will have the highest per capita capacity in MRIs in this country. Those are publicly funded.

Two years ago, Mr. Speaker, we did 23,000 MRIs in this province. Last year we did approximately 30,000 MRIs. This year we are projected to do over 40,000 MRIs. I might point out that this was with no help from the federal government. This is a contribution made by this province.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the records in fact showing that prior to May of 1993 there were no private MRI clinics in this province.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, will this Premier confirm that he plans to do nothing to stop the queue-jumping and the two-tiered health care already in place in this province right now?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the documentation with me. Whether they were up and running or not is a very moot point. The fact is that the first private MRI to be licensed in this province was licensed by the leader of the Liberal opposition when she was minister of health.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Cataract Surgery

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is hell-bent on privatizing the health care system. You can't pass legislation which encourages the growth of private clinics and private hospitals run for profit and expect to maintain a universal, single-tier health care system for very long. Two tier is here. My questions are to the Premier. Why does the government refuse to accept the advice of Edmonton ophthalmologists who are urging better use of existing operating theatres at the Royal Alex eye centre and who oppose public funds being wasted on contracts with private eye clinics?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness elaborate, but jurisdictions are quite different relative to how they treat various kinds of procedures, including ophthalmology procedures. I understand that about 70 percent of cataract removals in the city of Edmonton are done in public hospitals, about 30 percent are privately contracted. In Calgary I believe 100 percent are privately contracted. In other jurisdictions there's again a mixture of private contracts and cataracts done in public facilities.

I'll have the hon. minister go into further detail.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, two tier is not here, and if it doesn't fit, you better quit. That label does not fit the description of the provincial health care system that exists within this province today.

Our Health Care Protection Act specifically says that it prohibits private hospitals. The leader of the third party indicated that we were creating the environment for it. The fact is that these contracts are privately delivered but paid for by the public system. It is a public system that is privately delivered through contracts with regional health authorities. If you add up the sum total of all of those contracts, it comes to about $50 million.* That is roughly one-sixteenth of 1 percent of our $5.8 billion budget. We have a public health care system in this province.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier again: how can the Premier justify breaching section 8(b)(iv) of his own private health care law by allowing additional cataract eye surgery to be contracted out in the Capital health region given the unused capacity of the public Royal Alex eye centre? Answer that.

MR. KLEIN: Yes, I will answer that. Mr. Speaker, although we differ tremendously philosophically from the New Democrats, at least they have been honest and forthright in their approach, unlike the Liberal Party. They have been honest and forthright. I am therefore disappointed to read the news release that I have before me in my hand where it appears that the leader of the ND opposition is resorting to the same tactics of innuendo that have become so predominant, so prevalent from the leader of the Liberal opposition. It says:

New Democrat Leader Raj Pannu questioned the government on the apparent violation . . .

Apparent violation.

. . . of sections of Bill 11. He also released a letter from an Edmonton ophthalmologist who indicates that there is ample unused capacity at the public Royal Alexandra Regional Eye Care Centre.

Mr. Speaker, what I want to point out is that Bill 11 is no longer Bill 11. It is an act of this Legislature. It has been proclaimed. If someone is violating the act, then that person is breaking the law. If the leader of the ND opposition has evidence that that person is breaking the law, then he has a duty to bring that evidence to the minister in charge, and the person who is breaking the law will be prosecuted.

2:30

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Premier that I brought this to the attention of this House right here.

My supplemental to him is again: how can he justify breaching that section that I just referred to of his own health care law – I am talking about law here now – by allowing cataract surgeries in the Capital health region to be contracted out at higher costs when those surgeries could be performed at the Royal Alex eye centre at a lower cost, as the letter from the ophthalmologist clearly indicates?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is raising an allegation. He is suggesting that someone has broken the law. If he has evidence that someone is breaking the law, I would ask him now to take that evidence to the Minister of Health and Wellness and perhaps to the Justice minister, and Attorney General, and we'll have an investigation into it. If the hon. member is wrong in raising this innuendo, in raising these allegations, I would expect him to stand up in this Legislature and apologize.

I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, all of these contracts are approved through a process. We ask the regional health authorities to satisfy themselves that this is the best value that they can get for the performing of a certain type of procedure; in this case, cataracts. There is a lengthy process that the regional health authorities apply to these contracts before they are brought for the approval of the minister of health. I am satisfied that all of the contracts that have been approved have gone through this rigorous process.

Mr. Speaker, it is important that the regional health authorities do have flexibility to contract out certain services so long as they can be done safely within the guidelines set out by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. Those services, from the information I have, are being done well, they're being done safely, and they're being done cost effectively.

Provincial Debt

MRS. BURGNER: Mr. Speaker, at the recent annual general meeting of the Alberta Progressive Conservative Association a resolution was passed which called for the provincial government to work toward the elimination of provincial personal income tax within five years. Given that sound fiscal policy continues to be a high priority of Albertans, can the Provincial Treasurer advise the Assembly if it remains the priority of government as Albertans have clearly identified to pay down and eliminate Alberta's debt?

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about Political Party Activity

THE SPEAKER: Just a second, hon. Provincial Treasurer, please. One of the areas that is not to be questioned in question period is political party matters, so I presume this question has to do with the government policy and nothing to do with the political party.

MRS. BURGNER: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Provincial Debt

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, it indeed does have to do with government policy. If I go back to a questionnaire sent out to Albertans, Talk It Up: Talk It Out, a survey of 1999, they said by 74.8 percent to pay down the debt. That's what Albertans said. That is their priority.

It is a priority of this government inasmuch as we've put it into law. We have an act that says that we must retire the debt in the province of Alberta. We put it into a 25-year mortgage payment cycle so that the average person in the province of Alberta could understand it. They have 25-year mortgages on their businesses, on their homes.

Well, fortunately, we've been blessed in the province with onetime revenue increases due to the cyclical nature of oil and gas, and we've been able to pay that debt down to $8 billion in about six years. We will eliminate that debt on these types of projections in another two to three years. That given, that will set us in a position where we're not paying interest on that money, interest which in 1994-95 was $1.7 billion on a 22 and a half billion dollar debt.

So I'm pleased to re-emphasize: our main priority as stated by Albertans is to pay down the debt and get rid of the interest burden.

MRS. BURGNER: Mr. Speaker, how can we be sure that the province will have the economic growth and projected revenues needed to either reduce personal income tax, eliminate health care premiums, eliminate the education portion of the property tax, reduce gasoline tax, or indeed eliminate any taxes which Albertans may identify as we move to a debt-free Alberta?

DR. WEST: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that I appreciate about my job is that I have hundreds and hundreds of people within Alberta and in other jurisdictions commenting on the state of the Alberta economy and our fiscal plan. Today I noticed with interest that the Toronto-Dominion Bank of Canada said, "I think Alberta will remain the low-tax jurisdiction in all of North America." The story confirms that the top financial houses like TD have recognized Alberta and its government's work in setting its fiscal framework.

A little while ago Moody's stood notice that in three months they will take us to a triple A rating, the highest in this country, higher than the sovereign, which is unheard of. A part of a sovereign country, one of the provinces of Canada, will have a higher rating than the government of Canada on a domestic basis. That is unheard of.

On another note we have put in place by law three-year business plans, debt retirement plans, and we have had other people look at this and say: "If you follow that pattern, if you remove your debt and you start lowering taxes, you will drive your gross domestic product under these plans. You will create more jobs, and in so doing, you will return moneys back to the government which can be used to sustain the tax cuts as well as the lowering of fees, property taxes, and business taxes."

Not long ago we had a report from the Business Tax Review Committee in the province of Alberta that indicated that if we took $955 million out in business taxes, small business and corporate, that it would drive the economy of Alberta in four years out by 1.8 percent gross domestic product and create the equivalent of 30-some thousand jobs. That coupled with the lowering of personal income tax starting on January 1 by $1.3 billion will drive another percentage point in gross domestic product and create another 10,000 jobs. The combined effect of those tax cuts alone will create 40,000 jobs in four years and a 2 and a half percent increase in gross domestic product. That will sustain the concerns of the hon. member that we can continue to keep low taxes, low fees and ensure that Alberta is a place to invest and do business.

Speaker's Ruling

Brevity in Question Period

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, I'm dutifully trying to make sure that we have a time allocation here for questions and answers that really balances, so I think I must tell you that because of the rather lengthy explanation provided by your colleague, we're now going to move on to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's electricity deregulation has turned into an Alberta disadvantage for many businesses across this province. Lethbridge Iron Works, an iron foundry established in 1898, is facing a 250 percent increase in its electricity costs in 2001 under the Premier's deregulation system. The company says that it would have to raise its prices by 12 and a half percent in 2001 just to break even and is now faced with three options in the future: close its doors or face massive layoffs or possible bankruptcy. My questions are to the minister of resources. How can the government claim that this electricity deregulation will result in lower prices when companies such as Lethbridge Iron Works are faced with a massive 250 percent increase in their electricity costs in 2001?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, I have to be reasonably careful in this particular matter because one of the 10-point action plans that I announced recently covers the issue of the Lethbridge situation in relation to electricity costs. The surveillance administrator will be specifically looking at the Lethbridge situation in relation to the pricing of electricity. That report should be due at the end of November of this year.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned earlier that there are a number of businesses out there that have different ways of obtaining electricity, that to start with, over a million residential individuals including residential farms won't have to make a choice for five years.

I go on further. In relation to industrial consumers those industrial consumers that use less than 250,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity also have up to three years before they have to choose if they want to get out of the regulated system.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker – and this may address some of the issues in relation to the Lethbridge situation – a number of major industrial customers have already signed long-term contracts with the power purchase holders and other suppliers in that particular area. Some companies may not have chosen to do that and may be interested to participate in the new sale that's coming on.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, how are they supposed to sign long-term contracts when the companies that are selling the electricity do not even know at this point what the cost is going to be for their electricity? How can they get those long-term contracts?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, the power purchase arrangement holders, which hold, you know, over 60 percent of the electricity in Alberta, know what the prices are and therefore can sit down with the people that are interested in obtaining electricity. Again, I'd just like to say that after the market surveillance report is completed, which will happen within a month, I'm looking forward to seeing if there are some discrepancies in the pricing structure for that particular area. In the meantime, at the end of this month we will be selling another 2,000 megawatts of electricity in small blocks of two-megawatt packages, which allow companies like the Lethbridge company to be able to purchase their electricity requirements directly from the power pool. Therefore, the option is there.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, could the minister explain how that two-megawatt option is going to help a company that's consuming electricity at the rate that the Lethbridge Iron Works is? Two megawatts is insignificant in terms of their total cost.

MR. CARDINAL: There will be 2,000 megawatts of electricity sold, Mr. Speaker, at the end of November. The smaller packages were requested by working with individual consumers out there to determine how the packages may be sold, and the recommendation was to have minimum two-megawatt packages, but the packages can be a lot larger than that. Therefore, the company can purchase a number of packages like that.

Anno Domini Exhibit

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. Would the minister explain why he did not remove all references, visual and verbal, to Robert Latimer in the Anno Domini exhibit at the Provincial Museum when it became apparent that the inclusion of this person in the context of the beatitudes presentation was, in fact, communicating the wrong message?

THE SPEAKER: The Minister of Community Development.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we have to put the issue in context. The display, Anno Domini: Jesus through the Centuries, is a very, very significant display. It's been put together by people all around the world. We've had curators from various museums involved, also a 35-member advisory committee. Of this whole display the written and video portion dealing with the beatitudes is very, very small. There was concern, yes, brought to me in a way which I won't go over. I did not agree with the misinterpretation placed on this particular piece of the display.

However, in fairness to the folks who had the concern, I sat down with the directors of the museum and asked them to review it and see if they could in any way take away the possibility of this particular misinterpretation. The result was that the curator - and I think it's important to note: the curator and not the minister - put together a new news clip which only referred to Latimer by name once, removed the picture from it, and the final comments are from the prosecutor that stated very clearly that murder is murder is murder. The intention was not at any time to take sides or to present a particular view.

The new clip - and I would suggest that all members have a look at this again - that is being run there is very good, very neutral. As a matter of fact, it sides more on the side of what the AACL would like. I would have to say that the province and the government in no way, shape, or form condone murder in any way. I would say that the references to him are taken out sufficiently to where there is no possibility of misinterpretation at this point.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just like with Bill 11 this government is indulging in a massive propaganda campaign to misinform and to distort and to cover up its responsibility in the skyrocketing electricity prices in this province. The spin campaign is designed to cover up this government's five years of bungling of this electricity deregulation and is costing Albertans millions and perhaps billions over the next 10 years. My questions today are for the Acting Premier and perhaps his fall guy, the Minister of Resource Development. Why are the Premier, this minister, and the former minister misleading Albertans by claiming that the cost of natural gas is responsible for higher electricity prices when this government's own market surveillance administrator says that "the increase in electricity prices is not adequately explained by [high natural] gas cost"?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, we're not, but I'll have the Minister of Resource Development answer that.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd just like to indicate, you know, that in the March 17, 1998, debate on the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, which laid out how the electrical deregulation would take place and even identifies dates and time lines including 2001 for full deregulation, the member asked me the question and at the time said, "I must say on behalf of myself and at least a good deal of my caucus that we intend to look upon this bill favourably." Today he comes out with such remarks. It's funny how things change.

Of course high electricity prices are across North America; it's not only in Alberta. Now, in relation to the issue of generation itself today 50 percent of generation is done by coal, which costs about $30 a megawatt, and about 34 percent by natural gas. This is where the increased costs come in as a natural gas issue. The old generation plants that were put in place – actually some of them took up to 10 years to approve. Genesee is one plant.

So the old process, the regulated process, had difficulties also. In fact, by the time that plant was completed, the overrun on the cost was $600 million. That $600 million, Mr. Speaker, was added to the consumers, so we are paying for it. Therefore, there are a number of issues that caused that.

MR. WHITE: Why do this Premier and his government and this minister continue to mislead Albertans by claiming that this government's mismanagement is not responsible for higher prices when his own market surveillance administrator says that the five years of uncertainty has caused "reluctance on the part of suppliers to invest in new supply"?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, since I was included in that question, I will answer some of it.

The minister is quite correct when he said that there is a changing dynamic to electricity production in North America, not just here in Alberta. By the time the next 2,700 megawatts comes on by the year 2003, the amount of power produced by coal, which was a cheap power source that we had, will be around 50 to 56 percent of the province's grid.

Over the last three years there have been some great changes made in technology, technology as it relates to gas turbines that are going into many of the plants in the province, in cogeneration plants and new combined-cycle gas turbine plants that are going in freestanding, like the one that's going in next to Calgary. There have also been small microturbines put on flares, which has been part of our environmental progress in this province to get rid of natural gas flares that are out there on the horizon. There's also been wind power come on. You look at Vision Quest and some of the companies that are going in on Cowley Ridge with major wind turbines. Those power plants that are going to be onstream are going to be high-cost producers.

You know that Enmax and some of the rest have contracted that high-cost production to go into their mix because people have said: we believe in elements of the climate change issue; we want this new technology to come on, and we're willing to pay for it. Is the opposition saying that they're not interested in the new technology which will help CO₂ emissions and that may be a cost of higher power? Are they saying that they're against climate change? Why don't they stand up and say that?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, again, brevity is very important. I'm coming to the conclusion that this Assembly actually wants a debate later on this afternoon on this matter.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is this Premier, the current minister, and the former minister continually misleading Albertans by claiming – they probably mislead their government too – that there's a significant new generation coming onstream when his own market surveillance administrator says, "The numbers quoted in regard to new supply are . . . gross numbers, which overstate the net capacity brought to the system"?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, in relation to supply, the peak demand for this winter is projected to be 7,748 megawatts, but the total supply is over 9,400 megawatts. That leaves 1,650 megawatts. The Provincial Treasurer, of course, mentioned that in the last three years the new generation onstream brought in another 1,400 megawatts, and in addition to that we expect another 1,600 megawatts to come onstream in the next little while. In fact, the Joffre plant, I just found out today, will probably come onstream before the end of November.

When you go back to 1995, Mr. Speaker, there were 15 individual units generating electricity. Today you have over 30. That shows you how the system can work.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Working Alone Regulation

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last spring the tragic death of Tara Anne McDonald at a fast-food outlet in my constituency reminded us all of the importance of doing all we can to ensure that our workplaces are safe. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Can the minister please tell us what has been done to protect workers who may be required to work alone?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. After the tragic death of Tara Anne McDonald I think most if not all Albertans were deeply affected. I talked earlier about the role of Tara Anne's mother in moving this along.

We already had a general safety regulation task force that was out conducting hearings, and we added, then, a working alone safely component to some of the things that they were looking at. We also put together a committee that would look at best practices as they could be found not only here in the province but throughout the rest of North America.

The working-alone regulation that's now been put into place, Mr. Speaker, obligates employers in this province to do three very practical things. The first is that they must assess the hazards in their particular workplace. Second, they must – and we know they'll work with their employees in doing this – take appropriate safety measures to reduce those hazards if they are unable to actually eliminate them. The third and perhaps important as anything we have done is that there must be a communication system in place so that if the employee who is working alone runs into some particular difficulty, they will have a means to be able to respond so that someone can then react in an emergency situation.

We believe, Mr. Speaker, that the new regulation is practical, we believe it's a responsible reaction to the situation, and most of all we believe that it's enforceable.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the new working-alone regulation affects many small employers who may not know how to conduct a hazard assessment and that a written hazard assessment creates more paperwork for them, can the minister please tell us how his department is helping employers meet these new requirements?

MR. DUNFORD: Yes, I'd be pleased to, Mr. Speaker. Again, earlier today I tabled a document that was called Working Alone Safely, and this is a best practices document that attempts, then, to cut through perhaps some of the paperwork that might be required. The handbook provides the opportunity for employers to use it as a checklist. We provide in that particular document scenarios that should be developed for five different situations where employees can be found working alone.

So with this checklist we believe that employers, especially small employers, would be able to quite rapidly work through the situation and with very little inconvenience be able to come up with a safety regulation that would apply to their particular workplace.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us why he did not consider making it mandatory for two people to work these night shifts?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to indicate that what we have in front of us now in the new regulation and in the best practices points out the power of one, points out the power that one person can have when they become energized over a situation and become committed to that situation.

Once again, I want to acknowledge the efforts of Deb Dore, the mother of the slain worker. Through her efforts the safety of people working alone has a higher profile now within our department than any other workplace health and safety issue. Companies that had never before considered looking at the particular hazards that might exist in their workplace are now conducting these hazard assessments, and of course with that we know that more employers are looking at their overall health and safety programs.

As it relates to legislation directed to working alone, it was my understanding, based on the information that was provided to us and a review of the particular research that was made available to me through this committee, that it was in the best interest of employees working alone and also of those employers who employ people in these kinds of situations to develop sound safety practices and provide, then, emergency communication and that this was the way in which it could appropriately be dealt with. We looked at other jurisdictions across this country and of course the States, and we found that there was no jurisdiction that prohibits working alone. It was my decision then – and I accept the responsibility for it – to move forward with the regulation and with the best-practices document that was submitted earlier.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness wishes to clarify a response.

MR. MAR: Correct myself, sir.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, correct yourself, please.

Cataract Surgery (continued)

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, this is to the best of my recollection in responding to a question. I referred to the value of contracted services under the Health Care Protection Act. I believe I cited the figure of $50 million. I was not correct. It is closer to $9 million, which, as I correctly said, is .16 of 1 percent of a $5.6 billion budget.*

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of three hon. members to participate in Members' Statements.

We'll proceed, first of all, with the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Alberta Dress Tartan

MR. STEVENS: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I think it's appropriate this afternoon to report progress on Alberta's newest provincial emblem, the Alberta dress tartan. Bill 205, the Emblems of Alberta (Alberta Dress Tartan) Amendment Act, 2000, became law this past July 1, and then just a few days later the Alberta dress tartan was officially introduced to Albertans at the opening ceremonies of the ScotDance Canada Championship Series. The event was held at the Ice Palace in West Edmonton Mall, where 40 dancers from across the province showcased a special dance on a stage skirted with the Alberta dress tartan to commemorate the unveiling.

During this special performance dancers re-created the weaving of the new tartan culminating in a finale featuring a stage flooded with dancers wearing the Alberta dress tartan. The high-energy performance received a standing ovation and set the tone for the largest highland dancing event ever staged, with 1,185 dancing competitors from Canada, the United States, Australia, England, and Scotland.

Also over the summer two highland dancers from Calgary were accepted to compete in front of the royal family at the Braemar Highland Games in Scotland. One of the dancers was Ashley Stowkowy, who together with her highland dance instructor, Gail Danysk, approached me with the Alberta dress tartan proposal.

This invitation was quite an honour and one not extended to many dancers. To have two dancers from Calgary's Gillie Callum Highland Dance school perform at this prestigious event was special in itself, but even more thrilling was that they were able to wear their formal Alberta dress tartans as representatives of this province.

I am also able to report this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, that the Alberta dress tartan was officially registered just last week in the registry of all publicly known tartans.

Mr. Speaker, it's with great pleasure that I say that Albertans are proudly wearing the Alberta dress tartan both at home and abroad as a symbol of their Alberta pride. Thank you.

MRI Services

MS LEBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans take the level and accessibility of their health care seriously and will never agree to a system of health care delivery that makes a profit from someone's illness. In 1994 this Premier's health care cuts resulted in a very real crisis in Alberta's health care system that is still unresolved. These actions set the stage for the growth of private, two-tier health care in this province and allowed private MRI clinics to profit at the expense of Albertans' health.

The Premier continually uses the word choice, but the reality is that the choice is only for those that can afford it. In the provision of MRI services the Premier has manufactured an environment where Albertans are left with only two choices: they can either pay about $700 per MRI scan in a private clinic to get faster service, or they can wait months to have the public system provide the service.

The Premier has said that the only people who will pay for an MRI service are those who are healthy and just want to have their head or leg or arm checked out. On May 17 he also, however, said that if an MRI is necessary and prescribed by a doctor, it will be covered by the public system. In a recent letter to the provincial minister of health Allan Rock, the federal Minister of Health, wrote that "medically necessary MRI scans are insured health services" and that "the practice of insured persons purchasing medically necessary MRI services is a [Canada Health Act] concern."

The question remains: why does the Premier and his minister of health insist on contravening the Canada Health Act by refusing to pay for medically necessary MRIs? Are they waiting for the federal government to fine this province yet again to ensure that this government complies with the Canada Health Act principles?

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Camrose Continuing Care Project

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak on the $25.8 million Camrose continuing care capital project announced November 3 by the ministers of Health and Wellness and Infrastructure. This project means construction of five new facilities on four sites in Camrose and will increase the number of care choices for current and future continuing-care clients. The new facilities will replace spaces at the Rosehaven care centre and the Bethany long-term care centre.

By focusing on new and innovative ways to provide care and housing, this project will be the flagship for the future of continuing-care services across Alberta. It was developed using the Broda report as a planning guide. Emphasis will be placed on smaller facilities, on providing more privacy and personal choice in service delivery, and on maintaining client independence.

This is a giant step forward for continuing care and supportive housing in Camrose. The city faces a relatively unique situation of having 20 percent of its population over the age of 65. I hope this continuing-care project will serve as a model for other communities as they, too, face the challenges of an aging population in the years ahead.

This leading-edge project wouldn't have been possible without the partnership between this government, the East Central regional health authority, and the Bethany Group. I'm proud to take this opportunity to recognize the Bethany Group for their hard work and dedication over the years, culminating in this very important development. The group has a 78-year history of providing excellent continuing-care services in Camrose.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members on a point of order.

The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order

Oral Question Period Rules

MR. DICKSON: Yes. With your leave, Mr. Speaker, I was going to address the point of order raised by my colleague the Leader of the Opposition. The authority would be Beauchesne 408(2). The question that attracts a point of order or the response would be the third set of questions asked by the Leader of the Official Opposition. The first question in that third set and the response of the Premier was to this effect. Now, I don't have the Blues yet, but what I heard the Premier say was that the first private MRI clinic in this province was approved by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

What is particularly frustrating about this is that this is not the first time this issue has come up. There's ample authority, Mr. Speaker, that when a member in this Assembly stands and asserts a particular fact, it's accepted by members that in fact that was the member's intention and that member's knowledge. I recall over a year ago standing on a similar point of order. If members refer to sessional paper 149/95, that was tabled in this Assembly before, it was a response to Written Question 149. This is the answer from the government of the province of Alberta, and it says, "Private MRI clinics were not in operation prior to May, 1993." I could go on, but that's the relevant portion.

What we've got is a fact that there were no private MRI clinics prior to May of 1993, and I'm advised by the Leader of the Opposition that she did not approve any private MRI clinic during her time as minister of health.

So those are the facts, and it's the government's own document, this response to Written Question 149. This has been raised before. Surely the Premier has been advised in terms of what relevant documents have been tabled in the House. For him to persist in initially the publication but now the republication of what is a defamatory statement is completely unacceptable. It doesn't meet the standard that we expect of any member, never mind the Premier of the province.

This is not simply a question of an error, and it can't, in my respectful view, simply be dismissed as the Premier not having paid attention to detail. I think this is the second time that this error has been pointed out, and I think it requires a direct intervention from you, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that this inaccuracy is not republished again and again. It certainly has the effect, I assure you, of violating 408(2), which talks about answers that "should not provoke debate." What could be more provocative than the persistent repetition of a completely false and inaccurate statement?

Those are the observations I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again the opposition uses miscues and misdirection to try and take the public's attention away from the facts. The sessional paper, which the hon. member refers to, speaks specifically about when MRIs are in operation. It doesn't say anything, at least not as was quoted. I haven't had the opportunity to read it today, but I'm sure that if it said anything about when they were approved, he would have read it. The indication that was made this afternoon in question period, as I heard it, was a question of when they were approved.

Now, I don't think it's provoking debate at all to point out historical information in terms of who were previous ministers' of health in this province and what happened under their watch and whether it was approved or not approved at that particular time, although the hon. member has not really addressed the question of when it was approved. Whether or not it was or it wasn't, the bottom line is that we have had MRIs in this province only for some 10 years, and we are the province that has moved up rather rapidly in terms of the number of MRIs and the number of scans that are being provided to the people of Alberta. As the Minister of Health and Wellness indicated today, it is projected that some 40,000 MRI scans will occur in this province this year, and with the six new MRIs that have been brought on in the private sector, we will have the largest number per capita of MRI scans in this province.

The issue that the Official Opposition House Leader raised has not addressed the question of approval, when they were approved, but obviously if they were in operation in May of '93, it stands to reason that they must have been approved some time previous to that. It takes some period of time to install and get operational MRI machines, as we well know, having approved the money for the purchase of six new MRIs in the public system last May, which will be operational in this province within the early part of the year 2001. It stands to reason that there's a period of time prior to operation for approval.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, one of the pieces of research that the chair does not have in front of him, of course, is the historical knowledge of exactly what day a particular event occurred. One hon. member says: well, certain things were in effect on a certain date. Another hon. member says that another hon. member had approved something before that time. The chair is not in a position to ascertain that at the moment.

This certainly is a dispute about facts, and the hon. Opposition House Leader was certainly in a position to stand and correct what the hon. member believes was a misrepresentation of fact with respect to a colleague of the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo's with respect to this.

Now, the chair of course can dutifully leave the Assembly and go to his office and find all kinds of documents with respect to this matter, but perhaps there's a better judge at the moment for something like this if it deals with misrepresentation of facts. If there are many of our colleagues up above me in the press gallery, I'll invite them to in fact do a little bit of investigation and ascertain who did in fact put into effect a certain thing at a certain date, and that would probably lead to somebody writing an article or something with respect to that.

In this particular Assembly, in terms of where he says that all hon. members have a chance to clarify it, I'm sure we'll hear more about this in the ensuing days to come. This definitely is a matter of a dispute, and all hon. members might want to read the House of Commons book that we have and particularly refer to the text on page 433 on how it's dealt with in terms of a parliament.

There were a number of other strange things that happened here today as well. I want to repeat to all members again particularly that section in Beauchesne dealing with questions and asking for legal interpretations. On one or two occasions the chair did hear one hon. member say to another hon. member, "You are breaking the law," or alluding to something like that. If an hon. member in this Assembly is being accused of breaking the law, as I understand the system of organization that we operate under, we have a free and independent police that must be advised of any lawbreakers and wrongdoings, and suitable investigations must occur. Of course, then the police would be in a position to lay charges against anybody who is breaking the law. So that certainly is the manner in which we operate.

head: Statement by the Speaker

Motions under Standing Orders 30 and 40

THE SPEAKER: Now, we have to deal with a Standing Order 30 application and a Standing Order 40 application. The chair would just like to point out to the author of the Standing Order 30 application at this point in time what the chair is going to do today with respect to that Standing Order 30 application. This may come up in the future, and should it ever occur in the future, one has to be very, very cognizant and careful of the procedure in place.

The Speaker received in his office at 3:26 p.m. on November 6 notice from the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that it was her plan to come forward with a Standing Order 30 to move to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss an urgent matter of business, but the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition did not identify to the Speaker what that Standing Order 30 would be. Under Standing Order 30 the rule is very, very clear in what it says. Should another standing order application have arrived in the Speaker's office with identification of the text of what that Standing Order 30 would have been, the Speaker would have been dealing with the second one first today because it would have completely abided by the rules of this Assembly.
