Improved financial support for apprenticeship: a major item that was hurting bringing people into the apprenticeship system was when the financial support was actually cut. Who was going to actually hire somebody and then try to force them into getting the first year, second year, and so on apprenticeship, whether it's sheet metal, welding, and so on, if they're not getting some support? A lot of these individuals are young, married, supporting a family, and they just wouldn't leave. You know, if you tried to force them into the fact that you'd be setting them up to go to NAIT the next spring to take their six-week course, boy, you should have heard the excuses when that time came, whether they could afford or could not afford to be there.

Another item was increased promotion of ways to start an apprenticeship and recognizing prior learning. This is a case that we mentioned earlier on, and this is around life challenges. I believe that there are a lot of people who can jump the queue and actually do move ahead on this particular item.

Another item: more training opportunities for youth. Well, we have a case that I know of in my end of town. M.E. LaZerte high school for years was known as a high trades training program, and then with parents pushing to have more IB programs and so on, what happened in that particular school was the actual trades end of it got hurt. When a photography teacher is teaching welding and sheet metal, I do have my concerns with our public education system.

There are a lot of kids in my end of town whose parents are the blue-collar workers. There are the plumbers, welders, and that, and some of these young people are just not geared toward being university students or going into NAIT, especially with the requirements that they have. So we have to have more opportunities for youth whose abilities are more into the trades. It doesn't have to be in the red seal programs. There are lots of them that are optional. A lot of them are compulsory but do not have the red seals that young people can actually go into it. We should be looking at where we're going in the future.

Another item that I notice in here is increased options for certification of workers. Well, that is when you start getting the dual system, where you're getting ironworkers as well as boilermakers. Depending on the time, I've seen different changes in the economy in Alberta. I know I've run crews of 50 ironworkers, and all of a sudden that job is finished, and there is nothing. They go back onto the list, and they wait, and they wait. Then all of a sudden there's a boom in Fort McMurray, a shutdown in Fort McMurray, then they're up there.

Well, I really think that some of the proposals out of 1997 – and this is going to be brought forward: increased options for certifications for workers. Some of these tradespeople are very, very capable of jumping from millwright to ironworker to boilermaker to whatever, and a lot of them have got the training.

Then I look at another item: strengthen industry advisory committee network. Well, I think this is what the whole bill is about. I really believe that we've got into a position where the industry says: well, we have to get with it, or the cost of not having these tradespeople with the booms that are happening right now – not only Fort McMurray, but we have the Fort Saskatchewan area, where Shell is going to be building. Within the next year in this immediate area I do know that all my friends who have steel companies are already booked and have enough work to go for the next six or eight months. So this is where the free market comes in. There will be more welding shops, but I've also seen a lot of them go under over the last few years.

In 1998 discussions were brought around asking for feedback from Albertans on proposals about a regulatory framework on apprenticeship and industry training and their viewpoints on proposed criteria for design of trades and challenges to designated occupations. As I read through this, there are some awfully good items that actually came out of this one too. Apprenticeship wages will remain in regulation unless changed or removed by the board in consultation with the application of the provincial apprenticeship committee. Now, we do know that there's been a complete sort of freeze on most increases in salaries over the last number of years. This is the result of the low points of our economy and the bust of our booms, but at the same time as we're looking at the peaks, I hope most of the people do realize that there will be more labour problems due to the fact that we're back into the other system.

Apprenticeship boards will ask the provincial apprenticeship committees to examine the need to regulate apprentice wage percentages in their particular trade if wage percentages pose a problem for certain sectors in the industry. We do know that that's going to be a major talk.

Results of this 1998 study: journeyman/apprentice ratios will remain in regulation; the norm will continue to be one journeyman to one apprentice. I hope that that actually does come about, because for an apprentice to have a journeyman that you can actually learn under in a shop, especially when you're getting up into pressure welding and so on – you actually have to have somebody with you all the time. It's something that was always compulsory, and I hope it comes back.

Some of the respondents to the consultation suggested that the ratios do not guarantee suitable supervision.

THE SPEAKER: Excuse me, hon. member. The Assembly now stands adjourned until 8 o'clock this evening.

Bill 18 Alberta Personal Income Tax Act

[Adjourned debate May 1: Mr. Magnus]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to speak to Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. I'd start off by saying that every year I typically do an annual report to constituents, and just a few weeks ago I'd sent out about 25,000 copies of this annual report to the residents who live in downtown Calgary. What typically happens is that I highlight some of the legislation being debated and encourage feedback either directly or through the web site at www.garydickson.ab.ca. It's useful because then when I roll into this place to speak to a bill such as Bill 18, the Personal Income Tax Act, you have a sense of at least what some of your constituents are feeling, thinking, believing with respect to that legislation. What I wanted to do was share some of that feedback that I have received with respect to Bill 18.

Now, I'd also asked a series of questions, and I do this every year. It's fascinating because constituents respond. They e-mail and fax and phone. Sometimes they come into the office. They'll tear off part of the annual report and fill it in with some comments, Madam Speaker, in terms of the things they thought were particularly important.

I think I might stop and make the general observation that, you know, in its own way Bill 18 has as much public interest and concern as we've seen registered around Bill 11.

MR. DUNFORD: Crank it up.

MR. DICKSON: I'm receiving some terrific encouragement from the Member for Lethbridge-West. He encourages me to "crank it up," Madam Speaker. I was going to make this a very low-key presentation, and in fact I was planning on trying to strip this commentary of as much hyperbole as I can possibly shed and focus on the concerns of residents in Calgary-Buffalo. I'm going to continue to do that. As much as I'm encouraged by the Member for Lethbridge-West to take off, I'm going to try and focus on those concerns I've heard.

The concerns I've heard from residents in Calgary-Buffalo that have chosen to respond are, as is always the case, a variety of perspectives and opinions, but those who have chosen to respond on the flat tax have said, if not unanimously at least in overwhelming numbers, Madam Speaker, that they are very much concerned with the notion of a flat tax. They understand – and this is what they tell me – that what you're doing is shifting the tax burden to lower income Albertans. There are some people at the very bottom end in terms of income who arguably are going to see an increased exemption and some benefit, and that's true. I think of all those middle-income Albertans who stand to get some tax relief, but the tax relief is a fraction of what it would be for somebody in a higher income bracket.

Madam Speaker, I regret that I don't have with me – I'll find it for later debate on this bill – the actual text of the analysis I did for constituents. I went through and said, given different incomes, what your tax saving would be. I think people have responded in a very strong way by saying that with this single-tax system, the flat-tax system, they see there's something about it that is radically different from the system of taxation we've understood in this country. They understand that sometimes in the rush to adopt things that seem to be simpler and in the rush to adopt things that just seem to be less complicated, you sometimes work substantial injustices to significant groups of citizens, and that clearly will be the case, in my opinion, with Bill 18 if it proceeds unchanged.

The bill also tells us a couple of other things. Maybe I'll make this observation now because we are dealing with the principle of the bill and so many of my concerns are going to relate to some of the minutiae and some of the specific sections and subsections in the act. What I'd like to do is recognize that in Bill 18 what we're doing in effect is saying to an awful lot of Albertans, a lot of middle-income Albertans, that you haven't been paying a big enough share, that those wealthy entrepreneurs, the people who are making incomes in excess of $150,000, need a break, that they've just been carrying too much of the burden. Now, I don't know about you, Madam Speaker, but I think this government spends too much time worrying about people who have incomes close to and exceeding $200,000 a year and far too little time worrying about those Albertans that are managing on incomes somewhere between $30,000 and $70,000 a year in terms of family income. [interjections]

Madam Speaker, I see there are some government members that are offering some advice from their seats. I'm always interested in learning more about the machinations of the government caucus in terms of how they review these bills. All I'm left with is the bill that's produced from this process at the end, and when I have questions about it, some of those questions are about the process. You start wondering who had input into this. I mean, who are you listening to? It's a lot like Bill 11. You see a bill that is not going to advantage the vast number of Albertans, and you say: why is this bill coming forward? You say to the government: who are you listening to; who's driving the agenda? There's a suspicion that the same people that would drive the agenda on Bill 11 are now apparently working hard behind the scenes to promote Bill 18, this new flat-tax regime. So I've got those kinds of initial concerns in terms of reviewing this.

What's going to happen is that in the 2000 tax year, under the federal government tax plan – and this is the other thing. I might just digress and say that it appears the former Provincial Treasurer was in such a rush to launch his leadership campaign for the alternative, he moved heaven and earth to be able to move up the date for the provincial budget. Normally the provincial budget comes about two, three weeks after the throne speech, but you'll remember that just a week after the throne speech we had the budget speech. Many of us asked: why is that? What seems apparent, I think, to most of us is that it was a chance for the Provincial Treasurer at that time to show that he'd stolen the march on Ottawa.

Of course, what happened was that as a result of the changes announced in the federal budget, we then discovered that Albertans are having to pay more. What we find out is that the government in its haste and its absolute fixation with trying to score another cheap headline compromised the interests of Albertans, just as they have done on Bill 11. In the 2000 tax year, under the federal government tax plan the middle-income tax bracket will be reduced from 26 to 40 percent effective July 1, 2000. There will be an increase in the threshold of middle- and high-income tax brackets to $30,000 and $60,900 respectively, and the basic and spousal exemptions will increase to $7,231 and $6,140 respectively. Now, the impact of those tax measures in Alberta is going to be some $66 million, and that is just in the 2000 tax year.

What we find is that Alberta taxpayers below $70,000 in taxable income will be paying more in provincial personal income taxes under an 11 percent single rate in the 2000 tax year and subsequent tax years than they would under the existing tax system. Madam Speaker, this surely represents some kind of new height in audacity. Our provincial government comes forward and tries to present Albertans with a present – and that's the way they couch it and package it – which means that we would pay more income tax and we will pay more income tax than we would have before Bill 18 came along.

Now, one can only say – and we're getting some terrific body language from the Member for St. Albert, who appears to be signaling her disagreement. Well, I hope she's going to stand up and explain to me how the confluence of the federal budget passed in the last year and Bill 18 will not represent an increase in tax. If that can be shown, let's demonstrate it. Let her stand up after I sit down. She can take us through and explain to us how this is not going to cost Albertans more. I put my calculations on the record, and I'm going to specifically challenge that Member for St. Albert to tell me where she parts company with my analysis and how she comes to any different conclusion. I'm open to learn that, and I'm looking forward to seeing it.

On March 14, 2000, we heard the Provincial Treasurer say: well, maybe we'll then reduce the 11 percent single rate and raise exemption levels in order to flow through federal government tax measures. We might ask: why would we expect that this government will be any more competent in terms of making that adjustment than they were in bringing in the bill in the first place? You know, this is pretty serious stuff when you start changing your tax system. I think it's completely unacceptable that the Provincial Treasurer would not have foreseen how much smarter it would have been to wait and see what was in the federal budget before charging ahead with his flat-tax proposal. [interjections]

The Member for Calgary-Egmont, who seems to profess some expertise in terms of tax law, and the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek are offering lots of advice, the two of them. They represent that corner in south Calgary, and there are lots of high-income earners in those areas. In Calgary-Fish Creek you can drive around and see those big, fancy homes. In Calgary-Egmont there are some lovely single-family residential homes. It may be that the constituents in Calgary-Egmont and Calgary-Fish Creek don't care about those people whose incomes are less than $70,000, whose taxes are going to go up. It may be that that's the position they take, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Calgary-Egmont on a point of order.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

MR. HERARD: Madam Speaker, section 23. The hon. member is imputing motives to my constituents, and I think he should apologize.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On the point of order, Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: My response to the point of order is that it is contrary to the Standing Orders to impute motives to other members of the Assembly. I was doing no such thing, and in fact he suggested that I was imputing motives to his constituents. Well, I'm not imputing motives other than the sense of desperation and fear they may experience in Calgary-Egmont and Calgary-Fish Creek when they understand what's coming forward in Bill 18.

If you want to make a ruling, those are my observations on the point of order, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Excuse me. Order please. Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, I would ask that we do look at Bill 18 and try to discuss the overall principles of that bill, and let's not try tonight to be confrontational. I think you can make a point without being confrontational.

MR. DICKSON: Madam Speaker, can I propose a bargain? If the Member for Calgary-Egmont and the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek will not offer commentary during the course of my presentation, I will be happy to follow the absolute guidance I get from the chair and stick on the bill. Without the provocation I'm happy to focus on those things.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: It's fine to stand in this House and point fingers and name names, hon. member, but I think the chair sitting up here could say that we will not have anyone do that. There are people on both sides of the House with interjections and interferences. I'm not going to name names here, but it sort of goes back and forth. This isn't totally one sided.

The chair wants to be fair and equitable in all of this.

I would ask that if our remarks pertain to the bill we have in front of us, as you talked about earlier, the principles involved in Bill 18, without naming names, without naming constituencies, and talk about the overall principles of the bill, we'll all be better off.

Go ahead.

MR. DICKSON: Madam Speaker, thank you very much for your advice and direction. I take it that what you're not suggesting is that we can't talk about the people who are going to be directly affected. I want to be absolutely clear that what we're talking about is the people who are going to be affected by this bill.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, you're not arguing with the chair, are you?

MR. DICKSON: Of course, I'm not arguing, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Well, then let's get on with the principles of the bill.

MR. DICKSON: I want it to be absolutely clear in terms of what I'm attempting to do.

Debate Continued

MR. DICKSON: So let's spend a moment identifying the major flaws with Bill 18. The first one is the fact that it compromises equity and compromises fairness. What happens is that the whole system is skewed to the top 4 percent of tax filers. The top 4 percent. I thought that at some point our responsibility was to make legislation that's going to advantage most Albertans, not the top 4 percent of tax filers. But doesn't that tell us something about the priority of this government? I mean, whether it's private health care for those that have deep pockets and can afford it or special tax relief for those people who are in the top 4 percent of tax filers – that's fine. That's a priority for this government. But for the vast majority in this province, the three million people, it's an entirely different story. It's called not so benign neglect. [interjections]

Now, Madam Speaker, if you direct the minister to hold his remarks, I'd be happy to finish mine. You've enjoined me not to respond, so if the member opposite will keep his comments to himself, I'll try real hard to finish the observations I wanted to make.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose on a point of order.

MR. DICKSON: Certainly, Madam Speaker.

Point of Order Reflections on Nonmembers

MR. PHAM: Madam Speaker, I have been listening to the speech from my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo, and I would like to raise a point of order under Beauchesne 493(4): "The Speaker has cautioned Members to exercise great care in making statements about persons who are outside the House and unable to reply."

Your statement earlier referring to the constituents of Calgary-Egmont who do not care about other people was very, very rude. I think you should make an apology to those people who are not in the House and cannot defend themselves.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I really don't think there is a point of order, because we did just deal with that a few minutes ago. May I suggest again that we look at the principles of the bill instead of identifying areas.

MR. DICKSON: Okay. Would it be okay if I refer to Calgarians, Madam Speaker? I represent some of those people too.

MR. DICKSON: In terms of following through on the bill, we've identified that the priority of this government is the top 4 percent of tax filers. The people who receive much smaller cuts are those Albertans who are the 39 percent of middle-income tax filers who earn between $30,000 and $70,000. They pay over 45 percent of the personal income taxes in this province. They receive much smaller cuts as a percentage of the current personal income tax that's paid.

Now, the second problem we have with Bill 18 is a major one. This is sort of the end of the progressive tax system as we've known it in this province, because what it provides is that every single taxpayer in this province regardless of taxable income will pay the same 11 percent rate. Now, because 132,000 people at the bottom end are taken off the tax rolls and because there has been an increase in basic and spousal exemptions to some $16,000 and change, the government would have us believe that this is a way of maintaining fairness. But that's deceitful, Madam Speaker. That's not the reality at all. That's not the reality. You know it and I know it, and I think every taxpayer in this province is soon going to discover that with the bill as we understand it.

The other concern is that the people who are really injured by this are what we'd call middle-class, middle-income Albertans. Those taxpayers who earn less than $70,000 in taxable income would receive a larger provincial tax cut starting in 2001 if the federal tax measures flowed through than they will under the 11 percent single tax rate. That's a simple fact. It's a consequence of the skewing. The distribution of tax cuts under the 11 percent single rate is skewed towards taxpayers earning over $100,000.

Now, the other major concern is the marginal rate increases for low-income earners and middle-income earners. If we assume the elimination of the .5 percent flat tax rate on January 1, 2001, taxpayers in the 17 percent bracket – that's up to $30,004 – and the 24 percent middle-income bracket – that's $30,000 to $60,000, plus or minus – would have a higher marginal rate under the 11 percent single rate than they would under a tax-on-tax system in the 2001 tax year.

My MLA is here. We have an accountant here in the front row on this side from Calgary-North West. Now, here's a guy who's spent his life as a respected member of the chartered accountant profession. I'm looking forward not only as a constituent but as a fellow Calgarian to hearing him develop his analysis. I'd like to attest his proposition.

MR. MELCHIN: I've already spoken.

MR. DICKSON: Well, I haven't been persuaded by anything he's said so far, but I wanted to specifically ask him – I'd like to test with him these assumptions that I'm making. I'd like to know with as much specificity as the Member for Calgary-North West can provide how his analysis would differ from mine, because I want to share that with my constituents.

I think the point to make is that if you'd had a tax reduction package of, say, $877 million, if you were to do, independent of Bill 11, if we just pretended for a minute . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Bill 18.

MR. DICKSON: Bill 18. I'm sorry. They become interchangeable. I told you they're closely linked.

If you imagine just hypothetically that you had a tax-reduction package under the current progressive system of $877 million . . .

I think I'm out of time, but I'll pick this up at committee stage. Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very happy to be able to speak in principle to Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, the legislation before us this evening. In principle this is a very lousy bill. I have to say that to begin with. There are many reasons for that.

AN HON. MEMBER: Don't hold back. Tell us how you really feel.

MS CARLSON: Well, I could say a lot more than that but it would be unparliamentary, so I will stick with "lousy" for the time being.

Let me tell you what a number of people said about this bill last evening in front of the Legislature. I had the good fortune of speaking to about 2,000 of the people who were gathered outside the Legislature last evening to protest other forms of legislation before this Assembly. It was early in the evening. Later on in the evening about 4,000 people accumulated, but early in the evening I asked those 2,000 assembled people what they thought of the flat tax.

First of all I said: put your hand up if you support the flat tax, because that's what we're debating in the Legislature this evening. Madam Speaker, you'd be surprised to hear this but not a single hand went up, and of course the boos resounded throughout the crowd. Not a single hand went up. So then I said: who opposes this particular flat tax? Everybody's hand went up, the sirens went off, the horns honked. Resoundingly, to a person, there wasn't a single person out there who supported a flat tax. So, once again, the government hasn't done their homework on legislation that they brought to the floor of this Assembly.

I think the government believed they could just slide one past the people of Alberta. Everybody's concentration is on Bill 11, because it's a hugely important bill that's going to change the nature of our province forever. This government thought they could just slide in Bill 18 when nobody was looking and pass legislation that also would be harmful to the people of this province.

Albertans are a lot smarter than that, and we know that because we've been talking to them, listening to them, seeing them gathered outside, reading the e-mails, meeting them throughout the province, and so on. People aren't fooled by what's going on here. They see that Bill 18 and Bill 11 are companion pieces of legislation that will establish precedents in this province that are harmful to most Albertans, in fact all but 4 percent of high-income earners that my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo referred to.

Definitely a flat tax differentiates between those who have in this province, those who are maintaining a middle-class life style, and those who have not. High-income earners pay proportionately less money with the flat tax. There is no way the facts can be argued on that point. We've had the odd chirping from across the way this evening on that, but I don't see anybody standing on their feet to defend the government's position and to explain how it could be anything else than this particular bill disproportionately benefiting a few people in this society and disproportionately harming the balance of them. That's what this bill does.

Madam Speaker, let's face it. The high-income earners, that 4 percent of people in this province, do not need any more breaks. They have the greatest flexibility in terms of tax planning. They just don't need another break there. They have all kinds of options in terms of how to defer income and do a variety of tax planning. Because they have the cash flow, they have the maximum tools available to them, not like middle-class taxpayers like me and most of my colleagues and most of the people in this province where it's a tough go these days. We don't need to pay any more tax. By the time we get finished with user fees, with school fees, with tuition fees, with all those other costs this government has downloaded on us since 1993, we can't afford to pay any more tax burden. It isn't reasonable for us to expect other people to not pay their fair share.

It isn't that Albertans aren't prepared to pay their fair share, because we are. We know what it's like. When we have extra money, Madam Speaker, we contribute that to a variety of charitable foundations, churches, nonprofits, all kinds of organizations. How do we pay that money? We do it according to the kind of income we're making, the excess disposable income we have. When we have more money, we pay more money. So those who earn more money should pay more money. They should pay their fair share of taxes in this province. We would do that if we were in those high-income brackets. We do that in a volunteer way now in charitable donations and other kinds of giving. We would do that if we were high-income earners. Why should we expect specific breaks for these people in this particular legislation? It is simply unfair.

It is unfair in a global context in terms of what's happening in this province too, Madam Speaker, and it impacts Albertans in the long term in a very, very negative fashion. Because the high-income earners won't be paying their fair share of the tax, in general we will have less tax revenue coming into the Alberta coffers. What does that look like? Less tax revenue coming from tax generated income. We are in a declining position for oil and gas revenues in this province. In spite of what the Minister of Resource Development will tell us every chance he gets, we do not have unlimited oil and gas reserves in this province, and best estimates are 10 years to 25 years in both oil and gas in terms of reserve possibilities. So we're going to have less income coming in through those areas.

This government, in spite of a 30-year attempt to do so, has not been able to sufficiently stimulate tertiary development in this province so that we have that kind of corporate taxable income coming in. They're still floundering. We're a resource-based economy still. They haven't been able to get it right no matter what they've done, so we don't have that kind of a tax base coming in.

Yes, we have more gambling revenue, Madam Speaker, but what does that mean? For every dollar that we collect in gambling revenue, we pay $3 out in social costs, so that doesn't mean that there's a net benefit to the tax base of this province.

So we've got less personal tax coming in, less corporate tax coming in, less than what we could have had had we promoted development properly in this province, fewer tourism taxes and dollars coming into our economy because of the way this government has promoted oil and forestry development in the province. We are losing some of our best tourism resources, and we have the gambling revenue that's really sucking dollars out of the system, at a rate of 3 to 1.

So what does that look like long term? It means that this government is going to be in a position where they will be less able to fund basic services like health care and education. That's where we can see that Bill 18 is the companion bill to Bill 11, Madam Speaker, because this government is deliberately forcing a situation in this province where there is no option but to go to private health care and private education. There will not be the tax dollars to adequately fund a basic system. They are setting the stage now for private operators to be able to come in to skim off the cream of the profits in this province, not to the benefit of Albertans, not in terms of service providing, and not in terms of tax revenue, because in both of those areas, health care and education, the best possible service is provided when it's provided in a universal kind of system. We've seen that globally.

This government, in spite of all of the calls for documentation to be tabled in this Legislature to this day, to the date of closure, has been unable to put any proof on the table that in fact what they're proposing to do will be cost-effective or will provide better service. This won't happen. So why are they doing it?

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Edmonton-Ellerslie, the chair will remind you that we are in second reading of Bill 18, and I would ask that you debate the principles of Bill 18.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for that ruling, and definitely in principle these bills are linked because of the long-term effects they have on Albertans. But I will keep your ruling in mind and will explain it in more detail if it's escaping some of their attention spans.

MS CARLSON: The fact is that what's happening in this province is not random. It is a deliberate attempt to establish a private system in many venues. If you have no tax base in the province, the only option for providing basic service is privatization, and this bill is a Treasury bill which impacts every single department in this government. Therefore, we can talk about every single department in this government when we're debating it.

It also affects every single person in this province. It is a punitive kind of bill. It will not receive support from us. It does not receive support from Albertans, and once again this government has called the situation wrong in terms of meeting the needs of Albertans. They are playing to a select few, that 4 percent who under this particular scheme will gain a tax benefit.

We say that is wrong, and we will stand for the people of the province who do not want this kind of legislation brought in, in spite of this government trying to divert our attention away by bringing in another major, horribly planned bill in terms of health care. In spite of that, we will fight this bill because it is wrong and it should not be passed.

It isn't even well thought out in terms of the consequences of the federal government's actions. The Provincial Treasurer was very keen to bring this bill in before we saw the federal budget. Why, Madam Speaker? Because for that very short period of time between the introduction of his bill and the introduction of the federal legislation, which he knew was coming, he could truthfully say to taxpayers that middle-income earners were going to receive a tax break. Because of the way the federal legislation came in, which is actually more beneficial than what this bill could have ever been, now that isn't the case. Now middle taxpayers are going to be paying a disproportionately high percentage of taxes. So he was right for about three days, Madam Speaker, but he knew very well that he was going to be wrong for the rest of the life of this bill. Yet he still brought it in.

Why, Madam Speaker? Because he wants to set up a climate for privatization within this province, and that is fundamentally wrong, and because it's fundamentally wrong in principle, I at this time would like to introduce an amendment to this particular bill, and I will have it circulated at this point.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Just wait a few minutes, hon. member, until the other members have them.

Okay. Edmonton-Ellerslie, go ahead.

MS CARLSON: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Here's what the amendment says: that the motion for second reading be amended by striking out all of the words after "That" and substituting the following:

Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly believes that as a result of the tax reduction measures announced in the 2000 federal budget, the bill would not ensure that all Alberta taxpayers receive a fair tax reduction.

Now, what could be a better amendment than that, Madam Speaker? In fact, all of my colleagues here have said that they support the amendment, and what that means is they'll all be able to speak to it too. So I'm looking forward to what they have to say to it.

I know that they have been out in their constituencies talking to people about the flat tax. See; they're all agreeing with that. I know in my constituency I have had a number of people come in and meet on this particular issue. It is a hot topic in the phone calls and at the doors, and people do not trust this government, that they will be seeing any kind of lowering of tax. I'm not surprised that they don't trust them, Madam Speaker. I don't trust them either, because I haven't seen legislation come through that actually supports what they say they're going to be doing. In fact, they fall short on all of the major pieces of legislation that I have seen in this Assembly since I have been here since 1993. So they're right to question it.

In that regard, it's very important that the amendment be brought in at this stage. This government needs to do what it always does when it doesn't know what to do, and that's go out and talk to the people, Madam Speaker, be it roundtables or town hall meetings or whatever this government feels would be an effective process. They need to get out there and talk to Albertans and understand how strong the opposition is to a flat tax in this province, not by those few 4 percent who are going to achieve a great benefit through this particular legislation but by the middle-class taxpayers who bear the burden of taxation in this province and who have just had this burden increased by this government with this legislation.

Clearly, once again the government did not think through this process, and they need to do that. What we need to do is have this legislation tabled over the summer, let them get out there, talk to the people, find out what's wrong with it, and I'm sure at that point they're going to do the right thing and withdraw the bill, Madam Speaker, because that's what's required here.

We saw a similar circumstance like that happen last year with Bill 15, the Natural Heritage Act, where the government brought in a very badly flawed piece of legislation. We brought in an amendment like this and ultimately had the government stop discussion on the bill at that stage and put forward a number of meetings and focus groups over the summer, which the Member for Banff-Cochrane chaired and did actually a very good job at, and came back with revised legislation.

Now, unfortunately, it's hit a stumbling block in their own caucus because the Minister of Resource Development won't support the kinds of changes that need to be made to help protect the environment. However, that process worked quite well up to that point, Madam Speaker, and I'm suggesting a parallel kind of process to happen with this bill, that we not now read this bill a second time, as the amendment says, and that we see a process come forward where this government can get out from under the dome and actually take the time to listen, not just sit in front of the people of Alberta but listen to what they're saying, to assimilate that and to incorporate it into this particular legislation and come back in the fall when we're in our fall session and announce to us that they made a mistake. There's nothing wrong with doing that.

We know that the Premier used to be quite fond of saying that in this Legislature. He'd get up quite often and say: I've made a mistake, and we're going to change direction. On MLA pensions I remember very clearly that he stood up in the Legislature just before he went to the '93 election looking for some kind of a hook for that election, and he said: hey, we made a mistake; there shouldn't be any MLA pensions. He rescinded them. That actually got him elected in 1993, Madam Speaker, so he should remember how important the voice of the people of Alberta is. They want to be listened to. We know that. We're out there at the doors, and we're in the community halls, and we're talking to the people in the coffee shops. We know that this is a very flawed piece of legislation, that it unfairly burdens middle-class taxpayers and that people in this province want it gone. The vast majority of the people want it gone.

There are a couple of small portions of the bill that could be incorporated into new kinds of legislation, like increasing the personal exemptions. That is a good piece of the bill, and I would like to recognize that as a good piece, but it could easily be incorporated into other kinds of legislation. In fact, we would be happy to see that come through miscellaneous statutes with absolutely no debate on it, Madam Speaker, because that would be a good piece of legislation to see in this Assembly. But when you tie it into something that's absolutely abusive to the people of Alberta, like this particular bill, we are never going to support it. So for that reason I think it's very important that members on the opposite side here review this amendment, that we see them speak to it. The Minister of Resource Development was very eager to get up a few minutes ago and make comments on my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo's comments.

MR. DICKSON: He was shouting from his chair.

MS CARLSON: He was shouting from his chair. He wasn't anxious to get up, but maybe he'd like to get up now. He did speak before on second reading, but I'm sure that he would like to explain to the people of Alberta . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: A point of order. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

Point of Order
Questioning a Member

MR. BOUTILIER: I would like to know if the hon. member would entertain a question on the point that she's raising.

MS CARLSON: No. I only have a couple of minutes of speaking time left.

Debate Continued

MS CARLSON: This is what I would like that particular member to do: get up and speak to this amendment. He can raise all his questions at that point. I will give the notes to one of my colleagues and answer all of his questions in detail, which that person can then read into the record. I challenge the Member for Fort McMurray to get up here and defend his government's legislation, which I know he doesn't like and can't defend. So he has the opportunity to ask his questions of me at that point in time, and I will undertake this evening, before this debate is over, to get back to him with full and detailed answers on this particular amendment. Let's see if he'll do that. He's quite happy to stand and ask a question. Let's see if he's prepared to enter into debate, because I don't think he is. I'm sure that the people of Alberta would like to know what it is that he has to say.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray has risen on a point of order.

Point of Order
Questioning a Member

MR. BOUTILIER: I wonder if she will entertain a question?

MS CARLSON: No. I said no for the second time.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Continue on, Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Clearly he wasn't listening because I went on to explain how I would not use up my valuable speaking time, which is quickly running to a close, to answer his question but that I would undertake to answer those questions this evening in full detail. In fact, we could circulate those answers to anybody else who would also be interested in looking at them.

Clearly, the government didn't think through the process in this bill, and they need to be asking a lot of questions, Madam Speaker, and we are quite happy to provide the answers. In spite of the fact that they have massive research departments and a lot of resources at their fingertips to do the in-depth kind of study that's required for this piece of legislation, they didn't do it. On our very limited budget, which consists primarily of the ability to listen to Albertans, we are quite happy to answer their questions on any particular point they raise, including this particular amendment and including this particular regressive bill, at any point in time.

MR. DICKSON: We got elected to ask questions. They got elected to answer.

MS CARLSON: That's true. My colleague from Calgary-Buffalo says that, as members of the Official Opposition of Alberta, we got elected to ask the questions, and they got elected to provide the answers. [interjections]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Excuse me. Please, could we have some order? Edmonton-Ellerslie has got the floor and only Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: However, Madam Speaker, their point was excellent. Next time we will have the opportunity to answer the questions, and we'll be quite prepared to do that at any point in time, and unlike this government, we will answer the questions. That'll be a change, and it'll be refreshing for the people of the province. We will continue to listen to Albertans, unlike this particular government, who for some reason has become isolated and chooses to speak to the top 4 percent and hear what they have to say and bring in legislation that benefits them but forgets the rest of the people in this province. That is very unfortunate. However, we understand that they are going to pay the price at some short time down the road because people are very upset, and they are upset at a number of pieces of legislation. This particular bill, this flat tax bill, they are nearly as upset at as they are at Bill 11, and I wouldn't take that lightly. There were anywhere between 2,000 and 4,000 people outside the Assembly last night who clearly . . . [interjection]

Well, don't laugh at that. Don't laugh at that. There were 2,000 to 4,000 people out there, and those people are motivated, Madam Speaker, not just to vote but also to work for people. And they will tell the Premier at the end of the day what the answers will be.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Well, Madam Speaker, it's time to rise in this Assembly, address this bill and this amendment at second reading, and set the record straight on a few things. I think we've heard a lot of rhetoric, not a lot of it with detail about what Albertans are expecting from a tax system. I think I'd like to start with a little history of Bill 18, on what we did a few years ago in addressing what Albertans were asking us to do.

This bill, of course, brings us into the 21st century, with Alberta being the destination of choice for many people who wish to raise their families, earn a living, and invest their hard-earned dollars in this province. This is a forward-thinking plan that's in place today, based on the visions of Alberta: a hardworking family that wants and deserves to keep more of what they earn, who strive for fairness, and who desire simplicity in their tax system.

When we put together in February of 1998 a Tax Review Committee that traveled across this province, they came back with the views of Albertans, some 80,000 who mailed in their views on this issue as well as many hundreds who came to the meetings and voiced their opinions. During the debate that took place in 1998, the committee identified four problems with the tax system in Alberta. Bracket creep, also known as the invisible tax, has been an insidious method of tax collection used by all Canadians' governments. Through the simple process of inflation, the salaries of working people get pushed into higher tax brackets, and they pay higher taxes. This erodes buying power and hits low-income citizens hardest. As politicians we began to look around to see where the bracket creeps were, and as our previous Treasurer said, most of them were in government.

I have known many people who have come to me over the years and said, "You know, I work overtime," or "I go and get some extra money paid to me." And they say, "I turn around and find that I've moved into another bracket, and it's cutting my income down by 30 percent." My own children work in this province, and if they work overtime, whether it's doing CAT scans or MRIs or whether it's nursing, if they come home and they look at their tax notice today, it hardly makes it fair for them to go back and work many hours of overtime on behalf of the people of Alberta.

The second thing. The Tax Review Committee also reported that Albertans were frustrated with the flat tax and surtax, the so-called temporary deficit elimination taxes of 1987. We, who had brought in taxes – and all governments have done this over the years – to eliminate certain deficits at certain periods of time unfortunately never removed them. When these taxes were introduced a long time ago to reduce the deficit, the deficit continued to rise. When Premier Ralph Klein took over the reins of the government, the deficit finally started to go down. When we finally eliminated the deficit in '94-95, the taxes, however, stayed. So here in Alberta we have quite rightly been singing the trumpet song of deficit deliverance, but when we got to the verse about deficit tax deliverance, we forgot the words. Well, we are going to address it now, here in this Assembly during this session, and I ask the hon. members opposite to join with the Albertans who want these taxes gone.

Madam Speaker, we also know that families believe we need to level the playing field for how we tax one-income and two-income families. The choice of whether one or two partners work outside the home should be a personal family choice, but the tax scales are tipped in favour of two-income families, making the choice more difficult for those who choose to live on one income. It is evident in this province that one person making $60,000 a year with a stay-at-home parent pays more tax than people who have a two-parent, two-income family where one member earns $40,000 and the other earns $20,000. They want a level playing field put in place for these families.

Finally, the Tax Review Committee said that we should rid ourselves of the cumbersome and burdensome effect of the multibracket system. They suggested that we break away from the federal tax structure as a means of setting our provincial rate and move to a single provincial tax rate on all income and, at the same time, allow for generous personal and spousal credits. Breaking our attachment to the federal rates would give us more flexibility and would make our provincial rate more transparent to our citizens, less prone to the whims of the federal Finance minister.

Now I'll divert from my comments here to one issue that's been brought up over and over again in this debate. Since we were dehooking from the federal tax system and had announced this and had brought forth the announcement of a flat tax, the federal government – and I'm not going to say they did it deliberately – went into the middle-income bracket and changed their rate there, on one of their brackets. We have said in this province – and I stand here tonight, along with the Premier's statements – that we will change this system that we've come to by moving the rates and changing the spousal allowances to ensure that that middle-income bracket is justly served by this flat tax program. [interjection]

One of the hon. members says that you have to bring it in in this bill, but he should know – and you're an understudy of tax laws, are you? You should know that you don't have to change any one of the numbers in this bill for a government to effect its tax program. You know that. You know that rates of taxation are changed constantly without legislation at the time. It is brought into legislation in the future.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Acting Provincial Treasurer, through the chair, please.

AN HON. MEMBER: They're baiting him.

DR. WEST: The individual is de-baiting me; that's correct.

Now, let me repeat it one more time. We have said that if the federal government changes their tax brackets or changes their way of taxation so that it is injurious to any one segment of Albertans, we will change the flat tax to address that so there's no injurious action to the middle income, to the low income, or to the high income.

Now I'm going to go on to talk about what Bill 18 addresses and how it does it. But here's a speech given by one of our leading CEOs at the Summit 2000 meeting in Toronto, Canada, on April 5. He's talking about the liabilities of working in Canada for his company and where they invest their money. It is Mr. Gwyn Morgan, the chief executive officer of Alberta Energy Company. He said:

On the liability side of the ledger, we have one key problem: much higher personal tax rates make it very difficult for us to bring in those experienced international people we need. And, to make matters worse, we have found that when our Canadian workers are assigned to international operations, it's very difficult to get them to come home. They just have a lot of trouble undergoing the double cold shock of moving to after-tax financial realities and to Canadian dollars from U.S. dollar-based wages, and they often find that the quality of life elsewhere is better than they thought it would be.

He goes on to say:

The total tax load of Canadians is simply draining the ability of our economy to provide the investment capital necessary to fuel a strong, free market economy.

I note that the hon. members of the loyal opposition are chattering away here, but when I was a boy being raised, I understood that Liberals did support a free market system, the dignity and self-respect of having jobs, retaining the largest amount of your earned income so that you could raise your families, work hard, deliver self-respect back, build your homes, and accumulate certain evidence of wealth. But when we come and make statements like this, they chatter away, denying the reality that we must lower the taxes in Canada and in Alberta in order to be competitive.

Bill 18 is about making Albertans live better and making the Alberta economy stronger. Bill 18 addresses five general areas of concern identified by Albertans through that tax review: Alberta's competitiveness with similar jurisdictions, the tax plight of low-income earning Albertans, the phenomenon of bracket creep, taxation inequities between one- and two-parent families, and temporary deficit elimination taxes that linger long after the deficit.

People are concerned about Alberta's competitiveness. We compare favourably with other provinces, but Canada does not stack up well against other G-7 countries, and we're not competitive with the U.S. Bright young Canadians are fleeing south, where the before-tax value of each dollar is 50 percent higher and the after-tax value of each dollar is another 20 percent higher.

Albertans with low incomes deserve a tax break. Do you not agree with that? The current basic personal exemption is just too low. Bracket creep means that although people's incomes are not increasing in a real sense, they're paying more tax. When Canadian salaries increase to keep pace with inflation, they are pushed into higher tax brackets. This means that most Canadians get less than the government when they get a raise. This insidious method of tax collection has given Ottawa a $10 billion bonus. In fact, coffers in every province have been topped up by bracket creeps. Alberta has led the fight against . . .

MS OLSEN: Madam Speaker, a point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Acting Provincial Treasurer, we have a point of order.

Edmonton-Norwood.

Point of Order
Questioning a Member

MS OLSEN: It's under Beauchesne, section 333. I just wondered if the minister would entertain a question.

DR. WEST: Absolutely. We're not afraid of questions.

MS OLSEN: I just wanted to know, Madam Speaker, if the minister could tell us if it's necessary to go to a single-tax system to get rid of bracket creep. Is it necessary to go to a flat tax system to get rid of bracket creep?

DR. WEST: You can change taxes any way you want, but getting rid of bracket creep is the right thing to do. It's not fair for hardworking young Canadians to have to move into different brackets and pay more tax just because they work harder than they did before. I mean, that is unfair. The answer to your question is that it's the right thing to do. [interjections]

Madam Speaker, they have the right to ask a question, but if they don't like the answer, they can sit there and fuss.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Very quickly, Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Under Beauchesne, section 333, I have another question for the minister then, if he would entertain another question.

DR. WEST: No. This has gone far enough.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The answer is no. The Provincial Treasurer will carry on with debate, and I would ask for decorum in the Assembly, please.

Yes, Calgary-Buffalo.

Point of Order
Reading a Speech

MR. DICKSON: Madam Speaker, I would cite Beauchesne 495 to 500 and the Speaker's admonition of March 4, 1998, at page 683 that if you're going to read a speech in the course of a debate, you have to table the speech. I don't know whether the speech has been tabled, but would the minister please ensure that the speech is tabled so we can all read it and save the time of the Assembly.

Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Calgary-Buffalo, I'm sure that the hon. Acting Treasurer will be glad to table the portion that he talked about, the CEO I believe it was, through Alberta Energy in his speech in Toronto. I'm sure he'll be glad to table that. I think that if we are really going to make any progress tonight, let's quit this and get on with the debate at hand.

Now, the hon. Provincial Treasurer has the floor. The chair is recognizing him. I would ask for decorum in this House, and let's get on with the job at hand.

DR. WEST: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Now I'm going to move on to the new system that we're putting forth here tonight. I want to emphasize one more time. They've spent a great amount of time saying that those people at less than $70,000 are disenfranchised by this. I'll say one more time that the Premier of this province and the government of this province have said that if the federal government changes any one of their brackets, we will alter the basic exemption as well as a percentage here to make them part of the tax reduction.

Before I start on the new system, I'd just like to point out something to correct an image that's left. You can paint this any way you want, but there were some comments about who pays taxes in the province and who this helps or doesn't help. In Alberta, for example, the top 1 percent of income earners pay 21 percent of all the tax in the province of Alberta. Now, the top 5 percent – they were talking 4 percent over there – pay 40 percent of all the tax. The top 10 percent – now, all of you may know some people in the top 10 percent. A half million plus don't pay any tax, but the other 90 percent pay 48 percent of all the taxes. Those top 10 percent pay 52 percent of all the taxes in this province. To say that they don't fairly pay their share of tax is misleading this House and misleading the people of Alberta. Those statements are unbelievable.

The new plan announced in Budget '99 unhook Alberta from the federal rate structure, moving the province from our tax-on-tax system to a tax-on-income system, and when the plan is fully implemented, Albertans will pay less money to this Provincial Treasurer. Under the new system Alberta will unhook from the federal system by calculating provincial tax as a percentage of the taxable income rather than calculating provincial tax as a percentage of the federal tax. Albertans will see a simpler tax system and will continue to file only one tax return. We will move to a single rate of tax when we unhook from the federal system. A low rate interferes less with the choices people make about how they earn, spend, save, and invest their income. The single rate makes the system easier for Albertans to understand and rids the provincial system of the three federal brackets that until now Alberta has been forced to parallel.

Under the new system, a single nurse in Lloydminster who earns $40,765 paid Alberta income tax of $2,665 in 1996 and will pay $2,475 in the year 2002. A family in Lethbridge with one spouse earning $50,215 as a law enforcement officer and the other staying at home with three children paid Alberta income tax of $3,070 in 1996 and will pay $1,665 in 2002.

A Red Deer family with two children, where one parent is a firefighter earning $47,345 and the other a teacher earning $43,205, paid Alberta income tax of $6,315 in 1996 and will pay $5,830 in 2002, and remember that that includes inflation and all the other costs.

We will increase the basic exemptions and release an additional 132,000 low-income earners from Alberta's tax rolls. These people will pay no provincial income tax whatsoever. The Liberals' plan that they brought forward would see them still paying some tax. These increases are fully indexed to inflation to pre-empt the possibility of bracket creep for these low-income people. This move will see the basic personal exemption increase by more than inflation for the first time since 1988. I'll repeat it. These basic exemptions will take off an additional 132,000 low-income earners, and as the population goes over 3 million, this number will be higher.

The level playing field that people talk about. We will level the playing field by raising the spousal deductions to the same level as the personal deduction. Single parents will also get this enhanced deduction by applying it to their first child instead of a spouse. This will address the inequities between one- and two-parent families.

We will wipe out both of the Alberta deficit elimination taxes, the surtax and the flat tax. It just doesn't make sense to tax people for a condition that no longer exists. On January 1, 2000, we eliminated the 8 percent surtax imposed in 1987 when we were battling the deficit. Albertans will have $144 million more in their pockets as a result. The flat tax goes January 1, 2001, when the whole system switches over. With the population increase that we're seeing today and the changes that will be implemented, we will see a decrease of over $850 million in taxation, and when we address the federal issue, it could be well over a billion dollars that Albertans will be enhanced in their jeans.

I'm going to repeat it for the fourth time, Madam Speaker. Please bear with me. We will match any federal tax cuts for 2000 pending introduction of our new tax system. We are committed to passing the savings from the federal government on to Albertans. It's important to keep in mind that we have just begun our fiscal year, and we will need time to analyze the figures, but those adjustments we will address through the affordability of the income to the province of Alberta. Let me assure you that we will match any federal tax cuts so that this commitment is held whole to Albertans.

As I say, there are some people outside. I'm not criticizing them. We all have opinions. But if I were to ask many of my constituents the details of the flat tax reduction and that, they wouldn't know without me sitting down with them for coffee and going over the details of this tax plan. So to ask people standing outside the Legislature . . . [Dr. West's speaking time expired]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Treasurer for that enlightening set of remarks. I'm glad you didn't adjourn debate, because I think it might make some sense to be able to reply to some of your comments on the record in real time, as it were.

First of all, there's nobody in this Official Opposition that doesn't stand for fair and equitable taxation. There is nobody in this opposition that doesn't want to move quickly to ensure that there is comprehensive, sustainable tax reform in this province that ensures the adequate funding of all of our core social programs and doesn't pick the pockets of ordinary Albertan workers any more than they have to be. It's this government and the government that that minister is a part of that has chalked up an almost $10 billion surplus by lowballing revenues, continuing bracket creep, continuing high income tax surtaxes, continuing the flat tax, and then telling people that the cupboards are bare. So let's just express the facts as they are.

Now, the reason why I support this amendment from my colleague to not see Bill 18 read a second time is because fundamentally there is nothing that I have heard from the government since they introduced their concept of a flat tax that has convinced me or my constituents that this flat tax will treat them fairly. What we hear from the government is ideology that basically boils down to this: it is somehow morally offensive to tax people who earn more money, because if you do, you are creating a disincentive for those people to work harder. What this government forgets and what they would like to pretend is true is that it is only hard work that equals economic success. Of course, we know that's not true. Madam Speaker, nothing replaces hard work; don't get me wrong. But it is not just hard work. Who you are and where you come from and who your parents are and the luck of the draw sometimes and a whole host of other social and economic conditions will also influence the amount of personal wealth that you may create or that you may be able to maintain.

Now, Madam Speaker, it is also misleading on the part of the Acting Treasurer to suggest that anybody in the Official Opposition – and I say the Official Opposition – is against free markets and the free-market system. Liberalism is all about free enterprise. Liberalism is all about the individual. But it recognizes that not every individual starts off from the same place. We believe very much in equality of opportunity, and that's one of the beauties of the free-market system. Free markets allow for the creation of wealth, and the freer the markets are, the more that wealth can grow and grow and grow again. So when you're dealing with the free market, you also have to understand that the happy result of a free market is this creation of wealth.

As I said, it's not just because of hard work. It may be because of talent or resources, or it may be because of good luck. It may be because those to a greater degree than others were in the right place at the right time, and that means that there are going to be some who didn't have that good fortune. There are going to be some who, no matter how hard they work, may not be able to enjoy that prosperity as well as others, and it is also one of the results of a free market that you have this growing gap between the very wealthy and the rest.

There is absolutely nothing wrong with those individuals who can attain that great wealth. Equally, there is nothing wrong, from a social expectation, with those very wealthy contributing in proportion to their wealth to the economic well-being of the society that allowed them to accumulate that wealth. Part of supporting the free-market system is supporting the kind of society that we all choose to live in, that the free-market system is part of. You can't separate the two, Madam Speaker. No matter how much the Provincial Treasurer and his colleagues in cabinet and his colleagues on the backbench would like to, you can't separate those two facts. It is absolutely the basis of the kind of society, a society that's based on fairness and equity and equality of opportunity, compassion, that you would want to deal with a tax system that doesn't overly burden one sector, particularly when it favours that one sector that is already the most economically advantaged. That just doesn't make sense. There's nothing fair about that.

The Treasurer was talking about who it is that pays the taxes, and he mentioned the 1 percent of Alberta taxpayers. Those are taxpayers that earn over $150,000 per year. Under the provincial government's tax plan they will receive a 15 percent cut in their provincial taxes. However, the 39 percent, the bulk of taxpayers, who earn between $30,000 and $70,000 a year, are going to receive less than 50 percent of that tax cut. They're going to receive a 6 percent tax cut. Now, what's fair about that? What is fair about that? There is absolutely nothing fair about that.

I heard the Treasurer refer to the CEO of an energy company. You know, I just had an opportunity to review the annual earning statements of several CEOs of energy companies. I guess I wasn't surprised to see it, but before bonuses, before stock options, before you factor in the country club memberships and all those other things, it was not unusual to see those CEOs earning in excess of $1 million. When I have been inside their boardrooms and talked with them, I haven't had one of them tell me that personally they're thinking that they can't afford to pay their taxes.

So I would wonder what it was that the Provincial Treasurer was getting at when he quoted extensively from that correspondence. Is he trying to have us feel sorry for the oilmen in this province? They pay their fair share. Nobody wants them to pay anything more than that, but we don't want all of the men and women who work in their corporations that help them create that wealth to pay more than their fair share either. We want them to pay exactly what they need to.

I hear members from the government chorus in, like they are, and talking and calling us names in the Official Opposition, but let me quote for a minute from a paper called Why Fairness Matters: Progressive Versus Flat Taxes. It's by Robert Shapiro, April 1996, written by the Progressive Foundation. I don't need to be a front man for Dr. Shapiro. He's a Harvard-trained economist. He's well known, and I'm sure that the people in the Treasurer's department well know Shapiro and his work. Let me quote just briefly. I'd be happy to table this if the government members want it, but let me quote just briefly what Dr. Shapiro has to say.

America's wide-open markets accentuate the impact of all of these factors, so that those with more ambition, self-discipline, and talent can prosper greatly. Bill Gates and his investors, for example, would not have enjoyed as great a success in other advanced countries because their markets and laws would not have provided so hospitable an environment. And once a person or family's economic success is secured, America's open markets allow them to increase the value of their wealth at a greater rate than in most other places. The economic benefits of free markets are large and obvious. But there are social costs, because our open markets and laws also produce harsher economic inequality than in other advanced countries – an urgent issue today when economic inequality is increasing rapidly and for reasons that most working people can do little about.

If the members of the government would like to find fault with the argument about the social justice aspect of tax policy, then I would suggest they do a little bit of research first and bring their reasoned comments to the floor instead of just yelling epithets across the way so as to discredit anybody that wants to stand here and defend the middle-income earner in this province, because it's certainly not the provincial government that's standing up for the middle-income earner in this province.

Now, Madam Speaker, the underlying principle behind graduated income taxes is in itself simply equity. In other words, fairness dictates the amount of tax individuals pay. Those with the greatest disposable incomes pay a higher percentage of their income in taxes. Those with less disposable income pay a lower percentage of their income in taxes. Most citizens accept this principle. Most people recognize that it is this principle that has allowed us to build public education into excellence and public health care into excellence and to provide an infrastructure that is excellent. It is only this government which would attack public institutions, which would underfund public education, which would squeeze and starve public education. It's only this government that doesn't understand that principle of equity that underlies our progressive tax system.

MR. CLEGG: That's just garbage.

MR. SAPERS: I hear the hon. Member for Dunvegan say that that is garbage. If he would like to take to his feet and enter into debate exactly what is wrong with that, I'm sure his constituents would love to hear it, his constituents in Dunvegan, the men and women that farm there that I've had the privilege of getting to know. I would love to hear him explain to them why it's garbage to be arguing for fairness in taxation policy. Maybe that Member for Dunvegan will stand and at some point, instead of just yelling things across the floor, he'll enter the debate in the way that an honourable member would.

Madam Speaker, the 11 percent rate has already been proven to be grossly unfair. Many tax filers will have to pay more as a result of this rate. The Provincial Treasurer says: "Trust us. It's the feds; they undermined us. They did it on purpose." Talk about paranoia. 9:20

He says, "Trust us; we'll get it right next time." Well, Madam Speaker, we're in the middle of a debate on Bill 11, probably one of the most contentious bills that this Legislature has dealt with. This government spent years preparing that legislation. They spent millions of dollars trying to sell it. They've had focus groups, they've done polls, they've hired outside consultants, and they brought in lawyers. Then they brought in their bill, and they still got it wrong. They brought in 14 amendments. This government says: just trust us; we'll get it right next time. If they can't get it right on that, why should we trust them to get it right on anything?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, we are dealing with an amendment to Bill 18.

MR. SAPERS: I thought I was.

So what we're dealing with is a Provincial Treasurer that says: "Look, don't read the black and white of the bill. Ignore the text of the bill. We really will get the rate right. We really will." Now, if it goes down to 10.5 percent, it's still going to cost middle-income taxpayers more. If it goes down to 10 percent, it's still going to cost middle-income taxpayers more. In fact, if the federal government carries through on its plan – and I will encourage them to do so – up until the year 2004 most taxpayers in Alberta will continue to pay more even if they drop the rate down to 10 percent. If the federal government is able to get more aggressive on tax relief – and they've already outstripped this government in terms of tax relief – then they're going to have to keep on monkeying around with the rate year after year, and we're still going to see a lag. Taxpayers in this province are still going to take it on the chin and in the pocketbook. They're never going to get it right.

The easiest thing for them to do is to follow the lead of the federal government, that has been aggressive on tax reform, and to flow through every penny of those tax benefits by staying linked at least for the time being. Let's make sure we get the maximum benefit of those federal tax reforms.

Now, the Provincial Treasurer says: what about bracket creep? Well, he ought to know all about bracket creep. His government has raked in millions of dollars in bracket creep, all the while pointing the finger elsewhere about people who tax too much. Now, the federal government has figured out a way to get rid of bracket creep. They simply indexed it. They indexed the brackets. You no longer have to worry about bracket creep. This Provincial Treasurer doesn't seem to understand that you can index it, and then you don't have bracket creep. You don't have to go to a single-rate tax.

You know, the single-rate tax was the creation and the baby of the former Provincial Treasurer, who's now out seeking greener pastures someplace else. Now, that Provincial Treasurer had his own reasons for bringing in that rate. He'll say it's because he thinks it's for the good of all the people of Alberta, and I will say that maybe he thought it was for the good of him, but that's an argument we can have in another place at another time. But he brought in that rate.

Now, I would say to this Acting Provincial Treasurer that he doesn't have to babysit. He doesn't have to look after that baby. He can recognize the fact that it was wrong-minded to do it. He can do just like the Republicans have done in the United States and what the other right-wingers have done around the world: abandon this notion of trying to find the magic to make a single rate fair to everybody, go back to the principle of equity, maintain the progressive system, and take full advantage of the flow-through of the federal rates. Then maybe we could have some all-party support, and we can get on with the job of maintaining an equitable and fair tax system for Alberta, not this piecemeal, incremental kind of tax reform where little carrots are dangled from time to time suspiciously close to elections and not this notion of just ideology that a flat rate must be best because it's simple. You know what they say about complex problems and simple solutions.

This government is making a habit out of lazy thinking and trying to find simple solutions to complex problems. Well, that's not the way it works, and if the government was at least consistent, they would recognize that this is where hard work would pay off. Tax policy is not simple. The answers to the problems cannot be found in simply pulling a number out of the air, applying it across the board, then closing your eyes and crossing your fingers. That's not the way it works.

Now, according to analyses that have been done by individuals who are far smarter than I and far more experienced than I when it comes to tax policy – let's take a look at what the 11 percent rate would do and why again we have to support this reasoned amendment.

The breakpoints – and for those who are not familiar with that term, a breakpoint is the point at which a new tax rate will equal an existing tax rate. In this case the breakpoint for the 11 percent tax rate, where it equals the existing 44 percent rate on federal tax, those breakpoints at the low end of the spectrum are $18,425, and at the high end of the spectrum, $68,400. Everyone in between those breakpoints, in other words everybody that earns more than $18,425 but less than $68,400 – and I think that would describe, if not most, at least many of our constituents – they would be better off, according to tax experts, with the existing tax system. In other words, even if you just left the rate alone and flowed through the benefits of the federal tax reform, they would be better off.

Now, imagine how increasingly better off they would be if you took the responsible approach, if you took the informed approach, dealt with bracket creep through indexation, and then lowered the rate at which you collect the tax; in other words, lowered the proportion of provincial tax payable as a rate of federal tax. All of those taxpayers, who would be better off even if you just left it alone, would be even better served.

I listened to the Acting Provincial Treasurer, and there is no justification for proceeding with this bill at this time. It doesn't meet any of the fundamental tests. It may have been a politically expedient idea. It may have served the purposes of the former Provincial Treasurer. It may have made for some good headlines right after the budget, but upon careful analysis and careful reflection, it just doesn't hold water.

I would suggest that the government, in order to save itself from embarrassment, in order to prevent itself from having to come back into this Assembly time and time and time again and admit that it was wrong with this bill and keep on tinkering with the rate – in order to save them from all of that, I would hope that all members in a bipartisan way will support this reasoned amendment. Then we can get back to the business of looking at the Tax Review Committee, waiting for the government committee that's looking at corporate and business taxes to report, and we can get back to ensuring that Alberta has a fair and competitive tax regime. We can get away from this chest pounding that the Premier and his colleagues in cabinet want to get into to say: you know, we have the lowest taxes. I see that Ontario just did something with their taxes. You know, it's like little boys in the sandbox. Now we're going to get into this Premier saying: well, no; ours are really lower than yours.

You know, that is not the kind of stable business environment that Albertans and Alberta businesses want. What they want is a predictable tax environment. They don't want to see all of this politicking around taxes. What they want is fairness, because business knows that that's how business grows: in a fair and stable environment. They know that that's what their employees want, what their investors want, what their customers want.

I would argue very strongly for the Conservative members of this Assembly to put aside their partisan interests, listen to the arguments, listen to their constituents, listen to what the experts have said about this bill, forget about all the things that are going on in that other party's national leadership race, put aside all of that and just focus on these issues at this time and vote according to what would be best for Alberta taxpayers. I think that when they do that, when they make that reasonable assessment, they will come to the conclusion that Bill 18 is flawed, that this 11 percent flat rate is unfair, and that we really should get beyond this notion of trying to impose this arbitrary, simple solution, which just doesn't fit.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to stand and speak to the amendment to Bill 18. First I have to look at the amendment itself. Typically an amendment in second reading is somewhat unusual. It's usually a procedural ploy that is used by oppositions to delay the passage of legislation. We've seen that not only in this bill, but we saw it in Bill 11, and I guess we'll see it some more if more come up.

It's kind of interesting, I think, when you look at the history of why we have Bill 18 in front of us at the moment. I went back into my files to try and find – I couldn't believe this. Way back in February 1997 is when the hon. Member from Cardston-Taber-Warner joined the Tax Review Committee, and then shortly thereafter I was asked to join the Tax Review Committee. That's in 1997. January of 1998 is when the Tax Review Committee of this province delivered the report and made the recommendation for the bill that we have in front of us today.

So we have to remember that back on January 26 of 1998 the tax situation in this country was nowhere on the radar map, but as a result of the Tax Review Committee's report in this province, the whole country woke up to the fact that we as Canadians were being overtaxed and that bracket creep kept continually eroding and eroding our take-home pay.

I can remember personally that as a young individual trying to raise a family, the only way I could get ahead was to work overtime, but the harder I worked, the less I took home. So we have here a situation where the people across the way are telling us, you know, that we should love that, we should be happy to pay more tax.

I think what we have to do is compare the philosophy of those across the way who want to have a progressive tax system. They're telling us that the tax system that we're proposing in this bill is regressive. They want a progressive tax system. What a progressive tax system does is social engineering on the input side, because it taxes people at different rates. It discourages success. I know that I certainly was not encouraged by having to work a bunch of overtime and then taking home less and less and less. So they want to do their social engineering on the input side. That's what progressive taxation's all about.

Well, I think that this government has shown that social programs need to be done on the output side, not on the input side, and that's what a flat tax does. What is more fair than everyone paying the same rate of tax? And they're talking to us about fairness?

I think you have to take those things into account and remember that this was back in 1998. In 1998 the debate wasn't about taxation in this country, but it certainly has turned to taxation in this country since this government took the lead, as it has in many other ways.

I remember a presentation from a housewife in Calgary, as a matter of fact. I'm not sure if it was the first presentation that she ever made in her life, but she was there asking: why does the tax system punish single-income families? Why does the tax system punish single-income families? A two-income family pays less than a single-income family earning the same amount. You know, that lady made a huge impact on the committee that sat and listened back in 1997. Today we have the result. We have the result that is equalizing the personal exemptions, the $11,620 per person, which takes away the discrimination that the tax system had against single-family incomes.

You know, if a family wants to have the mother stay at home and raise the children, why should they be penalized by the tax system? In this province, we've done something about that. We've changed it, we've fixed it, and it's no longer a penalty.

I don't understand the arguments that some people make with respect to who pays for what. Well, it seems to me, Madam Speaker, that the top 10 percent of the earners pretty much pay for everything. Like, who supports our charities? Who supports our arts programs? Who buys the opera tickets and the symphony tickets? Who are those people? The people across the way would want us to tax them more. They're already paying more than their share, and I think they very much deserve a break.

So, Madam Speaker, at this point I would just simply move that we adjourn debate on Bill 18.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 23
Apprenticeship and Industry Training
Amendment Act, 2000

[Debate adjourned May 2: Mr. Gibbons speaking]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. A couple of comments with respect to Bill 23, the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Amendment Act, 2000. Firstly, let me start off on a positive note by acknowledging what I think has been very broad and very positive consultation that has been undertaken by the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board and by advanced education and career development, as it then was.

I can say that all of the information I have is that in fact this has actually been a far-reaching consultation, and the government deserves credit. The government deserves credit, Madam Speaker, for the consultation they've undertaken. I think the government also deserves credit for putting together in Bill 23 a series of positive changes that reflect what industry has identified and required. So there are some very positive elements in Bill 23.

Now, I've had a chance to go through the original act, and it's actually some 39 pages in length. There's a lot of material in it. Although the minister of intergovernmental affairs, I think, who introduced this bill, talked about the consultation, talked about this being something that's responsive to industry requirements and something that people in the respective sectors wanted, I wanted to test that with a couple of specific questions. I'd take the minister and anyone else who's interested, Madam Speaker, to some of the questions I've got.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I look for example at section 3(c). We have provision there for adding a whole range of new things. These have to do with functions of the board. Now, that's an essential part. Maybe if the minister has answers to these questions – she seemed well versed in the issue when she presented it this afternoon – she could just fire over a note with the answers, and we can save some time. If she looks at page 3 of the bill, we have a provision there that the Regulations Act – this is the new proposed section (3).

The Regulations Act does not apply

- (a) in respect of any documentation prepared by or on behalf of the Board relating to the carrying out of any functions under this section, or
- (b) to orders . . . under subsection (2).

Now, what we find in subsection (2) is “the establishment of standards or requirements.” This is “criteria or requirements for the granting and recognition of trade certificates,” the “establishment of standards or requirements.” These are not one-off things. These are not transitory things. These are standards. One would think, Mr. Speaker – would you not? – that a standard should be able to achieve as much notoriety as possible. It should be quickly referenced and readily referenced by apprentices and by employers and by people in a particular industry who wanted to know what those standards were. But what's interesting here is that in the proposed section 3 the Regulations Act does not apply.

Now, Mr. Speaker, members may be saying: so why would the Regulations Act not apply? The Regulations Act is not a very long statute. It's only about six pages long. Section 2 has to do with filing the regulation with a registrar. So one might ask: why would it be that if we are going to have standards set in one of these areas that are identified on pages 2 and 3, we not be prepared to have that filed with the registrar? Is there a good reason for that?

The Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations didn't share with us what the reason would be that those regulations wouldn't be subject to the Regulations Act. Why is it that in this long list – and what have we got here? Probably about 20 kinds of orders the board would make. Why wouldn't we make sure that that was as publicly available to anybody who's interested in finding that?

I'm going through the Regulations Act. What it requires is pretty minimal. You file it with the registrar. It's published in the Alberta Gazette. Now, there are not a lot of people that read the Alberta Gazette, but at least anybody who's interested in information knows that's the place you can go to find these things. There are wonderful librarians. We have one of the finest public library systems anywhere in North American in this province, and whether it's the Marigold library or the Calgary public library, there are people who are trained. They're professionals, and they can assist people to find it very, very easily, very, very quickly.

But if it's not published, if it's not gazetted and it's not filed with the registrar, you know what happens, Mr. Speaker? That tradesperson or that apprentice or that employer now has to go on a where's Waldo sort of exercise to try and find out where this regulation is, where this order is. It's not filed in any public place, and it's not published in the Gazette.

Is it section 2 in the filing requirement that the government has a problem with? Is it section 3 of the Regulations Act, which has to do with the gazetting, or is it section 5 perhaps? Section 5 requires the registrar of regulations to file a monthly report. Can the minister of intergovernmental affairs can tell us which one of these causes the problem? Why is it that these would not apply in this case?

All you need are 20, Madam Minister. All you need are 20 members.

Now, that's about it. It seems to me that that should be a pretty straightforward matter for the government to explain, but that minister has not chosen to do it. While there is still a quorum here in the House, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask that question. I don't know what the answer is. I hope the minister of intergovernmental affairs will share with us that explanation because I don't know what it is. Maybe the MLA responsible for the regulations task force has an answer to it, and I'd be happy to accept an answer from that member as well. So I have that question.

Then I go on in the bill to section 8, which appears on page 6. We have the new proposed 13.1(1): "The Minister is responsible for the administration." Then we see subsection (2):

The Regulations Act does not apply in respect of any documentation prepared by or on behalf of the Minister relating to the carrying out of any functions under this section.

So I have to ask in respect of section 8: which element in the Regulations Act causes this government a problem? Is it section 2? Is it section 3? Is it section 5? Will the minister tell us that? Will any other member of the government stand up and tell us why you have to carve that out from under the Regulations Act?

And I go on. If members look at section 16 of this bill, on page 11, we're going to have a new subsection (6), and what does it say? Once again, "The Regulations Act does not apply in respect of any authorization." Now, why would that be, Mr. Speaker? Why would it be that the government would want to take these things and not make them as widely available as possible? Why do we want to closet them away?

At this point, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you of a problem I've experienced in terms of trying to access material. There are sort of three different kinds of subordinate legislation we run into. We've got the regular gazetted regulations under the Regulations Act, and any Albertan can find those that has access to the Internet. You can find those things, and you can find them readily. [interjection] Well, you normally can, Minister of Health and Wellness.

The second kind of subordinate lawmaking is a thing called ministerial regulations, and then the third one is ministerial orders. What happens if I as a citizen want to find those things? Now, maybe in the Department of Health and Wellness it works differently, but here's what you have to do. You have to phone up the minister's office and say that I'd like to see a regulation or a ministerial order. They say: "Well, it's not under the Regulations Act. We have that in our library." I say: "Fine. May I come over? Is that library open to the public?" "Oh, no, no. This is a ministerial library, a departmental library. It's only available to people who have the permission of the minister to access it."

Now, I'm a tenacious guy, and I spend lots of time in Edmonton, so maybe I've got the time to do a little phoning around and show up in that minister's office and ask where that stuff is. But, you know, our job is not just to accommodate MLAs, who have to persevere. Our job is to accommodate individual Albertans who may want to find out something about the apprenticeship program and want to find out what those standards are. Why should you have to go through the hoop and hurdle and do this bureaucratic dance to find out what's in the regulation? All the government had to do was say: we make it subject to the Regulations Act, and anybody can access it through any public library really fast, really easily. Ideal. Now, the government has chosen not to do that, and my question is: why?

You go on and you look at section 17 of this bill, and what have we got there? We've got, lo and behold, on page 12:

The Regulations Act does not apply in respect of any order made or documentation prepared by or on behalf of the Executive Director relating to the making of an order under this section.

What's to be hidden here? Why not simply gazette it so that people can access it and it's in some standard place? I think it's preposterous that any Albertan who wants to find out what the regulations are, what the standards are with respect to an apprenticeship program, has sort of got to go on bended knee and beg his or her way into a department library and hope that there's some librarian in the department of health – oh, I don't mean to pick on the Department of Health and Wellness – in any department so that they can access it. This is not accessibility. This is not empowering individual citizens to get this material, and it's not good enough.

Then we go to section 23 of this bill. It has to do with regulations again. It's also part of section 20, which makes a further change here to the regulation provision, and it's not clear. It appears these may be subject to the Regulations Act. Here's what we're left with under Bill 23. You have some standards which appear to be gazetted and filed with the registrar, but you've got a whole lot of other standards and things that are not gazetted, and you have to go on a bit of scavenger hunt to find those things. All I'm asking is: why? I don't profess to know very much about the administration of the apprenticeship program, so my question is: give me a reason why those things can't be done in gazetted regulations; give me a reason in terms of why these things have to be such a big secret. I'd be happy to see that.

Now, the other question I've got. If you look at a question-and-answer sheet that was produced entitled Proposed Changes, Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act, produced March 20 of 2000, just a little more than a month ago, there's a question there where they talk about what's going to be done by way of regulation, but it doesn't address this question of why these things have to be a secret. I just find that a curious thing. Now, I expect I have some colleagues that are going to be wanting to join debate on this in three minutes and 32 seconds, and I know that they're going to have an opportunity to further develop some of these themes.

If you were to look at page 6 of this background that's been produced – and I'm not tabling it because my understanding is it's already been tabled. If anybody wishes to see it, I've got a copy, and I'd be happy to have a page take one over. On page 6 of this background that accompanied the changes in the bill, we've got this question: will industry be consulted on proposed changes to the regulations? Now, it doesn't say whether those are the gazetted regulations under the Regulations Act or whether those are the ministerial regulations, which are going to be secreted away in a departmental library. We don't know that.

Here's the response from the government department: members of the industry advisory committees, key stakeholders, and the public will have an opportunity to review and comment on draft regulations later this year; we hope to complete a review of the regulations by December 2000. Great to have a consultation with stakeholders and people who have been involved, but what happens to the rest of us? You know, why are regulations made only in consultation with those people that government deigns to involve? What about the stakeholder who is not identified by the deputy minister as a stakeholder? What about somebody who's forgotten on the list?

Why wouldn't we publish the regulations, not just for the benefit of so-called stakeholders but publish them on the Internet? It's really easy to do. The government spends that $8 million. The Public Affairs Bureau produces some wonderful web sites. I'm very much in awe of the Department of Health and Wellness web site. Terrific. I question the accuracy of some of the information on there around Bill 11, but it's a good place to go to be able to find out information. It would be no trouble in the year 2000 to get the web master to put up the draft regulations. Then everybody who has access to a computer screen anywhere in the province . . . [interjections] I think I have some colleagues that are concerned that I may not be delivering the corporate message here. They may think I'm on a bit of a frolic on my own, Mr. Speaker, but I want you to know that I'm speaking to the things that have sort of attracted my attention on a bill that I think is of some concern.

Those are my questions. I guess I'm open to information from people in the gallery who know more about apprenticeship, from people in the Assembly, from anybody outside who reads Hansard. If they've got answers for any of those things, I hope they'll send me a fax or an e-mail so I will have answers to that. I hope we'll have answers to that before we have to vote on Bill 23.

I want to thank my colleague for Edmonton-Gold Bar for what I thought was a really excellent analysis he did of the bill the other afternoon. It was helpful to me, and I'd commend that to all members who are trying to figure out whether they should support this bill or not. In the moment I have left, I'd say to the government: here's an opportunity. This could be a win/win bill. You can pass some changes that industry wants and the people affected want, but you can also signal that government is a lot more than just talking to a few selected stakeholders. Whether it's Bill 11, where you take your advice from the appointed regional health authorities – it's sort of akin to drinking your own bathwater – or whether you take a broader consultation to involve Albertans, that's really what we want to hear. It's the same principle, I think, in terms of both bills, and I think we can do so much better.

My inclination when I pick this bill up is to support it, but I could do that with an awful lot more enthusiasm and I could remove that sort of giggling doubt I have if I can get answers to those specific questions I've got.

Those are the questions I've got, and I'm looking forward to other analysis of Bill 23. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: May the Assembly grant consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two concerned citizens who have been outside the last couple of nights concerned about Bill 11 and are here tonight to hear the debate on it. One is from the constituency of St. Albert and has expressed her concerns to her MLA. Her name is Diane Gorman, and the other is a woman from Edmonton-Manning, and her name is Trudy Grebenstein. I believe they're in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Apprenticeship and Industry Training

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: On Bill 23, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise this evening to address Bill 23, the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Amendment Act, 2000. I listened very carefully to the comments that were made by my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo, as well I have looked at the Blues of the remarks that were made by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar as well as the Member for Edmonton-Centre and have also looked at the document that was put out by the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board, the questions-and-answers document. In putting together the speeches and some of the comments that have been made, it is a fact that there has been a fair amount of consultation with regards to the proposed amendments to this particular bill, and there are several recommendations that have been made that will improve the apprenticeship and industry training system for employers, employees, and apprentices.

There are still some outstanding questions as to whether the proposed amendments are in fact comprehensive enough or whether in fact there are outstanding concerns still around certain sections of the bill. In particular I understand that there are starting to be expressed some concerns by some of the trades with regards to sections 16 and 17 of the bill, that would amend sections 23 and 24 of the act.

I have had the experience in the past to work with the Member for Medicine Hat with regards to the Health Professions Act, which looked at putting together changes to a large number of bills and putting together a consensus around a long process that had occurred with regards to the consultation around that particular act. I think there are parallels between what happened with the Health Professions Act and what we are perhaps seeing right now with Bill 23, the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Amendment Act.

The reality, Mr. Speaker, is that when the consultation occurs with different groups and that consultation is synthesized and then put forward into legislation, sometimes some things are missed out, and in fact when I think back again to the Health Professions Act, we had some difficulties that arose out of the drafting of the legislation with regards to what the impact would be on firefighters throughout the province. That impact was unintentional, yet the wording in the legislation made it a potential for there to be huge costs to the cities of Edmonton, Calgary, Lethbridge, I believe, and some of the other cities that have firefighters on staff. There were also potential effects on the individuals who do the lifesaving on ski hills, the ski patrol, and that was also an unintentional effect of the drafting of the legislation.

So here we have something very similar in Bill 23, I believe, where it seems that in the majority the bill has addressed some of the concerns that have been developed and brought forward over a period of four years, yet there is still some fine-tuning that is required to occur. I would hope that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar will have the opportunity to work with the Minister of Learning to work out what some of the glitches are within the act, as addressed by some of the trades at this point in time, to make this piece of legislation reflect exactly what the consultations were that have taken place over a long period of time, because it would be a shame if in fact after four years of work on a particular bill there are some things that are not quite right.

Unfortunately we sometimes see, in the haste of this government to push through legislation, that we have to retroactively go back, whether it's in the fall session or the next year, to amend legislation that could have been amended when it was first introduced. That is, I think, something that needs to be looked at very, very closely.

Specifically where the concerns are is the fear that competency based training will find its way into the apprenticeship trades.

Again, my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar had addressed that issue in looking at the differences between the different kinds of trades, in that there are designated trades and there are occupations, and that there is sometimes optional certification of trades and there is sometimes compulsory certification of trades. In fact, when you look at section 22.1, which follows after section 22, what may well occur is that there are going to be exemptions to the compulsory certification of tradespersons, so that is a huge, huge issue.

If you go on a little bit further to section 23, the question was brought up by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar as to what is going to happen with apprenticeship programs in regards to technical programs and standards, the documentation of the program or the examination.

Now, again to go back specifically to the concerns of at least one of the trades that will be involved, what is indicated is that there's a fear that competency based training will find its way into the apprenticeship trades. While there are some positives to competency training, it can, through abuse, lead to the breaking down of high standards that exist at present.

This is actually a quote from a letter, as well as that "some form of qualifier, for example, written in the Act or in the Regulations that Level Three does not do Level Four work" is required. In other words, what's needed is "protection of some sort that protects the Journeyman."

So this is a very, very key concern that I'm sure can be addressed quite easily if there is a will to do so. I would hope that within the time available before the Assembly recesses for the summer break, there will be the ability to fix that particular concern within Bill 23 or to hold it over until the fall session so that in fact it can be as good a piece of legislation as it should be after four years of consultation.

Now, some of the questions that I have and that don't seem to be addressed within the bill itself – at least they seem to be still outstanding, from the document put out by the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board on March 20, 2000 – are with regards to the fact that there is some concern around the apprentice wage percentages and that these wage percentages may pose a problem for certain sectors of industry because of the way people are employed. There is a suggestion that the board will ask the appropriate provincial apprenticeship committee to examine the need to regulate apprentice wage percentages in their particular trade. I'm wondering if there was any attempt to address how long that process would take, because if in fact there is some kind of disparity in terms of those wage percentages, people should not have to wait three years for that to be addressed. In fact, there should be some kind of finite time when this issue is addressed.

Another key issue is around the journeyman/apprentice ratios, which are suggested to remain in regulations, and that the norm of one journeyman to one apprentice, as has been suggested through the consultation process by the various groups, may not guarantee suitable supervision and training of apprentices. There's an indication that the board will explore other ways of ensuring the quality of training, and I wonder whether that is in fact a strong enough promise, as it were, to the stakeholders involved and whether or not there should be something outlined as to what those other ways are of ensuring the quality of training.

There are some issues as well that were pointed out with regards to looking at the changes. I had mentioned that one of them could be made to provide for a competency based certification program in designated occupations – and that is still remaining as a key concern – and that there are changes that could be made to allow the board to address and implement solutions to the various problems being experienced with the description of some trades. So it would appear that in fact that has not occurred in the act and that the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board is still requesting that that occur.

Also, another change that could be made to the act is to strengthen the operation of industry advisory committees. Without sitting at the table with the stakeholders involved, it would be difficult for me to say whether or not these are key changes that should be addressed prior to the passage of the bill. However, it would be useful information for the Official Opposition to find out from the sponsor of the bill, the Minister of Learning, whether or not these in fact have been or will be addressed or what the training board has indicated with regards to these potentially not being addressed in the bill.

The other types of issues that have come forward are in terms of information. One of the questions is: how would apprentices and employers get program and process information? When I was labour critic for the Official Opposition, the issue of apprenticeship and the nonsupport, in a sense, at that time of some of the apprenticeship programs was a very large issue within the labour community.

One of the ideas that was put forward often by the labour groups was to bring programs and program information into high schools so that students who were making their career choices would be able to make a career choice that potentially would guide them into some of the apprenticeships and some of the trades. I don't see that that has been at all addressed in this particular question. Granted, that's not perhaps what it was geared towards, but I would like to see some recognition of the fact that there needs to be more information provided to our youth to make decisions as to what path their life will take after high school, and this is one piece of information that I don't think is always provided even when they do their career days. There could be more focus put on that as well.

There are a number of other recommendations that have been put forward with regards to this particular piece of legislation, and I know the industry does hope that this legislation will be passed within the year 2000. Again, I think that is not an invalid hope. I think that is something that could well occur, but there are, as I indicated at the outset, some outstanding issues that I believe can be worked out and addressed in terms of where this legislation is going.

There is one other issue the Member for Calgary-Buffalo did talk to, and that's with regards to the use of the Regulations Act and why in fact there is a need to exempt some of these committees from the Regulations Act. There are a number of committees that are going to be established, I understand, under Bill 23. The question is whether these committees do in fact need to be established as separate entities. Who are the participants on the committees going to be? How will the decisions be made as to the choices of the individuals that are going to be appointed to these committees? Why can't the issues, I guess, work through the existing apprenticeship committees and within the existing structure?

There's a whole other stream of questions in terms of accountability. Who is the committee going to report to? What are the interfaces between the various committees that are now being formed? What is the reporting mechanism? Are these going to be open meetings or not? In fact, again when I reflect back to the Health Professions Act, it's very clear as to how individuals were appointed to the boards of the various professions, what the composition of those boards was going to be, what the reporting mechanisms are, whether or not they're going to be held in public. That's laid out in that particular piece of legislation, so the question again is: why is this piece of legislation so different? What makes the requirements of the apprenticeship and industry training sector so very different from what is happening in other sectors in this province?

The Regulations Act, by not having the act applied to any of the documentation prepared by or on behalf of the minister relating to the carrying out of the functions of the act, is also of concern, because in fact a lot of that can be done in secrecy. We know that very often this government does a lot of its business behind closed doors, either through orders in council or through regulations. What we need to ensure is that unless there is some very good reason for any decisions to be made in secrecy, those decisions be made openly and that there's accountability built into this whole process.

So those are some of the comments I have with regards to this particular bill. I would very much appreciate having some of those concerns answered in order to make a decision as to whether or not this bill is supportable in its current form. As indicated, it seems that a lot of the concerns of the industry and the other stakeholders have been addressed, but there still remain some that have not. Again, after four years of consultation I find it hard to believe that those concerns were not brought up, but what I think may have happened is that some of the more particular aspects of a bill that is technical were not well understood so that the drafting in fact has managed to do what the consensus did not indicate should be done.

With those remarks, I will take my place, and hopefully we'll have some answers to those questions coming in the near future. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I look at Bill 23, the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Amendment Act, it brings to mind several things and how very important good legislation is in this case. I think of standards when we have people building our homes, people doing work in our homes, and our place of work. I think I came to appreciate the trades a great deal when we built our home over eight years ago. I would see different skilled people working. I had no idea how much work and how much skill it took to put a home together. I gained a great deal of respect for those people who work very hard and are very proud of the job they do. In that, I also came to realize that those skills aren't just something you get out of a Reader's Digest book.

In fact, as an example, we once bought an extra stove to put in our basement. You know, with the mega family do's I could have an extra stove in the basement. My husband grabbed the Reader's Digest electrician book. [interjection] Yes, it's a Raymond story. Sure enough, he connected it, and it worked. I was so happy. It worked. The stove in the basement worked. But you know what? The stove upstairs did not. So as I cooked, I was getting into better shape as I went up and down the stairs. But we finally called an electrician, and lo and behold both stoves worked safely.

From that time on, we've agreed that we must do what we do well and call in those to do what we don't do well. So there's just a simple example from home where you can appreciate that people need to be qualified and need to have standards, and those people themselves feel it's very important that that is implemented for them.

Now, from my understanding of this bill there's been quite a bit of consultation, and that's good. I commend the minister and his work on that, but I also know that there are still some outstanding concerns. One of them has to do with section 23 and section 24, and there is a concern expressed that competency-based training will find its way into the apprenticeship trades.

Of course, it's good that we have competency training, but we have to watch that it doesn't lead to the breaking down of high standards that exist at present. "Some form of qualifier, for example" – and I'm sure most of us have this letter that was sent to us – should be "written in the Act or in the Regulations that Level Three does not do Level Four work." It's the whole issue of de-skilling. I think we have to be very cautious that our legislation does not allow that to happen and that it safeguards that you are qualified to do the job you do.

The other thing that I have seen concern expressed about is proper inspections of those who do the work within the trades and in the training, that they are properly supervised. I think the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar gave a very good example of what happened at Swan Hills. Regrettably, the way things are now, we may never find out what happened there because of some court order to keep things under wraps for a certain length of time. So we don't know what happened there, and I would hope another fiasco like that does not happen until we find out what went wrong and take steps to improve it. I would say that would be one thing this government would want, to find the answers and to make sure they are improved from there.

[Mr. Herard in the chair]

Another section of concern that was expressed was section 15, where exceptions about compulsory certification of a trade . . .

MS BLAKEMAN: What kind of exceptions?

MRS. SOETAERT: Well, it seems that the minister may make regulations permitting a person who is not otherwise permitted under section 21 to work in that trade to carry out work or perform tasks, activities and functions in respect of one or more specific undertakings or a portion of those undertakings that come within the trade, and for that purpose may . . .

and then it goes for (a), (b), (c), and (d).

Now, I would think that once again we're giving the minister some responsibility he may not want or may not have the expertise to administer. That's nothing personal against the minister. I'm saying a generic minister. A generic minister wouldn't want that responsibility. There's no such thing as a generic minister. I know. But we'll move on.

AN HON. MEMBER: There are junior ministers.

MRS. SOETAERT: There are junior ministers.

I would like to continue with the concerns about the exceptions to the compulsory. One described here, which the minister would have control over the regulation of, would be to

- (a) prescribe the tasks, activities, and functions that a person may perform in respect of those undertakings;
- (b) prescribe or otherwise establish the qualifications or training that a person must have to carry out work or to perform tasks, activities and functions under this section;
- (c) prescribe any terms or conditions that a person is subject to with respect to carrying out any work or performing any tasks, activities or functions permitted under this section;
- (d) provide for any matter that the Board considers to be related, incidental or ancillary to permitting a person to carry out any work or to perform any tasks, activities or functions under this section.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have some concerns that there are regulations that aren't clarified or that are lumped under the Regulations Act, where we're not quite sure where they're going to be accessible. That has to be very, very clear. You know, anybody should be able to access those regulations, not just people within the trades. Certainly they should be able to access it, but certainly anyone out of interest should. It may come just by chance in your life that suddenly you are building a home. You are involved maybe just on a committee that may be doing renovations to a school. I've seen that happen.

In fact, at Woodhaven school out in my riding – and it was a good move on the board's part, a very good move – they involved parents and businesspeople, builders and students to look at what changes would make that school the very best. They learned a great deal about what it takes. You know, you just can't add a wall here and cut down a wall there. They worked with the tradespeople, with the architect, and I would say that that's one of the most successful projects in a renovated school in Alberta. I know the Minister of Infrastructure was at the grand opening of that new wing, as I was. It was a great event because so many people got involved and learned about what it takes to build something that would accommodate so many people in so many different ways.

So that's an example of how every one of us should care about the qualifications, the standards of the apprenticeship and industry programs and the supervision of them and the evaluation of them. Definitely I think that the people who most want this are the people in the trades themselves. They take great pride in their work and they want those standards. They want to be safe. They want the bridges that they build to be safe, and they want to be proud of them. So they expect that those standards will be set by this government through legislation and implemented and supervised on those standards of safety and accountability, the ability to be inspected and to do quality work that they are proud of.

As you know, I used to teach. I was in a wonderful composite school that had many students geared towards apprenticeship and the trades. They loved the welding class. In fact, they built a horse trailer once and all kinds of things. I don't know why they didn't like my English class as much as their welding class. I tried to make it as interesting as possible. The reality is that the students were very, very talented at other things.

I think we all have to recognize the diversity of our wonderful province and all that these young people are looking at. They're going into these trades, and they have to know that there are expectations of them. People in the trades want to say: "I'll show you how. This is what you have to pass, and this is what to do, and these are the standards we proudly meet."

I would say that this piece of legislation has to do that. It has to ensure that there are standards. It has to ensure that inspections will be properly done, that regulations are available, open to everyone so that everyone knows what they are and people can follow them.

Mr. Speaker, I'm glad this bill is before us. I know my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar has expressed some concerns, and maybe we'll get those answers, maybe in second reading, maybe in Committee of the Whole. Maybe he and the minister will have a chat and some of it will be explained. I look forward to further debate on this. I'm glad the bill is here. I'm not a hundred percent comfortable with it for the reasons I've indicated, especially sections 23 and 24 and also section 15.

Those are the things I am hoping a good piece of legislation will bring forward. I know that the people in apprenticeship programs and training programs and in the trades want this to be a real solid piece of legislation. I think if we work at that, it could be that.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 23 at second reading.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the side effects of a healthy and robust economy is often at least a temporary shortage of skilled labour, and we're experiencing that in this province right now. There are probably lots of reasons. The training programs, the ability of the government to forecast, the reduction in funding for postsecondary training, some uncertainty in terms of other conditions have probably all conspired somewhat to lead to this shortage.

What we've come down to now is where many of the megaprojects, whether it be the plant at Joffre or the pipeline projects, whether it be any of the oil sands projects or even just keeping pace with the commercial, industrial, and residential building boom that's taking place in some centres – many of these projects and initiatives are competing for the same relatively small pool of skilled workers. So there has been a lot of pressure on the apprenticeship board. There's been a lot of pressure to get more people into the workforce more quickly. I'm all in favour of more qualified, competent men and women getting high-paying, skilled jobs as quickly as possible. I think that would be a good thing. I think it would be a net benefit in general. I think it would serve the public good, and of course it would serve a very personal purpose, a very personal good for those men and women who gain the employment based on their skills and their abilities.

I'm a little bit concerned because of this coming together of all of these forces, which has led to a shortage, to a squeeze when it comes to many skilled workers, that mechanisms are being put in place that are going to be at least potentially compromising confidence and therefore confidence in this workforce just in order to meet some market demand. I think that would be a very short-term solution. I don't think that would serve us well in the long run.

I've had a chance to review Bill 23 and have engaged in some discussion, limited discussion, admittedly, with representatives of unions whose members are these skilled workers as well as with employers who depend on these tradespeople to help them get on with their job, and they share some of these same concerns. While they are clamouring for more workers and while the workers themselves are looking forward to greater remuneration, more job security, enhanced benefits because they're more in demand, they all agree on one thing. They all agree that it doesn't make sense to rush into law a series of reforms that will weaken what has really been something that's very strong in Alberta, and that is a very well trained, well supervised, well prepared, competent, skilled, technical workforce. Both employers and employee groups that I've spoken with don't want to do anything that would diminish this standing that the Alberta workforce has.

Now, I think that in at least two areas Bill 23 has the potential of eroding this high standard. My colleagues have talked a little bit about that in their remarks. I don't want to repeat their comments, but I do want to reinforce a couple of things. This whole question of competency-based training versus apprenticeship screening and training is something that I've thought about from time to time.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, you may not be aware, but for a short period of time – I think it was a period of about eight years – I was on faculty at Grant MacEwan College in the correctional services program, and one of the things we did in that program was gear the course towards instructing and then examining against core competencies. These were competencies that were identified by potential employers. The way the curriculum design and the instruction plan went is that we would go through a relatively rigorous process of meeting with potential employer groups and getting input from them as to what competencies they'd be looking for in potential employees. Then we would develop curriculum and instructional technique that was geared towards ensuring that the men and women, the students, who graduated from the program had these competencies. The diploma, of course, would be the formal certification that they had these competencies.

While I think that process was well served and many of those individuals found their way into employment, with the provincial government for example, those competencies are very different from the kind of competency training or development that comes from the sort of on-the-job experience. While I'm not going to diminish for a minute the fact that you can pick up many things on the job, and in fact I would say that every person that got elected to this Legislature had to pick up how to do the business of being an MLA on the job – I don't think any of us went to MLA school. I'm not going to diminish for a moment the notion that you can learn by doing while you're doing it, but I will say that there is a huge difference between that and putting somebody into a position where they're going to be called upon to do very precise, very skilled, very technical work and then allowing that to happen just based on the good or bad habits that they may pick up on the job. I think employee safety, colleague safety, public safety demand that in many areas we expect a higher level. We would expect a higher test than this competency that may or may not come.

We all have different capacities to learn, Mr. Speaker. You know what they say about old dogs and new tricks. So it's simply not enough to say that we can run the risk of this competency-based certification without paying close attention to its potential for lowering standards or at least compromising standards.

You know, there is an example given in some of the documentation I've seen of boom truck operators. Maybe they don't need to be certified in the same way, don't need to go through the same training. Maybe utility companies could hire people who gain on-the-job experience, and they can go up in those cherry pickers or in those boom trucks and do the work that they do and it would be safe and it would be okay.

You know, we've just had the National Day of Mourning for workers, and I know when I read the newspapers and I listen to the headlines and the electronic media, it seems that not too much time goes by between reports of people who have lost life because of interference with overhead wires and these boom trucks or people just weren't really all that well trained and well versed in the equipment and the tolerances of that equipment. Unfortunately, that lack of experience and that lack of knowledge resulted in a tragedy.

So I wouldn't want to do anything in law that would in any way accelerate or magnify that potential, no matter how small it may be. I want to pay particularly close attention to the caution that's been raised about competency-based certification or training sort of creeping into the apprenticeship regime as it's applied to our technical trades in this province.

This whole notion is not unrelated to the other major concern that I have. That concern is the one about the exemption from the Regulations Act. The bill before us would exempt many things from the Regulations Act. This means that what's exempted is not published. It's not known in the same way. It's not in the Alberta Gazette. So if you have regulations about training, what the bill would now do is rely on industry to publish these things in trade publications, in industry manuals, which may be okay most of the time, but it certainly isn't okay in a changing environment.

It would seem to me that when we're dealing with individuals, particularly individuals who may seek certification in more than one trade, we would want them to be able to go to one place. We would want them to be able to quickly know what it is that's expected of them. We would want the public to quickly be able to go to one place and see what the standards are and not have to have the intimate knowledge of the workings of a particular industry or trade to know where to go to ask for what kind of manual or trade publication. So I really don't see the justification or the rationale for exempting so much of this key critical information from being published in the way that it's being published today.

You know, I'd like to find ways to streamline the process. I'd like to find ways to clean it up. I'd like to find ways to modernize the process. I'd like to ensure that there's not a lot of red tape and there's not a lot of bureaucracy but not at the expense of the skill set and not at the expense of public awareness and public safety.

I guess my fear, if I get right down to it, is that there is this link between this potential for the standards to be lower, for somebody's notion of competency-based, on-the-job training to take the place of careful and methodical apprenticeship-based training and that that's why you want to remove the requirement for the regulations to be published. You see, if you don't have to have the regulations published so that they're there in black and white for everybody to see, the regulations can be a little bit more flexible or in flux or a little less knowable, and then it's easier to go with the flow and maybe sort of get away with some things that otherwise you couldn't because the regulations themselves present a challenge. They present a measure, and sometimes that measure might be a disincentive if what you were trying to do was rush people to market perhaps before they really have the knowledge base that they require to do their job well and to do it safely.

So I do see this relationship between the issue of competency training and the move by the government. It's not unique in Bill 23. We've seen it in other places as well. Government reduces public accountability by leaving things either to order in council regulations or, even worse, by exempting things from the Regulations Act.

I want to go on record as saying that along with these comments, Mr. Speaker, I think that Alberta and Albertans are incredibly well served by the apprenticeship and industry training system that is in place in Alberta. I am not for a minute with my comments suggesting that there is some conspiracy or collusion here to somehow damage or weaken or undermine this industry training system. I'm just saying that the way the bill is written, given the current climate, given the economic pressures, given the track record of this government, the potential for these dangers is very real.

I haven't heard from government any soothing words. I haven't read in their press releases and I haven't seen in the bill itself anything that puts my mind at ease on these matters. So I would hope that as we see this bill move from this stage of debate into committee, the sponsor of the bill will take the opportunity to reply to these concerns and to do so with an open mind. These aren't just my concerns or the concerns of the Official Opposition. As I say, these are concerns that have been expressed by those men and women who are closest to the matter. If there are ways to improve the bill to address these concerns, I'd hope that the minister of course would be open to amendments. I want to say that for the most part I find that the bill is supportable, but I do have these concerns that I want addressed before the bill receives this member's vote.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 23, the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Amendment Act, 2000, at second reading and to make some comments about the principles that underlie the bill. I wanted to start off with some preliminary comments about the context under which the bill is being presented to the Legislature at this time.

I think it's widely recognized, the need for a competent and skilled workforce at this particular time. There are a number of areas, a number of trades that have really had the pressure on them in terms of needing more workers, more apprentices, more trainees. The government has actually done some specific funding through the access fund to try to accomplish it. There is expanded training in specific trades, including welders. There are expanded opportunities in the electrician field, heavy duty equipment technicians, machinists, millwrights, steamfitters and pipe fitters, bricklayers, roofers, plumbers, painters and decorators, floor covering installers, recreation vehicle service technicians, sheet metal workers, and partsmen trades across the province. That's part of the list of trades that are facing increased pressure to increase the number of tradespeople for the industries in the province that need those skilled technicians and workers.

This has been a constant problem for our province. When times are good, we have that pressure. There's a lot of construction, a lot of projects under way, the economy is growing. We've had this same kind of pressure in the past. I think Bill 23 is in part a good response to making sure that changes as a result of those pressures will be reasoned changes and will fit into an overall plan for apprenticeship and training in the province.

We're also seeing a change in the kind of technology. A number of the professions and a number of the trainee areas and a number of the trades areas are changing because of technology, because of new ways of doing things. The challenge, of course, is to make sure that existing workers have the skills needed to meet new requirements and that those being prepared currently will have the kinds of skills that are needed and that are current and contemporary and useful to them. So there's a change in technology that I think is affecting a wide number of the trades that we rely on in the province.

There are also a wide number of changes in the ways that training programs are being delivered to the kinds of traditional modes that we are used to, with the tradition of a journeyman being responsible for the work of an apprentice and that being a fairly stable relationship over a three-year period.

There's mobile delivery of training now. The boom truck operator program is being delivered in Grande Prairie, Bonnyville, Fort McMurray, and Brooks by NAIT, so instruction out of an institute in this city being delivered mobile in areas remote from this city. The bricklayer training is being delivered by SAIT. So here we have bricklayers in our city being trained by mobile instruction centered out of SAIT in Calgary, the communications and electrician programs delivered in Calgary again by NAIT, and the roofer program in Lethbridge delivered in Calgary by NAIT. The instruction has become much more mobile than it was in the past, when apprentices were tied to institutions or specific locations where instruction was being offered. Another mobile program is the tile setter. The first period is being delivered again in Edmonton by SAIT. So here we have our two largest technical institutes working in each other's home cities and in various smaller communities across the province.

Distance education, of course, has become a fact of life in almost all aspects of education. Our province has a long history through the correspondence school of delivering, I guess, very rudimentary distance education in Athabasca University. But now we have electricians being able to receive their training from NAIT through distance education programs. We have locksmiths being able to receive their programs from Red Deer College through distance education and welders at all periods being able to receive distance instruction by NAIT.

Even the apprenticeship programs, the way the blocks were traditionally broken up in terms of work and school, have been changed with weekly apprenticeship training available for cabinet-makers and carpenters at Lethbridge Community College; for cooks at SAIT and Lethbridge Community College; for machinists at NAIT; for partsmen at SAIT, NAIT, and Lethbridge Community College; and millwright and welders at NAIT. We have the delivery of that instruction now broken up in periods that differ quite differently from what was traditionally the pattern.

We've seen in the bill a movement to competency-based instruction. Again, the idea behind that is placing the importance on what the trainee knows rather than how the trainee came to that knowledge. So the notion of putting in fixed periods of instruction or experience before certification could be acquired has changed dramatically. The competency-based apprenticeship training is now a fact of life in the carpenter program at SAIT and the carpenter program at Lethbridge Community College; the electrician program at NAIT, Fairview, Lakeland, Lethbridge, and Red Deer colleges; the locksmith program at Red Deer College; and the welder program at Red Deer College, NAIT, and SAIT.

Those are fairly significant advances in terms of how training is delivered, and Bill 23 has in its principles tried to bring that kind of competency-based education or training into focus in that it makes it clearer the context under which that training will take place.

There are a variety of ways now of programs being delivered, so it makes the consideration of changes to the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act really very, very important. It is important that we scrutinize them carefully so that we can assure ourselves that standards that are held to be extremely important in terms of the trades are maintained, that the kinds of certificates that tradespeople acquire during their training are well respected and are certificates that both the public and industry can have great confidence in in terms of the ability of the recipients.

It's important that those standards be maintained, and I think that if there's been a concern raised about Bill 23, it's the concern with standards around competency-based instruction. Competency-based instruction, of course, has been around for a long time. In its early form in grade school and in high school it was seized upon as being a panacea, a way of being able to lay out exactly what a learner should know or understand, to be able to put in place a series of steps that learner would go through and that would ensure that competency was acquired.

Well, it didn't work out quite that simply, Mr. Speaker. One of the downsides of the early competency-based instruction was the fact that what is most easily defined and what is most easily laid out in terms of instruction are very simple tasks, so the competency-based instruction seemed to focus primarily on very simple tasks, and the more complex operations were in many cases abandoned.

That same issue has been raised by some of the trades in terms of this bill. They want to be assured that competency-based instruction and the kinds of standards, the kinds of skills and knowledge that trainees participating in those programs gain are indeed the kinds that are required by the trade and are of a quality that the trade would sanction and that industry and the general public, too, would have confidence in. So I think we may want to look back again and return to the competency-based component of this and really assure ourselves before we proceed with passing the bill that those fears are unfounded.

In concluding my comments, Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I didn't comment on the kind of extensive consultation that went into the proposals that we have before us. There was widespread involvement of employers and employees and apprentices and journeymen, and I think that consultation over the last number of years serves us well in the bill that we see before us. I'm sure that the kinds of reservations we have are ones that can be easily resolved as the bill proceeds through second reading. So with those comments I look forward to the clause-by-clause discussion of Bill 23 at committee stage.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 23.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

For the benefit of those in the gallery, this is the less formal side of the Legislative Assembly. Members are allowed to sit in various places and indeed may remove their jackets and hopefully will not make loud noises. Members are also allowed to bring juice or coffee in here and to move to other places, so you can see it is not as formal, and the Speaker moves from the chair to the table.

Health Care Protection Act

17. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that further consideration of any or all of the resolutions, clauses, sections, or titles of Bill 11, Health Care Protection Act, shall, when called, be the first business of the committee and shall not be further postponed.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:02 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

For the motion:

Boutilier	Herard	Nelson
Broda	Hierath	O'Neill
Cao	Hlady	Paszkowski
Clegg	Jacques	Pham
Doerksen	Jonson	Renner
Dunford	Klapstein	Severtson
Evans	Klein	Smith
Forsyth	Langevin	Stelmach
Friedel	Lougheed	Tarchuk
Fritz	Magnus	Taylor
Graham	Marz	West
Haley	McClellan	Woloshyn
Hancock	Melchin	Zwozdesky

Against the motion:

Blakeman	Leibovici	Pannu
Bonner	MacBeth	Sapers

Carlson	MacDonald	Sloan
Dickson	Massey	Soetaert
Gibbons	Olsen

Totals	For – 39	Against – 14
--------	----------	--------------

[Government Motion 17 carried]

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would seek unanimous consent of the House to suspend the operation of Rule 32(2) so that the division bells, if any, tonight in committee on Bill 11 would be such that the next vote would be the usual 10-minute division bell and every vote thereafter would be a one-minute division bell.

THE CHAIRMAN: The next vote will be a 10-minute standing vote if one is called. Any that's called after that will be one minute.

The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Chairman, it is a very black evening in this Legislature when this government decides to move closure on a piece of legislation. Probably nothing has more impact on the people of this province and on their sense of being Canadian and Albertan than their health care system. Here is a government which has failed to make a case for the privatization of health care, which they want to now ram through this Legislature, using all the abusive power they have with their majority, ignoring the people out there in our foyer and the people on the grounds of this Legislature who have come to watch this historic night. That vote that we just took, the vote to say that we oppose closure, the vote that every single member sitting in this Legislature for the government side stood up on, is going to be a major legacy for the defeat of this government in the future.

Mr. Chairman, on two occasions this evening I have been able to go out and walk through the crowd that is demonstrating peacefully on the grounds of our Legislature, the families that are there, the senior citizens, the couples, the kids on their bikes, the people who have walked over, the mothers with their strollers. Constituents, people in this province, people who have come, people who are gathering tonight in Calgary at the McDougall Centre, people who gathered in Ponoka this weekend to give a requiem for public health care in the constituency of Ponoka-Rimbey, people who gathered in Lethbridge last week who protested, people who held a public meeting who protested, people all over this province are wondering what has happened to this government, what has happened to the government that said not one word about the privatization for health care when they last sought a mandate in '97.

But you know what Albertans know, Mr. Chairman? They know that when this government goes to seek a mandate the next time, which will be within two years, it's going to be a very different story, for Albertans have lost trust in this government.

Today in the question period when I was able to ask the questions of course surrounding the subamendment, the questions about the whole fundamental purpose of this legislation, which is to provide for the regulation of overnight stays in the province – mind you, Mr. Chairman, the Premier and his government members have never explained why they need this legislation when in fact overnight stays are not allowed now. Why is the purpose of this legislation to control them when the control is obviously there? So the key is that this government simply wants to allow overnight stays, wants to allow private hospitals to get a foothold in this province. The people of this province know it, even if the government tries to ignore them.

Mr. Chairman, just to sum up the kind of work that has been done by people across Alberta, and we as an Official Opposition have tried to amplify the voice of concern of the people, let's look at the government's failure to build a case around why they need this bill. I raised the questions today. Interestingly, these questions would have been the subject of the amendments we would have been bringing forward had the government not brought in its closure motion and shut off any further discussion.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, where is the proof that it won't cost more? This is fundamental to this bill, fundamental to the subamendment we're discussing here tonight, fundamental to good fiscal management of the province. Well, guess what? The proof is, the case is, the evidence exists that this in fact will cost more. The government has ignored that and failed to bring forth any evidence that says it's going to do anything but cost more. A shameful display of a government that has lost touch with people and lost touch with the role it has been entrusted to do for governing.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, where is the proof that this bill won't lengthen waiting lists? Guess what? The proof is that in fact it will lengthen waiting lists, and this government hasn't shown one shred of evidence to allow . . . [interjections]

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, the Leader of the Opposition has the floor, not Calgary-Fish Creek or anyone else, only the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Could we not do the courtesy of listening or hearing her out. We'll have other chances for other people to speak following that.

Hon. leader.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The third question that I asked today was: where is the proof that the costs won't escalate as private facilities compete with public facilities for a limited supply of health care professionals? Speaking to the subamendment, it's clear that in fact the costs will escalate as a pricing war is set up between these new private facilities and public facilities, yet we know that one of the very pressing issues within our province is the lack of health care personnel, probably in part attributable to the fact that so many of them were laid off when the government was in a cutting mode back in the early '90s, a cutting mode that of course resulted in a 30 percent cut in the hospital budgets in this province. [interjection] Thirty percent. They don't like to hear it, Mr. Chairman. That's because they don't like the truth and that is the truth: 30 percent on hospitals. It's very clear. They should check the Canadian Institute for Health Information studies and they'd see the number.

Mr. Chairman, speaking to the subamendment, the next question – and of course these were all very legitimate questions and there were no answers given by this Premier. [interjections]

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: Order. Hon. members, we only have 25, 35 minutes to go. Surely to goodness most of you can keep it down so that at least we have a chance to hear the hon. leader.

Hon. leader.

MRS. MacBETH: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I know they don't like to hear it. But guess what? They're going to have to hear it because it's true. No answers to the questions. They failed to make their case.

Why does this Premier refuse to stop the queue-jumping that is going on right now with private MRIs? In fact, the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert had a call from one of her constituents this evening who found out he needed an MRI and was told tonight that he would not be able to get that MRI for three months. The only choice he has is to go for a private MRI and pay $600 for that MRI, and this government doesn't even cover it in its Bill 11. This government doesn't even acknowledge it. They've turned a deaf ear and a blind eye to the people of this province.

On the subamendment, Mr. Chairman, let's move on. No answers. No answers to the question: why wouldn't the Premier create one, single conflict-of-interest standard that will apply across the province and show a little bit of leadership in this issue rather than hiding behind the coattails of the 17 regional health authorities that he's appointed?

Mr. Chairman, as we were preparing for this discussion on the subamendment this evening, it was interesting to hear the minister of energy speak. I quote from the Hansard when he said that they put together a February 1998 Tax Review Committee that traveled across the province and "came back with the views of Albertans," some 80,000 people, he said, "who mailed in their views on this issue as well as many hundreds who came to the meetings and voiced their opinions." Guess what the result was? The result was the flat tax legislation which we've been discussing here for the past several days. Well, guess what? The government, hearing the message and passing legislation on the flat tax – why do they ignore 80,000 people who have signed a petition, tens of thousands of people who have attended rallies, people who have written letters, spoken to their MLAs? I guess the 80,000 only applies if you're telling the government what the government wants to hear. If you're telling the government to stop privatizing health care, they turn a deaf ear.

Mr. Chairman, let's get back to the steps that have been taken. Speaking to the subamendment on the purpose of this bill being overnight stays, which of course we would remove from the legislation, let's look at the steps that moved this government to moving closure this evening. They knew full well they were going to move closure last week when the House was in recess. But what did they do? They spent another however much, probably by our estimate about $70,000, putting these big ads in dailies right across the province. The government talks about the truth. They call it fact. You know what it is? It's fiction. It's falsehood, because it says, for example, that Bill 11 is similar – speaking to the subamendment, Mr. Chairman – to legislation already in place in other provinces, including Saskatchewan, Ontario, and Manitoba. What utter nonsense. Saskatchewan, Ontario, Manitoba: none of them have overnight stays, the very amendment that we are talking about here in this Assembly this evening. Not one of them has overnight stays. Not one of them allows enhanced services, uninsured services, to be delivered alongside insured services in private surgical clinics. So it is complete fiction that they would tell that.

Mr. Chairman, this is a government that talks about telling the truth but does anything but. This is the government that talked about the Shouldice clinic. Remember that? That was the example they were going to use. [interjections]

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, we now only have 30 minutes left. Could you please keep the noise down? Those who are helping their leader, would they mind just listening to their leader? [interjection] I'm saying it to both sides, hon. member. Surely one is no better than the other. They're all noisy. I'm just trying to get them to be quiet in all corners of the committee.

Hon. leader.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Another one of the theses in this government piece of propaganda – our tally, of course, is that the government is up on the subamendment. The government has said in their so-called fiction sheet that Bill 11 has absolutely no implications for the health system under the NAFTA agreement. You know what? Not even the government can say that.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader, rising on a point of order. Would you share it with us?

Point of Order Relevance

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Chairman, yes. Under Beauchesne 459, relevance. We have had a lot of debate over the last few weeks on this particular bill, and the opposition has kept us on the subamendment to the amendment, overnight stays, for in excess of nine hours. And if I remember correctly, that's where we still are, on the subamendment to the amendment, which deals with overnight stays.

NAFTA has nothing to do with overnight stays. [interjections] I wasn't debating the bill. I was pointing out that the hon. Leader of the Opposition was speaking about NAFTA and speaking about an advertisement in a newspaper on issues other than this subamendment. It's very clear that if they wanted to speak about all of the other amendments, we could have had that opportunity, but they didn't give us that opportunity, Mr. Chairman. So I suggest that the hon. Leader of the Opposition should speak to the subamendment in the few remaining minutes she has left.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the point of order.

MR. DICKSON: I'll be brief. It seems to me the Government House Leader is now trying to invoke closure on closure, because he's going to use the time talking about points of order.

The point is simply this. I have listened to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition repeatedly reference the subamendment. You've heard that too, Mr. Chairman. You know that she's specifically talking about subamendment SA1 that's in front of us, and I invite you, sir, to allow this member the same kind of latitude you've accorded each one of those many government members that have spoken to the subamendment and let us get on to make the optimal use of the limited time this government affords us before they bring down the heavy hand at midnight.

Thank you very much.

THE CHAIRMAN: The chair would observe that strict adherence to the thoughts of Beauchesne under 459 would be true, but the chair has given leeway, and the Speaker commended the two chairs for giving wide leeway to debate this while, strictly speaking, it should be only on the amendment. But both sides have had the benefit of the relaxation of the rules of relevance on this particular bill so that we could have wide-ranging debate even though we were only on a subamendment.

So, hon. leader.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do get a little carried away when I'm talking about this subamendment to ban overnight stays, because of course this is one of the primary problems with the legislation. Of course the legislation opens up – it doesn't just, as the Premier is fond of saying, put a fence around what exists. Albertans know and anybody in the gallery knows that what it does is in fact open up a whole new cottage industry, with subsidies from the taxpayer, in terms of private, overnight, approved-stay surgical facilities, or what everybody else calls private hospitals, and at the same time ignores, does not include, private diagnostic facilities and others which lead to queue-jumping. The deceptions in the bill are widely known, and the deceptions in advertising it before the government moved on closure on this subamendment on overnight stays are clear and understood.

Finally, in terms of the ad and the government's decision to move on closure and on the subamendment, is the statement that this bill that would permit overnight stays "is one more tool, in compliance with the Canada Health Act, to help reduce waiting lists." What fiction is that supposed to be? We already know that waiting lists have been increased, because in fact there's been a 50 percent increase in the amount of privatization that's gone on in Alberta even without this legislation and the waiting lists are longer. So how can they possibly argue that because of their folly and mismanagement of the health care system over the past seven years, the responsibility for the waiting lists and the mess that's been created doesn't fall squarely on their shoulders, Mr. Chairman?

I think it's important that we look at some of the important insights which have been gained by listening to the people of this province, by being out there and going around in that crowd and hearing the things that are on people's minds. You know, Mr. Chairman, speaking to this subamendment on the overnight stays, people understand that this discussion in here this evening and the actions of the government to close off debate is not just about an issue of health care policy. I know the government would like to think this is just a single issue of health care policy, but in fact it is not. It has grown legs. This has become an issue of distrust in this government and an issue of the kind of relationship that this government has with the people of this province: that they will ignore them, that they won't respond to their questions, that they will ignore petitions, only hear the people they want to hear, and ignore the very people that put them where they are.

Well, guess what, Mr. Chairman. The voters in this province will have the final say when the day of reckoning occurs. And as I have said on many occasions, I am looking forward to when this Premier finally has the courage to come out and debate me on this legislation, because of course he has refused to do that on many, many occasions. He has refused to do it because he's afraid to stand and try to defend this legislation anywhere other than in his safe little office and at his political fund-raising dinners where people have to pay to hear him.

Mr. Chairman, this government has a record on health care. You bet they do. They created the climate. They created the pain. They created the shortage of workers in terms of health care, because of course they laid them all off in the early '90s and created that pain. I believe 8,000 nurses were certainly laid off, and now they're crying foul because there aren't enough. These are the very people they want to bring back, but as the question was put to the government today and they refused to answer: what are they going to do with the cost competition between the private and the public sector with the shortage of nurses? Guess what? The cost is going to go up, not down.

In fact, as some of the members have said, if their only purpose is to break the unions and the organization of nurses in this province, if they do happen to set up private health care and have nurses outside of the union, where do you suppose the profits from the cost of those nurses will go? Where will that profit go? Do you think it's going to come back to the public sector, as it does with the Shouldice clinic, Mr. Chairman? No, sir. That will go straight into someone's pocket. It will be a shift away from the public sector being the funder of health care and a shift to the cost of health care being on the workers as opposed to on the shareholders, who should be bearing that risk.

Anyway, Mr. Chairman, I have a very dear friend of mine, my friend Jennifer, who actually lives in Calgary but was born and raised on a wonderful farm in this province. I told her that I was going to be talking about Bill 11 probably tonight when this government invoked closure, when it decided that it didn't want to hear any more, and she sent me an e-mail tonight which was just fascinating. I want to read a little excerpt from it, because she's always been someone that's very concerned about our farmers. I'm quoting now from my friend Jennifer.

Our Alberta farmers are also in a terrible and complex failure not of their own making. A Bill 11 solution is the solution that says, "Just sell the Farm." Selling the farm won't increase the price of wheat.

We know that.

It won't raise the water table, return the topsoil or buy equipment or seed or insurance. A Bill 11 solution [in speaking to the subamendment] would have you still make the mortgage payments on the land anyways. A Bill 11 solution leaves nothing for our children or grandchildren. A Bill 11 solution is not a plan for Albertans. Bill 11 is part of someone else's plan [somebody else's benefit]. It's part of an investment plan.

Yet she had always thought and I had always thought that health care was about looking after each other, Mr. Chairman. Well, it appears not. This whole scene that this government has created is a private business plan, subsidized by the taxpayers by the way, under the guise of being something innovative.

You know, Mr. Chairman, there is real innovation that's needed in health care. This government, after eight years, has lost any sense of direction in health care other than to move towards privatization. This bill really creates a vehicle by which our health care system can be slowly pared away. A little piece of public health care can be given out to the private sector, a private sector that quite frankly doesn't need a subsidy from the public sector in order to make a profit, but this is a government that's giving it over to them and leaving it to them. The legacy of this Premier is going to be a legacy of working to destroy the public health care system.

We will continue to fight for public health care. I've done it all my life; I'm not about to stop now. I will continue, whatever it takes, to fight for public health care, and I am proud to do so.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you. This evening it is probably most appropriate, because I am Minister of Children's Services as well as an MLA, for me to begin by reading a letter sent unsolicited to my office by a mother who's quoted her daughter, reading up on Bill 11 and writing this letter as a grade 7 school project. Mr. Chairman, I would beg your indulgence for the Assembly to listen to this letter, because it does in fact reflect the faith and the considered and informed opinion of a child.

What is the truth on Bill 11? The bill would allow people to open up private health care centers. What's so bad about that? If you think about it, Bill 11 makes a lot of sense! Right now people are always having to wait in long lineups to be admitted into the hospital. If Bill 11 was intact there wouldn't be so many lineups because there would be more places to go for help. Everyone keeps saying that if we had this Bill poorer people wouldn't get help if they needed it, but that's just not true! You see, even if the private health care centers started to charge more money for people to get help (which they won't because the government promised that wouldn't happen) they would always have the public health care centers to go to, so I think that this Bill is basically asking if you trust your government, and I think you should.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

My great disappointment in listening to the debate on this incredibly important issue is that when you look at the subamendments, two thoughts strike you. Number one, the mover has absolutely assured, by putting words around or subtracting words, that the people of Alberta feel suspicion that this government is trying to undermine health care. The second issue is that something is terribly wrong with a challenge to the point of view . . . [interjections] Mr. Chairman, I would like the same courtesy afforded to the hon. Leader of the Opposition. I would like that same courtesy.

I have been in politics for over 20 years, and I can guarantee you of one thing. When you in fact enrage, misinform, engage in fearful debate, people – mothers and strollers, seniors, people who are least capable of gaining that information sometimes for themselves, except through their elected representatives – those people if in fact it is proven that they have trusted somebody blindly and gone in that direction, if at one time they find that that confidence is shaken, they will never turn back.

Mr. Chairman, the kind of misinformation that has gone on in this debate is shameful indeed, because it has engaged a fearful attitude in people who don't deserve to feel that kind of fear. We have people at night who aren't sleeping, who are concerned. They are saying: what is this government doing to us? It's very clear what we are doing. We are trying to protect the public health care system. We are saying no to private hospitals.

One of the things that I've also learned is that if in fact you enrage the public to that extent, then if at some time you are ever responsible yourself to take that governance leadership, they will return in kind the same kind of performance that you have encouraged them to engage in. In other words, Mr. Chairman, it's a very dangerous ploy to engage people in the debate when you know that you are not providing them all of the information and in an honest fashion. In the end, when the history is written of this day, I would suggest that the absolute atrocity that has occurred is that people will have been unnecessarily inflamed about a piece of legislation on the basis of what- ifs or what could happen, a shadow box of mystery that is in fact not the reality of this bill. When that is recognized by a member of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition who has in fact spoken, believing this does not engage in a two-tier system, I think the Leader of the Opposition has some real soul searching to do among her own troops.

Mr. Chairman, over this last year of listening to a discussion on health care reform, of having my own forum, I anticipated in January that the tabling of the bill might in fact engage in considerable debate in my community. So with a random selection but not in fact selecting any known Conservative Party members, three names were selected from each page of the phone book in my constituency, and I had . . . [interjection]

THE CHAIRMAN: Edmonton-Norwood, it is not incumbent upon you to answer each and every piece of rhetoric that is now being given. Would you please let the hon. minister continue.

MS EVANS: Mr. Chairman, I mailed out 385 surveys with questions asked about their predominant concerns, what was second, third, fourth, fifth, and asked them to rank their concerns and give their comments. Let me tell you about their number one concern, which was health. Let me tell you what their number one concern boils down to, and I will be pleased tomorrow to table in this House a copy of all of the survey information. Their number one concern is access. When our Premier first spoke to this bill, he said that his number one concern was the long waiting lists and the pain and suffering of Albertans who were waiting for treatment.

Mr. Chairman, I'm going to quote from some of the comments that have been made. "Line-ups are very silly especially when we are asked how to spend a surplus. Obviously emergency and hospital service needs." "With . . . empty beds in our hospitals why would you even consider paying private companies to look after our health needs" in a private hospital? "Maintain our health system so it's easily accessible to all and not favoring any one group, whether it is status or wealth."

Both mental and physical health of children, adults and the elderly [are important]. The health and well being of the community and society is directly related to the health and well being of its people.

"Without a health population - not much else matters or can happen."

They say further: "No two-tiered system - health care should be universal. It is a Canadian right to good health care." "Use facilities that already exist . . . [and] open up empty beds and wards." We are concerned about a "shortage of medical staff." "Hospital stays [are] too short, release of surgical cases too soon with no supplementary care provided." "Health is essential," and "homecare is a fabulous concept which needs to be continued." "Health care needs immediate attention." "Better care for seniors, health related assistance at an affordable cost."

I could go through a litany of the comments here. Most of these comments relate to concerns about many issues involving our health system, and many of these issues, Mr. Chairman, are in fact engaged within the context of Bill 11: no private hospitals, queue-jumping addressed, transparency of contracts.

Many of the concerns that have been brought forward by people who do not want to pay out of their own pockets for health care are addressed in this bill. You hear words like this:

Based on the service to my loved ones - the problem that I encountered is that if a large emergency was to occur no single hospital . . . could handle large numbers of people who would need attention - a large flu epidemic, accident, etc.

Mr. Chairman, during the time of the tornado here in 1987 a huge concern was having the capacity to provide adequate emergency response. I have to believe at one time, a decade or more ago, when surgical facilities were opened in this province, it was because of the frustration of long waiting lists to get in with minor procedures. It was because there wasn't adequate space in public facilities to look after both major surgical needs as well as minor procedures that also were needed by the people that brought them forward.

We have a great challenge in Canada, and that is to get health care right. We have a great challenge in North America, and that is to get health care right. We have a great challenge globally to get health care right and affordable, and we have a great challenge, Mr. Chairman, not to work in isolation of people but to work together on all sides of this House to set the example that we set when we sing O Canada. We have that great challenge to commit too in our communities so that we work as one in leadership and in governance to make sure that the people in our province, in Canada are as healthy as they can possibly be.

But, Mr. Chairman, when any one elected person attacks another, I can guarantee you this: when anyone attacks the other, to those people out there we all look the same. So while people in the opposition think that they have won the great debate, let me tell you that in God's eyes that cannot be true, because we have not dealt fairly with the people and the respect that people should have for their government and, I believe, ultimately will diminish on all sides of this House because of the attitude of people who show no respect in their disagreement.

I have heard repeatedly day after day petitions being tabled in this House that suggest, Mr. Chairman, that people out there feel that they are going to have private health care rammed down their throats. That can't possibly be the truth. That can't possibly be the truth because we already have private surgical facilities. We have over 50 private surgical facilities. Did the 30 some odd facilities in the early '90s come as a great revelation, a great horror story? Did people on all sides of the House yell and scream and barrage and engage in protest? Well, doesn't it make sense that if we've got a legislative gap today in the matter of dealing with surgical facilities that we have to close that? Doesn't it make sense that we should work in co-operation?

The opposition would try and make people believe that there hasn't been a filibuster. Mr. Chairman, when you look at the amount of time we have spent discussing this bill, not only attributed to Bill 11 but attributed to Bill 18, you can hardly believe that we haven't been focused on a very small and very particular part of this bill without looking at this total bill in the context of how it will help Albertans.

Mr. Chairman, we have a responsibility to the health of Albertans, to the other five points of the surgical plan, but what I am hearing in this House to my great disappointment is not the issue of health but the issue of politicization of an issue to the great detriment of the people of Alberta. We have actually managed to make this issue an issue not to unite for the health of the people but to divide for our own political self-interest. We have managed to make this issue an issue that is tearing apart the very fabric of the attitudes within this House that we engaged in at the time of Canadian unity, when I had such hope that this House - Her Majesty's opposition, the third party, and ourselves - would work well together in a spirit of co-operation.

On a personal basis I suppose the one thing that really grabs me - because I have been in a leadership position. Mr. Chairman, it is wonderful when it's quiet. When I have been a leader, it has been most painful to me and to my family to hear motives attributed to what I have done or what I am trying to do that are not my motives. The motives that have been ascribed to our Premier have been unworthy and undeserving. Our Premier like any good leader . . . [interjections]

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members who are sitting on the front bench . . . [interjection] Premier. Hon. members on both sides, we have but a couple of minutes. May we hear the hon. minister conclude her remarks.

MS EVANS: Mr. Chairman, our Premier deserves respect not only for the man he is but because the majority of Albertans have said that he's our Premier and our leader and have given him the trust and respect that they have shown when they marked their ballot in favour of him and in favour of this party. When he has provided this bill and the opposition has challenged that you can't trust this Premier and this caucus, they are belittling everything that this Premier and this government have done in reducing debt, reducing expenditure, eliminating waste, and in fact promoting the health and the safety and the education and the environmental concerns all for the people of Alberta. There will be a day of reckoning when the people in fact come to the realization that the period in which this government legislated on behalf of the people was one of the most glorious times in our history. We not only dared to do what was different; we dared to make a difference, not only for our children but for our grandchildren and our great-grandchildren.

For that, Mr. Speaker, I stand with pride with this Premier and caucus and vote for Bill 11.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members, due notice having been given by the hon. Government House Leader under Standing Order 21 and pursuant to Government Motion 17, agreed to May 2, 2000, under Standing Order 21(2), which states that all questions must be decided in order to conclude the debate on Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act, I must now put the question on the subamendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 3, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/05/03

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, grant us a daily awareness of the precious gift of life which You have given us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

Before recognizing the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, hon. members, I just draw your attention to the Order Paper, the second page. There's a typing error. There are two question marks associated at one point on that page that should not be there.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Her Excellency Daniele Smadja, ambassador and head of the delegation of the European Commission to Canada. Accompanying her is Mr. Peter van den Heuvel, first counselor for the European Commission.

Mr. Speaker, exports from Alberta to Europe total more than $1 billion each year. With Europe playing such an important and critical role in global trade negotiations, it's very important that we have a strong working relationship with the European Union. This visit of her excellency is an excellent opportunity for us to explore ways to build on our relationship and to discuss areas where we can work together.

This is the ambassador's first official visit to Alberta, and we're pleased to welcome her to this province. I would ask that our honoured guests rise and that the members of this Assembly give them the very traditional warm welcome.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I again have a petition signed by 216 people from Spruce Grove, St. Albert, Wetaskiwin, Vegreville, Onoway, Seba Beach, Leduc, Westlock, Ardrossan, Stony Plain, and Edmonton. Once again, they are hopeful as they "petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to present another petition on osteoporosis signed by 59 individuals from Brooks, Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Edmonton, Beaumont, Sherwood Park, and Tilley. They're asking the government to support mature women's health and add preventative medications and therapies to Alberta's drug list.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I would like to present to the Assembly a petition from over 60 Calgarians. This petition reads,

We, the undersigned, ask the assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition to present to the Assembly that states:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

It is signed by 225 Albertans from Sherwood Park, Stony Plain, Whitecourt, Vegreville, St. Albert, Spruce Grove, Fort Saskatchewan, and Edmonton.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to be able to present to the Assembly this afternoon a petition signed by 64 Calgarians who "urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald."

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a petition signed by 4,566 Albertans petitioning this Assembly "to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained." This submission brings the total number of signatures on this petition to well over 21,000 today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: A little patience today, hon. members. We have quite a list.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented yesterday opposing private health care be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I'd request that the petition I presented on May 2 in the Assembly urging the government to stop promoting private health care now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would ask that the petition I presented regarding the undermining of public health care and the concerns about it be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would now ask that the petition I presented signed by 219 Albertans requesting that the promotion of private health care and the undermining of public health care be stopped be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented earlier this week now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

MS OLSEN: I, too, request that the petition I presented yesterday signed by 82 Albertans requesting that the promotion of private health care and the undermining of public health care be stopped be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to stop promoting private healthcare and undermining public healthcare.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would request that the petition I presented to the Assembly on May 2 regarding public health care be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this point I'd ask if the petition I presented on May 2, 2000, registering opposition to private health care might now be read and received, please.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I ask that the petition I tabled yesterday regarding the government's promotion of private health care, which of course brought the total on the petition so far to 70,000, be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I also request that the petition I tabled yesterday regarding the promotion of private health care by this government be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would ask that the petition I tabled yesterday from a number of citizens opposing privatization of health care now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petitions I tabled yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

We, the undersigned, ask the assembly to petition the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would request that the petition which I tabled in this Legislative Assembly yesterday regarding the government's plan to privatize health care in Alberta now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. LANGEVIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chairman I would like to table five copies of the report of the Select Standing Committee on Legislative Offices recommending the reappointment of Mr. Peter Valentine as the Auditor for the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to give oral notice of the following motion:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Legislative Offices agreed to on April 19, 2000, to recommend to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor that Mr. Peter Valentine be reappointed as Auditor General for the province of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party on a Standing Order 40 submission.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 40 I'll be asking for the unanimous consent of the Legislative Assembly to debate the following matter of urgent and pressing necessity:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly has no confidence in the government's handling of the escalating labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to table the requisite number of copies of the responses to written questions 11, 12, and 13 as ordered by the House.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to table a survey that I have conducted of 385 residents, 85 of which have responded, and these responses are contained in the appropriate number of copies, which I table today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table two letters, one from Red Deer and one from Edmonton, strongly opposing Bill 11.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter from Merv and Hildegard Prediger from Edmonton-Gold Bar, and they're outlining their opposition to Bill 11.

The second is e-mail I have received from Ken McGoogan. He is a striking Calgary Herald journalist, and he would like to "urge the government to use all its legislative powers" to get a settlement in the Calgary Herald strike.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of the schedule of approved hospitals from Deputy Minister's Order 4/97.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a one-page report. The report is titled Anonymous Cash, and it confirms that "$375.66 in cash was received from the Provincial Treasurer's Office and deposited to the General Revenue Fund." This is not anonymous cash. This was $375.66 which was collected from Albertans who were assembled at the Legislature specifically to pay for damages caused to the property or the Chamber with the Bill 11 demonstrations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today, all letters of opposition to Bill 11. I'll simply read the names into the record: Duane Dawson, Marne St. Claire, Merv and Jean Rogers, and lastly, Stephen Lamoureux.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly students and their family members who are of the community of St. Gabriel's cyberschool in St. Albert. These students hail from the community of Onoway, represented here in the Assembly by the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne; from Lethbridge county, by the Member for Little Bow; from Swan Hills, by our Member for Barrhead-Westlock, yourself, Mr. Speaker; and from Edmonton, by the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 11 special guests from the newest school in Little Bow, Providence Christian school, opened last month in Monarch. Today with the nine students who are here on a three-day extended learning experience are their teacher, Mr. Chris Heikoop, and their bus driver, Sjaane Heikoop. Would they please rise in the members' gallery and receive the warm recognition of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'd introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two teachers, seven parent helpers, and 46 bright students from St. Hilda Catholic elementary school in Mill Woods. The teachers are Ms Annette Mendiuk and Mrs. Markiana Hryschuk with parent helpers Mrs. Fedun, Mrs. Kovacic, Mrs. Camina, Mrs. Rosales, Mrs. Kurtz, Mrs. Prangle, and Mrs. Villatoro. The class and the teachers and helpers are in the public gallery, and with your permission I'd ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my enthusiasm to introduce the students and families from St. Gabriel's cyberschool, I forgot to introduce the two teachers accompanying them. They are Miss Kara Zutz and Mr. Bernie Hryciw, and I would ask them to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

Voting on Bill 11

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thousands of Albertans have gathered peacefully at the doors of this Legislature to call for the protection of public health care in Alberta and for a free vote on the government's private health care policy. This question is to the Premier. How many Albertans have to come to the Legislature demanding a free vote on the government's private health care policy before the Premier listens?

MR. KLEIN: Well, yesterday, Mr. Speaker, as the leader of the Liberal opposition well knows, we had a number of votes on amendments and on the preamble and the title of Bill 11, and there was a free vote.

Mr. Speaker, just to set the record straight, the whole issue of a so-called free vote was discussed in caucus in my absence – in my absence – so that I wouldn't be there to fetter the discretion of members of this great caucus. As I understand it, the vote was unanimous to accept the government's position. That's a free vote.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, what was the Premier so afraid of that he couldn't even attend his own caucus meeting on a discussion of a free vote?

AN HON. MEMBER: He's not a dictator.

MR. KLEIN: Quite true. Unlike the leader of the Liberal opposition, I am not a dictator. I don't stamp my foot and say: this is the way it's going to be. I stayed away from that meeting quite specifically, as I mentioned, so as not to fetter the discretion and the good thinking of this great caucus of ours.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, can the Premier confirm that not all members were recorded in the votes taken last night because of a split in his caucus over the free vote?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I recall it, last night on all the points of the bill the vote was quite consistent, 45 to 14 or 44 to 14. All of the members in the House representing the government caucus voted in favour of the amendments, save for the subamendment, which was voted no by all the members of this caucus.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On May 10, 1994, quite a long time ago, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West stated:

I was impressed with the concept of free vote. I incorporated the free vote into my campaign to win the nomination, and I believe it helped me actually win that nomination.

My questions are to the Premier. Given that the government has now invoked closure on its major health policy, will the Premier at least make a commitment to allow his MLAs, including the MLA for Lethbridge-West, a free vote?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I can't speak for the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, who is not in the House unfortunately today, but I'm sure that if he were asked, his reply would be: I voted to vote with the government, and I voted to vote for a policy to protect public health in this province.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the Member for Lethbridge-West was nominated on a principle of free votes, why won't the Premier take a stand for that member and allow him to do it again?

MR. KLEIN: I'll go a step further, and with your concurrence, Mr. Speaker, I will ask all members of my caucus here today to register, either vocally or by standing or doing whatever they want: do you feel that you have a free vote?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Yes. Yeah.

MR. KLEIN: Right. There. [applause] Okay.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, have we got an opportunity for this government. Today I have signed a pledge that says that the members of the Alberta Official Opposition caucus "will be able to reflect the wishes of their constituents through a free vote" in the Legislature "at Third Reading of Bill 11." I've signed mine, and we've got one here for the Premier. Will the Premier sign his?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, that is a caucus decision, and if this caucus decides that they want to have a free vote in third reading, then fine. I'm not about to prevent that.

Mr. Speaker, the leader of the Liberal opposition knows how a Conservative caucus works. Well, it works quite a bit differently now than when she was on Priorities and in Treasury. Basically, we have a very open and a very free caucus. If the caucus members vote to have a free vote, so to speak, then that indeed will be done, but if this caucus votes unanimously to support the government's position and the government's policy and the government's bill as introduced by the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, that decision then will prevail. That's democracy.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, if this Premier is allowing free votes, then why was he forced to use closure to get this bill through committee?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we voted to invoke closure to get on with the bill. We voted to invoke closure so that we could ban extra billing. We voted to invoke closure so that we could ban queue-jumping. We voted to invoke closure so that we could ban private hospitals. We voted to invoke closure so that we could limit contracts to minor surgery only. We voted to invoke closure so that we could require contracts to be made public. We voted to invoke closure so that we could leave medical decisions to the physicians. We voted to invoke closure to ensure the efficient use of existing capacity in public hospitals before contracts are let. We voted to invoke closure to strengthen conflict of interest provisions. We voted to invoke closure to remove the profit motive from the sale of enhanced services. And guess what? They voted against all of those motions.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, after that cute little display that the Premier and the caucus had, will this Premier sign the pledge which says that he's going to allow a free vote, and will he explain it to the people of Alberta if he won't?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't need to sign a pledge. My pledge is my oath to this Legislature and to Executive Council. That is my pledge.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: You're losing it. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, now, there was a recognition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you. I'm sorry; I just lost my count there. Mr. Speaker, if this Premier is so committed to his pledge of leadership in this province, will he commit here and now not to invoke closure on third reading?

MR. KLEIN: No, Mr. Speaker. Well, yes, maybe I will. I will if the Liberals will stand up and commit right now that they will not filibuster. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Questions on Matters Previously Decided

THE SPEAKER: Please. Please, hon. members. I would like to remind hon. members that matters that have been decided by the House are not . . . [interjections]

Hon. members, while it appears that some members seem to be having fun this afternoon, I would like to advise hon. members what the rules are. Matters that have been decided in this Assembly are not the subject matter of question period. It was a committee of the Assembly of this House that voted to invoke a certain procedure on a division.

I would like to draw the attention of all hon. members to Standing Orders. These are not Beauchesne or Erskine May. These are orders of this Assembly, written by the members of this Assembly, agreed to by the members of this Assembly. Standing Order 23 says that a member will be called to order if that member

- (c) persists in needless repetition or raises matters which have been decided during the current session . . .
- (f) debates any previous vote of the Assembly unless it is that member's intention to move that it be rescinded.

There's no such movement, and it wouldn't be the case during question period to move it anyway.

Now, these are rules written by the members of this House. These are not rules that have been taken out of books.

The leader of the third party.

Private Health Services

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government may have scored a hollow victory last night. However, the government has lost on every other front. Hundreds of thousands of Albertans have been energized and politicized. Every single opinion poll shows strong and rock-solid opposition to what's being rammed down the throats of Albertans by a government that refuses to listen. My questions are to the Premier. While the government ignored the hundreds of thousands of Albertans who wrote letters, made phone calls, sent e-mails and faxes, and signed petitions, what made the government decide to subsidize a few private health care special interests who can't seem to turn a profit on their own?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the hon. member's statement that there's rock-solid opposition. That is not true. My office and all members of this caucus have received literally thousands and thousands of letters in support of the policy and of the bill. The only difference is that we don't waste the time of this Legislature tabling all of the letters. I indicated once before that if they wanted to get into that game, we could start tabling the letters we've received in support.

This is a very strange relationship indeed that has come together between the Liberals and the NDs. I can understand the NDs and their relationship with the Canadian Union of Public Employees and the Alberta Federation of Labour and the United Nurses of Alberta and the Alberta Teachers' Association, but now to marry the NDs with the Liberals makes for a strange but maybe a compatible political relationship, Mr. Speaker. To see the leader of the third party vote, as the Liberals voted, against the principles that the NDs fundamentally uphold was indeed something to behold, and that will live in Hansard forever, that the NDs voted with the Liberals to promote extra billing, to promote queue-jumping, to promote . . .

THE SPEAKER: Thank you very much. I hope all members will avoid continuing the debate in the question period.

The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will continue to speak on behalf of Albertans regardless of what the Premier thinks.

THE SPEAKER: I'm sorry. Hon. leader of the third party, it's not the Premier you have to deal with. It's the chairman you have to deal with.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. So I'm going to ask very humbly again: get on with the question.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier confirm that to avoid public outrage and possible electoral defeat, the government plans to put any approvals of private surgical facilities with overnight stays on ice until after the next provincial election?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the policy, of course, that is now the subject of Bill 11 doesn't leave that decision up to us. It simply says that RHAs, under very strict circumstances, may – may, not will. If a surgical clinic meets all the requirements of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, meets all the requirements of the rules of medicare, meets all the requirements of the rules of the Canada Health Act, may, then with the concurrence of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, with the concurrence of the minister a regional health authority under very, very strict circumstances may contract to a surgical clinic that might require a patient to stay overnight. That's what it's all about.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why did the government and its handpicked CRHA administrators close three public hospitals in Calgary, blow one of them up and sell two others to private special interests for cents on the dollar, if not to create the conditions for the establishment of private, for-profit hospitals?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that's a very interesting question. The closure of the Bow Valley centre and the Holy Cross hospital was done after numerous reports were prepared vis-a-vis the costs, first of all, the $182 million dollar cost of totally refitting the General hospital.

MR. DICKSON: You didn't have to do it all. Two buildings could have been kept.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, you know, now he's gone from lawyer to pretend politician to town planner. He has no idea. There were numerous reports saying that those hospitals had to be closed so we could reopen hundreds of state-of-the-art beds in hospitals like the Lougheed, the Rockyview, the Foothills. This notion that the Grace hospital was closed is absolutely wrong. It was moved to a state-of-the-art centre for women's health in Calgary. It is indeed the pride of this country as it pertains to women's health.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Children at Risk

MS PAUL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I read with interest the Start Young, Start Now report of the task force on children in crisis. On page 26 reference is made to:

Strong linkages are required among social workers, schools, probation and parole officers, police, and community agencies. Information should be shared among communities, agencies and schools, and additional steps should be taken to expand successful strategies across the province.

My question is to the hon. Minister of Children's Services. Would you please tell us what immediate steps you are taking to implement the expansion of these strategies, which are so desperately needed to protect our children and youth from abuse, violence, bullying, and gang activities?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a very good question. There are two particular areas that I would cite. Number one, two years ago in the business plan of this government the Alberta children's initiative drew all of the departments together and requested and required in the business plan collaborative action that would see strategies at the local level built for incentives to join together in the circle around uniting the child and the family.

The second strategy, Mr. Speaker, was the implementation of the child and family services authorities. Through that and our partnership with education and the local police forces, a student health initiative is one example of things that we believe should be expanded to include other agencies to support the child in need.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MS PAUL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Who will take the lead and be responsible for the implementation of these strategies: the school boards, the Justice department, social services, or your department?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the co-ordination role of the Children's Services department is simply that. We are advocates, and we deliver services for children, very special children with needs, but in each of those particular areas from time to time every ministry would have its role in leadership. If it was deemed to be predominantly a justice issue, for example, the Minister of Justice would deliver the program, contain the funding within their budget, and would have the partnership and the agreement of the other partners.

So it would be at times different leaders for different service delivery. Predominantly, the child and family services authorities deliver to the child already identified at risk and investigate it. Also,

Mr. Speaker, the delivery of family and community support services at the local level does cross over some and all of those boundaries for local delivery.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MS PAUL: Thank you. My second supplementary, also to the same minister. Would you be supportive and help to take the necessary steps to implement a course starting at the elementary level as part of the curriculum in all Alberta schools to deal with violent issues?

MS EVANS: Along with my colleague the Minister of Justice, who may wish to supplement this answer, I believe that there is a lot of interest in doing whatever we can to mitigate against family violence and abuse issues. That is but one step that would follow what is already in place, Mr. Speaker, and that is removal of the perpetrator of violence in the home so that in fact the family does not have to relocate while the perpetrator is held elsewhere.

If the Minister of Justice would wish to supplement, certainly we are open to strategies and development of those strategies that can support the child.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Grain Transportation

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week's announcement by the Canadian Transport Agency increasing freight rates for Alberta farmers by 4 and a half percent could prove catastrophic. In my constituency this will boost freight rates to approximately $29.25 per tonne and higher in many areas of the province. Only Ottawa can pre-empt the solution by further penalizing farmers. Several months ago we were led to believe a solution was pending at the federal cabinet level on the Estey/Kroeger reports. My questions today are to the minister of agriculture. Can the minister tell me, as a result of his discussions with the federal ministers and their officials, when Alberta's farmers can expect action on grain transportation reform?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This has been a very long process. As a matter of fact, well over a year and a half ago the federal government appointed Justice Estey to look at the whole issue of transportation and the movement of grain from the prairies. He reported about a year ago, and immediately the federal government set up a committee under Arthur Kroeger to look at the implementation of the recommendations.

Our Premier has written to the Prime Minister urging the implementation. I went to Ottawa and met with eight cabinet ministers, the Prime Minister's office, the Privy Council, members from Treasury and thought that we had a fairly good understanding about what needed to be done and was very hopeful that we would soon see some changes.

Unfortunately, those changes have not occurred, and of course now we've been hit with another catastrophic expenditure that is totally unnecessary. If in fact the things that we recommended were implemented, we would look at keeping another $200 million to $300 million in the pockets of prairie farmers, and those are farmers' dollars, not tax dollars.

We're very hopeful that we will soon hear – and hopefully it'll be before the new crop year so that these new announced rates won't be implemented – but, Mr. Speaker, it's impossible to predict. We're dealing with Liberals, and as we saw last night, they're totally unpredictable. When the Leader of the Opposition votes against the Canada Health Act, then we . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Questions outside Government Responsibility

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, my great fear was that I would have to interject on the question. Recognizing that the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development is not a member of the federal Privy Council and as the question asked for when a decision might come from the federal cabinet, it certainly would not sit within the competence of a minister of the government of Alberta. As we listened, my worst fears were confirmed.

Now, hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, do you have a specific question that might actually be within the administrative competence of a minister of the government of Alberta?

MR. COUTTS: Is Alberta's policy and position on grain transportation the same as that of the Canadian Wheat Board's chairman, Ken Ritter, who blames the railway solely for increasing freight costs?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, if you ever saw a case where the frying pan is calling the kettle black, this has got to be the situation. When you see the chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board blaming the railways for the high cost of moving grain in this country, it's something to behold. The fact is that the railways, of course, made an application to the federal agency to have this increase in freight rates, but if in fact the policies that we have been putting forward were implemented, then this freight rate increase would not go ahead.

MR. COUTTS: My last question to the minister of agriculture: what is Alberta's minimum package of changes out of the Kroeger/Estey process that must be agreed to?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We believe that the Canadian Wheat Board should be moved to the spout, and that's where they would take possession of the grain. We know that they can do a reasonably good job of selling, and that's where they should take possession. We believe that in order to get the grain to the port, there should be contracts and that the Canadian Wheat Board would call those contracts through a third party. We need to have a third party that would administer the contracts. The contract would go to grain companies on the prairies. They would then fulfill the contract by moving the grain out.

The thing that is important in this whole scenario is that the grain would be then pulled to the port as opposed to pushed. What's happening today is that the Wheat Board is pushing grain to the port, filling up the storage there, and we can't move other products through. So that has to change.

We also have to make sure that the Canadian Wheat Board doesn't have control of the rolling stock. Today they have total control of 70 percent of the stock, and as long as that's in place, we cannot get the rolling stock or the storage at the port.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Closure on Bill 11

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year it took the hon. minister of agriculture about 36 hours to fly to Shanghai and back and the Minister of Economic Development 36 hours in traveling time to go to Beijing and back. Including last night's closure motion, only 38 hours have been spent discussing the future of public health care in Alberta. To the Premier: why is this government limiting the time of the Assembly debate on the future of health care in this province to an amount of time less than the 72 hours it took two cabinet ministers to fly to Communist China and back?

Speaker's Ruling Questions on Matters Previously Decided

THE SPEAKER: Before I recognize the hon. leader of the government, can I just refer again to what I referred to earlier in the question period about Standing Orders 23(c) and 23(f). Perhaps I misunderstand something, but there's an answer. Fine.

Hon. member, proceed with your second question.

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, given that this government is ignoring Albertans' wishes, just whose time line is the Premier on? This is a major policy change. Why is it being rammed through with such haste?

MR. KLEIN: I beg to differ. This is not a major policy change. Mr. Speaker, it is not a major policy change to endorse the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act. This government caucus last night endorsed the principles of the Canada Health Act. They voted against the principles of the Canada Health Act, and the NDs did as well.

That is not a major shift in policy. Mr. Speaker, surgical clinics have been operating in this province for many years. Thirty of them were under the watch of the then minister of health, now the leader of the Liberal opposition. Thirty of them not only were allowed to operate but were allowed to charge facility fees. All this policy does is put fences around the operation and the contracting out of surgical facilities by regional health authorities. This is not a major shift in policy.

As a matter of fact, some editorialists and some respected columnists have referred to this as a very benign and a very timid piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker.

MRS. SOETAERT: That's why you spent $3 million marketing it.

MR. KLEIN: Well, we had to spend some money to market this, Mr. Speaker, to offset the propaganda and the vicious misinformation being put out by the Liberals, the NDs, CUPE, UNA, the Friends of Medicare backed by the Alberta Federation of Labour.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Liberals have agreed not to filibuster, will the Premier commit to not invoking closure on private health care at third reading?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. member an honest answer today. The answer is the same as the answer I gave during committee debate on this, and the answer was that if the Liberals don't filibuster, we won't use closure. We don't want to use closure.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, at third reading there could be a reasoned amendment introduced that could be debated by every member of this Legislative Assembly – I understand the rules are up to 20 minutes – and then we're back to the main motion. Every member of this Assembly again can speak to the main motion. That will add to the total debate. Well, do 40 times 84. You know, 40 times 84, that's a lot of speaking; I'll tell you that for sure. That's a lot of talking. Add to that the almost 55 hours now that we have spent on this bill, and that to me represents a lot of talking in this Legislature, more talking than ever before, than ever in the history of this Legislature on a single piece of legislation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Historic Sites

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Historical Preservation and Re-building Society in Calgary continues to provide leadership on issues regarding the value and significance of our historic sites. Recently they had expressed concerns about the future of three historic schools . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the chair has recognized the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, and she has every right to be heard in this Assembly. She has every right to be heard uninterrupted in this Assembly. She is a member of this Assembly who has every right to ask a question, and she has been recognized to ask a question. I'm going to ask for your indulgence to be polite enough to allow her to be heard, and I'll invite her to start over again.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Historical Preservation and Re-building Society in Calgary continues to provide leadership on issues regarding the value and significance of historic sites. Recently they have expressed concerns about the future of three historic schools that the Calgary board of education has listed as surplus: Dr. Carl Safran, Victoria, and Bridgeland schools. They have asked the province in conjunction with the city to consider designating these buildings prior to any change in their status with the CBE. My question is to the Minister of Community Development, responsible for historic sites. What opportunities are available to ensure the preservation of these buildings?

MR. WOLOSCHYN: Mr. Speaker, on December 21, 1999, the mayor of Calgary did in fact request through the Alberta Historical Resources Act that the Department of Community Development look at the viability of these three schools, whether or not they merit designation. Currently that evaluation is going on and, I might add, a decision has not been made. However, before the Calgary board of education can dispose of these properties, they have to go through the Department of Infrastructure, and I've apprized the Minister of Infrastructure of the proceedings on this particular issue.

MRS. BURGNER: Could the same minister please answer: what is the status of the old St. Mary's girls school with respect to the notice of intention to designate?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSCHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In March of this year the department issued a notice of intent to designate St. Mary's school as an historic site under the Historical Resources Act. The separate school board, which is the owner of the school in Calgary, has requested a hearing before the board to determine if in fact it's viable. That hearing will be held on June 1, and the decision by the minister whether or not to designate will be made after that hearing.

MRS. BURGNER: Finally, will the minister be further involved with the preservation of the Lougheed Building in Calgary?

MR. WOLOSCHYN: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Lougheed Building, as far as this minister is concerned, a decision has been made not to designate it. However, I might add that the city of Calgary has every opportunity to designate this building if they feel it is significant for the people of Calgary.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Redwater.

Health Care Facilities

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under section 44(2) of the Hospitals Act this government has been given the authority to "determine which hospitals offer a standard of service that qualifies them as approved hospitals." Given this authority, a list has been prepared under Deputy Minister's Order 4/97 of approved hospitals in this province. I tabled that earlier today. My questions are to the Premier. What criteria is used to determine what is and what is not an approved hospital?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the question is more appropriately put to the Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, this is the second or third time this particular question has been asked. It has certainly been answered before. I would like to point out that in a recent court judgment the legislation and its application were upheld in terms of at least this stage of court proceedings.

The Department of Health and Wellness determines what an approved hospital is in terms of a range of services being available which is appropriate to the particular region of the province which is to be served, Mr. Speaker. They approve it on the basis of there being the appropriate staffing with the appropriate qualifications. They approve it today in terms of being part of a regional health authority's system subject to being included in the business plan, which is subject to ministerial approval. Those are a number of the criteria that are considered when we designate facilities.

MS OLSEN: Can the minister then explain how it is that two hospitals, the Eckville municipal hospital and the Elnora general hospital closed in 1995, and another one, the Calgary general hospital, Bow Valley centre, which was blown up, made it onto the government's approved hospital list? Do empty buildings and piles of rubble qualify for approved hospitals, Mr. Minister?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, those particular facilities met all the requirements when they were in operation many years ago.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given the inability of this government to properly monitor the status of approved hospitals in this province, how can Albertans trust this government to effectively regulate the private health care scheme and private health care facilities?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Children's Services

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Recent media reports have talked about a new plan which would put responsibility for some child welfare cases in the Edmonton area into the hands of community agencies. Can the minister tell us about this plan and why it is being proposed?

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each of the 18 child and family services authorities have been requested to develop service plans that reflect local priorities. In the context of Ma'Môwe Capital region service planning about a third of the staff are staff of the authority, and about two-thirds belong to community agencies like McMan, Catholic Social Services, et cetera.

What has been evolving is a service plan that will see low risk or consultations and counseling and support services for children and families in the home dealt with primarily by contract agencies and the higher risk cases that require intensive child welfare protection officers being dealt with more frequently by social workers that are employed by the CFSA. So those are some of the elements of the planning.

MR. BRODA: My first supplemental is also to the Minister of Children's Services. What impact will this proposed service delivery framework have on child welfare workers?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, there has been extensive consultation with the social workers. One of the things they've identified is that frequently the administrative work and the tasks they're asked to do impede their ability to act in their professional capacity in social welfare. In this service plan we look at enhancing their opportunity to give their full professional attention to the child and to the family and removing some of the administrative duties.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, with the caseload review and the work that's being done by our department in reviewing the very specific impacts to social welfare workers in the delivery of the system, we hope to identify even greater efficiencies and, in consultation with the workers, continue to work on behalf of all the best interests of the parties involved.

MR. BRODA: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what is the time line for this framework, and when will it be implemented?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, last Thursday at a meeting held in my constituency the CEO volunteered to the workers that attended that this consultation would be open ended until they addressed all the concerns. So although there is a desire to get with the process, certainly and clearly there's a desire to be co-operative with the workers involved. What we see is a framework of working through the concerns and satisfying mutually all of the parties that there is work that will address their issues.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I have indicated and will be meeting with members of the association and the workers themselves and talking further about some of their concerns in this process as we consult on their issues.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 1999 annual report of the Calgary regional health authority points out that two pilot studies were conducted on the contracting out of surgical procedures to private providers. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Does the minister know the results of those two pilot studies?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as I understand the pilots or the initial projects that were undertaken, they were undertaken with respect to surgical clinics dealing with eye surgery. The valuation was done in terms of performance. They isolated the amount of money that had been previously spent on this particular number of procedures before when it was outside of the system. In fact, we were getting penalized under the Canada Health Act for allowing that to occur.

They isolated that amount of money. They compared it to the money they were spending per case within the contract arrangements and compared it also to the cost that they had incurred in other parts of their system providing these services. They found that they were providing more procedures for the same amount of money as they had been spending before in this particular area.

DR. MASSEY: To the same minister: given, Mr. Minister, that these are the only local studies on the cost-effectiveness of private surgical clinics, what efforts has the minister made to make public those conclusions, given the debate on health care?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would estimate that this is at least the third time the opposition has asked the same question, and I've given the same answer.

DR. MASSEY: To the same minister: will you table those reports?

MR. JONSON: I can provide to them the results that were reported to me, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A number of my constituents have raised with me concerns about the growing waiting time for MRI services both in Medicine Hat and across the province. Several weeks ago the Minister of Health and Wellness announced a plan to purchase four new publicly funded MRI machines for Alberta, namely two in Calgary and two in Edmonton. My questions today are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. While these new MRIs will no doubt dramatically reduce waiting times for people living in Calgary and Edmonton, what action is being taken by the minister to increase access to MRI services in the rest of the province?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as I recall, it was approximately a year and a half ago that we established an expert committee dealing with the whole area of diagnostic imaging. We looked to them to compile an assessment of our capacity in the province and make recommendations as to how we should proceed to improve our overall diagnostic imaging service. One of the very important components of that committee's work was to look at the MRI situation across the province. The committee did indicate that it was feasible, advisable to look at providing MRI services in our regional hospitals.

Following receipt of that report and due consideration by Alberta Health and Wellness and in government, we authorized regional health authorities to move ahead in the Chinook region with an MRI. It is currently in place and operating. An MRI in the David Thompson area is in place, and also in the Palliser region, Medicine Hat, and Mistahia, the Grande Prairie region.

So, Mr. Speaker, that is moving forward. We want to serve the regions of the province as well as the two major centres, so I think this indicates our commitment in that area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you. Well, given that my constituents feel that it seems a bit unfair that communities like Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, and Grande Prairie have been told to undertake public fund-raising so they can acquire MRI facilities and the health authorities are told that they must use ongoing funding from their budgets to fund the operation of the MRIs and the government has helped out Calgary and Edmonton for funding not only for capital but for operational costs, is there going to be an effort to ensure that there is some equity between the allocation of funds to the other regions in the province?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to emphasize that we recognize that in our funding of MRI services we need to be fair to all the regions of the province, including those outside of Edmonton and Calgary. It is not, however, quite the case that fund-raising was not involved in the support at least of two of the MRIs that were established in Edmonton and Calgary. In fact, some rather significant funding was provided in one particular case in terms of the capital cost.

But I would like to make two points, Mr. Speaker. First of all, we do realize that we need to provide operational funding for the MRIs, both the ones in the regions and the ones in the Capital and Calgary regions. We intend to do so on a reasonable basis according to the volume they attract and the costs they incur. That will be done in subsequent business plans, Mr. Speaker.

The other thing is that we will examine the whole area of capital costs incurred, and we will look at factoring in a fair amount of money to each of the regions for the purchase of the actual MRI machines.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is really the only one that most Albertans are concerned about. With this additional funding in place or planned for MRI facilities, will we actually see a significant impact on the waiting lists? When will we actually see the waiting lists drop, Mr. Minister?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to just make a point A and a point B here. First of all with the expansion. There has been some expansion of MRI services in the province in the Chinook region, and with the additional MRIs in the two cities it's brought them up to, I think, five publicly operated MRIs.

We have seen a marked increase in the number of MRI scans being done in this province. If I recall correctly, there's been an increase of somewhere around 15,000 MRI scans per year to over 30,000. With these MRI machines coming onstream, we hope that by the end of this year or very early next year we will rank at the top of MRI performance in the country – and that's publicly funded MRI services – right up there with the current leader, Ontario.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, seven hon. members have advised today that they would like to participate in Recognitions, and we will begin that process in a few seconds from now, but prior to doing that, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly Miss Victoria Gubina, a very talented lawyer and Yeltsin democracy fellow from Saratov, Russia. Miss Gubina is here studying Canadian constitutional corporate and commercial law in Canada for about eight weeks as part of her Yeltsin democracy fellowship, and we're very pleased that three of those precious weeks are being spent right here in our capital city of Edmonton. [remarks in Russian]

Hello, Victoria. It is a pleasure to have you here and to welcome you to Canada and to Alberta. [as submitted]

She has risen, and I would ask all members of the House to please join me in a rousing warm welcome for our special guest.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Tomb of the Unknown Soldier

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today a ceremony took place on the steps of the Legislature to commemorate the repatriation and internment of the remains of an unknown Canadian soldier. This unknown soldier, who died in the First World War and was buried in France, represents all the brave Canadian men and women who have died both in war and in the service of peace. All provinces are participating in this event, which will be completed at a ceremony in Ottawa on May 28 of this year.

At that time the remains of an unidentified soldier, who was selected by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission from a cemetery near Vimy Ridge, will be buried in a special tomb in front of the National War Memorial. This site will be known as the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and will become a focal point of commemoration for all memorial events at the National War Memorial.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my gratitude and that of this Assembly to the Royal Canadian Legion, who initiated this project as a millennium tribute to all Canadians who have died or may die for their country in all conflicts in the future. Now at last Canadians will have their own fitting memorial to these men and women and their families who have sacrificed so much for Canada.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Gold Bar School

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I would like to recognize one of the finest elementary schools in Alberta. Gold Bar school will be celebrating its 40th anniversary on May 25 this spring.

The school was officially opened on October 30, 1959, by then principal Mr. Norman Lougheed. I am proud to say that the community feels a great sense of pride in the school. In fact, there are many current students whose parents once attended Gold Bar school. Today 161 students from kindergarten to grade 6 in seven classes as well as one special-needs class attend this fine school.

On the occasion of Gold Bar school's 40th anniversary I would like to recognize the current principal, Mr. Terry Terlesky, teachers, volunteers, parents, and students for their accomplishments and contributions to the Edmonton-Gold Bar community. A fine school is a reflection of a fine community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Spinal Health Week

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week, May 1 to May 7, 2000, is Spinal Health Week. This annual recognition by the College of Chiropractors of Alberta brings awareness to the relationship of the spine and a person's overall health. For most adults back pain occurs at some point in their lives and is one of the leading causes of disability in Canada.

Chiropractic treatment is an effective method of health care. It often provides patients with relief from pain and improved health without invasive surgery and the use of drugs. Patient satisfaction continues to be very high, and a growing number of Albertans seek access to chiropractic treatment as a result. Last year over 380,000 Albertans consulted a chiropractor.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask that the Members of the Legislative Assembly join me in recognizing the importance of Spinal Health Week and the contributions of our Alberta chiropractors, members of a team of Alberta health care professionals.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Holocaust Remembrance

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we marked the occasion of Holocaust Remembrance Day. This day remembers the unimaginable horrors that were inflicted upon 6 million Jews as well as millions of others who perished in the atrocities of the Second World War. Yom Hashoah ensures that their sacrifices will never be forgotten by future generations.

Alberta's Jewish communities, which include second- and third-generation children of survivors of the concentration camps, must be recognized for their efforts to educate others to ensure that these horrors against humanity will never be witnessed again.

We urge this provincial government to consider two initiatives which will provide a living remembrance of the Holocaust. The first would be the passage of legislation similar to what has occurred in seven other provinces to recognize Holocaust memorial day for the province. The second would be to place a memorial on the grounds of this Legislature. These two actions would be a living memorial to ensure that we never forget.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Properties Sports Association

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Properties Sports Association, which is also known as the PSA, is a highly respected athletic organization in northeast Calgary. This Saturday the association will be hosting a gala evening to celebrate its 25th anniversary. This significant event will pay tribute to and honour all the PSA directors, organizers, parent volunteers, and participants. Over the years they've given countless hours of their time and energy to the athletic and personal development of our young people.

The successes of our PSA teams have been very impressive, Mr. Speaker. Many provincial and citywide championships have been won, and numerous individual honours have been achieved. I am very proud to recognize and say thank you to the 400 volunteers who each year coach 5,000 young players in hockey, figure skating, ringette, basketball, soccer, softball, T-ball, and coach-pitch. Along with many others my own children have had their lives enriched through many enjoyable years of playing basketball with the PSA.

Mr. Speaker, I invite all members of the Assembly to join me in congratulating the Properties Sports Association in celebrating their 25th anniversary.

Library Week

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize our public libraries and the librarians and staff members, all of whom run them with exemplary dedication and purpose. It reminds me of what Andrew Carnegie had to say about the importance of public libraries:

There is not such a cradle of democracy upon the earth as the Free Public Library, this republic of letters, where neither rank, office, nor wealth receives the slightest consideration.

It gives me great pleasure, indeed, to be able to add my own thanks to our own Legislature librarians, who are always most prompt and helpful and display the highest standards of service and expertise. Their skills and generosity are noticeable and remarkable. I speak, I hope, on behalf of everyone here and all those who use this library. This staff does a great job, and we thank them for it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Servants Anonymous Society of Calgary

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am very pleased to rise and speak about the Servants Anonymous Society of Calgary. The SAS was formed in May 1989 to serve the desperate needs of youth aged 16 to 25 who are victims of street life. For these street youth who genuinely want to make a change in their lives and who desire to become productive members of the Calgary community SAS provides this opportunity, because SAS works with these youths and their children. It established a long-term program, three to seven years, which includes housing facilities, in-classroom education, on-the-job training, and follow-up support.

SAS, since its inception, has enjoyed a 70 percent success rate. This is defined by the participants who have not returned to a street lifestyle and who are continually progressing in their journey towards wholeness. SAS believes that success is a journey and not the destination and that real success must be based on serving others. In the end every success is attached to a struggle as well as a dream or a vision.

I would like to ask the Assembly to recognize the great contribution of the Servants Anonymous Society of Calgary in making Alberta a better place.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, today is the birthday of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

THE SPEAKER: Now the leader of the third party on a Standing Order 40 application.

Calgary Herald Strike

Dr. Pannu:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly has no confidence in the government's handling of the escalating labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking to urgency, Mr. Speaker, yesterday evening the labour troubles at the Calgary Herald further escalated. Herald management locked out 105 press operators and production workers. This latest lockout brings to three the number of labour disputes plaguing this once proud Calgary newspaper. A hundred editorial staff and 60-some employees who worked in the Herald distribution centre have already been on a legal strike for the last 177 days. Long and bitter labour disputes inevitably divide communities.

Speaker's Ruling Standing Order 40 Motions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. leader of the third party, just a little reminder. Remember the last time we did this? Remember that the Speaker invited the hon. member to come and visit, so they had a thorough discussion about what the words "urgent and pressing" mean? You don't have to define or give your argument now. All you have to do now is make the case for a pressing necessity, and if the House agrees to it, then you can give your speech.

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly was trying to be very much cognizant of your advice, and I will certainly continue to do that.

DR. PANNU: Speaking to urgency, Mr. Speaker. It is imperative that members have an opportunity to debate the government's handling of the disputes at the Calgary Herald. That is because there is no evidence that the government is actively seeking a resolution to these bitter disputes. The management of the Calgary Herald steadfastly refuses to engage in serious collective bargaining. Was it any surprise, then, when the Herald's owner publicly stated that he plans to wait two years and then just decertify the union?

In the face of this intransigence the Minister of Human Resources and Employment doesn't appear to have lifted a finger. Meanwhile, the minister refuses to meet with 30 striking employees who visited the Legislature several weeks ago. At the same time, the Premier appeared to question the right of journalists to even belong to trade unions. Allowing a debate on this motion would provide an opportunity for the minister on behalf of the government to explain what steps he is taking, if any, to bring the prolonged dispute to an end.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we appear to have a recipe consisting of intransigent management, an anti-union owner, an indifferent government, and terrible labour laws. It's imperative that members be given an opportunity to debate a motion the effect of which should be to light a fire under the government. This confidence that members have in the government's handling of this serious matter should be debated. Members on all sides of the House should urge the government to be more proactive in seeking a fair settlement of the escalating labour disputes at the Calgary Herald. Therefore, I urge all members respectfully to allow this debate to proceed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the hon. leader of the third party certainly complied with all the rules of bringing notice to the Assembly with respect to this matter in terms of circulating it and rising with the appropriate notice, but it now requires unanimous consent to waive the routine of the day to proceed with it.

[Unanimous consent denied]

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it is my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 17, 18, 19, and 20.

[Motion carried]

Housing for Child Welfare Clients

Q17. Mrs. Soetaert moved on behalf of Mrs. Sloan that the following question be accepted.

How many children with child welfare status have been housed in hotel rooms in the Edmonton region between February 18, 1999, and April 5, 2000?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to respond that the government will accept Written Question 17 and will respond following.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert to close the debate.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that information, as does my colleague.

Housing for Child Welfare Clients

Q18. Mrs. Soetaert moved on behalf of Mrs. Sloan that the following question be accepted.

How many children with child welfare status have been housed in jail cells, remand centres, or single men's hostels between February 18, 1999, and April 5, 2000, in the province?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to respond that the government will accept Written Question 18 as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert to close the debate.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're on a good roll this afternoon, so I appreciate the hon. minister's reply. Thank you.

[Written Question 18 carried]

Housing for Child Welfare Clients

Q19. Mrs. Soetaert moved on behalf of Mrs. Sloan that the following question be accepted.

In which hotels in the Edmonton region were children who were receiving services under the Child Welfare Act housed between February 18, 1999, and April 5, 2000?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, once again I'm pleased to rise and indicate that the government will accept Written Question 19.

MR. DICKSON: I just wanted to make this observation, Mr. Speaker. This information has been sought in the past without success, and it's been a great frustration to members of the opposition. I wanted to specifically acknowledge the fact that this minister has found a way to be able to share the information. I wanted to particularly recognize that this is a departure from the past practice of the government, and that should be signaled.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert to close the debate.

MRS. SOETAERT: You bet. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister coming forward with this information.

[Written Question 19 carried]

3:00 Child Welfare Appeals

Q20. Mrs. Soetaert moved on behalf of Mrs. Sloan that the following question be accepted.

What are the reasons for appeal and breakdown of decisions reached in the 485 appeals heard by the child welfare citizens' appeal panel during the 1998-99 fiscal year?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to respond that the government will accept Written Question 20.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert to close the debate.

MRS. SOETAERT: Well, I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a fine day in this Legislature, and I thank the minister for being forthcoming with the information.

[Written Question 20 carried]

head: Motions for Returns

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it is my pleasure to move that Motions for Returns appearing on the Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 29, 31, 32, 36, 37, 38, 41, 42, 43, and 46.

[Motion carried]

West Edmonton Mall Refinancing

M29. Mr. Wickman moved on behalf of Mr. Sapers that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of handwritten notes of a meeting between Jim Dinning, Allister McPherson, and Nader Ghermezian dated January 28, 1994, pertaining to the refinancing of West Edmonton Mall, WEM, as listed on page 9 of the affidavit of records of the WEM corporate defendants, November 30, 1999.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, once again, as this pertains to a situation that is before the courts, we are not able to respond and, therefore, will be rejecting this motion.

I wanted to make a comment. At the beginning the members opposite were delighted with the response from the Minister of Children's Services on written questions, and I said across the House that if the question is written so we can respond, then we are delighted to provide the information. But when we're into a situation of a legal case, court proceedings, hon. members opposite know that we are in a difficult position to get involved because of the fact that there is a court case going on right now. So we will have to reject this motion for a return.

MR. DICKSON: I'm disappointed with that response from the minister. I thought we were making such good progress and that we were going to be able to follow the lead of the Minister of Children's Services, but it appears we're going to have to spend some time this afternoon.

The difficulty with this is that it's a bit of a smokescreen to say that because there's pending litigation and the province is a litigant in a court case, we can't share this document. Let's be really clear. This is not a written question for information. This is a motion for a return. It means we want to see a particular document.

Now, the document is identified in the affidavit of records by Raphael Ghermezian, which has been filed in the action between West Edmonton Mall Property Inc., WEM Holdings Inc., and WEM Management Inc., plaintiffs by counterclaim, and Alberta Treasury Branches. The document is listed on the affidavit of documents. It's tab 113, and it says: "handwritten notes of a meeting between Jim Dinning, Allister McPherson, and Nader Ghermezian."

Mr. Speaker, we know the record exists. We know it was tabled as part of the production in that civil action. So all that we're asking is for the government of the province of Alberta to provide a copy of that document. We're not asking them to make a statement which could in any way compromise their legal position. We're not asking them to do anything which would be prejudicial in any way to the government of the province of Alberta. All we're saying is: the document exists; why wouldn't you share it?

We have to start wondering why they would refuse to turn over that document. The fact that it's part of a pending court case, frankly, is irrelevant. The people also have a right to know.

Thank you very much. Those are the comments I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker.

MR. WICKMAN: To close debate, Mr. Speaker, I won't repeat what the Member for Calgary-Buffalo has said. I anticipated the response. I will close debate by saying that I'm very, very disappointed in the minister's refusal to accept the motion.

[Motion for a Return 29 lost]

West Edmonton Mall Refinancing

M31. Mr. Wickman moved on behalf of Mr. Sapers that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of excerpts of cabinet agenda and attachments dated March 12, 1996, pertaining to the refinancing of West Edmonton Mall as listed on page 34 of the affidavit of records of Her Majesty the Queen in right of Alberta dated November 30, 1999.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Once again, because of the court proceedings that are under way, we have been given advice by our legal advisors that we cannot get involved in this debate. I take exception to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo's comments that we are trying to do something untoward. He knows perfectly well, coming with a legal background, that when there has been litigation commenced, if outsiders or the public get involved in that, the case can be skewed.

That's not to say that the public won't see the end result and see the documentation down the road, but when you're in the middle of a litigation – and he has seen this firsthand in other cases or has been able to read about them, where political parties get involved in decisions before courts and skew the case. We're not prepared to do that. That's why there's a general rule that when something is before the courts, we stay out of it. We don't get involved in that.

We will not be able to accept this motion for a return because, again, it is before the courts. So we'll be rejecting it, Mr. Speaker.

MR. DICKSON: I'd just make this observation. I think the minister confuses somebody making comment about a matter before the courts and producing a simple document. The document speaks for itself. What she says is absolutely correct if we were to be asking a minister for an opinion, advice, that sort of thing. We're not asking for any of those things. We're asking for a single document. It exists. It's been identified.

The minister should have more confidence in the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench of this province. Nothing they do is going to be impaired by sharing with us a document which is already part of the lawsuit, and if she's getting that legal advice, that's pretty scary.

MRS. NELSON: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. Point of order.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

MRS. NELSON: I have to make it very clear. I don't want the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to in any way interpret that I do not have complete faith in the justice system and the judiciary of this province. They have done a wonderful job, and they serve us well. I think it's wrong for you to twist that around, and I won't tolerate that in this House. I have complete faith in the judiciary system in this province and support it completely and respect the process. So I will not have you play a political game by intimidating me by telling people I don't have faith in the justice system, because that's wrong.

THE SPEAKER: Well, on this point of order, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: The minister's words speak for themselves. Her initial comments are on the record, and others will be the judge of them.

Debate Continued

MR. WICKMAN: Again, to close debate, Mr. Speaker, I won't repeat the words of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, who has said it very, very wisely. Again, I'm very, very disappointed that the minister uses the courts as an excuse when it's not necessary.

West Edmonton Mall Refinancing

M32. Mr. Wickman moved on behalf of Mr. Sapers that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of correspondence from Stockwell Day to Triple Five Group Ltd., Nader Ghermezian, dated June 30, 1998, pertaining to the refinancing of West Edmonton Mall as listed on page 40 of the affidavit of records of West Edmonton Mall, WEM, dated November 30, 1999.

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, we will be rejecting this motion as it again pertains to the court cases that are under way, and we will not intrude in that arena. We hear the argument: we just want documents so we can stand there. I've seen so many times when members of the opposition take a document out of context, run around and play a political game with it. There's too much at stake with the province's position in this whole judicial process to have political games played. We've seen them today already. Therefore, we will be rejecting this motion for a return.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Speaker, again I must say that I'm very, very disappointed. The minister is beginning to sound like a broken record, and I anticipate we're going to continue to see this time after time. Possibly if we had the Member for Sherwood Park responding, she would at least show some favour.

Electricity Deregulation

M36. Mr. Wickman moved on behalf of Mr. White that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all studies and reports prepared by or for the Department of Resource Development between May 25, 1999, and April 3, 2000, evaluating the impact of electricity deregulation on the utility bills of various classes of Alberta consumers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Forestry.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is rejecting Motion for a Return 36.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Calder has repeatedly asked questions in the House on the impact of deregulation on the utility bills. He has made a case that there is reason to be concerned. Copies of all studies and reports give us the opportunity also to confirm that the minister has some direction as to where he's headed and that he's not just doing it blindly. It's very, very disappointing, and it just leaves us in a situation where we continue to be very skeptical of the results of the deregulation of energy in the province.

Mineral Revenue Information System

M37. Mr. Wickman moved on behalf of Mr. White that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all studies and reports prepared by or for the Department of Resource Development between January 1, 1999, and April 3, 2000, evaluating the cost-effectiveness of the mineral revenue information system, MRIS.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Forestry.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is rejecting Motion for a Return 37.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Speaker, to conclude. I have to conclude myself that the government has simply not done the necessary studies and reports before they plunged ahead. They've done it blindly. They've left us in the dark, they've left the public in the dark, and possibly they're in the dark themselves. Again, very disappointing.

West Edmonton Mall Refinancing

M38. Mr. Wickman moved on behalf of Mr. Sapers that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of excerpts of cabinet agenda and minutes dated February 6, 1996, pertaining to the refinancing of West Edmonton Mall as listed on page 34 of the affidavit of records of Her Majesty the Queen in right of Alberta dated November 30, 1999.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford talked about a broken record. Well, I don't know how many hundreds of times now on motions for returns that pertain to this court case we have had to say that we cannot accept these motions for returns while this court case is pending and under way. I don't know how many times you have to tell them that.

This is another question that pertains to affidavits, et cetera, that are pertaining to that case, and we must reject this.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Speaker, if it weren't every question that the minister responded to and rejected using the courts as a basis, maybe one could give some credibility that periodically she would be correct. But when the minister blindly uses the same argument for every motion for a return, then it leaves one very skeptical that the courts are simply being used as an excuse.

West Edmonton Mall Refinancing

M41. Mr. Wickman moved on behalf of Mr. Sapers that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of excerpts of minutes dated July 20, 1994, pertaining to the refinancing of West Edmonton Mall as listed on page 33 of the affidavit of records of Her Majesty the Queen in right of Alberta dated November 30, 1999.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Once again this is another motion for a return that pertains to "the affidavit of records of Her Majesty the Queen in right of Alberta dated November 30, 1999." I don't know how much clearer that makes it. This is part of a legal case that is going on. If you would read the questions and ask what you're asking us, you would realize very clearly that we are not able to participate in giving this information out while this case is under way. If you would like to have the same response that was given earlier of accepting written questions, word the question so it's something that we in fact can give you and quit bringing back questions when you know perfectly well we can't file that information. Therefore, we are rejecting this motion for a return.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, let me just make it really clear. There is no legal impediment to the government of the province of Alberta providing this document. There is no statute law and there is absolutely no regulation that prohibits the production of the document. The only thing that stands between the public of Alberta having access to this document is the fact that the government chooses not to share it.

This is an affidavit of records that is in the court record. This minister and her government have the ability and the power without any legal impediment to share the record, and if they choose not to, well, let them take the heat and have the courage to stand and say: we choose not to share the document. But, for pete's sake, let's not have some suggestion that their hands are tied in some way, that they'd be breaking some law, or that somehow they would be prejudicing the interests of taxpayers by not sharing the information. That is utter nonsense, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to close the debate.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has said it very, very well, and I'll leave it at that.

West Edmonton Mall Refinancing

M42. Mr. Wickman moved on behalf of Mr. Sapers that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of excerpts of the agenda and priorities committee agenda, with attachments, dated October 18, 1993, pertaining to the refinancing of West Edmonton Mall as listed on page 34 of the affidavit of records of Her Majesty the Queen in right of Alberta dated November 30, 1999.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, because this pertains to the exact same situation, we will be rejecting Motion for a Return 42.

I want to comment on Calgary-Buffalo. He knows perfectly well that he can go down, if he wants to, to the courthouse and request that information and pay for it to be produced there. What he wants to play is a little political game of doing this, and I'm not going to do that.

So we will be rejecting this motion for a return, and we will not have politicians interfering in the judicial system.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Speaker, methinks I've heard that record before. The Member for Calgary-Buffalo does not play political games. He has made good arguments as to why it can be released, and the minister fails to heed it.

West Edmonton Mall Refinancing

M43. Mr. Wickman moved on behalf of Mr. Sapers that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of minutes dated March 21, 1994, pertaining to the refinancing of West Edmonton Mall as listed on page 33 of the affidavit of records of Her Majesty the Queen in right of Alberta dated November 30, 1999.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You talk about political games. The previous motion talked about page 34; this one talks about page 33. I mean, just so you can have a whole slew of motions for returns on the Order Paper. Again the same scenario. This is before the courts, and if people think that the opposition is not playing political games with this, they're not reading the Order Paper, because this goes page by page by page. Naturally we have to again, with the same answer, reject the motion for a return because this is before the courts. But that's an example of the political games that get played on the other side, to list one of these for every page of the affidavit, and that's wrong.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. House leader of the Official Opposition.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If the minister will read the affidavit of records that's been filed in Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta, action number 9903-18469 – now, this is an affidavit of records filed by Robert A. Bhatia of the city of Edmonton, Assistant Deputy Provincial Treasurer. Remember; this gentleman works for us. He works for the people of the province of Alberta, and he has filed an affidavit of records.

Now, here's what's interesting. These are documents which the government does not object to producing for purposes of the lawsuit, and here's the document right here. It's number 007, excerpts of minutes, and we've got the date and so on, so it's all here.

You know, the province would sooner send people scurrying around to courthouses trying to get records. The reality, as this minister well knows . . .

MRS. NELSON: Do you know where the courthouse is, Gary?

MR. DICKSON: I know where the Law Courts is in the city of Edmonton, but I don't have a staff . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Please, please. The hon. House leader of the Official Opposition has the floor.

MR. DICKSON: I remember this is the government that at one time – they've lost their way – talked about making information accessible to Albertans, talked about one-window, one-door access to government services. This was the government that talked about making it easier for citizens of this province to be able to get information on how their tax dollars are spent or, in the case of West Edmonton Mall, misspent.

Now we have the minister saying the most insulting thing I can imagine, because when she says that to us, she says it to Albertans. She's saying it to the 3 million people in this province who want to find out how their tax dollars are being spent. She's effectively saying: you know, you go down to the courthouses, and if you live in Pincher Creek, Alberta, you travel to Edmonton and you wait in line and you pay the money to access the court record. That's the only way you're going to find out what the government of the province of Alberta is filing on their behalf.

You know, if you want to put out hurdles and make it as difficult as possible for Albertans to find out how their tax dollars are being misspent, you're doing an excellent job, Madam Minister, through the Speaker, because that's what this is all about, and that's the obstruction we have seen this afternoon. We can sum it all up together and say: this is a question of obstruction and simply making it as difficult as possible for Albertans to access information.

Thank you very much.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Speaker, in closing, let me say that it's with a great deal of disappointment that I have to acknowledge that I batted 100 percent in the wrong direction, while my colleague over here has batted 100 percent in the right direction. Again I must say that I'm very, very disappointed that not one of the motions for returns was accepted.

THE SPEAKER: Don't feel bad, hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. I've had those kinds of days too.

Employment Initiatives for AISH Recipients

M46. Mrs. Soetaert moved on behalf of Mrs. Sloan that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of requests for proposals for employment program initiatives designed for assured income for the severely handicapped and assured support program recipients since February 28, 1999.

MRS. SOETAERT: Well, it's a good day for playing ball, Mr. Speaker, because I'm on the winning team right now, and Edmonton-Rutherford owes me supper if I bat 100 percent. So we're going for this motion for a return with great hopes, and I hope it's an expensive place for supper.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know. I don't know. Okay. All right. What the heck. Sure, I'll accept.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert to close the debate.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you. Absolutely to close. Since Lent is over, I think I'll even have a glass of wine with that meal, which has nothing to do with the motion. In all seriousness, because I'm sure my colleague will read Hansard today, I do appreciate the acceptance of this motion.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: I wish to advise the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert that the victory is not here yet. The House still has to vote.

[Motion for a Return 46 carried]

THE SPEAKER: Thank you very much, hon. members. This place can work when it wants to. Thank you.

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 206 School (Students' Code of Conduct) Amendment Act, 2000

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Livingstone-MacLeod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I'd like to just finish with a few comments that I started yesterday in Committee of the Whole and beg the indulgence of the committee just to talk about something that came forward into the public since this bill received second reading. That particular document was a report that was released by the Task Force on Children at Risk. It was titled Start Young, Start Now, and in this report there are several recommendations that Bill 206 either partly or wholly addresses.

The reason I bring this up is that the task force was created to examine issues facing children at risk, including but not limited to those who are at risk of developing violent behaviour. I think that Bill 206 is broader in focus, dealing with all children in a learning environment, but certainly it deals with those kids who are at risk and who might be prone to violence.

The first step of the recommendations fell under "Developing healthy kids," and in that section recommendation 5 was to "make sure schools are ready when a crisis occurs." This includes implementing "a comprehensive crisis response plan" and training teachers "to identify students who may be at risk" and referring them to "appropriate professionals."

Included in Bill 206 in section 2(3) and (4) are provisions that require schools to "provide counseling for students where appropriate," and to "include penalty options which enable students to continue pursuing their studies."

Now, with reference to this, it's interesting to note that the Alberta School Boards Association, when it comes to counseling, made a comment to me that there are not enough funds available for counseling and that they're a little worried about this provision. But I'm sure that as this particular report goes through the process, it will identify that more funds be provided for counseling, where appropriate, for students. I see that as something that's being positive and coming down the road and being available for school boards to address in the long term.

This counseling and those school alternatives will ensure that students will get the help when they need it, even if it means an alternative outside a school environment, where possible. As well, a school code of conduct puts in writing which behaviour is and is not tolerated in schools, and this means that situations will be handled swiftly and disruption will be kept to a minimum and students who need help will get it.

The code of conduct that I'm proposing will also directly address recommendation 9 from the task force, which also falls under the section "Developing healthy kids." This states that we must "take steps to prevent and protect children and youth from abuse, violence, bullying and gang activities" in schools and communities. As I stated in second reading of Bill 206, in section 2 boards must have in writing a policy dealing with these activities. This will make it explicitly clear that these activities are not allowed nor tolerated in schools. A code of conduct fosters an atmosphere of mutual respect in which everyone knows what is expected of them. This goes back to the idea that students have the right to a stable learning environment and a safe school but also the responsibility of maintaining that environment by following the rules that they established, not rules that are established for them.

Madam Chairman, those are just a few areas of the task force report that Bill 206 will address. The basic idea is ensuring students are safe at school and that they can also receive help if they need it, and this is really the main thrust of the bill.

Now, Madam Chairman, since drafting the bill, I have received valuable input from constituents, colleagues, and even a few comments from the opposition. As I said before, the foundation of this bill is solid, and I think the input I have received will add strength to the legislation. My focus is on Alberta schools and students to ensure that they are safe and cared for in a stable and supportive place so that our young people can grow. So I'm welcoming comments or amendments from any hon. members that they wish to put forward.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Madam Chairman. At this time I'd like maybe the table officers to distribute an amendment that I had duly authorized by Parliamentary Counsel.

While we do that, I'd like to speak briefly in support of Bill 206, the School (Students' Code of Conduct) Amendment Act, 2000. Essentially, I guess part of the reason why I support this is because in today's day and age we seem to be hearing more and more with respect to unacceptable conduct and violence and threats within our school system. Quite frankly, I think that something needs to be done in terms of standardizing, perhaps, suggestions with respect to a code of conduct so that everybody takes it seriously within the province. It's one thing to say, "Well, you know, all of the boards do have some policy," but if you ask them to produce it, sometimes it's difficult to find. Perhaps they have a lot of experience over the years but nothing in writing that really specifies what is to happen.

There is one additional comment that I would like to make, and the mover of the bill might consider this, if he wants to. You know, after submitting my ideas for amendments, I'd feel a whole lot better if in fact there was some way of making it mandatory for schools to notify their boards when an incident occurs. We've had a few examples now of incidents that perhaps for one reason or another the principal may not have known how to handle. In some cases that I am aware of, the incident never does get reported back to the school board itself. So I would be a lot happier if the mover of the bill might consider even a further amendment with respect to that to make it mandatory that at least the school reports the incident back to the board. Because if you don't report it, then how do you know if you have a problem or how do you know whether or not you even have a standard way of looking after the process of handling a problem?

With those additional comments I'm going to now move to the amendments. Madam Chairman, will this amendment be called A1?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Yes, we will deem this amendment A1.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Madam Chairman.

Now, essentially what this does, if we look at section 2, under 44.1(1), "A board shall develop and implement a written policy respecting student conduct which addresses the following activities." What I've done is added "but is not limited to" after "addresses." In other words, it's not only these activities. It's not limited to these activities, although these activities are listed there. Therefore, the first amendment deals with adding the words "but is not limited to" after the word "addresses". It would then read, "A board shall develop and implement a written policy respecting student conduct which addresses, but is not limited to, the following activities." So that's how that first amendment would work.

The second part of that amendment would add section (h), which I believe is an extremely important part that maybe was missed, because we hear so much now about threats and intimidation. You know, it doesn't have to be physically present in the school itself.

It can come from the Internet. It can come through fax machines. It can come through e-mails. It can come through letters. It can come in many different ways. So section (h) would add “threats or intimidation of any kind against another person” to the list that the hon. member has proposed in the bill.

I would ask for your support with respect to these amendments and would also ask the mover of the bill to consider whether or not the reporting of incidents should be mandatory with respect to informing the board that something has taken place. We’re hearing these days that some of these threats happen but that the board doesn’t know about them.

Thank you very much, Madam Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont for the amendments. I believe that in this particular situation adding “but is not limited to” will relieve some of the concern that the Alberta School Boards Association had about this bill being too restrictive. Adding item (h), “threats or intimidation of any kind against another person” to the list will also add a new dimension to this bill that is very, very important and something that I didn’t think about.

The member’s comment regarding notification to the school board by a principal when an action took place in a school is an interesting concept, and I hadn’t thought of that. I was mostly thinking about a code of conduct that is developed by a school with the school council, the parent council, principals, staff, and teachers all being involved. In thinking quickly about this, if the principal is going to be involved in developing this grassroots, school-based code of conduct, that’s something that could be incorporated within the code of conduct, being reported directly to the school board. So there is some flexibility within this bill at the grassroots level to put those types of things in. In order to keep the momentum of the bill going, I would suggest that principals then look at putting that provision into a code of conduct at the local level for their own protection.

With that, Madam Chairman, I support these amendments and ask all members to support Calgary-Egmont’s amendments on Bill 206.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Could I have unanimous consent to recognize the member that I failed to recognize?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MS PAUL: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I guess sitting way back here in the corner you don’t see me that readily.

Yes, I’m standing to speak, obviously, to the amendments that the hon. member made in adding the clause “threats or intimidation of any kind against another person” after part (g). I do support that wholeheartedly.

I think we have found that a bill like Bill 206, School (Students’ Code of Conduct) Amendment Act, brought in by the hon. member, is actually very appropriate at this time, when we’ve seen a lot of tragedies in our schools not only across Canada but across the States as well. I think it does take the involvement of the school boards, obviously, to buy into and support policies that are made with respect to conduct and discipline in our school systems.

The reporting mechanism is absolutely key. We have to have that open line, whether it be through the Legislative Assembly, whether it be through the school systems, whether it be through the School Act, to implement and do some straightforward planning, whether the planning, unfortunately, be in crisis intervention, perhaps before there is a tragedy, or simply something that gives the school board a source of information with respect to what is happening in their schools that they are the elected officials to represent in the community. If there are tragedies that are occurring, we all have to take responsibility and try to make a safe place for our youth to learn and to go to school and feel safe and learn what is needed to be done.

This bill is also very timely with respect to the task force that was done under the Minister of Children’s Services. Start Young, Start Now reflects the crises with children at risk, and I think it’s a very, very appropriate title: Start Young. That is where it seems that any violent situations, any bullying, any carrying-ons in schools do start.

I applaud the member for bringing the bill forward, and I applaud the Member for Calgary-Egmont for his amendments. I think they’re very timely and very appropriate. So with those few comments I’ll take my seat.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Is there anyone else who wishes to speak?

[The clauses of Bill 206 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Are you agreed that the committee now rise and report?

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

MR. SHARIFF: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following with some amendments: Bill 206. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur with this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So carried.

Bill 207
Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing
Calculation Act

[Debate adjourned April 18: Mr. White speaking]

MR. JACQUES: Madam Speaker, it’s my pleasure today to rise and speaking on Bill 207, the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Calculation Act, that's been sponsored by the Member for Edmonton-McClung. At the outset I'd like to say that I'm not going to be supporting this bill for various reasons.

As I was looking through the principle of this bill, I was reminded of I think it was a television series called the Jerry Seinfeld show. There was a bunch of characters in the show, and the whole show was about a nothing. There were characters by the names of Elaine and Kramer and some other characters, and it was all formatted on a nothing. There was no substance to it. So when you look at the principle of the bill, one has to look at it: does the principle have some substance, or is it a nothing? Well, unfortunately, Madam Speaker, in this particular case the substance of the bill is nonexistent, so you're left with a nothing.

I reflect on the comments by the Member for Edmonton-Calder, who was speaking to this. He said that it "is not the be-all and end-all." Well, I think we all would concur with that comment because it's a nothing, and if it's a nothing, then it can't do anything. So here we are, ironically, with a bill that's before us that is a nothing.

In fairness, whether our political philosophies are different or our ideologies are different, if a bill comes forward and it has merit, has substance, has some principles, and it's clearly with objectives, then I think most members of this Assembly take a look at it on the basis of: yeah, okay; let me look at it on the basis of what the bill says and what the bill is trying to achieve. In other words, there's some kind of very related outcomes, some benchmarks. So when I read Bill 207, I was trying to go through this process of saying: you know, I'm sorry; I seem to come up here with a nothing. If it's a nothing, then why is the bill in front of us?

So I then tried to put some tests to it. I said: well, you know, maybe I'm really reading this wrong; maybe I've got the wrong end of the stick on this one. So I said: what is this kind of constituent concern that is being raised by the hon. member to bring forward this debate in the Legislative Assembly as a private member's bill? Now, remember, Madam Speaker, that a private member's bill is not a bill of the opposition. It is not a bill of the opposition. It is a bill of a private member. But the interesting thing is that when you read through Hansard and you look at the comments of the leader and I believe it was the Member for Edmonton-Manning and the Member for Edmonton-Calder, you quite clearly see it's not a private member's bill. It's a Liberal-sponsored philosophy, principle, and quite clearly. That's fair enough. They've said that it is, and that's fair, although it is, as I said, a private member's bill.

So here we have a Liberal philosophy that is a nothing. Then I went through and said: well, if it's a nothing, then why would the member draft and introduce legislation that lacks any form of either objective or rationale? You then come through and you say: "Well, okay. Again let's put some tests to it. Does it improve the delivery of government services to the citizens of this fair province?" You look at it and say: no, because it's a nothing. So then you say, "Well, does it help clarify something for the people of Alberta?" and again you say: no, because it's a nothing. Then you say: does it remedy something from a legislative gap perspective? Well, again nothing. Then you say: well, does it update and modernize or in some way change an existing act for the benefit of Albertans? No. Nothing. Then you ask the question: well, does it bring forward a new idea, a new concept that's going to keep our province on the leading edge of innovation, that's going to make us be admired throughout Canada, throughout even North America? Again, you answer no because you've got a nothing.

Then you have to come back again and say: well, gee, what's the motivation here? Then you look at the bill and you look at the specifics of the bill. It says that the Treasurer is going to prepare an annual report, that it's going to be based on an assumption, and that assumption is going to reflect an arbitrary percentage of personal income taxes that would be available to municipalities. Not could be, not will be, but might be, maybe. I don't know. It's an arbitrary percentage. So you come back: you've got a nothing bill with an arbitrary percentage.

Then you look at it and say: well, this arbitrary percentage and this method of talking about it could be selected in one of two ways. The first way is that we would debate and vote on a motion that would be moved by the Provincial Treasurer. The Provincial Treasurer is going to select an arbitrary percentage. He's going to reach out, get an arbitrary percentage, and he's going to introduce it in the Legislature. So we have an arbitrary percentage in a nothing bill. Now, if the Legislative Assembly in its wisdom decides not to deal with this arbitrary percentage by June 15, then the Treasurer would choose an arbitrary percentage. Then he would bring that arbitrary percentage back to the Assembly for endorsement. So, again, what have you got? Nothing.

Again, when you look at it, the interesting thing about the bill is that every year you're going to go through this. Every year you're going to deal with a nothing, and every year you're going to deal with an arbitrary percentage. You know, again you come back and say: okay; let me kind of get a handle on this. Let's say, for example, that personal income taxes were $4 billion in a year, and let's say that this arbitrary percentage was 10 percent. So 10 percent times $4 billion. Gee, is that $400 million? I think so. You know, it doesn't take too much to calculate that, and we know that if it was 20 percent, then it would be $800 million.

AN HON. MEMBER: Let's go for 5.

MR. JACQUES: A good question. What if it was 5? Well, gee whiz, that might be $200 million.

So here we have this kind of report and this arbitrary percentage that are going to be debated but can't do anything. It's going to be in legislation requiring this Legislative Assembly to debate and, again, can't do anything. But with the stroke of a pen and in our mind we can say that 10 percent, for example, of $4 billion is $400 million. So do we need an act to say that this is how you calculate 10 percent of $4 billion, for example?

Again, you come back and say: well, what's the purpose? Well, again I'm not sure here. I think we've got a nothing. Not only that, but we're going to produce an annual report that is going to be based on an assumption, and the assumption is going to be arbitrary. So if you have an assumption and the roots of the assumption are arbitrary and it can't do anything, then do you have a nothing? You know, I'm trying to work through the principles of this.

Now, the other interesting thing. If you carry the extension of that, in the bill it says that "the Provincial Treasurer shall assume." He shall assume, not calculate, not based on a formula. He doesn't do it on the basis of consulting. He assumes. It's not even based on the phases of the moon. He assumes. So now we're going to have an assumption of an arbitrary, of a nothing in legislation.

So, again, you come back to the question. You've got the assumption, you've got the arbitrary things, and you've got the nothing. Now, how does this really relate back to something that you would say to the municipalities? Does it really make sense that municipalities could – not will but could – receive, assuming the province allocated it, an arbitrary portion of personal tax revenue? Now, you can't do it. All you can do is assume it. Okay? You can't do it; you can assume it. Again you come back and say: well, gee whiz, if we're going to assume something on an arbitrary basis, why can't we just calculate that? I mean, I could table a report that says: "Hey, here's the assumption. Here's the calculation. Want some information? Here it is."

Then you get into the real crux of the question: does that report really facilitate some better form of co-operation, some better form of understanding between the provincial and the municipal governments? Does this report, that again is a nothing based on arbitrary percentage and assumptions, help clarify the existing funding streams that we have? Again, I think the answer to that is no. Most importantly, I think, does it help introduce some stability into provincial/municipal funding arrangements, which could very well be the objective that the author of the bill had in mind? Again, you can't answer the question and say yes; you can only answer no to the question. So if you go through all of this and you ask those questions and you quite clearly come up with no, then you're back to the nothing and you're back to the fundamental question: why is this legislation in front of us?

Again you ask the question: does this in some way bring more accountability to the existing funding streams, particularly as it relates to the business planning processes which are recognized by this Legislature and recognized by virtually all provincial governments across Canada as a leading role that Alberta has taken in this regard? Does this somehow complement this leading role? Again, no. Does it in some way bring to the table the municipal concerns that need to be addressed through discussion and consultation with the provincial government? That's a very legitimate question. It's a very legitimate process. But does this help it? No. In no way, shape, or form.

Then we get back to a very critical area and say: does the report, based on these assumptions, based on this arbitrary thing, improve the overall system of municipal grants and funding? Again, I think any rational person working through this on any rational basis would only come up with the conclusion of no.

Of course, the primary example of why this can't happen and why it's a nothing bill is because a money bill cannot be put forward by a private member. That's the bottom line of it. So what you have is a thinly disguised veil of something that is a nothing. Other than bringing, if you like, quote, the issue to the Legislature floor for purposes of debate, although we're not quite sure what we're debating in terms of, if you like, what could have been an objective but can't be an objective because of the restrictions that we place under our Standing Orders on how we conduct our business, then why is it here? I'm not sure.

I think that in time, Madam Speaker, there will be researchers who are looking at the debate history. They will look at milestones. Educators will look at this body over time and say: where are the meaningful milestones of the debate and the introduction of bills into this Legislature, particularly as it relates to private bills? Well, I'm afraid the example that is going to be put forward as not the best example could very well be this bill. It really goes back to the nothing. It goes back to the assumptions. It goes back to the arbitrary thing. It doesn't meet any of the acid tests that normally we as legislators and I think all citizens in this province would look at from the point of view of saying that it's meaningful to this Legislative Assembly and to the citizens of this province.

The interesting thing is that it can't be a money bill. Even if it were a money bill – and you can't stretch that into debate because it isn't a money bill. It goes back to the principle that if indeed it was, again the basic question would be: do you want this assumption, this arbitrary number that would be applied for purposes of determining funding that would go to municipal governments?

Remember that it is personal income taxes only that this bill is targeting. If you took the position of taxation on a personal basis, if the people of this province said, "We don't want personal taxes or we want them really down," do we want a funding formula – we can't have the funding formula because this is not a money bill. But if it were, would you really want a funding formula that would be tied to a taxation system that hopefully over time will result in far less funding through this provincial government by taking less money out of the people of this province? That is a very fundamental question that I think is at odds, if you like, with the fundamental principle that isn't in this bill because it can't be in this bill because it's not a money bill. Therefore, you're back to the nothing.

So I would suggest, Madam Speaker, that probably the time has come to put the bill out of its misery. Let's get on with some meaningful business in this Legislature, and let us defeat this bill at the earliest opportunity.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to add my comments on Bill 207, which is the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Calculation Act. What the bill does is provide the municipalities with access to a portion of the provincial personal income tax base, allocates a percentage of provincial personal income tax revenues to municipalities on a per capita basis beginning in the fiscal year 2000-2001. It allows the province to restructure provincial grant programs. Allocations to municipalities would be population based and determined pursuant to agreements by the AUMA and the AAMDC.

Now, Madam Speaker, I had the opportunity to sit on Edmonton city council for nine years, and I know there are many other members of this House, including yourself, who had the distinct privilege and honour of representing the local taxpayer at the municipal level. I'm not sure about your particular municipality, but when I attended the AUMA conferences and the AAMDC conventions and the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities convention and such, one of the common threads, in fact one of the very first resolutions I ever proposed in attending AUMA, was a revenue-sharing formula based on oil revenues. The reason for that was that common concern that was expressed by municipal leaders across the country.

Grants that were given by the provincial governments were generally done on a sort of conditional basis. In other words, there would be a $12 per capita base for recreation, social programs, and so on. There would be transportation programs, 75 percent and 25 percent, 90 percent and 10 percent, but all conditional. The 90 percent and 10 percent was conditional upon the roadway being a certain type of roadway. At times we as municipal leaders, elected representatives, felt like we were beggars with our hands out, and the province would throw us crumbs. Some municipal councillors would get the inferiority complex that we were in fact a junior government, that the provincial government was the municipal government.

MRS. SOETAERT: It was insulting.

MR. WICKMAN: It was very, very insulting.

Over the years municipalities have constantly cried to the provincial government: let's form a partnership; let's be a partnership; let's recognize each other as being equal. One of the greatest shortcomings in terms of equality, of course, is access to revenues. The provincial government basically has unlimited access to revenue. For example, when the provincial government decides they need more money, what do they do? They stick in VLT machines. When they need more money: more VLT machines, slot machines.

MR. DICKSON: We get to talk about that on the next bill, Bill 208.

MR. WICKMAN: On the next bill, that will come up. Exactly.

They stick a fee on liquor, stick user fees on licences, tax this, tax that. But municipalities are very, very limited in the areas that they can tax, and they become very, very dependent on municipal taxation through property taxation, and that creates a problem. That creates a problem in the sense that the other levels of government – and I won't call them senior levels of government, because they're not senior; they're equal levels of government – are in the position, because of the strong economy across the country and here in Alberta, that there are surpluses. The government is able to balance budgets, and the government is able to say: "We have surpluses, and we can put a little bit of money here and a little bit of money there. We can do this. We can do that. We can download onto the municipalities and take away about half of their revenues that were flowing down, thereby saving us all of that money." The federal government as well has a tendency to do the same thing, unfortunately, to the provinces, as in health care, and we continuously cry, recognizing that the federal government has to accept the responsibility as well.

You look at the municipalities. When they come to prepare their budget and they suddenly realize they're going to have a deficit, they can't operate at a deficit. They're not allowed by law to operate at a deficit. They can't turn around and say, "Well, we're going to come up with this new system of taxation to get more revenue by putting VLTs in the hotels and the cafes," or whatever they may do that would be in a sense additional revenue. They can't download. They can't turn around and say: well, we're going to reduce the amounts of money that go to the school boards. They can't do that. That's where the buck stops, and you, Madam Speaker, would realize that fully. I don't have to give you a sermon or preach to you, because you fully understand, having been there.

Now, what this particular bill attempts to do is recognize that residents in the various municipalities pay income tax. I don't have the figures, but if you look, for example, at Edmonton and you look at how much money went from Edmonton into the current provincial coffers in the form of personal income tax – and these are people that live in Edmonton – it would amount to hundreds of millions of dollars. I won't say billions of dollars but hundreds of millions of dollars. Why shouldn't the municipality have a share of that? Why shouldn't they have a certain percentage?

MR. DICKSON: There's no good reason.

MR. WICKMAN: No, there isn't, except there's a disadvantage to the province in that the province can no longer treat them like puppets. In other words, the province can no longer say: "Well, you have to spend it here. You've got to spend it there. You have to do this. You have to do that." It would give the municipalities a little more independence than the provincial government would like to see them actually acquire.

MR. DICKSON: The province would have to negotiate.

MR. WICKMAN: They would have to negotiate. They would have to recognize them as being equal partners. They would have to recognize that they in fact serve the same type of function, that they are accountable to the same people, and so on and so forth.

The government has never made the case why they simply don't cut the strings loose, recognize that there has to be a formula put in place so that revenue sharing can occur and so the municipalities can direct their own affairs and decide as to how these dollars are going to be spent.

When comments were made when this bill was dealt with earlier, the minister responded. He made a number of comments that I want to, again, respond to. The minister said:

The descriptive rhetoric used by the hon. member to describe this bill in no way reflects the speculation that appears in the paper. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, there is no resemblance between what's in this paper and what is being needed.

That's what the Minister of Municipal Affairs said on April 12.

However, the Leader of the Official Opposition, making it very clear, had indicated on April 5 in her remarks:

Unfortunately, because Bill 207 is a private member's bill, it is restricted from having a number of important elements, including a mechanism through which the municipalities would be able to access the income tax base. As all members are aware, private members' bills cannot deal specifically with money issues since nongovernment members are unable to introduce a money bill in the Legislature.

The member recognized that there is that shortcoming in the bill, and that shortcoming is in the bill because of the requirements that surround a private member's bill. So the minister should have been aware of that when the minister made his comments.

Also, I want to point out that the Premier of this province said on March 9 in Alberta Hansard: "A bill is the most important document that can ever be introduced in the Assembly." So we should never, never make light of a bill, whether it's a private member's bill, whether it's a government bill, whatever. Don't make light of it. It is a very, very important document.

On September 9, 1993, the Speaker of the House – he was not Speaker then; in 1993 I believe he was deputy Premier – made the statement: "There's provision here for the first time for private members to actually see their Bills made into law in the province of Alberta. That's quite remarkable." Those are the words of the present Speaker, who at that time was the deputy Premier.

Now, I can look at examples of private members' bills similar to Bill 207, one being Bill 205, the Debt Retirement Act of 1995, which was introduced at that particular time by Dr. Percy, the member for I believe at that time it was called Edmonton-Parkallen. Recognizing the previous precedent that has been set, we are extremely disappointed that government members would table Alberta Liberal Caucus News simply as a means to facilitate a point of order rather than engage in serious discussion on the merits of the proposal.

Then, Madam Speaker, the minister went on to say that very same day, April 12, in response to another comment that had been made: "We're reviewing the education property tax." In response to that, let me point out that despite the government's so-called review of the education property tax, the residential portion of the education property tax is projected to increase from $651.2 million in 1995 to $774.7 million in 2002, an increase of $123.5 million, or 19 percent. Also, the 18 percent mill rate reduction on the residential assessment announced on January 26, 2000, which the government made a great deal about, putting their spin on it, actually amounted to a paltry figure, a $22.50 reduction in provincial property taxes this year for a ratepayer with a residence assessed at $125,000. A reduction of $22.50.

When we talk in terms of the provincial government putting a 5 percent cap on increases and equalized assessment for residential properties, we recognize what's happened. In the city of Edmonton we're going to see the city of Edmonton taxpayer paying an additional $7.7 million in provincial property taxes in the year 2000. Now, make note of that. The city of Edmonton taxpayers will pay an additional $7.7 million because of the 5 percent cap, and that $7.7 million is used to subsidize other areas of the province where they exceeded that 5 percent cap. In other words, Edmontonians are not only subsidizing the provincial government and being denied their fair share of revenue, but now they have to turn around and subsidize other municipalities. Do you blame Mayor Bill Smith and members of Edmonton city council for mounting a campaign directing this shortcoming, this unfairness in equity to the Edmonton taxpayers? Those ads will be appearing shortly, and those ads will be urging Edmontonians to squawk to the provincial government about the unfairness.

MR. DICKSON: Why don't they just vote differently?

MR. WICKMAN: Why don't they vote differently? Well, in Edmonton they don't have a problem. They know how to vote. I'm sorry to mention this to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, but I think the problem is down in your part of the province.

This is an interesting one here. Now, in response to that particular statement, the only long-term solutions the government has publicly suggested for replacing the provincial education property tax are a 4 percent sales tax and a 38 percent increase in provincial income tax. Let me quote now the Minister of Municipal Affairs. "As a matter of fact, they've already shared the information that if we were to put in a sales tax" – you hear that? If we were to put in a sales tax, referring to themselves – "it would be somewhere in the area of 4 percent." Now, I don't think Albertans want to hear about a sales tax, whether it be 4 percent, 7 percent, whatever. Then he goes on to say that they've looked at the area of income tax and that it would mean a 30 percent increase in income tax. I'm sure the government can be a little more sensible, a little more creative than even referring to a 4 percent sales tax or a 38 percent increase in personal income tax.

The Member for Medicine Hat made an interesting concept in his Motion 518, introduced in the Legislative Assembly. Let me quote. This is his actual motion. You would think he was on this side of the House.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to explore alternative means of funding education other than through municipal property taxes and to begin discussions with municipal governments to develop new cost-sharing formulas that could be implemented after the provincial government removes requisitions for school taxes.

Now, there's one member that is headed off in a similar direction to what Bill 207 is attempting to do. So we in fact are not speaking out here in isolation. We in fact not only would see the AUMA and the AAMDC welcome these types of initiatives, but I'm sure there's more than just the Member for Medicine Hat who has a similar type of philosophy.

Interestingly enough, the minister also said that same day – he was very talkative that day, obviously – that it's important to note that the proportion of education funding derived from education property tax revenues has decreased from 50 percent in '94-95 to 38 percent this year. The facts speak for themselves.

That's what he said. Now, let me say that approximately 6 percent, or $165 million, of the reduction in the proportion of education funding derived from the education property tax revenues between '94-95 and 2000-2001 is accounted for by the exemption of machinery and equipment, which benefits only a small number of nonresidential ratepayers. So he was a bit loose with his statements there.

The minister then went on to say:

We've already agreed to work with municipalities as partners in clarifying provincial/municipal roles and responsibilities. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it's in our business plan.

This again is a quote from the Minister of Municipal Affairs on April 12. Let me point out, when we talk in terms of a willingness to work with the municipalities, what has happened. When asked by the Official Opposition what plans the government actually had to work with municipalities, the Premier referred only to the short-term funding proposals being worked on in the Premier's Task Force on Infrastructure.

Now, there's a great deal more discussion that has to occur with the municipalities than that one particular statement, Madam Speaker. There has to be a comprehensive discussion, a comprehensive recognition that we do have a level of government there that requires the loosening of legislative strings to allow it the flexibility, the independence that it requires.

Again let me point out some more interesting comments that the minister had to say that very same day. He's quoted as saying: "In fact, from '95 to '99 basic education spending – and that includes K to 12 – increased $693 million and is continuing to increase." Now, let me just say in response that as a percentage of the GDP, an amount equal to about 4.1 percent of the Alberta GDP was invested in basic education in '92-93. By 2002-03, according to Budget 2000, that investment will just be 2.8 percent; in other words, a reduction from 4.1 percent down to 2.8 percent of the GDP. Now, that is not heading off in the right direction.

Again another comment the minister made that day in response to the comments from the Official Opposition.

In fact, eliminating grants and relying on a source of income that can be unpredictable and uncertain would create a situation where funding to municipalities would reflect the volatility of this tax base.

Madam Speaker, just listen to these words: "In fact, eliminating grants and relying on a source of income that can be unpredictable and uncertain." How would it be unpredictable and uncertain if there were a formula put into place, a recognition that the municipalities could in fact be dependent on a percentage? While not being able to pin it down to the exact amount of money, I tell you it would certainly be a lot less unpredictable or it would be a lot more predictable – let's put it that way – than some of the sources of revenue that the province has to rely on at the present time, like the oil revenues that we can see fluctuate anywhere from $11, $12 a barrel up to a high of $36 a barrel. A great deal of the revenue of course is dependent on how much money Albertans want to gamble in the various forms of gambling opportunities that are allowed in the province. Certainly there would be some variation in the amounts of personal income tax that may be collected in the province, but nothing close to what we see in the other areas of revenue producing.

He goes on to say:

This government has committed to ensuring that Albertans pay the lowest income taxes in the country and has even speculated about the possibility of eliminating income taxes altogether. Where would that leave the municipalities?

Now, speculation about eliminating income taxes altogether. Let's get with it. This is not the state of Nevada yet. The state of Nevada may have been able to eliminate personal income tax because of their dependency on the megacasinos there that have up to 5,000 rooms and so on and so forth. But I don't think we're anywhere close to that situation or that we'll ever see that situation in Alberta unless the provincial government has some type of agenda so that they do in fact intend to start replacing portions of the personal income tax with a sales tax and eventually have a sales tax high enough that there would be no need for . . . [interjections] Well, I know there's been that type of discussion, but I'll tell you right now: Albertans have enough of a problem with Bill 11. That would be the crowning touch. Need I say more?

I think I should close at that point.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Yes, hon. member. I hesitate to interrupt you, but under Standing Orders your time was up.

We have approximately six minutes until I will call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung to close debate, so I will recognize the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and speak on Bill 207, the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Calculation Act, which is sponsored by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Having served as an elected member of a municipal government for 17 years and appreciating the level of autonomy that municipal governments enjoy as well as being able to look to the provincial government as a full partner in our joint responsibilities to the taxpayer, I found it rather puzzling when reading through Bill 207. Based on some of the debate I've heard, some other members have found it this way as well. This bill does nothing to either enhance that partnership nor to increase the independence of the municipalities. In fact, it has the opposite effect.

Madam Speaker, in my opinion, private members' bills offer MLAs the opportunity to propose innovative legislative solutions to problems that are of great concern to their constituents. Just this past fall two private members' bills, the Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Act, sponsored by the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, and the Charitable Donation of Food Act, sponsored by the Member for Calgary-Bow, passed third reading. More recently, in fact only weeks ago, the Member for Red Deer-South successfully shepherded the Marriage Amendment Act through this Legislature.

So I find it very curious, then, in reading Bill 207 to find its topic deals with producing a report that would detail the effect of contributing an arbitrary percentage of an annual income tax revenue directly to the municipalities. If I understand it correctly, Bill 207 proposes to implement a new budget reporting mechanism based on assumption. Under the authority of this bill the Provincial Treasurer would prepare a report detailing the effect that sharing an assumed percentage of provincial income tax revenue with municipalities would have on Alberta's finances. This report would then be made public.

I'm left wondering what the intent of this legislation is. What purpose does it serve? What situation does it attempt to remedy, and how is the operation of government improved by the proposal contained in this bill? For that matter, what does it accomplish to produce a report that tells municipalities that if we decided to give you X percentage of an annual provincial income tax revenue, this is what would be the total? This certainly, in my opinion, is a confrontational approach to working with our municipal partners and an approach that our government rejects. I would suggest that if implemented, an unprecedented level of provincial/municipal discord would result. Does it not make more sense to engage municipalities in a discussion of the realities of how the province provides financial assistance, not hypothetical situations based on speculation?

Madam Speaker, I believe as an MLA we need to be honest, open, and accountable to all Albertans. Dealing in hypothetical situations with what are essentially arbitrary numbers or producing meaningless reports based on assumptions is not a productive use of anyone's time. It only serves to cause confrontation, disagreement, and endless dispute about these reports to no specific end. What is accomplished by telling municipalities what the government could give them in financial support? I think municipalities are more interested in having the provincial government tell them what kinds of funding they will be receiving.

It's obvious in reading Bill 207 that the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung wanted to put forward a piece of legislation that would direct government expenditure and budgeting processes; in other words, construct a money bill. This of course, as we all know, she cannot do as a private member. Only government can propose money bills, Madam Speaker. So it seems that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has attempted to do a money bill without breaking this rule, through the back door so to speak, by having the government run a report that shows that if we spent the money, this is what impact it would have on the provincial coffers.

One of the serious problems that would be created should Bill 207 become law is entanglement of municipal and provincial tax policies. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, in introducing first reading of the bill, indicated that she felt it would – and I'll quote here from Hansard, March 1, page 187 – “move to more of a revenue-sharing model in our province as opposed to a children-of-the-province model.”

Actually, Bill 207 would lessen the independence of municipalities, not increase it, by tying municipal revenue to provincial tax policy decisions and any fluctuations in income tax that may arise. In years to come, when income tax revenues may decrease, the municipal government would be forced into the unenviable position of trying to make up such a shortfall. Interestingly enough, this is a danger that was recognized by the Leader of the Official Opposition as well. On January 26 she stated in an article that – and I quote – in the face of economic slowdown, which we are cautious of right now but we may be facing, the only place to accommodate that is to cut expenditures.

Madam Speaker, this bill contemplates reducing the stability of municipal funding that has been achieved through our present system. If income tax revenues drop, the corresponding reduction in the revenue transferred to municipalities would likewise drop as well. As a result, as the Leader of the Opposition admits, municipalities would be forced to make up the shortfall, most likely by cutting their expenditures. No one benefits from this. The provincial government would look bad because they're not transferring an appropriate amount of funding to municipalities. Municipalities would have to adjust their budgets to account for the reduction in revenue.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but under Standing Order 8(5)(a), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill, I would invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung to close debate.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would also like to thank all of the Members of the Legislative Assembly who have worked to speak to Bill 207 standing in my name on the Order Paper.

Madam Speaker, in summing up the discussion, the object of Bill 207 has been to provide local governments with access to a portion of provincial personal income tax revenues in order to create a more stable and predictable funding arrangement between the province and local governments and to provide our municipalities with an enhanced ability to meet their priorities on a medium- and long-term basis in accordance with fulfilling their significant roles and responsibilities, many of which have been increased over the past decade with downloading from the province.

Bill 207 proposes to allocate a percentage of personal income tax revenues to Alberta municipalities on a per capita basis beginning in the fiscal year 2000-2001. This would allow the province to eliminate the very unstable and unpredictable grant programs, which of course have been reduced by about 50 percent over the last eight years. As well, it would provide a framework for an increased accountability, responsiveness, efficiency, fairness, a long-term planning cycle.

In fact, the province has maintained its tradition. Certainly it kept true to the view that the Progressive Conservative Party has had for many years of the municipalities being children of the province. We on this side of the House believe that there is an opportunity to look at a whole new relationship with our municipalities, and that is why we brought forward Bill 207.

Certainly I don't believe this is the only method of stable long-term funding; we think it is one. It is modeled on the experience of the province of Manitoba with its Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Act. Bill 207 is just one component of our initiative to create new and sustainable partnerships with our municipalities and predictable funding arrangements so that when the roles, the division of powers if you like, are clarified, then municipalities are given a stable long-term funding arrangement rather than the ad hoc one which they have to operate under now.

Madam Speaker, this is the only forum in which this rather huge issue is being discussed. As much as the government members have spent time criticizing Bill 207 as a solution, we believed it was important to bring the matter forward, and instead of criticizing, they might have been able to open the forum up so we could come to some solutions.

I was interested to note the Minister of Municipal Affairs and today the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti and the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills speaking about this doing nothing to enhance the partnership between the province and the municipalities. Madam Speaker, I thought I would table a letter which I received from Lorne Olsvik, who of course is the AUMA president. The letter is addressed to me. He wrote to us in regard to Bill 207, saying that the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, the very municipalities represented by many of the MLAs who have spoken here today, appreciates the efforts of all Members of the Legislative Assembly through bills such as 207 to help municipalities become and remain more viable and self-sufficient. As you are aware the AUMA has adopted several guiding principles which are used to help us evaluate various Provincial programs, regulations and legislation. Our number one guiding principle is as follows:

Municipal Governments must have the fiscal capacity to fulfill their mandate through:

- primary access to the property tax base; and
- other stable long-term and progressive sources of revenue

The AUMA is pleased with the direction of Bill 207 in that it seeks to implement a component of AUMA's key guiding principle. Providing long-term and progressive sources of revenue for municipalities will go a long way to ensuring the viability of Alberta's communities.

So clearly the AUMA, which we see as a major stakeholder in this province and an important one for developing municipal policy, is certainly onside with the bill as a portion of dealing with the issue.

Madam Speaker, this bill is really a signal to our municipal leaders, one which we look forward to raising with them further.

Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2000

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's quite a pleasure to have both of these bills coming together as they are, Bill 207 and now 208, the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2000. It's interesting, because both bills address some of the issues which are at the core of our communities, are at the core of the kinds of communities that we want to have throughout our province, whether they be small urban or huge metropolitan centres. As we know, this whole issue of gaming has taken a very interesting turn in our province and has resulted in some impact on our communities that perhaps members and people of the public didn't have any idea that it would.

Interestingly, Bill 208, the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, is all about looking at our communities, looking at the kind of environment we want to create, the kind of environment we want our children to grow and mature in, and examines the whole issue of gaming and its impact on our values and our family values within the community that we see. Communities truly are the backbone of our province, Madam Speaker. That's certainly something that people have perhaps said without real meaning or at least without associating with the words how important a statement it is.

While we live and work in an environment where we have access to a worldwide web in terms of information, our companies trade and market their products on a worldwide basis, information is right out there in terms of television and communication, and we have access to incredible information at a moment's notice worldwide, yet where we live in that world is right at home, in our communities. It is that focus which we in the opposition have been working on, have been talking to communities across the province about, and they result in these two bills coming as they do, in concert one with the other. Really Bill 207 and Bill 208, in their two pieces, recognize that Alberta's quality of life comes from the strength within our communities, our neighbourhoods where we live and raise our families.

Madam Speaker, it's perhaps coincidence that you are in the chair today, because we in the Official Opposition very much admired the work that you did as the chair of the task force on gaming, your report that was submitted in December of 1998, and the consultation method which was employed in that effort: the talking to other provinces and coming up with a solution, not just looking at Alberta, not being so sort of self-centred or ingrown to only look at Alberta, but looking at what other provinces had done, what things we could learn from other provinces, before coming to some very sound recommendations which led to the gaming and review report in December of 1998. So in the first instance, I want to compliment you, as the MLA for Lacombe-Stettler, for the very excellent work and contribution you made to this issue in our province.

I think it is important to perhaps look at some of the observations that made up the report of the gaming review. I know the committee that examined the issue learned a great deal from the province of Ontario, who of course had instigated some legislation earlier on this subject to deal with the gambling issues within their province.

I think it's important to note in the overview of illegal gaming and criminal activity that makes up a part of the report the very excellent quote from William Jahods*, who was an organized-crime figure, in testimony before the Chicago Crime Commission when he said – and I quote – there always existed one solid constant. Now, this is from the point of view of organized crime. He said: there always existed one solid constant; any new form of legal gambling always increased our client base. A very telling quote, Madam Speaker. Clearly the issue of gambling, certainly having always attracted issues of organized crime, is one where we have to be very careful and very diligent as legislators to ensure that the controls and the standards and the protection for our citizens and for our communities exist.

Clearly, illegal gambling is a multibillion-dollar industry. Huge financial profits make it most attractive to organized crime. Gambling is not illegal. However, participating in the business unlicensed is illegal. Illegal gambling can, of course, be operated by both traditional and nontraditional organized crime. Thousands of dollars derived from these illegal ventures are often channeled into other illegal activities and often spur other related criminal offences.

The legalization of gambling – and I'm quoting here from the report – has not stopped the illegal activity. Organized crime has historically been involved in trafficking drugs, prostitution, loan-sharking, money laundering, and gambling. We would be very naive – and I'm quoting from the report – to expect criminal organizations to relinquish interest in gambling just because governments became involved in the business. What an excellent statement.

While there is evidence to suggest that people are more willing to tolerate legalization efforts than they were in the past, overwhelming public demand for legalization simply does not exist. Gaming activity is not being pushed by public demand. Rather, it appears that entrepreneurs and governments are predominantly the ones advancing the gaming envelope. So why is it that governments have become so attracted to the new forms of legal gambling that continue to grow? Well, the most obvious answer, Madam Speaker, is the economic benefits, the revenues that flow to the province or to the government.

There is a lot of money to be made in gambling, and we need look no further than our own province to substantiate this statement. The net return to the province of Alberta from lotteries and gambling will far exceed $800 million this year, above the budgeted amount, and an exceptional return for a government that is not a direct operator but instead is a tax collector.

Does legalized gaming promote an increase in illegal gaming and criminal activity? That's a question raised in the report. Many experts that were spoken to said that absolutely it results in an increase.

Crime is a basic function of opportunity. Criminals go where the big dollars are. They gravitate towards money, and the more that money is fast moving, loosely controlled, and the product line offered lucrative, the more appealing it becomes. Gaming establishments, gambling establishments, and gaming activities are not an exception.

Further on in the report, Madam Speaker, after having examined the experiences in both Ontario, British Columbia, and elsewhere, some excellent recommendations were made. I will quote the Member for Lacombe-Stettler, who said: we must have the political will to put in place good public policy, stringent regulatory controls, and appropriate law enforcement measures above strictly revenue-generating considerations. How right the chairman of that committee was in making that statement.

The recommendations of the gaming task force then go on to make suggestions for some of the steps that could be taken to deal with this issue in Alberta. Obviously the gaming foothold has increased its footprint on our province over the last eight years, and that is a reality. I think what this report did and did so effectively was to say: given that there has been an increase in the gambling and the gaming opportunities over the past decade, what can we do as legislators to put a framework around that gaming initiative and make sure that the protection for our citizens and our communities and the kind of society that we want to ensure prospers in our province does?

For that reason, Madam Speaker, I want to go just quickly to some of the provisions in Bill 208. Frankly, we were surprised that the government hadn't come forward with some of the provisions that we wanted to establish in this legislation, surprised and disappointed. We were disappointed in view of the work done in the city of Calgary under the chairmanship of Mr. Jim Gray, who did some excellent work around a referendum on the lotteries and the provision of lotteries. With all those signs of unrest, signs of concern by leaders in our province that left unfettered the gambling issue could become a huge issue in our province, it was remarkable that the matter was not brought forward in legislation. In fact, we had hoped that the minister of gambling might have seen the opportunity to bring forward some of these suggestions that we are now putting forward, but in view of the fact that he didn't, we decided that we'd help him with his work and bring forward what we think is a very constructive legislative suggestion for dealing with this issue.

Actually, I must go back to the minister of gambling because he's muttering something over there. You know, one of the things that was established of course was the Gaming Research Institute, but so far we've seen nothing other than the spending of 1 and a half million dollars by the institute, certainly a far cry from the opportunity that was presented in the gaming review report for which we now propose Bill 208.

It's my intention to let the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford talk in the limited time that we have available this afternoon, but just to do an overlay of some of the important features of the legislation, let me simply highlight briefly some of the provisions within this Bill 208.

*This spelling could not be verified at the time of publication.

The first one and probably the most important one is that this bill implements some of the very key recommendations of the gaming review report prepared by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler. For that reason, we are certainly looking forward to support from government MLAs for one of their own who worked so hard and did that important consultative work within our community supplemented by the Medicine Hat gaming summit, all of which came together to form this opportunity. So the first highlight is that this legislation will implement the key recommendations out of the gaming report.

Secondly, one of the most key recommendations is the establishment of a gaming secretariat to advise the minister on gaming policy. This is a very key recommendation, Madam Speaker, because of course the gaming secretariat becomes a vehicle by which the important issue of gaming and its growth and the changes in terms of gambling patterns can be addressed.

The bill also requires that all gaming supplies would be purchased by the gaming commission and be purchased by public tender, a very important issue within the whole area of organized crime.

Finally, it creates what we thought was a very excellent suggestion, and that is an all-party committee on gaming which would review the gaming act on a regular basis, which will report on the separation of the administration and the enforcement functions of the gaming commission. Of course, when the two of them exist together, there can become real questions of conflict of interest, and it's very important to separate the two provisions, administration and enforcement.

Thirdly, the all-party standing committee would review and report on funding police with lottery money to prevent and fight organized crime. We know, for example, that the policing – I apologize, Madam Speaker. I've lost my statistic on policing. Let me simply say that within the bill we believe, as was found in the example of Ontario with the gaming review, that funding the police to give them the resources that they need to ensure that organized crime, dealing with the problems that are clearly there, would be a very helpful opportunity.

MR. SMITH: How do you know they're clearly there?

MRS. MacBETH: Well, they're clearly there because of the points made obviously in the gaming review.

It's important in this review of funding that we note that given the revenue streams that are created by gambling, the current fiscal commitment to fighting organized crime and addictions associated with gambling are in fact minuscule. Gaming addictions are devastating to individuals, to families, and to communities. Any of us who have met with or know families who have been affected by gambling addictions know the toll that this addiction and all others take on a family. Given the amount of money that the government is making on the backs of gaming addicts, a proportion of that money, we believe, must be used to prevent and treat gaming addictions. Currently only $3.6 million goes from the lottery fund to AADAC to prevent and treat gambling addictions, and that's less than one-half of 1 percent of the government's projected income from gaming of $820 million forecast for this year.

Here's my reference that I had misplaced when I was speaking earlier. Alberta has one police officer who devotes one-fifth of his time to organized crime and gambling activities. So the combined effect of the organized crime with the impact of the gaming addictions is one that I think we as legislators ought to be very concerned about, and that's really why we've brought forward this bill.

As well, municipalities and the general public need some way to control or influence gaming activities being promoted by the province within their boundaries. Of course, one of the very important recommendations of our bill in proposing the gaming secretariat is that a licence to grant a gaming operation the right to exist would only be considered after the municipality had put forward an approval for that to establish within their boundaries. So what we have tried to reflect is the fact that some municipalities may well decide that they do not wish to have these kinds of establishments within their borders. We believe that we should respect the views of our municipalities. It's certainly consistent with our view expressed in Bill 207 that the municipalities aren't the children of the province but rather are certainly able to make the best decisions that they can for their areas.

Finally, creating an all-party standing committee on gaming to review and report on funding gambling addictions, funding AADAC properly because we know addictions all take on the same pattern, will make an important discussion for this bill.

I look forward to the debate with members and to their support for an excellent review.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 208, the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, as proposed by one of the members opposite. I would say that Bill 208 does raise some interesting points for debate, particularly with respect to the problem gambling intervention in our province. It certainly does offer some comment regarding solutions to these problems, and I have a few comments in that respect that I want to offer as well.

In my role as the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness and more particularly in my role as the minister responsible for AADAC, the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, I have some specific comments from that perspective. I want to begin by saying that I'm intending to provide some information about initiatives that have taken place or are currently under way to treat, prevent, and increase everyone's understanding of problem gambling in Alberta. Therefore, I will comment on Bill 208, Madam Speaker, and in particular its call on the establishment of an Alberta gaming secretariat.

Now, there are components of the bill that involve regulatory controls on gaming which other of my colleagues will likely comment on from their perspective, but let me begin by saying that legalized gambling in Canada is a fairly recent development in our history that has only existed for about three to four decades. Within a very short time it's grown to become a major feature of our entertainment industry. In fact, Alberta has been a pioneer in Canada in introducing some new forms of gaming and in fashioning strict but workable regulatory controls that govern those same practices.

The Alberta government has also established within an equally short time an enviable track record of addressing problem gambling issues. I'd just like to cite some of those examples for the members of the House. The Alberta Lotteries and Gaming Summit, which was held in Medicine Hat in 1998, was the occasion for a healthy dialogue on gaming policy by many citizen participants. It also included 202 public submissions. One of the recommendations of that summit led to the establishment of the Alberta Gaming Research Institute, a consortium of three Alberta universities that sponsors collaborative research into gaming-related topics. The summit itself was in fact the fulfillment, at least in part, of a recommendation of the 1995 New Directions for Lotteries and Gaming report, as Madam Speaker obviously knows because she led this particular task force. It was the product of a very wide consultation with Albertans and produced some excellent results.

Madam Speaker, actions often do speak louder than words. Therefore, concrete and effective actions have been taken, are being taken, and will continue to be taken to address problem gambling in this province. You may not hear that much about these actions, but these actions do in fact speak for themselves, especially so to those who are the recipients of Alberta's problem gambling treatment and our prevention and information services. However, the debate about Bill 208 provides an important opportunity to discuss this issue a bit further.

Much of the work undertaken in problem gambling is done by the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, an agency within the ministry of health now. AADAC's purpose is to assist Albertans in achieving freedom from the abuse of alcohol, other drugs, and gambling. AADAC positively contributes to the health of Albertans through the provision of a provincewide system of high quality and efficient addictions treatment, prevention, and information services.

I think before I proceed further, I'd like to provide just a brief background on the nature of gambling and, specifically, problem gambling here in Alberta. Here, then, are some recent statistics from research in our province. Overall gambling participation by adults in 1994 was 90 percent, while in 1998 the number had declined to 87 percent. During the same period of time the proportion of adult Albertans who were nongamblers or nonproblem gamblers increased from 94.6 percent to 95.2 percent, despite a climate that has generally seen an increase in the availability of gambling opportunities. For the large majority of adults, gambling is still a form of recreation that poses no problems. There are others for whom it does. However, the proportion of adults identified as problem gamblers, who experience some level of gambling-related harm, actually decreased from 4 percent in 1994 to 2.8 percent in 1998. The proportion of adults identified as probable pathological gamblers increased from 1.4 percent to 2 percent.

I'd like to comment also on the evolution of problem gambling programs here in Alberta. Elucidation of problem gambling issues in Alberta began to take shape back in 1993, when the provincewide research study on the prevalence of gambling and problem gambling among Albertans was conducted.

In January 1994 the government of Alberta addressed the need for problem gambling treatment and prevention by committing multi-year funding for AADAC to take a lead role in addressing the social impacts that accompany gambling. AADAC was given the responsibility, Madam Speaker, to develop and implement programs in the areas of prevention, treatment, research, and training, and this mandate obviously excludes regulatory matters. However, also in 1994 treatment and prevention capacity was developed and community programs were established.

In 1996 the focus on prevention was increased. Training resources were developed, and there was an increase in the number of treatment referrals seeking counseling assistance. In 1997-98, to bring us up to speed, there was a repeat of an earlier gambling research project to determine the prevalence of gambling and problem gambling, and more work was done on developing programs.

So what is the current situation, Madam Speaker? Well, thanks to research that has already taken place, we are gaining a much better and a much deeper understanding of problem gamblers, which is truly important for gambling programming purposes.

Now, with regard to some specific statistics let me offer the following. In 1998-99 there were about 3,100 admissions to AADAC programs for the treatment of problem gambling, which represents 7.9 percent of total AADAC admissions for that year. However, it's also important to note that 45 percent of current problem gambling treatment admissions are for gambling alone, while 55 percent are combined with an alcohol problem or with some other drug problem.

In 1998-99 there were about 4,100 calls made to the 1-800 Gambling Help Line. This is a free 24-hour service available anywhere in the province. It provides information, crisis intervention, advice and support, and referral services for those seeking them.

We also have several education and prevention initiatives wherein much work is being done to address problem gambling. For example, physicians office posters have been distributed to about 2,500 AMA members to encourage patients to discuss gambling as it relates to their health.

We have server intervention products such as posters, business cards, matchbooks, and so on, which indicate the 1-800 Gambling Help Line number, and these are distributed to gambling venues. We also have advertisements regarding problem gambling services, and these are displayed in and are aired on a variety of locations, including the print media, television, and telephone directories. We also have community project funding which is provided to local education or prevention projects that are conceived, developed, and implemented at the community level.

The outreach by the Canadian Foundation on Compulsive Gambling is actually funded to support the delivery of problem gambling information sessions in junior and senior high schools, communities, and workplaces in the Edmonton area, and that's another important program.

An annual stakeholder meeting also takes place for various concerned groups, including AADAC, the Canadian Foundation on Compulsive Gambling, Gamblers Anonymous, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, the gaming industry, Alberta Learning, mental health, Alberta Justice, the Alberta Hotel Association, and the Alberta Restaurant and Food Services Association. The main purpose of this meeting is to seek input on trends and on services as part of a broader planning process.

I'll conclude this portion, Madam Speaker, just by saying that a wide range of information resources have been made very publicly available, such as pamphlets, posters, classroom materials for elementary, junior, and senior high, handbooks, counseling materials, service information, displays, a newsletter, and at least one theatre project. So there is a lot going on in this area already.

Now, with specific respect to treatment initiatives there is a continuum of problem gambling treatment services available to Albertans. For example, nonresidential intensive day treatment is available where demand and numbers warrant. This program is flexible and can be adjusted to meet specific client needs. As part of this program's flexibility it can be offered as an evening or a weekend program.

We also have a crisis stabilization pilot project with residential support to stabilize affected persons from the effects of their gambling. This service is provided in Lloydminster and provides appropriate service for clients in need of immediate physical or emotional support due to the effects of their gambling.

Another important example is the enhanced inpatient treatment strategy for dually addicted persons; that is, for persons who may have both a gambling problem and an alcohol- or drug-related problem. In other words, Madam Speaker, this is a strategy for the 20 percent or so of clients with alcohol or drug problems who also report some form of gambling problem.

Three concluding examples of treatment initiatives include the following, Madam Speaker. One, we have gambling outreach services that are offered to Edmonton's Chinese community by a counselor fluent in their language. Two, we have outpatient counseling services that are provided throughout the province by AADAC. Three, we have residential treatment programs that are available in certain locations.

Madam Speaker, another important feature that we have is training initiatives. We do this because we recognize that it is important to have knowledgeable professionals and stakeholders to provide comprehensive services. Creation of a contingent of trained professionals who are able to work effectively in problem gambling has been the goal of training programs that are provided to a wide variety of stakeholders, including gambling industry employees, casino and VLT operators, concerned members of the public, and numerous others.

Training initiatives have also included an intensive four-day addictions course, an employee assistance conference, training for casino and VLT operators, which helps them take advantage of their unique position by identifying and providing assistance to gamblers who are experiencing difficulty.

Two other important initiatives include a modular training program designed to increase community capacity to address problem gambling concerns and advanced training for those who require more in-depth knowledge and skills.

Now, in addition to all of the aforementioned, we also have numerous research initiatives. In fact, one of the recommendations that the Alberta government adopted from the Alberta Lotteries and Gaming Summit in 1998 was the following.

The provincial government should dedicate more resources to gaming research in areas like the prevention and treatment of problem gambling, the social impacts of lotteries and gaming, aboriginal gaming issues and emergent gaming activities.

Subsequently, there are a number of completed or planned additions to research our knowledge about gambling. They include the following: number one, prevalent studies among adults and adolescents; number two, problem gambling research in Alberta's aboriginal community; number three, a national scoring tool for more consistent population surveys in Canada; number four, a specific study to understand the views of youth, parents, and other people important in youths' lives; number five, research on gambling specific to and among seniors; number six, a study of family impacts that accompany problem gambling among clients in treatment; and finally, number seven, research on gambling and the workplace.

In summary, Madam Speaker, and in response to the proposed Bill 208 before us, our government continues to address the health and wellness of Albertans, including many initiatives regarding the prevention and treatment of alcohol problems, other drug problems, and, of course, gambling problems specifically.

The government of Alberta has acknowledged that legalized gaming is an important recreational activity for some and that there is also a significant economic impact and a significant employment impact in our province. However, our government also has acknowledged its responsibility to assist those who, unfortunately, for whatever personal reasons, do experience problems with gambling. Key partners in government, the community, and the gaming industry are undertaking several actions to treat, prevent, or minimize the harms associated with problem gambling. This is done while respecting the freedom of individuals to exercise personal responsibility and choice in their entertainment choices and in their gambling activities.

Bill 208 recommends the establishment of a gaming secretariat for "research and public consultation on the social and economic effects of [problem gambling]." However, I feel our government has already established the Alberta Gaming Research Institute and the Alberta Gaming Research Council to work in this area.

The Gaming Research Institute has in fact already developed a research schedule with the involvement of three Alberta universities. The institute is governed by the Gaming Research Council, which is comprised of public and government representatives, including youth, seniors, First Nations, law enforcement, the legal profession, communities and the general public, the Canadian Foundation on Compulsive Gambling, the business community, the gaming industry, AADAC, Alberta Health and Wellness representatives, and others.

Bill 208 also proposes that a gaming secretariat would increase awareness about gambling addiction. Again, our government, as early as 1994, had already mandated to AADAC the responsibility to deal with the effects of problem gambling on families, individuals, and communities. Based on the leadership shown by the province and by AADAC, of whom I am very proud in this area, Madam Speaker, Bill 208 does appear to duplicate existing services and really does not offer anything all that new or all that different or tremendously innovative to Albertans in this regard.

So with those comments and in view of the hour I will conclude my remarks on Bill 208 and would move that we now adjourn debate on Bill 208. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Government House Leader.

MRS. NELSON: Yes, Madam Speaker. I'd like to move that we adjourn the House until 8 o'clock this evening, when we reconvene in committee.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly agree with the motion that we now adjourn until 8 p.m., when we will sit in Committee of the Whole?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: All those opposed? So ordered.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:27 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 3, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/05/03

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

THE CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the committee to order. For those of you who think we live here, we don't. We just spend our nights and mornings and afternoons here.

I'd like to say for the benefit of those in the gallery that this is the informal part of the Legislature. It's called committee. We're able to go through a bill item by item, section by section. People are allowed to take off their jackets and to drink coffee and even to move around, but hopefully not more than one person will talk at a time.

This evening before we commence, I wonder if we might have consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my honour this evening to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly Mr. Ken Allred, who is seated in the members' gallery. Ken is a former alderman in the city of St. Albert and a very fine and upstanding citizen of our community. I would ask the Assembly to give him a warm welcome this evening.

Thank you.

Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority Amendment Act, 2000

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just have a few comments to make on Bill 7. The minister responsible there has done a relatively good job of preparing this bill. Quite frankly, I would take a thousand of these for one Bill 11 or 999 of these for one Bill 18. The bill from my point of view, from what I can see – I don't know if I should use the term "centralizes" – creates three agencies that will now fall under the ministry, agencies that formerly consisted of an authority and an institute and a council.

There are some concerns that one can see in the bill even though the bill itself is not bad. There is the concern of the appointments that would be made to these three different institutes. We need a mechanism to ensure that the minister is given a wide range of names from which to make the appointments. We have to have some type of independent consulting or head-hunting company to engage in seeking out names of those appropriate experts for the three different institutes. We don't want to get into the situation where we have political appointments being made to institutes that can do a lot of good but whose potential benefit may be hamstrung by having members appointed that don't have the expertise even though they may have a political connection. We see that happen a bit too often, not just with this government. I've seen it happen with other governments too. Appointments will be made on the basis of who you know, political involvement, and so on and so forth.

What this does is bring the research funding under one organization, which can lead to efficiencies and a clear direction with respect to accountability. It can also lead to consistency when it comes to fulfilling the goals that are laid out in the business plan.

We still have to raise a concern. To what extent will this new Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority and the institutes complement business, and to what extent will they be competitive with business? We always hear from the private sector that they don't want government competing with the private sector. The private sector has its place. Not in health care, mind you; let's caution ourselves there. The private sector has its place when it comes to certain types of technology, certain types of expertise and so on. It's a given fact, and we recognize that business is there for a purpose and government is there for another purpose. Government is there to deliver human-type services and to ensure that those are delivered properly.

Now, to what extent will the needs of agricultural research be met? There is some special concern that the new institute may be less sensitive to different regional requirements, and different regional requirements are very important. With agriculture it's very important to retain links with the community so there is good feedback on where research is needed.

We've seen different areas throughout the province where different types of research may be required. The oil sands operators, for example: some of them are concerned that research funds will now be shared with other types of energy. We should welcome that change, because there have to be some innovations. We have to look at other alternatives when it comes to producing energy and such.

Mr. Chairman, as I said in my opening comments, it's not one of those bills that I want to spend a great deal of time speaking on, because there is some merit to the bill, and when there is merit to a bill, this opposition does not like to bog down creative thinking. We want to concentrate on trying to direct the government in those areas where they need some direction, but when they don't need that special direction from us, fine. This particular bill is not that bad.

On that note, I'll conclude.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority Amendment Act, 2000, is one that we've signaled we're going to be supportive of, words I'm not used to. There were some questions raised, though, during earlier debate, and I'd like to reiterate some of those and perhaps add a couple of new ones as we go through section by section, because I'm not satisfied that we've received the answers. I'll underscore this by saying that while these are more than quibbles – these are serious issues – we are generally in favour of the direction this legislation moves, but there are, as I say, some questions.

If you go right to the back of the bill, what you notice is that the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, the Oil Sands Technology and Research Authority, and the forest development research trust fund are all being collapsed into one and their legislation is being repealed. One of the first questions I have is the timing, Mr. Chairman. You'll note that the act comes into force on August 1, 2000, just a few months from now, except for all of the sections dealing with the forest development research trust fund. I haven't heard an explanation from the government as to why there is going to be a delay in applying this legislation to forest development research as well.

Now, in regard to the forest development research trust fund the act comes into force as of April 1, 2001, so I'm assuming that it has something to do with fiscal year timing. But I would like to know what the impact on the trust fund is. I'd like to know what other transitional arrangements are being made and whether or not there is any particular reason why it has to wait until the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. Chairman, there are some other questions that I have as well that have to do with the whole issue of intellectual property and ownership. If you look at part 1 of the act, the new section 4, which proposes changes to section 9, you'll see that the definition of ownership is changing, as it is in the new proposed section 9.1 that's in section 5 of Bill 7. After reading this over carefully and after looking at some authorities on intellectual property and ownership, I just have some concerns that this may not be very well crafted. In particular, some of the emerging law and decisions being made dealing with copyright and intellectual property make me suspicious that we could be on a collision course to some dates in court based on the wording in Bill 7.

Now, it seems to me that you cannot just because you put it in law take away the intellectual property rights of the person who originated the idea or the knowledge, and because of the way that this bill is written and the way that it extends from the existing law, as I said, I'm just not convinced that we've really done our homework.

In particular, if you look at section 5, the proposed section 9.1, it reads:

The Authority may enter into an agreement with a person in whose favour a grant has been or is proposed to be made under this Part providing for the respective rights, obligations and liabilities of the Authority and the person with respect to the ownership of any invention, work, information or material, regardless of form, including any patent, copyright, technological or industrial design process or trademark acquired or produced by the person while engaged in a project funded in whole or in part by a grant under this Part.

Now, that whole sentence leads me to believe that if the authority chooses to, it can enter into an agreement whether it is the sole funder or a partial funder or a minority funder or whether there has even just been a proposal that it be a funder.

I'm just wondering whether or not I understand this correctly. Does this mean that the authority, as a condition of partial funding in a work, very minor funding perhaps, would want to claim for itself the sole intellectual property ownership of whatever the purpose of the grant or the proposal is? That, I think, should be addressed by government before we are asked to vote this bill out of committee.

Also, dealing with the Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority, if I look at part 2 under the agricultural institute and I look at what will be proposed section 16.1(6), it talks about the minister designating a Member of the Legislative Assembly as the chair of the ag institute and another member of the agricultural institute as vice-chair. I'm wondering why it is that we would insist that the chair of the institute be a Member of the Legislative Assembly. I believe this matter has been raised by one of my colleagues. I'm not sure that we've had a satisfactory answer.

I can understand there being a requirement that there be a member of the Legislature involved in this institute, but I'm just not sure why that member must be the automatic chair. Most organizations that I'm familiar with allow the organization to determine chairmanship. Sometimes it rotates, and it can certainly accrue to others. I don't think that just by virtue of the fact that the minister has decided to tap one of his or her colleagues on the shoulder, that person should automatically assume the chairmanship.

This becomes perhaps even more important when you look at proposed section 16.11, the section that deals with remuneration. What it says is that all "members of the Agricultural Institute who are not employees of the Government may be paid remuneration and may receive reasonable traveling and living expenses," et cetera, et cetera, really at the whim of the minister. That means that the Minister of Innovation and Science can not only ask a colleague to come and sit and be the chair but can in fact give that colleague a tidy little raise in salary.

Again, I'm wondering whether that's really the most appropriate thing to do in this day and age. Perhaps what we should see is some legislation, not just regulation, which provides guidance on the expenses and remuneration paid to members of the agricultural institute and then have that chairmanship up for grabs, as it were, by any member who is appointed to the institute.

While I'm on the point of the minister and his discretion, are we satisfied that this matter should be left to ministerial order? It seems to me that that's even a rank below what I usually complain about, which is that it's left to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, that it's left to regulations that will be made by the cabinet. In this case it's the minister sitting all alone in his office late at night figuring out, you know, with a scratch pad and a pocket calculator how much money he wants to spend on these individuals in this institute.

Now, I don't have any evidence to suggest that this minister has been unfair or that somehow there's any suggestion of corruption or anything like that. I just think it's a little inappropriate, if you're going to call on men and women in this province to provide some public service and you're setting that up by statute, that you would then just say: well, it's okay; it's good enough for the minister all alone to be dealing with issues of remuneration. As we all know, it's these kinds of issues which, even though they may not involve significant dollar volumes, tend to gain public attention and generate certainly public distrust of the system, the cries of patronage, et cetera, et cetera. So I would like some comment from the sponsor of that legislation when it comes to his role in determining remuneration.

Still dealing with the agricultural institute, in part 2 – and I could repeat these comments for the other research institutes as well – I note that under the proposed section 16.2(1) and (2) the Regulations Act does not apply to the bylaws of the agricultural institute. Now, probably the biggest effect of that means that those bylaws won't be published in a way that's very readily accessible by anybody that has an interest in the workings of the agricultural institute. I can't for the life of me understand why that would be. Bill 7 and the general government direction in terms of co-ordinating research efforts across government is a good thing. I mean, Mr. Chairman, this is me saying something flattering about the government. It seems that they're going in the right direction.

The government talks a lot about transparency and openness and accountability, and certainly one of the best ways to be transparent and accountable is to also be open and make sure that everything you do that has attached to it somehow the expenditure of public funds, which is what this institute will have attached to it in many ways, is as open as can be. It seems to me that you would want to make sure that the bylaws which regulate the operations of this institute would be as public as they could be as well. So I don't really understand why the Regulations Act wouldn't apply, and I would like the minister to talk to me about that as well.

Now, if we look at part 3, the energy institute, I can make exactly the same comments about proposed section 16.4(1), which deals with remuneration one more time. Again, it's left up to the minister to decide who it is that would be on the board. Again, the same comment and concern, that the minister "must designate a member who is a member of the Legislative Assembly as the chair of the Energy Institute."

You know, in the province of Alberta there are probably more energy sector experts per capita than perhaps anywhere else in the world, and I'm not sure that a lot of them are Members of the Legislative Assembly. So here we are creating the energy institute, which is going to be doing leading-edge, world-leading research, and we're going to put as its chair always a Member of the Legislative Assembly. Again, I could understand appointing a Member of the Legislative Assembly to serve on the institute board, but I wonder about this prescription that the MLA must also be the chair. The same comments about the role of MLAs and remuneration. Also, I note again that the Regulations Act doesn't apply here either.

A comment that I failed to raise when I was dealing with the agricultural institute I will bring into the debate at this point, and that has to do with the annual report. The annual reports must be submitted to the minister "in a form satisfactory to the Minister." Now, the minister – and I'm not saying this critically – earlier in this legislative session tabled a report in the form of a CD-ROM, and I understand that he was instructed by the Speaker that as nifty as that may be, he was required to submit paper, hard-copy versions of that report. So we have a minister here that's not beyond experimenting with the form of reports.

In this case we have a situation where the minister is the only one that has to be satisfied with the form of the report. If the report should be made in such a way that it's not accessible to every Albertan on an equal basis, I'm not sure that that serves the public interest. I guess I would suggest that it would be helpful if these annual reports were submitted to the Assembly. We do that with so many other organizations, ones that are truly at arm's length from government. We have ministers of the Crown rising almost every day in tablings and tabling statutorily required annual reports from self-governing professions and from professional organizations. It satisfies a valid public interest. I would suggest that the same arguments could be made for the reports from these research institutes. We have not been told why it is that these reports (a) must be in a form prescribed only by the minister and only to his satisfaction and (b) why the reports are only going to be given to the minister.

You know, with freedom of information legislation, with citizens taking governments to court over broken election promises, in this age of electronic access to information people are getting to the point where they do not tolerate well being kept in the dark. This government I think should recognize that trend and could perhaps exercise a little bit of leadership here and move quickly to ensure that these reports are made public in a standard form and in the most public way possible, and that would be with a tabling in this Assembly.

Now, the forestry institute, which again is the one that's not coming into force until the beginning of the next fiscal year, includes in its legislation many of the same concerns that I've raised for the energy and the agricultural institutes. In other words, again we find that an MLA must be the chair, that remuneration is to be determined by the minister alone, that the annual reports are to be sent to the minister, and that the Regulations Act does not apply.

While I believe that the government is moving in the right direction with Bill 7 and I'm glad to see the co-ordination of research efforts and to see the elimination of duplication and the reduction of bureaucracy and I'm happy to learn of the commitment to focus and to make sure that value is derived, again I have this concern (a) that on the legal side we may not have done our homework as well as we might have as a province when it comes to intellectual property and ownership rights, and (b) I'm concerned about the way the public appears to be excluded from the control and the reporting and the understanding of what these new research institutes are all about.

You know, we're in committee. This is early on in the committee stage of the bill. We've signaled that as an Official Opposition we're not questioning the intent of the bill, but we're certainly hoping that the government will look at these concerns and perhaps suggest some amendments so that we can be assured that the public interest is going to be well served.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: I wonder if the committee would consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a real pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the committee in the Legislature a good friend, a member of the council in the city of Red Deer, and someone who has been a friend to many of us for many years, Mr. Bill Hull, who's in the members' gallery. I'd ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It seems like it was only a few scant days ago that we were addressing this bill in second reading. Frankly, I was actually surprised, and I referred back to Hansard to see that it was April 17, 2000, when I had a chance to raise some questions around this.

I might start by making the observation that the Minister of Innovation and Science is a fascinating minister to watch. There's been this conversion on the road to Damascus: the minister has developed this enormous enthusiasm for technology and for research. Now, that's a wonderful thing. It's a laudable characteristic that the minister who is charged with Innovation and Science takes such a huge personal commitment and interest in his area. But I must just say that as somebody who has had a chance to watch this government very carefully over a number of years – and it's manifest in the bill, and I'm going to come to some specific sections – I'm struck a little bit by a comment that William Wordsworth, the famous English poet, who lived between 1770 and 1850, offered. He made this observation that is useful to reference as we talk about what's enabled by Bill 7. Wordsworth said:

Science appears but what in truth she is,
Not as our glory and our absolute boast,
But as a succedaneum, and a prop
To our infirmity.

It strikes me sometimes that we think that if we can just immerse ourselves in enough technology, somehow it's a way of bypassing, overriding all of those sorts of challenges that go along as part of the human condition. As valuable as technology is – I have a laptop computer; I enjoy access to be able to do Internet research and send e-mails – I think it's important to remember that technology is supposed to be a facilitating tool and an enabler, but in essence what's still important is sort of what our primary work and our primary business is.

Now, I'm frankly disappointed, Mr. Chairman. When I rose to speak to this bill on April 17, I indicated that I thought there were some very positive things with Bill 7. I think one of my difficulties was that we've raised, not just me but my colleague for Edmonton-Glenora just a scant couple of moments ago, some legitimate issues and questions. It's useful to consider that on Bill 11, for example, we have government members complain that debate is tedious and nonproductive and so on. Well, here's an example of a bill at second reading where a number of bona fide legitimate questions were asked. We get to the committee stage. We vote for the bill because in principle we support the notion of this kind of management of science and research and technology in the province. Yet we get to this place, and has the minister responded in any way to those questions, issues, and queries that were raised at second reading? I'm sad to report that I haven't seen any attempt. It's not a question of whether it fell short or whatever.

This afternoon we saw the Minister of Children's Services provide an exemplary model of responsive governance in terms of trying hard to share information. There are some other ministers I might single out who are particular favourites of mine who get questions. If you ask questions, you are likely to get responses. You know, our friend from Calgary-Nose Creek, the Minister of Environment, is a minister who works hard in terms of trying to respond to those things. Why is it that the Minister of Innovation and Science has not responded to any of the questions I asked and some of my colleagues asked? You know, April 17, 2000 – that's a few weeks ago – would afford a department, a minister with those kinds of resources to answer some of those questions, but they haven't been answered.

Now, I'm going to go back to some of those things that still remain questions for me. Before I do that, I just want to note that my colleague for Edmonton-Glenora had talked about the intellectual property provision here. I'm a bit embarrassed. I had been a trademarks agent and had done some copyright work when I practised law, and I frankly am not as astute as my colleague for Edmonton-Glenora. My attention was not immediately drawn to those provisions, but in listening to his commentary and his analysis, I'd just like to say that I think he raised some legitimate questions around this whole issue of ownership of intellectual property, the ownership of the copyright, particularly if it's pursuant to a person's engagement under section 8(1), and if we look at the original bill . . . [interjections] [The chairman waited until the committee came to order]

THE CHAIRMAN: I wonder if we could be this quiet when we're listening to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Unfortunately, what we don't have in the bill is the text of section 8(1), but if you just go and look at the statute, here's what it provides:

The Authority may enter into agreements to engage the services of persons it considers necessary and may prescribe their duties and conditions of employment and pay their fees, salary, remuneration and expenses.

It goes on, but it's the 8(1) part that's relevant. So some of those people may enter into agreements where you often have a collaborative initiative involving two or three different creative forces, whether they're individuals or partnerships or corporations, and it seems to me this may not be sufficiently flexible.

The other thing is if you look at the proposed section 9(2): "The Authority may compensate a person" described in (1). You wonder if there shouldn't be stronger language to ensure that people who enter into these agreements are not taken advantage of by particular authorities.

I'd just like to take a moment to go back to the specific concerns I had raised the other day. One of the ones I zeroed in on last time was the provision for the appointment of a Member of the Legislative Assembly to these various boards, and I talked about that on April 17. I'm thinking here of sections 7, 16.1(5), 16.1(6) in terms of who's going to be appointed.

I'm reminded of 1991 when Mr. Don Getty, who was then Premier of the province, was defending the appointment of his barber to the Alberta Gaming Commission. You may remember this, Mr. Chairman. You've been here longer than I have. The Premier of the time said, and this is a direct quote: What's wrong with barbers? The answer, of course, is that there's nothing wrong with barbers, and I don't know whether the Member for Calgary-West maybe has some perspective on barbers in elected – no, that takes us in a different direction altogether.

I think the point I was going to make, Mr. Chairman, is simply this. MLAs are competent people. We all represent different kinds of experience and we have different sorts of skills, and hopefully we all got elected for reasons other than just the colour and the party we were running for at the time. I have lots of respect for my colleagues in this Assembly, for all 82 of them, but it's bigger than that. There's an issue of the independence of these various authorities and the extent why you would compromise what may be otherwise excellent work done by the authority by insisting they be – let me be blunt – tainted by having an elected member, an elected representative of the government on these things.

I think of the Calgary Airport Authority and the frustration that airport authority experienced because the federal government came along and said: we're going to appoint X number of people to that authority. When people come as sort of appointees, they often bring a different perspective, and you may say that's not necessarily a bad thing. But maybe what you want are just the best and brightest people involved in new technology in the province sitting on these different authorities. Do you really advantage those authorities? Do you make them any stronger by requiring them to have an MLA on there? Just as Mr. Getty's barber may have been a very knowledgeable person to appoint to the Alberta Gaming Commission back in 1991, I think it was, what does it do in terms of public confidence in terms of these different authorities? I asked that question. I've not seen any answer to it. I'm just referring the Minister of Innovation and Science to page 1056, when I made these comments on April 17, 2000.

I also asked about section 16.12. Why would it be that we would require the authority to report to the minister and advise the minister instead of advising the Legislative Assembly? Now, my ever astute colleague from Glenora also spoke to that.

It seems to me the essence of debate is that we can ask these questions, but after a while I feel like I'm in a bit of a wind tunnel, Mr. Chairman. I'm not getting any answers. I'm looking for some advice from wiser and more experienced legislators than I am. What's an MLA to do to get answers before we move to the next stage and we have to vote on this bill? What can I do? I've asked questions on second reading, and I stand up again and, as I say, it feels a little like being in a wind tunnel. You're closed off and the wind is zipping by and there's nobody paying very much attention. You just have to wonder if this is the way we're going to make the very best use of these authorities. I'm not sure it is. I think we can do better, but I'm still looking for answers to that.

Here's the other problem I've got. I come in and I want to support government bills. When the Government House Leader tells me that we've got some dandy bills here – you know, he's a pretty sharp fellow. He's a pretty sharp fellow and I'd like to accept that information, and I start off: how can I support this bill? So when I come in and ask questions and there's no response, no answers, it then gets me thinking. I'm not naturally a suspicious guy, Mr. Chairman, but every now and again I start wondering: if they won't give you the answers to legitimate questions asked fairly, then why not? Is it because there are no answers? Is it because they think we're not going to like the answers and we may go from the sort of mild support of a bill to opposition? I don't know, but I can't think of anything faster to move reasonable men and women from a position of neutrality to a position of opposition on a bill when you don't get answers.

What else haven't we got answers to? Well, why is it that the Regulations Act doesn't apply to the bylaws under these authorities? As I said on another bill, is it because of section 2 of the Regulations Act that they don't want to give a copy to the registrar of regulations? Is it section 3 of the Regulations Act that requires the gazetting of a regulation? Is that the problem? I don't know what it is, but I don't hear anybody offering an explanation. We're reasonable people. Even in the opposition we're reasonable people. If we were afforded that kind of explanation, we could at least deal with it and move on.

The question of an annual report. As my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora had also said, why doesn't the report come to the Legislative Assembly? Why does it go to the minister? This is usually good news. The Minister of Innovation and Science is the guy who'll talk to anybody with great enthusiasm about his portfolio. Well, why wouldn't he share the annual report? Why wouldn't he be insistent, adamant, that that annual report be made available in this place so that it's available to researchers, so that anybody who goes into the excellent Legislature Library can access it or university students and people can access it through the Alberta Library service? I mean, that just makes such good sense. Why would we not do that? I can think of no reason why the annual report wouldn't be tabled here and become a sessional document.

You can look at the ag institute, section 16.3, section 16.4(5), (6), or the energy institute, 16.42, and the same observation would apply.

Those are all questions I've got. I guess I'm expressing some chagrin that I'm not seeing any answers and I'm not seeing any attempt to provide answers. I'm really hopeful that we're going to have some answers before we get to third reading. This is what opposition is supposed to do. We ask those questions, and we're entitled to answers. I sure hope the Minister of Innovation and Science will come across with those answers before we have to get any further along. Those are the comments I wanted to make, and I continue to await not so patiently for those answers, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you very much.

Bill 10 Securities Amendment Act, 2000

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again this is one of those pieces of legislation that, I guess, demonstrates that opposition can be very co-operative. Opposition has the ability to look at bills and analyze them and separate those that are good from the bad. This is another one of those bills that a MLA has put some thought into and come up with a relatively good bill. I know at times there is that criticism, that opposition is there to criticize for the sake of criticism, which really isn't true. Now we have two bills in a row where we've made it quite clear that we support the principles of the bills. When we deal with bills like Bill 11 or Bill 18 that are very controversial, which in our opinion are bad bills, we're speaking out on those bills because they are not good bills, but when a bill presents itself that is acceptable, that has been well thought out and serves the purposes of Albertans, then it's a different story.

If we look at Bill 10, the Securities Amendment Act, just looking at the highlights of it, it restores the powers previously available to the Alberta Stock Exchange, the premerger to the Canadian Venture Exchange, the premerger in order to properly govern the conduct of its members and marketing regulation obligations, parallel legislation changes under the B.C. Securities Act. Secondly, it makes the filing of personal information a statutory requirement and, thirdly, gives the Alberta Securities Commission the flexibility to deal with involving alternative trading systems by permitting the commission to deem them an exchange, subject to a higher level of requirements.

Now, if you look a bit at the background of what has led us to this particular moment in history – let's put it that way – in March of last year, March of 1999, the restructuring of Canada's stock exchanges was announced, and upon the restructuring of the Canadian exchanges, the senior equity market was relocated to the Toronto Stock Exchange and the derivatives trading was moved to the Montreal exchange. The existing junior equity market was consolidated into one new national junior exchange, called the Canadian Venture Exchange. When we look at the stock market listings, for example, we now see that listed in the Edmonton Journal and the Sun under the Canadian Venture Exchange, rather than looking under the Alberta Exchange, as we used to previously.

Again, last year on November 16 we saw the appointment of the former chair and CEO of the Alberta Securities Commission named president and CEO of the Canadian Venture Exchange. His appointment was effective last year.

The goal of the Canadian exchange is to provide venture companies with effective access to capital while protecting investors. That's a very, very important point. From my observations of the stock exchange, watching it and participating in it to a very, very limited degree, both the Alberta and the B.C., the Alberta exchange I never really, really questioned that much, but with the B.C. exchange there were scandals related to it, scandals that, if I recall correctly, even involved one of the former Premiers of the province of B.C. There's always been some skepticism as to what was happening on that Vancouver exchange. By consolidating the two and coming out with a Canadian exchange, I think that's done good.

We saw earlier this year on March 2, for example, a Canadian exchange report a record-setting day, reaching new highs, trades in the value of $258 million and the number of trades and transactions being over 52,000. I think what that indicates is confidence in the exchange, restoration of that confidence that may have been lost to some degree.

So when we look at the intent of the bill, there is rationale for supporting it. It's not what we would call a contentious bill, and it has been vetted by the regulators and all the affected stockholders, as required. It's not one of those bills where we see hundreds of people in front of the Leg. saying, "Kill that bill." It's a type of bill that you don't see opposition to.

We should take the opportunity at this time to express our appreciation to the Alberta Securities Commission for their efforts to keep us informed as to developments concerning the Canadian Venture Exchange and for providing us with the briefing on the intent of the legislation. It's important, Mr. Chairman, that we have healthy, effective capital markets in Alberta to stimulate the economic growth, the job creation, and the investment opportunities.

Investment potential cannot be underestimated. It goes without saying. The benefit of capital investment is a key requirement for a strong economy. It's important, again, as I said earlier, to have confidence in the exchange. When investors are making their investments, they want to feel like they do have a degree of protection. I think that when we see the consolidation, the merger of the exchanges, we end up with a situation that probably is the better of two worlds.

On that particular basis, Mr. Chairman, I will keep my comments relatively short, as it's not a controversial bill with a great deal of shortcomings and I know the Member for Edmonton-Glenora is quite anxious to have his say on the bill as well. So on that note I'm going to conclude.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The Securities Amendment Act is pretty straightforward in many regards. We've had some co-operation from the sponsoring member and from the government, and for that I want to pass along my thanks. I also had a chance to talk with some folks from both the Securities Commission and the Canadian Venture Exchange. Some concerns have been clarified. Some others, however, endure.

Some of the language that's being cleaned up – for example, substituting the word "salesperson" for "salesman" – I think makes a lot of sense in this day and age. But I'm not sure, for example, under section 2(d) and 2(g), where the definition of "private issuer" has now replaced what was called a "private company" – now, "private issuer" is a term that I believe was used under B.C. legislation before but not in Alberta legislation, and I'm not versed well enough in securities law to fully appreciate the difference, and I haven't seen an explanation. I'm supposing what this means is that any private issuer would include either an individual or a company, but it doesn't say that. So I'm just wondering whether or not the sponsor could comment on that before we get this out of committee.

There are also some concerns that I have about regulations and rule-making, section 35, which I've raised at second reading. The subordinate lawmaking is a continuing problem in my mind, and the more I see the government move towards various forms of subordinate lawmaking, the more concerned I get, particularly when it comes to something that potentially may be affecting the life savings of Albertans and others, who may be affected by the operations of the junior exchange in Calgary.

Section 19, dealing with seed capital, also raises some red flags for me. Section 19 amends the seed capital exemptions to statutory declaration and substitutes "written acknowledgment" for "statutory declaration." Now, the requirement for a statutory declaration from investors under certain trade exemptions was reduced to a written acknowledgment through a blanket order back in May of 1987. So we've had more than 10 years' experience, and I'm wondering what that experience has been. Were there some particular problems that arose with this reduced standard? If so, maybe the sponsor of the bill could tell us what those problems were and how specifically moving toward statutory declaration is going to address those problems. Now, again, I recognize that the amendment may reflect current industry practice and it may bring this provision for exemption registration into harmony with other jurisdictions.

When I look at B.C., which seems to have been the model for other changes in this amending act, the requirement is only for written acknowledgment. So again we've got a little bit of a mismatch. If the idea is to harmonize regulations right across the country, why does this difference exist? So if the change wasn't driven by negative experience, what exactly is the change being driven by? [interjection] Mr. Chairman, I see that I have the associate minister of natural resources' rapt attention and interest in the Securities Amendment Act.

The other changes I think are relatively straightforward. I know there is currently no provision permitting the Alberta Securities Commission on its own to designate a person or a company as an exchange for the purposes of the act. Section 12 will correct this deficiency. The amendment in section 12 will give the commission the necessary flexibility to regulate the activities of alternative forms of trading systems that provide service to Alberta investors. As we see the explosion of e-trading and we try to anticipate all the changes that may come in the not-so-distant future, I think this is fairly visionary legislation, and I appreciate it.

There are some consequential amendments. One of them is the application for registration with section 54 being amended. This requires the subsequent amendment for a section to deal with applications for renewal, reinstatements, or amendments of registration themselves. Again, it's fairly benign. I think it's really in the realm of housekeeping.

Overall – and I think I mentioned this in second reading debate – the bill is supportable. It makes sense. It reflects some careful thinking about what we need to do to move forward as we gain experience with the new exchange structure across the country, as we work towards harmonizing interprovincially and then nationally and then maybe even internationally when it comes to dealing with the equities market.

I just wish that the government would show a little bit more leadership in talking to Albertans about these issues. It seems to me that increasingly we're learning of young students in school being given classroom assignments on picking stocks and watching the financial pages in the newspapers. Increasingly we're being bombarded with advertisements telling us to top up our RRSPs, usually in mutual funds. Canadians are being told that their government's sponsored pension plans may no longer be able to provide them the security they were hoping for. So there's a lot of pressure on individuals to look after their own financial destiny, their own financial future.

For many Canadians that means dabbling in securities one way or another, either through e-trading at home on their computer in the middle of the night or by handing over a portion of their pay to somebody for RRSP purposes to purchase mutual funds or whether it be in a more traditional relationship with a stockbroker. But because of that increasing experience of Canadians dabbling and becoming increasingly reliant on the success of those dabbings, I would just like to encourage the government to be far more proactive in providing education and information about the market, about investments, about the regulations and the protections and the risks of being involved in securities and equities. This bill would have been a good opportunity.

Now, I don't want to be provocative in this next comment, Mr. Chairman, but the government has demonstrated a willingness to go directly to Albertans to discuss or try to explain proposed legislation. Whether it be $1 million or $3 million, the government has certainly spent a bunch of money to talk about Bill 11: full-page newspaper ads, radio and TV spots, mail-outs to every household. So it's clear that if the government chooses to, it can commit public funds to the promotion of its legislative agenda. Instead of focusing on spending taxpayers' money to try to sell an idea that Albertans don't particularly seem willing to buy, it may be worth while for the government to ask its Public Affairs Bureau to figure out new and improved ways of communicating with Albertans when it comes to matters that are not really of a political or partisan nature but are really bread-and-butter issues that affect their lives in very real and tangible ways through their pocketbooks.

So I would ask, finally, that the government maybe rethink its priorities for how it uses its Public Affairs Bureau money. It's about an $8 million budget. Perhaps they should be less inclined to dedicate that money to trying to sell a government idea and therefore be accused of using taxpayers' money to purchase propaganda and, instead, use that same tax funding to provide nonpartisan, nonbiased information about something as fundamental as their ability to gain and to benefit from a healthy securities industry here in Alberta.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I look forward to response from the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the sponsor of the bill, and I hope to get the answers to some of these concerns before we are finally called to vote on Bill 10 in committee.

[The clauses of Bill 10 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 7 and Bill 10 as amended.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 7. The committee reports the following with some amendments: Bill 10.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 23
Apprenticeship and Industry Training
Amendment Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate May 2: Mr. Hancock]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure tonight to rise and speak to Bill 23, the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Amendment Act, 2000. I would like to compliment the sponsor, the Minister of Learning, on this particular bill. It overall is a good piece of legislation, and it certainly isn't anywhere nearly as contentious as Bill 11 or Bill 18. This is a bill that I think overall is very good.

Now, the object of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to implement changes to the operation of the apprenticeship and industry training systems in Alberta and to make it more responsive to the employers, the employees, and the apprentices. Again, this is an area that does have to be overhauled, and it is an area where there is great concern in industry here in Alberta. A lot of that has to do with the average age of our tradesmen in this province. We have seen in so many instances that because of our cyclical economy, because of feast and famine – and certainly it's good to see that that has been leveled off in recent years – it's extremely hard to train new workers, to put them into the apprenticeship programs and to see them complete that. If there's no work, then certainly it's very difficult for employers to keep these people on. So it's no wonder that employers are very cautious before they do take on young people into the apprenticeship programs.

As well, part of the object of this particular bill is that it will propose changes that will redefine the government's provisions in the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board. One of the things we will see from this is that entrance requirements for trades are removed from regulations and added to the legislation. I think one of the strengths of these proposed changes, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that there was extensive consultation before this bill was drafted. I think it's one of the reasons why the changes to this bill will be limited and it will be a good piece of legislation and one that industry, the employers, the employees, and the apprentices will all look forward to.

There are some concerns, and they are minimal. One of these is that they are concerned that not allowing the regulation that will tighten up the requirements of the new competency training to be drafted will not allow a high enough standard to be kept, and it is absolutely essential that there are uniform standards to protect the professional reputation of current journeymen.

Associated with this as well, Mr. Speaker, is the issue of workplace safety. We have seen in a recent article from the Calgary Herald that workplace fatalities are well above average, particularly when we look at it at this time of the year. We have already had 19 fatalities in the workplace here in the province whereas last year, according to the article, we had a total of 34. So even though we haven't reached half the year, there has been quite a rash of fatalities.

We don't know if this is because of a number of reasons: whether it is because we've moved to a system where we are looking at compliance for workplace safety from the employers, whether this is a result of the tremendous decrease in the number of inspectors in OH and S, or if part of the reason is because we have gone to a new system where we are creating safety associations and in those associations have sort of squeezed out the professionals that we had in safety training in this province. Once we had professionals that looked after, for example, safety management systems in companies. They delivered OH and S programs in the companies, and they also looked at emergency planning and response. So those are all things that certainly have a big impact on workplace safety. Again, when we look at an apprenticeship program, we certainly do have to have standards that are going to deliver employers and graduating apprentices out into the workplace who are very safety conscious, and it will certainly help all people.

Now, I also see here, Mr. Speaker, that the International Union of Operating Engineers supports this new legislation as well. One of their major concerns is that people who are entering the workforce from the apprenticeship program and the industry training program will in fact be quite competent, quite qualified, and certainly that safety for all will be guaranteed.

Some more specific concerns or comments I'd like to make on Bill 23, the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Amendment Act, are from the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board consultation, A Vision for the Future, phase 2 update. Now, they do have a number of recommendations here as to how they are going to strengthen the apprenticeship program here in the province. One of the first things they wish to do, Mr. Speaker, is to offer more options for training. I touched on that briefly in my opening remarks: how employers are quite reluctant to take on apprentices if they cannot see down the road that they are going to have work for these people and be able to provide them with top-quality experience in the apprenticeship program.

As well, when these apprentices do start in the apprenticeship program, because of their knowledge, because of their abilities, they start at a much lower rate. Certainly that is a discouragement for people entering a particular trade. It is very, very difficult for these people to survive on these low wages, particularly when they have to take time off in the apprenticeship program to go to educational institutions. So some of the recommendations here certainly will address this idea that there will be improved financial support for apprentices.

Now, as well, one of the recommendations is that we will have increased promotions of ways to start an apprenticeship and recognize prior learning so that the whole process of apprenticeship will be compacted. I certainly see that this has been one of the ways of lightening the load and the hardships of young people who are entering an apprenticeship program, but I also think that if we are going to allow a program where people can challenge standards, can challenge exams, then those standards have to be extremely high because of the lack of experience that does come with these types of situations.

As well, I think one of the strengths of this new bill is that there will be more training opportunities for youth. I know that when we look at what is happening in our institutions of higher learning in this province, perhaps one of the biggest expenses for anybody is when they have to leave their home, travel to a different city, and pay for room and board on top of all their tuition fees, their books and whatever. Again, I think it is an extremely strong part of this bill that there will be more opportunities for youth for training, and hopefully this will allow the youth to stay at home and share in the support that families give to people when they are seeking their education.

Another recommendation here is that there be increased options for certification of workers. More opportunities we can give people to be certified in a particular trade certainly is something that would draw people to the apprenticeship program. Again, the more qualified our workers are and the more we have, it will certainly eliminate the problems we do find in these boom times we have now in Alberta, where perhaps some people are being pressed into doing particular types of work that they are not qualified for, that they are not trained for, work they cannot do safely. Perhaps this is one of the reasons that we do have such an increase in workplace fatalities this year as compared to last.

One of the other recommendations that has support from the board is that apprenticeship wage percentages will remain in regulation unless changed or removed by the Board in consultation with the applicable provincial apprenticeship committee.

A second recommendation, Mr. Speaker, is that journeyman/apprentice ratios will remain in regulation. Again, certainly when we look at the overall quality of a program for young apprentices, a very important part of that component is the journeyman/apprentice ratio. It's a case where we don't want to see one journeyman for too many apprentices.

As well, Mr. Speaker, another recommendation that has been recognized is that there are specific . . .

THE SPEAKER: Excuse me, hon. member, please. The Minister of Forestry was on his way out. This is the House, not committee.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, the board does recognize that there are specific problems being experienced with the description of some trades. The board will work with the provincial apprenticeship committees to look for solutions to this particular problem.

Another very good recommendation by the board in the drafting of this bill was that they recommended criteria for the designation of trades and occupations. When we look at this, there are a certain number of criteria that the board chose, and certainly one of those was the criteria for the description of all trades, both compulsory and optional certification trades. This is certainly a criteria that we would look at, and I certainly look forward in Committee of the Whole to speaking about this in a much broader sense.

Another criteria they looked at was for the designation of compulsory certification trades, and finally, another criteria was for the designation of occupations. So, again, a very, very thorough look at what has happened here with the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act.

I think it's also important that we look at the background for this particular bill. Since late 1996, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board and the Alberta government have consulted on ways to make the apprenticeship and industry training system more responsive to employers, employees, and apprentices. As a result of those consultations, six new actions in apprenticeship and industry training occurred.

The first was more options for training. I think that when we have more options for training, one of the good outcomes is that it certainly gets away from any abuses that can happen in the apprenticeship program; for example, where young people are offered an apprenticeship, they go to work for a particular business, they start out as labourers, and after two years they are still not in the apprenticeship program. So we've lost people when they quit those jobs, probably people that would have been very good tradesman. They had a tremendous interest at one point. Just the sheer frustration of not being able to get into the apprenticeship program would allow them to quit.

One of the other recommendations they did have was improved financial support for apprentices. Again, when these people are studying, when they are at school, when they are on the job at reduced rates, they certainly are facing a certain number of hardships. For some it's very difficult to get student loans. So I think this is a definite improvement to what is in existence now.

Another recommendation that resulted from the consultation is that there should be increased promotions of ways to start an apprenticeship and recognize prior learning. Again, we've always had this in the trades. If we look historically at this, certainly a good example would be where a blacksmith would take his son on, and he'd have on-the-job training. This certainly continues to this day. It's not uncommon for someone in the trades to take one of their children with them, and they certainly do pick up an awful lot of knowledge even though they aren't in a program. This also fits right in with another conclusion of this group because of consultation, that this would provide more training opportunities for youth.

When we look at the whole program, we also see that all of these increase the options for the certification of workers. Again, what we want in this province is a very well-qualified body of tradesmen, and with that certification we'd get away from what we find here today, where we do have people entering jobs that are almost forced into those jobs because we do have a lack of skilled tradespeople.

Those are a number of the strengths of this bill, Mr. Speaker, and with that I will conclude my remarks on Bill 23 this evening. I look forward to debating it more in Committee of the Whole. Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a second time]

THE SPEAKER: A point of clarification, hon. members. The only people whose votes will be counted are those who are in their rightful places, and if it had been a situation, that would have been the resolution.

THE CLERK: Bill 19, Alberta Income Tax Amendment Act, 2000. Adjourned debate, hon. Dr. West.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.

THE SPEAKER: Please sit down, both hon. members. The Clerk very clearly pointed out Bill 19.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, might we receive unanimous consent to not deal with Bill 19 and move to third reading on Bill 11?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Government Bills and Orders
head: Third Reading

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. JONSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act, and in doing so to make just a few comments about this very, very important piece of legislation.

First, Mr. Speaker, it should be noted that this particular piece of legislation has received very extensive debate in this Assembly both at second reading and at committee stage. Indeed, this bill will be the most debated piece of legislation in the history of the Alberta Legislature by the time we have completed that debate.

The amount of time devoted to this bill is, of course, important, Mr. Speaker, because the topic is important. Health care is in fact probably the most important social issue in the minds of many Albertans and most Canadians today. As a result, not only has Bill 11 been heavily debated in this Legislature, but it has also been extensively discussed outside this building in the public: in meetings, in coffee shops and restaurants, in living rooms and kitchens across this province of Alberta.

That discussion and debate, Mr. Speaker, has sometimes become very heated, very emotional, as occasionally happens with very potentially emotional and important topics such as health care. Sometimes that discussion and debate strayed away from the actual content of the bill – in fact, in many cases it did – and focused on some of the bigger challenges and issues facing health care right across our nation.

What is important, however, is that this government did listen to the discussion with an open mind and an open willingness to adapt and to amend this bill. We heard what Albertans were telling us about this particular piece of legislation and about health care in general in Alberta. We heard what they said in their many calls to our constituency offices, in their calls to the government RITE operators, in the many community meetings and forums that we attended, and in the letters and e-mails that we received. We heard the concerns that Albertans had with Bill 11, the concerns that they had with our health care system, and the priorities that they have for a health system of the future.

We gave serious attention and consideration to their comments and their suggestions, and the result, Mr. Speaker, was the substantial number of amendments that we as a government brought forward to strengthen and improve this legislation, amendments that provide further protection for our publicly funded health care system, amendments that provide even further protection for patients and consumers, and amendments that clarify the overall intent of Bill 11 to build a stronger publicly funded health system for the future. For that, we thank all Albertans who took the time to provide their input. We listened, we considered, and we acted through amendment.

For those suggestions and concerns from stakeholder groups and individual Albertans that fell beyond the scope and mandate of this particular bill, we commit, Mr. Speaker, to take aggressive and timely action to address those overall issues as well with respect to our much-prized health care system.

Mr. Speaker, what we have ended up with is a strong and necessary piece of legislation to preserve publicly funded health care in this province and to retain the flexibility to deal with issues and challenges as they arise in the future.

What we have is a bill that prevents the development of any two-tier, American style health care system in Alberta, a bill that prohibits the two-tier concept supported by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

We have a bill that makes it illegal to operate a private hospital in this province and that makes it illegal to charge a fee to Albertans for medically necessary services.

We have a bill that makes it illegal to jump the queue and get faster access to medically necessary surgery through a payment of any kind and makes it illegal to accept any type of payment to give faster service for a medically necessary surgery.

Mr. Speaker, we have a bill that protects patients from any unethical behaviour or pressure to purchase unnecessary products and services and a bill that limits charges for enhanced goods and services so that there is no profiteering at the expense of a patient in the health system at large.

Mr. Speaker, we have a bill that puts all surgical facilities under the control of the publicly funded health system so that they operate only where there is a benefit to the publicly funded health system of this province.

We have a bill that requires a health authority to make effective and efficient use of existing hospital space before considering a contract with a surgical facility.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we have a bill that ensures openness and accountability in our health system by requiring that any contract between a health authority and a surgical facility must be available to the public.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 as legislation is fully consistent with the principles of the Canada Health Act and in fact helps to protect and preserve those principles in the operation of Alberta's publicly funded health system.

Bill 11 is legislation that, as I have so often stated, is not the solution to every challenge facing health care in Alberta or in Canada, but it is one important piece of Alberta's six-point plan to build a solid foundation for a publicly funded health care system in this province in the future. It is one important piece in helping ensure the sustainability and accessibility of quality publicly funded health care services in Alberta not only today but into the future.

Mr. Speaker, I would encourage all members in this Assembly to look at this legislation with an open mind, without political bias and without political rhetoric. Look at its strengths, its protections, its optimism for the future. I encourage all members to support Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last few weeks and even tonight we've heard lots of rhetoric from this government on Bill 11. We've heard half-truths, misinformation, insults, and inflammatory statements, all in an attempt to defend the indefensible, to defend a bill that will promote two-tiered health care in this province, that will open the doors to private, for-profit health care in this province, and that will ensure that our cherished publicly funded health care system will in fact be under attack not only here in Alberta but across Canada.

This government has spent at least $3 million – $3 million – to sell a bill to its own citizens. The more Albertans hear, the more information they get, the more they dislike this bill. The e-mails, the faxes, the petitions, the telephone calls, the polls all indicate that opposition to this bill is increasing daily, that the only ones in this province who wish to promote the bill are the government members in this Legislative Assembly and the few who have their ears, and that contrary to the wishes of its own citizens, tens of thousands of Albertans, they are pushing a bill that Albertans do not want.

It's as much an issue of democracy, Mr. Speaker, as much an issue of values as it is of the promotion of private health care in this province. This government has been told that morally, ethically, socially, and economically this bill does not make sense, and that's not only by the members of this Official Opposition. Religious leaders, scholars, economists, doctors, nurses, and health professionals in this province have told government members, I'm sure many to their faces, that this bill is dangerous. What we have instead of facts is government members, the government executive, and the Premier of this province trying to lay blame, trying to say that it's the Official Opposition's fault that Albertans do not believe what they are saying. In this government's arrogance, the only justification we have heard in this Legislative Assembly is that they are right and the tens of thousands of Albertans who have said that they do not want this bill, that they want this bill pulled, are wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this government has insulted Albertans by saying that they are left-wing nuts, by saying that they do not understand the bill, that it's only a minor adjustment, by sending out truth squads to tell Albertans what the truth is. They continue to insult the intelligence of Albertans by saying that they don't understand the bill, a bill that this government has sent to their homes, a bill that this government believed they would read themselves and understand what the meaning of the words are within the bill and make judgments on their own as to what that bill means. This government has the arrogance and these government members have the arrogance to say that Albertans do not understand what the bill says.

In fact, this disrespect the government members have for constituents is based solely on the fact that the constituents disagree with the government members. The reality is that in fact we have seen government members who don't understand what the bill is about. We've seen government members who say, "Well, this bill isn't about overnight stays," when in fact it is. We've seen disputes between the junior Minister of Health and Wellness and one of the members of the truth squad as to whether the bill is really about private hospitals or about surgical facilities. Then we had recently the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, who indicated that this bill was a miracle cure. Just this afternoon the Premier said: well, no; really it's just a minor adjustment to health care in this province. So do you know what you're talking about? Do you know what you're supporting, or is it just pure arrogance that you are voting for something that you have no understanding about?

The amendments that were put forward, Mr. Speaker, do not deal with the key concerns Albertans have with this bill. They do not deal with the issue of overnight stays. They do not deal with the issue of enhanced services. They do not really deal with the issues of conflict of interest that will continue to occur within this province. They do not deal with the contracts and the opening up of contracts that the Alberta Medical Association would see, not only for the surgical facilities but for all contracts. That is not what these amendments deal with, so in fact the amendments do not deal with what some of the issues are that Albertans have identified over and over again in the last few months.

It's easy for the government members to hide behind their desks and hurl insults, because it's impossible for them to substantiate their so-called facts, these half-truths that we see and hear on a daily basis from this government in this Legislative Assembly and outside this Legislative Assembly. So let's go through what some of these so-called facts are that the government indicates the bill will do.

The government says that the bill will support the principles of the Canada Health Act. Well, let's look at some realities. The Premier has been on record over the years saying that he would like to change the principles of the Canada Health Act, that he would like to change the Canada Health Act. Twice government members have voted against the principles of the Canada Health Act, and in fact the federal Minister of Health has recently indicated, as well as another legal opinion, that Bill 11 may well contravene those principles of the Canada Health Act. With regard to the provision of MRI services in this province, the Official Opposition has indicated, as well as now the federal Minister of Health in terms of an investigation, that in fact we think currently the province is contravening the principles of the Canada Health Act. So much for their support of the principles of the Canada Health Act.

Another so-called fact by this government is that this legislation is similar to legislation elsewhere in Canada. The reality is that there is no legislation in Canada which specifically provides for overnight stays, because what that does is open up the provision for private, for-profit hospitals. Their own blue-ribbon panel told them so. Not more than a year, a year and a half ago the government's own blue-ribbon panel said: you're going to have facilities that have overnight stays; those are private, for-profit hospitals. That's a fact.

Contrary to that being a minor change, as the Premier would on some days like us to think, even though it's a breakthrough, even though it's an innovation – and those are their words – even though this will make a difference in the provision of health care but is just a little minor change, in fact what this bill does is set up private, for-profit hospitals or, as the euphemism is now, surgical facilities.

Another fact, Mr. Speaker, is that Saskatchewan specifically outlaws extra billing, the so-called enhanced services that open the doors to two-tiered health care, which is what this legislation again provides for.

Now, another so-called fact the government talks about over and over again is that the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the federal Minister of Health made them do this, made them bring in the legislation in its current form. The actual fact, Mr. Speaker, is that HRG put forward an application to the College of Physicians and Surgeons to set up overnight stays at their facilities, which are, again – and that's what the blue-ribbon panel said as a result of that request – private, for-profit hospitals. That's why the college came back to this Assembly, to this minister to say: "You know what? We're not in a position to open up the doors for private, for-profit hospitals. Your role is to close those doors, not to open them." You know what? This government doesn't have the guts to do that, doesn't have the guts and the fortitude, doesn't have what it takes to say no to overnight facilities that are private, for-profit hospitals. That's what the bill should have said.

Now, another fact is that private facilities will only be allowed where there's a benefit to the public and the current beds need to be used more efficiently. This so-called fact is written into the bill, and therefore it will make it so. Well, the reality is that there have been virtually no studies done by this government with regard to the benefits of those 52 clinics that they like to bring up all the time. Any studies that do exist – and there are I think three, to my knowledge, in this province, of which the minister said today he would table two in the Legislative Assembly – in fact indicate that there is no benefit. All those studies have to do specifically with Calgary. Perhaps the members would like to ask the minister for those particular studies, because I think they might be very informative. They might in fact change your vote when it comes to the third reading vote.

So in fact there is no benefit. In reality, the experience in Calgary would bear out the analysis that has been done in other jurisdictions across the world that indicates that where there is a two-tiered health care system, where you have a private, for-profit system sitting alongside a public health care system, in fact what happens is your costs go up and your waiting lists go up and there is no benefit to the public system or to the public. That is borne out by the experience we've seen in Calgary. If you want to do some dot connecting, if in fact those 52 clinics, the majority of which are in Calgary, are so efficient and effective, then why do we have some of the largest waiting lists for services in Calgary? Shouldn't the results that this bill is supposed to provide be evident, then, in Calgary? But they're not. I think members need to ask themselves: why is that? Maybe the reality is that the experiment is not working in Calgary, and it might be better to plan than to experiment.

Conflict-of-interest provisions. In fact, what we are going to have in this province are 17 different conflict-of-interest provisions, and those provisions will have no teeth, much as we see right now in Calgary and specifically with regards to conflict of interest that is occurring there at this particular point in time. Again, the government has done little about it.

The other fact the government keeps saying is that the RHAs are asking for this, that the reason the government is doing this is because the RHAs are asking for this. Well, the only ones that have asked for this that I am aware of, unless the minister can table something different, are the politically appointed members of the Calgary regional health authority. They are the ones that are on record as saying they would like to have this option. The individuals in the health care professions who are working within the regional health authorities are not asking for this. In fact, they are saying that this bill will not provide them with what is required to ensure a well-run public health care system.

Another fact with regards to the bill and the whole issue around Bill 11 has been that this bill will be debated in the Legislative Assembly. Well, each member of the Official Opposition has sent a request to the members of the government to debate Bill 11, to have a real debate within their constituencies so that their constituents can in fact have an opportunity to ask questions. What occurred? To date, 31 government members have not said one word in this public debate in the Legislative Assembly on Bill 11. What we've also had is debate curtailed in this Assembly twice, through a process of a type of closure in first reading, in second reading, and in Committee of the Whole stage closure as well. We have not had a full and open debate, nor has the government indicated that they are willing to listen to what the real concerns of Albertans are with regards to some of the key issues on the bill. If they were, they would have voted in favour of our subamendment on overnight stays, which is one of the two key, key concerns on Bill 11. So not willing to listen, not willing to make any changes, not willing to have debate: those are what some of the real facts are when it comes to what Bill 11 is about.

Now, I believe a government's role is to hear what people's concerns are and not to diminish their legitimate concerns, because quite frankly to do so would be to sow the seeds of distrust that eventually this government will harvest. It is you who are sowing those seeds of distrust, and it is you who will harvest what the results of it are. The government members can sit and point fingers all they want. They can do that. They can say that it's the Official Opposition. They can say that it's the unions. They can say that it's the special interest groups. The reality is that it's only themselves to blame for not listening to what the concerns of Albertans are on this cherished issue of health care.

In the latest poll 60 percent of Albertans have indicated that they do not support this bill. That's a huge number, and of those 60 percent over 90 percent said that they knew the bill. These are not uninformed Albertans that are saying they don't like the bill. These are informed Albertans who are saying they have serious concerns that this government has not heard.

The government's insults and their half truths and their misinformation have not satisfied Albertans, nor has the $3 million spent on advertising been enough to buy them off. They know the bill of goods that they're being sold, and they're not buying that bill of goods. Though the government may well say "I'm right" and the government may well say Albertans do not know what they are talking about, the reality is that they do know and they do not agree with what the government has said.

It would do well, I believe, for the government and the government members to take a close look at what is the real story behind Bill 11, what are the real issues behind Bill 11, and to take heed and listen to those concerns and pull the bill. It's as simple as that.

It's the government's third try at it. It's still not right. They are still not protecting the interests of Albertans with regards to the protection of our public health care system, and in fact what needs to happen is that the bill be pulled. We are in third reading stage, and in fact what needs to happen is that the bill be killed.

We are hearing right now outside individuals who have severe concerns around the bill. We are hearing a representation of Albertans who have indicated that they do not agree with the tack this government has taken, and though the Premier has promised over the years that there is a plan in health care and has promised over the years that things will get better, the reality is that over the last seven years we have seen a worsening of our health care system in this province.

In fact, the promise the Premier made in 1993 that there would be short-term pain for long-term gain has now extended into long-term pain, and there is no end in sight. There is absolutely no end in sight. This proposal that is being put forward to initiate private, for-profit health care in this province will not do anything to alleviate the fact that our health care system needs to have some long-term plans and long-term solutions. With the efforts this government has provided and the money that has been spent on pushing private, for-profit health care, in fact there have been, it seems, no energies left over to defend and maintain and sustain our publicly funded health care system.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the first opportunity to speak on Bill 11 that I've had. While many good points and speeches have been made on Bill 11 and questions raised in other venues by very gifted and knowledgeable people, I believe I owe it to my constituents to put some of my thoughts about Bill 11 on the record in the House.

Firstly, I do not believe in a two-tier health system; likely I never will. However, I do not disagree with contracting some work to private providers.

I acknowledge and respect the concerns expressed by some of my constituents and by others outside the constituency who have called and written about Bill 11 and our health care system. Many have quoted one study or another, quoted one expert or another in their comments on our health care system generally or specifically on Bill 11. My experience in the matter of expert opinion, in over 15 years in local government and now as an MLA, has led me to the conclusion that the fact that the experts do not agree makes a layperson's opinion valid. However, I like to be as well informed a layperson as possible.

It has along the way in the debate been alleged that some self-interest is driving this issue or this bill. While it's my view that there is not much that is done that cannot somehow in some way be perceived or construed as being driven by the self-interest of a few or of many, when all is said and done, there is a lot more said than done.

Some questions arise. Why Bill 11, and why now? Right now there is no legislation to control, regulate, govern, or prohibit the operation of a private hospital system in Alberta, so if we do not create legislation to deal with it, I suggest to you that what we will have in the near future is a private hospital system running parallel to the public system. Some contend that it won't happen unless the private system can access publicly paid for, medically necessary insured work. I think otherwise.

The private sector can now do Workers' Compensation Board, military, and RCMP work as well as uninsured work, all of which is outside the Canada Health Act. In addition, they will likely be able to do publicly paid for, insured work coming from other provinces. What we could well have is publicly paid for, insured work from other provinces being done in an Alberta facility to which Albertans would not have access, so it seems reasonable that we should have a method of providing access for Albertans. Bill 11 does this through allowing for contracts between private providers and health authorities, which leaves both access and payment for insured services within the public system.

Then the question is: why now? It seems to me that for the first time in Alberta we have a private facility that is capable of competing in a significant way with the public system on a basis that heretofore has not existed through the small-scale 50 or so private clinics which are now in operation. So if we are going to do anything in the way of legislation, now is the time, and it is needed now.

The existing clinics demonstrate clearly that publicly paid for, private-provider arrangements can and do work very well. There are in the present health care system many private-provider contracted services. I do not think there are many people that go to work in our health care system that do so without some sort of contract.

My experience with collective bargaining leads me to believe that the employee-provider organizations say to employers that unless you assure us a certain earning, we will not work for you. In like manner, contractors, having calculated their costs and determined what they want in the way of earnings, either negotiate with or tender to employers for the work they want to do. Which method is preferable is largely determined by whose self-interest is being served. A point of view is driven by a viewpoint. The method of service delivery does not determine either access or payment arrangements. Albertans receiving medically necessary services will not have to pay for the medically necessary insured services no matter which delivery method is used.

In Bill 11 which method of service delivery is most desirable is to be determined by the respective health authority in accordance with legislative criteria. Bill 11, while it does deal with private-provider arrangements, is but a small part of the greater health care issue in our province and in our country. The fact is that health care expenditures have increased rapidly, mostly due to the very positive and beneficial developments and increased know-how in what we are able to do in the way of patient care for our citizens. We are truly well blessed in this regard. However, these improvements come at a cost. What we can do in health care in the future will not be limited by increases in knowledge. They will be limited by the fiscal constraints that economic reality will place upon us.

It has been said that some of the problems we face are due to the cuts that were made a few years ago. Well, the budget reductions ended years ago too. If the cuts made in Alberta are the ogre, why do all the provinces face the same problems we in Alberta face?

Many of the waiting lists we daily concern ourselves with are for procedures that were nonexistent a few short years ago. Billions more dollars will be spent to improve and strengthen our public health care system, and I strongly support our public health care system. Allowing some of the work within the public system to be done by private providers is nothing new and does not threaten our public health care system. Bill 11 will spell out the rules that will govern the private-provider arrangements.

Mr. Speaker, health care is a very interesting and complex matter of great concern to our government and to all our citizens. Accordingly, let us recognize that Bill 11 is not intended to deal with all health care issues but is intended to set out the framework under which private providers can participate in the delivery of publicly paid for services provided on an equally accessible basis to all our citizens without charge to any of them, and I believe Bill 11 will do so.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to move that we adjourn debate on third reading of Bill 11.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[At 9:59 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 4, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/05/04

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, we thank You for Your abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask You to ensure to us Your guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to file a petition signed by 65 constituents from Wetaskiwin-Camrose and neighbouring constituencies. They are urging "the Government of Alberta to re-instate the front license plate on all vehicles registered in Alberta."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition today signed by 180 Albertans from Edmonton, Onoway, and St. Albert. It reads: we "urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining [the] public health care [system]."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition this afternoon to table as well. It asks the Assembly to "urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald."

Thank you very much.

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Speaker, today with your permission I'd like to present to the Assembly a petition that has been signed by 171 Albertans. The petition calls upon the Legislative Assembly to maintain Kananaskis Country in a natural state, to deny development approval for projects proposed for that region, and to create a wildland park in the Spray and Kananaskis valleys.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition today signed by 162 Albertans from Sherwood Park, Morinville, Barrhead, Westlock, Beaumont, Fort Saskatchewan, St. Albert, Stony Plain, and Edmonton. They are all urging "the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present today signed by 80 Edmontonians who are reaffirming their support for the five basic principles of medicare and urging the government of Alberta to "uphold the letter and spirit of these principles," opposing two-tier health care, and urging the government of Alberta "to maintain an adequate system of public hospitals and to not permit the development of private, for-profit hospitals in the province of Alberta."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present to the Legislative Assembly this afternoon a petition signed by Calgarians. These Calgarians are asking "the assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour dispute at the Calgary Herald."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present to the Legislative Assembly that states:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government . . . to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

It's signed by 160 Albertans from Edson, Niton Junction, Peers, Whitecourt, Hinton, and Carrot Creek.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions to table today. The first petition reads as follows:

We, the undersigned, ask the assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.

This petition is signed by 111 Calgarians.

The second petition reads as follows:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

This petition is signed by 664 Albertans, bringing the total number of signatures on this petition to 21,725.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present 87 signatures from Hanna and the counties of Newell, Wheatland, Vulcan, and Lethbridge urging "the Government of Alberta to re-instate front license plates" on all registered vehicles.

MR. TANNAS: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased today to present a petition on behalf of 46 constituents from rural Calgary, Cayley, Okotoks, High River, Black Diamond, Priddis, and De Winton.

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to re-instate the front license plate on all vehicles registered in Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. SEVERTSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by 20 residents from the Innisfail-Sylvan Lake constituency. It reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to re-instate the front license plate on all vehicles registered in Alberta.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

MR. TRYNCHY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented on May 2 be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to re-instate the front license plate on all vehicles registered in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I brought forward yesterday regarding the undermining of public health care be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition on osteoporosis I presented on Wednesday, May 3 now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Alberta Government to take an enlightened preventative approach and add the newer and more effective medications and therapies to the Alberta Drug List to ensure the health of an aging society.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented to the Assembly on Wednesday, May 3 regarding the long, disruptive labour dispute at the Calgary Herald now be read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned, petition the assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented yesterday be now read and received. It states:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government . . . to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented yesterday signed by 4,566 Albertans be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

1:40

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table today a letter that was written to the Prime Minister by our Premier. It's urging the federal government to get on with accepting the Estey/Kroeger report, thereby saving Alberta farmers up to a hundred million dollars.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly eight copies of my response to Motion for a Return 46.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to table the requisite number of copies of the list of 52 major health facility infrastructure projects and well over 200 upgrading projects that the province has funded in the last eight years. Since '92-93 that's almost a billion dollars spent on these projects that have been completed, are under construction, or are in the design and planning stage.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table a letter from the mayor of Drayton Valley outlining the concern of the council of Drayton Valley about Bill 11 in its present form.

Secondly, I'd like to table a one-page report and interesting reading on the evolution of someone from a staunchly Conservative family to a Bill 11 detester.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a report prepared by the Liberal opposition research titled Alberta vs Ontario: Who Really Has the Lowest Personal Income Tax Rate? Attached to this report is a copy of a page from the Treasury business plan for the current year which states that the target for the province of Alberta is to have the lowest personal income tax load in Canada. Of course, the analysis shows that that's no longer the case.

The second, Mr. Speaker, is a summary of the 2000 Ontario budget produced by the Ministry of Finance for that province. It highlights the tax-on-income system that maintains a progressive system, has three different tax brackets, and of course provides fair tax cuts for middle-income earners in that province.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of correspondence from Mr. Scott Kennie. It's a very personal and moving observation on his battle with cancer and his fears about a private health care system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter from Mr. Harold Moore to the hon. Member for Dunvegan asking him not to vote for Bill 11.

The second is the president's update from the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses entitled What's Wrong With Bill 11?

The third is a letter from Mr. Rankin to Mr. Marshall with regards to Professor Levy's memo on the Canada Health Act and Alberta's Bill 11 indicating that it will provide for two-tiered health care and contravene the Canada Health Act.

My last tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the summary of five investigative stories which will become available on Calgary Lab Services. It asks: who approved the Calgary Lab Services?

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon with the appropriate number of copies. The first one is a study showing that for-profit hospitals are lower quality than not-for-profit hospitals.

The second is the results of a public inquiry poll that shows 92 percent believe there's sufficient evidence of conflicting interests at the Calgary regional health authority to warrant a public inquiry into its operations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three different letters to table today. Each one of these letters details the reasons why the writer is opposed to Bill 11. The first letter in the form of an e-mail is from David McVean of Calgary. The second letter is from Ruth Vander Wonde in Edmonton. The third letter is from Astrid Blodgett, also of Edmonton.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter from a constituent, Irene Rheinwald, who asked me to table this letter registering her "outrage at Bill 11, its ramifications" and with the Premier's "inability to produce any empirical evidence to support his claims."

The second is a thesis project by Kate Hibbard on The Role of Changing Together: A Centre for Immigrant Women in the Well-being of Its Clientele; A Qualitative Evaluation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings. They are all letters expressing concerns about private health care and Bill 11. They are from Leona Sambor, Linda Harasewich, Tenille Harasewich, Mark Pouliot, and Doug Thomson.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a report compiled by an injured worker. It includes a judge's decision that the Appeals Commission cannot set the terms of reference for an appeal, only the board of directors. It also includes a number of recommendations. It's quite timely in that there is a review of the Appeals Commission at this time.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a copy of a petition bearing 68 signatures of Albertans "expressing their support for the permanent protection of the Spray and Kananaskis Valleys and their opposition to any developments in the Spray Valley." The original copies went to the Premier.

My second tabling is a letter from Kristian Kiml, who is also opposed to having any further development around Spray Lakes.

The third tabling is a letter from Ken Topham, who is also opposed to the proposed development of Spray Lakes by Genesis Land Development Corporation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter I've received from the Minister of Municipal Affairs regarding the $375,000 raised through the power engineers registration fee. I'm very grateful for that information.

The second tabling this afternoon is five copies of an e-mail from Naomi Lakritz. She is an editorial writer who is currently on strike at the Calgary Herald, and she's looking desperately for a way for this dispute to be resolved and leadership from the government.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you know, it's not very often that I get an opportunity to introduce a class of students all the way from Medicine Hat. It's really quite a major undertaking to bring students up from Medicine Hat. I met with the group at noon today. They will have been on the road for three days by the time they get back to Medicine Hat, after traveling up to Edmonton yesterday, spending today here, and then traveling back to Medicine Hat tomorrow.

It's indeed a real pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of 96 individuals who have traveled from Medicine Hat to join us here this afternoon. They are students from Crestwood elementary school. They are accompanied by teachers Wade Lawson, Kathy Western, Jackie Sehn, Karen Shaw, Gary Ziel and their principal, David George, and teaching assistant Miss Nameth. Also with them are parent helpers Lois Higgins, Glen Smeby, Wayne Schlenker, Deb Gomke, and Guy and Janie Rouse and bus drivers Greg Penner and Vic Nickel. They're in both the members' gallery and the public gallery. I would ask all of them to rise, and I'd ask all members to welcome them.

MR. GIBBONS: Mr. Speaker, my class will be coming in after 2, but I'll be introducing them beforehand. It's a school from my end of town. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly the grade 6 classes of the northeast Edmonton Christian school. There are 34 students, and they're accompanied by eight parents: Mrs. Hilda VanHaren, Mrs. Carol Gurnett, Mrs. Wilma Binnema, Mrs. Helen VanBoom, Mrs. Audrey Vandeborn, Mrs. Henny Schenk, and Mr. Will Ryks. They're also accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Peter Prinsen and Mr. Greg Gurnett.

I'd like to note that teacher Greg Gurnett and one of the parents, Mrs. Carol Gurnett, will be watching very closely as their daughter, the ever-smiling Erin, one of our pages, will be delivering stuff around the room. They'll be here just after 2, and I'd ask that they receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today, if I may. The first is Mr. and Mrs. Hugh and Esther Rigney. They are from the Bon Accord area and are great community people, involved in a lot of things. Certainly of interest is that Mr. Rigney taught the Member for Redwater and the Member for Edmonton-Manning. Edmonton-Manning tells me he was the favourite, but that remains to be seen. I would ask that Mr. and Mrs. Rigney please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

I would also like to introduce two great volunteers who put in countless hours for many of us here. They are Lesia Kozak and Evelyn Butler. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Children's Services I would like to make you aware that there will be a school class joining us sometime after 2 o'clock, and I would like to introduce them. There will be 29 grade 10 students and one adult. The teacher is Mrs. Sherry Rourke. They are from Archbishop Jordan high school. It's a little premature, but if we could have an acceptance of them, I'd appreciate it.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. LANGEVIN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you 39 grade 6 students from Glen Avon school in St. Paul. They're accompanied by four teachers: Mrs. Linda O'Neill, Mrs. Patricia McRae, Mrs. Joan Brodziak, and Mr. Dave Doonanco. Our guests are now touring the Legislature, and they will be here after 2.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Voting on Bill 11

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The future of medicare in this province and in fact in Canada will be decided in this Legislature within the next few days. Yesterday I asked this Premier to sign a pledge that he will allow a free vote for his MLAs on this critical issue. My first question to the Premier is: has he taken the pledge?

MR. KLEIN: No, Mr. Speaker. I haven't take the Liberal pledge, but I did take an oath of office to represent my constituents and the people of this province both as an MLA and as a member of Executive Council.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, why won't the Premier allow his MLAs to represent the constituents they were elected to serve by offering them a free vote?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, we can go through the exercise again. Does anyone here want a free vote?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Yes. Yes.

MR. KLEIN: Oh, you all want a free vote? Okay. Fine. Do you vote freely to support the government's position? I don't know. [interjections] Right. Absolutely.

MRS. MacBETH: Okay, Mr. Speaker, if they're all ready to take a free vote, then will the Premier think again and sign the free vote pledge? We've got one here made out in his name so that he could.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of signing a contrived, phony Liberal pledge. I don't pledge myself to that party. That's the last thing on the face of the earth that I would do.

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has presented no evidence to refute the fact that his health care policy will cost more and will lengthen waiting lists. In the absence of any evidence Albertans are wondering why the Premier and his government are so determined to proceed with this health care policy. Once again it becomes the central question on everyone's mind: who benefits from the Premier's health care policy? My questions today are to the Premier. Will the Premier confirm that his health care policy is the result of the pressure being put on the Calgary regional health authority by private operators to increase the volume and variety of contracted-out services?

MR. KLEIN: There were two questions there, Mr. Speaker.

Absolutely not. What we're doing relative to policy and law is in the best interest of Albertans and in the best interest of the publicly funded health care system and in the best interest of fulfilling our commitment to the Canada Health Act. That's what it's all about.

MRS. MacBETH: That's interesting, Mr. Speaker. How does the Premier explain the following statement from a November 1998 Calgary regional health authority study on contracted-out services, which I am happy to table? It says:

The Surgical Advisory Committee has been under considerable pressure from private providers to enter into long term agreements for existing contracts, and to contract out greater volumes and additional procedures to them.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to answer that question in a very generic sense and perhaps have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness supplement.

Mr. Speaker, you can well imagine that if we were to put back into the conventional hospitals as we know them all of the surgical facilities that are existing now, performing something like 152 different procedures, some 20,000 procedures a year in 52 clinics, 30 of which were up and operating and approved under the leader of the Liberal opposition's watch when she was minister of health in the Conservative government – you don't have to be a rocket scientist to figure out what kind of pressure that would put on the hospitals that we have today.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, how does the Premier explain the following statement from the same study by the Calgary regional health authority revealed today that says, "This pressure has come both from providers with whom there are existing contracts, as well as new providers"?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, all the more reason to support the legislation that is before us, because it simply provides the health authority with the option under very strict circumstances to contract out. For the first time we are putting rules and regulations around the operation of surgical clinics.

Now, the Liberals are opposed to this. They voted against this. Mr. Speaker, if they were really, really concerned, they would be with the government and vote for rules and regulations relative to the contracting of surgical clinics.

THE SPEAKER: Third main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, obviously the answer is that the beneficiaries of the Premier's health policy are private providers.

Will the Premier now request that his handpicked Calgary regional health authority release all cost-benefit analyses of its contracted surgical facilities and services before this government's health care policy is rammed through this Legislature?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I find the question to be very strange indeed, because the legislation addresses precisely that point and they voted against it. They don't want it.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, what is this Premier so afraid of in those documents that he doesn't want Albertans to see before he passes his legislation?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, all of these questions can be addressed in the legislation. It was quite obvious during the debate during committee stage that they did not want to see these safeguards put in place. They voted against everything we wanted to do to make sure that contracting out is open and transparent, that it's cost efficient, that it will reduce waiting lists, that it will be to the benefit of Albertans and to the benefit of the protection of public health in this province.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, how can Albertans trust anything that this Premier says on health care policy when he is afraid to release existing evidence?

MR. KLEIN: I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness supplement my answer, but when it comes to a matter of trust, Mr. Speaker, Albertans trusted us in 1993 because we did what we said we were going to do. They again enhanced their trust in this government in 1997 because we did what we said we were going to do. Come the next election, I am confident beyond all doubt that once again the people of this great province of ours will enshrine their trust in the Progressive Conservative Party and in this government.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to supplement with two comments. First of all, we are operating in full compliance with legislation as it currently exists with respect to confidentiality and privacy in this province. That was legislation that, if I recall, the members across the way voted for with respect to the protection of privacy. The provisions of Bill 11 make it possible, make it very legal, make it a requirement that the content of contracts be released. That is why we need Bill 11. As has been pointed out already, the members across the way do not support that particular provision.

Public Opinion on Bill 11

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier claims to have received thousands of letters and e-mails in support of the government health care privatization scheme, yet he hasn't provided any evidence to support his claim. This isn't surprising when the government hasn't provided a shred of evidence to back up the claim that its scheme will shorten waiting lists and save money. My question is to the Premier. If the government won't table the letters and e-mails it has received, will it at least provide a detailed accounting indicating the total number as well as a breakdown of what percentage supported Bill 11 and what percentage opposed it? If so, when?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, when this bill is given third reading and when it is given Royal Assent and when it is proclaimed, I'm confident the people of this province will say: what was all the fuss about?

Again, I find it very, very strange that the leader of the third party, just like the Liberals, would be talking about approval processes and what evidence there is. He also voted against the bill in committee, and the bill specifically addressed the fundamental question of health authorities needing to provide evidence beyond reasonable doubt that it will reduce waiting lists, that it will provide efficiencies, that there will be cost savings. This hon. member voted against those requirements, Mr. Speaker, and that's a shame.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why won't the Premier admit that the reason his government refuses to do a detailed accounting of responses is because it would show overwhelming opposition to the health care privatization scheme?

MR. KLEIN: There is no privatization scheme, Mr. Speaker.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Denials won't change the fact.

Why won't the Premier admit that the reason his government is deliberately delaying a detailed accounting of responses is because they will show overwhelming opposition to the health care privatization scheme?

MR. KLEIN: Well, I don't know what kind of responses he's alluding to. If he's talking about the co-ordinated campaign of malicious misinformation and all the postcards that have come in and all the loaded questions that have come in, Mr. Speaker, yes there have been thousands.

But the good-thinking people of this province, you know, the remaining 2.9 some odd million people, are saying: "We're quite satisfied with this government. We like what you have done for this province. We like what you have done for the economy. We like what you have done for taxation. We understand and know that you're doing your very, very best to address the critical issues of health care, the issues of education, the issues of sustaining an economy, the issues of agriculture, the issues of labour, the issues of justice, the issue of protecting consumers, the issues of providing good solid infrastructure, and the issues of making sure that we have good community facilities and a good quality of life." Mr. Speaker, Albertans are confident that this government is doing a good job to address those issues.

Provincial Tax Regime

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, Budget 2000 committed Alberta to a bold path of tax reform. This bold path includes the introduction of a single rate of tax instead of a progressive system of taxation. Other provincial governments have not followed Alberta's lead. Would the Provincial Treasurer tell this Assembly why we have chosen this taxation route?

DR. WEST: Well, Mr. Speaker, some time ago we had a Tax Review Committee that asked Albertans through many questions what type of tax system they would like and some of the problems with it, and we had 80,000 responses on that plus all of the other submissions that were made as the review committee went about the province. One of the things with the act and the changes that we're bringing in is that Alberta will delink from the federal income tax system by switching to a tax on income rather than a tax on tax. Tax on income improves Alberta's policy flexibility by allowing the province to have its own brackets and rate structure and varied levels of nonrefundable tax credits to meet its own objectives.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the principles of why we're taking this approach and why it's superior. We believe that low-income Albertans should pay no tax. Our single-rate system allows us to liberate thousands of low-income Albertans. We believe that you should not be punished for being educated, hardworking, and innovative, and that is why Albertans will pay the same proportion of their income after they have deducted their newly enhanced deductions.

The single-rate system removes a complicated . . .

THE SPEAKER: Thank you very much, hon. minister. Normally we deal with principles of bills in the debate at second reading.

MR. DOERKSEN: Well, Mr. Speaker, could the minister please address the concern that a single rate of tax is not fair to all income levels?

DR. WEST: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the other things that came forward, of course, was that families in Alberta were being discriminated against based on their choice of how they raise their children. By making the spousal deductions equal to the personal deduction and by moving to a single rate, the gap in taxes between a two-income family and a one-income family will be drastically reduced.

Now, one of the things that happened recently is that there's been some criticism of our rate of tax coming forward, and the Premier and this government promised that we would address any changes that the federal government made to their tax brackets. One of those was in the middle-income group, where they changed their rate structure, and therefore today I'd like to table a draft amendment that would change the rate from 11 percent to 10 and a half percent and would raise the spousal allowance to $12,900 from $11,622.

MR. DOERKSEN: Thank you for that.

Would the Treasurer tell us what this groundbreaking change will mean to the average Albertan?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, this will take another 58,000 low-income people off the tax roll permanently. This change along with the surtax removal in the next two years will leave $1,320,000,000 in the taxpayers' pockets. That extra 58,000 brings the low-income off the tax rolls to 190,000 Albertans.

One other thing I want to say is that I'll give you a few examples, and then we can sit down and let the debate start.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, there is actually a part in the Routine called Ministerial Statements, which hon. members might want to just apprise themselves of.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Peace River Hospital

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Provincial and municipal planning for interchanges to keep the Peace River stretch of highway 2 part of the national highway system has been under way for 10 years. That's good; there's lots of activity. As well, everyone is pleased that a new community health centre is being built for Peace River. Unfortunately, the site chosen for the new Peace River hospital on the west hill across the river means that the interchange plans for the same location have been scuttled. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Why was there no consultation between health, public works, and transportation so that the choice of the hospital site didn't scuttle years of transportation planning and jeopardize the future of several Peace River business owners?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, there was a considerable amount of consultation, and once again the information that's presented today is totally wrong. [interjections]

MRS. SOETAERT: I've hit a nerve, I think.

My second question: why did the government approve the use of the 15-acre west hill site when so many Peace River residents were opposed to that location for the new hospital?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of contributors to the final decision. That includes the regional health authority, the minister of health, previously the minister of public works, and all the staffs. They reviewed all the information and made the decision.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, can the minister confirm that a co-owner of the new hospital land is also a partner with the Premier in the Eagle Point fishing lodge? That's the reason.

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, this ministry is responsible for coordinating over 52 major projects in the province of Alberta, over 200 minor upgrading projects. I don't have all the information carried here in my head as to who owns every parcel of land there is in Alberta. There are a heck of a lot of people living here, over 3 million, and many of them own property.

If she wants to put some kind of accusation down in writing to me, I'll personally address it, and I'll deliver this information in the House.

Privilege

Allegations against a Member

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as much as I hate to rise on a point of personal privilege, I think that I will on this particular issue. First of all, the member has not named this individual. She has made some implications that somehow there is a conflict, that somehow I was involved in the decision relative to the point in question. That is absolutely false. It is irresponsible, and, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to ask the hon. House leader to speak on my behalf when this matter is raised.

Thank you, sir.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Cattle Identification Program

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. I've been speaking with a number of producers in my constituency who have some serious reservations about the new cattle identification program. They believe that they haven't been well-informed about how the program will work and why they need to participate. They're concerned about the increasing costs and the potential for increased liability. It is my understanding that Alberta Agriculture is supporting this program. I would like to ask the minister: why does the Alberta government support the new federal cattle ID program?

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe I should give a little history on where this came from. Currently the consumer is becoming more and more concerned that food be safe. The Canadian Food Inspection Agency does a great job of inspecting all our plants, our processes and making sure that food is safe. This is extremely important to foreign buyers, and of course when you talk particularly about beef – and this is the area that it affects – we export anywhere from 70 to 80 percent of that product out of Alberta. So the market is extremely important to us.

The Canadian cattle association in conjunction with the Canadian Food Inspection Agency recognized that it was important to have a mechanism so they could trace back if there was a problem. So the Canadian Food Inspection Agency set up another agency, the Canadian Cattle Identification Agency, that will be administering a program whereby there will be an identification put on a animal where it is raised. Then, of course, that tag, that identification will follow through to the slaughter plant, and currently they have a track-back from the slaughter plant out to the consumer.

Now, it will take some period of time in order for the whole process to be put in place because an animal will change hands maybe four times in the life of the animal, and eventually it needs to be tracked all the way. What this will do is allow, if there is a problem – and mad cow disease is a good example of what it's done in some other jurisdictions and how it has destroyed the industry in the whole country. We need to have some way of getting back as quickly as possible and possibly isolating into a region or area if in fact there's a problem.

So this way, with this identification, the plant knows where the animal came from, so they can go there. If they know where the animal was born, then they can go back and start moving in the other direction, and that way they double the effort.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you. To the same minister: given the cost of the program and the concern about how an incident might affect the producer, can the minister explain how this new program will impact Alberta's cattle industry?

MR. LUND: Certainly any time you implement a major program like this, there is some cost, and there's no denying that. However, I think we have to look at the bigger picture, and that is to look at this implementation as a preventative measure. The fact is that in the countries that have had a major outbreak of disease, their exports have been cut off completely. If we have some way of tracking back really quickly and identifying where the problems lie, then of course we may have a very small area that would be quarantined instead of the whole industry being shut down. So I think that's where the payoff is.

MR. JOHNSON: Finally, I'd like to ask the minister how Alberta producers will be protected under this new legislation.

MR. LUND: In a number of ways. Of course, with a quick track-back not only does it protect to some extent in the marketplace, but also if it is a disease that is quite contagious, you can then very quickly isolate the area where the disease is found and stop the spread of it. So in that forum it would be a protection to the individual farmer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Redwater.

Mental Health Services

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the Canadian Mental Health Association the shortage of psychiatric hospital beds in Calgary is of crisis proportions. Currently there are 56 fewer acute care beds in Calgary than in Edmonton, and as a result patients in Calgary are forced to go over 200 kilometres to Alberta Hospital Ponoka for treatment. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that the Calgary regional health authority's recent budget only calls for an additional 15 short-term acute care beds, what long-term plans does the minister have to address the ongoing critical shortage of inpatient services in Calgary for individuals who are in need of psychiatric help?

MR. JOHNSON: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate that one of the joint initiatives of the Calgary regional health authority and the Provincial Mental Health Board has been to work together more closely to have a joint appointment, I think it would be called, in terms of a co-ordinator for overall mental health services in the region, and that seems to be going very well. There are also under consideration plans for implementation with respect to expanding the acute care psychiatric bed component in Calgary.

We should not be given the impression in this House, Mr. Speaker, that there are not acute care psychiatric facilities, though, in Calgary right now serving the people of Calgary. We acknowledge that that number has to be expanded, and action is being taken to do so.

MS LEIBOVICI: So can the minister, then, explain how spending $95 million on Alberta Hospital Ponoka is going to address the very real requirements in Calgary, where there is an acute care bed crisis right now?

MR. JOHNSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, with respect to what are in the language of mental health called emergency or crisis beds, I have acknowledged that we are working on expanding that particular capacity in Calgary.

With respect to mental health treatment beds, yes, those are being planned to be rebuilt in Ponoka. I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that the overall number of beds at the Ponoka facility is, however, being reduced.

I would like to also add, though, that there should be acknowledgment of the fact that there are other programs at the facility in Ponoka, one of which is the brain injury treatment and rehabilitation program, which serves both north and south in this province, Mr. Speaker, and I might say, although I do acknowledge that it's in my constituency, that this particular program is a very good one. There is also an alcohol and drug abuse treatment centre in Ponoka which serves central Alberta. I could go on with some of the other programs, including a psychogeriatric one, et cetera, that is part of that overall complex.

MS LEIBOVICI: Given that a stable home environment with families and a support system are crucial to the recovery of mental health patients, when can mental health patients in Calgary expect to be treated in their own city as opposed to having to travel 200 kilometres away?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think that traveling distances are part of getting specialized care in every part of the health care system. The other thing that I think is important here is that one of the impressions that is sometimes given about mental health treatment and is perhaps particularly pushed inaccurately by certain people is that once you go to a mental health hospital you stay there forever. That is not the case. The period of time that mental health patients on the active treatment side are in hospital has been steadily coming down.

Alberta Hospital Ponoka and Alberta Hospital Edmonton can show the reduction in length of stay as far as individuals are concerned and their transfer back to the community if – and this certainly is not always the case – there are family members or friends that can support and help the individual. Otherwise, transferring them to another location where there is no one there that they know doesn't make a heck of a lot of sense. Mr. Speaker, that is the situation.

Mental health, I think, does not yet get the credit they should for the advances they've made in the treatment of mental health in this province, and that is being pursued.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Royal Alexandra Hospital Neonatal Unit

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Royal Alexandra hospital in Edmonton opened a new neonatal intensive care unit for critically ill newborn babies. A significant portion of the capital costs of this project were raised by the Children's Health Foundation of Northern Alberta and the Royal Alexandra Hospital Foundation. To the Minister of Infrastructure: what if any was the government's contribution to this project?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was a great pleasure yesterday to open another new world-class health facility in the province of Alberta. The new neonatal ICU took four years of intense planning and consultation and construction to incorporate the latest technology. The latest technology they gave us a bit of an example of yesterday was the electronic transmission of diagnostic imaging.

The Capital health authority, the Royal Alex Hospital Foundation, and the children's foundation contributed over $6 million, and that was for new equipment. Our participation from the province of Alberta was 8 and a half million dollars to completely gut and renovate the fifth floor of the Royal Alex, bringing the total cost of the unit to $14 and a half million dollars.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: Maclean's magazine recently rated the Capital health authority as the best health region in Canada. Will this neonatal unit serve only the residents within the Capital health authority?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alex treats 1,200 babies per year, and about 30 percent of the babies come from other parts of western Canada. Now, the centre itself will be a centre of excellence for northern and central Alberta but will also be servicing the needs of critically ill babies from northern B.C., Northwest Territories, and Saskatchewan. So, really, Albertans are generously sharing their infrastructure with other Canadians.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you. My final question to the same minister: can other regional health authorities expect to receive funds for similar neonatal units?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, one of the great benefits of regionalization of health authorities of course is the ability of the RHAs to make the best use of their resources. There have been a number of centres of excellence created in parts of Alberta: Edmonton and Calgary and some in rural Alberta as well. We will continue to work with the RHAs to ensure that we continue to develop these centres of excellence.

I will say that we've invested about a billion dollars in health facilities throughout the province since '92-'93, when this Premier took over. We do have quite an aggressive program, about $324 million over the next three years in health facilities.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mental Health Services

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. In December the Alberta Mental Health Board announced the withdrawal of funds from a number of community-based organizations in central Alberta. Due to these cuts, groups such as the assertive outreach program, Red Deer crisis services, the Central Alberta Women's Emergency Shelter batterers' program, and other programs have seen their funding discontinued. Objections to that decision have come from former patients, family members, community organizations, the United Way, the FCSS board, and Red Deer city council. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the policy of the minister regarding the contracting of services with voluntary community organizations?

MR. JONSON: First of all, Mr. Speaker, as far as funding, one of the premises on which this question seems to be based is inaccurate; one might say blatantly false. The commitment of dollars in the David Thompson region – of course, Red Deer is the major population centre, but the service is to the whole area. The overall community mental health funding to that particular area has in fact been increased during this past budget and the budget before.

The second thing here is – and this particular question is kind of very ironic, because we're often accused in the health care system of not doing enough evaluation and providing for enough accountability in terms of the services provided. A procedure or policy of the Alberta Mental Health Board is to do a review of services on a periodic basis, Mr. Speaker, in consultation with their local advisory council from the mental health community. There was a decision made in the interests of improving services and better co-ordinating them to make some changes in terms of the agencies or in terms of the methods by which these services are being provided. So what you have is a situation where there has been, yes, a reconfiguration in terms of the delivery of services, but the region is being served.

As far as funding is concerned, it has in fact increased, Mr. Speaker.

MS BLAKEMAN: To the same minister: given that a stable home environment with families and a support system are crucial to the recovery of a mental health patient, can the minister explain why he has committed no new dollars to community mental health in the 2000-2001 budget?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the statement is inaccurate. In the budget that has been placed before this Assembly by government and has been approved, there are additional dollars for community mental health.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the minister commit to instituting a plan proposed by the Alberta Alliance for Mental Illness and Mental Health that any funds used to rebuild or refurbish the Alberta hospital be matched on a 2 to 1 ratio with funding for enhanced and new community services?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as the member knows, the question is quite ridiculous actually. When you build a particular hospital – let us talk about the neonatal unit which was recently inquired into, which is incidentally a very good initiative. If she's saying that you spend, let's say, $30 million on a particular project in Edmonton to meet a capital need and then you have to automatically take that $30 million and put it into your operational budget so it can be there forever, she knows very well that that doesn't work, and it isn't the way budgets are prepared.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Cancer Treatment

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Some serious concerns have been raised with me this past week about waiting lists in the Capital region for cancer radiation therapy in Edmonton, especially for breast and prostate cancer. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the situation, and what is being done about it?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, there is certainly a very serious situation in terms of waiting times for radiation treatment and other treatments being much longer than acceptable in the province. The Cancer Board is taking action to deal with this particular situation. This is something that unfortunately is not just isolated to one particular location but is almost a national situation. There seems to be a very severe shortage of cancer treatment technicians, particularly radiology specialists.

The Cancer Board has developed a three-point action program. One, of course, is to get concluded and get into effect a recent agreement with the workers there which should make their payment more competitive with, let's say, British Columbia or Ontario. Mr. Speaker, further, they are on a short-term basis bringing staff from Calgary to Edmonton to work here and to provide additional service until additional staff can be recruited.

So it is an issue not unique or specific to Alberta, Mr. Speaker. It is one where the Department of Health and Wellness and the Cancer Board have worked together, developed an action plan, and are following through.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell this House how soon this three-point plan can come into effect?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the Cancer Board, as indicated in their news release of yesterday, are putting that plan of action into place right now. They're acting upon their overall three initiatives.

We are still not in a situation that is as serious as other provinces. That's nothing, of course, to be complacent about, and we are working hard on resolving the problem.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While these solutions are being put in place, does the Alberta Cancer Board have any plans to send patients to the United States for radiation treatment?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, while it is the case that other provinces have been sending significant numbers of patients to the United States for treatment, there are no current plans to do so in Alberta. It is our view that with the actions that are being taken, we can deal with this situation in Alberta, and as I've said before, it is a priority of ours to do so.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the United States, with its two-tiered health care system, investor-owned surgical facilities, nursing homes, home care companies – the list goes on and on – an estimated $100 billion a year is lost in fraud. More and more, whole sections of state departments of health and social services have been created to fight frauds that have developed or are coming from private health care providers attempting to maximize their profits. Since 1993 under this government's master plan hundreds of millions of dollars of public health care assets and contracts have been handed over to government friends and political contributors who own private health care services. My questions are to the minister of health. Given the proliferation of investor-owned home care, laboratory services, and surgery companies under this government, how many people do the department and the health authorities have employed to root out health fraud and protect public taxpayer dollars?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as has been the case since the beginning of public health care in this province, our system has been made up of three basic components in terms of the delivery system. Part of it is owned and operated directly by the government; secondly, we've had the voluntarily sector, the nonprofit sector, primarily based in the churches of this province, who have provided service, albeit they want to make sure they balance their books and perhaps have a little left over too; and thirdly, we have the private sector. That is the way it has been for decades. It still is today.

We do not have a fraud unit. We've not had any reason to have a fraud unit. The records and documents of the regional health authorities, being part of Alberta Health and Wellness in terms of financial responsibility, are reviewed by approved auditors, in many cases directly by the Auditor General's department. The Auditor General's department has to be satisfied that there are proper financial controls and proper monitoring in place, Mr. Speaker.

We in Alberta Health and Wellness do not have and have not had the need to have what is inferred as being some type of a department to deal with those types of things.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. minister mentioned a health fraud unit. My next question is: what plans does the minister have for a health fraud unit once the current privatization expansion to investor-owned overnight surgical centres or private hospitals gets under way? What plans do you have for this health fraud unit?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I won't go back to the business about this being misnamed and misrepresented by the opposition. The point that's really, really important in response to this question is that we have had a privately owned, private enterprise, if you will, component in health care in this province for a long time. In credit to those people who have provided that service over the last tens of years, I frankly can't quite remember any major case of fraud in the entire system with respect to the private-sector operators. Perhaps there were one or two, but they certainly haven't been on the front line of concerns. I think that's really a good argument for respecting the fact that these people and these businesses and enterprises have a place within the health care system and have been providing good service.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the concerns that have been expressed by the Auditor General in last fall's Auditor General's report regarding fraud or the possible occurrence of fraud in WCB billing by private health care providers, can the minister provide the Assembly with his department's estimate of how much public money is currently being lost to fraudulent billing by unscrupulous private health providers?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I understand the question, he's posing a question with respect to WCB. [interjection] Perhaps not WCB.

I have no indication that there have been any charges laid or any evidence that there has been any degree of fraud within the system. I will certainly check with the Auditor General's department in case there's something that we have missed in the reporting and documentation that they have provided. I think the question is really quite inappropriate unless there is really hard evidence, which of course we would be concerned about, if there was.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Employment Standards Enforcement

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. According to the statistics released in the 1998-99 annual report from the former department of labour, employment standards complaints have risen from .47 percent to .57 percent. Why is there an increase in the amount of employment standards complaints?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, there are likely a number of reasons. The first one, I would think, would be the fact that there are many, many more people employed in Alberta. There's a huge number of new businesses that have been incorporated. Another reason is that we believe that we've certainly educated employees within the province to know about their rights and obligations. Of course, periodically there are companies that do go out of business, and behind them quite often is a trail of complaints.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is an independent workers advocate group needed to justly represent employees' concerns?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, I don't believe so, Mr. Speaker. It's our department's responsibility to provide a level playing field between employers and employees, so in a way, of course, our department officials are advocates, then, for both sides.

We work continuously to see that there's compliance. We have educational activities that are ongoing. We want to focus where we see there are particular areas of concern, so we do some targeting in particular sectors. We now have an employment standards hotline where people can call us, and I understand we're getting something like 800 calls, which we're dealing with. So I would think that an independent workers advocate group would just be another level of administration.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is Human Resources and Employment doing about the chronic offenders who violate the Employment Standards Code?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, we're currently targeting sectors that have shown some degree of noncompliance, and a good example that I would provide to the members here today would be the Alberta

Restaurant and Foodservices Association. We're working very closely with them and, in fact, assigning an employment standards officer to work directly out of their office. Now, there's always the odd employer that just won't get the message though, so we'll speed up our investigative process on any complaints that come from that particular area. Hey, if all else fails, we have the legislation in place to prosecute, and we'll do it.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now we'll call upon the first of three hon. members to participate in Members' Statements.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Canadian Association of Statutory Human Rights Agencies

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise as a member of this Assembly to speak of a very important conference that will be under way in just a few short days. It is important in that the topic affects each and every one of us. The conference begins Sunday, May 7, and runs through to May 9. It is the annual conference of the Canadian Association of Statutory Human Rights Agencies, or CASHRA. People from across Canada will gather in Banff to discuss human rights and diversity in our country. Fellow members, the hon. Minister of Community Development as well as the Member for Calgary-Montrose will be in Banff to welcome visitors to our province and to encourage their wholehearted participation.

Building a Human Rights Culture: Tools for Transformation is the theme of CASHRA's conference, which is a forum for Canadian human rights commissions to discuss human rights trends and issues that shape Canadian society and culture. This year Alberta is hosting the conference, and participation by the community at large has been encouraged.

The significance of this conference is twofold. First, the conference is a stage to demonstrate Alberta's human rights values and to promote the good work being done in our province. This conference and other educational initiatives are supported through the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Education Fund, chaired by the Member for Calgary-Montrose. Through grant-funding government and other sectors are creating partnerships that bring human rights awareness and action to many Albertans within a variety of communities.

Secondly, the conference will explore how we can actually live human rights and what tools and educational initiatives will help create a culture in which human rights are a way of life throughout Canada. Participants will look at strategies and successes in raising awareness and in encouraging positive action on human rights and diversity. It will be a valuable networking and learning experience for those who are already doing important work and leading change in this province and across this country.

2:50 Lawrence Grassi Middle School

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I wish to acknowledge the excellent contribution of grade 8 students at Lawrence Grassi middle school in Canmore. They've made a contribution in raising awareness on environmental issues in their region. Spearheaded by Courtney Dyck and Guy McLintock, the students wrote more than 100 letters to elected officials. They ask for a halt to proposed additional development in the Spray Lakes area. They also request an end to hunting grizzlies and the recognition of the grizzlies as an endangered species. A petition signed by 550 students supported these requests. As a result of these actions, these students won a competition sponsored by Outfront, CBC Radio One. The students will now be preparing a radio play based on the submission.

Mr. Speaker, 56 of those students gave me permission to table their letters in the Legislature. The letters are copies sent to the Premier, to the MLA for Banff-Cochrane, and to the Genesis Land Development Corp. These letters are excellent reading, being both thoughtful and thought provoking. I encourage all MLAs, particularly the Minister of Environment, to take the time to read them. I am tabling the letters along with a copy of their petition, which reads as follows:

We, the undersigned, students at Lawrence Grassi Middle School, 730 4th St., Canmore, AB, would like the government of Alberta to [do five things]:

- 1) Protect Alberta's wildlife.
- 2) Stop giving out hunting licenses for grizzly bears.
- 3) Employ more park wardens.
- 4) Preserve natural habitat.
- 5) Declare the grizzly bear a protected species [in this province].

These students are working hard. They are organized and forward thinking. They will be excellent stewards of our province in the years to come. On behalf of my caucus I thank them and encourage them to continue to voice their concerns on issues of importance to them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Nortel Networks' Westwinds Campus

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, information and communications technology, known as ICT, is the world's strongest and fastest growing economic sector, making innovation more important than ever. It is my privilege today to congratulate one organization that is leading in this kind of innovation.

Nortel Networks, which employs over 3,000 people in Calgary alone, is extremely well respected by leading ICT companies and organizations around the world for being an innovator. I'm really proud to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that yesterday Mr. John Roth, president and CEO of Nortel Networks, in a groundbreaking ceremony announced the expansion of Nortel's Westwinds campus and facilities in northeast Calgary. This significant investment in excess of $37 million U.S. is located in our area of the city, where development is very welcome. We are so pleased to know that the project at Nortel Networks' Westwinds campus will see the equivalent of 308 full-time, one-year jobs in construction and related activities for the Calgary area.

Mr. Speaker, Nortel Networks' expansion will add another 200,000 square feet to the existing facility. It really is another milestone in the new economy. It signals Calgary's success in attracting, growing, and building a world-class information and communications technology centre.

Thanks in part to companies like Nortel and their commitment to research, to their people, and to the future, we are quickly gaining an international reputation as a leader in ICT. Nortel's presence and commitment to its Calgary operations truly helps to put us and Alberta on the map.

I would ask that members of the Assembly join me in congratulating Nortel Networks on the expansion of their Westwinds campus and facilities in northeast Calgary.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would now ask that the government provide us the projected government business for next week.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Depending on progress from time to time, of course, and as always, on Monday, May 8, 2000, under Government Bills and Orders for second reading in the afternoon, bills 16, 19, and 20; for third reading, Bill 11 and as per the Order Paper.

At 8 p.m. on the same date under Government Bills and Orders for second reading, bills 16 and 19; third reading of Bill 11.

On Tuesday, May 9, at 4:30 p.m. private bills for second reading, Bill Pr. 3; Committee of the Whole, bills Pr. 1, Pr. 2, Pr. 4, Pr. 5, and Pr. 3; for third reading, bills Pr. 1, Pr. 3, Pr. 2, Pr. 4, and Pr. 5; Pr. 3, of course, with the unanimous consent of the House, if granted. Under Government Bills and Orders, Government Motion 18, as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Committee of the Whole, Bill 17, Bill 3, Bill 13, Bill 15; third reading of Bill 11.

Wednesday, May 10, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders, Committee of the Whole, based on progress Tuesday; third reading of Bill 11 and as per the Order Paper.

Thursday, May 11, under Government Bills and Orders in the afternoon in Committee of the Whole, based on progress Wednesday; third reading of Bill 11 and as per the Order Paper.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, during the earlier Routine today notice was given to the chair about two items. One was a purported point of order and the other one a point of privilege. As has been the custom with this chair, the priority is given to the matter which is deemed to be of greater significance in the order of the House. Of course, without any doubt, a possible question of privilege takes that precedence.

Government House Leader, you advised with respect to this.

Privilege Allegations against a Member

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today during question period, after a particularly odious question from the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, the Premier rose and indicated to you, gave oral notice at that time, as soon as it was reasonably possible, of a question of privilege to be raised under section 15 of our Standing Orders. The notice having been given orally, the requirement for written notice is not required under the rules.

It would be appropriate, Mr. Speaker, at this point in time, in our submission, after hearing such debate as you might desire, for you to rule that there is a prima facie case of privilege in this case and to ask the committee – I believe the appropriate committee is the Privileges and Elections Committee – to deal with the matter thoroughly.

A question of privilege, as you have mentioned previously in this House, is one of the most serious questions which can be raised in the House, because the privileges of the House and the privileges of its members are of utmost priority and importance if we are to be able to do our jobs in an appropriate manner. Nothing could be more important to our ability to do our jobs in an appropriate manner than to have the confidence of the public in the integrity of each and every member. There is nothing more important to a member of this House than that member's integrity and the public perception of that integrity.

It is my submission that the question raised by the member this afternoon, although it was directed to the Minister of Infrastructure, very, very clearly was intended to impugn the integrity of the Premier and, therefore, to interfere with his ability to maintain the public trust in his integrity and to maintain his ability to carry out his duties as a member of this House and as a member of Executive Council. I would suggest that it's not too strong to say that by doing so, it impugns the integrity of each and every member of this House.

This is something which is exceedingly important today, Mr. Speaker, because it is not an isolated incident. I am not suggesting that this member has on earlier occasions, and I am not going to cite earlier occasions of impugning the integrity of members, but we have seen in this House on a number of occasions allegations relating to suggestions that people were doing things in this House for reasons other than the representation of their constituents, for reasons of friends or otherwise. At this point that's all I'll say on that statement. I'll go back to the specifics of this particular situation.

I would refer the Speaker and this House to Beauchesne 64, which indicates:

The House has occasionally taken notice of attacks on individual Members. Most notably, [a situation where a member] while seated at his desk in the House, referred to a Member . . . as "a cheat and a swindler". Removed from the House, he returned twice more to repeat the charge and finally concluded with a written note to the same effect. For the offence, [the member] was judged guilty of a breach of privilege and was summoned to the Bar to apologize.

Mr. Speaker, I think that's precisely what should happen in this particular case. It is a case of that import. I'm reading from page 19 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, and I would advise you and the House that I paraphrased the rule that I read.

I would also refer you to Erskine May Parliamentary Practice:

Other acts besides words spoken or writings published reflecting upon either House or its proceedings which, though they do not tend directly to obstruct or impede either House in the performance of its functions, yet have a tendency to produce this result indirectly by bringing such House into odium, contempt or ridicule or by lowering its authority may constitute contempts.

I cite that not because it directly refers to a member's privilege but because there can be nothing more odious or contemptible than impugning a member's integrity and, particularly, doing it in a manner which does not afford an opportunity in any other legitimate way, I would suggest, than by bringing a question of privilege. A person's integrity, as I have indicated earlier, is the single most important tool that a member of this House can have.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also refer you to the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, edited by Marleau and Montpetit, which you provided to House leaders earlier this session. I'm reading from page 52, the fourth paragraph:

Any conduct which offends the authority or dignity of the House, even though no breach of any specific privilege may have been committed, is referred to as a contempt of the House. Contempt may be an act or an omission; it does not have to actually obstruct or impede the House or a Member, it merely has to have the tendency to produce such results.

Also, on page 53 in the first paragraph:

Either House can apply its rights to new circumstances, thereby in some cases creating new instances of contempt.

I cite that because as we read through it, the whole area of contempt is really an open area. We have in the past referred to the Legislative Assembly Act, where contempt and privilege were dealt with in a similar manner.

What I'm suggesting to you, Mr. Speaker, is that while we will not necessarily find in any of the rules of order or the books of procedure under which we operate a specific reference which relates to this particular type of situation, I would again indicate that the single most important item that a member of this House has in terms of their ability to represent their constituents is their integrity.

Now, I would go further to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we have purposefully put in place mechanisms and an officer of the Legislature to deal with those situations where it may be appropriate to examine actions or incidents to determine whether anything of any impropriety was undertaken. We have an Ethics Commissioner and we have a Conflicts of Interest Act. If there was ever to be a suggestion by any member of the House or any member of the public that something was done in an inappropriate manner by a member of this House for personal gain or for any personal reasons or reasons other than the reasons for which we were elected, to represent the electors in our constituency, that type of an allegation, because of its serious nature and because of the manner under which we have established the Conflicts of Interest Act and the role of the Ethics Commissioner to investigate those types of situation – there is a procedure in place, and they should be referred for investigation there.

I say that in order to say again that it's a breach of the privileges of a member of this House, then, to raise in an oblique manner in this House in a public context such an allegation, in a context which will leave or tend to leave or could have the possibility of leaving the public with the impression that a member has done an inappropriate act, has been corrupted or bribed or in any other way has done anything for the purposes of self-benefit rather than the benefit of their electors. The appropriate method, as I say, would be to take the allegation, if there was any suggestion that there was any merit to the allegation, to the Ethics Commissioner and ask for an investigation of it, not to make a public statement in the House or outside the House to impugn the integrity or the character of a member.

Now, specifically to the allegation that was made. The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert asked a question of the Minister of Infrastructure. I don't have the Blues, but you will have the exact wording of it. She asked a question to the effect of: was the Minister of Infrastructure aware that one of the co-owners of a piece of property which was purchased for a medical clinic or hospital in Peace River or in the Peace River area was a co-owner of a fishing lodge with the Premier?

Now, the question could be raised for only one purpose, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, and that is to impugn the integrity of the Premier. That could be the only reason for asking that question in that way in this House at this time. If there was any suggestion or any concern by the member that anything inappropriate had been done, it would have been that member's responsibility, that member's duty to bring it to the attention of the Ethics Commissioner and ask for an investigation of it. If there was any evidence of that, it would be that member's responsibility to bring it to the attention of the Ethics Commissioner. The only purpose for raising it in the manner in which it was raised in the House is for the purpose of undermining public trust in our Premier, but it had the effect of impugning the integrity of our Premier, and as I've said on several occasions already, integrity is the most important thing that any member of this House can have. In fact, no member of this House can carry out their duties properly without their personal integrity and without the people's belief in their personal integrity.

One can always disagree with a member on a matter of policy. That is what we're all about: having discussions over matters of policy. But it should not ever come to this House where a member's integrity is called into question, a member's ability to represent their constituency, where there's a direct or indirect allegation that that member has in some way benefited or in some way accepted a bribe or in any other way has been moved by inappropriate considerations to deal with the matter of government or of the Legislature.

Now, with respect to the specific allegation, the House should also know – and I do not have personal knowledge of this particular information; I've been advised of this information. I understand that the Member for Peace River does have personal knowledge of this information and could be called upon by you, Mr. Speaker, to give this House personal knowledge or to give the committee in due course personal knowledge, should you refer it to the committee. The individual referred to by the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, who owned or was a co-owner or had an ownership interest in the piece of land in Peace River, I'm given to understand, donated the piece of land in question to the local RHA for the purposes of building the hospital. So that individual, as I understand it, received no personal benefit for the transfer of that person's property to the RHA except perhaps in the context of the building of services to that property, which might otherwise assist with the surrounding property.

I'm also given to believe by the Member for Peace River that the person in question donated this land before becoming an owner in the fishing lodge to which the member referred and, in fact, before perhaps even any of the first meetings that he might have had with the hon. the Premier in terms of when they first met or, at least, first went on fishing trips themselves together. So there's no reason to believe that there would have been any benefit at all to the owner of the land other than, as I say, the fact that he owned other land adjacent and would therefore have benefited perhaps from some of the servicing to the new facility when it was built.

Also, it is clear to me from the information that I've received that at the time he made the donation he didn't know the Premier; the Premier didn't know him. In fact, I'm given to believe as well that the site selection for the hospital took place in the fall of 1997, that the purchase of the lodge happened in early 1998, that one of the original partners in the purchase of the lodge then sold their interest, and it was this interest that was sold that was acquired by a group of people including the individual which the member has mentioned.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think it's clear that we have a situation where the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, in bringing forward a question to this House, has done so with the clear intention of impugning the integrity of the Premier of this province and a member of this House and by impugning the integrity of the Premier of this province and a member of this House has attempted to interfere with that member's ability to do his job, because one cannot do this job if one is not perceived as having integrity, has done so in clear violation of the procedures which we have available and which this House has specifically made available by appointing an officer of this House as Ethics Commissioner and by passing an act called the Conflicts of Interest Act and by having an appropriate framework for dealing with questions of a nature which was raised. By not following that process and by determining to bring that question to this House at this time, she did so clearly with the intention of interfering with the Premier's ability to do his job as Premier and as MLA.

I cannot emphasize more how odious I believe that type of question, that type of conduct to be, how detrimental it is not only to the Premier but to every single member of this House, and I would ask you to find a prima facie case that there has been a breach of the privileges of the member, in this case the Member for Calgary-Elbow, the Premier of the province, and that the Privileges and Elections Committee be asked to investigate and bring a recommendition of censure back to this House if in its investigation it is found that there has indeed been such a breach of privilege.

THE SPEAKER: The Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: I have no questions.

THE SPEAKER: I'm sorry. I want to hear from the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert why this is being done, please. [interjection] The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora is not the Opposition House Leader.

MRS. SOETAERT: He is today.

THE SPEAKER: Well, you stand up and tell me that this is the way you want it, because I don't want you to come back later and say that . . .

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If I may, I'd ask the Acting Opposition House Leader to speak, and then, if appropriate, I will after.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Very well, and I'll certainly recognize the Acting Opposition House Leader in this regard.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question of privilege is very serious. It's so serious, indeed, that it is incumbent upon all members of this Assembly to only raise such questions on those rare occasions that the business of the Assembly or the capacity of an individual member has been materially impaired. I don't think that's the case today.

Now, I will review Hansard when it's available, and I may have more to say or the Official Opposition House Leader may have more to say at that time, but at this point I do not believe that there is a valid point of order let alone a breach of the privilege of the Member for Calgary-Elbow. The Premier has not been prevented from pursuing his duties, and there has been no interference with the operations of the Assembly. A sensitive question put to a member of Executive Council, which may make the government uncomfortable, is not a breach of privilege.

Now, I did not hear the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert make an accusation. I did not hear that member draw a conclusion. What I heard was a question that required an answer. The question, as I understand it, was words to the effect of: can the minister confirm that a co-owner of the new hospital land is also a partner with the Premier in the Eagle Point fishing lodge?

Now, there was no reference to personal gain. There's no reference to anything fraudulent. There's no reference to anything under the table. There is simply a question asking about a relationship between the Premier and an Albertan.

The Government House Leader made several arguments, but in the course of those arguments he admitted that there is a relationship between the Premier and the former owner of this parcel of land. That was, of course, the object of the question. The Government House Leader may try to ascribe other motivations. He may try to pretend there was more to it than that, but really, Mr. Speaker, that's what it boils down to.

The Government House Leader made reference several times to the ability of all members of this Chamber to be able to carry on their duties based on their standing in the community, their reputation, their integrity. Then he suggested that by asking a question which doesn't go to the issue of integrity or standing in the community but simply asks about a relationship, the Premier has somehow been diminished. But every day in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, during question period, during debates, hon. members ask pointed questions of one another regarding government policy and the manner in which the government of Alberta operates.

Mr. Speaker, we've had the Premier nearly every day in recent memory stand in this Assembly and accuse the Leader of the Official Opposition of purposely spreading malicious misinformation. Now, if that doesn't impugn reputation and standing . . .

THE SPEAKER: Please, hon. Acting Opposition House Leader. If such be the case, I would entertain a member rising on a point of order or a point of privilege. Right now we have a specific point of privilege before the House, and that is what we will discuss in this very serious matter.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Part, of course, of the argument about privilege, as I review Beauchesne and Erskine May, is context, and that's simply what I am trying to establish, context.

So what we have in the Assembly every day are members making allegations and suggestions, and no points of privilege are raised, Mr. Speaker. In this case we don't have an allegation or a suggestion; we simply have a question. I believe that a review of Hansard will confirm that.

Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader makes it very clear that the question upset at least him, if not the Premier. But his mere discomfort, I don't believe, is a prima facie case of privilege.

I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that you consider whether or not there is a reason to rule today. I would like an opportunity to review not only the question as it is recorded in Hansard but also the Premier's comments immediately following the question and, of course, the Government House Leader's submission on this matter. Now, at that time the Official Opposition House Leader may have additional pertinent observations. A ruling of a question of a prima facie case will not be impaired by waiting until Monday, and I would appreciate your consideration unless, of course, you are of the opinion that no breach of privilege has in fact occurred.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Peace River on this point of privilege.

MR. FRIEDEL: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That an attempt is made by the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert to invent a controversy or worse yet to suggest some kind of an impropriety is probably typical of what we expect from the opposition and particularly during question period.

THE SPEAKER: Again, hon. member, I want us to deal with the context of this point of privilege. This is not a time for speech-making. This is the time to deal with a very serious matter raised by the Government House Leader.

MR. FRIEDEL: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Part of the point of privilege is that the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert made a statement against a very respected person in my constituency, who cannot be here to defend himself in this House.

I want to substantiate the statements that the Government House Leader made in respect to the order of events. The site of the Peace River hospital was selected by the regional health board in conjunction with the town of Peace River, surrounding communities, and considerable input from local residents. After the site selection was made, the person who owned the land, Mr. Lovsin, could easily have sold this property to the health board. Instead, he chose to donate it. Some people would consider that kind of a donation as very commendable rather than to make such a despicable accusation.

I'm personally aware that Mr. Lovsin is a partner with the Premier in a fishing lodge. I'm also personally aware that that partnership occurred at least a year after the land transaction took place, and I would like to suggest that that transaction was very much an open process. The community was involved, the town of Peace River was involved, the Peace regional health authority was involved, and I don't think there's anything in the documents that could be considered underhanded or in any way linked to some impropriety with the owner and certainly not with the Premier.

I am certainly defending a constituent who cannot be here to speak for himself, and also I believe I would make this point on behalf of the Premier, who for no good reason at all is being dragged into some kind of a made-up story, you know, just as a political attempt to besmirch someone's character. I would certainly ask that you take strong steps to censure this member or whatever else could be done to prevent this kind of action in the House in the future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To me this was an infrastructure plan that was in place, and there were huge expenditures on it, so I asked the question about why the site was changed. I have now received information about that last one. I got that from the House leader's information that he gave us. I do apologize if anyone interpreted the question to mean any more than it was.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, I'm going to ask you to do something more than what you've just done. There are two things that happened here today. I may make a ruling or not make a ruling depending on how the hon. member chooses to deal with the request made from the chair.

Time and time again statements are made in this House by members with respect to individuals outside this House. Now, in this case no name was mentioned. However, because all of us have to file with the Ethics Commissioner on an annual basis a complete disclosure of who our associates are, it's public knowledge who that individual in question would be by simply going down to the Ethics Commissioner and asking. It's public knowledge. So there is the question of the reputation of the individual outside this House that the chair is also concerned about, and it's not the first time the chair has said that.

The second point has to do, then, with – I gather the apology was directed to the member of the House. So I'll sit down and invite you to in fact consider extending your apology.

MRS. SOETAERT: Mr. Speaker, I most definitely extend that apology to the person outside of this House as well.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, it's my view and it has always been my approach to try and deal with these matters as they come and try and deal with them as quickly as we possibly can and not defer matters and the like.

I'm going to make a number of comments. We've certainly had a point of privilege raised, and quite frankly my conclusion in my head is that it is a valid point of privilege. I'm quite prepared to basically say that under Standing Order 15(6) I'll find this a prima facie case of privilege for the following reasons.

Number one is that members have to be responsible for what they say in this House, absolutely responsible, and there's no shirking of that responsibility. I remember a sage old parliamentarian many years ago telling me: you know, it's a lot easier to talk your way out of this House than it is to talk your way into this House. How true that is. The point about dealing with people who are not inside this House is a very serious one for any member to make any aspersions, innuendo, or anything else.

Secondly, the reason why I would come to that conclusion has to do with the very nature of the question itself and the importance of it all in recognizing that. The Government House Leader is absolutely correct with respect to this. It is this Assembly that had a debate in it, passed legislation, and made a decision that there should be an independent office of this Legislature, an office called the Ethics Commissioner, who should deal with any and all questions that members might have about any and all other members with respect to any kind of dealings.

Further to that, there is an all-party committee which governs the performance of the Ethics Commissioner. Members of all parties sit on it. The Ethics Commissioner has the right, incredible legal authority, has all the documents with respect to everybody's associations, and if there's any suggestion of wrongdoing by any member to another member, they have the responsibility to go to the Ethics Commissioner. Why else would the Assembly have taken all this time, made these decisions, passed legislation, put public dollars into this question if not in fact to ensure the integrity of the House?

So the chair has great difficulty – great difficulty – with respect to this matter and doesn't understand the motivation. The Blues are very, very clear. First question, basically after some preamble:

Why was there no consultation between health, public works, and transportation so that the choice of the hospital site didn't scuttle years of transportation planning and jeopardize the future of several Peace River business owners?

Okay; a valid question. Certainly, the future of several Peace River business owners sort of suggests that somebody got hurt financially.

Then going on:

My second question: why did the government approve the use of the 15-acre west hill site when so many Peace River residents were opposed to that location for the new hospital?

Okay; a valid question, but what it has to do with the future of several Peace River business owners – the chair can't find a connection to that one, so fair game.

Third question:

Finally, can the minister confirm that a co-owner of the new hospital land is also a partner with the Premier in the Eagle Point fishing lodge?

Well, again, it's public information who the Premier's associates would be. Nothing secretive about that. Absolutely open to the public. But what's the purpose of the question other than to perhaps create some aspersions? It's on that point that the chair is really, really concerned, because someone now rose on a point of privilege, and it means that it has to be dealt with.

Now, the positive to this is that the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert did rise and extend an apology. Then on a second occasion the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert was given a further opportunity, and the hon. Member did rise and extend an apology. I would hope that in fact the matter would end there.

Now, the acting House leader of the Official Opposition said in his remarks that it may be that the Official Opposition House Leader would like to make some comments. But he's not here. Of course, I can't say that, but the fact is, reality is, he's not present in the House at the moment, so I can't hear from him today, which means I cannot possibly hear from him until Monday. So the choice is to deal with this now and wrap it up or delay it until Monday.

Hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, you heard what I said. I really am greatly reluctant to say that I'm going to find a prima facie case of privilege. I think there is greater honour if you just do it one more time and extend an apology to the member outside the House and withdraw your comments, and we can move on. I'm giving you the honour to exit with dignity. Your choice.

MRS. SOETAERT: Sure, Mr. Speaker. I apologize. You know what? I apologize to the member in here and to the . . . [interjection] No, no, to the entire House. This is serious. I apologize to the entire House, to the Premier, and to the person outside of this Assembly as well.

THE SPEAKER: That matter has now come to a close.

Now, hon. acting House leader of the Official Opposition, you wanted to rise on a point of order.

Point of Order

Ministerial Statements in Question Period

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am going to rise under Beauchesne 317, which can be found on page 96 of the sixth edition. It reads:

Points of order are questions raised with the view of calling attention to any departure from the Standing Orders or the customary modes of proceeding in debate or in the conduct of legislative business and may be raised at virtually any time by any Member, whether that Member has previously spoken or not.

I am referring to an exchange between the Member for Red Deer-South and the Acting Provincial Treasurer.

I will note, Mr. Speaker, that at some point during that exchange you yourself rose and suggested to the Acting Provincial Treasurer that there is a place in Routine for ministerial statements, because it certainly sounded to this member that that's what was being provoked from the Acting Treasurer, a ministerial statement about tax policy.

Mr. Speaker, in the answer to the question that was put by the Member for Red Deer-South, the Acting Provincial Treasurer made reference to tabling draft amendments to a bill which was on the Order Paper to be discussed at some future point by this Assembly, very irregular and unusual. Not only was it the ministerial statement aspect of the answer that caught my attention but, in fact, the breach of procedure and protocol by introducing the tabling of draft amendments on a bill of such importance during question period.

I will note that if I understand the intent of those amendments, it would lower the tax rate on income tax that Albertans were required to pay, and the purpose expressed was to keep in line with another provincial government's tax regime. Unfortunately, that lowering of that tax rate won't do the job that it was purported to do. My information is that the tax rate would have to be lowered in combination with the personal exemptions being increased to over $14,000 before we even got close to appreciating the flow through of the federal tax cuts and keeping pace with the government of Ontario.

So, Mr. Speaker, it's really three separate issues here: one, the misinformation that was provided in the context of the answer; two, the obvious device on the part of the Provincial Treasurer to use question period to hijack time from question period to make a ministerial statement when he has ample opportunity to do that. Of course, the only thing I can suggest is that the reason why the minister wouldn't use Ministerial Statements is that the Official Opposition gets an opportunity to respond, and he didn't want that to happen, I'm sure. Thirdly, of course, is the very inappropriate use of question period to table amendments to pending legislation, to a bill that's before the Assembly.

So I would ask that you formally call the minister to order on this particular set of breaches. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be very brief on this. First of all, the question as to whether the information was good information or misinformation is really in the eye of the beholder. Obviously, the Acting Provincial Treasurer put forward information which he thought was in response to a bona fide question from a member of this House who is known for asking questions about taxes going down, has developed a reputation in this House for asking questions about taxes going down, who has made a point in this House of raising questions about taxes going down, and the hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer responded by giving good news in that context. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, as is my wont, I sat quietly and listened to the presentation made by the Acting Opposition House Leader, and I now find that they haven't got the respect for members of this House that we have.

The comment that was made by the Speaker about this being more appropriately a ministerial statement, which has now been picked up by the Acting Opposition House Leader, I would suggest has been taken well out of context. You, Mr. Speaker, on many occasions encourage ministers answering questions to be brief, and I believe your comment relating to this more appropriately being a ministerial statement was more in the context of the length of the answer rather than where it would be appropriate for the minister to give that information. In any event, it is quite appropriate for a minister in this House being called to account for government policy by a private member in this House to give the information which is being requested, which is what the hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer was doing.

With respect to tabling amendments, Mr. Speaker, while we've had discussion earlier this year about bills coming before the House and the timing of bills coming before the House and that sort of thing, there is no obvious protocol of that nature relative to amendments. In fact, it's quite appropriate. I've asked as Government House Leader on many occasions for the opposition to bring forward their amendments long prior to them being brought into the House so that they could be appropriately reviewed in context so that we can determine whether or not they can be supported. The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer clearly indicated that what he had was a draft of an amendment that he was proposing to bring forward. The draft of the amendment clearly could have been brought forward if the opposition had not brought forward a motion which I consider to be in the nature of a hoist motion, but I understand that it is being considered to be a reasoned amendment at second reading of Bill 18.

I think it's quite appropriate for the hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer to give the House such information as may be helpful to the House in its determinations, particularly when asked specifically about it by a member of this House who makes it his business to ask those questions on an ongoing basis and when that particular item is not on the Order Paper for discussion on that particular day.

Bill 18 is not on the Order Paper, so having the Acting Provincial Treasurer take the opportunity of a good question to provide information to the House which the House can use in doing its further consideration at a later date of a bill before the House is entirely appropriate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South on this point of order.

MR. DOERKSEN: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. Because I was the member who asked the question, I think I have an obligation to speak here. I raised the question on behalf of my constituents. In fact, when we're talking about taxes, it's on behalf of all Albertans. It is important for Albertans to know what the flat tax policy really means in its rollout and implications. I, in fact, have had several individuals from Red Deer who have contacted me, given me their personal financial information, and said: please calculate what the impact is going to be under your new tax system. So I consider that it's a member's privilege to be able to ask questions. I can't predict what the minister is going to answer or how he's going to answer.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I'm a little perplexed as to why the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora would raise a point of order, because in his tablings today – and I'm reading from the Blues – he made at least two tablings which refer to this tax rate, to the very issue that we were discussing in my question. In fact, if one were to reflect on past behaviour, a tabling of that nature normally would be foregoing to a question that he would probably be raising later. Now, it didn't happen today, but quite often a tabling prompts a question later on in question period. So this question may in fact have been on his mind for him to ask the minister, but I got to it first, and I'm pleased that I did, because it's a very important question to the people of Alberta.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order. The point of order was with reference to the nature of the answer that was received on the question, not to the nature of the questions themselves.

As you, Mr. Speaker, pointed out yourself at the end of that ramble that we heard this afternoon, there is an opportunity for Ministerial Statements on the Order Paper, and we would expect ministers of this government to respect the Order Paper and to adhere to the process that is listed for us every day. If somebody has a problem with following it, they have the Order Paper in front of them every day.

In fact, the answer to that question was at least a ministerial statement if not a complete platform that could have easily been put forward in a news release or other venues. It was not a short answer to a question, which is what you repeatedly ask for in this Assembly. It was nothing more than a full and complete statement, a platform for him to get his point across, and there are far more appropriate venues for the minister to do that in rather than in the limited time in question period, when we do solicit answers to questions that do not have a venue to be asked in a timely fashion in other manners.

So in that particular instance I would say that the points brought forward by the Member for Red Deer-South were not appropriate to this point of order.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, this point of order arises as a result of an exchange between the hon. Member for Red Deer-South and the Acting Provincial Treasurer, and the time frame for those series of questions was five minutes, which is just a few seconds above the norm for the day, so close but not an issue.

There was an intervention from the chair. All hon. members saw the chair rise and caution the hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer that the question period was not a time for ministerial statements, nor was it a time to debate principled issues with respect to a particular bill. That having been said, whatever the issue is, whatever the bill is is totally neutral to the chair. The chair is looking after the process. The appropriate time to table a document is during Routine, not during question period. The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer, however, is not the only person in the House to have violated that. Tablings should be where we have the tablings situation, and we should not be using the time of the question period to debate a section in the bill.

It's a valid point, but we're not going to tar and feather anybody, the same way we didn't tar and feather the previous individual that there was a point of privilege associated with.

Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate April 20: Mrs. Sloan]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have this opportunity to speak to Bill 15, the Business Corporations Amendment Act. It's been a little while since it was on the floor of the Legislature, and it is a bill that for the most part we do support.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

For those who don't remember, I will refresh their memories in terms of the object of this bill. It's to remove the requirements for corporations to meet a solvency test before giving financial assistance by means of loans or guarantees to shareholders, directors, and other associated parties while adding the requirement that any financial assistance must be "in the best interest of the corporation," which is in section 42, Mr. Speaker.

This is a technical bill. It addresses a technical issue of concern to a number of organizations, and it has been brought forward by a number of stakeholders, Mr. Speaker, who have been reviewing this issue for a long time, since about the mid-1980s, if I recall correctly.

Stakeholders who have been responsible for the development of the work here have been the Alberta Law Reform Institute. Over time they have issued three different discussion papers, in the mid to late '80s and then again in 1996, which called for changes to section 42. Industry Canada also issued a March 1996 discussion paper on this recommending changes to section 44 of the Canada Business Corporations Act, all parts that have been incorporated into this bill.

Once the bill was written and brought forward to a variety of stakeholders, there were a few more concerns that were brought forward, and a number of other organizations came forward in the development of amendments. That brings me to an issue of concern that I have with this bill and with other bills like it.

Drafting this kind of legislation, which should be relatively minor in nature once the various stakeholders have been approached and advised, should not then subsequently result in additional amendments, Mr. Speaker. What should happen is that a thorough review should be made prior to the tabling of legislation so that all concerns are brought forward and we don't have to see potential changes to the principle of the bill coming forward at other stages. Faith in the government and their ability to bring forward good, strong legislation would be enhanced by making sure that it was good and strong in the first instance and didn't require changes to it. So that is a bit of a concern that I have, that we continually see instances where legislation is brought forward that isn't up to par, but having said that, what we see at this stage is satisfactory in light of the fact that we'll be seeing amendments coming forward later.

In the object of this bill there's also requirement for full written disclosure to shareholders and creditors within 90 days of financial assistance provided by a corporation to shareholders, directors, and other associated parties. This is very good, Mr. Speaker. We fully support this. It will allow shareholders and creditors to seek existing remedies available under the act, and should it be determined that the corporation, the shareholders, or the directors have entered into a transaction that is inappropriate and not in the best interest of the corporation, then those shareholders will have remedial action. Always important.

You know, we can see in corporations sometimes where there is a necessity for those kinds of transactions to occur or where it's in the best interest of the corporation for those kinds of transactions to occur, but it's the kind of transaction also that lends itself to activities that may not always be in the best interest of the corporation. So who should always have the final answer in a situation like this are the shareholders and the creditors.

In the past, without the 90-day provision, shareholders and creditors may be ultimately advised of what's occurring but not in a timely enough fashion to take any kind of remedial action that would be beneficial. If creditors don't find out the information until the next tax return is filed or the annual return is done, the same being said for shareholders, the kind of action taken by the corporation may have jeopardized their operations to a point where the corporation itself can't recover.

If this kind of information is disclosed in a timely fashion – in this case it's decided that 90 days is a timely fashion – then that's excellent. There's time to recover from transactions that have occurred that may financially harm the viability of the organization. Ninety days, I am assuming, has been the time determined in consultation with the various stakeholders that have been involved here. I know this bill has been run by the Law Society of Alberta, the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta, the Canadian Bankers' Association, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and the Alberta Chambers of Commerce. Those stakeholders unanimously approved the proposed legislation with the amendments, and that's excellent, Mr. Speaker. We also would like to thank all of those associated groups for their work on this legislation and subsequent amendments that we'll see after we're out of second reading.

I am assuming that they also, then, fully approve the 90 days and that they find it a reasonable time frame for shareholders and creditors to be apprised of any kinds of financial assistance provided by the corporations to directly affected parties and enough time to respond to that. To my way of thinking, 90 days is a bit of a long time line, perhaps not in large corporations, but certainly it's an issue for small corporations where a three-month operating time line can make the difference between the viability and the nonviability of an organization.

Should the shareholders or directors or any other associated parties have the intent to profit themselves first and the organization second, a lot of damage can be done in 90 days, Mr. Speaker. I have personally seen instances of this over the course of my 25-year career working with small businesses in this line of work in helping them secure credit and then negotiating different kinds of loans internally, within organizations, and outside of those organizations. In three months a lot can happen. I am hoping that when we get to committee, the Member for Calgary-North West, who sponsored this bill, will be able to give me a little bit of background in terms of that 90-day stipulation.

I would like to hear the kinds of comments and suggestions that were made by the various stakeholders, with a particular emphasis on small business operators, in terms of the length of time and how it can affect the cash flows in their organizations. It can be an eternity if there isn't enough cash flow in the organization to operate, so I think that is something we need to take a look at. If you withdraw a large chunk of cash or secure loans that have obligations to be met that aren't met by the original shareholder or director or affected party and the organization itself has to come up with the payments or restructure the debt, I would anticipate that that could adversely affect many organizations.

I know that the stakeholders whom you contacted with regard to this do have a fair representation of small businesses and microbusinesses, so I would like to know what those comments were, the discussions that were held, and if there was any consideration given to two different time lines: one for larger organizations, which have a longer turnaround time in terms of how significantly cash flow can be affected and the time it takes to actually apprise shareholders of changes in their operations, but also for those microbusinesses for which a very small change in cash flow can have a significant effect on their operations. If you could answer those questions for me when we get to the committee stage, I would certainly appreciate that.

When we take a look at the Business Corporations Act and the current section 42, it seeks to protect creditors and shareholders by prohibiting corporations from making loans or guarantees to shareholders and related parties subject to a solvency test. This prohibition applies to loans and guarantees made in relation to a related party in share purchase transactions. Related parties, as I see it, are spouses, children, direct relations, other corporations in which the person is a major shareholder, that kind of thing. The current solvency test is, by everybody's observations, unworkable and increases the transaction costs for businesses in order to approve the beneficial transactions designed to improve the financial viability of the corporation. We certainly agree with that. It's a cumbersome process, and it really just doesn't work. The elimination of the solvency test doesn't weaken available remedies to shareholders, in our opinion. In fact, it reduces the transaction costs for businesses, and that's a good thing.

Certainly I know from my experience over the years and since being elected that in listening to these various organizations who were original stakeholders, anything that government can do to reduce regulation and regulation-associated filing costs, the better it is for the business. We hear a number of numbers being tossed around in terms of the hours businesses spend doing just government-related paperwork, and often it's as much as eight hours a week, which is a full working day, not a full working day for a small business owner, generally speaking, but a generally accepted full working day. The costs associated with the variety of hours of labour put into filling out forms and transaction fees and so on are prohibitive, so anything we can do to assist businesses in that regard is a benefit.

In fact, I would like to see a complete review done of the kinds of regulations that affect businesses and see a substantive and committed approach to reducing those kinds of costs. There is an MLA charged with taking a look at the regulations, but that process seems to have stalled and has for regulations in general. Specific to businesses, I think it would be an excellent process to undertake. Perhaps the Member for Calgary-North West could be the person to chair that kind of a process, given that he has done good work on this bill. With his technical background he is certainly in a position to understand how adversely affected organizations can be because of these kinds of costs. It would be a progressive move and something that people on this side of the House would support.

Perhaps we could take a look at an all-party approach to it so that as you go through the process, any concerns could be addressed at that stage. When we brought changes to a variety of forms of legislation that would be required, it could follow a very speedy process here in the Legislature. I think that would certainly be a win/win situation for everybody, a good example of how government and opposition can work co-operatively together. There have been a few in the past, since I was elected in 1993, but certainly not enough. I think for the most part it isn't because we haven't been prepared to work co-operatively on a variety of issues. This would be an excellent issue to bring forward in that regard and to put in a sunset clause in terms of the reporting process so that it isn't the kind of problem that carries on for a long period of time, so that it's got a time line in it, a beginning and an end, so that businesses, organizations, and other stakeholders can see that their time would not be wasted in participating in this kind of review.

Certainly I know that we have seen any number of proposals from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, over at least the last 10 or 15 years that I've been reading their information, suggesting different kinds of regulations that could be eliminated, that could have sunset clauses attached to them or be adapted in a manner that would be more conducive to conducting business, such as this one was here. We still have the kinds of checks and balances in the system that I think we need with these kinds of loan transactions, but definitely by changing the nature of them, we've improved the ability of businesses to operate by reducing their transaction costs, and that's only a good-news story.

I'm wondering if the Member for Calgary-North West would also comment on that suggestion when this bill gets to committee. I think it certainly merits attention. It would be good for industry to see that we can work co-operatively and that everyone in this Assembly is supportive of business at all levels of activity within the province and that we want to ensure they can get on with providing their product and selling it in the marketplace and contributing in a global marketplace rather than being deskbound by filling out forms and paying registration fees. I think that's something that certainly needs to be looked at in the near future.

There are already a number of remedies available under the act to shareholders and creditors if they feel that a financial transaction approved by directors or some shareholders is not in the best interests of the corporation, but, once again, the elimination of the solvency test doesn't weaken these remedies. It's beneficial to improving the financial viability of the corporation as I read it, and I wouldn't mind having the sponsor of the bill refer to that, too, when he is next able to speak to the bill.

This bill improves disclosure requirements, I think, by requiring the terms and conditions of financial assistance to be provided to all the shareholders within 90 days with the exception of the microbusinesses and very small businesses that I referred to. It may still be a fast enough turnaround, and I'll look forward to comments on this. This is certainly a major improvement over what we had there before, which was disclosure only at year-end in the annual financial statement. I think that was a very poor setup. It set up a system for abuse and didn't benefit anybody, certainly not shareholders, who didn't get the benefit, and certainly not any creditors there.

That just about concludes my remarks. I think I have one more question that I would like the member to address when he speaks, and that is that we'd like to know about the status of the negotiations with the Alberta Securities Commission to extend these provisions to public companies and reporting issues. I think that's a very good idea, and we think you should be moving forward in that regard as fast as possible. In fact, if there are any public documents, some detail available on that, we would certainly like to see them if not tabled then at least referred to us so that we can take a look at them.

I look forward to hearing the comments from the Member for Calgary-North West when we get into committee, and I look forward to seeing the amendments. I have no doubt at all that we'll be supporting the bill in its amended form when we get to the end of committee.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I listened with interest to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and her remarks regarding Bill 15, the Business Corporations Amendment Act. This amendment, as presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-North West, I think is certainly worthy of support. I noticed from the hon. member's remarks that the stakeholders involved in the consultation as the bill was developed, as the amendments were developed were the Alberta Law Reform Institute, the Law Society of Alberta, and the chartered accountants. In my remarks a little later, particularly around the professional groups, the Law Society and the chartered accountants, and the discussions on section 42 and the solvency and asset tests, I will have some questions for the member who brought this bill forward. I'm looking forward, as is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, to hearing from that member regarding this.

Certainly we want to promote an environment in this province that is going to be comfortable for business to operate in and operate efficiently, not only business that's here now but also in the future. Alberta, we all recognize, has had the fastest growing economy in Canada over the past five years, and we're very lucky in this. I hope that this continues, and I hope that Bill 15 in a small way will be a positive contribution to future growth. I'm not so certain that individuals who are contemplating setting up a business in this province are going to have a look at this amendment and that that is going to be the reason for their decision to locate in this province. I would like to hope that perhaps in some small way this will, in effect, make the economy of this province more noticeable for investment.

We all know there is a need for capital investment in this province. We look at northern Alberta. We look at the Fort McMurray area in particular, and we see the investment that's going on in heavy oil. An abundance of natural advantages, one of them being the tar sands and the abundant supply of oil that's captured in them, is the foundation for our flourishing economy, and this positive investment climate has allowed Alberta businesses to compete successfully not only with each other but in the global economy. We look at encouraging the diversification of our economy and what that will do for job creation. This could go on even when the commodity prices for natural resources, whether it be ethane, whether it be heavy oil out in Lloydminster, whether it be synthetic crude, whether it be conventional crude – what will this amendment do whenever conditions are not favourable or there is a downturn in the economy? Will this amendment in a small way encourage enough diversification of the economy so that there are not these dips where there is a great deal of unemployment?

Now, what will this amendment do to help attract corporate headquarters to this province? We see that Calgary already has the second highest number of head offices of any city in Canada. If we look at Toronto, Toronto has approximately five times the population of Calgary, but on a per capita basis Calgary exceeds any city by far. Where does Edmonton rank in this? Well, unfortunately, if you look at the top 10 in the country, Toronto would have the highest number of corporate offices, Calgary would be second, and Edmonton would be 10th. Now, I'm sure the hon. Member for Calgary-North West had that in mind when he not only went through his extensive consultation on this bill but also as he spoke to the various stakeholders.

The growth in business and in the number of businesses in this province since 1995, Mr. Speaker, has been the fastest of any province in Canada. This tells us something about the Business Corporations Act, and it also tells us about this amendment. Maybe this is the foundation that we need. This is symbolic because it displays to the business community that Members of this Legislative Assembly are listening and are reacting to their concerns. Now, it is interesting to note that in 1999 the number of businesses in Alberta increased by over 4 percent. That is also the strongest among the provinces.

Earlier I was mentioning section 42 and the solvency and asset testing under section 42. I understand there is no accepted definition of the value of assets. There is also uncertainty as to what should be included as a liability here. Now, this resulted in a certain unwillingness by CAs, or chartered accountants, to give an opinion as to the value of a corporation. They did not want to do this. They felt cautious. Of course, this required companies to hire legal counsel, and these are expensive costs. As I'm told, it could be anywhere between $3,000 and $50,000 – and this is per transaction – to ensure that these transactions are in accordance with the requirements of the Business Corporations Act.

Now, the uncertainties created by section 42 raised transaction costs for businesses and prevented them from undertaking transactions beneficial to their shareholders and to their creditors. Word of this is obviously going to get out. We think of the provincial corporate income tax rates in this province. We think of the provincial small business corporation income tax rates everywhere. The Alberta small corporation business income tax rate is competitive. It's 25 percent lower than Ontario's. This amendment will also make businesses more competitive. Will it mean, Mr. Speaker, that there is a greater competitive advantage? I don't know, but certainly it would be one thing that we could look at.

Lower operating costs. Certainly, for some businesses at least, this is going to lower operating costs. We think of lower operating costs for businesses, and we also think of lower operating costs for households. When it comes to the cost of living, Alberta is the place to live. You would think that hon. members across the way would be talking about this, but they're silent. The best ambassadors of this province, Mr. Speaker, are businesses when they travel and are looking for new markets or looking to have product development. We need to talk about the prices of goods and services and our utilities. Oh, I shouldn't have said utilities, I believe, because they're going up.

Alberta is an attractive place to live and to do business. Costs, as I said earlier, are certainly competitive with the rest of Canada and the United States. We look at our combination of taxes, our skilled workforce, and the well-established infrastructure. In some places it needs improvement, and hopefully these improvements are going to be made in a timely and economic fashion.

We look at initial investment costs if, for instance, a business is to locate or relocate. Hopefully we would get our share of relocations. Of the largest cities in Canada for initial investment costs, Edmonton is in the top 10. I believe it's ranked second. Calgary is ranked seventh. This is good news for both cities.

Now, we look at the annual location-sensitive costs. We look at Edmonton and Calgary. They're both ranked in costs. Edmonton is second, and Calgary is fourth. That's good, but what will this bill do to that in the future? Well, it's going to help. We are now going to be on a level playing field with Saskatchewan because similar legislation has already been in force in Saskatchewan since the early 1990s. There are no cities that I can think of, even Saskatoon and Regina, that can compete with investment costs or location-sensitive costs like Edmonton and Calgary can. Ontario has recently introduced amendments to their Business Corporations Act, and the federal government, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie said earlier, is also examining changes to the Canada Corporations Act.

Now, we look at another indicator of how businesses are welcomed in this province: office rental rates. I don't know if many of the businesses that are going to start up are going to have the capital to just buy property. You look at Edmonton and Calgary. They're both well placed. Edmonton has the lowest overall office rents among major Canadian cities, and Calgary's rates are down, as I understand it, from last year. This is going to be further good news for the business community.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, as we look at diversifying the province economically for the future, this is just one small stepping-stone to that. It is going to be a good bill in a small way. As I close, we need to highlight just exactly what we are going to accomplish with this piece of legislation. Certainly there will be the requirement of the written disclosure within 90 days to shareholders of the terms and conditions of any financial assistance between a corporation and its shareholders or directors, the removal of the requirement to meet the solvency testing, which I believe we were concerned about in section 42, before giving financial assistance or loans or guarantees to shareholders, directors, and other associated parties or individuals while adding the requirement that any financial assistance must be "in the best interest of the corporation."

I'm certainly going to support this amendment to the Business Corporations Act. The amendments are designed to enhance legitimate business activities that are deemed to be in the best interests, as I said before, of the shareholders, the directors, and the creditors. This is one more small step in welcoming business and using their expertise to diversify our economy. We are going to no longer have all the spikes that come with commodity prices, not only in petroleum and natural gas prices but also in grain prices and beef prices. We shall see how this works. I'm sure it will. I look forward, as my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie said earlier, to the remarks from the sponsor of this bill.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks at this time on Bill 15. Thank you.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak this afternoon in favour of Bill 15, the Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2000. It's a bill that provides a good example of where government plays a valid role in regulating the free-market economy. We hear much these days about the benefits of a free-market economy, and we hear from the proponents of free markets, some of whom feel that an unfettered market would be the best in terms of future directions. This bill reminds us that that's not true, that unfettered free enterprise would carry with it a great number of difficulties, and we would all suffer for it. It provides a good example of where as a community and through our elected government we step in and say that these are the kinds of rules that will be used to try to bring order and stability to the marketplace; in this case, the dealings in terms of corporations and the activity of corporations vis-a-vis buyouts and the relationship with shareholders and the board of directors.

It's an interesting set of amendments when it's viewed in the context of what we saw with the behaviour of Onex and Air Canada buying out Canadian Airlines. I think that for a lot of us, who don't spend a lot of time examining the details of those kinds of operations, it provided a bit of insight into the kinds of difficulties corporations can find themselves in when they're looking at buyout bids, when they're looking to sell their assets. We learned in that instance about poison pills, something I hadn't heard of, in terms of a corporation setting in place such staggering future obligations that it could be used as a mechanism for fending off takeover by a competitor.

We've had a look at the system to the south, the American, in recent weeks with the government there trying to regulate or to curtail the interests of the Microsoft Corporation and what the government believes is a company that is not operating in the interests of the public. So it's rather timely that we have this legislation in front of us and have an opportunity to think about corporate behaviour in our province and how those corporations can be helped and can be enabled to operate in the best interests of their shareholders and, of course, in the best interests of the public.

There seem to be at least five major principles that undergird Bill 15. One of those principles, of course, is really self-evident, and it's one of the reasons why the bill is before us. That principle would state that businesses should be able to operate in a timely fashion in the best interests of shareholders and creditors and boards of directors. The legislation that this bill amends had encumbered corporations and tried to fulfill that obligation. It made the solvency test really curtailed and made inflexible a company that was trying to raise money, that was trying to secure funding for buying other businesses.

It wasn't that it was just a provision in the act. It was that that provision was almost impossible to act upon, and proving that a company, a corporation was solvent became a very onerous task. Companies, corporations would have difficulty finding accountants, finding experts who would attest to the solvency of the corporation, in some cases, unless that solvency was so overwhelmingly evident. With corporations, many of which have a variety of assets, this really slowed down their operations or made the kinds of things they often wanted to do almost impossible. So that principle, I think, is supported by Bill 15, and I think it's a valid principle and one that we need to make sure all of our legislative changes support.

A second principle that seems to be endorsed by the bill is that legal restraints should not unfairly curtail the operations of corporations. We've heard this time and time again, that the kinds of regulations, the kinds of laws governing corporations should be those that are fair but certainly not those that are unfair in terms of curtailing their operation. It's a principle I think everyone would endorse. Let's make sure that the regulations and the laws that are put in place don't prevent corporations from doing those things they should logically be able to carry out were it not that they were being constrained by a law governing their operations.

A third principle is the principle of best interest, and this is an interesting one, Mr. Speaker, because the principle that corporations must operate in the best interest of that corporation and the shareholders and the public, for that matter, is one that I think again has general support. Yet we have, I know, coming before us when we get to the committee stage of the bill an amendment, because although the words "best interest" sound good and they're in this version of the bill that we have in front of us, it's been pointed out by some of the stakeholders that best interest in itself is open to wide interpretation. The bill removes a set of restrictions in terms of solvency, but if we were to include in the bill the words "best interest," the feeling by those stakeholders is that we would then impose another whole set of restrictions and an even more difficult set of restrictions in terms of trying to prove what is in the best interest and what isn't in the best interest.

Again, I understand that the government intends to bring forward an amendment when we get to the committee stage of the bill that will remove that term "best interest." I found it interesting because when I first read the bill, it was a term that I found very attractive, and I was only reminded by one of the stakeholders that the kinds of difficulties involved in trying to prove best interest could really, really work to the detriment of corporations and shareholders.

I think another principle that this bill supports is that corporations must be able to use a wide range of tools, if you will, to operate successfully in today's financial climate. That again, for those corporations and the shareholders in it, is an important principle, that they are given maximum freedom to use the tools at their disposal to work in the interests of the corporation and the corporation's shareholders. Again, it's a sound principle. It's a principle that operates within our notion of corporations being good corporate citizens, as are most of these principles that underline the bill. We see, with the kind of knowledge-based economy we have and the speed with which assets can be transferred and liabilities undertaken, that corporations really have to be flexible, and they have to be in a position to use a wide variety of tools to be successful in today's climate. It's a good principle. It's a principle that the amendments to Bill 15 support.

I think another principle – and it's a more general one – is that there has to be a legal framework that protects the interests of corporations and shareholders and creditors. We've added to that framework in this province over the years, and it's a framework that is being constantly adjusted to accommodate changing marketplace conditions and changing ways of doing business. It goes back to my opening comments about the need for government to play a role in regulating and making sure that the free-market economy that we have serves all of society and not just special interests or special segments of that society. In that way Bill 15 is, I think, a good move in terms of strengthening that legal framework and strengthening the kind of protection that we provide for those involved in the marketplace.

A further principle that I think Bill 15 supports and that I think is an important one is that there is a public interest in a stable and a disciplined corporate climate. I think that's a principle that we would all defend very, very strongly. Yes, these amendments are directed at corporate behaviour, but let there be no mistake that there is a huge public interest in making sure that that corporate behaviour is such that the marketplace is stable, that it's a marketplace in which people around the world can have confidence they can come and be part of and the rules of fairness and equity will prevail. That public interest is an important principle and, as I said, one that's supported by the bill.

Those are really most of the comments I'd have about the principles of the bill. When the amendments are brought forward, Mr. Speaker, and there's more detailed discussion of the bill at the committee stage as it proceeds through the Legislature, I look forward to supporting it. I think the government has done a good job of consulting and responding to the interests of stakeholders and the marketplace. These kinds of changes to the Business Corporations Act are changes that are for the better, and I think we'll all profit from them.

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise this afternoon to address Bill 15, the Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2000, that's been sponsored by the Member for Calgary-North West.

It's my understanding that one of the highlights of this particular bill is to remove the requirement to meet the solvency test before giving financial assistance to shareholders, directors, and associated parties while adding a requirement that any financial assistance must be in the best interest of the corporation.

An additional highlight is that there's a requirement for a written disclosure within 90 days to shareholders of the terms and conditions of any financial assistance between a corporation and its shareholders and directors. This in fact will allow shareholders and creditors to seek existing remedies available under the act should it be determined that the corporation, its shareholders, or directors have entered into a transaction that is inappropriate and not in the best interests of the corporation.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie I think rightly pointed out that this is a technical bill. It's not a very large bill in the number of pages, but it is a technical bill that has come about as a result of a fair amount of consultation with some of those stakeholders that were involved in the development of these amendments to the Business Corporations Amendment Act: the Law Society of Alberta, the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta, the Canadian Bankers Association, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and Alberta Chambers of Commerce.

I know that the government is sometimes fond of indicating that the Official Opposition is not in support of private business. In fact, Mr. Speaker, we very much stand on the record as being supportive of industry in our province. We do, however, draw the line when it comes to industry entering the field of the provision of public health care. But in this particular case it is an issue that I will most likely support, in terms of the amendments, because they are designed to enhance legitimate business activities that are considered to be in the best interest of shareholders, directors, and creditors.

From the consultation that was undertaken with the stakeholders, it soon became apparent that the current solvency test under section 42 is unworkable and increases the transaction cost for business in order to approve beneficial transactions designed to improve the financial viability of the corporation. Although there are already remedies under the act available to shareholders and creditors if they feel that a financial transaction approved by the directors or some shareholders is not in the best interests of the corporation, the elimination of the solvency test won't actually weaken any available remedies but will improve the requirements that are within the act.

What I find surprising, however, having been in this Legislative Assembly now for seven years, is that it almost seems to be a habit by the provincial government, in bringing forward legislation, that amendments seem to occur even though there has been a fair amount of work that was provided on a piece of legislation. It's my understanding that when this particular act is passed from second reading into Committee of the Whole, there is already an amendment that will be brought forward to section 42(2), I believe, as well. We just had an example today, where on Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, the Acting Provincial Treasurer tried to bring in his amendment through question period. Even though there are vast resources the government has at its disposal, it seems to be, as I indicated, almost a habit that legislation is provided in this Assembly and, lo and behold, there are amendments that occur at the Committee of the Whole stage.

What is even more surprising is what occurs with regards to closure in this Assembly, where bills are rushed through this Legislative Assembly. It has happened 26 times in the last seven years that bills are rushed through. There's not adequate debate. There's not adequate time provided in that Committee of the Whole stage, and lo and behold, sure enough, what occurs is that the government either in the same year or in the following year brings in amendments. I can remember in particular one instance where the amendments were larger than the bill that was passed. I believe it had to do with an education act.

We have in front of us a living example of that with regards to the private health care bill that recently closure was brought in on. What we have in fact is the situation where there were amendments brought in, and I guarantee that if that particular bill is passed and if that bill is not laid aside and withdrawn, we will be back in this Legislative Assembly in the very near future trying to amend the holes that have been created and the problems that have been created by that particular piece of legislation.

Bill 15 is another technical piece of legislation. In listening to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, he indicated that it was very important to the business sectors within our province and that what in fact is required are some amendments to the Business Corporations Act in order to ensure that Alberta is indeed open to business.

Two main issues that have been brought forward by Bill 15 are with regards to the solvency requirements, the solvency test, as well as the requirement of a full written disclosure to shareholders. This is similar to legislation that we see in Saskatchewan and Ontario, and in fact even the federal government is examining some changes to the Corporations Act. As I indicated earlier, this issue has been the topic of extensive review since the mid-1980s, and there were three discussion papers that were issued calling for these changes to section 42, so the issue does seem to have been studied at fair length. I wonder why it did take so long to enact some of the recommendations that have been put forward as a result of these extensive reviews, and I'd be interested in hearing a little bit more as to what the background was and what the holdups were in terms of providing the amendments to the act.

I did hear and would also be interested in finding out – the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie had asked about what the status is of the negotiations with the Alberta Securities Commission to extend these provisions to public companies and reporting issues. That would be interesting to find out as well.

The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods as usual was very succinct in his comments in dealing with the principles of the bill and looking at the fact that the bill appears to support the public interest and is involved in dealing with some of the issues around regulating the market economy.

The issues that we see within this particular bill have been reiterated in terms of the solvency and asset tests that were a difficulty under section 42 and that there is no currently accepted definition of realizable value of assets. There's also uncertainty as to what should be included as liabilities. The result, therefore, is that chartered accountants were often unwilling to give an opinion as to the value of a corporation, and this required companies to hire legal counsel, at a cost of $3,000 to $50,000 per transaction, to ensure that these transactions were in accordance with the requirements of the Business Corporations Act. The uncertainties created by section 42 raised transaction costs for businesses and prevented them from undertaking beneficial transactions for the shareholders and creditors.

We would never want to be accused of standing in the way of having a smooth process whereby transactions could occur and having unnecessary limitations to corporations and companies in terms of additional costs that are a burden and not required. So the amendments that are put forward are considered to be in the best interests of the corporation and, I would assume, also in the best interests of the consumers. In looking at the bill – and I realize it's the Business Corporations Amendment Act – I would appreciate any comments that the mover of the bill has with regards to any potential impacts on consumers.

There is a fair amount of discussion that has occurred with regards to shareholders, directors, and other associated parties, but even in the list of stakeholders that I have here in my notes, it does not appear that the Consumers' Association was involved, and perhaps there is no role for the Consumers' Association. But I would appreciate knowing if in fact there had been any thought given to involving the Consumers' Association and if not, why not, just to be assured that there is no real impact that could in fact be downloaded to any consumers who are partaking in or involved with any of these corporations. Again, because it is a technical bill that seems to deal with a very specific area of business dealings, it may be totally irrelevant in terms of the impact on consumers, and they may not have been considered as part of the other associated parties that are involved in terms of any of the amendments that are put forward. I believe in always looking and seeing whether there is a flip side to a coin and ensuring that there are no unintentional effects as a result of any changes that occur.

From what I understand, the consultation appears to have been fairly thorough. The input seems to have been taken, and what we have is a bill that, as I indicated, is not very long but potentially could have some impacts on businesses within Alberta and hopefully some positive impacts on businesses.

The only note of caution again is, as I indicated earlier, that we sometimes have bills that are brought forward in this Legislative Assembly that in fact are very complicated. They may be long, they may be short, but what occurs is that somewhere in between – and I have mentioned this before with regards to some of the other bills I have addressed – when we look at some of the issues and the consultation that occurs and then the movement from the consultation process to the wordsmithing, sometimes what ends up occurring is that the words mean something different than what the stakeholders had intended. Perhaps that's why we now see that there will be, as I indicated at the outset, an amendment brought to the Committee of the Whole stage, which, I would assume, we will be moving into in the near future.

The whole issue is one of ensuring that legitimate business activities within this province are enhanced and that individuals are protected in terms of ensuring that the best interests of shareholders, directors, and creditors are met.

So with those few words, I will take my place. If there are any other comments, I would be more than pleased to listen to any of the comments that other members may have. I also look forward to hearing from the mover as to some of the issues that not only I have brought up but the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, and the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. There may have been some other members that I missed and didn't quite hear what their comments were. I think we have discussed this issue, as we do issues in our caucus, to try and come to a full understanding, and there are some questions still that, as I indicated,

I would appreciate the mover providing comments on. The comments do not have to be long, but I think it would help to provide a full understanding of what Bill 15, Business Corporations Amendment Act, is attempting to rectify.

I'm just checking to make sure I've covered all of the areas under the bill – I think I have – and the points that I wished to make and will now take my place. Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a second time]

Bill 17

Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate March 20: Mr. Hancock]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure this afternoon to speak to Bill 17, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2000. I'd like to commend the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for the work he did on this legislation. It is legislation that I can certainly vote for, and I would hope all members of the Assembly would vote for it.

There are certainly a few observations I would like to make on the bill, Mr. Speaker. It is a bit of a housekeeping bill, and the few amendments that will be made certainly will help to strengthen this bill. They will help to clarify the intent of the bill. For those reasons I think these changes are not too controversial, and some of them in fact are very good.

Now then, there are amendments in sections 43(e), 45(3)(b), and section 109(b). I would like to look at these and do a brief analysis by section.

In looking at section 43(e), what we see here is that this is part of the credit and personal reports section of the act. As the legislation currently stands, the reporting agency must furnish "reports for gain or profit or on a reciprocal non-profit basis, and" must be "designated by the regulations." That amendment would change this "and" to an "or," meaning that a reporting agency that fulfills the first set of criteria set out in subsection (i) can be considered an official reporting agency without being designated in the regulations. It also means that the minister can designate a person a reporting agency without having to meet the first set of criteria in subsection (i). So we see by this amendment, Mr. Speaker, that simply by changing the word "and" to "or," we are ensuring that the reporting agencies are covered by the act as soon as they are established.

The second amendment that is included in this particular act is section 45(3)(b). Now, section 45 is also part of the credit and personal reports section of the act. It deals with the information that cannot be included in a report. Subsection (b) deals with the reporting of debts. As it currently stands now, Mr. Speaker, "actions, accounts or debts" cannot be reported if they "cannot be pursued because of the expiration of limitation periods." The amendment clarifies the term "limitation periods" by stating that unfavourable information about a debt cannot be reported if it has been more than 6 years since the last payment on that debt or more than 6 years since the debt was incurred. I understand that this part of the legislation is consistent with other provinces.

Now then, the amended section only mentions "debt" and deletes "actions" and "accounts." Under section 45(3)(b) this would come into effect on March 1, 2000. So all this information on the debtors, Mr. Speaker, will have to be purged from the records of Alberta debtors after two years. This does cause some concerns in that Alberta is changing with this new limit of actions, and in some respects this will put us out of step with other provincial jurisdictions.

Then the last section that is amended by this act is section 109(b). In section 109(b) this amendment changes the term "a person" to the term "an individual" in the definition of "collector" in the collection practices section of the act. Interestingly, Mr. Speaker, the previous section, section 109(a), defining "collection agency," in which the term "a person" is also used, is not similarly changed. Legally the word "person" includes under the current legislation corporate bodies, which was not the original intent of this legislation. So the amendment to the act will make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that only licensed individuals are to be covered.

So with those few comments I would like to conclude what I have to say here on Bill 17, and I would urge that all members of the Assembly do support this bill and these amendments. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a few brief comments that I would like to make on Bill 17, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2000. It's interesting to see that this bill is not substantive in nature, in my opinion. We've got a few sections that are being amended and really overall, to me, reflect slight changes and are providing some clarification. The changes that are being affected here in a general sense speak to streamlining the process and addressing some of the concerns that we have heard from businesses and corporations in the past and those associated stakeholders involved with them.

This is an excellent bill to be discussing after Bill 15, because in many respects they have similar overall concerns when we talk about reducing regulations and streamlining processes for businesses doing business in the province of Alberta. This is another good example of the kind of legislation that could be addressed through an all-party committee, because what we really need to do is address the overall concerns that organizations have in this province about the kind of regulation they have and how very small changes in words can make a big difference to the requirements they have to adhere to, sometimes requirements that are excessive, duplicated, or just simply not necessary.

Section 43(e) would fall into that category. As part of the credit and personal reports section of the act as the legislation currently stands, reporting agencies have to furnish "reports for gain or profit or on a reciprocal non-profit basis, and [also be] designated by the regulations." When you change that from an "and" to an "or," then you start to get into a situation that is much fairer for organizations. To have them have that kind of duplication is not reasonable, and definitely we want adequate reporting standards but not excessive ones or requirements that will become a burden for organizations. So this is, in one very small section with one very small word changed, an example of how we can accomplish this and still mean that reporting agencies will fulfill the sets of criteria as set out in the subclause in the appropriate section, Mr. Speaker. That's a good-news story.

These are the kinds of small changes that can make a huge difference to organizations and that we should take a look at doing in a more substantive manner to lots of regulations, not just a few of them. We've seen two before us in the House this session, and it would be my wish that we would see many more than just two, because we need to seriously address the concerns that we're hearing from outside organizations.

What also happens with this change, Mr. Speaker, is that the minister can designate a person or a reporting agency without having to meet the first set of criteria in subclause (i), which once again makes it a slightly more streamlined process and gets rid of some of that horrible paperwork that organizations not only find tedious and onerous but can't find any relevant use for or applicability to their organization. So, once again, good news. [interjection] It is good news, and it's nice to be able to agree with something that this government has done, however small it is. It's a small change, but it's good.

Section 45 is also part of the credit and personal reports section of the act, and here it deals with information that cannot be included in the report. One of the subsections deals with the reporting of debts, and under the current legislation we find that accounts or debts cannot be reported if they cannot be pursued because the limitation period has expired. This amendment clarifies the term "limitation periods" by stating that unfavourable information about a debt cannot be reported if it has been more than six years since the last payment on that debt or more than six years since the debt was incurred.

The section only mentions debt underneath "actions" and "accounts." This is good news on a number of fronts, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk about it just from a tax perspective. If you're listing a debt on your books, it has to be a reasonable time period before you can write that off against your income as something you can never clarify. I have seen some instances in years past where Revenue Canada has deemed it still collectible even though the debt is very old and it's been many years since any collection has been made on it.

So it's excellent to be having a clarification of this ruling for many purposes, not the least of which is income tax purposes. If Revenue Canada decides they don't like a particular company, they can be quite oppressive in terms of their requirements and the meeting of the letter of the law. To them an accounts receivable is an accounts receivable even if the owners of the organization believe it can never be collected. So for us to see an amendment here clarifying the term "limitation periods" is very good from that perspective. It also gives some operating guidelines to businesses new and old who don't know how to handle these things or what they should do or if there is a rule of thumb or a standard practice or some piece of legislation that they are bound to have to follow. This sets this out quite clearly.

I'm not sure what the government's intentions are in terms of the reporting requirements for this. How will they be notifying organizations? Is there some current agreement that stakeholders who are involved in the process of putting this bill through will undertake to talk about these changes in their publications, or has the government undertaken some sort of role in the information-sharing process? It would be nice to have had those answers for us here; we don't have them yet. Perhaps we could have an undertaking by the government to provide those answers, because while these are small changes, they are substantive to some organizations, and they should get to know what it is in terms of what the requirements are going to be for them and once again share the good news about regulations being changed.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to talk a little bit about the changes happening in section 109(b), where the amendment is changing the term "a person" to the term "an individual" in the definition of "collector" in the collection practices section of the act. This is also good, because to be accurate, it wouldn't always be a person who would fall under the definition of a collector and in fact in most cases it isn't. It's an organization, it's a company, it's a department, or something of that nature. It isn't definitively a person. A small change, but it makes it more accurate and correct than what we've seen in the past, so that's good.

It's surprising to me though, Mr. Speaker, that we haven't seen the previous subsections defining collection agency also changed to provide some consistency throughout the bill. I would expect that having had this shortfall in the legislation pointed out to them, the government will undertake to make these changes in a miscellaneous statutes act, if not in time for this spring then in the fall sitting. It's a minor change, but it cleans it up a little bit, and if we're going to be doing some work on that, then we should do the work completely. I think that would be a very good idea.

I think that concludes all the remarks I have on Bill 17 at this time. Once again, minor changes that we can agree to, so good work on the part of the sponsor of this bill. Once again, I would like to see this kind of legislation referred to a more substantive committee that would review these kinds of regulatory changes in a more comprehensive fashion and better address the needs of businesses that operate throughout this province and provide a substantive amount of tax revenue to this government.

So with those remarks, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a second time]

[At 5:12 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 8, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/05/08

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, would you please remain standing after the prayer for the singing of our national anthem.

Fifty-five years ago on, May 8, 1945, the war in Europe ended. As we pray, would you bow your heads in silence as we especially remember those who died in that long and costly struggle.

Almighty God, we give thanks for Your servants who died in defence of peace and freedom. Let us remember them. Amen.

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

Please be seated.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition from 142 residents of Alberta from Spruce Grove, St. Albert, and Edmonton urging “the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care” in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions to present to the Assembly today. They both state:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to stop promoting private healthcare and undermining public healthcare.

The first one is signed by citizens from Berwyn, Sherwood Park, Stony Plain, Spruce Grove, and Edmonton; the second one from Cochrane and Calgary.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present to the Legislative Assembly today on behalf of many Calgarians. These individuals are asking “the assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.”

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and table petitions signed by 151 citizens of the communities of Stony Plain, St. Albert, Sherwood Park, Fort Saskatchewan, Ardrossan, and Edmonton. These citizens petition “the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.”

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two separate petitions that I would like to present to the Assembly this afternoon.

The first has been signed by residents of Edmonton, and it reads:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta, petition the Legislative assembly to urge the government to stop promoting/implementing Bill 11 and the privatization of public health care.

Mr. Speaker, the second petition I table on behalf of 49 residents of Sherwood Park who attended a church service last weekend.

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta and as members of Sherwood Park United Church, petition the Legislative Assembly to add our names to the list of Albertans who oppose the proposal to allow private for-profit hospitals in Alberta. We agree with the health reform but wish it to occur within the existing public system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to present a petition bearing a total of 179 signatures that calls upon the Legislative Assembly to “maintain Kananaskis Country in a natural state,” to “deny development approval” for the projects proposed for that region, and to “create a Wildland . . . Park” in Spray and Kananaskis valleys.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a petition today. It's signed by 200 Albertans from Beaumont, Edmonton, Sherwood Park, St. Albert, Ardrossan, and Grande Prairie. The petition reads:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

This brings the total number of signatures on this petition up to today to 21,925.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table with the Legislature a petition from 189 Calgarians.

We, the undersigned, call upon the Legislative Assembly of [the province] of Alberta to urge the Government to:

- (1) maintain Kananaskis Country in a natural state . . .
- (2) deny development approval to any intensive recreational developments . . . and
- (3) create a Wildland Provincial Park that protects the Kananaskis and the Spray River Valleys.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before we move on to the next item in the routine, might we revert briefly back to Introduction of Visitors.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a distinguished guest who is with us today, the president of the International Amateur Athletic Federation, Mr. Lamine Diack. As well as being president of the IAAF, Mr. Diack is currently president of the African athletic confederation, a member of the International Olympic Committee, and the president of the National Olympic Committee of Senegal. His role has been as track and field athlete or as coach and as committee member or president. His continuing commitment to amateur athletics has remained constant.

Mr. Diack has now involved the city of Edmonton in that commitment as the city will host the 2001 IAAF World Championships in Athletics. Mr. Speaker, this is significant in that Edmonton will be the first North American city ever to host these prestigious international championships, and of course these games will feature the world's best track and field athletes from over 200 countries. The IAAF World Championships in Athletics is the third largest sporting event in the world with an anticipated international viewing audience of 4 billion people. This makes the championship third in scope only to the Summer Olympic Games and World Cup soccer.

Mr. Speaker, we are pleased Mr. Diack is visiting the city of champions and seeing all it has to offer. Accompanying Mr. Diack are Istvan Gyulai, general secretary of the IAAF, Jack Agrios, chairman of the board of the 2001 championships, and Ed Zemrau, member of the board of directors at this time. I would ask that Mr. Diack and his party seated in your gallery rise and receive the warm welcome of this Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that the petition with respect to public health care that I presented last week be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, request the petition I presented in the Assembly on the 4th of May of this year representing 160 signatures from Albertans requesting that the promotion of private health care and the undermining of public health care be stopped be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented to the Assembly on Thursday, May 4 regarding the disruptive and divisive labour dispute at the Calgary Herald be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned, petition the assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented last week now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I gives me great pleasure to rise and with your permission seek that the petition I tabled on May 2 in regards to urging the government to stop the promotion of private health care be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise this afternoon to ask that the petition I presented the other day now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned, petition the [Legislative] assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, request that the petition I tabled last week from Albertans opposing private health care be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I presented two petitions on Thursday, May 4. I now request that those be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned petition the [Legislative] assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. TRYNCHY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chairman of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund I would like to table the report of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund for the 1999-2000 fiscal year.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to file with the Assembly today five copies of the 1999 Farmers' Advocate annual report. This Farmers' Advocate is the only such office in North America that offers advice to farmers and helps settle disputes.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table Connecting Voices, Creating Choices, the second publication of the Prostitution Awareness and Action Foundation of Edmonton.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise to table invitations with respect to two very important community events that will be happening this week. The first is for the Support Network of Edmonton, Theresa Comrie's champagne luncheon occurring Friday, May 12 here in Edmonton at the Hotel Macdonald, and also the Girl Guides of Canada, Edmonton area annual area awards and appreciation dinner, which will be occurring May 10 here in Edmonton at the Delta south-side hotel.

My third tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the required number of copies of a policy framework for homelessness issued by the Alberta Department of Community Development, family and special purpose housing, dated January 26, 2000.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table a letter which I sent to the Prime Minister last Friday urging him to fight for public health care for all Canadians.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings. I'll move quickly through them. The first is a letter from Barb Baker to the hon. Prime Minister of Canada regarding Bill 11 in Alberta and explaining from her perspective why Albertans have lost faith in the Premier.

Mr. Speaker, the second is another update on the VoteAlberta.org web site poll on Bill 11, and what it shows now is that 77 percent of the 3,077 voters at this web site are against Bill 11. That's another erosion in what little support there was for Bill 11.

Mr. Speaker, the next is a copy of the web site guest book for Mr. John Mills of Lethbridge, where several Albertans have expressed their concerns regarding Bill 11 and posted those on the web site.

Mr. Speaker, my next tabling is copies of the government of Alberta Bill 11, Alberta Health Care Protection Act web site, Bill 11 Debate Summary for May 3, 2000, which shows yet another distortion in how the government is communicating with Albertans. It no longer summarizes the debate; it now puts an editorial comment on the debate.

Mr. Speaker, finally, copies of a reply dated May 4 from the Alberta Treasury freedom of information and protection of privacy officer refusing to give any information, in fact suppressing 17 pages of information on the government of Alberta's 11 percent flat tax plan. Even though they said, "Just ask us," they don't want to give the information.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a report by Victor Blanc from the Cite libre magazine, spring edition: Is a Two-Tier Health-Care System the Right Answer? He concludes that no, it is not.

The second is a synopsis of a report that was completed by John Yates which indicates that "waiting times for appointments in many NHS specialties are increasing – yet the same consultants can be seen privately within a few days."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got three letters for tabling today. Each one of these letters is opposed to Bill 11 and seeks its withdrawal.

The first one is by Michelle Laing-LeClercq of Beaumont. Her letter is addressed to the Premier and expresses grave concerns about the bill and requests him to withdraw the bill.

The second letter is from Saskatchewan, Mr. Speaker, from the chairperson, Prince Albert district health board, Carol Beck. The letter, addressed to me, is asking me to oppose Bill 11 and seek its withdrawal or defeat in the Assembly.

The last one, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from Carol Larsen from Standard. Her letter is addressed to the Minister of Health and Wellness, and Miss Larsen is also seeking the withdrawal of Bill 11.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1:50

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to table a letter this afternoon from Keith Walker to the Premier of the province expressing Keith's disappointment with this government's move to develop the Spray Valley by Genesis Land Development Corp. He would like Kananaskis to stay as it is.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glangarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter to the Premier from the grade 6 class at St. Anne school. This is outlining the reasons why they are opposed to Bill 11.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five different letters here. They're all concerned about Bill 11 and their portion of tax dollars going to private health care. They don't approve of that. This is from Gary Comer, Vic Mastronardi, Doug Edwards, P. Lemoine, and Gerald Larson.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a program of a performance I saw on Thursday. This Mama Mia! Me A Mama? is at the Varscona theatre. It's written by homegrown talent, Cathleen Rootsart.

Thanks very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter I received from the Premier of Manitoba "regarding the issue of the shortage of health professionals that is facing our health care system" across the entire country.

The second tabling this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is the complete program from The King's University College graduation ceremonies, which occurred Saturday, April 29 at the West End Christian Reformed Church. This is the 14th graduation of the institution. There were 119 graduates. In the first graduation ceremony, it's interesting to note, there were four graduates.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today, and it is a letter from the Red Deer Network in Support of Medicare outlining a response to an opinion piece by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South which appeared in the paper on April 26.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you 43 people from Duchess, Alberta. Included are two teachers, Joyce Evans and Colin Butters; 11 adults, Linda Morey, Brenda Scherger, Connie Scheuerman, Faye Wortel, George Berg, Joan Gramlich, Patti Rommens, Sandy Bandura, Jo-Ann Grove, Laurie Creybohm, and Sandra Genovese; and 30 students. I would ask you to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and to the members of this Assembly 13 bright, enthusiastic grade 10 students from the Will Sinclair high school, plus their teacher, Doug Daisley. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would now ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it's my privilege today to be able to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 22 students from the New Norway school located in the Ponoka-Rimbey constituency. They are accompanied by teacher Mr. Ed Martinson and parents Mrs. Laurie Huolt, Mrs. Karen Clark, and Mrs. Sandy Bright. I would ask the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. TRYNCHY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to the Assembly today some 35 people in total from home schooling in my constituency. They are accompanied by parents and helpers Mrs. Ann Walsh, Mrs. Diane Hagman, Mrs. Alice Aschenbrenner, Kirk and Marilyn McIntyre, and Mr. Andreas Aschenbrenner. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly. I guess they won't be there until 2 o'clock, so I'm a little ahead of the game.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce Dr. Malcolm McPhee, who is seated in the public gallery. Dr. McPhee is a professor emeritus of the department of surgery and urology at the University of Alberta. He has worked steadfastly for the prospect of high-quality public health care in our province, and I welcome him on behalf of all members to our Assembly today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Gwyneth Foster-Newell. Gwyneth is a passionate voice for public health care in this province. She has been very active not only in the Edmonton-Gold Bar community but across the province in making people aware of the implications of Bill 11. She's in the public gallery, and I would now ask her to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly William Amos. He is a special assistant with the federal Minister of the Environment, and he is here for a day and a half in this province talking to people about environmental issues that are very near and dear to the hearts of many of us in this province. I would ask that he now stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have an introduction to make as well this afternoon. It's to introduce three staunch supporters and defenders of our public health care system. They are Jane Walker, Shirley Armstrong, and Maryann Stepien, and I welcome them to the Legislative Assembly. I know they've been here before, especially to hear the debates around Bill 11. I would request that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you. I've got two introductions. The first is a group of 26 grade 6 students from Mount Royal school located in Edmonton-Highlands. These 26 students are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Colin Woelfle, and their interim teacher, Mr. Chris Enyedy. Mr. Speaker, a word about this school. Mount Royal is only the second school in Canada to organize itself around the principles of microsociety. Microsociety is an innovative school design where children create a microcosm of the real world inside the school. Each student has a role in running that world. I will ask these young students and their teachers to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, there is another one. There are several citizens who were participating in the citizens' vigil rally at noon outside the Legislature today. They are seated, I think, in the public gallery. I will ask all of them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to the Assembly a familiar face: Howard Yeung. He's a former page in this Assembly, and he is now working in the Edmonton-Gold Bar constituency office for the summer. If he would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not so long ago this Premier told Albertans that he listens and he cares. Well, now it seems he no longer cares and continues to ignore the very credible critics from the political, the religious, and the medical world. A respected and the second-longest serving Speaker of this Legislative Assembly, Gerry Amerongen, has urged Albertans to forget the loyalties earned by wiser leaders and to remember this government's health care policy at election time. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier listen to Gerry Amerongen and withdraw his new health care policy?

MR. KLEIN: The answer to the question relative to withdrawal of the bill is absolutely not, Mr. Speaker.

Relative to the preamble, Mr. Speaker, intelligent Albertans who read the bill know that this is a bill to protect the publicly funded system as we know it today and to put rules and regulations around clinics that have existed for years and years, including the 30 clinics that were up and running and approved by the then minister of health, who happens to now be the leader of the Liberal Party.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, since Alberta's health care plans will impact all Canadians, will the Premier at least listen to the Canadian Council of Churches, that represents Protestant, Catholic, and Orthodox churches across Canada, and place his new plans on hold as they request?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I am astounded as to why they would be concerned about putting rules and regulations relative to the contracting out of surgical services. There are now 52 clinics offering some 152 or 153 different surgical procedures. Some 20,000 procedures are being performed each and every year. They have been operating without rules and regulations relative to contracting out. What this bill does and the policy does is simply put fences around surgical clinics that have been in existence for years in this province.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, since the Premier won't listen to the churches and he won't listen to former members of his party, will he now, having seen the criticism by Dr. Walley Temple and Dr. Malcolm McPhee, both respected surgeons from Edmonton and Calgary, stop ignoring the evidence and hold off on his health care legislation until the Premier's Conference has had an opportunity to review the implications of it?

MR. KLEIN: The answer is no, Mr. Speaker. We plan to proceed with this legislation. Yes, there are differing opinions within the medical community. On Saturday along with the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill I met with eight doctors who had differing opinions. Earlier in Edmonton I met with a group of about 12 doctors who had differing opinions on this particular piece of legislation: some in favour, some opposed, and some with concerns that they wanted to see addressed. There are all sides to this debate.

Really I think the amendments that were introduced by the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness address most if not all of the concerns that have been raised not only by the medical community but by the public at large.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People continue to ask why the Premier is pushing ahead with his private health care policy when there is evidence to show that it won't work. No regional authority has shown that it won't cost more or lengthen waiting lists, nor have any of them asked for it apparently. My questions are to the Premier. Given that this report going to the Edmonton city council this week shows that the capital regional health authority has not evaluated potential cost benefits, is the government just flying blind on it?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would point out to this Assembly and to you, sir, that the leader of the Liberal opposition and members of her caucus voted against the motion, the part of the bill that quite specifically says that regional health authorities must be satisfied without reasonable doubt about the validity of the contract in terms of the contract creating efficiency, being cost effective, and reducing waiting lists. That does not exist now. That section, Mr. Speaker, is one of the fences, one of the rules, and one of the regulations we're putting around contracting out, and they voted against it.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, since the government would undoubtedly release any positive evidence to support their health care plans, why have they not released the cost-benefit study done by the Calgary regional health authority? Is it because it's telling them something they don't want to hear?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I can say one thing for sure, and maybe the Liberals have some figures to address this particular situation. What would the scenario be today if we took the 20,000 procedures that are now being done in the 52 surgical clinics and put those back into the public system? Would they be willing to provide us with some information as to the impact that would have on full-scale hospitals as we know them today? No, they don't want to address that.

THE SPEAKER: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is this government pushing ahead with its health care legislation when there is evidence of financial loss and longer waiting lists? Who benefits? Who benefits, Mr. Speaker? Who asked for it?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, I find it so strange that this leader of the Liberal opposition would not have raised those questions when she allowed 30 private surgical clinics to operate under her watch and also allowed them to charge facility fees. She didn't ask those questions then. Why is she asking them now?

THE SPEAKER: Third main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MR. SAPERS: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Premier continues to show his disdain for democracy by refusing to listen to Albertans when they ask him to withdraw his health care policy. It is a shameful record: closure on two occasions, denying his caucus the opportunity of free votes, and refusing to enter into any real public debate with me. As well, this government has a record of developing regulations behind closed doors, yet another blow to democracy. My questions are to this Premier. Will the Premier leave his controversial health care policy on the Order Paper so that Albertans can have input into the regulations that must support his policy?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it's obvious the leader of the Liberal opposition hasn't read the bill, because there's a regulation section in the bill.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, in other words, no.

Given that the Premier has refused to listen to Albertans, will he now commit to public hearings on the regulations prior to the proclamation of his health care policy?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there's been no piece of legislation that has been the subject of as much public discussion and public input as this particular piece of legislation. Just to recap, it all started with Bill 37, which of course was pulled. That culminated in a blue-ribbon panel that made some recommendations relative to the kind of policy and the kind of legislation that should be drafted. This in turn resulted in the development of a policy paper that was released to the public and was out there for months to receive public input. This then resulted of course in the preparation of legislation which was introduced in this Legislature, a piece of legislation that was in an unprecedented move sent out to every household in the province.

Thus far, as I understand it, there has been something close to 40 hours of debate on this particular piece of legislation in this Legislature. I think there have now been close to 30 hours of questions in question period on this particular piece of legislation. It's unprecedented in the history of this Legislature to have a piece of legislation discussed as much as this piece of legislation has been discussed.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, if he won't commit to public hearings, will the Premier commit to full involvement of the all-party committee, the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, in the drafting of regulations, like every other province in this country does, to ensure that Albertans' views are not ignored and left behind closed doors in the development of regulations?

MR. KLEIN: You know, Mr. Speaker, I find it so totally strange that the leader of the Liberal opposition could be talking about regulations and about public input into regulations. On one hand, they said: scrap the bill; kill the bill; get rid of the bill. Now they're saying: pass the bill, and let's get on with the regulations. Now, which way is it?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite overwhelming opposition from all walks of Alberta life, the government will likely ram its private, for-profit health care initiative through the Legislature this week. All of the available evidence and overwhelming public opposition suggest that this government is on the wrong course and that what we will end up with is a health care system that's both less fair and more costly. My questions are to the Premier. Why do the Premier and this government disregard the wise counsel of prominent Alberta Conservatives including a former Premier and a former Speaker of the Assembly, who have both called for strengthening public and nonprofit health care rather than making reckless forays into for-profit medicine? Why?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, I find it very, very strange that this hon. member would be asking the question at this particular time when all we're trying to do is put rules and regulations around what has existed for some years. Is this hon. member, the leader of the third party, denying the fact that there are now in existence and have been operating for some time some 52 surgical clinics? Is he denying that? You know, why did he not make an issue out of these clinics operating without rules and regulations? This is what is so bewildering. Why would he be making an issue out of putting rules and regulations around something that has existed without rules and regulations in this province for years? Why would he be doing that?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is the Premier and this government determined to expand private, for-profit health care even though, in the words of Dr. Walley Temple, "it destroys the 'Samaritan' role of the hospital" while making "doctors and nurses into the 'instruments of the investor'" and patients into commodities?

MR. KLEIN: Again, why is the leader of the third party raising the issue at this particular time? Why did he not raise the issue two years ago, a year ago when these clinics were operating and there was no thought – well, there was a thought; it was called Bill 37; he opposed that too – to put rules and regulations around these clinics? This is not an expansion, Mr. Speaker. This is putting on restrictions. This is saying for the first time that RHAs, before they let contracts, which they can do today, by the way – there's nothing to stop them. This is the first time that the government is saying to regional health authorities: before you contract out, you have to meet a number of conditions. And they're opposed to it. That is what's bewildering about all this.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why are this Premier and this government replacing the values of compassion and caring in health care with the profit motive and corporate greed?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that is absolutely and totally untrue, and this hon. member knows it. That is the kind of vicious and malicious misinformation that does a disservice to both of the opposition parties and to the people of this province. That is untruthful.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Interprovincial Trade

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, who as our trade policy minister is representing Alberta on the committee on internal trade. I understand that the committee recently met. Can the minister tell us what was discussed and what, if any, decisions were made?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the internal trade ministers did meet last week in Toronto, and it was the first meeting that we've held for two years. Alberta assumes the co-chair position of this committee now.

There were obviously a lot of issues on the table, because it had been some time since we had met. Implementation issues on government procurement were discussed, how we could finalize the energy and agriculture chapters, two which are incredibly important to Alberta. One other very important issue is on addressing the dispute resolution mechanism which is in the agreement now, but some of our companies and individuals who do trade across Canada are finding the process rather cumbersome and want us to try and streamline that process. Those are a few of the issues that we discussed at that meeting.

MR. BRODA: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: can the minister describe the priorities of the committee on internal trade in the year ahead?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly Alberta is an aggressive champion of this agreement and has led, I believe, all of the country in trying to move ahead. Trade is incredibly important to this province. One in three jobs depends on trade.

We would want to focus on the issues around negotiations in the energy and agriculture chapter, certainly to make sure that they are there. We'd like to conclude and do some more work on government procurement, the MASH sector, which all provinces agreed to but which British Columbia is not participating in. Truly, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's goal in being a part of this is to ensure that we eliminate or take down as many barriers as we can to trade so that our companies have every opportunity to trade across this country fairly and without impediment.

MR. BRODA: A final question to the same minister: seeing that there are internal trade barriers, how is this agreement going to benefit Albertans? What are we looking at?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, improvement in the reduction of trade barriers can only assist companies in Alberta to trade more freely, more openly across our borders. Whenever we have barriers to trade, whether they be artificial or real, it causes impediments to the movement of goods and services across this country. Alberta is a trading province. We believe in fair rules, and we believe in fair trading. That will be our role in the next years, and it is a commitment from all of the provinces and territories that are a part of that agreement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Calgary Laboratory Services

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent research by Donna Korchinski, a Calgary journalist with NetNews, has shown that the merging of private and public enterprise into one group called Calgary Lab services occurred despite major government concerns. In fact, NetNews was unable to obtain even through a freedom of information inquiry any evidence that formal ministerial approval was given. My questions are to the Premier. As NetNews was unable to obtain any evidence that ministerial approval was given for the creation of Calgary lab services, can the Premier provide evidence that this approval was given?

MR. KLEIN: I'll refer this to the Minister of Health and Wellness and ask him to respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, in the whole process of the Calgary regional health authority entering into an agreement with this laboratory company, there was, yes, a considerable amount of discussion back and forth between Alberta Health and the Calgary regional health authority and the company. And, yes, in that rather complex process Alberta Health and Wellness officials did raise issues, as it is their responsibility to do. There has been an agreement and a working arrangement developed between the company and the regional health authority. There are still one or two issues outstanding from a legal standpoint in terms of equity positions and risks that both sides would be encountering. It's my expectation that those final parts of the agreement will be wound up fairly shortly.

MS LEIBOVICI: The process has been going on since 1996.

Can the Premier tell us what potential risks were identified in 1996 by Alberta Health in the plans to privatize the Calgary lab services?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think that quite a thorough examination was done of the overall process, which, again, I think is the responsible thing to do. One of the examples of the risks that had to be addressed was that of the company running into financial difficulty, going bankrupt. That hasn't happened certainly. It's a very big and effective service. That had to be dealt with in the contract with respect to making sure that the Calgary regional health authority was not going to be on the hook, so to speak, for any of these difficulties should they arise.

MS LEIBOVICI: Given that in this province the use of private facilities in health care is being encouraged, will the Premier commit to releasing uncensored – no blank pages on this one, Mr. Premier – all government documents related to the Calgary lab services from 1995-1996 to now?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond.

But, again, I find it very, very strange that they would be talking about contracts going back to 1994-96 and would not be concerned about future contracts. They voted against the section that would make contracts open and transparent, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness has the floor briefly.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, two quick points. First of all, the existence in this province of contracts or agreements between different parts of the health care system as far as laboratory services are concerned should be recognized as being decades and decades old. There were companies such as Kasper – and I can go through a whole list – that existed for a long time under contractual relationships. The other thing, though, is that disclosure is certainly provided under the existing laws with respect to freedom of information and protection of privacy, and when we have in place Bill 11, despite the opposition that the Liberals seem to have to this, we will have an overall structure in legislation whereby these disclosures will be made.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Trans Canada Trail

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This month at various locations throughout the province Relay 2000, an event which brings together water from the Arctic, Atlantic, and Pacific oceans planned by Participaction, is to take place in various locations on the proposed Trans Canada Trail. This event and others like it that are sure to follow are a concern of adjacent landowners in my constituency because at this time no development permits have been obtained or even applied for on the proposed route, which makes trail use in contravention of local land use bylaws. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Would local authorities have the authority under the Municipal Government Act and their local land use bylaws to issue a stop order to prevent this type of event from taking place on those sections of the trail that do not have a development permit?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The department has advised in the past that the development of formal trails, including such things as gates and signage, fencing, trail bed, and so on, and change in the intensity of use would likely meet the qualifications of the Municipal Government Act's definition of development and would be subject to provisions of the municipal land use bylaw.

The department has also advised that whether or not trail development and a change in use requires a development permit depends on the specific provisions of the land use bylaw of the host municipality. There is a provision in section 645 for development to be stopped if you need a permit or a subdivision approval where it is not in accordance with the reading of the act. Depending on the provisions of the applicable bylaw, a stop order is possible and certainly available to the municipality.

These cases are always very site and fact specific, and a municipality should really seek legal advice on the matter if they're not clear in their minds.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that Trans Canada Trail is the owner of the property and Alberta Trailnet is in their own words only managing the property, who is in fact the party that's responsible for applying for and obtaining the development permit?

MR. PASZKOWSKI: The MGA is silent on who may apply for a development permit except to require a land use bylaw that establishes provisions relating to applying for a development permit. Under section 640(2)(c) most municipalities allow an agent to apply on behalf of their owner or on behalf of their lessee or potential owners in the case of a sales agreement, all with the owner's authorization of course. Subject to the provisions of a specific land use bylaw there doesn't appear to be any reason why Alberta Trailnet couldn't submit the required development applications related to land in which they have specific controlling interest.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Community Development. Would the minister consider withholding any further grant money to Alberta Trailnet or Trans Canada Trail until they resolve their issues with respect to obtaining development permits and their outstanding issues with the adjacent landowners?

MR. WOLOSZYN: The short answer is no, but to elaborate somewhat on that the issue here revolves around the transfer of lands, abandoned right-of-ways, by the CPR to Trailnet. Unfortunately, there wasn't the proper consultation done between adjacent landowners and the CPR prior to Trailnet, which has raised a whole series of issues which need to be resolved.

The government is committed to the concept of Trailnet, which stretches right across Canada and also through Alberta and joins all three oceans together. The concept is very sound. Our commitment is to work with the landowners and with the Trailnet proponents to ensure that they come to a reasonable agreement through consultation on how the trails will be managed and used.

I quite frankly look forward to a lot of progress being made. We have a lot of examples of trails that are very successful currently throughout the province. Some are restricted to snowmobile use. Some are other uses. We have right in this fine city a good example of multi-use trails along the river valley which are done very, very well. So I look forward to a good resolution. We will try to accommodate both sides as best we can.

Long-term Care

MRS. SOETAERT: Mr. Speaker, this government is separating a 71-year-old woman who is nearly blind from her husband after 53 years of marriage because of the government's failure to plan for long-term care needs of Albertans. After 53 years this frail woman, who has suffered several strokes, will have to make a 130-kilometre round trip from Red Deer to Rimbey to visit and comfort her 73-year-old husband. In the words of the senior involved: it's cruel. Even the health authority admits that the current shortage of long-term care beds in the region is a direct result of cuts in 1995 by this government to Red Deer and regional hospital beds. My questions are to the Premier. Why did this government ever let this kind of thing happen?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform this Legislative Assembly that funding to health care generally has increased some 40 percent. For every dollar that was taken out of the system, we have put $3 back into the system, and over the next three years about a billion dollars more will be going into the system.

Mr. Speaker, as we address health care, I know that there's been a lot of talk about the legislation before the Assembly today as it pertains to health care, but I would point out that that is only one point in the six-point plan. Certainly long-term care has been identified as a priority. It's always been a priority.

What I say to this elderly woman is that I will have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness look into the particular case. If the member will provide him with the details, we'll look into this case. I'm sure he'll have discussions with the health authority in question, Mr. Speaker, and hopefully we can resolve this particular issue.

Certainly restructuring was difficult, but through it all we maintained our commitment to provide as adequately as we possibly could facilities to accommodate those in need of long-term care, and we'll continue to do so.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second question: does Alberta Health or the RHA cover the costs of transporting this woman back and forth to give care and comfort to her husband?

MR. KLEIN: I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness answer this question.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, in this particular instance, as I understand it, yes, the capacity of the long-term care facilities in Red Deer are right now full, and it was necessary to transfer this particular individual to Rimbey, which incidentally, despite being some distance from Red Deer, does have a very good long-term care facility. I hope the member across the way was not inferring that the care was not of very good quality and the people in Rimbey were not providing for this individual, because they are. As I understand it, the regional health authority has committed to bringing this individual back to Red Deer as soon as the space is available.

I would like to add further, Mr. Speaker, that in our recent budget and overall business plan we have on the capital side made a very significant contribution to expanding long-term care in this province in terms of accommodation. Red Deer, as I recall, was approved for over 150 new beds in the region.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, in the words of this senior: why is the provincial Conservative government abusing the old folks that have lived and worked hard in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Well, that is an entirely and unnecessary preamble to a question. This government always has been and always will be fully committed to the well-being and the care of our seniors, Mr. Speaker. It's as simple as that.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Point of order on that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. [interjections]

School Lunch Supervision

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East does have the floor.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. At 110 schools in the Calgary board of education's system there are parent-operated school lunch programs for students who are not bused to school but who stay at school for lunch. I understand that an agreement has been reached on the status of certain lunchroom supervisors employed under these parent-operated lunchroom programs. Could the minister advise the Assembly as to what this agreement will mean for the parent-operated lunch program?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually I am very pleased that the parties involved in this issue, the Calgary board of education and their staff association, have reached an agreement on the status of the school program supervisors employed under the parent-operated lunchroom program.

Now, as I understand it, under the terms of the agreement both parties agree that parent-operated lunchroom programs will continue to operate in the Calgary board of education schools subject to certain conditions being met, and over the next year the Calgary board of education will consult with all stakeholders and develop a comprehensive lunchtime supervision policy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister advise the Assembly as to why the Labour Relations Board was involved with this issue?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, it was in June of 1999 that the Calgary Board of Education Staff Association asked the Labour Relations Board, as they have a right to do, to determine whether or not these parents were actually in fact Calgary board of education employees. Now, the Labour Relations Board appointed one of its members to try to help the parties reach an informal solution and avoid a perhaps long and divisive formal hearing process. While the board member consulted with the parties and issued recommendations to them, I'm pleased to announce that the parties arrived at an agreement on their own.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what happens next?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, the staff association, of course, has withdrawn its application to the Labour Relations Board, and the parties are now going to work together to look at the situation between now and next April, as I understand it, and try to come to grips, then, with the issue of lunch room supervision. They'll have to determine, Mr. Speaker, on the issue – there's been some indication as to whether or not these parents were volunteers or just what the situation was. I think that clearly we now have to have an understanding that if someone is scheduled and actually receives a set remuneration for the particular work they're performing, then of course bargaining unit work under a collective agreement is going to be up for discussion.

MRS. SLOAN: When are you going to mediate the Calgary Herald dispute?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SOETAERT: It was Edmonton-Manning.

THE SPEAKER: Well, I don't know. I kept hearing all these interjections. It's okay with me. It makes no difference to me who I recognize.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Education Property Taxes

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has a history of creating piecemeal policy solutions that do not work. The most current example is health care. Another case in point is its policy on education property tax. At the four regional AUMA meetings over the past month education property tax was the most important issue, yet all this government has come up with is taxpayer-funded propaganda to obscure the truth. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. How much is the government spending to tell Edmontonians that their education property tax is increasing by $7.7 million this year?

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that Albertans have told us and told us very clearly is that education is very critical and very important to them, and one of the things that all Albertans have told us also is that they are prepared to pay for education as long as it is paid for in a fair and equitable manner. Ultimately, that's the objective. Any effort that Alberta Municipal Affairs is expending is to advise Albertans on the process of taxation, and ultimately the process is conceived and developed in as fair and as equitable a manner as possibly can be achieved.

MR. GIBBONS: My second question: will the minister admit that this government's tinkering with the education property tax will adversely affect over 60 municipalities in this province?

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out, education is very, very important to our future in this province. As a matter of fact, it's been clearly identified by Albertans that education is their number one priority. It's critical for the growth of this province; it's critical for the development of this province.

What we had in the process in Alberta was a process that indeed dealt with municipalities in a fair way, but when you expanded the process over the whole province, there were some variables. Certain parts of the province were growing more rapidly than others, and when market value assessment was put in place, there were municipalities such as Fort McMurray and Wood Buffalo that would have actually had a spike of over 50 percent in their market value tax increase. Through the process of years – and this has been over a process of three years now – a cap has been put in place to help mitigate those extreme spikes.

Further to that, there was a committee put in place. The committee has made recommendations as to how to deal with the extreme variables that exist today and ultimately made some recommendations, which included averaging, capping, and dropping the mill rate.

Today Edmontonians are actually paying significantly less in education tax than they paid in 1994.

MR. GIBBONS: Will the Minister of Municipal Affairs instruct his education property tax committee to come up with a long-term solution that will treat all municipalities fairly rather than continuing the tradition of tinkering at the margins?

MR. PASZKOWSKI: The committee is actively pursuing all input from all stakeholders. Certainly, if the hon. member has some input and some ideas that would help with this process, it would be very, very useful. We're open to any suggestions from all stakeholders. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods indicated earlier that, indeed, this is not an easy process. He went on to say: I really think that sometimes we have to remind ourselves that our municipal and school board counterparts – that's in this case – perhaps can find a better solution, but it's not an easy one. Ultimately, that's what your hon. colleague has indicated. The committee is studying . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, thank you. We're going to move on.

The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Teacher Remuneration

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some teachers in my constituency are concerned about the calculation of pensions under the Alberta teachers' pension plan with the wage rollback that occurred in 1994. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Can you please outline whether this rollback will negatively impact these teachers' pensions?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, what happens with the Alberta teachers' retirement fund is that an average of the five highest years that a teacher is currently enrolled is used to determine their pension rate. When an employee actually retires is obviously up to the employee himself. In 2000-2001 we will be putting $212 million into the teachers' retirement fund.

MRS. O'NEILL: My second question is to the Minister of Learning as well. Can the minister outline how the Alberta Teachers' Retirement Fund Board works?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, what happens is that there are three employees from Alberta Learning as well as three representatives from the Alberta Teachers' Association. Those six people comprise the board and set the policies and trends for the Alberta teachers' retirement fund.

MRS. O'NEILL: My final question is also to the Minister of Learning. Where do teachers currently stand in terms of salaries since the rollback?

DR. OBERG: The average rollback for teachers was 4.70 percent. The last time that there was a teacher rollback was in '95-96. Mr. Speaker, since that time the teachers' salaries have increased an average – and I must say an average – of 13.53 percent. So 4.7 percent versus a 13.53 percent increase since that time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Income Tax

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite another attempt at tax tinkering last week, it's clear that this government's flat tax policy is designed to shortchange those middle-class, middle-income Albertans who work hard every day to pay their own bills and the bills for this government, the very same Albertans that are hit hard by private health care issues. This government's policies have become synonymous with unfairness and inequity. My questions are to the Provincial Treasurer. Will the Treasurer confirm that under his flat tax scheme the top 1 percent of taxpayers in Alberta will receive a 20 percent cut in their taxes while 39 percent of tax filers, the whole middle-income group, will get just a 13 percent cut?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer, and let's deal with policy.

DR. WEST: No, Mr. Speaker.

MR. SAPERS: Those are the facts, Mr. Speaker.

Well, maybe the Provincial Treasurer knows this. Will he explain why exactly he believes it's fair that his policy gives the top 4 percent of tax filers fully 23 percent of the total tax savings while that same 39 percent, the middle-income Albertans, have to share 26 percent of the tax breaks? Why is that, Mr. Treasurer?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, let's look at some of the facts here in the province of Alberta. First of all, the type of tax that the Liberals would have recommended would have been a truly regressive tax. The tax notice that we announced the other day will take 190,000 people off the tax rolls completely in the province of Alberta.

From then on it only gets better, because as the middle-income people progressively move forward, they get an opportunity to keep more money of their hard-earned savings in their pockets. The middle income was disenfranchised by the federal government's change to the middle bracket in their last budget. We corrected that in the announcement the other day.

Now, let me give you a few examples so that the individuals across the way might get something right for a change. They keep talking about the middle-income versus the high-income people. Well, I would say that perhaps an individual working on highway maintenance in central Alberta – Phil is his name; his annual salary is $47,243. The company where Phil works contributed $1,800 to an employee pension plan, and Phil did not have to contribute into this plan. In 2001 Phil will pay $3,352 in provincial income tax, $451 less than he paid in 1999.

Now let's look at Mel, who is an 82-year-old widower living in a seniors' lodge. He makes $12,000 per year in private pension income and receives old age security. In 1999 Mel paid $335 in provincial income tax. In 2001 he will not pay any provincial income tax, and of course he will still receive his Alberta seniors' benefit program.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Let's maybe compare Mel to a guy named Steve. Maybe the Provincial Treasurer will confirm that those middle-income earners, who pay taxes on between $35,000 and $45,000 a year, let's say, are going to receive an average tax reduction of $554, while those whose income tops $100,000 are going to get a break from this government that's not one or two or three or four times bigger but 10 times bigger. They're going to be saving over $5,400 on average. Will the Treasurer confirm that and then explain what's fair about that policy?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, we'll be bringing out hundreds of examples of variables in the province of Alberta as to what income pays what. Depending on the deductions – how many children you have, how many are going to university, what you pay into an RRSP, what you get for deductions as far as your child going to university, whether it's his tuition or whether it's his book expenses, and depending on whether you pay into a pension plan at work, or whether you don't – many variables will take place.

Now, let's look. Sandy is a legal secretary in Calgary earning $34,800 per year. She has a 12-year-old son but does not claim any child care costs. In 1999 Sandy paid $1,785 in provincial income tax, but she will only pay $608 in 2001, a saving of $1,177.

Now, Gabrielle is a single parent with a 10-year-old daughter, Rachel. Gabrielle works as a bookkeeper with a small family-owned business, where she earns $29,000 per year. Gabrielle has a child care expense of $3,360 per year. As a result of the move to the single-rate tax, Gabrielle will save $968 a year.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members in a few seconds from now we'll call upon the first of seven members, but please join with me in recognizing this special anniversary of four of our members who were first elected to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta in the general election of May 8, 1986. They include the hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer, the real Provincial Treasurer, the hon. Member for Dunvegan, and the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Jerry Selinger

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I stand with great sadness to recognize Jerry Selinger, QC, who passed away at the age of 50 years on May 2, 2000, surrounded by his loving family and friends. Jerry was born in Saskatchewan, received his law degree in 1973, and came to Calgary in 1978, where he became chief Crown prosecutor after 18 years in the Calgary Crown prosecutors' office. I am proud to add that Jerry was also a constituent of Calgary-West.

Jerry will be fondly remembered for his positive energy, honesty, humour, integrity, courage, and also for his numerous contributions to the community, especially as a member of the Alberta Justice working committee on domestic violence and of the steering committee of the national pilot project in developing a domestic violence intake court in Calgary. I can speak personally of Jerry's valued contribution to the establishment of a native court on the Tsuu T'ina reserve.

Jerry will be forever remembered by his loving wife, Terry, and special daughter, Erin, and by family, friends, and colleagues in the legal and law enforcement community.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May is Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month. Canada has one of the highest rates of MS in the world, with some 50,000 affected, and Alberta has the highest prevalence rate in Canada. Yesterday at Rundle park over 2,700 people gathered to participate in the 10th annual Super Cities Walk for multiple sclerosis. The walk was very well organized and ran smoothly, due in great part to the 400 volunteers who gave their time and energy to make certain the event achieved its goals.

Part of the success of the walk was due to the substantial contribution of the major corporate sponsors, which included Chili's, CFRN, Save-on-Foods, and Mobile Communications. Even though the deadline for the collection of pledges is June 30, $64,143 has been turned in as of this morning.

On behalf of all members of this Assembly and all Albertans, Mr. Speaker, I extend our congratulations to those who organized, volunteered, walked, or sponsored the Super Cities Walk for multiple sclerosis.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Grande Cache Rockies

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize members of the Grande Cache Rockies hockey team. This senior team very successfully competed in and won the Alberta north-central hockey league championship on May 9. The Grande Cache team was founded by Mr. David Ling in 1992. He believed that there were many good hockey players in Grande Cache and that the community would support the team. This year under the direction of Coach Rick Bentley the team proved they were the best in the league. On April 9 300 fans from Grande Cache traveled to Grande Prairie to cheer their team on to victory. This was a community win.

I also recognize the executive, the coaching staff, the sponsors, and the citizens of Grande Cache for the support and the encouragement they provided to this hockey team. Mr. Speaker, the citizens of West Yellowhead were proud to have Grande Cache Rockies represent our region.

I would ask all members of the Assembly to join me in extending our congratulations and best wishes to this team's members.

International Nursing Week

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, 25,000 registered nurses in Alberta will join with their colleagues across Canada and the world to celebrate and reflect on their profession during International Nursing Week, May 8 to 14, 2000. Initiated in 1985, the purpose of Nursing Week is to increase public awareness about the role of registered nurses and important health care issues.

Under the theme Nursing in the New Millennium registered nurses will celebrate and value our profession through multiple events across the province. As an RN I was honoured to be present last week as the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses honoured the outstanding contributions of registered nurses in the fields of clinical practice, administration, research, lifetime achievement, and partners in health. This week the Alberta registered nurses educational trust will hold Nightingale night galas across Alberta to raise funding for nursing education and to recognize the 180th birthday of Florence Nightingale.

It is our duty as legislators to be alive to the realities that face the profession of registered nursing today and to undertake a leadership role in addressing the issues of the nursing shortage, nursing work life, and lack of true reform of our health care system. May we take the time this week to reflect on these issues and to recognize registered nurses.

Thank you.

Lord Strathcona Statue

MR. LOUGHEED: This past Saturday, May 6, 2000, a monument to Lord Strathcona was unveiled in Sherwood Park. It sits on the corner of Broadmoor and Main boulevards. Lord Strathcona was a great Canadian, and this ceremony and the monument that celebrate his life and accomplishments will do much to help remind residents about how Strathcona county got its name.

Pioneer fur trader, Hudson's Bay Company governor, Member of Parliament, Bank of Montreal president, Lord Strathcona made many contributions to this country. In fact, one of the most enduring images in Canadian history is his driving of the last spike in the CPR intercontinental rail line.

Participating in the unveiling were the Royal Canadian Legion colour party and the commanding officer of Lord Strathcona's Horse regiment. Also present were Lord Strathcona's Horse colour party and mounted troop and armored vehicles.

On behalf of the residents of Strathcona county and their elected representatives who took part in the unveiling I'd like to congratulate the organizers of the very successful event. I'd ask the members assembled to recognize the project co-ordinator, John Ashton, the MLA for part of Strathcona county from '71 to '79, and Dawn McLean, the creator of this unique work of art.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Bill Hunter

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure this afternoon to recognize Bill Hunter, affectionately known by most Edmontonians as Wild Bill Hunter. This Saturday the Jasper Place Arena in my constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark was renamed Bill Hunter Arena.

Bill Hunter stated: this arena is especially close to my heart as Jasper Place was home to the Edmonton Oil Kings from 1965 to 1967. Mr. Hunter, president and general manager of the club, later helped found the World Hockey Association and the Western Hockey League and laid the groundwork for the National Hockey League to come to Edmonton. He brought the Oilers here in 1972 and doubled as the team's general manager.

For his work as a hockey pioneer he recently received the Order of Canada. Mr. Hunter has also recently been nominated to the Hockey Hall of Fame and will learn in June whether he'll be inducted. These honours that are bestowed upon Mr. Hunter are well deserved and recognize a life dedicated to the betterment of the community.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Excellence in Teaching Awards

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Saturday evening I had the opportunity to attend a truly celebratory event honouring 21 teachers from across this province. They were recognized under the excellence in teaching awards banner for their creative, innovative, and certainly effective teaching methods. This was the 12th annual excellence in teaching awards, and these teachers represented a broad spectrum of the teaching skills and the art of teaching in this province.

I would like, most particularly, to recognize Mr. Mark Samuel, who teaches at the St. Albert Storefront school for many of the students in our community who are at risk. He is with the St. Albert Catholic high school and the greater St. Albert Catholic regional division. Mark was honoured for his work and his inspiration to young students, and I'd like to take this opportunity to congratulate him and all of the members of the teaching profession who do such a fine job in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood on a point of order.

Point of Order Insulting Language

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Right as we got into question period, at approximately 2:02 p.m., the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was engaged in heckling and once again heckled a comment: princess. I sent a note to the Speaker last week suggesting that I find this rather offensive, that in fact I find this to be somewhat of a sexist remark.

Section 23(j) talks about a member using "abusive or insulting language." Quite frankly, I find that particular comment abusive and insulting. It's only directed to the Leader of the Official Opposition. The comment has been used several times and is only ever made when the Leader of the Official Opposition is speaking. The provincial government has a policy that, quite frankly, I think members of the Assembly need to abide by. I think this would border on harassment in the workplace if it were outside this Assembly. Not even that, if a male member of this Assembly were to utter those same comments, this would have been dealt with a long time ago in relation to the issue of sexist comments. Quite frankly, I believe that there has been a breach of 23(j), and I find it rather disturbing that this continues to go on. It's one of the comments that I find most offensive, and I would expect some action in relation to this. I would love for this comment to be filed in a drawer somewhere and left there.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on this point of order.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would submit off the top that I don't believe there will be a point of order. However, I'll leave that to your determination.

I think that comments in this House oftentimes do get hurled one way and the other. They seldom, if ever, appear as a matter of record. It is of course unfortunate when that particular type of exchange is heard. Usually it's precipitated by something that one member says about, against, or toward another member. I checked the Blues. I don't see any record of those comments having been made.

I'm well aware, as you are, Mr. Speaker, that heckling is a traditional part of the parliamentary process. Certainly there have been many occasions in this House when heckles have been used to very good advantage, and some of them have been found to be quite humorous and quite playful. In this particular case I find it offensive that someone would actually suggest that a comment was made that was of a sexist nature. In fact, if the comment made was one to do with the word princess – who knows? – maybe it was meant in a complimentary way. Princess is a very nice word.

I did not hear the particular reference that is being referred to. Nonetheless, I think the Speaker has been very clear in reminding all members that they have to be very careful what they say in this House because sometimes those things do get printed. In this particular instance I don't believe that was the case. I would suggest that there may have been some difference of opinion perhaps. Perhaps there was something of a disagreeable nature, but I certainly don't believe there was anything verifiable as such that would constitute a point of order in this case.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on this point of order.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With specific reference to the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek's comments that the comment made by Calgary-Fish Creek was not on the record, there are numerous incidents in this Assembly when people have been asked to stand up and apologize for remarks made in a context that was not appropriate, most recently, last week, when the Member for Edmonton-Norwood was asked to withdraw the comment "shame on you," that was made off the record in this Assembly. So I would ask you to strike those comments from Edmonton-Mill Creek's defence of his colleague and find that in fact she is out of order.

MRS. FORSYTH: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've been listening intently to what the Member for Edmonton-Norwood has brought forward. At the same time, when I saw her rise, I thought it might be interesting for me to just keep a running tally of interjections through the process. The hon. Leader of the Opposition interjected 33 times with comments; the Member for Edmonton-Norwood, 22 times. So I find it quite interesting that all of a sudden I'm called on one remark. I was so busy keeping a record of the interjections of Edmonton-Norwood and the Leader of the Opposition that I didn't bother keeping comments in regards to some of the other members. I have heard worse remarks than that. Last week someone called our Premier a chicken, and that was the Leader of the Opposition. So as far as I'm concerned, there is no point of order.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert on this point of order.

MRS. SOETAERT: Yes. My point, Mr. Speaker, is that this is very specific about one issue, and I think that if the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has other issues to bring up, she can bring them under other points of order. This is very specific. The concern has been presented that it is sexist, and I think that's the point of order that should be dealt with. If she has other concerns, she has every right to bring them up under other points of order, but right now this is very specific to this one. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, please, please, please. First of all, the Speaker has checked the Blues. There is no indication that Hansard has picked up any of the purported comments today. Number two, there is absolutely no doubt at all that the chair heard a tremendous number of interjections, sometimes when a question was being asked and sometimes when an answer was being given to a question.

The chair has also observed some rather interesting approaches that individual members make when they make their interjections. Some hon. members slide in their chair and hide behind the shoulders of the hon. member sitting beside them so that the chair can't see them do that. Some hon. members have been known to slouch down and bend over in their chair and utter certain things and interjections as they do it. Other hon. members have been noted to actually turn their back to the chair and make interjections. Other hon. members put a piece of paper, blocking their face to the chair, and make interjections, all of which can be viewed as rather childish.

The chair would also like to point out that not one side is innocent and not one side is completely guilty. Oh, there are some sections of the House that are very, very good. The chair has to make it very clear that there are some sections of the House that have exemplary attitude in this Assembly for the most part.

There's one item that the chair must make a comment on, and that's the statement raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. There's absolutely no doubt at all that the chair did interject when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood last week said, "Shame on you," because that criticism was directed to the chair, not to any other member. That violates all the rules of the Assembly – all the rules – and that certainly is not pertinent to this particular point of order today.

Now, last week the chair received a note from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood with respect to her concern about the use of the word princess, and the chair shared that note with the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was informed by the chair that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood was concerned about the use of the word princess, and the note also said that this might be viewed as a sexist statement.

Hon. members have to appreciate that the chair is of the male gender and the two individuals in question are both of the female gender. Perhaps there's something the chair doesn't understand about this being in the sexist context and doesn't quite understand this, because the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek made it very clear to the chair that she didn't think this was a sexist statement. Now, I don't want to get involved in any of this, quite frankly. I don't want to touch this with a 30-foot pole. There may be something here that I don't understand.

The point is, you know, that a lot fewer interjections would allow those remote interjections to be clearly heard by the chair, would allow Hansard to pick it up, and would allow us then to deal with a point of order, but if the interjection is muffled by 10 or 12 or 13 interjections, there is no clear interjection. So the difficulty we have with this point of order is that I have a great difficulty determining that this is a point of order, but it does allow the opportunity to basically point out that there are way too many interjections.

If hon. members want to convey a thought to the chair on how the word princess is sexist, the chair will wait and in fact will consult with Parliamentary Counsel with respect to this. I might even do an undertaking in other Houses in Canada with respect to this matter. The chair has heard a lot of interesting remarks in this Assembly in recent weeks, from “cluck-cluck” to “chicken” to “princess.”

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on a point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me say at the outset that I am going to be referring to a number of authorities. Right off the top I'll talk about the list of words that have been found unparliamentary under Beauchesne 492. I will also be referring to Standing Orders and Erskine May and perhaps not just Standing Order 23, but at your discretion you may find that this is a more serious point and may in fact constitute a contempt.

What I'm referring to, Mr. Speaker, is another interjection that likely didn't make its way into the Blues. It is an exchange that took place between the second and third main questions put by the Leader of the Official Opposition to the hon. Premier. It was at that point in time, between the second and third questions, that I clearly heard the Minister of Government Services, the Member for Calgary-Foothills, lean forward in her chair and utter the words: you're a liar, Nancy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this whole question about lies and twisting words you've dealt with many times. In fact, this won't be the first time that this whole issue of referring to somebody sort of off the air as a liar has been brought to the attention of the Assembly. You yourself called this member to order for suggesting that the Premier was not telling the truth during an interjection. At that time I took the opportunity to withdraw the remarks. We've had many discussions in this Chamber as well as documents that you have circulated prior to each sitting cautioning members from making such allegations.

Mr. Speaker, nothing could be more important to our ability to do our jobs in an appropriate manner than to have the confidence of the public and the integrity of each and every member. There is nothing more important to a member of this House than a member's integrity and the public perception of that integrity. It is my submission that the comments uttered by the Member for Calgary-Foothills this afternoon very, very clearly were intended to impugn the integrity of the Leader of the Official Opposition and therefore to interfere with her ability to maintain public trust in her integrity and to maintain her ability to carry out her duties as a member of this House. I would suggest that it's not too strong to say that by doing so, it impugns the integrity of each and every member of this House.

I can refer you to Beauchesne 64, which indicates that the House has occasionally taken notice of attacks on individual Members. Most notably, [a situation where a member] while seated at his desk in the House, referred to a Member . . . as “a cheat and a swindler.” Removed from the House, he returned twice more to repeat the charge and finally concluded with a written note to the same effect. For that offence, [the member] was judged [to be] guilty of a breach of privilege and was summoned to the Bar to apologize.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that you could find that such a breach has occurred in this case.

I would also ask you to refer to Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice where it states:

Other acts besides words spoken or writings published reflecting upon either House or its proceedings which, though they do not tend directly to obstruct or impede either House in the performance of its functions, yet have a tendency to produce this result indirectly by bringing such House into odium, contempt or ridicule or by lowering its authority may constitute contempts.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on, but I will refer to the comments made by the Government House Leader to be found in Hansard, pages 1336 through 1337, on May 4 when the Government House Leader himself was rising on a point of privilege regarding allegations made, in his mind, against the integrity of the Premier. Now, you ruled that in fact such a breach did take place.

At the very least the Minister of Government Services is guilty of using abusive and insulting language. It's not the first time; it's not the second time. It happens almost every day that she utters this phrase or words to similar effect. She's been careful, Mr. Speaker, to try to avoid the microphone but certainly has not avoided the earshot of those in this Assembly or those who may be listening on television. At the very least there has been a breach of the practice of this Assembly, and I would ask that that member withdraw the comment and apologize to the Leader of the Official Opposition and refrain from such behaviour in this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we again have a similar circumstance here as was commented on by you just moments ago with reference to the first point of order. Clearly, again, we have three different types of dynamics that occur in this House. One of them is heckles that go back and forth during question period, which is unfortunate, but it does happen. Another goes on directly between one or two members who bait each other on some particular point or get baited and goaded into something that is perhaps only between one or two of them.

I happen to sit right behind the Member for Calgary-Foothills, and I certainly didn't hear anything of the nature to which the Member for Edmonton-Glenora is referring. I'm not suggesting that they did or didn't get said. I'm simply saying that I did not hear them. It may be proven differently later; who knows?

Again, I checked the Blues, Mr. Speaker, and I don't see any comments of that nature having surfaced during what the Member for Edmonton-Glenora referred to as a point of order that occurred at the outset of the hon. Leader of the Opposition's third main question. No such reference appears to have existed there. There may be some misunderstanding; I don't know. Nonetheless, there is nothing again here that is verifiable.

I think it's unfortunate, if it did happen, that one of the members of the opposition would be caught up debating and heckling during the time that his own leader is asking a question. I think that is unfortunate, but that, too, sometimes happens.

I also am acutely aware, Mr. Speaker, that under our Standing Orders, particularly Standing Order 13(4)(b), the Speaker has the incredible charge of trying to preserve order and decorum in this House, and in enforcing 13 it says:

(1) The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum and shall decide questions of order.

It goes on to say:

(4) When a member is speaking, no person shall . . .

(b) interrupt that member, except to raise a point of order.

I don't recall any interruptions other than the point of order being flagged at that time, and I certainly don't think the Speaker heard any of those comments either. If something existed privately between two members, then perhaps it's best left there.

Mr. Speaker, I would just say that if we were to raise points of order every time some heckling occurred or every time one or two members disagreed with each other or with what was being said, we would be in this House doing nothing but points of order. We see far too much of that type of stuff happening here, and when it does happen, it's not only unfortunate, but it's usual traceable back to some precipitation. In this particular case, if it did happen, I'm sure that's probably what in fact did occur.

In defence of the previous point of order, our member from Calgary-Fish Creek noted how many interjections had occurred. In fact, having kept some score of those same types of interjections, my numbers are just slightly different but pretty much the same as the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek indicated. I think she indicated something in the order of 55 interjections. I counted at least over 46 to the point at which I stopped counting and said: this is going to go on forever. Clearly, we spent a lot of time looking at and listening to and hearing all kinds of points of view in this House, and this one is another example of that.

Just in summary, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to note that when falsehoods are uttered or when unkind words are said, particularly when they're hurled to and fro, they usually come about as a result of the manner in which a preamble is crafted or the manner in which a particular question has been drafted, purposely perhaps in some cases at least, to exactly get this type of anticipated response. That's far from the purpose of question period. I've sat here for seven years and listened on numerous occasions to this Speaker and others who have occupied that chair explain to us what the purpose of question period is, and it is not a time to be hurling comments back and forth. Not only are they nonproductive, but they don't form part of the official records of this grand Assembly, in any event.

I would contest that there is in fact no point of order that should be raised here or no point of order that is in fact verifiable and substantiatable, so to speak. As such, I don't think it constitutes a point of order.

The member also made reference to the issue of the word "trust" and how it's used. In that case, I think we could count back numerous occasions when they have used similar words, so I would suggest that there is no point of order here whatsoever. However, I'll leave it to your discretion and perhaps to others who may wish to comment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to comment on the point of order. In the process of question period I got involved in an exchange across the House, and clearly I should not have been baited into it by the preambles and the questions that were put forward. I know better. In fact, under our own Beauchesne 492 the term "liar" is not appropriate for parliamentary use in this House, and I would like to withdraw the term. I did use that term, even though it is not in the Hansard, and I don't want it left there because it is an inappropriate term, so I would like to withdraw it.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, there's absolutely no doubt whatsoever that the word "liar" is inappropriate. If the chair would have heard such, there would have been an immediate interjection, as would have been required.

In a follow through to what was said a little earlier, might I just remind all hon. members of Beauchesne 486(4):

Remarks which do not appear on the public record and are therefore private conversations not heard by the Chair do not invite the intervention of the Speaker, although Members have apologized for hurtful remarks uttered in such circumstances.

In this case there was clearly nothing. The chair did not hear such a thing because of perhaps a variety of things, the items, the circumstances that were referred to earlier. In this case, the hon. Minister of Government Services certainly admitted and withdrew, so methinks the matter is resolved, and now we will move on.

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, you were going to withdraw your purported point of order.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

[Adjourned debate May 3: Mr. Klapstein]

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Mr. Speaker, to date on Bill 11 we have had nearly 2,200 minutes of debate, nearly 36 hours. If everyone in the House now spoke again for 20 minutes, that would represent an additional 1,620 minutes, or another 27 hours, for a total of 63 hours. Therefore, to help that happen, pursuant to Standing Order 47(1) I move that this question be now put.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, the chair was moving some papers. Did the chair understand correctly that the hon. Member for Leduc has moved section 47(1)?

MR. KLAPSTEIN: That's right.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Standing Order 47 has two sections to it, (1) and (2). I will read into the record what 47 says:

(1) The previous question, until it is decided, shall preclude all amendment of the main question. The previous question shall be in the following words: "That this question be now put," which the hon. Member for Leduc has put forward.

(2) If the previous question is resolved in the affirmative, the original question shall be put forthwith without any amendment or debate.

What this means for the operation of the House is that all hon. members who wish to participate on the third reading of Bill 11 now have that opportunity. That means there are 82 members in this Assembly who can participate, and both leaders under our Standing Orders have up to 90 minutes to participate.

When the list of 82 has been concluded or those members who want to participate, then two votes shall occur. The first of these votes shall be "that this question be now put," and the second vote will be then on Bill 11. That's the process.

Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I had some comments that I was prepared to make at third reading, and I was banking on the fact that the Premier said last week that there would be no closure at third reading if the Official Opposition agreed not to filibuster, and of course since the Official Opposition doesn't filibuster, we quickly agreed to that and thought that we would have a full and complete third reading debate. It turns out that on Bill 11 at third reading there has been one speaker from the Official Opposition – just one speaker, 20 minutes – and a couple from the government.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, for a government that seems to know the price of everything and, of course, the value of nothing, it should be no surprise to hear the Member for Leduc stand up and recite in minutes and seconds how much time has been spent on this wrong-minded policy, as though there is a time price tag to democracy. Mr. Speaker, democracy is not fast; it is not quiet. It in fact is messy, but it is what we are all about in this Chamber. For one of the most divisive, hurtful policies that any government of Alberta has ever brought forward, Bill 11, to then try to boil it down to: we've spent enough minutes and seconds talking about it; therefore, we're just going to go ahead and use our electoral clout, our majority in the House, to push this through in spite of overwhelming opposition, in spite of the thousands of Albertans who show up at this Legislature every night, in spite of the tens of thousands of Albertans who have signed petitions and sent letters and e-mails, in spite of the experts, in spite of all of the weight of research against such initiatives – this government would have us believe that what it comes down to is simply the inconvenience of debate. "We've heard enough. We want our way. We're bigger than you are, so we're going to get our way."

3:30

Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not why I was sent to this Chamber. That's not my understanding of the democratic process. I must tell you, particularly because of the respect I have for the Member for Leduc, that I am surprised and very, very disheartened that it is that hon. member that was tapped on the shoulder by the government to carry forward this breach of democratic process.

I can think of nothing else that this government could have done today to have actually punctuated the dissatisfaction of Albertans not just about Bill 11 but about the growing discontent regarding the arrogance of this government, a government that prides itself on caring and listening and then refuses to listen and clearly doesn't care about the legitimate arguments. Mr. Speaker, I'm not just talking about one or two Albertans. I'm not talking about a partisan response. I am talking about a broad-based coalition of ordinary Albertans, men and women, young and old, from across this province that have come together for one reason and one reason alone, and that is to be desperate in their attempt to stop this government from doing something which the people know is wrong, which the government doesn't seem to care about, and that is the erosion of our public health care system.

The Premier wants to pretend that those who stand opposed to Bill 11 are left-wing nuts or some special-interest group when nothing could be further from the truth. Card-carrying members of the Premier's own party are imploring him not to go ahead with this bill. I have had private conversations – and I won't breach the trust – with members of the government caucus who have told me that they don't like it either and that they are getting tired of being beat up in their own constituencies. But, you know, it's the government's bill, and they feel they have to support it.

We've had the Premier say that he allows a free vote, but he won't sign a pledge. We've had the Premier say that everybody here can represent the views of their constituents, but because of the mail that I'm getting from St. Albert and Sherwood Park and Fort Saskatchewan and Leduc and other places in the greater Edmonton vicinity, I know, because I'm meeting with those same groups and those same people, that if those government members were really to be listening to the majority of their constituents, they would be standing in this Assembly and speaking and voting against Bill 11 because that's the view of their constituents.

Mr. Speaker, to pretend for one minute that Bill 11 is all about building fences around existing private initiatives is poppycock.

Let's take a look at the evolution of the government's rhetoric about Bill 11. It started off being: we're going to reduce the pain and suffering. The favourite example of the Premier in those days was the example of waiting lists for hip surgery. He accused the Official Opposition of wanting to keep Alberta's senior citizens on painfully long waiting lists for hip surgery. Then the College of Physicians and Surgeons canceled that party. They said: "Do you know what? Hip surgery is not simple surgery. Hip surgery is not a good example." You can't do hip surgery in the way that the Premier would have us believe, so hip surgery is not an example, and it fell out of the government's lexicon.

So we went from relieving the pain and suffering to: well, we're going to make it more efficient; we need flexibility in the system; we don't have the flexibility; we're going to be bankrupt. Then study after study after study, report after report after report, bricks of evidence, brick by brick by brick built an impregnable wall around that argument. In fact, Mr. Speaker, there is no evidence that contracting out surgeries, that creaming off easy surgeries produces greater capacity in the public system. There is no evidence that cherry-picking patients saves money for the public system. There's no evidence at all that these private clinics, who have to pay taxes and who have to ensure profits, can offer medically necessary treatments more efficiently, more cost-effectively than well-managed, properly funded and staffed public hospitals. No evidence whatsoever.

So we went from pain and suffering to flexibility and efficiency. The pain and suffering argument went by the boards. The flexibility and efficiency argument went by the boards. Now we're getting to where the government is saying: oh, it's all about building regulatory fences around the existing clinics. They talk about the three or four dozen existing private clinics as though those clinics do the same thing that they're talking about.

Mr. Speaker, in fact, these private clinics do day surgery, out patient only. These private clinics do low-intensity surgery. They take advantage of the latest technology, and many of these private clinics are efficient. They work in partnership, but they do not perform complex surgeries needing overnight or longer stays. The fact is that there is an existing regulatory framework around these private clinics, even though the Premier and his colleagues would have us believe that there is no existing legal framework to protect Albertans against abuses by private businesses posing as medical businesses.

In fact, there are bylaws made by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. There is the Alberta Hospitals Act. There is the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act. Mr. Speaker, there is clearly a set of rules in place. Part of it is the negotiated agreement to do with the fee schedule between the Alberta Medical Association and the government of Alberta. The Minister of Health and Wellness knows full well about the regulatory environment because he's had to face these questions in the past: what would happen if doctors opt out, and what is the impact on the system, and how do certain procedures become classified on the list and other procedures come off the list? It is misleading to the extreme to suggest that there is no regulatory environment which governs the provision of medically necessary services. In fact, it's one of the most layered and complex and detailed regulatory environments in the province. So this is clearly not about simply building regulatory fences.

On the point that the government seems to make about these clinics that popped up on the scene in the late 1990s and somehow saying that it was the former minister of health's fault that these clinics popped up, let's take a look. The abortion clinics became a feature of the Alberta medical system as a result of a Supreme Court of Canada decision. The ophthalmology clinics became a feature of the Alberta medical environment as a result of a complex series of events that included technology, the relationship between specialists and general practitioners and the Alberta Medical Association, the location of certain practitioners and the relationship they had with specific hospitals. So, Mr. Speaker, it was clearly an accommodation at the time with all kinds of limits being put into place.

In fact, when the Official Opposition leader was minister of health, there was an ambulatory care policy that was prepared for government that would have truly reined in these private operations. But you know what? The government, which has become the government of the current Premier with this current cabinet, that government rejected that ambulatory care policy clearly because they had their eye on some possible future when they could truly pay homage to special-interest groups and provide some kind of financial benefit to those who had their ear and were pushing the government down the path of more and more private care at the expense of our public system.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it's clear that this government has been marching down this path since at least 1993. The systematic underfunding of the public system, the squeeze on the public system, the closure of hospital beds from one corner of this province to another, the blowing up of hospitals, the renaming of public hospitals to community health care centres, the laying off of thousands and thousands of nurses and thousands and thousands of other health care professionals, the driving away of doctors by diminishing their role in the system, by questioning their expertise and their motivations: this has clearly been all part of the piece.

I'm going to admit to something at this point. I'm going to admit that I was wrong about this government, because back in 1993 and 1994 and 1995 I stood in this Chamber in my place during health care budget debates and I said: Mr. Speaker, this government doesn't have a plan; this government does not have a plan about health care; they don't have a vision about health care; they seem just to be helter-skelter in their approach to our health care system. But I was wrong. They do have a plan, and we are seeing the evidence of that plan now. Not only was I wrong; this plan is worse than them not having a plan. This was their purposeful dismantling of public health care to create an opportunity for private business to take the place of public good, and this government has been marching toward this end for some time.

Now, perhaps I should be buoyed by this. Pushing through Bill 11, this policy, at this point in time indicates a couple of things to me, Mr. Speaker. Number one, it indicates to me that this government has lost its moral authority to govern this province, and that should actually buoy my spirits. Number two, it indicates to me that this government is very clearly at the end of its tether – why else would they be rushing to keep promises to those special-interest groups who will benefit and profit by this policy if it wasn't that they thought they were at the end of their rope? – that it's time for them to keep that promise they made behind closed doors to those individuals who will benefit from this policy.

It's clearly not the everyday Albertan that'll benefit from this policy. It's not the hardworking wage earner who'll benefit from this policy. We're not going to get faster care. We're not going to get cheaper care. We're not going to see waiting lists decrease. We're not going to end the pain and suffering. What we are going to do is we're going to take the hard-earned money that is paid to the government in the form of tax dollars, taken out of the pockets of the taxpayers, and put it in the pockets of the investors of these private clinics. That is what we're going to see. That will be the net result of this policy.

Now, the Premier can pretend all he wants that this is about flexibility and innovation. He can pretend all he wants that he has other provinces on board with him, but when you do a careful analysis, Mr. Speaker, the province of Saskatchewan law doesn't allow what Bill 11 allows. The province of Ontario law doesn't allow what Bill 11 in Alberta does. The legislation in British Columbia doesn't allow what Bill 11 does. Only Alberta will have the distinction of being a safe haven for privateers in health care. Only Alberta will be the place where if you want to up sell people, if you want to take advantage of markets, if you want to take advantage of people when they're the most vulnerable, you've got permission from the government to do that. In Alberta you're going to have a law that's going to permit and allow sale of enhanced services and products. In Alberta you're going to have a law that will direct regional health authorities and will expect regional health authorities to have a contractual relationship with a private clinic. Okay?

Now, that's not what happens in Ontario. This government has used the Shouldice Hospital in Ontario as an example. The Shouldice Hospital does not operate with a contract. There is no minimum guarantee of tax dollars transferred for medical procedures to the Shouldice Hospital. It's only in Alberta that this government wants to rush to put taxpayers' money into the form of a subsidy to private enterprise. Mr. Speaker, I don't think that is the future of Alberta's health care system that the taxpayers want. In fact, I know it's not the future of Alberta's health care system that the voters of this province want, and I will say that this government will be mightily surprised, in fact, with what happens in terms of the electoral backlash from Bill 11.

Let me conclude my remarks – because this will be the last opportunity I'm going to be given to speak to Bill 11. I see the Minister of Learning is applauding at that. You know, before politics the Minister of Learning was a medical practitioner. I don't know what he considers himself now, but I know that I've talked to literally hundreds of his former colleagues. And you know what, Mr. Speaker? They don't like Bill 11 either. So he can applaud all he wants. It's not me that he's going to have to be afraid of not listening to again. It's his own constituents that he's going to have to be afraid of hearing from. In fact, that's where I'll conclude, as I was saying. I'll conclude where I began.

It is appalling that the government would curtail debate at every opportunity on Bill 11. It is absolutely appalling, when you talk about a government that ought to be ashamed of itself, a government that is so uncertain and so insecure about its own position, so unwilling to put forward one shred of evidence, that all they can do, Mr. Speaker, is close their eyes, plug their ears, point fingers at other people and then say: we're not going to listen anymore.

Mr. Speaker, this government has found a whole new low when it comes to paying attention to the electorate concerning very, very important social policy, and today marks that low waterline. Today we've seen this government exposed for what it is. They are dismissive of critics. They turn their back on debate. They have disdain for democracy, and I think they clearly don't care about the lot of the men and women who make this province such a wonderful place.

MS HALEY: Point of order.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. government whip on a point of order.

Point of Order Reflections on Members

MS HALEY: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to rise on a point of order, referring to members in a debate. Beauchesne 484(3) is “to impute to any Member or Members unworthy motives for their actions in a particular case.” I guess I would like to, on this point of order, bring to the awareness of the Liberal opposition that every single member of this Assembly has a chance to speak on third reading. There is no desire to cut off their opportunity to have that conversation. According to the Standing Orders that were moved this afternoon, it was to prevent more amendments from coming in and to find ways to delay, which is all we’ve managed to do on this bill for about two months, the parliamentary process.

The member, just prior to that in his speech, also commented that there must be some untoward motive for us wanting to pass this bill. The motive in passing this bill is to improve access for Albertans, to ensure that the health care system . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: That’s what we’re debating.

MS HALEY: No, it’s not. It’s not debating. You’re implying all kinds of . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on the point of order, which is Beauchesne 484.

MR. SAPERS: Yes. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I’m familiar with 484 in Beauchesne. The fact is that there are many opportunities at all stages of debate to utilize the precedents of parliamentary practice; for example, to move amendments even at third reading, just as there were opportunities at second reading, at committee.

Now, this government moved to curtail the opportunity for the Official Opposition to do that in committee. We had the word of the Premier that that wouldn’t happen unless something happened at third reading. There may have been an amendment coming at third reading, but because of the moving of a motion pursuant to Standing Order 47, that opportunity has been taken away. So clearly the opportunity for debate until the natural conclusion of debate has been taken away.

So, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing that I have said that violates Beauchesne 484. There is everything that the government has done that violates democratic practice.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The chair would observe that 484 deals with: “It is the custom in the House that no Member should refer to another by name.” We have intervened on a number of occasions, and people have objected to that. In part (2) is designation, and part (3):

. . . will not be permitted by the Speaker to indulge in any reflections on the House itself as a political institution; or to impute to any Member or Members unworthy motives for their actions in a particular case; or to use any profane or indecent language; or to question the acknowledged and undoubted powers of the House in a matter of privilege; or to reflect upon, argue against or in any manner call in question the past acts and proceedings of the House, or to speak in abusive and disrespectful terms of an Act of Parliament.

In this part there is some question as to whether or not in the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora’s comments with regard to the government there was some reflection on the House. I would presume that if there was in any way, unintended or otherwise, a reflection on the House, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora would want to retract that, if there was any.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the gist of my argument is the respect that I have for what happens in this Chamber: the democratic process. So, clearly, there is nothing that I am saying that diminishes the role of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta or this Chamber.

What I’m saying, Mr. Speaker, very clearly is that this government, in my opinion, does not share that same respect and feeling for what happens in this place, and they have shown that contempt as a government by using every bit of procedure they can to stop debate on a bill that is talked about in every coffee shop in every corner of every town, city, and village in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much your guidance in the matter. If that is satisfactory in terms of the point of order, I believe I still have a couple of minutes left of my time in third reading. Is that true?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The chair would take it, then, that if there was some reflection on the House, you would withdraw that. I haven’t got the Blues nor a perfect memory and recall of all the things that the hon. member was laying forth. That may be reviewed at a later time. In the meantime, it will be taken that there was none intended nor offered.

MR. SAPERS: Absolutely. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. SAPERS: The people of Alberta have made it clear that they don’t want Bill 11 to be passed into law. The government of Alberta has failed at every opportunity to establish credible reasons for this legislation. There can be no other conclusion than that this government knows something it’s not sharing with the rest of us. There can be no other conclusion than that this government has private reasons, that it wishes to keep secret, in terms of its pursuit of Bill 11, and it is determined that Bill 11 will become law.

Even today in question period, Mr. Speaker, we asked one more time. Once Bill 11 does become law, against the wishes of the majority of Albertans, will they agree that it not be proclaimed until first ministers across the country have had a chance to review the implications? Will they agree that no regulations will be done in secret, that the regulation-making process will be open and transparent, that the regulations will be referred to a standing committee of this Assembly? That would be an all-party committee. You know, the answer was no. It was just dismissed. It was cast aside with the same arrogance as all the other concerns and complaints regarding Bill 11 have been cast aside.

Mr. Speaker, I’m convinced that the government of Alberta has something else in mind, that we’ve only just really scratched the surface of the danger of Bill 11. It’s not a matter, as the Premier was saying, that the sun won’t be shining when we wake up the day after they ram this through. Of course the sun will be shining and the skies will be blue in Alberta, but the men and women of this province will be somewhat poorer for this wrong-minded public policy. They’ll be poorer in terms of a loss to the community, and they’ll be poorer in fact because their health care expenditures are going to be going up as a result of this policy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today in this House and express my full support of the government amendments to Bill 11 as well as Bill 11 itself, the Health Care Protection Act.

The amendments to Bill 11, which aim to further protect the publicly funded health system, include changes recommended by the Alberta Medical Association, the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses, and other professional groups. The amendments tighten the prohibitions on queue-jumping, making it illegal not only for a person to pay for faster service or to receive a payment to give faster service but also for a person to give faster access to an insured service through the purchase of an enhanced product or service or through the purchase of an uninsured service.

The amendments proposed seek to strengthen the restrictions already in place within the bill. For example, the costs of enhanced medical goods and services must be reasonable. In other words, a public hospital, surgical facility, or physician will be prohibited from charging a patient more than the product cost and a reasonable fee. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We seem to have a debate within a debate. I wonder if the two hon. members on the front benches on either side would retire to the back. They could have their debate at length, and then we would be able to hear the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, they will be prohibited from charging a patient more than the product cost and a reasonable fee in connection with the provision of the insured service.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, no person or facility will be able to require a patient receiving a medically necessary procedure to purchase a medical product or service or a nonmedical product or service as a result of the procedure being performed in a surgical facility. Bill 11 also allows the minister to limit the charges for these products and services, whether they're sold in a public hospital or a surgical facility.

In addition, the proposed amendments specify that existing hospital space must be used efficiently and effectively. Health authorities will have to consider the efficient and effective use of existing capacity in their own hospitals before considering a contract with a surgical facility. Currently if the health authority or the minister decides that a particular facility cannot provide services that are of benefit to the public system, there will not be a contract signed with the surgical facility for the provision of services. The amendment enhances this provision by outlining a clear process to be used by the Minister of Health and Wellness in withdrawing the designation of a surgical facility.

I'm proud to support these amendments, Mr. Speaker, because they are a result of effective public consultation. Not every piece of legislation is perfect, so I'm glad we have the opportunity during this process to fine-tune the bill and address the concerns of Albertans. It's important that we look carefully at this bill, because health care is dear to people's hearts, and whenever we are looking at change, however minor that change may be, it's crucial that we take a step back and look at how we can manage that change.

Mr. Speaker, throughout history change has never come easily, whether it be religious, political, or social reform. There are always factions that advocate strongly against change and those who believe there's a better way to do things. This instinct against change is a quality inherent amongst people in all societies. It's a skill that has benefited people since the beginning of time, and it's the instinct that tells us that if we are unsure of where we're going, we should proceed with caution. It's why I sympathize with Albertans who are concerned about the future of public health care in Alberta. Albertans have seen on their televisions an endless parade of special interest groups suggesting that this government's agenda is to privatize health care. They've heard that this is the start of a slippery slope towards privatized, two-tiered health care or the thin edge of the wedge of American style medicine.

That's where the survival instinct kicks in for most people. That's where people start to fear change regardless of how small or innocuous that change may be. And what a job the members of the Official Opposition have done. By repeating the words "private hospital" and "two-tiered" so often, they seem to have modified Albertans' vernacular. Nowadays these words have become almost as nasty as many other words deemed unparliamentary in this House. Certain words can take on certain meanings beyond that which is found in a dictionary. Fortunately, these often-used words don't apply to the debate that we're engaged in today.

As many of my colleagues in government have outlined, there is nothing in the Health Care Protection Act that suggests that Albertans will have to pay for medically necessary services. There is nothing in the Health Care Protection Act that allows a two-tiered health system. While all people have an instinctual fear of change, the root cause or the source of danger can be different for different people. Some may fear for their freedom and for the quality of life of their children, while others fear for their own financial or professional future.

Mr. Speaker, on Canada Day in 1962 the Saskatchewan Medical Care Insurance Act came into effect. On that day the province's doctors launched a strike that they thought would force the government to repeal the legislation. Two factions were formed in that debate. Against public medicare were all but a few doctors, the Liberal Party, the business community, and the Canadian and the American medical associations. On the pro medicare side were the government of Saskatchewan and a few doctors who chose to break ranks with their colleagues. There was a lot of fear back then, a lot of people looking out for their own best interests, not necessarily those of the citizens of this country. It's striking to see that some of the things they discussed then are being as hotly debated across this country today. They were talking about the skyrocketing cost of patient care. They were talking about who would be responsible for paying for this program.

Mr. Speaker, you've got to hand it to the late hon. Tommy Douglas. He was a true Canadian who badly wanted to make a difference, and he did just that. He helped create a universal health care system that benefits all Canadians and gives us peace of mind. He showed solid leadership in developing a program that was fiercely contested by scores of interest groups, and he did what he knew was right. I think I speak for my constituents when I say that I'm glad he took that step.

I for one wouldn't want to do anything that threatens that system. This is a system that helps those in need. That's why both the Canada Health Act and Bill 11 entrench the five principles of the Canada Health Act in law. The principles of universality, accessibility, comprehensiveness, portability, and public administration help to maintain the spirit of our publicly funded system. My constituents have made it clear that these principles must be maintained, and that's exactly what Bill 11 does.

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in this bill that should instill fear in the hearts of Albertans. However, members across the floor have taken those words I mentioned earlier and used them well. They've charged into seniors' homes and extended care facilities and used the words that arouse the fight-or-flight instinct. One staff member here at the Legislature found a brochure, emblazoned with a photograph of the hon. Leader of the Opposition, that says that we're trying to privatize the entire health care system. He found this brochure on a church pew. Some Bill 11 opponents know where all the hot buttons are and are happy to press them as long as they benefit politically or, in some cases, as long as they gain strength in their next contract negotiations with the province.

MRS. SLOAN: Point of order.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We have a point of order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Point of Order
Imputing Motives

MRS. SLOAN: A point of order, Mr. Speaker, under 23(h), (i), and (j). I believe, if I heard the hon. member correctly, he imputed that the opposition was blazing into seniors' homes in this province attempting to incite fear in the hearts of our senior citizens. I would suggest that that is most certainly false. It's most certainly provocative and in fact violates both our Standing Orders and parliamentary procedure.

The reality, in fact, is that in my own . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Once you get into the reality, you're into the debate. You're objecting to his use of this term.

The hon. member on the point of order under 23(h), (i), and (j), as listed.

MR. MAGNUS: Mr. Speaker, there is no point of order. To use the expression about blazing into seniors' homes and being in churches is not a point of order.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: On the points of order that are raised from time to time, it remains to be seen whether in fact they will be judged a point of order. We've had examples of both sides imputing motives to the other side. Our Standing Orders deal with making "allegations against another member," and I did not hear that, and with imputing "false or unavowed motives to another member." I did not hear that.

Now, the last part, when you describe people blazing in and doing those kinds of things, that may be "language of a nature likely to create disorder." That could be perhaps held. On this bill, it seems to the chair, each side has accused the other side. On the one hand, we talk about the opposition having certain kinds of motives and procedures, and we talk about, on the other hand, the government having unworthy motives and so on. Those are regrettable uttered by either side, but they have been. When we get to specifically naming individuals, then that's where the rules, as the chair would interpret them, kick in.

Abusive language. Certainly there has been some of that on both sides, and when the chair feels it necessary to intervene in those instances is when the other side, the aggrieved party, makes noises and starts yelling back and forth and therefore brings disorder. So far, other than the point of order, we really haven't had disorder. Let's not invite it, please.

We are at third reading. I would invite the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill to continue his debate.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The emotions that have risen to the surface in our province in the frenetic pace of the public debate are over what is in fact a modest piece of legislation. Judging by the rhetoric being thrown around by certain members of the House, I can see why some of my constituents fear that this bill privatizes our health system, and that's the biggest misconception around. It is vitally important today that we take a step away from these tactics and work together for medicare rather than for narrow self-interest.

Bill 11 has a narrow scope and a limited purpose. In fact, when this bill is passed, I don't think that most Albertans will notice much of a change. Perhaps one change people will notice is that they're getting certain services done faster and more conveniently. Hopefully, Albertans might also notice that waiting lists for operating rooms have shortened. I'm sure those in the medical profession will in fact notice the difference.

Once the Health Care Protection Act is passed, it will continue to be business as usual in the province of Alberta. Our health care professionals will carry on helping people with their health, and Albertans will continue to rest comfortably knowing that the health care system is still there for them when things go wrong. The bill is not intended to be a panacea for the health care system. This proposed legislation simply adds another tool for health authorities to work in the public interest. It offers another avenue for administrators to get help to those who need it. Bill 11 gives the regional health authorities the freedom to contract out, in a very limited way, certain surgical services. That simple change gives the stewards of our health care system the flexibility to try different approaches to solving some of the problems facing this system.

I can see nothing wrong with adding flexibility to a system that requires change, and I don't think that even members of the opposition will argue with the assertion that the system needs to evolve. Of course, opposition members don't have solutions. Actually, that's not entirely true, Mr. Speaker. They do propose one thing: throw more money at the problem. It seems to be their answer to simply put more taxpayer dollars into the system in the blind hope that it will remain afloat, and any possible solution besides spending more is a manifestation of some secret agenda to privatize health care and rob Albertans of their most important social institution.

One thing I know for sure, Mr. Speaker, is this. When you have a car that leaks or burns oil, you can keep it on the road by adding oil or you can fix the problem. With regard to health care, I would prefer to introduce some minor reforms and try to improve the system for the future rather than simply funnel more taxpayer dollars into it, and I think that is exactly what Bill 11 proposes to do. I also think that when it comes down to it, Albertans want us to do that as well.

Bill 11 helps by plugging holes that currently exist in our legislative framework. By establishing firm guidelines and defining regulations, Bill 11 provides much-needed controls on the development of private health facilities in Alberta. It does this by prohibiting any private surgical facility from providing insured service unless that facility has a contract with a regional health authority to provide those services on behalf of the health authority and unless the Minister of Health and Wellness has approved that contract. That provision acts like a fence around the contracted surgical facilities, ensuring that they can't operate without the express consent of the government of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, what we're talking about here is a bill that does two simple things. Bill 11 provides a regulatory framework ensuring that Alberta's health system remains in compliance with the five principles of the Canada Health Act, and secondly, it allows the regional health authorities the freedom to be inventive and proactive in their effort to reduce waiting lists. That's why I'm happy to stand here today and support Bill 11. When the fear recedes and the discourse returns to normal, I think people will see Bill 11 for what it really is, a strengthening of the public health system. It isn't a panacea, nor is it a great reform that changes the course of social policy in Alberta. However, it is nonetheless important. We need to act instead of reacting, we need to stand and be leaders in the area of health care, and we need to show the rest of Canada that there are alternatives. There's room for improvement, and our government will do whatever it takes to ensure that Albertans have access to a reasonable, effective, and universal health care system.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank you for the opportunity to rise today in this House and speak to the amendments in Bill 11 and to the bill itself. The amendments help improve an already progressive initiative that will contribute in a significant way to helping our health care system address current and future needs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to stand and speak against Bill 11 at third reading. Third reading, of course, is our opportunity to return to the principles of the bill and to reflect upon them after having had second reading and Committee of the Whole debate.

I want to preface my remarks with a couple of comments. One, I do applaud the government for sending a copy of this bill to every Albertan. I do that in light of our experience since the bill was introduced, because no matter how you try to explain it, Albertans do not like this bill. I would like to think that as an effective opposition, in working with those interested in public health care, we were able to influence the thinking of Albertans, but I'm afraid that's not the case. Albertans read the bill, and the more often they read it and the more they learned about it, the less they liked it. I think that is the bottom line. That's the truth of the matter.

There have been some comments that those who oppose the bill oppose change. I think that's an argument of convenience and one that's not true. I think all of us, at least for the 15 years that I've been associated with the party on this side of the House, have been looking for better ways of improving public health care. I look back to members like the hon. Bettie Hewes for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who came forward with a number of very positive proposals. We know the system has to change, and we know this isn't the change that we need.

Just one more comment, before looking at some of the specific principles, on the kind of distrust, the kind of climate that has been created by the government. Embodying the principles of the Canada Health Act in the preamble of the bill is something I think we would applaud, but you have to take that inclusion and look at the government's previous record in terms of voting against those very same principles. So it leads one to question what's going on. How can Albertans believe that the government is really committed to those principles given their past behaviour? Again, it leads to the suspicion that the endorsement of the Canada Health Act principles is merely convenience and window dressing to bring in the parts of the bill that Albertans find so reprehensible.

One of the principles that seems to underline the bill, of course, is that private health care will cost less and help make the waiting lists shorter. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the government has not brought in a shred of evidence that would support that premise. I looked at the study the province had commissioned, the Donaldson and Currie study, and at the kinds of comments they made in their overview of studies. One of their conclusions is that there are [very] serious issues and questions . . . regarding the Alberta experience with private provision of a publicly funded service, which should be investigated seriously by a government considering further extensions of private provision of insured health services.

That in itself, you'd think, would give the government cause to stop and listen to what is being said. The report doesn't come right out and say that it costs more, but it said: look; there's enough evidence out there that the government should be wary. That's one of the conclusions that the Donaldson and Currie study put forward.

Again, why would a government proceed with a bill that seems to violate such an important premise? You would think that if we were going to move into private health care, it would be, if the government had its way, because it would cost less – well, it doesn't; it costs more – and it would shorten waiting lists. Well, it doesn't. The lists grow longer. Experience elsewhere with similar bills has proven just that, that Albertans will wait longer and pay more. I don't understand how the government can defend that kind of legislation and pretend that they're adhering to and supporting the principles of the Canada Health Act.

There's another premise – and of course this is the one that really has upset Albertans – and that's the assumption or the premise that somehow or other private surgical facilities differ from private hospitals. Albertans just do not see the difference. The bill can make all the claims it wants, the government can make all the claims they want, but the bottom line is that there's no difference. If there is a difference, Albertans and those in the opposition are unable to see that difference. We've had hours of debate, and we heard listed today the minutes of debate. That is, I think, the first time it's happened that we have had the actual minutes that we debated counted. In all of those minutes and seconds, we have not heard the difference between a private hospital and a private surgical facility. It's that premise, that there is somehow a difference, that has Albertans concerned and worried.

The premise that the definition of what is a major surgical procedure and what's a minor surgical procedure can be left to an independent body, an independent body that has some self-interest in those definitions, is again a premise of the bill that's very, very questionable. The vast majority of medical doctors across this province oppose the bill, but there are some of those in that profession, a very few, who will be in a position to further their self-interest, given how those procedures are defined, and again it's a weakness in the bill that that provision is there.

Another assumption or premise in the bill is that pressure on patients to buy enhanced services will not take place because of the provisions of Bill 11. Again, it's a premise that doesn't seem to be borne out in other places. You can imagine yourself, Mr. Speaker, in a private surgical facility and under some duress, because you're there obviously for the remedy of some ailment, and someone presents to you a list of further things that could be done at the same time and suggests that they would be beneficial to your health. The chances are that you're going to say yes. So the practitioners won't have a very hard sell to have patients take them up on those enhanced services, and again that's borne out by experiences elsewhere in the world.

Patients are not customers who have comparison shopped, who move around and evaluate services that they're going to buy. Patients are people usually under some pressure and usually frightened, and the kinds of decisions that they make or that we make under those conditions are quite different from the kinds of decisions we make when we're out shopping for a landscaper for our property or for someone to come and clean the house. Those are quite different decisions. Again, we seem unable to learn from experience elsewhere. It just doesn't make sense that we are not tapping others' experience, especially on something as precious and as dear to the hearts of Albertans as health care. Why we seem unable to or seem to close our eyes to that other experience I think most of us find very, very difficult to understand.

I think another premise that seems to underline the bill is that other nonsurgical health services do not need to be regulated. Again, it's hard to understand the distinction that's being made by the government. Diagnostic imaging, fertility clinics, and mental health services are all parts of the system, yet somehow or other the assumption, the premise in the bill is that they don't count, that they don't need to be provided for in this legislation. It's the provision of those very services that has Albertans looking at the specter of a private health care system. When they see that if they go and pay for an MRI at a private clinic, it allows them to go back to their medical doctor and to enter a public hospital and jump the waiting line for surgery – those people in that line are still waiting for that MRI service within the public system – when they see that happening right now, today, without Bill 11, they're even more frightened. So the assumption that those health services somehow or other shouldn't be considered within the context of Bill 11 is one that is really quite astounding and again leads to a distrust, if you will, of Bill 11.

One of the other assumptions or principles that the bill seems to operate on is that health care bracket creep will not be a problem. Yet we know full well that it will be, that the number of procedures is growing at a rapid rate, that technology is adding new and better services at a rapid rate, and that the kinds of things that patients will come to expect to be provided by the system are going to grow. Bill 11 seems to say that the provisions of the bill will account for that, and again it's very difficult to see how.

A further principle of the bill would read that limited access to health care contracts is satisfactory public policy. That's just not true, Mr. Speaker. It's no good waiting two or three years to find out the details of contracts that are being put in place today. A real fear on the part of many is that the kind of access to information provided by private health care providers is not open to the kind of scrutiny that other recipients of public dollars are subjected to. So the provisions within the bill are just not good enough in terms of making public the deals that are being made, and of course there's a great deal of fear across the province. If you look at the increased activity in some of the corporations related to the provision of health care services, the increased activity by those companies in the last six months makes one wonder about this whole notion of things that are being done now that we'll only learn about two or three years down the road. Again, it's a weakness in the bill that makes the bill even more unacceptable.

The assumption in the bill that the guidelines for approving private facilities should be left to the health minister is, again, one that has many Albertans raising questions. The provision that the minister's decisions would not be questioned in court the government of course changed because of the kind of public outcry. They tried to make provision for that in the amendments that were introduced, but there's still a great deal of reservation about leaving in the hands of the health minister the kinds of decision-making that Bill 11 leaves. It makes one wonder how well served Albertans are going to be with that provision in the bill.

A further assumption is that there should be no limit on the size and scope of private facilities. That again is a principle that I think ill serves health care and ill serves Albertans. The bill doesn't limit the procedures that can be performed. It doesn't limit the number of days they can keep patients, and nothing in the bill restricts private companies from establishing for-profit health facilities that are even bigger than the existing public hospitals. You could have facilities in this city, you could have HRG in Calgary grow to a size larger than any of the public facilities. Again, it's a weakness. It's a principle that doesn't seem to serve Albertans or the public health care system well.

In drawing to conclusion my comments at third reading, Mr. Speaker, I would like to go back to the question, the one haunting question of this whole legislation, and it's the "who benefits?" question. No matter how it's been answered or how the government has tried to answer it, that question remains unanswered to the satisfaction of most Albertans. If waiting lists are not going to be reduced, if it's not going to save the system money, if it's going to place in jeopardy possibly the health care system and open the doors to companies and to private providers outside the borders of the province, if all those things are going to happen, then why is the government pushing forward with Bill 11, and who benefits? Who benefits remains the question.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I think it's unfortunate that this will be the last time I or each member, as they indicate their feelings at third reading, will be able to speak to the bill before it's brought to a vote. It's a bill that deserves much more discussion, and it's a bill that deserves amendment at this stage to try to make it better. Why are we giving up on trying to improve things?

With those comments I would conclude. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I get to the subject matter of Bill 11, I want to comment on our democratic parliamentary system. Our democratic parliamentary system specifies a clear lawmaking process for elected members. We respect the parliamentary process. It may not be perfect, but it is better than any other system, and it has survived the test of time for about 800 years. What I'd like to say is that we use democracy here in the process of debating about our health system. The common-good objective is to sustain the health and wellness of Albertans. Our objective as an accountable government is to create the most public good from the limited and hard-earned taxpayers' dollars. Even though aiming for the same objective of public good, one often gets accused of destroying the objective when one does not follow the way of the accuser.

In the context of representing my Calgary-Fort constituents, I'm very honoured and pleased to speak on Bill 11. From my constituents I have heard many encouraging opinions and many deep concerns about our health care. I have brought forward their issues, concerns, and solutions. I have heard many of my colleagues speaking on Bill 11. I have seen the progress made by the government listening to Albertans reflected in the meaningful amendments to Bill 11. Bill 11 debate is now going into a new stage with the completion of the needed amendments that our responsive government introduced after listening to suggestions from individual Albertans, from stakeholder groups, from myself and my colleagues.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, health care is very important to myself, my family, to every Albertan, and to all Canadians now and in the future. I treasure and cherish our Canadian public health care system with its legislated principles of universality, comprehensiveness, accessibility, portability, and public administration.

Mr. Speaker, in my own analysis, our health care system has two components. Component number one is the public health care insurance. It is governed by the Canada Health Act and the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act. It's based upon a single public insurance program to cover everyone, rich or poor, young or old. All we need is the health care insurance card to pay for our insured health care services.

Component number two is the delivery of health care services. The services are many, not limited to surgeries, and the deliveries are not limited to the confines of hospitals. They range from local community health centres to ambulance services, from specialist clinics to medical school hospitals. They range from checkups at private doctors' offices to buying drugs at private pharmacies, from lab tests to treatment of skin rash, from stitching cuts to brain surgeries. They also range from physiotherapy rehabilitation to dealing with mental health, and many more. Our public health care insurance is the cornerstone. It remains intact, solid, and as well protected as ever. I shall fight to the best of my ability against any plan or program that dismantles it.

However, there are many ways to deliver the services. Should we insist on delivering all services from hospitals only, or should we allow for some services to be delivered by other means outside the confines of hospitals? That is the question, and Bill 11 provides part of the answer. Bill 11 is all about allowing public health authorities and public hospital management to contract out some less complex surgeries.

I have lived in and have been to many countries. Indeed, many members of my extended family are living in different countries. From my own experience and their experiences I have learned that in other countries they allow many different private health care insurance programs, and the public takes care of those who are not covered by the private health care insurance program. This is where multitier starts. I am against this and so are the majority of my constituents.

Other countries also allow for full-service private hospitals to operate alongside the public hospitals. This is where patients are separated into those who can pay and those who cannot pay for their basic health care services. I'm against this and so are the majority of my constituents.

None of this is allowed in Alberta. It is formally stated clearly in Bill 11. That is why I agree with Bill 11. It is an Alberta-made solution for the needs of Albertans. The original text of Bill 11 and its amendments to address concerns of citizens are clear. Simply, it has two objectives. Number one: putting legal control around what already has existed for years. It means protecting patients. Number two: allowing public health authorities and hospital management to contract out less complex surgeries when it is proven to be beneficial to patients and taxpayers. It means freeing up more costly hospital operating rooms for more complex surgeries.

After Bill 11 and all its government amendments are passed and become law, I see nine positive points for a better future.

Number one, patients are protected from extra billing, extra payment, queue-jumping, and so on. It all remains under one public health care insurance program for all Albertans.

Number two, patients have more access points, more clinics to go to, not just hospitals, for less complex surgeries and can receive quality services without paying, as it all remains covered by one public health insurance program.

Number three, it provides flexibility for health service and public hospital management to contract out less complex surgeries to any qualified service provider, nonprofit or private. It is only an option and with stringent contracting conditions.

Number four, taxpayers are protected in that the contracts and costs are open to the public, free from conflict of interest, subject to improvement in effectiveness and efficiency. Contracts are subject to being revoked, rejected, renewed like any normal public contracts.

Number five, our health care services via the public hospitals and medical facilities are still growing to meet more advanced and complex treatments. We shall continue the miracle of 20,000 to 30,000 babies born each year. We shall continue the miracle of thousands of organ transplants. We continue to see the progress and advance of research and discoveries. Our lives are maintained more by preventive measures than by treatment measures. Our current health care spending is $5.6 billion. That is 15 and a half million dollars each day; 32 percent of our total public provincial spending is in health care. In the past four years spending on health care increased $1.5 billion, an increase of 40 percent.

AN HON. MEMBER: How much?

MR. CAO: A 40 percent increase in the last four years. This is despite the fact that the federal transfer payment support for health and social programs has fallen by almost 30 percent since 1995, and we have never spent more on health care than we are spending today. Health spending increases will be more than $1 billion, or 21 percent, over the next three years.

The number of beds has also gone up. In the Calgary region we have more beds open and staffed than in 1994-95. This is despite the closure of the three old hospitals. In 1999-2000 the Edmonton region has opened 100 new permanent acute care beds and 150 new permanent continuing care beds. Today more diagnostic services, more surgeries are being performed than ever before.

Number six, our schools still provide more training spaces for health care professionals such as doctors, nurses, technologists, research scientists, and so on. Last year we targeted hiring an additional 1,000 nurses and frontline health care professionals, and in fact we hired almost 1,200. In the next three years we will be hiring up to 2,400 more. By the end of 1999 we increased the number of doctors by 250 from the previous year, an increase of 400 over two years, and we expect 90 more this year. Also, funding has been increased for 40 more residency doctors and 200 places in nursing schools. Our education budget for 2000-2003 is targeted to increase by 19 percent over the next three years.

Number seven, health care professionals have more choices of where to work right here in Alberta instead of going outside of the province. Employers have to treat the staff well or else they will go to different employers. Surgeons have more operating time and more operating rooms to use, not limited to the confines of the hospitals.

Number eight, all hospitals are public, since Bill 11 states that no private hospital is allowed in Alberta.

Number nine, as a strong Canadian nationalist I find that Bill 11 is not opening wide the health care door to foreign companies under the free trade agreement. NAFTA contains a carve-out reservation clause that allows federal and provincial governments to protect the publicly funded system. Similar contracts already exist in other provinces without any implication under NAFTA.

Mr. Speaker, I have seen the excerpt from the NAFTA reservation text. Annex II, social services, national treatment, articles 1102 and 1202, cross-border services and investment, reads:

Canada reserves the right to adopt or maintain any measure with respect to the provision of public law enforcement and correctional services, and the following services to the extent that they are social services established or maintained for the public purpose: income security or insurance, social security or insurance, social welfare, public education, public training, health, and child care.

This means our publicly funded health care is carved out of NAFTA. Also, government procurement is not within the coverage of NAFTA. The contracting out of the government is a type of government procurement. By the way, Mr. Speaker, private hospitals have existed in Toronto, Winnipeg, and Vancouver for a long time, and there has not been any NAFTA challenge.

Before drawing to a conclusion, let me go back to the situation closest to me. I have a brother who recently came out of a life-or-death surgery. His cancerous bladder was taken out and replaced by a part of his small intestine. Also, one of his nonfunctional kidneys was removed. It was a very serious and costly and amazing surgical procedure. His advice to me is that he's not concerned where and by whom his health is restored as long as his health care insurance covers all the costs.

I myself am getting older. My family members and friends include seniors and young ones. Just within that small circle alone we need to protect and sustain quality public health care.

Mr. Speaker, I heard people talking about Bill 11 as a slope. Yes, we are always on a slope. Bill 11 is a step up the slope to the brighter horizon, leaving behind the valley of darkness that we have been through. I've also heard people talking about Bill 11 as a thin-edged wedge. Yes, to right up the leaning tower of our heavy public health care delivery system and to reinforce this foundation, at times we need thin-edged wedges.

Mr. Speaker, these facts and positive future projections have helped me to form my accountable judgment to support Bill 11 with all its amendments introduced by our responsive, accountable, and progressive government. I call on all members of the House to put aside their own political motives and support the reality of Bill 11 for the betterment of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, to our fellow Albertans I suggest two ideas. First, let's look at what our government has helped achieve for Alberta, becoming the envy of other provinces and other countries, an attractive place for many people and a source of pride for Albertans. Second, do not let our political opposition draw us back into the doom and gloom. Just ask what their plans are, what they have done and where they have been.

Mr. Speaker, to our political opponents and those who insist on opposing Bill 11, I would like to propose this. How about after Bill 11 is passed and becomes law, you contact me, say, six months or a year later and see how Bill 11 affects you personally. If Alberta becomes worse, you can vote us out in the next election. However, if Alberta becomes better and not disastrous, like the opposition is saying, you have to vote for us and campaign for us against our opposition. Is that a deal? That's what democracy is all about, with all its everlasting beauty.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the third reading of Bill 11 and put the position of the New Democrat opposition on record. It's a bill the debate on which has just been choked off by the use of Standing Order 47 by the government, a true act of desperation.

[The Speaker in the chair]

In this third and final stage I will explain why Albertans are not going to like what's at the end of this blind alley that Bill 11 represents. In poll after poll Albertans have told this government that they don't want an expansion of private, for-profit health care. Instead of costly privatization experiments Albertans have told this government time after time after time that they want money put back into the reopening of beds and operating rooms in public hospitals. Over 10,000 Albertans attended public rallies in Edmonton and Calgary last month. Thousands more have rallied nightly against Bill 11 in front of this Legislature and in small and medium-sized towns across this province. About 100,000 Albertans have signed petitions against Bill 11 which have been read and received in this Legislature. Tens of thousands of letters have been written, phone calls made, and e-mails sent, unfortunately to no avail.

The government is seriously misreading the public mood if it believes its own rhetoric about the opposition to Bill 11 being union inspired. Organizations like the Alberta Federation of Labour, the Canadian Union of Public Employees, the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, district labour councils, the United Nurses of Alberta, and the Health Sciences Association do represent hundreds of thousands of Albertans working in the health care system. They have every right to speak out on behalf of their numbers, and I congratulate them for doing so with dedication and effectiveness. The hostility of this government towards unions is well known. In the latest issue of Alberta Views, that hostility has been recorded by a fellow who has just finished his doctorate on the history of the union movement in Alberta. So I'm not surprised that this government has tried to discredit opposition to Bill 11 by way of its reference to unions in this province.

Unions representing health care workers are partners in Friends of Medicare. So are many other groups representing seniors, churches, teachers, students, and many thousands of ordinary Albertans from every walk of life. Friends of Medicare and especially its chair, Christine Burdett, deserve the thanks of all Albertans for exemplary and dedicated leadership in support of public health care.

However, the opposition to Bill 11 has been much more broadly based, from organizations as diverse as the Alberta Medical Association, the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses, the Calgary Regional Medical Staff Association, the Capital Region Medical Staff Association, the Alberta Teachers' Association, the Canadian Council of Churches, the Catholic Health Association, the Alberta Council on Aging, the Alberta branch of the Consumers' Association, Bishop Frederick Henry of the Calgary Catholic diocese, and the list goes on and on. Today even Gerry Amerongen, the former respected Speaker of this House, has also spoken out.

These groups and individuals represent the mainstream of society in Alberta. This is a government which, for its own reasons, refuses to listen to its own citizens. While the government is willing to tinker with Bill 11, they are not willing to withdraw it. They are not willing to abandon their blueprint for expanding the private, for-profit delivery of health care in this province. The government was clearly overconfident, perhaps the result of receiving too many awards from the right-wing Fraser Institute. The government believed that with enough high-priced spin doctoring, Albertans would be convinced to support this government's blueprint. Well, guess what? It didn't happen. Public opposition has been loud, swift, unrelenting, and rock solid, and the government is completely frustrated. Poll after public opinion poll has confirmed this. Despite the fact that the government will likely use its majority and in fact has decided to use its majority to force Bill 11 through the Legislature, the government has lost the battle on every front.

Bill 11 has shone an unfavourable spotlight on the private, for-profit health care in this province. The picture that's emerging is not a flattering one. In order to mollify the public in its futile attempts to sell Bill 11, the Conservative government is finally addressing some of the worst abusers of Alberta's existing forays into for-profit medicine. While these abusers have existed for many years, until now the government has turned a blind eye to them. The government recently announced that foldable lenses sold in private clinics would be covered under medicare. While a positive and long overdue move, this is also an act of political desperation and

The debate over Bill 11 highlighted the fact that there is blatant queue-jumping taking place every day of the week at private MRI clinics in this province. While Bill 11 itself does nothing to put a stop to this, the government was shamed into announcing expansion of MRI capacity in the public system, including two additional MRI units for Edmonton and Calgary next year.

The lengths to which this government has gone to try to win public support for an odious bill are remarkable. Crafting a preamble which contains many fine-sounding words about being committed to the principles of the Canada Health Act was a nice touch. However, the fine-sounding words of the preamble, which carry no legal weight, stand in stark contrast to the bitter reality of the actual text of the legislation, which does.

The sincerity of the preamble needs to be placed against this government's actual track record as well. Actions speak louder than words, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government has a knack for being on the wrong side of history when it comes to health care. A previous Alberta government fought medicare and only joined in order to get access to federal government funding dollars. In the '80s the Tory government defended extra billing, claiming it didn't undermine the principles of medicare. Only when the federal government threatened to levy penalties against Alberta did the province do the right thing and end the practice of extra billing.

In the '90s the provincial Conservatives defended the right of private eye clinics to charge facility fees to patients for surgeries that would have been covered by medicare had they been performed in public hospitals. In this instance several millions of dollars in federal fines were levied before the provincial Conservatives put a stop to this particular form of extra billing.

Albertans paid a very high price, Mr. Speaker, for the settlement of the private clinics dispute in 1996. This very high price came in the form of a federal/provincial agreement entitled Public/Private Health Services: The Alberta Approach. This agreement lays out 12 key principles for the expansion of private, for-profit health care delivery in Alberta. Principle 4, in particular, pretty much sums up what the Tory government is trying to achieve through Bill 11. Principle 4 reads: "ensure a strong role for the private sector in health care, both within and outside the publicly funded system."

The government cannot deny its commitment to and actual designs for what it's trying to do through Bill 11. This is the backdrop that led to Bill 37 two years ago and to Bill 11 today. In crafting Bill 11, the government masked its true intentions. The purported ban on private hospitals is bogus. In so doing, the government decided to play Albertans for fools. As I said during second reading, the only people who were apparently fooled were the government's own backbenchers. The Premier's steadfast refusal to admit what Albertans know, that approved surgical facilities with overnight patient stays are private, for-profit hospitals in all but name, is dishonest. Albertans didn't buy it, and they won't buy it.

Bill 11 legalizes private, for-profit hospitals by calling them approved surgical facilities. If you look at the definition of facility services contained in this bill, the definition provided is virtually identical, word for word, to the definition of hospital services in the Canada Health Act and to the definition of inpatient hospitalization contained in the provincial Hospitals Act. The facility services that would be allowed under Bill 11 include inpatient beds, foods, drugs, operating rooms, et cetera. No, the government is only playing clever word games to mask its true intention; that is, to expand private health care delivery by legalizing private, for-profit hospitals.

Bill 11 leaves the decision on which surgeries would be allowed in approved surgical facilities to the College of Physicians and Surgeons. The government has justified delegating this responsibility to the college by saying that doctors have the expertise to make the distinction between major and minor surgery. However, the real effect of this inappropriate delegation will be to politicize the college. This legislation will set up a situation where doctors lobby the governing council of the college for permission to designate surgeries as minor so that they can be performed in a private facility in which that doctor may have an ownership interest.

This is not idle speculation, Mr. Speaker; this is already happening. For the past three years Dr. Steve Miller, an orthopedic surgeon, has appeared before the college council on several occasions lobbying for the right to perform hip replacements at the Health Resource Group, a wanna-be private, for-profit hospital in Calgary. Dr. Miller is both a director and shareholder of HRG. That is why I take very little comfort from the words of the college registrar several weeks ago when he said that hip replacements may not be considered minor surgery. I distinctly recall the registrar's active efforts to pressure the college council into reversing a decision to deny HRG's request. In fact, had it not been for the courageous stance of the majority of the council members, especially its public members, hip replacement surgeries would be taking place at the HRG facility today.

The College of Physicians and Surgeons should be regulating the practice of medicine, Mr. Speaker. The college should not be regulating the commercialization of for-profit medicine. Bill 11 will place the college in the untenable situation of having to adjudicate between the business interests of doctors and their professional responsibilities to their patients.

It is also not appropriate for the College of Physicians and Surgeons to be the sole arbiter of standards for so-called approved surgical facilities. Hospitals are by their very nature multidisciplinary environments in which many health professionals contribute to caring for patients, both during surgery and after or during recovery. That is why the Hospitals Act sets out in great detail the governance structures in public hospitals and ensures participation by all health professionals in setting standards of care. After all, nurses spend a lot more time caring for patients in hospitals than doctors do, yet Bill 11 puts the doctors solely in charge. This is definitely a backward move to the bad old days of doctor domination rather than a forward-looking move towards a more multidisciplinary future.

The text of the bill sets out a blueprint for extending private, for-profit health care delivery, Mr. Speaker. One thing the bill does is set up an approval process for private, for-profit hospitals that contract with the public system. It sets up a process whereby taxpaying citizens, without their consent, subsidize the development of private, for-profit hospitals' infrastructure in this province. Almost as scary, the bill also sets out a parallel process for the development of private, for-profit hospitals that do not contract for taxpayer dollars and, I presume, would offer only nonmedical services. Due to the hammer of closure used by this government, this particular aspect of the bill contained in division 2 has received little or no scrutiny in this Assembly.

In many respects private, for-profit hospitals operating outside the public system are even more of a Trojan horse than those within it. One only needs to look at the history of the private day clinics in Alberta to see why. Twenty years ago when the first private clinics were established, they only did nonmedical services like dental surgery and cosmetic surgery. Today there are 52 clinics, and fully half of them contract for medical services with the public system.

In this House, Mr. Speaker, the New Democrats are the one party that advocates a total ban on private, for-profit hospitals. There should be no private, for-profit hospitals in this province under any circumstances. If we allow private, for-profit hospitals to set up and operate outside the public system, it will only be a matter of time before the owners of these facilities begin aggressive lobbying of the government and regional health authorities for public contracts. The owners of HRG, the wanna-be private, for-profit hospital in Calgary, have been doing exactly this kind of aggressive lobbying, as attested to by the minutes from their board of directors that were released by the New Democrats.

One doesn't have to dig very deep to find the real reason behind Bill 11. Bill 11 is a bailout of private, for-profit health care interests, mainly in Calgary, who can't turn a profit on their own. I take no comfort in the amendment that requires regional health authorities to consider unused capacity in public facilities prior to contracting out. Not long after the Conservative government and their CRHA henchmen closed three public hospitals in the city of Calgary, selling two of them to private business interests and blowing up the third, the Conservative government deliberately shorted Calgary hospital beds and operating rooms to create the conditions for expanding private, for-profit health care delivery in that city. That is why it's no coincidence that the two business groups pushing most strongly for Bill 11 are now located in two former public hospitals.

I've already mentioned HRG, which is located in the former Grace hospital. What has not been as well reported is the sad case of the former Holy Cross hospital, Mr. Speaker. Just prior to the decision to close the Holy four years ago, 35 million public dollars had been spent renovating the Holy, including the development of a state-of-the-art cardiac unit for heart patients. Shortly thereafter, the Holy was closed and then sold to private business interests for $4.5 million. Why is the Conservative government choosing to use public dollars to bail out failing private business interests who occupy former public hospitals instead of targeting those dollars to the more efficient and accountable public system? It's a reasonable question, and Albertans wait in vain for a satisfactory answer. They will never get it from this government.

The government is using its majority to force Bill 11 through this Legislature and onto an unwilling public. However, if government members think this is the end of the matter, they should think again. While opposition to Bill 11 will take different forms, it will not go away. It will simply shift to new arenas.

One of those arenas is at the federal level. The Premier has tried very hard to turn the fight over Bill 11 into an anti-Ottawa crusade, but do you know what, Mr. Speaker? Albertans didn't buy it. Poll after poll has shown high levels of support for the federal government to be involved in protecting the public health care system. For example, an Angus Reid poll asked Albertans a very leading question along the lines of, and I quote: the federal government should stop interfering in the Alberta health care debate. Guess what? Fifty-nine percent disagreed, and only 39 percent agreed. This only goes to show that Albertans are a whole lot smarter than their government gives them credit for.

Albertans know that they can't trust their own provincial government with their public health care system. Albertans acknowledge the right of the federal government's role in ensuring that the principles of the Canada Health Act are appropriately applied. In fact, if the federal Liberals can be faulted for anything, it is that they have wimped out. The Prime Minister and the health minister should have told Alberta and all other provinces: no, we are not prepared to allow the legalization of private, for-profit hospitals in all but name; we are not prepared to allow add-on patient charges, the so-called enhanced medical goods and services, to be codified into provincial law. This is what the feds should have told this government.

Even today I urge the federal Liberals to act. The Canada Health Act should be amended to ban so-called enhanced goods and services. It should be amended to clarify that hospital services, especially those requiring overnight patient stays, must be delivered in public hospitals operated on a nonprofit basis. The federal Liberals would find that such straightforward amendments would enjoy the overwhelming support of Canadians from coast to coast, including Albertans.

Albertans will demand that the RHAs not expand contracting out, especially not before RHAs are fully elected. RHAs have no mandate to expand private, for-profit involvement in health care. The College of Physicians and Surgeons will also likely become a new battleground between the entrepreneurial doctors lobbying for the right to perform complex surgeries like hip replacements in private facilities and Alberta citizens and doctors who will be urging the college not to do so.

The fight over the future of health care will shift to the electoral arena as well. The first judgment will be passed by the constituents of Edmonton-Highlands in a by-election, and I call on the Premier to call the election right away. It will also be fought in the next provincial election. If government members believe that the passage of Bill 11 would put their political troubles behind them, they are sadly mistaken. Hundreds of thousands of Albertans have been energized and politicized in the struggle over Bill 11. You don't put that particular genie back in the bottle that easily, Mr. Speaker.

In conclusion, that the government has now moved to choke off this full debate at third reading and final stage is, I suggest, a shame. It's an embarrassment to all Albertans that the government has done that. Using closure and other procedural tricks to shut down debate, like what was done at the second reading and at the committee stage and now at the third stage, I think is terribly disrespectful to democracy and will betray the interests and trust of Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I've never seen a prophylactic motion used before. I've heard of safe sex, but I guess this was an attempt to have safe debate in that it had to be cut off to begin with.

MRS. SOETAERT: This is the Bobbit technique.

MS BLAKEMAN: I'm not going there.

Specifically, this is third reading now on this bill, although there is a bit of confusion for that, because we know that Motion 47, that was put forward earlier this afternoon to call the question, is in fact debatable. Now, I've been caught in this position twice, in that I should be speaking to the motion, but if I do so, I lose my opportunity to give my third reading speech. So I am going to go ahead and give my third reading speech, and I know the Speaker will call me to order if . . .

Speaker's Ruling Third Reading Debate

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, you're expressing the same fears that many other hon. members have. There is kind of a dual nature here: yes, you are speaking at third reading and you can bring in your comments on the motion. As you have seen this afternoon, some people have wandered at some distance from third reading. Hopefully, they will only momentarily, but you're entitled to speak to both those things: the motion and what you like about it or don't and the third reading, which is, of course, the bill as it is amended and your comments on that.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for your wise words, as always.

MS BLAKEMAN: Third reading is intended to be on the effect of the bill or the anticipated effect of the bill. I have to say right at the beginning the new line coming from the government benches this week is something about: Bill 11 is to build restrictions for private hospitals and to build fences around things. I have to be honest with you. I'm a dog owner, and I'm a conscientious dog owner. It means a great deal to me. I take good care of them, and I would not leave my dog in a yard that was fenced with something like this government's version of Bill 11, because it's about what can get into the yard through that fence, not what is being kept in the yard by that fence. As a responsible dog owner I would not leave my dog in that yard. I don't think it would be safe.

So this whole process of Bill 11 I think is going to change our health care system as we know it. The process that has gone along with it, I think, has also made some interesting changes for democracy in Alberta as well, because this bill was based on a want, not on a need, not on demonstrated proof, not on the public clamoring for this bill. It was based on some want of the government's, and I haven't been able to identify what that want was yet or whose want it was exactly, but it certainly wasn't based on any kind of demonstrable, quantifiable research that would tell us why we needed Bill 11. The government has yet to produce any reasonable study that supports what they were doing. I won't exaggerate. I won't say that there has been a mountain of evidence, but there has certainly been about three feet of evidence of studies that have been produced here in Alberta, here in Edmonton, in Canada, in Australia, in the respected medical research universities in the States, in other countries, saying: bad idea; don't go there. But this government without being able to have any kind of backup for what they want to do is going to do it.

When I talk about democracy being changed, I think it has been with this bill. What I get from the government side is that I think we should have had a longer debate, and there are two issues that come out of that. One is we've now had debate cut off three times. We've had closure used, and I guess we've had closure used in that we've had this Standing Order 47 to call the question used. So it's sort of a minor version, a cuter version, if you'd like, of the closure motion. However you want to dress that one up, it still doesn't fly with me. It is about shortening debate in this House. Why did they need to use this Standing Order 47 as a prophylactic on third reading debate here? Why? What on earth are they afraid of? [interjection] Oh, sure it is.

In Beauchesne for third reading it tells us that there are motions that can be used as part of the proceedings of this House. So right here in this book that we rely on so much, Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, it gives us those. In fact, what it does is refer us back.

When an Order of the Day for the third reading of a bill is called, the same type of amendments which are permissible at the second reading stage are permissible at the third reading stage with the restriction that cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the bill.

What are the ones that are allowed in second reading? Well, lots. We can have a hoist amendment, which sort of takes the bill into thin air so people can work on it and bring it back later or not. We have reasoned amendments, and we have referral of subject matter to a committee. So that's what the government was trying to stop, to avoid, to cut off, to save itself from.

What is the fear here? That there would be additional debate on this bill? Frankly, I think, especially in light of what's happened today, there should have been a recommittal motion. I think we should have gone back into Committee of the Whole, because there are 13 out of the 14 amendments that weren't debated, didn't get any discussion on, none whatsoever. Those motions were called one after another, and there was no debate. So I think there was good cause for a recommittal motion there.

The second thing that keeps coming up, that the government keeps putting forward is: "Oh, my goodness. We've had 36 hours of debate on this bill. Oh, heavens," as though this were some sort of terrible thing, that we would spend time debating, changing the entire medicare system and the health care system in Alberta, that somehow 36 hours - oh, gosh, you know, some terrible flying thing will come out of the sky if we debate one second longer. To make it even more interesting, they keep getting up and giving it to us in - how many minutes? - 2,001 minutes, as though that is going to make the people in Alberta think that's any worse than 36 hours. Well, it isn't. It's exactly the same thing, but again government's spin to make it sound more impressive.

Why is 36 hours some sort of cutoff on the bill? Who decided this? What is the decision? Is there some secret order in council we don't know about here that says that this Alberta Legislature shall not debate a bill any second longer than 37 hours or whatever is their arbitrary time? That's ridiculous. When I looked at B.C., they spent more than a hundred hours debating the Nisga'a land treaty settlement, and that was a huge issue for B.C. It affected everybody there. It was changing their province. More than a hundred hours on that before they brought in closure, and here 36 hours and that's it - no thanks - everybody go home and not another word spoken here.

It really underlines to me the unease that this government has about this bill and the need to make it go away. Get out of the headlines. Get out of this Legislature so we're not giving fuel to those Albertans that gather each night outside this Chamber. What on earth are they scared of? It's democracy, and democracy is time consuming. It is noisy. It is cumbersome, but it's also what put these people in here. I sense a feeling they don't want to be in here anymore because this is somehow too difficult for them to get up and debate. I'm very disappointed and I disagree.

I also remember that during a question I think that was asked last week, the Official Opposition looked for reassurance of some kind that this would not happen to us. The Premier said: if you promise not to filibuster, then I'll promise not to do this. Well, we didn't filibuster. There's been a government member up in between every one of the opposition members that has been up. Frankly, who's had the chance to filibuster? Nobody. We didn't want to filibuster in the first place. We wanted to debate every possible aspect of this bill so Albertans could understand it and we could bring the input, the voices of Albertans, into this Chamber. So I guess that's another broken promise from the Premier.

The effect of all of this is that there are still members, despite what the good Speaker has ruled for us here in the rush to reassure everyone: no, no, no, no, you can speak in third reading; honest, honest, you can - strictly speaking, we should be debating that motion. That is what's supposed to happen here, but everyone is willing to go: no, no; it's okay; you can do your third reading; just don't, for God's sake, say one more word beyond that. I found the heckling really interesting. The language that was used in the heckling during this debate was very abusive in many cases, very personal, and not what I would have expected from this Legislature, not what I would have expected from members opposite at all.

I'm not a rookie anymore. I'm not naive enough to think that there can be good feelings and jolly-jolly between everybody in this Legislature. I mean, obviously it's divided. There's a huge majority on one side, and they feel that they can use that majority to bully us and yell at us and say abusive things, very personal, cutting comments, which is totally unacceptable to me, but I'm going to rise above that one.

Now, let's look at the effect. In third reading we're talking about the effect of this bill. Well, the amendments did not address a number of things. We did have the opportunity to spend quite a bit of time on the first amendment and the subamendment that the Official Opposition brought forward, which was attempting to limit the overnight stays and to clarify insured versus noninsured services. What the government wanted to do was an administrative thing, changing between a person and detailing that it was physicians and doctors that in fact were covered there. We didn't have a problem with that. We had a big problem with overnight stays. We have a big problem with it not being listed as an insured versus an uninsured service there.

But what were the rest of the amendments that we never heard debate on here? Well, the second one was about no queue-jumping being allowed for the sale of enhanced services and the effect of that is – well, we didn't get rid of the sale of enhanced services. This is what I meant about this fence that lets more things in than it actually is enclosing and stopping from getting out. This bill legalizes the sale of enhanced services. It puts it in place. It tells you how to do it. It tells you the form you're supposed to use and who's supposed to sign where. It sets up the sale of enhanced services.

Now, government starts out by saying, "Oh, we've got to have this legislation to be able to control private clinics," assuming, I think, that they're running out of control or running amok or something and that we needed this legislation. The truth is that there were a lot of things going on out there that people were very uneasy about, and I think the sale of enhanced services was one of them and certainly queue-jumping through the sale of enhanced services.

DR. WEST: The doctors asked for it.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, I see that the interim Treasurer is going to get into the heckling, and I invite him to please avoid heckling during my time up here, because it is precious. I invite him to stand up on his own and debate later.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, if you wish to debate, wait your turn.

Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. So this bill did not get rid of the sale of enhanced services. It in fact legalized it. It entrenched it in legislation. I really disagree with this.

The other thing that's been bandied about is that this legislation is very similar to the legislation that's so popular in Saskatchewan. Wrong. And this is where the two part ways. Saskatchewan specifically banned the sale of enhanced services.

MRS. SOETAERT: And overnight stays.

MS BLAKEMAN: And overnight stays. But specifically this. So they part ways. I don't know how you can say that they're similar when they part ways on such fundamental core parts of it as this.

The one good thing that this amendment did do is it stopped the queue-jumping through the sale of enhanced services, but it did not stop the queue-jumping that was going on, is going on, and will continue to go on around diagnostic services.

Now, the other point where the Saskatchewan legislation is far superior to this is that it gathered all MRIs, the diagnostic services, under public health care. There are no more private MRIs, and therefore they took away the incentive to queue-jump through use of private diagnostic services. Once again what happens here is that if two people have identical ailments and one of them goes through the public system for their diagnosis and it takes three months to get it and the other person walks out and buys an MRI tomorrow, the second person has their diagnosis the day after that, and they get into the lineup to get their surgery or whatever corrective medical procedure they need. Meanwhile, person A is still waiting in line for three months to get their diagnostic surgery. That is queue-jumping, and that is queue-jumping using diagnostic services, and this bill did not do anything to stop that.

I still disagree with the sale of enhanced services. If it's medically necessary, it's medically necessary, and the public health care system should be covering it. End of discussion. Why do we have to have this thing where we dangle it in front of people? Well, you could have this extra thing if you wanted to because it's available. Forget it. Why do we need it? If people are desperate to have psychedelic coloured eyeballs or whatever the heck you can purchase through this, then go to another province. Go to the Mayo Clinic. Go somewhere else. Why on earth would we be offering the opportunity to make that kind of profit in a private clinic in Alberta? It's beyond me. I totally disagree with it and always will. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order, both sides. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has the floor. We don't need any help on this side nor hindrance on that side. The hon. member is quite capable of carrying on her own debate.

Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, had I time I would have gone through every single one of the amendments that was put forward in an attempt to describe them for my constituents and for people that read Hansard or listen to it on live audio at www.assembly.ab.ca, and I highly recommend that by the way. But I don't have time to go through each of them, so I'll just hit the high points here.

It did change the privative clause – I think that was amendment H – which caused a number of people great unease. It appeared that the minister was suffering from hubris, that the minister was put above God, and that his or her word could not be questioned, could not be brought before any kind of judicial review. There has been an amendment made there which makes it clear in fact that the minister's ruling is subject to a judicial review. But certainly as it stood, it was hubris; there's no question whatsoever.

We have a number of changes in the regulations, agreements to consult with the Alberta Dental Association.

Now, a couple of things are not in here, and previous members have alluded to them. One of the members was kind enough even to read out the NAFTA ruling, the Member for Calgary-Fort. The problem with that is that you line up your experts and the next person will line up their experts across the way. Nobody can declare definitively that opening the door to private health care clinics will not invoke some problems under NAFTA. We've had studies and experts on both sides of this.

I think that basically we're saying: well, let's have faith; let's take the risk; let's assume that it's not going to be a problem. I'm not willing to do that on behalf of other provinces and indeed the federal government in Canada. I think Alberta has a responsibility to be more careful than that, but they choose not to.

Slippery slope. Is this the slippery slope? Well, yeah, it is. We've had a member opposite say that it's the slippery slope upwards, which I find a bit of a twisted metaphor. But okay; let it go. Will the effects of this bill be seen tomorrow? No. Even six months from now? No. I don't think we'll see the effects of this bill before the next election. I think the government will be darn sure that we don't see the effects of this bill before the next election. We won't see anything until after the next election, when they hope that they will be re-elected and everything can be put into place.

We have not seen the shortage of doctors and nurses being addressed through this bill. We haven't seen anything with the problems identified in the other countries where you get higher salaries wooing folks to the private sector, and at the same time you've got de-skilling of some of the lower paid jobs so that they are paid even less.

I think that what's happened around this whole process is that the government has been asking the people of Alberta to trust them: trust us; trust us on NAFTA; trust us that you won't have to pay more; trust us when we say that it will shorten waiting lists; trust us. I think the people in Alberta will not trust this government anymore.

My time is up.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

MRS. FORSYTH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm awfully pleased to rise and join the debate on third reading of Bill 11, Alberta Health Care Protection Act. This year the government will spend over $5.6 billion on health care. If you are like most Albertans, a figure as large as this is utterly incomprehensible. Questions have been raised on whether we are spending too little, too much, or maybe just the right amount. Taxpayers as owners of the system need to know what is being spent on health care, where it is being spent, and are we getting the best bang for our buck?

Albertans and Canadians justifiably want to hold on to the last social system that defines and connects them. There is nothing wrong and everything right with this except when health care is put on a pedestal. All the moral platitudes and boastfulness in the world can't keep a complex, multibillion dollar health care system going without changes. The trouble is that everything makes sense when it comes to health care, but there is not enough and never will be enough money to implement everything.

Now, on speaking to Bill 11, when the doctors say that they alone have the training to give you a new heart, of course they have.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, your seatmate is building a nest or tearing up papers or something or other, and the speaker system is picking that up so that we can't hear.

MRS. FORSYTH: When the doctors say that they alone have the training to give you a new heart, of course they're right. When the nurses say that they can expand their role and save doctors' fees, of course they're right. When a chiropractor says that they make people better, of course they're right too. When midwives say that they can provide a better service to expectant moms, of course they're right. When herbalists point to the tremendous support they get which suggests that people benefit from their age-old medicines, they're also right, Mr. Speaker. Practitioners of eastern medicine challenged the monopoly on wisdom claimed by western medicine when they said that by their standards of proof eastern medicine hadn't proved itself. It goes on and on and on. Everybody is right, and no one is wrong.

The health care system has been polarized to the point where slogans, protestors, petitions, and victim-of-the-week stories have taken over reasonable debate. Mr. Speaker, first of all, one must question why the opposition continues to judge the inefficiencies of the system by the number of acute care beds in the community.

Mr. Speaker, due to the time I should adjourn debate, I guess.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:29 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 8, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/05/08

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Welcome to tonight's session. Please be seated.

Before we proceed with the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, I would ask for unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE ACTING SPEAKER: First, the hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my honour this evening to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly members of the 553 Squadron of the Royal Canadian Air Cadets. They are seated in the members' gallery. There are 24 members of the squadron here, and they are accompanied by group leaders Major James Barnes, Captain Bentley Barr, and Second Lieutenant April Harris and by assistant Mrs. Judy Warford. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair believes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has an introduction.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a young father and his daughter who are here from Drayton Valley. The daughter is a potential political leader who years from now will probably be sitting in one of these chairs right here. If I could ask Russ Hickman and his daughter Leal to please stand.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

Mr. Klapstein moved that pursuant to Standing Order 47 the previous question be now put.

[Adjourned debate May 8: Mrs. Forsyth]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to continue debate on third reading of Bill 11. First of all, one must question why the opposition continues to judge the inefficiencies of the system by the number of acute care beds in the community. Before I go any further, let me make it clear that acute care is a cornerstone of the system, but some day hopefully that will change and preventative medicine will be given the role it deserves. There's a heck of a lot more to the system than acute care. For one thing, preventing people from needing acute care in the first place is pretty darn important.

What is happening today, right now, all over this country is that older people who need care but not acute care are still in acute care beds because there is nowhere else to put them. Interesting how we hear that from the other side, from the opposition, yet when the opposition leader was health minister, she didn't plan for that problem either.

Madam Speaker, this is a problem that dates back and is certainly not a new problem. One of the enduring hangovers from the acute care bed binge of the 1950s, '60s, and '70s was a shortage of facilities for elective or minor surgery. You might think that a lot of acute care beds would mean lots of operating capacity, but the reverse has happened. Because so many beds were occupied by nonacute care patients who had nowhere else to go, the system has failed. We had the irony of money going into acute care hospitals and not being used for acute care purposes, thus clogging the system. When ministries of health across this country busted their butts to take care of waiting lists for elective/minor surgery, the situation got worse. Ministries threw money at the problem, but it was never enough.

Chances are that there will always be waiting lists and that there will never be enough money in taxpayer pockets to get rid of them. So one must ask what is important here: alleviating the waiting lists or allowing patients to continue to wait and wait and wait? The present mix of services and facilities is clearly out of line with what the community really needs.

Imagine if we built a system that dramatically expanded the chances for patients to become informed and make real choices based on their preferences and their needs. Voila. Then we could really do some definite health care patient planning. In fact, if we let the informed choices of patients and families drive the planning process, then we could simply construct a system based on individual choices. If more patients had the option of dying at a hospice or at a home with home care, then fewer institutional beds would be required. But how would communities create new structures to deliver this kind of care based on informed decisions? Well, first the regional health authorities need the authority and legislation to actually restructure the delivery system.

Madam Speaker, one thing that has continued to frustrate me through the whole process of many hours of debate is the lack of understanding of one word by the opposition. This small word is "no." I thought: well, maybe I just don't get it or understand it. So I went to the dictionary to clarify what I thought might help me understand the word. No: not any, not a, used emphatically in a notice, it is impossible, will not agree to, indicating that the answer to the question is negative, by no amount, denial or refusal. And it goes on and on and on.

So then, Madam Speaker, I thought: okay; I'm going to check one other word. That other word is "negative." Negative: "expressing or implying denial . . . of the opposite nature to a thing regarded as positive."

I thought: now that I understand what no means, I will go back and again review Bill 11. Part 1, section 1, reads, "No person shall operate a private hospital in Alberta." Well, there is that simple little word "no" again. Clearly it says no, and no means – and I know I don't have to read the definition again. Obviously no means no.

Section 2(1) reads, "No physician shall provide . . ." I know everyone in the House can read, so I won't go through it all. Well, guess what? There's that darn "no" word again. Section 3. Well, here we go again one more time: "No person shall . . ." And, Madam Speaker, it goes on and on.

So we'll briefly review it again. We have no private hospitals. We have no queue-jumping. We have no one paying for an insured surgical service at a public hospital or a surgical facility. It is amazing to me how when it is the opposition, no means yes.

Well, I could go on and on, but I will tell you this. The people I want to make the decision on who will provide and make the decisions on surgical facilities are in my mind the people who know the best, and that's the College of Physicians and Surgeons. After all, they truly are the people who know best.

In closing, Madam Speaker – and I have mentioned it before – I am a baby boomer. I will be utilizing the health care system in a few years. I have a 77-year-old mother who has not been well for some time, and she's using her full share of the health care. I have a son who was in a terrible, terrible car accident several months ago, and, yes, he used the health care system also. I have another son whose career continually takes him into high-risk situations, and, yes, God forbid, he at some point will probably use the health care system. My dad took sick in the States. He received excellent medical treatment, and we received pages and pages and pages of bills to a grand total of $300,000. As an Albertan and Canadian hell will freeze over before I will jeopardize what we hold so dearly to us and cherish: our beloved health care system.

Bill 11 is about reform, nothing more, nothing less, and I believe it's the right thing to do. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm again rising to speak to third reading of Bill 11, a bill which will in fact create two tiers of hospitals in this province, will in fact legalize overnight stays in so-called approved surgical facilities, which everyone knows are private hospitals, a bill that will in fact lead to, if we believe the plethora of research available on it, lengthened waiting lists, and a bill that puts the interests of private, for-profit operators ahead of the public interest.

Madam Speaker, I intend to use the full extent of my ability tonight to try and make the case against this legislation in the hope that the members of this government, who are pushing through this private health care policy, might in fact start to listen to Albertans instead of ignoring them.

Madam Speaker, democracy was dealt a body blow in this Assembly at 3:30 p.m. today. The Member for Leduc raised the motion to end debate after, in fact, one member of this Legislative Assembly had completed speaking. The Member for Leduc had risen to speak to the bill but hadn't completed it. So in fact what this government did was shut off debate after one person had spoken to third reading of this bill.

It's interesting, because I was in fact sitting in the news conference by the Premier.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Madam Speaker, point of order under 23(h)(i) and (j). I think the member opposite is clearly imputing some false motives to our colleague from Leduc. The colleague from Leduc in introducing Standing Order 47 knows, as everyone over there should know if they've read the book, that this particular motion does not shut off debate. What it does is allow every member in this House yet one more opportunity to speak to Bill 11 at third reading, and it guarantees it. That is far from restricting it the way the member opposite is trying to impute, and I would ask that she reconsider her comments in that respect.

Thank you.

8:10

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On the point of order I'm going to recognize Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I know that the government may be a little sensitive to this, but in reality what Standing Order 47 does is not allow for this opposition or anybody else in here to bring forward any other procedural initiatives. Quite frankly then that cuts off debate. It is a form of closure, if I may. It is not the same as the closure that the hon. House leader introduced last week but is a form of that. It does not allow debate to be continued in any other form. It does not allow amendments to come through on Bill 11 at third reading.

So essentially, yes, it is a procedural motion that did not need to be used in this House. Quite frankly, there is no point of order. You know, this government shouldn't be so sensitive.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On the point of order, Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Absolutely. Maybe I'll read what the point of order says. It's 47(1) and (2).

(1) The previous question, until it is decided, shall preclude all amendment of the main question. The previous question shall be in the following words: "That this question be now put".

(2) If the previous question is resolved in the affirmative, the original question shall be put forthwith without any amendment or debate.

In other words, Madam Speaker, not only are there no amendments allowed; there is no further debate allowed as well. So there is a curtailment of debate. It's in the Standing Orders. It's in 47(2). If the junior minister wishes to actually look at it, he can see that that's what it says. It very frankly says: without debate.

That is what third reading is supposed to allow. It is for debate in principle on the bill. That is what the Premier announced with much fanfare was going to occur in this Legislative Assembly, and by putting forward this 47(1) motion, in fact he has allowed for this debate to be curtailed.

It is very simple. There can't be a point of order on the truth. That is exactly what we have said, and that is exactly what is occurring in this Legislative Assembly. I am the only member of the Official Opposition to have spoken in third reading. We are now speaking to the amendment, so that is not debate in third reading, it is speaking to 47(1), which indicates that there will be no other amendments or debate occurring and that the question will be put. That is what it is about.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just in rising to support the Deputy Government House Leader's point of order, one of the things that seems to be missing in this discussion is the fact that in speaking to the question of whether you're ready to have the question put, in speaking to the previous question, one has a full range of debating opportunity, because the question is: are you ready for the question? So every single member of this House has an opportunity to speak to the question as to whether they're ready to vote, and obviously in so doing, they would be able to put forward any arguments, if there are any, that they haven't already put forward.

What it does preclude is exactly what the Member for Edmonton-Norwood and the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark indicated, and that is that it precludes bringing forward an amendment in third reading. One of the only amendments allowed for in third reading is referral back to committee. We've already dealt with committee; we spent 18, 19 hours in committee. We spent a ton of time in committee, and the opposition did not allow us to get past section 2 of the act. The other type of amendment which would be allowed in third reading is to negative the principle. Well, we know that you don't like the principle of the bill, and we know that they're going to vote against it. The question of bringing in an amendment to negative the principle of the bill would have only one purpose, and that is to prolong debate or filibuster. They stood in this House not too long ago and indicated that they didn't intend to filibuster.

So, Madam Speaker, it's absolutely correct for the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, the hon. Associate Minister of Health and Wellness, to indicate that bringing forward a Standing Order 47 does not cut off debate but, in fact, allows every single member of this House to participate one more time in this important debate.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On the point of order, Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Yes, Madam Speaker. Methinks the government doth protest too much on this. After the Premier of this province stated that he would not bring in closure on this particular bill, here we see another form of closure being brought in today.

In fact, the government has done two things by asking that the question now be put. First of all, we are only supposed to be addressing that particular question. While the chair allowed wider ranging debate on the issue this afternoon, the fact is we're only supposed to be debating that the question now be put. Secondly, there are, as the Government House Leader referred to, two other options we could have had on behalf of the people of this province in terms of talking to Bill 11. They were the referral motion and to negate the principle of the bill. Well, we know that a majority of the people of this province do not want the principle of this bill in any shape or form to pass through this Legislature. So it's very important that we have all available opportunities to speak to this bill.

This is not a filibuster, Madam Speaker, when we only have a total potential of three more times to speak to this bill before it is passed out of this Legislature. Those are opportunities to express the concerns of Albertans. In fact I, like many of my colleagues, was not allowed to speak to second reading of this bill because closure was brought in. Now, once again, we get to this stage of the bill and the government is trying to ram this bill down the throats of Albertans without allowing democracy or free speech. Well, they don't like democracy, but the fact is that's the way this province is supposed to run. They either acknowledge democracy now, or they will do so at their own peril at the end of the next election.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on the point of order.

MR. WICKMAN: Madam Speaker, on the point of order I'll keep my comments relatively short. Having sat on a council for nine years and sitting here for almost 12 years, I've come to understand various procedures that can be used. The government members may try and insist that this is not closure. They can use a form of closure which is done in the form of a notice of motion and which then can be acted upon at any time after 24 hours, but it doesn't mean to say that it has to be acted upon after 24 hours. The government could serve notice of closure and allow everyone to speak once, allow everyone to speak twice, whatever they choose. This can be even more restrictive than formal closure in the sense that with the exception of the Leader of the Official Opposition and the Premier of the province, who are allowed to speak for 90 minutes, it restricts everyone to 20 minutes. If that's not a hidden form of closure, I don't know what it's called.

In the 11 and a half years I've been here, Madam Speaker, I have never seen a bill that has gone through the three stages attached to it, through a form of closure and, let's call it, informal closure, and in all three stages the government has limited debate. They have reduced debate. They have reduced potential for amendments. They have reduced the potential for adjournment. They have, in fact, made it difficult for opposition to speak out on one of the most important bills this province will ever see.

Madam Speaker, to conclude, it is closure in a different cloth, but it is closure.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I wish to thank all members of the Assembly because you've actually helped me with my job. You've actually explained for the sake of the House what Standing Orders 47(1) and (2) are about. Basically, as all members have said, the previous question shall be in the following words: that the question be now put. Well, how do you discuss for 20 minutes that the question should be now put? Obviously the chair has to allow a lot of latitude in the discussion and in the debate that is going to take place in this House. If people found fault with or are pointing a finger at who was in the chair this afternoon – obviously you have to talk on the main motion, which is the moving of third reading of Bill 11, so the chair obviously is going to allow a lot of latitude.

I have to say that there isn't a point of order. As I've said, both sides of the House have basically explained parliamentary procedure, parliamentary precedent. Within our Standing Orders, which are the Standing Orders of this Assembly, there is a provision called 47(1) and (2). That provision has been made available. It has been used. We have here Erskine May and Beauchesne, that talk about parliamentary rules, parliamentary practice, and that is exactly what has taken place in this dialogue: an explanation for the members of this Assembly and probably our guests in both galleries to explain exactly what we're doing here.

We will now get on with the debate. We are debating the question that has been put, and we are allowing a lot of latitude to deal with third reading of Bill 11.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's interesting to note how touchy the government is about the description of the rules of order of this House. I can understand it, because of course even in spite of their majority, in spite of spending $2 million or more on advertising to try and make their case, they failed to do so. It's no wonder they're touchy.

Anyway, Madam Speaker, as I was saying, democracy was delivered a body blow at 3:30 today with the motion to end the debate without amendments being allowed to be put forward after one member of the Legislature had finished speaking. It was interesting, because at the same time, at 3:30 p.m. today, as the motion was being put, I was in fact attending a news conference at which the Premier was speaking. The Premier made an interesting statement at that news conference. Members will recall that previously the Premier had indicated that he would not be putting forth any method of closure unless we in the Official Opposition were attempting to delay debate. Well, it's difficult to see how that circumstance existed when in fact only one member had spoken.

Secondly, at the news conference today the Premier made the incredible statement that if we in the Official Opposition dared to put forward any of the amendments which are in fact provided for in the standing rules of this Assembly, he would invoke a closure-type motion. That is what was said at about 3:15. I returned to the Legislature, Madam Speaker, at about 3:30, only to hear the Member for Leduc in fact proposing the amendment that his Premier had said in the previous 10 minutes wasn't going to come. So it was very, very interesting and showed, on the one hand, how the left hand didn't know what the right hand was doing but, as well, a government that is afraid to listen to any kind of suggestions for improvement and that is shutting off the discussion on this bill in this Legislature. Albertans know it.

Madam Speaker, tonight I would like to go through several studies that I haven't touched on in my opportunities to speak to this legislation. First of all, maybe I could go through some of the points which the government has made over and over again and which in fact several members of government repeated in the Assembly today.

First off is this whole notion of public consultation. The Premier has so frequently talked about how much public consultation has gone on with respect to this Bill 11. As I was sitting there listening to the Premier's news conference today, I decided that what the Premier understands public consultation to mean is that if people agree with the government or if people refuse to criticize the government, if people go along with the government, then the government feels they've consulted with them. If anyone dares to disagree with this government, to question it, to sign a petition, to send a letter, send a fax, to attend a rally, stand outside the Legislature, come to the Legislature, if anybody dares to do that, well, they're shut off.

They're told that they don't understand the bill. I guess one of the most recurring themes and one of the most blasphemous categorizations of Albertans is this one. How can a government dare say to Albertans that they lack understanding when it comes to this legislation? In fact, Albertans probably understand this legislation better than any other piece of legislation that's ever come before this Legislature, and in fact it is this government that refuses to understand and listen to the people of this province who are trying to send them a message.

Besides the public consultation myth, the second point I want to touch on this evening is that this government wants to have it both ways. This is a government that says – and I heard one of the government members say this in the Legislature today – that groundbreaking change is what is going on with Bill 11, that changes are being put in place that are far-reaching. In fact, the hon. member even went so far as to liken what this government is doing to the change which Tommy Douglas was promoting back in the mid-60s. It was laughable, it was disgusting, and frankly it showed the government's lack of understanding on this bill.

Here we have the government talking about, on the one hand, groundbreaking change – that's the code word, Madam Speaker – but on the other hand, when they are accused of in fact going too far on the legislation, as they are by a majority of the people in this province, they say in fact: "Oh, no, no. It's not big. It's just a tiny little, wee step towards, you know, whatever, towards making the public health care system more efficient." So which is it? You know, they argue out of both sides of their mouth.

The most lamentable thing is that the government has failed to make its case. It has brought forward zero studies to show that it's going to do anything other than increase costs, increase waiting lists, and could, in fact probably will, very much lower patient care. That's not what Albertans want, and that's why they're speaking out.

The third issue, I think, around this bill and the most recent comments that have been made subsequent to my remarks in second reading and my remarks in Committee of the Whole in the manner in which this government is proceeding to ram this legislation through the House. You know, the Premier is very fond of referring to the deficit elimination as an example and a template for what is going on with this. He likens it, you know, by saying that that was one where he didn't blink, where he had to fight demonstrations and opposition and people writing letters and doing all those kinds of things. He says, in fact, that deficit elimination was the same issue as the one we're dealing with here with private hospitals.

Well, Madam Speaker, they're entirely different. Very few Albertans would have disagreed with eliminating the deficit. What Albertans didn't have the same point of view on was how the deficit was eliminated, the cuts that were made, the ransacking of some pretty important public institutions. How they did it was in fact very much a point of contention, but what was being done in terms of elimination of the deficit was in fact supported by the majority of Albertans, unlike Bill 11 with privatization of health care.

This government has had to use closure or a form of closure on Bill 11 on at least three occasions. Really, the use of closure by this government today, after what they did last Monday to have real closure on Committee of the Whole and then the Standing Order 47, again, on second reading, was clearly an admission of defeat, an admission of defeat by a government with a majority, by a government that spent millions of dollars but still had to use the most draconian source of power and the biggest misuse of power that any government has. It's legal, it's under the act, but only a government as heavy-handed as this one would have chosen to use it on three occasions on this legislation. As a result, Bill 11 is as much about a loss of democracy and democratic practice in this province as it is about a loss of public health care and the entrusted role that is given to a provincial government to handle it in the way that reflects the needs and the wants of its citizens.

Madam Speaker, the whole issue of gradual privatization – we've described it as privatization by stealth – is very much clearly documented in this government's practices and its actions. Since they took over in 1992, privatization has been growing. The Premier is very fond of saying that privatization isn't anything new. Well, it is new in terms of its growth since the current government took over. Up until 1992, of course, the total spent on health care, private and public, had remained at a constant of about 22 percent. That had been the case since the mid-1960s, when medicare had first come into force. Over the last eight years of the current government's reign, that amount has now risen by 50 percent, to over 31 percent of total public and private spending on health care.

I guess one of the very valid questions, for which there was no answer, of course, in the Assembly, has been: why do they want more privatization? You know, the Premier says that he doesn't want more privatization, but of course he does, because this isn't about just putting the so-called fence around the existing private clinics. This is about opening up a whole new cottage industry in Alberta, a whole new private hospital cottage industry enshrined in legislation. Why do they want more privatization? You know why? Why is it? There's no answer, absolutely no answer, Madam Speaker.

What we've seen, therefore, is a systematic privatization of health care, systematically destroying what in fact is something that we as a society, as a community, as a country, and as a province have worked hard to build. Really what we're seeing under this government is a death by a thousand cuts. Death by a thousand cuts, death by slow bleeding, and what does the government want to do? What is its response to a 50 percent increase in private-sector involvement in health care? More private-sector involvement in health care. That's why Albertans are so concerned about what's going on.

You know, Madam Speaker, it's been very, very interesting to participate every single day that this legislation has been before this Assembly. I applaud all the members of the opposition side of the House, the Official Opposition in particular, who have worked so hard to reflect the views of the people of this province: the 100,000 that have signed the petition, the 10,000 that have written letters, the tens of thousands that have gone to forums, the thousands that have displayed, all of those people. That is what we deem to be our responsibility, and we deem it to be a privilege.

You know, Madam Speaker, throughout this whole discussion it's been very interesting to hear the name-calling that goes on by the provincial government for anyone who dares to speak out contrary to the position being put forward by the Tory government. They've been called left-wing nuts. They've been called guilty of malicious misinformation. They've been charged with inciting riots. Really, those kinds of names are all a slap in the face to the people of this province. It's basically thumbing their noses at the people of this province, but you know they're all big, grown-up people. They obviously know what they're doing, and so do Albertans. So are Albertans waiting for the final say on this legislation. It's not going to be here. The government might be able to use its power and its heavy-handed majority here, but what the real result will be is at the next election, when Albertans get the final say.

Anyway, Madam Speaker, back to the name-calling. I actually wear it as a badge of honour – and I'm sure most Albertans do – to be named some of the things that we've been named for daring to cross this government. As we all know, one of the weakest forms of argument is name-calling, and it's for those who don't have the evidence, don't have the research, can't make the argument, have failed to convince Albertans. That's when they resort to name-calling, and this is a government that does it on a regular basis.

What I've attempted to do this evening is to bring forward some of the excellent work which has been done by Albertans on Bill 11. Fine reports, fine scholarly review, fine letters, fine e-mails that have been written and sent out by people who are opposed. Fine work by journalists in our province, by members of the media who have worked very hard to reflect what they're hearing Albertans say, which of course, as we know, has resulted in a majority of Albertans being opposed to the legislation, which now this government has invoked closure on, in one form or another, for the third time here today.

Let's go, then, to this whole issue of the systematic dismantling of public health care. I spent some time on that particular issue in my debate at second reading and even more so in Committee of the Whole. But I think one of the areas I didn't talk about as we saw private health care gaining a foothold under the government is that certainly some of its members believe there's nothing the public sector can do that the private sector can't do better. We've heard that from many members of this government, and of course as a result their actions, in increasing private health care involvement by 50 percent, are really a testament to that.

I think one of the things that I would like to touch upon was the subject of an economic overview, from a public interest perspective, on the privatization and the commercialization of public hospital based medical services within the province of Alberta. This was a report written by Dr. Richard Plain at the Department of Economics, University of Alberta, Medicare Economics Group. You know, the Medicare Economics Group, Madam Speaker, is very interesting, because one of the things the Medicare Economics Group has said is that any research carried out by MEG, as it's called, is carried-out at arms length from any grants or funding received from agencies, corporations, unions, professional associations, governments, individuals or groups. No prior predetermined outcome or support for a particular policy position can be linked with any funding provided to any individual MEG researcher or research team . . . The one constraint is that MEG related health economic policy analysis must be in conformance with the five principles contained within the Canada Health Act.

Interestingly, this report has been done by someone who has provided great leadership in this province, great leadership, in fact, to the party represented by the government in this province. One would think that this report would be one where rather than letting it stay out there without comment, the government would respond to some of the very sound and fundamental criticisms that Dr. Plain has laid on Bill 11. He bases his case on this whole issue of creeping privatization, on the 12 principles that have been adopted by the government of Alberta underlining the Alberta health care system.

If anybody wants to find a way in which the privatization has become so much more than just a mantra but has in fact become a driving energy in terms of health care restructuring in this province – some would call it dismantling of public health care – one need only refer to these 12 principles underlining the health care system. Of the 12 principles, six, half the principles, refer to things like:

4. Ensure a strong role for the private sector in health care . . .
5. Public and private sector should work together to provide patient choice . . .
8. Maintain the restrictions on the role of private insurance, while introducing measures to expand the opportunities for the private sector . . .
9. Private clinics should have the option of becoming completely private [where the patient pays] . . .

An interesting reference for the government that says the patient won't be paying.

. . . or allowing them to enter into a variety of funding arrangements with the public sector to cover the full costs of insured services [i.e., a taxpayer subsidy].

Another principle, principle 10, says:

10. There is a place for medical training in both public and private settings.

Finally, probably the killer principle and the one which Dr. Plain goes to great length in his study to show how dangerous it is for public health care is this one.

11. The same physician can practice in both the public and private systems if he/she is offering insured services which are fully paid for by the public system and non-insured services which are paid for privately.

Well, Madam Speaker, to students of the Canada Health Act that is blasphemy. That is all about having your foot in both camps. It's all about double-dipping in the public and the private systems, and it is all about making sure that the private system, which couldn't make a profit otherwise, is subsidized with public taxpayer dollars. This government used to say that it was out of the business of being in business. Well, guess what? They're right back in it, with a legislative framework to do it.

I think another point that needs to be made on this systematic dismantling of public health care is reference to another bill that passed through this Legislature, this time in the fall. That was Bill 40, the Health Information Act. Interestingly, that bill was originally called, when the government muffed it the first time, the health information protection act. It was an interesting choice of words. Then it reappeared in the fall as the Health Information Act. I guess maybe they were trying to catch themselves on this whole idea of protection, so they made sure they put the notion of health protection in the current bill even though Albertans know the opposite is the case.

Anyway, I think there are a couple of important things to note on Bill 40. One is the issue of substance. Bill 40 is a breach of the confidentiality provisions which have always governed and safeguarded the patient/physician relationship. Bill 40 allows for other parties, many unnamed parties, including members of the provincial cabinet, to look at the confidential health records of individuals, things that used to only be available to a physician and entrusted to a physician.

Madam Speaker, there's good reason why physicians are upset about Bill 40 and the way this government has used that trust relationship that physicians have with their patients and exploited it under the name of putting more health information into their hands. It's a sickening tool, actually. It's a sickening use of doublespeak that goes on in this province as it tries to inflict on Albertans its health policy.

There's another reason to bring up Bill 40, Madam Speaker, and that is that of course Bill 40 passed through this Legislature with closure as well. You know, here's the example that all of the government's health care legislation seems to need closure in order to work its way through the legislative process. Closure with a majority. You know, why do they need closure? Why can't they simply listen to the concerns.

So there's yet another issue on Bill 40, which is so similar to this one and it's why people get very nervous, and that is the whole issue of the regulations. The government put in place and pushed closure to get the regulations being developed now behind closed doors on Bill 40, and exactly the same thing is going to happen. The disturbing thing about Bill 40 is that it was step 1, if you like, in the systematic dismantling of public health care, because of course Bill 40 ensures that the private-sector operators in health care do not have to operate with the same standards as those in the public health care system. So here we have this little bit, little bit. Remember that argument the Premier always made when he'd hold up his two fingers and say: we're just taking one more little step. Well, in fact, this is groundbreaking, Madam Speaker, because the pathway through is being mowed by both Bill 40 and now Bill 11.

Then there's a third leg to this little stool, and the third leg to the stool is the flat tax. You know, interestingly, we've noticed in the last three days, Madam Speaker, that "flat tax" are two words that are no longer uttered by the provincial government. Flat tax has been removed from the lexicon of all the members of the Legislature, and this is very much a part of the whole issue of a systematic dismantling of public health care, which I think in fact is very germane to this third reading debate on Bill 11 and the discussion about Standing Order 47.

Of course, the flat tax is yet another piece to the puzzle, because the flat tax ensures that those with a high income will be paying less tax, a good deal less tax, than they were in the past, and the people at the middle income will be paying a little bit less. In fact, the numbers that appeared on the weekend showed 1/13 the amount of tax savings for someone at the $40,000 income level versus someone at the $100,000 income level.

So what are all of those people with their reductions in tax going to be doing with all their hard-earned money? Well, as one of the letters to the editor said in recent days: perhaps they're going to use those dollars to purchase private health care. Really, as we see here, the whole issue of the flat tax pushing and increasing the burden onto the middle-income group, away from the high-income group is of greatest benefit to those at the high-income level, as is privatization of health care. The greatest benefit will flow to those who can afford to pay and those who can create a business out of the $75 billion industry, which is public health care in Canada. So in fact what we have are pieces fitting together, meshing together, as this government pursues its ideological agenda.

So, Madam Speaker, what I would like to do now is turn to some of the works, the Alberta studies that have been done, excellent work, and go through what Albertans do understand about Bill 11, this legislation, and try to give a sense of where we might be heading down the road. The first study I would like to cite is one done by Laura Shanner, who is a PhD and is part of the John Dossetor Health Ethics Centre and Department of Public Health Sciences at the University of Alberta. Dr. Shanner has gone through some of the very important ethics arguments, which have become of increasing importance in health care, particularly with new technologies, with all the many issues that are being faced in health care. Ethics in health care becomes a very major issue.

Again, the government has ignored this Alberta work, not just ignored it but has dared to say that the people who criticize the government, who question the bill, who have an excellent paper on ethical concerns to the bill, are – take your pick, Madam Speaker – left-wing nuts, spreading malicious information. I guess it all falls under the category of disagreeing with the government, which I thought in a democracy everyone had the right to do.

Anyway, I do want to review some of the very key points that have been brought forward in the ethical concerns about Bill 11. The paper starts out by talking about the core values in health care and says:

Health care interactions typically arise in the most poignant moments of human lives . . . and this is one of the key issues in ethics

[at] birth, death, illness, injury, pain, and amid the tension between fear and hope. Further, moderately good health is an essential prerequisite to engage in education, productive work, taking care of others, and other important human undertakings. Everybody thus has an interest in good health and in an effective and accessible health care system. We all need respect and genuine caring when we face health problems, as a very great deal of what is important to us may be at stake.

With that introduction, then, Madam Speaker, Dr. Shanner goes through some of the ethical principles which are used to assess actions and are commonly used in a health care setting, and I want to cite some of those.

The first one is the core value of "nonmaleficence: 'above all, do no harm'."

The Hippocratic Oath traditionally taken by physicians (and adopted in principle by most other health care professionals) requires that great care be taken not to leave the patient worse off than they were before.

So then Dr. Shanner poses some questions: "Why would someone have to stay overnight after surgery rather than go home on the same day?" It's a very, very good question, Madam Speaker.

The answer is that the surgery was so invasive or difficult that the patient is at risk of serious complications that may require immediate medical attention. The complications of surgery can affect any part of the body, and may include: neurological problems from the anesthetic; vascular problems such as embolisms . . . or blood clots that may cause a heart attack, stroke or other major organ complication; difficulty breathing; pinched nerves from blood clots pressing on nerves; internal bleeding; allergic reactions to anesthetics or other medications . . .

It does no good [simply] to notice that [the person] is suffering post-surgical complications . . . Any facility that does surgery complicated enough to require an overnight stay – remember, as I addressed in Committee of the Whole on this legislation – is effectively being admitted to the hospital as opposed to being served in an outpatient capacity. So any facility that does surgeries that are complicated enough to require overnight stays will therefore require a full array of health care specialists to address any complication – and all these caregivers must be available 24 hours, 7 days per week.

So what has happened? What happens under Bill 11? Well, effectively, Bill 11 says that these clinics can set up without an emergency, that these so-called clinics, which we all know are private hospitals, are available for people. So where is the issue of safety? It's fine to say: oh, well, the College of Physicians and Surgeons will make sure that nothing is done that wouldn't be safely done there, but you know that is a complete fallacy. Someone can get into an allergic reaction with anesthetic with a day surgery procedure, with tonsils being taken out, with teeth being removed. Anyway, the whole issue of "Above all, do no harm" is a value that is, in fact, contradictory to what is being proposed under Bill 11.

Bill 11, Dr. Shanner goes on to say, fails to regulate private health care facilities or providers outside the limited realm of surgery;

We've seen this before.

diagnostic clinics . . . long-term care nursing home facilities, home care services, [lab services], and other outpatient providers such as physiotherapy services.

We've been saying this for some time, Madam Speaker.

All elements of private-sector, contracted care should be regulated according to similar standards and coordinated with the public system.

Bill 11, of course, doesn't do that. It just proliferates the very medical model that one of the members was talking about earlier.

Another value in ethics is called "Beneficence: doing good." Here Bill 11 fails as well. One of the things that Dr. Shanner has said is that the justification and motivation for any health care system is to promote both public and individual goods by improving health status, relieving illness . . . and improving functional capacities.

No real good can come from a health care system unless it is truly an integrated system that promotes continuity of care. Regulating surgeries as independent, "off the shelf" treatments fails to address the prevention of accidents and illnesses that lead to the need for surgery and . . . fails to account for post-surgical care. Bill 11, and this is Dr. Shanner's comment, is thus grossly misnamed: it is not a "Health Care Protection Bill" at all, as it focuses on a single, extremely limited aspect of the health care system.

Madam Speaker, we have of course pointed this out on numerous occasions, that it isn't a health protection bill at all, but of course the government has turned a deaf ear not only to Albertans but to the opposition as well.

"Justice and fairness," key values of ethics in health care. This is what Dr. Shanner says:

Bill 11 offers no assurance that services currently covered by Medicare will not be "delisted" . . . in the future . . .

Bill 11 offers no improvement in services for residents of rural or northern communities. Private, for-profit surgical centres would open only in urban areas with sufficient population to ensure steady patronage and profits. Indeed, residents in non-urban areas may suffer a reduction in services if health care providers, already understaffed in public facilities, jump to the for-profit centres. Since rural and northern residents already have a greatly reduced level of service relative to urban areas, health care expansions should reasonably focus on the areas of greatest need first.

Access to health care services, as we've said on many occasions, doesn't just matter to someone in downtown Calgary or downtown Edmonton. It matters to people living all over this province, whether it be Fairview or Lacombe or Ponoka or Brooks.

Another issue in the bill: "Queue-jumping." We've certainly talked about it. Queue-jumping goes on, as we know, in private MRI clinics, as people will purchase the private MRI and then move to the head of the queue in the public system when they return for their treatment. We know this is happening, and of course Bill 11 does nothing to address this. Members will have heard government members stand up and say: Bill 11 outlaws queue-jumping. Well, what a joke. What a joke, Madam Speaker. It is a complete hoax, because it doesn't do it.

Anyway, Madam Speaker, I could go through the study even more, but I think it's important to just close with this whole issue: "Duration of effect if passed: Informed consent for an 'experiment.'" As Dr. Shanner points out, this experiment going on here in Alberta, which the chairman of the regional health authority in Calgary said – what was it? – it's better to experiment than to plan? I think those were his words." The 'experiment' has been tried already in several parts of the world, but the results are not acknowledged by the Government." In fact, the government has ignored any of these studies, which, because they haven't argued against them, presumably means they are in fact right and the government has no case against them, much as they did with Shredding the Public Interest, of course an excellent book. They didn't ever refute it, so presumably the record stands, and there are others that will follow.

The paper goes on to cite untenable conflicts of interest for physicians. In fact, I had an e-mail from a young physician today who has just completed his residency in one of the public hospitals in Alberta. I won't name it in case he gets in trouble. His point, you know, was that he had gone through his premed, done his medical training, done his specialty training, and was now doing his residency work in his specialty. He said, "You know, this Bill 11 is very disturbing, because the discussion amongst medical students is that all our training in trying to deal with patients and provide patients with the best possible care we can possibly provide has now been replaced with this value of: what's wrong with you; why wouldn't you open a private clinic and beg money off health care?"

He said: "You know, as someone who believes very strongly in public health care, I find the argument so disturbing. It's going to result in a whole new crop of medical students and medical practitioners, who feel that's what is expected of them because the government has sanctioned it and enabled it by its legislation." A shocking, shocking, and, as Dr. Shanner says, untenable conflict of interest code for professionals that requires them to consider the interests of the patient paramount, but the lure of profit may draw attention away from the patients' needs and towards the capital gain of the physician. The government members, you know, may well say, "Oh, that's not the case," but Albertans know it is and especially medical students, and the ones who e-mailed me know it is.

There are other values in terms of compensation versus profit, benefiting from others' pain. The point Dr. Shanner makes on this one is: no health care system can be considered ethical or fair if – now, this is an interesting statement – it causes caregiver burnout. Well, what have we seen in this province over the last eight years? So here's one study, an excellent study done by Dr. Laura Shanner, as I say. How dare this government say that Albertans don't understand this legislation. Albertans understand it perfectly. That's the ethical case, Madam Speaker, one example of the work that's been done in the province, one example of the ethical issues, but I think it's a good summary.

That's the ethical case against Bill 11. I want to next turn the argument to the economic case. I want to discuss health care from the point of view of the economic advantage it provides to Canadians. It's true that when asked to identify what distinguishes a Canadian from others, by far the most frequent response from Canadians is our Canadian health care system. Yet the system has many winning features beyond any nationalistic fervor. Our public system is in fact less costly. It ensures that all Canadians are covered. It costs far less to administer. It costs employers far less to insure workers than in the American system, and it is that point that I want to address.

I want to look at the Canadian model of health care from its economic advantage and then look to see Alberta as a microcosm of the national plan. First, the issues of cost. We've seen these before on many occasions, the comparison of GNP in Canada versus the U.S. Canada is at 9 percent and holding steady while the U.S. has increased to 14 percent of GNP and is now on the rise.

By 1994, interestingly, in the U.S. public health care sector spending alone was $1,600 U.S. for a system which, we know, leaves 35 million to 45 million Americans with no health care insurance whatsoever. By contrast, in Canada public sector spending was $150 U.S. less, or $1,444, for a system that offers universal first dollar coverage for hospital and medical care. As Dr. Bob Evans has said – and I think it was very apt. In fact, I think the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness was there when he said it. Dr. Evans said: Americans thus pay more in taxes for health care than Canadians or almost all other people in the developed world in addition to or despite their massive contributions through the private sector. People find that hard to believe, Madam Speaker. The U.S. spending per capita on health care in the public sector – in other words, what tax dollars are going to be spent for the U.S. system per capita – is $150 more U.S. than the Canadian system, yet 37 million aren't covered. That's a fact. Sometimes people forget how much the U.S. is in fact spending on health care.

The question obviously becomes: why do the Americans pay more for less coverage? Well, the issue is administration costs. At least that's one of the key factors. The biggest advantage of the Canadian over the American system is the administrative cost savings. Canada's single-payer insurance plan means cost control and lower administration costs. In fact, processing the multitude of private insurance schemes requires four to five times the administrative resources needed with the universal plans.

A study published by the Conference Board of Canada in March of '99 entitled Corporate Health Care Costs in Canada and the U.S. confirmed significant cost advantages for Canadian business, something that's often forgotten and certainly something that's not lost on our independent businesses here in Alberta. I quote from the Conference Board. The study showed that in Canadian firms total health care costs ranged from a low of 3,306 in Canadian dollars to a high of 13,326 dollars per employee in 1996, while in sister sites in the United States, they ranged from 7,493 in Canadian dollars to 27,658 dollars. Total health care expenditures – private and public – averaged 14 per cent of gross payrolls in Canada and 24 per cent in the United States.

The study continues, and I quote:

The key cost differential is that of employer-sponsored health plans. Health plans cost the case study firms more than 9 per cent of payrolls in the United States. In contrast, expenditures for supplemental healthcare plans in Canada cost between 1.4 to 2.1 per cent of payrolls.

So what's going to be the result of more privatization in health care? Higher costs to our businesses, Madam Speaker. Clearly said, the Conference Board of Canada has already told us.

Now, I would imagine that some of the hon. members in the government – well, maybe not; maybe they've turned a completely deaf ear, but let me go on – are saying that they can see that health care costs may be cheaper, but the argument will be that we're paying more in taxes. Well, the truth is that even when taxes are included, Canada has the lowest labour costs of eight major countries: the United Kingdom, Japan, France, Germany, the United States, Austria, and Italy. I know the government doesn't like to think about that, but it's true.

The KPMG study entitled Competitive Alternatives, a Comparison of Business Costs in North America, Europe, and Japan was completed in March of 1999. It examined the total annual costs of a typical firm in eight different jurisdictions, how such things as freight, electricity, lease, interest, depreciation, as well as property transaction and income taxes came about.

Labour costs are the key. Labour represents 58 percent of location-sensitive costs, while taxes represent just 12 percent, Madam Speaker. Overall, Canada has the lowest costs of all countries in the survey. In attaining the lowest overall cost rating, Canada has its biggest advantage in employer-sponsored benefits, with health care insurance being the largest component. In the U.S. 8.2 percent of wages went to hospital, surgical, medical, and major medical insurance premiums. By comparison, 1 percent, at this point, at any rate, of Canadian wages go to health care insurance.

So looked at from a different perspective, Madam Speaker, a typical 90- to 120-person firm in Canada would have labour and benefit costs of $3.8 million, measured in U.S. dollars, compared to $5.6 million in the United States. It costs more, and it's quite a remarkable savings, I'm sure members would agree.

Let's look at the specific example of the automobile industry, Madam Speaker – I think it's a good one to look at – and what's happened in the case of Ontario, which interestingly has not gone down the private health care route yet. Hopefully, they won't, but let's look at the example of the automobile industry.

Scotiabank's latest Canadian Auto Report notes that U.S. automakers have made long-term investments in Ontario plants that have exceeded the money spent in Michigan. In the past five years automakers and parts manufacturers have been spending an average of $3.8 billion a year on new Canadian assembly and parts plants. Over the same period spending to repair existing assembly and parts plants has averaged $4.5 billion a year. This investment of $8.3 billion has given Canada a massive, massive productivity advantage over the United States. Assembly capacity in Ontario has risen 19 percent since 1994. Automakers building in Canada gain from cheaper currency, lower wages and benefit costs, the Scotiabank study says. Perhaps the minister of energy would like to read it.

Health care, interestingly, is one of the biggest advantages. Savings amount between $1,200 and $1,500, Canadian versus American, for every vehicle assembled in Canada. Savings of $1,200 to $1,500. In terms of overall production that means that automakers that manufacture vehicles in Canada save $3.5 billion to $4 billion a year.

Interestingly, Ontario now accounts for 17 percent of the North American vehicle market, up from 13.5 percent in 1994. That's a very interesting increase in market production here in Alberta and for Ontario specifically, and perhaps that explains why they haven't gone the route of private health care. This year Michigan will account for about 17 percent of production, down from 22 percent in 1994. All part of the Scotiabank study, Madam Speaker.

Now, senior Canadian executives recognize this advantage clearly. On April 15 of this past year, 1999, Charles Baillie, who is the chairman and CEO of the Toronto Dominion Bank, spoke to the Vancouver Board of Trade. "Canada's health care system is an economic asset, not a burden," he told the audience, "one that today, more than ever, our country dare not lose." He pointed out the strengths of Canada's medicare system, and though he fully recognized that medicare must adapt to new conditions, Charles Baillie came down strongly in its defense.

While many of his remarks addressed the social value of medicare, some of his most pointed comments concerned the economic efficiency of a public health care system. He said:

It would cost every business, large and small, more if they had to pay for benefits themselves. It would, in a very real sense, constitute a defacto increase in taxation – for employers or for employees or both . . .

In an era of globalization, we need every competitive and comparative advantage we have. And the fundamentals of our health care system are one of those advantages.

So what is it, Madam Speaker? My earlier point. Is it a ground-breaking change in health care policy, or is it a modest proposal? The fundamentals to which Charles Baillie refers are the single payer and the resultant administrative cost savings, as well as the public scrutiny of costs. These two fundamentals give Canadian taxpayers cost control over this essential service that is absent – absent – from the American multipayer system, and it is that road down which this government is heading.

Madam Speaker, the next Alberta study that I think needs to be cited is the work done by Kevin Taft and Gillian Steward, again an excellent study on what's happening in health care. Of course, you know, the government loves to discredit anybody that dares to speak against them. They, of course, have been unable to refute what is in this book, Clear Answers: The Economics and Politics of For-Profit Medicine. That reminds me: how dare this government politicize health care to the degree they have?

You know, one of the important points – and it's one that's been raised in the Legislature a couple of times – is that moving to this private/public mixed system which is subsidized by the taxpayers of this province, which the majority don't want, at the end of it the government can go back to the way it was. If the experiment fails, as all the evidence points to, then the government can go back to the way it is right now.

Well, I think it's important to note the part contained in the study Clear Answers about what happens in the case of Singapore. Of course the book Code Blue talked about this whole issue of Singapore and what was happening in Singapore with their medical savings account and gave a rather one-sided view of the picture. It's interesting to note, in fact, what happened in Singapore, where it moved to a private profit system, which this government wants to move to, and then tried to go back. I want to quote from a couple of points in the study. It says:

It's difficult to judge the success of Singapore's health care system . . . Still, some crude analysis can be done. The wages of doctors in Singapore are on par with those of doctors in the United States and higher than those of doctors in Canada. Diagnostic medical equipment, such as CT and MRI scanners, is more abundant in Singapore than in Canada.

One of the two sources that Dr. Gratzner used in his analysis of Singapore was an article that was published in the Health Affairs journal in 1995. Despite the impression Gratzner creates, the article is rather negative in fact about the effects of the medical savings accounts in the markets on health delivery in Singapore. Here is a small portion of what the article actually says.

Singapore's decade-long experience shows that its [medical savings accounts] neither reduced nor controlled health care cost inflation. Instead, cost inflation rates increased . . .

Singapore found that hospitals largely did not compete on price. For example, the average charge of private hospitals for an appendectomy was twice that of the prestigious Singapore General hospital. Hospitals competed instead by offering the latest technology and expensive equipment . . . Ten years after . . . the introduction of [these medical savings accounts] Singapore is saddled with widespread duplication of expensive medical equipment and high-technology services . . .

Under a free market the fees and incomes of private-sector physicians rose at a phenomenal rate, something that needs to be taken note of here in Alberta, which caused experienced physicians to migrate to the private sector. The public sector had to raise compensation for its physicians and other health care workers to retain well-qualified professionals in the public sector. Today the top surgeons employed by the public hospitals receive close to $400,000 per year. Top private-sector surgeons earn at least twice that amount. Rapidly rising compensation was another cause of health care cost inflation.

So what's happening on that study, Madam Speaker? Well, what we know will happen, and that is that the public system then chases the costs and the wages in the private sector, especially if it's trying to retain workers in the public sector to work for health.

There are some other excellent papers done by Albertans, Madam Speaker. Of course, Donna Wilson on regional health planning and delivery in Alberta points out:

Since regionalization was initiated, an increased proportion of health system funds have not been, nor are they now available for direct patient care.

In other words, regionalization has increased administration costs, and the increased costs are not going to help patients. They are going to pay for administration. Something that is completely unbelievable is that this government would try to spend more on administration costs. We would like to see and the majority of Albertans would like to see those dollars going to health care itself.

Concerns have been identified in this paper, again one not refuted by the government, where Donna Wilson has gone through extensive review of the regional health authorities and the increased costs they have caused. She concludes that these concerns indicate that regionalization should be thoroughly reviewed, with a much more detailed cost-benefit analysis of regionalization undertaken.

This government hasn't done a single cost-benefit analysis, at least not one they've been able to share with the public, and as we well know, if there were any positive reactions to the costs of regionalization, they would be screaming it right across this province and using it as part of their propaganda campaign, their $2 million propaganda campaign.

And what does the government say? How dare this government say that people like Donna Wilson do not understand the health care system and that if only she would read the bill, as they say to all Albertans, then somehow she would be more intelligent than she is. You know what, Madam Speaker? It's offensive, and it's what they have continued to say when they have refused to respond to studies that I'm outlining here tonight, absolutely refused to respond. In fact, the criticism is always that anybody that dares to criticize lacks an understanding of what's in the bill. I've heard it so many times that even if the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud doesn't want to hear it, he should simply open his ears to his own members when they say it.

Next, Madam Speaker, I turn to the excellent remarks made by Dr. Walley Temple, a surgeon at the Tom Baker cancer centre in Calgary, and the excellent review he had given as to why Bill 11 is the wrong prescription for Alberta. He starts out by saying that he wants to look at the economics of the system and says, "It is a myth that health care costs are out of control." He says that per capita costs have increased only $50 in the seven years before the present provincial government. In Canada, the costs haven't changed in 20 years and are only 8.9 percent of our . . . GNP. The cost of our health care is $2,500 per person and provides us with 100-per-cent coverage.

He then goes on to say that the U.S., of course, spends $4,000 per person to support a public system.

I know that the government doesn't like to hear these informed Albertans speaking out, educated, intelligent Albertans. They don't like having to listen to it, but in fact I think it's well worth it.

Dr. Temple goes through the incredible work that's been done in our public health care system to innovate and to in fact improve patient outcomes. He notes that “in Canada, our infant mortality rate is 5.6 per 1,000 and 7.6 per 1,000 in the U.S. Our cancer mortality is 10 percent lower.” We live on average “two years longer than Americans. All this at one-third of the cost.”

So why would this government want to push ahead with setting up a system that we know is going to end up costing us more and serving us less. How dare this government say that someone like Dr. Walley Temple doesn't understand the health care system because he dares to criticize Bill 11.

Moving off the economic and the innovation and the ethical cases that are made contrary to Bill 11, let's move to the more spiritual side of the equation and look at the excellent principles by which Spiritus suggests that Bill 11 be judged. Now, Spiritus is a grass-roots Catholic organization in Alberta advocating and mobilizing on issues that impact faith and life. Founding members of Spiritus include the Catholic school trustees, the Catholic Women's League, and the Knights of Columbus, who recognize the need for better networking within the Catholic population of Alberta, estimated to be 750,000 people.

Spiritus lists eight principles on which to judge the bill. The first is the principle of human dignity.

Point of Order Decorum

MR. SAPERS: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Yeah. I'm sorry. I'm having a little bit of trouble hearing the remarks from the Leader of the Official Opposition, because the Acting Treasurer keeps persisting with his outbursts. Perhaps he'd like to go outside and tell those assembled at the front steps about Bill 18, or maybe he wants to talk a little bit about defending his flat tax, but I wish he would just listen patiently.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Edmonton-Glenora, you can't kid a kidder. I mean, this is the quietest the Assembly has been for many, many nights. I do know that once in a while the hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer does say something rather provocative, but I have noticed that on occasion you say something provocative back.

So let's get on with the debate.

DR. WEST: Madam Speaker, may I comment on that?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: No, no. Let's get on with the debate.
The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Debate Continued

MRS. MacBETH: Anyway, Madam Speaker, I wanted to go through the eight principles that the Spiritus people have raised questions on. They're excellent points.

The principle of human dignity:

To what extent does Bill 11 ignore this principle by allowing the health of persons to be a means to make money for investors and shareholders?

The principle of participation:

To what extent does Bill 11 shut out the people of Alberta from participating in the final determination of the suitability of this legislation?

Something that's going on right here, right now, Madam Speaker, as this government moves with Standing Order 47 and closes off any opportunity for more amendment of this legislation.

Thirdly, the principle of preferential protection for the poor and the vulnerable. The question is:

To what extent does Bill 11 protect the poor and vulnerable and their families from the inequities of a health system which has to resort to policing in order to insure that those with means do not have improved access to services or to a higher standard of care than those who do not have the capacity or the resources to respond in a manner which meets their needs?

A very, very compelling question, Madam Speaker.

The principle of stewardship:

To what extent does Bill 11 reflect moral responsibility in the use of limited public funds in agreeing to pay facility fees to private operators for 'bricks and mortar'?

Albertans know that that's going to cost more, Madam Speaker, even if this government refuses to admit it.

The principle of subsidiarity:

This principle puts a proper limit on government by insisting that no higher level of organization should perform any function that can be handled efficiently and effectively at a lower level of organization by persons who are closer to the problems.

To what extent does Bill 11 continue to delay on this principle by maintaining government appointed health boards which serve as an extension of the arm of the government rather than an elected group of citizens reflecting the values and the needs of the community?

That's what a democracy is all about. That's what this government is ignoring.

Next, the principle of human equality:

To what extent does Bill 11 weaken the community's sense of trust since the legislation fails to address the relationship of those in positions of power with the opportunities they have for personal or financial gain?

The principle of solidarity:

To what extent does Bill 11 strengthen the capacity of the community to care for our sick within national standards and through a universal health insurance system?

It weakens it, Madam Speaker.

The principle of the common good.

Question: To what extent does Bill 11 foster further division and mistrust within the community, where some health providers will get a greater share of the pie than others, and where the goal of some could very well become the selling of a product rather than reaching out to those who are suffering?

An indictment from the Spiritus, representing 750,000 Catholics in Alberta.

How dare this government ignore and say that people like the Spiritus group have a lack of understanding of what Bill 11 means, that all they have to do is read the bill? It's utter, utter nonsense, Madam Speaker. Utter, utter nonsense. [interjection] People in St. Albert can definitely see through this bill, and they know what's going on.

Next, Madam Speaker, I have gone through, of course, so many of these studies that have been done by Albertans which this government has ignored and, in so doing, is basically, I assume, agreeing with these studies and has not given any sound evidence to refute them, and that is something that is very much what's causing the concerns.

MS LEIBOVICI: Very legitimate concerns too.

MRS. MacBETH: I think that's right: very legitimate concerns from a wide range of people in this province. . . . And how government members can sit there and ignore this . . .

You know, the government has failed to put forward any of the people who are supporting this legislation. They talk about it. They say that there are thousands who have written letters, but they have failed to table those. They have failed to document it. As far as we know, the only group that's supporting this legislation is the Alberta Chamber of Commerce, and isn't that an interesting comment on the making of a new business out of public health care?

MR. DICKSON: There are more than 30 government MLAs who haven't spoken to Bill 11.

MRS. MacBETH: Yeah, probably that's why more than 28 or 30 government members have not spoken on this bill.

So I thought it might be useful, Madam Speaker – because we've had at least three independent polls that have been done on health care, and of course the government has done two of its own polls, with taxpayer dollars I might add, and even those show that government opposition to Bill 11 is growing. But the results from the government polls have just a slightly different take than the independent polls, so let's turn to them, the most recent being the Angus Reid worldwide services poll that was done on Albertans' views on Bill 11 in April of 2000.

The results of an Angus Reid/Calgary Herald province-wide Alberta survey shows that a bare majority . . . of Albertans are against the . . . government's controversial Bill 11, however opposition to the proposed legislation is considerably more intense than support.

Hmm. I wonder if those people are going to vote in the next provincial election. What do you think?

Dissent toward the proposal to allow RHAs to "contract-out" certain medical procedures to private healthcare facilities is driven by a variety of fears – stepping too close to the "slippery slope" of two-tiered healthcare; concerns about the implications of the Bill for future "extra fees"; "queue-jumping" and "de-insuring of procedures" . . .

All of the things that Albertans have said they don't like about this legislation.

. . . and concerns about the impact on the quality of healthcare in the province as a whole.

The mid-March survey also finds that government communication efforts on Bill 11 to date have not hit the mark in any significant way.

That is, the at least 2 million of taxpayer dollars spent to put out a propaganda campaign. Hmm. Gee, how many hip replacements would that $2 million have done? I think it's about 50 of them, as I recall. I think about 50 hip replacements could have been done with that $2 million.

Only 15 percent of Albertans report reading a government brochure delivered to every household . . . while another 23 percent "skimmed it briefly". Fully 39 percent of those interviewed say they do not remember receiving the Bill 11 supplement . . .

Finally, the survey finds that Albertans are evenly divided in their views about whether or not Medicare is in need of a facelift (50% say it works fine the way it is now vs. 49% who disagree with this view), but a large majority feel that other alternatives are available to the Alberta government.

This is what the majority of Albertans feel, in case the members are listening: that alternatives are available to the Alberta government such as reopening closed facilities or putting more money into the existing public health care system, the health care system, in fact the hospital system, that was cut by close to 30 percent, as we know has been documented in the studies.

Now, this is something that I know from having read polls for a long time. When you've got 36 percent of Albertans strongly, strongly opposed to Bill 11 compared to only 13 percent who strongly favour it, that's where that old 3 to 1 odds comes from, Madam Speaker. It's a clear indicator of how off the mark this government is on this legislation. Both Edmonton and Calgary citizens are split.

There's one other point that I wanted to make. The poll says that large majorities of Albertans believe that the government should be "cutting waiting lists by re-opening hospitals" or at least halting further closures; 79 percent agree with this statement. The government should be "putting more money into the existing public system" rather than into private medical facilities. In case the government hasn't noticed, Albertans don't like those public dollars being siphoned through regional health authorities and over into private entities. In fact, 72 percent of Albertans would rather see that money that this government has allocated for private health care and private hospitals go to public hospitals, but still they ignore it. Interestingly, Madam Speaker – and this is probably most telling – two thirds, 64 percent of the province, "believes that Bill 11 is moving Alberta toward two-tiered healthcare." So I know we're on the right side of this one.

Madam Speaker, I think I'm coming close . . .

MR. SAPERS: Ten minutes.

MRS. MacBETH: Ten minutes?

. . . to the end of the debate. I think some of the questions obviously still remain. I've said before that I never understood quite why it was called question period until this session. We know that we ask all the questions and there are no answers, so it's clearly question period.

In terms of solutions, of course I outlined the several steps that we think need to be taken instead of going down this route of private health care. Those I outlined in my second reading address to the Legislative Assembly, so I won't go through that again. I think that again the questions, of course, haven't been answered.

I think I'd like to give a commendation to the Friends of Medicare group, who have put forward their 11 reasons to say no to Bill 11, and I think it's well worth repeating those.

There are clearly faulty assumptions on the bill. It's based on an assumption that private health care will cost anything other than more and will help shorten waiting lists. We know that to be faulty. In terms of definition of hospital, another reason to say no to Bill 11. It says that private surgical facilities will now become a second tier of hospitals in this province. Conflicts of interest: while there was a minor, tinkering little amendment made by the government on conflicts of interest, it doesn't in any real way do anything other than window-dress the issues on conflict of interest, as of course the young physician who e-mailed me today noted. The whole issue of lack of public scrutiny and accountability: the government has done nothing, nothing to release the contracts which exist in health care now.

They say they need Bill 11 to do it, but guess what? Bill 11 doesn't cover private MRI clinics, and we can't get contracts on that. It doesn't cover lab services that are contracted out; can't get the contracts on that. It doesn't cover long-term care nursing services which are contracted out. Those contracts are the use of public dollars for private services. Because they're public dollars, the principles of public administration would say that they should be available to the people of this province. They are not. This government has refused to let those contracts out at all, and Bill 11 doesn't even touch it.

Enhanced services is all about delivering uninsured services in a private hospital that's allowed under Bill 11 which got its client base through insured services. There, another conflict of interest, Madam Speaker.

Lack of comprehensiveness. We know, of course, that diagnostic imaging like private MRIs, which we think need to be part of a standard control on contracting out in the province – and all private MRIs should be included in that.

Mental health services. Bill 11 ignores important parts of the system.

Health care bracket creep. Bill 11 says that all medically necessary procedures will be covered by medicare, but advances are made every day, so what services are going to become deinsured? What services are deemed to be medically necessary? What are not? No answers. No mechanism to address the problem of bracket creep in health care.

Lack of ministerial accountability. We've talked at length about section 23. The government has refused to listen.

Public access to contracts. Of course they're not available, despite what government says.

Vague guidelines for approving facilities. Essentially, private facilities can be approved at the whim of the minister. There is no absolute shutdown of a private clinic that's found to be negligent or not providing appropriate health care and also no limits on size and scope. This is the whole issue of no control over the quantity of private MRI clinics. You know, do we need any more of them? I don't know, but there's no ability for the government to be able to control those. Bill 11 doesn't go anywhere near it. It doesn't talk about private labs. It doesn't touch them.

While this government likes to mix its rhetoric in and say, "Everything's fine, everybody; don't worry; there's no problem," Albertans understand this legislation and are offended by a government that tells them they lack understanding on how the bill works.

So, Madam Speaker, as we move towards closing off the discussion, I think that Bill 11, as I said at the outset, is as much an issue of a loss of democracy as it is an issue of a loss of public health care and the protection for public health care that this government was elected to uphold. We know full well that this government has no mandate to privatize health care in the way that they have. It wasn't even discussed before the previous election, in 1997. I guess the reason they are wanting to ram this thing so quickly through the Legislature is because they don't want to have to go to the voters and ask them. They want to go to the voters and tell them. That's what they need their mandate for. They like to dictate to people.

You know, the impact of their dictation has been to effectively muzzle the members of the Official Opposition, because of course the use of Standing Order 47 muzzles the Official Opposition. They've certainly muzzled the media by their spin messages that have been out there. They've muzzled 100,000 petitioners that have signed petitions in this province. They have muzzled people who have written letters and have received not a word of response from the government other than, you know, trust them; they're the government, after all.

Finally and probably the most disturbing is the muzzling of their own members. That's what has happened on this. Presumably, if the government and the government powers over there weren't worried that their members might break ranks, they would call a free vote, but they've had to move on closure. They've had to move with their $2 million advertising campaign. They've had to muzzle their MLAs. They've had to do everything possible in order to try and move this through and snow Albertans on what the impact will be.

Madam Speaker, although many of my colleagues will of course speak very effectively, further to me, on this legislation – and for that I think all Albertans should be grateful – in this closing opportunity to speak, let's look at the people who have come out opposed to Bill 11.

Certainly there are those who have rallied nightly and those 100,000 petitioners, and I've already mentioned them. The Alberta

Medical Association continues to have major concerns about Bill 11 on conflict of interest, the contracting provisions, the overnight stay provisions. There are the Calgary Medical Staff Association, the Edmonton Medical Staff Association, and the Alberta Teachers' Association. Educators and parents in this province know that if Bill 11 goes through, the next place that needs privatization, in this government's view, is probably going to be education, and they don't want any part of it. So that's why they're speaking out, opposed to Bill 11 on health care.

The Alberta Association of Registered Nurses has spoken out against Bill 11, as has the Canadian Council of Churches, the Spiritus group, that I referred to today, the Alberta Council on Aging, and Bishop Henry. A former and second-longest serving Speaker in this Legislature, the former Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, Gerry Amerongen, has spoken out opposed to this legislation. So how dare this government say that Albertans who dare to oppose this legislation are not intelligent enough to understand what's really, really in the bill. In fact, they understand it abundantly well. They see right through it, and they say no to Bill 11.

Madam Speaker, we made a very constructive suggestion today, given that it's now clear that the government wants to ram this legislation through and use closure or a form of closure at every chance, and that was to talk about the potential for leaving the bill on the Order Paper at third reading and calling public hearings on the regulations. Much as with Bill 40 and the regulations on that bill, as I referred to, this would be another opportunity for there to be public hearings on the regulations.

An alternative would be for the government to refer the bill to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations of this Legislature. Of course, that is a process that other governments in this country use and have used frequently to make legislation speak more to individuals in the provinces. They've used that tool of an all-party committee to strengthen legislation, but of course this government is so much self-centred and so much of the view that they don't have to listen to Albertans. You know, after 30 years the arrogance shows through. The arrogance is well evident. I think the fact that they've had to use closure for yet a third time on this bill is ample indication that they are admitting their defeat, admitting that they don't have a health care policy, and they don't care.

Madam Speaker, this is a black day for democracy in this province, and it's an even blacker day for public health care. Albertans will have the final word on health care and on this legislation, and this government and all its members will have to face the people of this province.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Before the chair recognizes the next speaker, could we just change our mindset for a moment and divert our attention from Bill 11? Could I ask for unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests?

9:50

head: Introduction of Guests

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Actually we don't have to change our train of thought from Bill 11, because these people are in the gallery to listen to the debate tonight. In fact, two just had to leave, I guess, but I would like to introduce some of the people that are here: Dianne Godkin, a PhD student; Allan Dansy; Marc Perron; Cory Doit; Susan Duncan, another PhD student; Eugenie Verna; Raillinda Ganton; Ron Clarkson – I believe he's the health research administrator from the U of A, who had to leave – and Paul-Andre Gauthier, a doctoral student in health care. I would ask you all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, are you rising to introduce guests?

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, Madam Speaker. I, too, have at this point a member in the public gallery that I would like to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly. Barb Swanson is here tonight to listen to the debate on Bill 11. Barb Swanson runs a clinic along with her husband, Dr. Rick Swanson, on the south side of Whyte Avenue in the constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona. She has a very keen insight into not only Bill 11 but the health care delivery system in this province. I would ask her now to please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Thank you.

head: Government Bills and Orders
head: Third Reading

Bill 11
Health Care Protection Act

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased as well to rise today during third reading of Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act. In doing so, I'd like to take a moment to acknowledge a colleague for whom I have a great deal of admiration and respect, and it is the mover of the bill, the hon. minister of health. It is through his insight and wisdom in understanding health and disease that we have a bill that will ultimately lead to an important contribution to the delivery of medicine in Alberta. Also, I'd like to make it very, very clear that my support for this bill, for Bill 11, is strong and also that I'm making it freely.

Madam Speaker, health care has become very politicized in Alberta, so much so that Bill 11 has become a lightning rod for powerful interests, be they political parties wanting power or special interest groups concerned about promoting their own agendas. This is to be expected and applauded, for true debate and the to-and-fro of ideas is what makes ours a free and open society, worthy of our highest and most inspired efforts. But what really is incomprehensible to me is the degree of distortion, the fear, the misinformation that has been promoted by the opposition, that has marred what has been a very important debate.

In fact, only a few days ago, after this bill had received more debate and discussion than any piece of legislation in Alberta's history, I was shocked, if that's still possible, by a letter from Mr. Jake Kuiken, who is a senior child development consultant in the community and social development department in the city of Calgary. Mr. Kuiken wrote, and I quote:

Bill 11's proposal to allow individuals to purchase an enhanced level of care creates a federal and provincial tax credit for better-off Albertans who can afford the enhanced level of care.

How did this individual get it so wrong, Madam Speaker? It is wrong. I talked to him on Friday about it before I brought it to this Legislature, and I gave him insight.

Madam Speaker, first of all, enhanced services were allowed not by Bill 11 but by Order in Council 211/92, on the recommendation of the then hon. minister of health, who is currently Leader of the Opposition. The hospitalization benefits amendment regulation of April 2, 1992, permitted and in fact mandated the boards of hospitals to charge for enhanced goods or services. There is no provision in that regulation, however, setting out what could be charged for these enhanced services. Under her watch 35 private surgical facilities were operating, and still no regulations were put in place governing the cost of enhanced services or prohibiting people who purchased the enhanced services from getting in a faster line for service. [interjection] It doesn't matter how long ago it was. It happened, hon. member, and that's the point.

[Mr. Renner in the chair]

Nor were there any regulations that would allow private clinics to operate only when there was a clear benefit to the public system and prohibit their operation when there was no benefit to the public system.

Mr. Speaker, it is that overall lack of government regulations that is the precise reason why Bill 11 is before us. It took this government and Bill 11 to close the regulatory gaps, and the profit motive has been taken out of the sale of enhanced goods and services. They cannot cost more to the patient than the cost of the product plus a reasonable amount to recover administrative costs. Of course, there can be no extra fees whatsoever since facility fees that were brought in under the hon. Leader of the Opposition were stopped by this government.

MS LEIBOVICI: Point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: There's a point of order.

Point of Order
Imputing Motives

MS LEIBOVICI: I can't sit any longer while this misinformation is being spread. The reality of 23(h), (i), and (j): imputing false motives to a member inside of the House and outside of the House in terms of individuals not understanding what this bill is about. I would like to know if the member has the guts to say that Jake Kuiken agrees with her now, because my guess is that he does not. The reality is that the enhanced services that are being provided for in this bill are . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, it's not a point of order. You're entering into debate, and I suggest that if you wish to enter into the debate, you do so.

Hon. member.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's amazing how after listening for 90 minutes, it took two minutes for this to happen. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling
Decorum

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, it was actually relatively quiet before this chairman assumed the chair, and I hope that's not a reflection on the chair. Could all members please be quiet so we can hear the member speaking that has the floor? The member that has the floor is Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's amazing to me that we were able to listen for 90 minutes here to some rhetoric a little earlier, and now that we have some facts on the floor – and they do include Order in Council 211/92 – this is happening.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I firmly believe as well that it's the overall lack of government regulations which is the precise reason why Bill 11 is before us. As I said, it took this government and Bill 11 to close the regulatory gaps. The profit motive has been taken out of the sale of enhanced goods. As I said and will say again, they cannot cost more to the patient than the cost of the product plus a reasonable amount to recover administrative costs. That's very clear in this legislation and in the amendments that have been before us in Committee of the Whole.

Of course, there can be no extra fees whatsoever since facility fees, as I said earlier, were brought in under the hon. Leader of the Opposition, and they were stopped by this government and are being made illegal in fact by Bill 11. Albertans cannot be charged for any services that are covered by our publicly funded health care system.

I might also add a note about the fears that the opposition has aroused about Americans taking over our health care as a result of Bill 11. Mr. Speaker, if American companies have not come into Alberta when private facilities have been totally unregulated, why would they enter after Bill 11, when private clinics will be highly regulated, in fact will be more regulated than anywhere else in this country?

As the Prime Minister pointed out over the weekend, overnight stays already exist in a number of provinces. In British Columbia overnight stays were allowed as a result of a simple ruling by the B.C. College of Physicians and Surgeons in May of 1997, yet this situation has not inspired any free trade challenges in that province. In fact, I can't help but wonder if we would have seen demonstrations outside the Legislature and other protests if we had done what the government in B.C. did and simply allowed the college to permit overnight stays without introducing any legislation or regulations on the subject.

Mr. Speaker, these are the realities, and they are the facts that somehow have escaped this debate. The reality is that although most Albertans are happy with the convenient service and care they receive in the 52 private surgical clinics in this province, it's high time that these clinics that are supported by public dollars are regulated so they continue to provide in the future a public benefit, so they don't ever become a detriment to the public health system, so they continue to provide quality service, and most importantly, so they increase access to publicly paid for health services and provide a cost-effective use of public dollars. It's that simple. This is what Bill 11 is all about: regulating the use of public funds going to private surgical facilities so that they are used in a cost-effective manner to provide quality health care.

We've said it before in the Legislature, but I think we should say it again. In Calgary it costs a million dollars to build and equip a single operating room, and to run it costs another million dollars a year. With that kind of outlay of public funds we want to ensure that each OR is functioning as efficiently as possible. Performing abdominal, inguinal, and femoral hernia surgery or minor surgical procedures on tendons, peripheral nerves, muscles, bones, joints, supporting tissues, and many other minor surgeries has been shown to not be the most efficient use of that million dollar room. We believe that if a few specialized clinics could become centres of excellence for specific minor procedures that have been approved by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, it would free up scarce and expensive operating room time.

There are other benefits, Mr. Speaker. It could prove to be a way of keeping some surgeons in the province, because they will have increased operating room time, which will ultimately increase the level of health and healing for their patients. I think these realities reflect common sense. That has been borne out in practice already. For example, after six months of contracting out cataract surgery, the North Shore region in Vancouver saw a 13 percent drop in surgical waiting times at the region's Lion's Gate hospital, and it reduced the waiting list for cataract surgery by 29 percent and freed up a precious 28 hours of surgical time per week at regional hospitals. Most importantly, it allows health authorities to direct dollars to patient services rather than capital purchases and to alleviate pain and suffering when it is needed, which is now.

Mr. Speaker, in Calgary, contracting out 13,000 procedures yearly has freed up operating room hours for more complex procedures that require all that modern-day medicine can provide. Every hour contracted out for minor surgery is an hour available in the hospital to meet growing demands. These demands, I can tell you, are huge, and they can't be dismissed.

A study done in 1997-98 put the increased demand for surgical services in Calgary at 19 percent by 2003-04. That's 19 percent, and that's only three years from now. By 2003 this government is slated to spend a billion dollars more than we are spending today. That's in three years. A billion dollars more, and that is in our base budget. It's absolutely incredible to me when people dismiss the facts of what the realities are with our budget. We know that health care will be taking a third of the total of our budget, and that's approximately a billion dollars more, Mr. Speaker, than we spent three years ago.

So my vision is that in three years' time I will be able to tell my constituents, who happen to work very, very hard for their money and pay taxes, that we dared to go forward and change conventional thinking, that despite the fact that public funds continue to be spent on private facilities, the health care spending curve started to decline a little instead of going straight through the roof, and that we entered new partnerships, ones that provided convenient, safe, community-based clinics that perform minor elective surgical procedures instead of having to build . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: A point of order.

Point of Order Questioning a Member

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Beauchesne 333. Mr. Speaker, I'm wondering if at this time the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross would answer a question?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, you only need to say yes or no.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not at this time. We did hear from the hon. Leader of the Opposition for the previous 90 minutes, and I have just a few moments here.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The floor is yours.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you. As I said earlier, my vision also is that we will be providing convenient, safe, community-based clinics that perform minor elective surgical procedures instead of having to build new facilities that unnecessarily add to the upward slant of the curve of spending. Yes, some of these safe procedures require overnight stays, stays of more than 12 hours. Instead of being released from a day clinic after late afternoon surgery, the law was changed to allow patients to get a good night's sleep, which one very experienced OR nurse told me is sometimes all a patient really needs and which I might also add is a principle that the Alberta Medical Association agreed with in writing, and it has been filed with the Legislature. Maybe some surgeries were added to the list, Mr. Speaker, but that was only after the College of Physicians and Surgeons said they could be safely performed on relatively healthy people in safe surroundings by qualified physicians, nurses, and other very caring health care personnel with adequate backup plans.

It is also my hope, Mr. Speaker, that I can tell my constituents that Albertans had better access to publicly funded health care, that queue-jumping through offering enhanced goods and services was made illegal, that the cost of uninsured enhanced services was made fair with no profit for the provider, whether public or private, above a reasonable administrative fee, and that they were consistent no matter where in this province a patient lived.

These are the reasons why I support Bill 11, Mr. Speaker, and why I applaud the courage of this government and of our minister of health as well as our Premier in proceeding with a law that would have been far easier to have left alone but which I am certain will, when it is implemented, serve well the interests of my constituents and all Albertans.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I sit here and listen to some of the arguments made, I find it quite incredible, quite stunning that there are members on the government side that get up and actually believe what they're saying. I think they actually believe what they're saying. It amazes me how they can have such a false concept of what the bill is all about, how they can ignore the dangers that lie in Bill 11.

We hear discussions about it costing a million dollars for a bed when you're building a medical facility. That's true. That's a figure I wouldn't dispute. Then why does government blow up a whole bunch of these beds in Calgary if they cost a million dollars to build in the first place? Why did they sell off all kinds of beds at a discount rate? What? A penny on the dollar, whatever.

We hear talk about visions. They're not visions; they're nightmares. When we say privatization starts creeping in the health care system, we're not talking about a vision. We're talking about a nightmare.

When I think of Bill 11, it reminds me of a story, Mr. Speaker, and just bear with me and you will see how this story relates to Bill 11. When I was a young fellow growing up outside Port Arthur, Ontario – and the Member for Calgary-Mountain View will relate to this – I lived on the east side of Port Arthur there, just off Lake Superior, which at that time was called Nipigon highway and now is called Scenic highway. About a mile away from our house was the general store, where we'd go and pick up bread and milk and such, and in between the road and the lake were the railway tracks. My younger brother, Gerry – we called him Pee-wee – and I would walk along the tracks because it was a shortcut to the store. One day we were walking along picking up some bread, whatever, and we get into this argument about candy. My brother Gerry, Pee-wee, is very, very stubborn. He's on the track and we hear a train coming. I said, "Gerry, you've got to get off the track here. The train's coming." But he's stubborn, and he's not going to move because he's upset with me. The train comes closer, and he's not going to move. He's going to let that train run over him before he budes. Finally I had to forcibly remove him from the track.

That reminds me of the opposition to Bill 11 coming down like a train. The Premier of the province is standing on the tracks and refuses to move, refuses to budge, refuses to listen to that outcry that is there, that is plowing down. So just like I had to remove my brother from the tracks, I guess Albertans will have no choice but to remove this government come the next election, because otherwise they're not going to be heard.

I've seen protests in the past. We've seen demonstrations on education and such. We've tabled petitions on education. We've tabled petitions on different things. But in the 11 and a half years I've been here, I have never, ever seen the type of opposition we are now encountering towards any issue, any bill, any piece of legislation, any matter that has been brought before this House.

We've talked about the rallies that have been held where thousands of people have attended. We've talked about the petitions, the 70,000 that we've tabled. The third party has tabled another 15,000 to 20,000, whatever it is. There are others that are waiting to be tabled. We get letters. We get phone calls. We get e-mails. We get protests. Clearly, despite what government members may say, what they may believe when they stand up, they must understand that there is opposition there. You can read the polls, but even forgetting the polls, just the outcries, just the comments that are made not only from Liberals, not only from New Democrats but from Tories, longtime Conservative members, are really questioning what the government is doing with Bill 11.

This opposition that we hear in Alberta is being heard right across Canada. There is no question that people in other provinces are extremely concerned as to what's happening here in Alberta, because they fear that it will become the demise of the health care system, that other provinces will pick up on what Alberta has done, expand upon that. Just like we have Ontario and Alberta trying to fight as to who has the lowest tax, we're going to have the two provinces battling head to head over who can privatize the health care system the fastest.

Now, this bill without question is going to go through. The government has made it very clear. The concerns of the people, the opposition of the people doesn't count. The government's not listening. They don't want to listen.

I remember hearing: he hears, he listens, he cares. Well, obviously on Bill 11 the government is not listening, the government is not hearing, the government is not caring. People cannot be simply written off because they exercise their democratic right to oppose government legislation. They can't be classified as left-wing nuts. We look at the people that are protesting. Neighbours of mine have been out front there protesting, and they're not left-wing nuts. Members of churches that have protested are not left-wing nuts.

One of the things, Mr. Speaker, that people become very, very upset about is Bill 11, yes, but also the process that's being used, the way that people are written off, the closure that has been used now on three attempts. Closure, a form of closure, a hidden form of closure: call it what you want. Government has chosen to choke debate on Bill 11. They know that the protests will continue, that the opposition will continue to build, so they're trying to head it off.

From here what will government do? I would suspect the bill will be passed. There's no question about that now in my mind. The bill will be passed using closure, something the government has used about 26 times before under the current Premier. We'll see third reading happen before the end of this week, would be my venture. The bill will be proclaimed, and come the fall, when it's all in, I don't think you're going to see a great deal of change in the early stages, Mr. Speaker.

I think we'll see an election come next February or March, and the government will say: "See; was there really any difference? Was there really any change?" But you wait till that election is gone, and if – if – they are fortunate enough to somehow convince Albertans that they deserve to be re-elected, you watch what will happen at that particular point. Then you're going to see, I believe, widespread privatization start to take place and the demise of the health care system.

Members will stand here and criticize what members of the opposition are saying. Government members will do that. They'll criticize the Leader of the Official Opposition. But, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, nobody, no member in this House, has the same understanding, the same knowledge, the same passion for health care as the Leader of the Official Opposition, bar none, and when she speaks, she should be listened to, because she knows what she's talking about when it comes to health care. So her comments can't simply be dismissed, written off.

I find in my riding of Edmonton-Rutherford and, interestingly enough, the Tory candidate that's going out there door-knocking now, that has now been nominated, is also finding that Bill 11 is the catalyst for people to voice their objection, their concern about what's happened to the health care system in Alberta in recent years. I hear their comments about: we're spending more than we spent before. You don't measure it by how much is spent. It depends on how those dollars are spent, how they're managed. Now we see government saying: well, we're going to allow the private sector to start spending taxpayers' money as well. We can imagine how they're going to spend those dollars.

So the whole health care system has really come under question and Bill 11. The government actually did the people of Alberta a favour in the sense that they finally brought to a head, focused attention on the shortcomings in the health care system. The government has acted as a catalyst for people to become politically involved, for people to start to have a much deeper appreciation for their health care system, which we in the past had tended to take for granted.

We talk in terms of privatization. I pulled something out of the paper the other day. Everybody reads Ann Landers. Now, she's talking about privatization of the health care system in the States, and she invited comments from readers. One of the people that commented is a doctor. He says: "I am a physician looking forward to getting out of this profession. It bothers me when I prescribe medicines . . ." and such. Now the critical part. Listen to this. He says in his letter to Ann Landers: "It pains me to see the HMOs" – we all know what the HMOs in the United States are – "making millions while I can barely afford to give my staff a raise."

Now, that touches on the nature of privatization. Privatization involves businesses getting into a venture not for the good of their people, but they're motivated by making a profit. It's no different than if I in my life after politics decide I want to get a McDonald's franchise, for example, or some other type of business. I'm not going to go in there because I want to necessarily provide a service to people. I'm going to go in there because I'm going to say: this is an opportunity for me to make a good income; this is an opportunity for me to make a 15 percent return, whatever, on my investment. So when we get into privatization, let's not fool ourselves about what the motivation is. The motivation is not necessarily to provide a good quality of health care to Albertans. It will be to in fact make dollars at the expense of Albertans, at the expense of taxpayers, at the expense of the health care system. We will see what's going to happen with the health care system.

One of the constituents of the member that represents Stony Plain was out at the rally here one night, and I got into a good discussion with him. He gave me a copy of a letter that he had written to the editor of the Spruce Grove Examiner, April 20, 2000. He expressed to me that it was unfortunate he was not able to have that letter published in every paper across Canada, so I'm going to take the liberty of reading a few of his comments. It's written by R.W. "Bob" Oldham from Stony Plain. The editors have captioned the letter. They put on a title called: Promising future more promises than future.

Now, in his letter Mr. Oldham makes a number of references. He refers to the local newspapers containing full page ads, those full page ads that were in the Calgary Sun, the Edmonton Journal, the Calgary Herald, and such. It also went into a lot of the smaller newspapers throughout rural Alberta. We saw those full-page ads run countless times at countless expense. He takes objection to some of the statements made in there. He takes objection to the statement "No one will pay for medically necessary services." Now, that's a quote from the ad: no one will pay for medically necessary services. Mr. Oldham responds:

Wrong! The cost of medical care ultimately comes out of our pockets, one way or another. So, we need to be concerned about how these costs will be arrived at and what they will be.

That stands to reason. You can't possibly say no one pays for medically necessary services. The government gets the money from some place. They get it from the taxpayers. He goes on to say:

When the costs of services go up, the regional health authorities have two alternatives: reduce services (and lengthen waiting lists), or ask taxpayers for more money. Those are the choices and there is nothing in Bill 11 to avoid these economic facts of life.

He then takes objection to another remark in the ad: no one will be able to jump the queue. Now, he makes it very clear.

Suppose you and your neighbour are on a long waiting list for diagnostic services at a public hospital before getting on a waiting list for surgery or curative treatment. What is there in Bill 11 to prevent your neighbour from paying several hundred dollars to get on a shorter list at a private MRI clinic? He will then be in the queue for treatment long before you [even] get your MRI scan.

So that's what we talk about in terms of queue-jumping. That's how queue-jumping can occur when Bill 11 is in place. You jump the line in the initial stages because you can lay out the money for that initial treatment that gets you on the waiting list for surgery a lot sooner than the person that can't afford to lay out the money from their own pockets.

He also goes on to say, "The government has defined a private hospital as an 'approved surgical facility.'" Now, we've heard that statement in here many times. "Perhaps they will replace 'queue jumping' with a kinder, gentler term."

Then he goes on to dispute another reference in that ad that reads: "Everyone will benefit from reduced waiting lists." Now, listen to that: everyone will benefit from reduced waiting lists.

Wrong again! A major reason for long waiting lists is the shortage of doctors and nurses. Why are we [so] short? When the government, in its infinite wisdom, drastically reduced budgets, professional training was cut back and existing medical personnel were forced to leave their profession or leave the country. Some older ones retired and are even older now. Others have established themselves in other lines of work. Many went to jobs south of the border. Are many of them going to be tempted to return to work in Alberta where a fickle government may, someday, put them out on the street again?

Then he objects to a last statement in there where it says, "Bill 11 will create more choices for Albertans." I like his response to this one. He says:

There is an element of truth in this. In the next election, we will have a choice of re-electing the people who create problems and try to solve them with phony economics or some people who will try to improve a public system that, even now, is better than any other.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that Mr. Oldham was not able to get that letter published in every newspaper across Canada because he doesn't have the financial resources this government has by simply tapping into the pockets of the taxpayer and saying: "We're going to run this full page ad here; we're going to run this full page ad there. We're going to run it again. We're going to run it a third time. We're going to run these things on the radio," spending millions and millions of dollars trying to convince Albertans of something that is not good for them, that Albertans already know is not good for them. Albertans are telling this government it is not good for them. We know it's not good for them. We want them to kill this bill, but government chooses not to listen.

Now, when I attend these rallies and I speak to constituents that come into the office and I go to Superstore – people stop me there – everybody wants to talk about Bill 11. Everybody wants to talk about Bill 11. A number of people now want to talk about Bill 18 as well, which is coming up next, but Bill 11 is the hot one now.

AN HON. MEMBER: The flat tax.

MR. WICKMAN: Yeah, the flat tax, again a very serious mistake on the part of this government. But when people talk about Bill 11, they tell me what they fear, and many of them can relate stories of how they know somebody in the United States or in New Zealand or in Britain. They themselves may have experienced a situation where they had to pay for enhanced services or they know somebody that went bankrupt or was driven to the poorhouse because of medical procedures that were conducted under a private health care system.

What they see about Bill 11 that they find the most frightening – they recognize now that this government is not prepared to listen. It doesn't matter how they feel, this government is going to do what it is going to do. They fear that Bill 11 in the initial stages is the foot in the door, the crack, the crack towards destroying the health care system in Canada, and I say in Canada because they see the potential of this to spread to other provinces if the government of Alberta gets away with it. So they see this crack in the door allowing some initial privatization, so-called surgical facilities that will have relatively short stays. In time to come we'll see that certain services can be deinsured, more and more services deinsured, where more and more of it is classified, then, as an enhanced service, that you can jump to the front of the line if you've got the dollars to pay for it. So that's their real fear, that this is the crack in the door that can be the demise of the health care system as we've come to know it, as we've come to love it, as we've come to appreciate it, as we've come to accept it, being the best, at one time at least, system in the world, bar none. Even when we look across Canada, Alberta had a certain pride in probably producing the best, if not the best close to the best, health care system in comparison to the other provinces. I've experienced a health care system in some of the other provinces, and Alberta at that particular time, in terms of health care, was a joy.

Ironically, at that time, when the health care system was going along so smoothly and people had such confidence in the health care system, do we all recall who the minister of health was who instilled that confidence in Albertans, who instilled that passion, that appreciation for a health care system that suited their needs and that was there for them when they needed it?

That crack in the door, that's the first thing.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

The other thing, now, that people will talk about is the so-called definition of surgical facilities, and people will say: why is a surgical facility different than a hospital other than it being for a profit, whereas a hospital is not for-profit? They say: "If I go to a surgical facility, I'm allowed to stay there overnight. I'm allowed to stay there a second night, a third night. They're allowed to do surgery on me, they're allowed to have an operating room, and they're allowed to have recovery beds and such. How is that so much different than a hospital?"

In the initial stages the types of surgical procedures that may be carried out will vary. They may not be as severe as what we see happening, say, at the University hospital, where we see heart transplants occurring and that. But again that foot in the door, that foot in the door that will allow the government to expand the areas of privatization and start including more and more services that will be deinsured and that will then have to be covered by taxpayers out of their own pockets. Certainly under that concept it would sound like the government could save money by transferring it to the public health care system.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

MS LEIBOVICI: Unanimous consent to continue.

MR. WICKMAN: Oh, I'd love that. Anyhow, I've used my 20 minutes, so I will cede the floor. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to the Health Care Protection Act. You know, over the last several months Bill 11 has generated a great deal of discussion, and I would like to take this opportunity to discuss the bill in response to some of the issues and concerns raised by my constituents. First, I'd like to recognize the important debate that took place in committee and especially the amendments that arose from it. The amendments alleviated some of the concerns that had been raised by my constituents.

Madam Speaker, Bill 11 in its amended form will provide protection for our publicly funded health system. It will provide protection for Albertans using the system, and I believe it will help to build a stronger foundation for health care in the future. It brings existing private surgical services clearly under the control of the public system and any future surgical services as well.

Let me begin by saying that the 63 other government MLAs and I are fathers, mothers, aunts, uncles, grandfathers, and grandmothers. Like our constituents we firmly believe that quality medical care must be available to all Albertans, regardless of the ability to pay. We want to protect our health care system, as everyone does, for future generations.

I've been asked: why do we need legislation like Bill 11? Bill 11 regulates surgical facilities. The first private surgical clinic opened in Alberta in 1984. Today there are 52. These clinics provide services like cataract surgery, dental procedures, plastic surgery, and pregnancy terminations. Albertans are not charged for the insured services they receive at these private-sector facilities now, and Bill 11 ensures that there will continue to be no charge. That is reassuring to those raising this concern.

The problem, however, is that while these surgical clinics are accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the Alberta government has no legal authority to regulate them. Our government was asked by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the blue-ribbon panel, and by federal Minister Allan Rock to bring in legislation that lays out the rules and guidelines under which all surgical facilities must operate in Alberta. Madam Speaker, Bill 11 is that legislation. It puts in place rules that regional health authorities must follow if they wish to contract out services, all within full compliance both in principle and in spirit of the Canada Health Act.

My constituents have asked if American-style private hospitals will now be allowed to operate in the province. The answer to that is no. Bill 11 totally bans private hospitals in Alberta and controls the development of private surgical facilities offering minor procedures as defined by the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

There are people in my constituency who are worried that under Bill 11 private surgical facilities could start charging patients for insured services. I want to assure them that this is not the case. Albertans are not charged for the insured services they receive at these private-sector facilities now, and Bill 11 ensures that this will continue to be the case for existing facilities and for possible future facilities.

I've been asked if services will be deinsured under Bill 11. Contracting with surgical facilities to deliver services on behalf of the publicly funded system has nothing to do with deinsuring services. This government has no plans to deinsure services, and all contracting will be done in strict adherence to the principles of the Canada Health Act. We are committed to the Canada Health Act, and that commitment is included in Bill 11. The principles are and will continue to be the foundation of the health system in Alberta.

Some of my constituents are worried that under this legislation people will be able to pay to jump the queue. Bill 11 prohibits anyone from making or accepting payments to get faster service and jump ahead in the line. I am happy to tell my constituents that the bill has even been amended to strengthen this section. This will be the law.

People want to know if this bill could open the door for private clinics to perform major surgeries. Bill 11 prohibits major surgeries as defined by the College of Physicians and Surgeons from being done anywhere except in full-service, public hospitals. The college will decide what is done and where. Physicians, not politicians, will decide.

Madam Speaker, Bill 11 was never intended to solve all the health care problems in this province. It's only one part of a much larger plan. This government is increasing our annual health spending by over a billion dollars in the next three years. We are hiring more nurses, recruiting more doctors, and increasing the number of cancer, heart, and neurosurgeries. We are increasing access to home care and continuing care services.

Madam Speaker, the debate on this bill has encompassed a dialogue on our health system that has gone far beyond the purpose in terms of the Health Care Protection Act. That is likely good in that it has alerted all Canadians to the problems facing medicare's sustainability in this country. The bottom line is that Bill 11 would protect our publicly funded health system and would give our regional health authorities wider options to consider when finding new and better ways to meet the challenges facing health care now and in the future.

I want to tell this House tonight that my constituents made it clear in the last election and again throughout this whole process that we must preserve publicly funded and publicly administered health care. In light of the servicing challenges that could threaten its sustainability, I believe, as so many others do, that we are wise to take action now. We must look to the future and take precautionary measures to protect and improve the system we all hold dear. That is why we need the health protection legislation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The debate on Bill 11 over the last few weeks has been very extensive but not too comprehensive. While many MLAs in here have taken the opportunity to speak to Bill 11, there have been in the neighbourhood of 30 MLAs who have not taken this opportunity to speak at second reading, Committee of the Whole, or to this point at third reading. It's interesting to note that these are government MLAs. Now, certainly, as the hon. member just mentioned, he was elected by the people, but he was elected by the people to represent their views. Certainly with what we've seen here tonight, this is not serving the needs and the wishes of his constituents.

We look at Bill 11 and all that has happened with it. This government took the unprecedented move of mailing this bill out to all Albertans. Now, they didn't only mail out the bill, but they put their own notes in the margins. They also spent in excess of $2 million on a PR campaign that included ads on TV, full-page ads in newspapers, yet with all of this, Madam Speaker, it has not worked. The majority of Albertans continue to have mistrust with this government, and they do not support this bill. As well, if this PR move were performed in the private industry and had this rate of failure, then those people would be fired. It certainly isn't what Albertans are spending their hard-earned taxpayer dollars for, to pay for PR campaigns rather than putting that much-needed money into our public health care system.

On Bill 11, Madam Speaker, we have seen the presentation of many studies and many reports that all support the Official Opposition's view that Bill 11 is not a bill that will serve the public interest. Many studies have been presented here before, and a number more were presented this evening by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, the Leader of the Official Opposition. We have seen from these studies that there is not one shred of evidence that supports this bill. We look around this room. We have people from all walks of life. We have businesspeople, former teachers, former school board members, and none of them in those areas would undertake something of this nature without one shred of proof. Albertans expect that from us. They expect us to be good custodians of their money.

As well, Madam Speaker, we've seen the government try and defend a bill with half truths, with misinformation, with insults, and inflammatory statements but not with studies, not with information, not with reports, and certainly not with facts. We have unelected regional health authorities in this province that are responsible for over $5 billion in our health care budget. It is hard to believe they have not done cost analyses. In fact, it's certainly hard to believe that they have not done any studies on the cost of private versus public health care systems. If they have done those studies, then why haven't we seen them here? If I were the minister of health, I would certainly want those studies, and I would certainly want that support before I would ever introduce a bill of this nature into the House. So it is hard to believe that we continue out of control down a slippery slope which will certainly lead to a health care system that is not sustainable because we are funding private companies with taxpayer dollars.

Now, we also look at the record of this government, and it's another reason why Albertans certainly don't trust this government when it comes to the introduction of this bill. All we have to do is look at the past with our NovAtels, our Swan Hills, MagCan, problems with the ATB, and the list goes on and on, of course. As the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford said, there's certainly no doubt that this Bill 11 will be passed. It will be shoved through by this government. But as bad as all those other examples I have spoken about were, Madam Speaker, this Bill 11 has the potential of spending more taxpayer dollars, which should be spent on a publicly funded health care system, and it will make all the other blunders seem small.

Never in the history of this province has the government spent in excess of $2 million for an ad campaign to promote a bill and failed. It is something that a former hon. Speaker of this House mentioned today, that he certainly hopes that Albertans do not forget about the lessons they have learned during this terrible attempt at passing legislation.

Now, Madam Speaker, we see that the more Albertans hear, the more informed they become, the more vocal and opposed to this bill they become. Support for the pulling of this bill just continues to grow and grow. We have heard their concerns. We have heard their concerns through various types of correspondence in the form of telephone calls, letters, e-mails, faxes. They just continue to pour in. At the same time, we have tens of thousands of Albertans that have taken the time to sign petitions, and those petitions have been presented on the floor of this Legislature. I can't recall the last time that we had so many public rallies in this province, rallies right here on the steps of the Legislature, where people have had the opportunity to voice their concerns and their displeasure with the bill.

So if the people in this province do not support this bill – and every poll that's been conducted indicates that they don't – who does support this bill? Obviously there are a number of government MLAs that support this bill. There are a number of special-interest groups out there. There's a small number of doctors. There are probably some insurance companies that are waiting for this to pass. So then why does this happen?

My wife went to her doctor here last week, and when he heard what I was doing for a living these days, he said: well, what about this Bill 11? She said: well, what do you think about it? And he said: the only people I can see benefiting from this at this time are a few doctors in this province that are going to get very, very rich. I certainly have no trouble concurring with those views.

Now, this is an issue, Madam Speaker, that is not only an issue of democracy, it's also an issue of private health care. The whole strategy here – and we've seen it here today, where all other business of this House was set aside so that Bill 11 could be discussed, and we see that again at third reading under Standing Order 47(1) we do have closure invoked on this bill.

Now, I've been in this House for only a little over three years, but in speaking with a number of members that have been here a lot longer than I have, none of them can remember any bill that was ever presented on the floor of this Legislature where the government had to invoke closure or a form of closure in three different ways. I think of some words I heard the other night, and I think of them because they are very, very appropriate here. We see a government trying to ram this bill through, and they hope that by passing this bill, by getting it out of this Assembly, that will be the end.

But I don't think that will be the end, Madam Speaker. That will just be the beginning. It will be the beginning of the end of a government that has grown old and has grown arrogant, a government that is failing to listen to the people. When a government stops listening to the people, then of course the voters have the say in what happens to their future.

Now, voters in this province have told the government that this bill does not make sense from a moral, an ethical, a social, or an economic standpoint. Today we heard from a former Speaker of this Assembly; we also heard from two prominent Alberta surgeons; we've also heard from the Canadian Council of Churches: all opposed to Bill 11. But this government continues not to listen. They are not listening, as well, to many doctors, nurses, health care economists, scholars, religious leaders, and many others in this province who oppose Bill 11. They have all spoken out emphatically on how dangerous this particular bill is.

All of the time the Premier has been quite willing to blame the Official Opposition for spreading misinformation and for fear mongering. The Premier has also been calling those that oppose the bill left-wing nuts. He continues to turn a deaf ear to all those who do not support this legislation. How does this government, Madam Speaker, continue to push the passing of this bill when despite all of their public relations moves to sell this bill, Albertans are not buying it? They want the bill pulled, and Albertans are right in wanting this.

Once Albertans saw this bill, once they saw its contents and its intent, they raised many concerns. Despite perhaps the biggest PR campaign ever put on by a government in this province, Albertans knew this bill would not fly. Next, we saw a desperate attempt by the government to tell Albertans what the real truth was, and truth squads were sent out to explain the bill so that Albertans would understand it. We continue to hear that same rhetoric in the House tonight.

Once again Albertans rejected what the government line was, and as Albertans were telling the government about this bill, two of their own MLAs were telling the public that overnight stays in hospitals would be disallowed by this bill, again misinformation but certainly not by the Official Opposition. Madam Speaker, Albertans realize that this is not correct. The fact that this legislation would allow overnight stays is one of the more contentious parts of the bill.

The government amendments that were put forward do not deal with the key concerns. There were 14 amendments in all, and unfortunately we did not get to complete debate in this House on 13 of those amendments, which were rammed through this House after closure was invoked at Committee of the Whole stage. To my knowledge, Madam Speaker, no major government bill was so badly flawed that they needed 14 amendments of their own to try and correct it. And this is without even hearing any opposition amendments.

So we had a piece of flawed legislation, yet the opposition did not get any input into the changes in this bill, which would make it a better piece of legislation for all Albertans. What is this government so frightened about, Madam Speaker, when they force closure and stop debate on the remaining 13 amendments? What are they frightened of when they don't allow their own members an opportunity to speak to this bill at second reading or Committee of the Whole?

It would seem to me, Madam Speaker, that the poorest prepared Albertans are the government members. Every government member was given the opportunity to debate a member of the Official Opposition in their own constituency. Precious few took that challenge. I received letters from the hon. members for Calgary-Egmont and West Yellowhead informing me that public debate on Bill 11 will occur in the Legislature. However, the government has effectively curtailed public debate in this Assembly with Standing Order 47(1), closure at Committee of the Whole, and no amendments at third reading. It appears that the government does not want to debate this bill in the Assembly or out in the constituencies. An open debate would have provided the constituents of Edmonton-Glengarry and of course all people of this province with answers to their questions about Bill 11.

This afternoon in the House, Madam Speaker, I tabled a letter from a grade 6 class at St. Anne Catholic elementary school. It is a short letter which reflects their concerns and the concerns of many constituents with this legislation. I would like to read this letter into the record this evening. It's addressed to the Premier.

Dear Mr. Klein:

We are the grade 6 class from St. Anne school. We are studying politics in social studies. We learned about democracy in Ancient Greece, and have compared it in China. We have heard about Bill 11 and how people feel about having private health care. The voices of most Albertans are not being respected. The government isn't listening to the opposition and is limiting debate. You will not allow the members of the conservative party to vote according to the wishes of constituents. We as a class and more than half of Albertans think Democracy is not being practiced in this province. The opinion of most Albertans is against Bill 11. We think that if you keep running the government like a tyrant you will never be re-elected again.

Sincerely,

Gr. 6 Class

That was an excellent letter that those students wrote.

As well, Madam Speaker, other constituents in Edmonton-Glengarry have asked a number of questions of the government, and to date they are still waiting for answers. I have one of those letters right now, from a Mr. Struthers who lives in Edmonton-Glengarry. He wrote this letter to the Minister of Health and Wellness, and as of this evening he was still waiting for a reply to some of the questions he had here. I would like to just make a few comments and read into the record some of his concerns with Bill 11. Mr. Struthers goes on to say:

I wholeheartedly agree that private facilities must be controlled. I am, however, confused by your statement that, "Right now, if a private surgical facility is accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta, it could set up shop and there is absolutely nothing the Alberta government could say or do about it."

I am assuming that you mean the College could approve an additional eye clinic and, if they did, the government, in the current circumstance, would have to let its operation proceed. Can you inform me of any problems that have arisen in that regard to this point in time? In other words, do any College approved facilities currently exist despite the wishes of the government?

Is there any chance, under the current regime, that a college could approve a hip replacement or hernia facility that could operate without the blessing of the government? I think not. In fact, I suspect that currently the government could not provide the required blessing because of the overnight constraints.

Again, he goes on to list a number of concerns he has in this regard. His first one.

First, I suspect that within the current public system there are beds and facilities that could alleviate much if not all of the pressure if they were put back into service and the necessary staff was engaged to run [it].

[Mr. Bonner's speaking time expired]

MRS. SOETAERT: Aw, Bill. You didn't get finished.

MR. BONNER: No, I didn't get finished, but I want to thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 11 in third reading.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise tonight to make some final comments on the Health Care Protection Act. The process that we're participating in began more than two years ago with the introduction of Bill 37 and the subsequent blue-ribbon panel on Bill 37, which was a broad public consultation process. [The sound system malfunctioned] I'm getting some feedback here, Madam Speaker. [interjections] Most of the feedback I've got pertaining to this bill has been positive.

As I was saying, the blue-ribbon panel was a broad public consultation process that developed the policy guidelines on private clinics and the text of Bill 11, which we are now debating, the Health Care Protection Act.

Some Albertans have been wondering why Bill 11 is being brought forward. Certainly there are people who would shy away from a debate such as this simply because of the controversy generated so far. Well, Madam Speaker, there are several reasons for bringing in Bill 11, and they point to the fact that Bill 11 is the right thing to do.

The first reason we're doing this is because a legislative gap exists. The Alberta government does not presently have the legislative authority to restrict or prohibit the opening of new clinics. As it stands, so long as a facility is approved by the College of Physicians and Surgeons to do procedures outside a hospital, there is nothing we as government can do to prevent that from happening. To date more than 50 private clinics offering minor surgical procedures have set up in Alberta. More than 30 of these clinics were opened while the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was the then minister of health.

Make no mistake about it, Madam Speaker: this government and Albertans alike value the role that these specialized clinics play in contributing to the well-being of our province and its citizens. At the same time, it is equally important that we have the ability to ensure that these clinics and any new clinics that open in the future always maintain the highest standards and serve the best interests of Albertans in the publicly funded health care system.

The College of Physicians and Surgeons recognized this and asked our government to close the legislative gap and play a leadership role in providing surgical facilities to ensure that all the proper protective guidelines are in place. Moreover, Madam Speaker, the federal Minister of Health, the Hon. Allan Rock, recently wrote a letter to the Minister of Health and Wellness to the same effect, asking that that framework for approval and accreditation of private facilities be developed and enacted as quickly as feasible.

Well, Madam Speaker, we now have that framework, and it is Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act. Bill 11 places some very strict guidelines on what kind of surgical clinics can be developed within our province and how those clinics can conduct their business. First of all, Bill 11 slams the door on private hospitals and anything that may contribute to a two-tier, American style health care system. Albertans don't want a two-tier, American style health care system. The hon. members of this government don't want a two-tier, American style health care system either. Bill 11 safeguards against this possibility with strong protective mechanisms.

I find it quite ironic that some nine years ago the Leader of the Official Opposition believed in and supported the basic tenets and protections offered in the Health Care Protection Act. In 1991, when she was the minister of health, she brought forward a discussion paper to the government caucus outlining possible legislative options to regulate nonhospital facilities. The paper states that the “innovations in medical technology are changing the way medical services are . . .” [interjections] I’m getting some interruptions from across the way here, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: We’re just having a real debate.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: But you don’t have the floor, hon. member. I would ask that we respect the person that does have the floor.

Go ahead, hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I was saying, the paper states:

Innovations in medical technology are changing the way medical services are delivered and expanding the range of locations in which they can be provided. Hospital stays are no longer required for many procedures that can now be performed on an ambulatory basis.

The report commissioned by the now Leader of the Opposition and former health minister goes on to say:

Approaches to the development, organization and funding of ambulatory services need to be as innovative as the technologies which make ambulatory care possible . . . As the number and type of ambulatory care services increases, the need arises to develop a method to ensure quality service and patient safety.

Finally, Madam Speaker, comes a call for exactly what Bill 11 proposes. Again, I quote from the same discussion paper.

Appropriate methods of funding ambulatory care services both inside and outside the hospital are needed to facilitate a shift from inpatient to ambulatory services when they are safe, efficacious and cost-effective.

MS LEIBOVICI: Where does it say profit in there?

MR. MARZ: I continue to get some negative feedback from the opposition, Madam Speaker, and continued interruptions. Perhaps they don’t like to hear what their leader was saying in 1991.

I don’t know about you, Madam Speaker, but what I’ve just quoted from the Leader of the Opposition, what she said in 1991, sounds a great deal like Bill 11 to me. The opposition leader suggested and supported the principles of Bill 11 then, so why is she opposed to Bill 11 now? [interjections] Perhaps there are a number of reasons. Perhaps it’s just because a year later the Leader of the Official Opposition began to slide down the slippery slope of supporting a two-tier, American style health care system herself. The thin edge of the wedge, if you will.

In this Assembly she said – and I’m quoting this from Hansard, June 10, 1992.

My view is that we don’t have all the answers in the Canadian . . . system. I think we should always be open to learning more, and it may well be that we can learn something from the quality management structures that the Americans have put in place.

Madam Speaker, it would seem that nothing has changed since then. In an Alberta Liberal caucus news release dated November 4, 1999, the Leader of the Opposition committed to banning private hospitals from receiving taxpayer dollars by requiring physicians who practise in private hospitals “to opt out of the Alberta Health Care Insurance Plan.” This clearly is not the outright ban on private hospitals as proposed in Bill 11. In fact, this is clearly the slippery slope that the opposition Liberals so often maliciously speak about. Instead of pointing the finger, they should be chastising themselves for not supporting the principles of the Canada Health Act. The Liberal leader’s position is truly what two-tier health care is about, where patients would be able to queue-jump into an opted-out health care sector where they could pay for services out of pocket to an opted-out physician in a facility that would presumably be opted out of the public system as well.

Madam Speaker, contrary to the Liberal leader’s position supporting two-tier health, the Health Care Protection Act absolutely bans private hospitals and ensures that approved surgical facilities provide a net benefit for patients as well as the public health care system in general, since those approved facilities will in essence become part of the public system, where the Alberta health care insurance card will be all you need to pay for your health care services.

If the stringent criteria found in Bill 11 are not met, absolutely no contract will be awarded. The onus is completely on the contract applicant to meet each and every condition outlined in Bill 11.

Madam Speaker, we’re introducing Bill 11 because it is the right thing to do. Albertans recognize that our province is changing; the health care system needs to adapt to our changing needs as well. Our population is growing and aging, and as it does, Albertans will need to access an increasing number of services from our health care system. Moreover, the cost of providing services such as purchasing new technologies, new medicines, and new techniques is also growing.

At present Alberta’s share of contributions towards Alberta health care funding is 76 cents out of every dollar compared to the federal contribution of just 11 cents. This year the province’s share amounts to $5.65 billion, one-third of the provincial program expenditures, $14.8 million a day, or $1,639 per Albertan.

Madam Speaker, this government has increased spending in the area of health to meet increased demands. In fact, since 1994 this government has reinvested $3 for every $1 that was taken out of the system when our fiscal house was not in order. At the same time, we have recognized that simply throwing money at the problem is not a solution, nor is it an approach that is acceptable to Albertans.

Again, Madam Speaker, when the Leader of the Official Opposition was health minister in 1992, she is quoted in Hansard as saying:

I’m not an advocate for adding on to the existing system . . . That’s why I say, as a planning scenario, freeze the dollars. Don’t add more dollars to the status quo, because if you do so, you merely perpetuate this notion that the status quo has to continue.

She goes on to say:

In my view, the only way we can get to the fundamental reform is to hammer it and not give in to “Let’s put a little more money here,” because that merely continues on in the way we’ve been going.

Well, Madam Speaker, we disagree with that ideology, and it appears that members across the way don’t like to hear what their leader has said in the past or in recent history as well. Perhaps if they listened more closely when she said it, they wouldn’t be arguing so vigorously against Bill 11 today. [interjections]

Speaker’s Ruling Decorum

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, just a moment. There seems to be an awful lot of speakers speaking on this bill. The chair has only recognized one person. For the last several hours everyone here has been very, very good. Could we ask that over the next little while we maintain some decorum and allow the person that’s standing to speak without interjection?

Go ahead, hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I was saying, we disagree with that ideology. Instead of freezing health care funding, this government has made tremendous investments in public health care. We also have an excellent track record of alleviating pressure points within the system when they do occur.

Madam Speaker, we've hammered nothing in terms of bringing Bill 11 forward.

MS OLSEN: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, there's been a point of order raised by Edmonton-Norwood.

Point of Order
Questioning a Member

MS OLSEN: Beauchesne section 333. I was just wondering if the member would entertain a question about the Didsbury hospital.

MR. MARZ: No, Madam Speaker. My time is precious to get my points across. If the member across the way would have been listening to all the debate so far, she'd probably get all her questions answered.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, yes or no would have sufficed. Go ahead.

MR. MARZ: You can take that as a no, Madam Speaker.

11:10

MR. MARZ: As I was saying, Madam Speaker, we've hammered nothing in terms of bringing Bill 11 forward. The lengthy consultation process has been well documented both inside and outside this Assembly beginning with Bill 37 and the blue-ribbon panel discussions. The government has listened to the concerns of Albertans, and I am pleased that with the well-thought-out amendments that passed in Committee of the Whole, further strengthening of an already strong piece of legislation now exists.

Madam Speaker, the people of this province and indeed this country have spoken. The status quo is not an option. I believe Bill 11 is a product of innovative and forward thinking. It will give regional health authorities the options and flexibility they need to ensure the continuation of a strong and sustainable publicly funded system. Bill 11 will give regional health authorities the opportunity to effectively use approved surgical facilities to increase access, shorten waiting lists, and serve more patients in need of care. Contracting out minor surgeries will free up valuable hospital operating room space for more complex surgeries which require an entire range of equipment and services found only in a public hospital.

It's been pointed out that Bill 11 won't solve all of the problems the health care system faces. That's true, Madam Speaker. Bill 11 is just one part of a broad six-point plan that this government is working on, and that six-point plan includes such initiatives as increasing the health care budget by more than a billion dollars over the next three years, increasing the number of key and lifesaving surgeries to shorten waiting lists, hiring more doctors, nurses, and frontline staff, and increasing the number of spaces for students in medical schools. This is something that's been asked to be included in Bill 11 by members across the way, but it is part of our six-point plan and more appropriately included as part of that plan than in legislation.

Increasing the number of long-term beds in Alberta and purchasing new and high-tech medical equipment is also part of that plan.

We've heard about increasing the number of MRIs in the province already. Launching a long-term immunization program and developing and implementing screening programs for breast and cervical cancer are also part of that six-point plan.

Madam Speaker, these are important initiatives that will make our health care system stronger and able to meet the challenges of the new millennium. Realigning priorities and relocating resources is a constant challenge that must continue if we're to keep the costs within the capacity of public funding while ensuring accessibility, quality, and accountability. To that end, we'll continue to work with the other provinces and the federal government to find new solutions to national problems in health care.

I'm proud to join my government colleagues in supporting part of a long-term vision for addressing our health care concerns. I certainly appreciate all the feedback that I've received from my constituents on the health care system in general and on Bill 11 specifically. I urge all members of this Assembly to support Bill 11 and our public health care system.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Seeing the lateness of the night, I can't say that it's a pleasure standing up, but it is very important to stand up to speak to Bill 11. You know, we keep standing and kind of wondering when the next motion for adjournment is, and today we got a motion saying that we could only speak one more time because, typically, they don't want to see any of our amendments.

As I stood in the Assembly on April 10, 2000, my first words were, "This bill does little to protect individuals or Albertans in general." I went on to say that the government has three choices: scrap the bill, amend it to disallow overnight stays in approved surgical facilities, or ram it through and hope the firestorm dies down.

Well, we know how the story continues, and it's continuing to unravel with all the information being presented from all around the world discounting and questioning why this government is moving ahead with this bill.

Examples are Australia, New Zealand, Sweden, England, and the U.S. We also see that in some of these countries the complete government has been changed because of their first push for privatization. The question that Albertans are asking from the far south and the far north is: why are they doing this? We see cracks forming in the old and new Tory parties, and I say "parties" because they are two totally different parties. Friends of mine who actually sat in this Chamber under past Premier Lougheed can't fathom why or who the members are in this present Premier's kitchen cabinet calling the shots.

As a very normal Albertan I've been questioning the government's motives. I was actually waiting for the Premier to pull the bill when everything that was presented was shot down: the hip operations, the hernias. You know, we get thrown the fact that what's happening in Ontario is the best way to go for hernias. Well, if I were the Ontario government, I would be closing that place down because it's a total rip-off, their three-night stays, their 72 hours. They've created a hotel down there.

You know, the Premier has used everything possible, and everything that he has put out has actually been shut down. So why are we still looking at this? Albertans have very deep feelings and thoughts that the provincial government administration has a secret plan to erode public health care. People are starting to really, really distrust this government with their health care. I repeat: Albertans do not trust this government with their health care, nor should they.

The Premier has been unclear about his intentions. Not long ago he openly questioned why those people with money shouldn't get faster access. This goes totally against the sense of fairness and equality that Albertans have, and they resent it. It's like skimming cream from the top.

You know, Madam Speaker, Bill 11 allows certain services to be contracted out to private clinics/hospitals, but at what cost to the public system? Does privatization mean that it's cheaper, or does it set up people or companies to profit at our expense? We think of it, we hear of it, and we know that we are actually setting out a bill that is going to be funding private companies with our taxpayer dollars while we've got many, many hospital facilities still available. Why aren't we filling up our own facilities?

You know, the PR campaign around this . . .

MR. HANCOCK: Did you read the amendments?

MR. GIBBONS: Yes, I have. You know, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud sits over there opening his mouth and talking about the amendments, which are a point of disgust. The amendments that were put forward came after the bill was introduced. It was a joke. A bill was put out there that had more amendments than the actual bill.

Do you know what? I really think this government has actually set out under the path of a book by a person from New Zealand, Roger Douglas, called Unfinished Business. It has set out so well how they actually went about this over the last years.

Going back to the PR campaign and before I was rudely interrupted by the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud – maybe he should look at his own seat and be quiet about it. Remember when our Premier claimed that he and his government were listening? Of course, he failed to explain who he was listening to. Albertans are protesting this bill through their presence at rallies and town hall meetings throughout the province. The Premier just resorts to name-calling. Isn't that interesting? You know, I have friends that work in the AADAC system, and they say that there's something behind all this.

The Premier just resorts to name-calling, and that's really ridiculous. Are we seeing the cracks forming? I would dare the Premier to repeat the comments that were published in the Edmonton Journal today by his communications spin-doctor. Watch the cracks become an earthquake, Madam Speaker.

When we recessed for the first break, Madam Speaker, I actually thought the Premier would use this time to pull the bill. My thinking was that this would give the government and the Premier their way out, a whole week of spin-doctoring, and actually coming back in and saying, "You know, I've listened to my wife. I've listened to my father. Let's pull this bill before it gets too far." Then after the April 4, 2000, speeches the Premier failed to sell Albertans on what he's trying to introduce under this bill. You know, this bill is actually not for Albertans. It's for, I would suppose, his kitchen cabinet friends, a bill to protect their attempts to profit from Albertans under the guise that the public clinics will shorten waiting lists, that private will always be cheaper.

Why did the government continue on this road by pushing this bill through when many, many Albertans are concerned about the health care system, which should be in place to protect our children and our grandchildren. We should always be vigilant about the statements repeated by the Premier many times: trust me; while I am Premier, there will be no two-tier system in this province. The more I think about this, the more I worry about what these comments might possibly mean. What happens when he isn't the Premier? Is it possible that in this next year this is going to happen? Is he dispensable?

After the spring session and bringing in this act and bringing in the tax bill, Bill 18, is complete, maybe his time will be up. If it is a political game that is being played, that is playing out this particular system, well, I don't believe in this type of playing games, pointing fingers between the feds and the province. Maybe the hon. member will stand up afterwards. There's a direction in politics in this country where the implications of both Bill 11 and Bill 18 are heading, starting in Alberta and soon to be overflowing the boundaries into other provinces. What is wrong with this politics is . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, the chair is going to ask you to move on to what we are in fact debating. It has to do with Bill 11 and whether the question should be put. Let's bring it back to that perspective.

MR. GIBBONS: Madam Speaker, I am speaking about Bill 11 and I am talking about the direction in which it's going, but none of the people here actually really, really care what's happening except they want this night over, tomorrow night over, so Bill 11 is actually out of this House, so they can actually ignore what's happening out there.

Nothing in this bill ensures that contracting out services to private facilities will open up more beds within public systems. Hospital beds, operating theatres, and other services are already available to open up within public hospitals but remain closed because of a shortage of funding or professional staff. It is fundamentally incorrect to think the solution to the problem of scarce resources within the public system is to split the resources between two systems.

Why isn't it better to take the same amount of money that the Premier and his government would hand over to private hospitals and give it to public hospitals which have the capacity to meet the needs? Where's the evidence that giving the same amount of money to private hospitals is going to cost less in the long run or provide a better income? The government has no data to show that this will benefit the health system.

We also read and understand that the city of Edmonton is being given no data that in the Capital region this is going to benefit or make the system cheaper. Perhaps the data is available. Maybe they have lots of data, but nothing will show up in the information this government wants us to see.

Madam Speaker, this is what we are talking about. We're talking about a gentleman like Dr. Walley Temple speaking out and actually stressing that the most significant problem with for-profit care is that it destroys the sacred trust between the patient and physician. It makes the doctors and the nurses into instruments of the investors, and it makes the patients a commodity.

We also think about other items about Bill 11. Bill 11 is not the solution to every challenge in the health system. In some people's minds it is only a tool to help reduce waiting lists. The government has never said which waiting lists are of concern. It has not explained why the minor solutions which it says may not be adopted in the health regions are worth a huge political struggle.

We also look at comments coming out from the churches, writing to Minister Rock to prevent Bill 11. To spin against that we also read that the government is saying that legally the challenge would go against a move from Minister Rock in the federal system against this one.

Teachers, unions, the AMA, doctors, and nurses are all concerned about this. In the last few days the Premier has said that he is going to give us a list of insured services. I'd really like to see that, because that is one thing that should be out there so people can actually gain some trust. You know, I wouldn't like to say that our government has totally lost all trust, but that seems to be what's happened.

Support for the health bill ignores the key issues. First, this government has reduced government spending on health care by shifting the cost to individual Albertans. Second, one of the early actions of the government was to reduce levels of coverage and deinsure several medical services, including eye exams. Third, while Bill 11 prevents private hospitals, it allows private surgical facilities that are equivalent to private hospitals. Fourth, the bill allows the sale of enhanced services – some doctors in Alberta have used the sale of enhanced services to replace facility fees – and it allows patients to queue-jump. Fifth, when complaints were filed with the regulator regarding the conflict of interest and the queue-jumping, no action was taken.

I mentioned in my previous speeches that there are questions in this House. When we bring things forward, all of a sudden 14 amendments pop forward. Well, you know, people ask why we need opposition, but believe me, there are more people saying that we need opposition in this province than anywhere else, and at this time in history I really believe that is totally true. The College of Physicians and Surgeons found that doctors could justify markups from 300 percent to 750 percent due to the increased costs of providing services privately, and the government didn't see fit to investigate the complaints of queue-jumping.

You know, this is a major, major concern. It goes back to: what are private, for-profit hospitals? The introduction of private, for-profit hospitals will open up a variety of cream-skimming opportunities. If surgeons are able to work in both the public and the private system, as they are at present in Alberta, and have equal interests in the private facility, it will be economically advantageous to steer their most straightforward cases and high-paying patients to the private facility. Cost shifting is the effect, as cost reductions improve the bottom line of private, for-profit organizations.

In addition to serving the less complex and costly Canadian patients, we might expect a private facility to market its services to Americans. Indeed, if a private clinic could attract a sufficiently large number of American clientele, it would have no economic incentive to care for Canadians at all, unless they were prepared to pay extra in some form or another. In this case, public-sector shortage and waiting lists allegedly faced by Albertans would be exacerbated not alleviated by private care.

The private hospitals also provide motivations and opportunities to promote additional, uninsured, or not medically necessary services which carry substantial profit margins. These services may appear to be merely offered to patients to choose or reject, but they may be packaged with insured services such that practices are not optional, or the patients who accept and pay for these optional services may be placed in a much shorter queue. The patients will typically have no way of evaluating the real value, let alone the true cost, of the extras.

Going back and looking at what's wrong, the politics of this has actually led us to ask: really where are we going? You know, let us not forget that the protection act might be a major interest to the present head of the Calgary regional health authority and the former Treasurer of this province. He is the person who believes in experimenting with our health system instead of planning. I hope he stays in Calgary and leaves his mess within Calgary and not throughout the rest of our province. We're also hearing that he might be the person that's going out to bring the fold back into the feeling that this government can be trusted again. Well, after what's happening in Calgary and what he believes in experimenting, I really believe he should stay where he is.

You know, we have witnessed health care dismantling over the past seven years all across Canada. This problem won't be solved and go away by pointing a finger. We need the federal government to take the leadership role and draw all our provinces and territories to the table. Both the feds and the province have been tinkering and allowing experiments to occur while turning a blind eye. Well, this doesn't show leadership, and I actually hope that if this bill were pulled at the right time, while saving face, this government still could show a leadership role in actually pushing the feds into doing something on this.

As I listen to members from the government benches, I can't believe that they aren't inundated with concerns around Bill 11 from people in their constituencies. Well, Madam Speaker, I am. I don't believe the e-mail is any shorter in their offices than mine or the faxes or the people coming in and asking where they can sign on the dotted lines on petitions.

A week ago Sunday I popped into my office to grab some more stuff because I needed it. I forgot to take it the day before. There was a letter on the fax machine, and I tabled it the next day. It was a fantastic letter by Sheila Hogan. The letter was well put together about her concerns around health, and when I got to the covering letter – I read it last – she actually bawled me out for not being out front fighting this more. Well, I looked for her phone number. She had no phone number on it, so I looked it up in the book. There was nothing. So, Madam Speaker, I drove right to her house at 5:30 in the afternoon. I spent three-quarters of an hour on her step talking about it and talking about what our concerns were about it. I sent some copies of Hansard over the next day of how different people spoke on it, and she actually brought a number of people down to the rallies over the next few nights from the Alberta Hospital. Their concern around this was very evident. I don't believe there is a member who hasn't gotten that type of phone calls. I don't believe they can actually not stand up here and put their thoughts on this bill on the record.

You know, we look at this, and we look at what went wrong with the British system, and that is party control. I believe my speeches and the scrutiny by the people in my constituency will stand and hold quite firm that I am totally against this bill. I will oppose it and keep opposing it. It is too vague and it lacks hard facts. To Albertans trying to comprehend this bill, it is not what it's saying; it's what it's not saying.

Well, my second suggestion was to disallow overnight stays in approved surgical facilities. When I introduced an amendment two weeks ago . . .

Oh, I ran out of time. Sorry, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise this evening in third reading of the Health Care Protection Act to speak about this bill and to recommend that we put our arguments to the question. Without a doubt this bill has generated more discussion on the delivery of health care than we could ever have imagined. In fact, I've learned more about the intricacies of our health care system than I ever thought existed. I have learned more about the personal medical condition of many resident Albertans. I have learned about the responsibilities of health care providers like I didn't know before, and I have learned about the different circumstances in which health care is delivered across this country, and indeed I would say around the globe, because I have taken the time to look at the studies and the circumstances and the situations that have been put in place in Australia, in New Zealand, in Britain, and certainly by our closest neighbour to the south, the United States.

What this bill does is provide for the delivery of an option of health care provided by choice to the regional health authorities that is unlike any other delivery model of health care on the surface of this globe. So when I say that this bill has generated discussion on health care and its delivery, that is, indeed, an understatement. However, when I talk with a number of my constituents, when I have the opportunity to be on a number of panels, and when I listen to those who are so-called critics of the bill, what I find most frequently is that they are speaking in speculation about what is going to happen if Bill 11 does come into play. They are talking about what is happening in other parts of the world. They are talking about what they imagine is going to take place should this bill pass. But when I ask them have they read what is in the bill, many of them are not familiar with what is in the bill.

I'm going to use an example from a panel that I sat on on Friday afternoon. It was a panel that was put in place to talk about Bill 11 by the Canadian Council of Churches. It was hosted out at Providence Centre in Edmonton. On that panel was Kevin Taft. It was moderated by the Reverend David Pfrimmer from the University of Waterloo. There was also on that the reverend from the Robertson-Wesley church here in Edmonton. There was also a professor of nursing at the University of Alberta, Dr. Donna Wilson. No one else on that panel spoke about what is in Bill 11. They all talked about their theory. They all talked about what they thought about our government, and I suffered through their accusations, which were, quite frankly, very untrue.

However, when the moderator of the panel, David Pfrimmer, said that we as the Canadian Council of Churches are going to send a letter to Minister Allan Rock and tell him to tell the provincial government of Alberta to shelve Bill 11, I said to him: what is it in Bill 11 that you object to? He said: well, I object to . . . [interjections]

MS LEIBOVICI: Overnight stays and enhanced services.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Excuse me, hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Edmonton-Meadowlark, the hon. Member for St. Albert is allowed to speak. If you take exception to it, you can talk with the member after, but don't have this discussion back and forth, please.

Debate Continued

MRS. O'NEILL: Madam Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark was not there, so she does not know what the gentleman said. But what he did say was: I object to what it might do. So I said to him: what might it do? He said: well, it might lead to a destabilization of our social system. So I said to him: and what in the bill says that? He paused, and I said: have you read Bill 11? Now, this is a man who is authoring a letter to the federal Minister of Health. I said: have you read the bill? He said: not really. That's absolutely devastating to me, for someone who would want to speak on behalf of the Canadian Council of Churches and who was going to rail against us as a government for not having an understanding and a caring health care system. He was going to write with all authority and pomposity to the federal Minister of Health and say to him: tell them to put it aside.

So, quite frankly, I would like to say that I feel there are those elements of the bill that have great merit in order to deliver to the citizens of Alberta a caring, considerate, health care system that will give our regional health authorities the opportunity to get for you and me, our children, our grandchildren, and all of those who come after us, the opportunity to get the surgical services and procedures that they need and want in a more timely fashion, and certainly, in a greater number than the current situation allows.

There is one benign section of Bill 11 that I feel has the strength of what I have heard from many, many people across this province. What I have heard them say is: "We need a debate on the bigger picture. We need a debate on how we are going to sustain our beloved medicare. We need to have an engagement of the federal government, of all of the other nine provinces and three territorial health departments, and we need them to sit down together and say, in effect, that we have to look at how we deliver health care in this country. We have to make sure that we do proper reforms with respect to primary health care. We must evaluate how we are remunerating our physicians in this country. We have to look at how we are going to address the exponentially growing demand for technological services and for pharmaceutical items that we have for all of the illnesses that we are able to identify here."

What we as a government want to do, through Bill 11, is to provide for the establishment of an advisory council on health that would, in my estimation, probably be composed of perhaps an ethicist, a health care policy author, a health care economist, health care providers, and health care consumers so that we can have the big, important, necessary debate, and that is what part 4, sections 27 and 28 identify that we can have when we pass Bill 11. In fact, that's what I heard the Catholic health authority and association and affiliates say, because I attended the meeting with them and that is exactly what they said. They said that we need to have this discussion on the broad scale to look at the breadth and the depth of the delivery of health care and medicare in this country. That's what they want.

That's also what I understand a number of the religious groups want. They want to make sure we have this particular debate, and that's what I say part 4, sections 27 and 28 of Bill 11 do address. That is what I'm hearing when we do as a government listen to what the people are saying, and they are saying: please make sure you do something to give us access in a more timely fashion to the health care surgical provisions that are available in this province or have the potential to be available.

They're also telling us that we must look in conjunction with the federal government and also all of the other provincial governments at how we are going to look after and sustain medicare as we know it. So I would exhort everybody in this room to endorse Bill 11 because it addresses what people want, which is accessibility. It tells us that we as a government are looking after the bigger picture. We want to be engaged in that discussion.

The other thing that it does is give us the element of consumer protection, because, quite frankly, those clinics that are in operation do not have that kind of control that we should regulate from the government. If we don't pass Bill 11, we are going to find ourselves in a situation where we have a private, parallel health care system in this province, which I can't afford and I daresay most other people can't either.

So that's why I welcome, Madam Speaker, the opportunity to speak here today to correct the statements that I have heard from across the floor in this House that we do not listen and that we do not care. I'm going to tell you that if we are concerned about the health and the provision of health care in this province, then we will be very responsible in voting yes for Bill 11, because it looks after the people instead of looking after the political agenda of those who oppose it.

MS OLSEN: Well, Madam Speaker, I've never seen 16 votes disappear so quickly in all my life. [interjections]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Go ahead now, hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Okay. Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, here we are at third reading or what I thought was going to be third reading. We're kind of actually on a motion to shut this debate down. We're at this point because the government chose to do it, and I repeat, chose. The government chose to invoke closure at committee, at second, and at third reading. You know, we are probably the only province in the country where the schoolchildren understand the word closure in a parliamentary context. That's because this government uses it so often.

This is likely the most contentious bill to come before this Legislative Assembly. This government has slowly and methodically worked to tear apart the most valued social program in this country and in this province.

All Canadians are watching as they know the impact this bill could have across the country. The latest Angus Reid poll shows that 60 percent of Albertans, clearly 60 percent of Albertans, are against this bill. In early April the Angus Reid poll showed that 94 percent of Albertans were concerned about the negative byproducts of this bill, and that is something we have to pay attention to. Thousands of Albertans have rallied at provincial buildings and the Legislature. Tens of thousands have mailed letters and sent e-mails and faxes, and over 100,000 signatures will have been added to the petitions during this debate, Madam Speaker.

Now, the Premier has stated that Liberals are responsible for sending out malicious misinformation. Well, let's have a look at a few of these issues, Madam Speaker. I can say that at no time during this debate on this bill has the government met the test. They have not been able to substantiate their claim that this legislation will benefit all Albertans, and I repeat, all Albertans. In fact, the Premier said the other day that he couldn't name one surgery that may require an overnight stay. Fortunately, he passed it off to the College of Physicians and Surgeons, as he should have done in the first place. The College of Physicians and Surgeons have already stated that the long-touted hip replacement waiting list this bill was designed to accommodate will not be considered as minor surgery and therefore not be eligible to be performed in a surgical facility under Bill 11.

The government didn't even offer an explanation as to why they did not consult with the AMA or the College of Physicians and Surgeons before making this blanket statement. I cannot understand why, if this government is wanting to garner the trust of Albertans, they would not have consulted with the college or the AMA prior to bringing this bill forward, not after.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services stated last week that the subamendment put forward by my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Meadowlark will ensure that people of Alberta will feel suspicion around this bill. I want it to be perfectly clear that this government does not need one bit of help from the Official Opposition. Its actions or lack thereof, like not consulting with the Alberta Medical Association, is what's created this climate of distrust, suspicion, and uncertainty, and they ought to be big enough to take the flak that comes with it. They are the government.

Madam Speaker, the latest propaganda from the Premier states that Bill 11 complies with and supports the principles of the Canada Health Act. Well, I'm not sure about that. You see, the Premier has asked the federal Health minister, Allan Rock, to review the bill and let him know what needs to be changed. The minister sent a letter to the Premier identifying the particular problems as he saw it. But what did the Premier do? He whined, and he kicked, and he said: I don't like the answer. That's what he did. That's our Premier. In fact, Minister Rock stated in his letter, and I quote: "Private clinics or 'surgical facilities,' as proposed under Bill 11, are considered hospitals under the Canada Health Act."

Now let's see what the formal definition is of a hospital as outlined by the former federal Minister of Health, Ms Marleau. She stated that as a matter of legal interpretation, the definition of [a] 'hospital' set out in the [Canada Health] Act includes any facility which provides acute, rehabilitative or chronic care. This definition covers health care facilities known as 'clinics.'

This issue arose when? Well, when the province allowed facility fees to be charged and the government here was fined $420,000 a month. Do you remember that? My colleagues remember that. I think the definition is amply clear. It's adequately clear, so it's time that the government opened up their ears.

Now, let's move on to another point. The Premier states that the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the federal Health minister urged the government to bring forward this legislation regulating surgical facilities. Well, let's examine that a little more closely, and I'm going to quote again a letter written by the former federal health minister Diane Marleau. It's a letter that she sent to all the provincial health ministers January 6, 1995. All of the provincial health ministers. She stated:

I indicated earlier in this letter, that while user charges for medically necessary services are my most immediate concern, I am also concerned about the more general issues raised by the proliferation of private clinics. In particular, I am concerned about their potential to restrict access by Canadian residents to medically necessary services by eroding our publicly funded system. These concerns were reflected in the policy statement which resulted from the Halifax meeting. Ministers of Health present, with the exception of the Alberta Minister, agreed to:

- take whatever steps are required to regulate the development of private clinics in Canada, and to maintain a high quality, publicly funded medicare system.
- Private clinics raise several concerns for the federal government, concerns which the provinces share. These relate to:
- weakened public support for the tax funded and publicly administered system;
 - the diminished ability of governments to control costs once they have shifted from the public to the private sector;
 - the possibility, supported by the experience of other jurisdictions, that private facilities will concentrate on easy procedures, leaving public facilities to handle more complicated, costly cases; and [finally]
 - the ability of private facilities to offer financial incentives to health care providers that could draw them away from the public system – resources may be devoted to features which attract consumers, without in any way contributing to the quality of care.

The only way to deal effectively with these concerns is to regulate the operation of private clinics.

Now, it is clear that the intent of the letter was to deal with the proliferation of private facilities. It was to stop it. Of the concerns identified by the federal government and concurred in by the provinces, Bill 11 provides for exactly what the provinces and feds wanted to stop: weakened public support, diminished ability to control costs, public facilities left with the major and most costly surgeries, and the draw of medical professionals to the private sector by private health care providers. This is what they wanted to stop. Bill 11 does exactly what they wanted to stop.

The legislation that other provinces have passed prohibits further proliferation of private hospitals and clinics and does not allow for enhanced services. It is time for the Premier and this government to quit manipulating data and documents, to quit twisting the words of qualified professionals and start telling the real story, Madam Speaker.

Now let's turn to the potential implications of the North American free trade agreement. This government states that Bill 11 has absolutely no implications for the health system under NAFTA. Well, Madam Speaker, we have heard otherwise. The most compelling argument came from Dr. Michael Rachliss who suggested: given that there appear to be serious NAFTA implications and that an international tribunal would be adjudicating the issue in an international court, it would not be in the best interests of Canadians to put Canada's public health care system at risk.

Barry Appleton, an international trade lawyer, also indicated that Bill 11 will open the door to any private company in the U.S. or Mexico. Given the Americans' lust for racing to the top of the personal wealth ladder and the Mexican government's inability to deal with widespread corruption at all levels within their country, I am not ready to put Canada's health care system up for sale to the cheapest bidder through Bill 11.

Let's also look at a recent example of a decision by the WTO in relation to drug patents as reported in the Globe and Mail on May 6. The WTO believed Canada's drug patent protecting name brand pharmaceuticals is insufficient and should be extended. The federal government allows these multinational companies 20 years' protection from the date the patent application is filed. The generic drug companies can then and only then introduce their drugs into the market thereby creating competition.

Now, the intervening companies were from the European Union and the United States, okay? They were from other countries. The federal government will appeal the ruling, but past history shows that although the ruling may vary, it is usually upheld. The ruling is estimated to cost consumers and health care plans in this country about $200 million over the next few years as the generic drug companies will not be able to market their lower cost drugs to consumers. That is a WTO decision.

Madam Speaker, this is only one example of the impact of an international ruling. Alberta won't even be a player in the big scheme of things if NAFTA or the WTO were to rule in favour of expanding the private health care market in Canada. You see, the legislation has far-reaching effects, and that's why all Canadians, not just Albertans, should be concerned.

The Premier is eagerly attempting to create a fight with the federal government, and I think the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General just alluded to that. I think he's taken his stabs too. This has been demonstrated time and time again by his attempt to pit the Prime Minister against his federal Health minister: the Premier's comments about Minister Rock's attendance at the University of Calgary and not calling to notify the Premier and his latest comments as reported in the Edmonton Journal on Sunday, May 7. Here the Premier says that the Prime Minister said: "Ralph, for some reason, they can get away with this in socialist B.C. and socialist Saskatchewan and socialist Manitoba."

MRS. SOETAERT: I don't think the Prime Minister would say that.

MS OLSEN: Boy, oh boy, I don't think the Prime Minister would say that, either. But, boy, oh boy, this Premier likes to be a victim, you see, and this is his way of playing the victim. Poor, poor, pitiful Ralph. Everybody is picking on him, even the federal Health minister. Well, I don't know . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member . . .

MS OLSEN: Yes, I understand what you're going to say, Madam Speaker. Well, I don't know if the Prime Minister said this or not. However, I do know that the Prime Minister advised the Premier to take all the legislation that exists to the health ministers' conference and have it reviewed and compared to all other legislation in this country. We already know that Bill 11 does not meet the test of the other legislation and that Minister Rock has asked the Premier to amend the bill to meet that test, or, in his words: we will have to respond accordingly.

Well, I take Minister Rock at his word, and I believe he will take action when this bill is passed. Let's not forget, he can take no action until after the bill is passed. Section 92 of the British North America Act sets out the division of power in relation to health, and that's that the federal government cannot stop this bill from being passed. It can, however, sanction the provincial government if it violates the Canada Health Act.

Madam Speaker, federal and provincial leaders have discussed health care reform. They have actually outlined a direction they could agree to. Now, if the Premier of Alberta would only holster his weapon, Albertans might actually reap some benefits from the discussions.

On April 8, 2000, the Globe and Mail interviewed federal and provincial officials and determined that the following elements could be configured into a national long-term plan. Home care, a 50-50 split. Economies of scale are achieved with bulk buys on prescription drugs. Increased accountability. It is essential to know where the money is going, how it is being spent, and if that translates into good quality patient care. Primary care reform. This may be more difficult an undertaking given it might require doctors to abandon the current fee-for-service scheme that they are paid on. This is only one aspect of primary care reform but appears the most difficult to address. Long-term care is another area where provinces would like to assist. Affordable beds for those who need care but not hospitalization are in great demand not only throughout Alberta but Canada.

Madam Speaker, my aunt is 72 years old. She lives in Albuquerque, New Mexico. She pays just over $200 a month for long-term care insurance so she can have a bed somewhere, wherever that may be. On top of that, her health care insurance is $246. So my aunt at 72 years old is paying $446 a month to look after her health care needs, and that's while she's healthy. I'm not sure that I want that system to exist for seniors in this province, thank you.

The province of British Columbia has proposed a hospital relief fund that according to Anne McLroy, the writer of this Globe article would include funding to replace equipment, computers, home support, home care, long-term care, and infrastructure funding. The feds may be loathe to spend money on capital or infrastructure. However, it appears there is some room for negotiations. Health information has been identified as an area where both levels of government could come to some agreement. Bill 40, the Alberta government's health privacy information bill, is one that should not be the template for other provinces. The Canadian Medical Association health information privacy code is rather instructive in this regard. This applies to all health information and to all individuals, groups, or organizations that collect such information. Alberta's act excludes many health institutions including those who would provide enhanced services under Bill 11.

Human resources is of a great concern to both levels of government. According to the article, the provinces and the federal government have talked about a mutual approach in the past. Addressing the nursing shortage across this country and in this province is of paramount importance along with the shortage of doctors in rural and urban areas. Cost efficiency is another issue that could be jointly addressed, particularly where drug costs are concerned; however, as previously pointed out, the WTO decision does not help this issue. We can only hope Canada is successful in its appeal. One Premier has called for a public inquiry, and where that may be a noble thought, many of these issues are more pressing and require action now or in the very near future. The two or three years it would take to conduct an inquiry will only help to erode the system even further.

And the moment you've been waiting for: in closing, Madam Speaker, I believe the health care system in this country and in this province is at a crossroads. However, the introduction of the private sector, as Bill 11 would do, is not the answer. Health care spending in this province has not spiraled out of control as this government would have us believe. It's been maintained on a level basis for a number of years. It does not need to be fixed with an American plan.

Public health care is the true measure of all things Canadian. It is the true measure of the compassion and caring we have towards each other as Canadians. It is a symbol that differentiates us from the Americans, and as I have said before, we do not have a history of reducing citizens of this country to mere economic units, as Bill 11 would do.

I once again implore this Premier and his government to listen to Albertans and do the right thing, and that is to pull Bill 11. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have been looking forward with a good deal of anticipation to having an opportunity to address Bill 11 at third reading. It's been quite some time since I had an opportunity to speak about the bill. It was very early on in the committee stage. But given the hour and the fact that it's usually better to be the first speaker rather than the last, I would like to adjourn debate and have the opportunity to be the first speaker tomorrow. So I move we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[At 12:07 a.m. on Tuesday the Assembly adjourned to 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 9, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/05/09

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, guide us so that we may use the privilege given us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Give us the strength to labour diligently and the courage to think and to speak with clarity and conviction and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly His Excellency Dr. Yuri Scherbak, ambassador of Ukraine to Canada. Accompanying him are his wife, Mrs. Maria Scherbak, and Mr. Taras Malyshevskiy, second secretary.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has had a long relationship with Ukraine. People have come to Alberta from Ukraine for over a hundred years. They have helped build our province, making it such a great place to live. Today there are over 250,000 people in Alberta of Ukrainian descent contributing in many ways to the culture and economy of our province. This visit is an excellent opportunity for us to explore ways to build on our relationship with Ukraine and to discuss areas where we can work together.

This is the ambassador's first official visit to Alberta, and I hope the first of many. We're pleased to welcome him to our province. I would ask that our honoured guests please rise in your gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, we have quite a list this afternoon, so let's be a little patient.

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table petitions from several hundred residents asking for the reinstatement of front licence plates. Many of them are from Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan but from across the province as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. LANGEVIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to table a petition signed by 210 Albertans urging the government to reinstate front licence plates. They're from Fort Saskatchewan, Vegreville, Boyle, Athabasca, Waskatenau, Tofield, and the Edmonton and area.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

MR. THURBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to present today a petition from over a hundred good citizens from rural Alberta, including Rocky Mountain House, Stony Plain, and Parkland county, asking the government to reinstate front licence plates.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

MR. JACQUES: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to present a petition that calls for the reinstatement of Alberta licence plates on the front of vehicles. The petition has been signed by 280 Albertans from the town of Beaverlodge, the town of Wembley, the county of Grande Prairie, and other locations throughout Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'd like to present a petition signed by 172 committed and informed Albertans from Spruce Grove, St. Albert, Leduc, Sherwood Park, Alberta Beach, and Edmonton, and they are urging the government "to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to be able to present this afternoon a petition signed by 140 Albertans residing in Calgary, Okotoks, De Winton, and Black Diamond urging "the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glegarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to present a petition this afternoon. It is signed by 141 Albertans from Spruce Grove, Gunn, St. Albert, Onoway, Morinville, Drayton Valley, Cold Lake, Sherwood Park, and Edmonton, and this petition is urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure this afternoon to present a petition on behalf of 223 well-informed Albertans. They want the government "to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care." They are from Fort Saskatchewan, Spruce Grove, and Edmonton.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition this afternoon on behalf of 49 individuals from Lethbridge. They are urging the Legislative Assembly "to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to table this afternoon containing 135 signatures from Albertans residing in Edmonton, Mundare, Fort Saskatchewan, Stony Plain, Tofield, Leduc, Sherwood Park, and St. Albert. They are urging the Legislative Assembly to "stop promoting private health care and undermining [the] public health care [system]."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I have two petitions to present to the Assembly. The first is signed by 76 residents of Edmonton, and it reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to ensure that all residents requiring long term care are able to access this service in an equitable manner within the publicly funded system.

Mr. Speaker, the second petition is a petition supporting public health care in Alberta. It's signed by another 37 residents of Edmonton, and it reads:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to rise and table a petition signed by 136 citizens of Alberta from the communities of Sherwood Park, Stony Plain, St. Albert, Calmar, Ardrossan, Devon, and Edmonton. These citizens are petitioning "the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition from some 216 Albertans primarily from Edmonton, Fort Saskatchewan, Beaumont, St. Albert, Spruce Grove, and Stony Plain. They "urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care," sir.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition signed by 152 people. They are from Carvel, Spruce Grove, Sturgeon, St. Albert, Stony Plain, Devon, St. Paul, and Edmonton, and they are urging "the Government of Alberta to stop promoting private healthcare and undermining public healthcare."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would present a petition signed by 107 citizens from Lamont, Chipman, Bruderheim, Sangudo, Mayerthorpe, and Wetaskiwin urging the "Government of Alberta to stop promoting private healthcare and undermining public healthcare."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions to table with the Assembly this afternoon. The first is on behalf of 137 residents of Bruderheim, Ardrossan, Tofield, Beaumont, Leduc, Millet, Fort Saskatchewan, Sherwood Park, and Edmonton. The citizens petition "the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to protect, support, and enhance public health care in Alberta and to ban for-profit, private hospitals from receiving public dollars."

The second petition, Mr. Speaker – and I'm very proud to present this to the Assembly – is on behalf of Calgarians. The Calgarians are asking the Assembly "to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes" that are divisive and disruptive at the Calgary Herald.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present to the Assembly that states:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

It is signed by 146 citizens of this province from Grande Prairie, Peace River, Grimshaw, St. Isidore, St. Paul, Elk Point, Ashmont, Glendon, Lac La Biche, Iron River, and Wembley.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition supporting public health care in Alberta. This petition is on behalf of 124 Albertans from Fort Saskatchewan, Bruderheim, Sedgewick, Lamont, and the metropolis of Gibbons.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table petitions from Calgary, Edmonton, Spruce Grove, Leduc, St. Albert, Bon Accord, Egremont, and Stony Plain. That brings today's total of Albertans who have signed the petition opposing the undermining of public health care and the promotion of private health care to 2,518, bringing the total to date to almost 72,000 Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table a petition signed by 201 Albertans who are calling on the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to "disallow further development of the Spray Valley," to "maintain Kananaskis Country in natural state," and to "create a Wildland Provincial Park which protects the whole of the undeveloped parts of the Kananaskis and Spray Valleys."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today and with your permission ask that the petition I tabled yesterday be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that the petition I had presented the other day be now read and received, please.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned, petition the [Legislative] assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition standing on the Order Paper under my name concerning working night hours now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government . . . to introduce legislation requiring a minimum of two people on shifts from dark to daylight.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented on the divisive and disruptive labour dispute at the Calgary Herald now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned, petition the [Legislative] assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented yesterday from 156 residents from Calgary and Cochrane requesting that the promotion of private health care and the undermining of public health care be stopped be now read and received.
Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to stop promoting private healthcare and undermining public healthcare.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that the petition with respect to public health care that I presented yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request that the petition I presented yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that tomorrow I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

I am also giving notice that tomorrow I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 33, 34, 35, 40, 44, 45, 48, and 49.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased today to table five copies of a letter and the appropriate amendments to the Prime Minister. The amendments address issues raised by Albertans over the course of discussions on the Health Care Protection Act. Among the amendments approved include a strengthening of the sections prohibiting conflict of interest and queue-jumping. Charges for enhanced services were capped, and the process for withdrawal of approval was clarified. This is a follow-up letter to the letter that was sent by the leader of the Liberal opposition.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise and table eight copies in response to government questions to written questions 17, 18, 19 and 20.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Resource Development.

DR. WEST: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table responses to questions raised at the March 6 review of Treasury's 2000-2001 budget estimates by the Committee of Supply.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table today a letter responding to Written Question 16.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of Manifesto 2000: For a Culture of Peace and Non-violence. This is crafted by Nobel peace prize laureates on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the declaration of human rights at the United Nations.

THE SPEAKER: The leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to make three tablings today. These are three letters: one from former MLA, Marie Laing, opposing Bill 11; one from Red Deer resident Dorothy Corney opposing Bill 11; and a third from the Seniors' Alpine Ski Club in Calgary opposing the proposed Genesis development in the Spray Valley.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today with the appropriate number of copies from John Olson of Camrose, who is very, very much opposed to Bill 11.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got four tablings this afternoon. The first is a summary of Donna Korchinski's second installment on Calgary Lab Services, where she indicates that the Calgary regional health authority changed their accounting numbers on the lab services to reflect the increased savings that were supposedly going to occur.

The second is a news release from NetNews wherein it is stated that Calgary Lab Services have been operating since November 1, 1996, without approval.

The third is a news release from Barry Robinson, the Alberta Liberal candidate for Grande Prairie-Smoky, indicating that the health minister is shirking his responsibilities with regards to the long surgery waiting lists in the Mistahia regional health authority.

The fourth is from the International Express from England wherein it's indicated that doctors now have to be provided with a £60,000 bonus – that's about $120,000 – in order to be enticed back into the public health care system from their private practices.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to first of all table a letter from a constituent of Edmonton-McClung, Ms Dorothy Almas, talking about the inhuman waits for cancer treatments because of being on the waiting list. Ms Almas' story is very poignant reading for members of this Assembly who are concerned about public health care in this province.

Secondly, I would like to table a copy of a letter to the editor of the Edmonton Journal from David King, a former Member of this Legislative Assembly, beginning with: "Bill #11 is bad law, bad public policy, and bad politics. It should be withdrawn or defeated."

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, another child has died while in the care of this government. I am tabling today a letter I have written to the Ministry of Children's Services, seeking information relative to the ministry and child welfare's actions and omissions in the placement of two-year-old Corvette Crier.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today for the Assembly. The first is a document titled Calculating Your Taxes under the 10.5% Klein Flat Tax, 2004. It refers to an Albertan named Ralph and another Albertan named Steve, both earning over $100,000 a year and both receiving more than 20 percent tax cuts. Yet another Albertan earning half that salary would only receive a 10 percent tax cut.

1:50

Mr. Speaker, the second is a petition – unfortunately, it's not in the right form – that is signed by 20 residents of Dewberry, Clandonald, and Heinsburg. The petition is opposing privatization of health care in Alberta.

We, the undersigned citizens of Alberta, strongly oppose the privatization of health care services in Alberta. We do not wish to see for-profit services used in our health care because we believe that this will lead to a two-tier system.

Mr. Speaker, the third tabling is titled A Message to Ralph Klein. It reads, "We, as residents of Polo Park, High River, Alberta, protest the content and the intentions to legislate 'Bill 11' by the Klein Government."

And finally, Mr. Speaker, a letter from myself dated today to Mr. Carl Roy, the president of the Caritas Health Group, in which I correct the record regarding the comments made by the Member for St. Albert at a public meeting and my comments made in Hansard on page 779.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bufferlo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have only four tablings this afternoon. The first one is the summary of the poll on Bill 11 at www.misterpoll.com showing 75 percent opposition.

Secondly is an e-mail from Cinda Chavich, formerly of the Calgary Herald, urging government action to end that nasty dispute.

The third item is a document entitled Our Chosen Land produced by the Calgary Chinese Cultural Centre talking about the 100 years of development of the Chinese community in this province.

Then the final document is a copy of the principles and policies for the protection of health information. This is an April 1999 publication produced by CIHI, the Canadian Institute for Health Information. It may assist the minister of health in drafting regulations to Bill 40.

Thank you.

MR. WHITE: I have but one tabling today, sir. It is on behalf of some 200 citizens of Edmonton-Calder in response to a questionnaire that their member put out, and it has to do with the health care system in the province of Alberta. I'll recite just one question to you, sir: should the minister of health in the province of Alberta "have the power to approve public funds for private hospitals?" The answer, sir, is 95 percent against and 5 percent for.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would table five copies of a Harvard study entitled Medical Errors Higher at For-Profit than Not-For-Profit Hospitals, Harvard Study Finds.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is five copies of the May 2000 edition of the Asian Times, featuring citizens from Edmonton-Mill Creek on the steps of the Legislature saying no to Bill 11.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a letter from the president of the Central Alberta Women's Emergency Shelter. She's asking why, despite promises from the minister, the Alberta Mental Health Board has done nothing to assist this organization replace the funding that was cut by the Alberta Mental Health Board.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me today to rise and introduce to you and through you, sir, to the Members of the Legislative Assembly on behalf of my colleague the MLA for Lesser Slave Lake 105 grade 8 students from the Roland Michener secondary school in Slave Lake. They are accompanied by two teachers, Miss Tracey Crain and Miss Karen Brace, and nine parent chaperones: Mrs. Smears, Mrs. Savage, Mrs. Olsen, Mrs. Noel, Mrs. Norberg, Mrs. St. Martin, Mrs. Properzi, Mrs. Garon, and Mr. Bohn. They are seated in both the members' gallery and the public gallery, and I would ask that they all stand and receive the very welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Mr. Speaker, my guests aren't coming in until 2 o'clock, and I'd like to do it after if it's okay.

THE SPEAKER: That's fine.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a resident of Calgary-Buffalo. In addition to his other volunteer work John Burgener has recently been named to the Calgary chapter of the United Nations as a youth co-ordinator. John is involved in promoting the Manifesto 2000: For a Culture of Peace and Non-violence in preparation for the general assembly of the United Nations this September. He is seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask my son John to rise and receive the warm recognition of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you and to all the members of the Legislative Assembly Shannon Sampert. Shannon has just completed her master's degree in communications at the University of Calgary and has been awarded over $53,000 in scholarships and will enter the U of A PhD program in political science this fall. She is currently the vice-president of communications for the Alberta Liberal Party and employed in the Edmonton-Norwood constituency office for the summer. If she would please rise and receive the warm welcome.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Voting on Bill 11

MRS. MacBETH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. So let's see now. First he was a Liberal thinking about the leadership of the Alberta Liberal Party, and then he was a Progressive Conservative federally and provincially, and now he's thrown his hat behind the Canadian Reform Alliance party. Presumably he is taking his provincial party along with him. [interjections] Given the applause, I'd say they're all going along with him. But guess what? The constitution of the Alliance party reads: "We will move to restore democratic accountability in the House of Commons by measures such as allowing free votes." Will the Premier be true to the values of his new party and allow a free vote?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I've answered that question before. Again, I will ask the members of this caucus. Do you support the government's position on Bill 11?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Yes.

MR. KLEIN: Could I ask the question, Mr. Speaker? Are there any of you opposed? That is a free vote.

Mr. Speaker, we run a far different caucus than the one that was controlled by the former member of Priorities and Treasury Board in the old Conservative government. This is a free and open caucus where we have good and free and open discussions on matters. I don't run my caucus like a dictatorship like the leader of the Liberal Party. I don't stamp my foot and say: this is the way you're going to vote. That's what's happening over there in the Liberal Party.

Speaker's Ruling Questions about Party Activity

THE SPEAKER: Actually, hon. members, Beauchesne 410(17) says the following: "Ministers may not be questioned with respect to party responsibilities."

Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, proceed with your next question.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, then, Mr. Speaker, I guess the question is: why would the Premier be supporting democracy and free votes for Ottawa, but he appears to be treating it as if it's a nuisance here in Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: Not a nuisance, Mr. Speaker. I will explain once again. There was a caucus meeting. I didn't attend that caucus meeting. I'm very, very proud of members of the Progressive Conservative caucus who had a good discussion, as I understand it, about how they were going to vote on Bill 11. The decision was – and it was a caucus decision – that they would support the government's position.

MRS. MacBETH: Will the Premier concede that the real reason that he is not allowing his members to reflect the majority position of Albertans in opposition to this bill is that he knows that his private health care bill would go down in flames?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, there is no private health care policy.

Perhaps it's time to take a closer look at the opposition leader's stand on health care, because she's questioned my motives so many times. This hon. leader of the Liberal opposition is on record many times as saying that she supports privately owned, privately operated private hospitals that are opted out of medicare; in other words, a classic for-profit, two-tier health care system.

When this member was a Conservative at one particular time, or a suspected Conservative at least, she did nothing to stop the expansion of private surgical clinics when she was the minister of health. In fact, she allowed them to charge patients a facility fee, something that is against the Canada Health Act. She did absolutely nothing to stop it.

So, Mr. Speaker, one could ask her the same question she has often posed of me: which of her friends or relatives would stand to benefit from a policy that allowed opted-out, for-profit private hospitals that could charge people directly whatever they like and service clients from the U.S. and other jurisdictions?

Limiting Debate on Bill 11

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not just about freedom of voting. This government's flagrant use of closure has set a new low for parliamentary behaviour in Canada. The Premier's reliance on closure betrays his true feelings about this Legislature. For him the Legislature has become an inconvenience and democracy a nuisance. My questions are to the Premier. Why did the Premier break his word that closure would not be used on third reading?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, closure is not being used on third reading. If we were to invoke closure on third reading, the debate would end at midnight tonight. We have introduced a motion, Standing Order 47, which allows every Member of this Legislative Assembly to debate the bill one more time. That is not closure. That is part of the democratic process.

Now, relative to reaching new lows, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Liberals have reached a new filibustering low. They have cost the taxpayers thousands and thousands and thousands of dollars through their delaying tactics, and if they want to be critical of closure, then I would ask them to look to their Liberal cousins in Ottawa. This article in the Calgary Herald dated May 4 says:

By next Monday, Prime Minister Jean Chretien's Liberals will have stifled parliamentary exchanges on government bills 67 times since January 1994, when the Liberals convened the 35th Parliament.

THE SPEAKER: It would be helpful, hon. the Premier, if you'd table that document as well.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, why did this Premier mislead Albertans yesterday afternoon when he promised in his news conference that he wouldn't resort to closing off this debate, yet moments later the Member for Leduc was rising to do just that?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the question was asked: would we use closure? The answer was: no, we would not use closure. And we didn't use closure. The hon. Member for Leduc introduced a Standing Order 47, which basically says that the bill can be debated by all members of the Legislature at third reading. What could be more democratic than that?

I refer, Mr. Speaker, to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms relative to closure, and basically I don't know what the fuss is about, because when I refer to section 518, "The House has adopted a number of procedures to limit debate, or to preclude the moving of amendments, and to provide for the wise management of its time." The Liberals have no concept whatsoever of the wise management of time. All they can think about is wasting taxpayer dollars.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier admit that he has had to resort to shutting off debate at every single step of the debate on this legislation because he's afraid that the majority of Albertans oppose him?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, the majority of Albertans do not oppose me. As a matter of fact, the latest poll shows that we have about 66, 67 percent support. That's slightly more, if not a significant amount more, than the Liberals have right now or than they will ever have.

THE SPEAKER: Third main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Representing the Public

MRS. MacBETH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I want to quote something that I read, and it says:

The little dictator in Edmonton has ignored Albertans' collective cry not to tear the heart out of our health care system and replace it with one that most of us are opposed to and afraid of.

Actually, not my words but the words of the Fairview Post. Now, opposition to the Premier's health care policy has also been voiced in the Coronation Review, the Drayton Valley Western Review, the Cannore Leader, the Lac La Biche Post, the Ponoka News, the Eckville Echo, the Lethbridge Herald, the Red Deer Advocate, the Grande Prairie Herald-Tribune, the Cold Lake Sun, the Cochrane Times, the Brooks Bulletin, the High River Times, the Edson Leader, the Lloydminster Meridian Booster, and more. My questions are to the Premier. Why is the Premier ignoring the views and the voices of these local papers who so accurately reflect the views of their communities?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there has been editorial comment on this issue on both sides of the issue. I just happened to pick up something from May 3, the Calgary Herald. It says . . . [interjections] I hear a lot of yipping and yapping over there. Are they saying that the Calgary Herald is not a reputable newspaper? [interjections] Will they stand up and say that the Calgary Herald is not a reputable newspaper?

The Calgary Herald says with Bill 11,

Klein has done something far more important than simply pen a new law. He's activated a national debate on health care that is long overdue. . . . If Klein lost his nerve and killed his health care bill, the national debate would continue but it's doubtful the political will would exist in this province to fully participate.

2:10

I mean, there have been all kinds of comments in all kinds of different newspapers relative to this issue, some against, yes. Right. You know, the Liberals go to great pains to bring out the negative in everything in this province, but there has been a lot of positive comment in editorials in weekly newspapers and in major daily newspapers. I would allude to some of the comments that have been published by Neil Waugh, the columnist for the Edmonton Sun. I could table column after column after column. He makes a lot of sense.

Speaker's Ruling Questions about Media Reports

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Beauchesne 428 says that a question must not "inquire whether statements made in a newspaper are true." So what we've really got here is a debate over "My article says this and somebody else's article says that." Let's deal with policy.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, first Gerry Amerongen and now Dave King. Is this Premier so arrogant and so out of touch that he doesn't realize that his own party members are opposed to his private health care legislation?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad that the leader of the Liberal opposition asked that question and alluded to Dave King, because I understand that Dave King said yesterday that Bill 11 shows that the government does not know how to run the public service properly and that it has failed to address the real issues facing health care, such as staff shortages and rising drug costs. He also said that the bill would foster a two-tier health system.

The point I want to make is that, first of all, he has insulted a very strong and very proud public service. The Alberta public service leads the nation in efficiency. In recent years the government's administration has won numerous awards for public service. For instance, they won the silver award for innovative management from the Institute of Public Administration of Canada last fall.

Now, Mr. Speaker, compare that to the time when Dave King was the minister of education, when Alberta had 181 different school jurisdictions and 40 of them didn't even have a school. And he wants to talk about public administration.

Our six-point health plan addresses all of the concerns that were raised by Mr. King, by the way a suspected Liberal now, not a Conservative.

Speaker's Ruling Seeking Opinions

THE SPEAKER: Thank you very much. The purpose of question period is to basically deal with government policy. If someone wants to introduce a person and then someone else wants to respond regarding the person, this violates all the rules of the question period.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier finally come clean and tell Albertans who or what is so important that he has turned a deaf ear to ordinary Albertans, even to members of his own party?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll turn that question around. Why is the leader of the Liberal opposition so intent on defeating a bill that protects public health care? Is it because she wants private, for-profit opted-out hospitals? Again, she has stated on numerous occasions that she supports privately owned, privately operated private hospitals that are opted out of medicare; in other words, a classic two-tiered, for-profit health care system. Who is she trying to protect in terms of the doctors and other medical practitioners or businesspeople who'd really want to profit from medicare? I think that's her real agenda.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Court Referral of Bill 11

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the government's private, for-profit hospitals scheme lurches toward third reading approval aided by the use of closure at all three stages, many questions remain unanswered. Among the most serious are whether the government's approach violates the Canada Health Act and its ramifications under the North American free trade agreement. A referral of Bill 11 to the Alberta Court of Appeal would be a cost-effective, timely, and prudent way to address these outstanding questions. My questions are to the Premier. As president of Executive Council why doesn't the Premier, prior to seeking royal assent and prior to proclamation, use his powers under the Judicature Act to refer Bill 11 to the Court of Appeal to settle once and for all whether it violates the Canada Health Act?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this policy statement and the bill have been sent to the federal Minister of Health – I think they have a bevy of lawyers there in Ottawa, thousands, lots of lawyers – to pore over, and we have received no indication whatsoever from the federal minister or the Prime Minister or any of his officials that the bill in any way, shape, or form violates the Canada Health Act or violates the rules of NAFTA. Nothing.

DR. PANNU: Why is the Premier unwilling to or afraid of letting the Court of Appeal of this province address the ramifications of Bill 11 under NAFTA even in the face of two eminent legal opinions which say that the government is courting NAFTA disaster?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if there is something in Bill 11 or any other act of this Legislature that is deemed to be unconstitutional, there is recourse to the courts. Once the law is passed, if someone feels that it violates the Canada Health Act or it violates NAFTA or that in some way it violates the principles of health care, then they're free to challenge that act just as any citizen is free to challenge any act of this Legislature or any act of Parliament.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why doesn't the Premier exercise prudence and refer Bill 11 to the Court of Appeal for a determination of its vulnerability to costly challenges under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

MR. KLEIN: I don't see how there could be a challenge under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, especially since the preamble to the bill upholds without question the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act. What I find amazing is that this hon. member would like the referral now, after voting against upholding the principles of the Canada Health Act, voting against, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to emphasize that. This hon. member along with his Liberal bedmates voted against upholding the principles of the Canada Health Act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Summer Temporary Employment Program

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday's labour force statistics for April 2000 indicated that the number of youth job seekers was higher than the number of new jobs created for youth. My questions today are to the Minister to the Minister of HR and Employment. With the end of the school year at hand what is this government doing to help unemployed Albertans gain some work experience during the summer months?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, of course, we continue to help Albertans with our Youth Connections program all year round, but we also have what is called the summer temporary employment program. It's referred to as STEP. We have this in place to offer work experience to unemployed Albertans, primarily students, from the end of April to the beginning of September. We're contributing 9 and a quarter million dollars to nonprofit and publicly funded community organizations to help them hire students to develop skills and enhance long-term employability.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, can the same minister please explain how the process works when an organization applies for the funding under STEP?

MR. DUNFORD: Yes, Mr. Speaker. STEP employment applications are of course sent out at the beginning of the year. They're completed, and then they're returned to our department. We look for those by the end of February. The applications are reviewed, and the employers notified when they're approved.

In this regard, our STEP program is similar to a federal program that is called SKIP. Basically, employers apply, and then of course they're notified if it is approved. Once the employer has been approved for the STEP program, they hire, they pay the employee, and then they submit a claim to the STEP or SKIP co-ordinator for reimbursement once a month.

2:20

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. With this process in place can you tell us how many Albertans will be able to participate in the STEP program this year?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, 2,479 community groups actually applied for the STEP program. With the placements through the provincial government partnership we think this will translate into 3,540 full-time equivalent positions for unemployed Albertans between April 25 and September 1 of this year.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Bill 11 Publicity

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I take the Premier in earlier answers today as indicating that he thinks it's important that Albertans have accurate information. Well, the Premier's $8 million Public Affairs Bureau seems to be under strict instructions to deliberately underestimate the cost of the government's propaganda campaign to sell its private health care policy. Now, despite the government's misguided decision to ram its health care policy through this Legislature, Albertans aren't buying the policy nor the Premier's attempts to minimize the costs of propaganda. My questions are, of course, to the Premier this afternoon. Will the Premier keep his previous promise to release today, before we make a final vote on Bill 11, all the invoices, all the receipts, all the contracts from his $2.7 million taxpayer-backed propaganda campaign to sell the government's private hospital policy?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member is anticipating a question that is related to Bill 11, which is up for debate this evening, so it's inappropriate.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that silly, dumb, question is quite simple. It is very hard to provide intelligent answers to stupid questions. To exemplify the stupidity of the question, there is no propaganda campaign; there is no private health care policy; therefore, there are no invoices related to what the hon. member alleges. Nothing. Because there's no propaganda campaign, and there is no private health care policy.

[The Speaker in the chair]

MR. DICKSON: Speaking to the policy and certainly not to the bill and speaking to government practices as well, Mr. Speaker, how much of the true cost of the Premier's private health care propaganda campaign is hidden away in the vault of the Public Affairs Bureau, buried in the Ministry of Health and Wellness, or perhaps incinerated in the Premier's $440 million waste treatment plant?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is, first of all, nothing in any vault anywhere related to a private health care policy or a propaganda campaign. It simply doesn't exist, because this government hasn't been involved in any kind of activity. The only person who has been involved in the promotion of private, for-profit, opted-out, two-tiered health care is the leader of the Liberal opposition.

MR. DICKSON: This is more and more like Alice in Wonderland, Mr. Speaker.

Before the Premier rams his health care policy through the Legislature, will the Premier confirm right now, this afternoon, that the Official Opposition estimate of $2.7 million is in fact the true cost of the taxpayer-funded propaganda campaign? Will he do that?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is no cost associated with a propaganda campaign. There will be some costs associated with a program to mail out a bill that purports to become law, and there's nothing more truthful than the law. There will be some costs associated with that, and there will be some costs associated with telling the truth about a piece of legislation that is now before this Legislative Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Beer Marketing

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Calgary-Fort includes a large industrial park. Alberta's midsized and small brewers have recently expressed concerns to me. According to these brewers, the Gaming and Liquor Commissions's new policy allowing buy/sell agreements and product promotion will benefit the big brewers who already have almost 90 percent of the draft beer market in Alberta. My question is to the Minister of Gaming. Can the minister explain why this new buy/sell policy is not harmful to Alberta's smaller brewers?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the new policy that includes the use of buy/sell agreements is a creation of the industry themselves. It was a group of brewers, distillers, merchants, and liquor store owners that came up with the buy/sell agreements, so it includes all the breweries.

The buy/sell agreements, Mr. Speaker, provide for the normal trade and commerce to take place in an above-the-table, open, transparent manner and one that can be fully disclosed. What has happened in the past we have found to be in violation of regulations at the time. We took actions. Fines were levied. The new policy, if the industry decides to comply – and the onus of responsibility of compliance lies completely with them – will allow all of them to participate in this marketplace that is growing because of population, because of increase in disposable income, because of a healthy growing economy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Can the minister explain why the product promotion aspect of the commission's new policy is not harmful to small brewers?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, we have a competitive marketplace – that's been the foundation of the marketing of spirits and alcohol in this province – and also privatization. Suppliers and manufacturers need to be able to promote their products. It's taught in every business school. It's taught to everybody who goes through the great institutions like SAIT and the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta. Clearly it is not government's role to prevent those types of activities as long as product promotion benefits the consumer and does not exclude artificially some competitors from the marketplace.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that a smaller brewer, like a small person in the oil industry, as my own experience indicates, always has challenges in the marketplace when we take on the large employers.

I know from experience that for a company with the reputation of Big Rock in Alberta its quality of product, its quality of service and consumer choice will prevail. After all, Mr. Speaker, the quality of good taste lingers long after the price is forgotten.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also to the same minister. What can the minister do to ensure that small brewers continue to have a fair opportunity in the Alberta market?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know the member is concerned and interested because he is in a constituency where Big Rock Brewery is located. In fact, there's one building where they started out as Big Rock, and then a second building that expansion of the marketplace caused, and it became known as Bigger Rock.

Mr. Speaker, the government recognizes that these 84 to 100 jobs are critical to the marketplace, critical to this member's constituency, and in fact over a year ago the government took action and reduced its markup by $15 million on beer. That reduced annual cost was primarily aimed at benefiting the small and midsized brewers.

Remember, Mr. Speaker, that the job of government in the liquor industry is to control the product. We're not there to control the marketplace. We know that all of us are committed to a level playing field. All brewers have equal access to the market, and success or failure is the result of consumer choice, not government intervention.

Private Health Services

MRS. SLOAN: The greatest legacy of private health care in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, will be the accompanying legacy of deception and deceit. The Premier risks contributing to such a legacy by continuing to withhold the contents of 30 blank pages outlining his government's beliefs on private health care. My questions today are to the Premier. When does the Premier plan to permit Albertans to see the private health care document their tax dollars paid for?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness indicated on a number of occasions in this Legislative Assembly, that information is being prepared as we speak.

But speaking of missing documents, why has the opposition leader put a 15-year prohibition on the public release of 150 boxes of her documents from her time as minister of health?

MR. DICKSON: Point of order.

MR. KLEIN: What has she got to hide, Mr. Speaker? Is she afraid of something? Is there something in those documents that alludes to her promotion of private, for-profit health Care? I wonder.

MRS. SLOAN: Let me amend that. A legacy of deception, deceit, and desperation, Mr. Speaker.

Why enact closure, Mr. Premier, before you release your government's own position on private health care policy? Why enact closure before the public has had an opportunity to read those 30 blank pages?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again I allude to the 150 boxes of documents that have been secreted away, squirreled away someplace under lock and key because the leader of the Liberal opposition is afraid there might be something in those documents that might put her in contradiction of her position today.

Relative to the question, this government has not invoked closure on third reading. We introduced a motion under Standing Order 47, which allows full and complete debate on third reading. That is not closure. But this is typical of the kind of malicious misinformation that is being spread by the Liberal Party.

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, when will the Premier stop his desperation antics and table the documents in this Assembly: pages 31, 34, 41, 44, and 47, all speaking about private health care? When will those documents be tabled in this Assembly so Albertans can read them for themselves?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, they will be tabled in due course, as soon as the documents are prepared. I understand that that work is under way right now.

You know, you might have to wait days or weeks, but the rest of us are going to have to wait 15 years – 15 years – to see the documents that have been secreted away under lock and key by the former minister of health, who is now the leader of the Liberal opposition. What has she got to hide, Mr. Speaker? I thought she said that she would stand up to her record on health any day. Well, we are waiting. What has she got to hide?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Computer Viruses

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week a virus dubbed the Love Bug spread across computers around the world causing many companies and governments to shut down e-mail systems and networks. The virus traveled by e-mail with the subject line I Love You. My question is to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Can the minister please tell us the effect of the I Love You virus on government systems?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me say that government takes IT security very seriously. All ministries were affected by the I Love You virus, but it was isolated to the e-mail systems by 9:30 a.m. In spite of what Dave King might say, this was isolated by our excellent public service professionals. We have assessed the impact and cleaned the e-mail system to ensure that the viruses have been removed and any data that was lost has been repaired.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, the reference to an individual outside this House was absolutely inappropriate.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: while the media have reported that several copycat viruses have been released since the I Love You virus first hit, what is the government doing to protect systems from other similar viruses?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, we've been taking proactive steps, Mr. Speaker. Last winter we improved our e-mail security status. We rolled out some antivirus security issues last winter, and we now have the availability of screening incoming e-mail for viruses. With that availability and with that ability we can look at viruses that might be similar to the I Love You virus, and they will automatically be screened out.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: No, Mr. Speaker. It's been answered.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Private Health Services

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A report on a recent Harvard study reaches the conclusion that patients at for-profit hospitals are two to four times more likely than patients at not-for-profit hospitals to suffer adverse events such as complications following surgery or delays in diagnosing and treating an ailment.

My questions are the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given the Harvard study, why is the government pursuing a policy of health care privatization and placing Albertans at increased medical risk?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the government is not pursuing a policy of private hospitals. We have stated that very clearly. The legislation is very clear with respect to that. Therefore, although I'm not familiar with respect to the Harvard study, it may be very interesting, but it is not relevant to our particular legislation or policy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the study also speculates that adverse medical events may increase as money is redirected to facility shareholders, why has the government chosen private profit over the health of Albertans?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I assume that if the study is from the Harvard source, it must be a credible one. I do note that the questioner is referring to it as speculating, which is hardly scientific basis on which to place a question.

I repeat that we are not promoting private hospitals. We have banned them in the legislation. The research may be quite interesting and quite thorough – I don't know – but it is not in my view relevant to the particular initiative we're taking.

DR. MASSEY: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what liability will the government assume when things go wrong at for-profit surgical clinics?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I have to repeat something that is a fact but that the opposition can't seem to acknowledge, and that is that within our health care system right now we have in various roles a very important private sector, whether we're talking about doctors' offices and clinics or we're talking about, yes, laboratory companies or we're talking about some of the maintenance firms that repair and maintain the equipment in the health care system. I think that overall the record of the whole health care system in terms of major mistakes and faults and liabilities has been very, very good in this province.

If there is something that occurs to which liability can be assigned, there is a judicial process in this country to sue, to recover money, and that does occasionally regrettably happen in the health care system. The process is there.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Pigeon Lake Fishery

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've received a number of calls from constituents regarding the opening of the fishing season a month ago, particularly in relation to Pigeon Lake and its commercial fishery. Within the fishing regulations this year there are a number of Alberta lakes that are under pressure related to fish population and that have been closed to fishing during spawning. Since this is the case, can the Minister of Environment tell my constituents why the commercial fishery on Pigeon Lake is allowed to continue once the lake is open to recreational fishing?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I have certainly heard of the piscatory concerns of not only the constituents of this hon. member but of others throughout the province, and I can assure the hon. member that the concerns that are expressed are taken seriously. The decision to close a number of lakes during the spawning season is not one that is lightly taken. I'd like to point out that when we do make such decisions, we work with the best science available. We work with biologists, but we also work with the various advisory committees with lakes to make determinations as to how management plans can be put in place for various lakes throughout the province to manage this valuable resource. I'd like to emphasize that we look at each lake on a lake-by-lake basis to take into account the unique situation in each lake and the pressures that are on those lakes.

In the case of Pigeon Lake, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of different user groups that we had to listen to and work with. It not only supports commercial fishing but also domestic fishing and also, of course, recreational fishing. I wish to assure this House that I am monitoring issues related to the commercial fishing industry, and I want to assure members of this Assembly that immediate steps will be taken by the department if the health of Alberta fisheries is ever threatened.

MR. JOHNSON: More specifically, to the same minister: what is the amount of fish allocated for the commercial fishery on Pigeon Lake, and what is being harvested?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the quota for whitefish for Pigeon Lake is 100,000 kilograms. Over the last 10 years the average harvest of whitefish from that particular lake has been 88,000 kilograms. I would note, though, that for the species of walleye and pike, their tolerance limits were reached before the quota for whitefish was reached. Just to be clear, the fishery is closed whenever the tolerance on any particular species is reached or the quota is met. So the lake is closed to commercial fisherfolk when either the tolerance on a species is reached or the quota is reached.

MR. JOHNSON: My final question is to the same minister. What is the status of the environmental and commercial viability of Pigeon Lake's fishery?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to emphasize that our main priority is to devise mechanisms and strategies to ensure that this valuable resource continues not only for those who are involved in commercial fishing now or for domestic use or for recreational reasons but for the benefit of those in the future as well. Based on public input and sound science, we will make decisions that are necessary to conserve Alberta's fishery.

With respect to Pigeon Lake, Mr. Speaker, that lake has whitefish resources that will support a very important commercial fishery here in this province, but I want to point out that the challenge will be to find the mechanisms and the strategies to sustain this commercial fishery without harming the interests of other users of the lake, specifically recreational and domestic use. We will continue to work on those strategies for Pigeon Lake but also for a great number of other lakes throughout the province for the benefit of all users of Alberta's lakes.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Calgary Laboratory Services

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1996 the Calgary regional health authority began a partnership with a private laboratory service with the goal of decreasing the cost of lab services by 40 percent in the Calgary area. While this government claims that the new partnership has meant big savings to taxpayers, Albertans deserve to know what the numbers really are and how the money was spent. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister provide a public explanation as to why the amount spent on laboratory services before the creation of Calgary Laboratory Services was reported as being $80 million but then later changed to $97 million?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, in terms of the increase in the overall contractual payment to the laboratory company in Calgary, I think it is reasonable to expect that the number of tests, the amount of work that is being done – there's actually been the addition of a new spectrum of tests as well as an increase in the volume. It is quite logical to expect that the overall contracted amount according to the volume of work done would increase.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Speaker, again, to the same Minister of Health and Wellness. In reality, was this an attempt to create the illusion for Alberta taxpayers that the savings from the Calgary Laboratory Services were greater than they really are?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the overall contract between the Calgary regional health authority and the laboratory firm is a very comprehensive one. As I've indicated, the contract would, I think, logically provide for the accommodation of an increased volume and increased variation or variety or new tests that come onstream.

In fact, Calgary Laboratory Services, as I understand it, is very sophisticated. It does a very, very wide range of tests, which would compare to any large centre, certainly in Calgary. Mr. Speaker, I think it is unrealistic to think that a contract would not have a provision to be adjusted in terms of payment for increases in volume and in the nature of the tests that are done.

MR. WICKMAN: My final question, Mr. Speaker, is to the same minister. Will the minister provide evidence to Albertans as to why there was a $17 million discrepancy in the budget prior to the contract being awarded?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the implication of the question in terms of a discrepancy. I've provided the description of the overall way that the contracts operate. I think there has to be an understanding that contracts will be adjusted according to factors which develop in terms of the nature of the services to be provided, the breadth of the services to be provided, the volume of the services to be provided, and that will occur. Those things will occur.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, three members today will participate in Members' Statements. We'll call on the first of these in about 30 seconds.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

International Year for the Culture of Peace

MRS. BURGNER: The year 2000 has been proclaimed by the General Assembly of the United Nations as the International Year for the Culture of Peace. On the 50th anniversary of the UN universal declaration of human rights a group of Nobel prize laureates drafted a document they call Manifesto 2000. This manifesto will be presented to the General Assembly in September 2000 as part of the International Day of Peace.

It is not an ordinary petition, Mr. Speaker. It is expected that 100 million people from around the world will sign this manifesto. It will represent their personal commitment to the values, attitudes, and behaviour that inspire the culture of peace. So many will sign because they know that a culture of peace is required to permit sustainable development around the world and to enhance environmental protection and the well-being of every person.

What are the values that so many individuals will be pledging their support to? They're pledging to respect all life and the dignity and worth of every human being. They are pledging to reject violence in all its manifestations, particularly against children, who are the most vulnerable, to share with others their time and resources, to listen and understand without defaming and rejecting others, and to preserve the planet by respecting all life and preserving the balance of nature. They're pledging to rediscover solidarity by contributing to their communities.

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope and the hope of my son, who is here today, and the hope of this Assembly that this manifesto will help transform the culture of war and violence where it exists to a culture of peace and nonviolence, that will benefit all of us.

In order to give us a wide scope of the possibilities of this campaign, the organizers are hoping to spread the word and collect signatures through the Internet. Anyone who wishes to sign on can reach the Internet through www.unesco.org/manifesto2000. By signing your name to the peace manifesto, you will be included with the citizens of the world who are devoted to sharing the culture of peace with others, and you will be participating in an historic and worldwide celebration of peace.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Democracy in Alberta

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about democracy in Alberta. Alberta's democracy has been compared to corporate statism. This government has become, to quote a former columnist at the Herald: a government by CEO. The Premier with his business cronies for MLAs believes all Albertans should support legislation like Bill 11, even though it will only help the wealthy in the province. In this province it appears that anyone who dares to question the CEO is in line to be fired or at best derided, branded as a left-wing nut, and personally attacked for not buying the latest of the so-called advantage.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not how democracy is supposed to work. Democracy is supposed to do what's best for all citizens, not just the wealthy elites. Democracy understands that opposition is important and supports alternative points of view. Democracy does not cut off debate, does not artificially invoke closure, and does not denounce people's concerns. Democracy does not paint the oppositional voice in this province with red menace overtones, insulting the people who have worked so hard to build this province.

I've watched every night as people gather at the Legislature to speak out against Bill 11. This government just isn't interested. It has ignored these protests with a top-down managerial view of the world. With a Premier as chairman at the helm this government sneers at the underlings, those who dare to just say no to Bill 11. You know, he should be careful. CEOs have been known to topple, and the people you stepped on on your way up will be waiting for you on your way down.

You can legislate until you're blue in the face, but people have memories, and they're going to remember how this government ignored them, how this government insulted their intelligence and patronized the opposition. They will remember. One day Albertans will stop the Premier and his company and once again embrace democracy in this province.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to recognize this year's inductees to Canada's Aviation Hall of Fame, located in Wetaskiwin. The induction ceremony will be held at the Reynolds-Alberta Museum in Wetaskiwin on Saturday, May 13. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Interrupting Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: One of the great traditions in this House is this opportunity for free speech that was brought in a number of years ago, when major amendments were made to the Standing Orders. This section of the Routine is called Members' Statements, and members should have the right to express themselves on any subject they want regardless of the content. The content is their own content, and they may choose to say what it is they want to say. There should be no interjections, and we've ruled out points of order and points of privilege and everything else with respect to this in the past. Those who don't like the message today, well, get ready because there'll be another opportunity in the next number of days for additional members' statements, and it can go back the other way.

Now, hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, I invite you to start at the beginning.

Aviation Hall of Fame

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to recognize this year's inductees to Canada's Aviation Hall of Fame, located in Wetaskiwin. The induction ceremony will be held at the Reynolds-Alberta Museum in Wetaskiwin on Saturday, May 13. Canada's Aviation Hall of Fame was founded in 1973 and pays tribute to men and women who pioneered and advanced aviation in Canada. The hall of fame has 160 members, including this year's five inductees.

Mr. James Tocher Bain will be posthumously inducted at this year's ceremony. Mr. Bain is widely known as the man responsible for the development of the Canadair North Star, and he oversaw construction of the Air Canada jet base in Dorval, Quebec.

Another inductee, Mr. Albert Baker, earned his pilot's and engineer's licences at the Moose Jaw Flying Club. He's credited with turning around the troubled Fleet Manufacturing Company in Fort Erie, Ontario.

Mr. Paul Bernard Dilworth studied jet engine technologies in the U.K. He went on to set up the cold-weather ground test facility in Winnipeg and conducted the first ever test on a jet engine in Canada in 1943.

Mr. Reginald John Lane joined the RCAF in 1940 and became a distinguished wartime Pathfinder and bomber pilot with three tours of duty over Europe. In 1943 Mr. Lane flew the first Canadian-built Lancaster KB-700, the Ruhr Express, to England.

I'm particularly proud to mention the induction of Ms Vera Elsie Strodl Dowling of Edmonton. Ms Dowling worked extensively in the area of test flying, and after World War II she was a flight instructor with the RAF. She was also the first female flight instructor in Alberta.

This year's Belt of Orion award of excellence will be awarded to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police air division. For over 60 years the air division has performed essential support for the RCMP and service to Canadian citizens.

Congratulations to the air division and the five inductees into Canada's Aviation Hall of Fame.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, earlier today in the routine the chair called on the hon. Member for Wainwright for an introduction, and the hon. Member for Wainwright indicated he wanted to do it a little later. Now is the time, sir.

head: Introduction of Guests (reversion)

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce for the record a group from the Provost school in the Buffalo Trail school division. This group consisted of 36 grade 6 students and 10 adults. They were accompanied by teachers Sherri Smith, Julie Bouma, Vern Tessman, Roxy Reinhart. They were here to visit the Legislature and observe our government in action. Unfortunately they have left now.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order Provoking Debate

MR. DICKSON: Actually, Mr. Speaker, I raised two points of order, but they relate to exactly the same comment made twice by the hon. Premier. My authority would be Beauchesne 408(2) about the enjoinder against answers "should not provoke debate." I've had some Blues delivered to me, but they haven't caught the question-and-answer exchange in question.

The Premier on two different occasions referenced documents that had been in the possession of the Leader of the Official Opposition when she was minister of health and at the end of her time as minister. What I heard was a clear indication that the Leader of the Opposition was in some fashion trying to withhold documents, delay their publication, their availability to members of the public.

Now, this is nonsense, Mr. Speaker. We have a provincial archivist in this province. Members will appreciate that under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, section 3, the act

- (b) does not affect access to records
 - (i) deposited in the Provincial Archives, or
 - (ii) deposited in the archives . . .
 that were unrestricted before the coming into force of this Act.

The act came into force on October 1, 1995.

Then, further, the act

- (e) does not prohibit the transfer, storage or destruction of a record
 - (i) in accordance with [any other] enactment of Alberta or Canada, or a bylaw of a local government body. In this province we do have, in fact, a regulation that deals with the destruction of public documents. You will be well familiar with it, all ministers, because those records that a minister has with respect to ministerial function are public property, not personal property.

3:00

Well, we can argue the law, but the point is this. I'm talking about papers that a minister had in the execution of a ministerial function, that those records have been turned over by the Leader of the Official Opposition. She received advice from the provincial archivist in terms of the policy of the provincial government, and she has neither sought nor obtained any special protection, remedy, or treatment with respect to those records. They have been treated, as I understand, no differently than the records when the Member for Wainwright left cabinet or the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne left cabinet. Those records were treated the same way.

For the Premier to suggest, as I heard him do, that in some fashion the Leader of the Opposition was trying to have those records that had been in her possession treated in some different way is more than mischievous. It's inaccurate, and it's just plain wrong. I trust I've not distorted the meaning of the words I heard from the Premier, but it's clearly a concern.

If we have an existing set of policies in terms of the way we deal with ministerial records, let's recognize that that is, in effect, uniform treatment and not something that in this case somebody has tried to have records protected for a longer time period.

You might recognize, sir, if you look at the amendments to the FOIP Act, that there are specific provisions in terms of records like this from this point forward, but I think the insinuation and implication, if not the express comment made by the Premier, is inflammatory as well as inaccurate and in my view offends 408(2). I'd ask the Premier to withdraw the remarks he made and in fact apologize in the House for the insinuation that he made.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate what the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo is rising on, that being a procedural issue under item 408(2), where it says that "answers to questions should be as brief as possible, should deal with the matter raised, and should not provoke debate." However, if he reads a little further, he will also see under Beauchesne 409, where the issue of question period is discussed in greater detail, that Beauchesne also says:

A brief question seeking information about an important matter of some urgency which falls within the administrative responsibility of the government or of the specific Minister to whom it is addressed, is in order.

It goes on to say in section 409(2): "The question must be brief." Then the real crux of the matter is 409(8), where it says: "A question that has previously been answered ought not to be asked again."

Now, on this issue of a certain page of documents that is being sought by the Official Opposition, the Premier has answered this question numerous times in this House and has very openly said that he would bring that forward as soon as it was ready, and he has directed the minister of health to research it and bring it forward. Not only has he said that to the hon. Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, but he has answered that same question or questions to that same effect, seeking the same information, from other members opposite. Therefore, I would say that there is an issue of redundancy here under 409(8), which may well be another point of order.

Nonetheless, the issue of what the Premier has been asked to provide will be dealt with. There is an undertaking to do that, and that work is in motion as we speak. In view of the openness with which that particular question had first been asked and the openness with which it had been responded, I don't think there is any point of order here, but I'll leave it up to the valuable judgment of the chair to decide.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations on the point of order.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I will be brief on the point of order. I would like to clarify my understanding of the issue of ministerial documents. It is my understanding that ministerial documents are the property of the minister and that it is in the minister's purview as to the handling of those documents. Those documents are different from departmental documents or documents that the department of health might hold during a minister's time.

On the issue of the disposal of those documents. You may hold those documents for any period of time as a minister. You may dispose of them as you wish. However, if you choose to dispose of them by providing them to the Provincial Archives, then the rule of closed documents for 15 years comes into effect. In effect, Mr. Speaker, the time when you put those documents in the hands of the Provincial Archives dictates the time and length of closure.

I do want it on the record and I want it clearly understood by members of this Legislature that ministerial documents are the property of the minister, and it is the minister's responsibility as to how he or she wishes those documents handled.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Opposition House Leader, do I take it that the two points of order were then wrapped into one? So this is it, and we're not going to do this again?

MR. DICKSON: That would be my intention, sir. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: There was a concern raised by the hon. Opposition House Leader under Beauchesne 408(2): "Answers to questions should be as brief as possible, should deal with the matter raised, and should not provoke debate." Then we went on to discuss the ministerial documents.

What the Hansard Blues say is the following: the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview:

The greatest legacy of private health care in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, will be the accompanying legacy of deception and deceit. The Premier risks contributing to such a legacy by continuing to withhold the contents, 30 blank pages, outlining his government's beliefs on private health care. My questions today are to the Premier. When does the Premier plan to permit Albertans to see the private health care document their tax dollars paid for?

Then the hon. the Premier:

Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness indicated on a number of occasions in this Legislative Assembly, that information is being prepared as we speak.

But speaking of missing documents, why has the opposition leader put a 15-year prohibition on the public release of 150 boxes of her documents from her time as minister of health?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo: "Point of order."

The hon. the Premier:

What has she got to hide, Mr. Speaker? Is she afraid of something? Is there something in those documents that alludes to her promotion of private, for-profit health care? I wonder.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview:

Let me amend that. A legacy of deception, deceit, and desperation, Mr. Speaker. Why enact closure, Mr. Premier, before you release your government's own positions on private health care policy? Why enact closure before the public has had an opportunity to read those 30 blank pages?

The hon. leader of the government:

Mr. Speaker, again I allude to the 150 boxes of documents that have been secreted away, squirreled away someplace under lock and key because the leader of the Liberal opposition is afraid there might be something in those documents that might put her in contradiction of her position today.

Relative to the question, this government has not invoked closure on third reading. We introduced a motion, Standing Order 47, which allows full and complete debate on third reading. That is not closure. But this is typical of the kind of malicious misinformation that is being spread by the Liberal Party.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview:

Mr. Speaker, when will the Premier stop his desperation antics and table the documents in this Assembly: pages 31, 34, 41, 44, and 47, all speaking about private health care? When will those documents be tabled in this Assembly so Albertans can read them for themselves?

Then the leader of the government goes on:

Mr. Speaker, they will be tabled in due course as soon as the documents are prepared. I understand that that work is under way right now.

You know, you might have to wait days or weeks, but the rest of us are going to have to wait 15 years - 15 years - to see the documents that have been secreted away under lock and key by the former minister of health, who is now the leader of the Liberal opposition. What has she got to hide, Mr. Speaker? I thought she said that she would stand up to her record on health any day. Well, we are waiting. What has she got to hide?

So under Beauchesne 408: "Answers to questions should be as brief as possible, should deal with the matter raised, and should not provoke debate." And then 428 says:

A question . . . must not:

- (a) be ironical, rhetorical, offensive, or contain epithet, innuendo, satire, or ridicule.
- (b) be trivial, vague, or meaningless . . .
- (f) contain an expression of opinion . . .
- (h) contain inferences.
- (i) contain imputations.

Then the Deputy Government House Leader basically said to refer to 409, a series of things with respect to this.

3:10

The whole subject matter of the boxes is a rather interesting one, and the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations certainly gave her views with respect to this matter. The fact of the matter is that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was a member of Executive Council at, interestingly enough, the same period of time in which the Speaker was a member of Executive Council. The Speaker has had particular experience with respect to documents, and it is exactly as the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations has said: such records are the property of the minister in question, to be released, disposed of, reviewed, made public in any way or form that the minister of Executive Council at the time so chose to do.

Since that time there have been some modifications to that, but in the time frame which we have at hand, these documents could be made available to anyone at any time, and they are the total responsibility of the minister in question. Quite frankly, that should not be the basis of any point of order or discussion thereof.

The use of inflammatory language from one will bring back inflammatory language from another, and if someone wants to throw out "legacy of deception and deceit" and "withhold," then I guess it comes back: "But speaking of missing documents," why would somebody put a "prohibition on," and what have you. It violates all the rules that we've just talked about under 408 and 409 as much in the question as in the answer, as much in the answer as in the question.

I'm not sure where this comes in on government policy. These are debatable questions that just go on on a daily basis. I guess everybody looks for the bite on TV and is hoping to get it. That's what it's down to. What is that expression, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo? The pot calling the kettle black? Is that what it is?

Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate May 3: Mr. Zwozdesky]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to make some comments on the private member's bill that was brought forward by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

Now, I want to relate this bill in terms of the key recommendations of the report that had been prepared by the Member for Lacombe-Stettler. Madam Speaker, I have to be very careful in my language, I guess, as you're now wearing two hats. In that particular report that I refer to - and I want to talk about the highlights - it proposes the establishment of a gaming secretariat to advise the minister on gaming policy. It requires that all gaming supplies purchased by the gaming commission be purchased via public tender. It creates an all-party standing committee on gaming to review the gaming act on a regular basis, to report the separation of the administrative enforcement functions of the commission, to review and report on funding the police with lottery money to prevent and fight organized crime, to review and report on funding gambling addiction and treatment with gambling revenues, and requires municipal approval for new or the expansion of existing gaming operations. Those highlights relate very, very specifically to the report that was done by the Member for Lacombe-Stettler called Gaming in Review.

Let me just say in my opening comments that it surprises me - and I don't want to put you in an awkward position, Madam Speaker - that we have a Member of the Legislative Assembly who takes it upon herself to work very hard and to develop expertise in a particular area, even to the point where the Premier will say: I want you to head up a special task force or a commission to review gambling throughout the province and come forward with recommendations. I go back to the first report that was done by the Member for Lacombe-Stettler. Many of those recommendations were in fact acted upon. That particular member has a better understanding than I think anybody else on the government side in terms of gambling in this province, the implications of gambling and steps that could be taken to minimize the negative impact of gambling. We accept the fact that gambling is now a part of life in Alberta and throughout Canada, but it doesn't have to escalate out of control.

In the particular report that the member came forward with, Madam Speaker, the government chose to ignore it completely, which really, really surprises me. Every recommendation was ignored. There was no discussion. Nothing came forward, even though the Canada West Foundation in their report that was tabled a few weeks later more or less concurred with the recommendations of the report Gaming in Review.

Madam Speaker, the first point I would make is that government has a responsibility to heed advice, to heed advice when it comes from opposition but particularly when it comes from their own members that are asked to create a certain task and then are shut out when that task is completed because, for whatever reason, it interferes with the objectives of the government or the minister, which may very well be to use gambling as a cash cow and forget about the implications, the negative effects that gambling throughout the province may have.

In that report that came down from the Member for Lacombe-Stettler – I want to refer to some of them, because they're directly related to Bill 208. There's no question about that. I don't make any bones about it. It's unusual for opposition to be trying to assist a member of government in implementing recommendations, but in this particular case there is every rationale in the world as to why it should be done. The government has refused to do it. We have a member that has done something good, and the government refuses to act upon it, so the Official Opposition then has a responsibility to try and push government in the proper direction.

Now the recommendations just briefly. The first recommendation in that report was that the Ontario gaming model be studied with emphasis on implementation; secondly, a gaming policy secretariat should be re-established in Alberta; thirdly, a national gaming presence or direction should be considered; fourthly, the province of Ontario did not reinvent the wheel when it came to implementing new strategies on gaming; Alberta did some and so on and so forth; fifth, net lottery dollars should be appropriated to two key priority areas; sixth, gaming is an extremely lucrative industry, it points out; seventh, if serious consideration is given to large destination casinos, many factors must be taken into account. In Ontario it relates to the policy decisions that were made and later rescinded following public discord.

Now, in the actual bill itself, Madam Speaker, when I look through the specific sections, first of all section 2, clause (i.1), the amendment is: "'Gaming Secretariat' means the Alberta Gaming Secretariat established under section 42.01." Then we go to section 3(2), where we would add:

37.1 Prior to the board issuing a gaming licence or a facility licence under section 37,

- (a) the board must, within 30 days of receiving an application, forward the application to the municipality in which the activity prescribed in the licence would occur, and
- (b) that municipality must pass a resolution approving the new facility licence or gaming licence.

The reason that is done, Madam Speaker, is that municipalities know what's best in their particular area. We've seen municipalities throughout this province that have said, "We do not want VLTs," for example, "in the hotels." We've had other municipalities that say that they don't object to them, and they've voted in favour of allowing them in the bars, as that was one of two options that was given at that particular time. Nevertheless, the municipality must have the right to be part of the decision-making process as to what's good for their community.

Then we go into the next section, where we would add: "All acquisitions of gaming supplies by the Commission must be made by public tender." I think that's self-explanatory. To ensure that we get the best goods at the best price, a public tender is the only way to go.

Now, the purposes of the Alberta gaming secretariat itself. It would be established

- (a) to advise, report to and to make recommendations to the Minister on matters relating to [gambling],
- (b) to conduct research and public consultation on the social and economic effects of gaming,
- (c) to foster awareness and to encourage public discussion on matters relating to
 - (i) gaming addiction,
 - (ii) organized crime and [gambling],
 - (iii) the effects of gaming on children and families.

(3) The Gaming Secretariat shall make its recommendations to the Government through the Minister.

We look at those purposes, "gaming addiction" for example. We've had $1.5 million allocated towards the research institute on addictions. What has come of that $1.5 million? What has come of this research institute? I know there is a board of directors in place. I know that they've had at least one meeting. I don't know how many after that, and I don't know what's come out of that. We've seen no reports. We've seen absolutely nothing that would justify that $1.5 million being allocated. Maybe it hasn't been spent yet. But if it hasn't, what is the holdup? Why isn't the government reporting back to this Legislative Assembly as to what activity is going on, if any activity is going on?

We talk in terms of "organized crime and gaming." Now, government has denied any fear of organized crime in gaming. However, again the Canada West Foundation report, the report from the Member for Lacombe-Stettler, numerous reports throughout the United States, throughout Canada, throughout the world state that widespread gambling can encourage organized crime. There is absolutely no question. The potential is there.

What do we have? I think we have one-fifth of a police officer's time that is allocated towards crime that may be associated to gaming in this particular province. [Two members rose] Are they standing for me? Oh, I thought maybe it was a point of order.

Then the third was "the effects of gaming on children and families." Madam Speaker, we've all heard stories – at least we should have heard stories – about the effects of gaming on children and families. As the critic of Gaming in the Liberal caucus, the Official Opposition, I've heard countless ones. I've heard ones where people have felt that suicides were committed because of a gaming addiction, a gambling addiction. Now, there's no way of proving that certainly, but the evidence was there, that the gambling addiction led them to actually take their own life. We've heard about broken marriages. We've heard about people going to jail, stealing money from their employers because they had this gambling addiction and they had to feed these machines. We've heard of people losing their homes, their jobs, their businesses. We've heard of, I think in the Lethbridge area, a businessman losing $800,000.

The member that was appointed by the minister to the Gaming Research Institute board of directors is himself now a member of the Canada foundation on gambling addiction. He himself is one that was worth $1 million at one time, who opened up a restaurant in Fort Saskatchewan. He's gone on TV – I'm not saying anything that hasn't been said publicly before – and he's told his story about how it's cost him virtually everything in life. He's fought that addiction fortunately, but it's cost him everything in life.

But of all the stories I heard, the one that touched me the most was this mother, a grandmother, that phoned me and said that her daughter was so addicted to the VLTs that she would do virtually anything to get money to put into those machines. One Christmas, when the grandmother bought the grandchildren a bunch of gifts and went over to the house and put them under the Christmas tree, the children never got those gifts because the mother, who was addicted to the VLTs, took those gifts down to a pawnshop, pawned them off, took the money and blew it on the VLTs. The grandmother then applied for court action to take custody of those children. The family is in turmoil now. They're not speaking to each other. It has just totally destroyed that family.

So the rationale for an Alberta gaming secretariat to fulfill those purposes outlined speaks for itself.

Now, we talk in terms of this gaming secretariat and how it would function.

42.02(2) At least one member of the Gaming Secretariat shall be . . .

- (a) Members of the Legislative Assembly who are members of the governing party;
- (b) Members of the Legislative Assembly who are members of the Official Opposition;
- (c) [a member of] the general public;
- (d) the Royal Canadian Mounted Police;
- (e) the Alberta Gaming Research Institute;
- (f) the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission;
- (g) the Child and Family Services Secretariat.

Then we talk in terms of how the appointments would take place and such.

We talk in terms of the standing committee on gaming which is recommended in Bill 208. Now, the standing committee on gaming would be a standing committee of the Legislative Assembly called the "Standing Committee on Gaming" consisting of 9 Members of the Legislative Assembly.

(3) The membership of the Standing Committee shall include 3 Members of the Legislative Assembly who are not members of the governing party, but if there is

- (a) an insufficient number of non-government members to fill the 3 positions on the Standing Committee, or
- (b) an insufficient number of non-government members who are willing to fill the 3 positions on the Standing Committee, the resulting vacant positions on the Standing Committee may be filled by Members of the Legislative Assembly who are members of the [party in government].

The purposes of that are

- (a) to hold public meetings . . .
- (b) to complete a comprehensive review of this Act within 1 year after the coming into force . . . and every 3 years after that . . .
- (c) to study and make recommendations regarding
 - (i) the separation of the administrative and enforcement functions of the Commission and the creation of an independent body . . .
 - (ii) the introduction of a statutory requirement to provide a proportion of revenues from the Commission or Lottery Fund for the prevention and treatment of gaming addiction.

Again, that gaming addiction. We recognize that there is roughly $3 million that goes to AADAC, but there is still a very, very serious problem out there.

- (iv) the economic, social, regulatory, enforcement and addictive implications of Internet gaming, which is spreading and continues to spread and which is very, very difficult to control.

Now, when we look at the rationale for this bill coming forward, for the members of this caucus supporting this type of legislation, let's keep in mind that revenues from gambling businesses are approaching $1 billion in this province. That's a far cry from 1989, when I was first elected. I think it was in fact a year or two later when the first dollars sort of spit themselves out of VLTs, I believe down in the Medicine Hat or Lethbridge area. When the former minister responsible for gaming, who is now the Speaker of the House, shifted $25 million into general revenues, that was considered a big, big deal.

Now, that's chicken feed in terms of what the province produces in terms of its cash cow, close to $1 billion, and there's no indication to believe that figure is going to decrease. There is a freeze under way, yes, until this summer sometime, to review gaming totally, but we don't know what the outcome of that review is going to be. We don't know what direction it's taking. Is it a review to see if electronic gaming should be allowed in the bingo halls, for example? Is the review going to look at the minicasinos that the Hotel Association would like to see? Is it going to allow for what we call the creation of destination casinos in areas possibly like Banff in an attempt to lure dollars from the United States from tourists that may come up and want to gamble in some nice country like Kananaskis? So we don't know the purpose of the review, if it's to better the lives of Albertans in terms of gambling or if it's to look at ways to create more revenue; in other words, to enlarge upon that cash cow.

When we look at the revenue streams being created by gambling, we then have to recognize the possibility that we've got to make a commitment to fight any organized crime or potential organized crime and addiction associated with gambling. That has to be done, and as gambling escalates, as the amount of revenue escalates, of course the addictions and the potential for crime are going to also escalate accordingly. I think that's a given.

I've talked in terms of gaming addiction in the past, about how devastating it is to families, to individuals, to communities. We've seen that happen, and that's why a number of communities who had plebiscites and asked for those machines to be removed don't want the widespread gambling that we see in some of the municipalities at the present time.

We now see $3.6 million, a rough figure, that goes towards addiction, but when we look in terms of the percentage, that's less than one-half of 1 percent of total net revenues going to addiction. When I studied the model in Texas . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, I hesitate to interrupt you, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has expired for today.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Vehicle Front Licence Plates

509. Mr. Lougheed moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to reinstate the requirement to display front licence plates on all vehicles registered in the province.

Mr. Tannas moved that the motion be amended by adding "in conjunction with a licence plate reissue" after "province".

[Debate adjourned May 2: Mr. Fischer speaking]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to complete my remarks on the amendment to Motion 509, as last Tuesday we did run out of time, but my position has not changed any, and I'm still strongly in favour of the amendment and the motion.

It is important to note that many of the petitions that have been filed in the Leg. on this issue are from rural residents from Small Town, Alberta. Many of these residents are good people who work with Rural Crime Watch, Neighbourhood Watch, Citizens on Patrol, and other groups, and these people have experienced firsthand the disappointment of not being able to identify a vehicle because of no front licence plate. Madam Speaker, these people volunteer their time. They expose themselves to substantial danger, sometimes even risking their lives to help keep our communities safe, and I believe we should give them all of the tools that we can to make their job easier.

Passing Motion 509 is something that this Legislature can do to improve the safety and the well-being of our communities, and reverting to the two licence plates concept is a very, very positive step for us here in Alberta. I want to urge all of the members to support this amendment and Motion 509.

Thank you.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Ready for the question?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to add a few comments. I'd like to congratulate the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for bringing forward this issue.

I remember when licence plates on the front of vehicles were lost. Sometimes policemen are not very complimentary of governments, and it doesn't matter what government. Sometimes they're a little cynical, and I remember a comment, somebody saying: whose stupid idea is this anyway? It really did impede the law enforcement efforts of police officers.

Criminals are not very bright, and sometimes, you know, they'll do things, and they think they're going to get away with something. I recall many times when I apprehended a thug for stealing a vehicle. He would exchange the rear plate on a car, but he forgot about exchanging the front plate on the car, and the front plate was how we were able to determine that the vehicle was stolen as it drove by you or if you found a vehicle in an alley or someplace with two different plates. Of course, it was obvious to you that if the front and rear plates didn't match, there was a problem here.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I know that the removal of the plate was an effort to save about $700,000 or $750,000 to the government on a yearly basis. Well, I would suspect that that amount of money was spent investigating crimes that did not likely have a good conclusion as a result of removing the front plate and on insurance costs and insurance investigations as a result of that.

The initiative, I know, came out of Rural Crime Watch groups. I have spoken with them in the past couple of years in relation to this. I think it's a great initiative. I think it's important to bring back the front licence plate. Certainly, with the advent of technology, for those who don't like photo radar, I think this is maybe another way, of course, of getting the most out of your cameras. I suppose we could look at that as well, intersections with red-light cameras, photo radar. Those are just by-products of having a front licence plate, but I think the more pressing issue is the issue of being able to identify vehicles that may or may not be involved in crimes in rural areas and certainly, as well, in the city. I think it will help police officers and those folks who are on community patrols trying to help police members out in communities.

I urge all members of this Assembly to support this motion. Hopefully we'll see it come back, and we'll have front licence plates back on our vehicles soon.

Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 509 as amended carried]

Urban Renewal

510. Ms Olsen moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to establish a special task force in conjunction with federal and municipal authorities to examine ways to preserve neighbourhoods affected by school closures and business relocations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One might ask: why does this belong here in the Alberta Legislature, and why would one want the federal authorities involved in this as well? My thought is that we need to be looking at the big picture when it comes to communities, and that doesn't take just one level of government. It takes all three working co-operatively and moving forward. The intent of the motion is to get people thinking about the big picture of neighbourhood denigration and moving forward to some solutions.

We have all of these little pockets of things happening. We have, you know, the policy framework on homelessness. That might be one issue. We have the Safer Cities Task Force and the safer cities initiative, and we have changes that the hon. Minister of Children's Services worked out with myself when she was the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and that's another piece of legislation that's helpful. We have business revitalization zones that council is working on, but we need to bring it all together. Then there's the National Crime Prevention Council, that looks at the big picture and says: well, what can we do here? Let's not see crime prevention just as target-hardening programs, those programs such as Neighbourhood Watch or Stop Thief or Block Parent. It's much bigger than that.

Crime prevention is a very big picture perspective. We talk about safe and affordable housing and the homelessness issue, and we talk about health issues and education issues and safe communities. You know, we've heard lots of that discussion in here. I guess what I'm looking for is some way to have all of those groups that are working together from the municipal, provincial, and federal levels get together and look at how we can preserve some of the neighbourhoods that exist.

Some of the highlights. Schools, in my view, are the heart of a neighbourhood, and once a neighbourhood in a large city such as Edmonton or Calgary or in a smaller rural area starts to lose the schools in older neighbourhoods, it becomes harder if not impossible to retain and attract young people and families and businesses to that area. We've had a number of those things happen in Alberta. We've seen downloading at all levels of government. We now see that it's very difficult for any municipality or any one government on its own to deal with some of these issues. So I think there's a shared responsibility.

I think about a school in my own neighbourhood. You know, part of my constituency is inner city. It's a great community, and it's got great community action, if you will. Those folks really love their community and are trying to make it a better place. Again, I go back to the Municipal Government Act change that the hon. Member for Sherwood Park assisted to usher in.

You know, we've had a number of houses, I think somewhere near 40, that were boarded up, declared unsafe, and those kinds of things. They have been knocked down as a result of – I think it was more the threat of the city being able to do something through that new legislation, not because the city actually went out and did something, that finally all these homeowners who had these buildings that needed to either be restored or bulldozed did in fact get rid of them. Now there's a lot there where a new home can be built that new people can move into. So you start to regenerate your community and gentrify that community, and that's okay. Gentrification of a neighbourhood isn't a bad thing, and there are lots of communities that could certainly use that kind of change. So there are those issues.

Businesses don't want to locate in areas without schools, especially in the rural centres. I think that's an issue as well. If your kids are on a school bus ride for, you know, an hour or an hour and a half a day, that's not only a long ride for the kids. But how do you build up your community? How do you attract businesses when they know that there is no school and there are no services in the area?

I think we have to also pay attention to the notion of suburban decay. We've seen that happening. The U.S. is going through that phenomenon right now. What's happening is that all of these areas that people moved out of – they moved out of the inner city because they thought that was denigrated. Then they moved out to the suburban areas. Now they're getting farther and farther out. So what's happening in the suburban areas that they moved out to to offer them sort of the middle-class life is that those areas are now becoming decayed. Those are the areas losing their schools. We haven't paid enough attention to those kinds of issues as well.

We know that construction and servicing costs for new subdivisions are very high, and the infrastructure exists in the inner city in those cities that could make a comeback. One of the things that I am concerned about, I guess, is that we have areas within our constituencies, in the downtown core of, say, Calgary or Edmonton – even Lethbridge and Grande Prairie will experience some of this, some of the growing cities – where we'll see people moving out, as I talked about, sort of that suburban growth. Then what happens is that we only have a few people in the inner city, and oftentimes those people that are living in the inner city don't have a lot of money. They may be people on assistance. They're not always. In fact, I would suggest that my constituency has a number of people who have been there for many, many years and a number of people who have moved to the area because housing is affordable. We also have a group of people who have some high needs or are transitional. They're transient. They're moving more often than others.

What happens is that if you close a school that's offering specific needs to a child whose family is suffering in some way, be it poverty or dysfunction, and the child needs some specific care and is getting it at a school, well, because the utilization rate at that school isn't what the government wants it to be, then the threat of closing down that school becomes a problem. So now where does that kid go? Where does that child go who's already suffering maybe some serious issues at home, suffering from poverty and maybe some other serious behavioral problems or learning disabilities? Now we're going to put that child on a bus – and we see that happen all the time – and the child is now bused to some other school, creating a little more stress for the family and a little more stress for the child. I have some difficulties with that when we have these existing spaces in inner cities. We should be looking at rebuilding those spaces. It is far more cost-effective to do that than it is to keep on with urban sprawl.

I've visited some great communities throughout North America and, in fact, England. They've gone through these transitions. I remember one community in London. They built these huge, tall 40-storey housing complexes. You know, they built two or three of them side by side. This was all low-income housing. Then they built this great, huge park in the centre. They expected the mom who was 20 storeys up to be watching her kids in the park that was 20 storeys down. This whole concept just didn't work, you know, the stacking. There's this whole notion of public private space, and that whole idea was to feed it in this particular project. So they blew up those buildings. They redesigned the area, and they built it on a crime prevention model. It's a pretty active area now, and it's a pretty vibrant area.

We've seen those in communities in Louisville, Kentucky; Savannah, Georgia; Atlanta; Toronto. Toronto and Vancouver have some great communities and some great co-operation with all three levels of governments, that we should be looking at, tapping into the resources that exist but also having an overall community as well and an overall plan that all three levels of government are involved in.

Edmonton's safer cities initiative is one of the best initiatives in this country, to be quite honest. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora was one of the founding members on that particular committee, and in fact that's where we came to know each other. He's done some tremendous work, and so have all the other players involved in that, but we can't let all of that just die.

I'm looking for at least some thought to examining, as I said, ways to preserve these neighbourhoods. It doesn't come from just this city. It needs to have a big focus. The federal government was in a housing co-op plan at some point. Should we be re-evaluating that? There are all sorts of other initiatives that we could look at. In fact, I think the development community has a role to play and would like to develop safe neighbourhoods and preserve the existing communities. I'm looking for some sort of support in that respect. We have to accept the fact that bigger is not always better. So moving out, just expanding the walls of the cities, isn't always the best thing. Is that sustainable development happening? As I suggested, you know, the whole notion of suburban decay is something that we have to focus on.

We do know that there are programs out there. We do know that all levels of government are working in some way. The National Crime Prevention Council is looking at community projects and safe communities. The business revitalization zones are established in order for business strips to become more sustainable, so it's not just as 118th Avenue – there's some frustration in relation to the prostitution issue and the businesses that tend to pop up on 118th Avenue. They tend to be pawnshops. Let's see; I think there are some triple X movie places up there and all sorts of liquor stores. In order to rebuild, we need goodwill at all levels of government. That doesn't necessarily mean that I'm asking all levels of government to throw a whole pot of money at this. I'm looking at ways to ensure that our neighbourhoods remain active and vital. The communities are generally fighting to keep their neighbourhoods alive, and I'm hoping that we have that kind of will to put together an overall plan as well and look at what we can do.

I think there are steps, as I say, that have been taken, but there doesn't seem to be one overall strategy. You know, we would even want to look at the whole notion of not just development in terms of housing but certainly in terms of schools and community plans. I know that the city of Edmonton has community plans and ARPs, but how do they feed into what the provincial government is doing, and how does the provincial government feed into what the federal government is doing? Is there a happy medium in relation to that?

I put together an initiative in relation to prostitution and put it forward to the Minister of Infrastructure and the Justice minister. You know, it was a bylaw within the municipalities at one point that we now figure is just not workable at that level and needs to be moved up to the provincial level. If we can get that bylaw moved to the provincial level, then that's great. However, because it has to do with prostitution, maybe we should find out what the feds are doing in relation to that.

So there are all sorts of things that need to happen, and I feel that it's better to work co-operatively than it is for everybody to just go their own different way. We know that that doesn't work. We know that we need to look at the big picture.

I guess the other thing I look at is that when there's political will and there's an overall strategy that's developed out of that political will, we're doing a couple of things. We are providing safe communities, and we are providing for new development. We are looking at safe housing initiatives, and we are looking at the crime and safety issues. I think that's critical. We've seen at this stage in many communities that it can't happen with just one level of government trying to deal with the issues, so I would like to see the kind of good work that all levels can do.

I know that there are ministers in here who are willing to work towards this type of initiative, and it's a matter of co-operation. It's not a matter of "Well, we can't get involved because we don't have the money," or "We don't want to get involved because we don't want to work with that level of government." We're not very productive when we do those kinds of things, and the people who lose are the citizens of the province.

Mr. Speaker, I'm hoping that we can see some support for this. This is not something that's going to cost money. It's just great to have a number of different-thinking views around a table to come up with a plan.

With that I take my seat. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm grateful for this opportunity to speak to Motion 510. This motion proposes to set up a special task force to consider the decline of neighbourhoods resulting from business relocations and school closures.

I would like to consider, first of all, what Alberta statutes currently say with respect to business relocations and school closures. Under the Municipal Government Act, part 1, section 3(c), one of the purposes of municipalities is "to develop and maintain safe and viable communities."

Furthermore, under section 7 of the act municipalities are given jurisdiction to pass bylaws in matters respecting "businesses, business activities and persons engaged in business." Business relocations, as outlined in Motion 510, are very much within the jurisdiction of our capable municipal governments. For the province to pass this motion and get involved in directing where businesses are to locate would be a violation of not only the statute but also the jurisdiction of our municipal counterparts.

The role of the Alberta government has been to work diligently to ensure a hands-off approach to business activity in the province and to create an economic climate that facilitates the growth and success of businesses. This policy has worked very effectively to foster viable businesses within our local communities and attract new business investment to our province. This government's new economic development strategy, Get Ready Alberta: Strengthening the Alberta Advantage, released in February this year, outlines very specifically the direction of this government in ensuring sustainable economic development and prosperity within our province while promoting the success of our businesses nationally and internationally.

While supporting our businesses through fiscal responsibility, balanced budgets, low taxes, good transportation systems, and balanced economic growth, this government has also determined to get out of the business of being in business. This means that no financial incentives are offered to specific businesses in Alberta. One of the Alberta government's goals is in its business plan, and that is to promote sustainable communities. One of the initiatives that the government indicates will help fulfill this goal is working in partnership with local governments to promote healthy and sustainable communities throughout Alberta.

In order to do this, the government aims to foster self-reliance and self-sufficiency among businesses and municipalities. This is consistent with the fiscal agenda of the Alberta government, which has been to ensure that departments and government agencies live within their means and that the government moves out of the private sector. The Alberta government has maintained this position since 1993 and over the years has worked diligently to create a positive business climate to attract investment and ensure the viability and self-sufficiency of Alberta businesses, making them strong competitors and world leaders in the global economy.

Currently the government is doing a number of things to preserve Alberta communities adversely affected by school closures and business relocations, making the objective of this motion rather redundant. These programs include Alberta Community Development's Alberta Mainstreet program, which helps communities facing challenges resulting from business relocations or closures, and Alberta Economic Development's business counseling and advice services offered through their eight regional offices around the province.

In addition, the Business Link Business Service Centre is the first of its kind in Canada. Located in Edmonton, the centre services clients across the province on a wide range of issues facing businesses including start-up, loan programs, exporting, private- and public-sector programs and services, as well as others. This centre is a tripartite initiative between the federal government through the department of western economic diversification, the provincial government through Alberta Economic Development, and Economic Development Edmonton. The Business Link serves all Albertans both directly and through alliances with other municipal, provincial, and federal networks.

The city of Vancouver also has a tripartite agreement in place between the federal, provincial, and municipal levels of government that focuses on encouraging economic development, addressing housing issues, and reducing crime. With respect to neighbourhood decline specifically, the B.C. government has a unique approach to this issue. They advocate that bureaucracy will never solve the problems facing declining neighbourhoods as it is too inflexible and that therefore private industry must indeed take the lead. In particular, they stress that flexibility is needed in zoning bylaws.

In Alberta, Alberta Community Development along with Alberta Economic Development and Alberta Municipal Affairs are partners in an initiative with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, or AUMA, called the viable communities initiative. In October 1999 the AUMA passed the viable communities resolution and subsequently resolved to present a proposal that would effectively move

Alberta municipalities in a collaborative manner towards achieving the objectives of the resolution.

Utilizing the definition that a viable municipality is a community which has the will and resources to sustain itself both economically and socially, the intent is to develop a template that will assist communities in self-assessment and identify tools and resources that could be applied in addressing gaps. Alberta Community Development has been approached and has agreed, based on their understanding of the skills needed to strengthen groups and organizations, to assume the co-ordinating role within government. A formal meeting of partners will take place in the very near future.

Alberta Economic Development, or AED, oversees a number of different initiatives that contribute to the preservation of neighbourhoods by facilitating the viability and competitiveness of community businesses and local economic development. These initiatives include the following. By supporting regional partnerships, community economic development is encouraged. AED supports communities in their economic growth through the regional development branch. This branch implements regional initiatives that disseminate information, encourage development opportunities, and facilitate networking within a community.

The regional development branch has played a proactive role in recent months by facilitating a number of regional economic development initiatives focused on communities working together to address economic issues. Examples of regional co-operation include the central Alberta economic partnership, the Peace region economic development alliance, and the emerging northeastern Alberta information hub. These three initiatives represent over 90 Alberta municipalities working together in a regional context. In addition, the Self-Reliant Communities Committee of Alberta Economic Development Authority, or AEDA, has also placed a high priority on supporting and encouraging regional co-operation as a major policy recommendation to the provincial government.

Alberta Economic Development offers a number of business seminars throughout Alberta to provide information to business on current topics. Two seminar series are currently running within the province. Selling Business to Business offers Alberta's small manufacturers and producers an insider's look at how stores make decisions regarding the products they sell. E-commerce information sessions provide information on how to use the Internet as a tool for conducting business.

Finally, Alberta Economic Development is a part of the Business Link. The Business Link Business Service Centre is a joint initiative between the governments of Canada and Alberta and Economic Development Edmonton. The Business Link provides special products and services that help businesses to network, provide better customer focus and service, and develop and implement successful business plans. As part of its new economic strategy, Get Ready Alberta, it is providing every home, business, classroom, library, and municipality in Alberta with access to a high-speed Internet connection. High-speed Internet access can deliver university or college educational programs at home and will open up new business opportunities in the community.

AED also assists communities by promoting the establishment and expansion of businesses in the province. This is accomplished with promotion and advertising activities through networking, publications, studies, seminars, and trade shows. Alberta communities are partners in promoting the Alberta advantage, and AED maintains a full range of community profiles on the department web site. These profiles describe the amenities of each community and include statistics that provide valuable market and business data.

Mr. Speaker, this motion has not been well thought out when we consider the vast number of initiatives that this government is already doing to foster viable and growing communities in Alberta. The initiatives I have mentioned are only a few that deal specifically with the business relocation issue in the motion.

In addition, the motion states that the task force could be a tripartite initiative between the federal, provincial, and municipal levels of government. First, Mr. Speaker, we already have a very effective tripartite agreement in place to service the business community. Second, as I stated earlier, under the Municipal Government Act it is the jurisdiction of municipalities to pass bylaws regarding businesses. The Alberta government would therefore oppose any initiative to involve the federal government in an area of municipal jurisdiction. In addition, the government could not support a proposal to have a federal presence on a task force examining local issues in areas within exclusive provincial constitutional authority; namely, schools, municipalities, and local economic development.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, duplicating the mechanisms currently in place "to examine ways to preserve neighbourhoods affected by school closures and business relocations" by Alberta government ministries may offset the benefit that might be derived from the establishment of a special task force. Provincially there are currently systems in place to provide a co-ordinated approach to departmental planning. These include the standing policy committee on health and safe communities, the standing policy committee on economic sustainability, the deputy ministers' committee, and the business planning structure. It would be helpful to know what role this proposed task force would fulfill that is not being addressed by the systems that currently exist provincially, municipally, and federally.

All in all, Mr. Speaker, this motion is poorly worded and lacks an understanding of legislated jurisdictional powers of different levels of government. I would encourage all members to vote against this motion.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, we've heard an interesting catalogue of a range of government programs, some targeted to businesses and other areas, but I think the last speaker misses the point of Motion 510. The essence of it, I understand, is one of trying to co-ordinate so that you don't simply deal with businesses over here in this corner and deal with schools over in that corner. It's the idea of trying to integrate things and recognizing that the key building block is really the neighbourhood, a unit smaller than the community.

I just look at this from the perspective of Calgary-Buffalo, and I think of the nine different communities I represent. I think how different they are. There is the Downtown Business Association, which is huge. It represents the largest number of businesses, I expect, of any business association I can imagine in the province. Then you've got a small number of businesses along 11th Street between 11th Avenue and 17th Avenue. There's not even a formal BRZ – they wouldn't have the budget for that – but there's some community identification or some neighbourhood identification, and I think that's really what the mover of the motion was trying to speak to with the motion.

In Calgary-Buffalo you've got a very active business revitalization zone along 4th Street, another very active one on 17th Avenue east/west, and then you've got the downtown one. Chinatown has got a whole set of different kinds of issues. So if you were to deal with this, as the last speaker suggested, on a community basis, you wouldn't be recognizing the differences and the different kind of challenges that exist in Chinatown or the Downtown Business Association or 17th Avenue and 4th Street. There are certainly some similarities, but they also have some particular challenges and uniqueness.

When I was looking at this motion, I thought of what we'd gone through when the Victoria community used to be part of Calgary-Buffalo. That was before the 1997 election. I remember the concern when they closed the Victoria community school. That was one of the 60 schools that closed. Victoria Park has been a neighbourhood and a community that's had a tough time for a very long time. As the members in the Chamber who've served on Calgary city council will recall, it's a community that has struggled in the shadow of the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede board. They've tried to make that an attractive place to live and a place for people to make homes and raise families, and it's tough. I remember that the loss of the community school was seen by many as a devastating blow, though you still have an active Victoria Community Association.

They say that all politics is local. In seeing the kind of impact on that community when the Victoria school was closed, I think what that certainly taught me is that it was a huge body blow to the community. What was tough was that these decisions were all sort of being made independently. There wasn't a sort of linkage, and what I applaud the mover of this motion, the Member for Edmonton-Norwood, for attempting to do is to link together schools, because that's such an important part of our community, and also what's happening with local businesses. You know, reasonable men and women may think of a host of different ways you might configure this, but all this is is a motion, members. I'd be disappointed if any member thought to vote against this. This isn't about spending money. It's just trying to do a better job in terms of co-ordinating those things.

I take some heart from something done in the city of Calgary, the learning environmental action plan, or LEAP, that's just completed its first year in Calgary communities. It's a program that was created by the Calgary public school board having to do with school closures, and this was after the minister of education at the time said: we're not building any more new schools in Calgary because there are too many schools that aren't currently being utilized. What the Calgary board at the time did was come up with a major process to find ways of involving people in neighbourhoods and communities in that discussion, and I expect that some of my Calgary colleagues here have had the benefit of seeing some of those LEAP projects. You know, the people who are involved in them feel empowered. I mean, I haven't talked to everybody involved in all the LEAP projects, but the people I talked to signal that they think it's a very worthwhile kind of process.

It's a question of looking not just at what classrooms you close but whether there are other uses the school facility can be put to for the benefit of the community. I mean, what would possibly be the matter with that? It's creative, it's resourceful, and I think there's some potential. I don't know how familiar our colleagues outside of Calgary are with LEAP, but I think it has some real potential. I use the example that in the 1999-2000 school year they had what were called pathfinding teams in 10 different Calgary communities, and the focus was on creating quality learning environments for children. Part of it was a recognition that it isn't just the physical facility, Mr. Speaker. There may be alternatives with some creativity that we could find to provide quality learning environments for children that may be outside what we'd thought of before.

I look at the school consolidation in communities like Acadia, Forest Lawn, Forest Heights, Ramsay, and at the French immersion programs south of the Bow River. Pathfinding teams have been working on the concept of minischools in Hidden Valley, Martindale, Taradale, Monterey Park, Signal Hill, and Richmond, all areas where people came together to do a lot of what this motion calls for and suggests, and that is: can we be creative in our communities? It's useful.

Members may say: "Well, why would you need a federal government perspective? Why would you need a provincial government perspective?" You know, it could be done in ways where it would be a more remote kind of involvement, but it seems to me that it starts to look at ways we can look at our neighbourhoods, which is where we live and where we raise our families and where we carry on our businesses and where we do our work. Are there ways of trying to ensure that we just don't treat it as a school closing problem or that we just don't treat it as a business shutting down problem? Can we look to find ways to see how they can reinforce each other so that we don't end up in a situation like in Victoria Park, where the school closed and the businesses are going to take a hit? It makes sense to me to try and do some integration of those kinds of services.

If you look at what the pathfinding teams have done in Calgary, in Renfrew and at the Viscount Bennett Centre, they're continuing to work into the next school year, and there are 12 new teams. What you'll find is that the pathfinding teams have gone beyond a narrow school utilization formula, one that hopefully the Learning minister is going to find a way to change because it's too rigid, too narrow. We have to find a way to take the creativity we're finding in communities. This is the reason I'm supporting this motion.

What's the point in having these good citizens putting all of this energy into trying to find ways to revitalize their community, to ensure a quality learning environment for their children, if you have one level of government or another – and it is not just a question of the municipal government doing something or the provincial government doing something. If any of the three levels of government are doing things that are counterproductive to a strong local community, I think that's a bad thing. I would hope that all members in the Assembly would feel that would be a bad thing and something we'd want to avoid.

I look at the sort of impact that the proposal in terms of minischools has had. That's one of the things that's come out of LEAP in Calgary, the notion of relocatable classrooms, such as a new starter elementary school in the Hidden Valley area in I guess it would probably be the Calgary-Nose Creek constituency. I think that shows us why this motion could work and work very well.

My perspective may be a little different than some because parts of Calgary-Buffalo are very old. You know, my mother, who is 81 now, went to elementary school in the Connaught school, behind my constituency office. The same building is still standing. It's one of those old sandstone treasures. I heard the Member for Calgary-Currie the other day doing a recognition or a private member's statement and talking about some of the great old historical buildings in Calgary. Well, that's a dimension of the problem too. How do you find a win/win, potentially more wins, by looking to protect some of those heritage buildings, and provide quality learning spaces for children where they are?

I can't help but think that the old community school program, when we had 60 of those, was arguably one of the best things we could have done to involve communities and educators and parents and so on in trying to provide services in one place and do some planning in a centralized way. Well, the government, as part of the cost-cutting regime – I never heard a criticism of the model, but I think it was a cost-cutting regime – eliminated that program and eliminated the 60 community schools, and they lost the worker they had to help co-ordinate those things. I lament the loss of that, and I think we all recognize there is a need for something like that. When I see a motion like this come forward, it's a question of trying to do again some of that co-ordinating facility that we lost before.

So I'd say to the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview that this is not a question that's solved with provincial government programs that are targeted at cities or provincewide. It's trying to get beyond that to provide some more co-ordinated local response.

4:20

As I say, I think that in Calgary-Buffalo you could find some very good examples where people are, as a matter of need, starting to do informally some of what the motion calls for in perhaps a formal way. I remember that in the communities of Connaught and also Cliff Bungalow and Mission, where my office is involved, we meet with people representing different agencies – the community association and the business revitalization zone board are represented – and we talk about common problems. In the 4th Street BRZ it was panhandling. It was a significant issue. So what happened was that my office and the community association and the BRZ and some other agencies came up with an idea. Instead of just ranting about the problem, why don't we arrange to hire somebody to work with people on the street to let them know where they can go to find a meal or to see if there are some job opportunities?

This actually came out of an initiative initiated by the Calgary Downtown Business Association. Panhandling was a problem, and as a community they tried to find solutions to that. You know, as with a lot of social problems, we haven't fixed the problem, but I think what you saw were some really creative ideas to try and reduce panhandling so that people weren't uncomfortable in some of the prime shopping areas and pedestrian areas in downtown Calgary.

That's the sort of thing that this motion speaks to, at least as I understand it. I think whether you are an MLA in northeast Calgary or downtown Calgary or someplace in Edmonton or in any other community in this province, you'd say: this is something that we can work with. The great thing about a motion is that there's not ever a lot of detail. You talk about or you tease out concepts and general ideas. Why would it not make sense, if you have three levels of government, to have varying levels of involvement? Would it not make sense that they would all have some role? Obviously, the municipal role would be the biggest, because they have the biggest legislative mandate, the biggest area of legislative responsibility. The province's role might be a little smaller, the federal role smaller yet. I think this is worth a try. Why wouldn't we attempt to see if this kind of a focus would pay off? It does go back and speak to some of those things we tried to do around community schools a number of years ago.

Those are the observations I wanted to make. I hope that members would support it. I certainly hope the Calgary members who have seen those communities in action would support it. I suspect that their constituents would like to see this sort of co-ordination promoted at every possible opportunity. So for all those reasons, I'm going to support this motion, Mr. Speaker.

Thanks very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with pleasure that I rise this afternoon to speak in support of Motion 510. I believe that this motion is very timely and concerns an issue that's worthy of this Assembly's consideration and support. In my constituency I have been contacted by constituents concerned with this very issue. Schools in particular are a vital part of any community, and concerns surrounding the closure of our schools need to be addressed.

Mr. Speaker, why I will be voting in support of this motion is simply because of the principle behind it. I would like to state that it could benefit from more precise wording and a greater clarification of what this task force would accomplish and to whom it would report.

Mr. Speaker, it is important, as mentioned by my colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, to recognize the jurisdictional lines between different levels of government and ensure that municipalities take the lead. If the sponsoring member is proposing, as I think she is, that the federal government provide some sort of financial assistance in addressing these issues, then that should be taken into account and the motion worded accordingly.

Other jurisdictions have developed initiatives involving all three levels of government to address community-based concerns, and I would like to discuss what Manitoba is doing to meet these challenges. In Manitoba a capital region review panel was created by the government in 1998 to study a variety of issues shared by Winnipeg and its 50 surrounding municipalities. The panel was given a mandate to review the effectiveness of existing legislation, policies, and procedures guiding land use, planning, and development as well as the provision of services to municipalities in the capital region. The panel dealt with neighbourhood decline in the context of urban sprawl, similar to what Calgary is facing now, and completed and presented its report in December of 1999. Overall, Mr. Speaker, Manitoba is experiencing a low rate of growth. However, the problem facing the urban centres is that people are abandoning older neighbourhoods in favour of new ones.

While Calgary has seen a very fast rate of growth, the problem faced is similar. Schools are located in the older ring of the city, while the school-age children are located in the newer outlying areas and are having to be bused in or are opting to attend private and charter schools rather than public schools.

Mr. Speaker, the Manitoba government has many strategies in place to address inner-city revitalization and community development. The Winnipeg community revitalization program involves a number of agreements between the city of Winnipeg and the province and is concerned with shoulder communities. These are older communities that are beginning to decline but are not inner-city neighbourhoods. This program has been in place since the 1970s and involves a series of five- to six-year agreements between the city and the province involving expenditures of about $10 million, with each party contributing matching shares.

Mr. Speaker, there is also a tripartite agreement in place between all three levels of government called the core initiative, which targets the inner-city and downtown areas of Winnipeg. There are two programs as part of this initiative, each involving about $100 million split equally between the three levels of government.

Another agreement, Mr. Speaker, is the Winnipeg development agreement, which is broader than the core initiative, with its focus reaching beyond the city's central core. Each level of government has committed $25 million. There are about 25 programs in effect under this agreement, and each level of government is able to pick the programs which they are the most interested in funding. Programs have included storefront improvements, small business grants, and the building of an aboriginal centre.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Manitoba is currently developing a Neighbourhoods Alive program, which is a provincial initiative involving the departments of Health, Justice, Housing, Family Services, and Government Services. This is, again, a tripartite initiative involving a bottom-up approach, where the local communities decide what their priorities are and government directs them as to the options available to address these priorities.

Mr. Speaker, Winnipeg has a long history of community development programs.

THE SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-East, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has now lapsed for today.

Bill 11
Health Care Protection Act

Mr. Klapstein moved that pursuant to Standing Order 47 the previous question be now put.

[Adjourned debate May 9: Mr. Renner]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the first opportunity that I've had to speak on Bill 11 since early in the debate at the committee stage. At that point I talked about some of the specifics of the bill. I'm not going to get into a lot of the detail on the bill because I think it has more than adequately been discussed by various members in the House.

What I would like to do is talk about the discussions that I've had with constituents from my constituency, the constituency of Medicine Hat. That's the key, frankly, Mr. Speaker, because in the time since I've been an elected official, which is now approaching seven years – time goes very quickly – I've never had to deal with a bill that had so much emotion attached to it. The discussion went far beyond discussion of the specifics of the issue related to what is in the bill, and for the first time I find myself discussing not what's in the bill but what might happen someday, maybe, if. It's the most frustrating discussion I've ever had, and I blame that type of discussion on the malicious misinformation campaign that has been engaged in by the opponents of this bill.

I'll give you a very good example of the type of misinformation that my constituents have. During the Easter break I had occasion to be in my constituency office one morning, and I had a group of Raging Grannies come to visit me at my office. They did their Raging Grannies thing. They sang a number of songs and called me outside. Unfortunately, they didn't tell me that they were coming, and I had already booked appointments for the entire morning, so I had to wait until the constituent who had made arrangements to meet with me had completed the business that we were dealing with. Then I went out onto the sidewalk to talk to the group that had assembled.

Well, my office, Mr. Speaker, is a very small office. It's probably not much wider than this row of four desks that we have here, so the sidewalk in front of my office is not very big. By the time I went outside, there were probably about 25 people who had assembled in front of the office. A number of them were standing on the sidewalk, but some of them were standing on the road. When I walked out, the first thing I said to the group was: "If you could please come in off the road. The last thing we would like is for someone to be hit by a car while we're having this conversation outside of my office." One of the ladies responded: you would like that to happen, because then you could put me into one of your private hospitals, if I got hit by a car.

Well, Mr. Speaker, here we have a group of informed people coming, presumably wanting to have some informed discussion with me about this bill, and one of the spokespersons for this group is saying: if I get hit by a car in front of your office, as a result of Bill 11 I'll have to go to a private hospital and pay for it. She added: I'll have to go to a private hospital and pay. Well, it gets very difficult to have conversations with people when they have that kind of information available to them.

So I've been dealing with a lot of that kind of misinformation, and what concerns me the most, Mr. Speaker, is that when you have an opportunity to sit down with them one on one and actually go through the bill, except for people who have philosophical differences, the vast majority of the people recognize that the bill is very specific in what it says.

I recognize and I respect people who have a philosophical difference, and frankly, Mr. Speaker, it is their right to have that difference. If we can agree on what the facts are and we can still disagree on whether the bill is the right thing or not, that's fine and dandy. I think that is a legitimate discussion that all of us should engage in. But when people want to engage in the discussion with a bunch of false assumptions that have been fed to them not only by members of the opposition here in the Legislature but by the Friends of Medicare, by all the various unions that have been organized in ensuring that this misinformation goes out to all Albertans, it makes it very difficult to have frank discussions with people.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I have had numerous contacts, letters, phone calls as late as noon today from constituents of mine who have called specifically to say: Rob, when are you going to get on with it and pass this bill? I talked with a gentleman today. He said: you know, I have read the bill cover to cover, backwards and frontwards, and I cannot figure out what the commotion is all about. This individual is not a longtime Conservative. This individual is someone who has not necessarily been of any political stripe, but he wanted to read the bill. He took the time to read the bill, he called me up, and he said: "Why don't you just get on with it? There must be more things that you can spend your time on in the Legislature of Alberta other than dealing with this bill that has been rehashed and rehashed over and over again." Well, I think that individual speaks for a large number of people in Medicine Hat.

We've heard repeatedly that members in this House should be given the opportunity for a free vote. Mr. Speaker, I want it on the record in black and white: I am supporting this bill, and I am supporting this bill because I truly believe it's the right thing to do. No one told me what to do on this bill. I am supporting this bill because I believe it's the right thing to do, and beyond that, I believe that the majority of my constituents also believe it's the right thing to do; not all of them, by any means, but the majority of them. So when the debate at third reading comes to a conclusion sometime in the next few days, I will be here, standing in my place, supporting this bill and voting yes to this bill.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MS PAUL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important to stand and address the bill at third reading, which reflects on the principles of the bill, which in turn is something that gives you a quick overview as to the intent of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, you can imagine that sitting here as a Member of this Legislative Assembly, as a newly independent member and the one and only, of course in my caucus I've had hot and heavy debate. I'm not sure who's winning, whether I'm for the bill or whether I'm against the bill.

I think, Mr. Speaker, what it all comes down to is that health care is a very emotional issue. There are emotions involved on both sides, and there is merit in the case put forward by either opposition members or government members.

I think, Mr. Speaker, we have to recognize that the government did send the bill out to all the residents in the province of Alberta, and the residents in their wisdom – their interpretation of the intent of the bill has been exemplified by what they interpret the bill to mean.

Mr. Speaker, when I am speaking to the bill as an independent, I have to reflect on what my constituents in Edmonton-Castle Downs have told me. I tabled in the Legislative Assembly quite a few weeks ago the survey I conducted in my riding. It was the Health Care Protection Act survey. It asked three questions, and for the record I'm going to indicate what the questions were.

Question 1:

Have you read Bill 11 since it has been delivered to your [address]?

Yes or No (please circle your response)

Question 2:

Do you favour the passing of this legislation? Yes or No (please circle your response)

If you responded no to question #2 please feel free to express your reasons.

Question 3:

Are you prepared to pay higher taxes for health care? Yes or No (please circle your response)

Then, obviously, a thank you for people that responded.

As well, the survey was conducted with people phoning into the constituency office, and we did contact 200 or 300 people on our own initiative.

Mr. Speaker, for the record, I have to say that the results of the survey on Bill 11 in the constituency of Edmonton-Castle Downs go as follows as of yesterday. The number of people that read the bill, as of yesterday, was 68 percent; 26 people had read the bill. The number of people that have not read the bill was 32 percent, which indicated 12. The number of people in favour of Bill 11: 21 percent, which was 9. The number of people against Bill 11: 79 percent, which in total was 34 people. The number of people that would pay higher taxes for health care: 63 percent said yes. The number of people who would not pay higher taxes for health care: 37 said no.

Mr. Speaker, when you do a survey, of course you incite some sort of conversation, obviously, and a little feedback with respect to the questions that you've asked. One of the reasons that constituents who are opposed to the bill gave to the staff that were doing the survey was that there was no indication that the bill would, in fact, save money to the health care system as it sits now. They were not clear on, did not understand how a private clinic would save money in the public health care system. So that's very simply put; they just don't understand it.

Number two, they had a fear that the passing of the legislation would lead to two-tier health care, and we've heard that. That's been regurgitated many, many times in this Legislative Assembly, that it's going to lead to a two-tier, U.S. health care system. Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that's necessarily the way you interpret the bill, but this is what the constituents of Edmonton-Castle Downs have said. Also, they do not want U.S. involvement in any aspect of the health care system.

Another point, another reason why they do not support the bill: they don't want to pay more for services. They've paid enough for services. They don't feel that there should be any more money put into it. They want the public system to stay the way it is, and, maybe with their heads in the sand, they're saying that it would not cost any more to have the public system the way it is, when in fact that is not the way it's going to work out.

They also have the impression that the bill would leave seniors without health care. I've had a number of seniors who have phoned and said: "Ms Paul, the Alberta health care card is no longer going to be viable. We cannot use our health care card when we go to the hospital. What are we going to do? What are we going to use?" Well, many, many times in this Assembly the Premier has stood up and said that the health care card, the Alberta health care card, is all you need in this province to get attention when you need health care, period, whether that be in the public system or whether that be in a private clinic. That is the key.

Also, Mr. Speaker, in the survey people that opposed the bill were not convinced that it would shorten waiting lists. I'm not sure, in the debates that have gone on in this Legislative Assembly, that it has been proven that yes, it's going to shorten, or has been proven that no, it's not. But I think it's a recommendation and an accomplishment of this government to bring forward a bill that is in fact looking at that solution. Perhaps it is not timely at this point. Maybe the bill is a little premature before we get our house in order. Perhaps in the long run, when the bill is enacted, we will see five years down the road that we do have shorter waiting lists and that we are using our Alberta health care card in our private clinics and in our hospitals.

Also, Mr. Speaker, my constituents felt that they did not want to pay higher taxes for services that are already there or to pay for the extra technology that is required in our health care system. The technology is outpricing our capabilities to pay for what it is we need. Take, for example, the MRI machinery. It's costly. I think a few years ago technology advanced such that we had the bone scan machine. I know a lot of women – and myself in particular, I now have to go for my second bone scan. That machinery is also very expensive, and it is in a private clinic. It is done privately; it is not done through the hospitals. I think we have to be realistic and less emotional about what the intent of the bill is: that perhaps it's going to do this, that perhaps the U.S. is going to come down and swoop us all up in a big umbrella and carry us all off to private hospital land. I, in fact, don't believe that for one minute.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I also have to point out that when the bill was introduced, I think on March 2, there was a flurry of activity in terms of media attention, and a constituent of mine came walking by the office and saw me sitting at the desk. He popped in, shook my hand, and he said: Ms Paul, I want to come in here and talk to you about Bill 11. He had a very heavy British accent. So I said: "Well, by all means. Do sit down, and we'll discuss the bill." He said: you're going to be very surprised as to what I have to say about the bill. Normally you get people in your office that are opposed, rather than people that support, I'm finding out. He said: I wholeheartedly support the bill. I tabled his letter in the Legislative Assembly.

He gave me six good reasons why. His family is still in Great Britain. There is a public system, and there is a private system. He's had three family members who needed health care. They needed it quickly and it was there, and he said that it was in the private system. Now, whether that was a clinic or a hospital, he didn't say. I think that speaks volumes. He said, "Please table my letter," which I did.

He is in full support of the bill, but he has reservations. He thinks perhaps the bill has not gone far enough in defining or maybe in bringing a private hospital fully and completely into Alberta. He fully believes that a private hospital is the way to go. I tried to point out to him in the bill that a private hospital is not going to be allowed in this province. All the bill addresses is private clinics, which will do minor surgeries encompassing overnight stays, which are needed if you have minor surgery. I don't care how you cut the apple; you have to stay in the hospital if you have minor surgery.

Mr. Speaker, getting back to the principle of the bill, I also have to speak about the need for change and the need for the clinics. I think the need for change comes from, as I've alluded to earlier, the costs that are involved in running a hospital. Many times in this Leg. the question has been raised, has been yelled back and forth: what is a private clinic as opposed to a hospital? Well, I asked my neighbours and I asked some people that walked into my office: what do you envision as a private clinic as opposed to a hospital? What is a public hospital? A public hospital is a place where you go for a number of services. You go because you have an emergency. You have a heart attack. You have kidney failure. You have an aneurysm. You have encompassed in that building, in that public building, all the machinery, all the equipment, all the staff to deal with all the emergencies.

When you go to a private clinic, you go for perhaps foot surgery, minor foot surgery that you need to stay overnight for. That private clinic, in my view, will be specialized to do and to address the needs of whatever the clinic has been set up to do. In fact what you have is an alleviation of time and room in a public hospital that can be left for the emergencies while you're dealing with an issue or a health care problem in a clinic. So I think it's rather simple, and to use the KISS philosophy, please keep it simple. I mean, that's how I view the bill. That's how I view the intent of the bill.

I don't think it takes a rocket scientist to figure out that the bill itself on its merit, if it's going to be carried through the way it is written, with the amendments that have come before the Legislative Assembly – the amendments enhanced the principle of the bill. The amendments I think talk to the concerns that a lot of Albertans have had with respect to the bill. The amendments were absolutely necessary. I know that members of the opposition had a number of excellent amendments they were ready to bring forward, and it's unfortunate that time was not allotted to everybody to bring forward what they felt was needed for a good, fair, democratic debate. I do believe though, Mr. Speaker, that anybody wishing to speak to the bill in the process we went through certainly was given ample opportunity.

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat spoke before I did, and I can attest to the comments that he made. I was at a conference in Medicine Hat for two days, a poverty conference, and I was sitting beside a minister at lunchtime. Of course, the famous bill came up because I asked questions. How do your parishioners feel about the bill? Is there any debate going on? Have you heard any rumblings pro or con? He said: "In fairness, I have to tell you that I've heard nothing. I've read a little bit about it in the paper." He said that he's not swayed by party politics. He's not swayed by "I am a Liberal" or "I am a government member." I'm an independent. It made no difference to me what his comments were. In fact, I did ask a few other people, and I got the same response.

Then I went to Camrose to speak at a banquet on Saturday, and I asked the same questions. Now, there were concerns. There were concerns from people at the banquet, and the concerns expressed were exactly what I've addressed about the health care card. They did not understand that your Alberta health care card is what you need to get services still in the province of Alberta. I think, Mr. Speaker, that that really needs to be stressed and really pointed out.

But, and as an independent is allowed to say, there is the good side and there is the bad side. You can imagine, Mr. Speaker, how I've been surveying this bill. I've been wrestling with when and how to approach speaking to the bill. I waited, because I wanted the survey done in my riding to be open and fair. I've left my constituents enough time to phone in if they're in agreement with the principles of the bill or if they're opposed to the principles of the bill.

So, Mr. Speaker, with those comments, with my reading of the results of what has been found in the survey, and in all fairness to the constituents of Edmonton-Castle Downs, I will not be supporting the bill, because it is their wish. It is their wish that I do not support the bill. As I pointed out, 79 percent of them have said that they oppose the bill, and it is not up to me and my personal opinion to stand in the way of how the constituents want me to vote. I'm not going to be swayed by political agendas. I'm not being swayed by party politics. I am going to do what the constituents of Edmonton-Castle Downs have told me to do. They have asked me to not support the bill, and in fact that's what I will be doing.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I represent a rural constituency. I'm proud to represent a rural constituency. I'm also a fiscal conservative and proud to be one.

I think before I begin today, because this debate and what I'm going to say today is for the benefit of my constituents, I want to go back a few years to 1966, when the Medical Care Act of 1966 was proposed. It was an arrangement in which the federal government would pay 50 percent of the national per capita cost of insured services. So 50 percent would be paid by the provinces and 50 percent paid by the federal government.

Today we are certainly not anywhere near that original commitment of 50 percent. We're representing something like 13 percent. Back in 1966, $34 was spent per person, and today that equates to $1,600. It's been said in this House before that that's a 47 percent increase in 34 years. If this rate of increase were to continue for the next 34 years – and at this point we have no reason to doubt that it wouldn't, that the demand on the system will be there – we could see this increase come in at approximately $75,000 per person. So for every man, woman, and child in this province, to cover their health care costs as needed, as required, as exists today, that would be the cost. Can we afford that? I don't think so.

We need to sustain in the long term our health care system. In today's world we have new technologies that are rapidly changing as we speak. More doctors are using new technologies – MRIs, CAT scans, et cetera – for diagnosis. People are living longer. People are requiring more help to do with prevention and the curing of diseases, and of course we want to continue what we're doing with research. All this costs money, lots and lots of money. Today we're spending $15.5 million a day on health care. I don't say that begrudgingly; it's necessary. But we also have to look at new and innovative approaches to managing and to ensuring that our health care in the long term is sustainable, not just for me when I turn 65 and require more help and care than I do today but for my children and possibly grandchildren, if I ever have any.

I want to talk a little bit about why I will support Bill 11 and about a lot of the confusion regarding it. Bill 11 is about one option and one option only: allowing regional health authorities to contract out certain surgeries to private surgical clinics. The goal is straightforward. It's to reduce waiting times and increase overall efficiencies; nothing more, nothing less. If we can achieve this, it will go a long way to helping people move very quickly through procedures and through the system, alleviating a lot of stress on them, on their families, and on their health practitioners.

I am not a professional so that I would know what surgeries could in fact be done in these facilities. I would want to leave those decisions to the people in the know. The people in the know in this province are physicians, are medical practitioners. They will be the people that will decide, and they will be the people that will make sure that the criteria and standards are in place for these facilities. If they say that a procedure isn't minor but is major and shouldn't be done, I'm not going to argue with that nor, I think, would any Albertan or any politician. I'm sure that in today's world, with all the technology and all the expertise they have, they can make a determination on what can be done safely in that type of environment.

We have said that there will be no private hospitals or a parallel health system. One of the biggest concerns of my constituents is the possibility of a two-tiered health care system. Part of this has come from a lot of debate that has taken place over the last several months. I recall when the discussion paper first came out, and the opposition and the media were making sure that this hit the airwaves and was certainly on the front pages of newspapers. American style health care was talked about. Nothing could be further from the truth. If you take a look at what American health care is, under the American there are two separate routes in which you can go. One is the public system, and one is the private system. We are not suggesting that.

For the sake of argument, quite simply, I see that what we're trying to do is have someone else provide the bricks and mortar. In today's world, in the accounting world, as changed over the last several years, accountants now are telling prospective business entrepreneurs to lease or rent buildings: do not put up the bricks and mortar; over the long term it will be best if you lease or rent space. This is a complete about-turn from the last 20 years, when everyone was encouraged to build a building and possibly to even take leased people into their working partnership.

But no. This is about contracting for certain surgeries: minor surgeries. We have talked recently in this Legislature about several people that have had a very difficult time getting into the hospital for cancer treatments. I believe that if this bill were put in place and implemented, we would see a number of beds freed up, beds that would allow people that are terminally ill, acutely ill, to utilize those beds and allow those people that need an overnight stay to have that procedure done quickly, efficiently, and effectively by a team of doctors in a private facility that understands and every day does those procedures and does them well.

I just find it rather difficult that we cannot see that competition in the health care field is good and necessary. We already in this province are contracting out a number of procedures in a number of areas within health, and private providers are doing an excellent job. This would just be one more area where they could excel. This does not mean we will have a two-tiered, American style health care system. That is not the Alberta solution. It is not one that I would want. It is not one my family would want, my friends would want, my colleagues would want, or my constituents would want.

Another area we have to look at is that we have to give credit where credit is due. For many, many months and for many, many hours I have sat in this House and listened to negativity. We can be very, very proud in this province of what we've achieved to date as far as our fiscal house, what we want to achieve in the future. We have so many, many exciting things happening in this province. My community, namely my hometown of Lacombe, is growing rapidly. We have several, several new housing starts, and we have so many things that we can look forward to with anticipation, with anticipated growth.

I think we need to put this bill behind us and move on. I believe the proof will be in the pudding. If this bill is passed, which it will be, and it is implemented, I can tell my constituents that they will not be impacted negatively by this bill. They will not be. When I go to the doctor, and if he says he wants me to see a specialist and I don't particularly want to see that individual – because we all know there are some people that you can relate well to, and I'm talking about specialists. If I were to say to my family doctor, "I do not wish to see that doctor," he doesn't send me there. We find a doctor that I will agree to go to. If a patient goes to the doctor and he says, "I'm going to send you to this medical facility that only does hernias," if you need a hernia operation, for instance – if you as the patient and as the consumer do not want to go there, you do not have to. So there is a choice.

Another thing that I think I need to say for the benefit of my constituents, for those people that have a hard time grasping this concept – one confusing word in all of this is insured services. Insured services are strictly medically necessary services that your doctor says you must have, and these services will be paid for by Alberta health care. They're medically necessary; thus, they are covered. When people talk about insured services, some of the elderly believe you have to go out and purchase private health care insurance. This is not so. We have said through this bill that if you're deemed to have this procedure done, in fact it will be paid for through the public system, under the single-payer system.

Also, we talk about queue-jumping. Now, there's some confusion on that too. There's queue-jumping, and then there's a medical doctor prioritizing his patients' needs, and often – often – doctors will prioritize what procedure and when they need it done. Often in emergency situations their patients get priority. That's very, very different than someone jumping the queue.

I think something to consider is that we will see competition in the health care system, and imagine what we can improve in Canadian health care through private competition. Is that a dirty word? Competition where I come from, my background being accounting, has always been healthy. It makes businesses work harder, and it makes people work harder.

Also something else that hasn't been said. I know there are a number of doctors in this province that due to lack of operating rooms are not able to operate. These doctors could well find a place in this type of facility doing something they do well, a procedure they do very, very well.

As well, wages in these facilities will be reduced. We don't need studies, whether they be U.S. studies or anyone else's studies, to know that unionized wages versus non-unionized wages are very, very different. There's no reason why a facility would need to hire doctors on a fee for service. They could well be paid a salary. As well, nurses don't necessarily need to be unionized, nor support staff. These are things that would certainly have to be considered in conjunction with the facility.

Is there proof that using the surgical facilities will save money? I'm asked that time and time again. No, there is no proof. The proof will have to be implementation. The proof will have to be in the evaluation, and time will be the proof.

The key objective of this proposal is to reduce waiting lists, to reduce waiting times. If contracting out certain surgeries remains under the control and within the budgets of the regional health authorities, they will be the people that will decide if it makes good sense to contract this out. Obviously, there's a lot of criteria and some standards that will be put in place that way so that they will have to look at each and every proposal on its own merit.

In speaking with a number of regional health authorities and some of their CEOs around the province, I can't say that we will see a lot of movement in this direction over the next little while. I know that in my own community of Lacombe there's one wing in the hospital that has been sitting vacant for some time, and with our amendments we talked about using some of this unutilized space first. I don't want to see that space in Lacombe hospital go to one of these facilities, because at the rate Lacombe is growing, we will in fact very, very shortly need that as an acute care wing. So I think there are a lot of things that will have to be taken into consideration in the final analysis. However, I think we have to be optimistic as an Assembly. I think we have to be optimistic as Albertans. Health care, if we are to continue with the status quo, is not – not – sustainable in the long term.

Something I found rather strange throughout this entire debate: the many, many hours in this House, with media, forums, et cetera. Two things: one, some people did not want to talk about this at all. They had their minds made up. That was evident to me in a forum that was held in Lacombe about two and a half months ago. The Minister of Health and Wellness is my nearest MLA colleague neighbour north of me and had volunteered to come down and sit in on that particular forum. There were four of us on the panel, one being the Leader of the Official Opposition. The Minister of Health and Wellness was refused comment. He was not allowed to assist whatsoever in that forum or that debate. It was unbelievable. People came in there with closed minds, and I think that's very, very unfortunate, because if nothing's ventured, nothing's gained.

Something else I find very, very strange is that all the talk in this Assembly has been no, no, no, but not one solution, nothing that would add to: if we don't do this, what can we do to sustain health care in the long term? Amendments coming forward from the Official Opposition were talked about. Your amendments could have been tabled in the Assembly. Your amendments could have been tabled at second reading. Your amendments could have been tabled very early on in this discussion. Then we could have looked at them, the government could have considered them, and maybe we could have worked together for some type of compromise. But there were no amendments.

I want to say before I sit down that I am a believer in Canada. I'm a believer in Alberta. I believe in medicare, and I thank Tommy Douglas for his insight and for the goal that he achieved. But my understanding is that when Tommy Douglas brought this in, there was a great deal of opposition, and people said that it wouldn't work. I hope, Tommy, that you are watching today and can see what's transpiring in this House, because I believe that a couple of years from now people will say, "I don't know what all that hullabaloo was about. This is working. It hasn't impacted my life a great deal." We will have at that point in time, I hope, come to terms along with the federal government and the other provinces, put together a national debate on health care, and we have in this province committed to paper a long-term plan that the people of this province can see and work with, because that's what my constituents are telling me. This is something that I'm saying here publicly and I stand behind. We don't need short-term solutions; we need a solution in the long term. We need people to put aside their hostilities. We need stakeholders to sit down at the table and address for the future of this province and the future of Canada health care and how it's going to be delivered efficiently, effectively, and with some financial responsibility.

Also, another area that I would like to say publicly: some of my constituents that are against this bill would like to see conflict of interest guidelines put together by the province so they are uniform and so each and every regional health authority is singing from the same songbook. I can go along with that.

I also want to tell my constituents, as a final note, that this is not the slippery slope. It can't be the slippery slope because we are only going to do this one small area, and as we go ahead and implement this, we will have to evaluate it and make sure it is working in accordance with what we wanted. But in the long term I want a commitment from this government and all governments in Canada and Allan Rock and Prime Minister Chretien that we get on with a national debate on health care and put in place something that is sustainable.

I would ask my constituents to keep me informed as to their concerns regarding this even after it's passed, and together we will try to ensure that some of their concerns are looked at. Not all of their concerns with health care have to do with Bill 11. We also have a long way to go with an exciting and an excellent report by my hon. colleague here from Redwater, the Broda report. Long-term care is something we must address, but for now we need to vote and implement Bill 11.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a privilege and a pleasure to speak to this bill at third reading. This bill was cut short in committee, and being unable to be in attendance, I was not allowed to speak to some of the many, many amendments that should have and could have been made.

However, this bill is perhaps the most important bill that this Legislature has seen in my time, since 1993, certainly by the response from the public. The public should be our guide, in fact. Those that pooh-pooh that from the other side should take note that they are our masters and we the servants and not the other way about.

All of Canada is looking at and reviewing that which is happening in this Legislature and how it will fall out over the rest of Canada. In fact, it's true that changes must occur, as they always must occur in every piece of legislation as time does evolve. There are changes in society that must be reflected in legislation. Unfortunately, these changes have many, many people in this part of our world very concerned, and rightly so.

The ones that are most concerned are those in this society who have spent a great deal of time on this Earth. I'm talking of people that we normally call seniors, any of those that are over 60 and have had some health problems and had some concerns. Those people will tell you that there are only two really important things in their lives: their family and their health. Everything else is secondary. All the money, all the material goods, all the holidays, all the wonderful things and gadgets and gizmos that they have in their kitchens and their cars and their RVs and all of the rest of that matters very, very little when your family is threatened or your health is threatened.

So this is a piece of legislation that concerns those people, and rightly so. All across Canada, from sea to sea to the Arctic Ocean, these people are concerned and are watching. There is no second-guessing these people. Some of them have made up their minds, and others have not. Most are hoping that this Legislature and other Legislatures deal with this in a reasonable manner and deal with the facts.

The question is always: why this kind of change and this kind of bill? The first argument that is always presented is that health care as we know it in Canada cannot be sustained; we can't afford it; we cannot afford the status quo. Well, if that was the case, then why was the last solution of this government to chop health care? In 1994-95 those funds that were allocated for health care in the budget were cut and cut drastically. Was that a solution? If that was a solution, then the status quo would certainly not be adequate at that point. It was decimated, decimated to the point that it had a great deal of difficulty coming back from where we were on that date.

You recognize that one of the original studies in 1964 by now Justice Emmett Hall, then, I believe, a cabinet minister, estimated the cost relative to the gross domestic product to be considerably greater than it is today, and it would be then still sustainable. He reckoned that it would be 20 percent more than it is actually today. In fact, currently health care expenditures are 10.2 percent of Canada's GDP, gross domestic product, which some may consider high, but certainly not near what the United States is at 14.1 percent. I'll say that the health care delivery in that country is roundly condemned in this. To those that would say that it is better, it is only better if you have the cash and certainly not better for the citizenry.

Canadians are different in that respect. I have personal knowledge of that having a brother and a sister living in the United States, and we compare notes all the time. As a matter of fact, we just did it last week. They concur that the Canadian system is far superior to what they have to deal with even though they're relatively wealthy and have their health care providers and insurance corporations. They seem to do reasonably well for them but certainly don't do well for their neighbours and their staff.

The second argument that's always put is that health care expenses are out of control. The facts are that health care expenses have never been out of control. They've always, always been relatively well controlled by the relative governments. Yes, the expenses are rising and are drug related. Doctors' salaries are up perhaps as much as 15 percent. The main causes are the salary of professionals and the management of professional systems, which in this province has not dropped one iota and in fact has increased in percentage over the course of the last four years, much to the chagrin of the government, I'm sure. In fact, the prices of the 10 most frequently used drugs are the cause of a great deal of the increased costs in health care.

The third argument that is always put is that the public health care system must be privatized to reduce cost and shorten waiting lists and create a healthier competition. Well, that is the exact definition of the American system, and if that were the case, then the argument would absolutely hold true that the American system is a better system. I think that it's pretty well universally understood inside and outside this Legislature that that is certainly not the case. In fact, the mortality rate for newborns in the United States is considerably higher than it is in Canada and, in fact, a great deal higher than it is in northern Europe, which has a fully functioning and public health care system and has banned private health care systems.

The fourth argument that is always presented, too, is that Canadians are now willing to accept the partial privatization of their health care system. Well, that may be so, but that's a matter of political will. Certainly it's influenced by the first two arguments, which say that we can't afford to pay and that the costs are out of control. The counterargument to that, of course, is that when surveyed, Canadians are willing to spend considerably more. Seventy-three percent in Canada and I think about 65 percent in Alberta are willing to pay more for their health care system, and they're willing to pay more in the way of tax.

The fifth argument that is always being put is that our governments can never achieve efficiency, that government by its very nature is not as efficient as the private sector. That is not the case in all instances. Certainly in a great deal it is. There are a number of areas, contracting and service cleaning and that sort of thing, where the private sector does and should be allowed to compete. In fact, in most of those kinds of service areas the government really has no place being in that business.

But here we're dealing with the deliverance of health care. By and large, there is no more vulnerable time – perhaps there is in the death of a family member and dealing with the funeral services – to have your pocket picked or to have a service rendered that is more expensive than you would normally negotiate than in health care. Health care is the one area that does elicit that response of some immediacy. If you're dealing with the illness of a child and the like, that certainly does require that kind of immediate response, and the wallet falls open.

It's also an area in government-paid health care where there is no point-of-sale contract or transaction that can be made. If you go in to a doctor in a public health care system, the average soul does not know what the billing is from that private practitioner to the system. In fact, they should not know. That is the wrong place to be dealing with the vagaries of negotiating contracts at that time. That is not the place to do it.

So when you come down to it, that argument holds some water, agreed, but the alternative is a private health care system such as has been experimented with in England, which is an absolute disaster if you ask any of those that are there. New Zealand certainly has had a disaster, and any of the relevant studies by any Canadian or American universities in the health care field will tell you that there is no basis of evidence that public and private health care systems can work side by side efficiently.

The last argument is that we should follow the European experience. Well, that does not hold any water whatever in that the successful operation of a publicly paid for health care system in northern Europe is in fact the example that Canada is using today, and in fact it is most, most efficient. The argument falls short.

Now, the argument that we hear in Alberta is the need to control the current facilities. Well, that is absolute balderdash. This is a contractual arrangement between a health authority and a provider. It is a contract. When you negotiate a contract, you negotiate the terms. If you do have the cash and if those that you're contracting with do not agree with the terms, you don't sign the contract. All of that does not need legislation and should never have needed legislation.

Let's finish with that argument, the need for control. If that were the case, then in the seven years that this member has been here, why was that control not instituted? That's regulation. It needn't have the weight of a bill and certainly not at this late date.

The same can be said for waiting lists. We hear the great hue and cry that waiting lists must be reduced. Well, the fact is that there is a shortage of doctors in this province primarily because of this government's ill-fated attempt to reduce costs by just closing their eyes and chopping budgets. In fact, the same personnel is expected to be used for the operations to reduce those waiting lists, whether it be in the public or the private system.

So how do you reduce waiting lists if you still have the same number of practitioners? In fact, it'll be the same operating theatres. You're not going to invent operating theatres when they are available in the public system now because they are not fully utilized. So the bricks and mortar argument may work some 10 years down the road, but the fact is that there are more hospital beds, more operating theatres in this province that are underutilized than in any province and certainly in any state in the United States.

Queue-jumping. We're saying that this will reduce queue-jumping. Absolute nonsense. Absolutely. When you have two systems working, my personal experience, having my brother in Kentucky, will tell you exactly what it is. When you have a private health care system that you can go to and say, "I want to have this kind of special service," because it's either not insured or a little is added for its service, you don't think that's not going to occur? That's competition. That's the way private enterprise does work and does work in many, many areas exceedingly well, but this particular case is not one of those areas.

There is one argument that does in fact hold water, and that is the reduced costs by way of reducing union staff.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I must regrettably inform you that the time allocated for this matter of business for this afternoon has now elapsed.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 9, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/05/09

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

Mr. Klapstein moved that pursuant to Standing Order 47 the previous question be now put.

[Debate adjourned May 9: Mr. White speaking]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, sir. Continuing along from whence I left off before the break, I was going through the whys and wherefores for Alberta and the arguments put by those in the Legislature here that are in support of this bill. One of the rationales for support of this bill was so as not to have the public purse pay for bricks and mortar, as it were, for the deliverance of health care. That argument holds very, very little water in a province that has an overabundance of hospital beds, an overabundance of useful hours in operating theatres, and a woeful shortage of that which is not bricks and mortar, which is the surgeons, the nursing staff, and the like.

Now, to carry that argument to conclusion, the bricks and mortar should be provided. Perhaps someday way out in the future that may be so, that the private sector may be able to build these highly specialized beds, as it were, or highly specialized facilities, but certainly in the short term that argument does not hold and should not hold.

There is one argument, however, that does hold some water in the argument when speaking in favour of this bill that the government speaks of, and that is that any private-sector operator would not be paying union wages to the staff. Now, that's the upside. The downside is that to get good staff, you have to pay them, and the going rate is the union rate. In fact, in operating theatres those highly specialized staff are in woefully short supply at the moment, and if you ask any of the physicians that also happen to be surgeons in this province, they will tell you that that good help is hard to find.

Now, recovery staff and the ICUs and the like of course are also in very short supply. I suppose that for the cleaning staff, the secondary and tertiary staff, there would be some savings in using the private sector as opposed to public-sector union staff, but personally I believe it would be folly to hang an entire bill on the basis of the secondary and tertiary staff and the differential in their salaries.

The "why" follows also to the political why. There is a major downside and a major fallout, and I'm sure it's not lost on those members of the government and it certainly isn't lost on those members of the opposition that all of a sudden we're popular and there's a speaker speaking in the barber shops of what closure is and what it does. There's an amazing amount of interest in this particular bill and in fact the whole process. The argument has moved a long way in the political capital area from a discussion of Bill 11 to a discussion of arrogance and a feeling that this government, in this member's view, is not listening.

Of course, the government will say that in fact they are listening and listening very well, but the public is saying that. When that gets down to the old grassroots level and they're talking about it in cabs and they're talking about it in between halves of the kids' soccer games and that sort of thing, when people are standing about just having a chat, that's dangerous for a government. I don't understand how this government would allow themselves to be put in that position and be reduced to those kinds of arguments, having to spend in the order of 2 million, 2 and a half million, 3 million, whatever, dollars of government money to try to sell this bill and coming up very, very short.

Looking at the polls that even we get copies of – even though we don't have the budget to pay for them, we get copies of them – the support for the government on this particular bill is dwindling and dwindling rapidly. I don't see the rationale for it. Then to have the Premier stand day in and day out in this Legislature and instead of presenting an argument in favour of the bill or the policy, as it were, when questioned, the Premier strikes back at all the things that Leader of the Opposition did or didn't do some seven to 10 years ago, in a totally different era of government, a totally different setting, and the government is not saying anything about . . . [Mr. White's speaking time expired]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I know Bill 11 has been thoroughly debated and there's not much left unsaid, I would like to add just a few comments. I have been involved with and had an interest in health care for a number of years, sitting as a health unit board member for five years, chairing a regional health authority for a few years, and now chairing our standing policy committee on health and safe communities. Over the years I've watched health care evolve and marveled at the many exciting advances in the field, but as well I have struggled with some of the issues surrounding sustainability and have come to understand fairly well the challenges facing health care today.

I've witnessed the increasing role that the private sector and private health care providers have played over the last 20 years in our health system, a trend, I believe, that will continue with or without this bill. Our government needs to establish clear rules regarding the circumstances under which contracting may occur and ensure that private surgical facilities do not operate outside the control of the public system.

In some ways I looked forward to the public debate because I thought it could accomplish a number of beneficial objectives over and above determining criteria for regulating private surgical facilities, and to an extent it did. I've always thought that if we truly wanted to experience health reform and not just restructuring in this province, we needed a better understanding of what currently exists. Without that understanding, we can't be clear on where it is we want to go.

While there has been much confusion and misinformation around the motivation and intent of Bill 11, I do think that Albertans for the most part are now more knowledgeable about our current system and some possibilities for the future. The debate has also forced this province and its people to articulate their values with respect to health care, and I think that regardless of perspectives Albertans have clearly affirmed a commitment and a very strong commitment to protecting and improving a quality, publicly funded and administered health system that is accessible to all Albertans when they need it.

Because of the mixed messages sent to the public from a variety of sources with different agendas, we have had a public reaction to far more than Bill 11. Health care is of utmost importance to all of us, and discussions on issues can get emotionally charged and involve passionate responses. In the midst of debate a number of issues have been raised that have little if anything to do with the bill but are nonetheless extremely important to Albertans. These issues need not be lost, and in fact I think they have given government the opportunity to reaffirm Albertans' priorities and continue to work on other initiatives that will also benefit our health system and impact waiting lists.

Mr. Speaker, with both the policy statement of last fall and subsequently Bill 11 I have encouraged constituents to get involved, read the bill, ask questions, and let me know what they think. As I am sure is the case in every constituency across the province, I have heard from many and from many different perspectives. But when all is said and done, most constituents support the Canada Health Act, they do not want a two-tiered system, they do not want patients being charged for insured services, they do not want queue-jumping, and they do not want the role of private surgical facilities enhanced if there is not a net benefit to the public system. Bill 11 reflects those positions while also allowing us to look at innovative ways of delivering health services so people get the care they need when they need it.

Our job does not end with debate on this bill. We all need to ensure that the Health Care Protection Act does exactly that: protects our public health care system.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, the challenges facing health care exist from one end of this country to the other. We are not alone. But I do have confidence that Alberta is the province in the best position to successfully meet these challenges. Bill 11 is but one part of our government's plan to meet these challenges. Let's leave the rhetoric and our differences behind us now and work diligently towards the success of that plan.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I would like to spend a few moments speaking to the motion that was brought before us that "the question be now put." That is certainly a form of closure, and it is quite surprising that we would have seen it in this Legislature only days after the Premier told us that that wouldn't be happening. Unfortunately, we saw it and saw it brought in by a surprising member, the Member for Leduc.

Last week I was speaking to some of the Member for Leduc's constituents, and some of them were very upset about the progress on Bill 11. One of the women in the group said that she was sure her MLA would be voting the way the majority of the people in that constituency wanted, and that was against Bill 11. She was quite surprised to find out, then, that that particular member had supported the caucus decision to not have a free vote on the issue and to follow the party decision rather than the constituents' wishes. Then she diligently observed the voting last week, when not a single government member voted against any aspect of the bill at the committee stage when closure was brought in.

Then what happens this week? After only one of our speakers at third reading the Member for Leduc brings in another form of closure by asking that the question be now put. So not only is this particular member not going to be representing his constituents and their wishes, Mr. Speaker, the ones that I talked to at any rate, he is fully supportive of closure on the democratic right of MLAs to speak on behalf of the people of this province. That is quite appalling.

What that means is that we don't have very much time left to speak on Bill 11, so we have to make some choices in terms of which issues we will address.

I still have hundreds of letters and e-mails and questions put to me by people in the constituencies throughout the province and amongst those who have gathered outside the Legislature during this particular debate. To choose who to represent here this evening in terms of actual quotes is tough, Mr. Speaker, but I think I'm going to start with the young people, the students. Many of those students will be voters in the next election and are taking a far greater interest in politics in their 17th and 18th years as grades 11 and 12 students than I ever did at that age. Of course, we didn't have private health care being rammed down our throats either at that time.

I certainly would like to applaud those young people and their interest in the process, and I'm going to share a few of their comments with the government caucus at this late hour on this bill in the hopes that perhaps when MLAs go back to their constituencies and they think about the job they have in representing people and that new crop of voters coming up ready for next year, they will think about how important it is to represent the people first and the party second.

This person's name is Gregory Joseph Trumble, and he attends Holy Trinity high school. He says that he was surprised that the Premier would do such a thing as bring in Bill 11. "Instead of fixing the Public Health Care, he introduces this Private System that is supposed to cost less money." He wants to know, "Where is his 'proof'!" I want to know that, as do people sitting in the gallery and most Albertans. "This bill does not get my support," he says, "and neither does [the Premier] get my support in the next election."

Now, Greg is part of a social 30 classroom at Holy Trinity school that took the householders that the government sent out, went through them line by line, clause by clause, and had a serious debate in their classroom. When they had gone through almost three-quarters of all of the work they were going to do on the bill, they asked me to come in and explain some sections to them. In that class of over 30 students – and over 30 students in a social 30 class is also an issue that we will address when we get to education as being an issue in this province, Mr. Premier. Of those students, there were at the end of the day about four of them who were undecided on the bill and one or two who liked certain parts of it, but the majority of them were opposed.

At that point I asked those students who were interested in it to write me, regardless of their position on the bill, and that I would do my best to reflect those wishes here in the Legislature. These are the letters that I'm speaking from now.

The next person is Angelena Charbonneau, who is also from that school. She says:

I do not support Bill 11 . . . We have a democracy. The majority of the people get their way. Unfortunately, most people support [the Premier] because he promises better health care, better education, etc., to the people who can afford it.

She says that "everyone deserves to get equal health care." I think everybody in this province believes that, Mr. Speaker. "No one should be told they have to wait 6 months" because they have less money than others, who only have to wait two weeks or shorter time periods. She says, "It just is not fair." There she is specifically speaking about the current situations that we have with MRIs, cataract surgeries, and those kinds of surgeries where we now see that people can queue-jump.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier has talked about there being no queue-jumping allowed with this bill, but what he's talking about there is people moving in the same line from the back to the front. Of course, there's another form of queue-jumping, and that's when you move from the long public health care lineup to a much shorter private health care lineup. That also is queue-jumping, and those who can afford to pay get to the front of the line a lot faster than those who can't. That will continue to be a serious concern with this legislation regardless of what this government has tried to convince people of otherwise.

Randy Chua has this to say: "There was no evidence to back their claims up." This is the government. When he couldn't find anything, he became more interested. "Could you please continue to tackle the issue of where they are receiving their evidence from?" You know, Mr. Speaker, we've repeatedly asked for that evidence to be tabled in this Legislature, and unfortunately it has not been forthcoming.

This government has ranted and raved over the past couple of weeks about the number of hours accumulating in debate on this bill. Mr. Speaker, the fact is that in spite of the number of hours accumulating here, we have not seen one shred of evidence yet tabled in this Legislature to prove that private health care will either cost less money for the average taxpayer or will shorten waiting lines or improve our overall service. In fact, the evidence does not exist. That is why this government wants to move off this bill as fast as it possibly can, because they don't have any evidence to support their claims.

Randy then says, "Ask them why they want private hospitals if they are not even certain whether they will benefit the people." Well, that's a very good question, Mr. Speaker, and one, again, that we have not had an answer to through this legislative debate. That's a question I heard from many people, from people outside of the Legislature too. If it won't benefit the people, the question remains: who does it benefit? That's a question that remains outside, looming large, yet to be answered. I guess over time we will see who gets rich out of this scheme, but it certainly isn't going to be the average Albertan taxpayer. There is certainly no indication at this time that they will receive better service as a result of what's happening here.

The next letter is from Olivia Rasa. She says:

If [the Premier] doesn't even believe in the normal health system not designed for the rich, then why would I want to go to the regular hospitals also? If it's not good enough for him, then why would it be good enough for the rest of the Albertans and certainly not good enough for me. I oppose Bill 11, and I speak on the behalf of the people who oppose this bill by saying: no, we don't want it. So get rid of it and just fix up what our problems are right now. Don't just push it aside and replace the problem. Deal with it first. It is the first stepping stone.

I think that's a very good point. Why hasn't the Premier addressed the outstanding issues in the public system right now?

The primary issues facing us are shortages of doctors and nurses. That leads to beds being not opened that are currently available within the hospital system. Why don't they just address that critical problem first? That problem is not going to go away once private hospitals are introduced. In fact, the problem is only going to get worse, Mr. Speaker. They've had an opportunity, since they initiated the cuts and since they saw that first wave of nurses and doctors leaving this province, to address that very real problem.

We are in an absolutely critical shortage in terms of doctors in rural Alberta, and the stress and strain on nurses in this province is unbelievable in this time period. They are dealing with a workload that is practically beyond human capacity to absorb, yet this government refuses to deal with the issue directly and head-on. They're tinkering around the edges. They're in consultations. They're talking to everybody they can think of. But what we don't see are more people being trained, more people being put in the field, or systems being set in place to attract nurses and doctors from other locales.

It's a critical issue. It's the first issue that they could have tackled in terms of addressing this problem. Let's fix the problems we have first. Let's get those hospital beds open. Let's ensure that they have adequate resources to run them. Let's figure out what that costs. Let's figure out what problems can be eliminated, what efficiencies can be found in the meantime, efficiencies that don't harm people in terms of not providing sufficient resources or doubling workloads on existing staff. Let's address those current issues first and then see where we are in the health care system.

All of those problems will continue to remain regardless of what they do by setting up private clinics, Mr. Speaker. Not a single one of those problems is going to go away. In fact, those problems will all get worse because now the private systems are going to be competing for those same resources. What happens when you have a competition like that? You drive costs up, and that's not what Albertans want to see. They do not want to see health care costs increase. I think that those are very real concerns.

To go on with what Olivia was saying, she says:

I want you to inform [the Premier] that in 2 weeks I will be turning 18, which means when election time comes around I will remember what [the Premier] has done to us and I will refuse to ever vote him back in. We young people are the voice and vote of the future. The true question is: now will you listen to it?

Well, I think that's also an excellent question and one that the Premier needs to discuss.

The next letter is from Jason Doucette, who happens to be the president of the Holy Trinity student council. Mr. Speaker, he sent me a copy of a letter that he had originally sent to the junior minister of health. The junior minister of health refused to respond to it because he did not believe that Jason was from his constituency, because Jason wrote on behalf of the high school, a high school that does certainly service the students who do live in his constituency. He made a mistake in that, because Jason Doucette does in fact live in the junior minister of health's constituency, and Jason is not very happy that he could not get a response from this particular minister.

What he said in this letter to the junior minister was that he's got a few concerns about what's happening.

The bill states that government will support the private facilities and the patient will just pay for upgrades. As a result, won't the budget for the public health care decrease? The people who are not as fortunate as others will have to go to public health care and have a lower standard of treatment because of the decreased budget.

Also, who is going to make sure that the private facilities don't get paid by both the patients and the government? Since it is a private facility, the doctors will turn into salesmen.

A very real concern when they're pushing upgraded services, where the money is for them. It's an issue for people using the system.

They will try to sell the most expensive upgrades for the facilities to make profit.

Finally, the main concern I have is the future compliance with NAFTA. The U.S.A will start introducing their own facilities here. This is a step closer to the American system. Are private facilities worth the risk of opening business up for the U.S.? I believe that private facilities have no place in Alberta and Canada.

I'm sorry; I made a mistake earlier, Mr. Speaker. This letter is actually from Joel Tambaoan, who is the president of Holy Trinity student council. We'll get to Jason's in a minute.

MR. SMITH: Another mix-up.

MS CARLSON: It's not me who made the mix-up, Mr. Minister. It was the junior minister of health, who refused to respond . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order
Referring to Proper Titles

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the member is well aware that there is no junior minister of health in this Legislature. It's the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness, and I'd ask that she simply refer to him by his appropriate title.

Thank you.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order. We've had many occasions when that particular minister has been referred to as the junior minister, and it has been accepted by this Legislative Assembly as a practice.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: No, the chair does not recall such an occasion, unless it slipped by. We've had, over the years, people refer to members as the hon. member without purpose and that kind of thing. That is not allowable. You know the protocol, hon. member, and it's just a general reminder to you to remember that as opposed to defending what's not defensible.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will keep that in mind.

Debate Continued

MS CARLSON: When this person sent this letter with very excellent concerns and questions – NAFTA concerns, upgrade concerns, and private facility concerns – tell me why that particular minister wouldn't respond. We're talking about a key person in the community. This is the president of Holy Trinity student council, who is reflecting the concerns of the council and therefore the concerns of the students and of the constituents of Mill Woods, many of whom come from that particular member's riding. Yet what this minister said is:

If your residential address is within the Edmonton Mill Creek area, please complete the following and return your E-mail. Comments, concerns, ideas gathered from this address are used . . . Unfortunately, without an address, constituency status cannot be established.

He won't answer the questions per se, and that's exactly what happened here. They weren't answered. He missed the boat because this is a constituent of his who's not very happy about what happened.

Okay. Jason Doucette. He says that he is going to be voting in the next provincial election and that he has several concerns about Bill 11. "We have several problems with our present day health care system. I also know that it needs work." So people are acknowledging that the system isn't perfect and that that's where the attention should be put first.

He says:

Allowing the government to support the private facilities will not solve our problems. We want everyone to have equal rights even in private facilities, also to have an image of doctors who help us, not as salesmen who will try to sell upgrades to make a maximum amount of profit for the facility.

Another concern. By allowing Bill 11 to pass, we may create a situation for the USA to get involved with our health care system. We would be losing more and more of our Canadian identity. I believe that private facilities have no place anywhere in Canada.

Please reply as soon as possible.

This is from Jason Doucette of Holy Trinity high school. Very real concerns, Mr. Speaker.

Throughout this debate I've been in nearly every grade 6 classroom and a number of the high school classrooms in my constituency, and I always ask the questions: who knows about Bill 11, and what do you think about it? In the classrooms I'd say about 10 percent of the young people feel that they don't have enough information to make a decision, which is a very fair comment. In all of the classrooms I've been in, less than 10 people support the bill. Most of those people support the bill because they have had someone in their family, generally speaking a grandparent, who has died because they couldn't get fast access in the current system. They think that Bill 11 will solve that problem.

Well, the fact is, Mr. Speaker, I didn't have the heart to tell any of those kids that this bill is not going to solve that problem. In fact, it may increase the problems. Until we have addressed the critical issue of having enough doctors and nurses and opening up an adequate number of hospital beds, any kind of beds to properly service the people in this province, we will continue to see situations occur where people die because they don't get fast enough service.

The rest of the kids that I talked to are very strongly opposed. In fact, one of the young people that we had here at Mr. Speaker's forum left me a note on that particular issue. This young person said the following: "I also would like to wish your party the best of luck in defeating Bill 11." This is a person from rural Alberta, not someone from my constituency.

I know it's unlikely but I know your party will give it your best shot.

I hope that your party will at least be successful in making needed amendments to this bill.

Once again, closure was brought in, so we couldn't bring in the amendments that we had brought forward.

I fear if the bill is passed as it is, it will lead to American style health care, where the rich can afford the best care while the poor suffer.

This is an unsolicited letter from a young person who lives in rural Alberta who wanted somebody in this party to express his concerns. Just a few of the letters I have gotten from young people in the constituency.

The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and I put a posting in the Mill Woods newsletter where we asked people to respond to a number of questions on this. Here are some of their responses. On surgical clinics: do you believe there is a difference between an overnight surgical facility and a private hospital? The comment is: no, it's only a difference in name but with the same nature.

8:30

Do you believe Bill 11 will ban private hospitals? [interjections] No. Comment: actually, Bill 11 is a door which will lead us to private hospitals.

Do you believe that private hospitals will cost less?

Speaker's Ruling
Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, we allow one member to address the Assembly at a time, and we ask the member to speak through the chair. We don't invite other hon. members to chat back and forth or to engage in conversations with the gallery.

Hon. member.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Do you believe that private hospitals will cost less and reduce waiting lists? No. Comments: just think about where the profit of private hospitals comes from, if they cost less; only the rich will have no need to wait; waiting lists for the poor will be longer.

Should decisions of the Alberta minister of health be open to court challenge? Yes. The impact of the decisions affect us all, so it should be open to the public to debate and not the government only to work on in their own way.

Who benefits from the provisions of Bill 11? It's so obvious; the only parties that will have benefits are not average Albertans.

Do you believe Bill 11 will ban private hospitals? No. It will only encourage them.

Do you believe that private hospitals will cost less and reduce waiting lists? No. Private hospitals will not be able to buy supplies in the large volumes that the public system can to keep the costs down; also, they will be marked up with the goods retained.

Should decisions of the Alberta minister of health be opened to court challenge? Absolutely. No one or any position is above the law. That would be a dictatorship.

Who benefits from the provisions of Bill 11? The Premier's friends and backers. That's what they said. [Ms Carlson's speaking time expired] I've got a lot to talk to yet; unfortunately my time's gone.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and add my support to Bill 11. Throughout the Bill 11 debate there's been a lot of talking: roughly 2,500 minutes, 43 hours, as a matter of fact, of discussion on this one bill. Despite all that talk we've heard from the opposition, there's little if any evidence of forward thinking, dealing with the problems, dealing with the issues of health care that have come forward as forms of solutions. The ideas on their part as to what needs to be done to meet Albertans' health needs not just today but in the future are totally absent, totally lacking. If there was any sincerity in the opposition's positions, we should be discussing those now, because now is the opportunity to deal with the long-term needs of health care, and that indeed is what Bill 11 is dealing with.

That's the purpose of Bill 11, and ultimately that's what the discussion should have been centering around: the needs of tomorrow and the betterment of health care for tomorrow, not just today. That's what we should be talking about, as I said, and that's what I plan on spending a little time on. Indeed, through the process of the discussion there has been a lot of good come forward, and part of that has allowed us to be involved in dialogue with our constituents. It has allowed us to search out the opportunities of change and the ability to preserve our wonderful health care system and to maintain that health care system for the future.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to spend a few moments now sharing with you some of the thoughts and some of the ideas that constituents have brought about as a result of the discussions that we've had. We did have, as a matter of fact, three open meetings within the constituency where people were able to come forward, discuss their thoughts and their ideas, and bring forward ideas as well on the preservation of the system, the needs for change, and how to better the existing system.

My constituents have told me that we need to improve access and the quality of the publicly funded health care system. That was one of the most critical elements that constituents talked about. Indeed, I've received more calls, Mr. Speaker, from constituents who are caught in lineups, from constituents who are ill, from constituents that are caught with cancer, with heart problems, with pain and have need to be dealt with than I have regarding the concerns of Bill 11 that have been flaunted out there, the fear mongering that's happened. Ultimately the people of my constituency have not bought into the fear mongering and certainly do not believe in that approach as well. I think it's important that we as Albertans and everyone realize that by and large Albertans are forward-thinking people and that Albertans will deal with the future in a constructive manner rather than in a fear-mongering manner.

What they've also told me, Mr. Speaker, is that we need to improve our management system to enhance the quality of service so that we maintain our high level, our high calibre. Indeed, this is something that's critical, that we provide as efficient a system as we possibly can so that we can allow as much of our efficiency to flow back into the health care system. That in part is what Bill 11 is about as well.

My constituents are adamant that we need to increase our emphasis on wellness and our efforts to promote disease and accident awareness and preventative action. Indeed, this is important as well because being proactive and preventative saves you money, which you can infuse back into the system. Consequently, that's something that my constituents have asked me to work towards as well.

I'm constantly being told to work with my colleagues to foster and develop new ideas on how to improve health care, an effort that my constituents have demonstrated a willingness to become part of and to work with as well. They've also told me to protect the publicly funded health care system, a sentiment that I and all my colleagues totally agree with.

Mr. Speaker, there is only one other issue that the residents of Grande Prairie-Smoky raised with me: to maintain and increase our focus on waiting lists for necessary procedures. Bill 11 in a small part, albeit a significant one, is addressing this ultimate problem in a solving-method process.

In my discussions with my constituents in all parts of the riding, away from the misleading statements of the opposition, it's quite evident that Bill 11 is a critical measure in addressing my constituents' concerns. Bill 11 basically does the following things: pays for all insured medical services; controls and prohibits extra billing; states very clearly that there'll be no private hospitals; allows for surgical clinics for minor procedures, thereby addressing concerns around waiting lists and congested surgery beds; and prohibits queue-jumping. Is there something wrong with that? Is there something that's so wrong that we would spend 43 hours debating that? Is there something wrong, that would hurt Albertans, with those types of initiatives? Obviously, my constituents have not bought into that.

Mr. Speaker, the need to deal with the issues in health care are not unique to Alberta. Pressing needs exist everywhere, not just in Alberta. They exist in Canada, and they exist all over the world. This government has demonstrated its leadership and, in fact, courage to deal with pressing issues facing health care. This government is trying to be creative, to find ways of preserving this outstanding health care system. We will find creative ways of doing it, and we will see that Albertans are well looked after as far as health care is concerned in this province.

Just before closing, I'd like to share with you some articles that are fairly interesting, which I will table after I've completed this. I want to discuss an article from a Norwegian newspaper where the minister for Norway – and by the way, Norway is the bastion of social programming. There is no country in the world that provides greater social programming. Indeed, the delivery of health care services, the minister points out, is something that's very critical to the country, and concerns are clearly identified in the delivery of top-quality health care service. That's what we're trying to do here, and that's what they're trying to achieve in Norway. Indeed, the minister in that social programming country is indicating very clearly in this article that he is looking at private health care delivery as well as the public health care delivery to provide the most efficient type of service and the highest possible quality. I'll be tabling this.

As well, I want to read from an article regarding the Romanow revolution.

To many minds, including Kiefer Sutherland's, Saskatchewan is the birthplace of medicare, and Alberta is its graveyard. Thus Kiefer et al have joined forces to protest Bill 11, the proposal to formally regulate private health care clinics in Alberta . . .

Don't tell Kiefer, grandson of the legendary Saskatchewan CCF/NDP leader Tommy Douglas, but on Feb. 22, 1999, Saskatchewan proclaimed the Health Facilities Licensing Act. Since then, private, for-profit corporations may perform a wide [variety] of medical procedures in Saskatchewan . . .

The Saskatchewan law is still new, so the number of investors who will accept this invitation is not yet known.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I'm sorry to interrupt you, hon. minister. There was a debate going on that was informal and unrecognized, and I was standing to say to one of the hon. members who offered to read something in the paper to another hon. member that in fact we only have one person speaking at this time, and that would be you, hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's only fair that every member in this Legislature has an opportunity to speak. They have an opportunity to speak at second reading, committee, third reading, many times in committee; as a matter of fact, 43 hours of speeches so far. So I think that there is no lack of time. Indeed, everyone's had an equal opportunity, and I would appreciate that opportunity, as well, from others.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: It goes on:

Saskatchewan will continue its practice of sending many patients to private clinics in the U.S.

Unlike Alberta's Bill 11, which permits only minor private surgeries, the Saskatchewan law allows private clinics to perform any "diagnostic or therapeutic medical procedure" normally done in hospitals. Saskatchewan didn't bother to include anything like the reassuring Section 1 of Alberta's Bill 11, which reads "no person shall operate a private hospital."

Under Alberta's bill, the provincial College of Physicians and Surgeons has the final say over which private procedures will be allowed. In free-wheeling Saskatchewan, the health minister need only be convinced that there is a "need" for the private clinic, and that it would be "effective and efficient."

Why did Kiefer and the Bill 11 dissenters – not to mention Allan Rock, the federal minister of health who decried Bill 11 – let Saskatchewan enact its law without a peep of protest? Kiefer has an excuse: Saskatchewan is once again run by the Tommy Douglas party, so he's going easy on his home team.

What is Allan Rock's excuse?

In closing,

Mr. Romanow has some refreshingly honest diagnoses of medicare's problems – and some exciting prescriptions for change. His private clinics act is bolder than Alberta's Bill 11, and more respectful of free enterprise. Let's hope the protesters stay in Alberta and let him get on with this important work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a way, there is so much to be said and a short 20 minutes to do it, and I think . . . [interjection] I know, and I've heard: oh, we've had 46 hours of debate. Well, you know what? How much is enough when a bill is this bad?

I was looking at this and thought that, in a way, this is a very historical time in Alberta. In a few years social studies books in high schools and classrooms around this province will read about the change in Alberta and what happened to publicly funded health care in Canada. This bill is not just about Alberta. This is affecting changes across Canada, and there have been people expressing concern across Canada. We're changing something here that is not just a little focus on Alberta or Edmonton or Calgary or Spruce Grove or St. Albert. This is affecting everyone across Canada, and that's why so much has been written and so much concern has been expressed about it. We're changing something fundamentally here that changes Canada. They're going to read in social studies books about that historical moment in Alberta when, despite peoples' protests, despite actually thousands of people protesting outside the Legislature – yeah, there were thousands, 2,500 one night. That's historical in Alberta. They may laugh at those people outside . . .

MRS. SLOAN: More than at their last party convention.

MRS. SOETAERT: Certainly more than at their last party convention.

They may laugh at those people outside, Mr. Speaker, but I certainly don't. I have met people who have said: "You know, I have never been involved in politics before. I have never taken a stand. I've never written a letter. I've never signed a petition." Because you know what? In Alberta we're pretty lucky. We have a great economy, we have a beautiful province, and most people have jobs and are busy with their families. At the end of the day they may go and vote every four years, but they don't really get involved because life is pretty good in Alberta.

But this bill has awakened a sleeping giant, and it's the people of Alberta. They said: "You know what? I don't like this bill." They have asked and asked in as many ways as they know of. They've e-mailed, they've faxed, they've written letters, they've phone called, and they've signed petitions. At least 100,000 different people have signed petitions regarding health care in this province. Never before have I seen anything like this. The last I heard about a protest inside the Legislature was the farmers of Alberta. I think it was over 50 years ago, about grain prices or something. I read it somewhere, and I'd forgotten about it. It would be interesting.

So this is an historical moment in Alberta, and we're going to read about it a few years from now. Maybe our grandchildren will read about it, and we'll be there and we'll say: I remember that moment. Chapter 1 will be the destruction of health care in Alberta, and chapter 2 will be the Liberals trying to fix it, because that's what's going to happen. Absolutely that's what's going to happen, and we're going to.

You know, I saw somebody leave this Legislature yesterday when she heard that there was this motion before us that would only allow us an opportunity to each speak once more. She was in tears when she left. She said: "I've never been involved. I've now been in a protest. I've now signed a petition. I've now written a letter." And in tears she told me: "I can't believe they're actually going to go through with this." People over there laugh, but she was in tears. I said: "You know what? You can't let it get to you this much. You can make your mark during election time, and we can work at making it better after that election, because we will."

It's interesting that I've heard from over on the other side saying: oh, they're fear mongering. Now telling the truth is described as fear mongering. Telling the truth is now called fear mongering, and that's very disappointing.

MRS. SLOAN: It's called delusion.

MRS. SOETAERT: It's delusional on their part, absolutely.

It would be interesting to know – because when I get groceries, when I walk through the mall, when I'm at something in my community, at church, people come up to me and say: "Colleen, you keep fighting them. Don't let them get away with this. Are you going to stop that bill?" I get that all the time, so how can Conservative MLAs not be getting that too? I've honestly had 900 phone calls, e-mails, letters, faxes, and we've documented them all. Sixty-four are in support of this bill, and all the rest are opposed. Now, I don't think my riding is that different than anyone else's, and in fact mine is a good portion of St. Albert. Those are the same people we are talking about in that community, so I fundamentally disagree with the Member for St. Albert in what she has said on this bill.

You know, it's mainly men sitting around having coffee first thing, and they solve most of the world's problems at 10 o'clock in the morning in a couple of malls in my constituency. They're the ones who say to me – well, actually I can't repeat some of the things they say; they're rather blunt. Even if they support the bill, because there has been the odd person who does, they're very offended by the way it's been pushed through, very offended by the fact that they haven't been heard, that even if the majority of people don't want this, they are pushing ahead with this. One guy said to me, "How is this going to affect those of us who can't pay for those private clinics?" They know what's going on.

This government spent the money to send them the bill and then has the audacity and the arrogance to say: well, they don't understand it if they don't support it. I find that very insulting. They can read the bill. They don't like it, and that's certainly what I have been told. I was sitting there the other night and saying: what if I were a government member and I had to support this? What would I do in my constituency? I know if I wanted my mom and dad to vote for me again, I couldn't support this bill. I couldn't.

It's a time in history that I find distressing for my constituents and for me. I'm disappointed that this is going through. Many things I haven't agreed with. Many things I have agreed with. This is probably the first thing that I'll have a very hard time living with, the passage of this bill.

What does this bill do? It allows overnight stays. We know that. People define that as a private hospital, and I don't care how many times you describe it and how many times you want to call it a private surgical facility, people out there know that it's a private hospital. So don't kid yourselves. They know that. They know that it promotes a two-tiered health care system. They know that. They also know that it won't clear waiting lists, it won't cost less, and it won't lead to a more efficient health care system. They know that. It also puts – and this is what is wrong, most definitely – the interest of private, for-profit operators ahead of the public interest, and that's wrong. That's fundamentally wrong.

What we should see in this Legislature is a piece of legislation that does make things better. For one thing, I would like the MRI issue addressed. I got a call just on Friday from a constituent of the Member for St. Albert, but I got the phone call. This young man is a carpenter. His wife works at a job. They are trying to make mortgage payments. They have two children. They work hard in their community. He needs an MRI, and then he needs surgery. Because he could physically wait three months, because he could – though he's in pain and he's on pain killers, he isn't as urgent as others on the list – he has to wait three months for a public MRI. Or he could get it done – in fact, I think he got it done today – for 600 bucks at a private clinic, except there was a special advertised in the paper for $495 at another clinic. Can you believe that? We're now having specials at MRIs.

They were trying to get higher up on the public list because if he doesn't work for three months, they lose their house, but that wasn't a criterion to move up on the list. Your physical well-being is, not your financial well-being. They borrowed the $600 for the MRI so that he could have it done today so he can get on the surgical list sooner, because he cannot be not working for three months. People can say that you should plan better, et cetera, et cetera. But you know what? That's not the real world, and if we believe that everybody has three or six months planned ahead to pay for their mortgage, then we're pretty naive. Most people don't do that, and most people can't do it. So that did not address the MRI situation for that constituent, who's very upset about the politics behind getting health care.

This did not address long-term care. I had a question in the Legislature the other day about how far away people are from family when they need long-term care. Yes, they may have great physical care, but if you're going to be away from family when you are in your last stages of life, why bother? I want to be near my family, and I want to be near family members in their last stages of life. I can imagine how sad it was for the woman I spoke about, and I know from personal experience how difficult it's been for my family members to drive miles and miles to see their mother because that was the only place their could get for her. This bill did not address the issues. All it did was promote private operators.

Did it promote standards across RHAs? Of course not. Of course it didn't. We're going to have different standards in Calgary and Edmonton, and rural Alberta is losing especially from this bill, absolutely losing. Do you think we're going to be able to keep doctors in rural Alberta when they can get paid more in the private system in some city? Absolutely not. Member for Redwater, you should be worried about that. Absolutely you should be worried about that. You know what? I also worry that in these private clinics there's no backup emergency acute care facility.

Some of the operations that are now going to be allowed there are unsafe. I got a letter just on the weekend from Ellen Tarvis in my riding expressing that very concern, that some of the operations that are going to be allowed now will not be safe. She's just not thinking this out of the top of her hat. This is fact. This has been documented in different studies, that private facilities do not give the same – they're not as safe as public facilities. So this has not been addressed in this bill.

I spoke a bit about the loss of democracy in this bill. I think that's probably as big an issue – no, it's not as big. But in the minds of people they've felt betrayed by a government who didn't listen to them. They don't want this. They've asked time and time again. And if my constituency is like everyone else's, they've asked each MLA in here not to support this, overwhelmingly asked them not to. I don't know what answers Conservative members are giving that they can convince their constituents that really it's good for them. They're saying that they don't want it, and to condescendingly preach to them that "Really, you just don't understand it" is wrong. So I'm disappointed about what this means to democracy.

There's an issue, just an example about private health care and the direction we're going in this province, that I'm very, very concerned about and very, very opposed to. An example was a Mr. Cameron. He was 82 years old and went to Seattle to visit his daughter. Well, he fell and broke his hip there. He had travel insurance, but no bed was available here. He couldn't be evacuated at the time, so his condition deteriorated. He needed surgery in Seattle, and the cost of the operation was $55,000 Canadian. Now he has to sue the insurance company, who are renegeing on the contract. Alberta health care has written a cheque for $472 to close the account, and appeals to the minister have fallen on deaf ears. It's solutions to the problems faced by Mr. and Mrs. Cameron and patients across the province today and tomorrow that should be debated in this Legislature, but we're not.

Instead we debate Bill 11, and Bill 11 is not about health care. Bill 11 is about money. The underlying principles in this bill are all about money. Bill 11 is about who gets the money. Who gets the money because of Bill 11? Bill 11 is about who pays the money. Who will be paying for this because of Bill 11? Taxpayers' dollars will be paying for more, and individuals will be paying more. Bill 11 is about how public money is spent. I thought this government was out of the business of being in business. Wrong. Bill 11 is absolutely about being back in the pockets of business. Bill 11 is about diverting public money into private bank accounts. Absolutely. To investors, board members of those private institutions, private surgical facilities: absolutely that's where the money is going.

And what's missing from the bill? Well, just about everything that would ensure that the Camerons, for example, their children, their grandchildren, and those who follow us will have the public health care system they deserve.

You know what? Bill 11 should be scrapped. And they sit there saying: "Forget it. We're taking a vote tonight or tomorrow night, when everyone can show up, and we're going to push this bill through. We really don't care what you say or what people in Alberta say." It should be scrapped. [interjections] And they say: wrong, wrong. I'm absolutely right. You have not listened to your constituents when you support this bill. Absolutely.

You know what we should be doing? We should be acting on a commitment to prevention. And you know what? The minister talked about that. We should be talking about prevention. Is that addressed in this bill? No, it isn't. We should be supporting healthy children. That's not addressed in this bill. I've often talked about fetal alcohol syndrome and what that could mean. If we addressed that issue in the province, do you know what that alone would do to health care dollars?

Let's build an integrated community health network. Let's create those health care teams who can co-ordinate programs and care. Let's join with other provinces and the federal government and work out a better system, not a private system. That's been proven time and time again not to be the most efficient. Let's activate a best practices network. Let's base health care changes on proven, high-quality research, and we can do that in Alberta. We've proven it. We're leaders in that, yet we ignore that in this bill.

Let's establish appropriate world-class facilities. We can do that. We are pioneers in Alberta, willing to be innovative and creative, and we can do it in health care. We've proven to have done it in health care in several different ways. In cancer treatment, in all kinds of things we are leaders. Yet we have this before us that puts us backwards. It absolutely puts us backwards.

Let's put caring back into home care, and let's take geography out of health care.

I realize that I don't have much time left.

AN HON. MEMBER: That's good.

MRS. SOETAERT: I hear "That's good" from over there. I know it's tough to listen, and I know it's tough to hear concerns, but they're not even my concerns as much as they are concerns of the people I represent.

I've heard people in here say: I'm not a politician; I'm a representative of the people. I am a politician – I think it's the same thing, quite honestly, Mr. Speaker – and I represent my constituents, and they don't want this. I hope every member of this Assembly represents their constituents and votes against this bill.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

MR. CLEGG: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I was debating whether to talk on this bill at all, but I got a holler from across the way today – he's not in here now – from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry. He asked me why I don't speak. So I thought: well, I will just speak a little bit.

You know, when my dad was living, he always said, "Glen, don't talk too much, because when you're talking, you're not learning anything." I've followed that advice pretty good, and when I sit here and I hear the opposition speak 10 and 12 times on the bill, there's only so much I can absorb. But there isn't too much to absorb, because it's the same repetition over and over again.

Now, let's just take a quick look at the bill, because I don't want to speak very long. There are two main things this bill does. Yes, it does allow overnight stays at surgical clinics. There's no question about that, and what is truly the matter with that? What is truly the matter?

You know, I get about two phone calls a month. [interjections] See. They're laughing already. But just wait a minute; you won't have to laugh long. I get about two phone calls a month from people that have to wait five and six months to get into an active hospital. They get to Edmonton – by the way, it's a six- or seven-hour drive. I drive it every week. They get out here to an active hospital or a public hospital, whatever you want to call it: "Well, didn't somebody phone you? We tried all day yesterday to phone you and tell you that it's been canceled." It's been canceled for a very good reason. It's been canceled because of emergencies. That's what happens in our public hospitals. It happens to many. It's not bad to have something canceled if you live within the radius of a hundred miles of Edmonton or Calgary, but we are 572 kilometres, to be exact, from Edmonton.

The public hospitals have done a wonderful job. Nobody's even arguing about that. I'd be the last one to argue when I have one daughter who is a nurse and another who is the head of medical records in the Mistahia health region. I'd be very foolish to talk about them not running a good show. They are, and all the active hospitals are, but you can see that surgical clinics can do a more efficient job because they can schedule these surgeries . . .

MR. LUND: Without interruption.

MR. CLEGG: Thanks, hon. minister of agriculture. Without interruption from emergencies. The public or the active hospital, whatever, handle them, and they must handle them, and that will never go away. We'd obviously like to never have emergencies, but there always will be.

Where do a lot of the people that come out here to a surgical clinic go? They can't stay overnight. Where do they go? Well, they obviously go to a hotel room, and then they have to go back to the surgical clinic the next day because they can't stay. I see nothing, absolutely nothing the matter with an overnight stay.

The second thing this bill does, which should have been done long ago, is put some legislation and regulations on our surgical clinics. There is nothing there today. Oh, Ty Lund could probably start up a surgical clinic. Obviously, he couldn't operate.

Speaker's Ruling
Referring to a Member by name

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member we've already had several interventions tonight on this. Here we call each other by our constituency name or by the office that we serve. I know it was a slip of the tongue.

MR. CLEGG: Well, the hon. minister of agriculture and the Member for Rocky Mountain House. I mean, everybody in Alberta knows him. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. CLEGG: Everything beyond that is what's going to happen, what might happen, what may happen. That's the crunch of this bill.

You know, I always give credit where credit is due, and the Liberals and the NDs along with many unions have done a wonderful job of telling Albertans about Bill 11. There is only one problem. They haven't told the truth about it. They have sent out brochures, and I just happen to have a little brochure. I read it so often because I can't believe it. I'm not going to read it out because I'm sure they've read it before. But there's no truth in it. That is what the bill said. You know, everything the Liberals do, they backtrack. I can tell you that Albertans are very, very clever people, and when this bill is passed and they know what this bill is really all about, they will be in favour. There is no doubt in my mind.

You know, when I ran in the 1997 election, you know that the Liberals did? They talked two doctors in the Dunvegan constituency into going on strike. Ironically, that night there was a candidate's forum in Fairview. Of course, the first question is: "How come the doctors are on strike? You're not treating them right. You're not doing this." Well, the Liberal and the NDP got up and said, "Well, if the government would treat those people right, they wouldn't be on strike." I got up, and I said: "They shouldn't be on strike. It's not ethical to be on strike. We have a signed agreement with the doctors in this province, and they should commit to that agreement we've got." There were about 400 people there. Twenty-five people – that's about all there are that are NDP and Liberals in Dunvegan – got up, and they got a little clap. When I said those words, 375 . . . We are small business in Dunvegan. Let's remember that, just remember that.

My researcher said: don't you want a speech? I said no, because I get mixed up. I also get mixed up when I don't have the words.

You know, it's pitiful when we have people going around Alberta scaring our senior citizens. I'm pretty near scared. I am a senior citizen. I'd be almost scared too if I listened to that kind of stuff. We in the province of Alberta without a doubt – without a doubt – have the best seniors' programs of anywhere in Canada and probably the world. Probably the world. Go to any other province and ask them. We have the best programs. We have wonderful health care.

In closing, I just want to say something that I know is going to happen in the years to come. What we have in health care are many what I call universal programs. I can tell you that we will never, ever afford a universal program at the rate we're going today. In 10 years – and I'll talk federally. If you wanted me to talk provincially, I will do that too. Eighty-five billion dollars federally for our health care in Canada. At the rate we're going, at 10 percent a year – I went to school a long time ago but inside of nine years it'll be at least $170 billion.

Now, I can't sit here and say that Alberta can't afford this 10 percent. We all know that we can afford that 10 percent, and we also know that the federal government can afford it as we sit here today. But I happened to come here in 1986, and we lost 3 and a half billion dollars from '85 revenue to 1986.

What will happen? And it will happen, people. It will happen. It won't happen tomorrow or next year. I don't know when it'll happen. Then we will not have a health care plan. I talked to our minister of health. I just want every minister of health in Canada to get together with the federal Minister of Health and sit down and make sure that we can cover people's needs when it comes to health care. Not their wants. In a universal program you can never satisfy everybody's wants. Never will. It'll never happen. It'll happen and happen, and all of a sudden the whole thing will fall.

You know, it reminds me of a story. As hard up as we are in the north there, we do it quite often. If I'm in the middle of downtown Fairview and it's 30 above and I'm giving away lemonade, everybody that goes by takes a drink of lemonade, but if I charge them a dollar, all of a sudden nobody is thirsty. It's no different than in our health system. What we've got to do is make sure that we take the abuse out of the system. This bill does not do that. This bill does not do that. [interjections] That's why I say that when she's talking, she's not learning anything. She should be listening. She should be listening.

In closing, I just want to say that the Liberals have a great policy, but their policy changes as the wind blows. They've got a different policy when it's from the south than they have when it's from the north or the east or the west. Well, I'm sorry; Albertans won't buy this stuff. People will not buy it, because people in Alberta are very clever. When this bill is all passed through, well, the whole world isn't – we don't have to pay for anything. It doesn't matter whether we go to a surgical clinic or whether we go to a public hospital, we're not going to pay anything. If you need it, this government will be there. It will be there to protect Albertans' needs – that's what this government is here for – and do it in the most efficient way, because someday it'll have to be done that way.

Thank you.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, before I begin, I'd to ask for unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member.

head: Introduction of Guests

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not too often that I get to introduce one or two people from southern Alberta, but we have five guests in the gallery this evening, and two of them happen to be from southern Alberta. The first is Cheryl Lamb, from Lethbridge. The second is Colleen Sinclair, from Taber. They're with their friends from Edmonton, Susan Duncan and Dianne Godkin, and also Don Crisall, from St. Albert. I'd like to ask them to stand in the public gallery.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 11
Health Care Protection Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Then to speak, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to rise this evening to speak in third reading on Bill 11. This has been a bill that has probably brought more discussion to my office, more discussion to the street-side, more discussion to the cafe, more discussion to meetings that have nothing to do with health care than any other issue that we've faced since I began to represent Lethbridge-East in 1993. I think it's even well up on the scale compared to the debates about the cuts in education and in health care in 1994 and '95. This is something that everybody wants to talk about.

Mr. Speaker, I think one of the things that's really unique about the debate that's going on right now with Bill 11 in the community and among the people that I speak to is that a lot of them, with all of the debate, with all of the publications, with all of the advertisements still don't truly understand what the bill really means to their health care system. So they want to know things like: what does it do to queue-jumping? What does it do to two-tiered health care? What's it going to do to access? These are the kinds of things that they don't truly understand in the implications of this bill at this time.

I think the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky a little while ago talked about, you know: one of the things we have to talk about is looking for innovative, new ways to provide health care. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think this is something that Bill 11 tries to do, but it only tackles one very, very small area. The debate goes around how we deal with access to our health care system, how we deal with the waiting lists in our health care system. These are the two issues that really are at the crux of the concerns of most Albertans. They want to know whether or not they're going to get timely and complete health care from the public system. I would suggest that Bill 11 doesn't really go far enough in addressing those kinds of issues. What it does is not really provide the regional health authorities or our health system at a provincial level with a lot of options.

What it does is say: okay, we're going to define the role of private surgical facilities; we're going to define the relationship between a regional health authority and a private surgical facility. But it also talks about this supposedly giving us a real change in access, a real change in the waiting lists. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, as I did in my debate at second reading, that the issue here is that unless we have more overall capacity in the system, no matter how we organize the structure of that system, it's not going to reduce waiting lists or improve access. That capacity right now is defined by the number of dollars that are available for regional health authorities to allocate to the provision of particular services.

It doesn't matter if they say: okay, we've got X dollars to provide for a postoperative bed in a public hospital. If we're going to take those exact same dollars and put them into a contract to provide that recovery bed or the operation itself in a private surgical facility, we don't have more capacity. How can we say that this is going to reduce waiting lists, how can we say that it's going to give us greater service, when all we're doing is transferring a dollar out of a budget through a contract to a private operator?

Mr. Speaker, we talk about how this kind of process has to be looked at in the ability it's going to give us to really enhance our services. If we look at how the original bill was defined, it really doesn't talk about how regional health authorities can improve that efficiency. We've heard references to the fact that private operators are not going to be unionized. They're going to be non-union providers of these services, so their labour will be cheaper.

Mr. Speaker, we've seen a number of cases where competing businesses have started in this province, in our country with non-union members, and it doesn't take very long until they're unionized, especially when you get into the areas where the majority of the providers of that service are members of unions. They have to operate to the same standards of staffing. When we look at that, we're going to see that there's no real chance to get the efficiencies except maybe in a very, very short-run situation.

What we've got to start doing is looking at whether or not we can really rearrange and deal with some of the dollar leakage that exists in our system. We put in restrictions in our education system that talk about how much of the total allocated budget a school board can use in administration. We don't put the same thing into health care. Why not? We hear all kinds of discussions about the inequities that exist in the number of administrative dollars that are being provided to different regional health authorities. Mr. Speaker, service is defined by the frontline dollar, the dollar that's actually there to service a patient when they have a need. We can't have this kind of false expectation created when we say: we're going to give you that greater capacity just by having contracts out. Those contracts are going to cost the same as providing that service through the public system. This bill doesn't provide an increase in service.

Mr. Speaker, from a third reading perspective we also have to look at how we're going to deal with the effectiveness of this bill when it gets operational. What we're going to see is that the government has promised us that this bill is going to get rid of queue-jumping. But when we look at the bill, it doesn't do it completely. We've heard numerous references already to the idea that you can go outside the insured service component and pay for support diagnostic services and get on the queues quicker. That constitutes queue-jumping. By paying, you get in ahead of someone else who doesn't have the money to provide that diagnostic service.

Mr. Speaker, you know, I ended up a couple of weeks ago being the topic of a few headlines by saying that we need to have more clarity in the context of how we talk about this bill. I look at the little packet of amendments that came out, and right in here it says, "no person shall . . . provide an uninsured surgical service . . . for the purpose of" queue-jumping. Yet when we look at the news release that came out with that very same set of amendments, the news release says that you cannot get faster service "to an insured service through the purchase of an enhanced product or service or an uninsured service." They left out surgical. By "uninsured service" this would imply that that would cover the possibility of going out and getting an MRI because that is a noninsured service. So if you read the news release, you believe: wow, they've plugged the hole in this bill. But when you actually look at the bill, they haven't.

So, you know, misinformation doesn't allow us to provide our constituents with the kind of debate that's necessary to conduct a thorough review of their wishes when it comes to how we act on their behalf in this Legislature. This is the kind of thing that we have to start looking at a little more closely, because more and more we're seeing our constituents become actively involved in the processes that we conduct here on their behalf. We see people wanting to have copies of legislation when they come to our office. They want to be able to read the bills. They want to be able to read the relevant news releases, the newspaper articles, the interpretations of them. We have to be able to give them accurate information that has a consistent set of definitions and a consistent set of even connotative interpretations; otherwise, we end up with the kind of debate we've had over this bill, where no matter how many people you talk to, they each have 10 reasons why they can source their information to be right. That's not helpful when it comes to us providing constructive debate here in the Legislature on behalf of our constituents.

Mr. Speaker, this bill in its context, in its ability to provide options I don't think really addresses the issues that we have to look at in the context of our health care system. We have to start looking at how we can deliver those services. Again, the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky was up shortly before me, and he talked about some of the things that his constituents are saying. Those are the same things I'm hearing in southern Alberta, in Lethbridge. People want to see us be more proactive, deal with preventative health care, deal with systems that allow for the introduction of vaccines, the introduction of education, and the idea that this is when it's appropriate to use a health care system.

We've never talked about possibly reorganizing some of our emergency wards or some of our health care access systems to where we do a set of education components and possible prescreening so that we're sure that people that come in there really have a functional need. We all saw the article in the paper about three weeks ago where they were tracking some individuals in Alberta. To prevent the disclosure of individual activities, they reported that 25 people in the province had used emergency in the last year to the tune of twice a month on average. It's hard to imagine how anybody could be using an emergency ward at that level: the idea that you are going to have that many emergencies even if it's weekends or evenings. Now, is it possible that these individuals are effectively using the emergency to get after-hours doctor care? Well, if that's the case, then we need to look at longer hours in our physician clinics. We need to start looking at some of these options that will provide us with more cost-effective ways of delivering our health care system.

Mr. Speaker, the thing that I guess I find the most lacking in Bill 11 is the clear definition of the way the minister will determine whether or not the contract is in the public interest. We see the section there that talks about all the different things the minister is going to look at when they decide whether or not they will approve a contract, and they talk about the public benefit. Well, how do you define public benefit in that kind of a context, especially when we look at all of the different innuendos and connotative definitions of that term that have gone out to the public in the last three months since this debate about Bill 11 started? If we take it back to the idea of Bill 37 last year, this kind of thing has been going on. How do we define cost-effectiveness?

As an economist and a previous faculty member out of a faculty of management, one of the things that we learn in there is that there are a number of different ways of reporting costs. There are a number of different ways of doing the comparative cost analysis. Do you look at it from the short-run perspective or the long-run perspective? You can get a completely different decision whether you look at it in those contexts. How do you handle the concepts of amortized costs? Just using simple little different discount rates can completely change the decision you make. If we're going to talk about this, we've got to be sure we get our definitions and our terms so that we know that the public costs are truly being reflected in the total context.

Mr. Speaker, when I talk about this in Lethbridge, a lot of times I talk about the internal rate of return that comes from a business. Well, even if we use the concepts that a lot of people are talking about now in public accounting where they have to deal with an internal rate of return so that we can deal with cost-effectiveness as public spenders, then what we're doing is transferring that money out of one pocket, say the minister of health, back into general revenue, because we've accounted for the discount on our capital investment.

If we deal with it in the private sector, we take that same volume of dollars and transfer it off to some financial institution. It goes to a bank; it goes to a bunch of shareholders. That's gone from the public use. We don't have the option of taking it back out of general revenue and putting it into an expanded health care system, maybe even a tax cut, some of these kinds of things that would really give us an effective way of addressing how we spend those public dollars.

This bill, in the section where the minister has to make the decision about cost-effectiveness, doesn't outline any of that. Until we know how the minister is going to do that, how are we ever going to judge whether or not we're getting value for our dollar?

Mr. Speaker, what would be wrong with a public debate before a contract can be let, where the parameters that are being used to reflect these decisions have to be presented and debated in a public meeting in the community or in the health authority region where the contract would be undertaken? If it's going to be for a service that's available on an across-province level, then we should have a full provincial debate on it.

These are the kinds of things that this bill doesn't address. Mr. Speaker, I guess we have to look at how we're going to be able to make the people of Alberta feel comfortable, and at this point this bill does not do that.

Mr. Speaker, we have to look at it also from the perspective of whether or not we've actually been able to look at the power that exists with the government in terms of how they're going to be able to actually implement the bill. There's a lot of power that falls back onto the regional health authorities. We already have had an admission from the government that there is excess capacity in the current system, and I will commend the government at this point for bringing in the amendment that says that they have to use existing capacity. But they always put a whole bunch of adjectives in front of that. So again we're caught with the idea that depending upon how you interpret those adjectives, what we're going to have is a lot of interpretation of whether or not the existing capacity is used.

Mr. Speaker, we heard earlier references to Saskatchewan and how they were sending some of their citizens off to other provinces or to the U.S. There are probably a number of procedures in a small population base like the less than a million people that are in Saskatchewan where they cannot create an effective system to deliver that service themselves, and the most cost-effective way for them to do it is to take public dollars and transfer the patient to where it can be provided efficiently.

This bill doesn't address the idea of specialized surgical facilities under the public health care system. Why can't we have the kind of efficiencies that can be created by specialized surgical facilities operated inside the public system? We keep hearing: well, you know, these surgical facilities can specialize. Why can't we in the public system specialize? These are options that we have to be able to look at.

Mr. Speaker, until we see some of those issues addressed, I have to admit that I'm still going to vote no on this bill.

Thank you, very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Albertans and Canadians we like our health care system. It's evolved to meet changing needs since it was introduced some 35 or 40 years ago. The way it has been funded has changed as well. What was once an equally shared program between the federal and provincial governments has now changed to become mostly a provincially funded program. Thirty percent of Alberta's health care budget goes into health, and 5 percent of the federal budget is dedicated to health care. Put another way, the province pays about 87 percent of the cost of health care, and the federal government pays about 13 percent. It's similar in other provinces as well.

We also like the way it appears to be unique in the world for its level of service to all citizens of the country, and for its adherence to the five principles of the Canada Health Act. "Universality": all insured Albertans are entitled to all insured services provided in the province. "Comprehensiveness": all medically necessary services are insured. "Accessibility": access to all insured services is provided uniformly, and reasonable compensation is paid for services provided. "Portability": health care services can be utilized in other provinces. "Public administration": health care is publicly administered and publicly funded.

We reject the American-style, two-tier health care system, where citizens can obtain different levels of care based on the kind of money they have or the kind of insurance policy they or their employer has purchased on their behalf. Following the principles of the Canada Health Act, our system is equal and free, but we know it's not a cost-free system. It's paid for through our tax dollars, through resource revenues, and also medicare premiums, which provide about 10 percent of the cost of health care here in Alberta. We know the total cost of health care provided under the Canada Health Act and Alberta health care is about $6 billion, and that's for about 3 million Albertans. If we do the math, that means that approximately $2,000 is spent on every man, woman, and child, in this province every year.

Let's consider some aspects of our current health care system. There are about 5,000 different surgical and medical procedures identified and regulated by the medical profession, and most are paid for by medicare. About 150 of these procedures are currently being done in privately owned surgical facilities operating here in our province. There are 52 of these clinics currently operating in Alberta, and that situation is not unique to Alberta, as other provinces also have privately owned surgical clinics.

The doctors are paid by Alberta health care for the operation, say a cataract removal, the same amount of money whether the cataract is removed in the Fort Saskatchewan hospital, the Royal Alex, or the Gimbel eye clinic. The costs of the building and support staff is paid also in both cases by Alberta health care through the local health authority. These costs are called facility fees, and if patients had to pay facility fees in private clinics to pay for the building and staff, then Alberta would lose transfer payments from the federal government.

We know, too, that the private sector plays a large role in the delivery of health care and that the public system pays for some parts but not others. There are chiropractors, opticians, optometrists, dentists, pharmacies, drug companies, ambulances, physiotherapy, child psychologists, walk-in clinics, medcentres, and long-term care facilities for older seniors.

We recognize, too, that there are challenges in the delivery of health care. Recently the federal minister challenged the provinces to be innovative, to reduce wait lists, to increase the number of doctors and nurses available, and to implement more home care to reduce hospital stays. These challenges are the same in every province, but Alberta is ahead of the other provinces in addressing the issues. Because of our early willingness to address budget problems like deficits and debt and use windfall resource revenues to reduce interest rates by paying down the debt, Alberta is in a much better position than other provinces to be able to pay for ongoing quality health care.

There are several initiatives. Health care spending will increase by about 20 percent, or $1.1 billion, over the next three years. More doctors, nurses, and specialists will be trained and recruited. Waiting times are targeted for reductions. There will be increased home care support, wellness will be promoted, and the prevention of accidents and diseases will be emphasized.

The government has put forward the following six-point plan to improve our health care system: first, improving access to publicly funded services; second, improving the management of the health system; third, enhancing the quality of health services; fourth, increasing emphasis on health promotion and disease and accident prevention; fifth, continuing to foster new ideas to improve our health system; and sixth, taking steps to protect the publicly funded health system from external threats.

Bill 11 is one step to help protect our health care system, because there is a lack of legislation to regulate and control any private surgical facility or even a full-fledged private hospital. As it is now, a private hospital could start up and do major surgery, like heart bypass, for a huge fee to the patient, and there is nothing that could be done about it. As has happened before, a clinic could start up and charge a facility fee when you went in for cataract surgery. In these cases, Alberta would be fined under the Canada Health Act, because we as Alberta citizens cannot pay for medically necessary surgeries or services like bypass surgery, hip replacement, back surgery, and so on.

So legislation had to be created. The legislation could have outlawed all surgical clinics, but that would be unlike other provinces and would mean closing down the 52 clinics currently operating and serving Albertans. Instead, the decision is to regulate privately owned clinics so they operate only to benefit Albertans and the publicly funded system that we have.

Let's look at what Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act, says. The preamble of the bill states that the government of Alberta is committed to those five principles of the Canada Health Act. All medically necessary services will be paid for by Alberta health care. No one will pay for medically necessary services or pay to get to the front of the line.

Clause 1 outlaws the operation of private hospitals in Alberta. That is, there will be no private hospitals in which Albertans can purchase any of the approximately 5,000 medically necessary services, like setting a broken arm, back surgery, or angioplasty.

Clause 2 states that the surgery can only be done in one of two places. The two locations are either a large public hospital, or if the surgery is not major, it may be done in an approved surgical facility. The College of Physicians and Surgeons will accredit these surgical facilities and determine what procedures can be provided. In addition to the 150 different day-surgeries currently being performed, there is a possibility that some surgeries, like gallbladder removal, small joint and ligament repair, or hernia repair, which require a few days' stay in hospital, may also be performed in these approved facilities.

The third clause prohibits queue-jumping, and fines of up to $10,000 can be levied if someone pays to get ahead in line or receives a payment to permit someone to do so.

Other clauses prohibit the payment of facility fees by patients and restrict the charges for enhanced goods like bifocal soft lenses for cataract surgery to the actual cost plus some small percentage for carrying charges.

Additional clauses state that before contracts with surgical facilities are made, there must be a demonstrated need for the services and there must be a net benefit to Albertans by way of reduced waiting lists or more cost-effective delivery. Also, the efficient use of existing capacity in public hospitals is to be accomplished prior to any contracting out of surgical procedures.

Although concerns have been expressed that Bill 11 will lead to two-tier health care, private hospitals, or American style HMOs, the bill legislates against queue-jumping, profiting from sale of enhanced goods or services, or patient payment for medically necessary services. For those reasons the bill is rightly called the Health Care Protection Act, and I believe that our health care system will not be destroyed or less efficient, as some have predicted, but will be better in the future. Therefore, I support this bill.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, to begin this evening I'd just like to share with the Assembly a bit of a nursing assessment that I performed relative to the will within the government caucus on Bill 11. It was particularly provoking to me to sit and watch I believe the last three or four speakers speak from preprepared speeches on this bill, indicating to me that they don't trust themselves to speak from the heart on this bill. They don't trust themselves to speak from the letters, the correspondence, the e-mails and conversations they've had from their constituents. They come forward with this cited and recited rhetoric about why Bill 11 is good for public health care in this province, and 99 percent of citizens don't believe it. It's a sad, sad state.

There are several other things that I've observed in my nursing assessment of the government caucus relative to Bill 11. You know, as a registered nurse over the years your assessment skills go beyond just the external, the physical and the mental characteristics that a patient might exhibit, and you start to develop an instinct. You develop an instinct that tells you when a patient is about to go sour, an instinct that anticipates that a patient perhaps is about to die. One of my instincts in this Assembly as I've watched the debate on Bill 11 is that there is an undercurrent of struggle and discomfort, where individuals are being placed in a position of having to defy their ethics and their principles and their beliefs. You can see it. You can see it in their eyes, you can see it in their postures, and you can see it in their physical frame, Mr. Speaker.

The reality is that politics can sometimes – in today's context, in the context of this bill – be a very destructive thing. My assessment leads me to believe that in fact there are many in this Assembly that do not support this bill, and politics is placing them in a position that they must support it.

On a positive note, I've never seen a bill that has mobilized, galvanized, and energized Albertans like Bill 11. It has been an absolute treat to watch how this bill has politicized this province. For that, Mr. Speaker, I have to stand here today and say that I am grateful. Political democracy in Alberta is alive and well. I have to commend those Albertans, so many, who have written to me, who have called, who have spoken to me in the grocery store aisles and hockey rinks, at private and public functions, at wedding receptions, at community events, and in health care settings about Bill 11. While I can't name all of those individuals and how insightful and wise their reflections and impressions of Bill 11 have been, I would like to share just a few remarks that were made by grade 6 students.

I know members earlier this evening have talked about being in grade 6 classrooms during the course of the debate on this bill. There is something that is so pure about a child's reading and assessment of issues, and I have been astoundingly impressed by the level of understanding that students in this province have of this legislation.

One grade 6 student, who happens to live in my household, upon my indicating at one point that I was growing very tired of Bill 11, said to me: well, we're all tired of Bill 11, Mom. Her advice to the Premier was that he should just admit he's made a mistake, that we all have to learn in life that if you've made a mistake, it is best to admit it, to take actions to change the mistake you've made, and to move on.

Another grade 6 student said: what can we do? How can we get it through to the government that we don't support this bill? Of course, we respond by saying that they can write letters, which many of the grade 6 students have. They can come out to events, debates on the bill. Then, of course, there's always the election. They're in a position where they're too young to vote, but they can certainly volunteer and take an active part in that process.

My all-time personal favourite, Mr. Speaker, was a grade 6 student in Belgravia-McKernan who said to me: I'm putting my faith in the Lieutenant Governor. I thought: that's amazing. He has the knowledge to understand that this bill will never be proclaimed without the signature of the Lieutenant Governor. He was putting his personal faith in her to stop this bill. Now, I'm not in a position to anticipate or predict what might happen, but I can stand this evening and say that all across this province, regardless of what age groups, in classrooms, in seniors' homes, in all places where Albertans go about their business, people understand this bill well, and they do not support it.

I spoke this afternoon in question period about a web of deceit and deception and of the desperation that's accompanied this bill in its journey across Alberta and through this legislative process. As I think back over my time in health care in this province and my time in this Legislature, really there's been that strong web all along. In 1993 we were told that we needed to cut a quarter of the system's funding because health care expenditures were out of control. Well, we have now clearly had the analysis completed and publicly circulated that that was not the case, but that was the information we were fed, and so it went. The system was cut. Health care professionals were laid off. Hospitals were closed. Beds were closed. Operating room theatres were closed.

And lo and behold, Mr. Speaker, today where we find ourselves is in a position where thousands of Albertans are waiting to access the system and cannot. That's no stroke of magic or stroke of accident. That is a result of the reckless, unplanned, and misguided cuts of the 1990s. It is the legacy of this government, but rest assured that the wool covers our eyes no more. We see with complete clarity the callous disrespect, the resolved arrogance, and the steeled intent to shape our system, our public health care system, into one that incorporates a private tier of care.

Along that theme I cannot refrain from mentioning the large full-page ads that this government has placed in newspapers across this province titled: "Bill 11 – What's the Real Story?" It goes on to list a number of supposed facts, and I'd just like to challenge a couple of them. The second fact in the government ad says, "Bill 11 is similar to legislation already in place in other provinces, including Saskatchewan." I would now like to cite from a release that was issued by the Saskatchewan government specifically on Bill 11: Saskatchewan health legislation touted as similar to Alberta's controversial Bill 11 was designed to discourage private clinics rather than promote them, says a Saskatchewan government official. We passed it with the intention of preventing private clinics from setting up, said Mark Stobbe, communications director for Saskatchewan Health; our intent is to maintain a totally public system.

He added that since the Health Facilities Licensing Act was implemented last year, no private clinics have been licensed to provide for-profit surgical or diagnostic services. Completely the opposite of what Bill 11 will do, but Stobbe said that Saskatchewan's law was passed to try and keep private clinics out. He said that the government was unable to legislate an outright ban on private clinics, so instead it has adopted regulations so strict that no private health care clinic has set up shop in the province. The legislation was passed in '96 but not implemented until last year.

Further, as a contrast, the private clinics that operate in Alberta will offer publicly funded cataract surgery and abortions to regional health care authorities. In contrast, no private clinics in Saskatchewan offer medically required services funded by medicare, Stobbe said. He said that private eye clinics in the province provide laser surgery, which is not covered by medicare, but unlike Alberta these clinics cannot provide cataract removal, a publicly funded service that is only performed in Saskatchewan hospitals.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, there are no private MRI clinics in Saskatchewan. The proliferation of private MRIs in Alberta has been one of the fastest growing industries in health care. In addition, Saskatchewan hospitals don't charge patients extra for add-ons like fibreglass casts or titanium hips.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, a discrepancy. And how are Albertans to decipher it when the government says it is a fact that Bill 11 is similar to legislation already in other provinces, including Saskatchewan, and the Saskatchewan government says not so? Is that not deception? Is that not deceitful? Is that not a desperate act? I would suggest that it is.

Now, the other fact that I would like to challenge in this ad is the ninth fact: "Bill 11 has absolutely no implications for the health system under the North American Free Trade Agreement." Again, clear evidence and analysis – I will quote from one such analysis, titled A Legal Opinion Concerning NAFTA Investment and Services, Disciplines and Bill 11: Proposals by Alberta to Privatize the Delivery of Certain Insured Health Care Services. This analysis was done by Steven Shrybman, a solicitor from Vancouver, B. C. I would just like to quote the following summary:

We have in this part examined the implications of present Alberta proposals if they are ultimately judged to fall outside the ambit of Annex I and II reservations. But for exceptions concerning government procurement and funding, this would leave all other provincial measures fully exposed to NAFTA . . . The risk here is that the province's experiment with private sector delivery will escape whatever bounds it may have intended. This would allow US and Mexican investors and service providers unrestricted access to the contracts that regional health authorities would be tendering.

Even if there is just one, even if the government just has one legal analysis before it that suggests that the facts are contrary to what is contained in this ad, is it not deceitful? Is it not deceptive? Is it not an act of desperation that they put out in a public ad that there are no implications for the health system under the North American free trade agreement? I suspect they have more than this analysis to suggest that, but because their intent is clear, the article, the ad I'm speaking from this evening clearly chose to mislead, deceive Albertans in Bill 11's intent.

Now, on this very point I'd also like to cite from Hansard comments made by a member of the government side relative to the intent of Bill 11, and I'm speaking from the Hansard of May 3, 2000. The hon. Member for Leduc said as follows:

The private sector can now do Workers' Compensation Board, military, and RCMP work as well as uninsured work, all of which is outside the Canada Health Act. In addition, they will likely be able to do publicly paid for, insured work coming from other provinces. What we could well have is publicly paid for, insured work from other provinces being done in an Alberta facility to which Albertans would not have access, so it seems reasonable that we should have a method of providing access for Albertans. Bill 11 does this through allowing for contracts between private providers and health authorities, which leaves both access and payment for insured services within the public system.

Then he goes on to say:

It seems to me that for the first time in Alberta we have a private facility that is capable of competing in a significant way with the public system on a basis that heretofore has not existed through the small-scale 50 or so private clinics which are now in operation.

What I took him to mean, Mr. Speaker, is that he envisions we're going to have maybe double the number of clinics. He was saying, you know, that we have a small scale of 50 now. Well, what would he consider to be an adequate number? A hundred? Two hundred?

He also envisions, if I'm interpreting his comments correctly, that these clinics could compete amongst themselves or compete across Canada to do a particular type of work. Is that what Albertans want in their health care system? Is that what Canadians want in their health care system? Absolutely not. They do not want the market in their health care system, and I don't know how many times people need to say that before the government hears the message. They do not want for-profit market approaches taken in respect to health care services. But clearly this member – and he may not be alone; he may not have concluded this entirely on his own accord. The conclusions may have been offered to him by someone closer to the inner sanctum, perhaps someone who even has an interest in the field, but they are envisioning this enormous market for contracting, selling health care. It's so abhorrent to me that we would find ourselves in this state.

Now, just to give you a flavour, I want to quote from one more article. This article was written by a former managed care insider, Linda Peeno, and it's titled: Managed care and the corporate practice of medicine. She's describing what it's like to work and try and provide care to patients within the managed care system in the U.S.

Under the rubric of managed care, the practice of medicine radically shifts from physicians bound to patient best interest to individuals and organizations bound primarily to corporate best interest.

We have the only health care system in the world in which care is limited or denied systematically by those who stand to financially benefit from its withholding . . .

Statistical norms replace individual patients. Utilization reviewers replace individual physicians. Cookbook guidelines replace complex diagnostic evaluations. Economic rationales replace clinical judgments. Cost savings replace compassion. Add to this the grave lack of ethical, legal, and safety protections for patients subjected to this new kind of practice, and it is little wonder that our country is outraged by managed care.

Speaking about the U.S., Mr. Speaker.

Let me go on further just to describe how it impacts at the bedside and patient level.

Except for rare cases in which a physician has completely rejected managed care, almost every medical decision by a physician is now affected in some way by the changes wrought by managed care. Doctors no longer practice autonomously. Their contracts, financial arrangements, utilization targets, practice structures, medical protocols, and referral and network rules expose their new partners . . .

Even when a physician strongly resists these pressures, his or her practice of medicine is changed fundamentally. The most financially successful plans control medical decisions from beginning to end – from defining the disease to deciding the treatment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, maybe government members think we are not going to have private insurance companies, but if the system evolves to the place where the hon. Member for Leduc envisions it will go, where we will have widespread and open competition between these private companies, whatever we want to call them, approved surgical clinics or private hospitals, we will have private insurance companies. We absolutely will, because we do not have enough wealthy people in this province to afford this type of care otherwise.

I regret this short time is completed, Mr. Speaker. I again state my opposition to Bill 11.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It indeed is a pleasure to rise this evening and speak in support of Bill 11, in support of public health care, and in support of the principles of the Canada Health Act. This is an issue of paramount importance to my constituents and to the citizens of Alberta, and they deserve to know the truth about how the Health Care Protection Act will maintain, protect, strengthen, and sustain the publicly funded and publicly administered health care system in Alberta and how it will respect the five founding principles of medicare that are enshrined in the Canada Health Act.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to begin by outlining what Bill 11 does not allow. It does not violate the Canada Health Act. It does not create a parallel health system. It does not allow for facility fees to be charged for insured services. It does not allow for queue-jumping. It does not necessitate private insurance premiums. It does not permit the contracting of insured surgical services without the facility first being accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and approved by the Minister of Health and Wellness. It is not a NAFTA Trojan horse that makes Alberta health care vulnerable to American interests. It will not veil agreed-upon contracts in secrecy. It will not harm the public health care system, and most importantly it will not create a two-tiered, American style health system.

Mr. Speaker, that's quite a long list of clarifications, but by no means is it a comprehensive response to the malicious misinformation campaign that has been supported by the Official Opposition and their fear-mongering union backers who have their own private agendas and selfish motives for spreading absolutely false propaganda.

Mr. Speaker, I have the opportunity of speaking to my residents at every opportune time, and I heard the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert say that she has received about 700 letters or e-mails. You know what? I've probably received about maybe 50 since March 2 and maybe about 40 phone calls. Guess what? Of the 40 phone calls, some that have been left on my message centre, there is no name and no phone number. On Easter weekend I thought: oh, my God; here are about 70 e-mails that have come in. Seventy e-mails. You know what? Not one of them was from my constituency.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the principles of the bill are really no different than those supported by the Leader of the Official Opposition when she was health minister back in 1991. In that year she brought forward to the government caucus a discussion paper outlining possible legislative options to regulate nonhospital facilities. The paper states, and I quote: it has been suggested that more could and should be done to maximize the benefits of substituting ambulatory for inpatient services, particularly minor diagnostic, medical and surgical procedures under certain clinical and administrative guidelines. End of quote.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know about you, but it sounds a great deal like Bill 11 to me. The opposition leader suggested and supported it then, so why is she spreading such a great deal of misinformation about Bill 11 now? You know, Bill 11 has become not about Bill 11; it's become political. It's political rhetoric and what-ifs. What-ifs. That's all we are hearing from the opposition.

Alberta has long believed that the private sector can play an important role in supporting the publicly funded system as long as it is a publicly funded system that pays for the insured services and administers the overall delivery of health care to Albertans. So here we have Bill 11 before us and the opportunity to retain the valued service provided by the private sector while responding to a serious gap in our health legislation.

British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Ontario all have similar types of legislation providing an appropriate framework. Now it is the responsibility of this government to establish similar protections found in those jurisdictions.

Earlier I gave a brief outline of what Bill 11 doesn't allow. For the benefit of those who clearly don't understand Bill 11, I would like to, for one last time, explain what the Bill clearly does accomplish. It will prohibit private hospitals in Alberta. It will prohibit major surgeries outside the public hospitals. It will prohibit facility fees for medically necessary surgical and physician services. It will prohibit queue-jumping through payments by individuals to get faster service. It will regulate private surgical facilities. It will set out clear rules and limits for the sale of any enhanced products or services that are not medically necessary. It will prohibit any surgical facility from providing insured services unless that facility has a contract with a regional health authority and unless the Minister of Health and Wellness has approved the contract. It will set out the criteria the minister would consider in approving or rejecting a proposed contract. It will require that any contract be open to the public. It will set significant fines for any person contravening the provisions of the act. It will help reduce waiting lists, and most importantly it will ensure that no harm comes to the public health system as a result of contracting out. Contracts can only be entered into when there is a clear benefit to the public system, such as access to publicly funded services, quality of services, flexibility for the regional health authorities, cost effectiveness, and other economic considerations.

These are some of the bill's many provisions that will serve to maintain, protect, strengthen, and sustain the publicly funded and publicly administered health care system in Alberta, affirming the government of Alberta's commitment to the Canada Health Act and ensuring equitable access to publicly funded health care for all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to remind all members of the Assembly that this bill is the result of a well-documented, long-term process that was not only transparent in nature but one that welcomed the input of Albertans, who were always part of the process and who were always given the opportunity to be well informed. So I find it difficult to understand how anyone could suggest that we have not consulted Albertans on this bill, not kept Albertans informed, or for that matter that we have not listened to Albertans on this bill. The simple truth is that we have. From the very beginning and all the way through we have never stopped listening. I am pleased that some of the input we have received over the course of this consultation process has resulted in some of the well-thought-out amendments to the bill during Committee of the Whole, 14 amendments to strengthen the bill, which the opposition voted against, including adhering to the principles of the Canada Health Act.

The amendments reflect the broad and diverse input received from many Albertans: in particular, key groups such as the Alberta Medical Association, the Alberta chambers of commerce, the College of Physician and Surgeons, the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses, and the Alberta Dental Association. As well, the college will be involving other health professions such as nurses in developing the standards for inpatient surgical services, and under section 25(2) the college will be consulted in the development of the regulations.

[Dr. Massey in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, we have listened to Albertans, and we have responded. Bill 11 in its amended form will provide strong protection for our publicly funded health system, strong protection for Alberta patients, and will help Alberta build a stronger foundation for our health system of the future.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this legislation, the Health Care Protection Act, is designed to protect and strengthen public health care by building on its solid foundation. In short, there will be no two-tiered American style health system, no American style, for-profit hospitals in Alberta, only one publicly funded health care system that uses every opportunity to serve Albertans better. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that everybody stop and think and really think hard about this one. Why would I, the Premier, or any of my colleagues want to destroy the system we have? For what gain? Think about that one. You know, I use the system, my family does, and so do my constituents. If we as government can do something for our constituents, for the people of Alberta, I think this particular bill is a bill that must go through.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and finally get a chance to deal with Bill 11 in this motion. I am disappointed in the fact that we have to have a form of closure or censure on all further discussions on Bill 11.

Now, earlier today we heard one hon. member from this Assembly, I believe the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness, state: at some point you've got to look at what they call redundancy and repetition. This is in relation to the justification for using censorship on this bill. I have to say that no one has had an opportunity to have a look at the amendments to the Hospitals Act that are tucked away conveniently in the back of this bill, the consequential amendments. Now, the glib assurances of the associate minister of health regarding the use of closure on this is similar to a pyromaniac operating a fire truck. It just doesn't make sense.

We look at why nursing homes are now going to be removed from the Hospitals Act. This has not been part of the discussion. Does this mean that there's further privatization of the nursing home industry in this province? Last year I had the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to ask the Premier regarding the $666 million, or 19 percent of the entire health care budget, allocated to these health care service providers. I really didn't get a satisfactory answer. I basically was left with the impression that the regional health authorities were going to look after all this. Well, it's evident in this consequential amendment that the minister of health is washing his hands of this duty or this responsibility in regards to contracts with nursing homes. So this means a further expansion of the private, for-profit providers, and we all know what's going on in America with a lot of these private, for-profit operators. I need to tell all hon. members of this House that they support this bill at their political peril.

We hear the comments from the hon. Member for Redwater. He's a little bit confused. As I understand his remarks, Mr. Speaker, he can't understand why Albertans would say that they haven't been consulted or that we're not listening to Albertans. Well, excuse me. The front door is locked. The hardwood doors to this Legislative Assembly are locked, so how can you say we're having an open consultation with Albertans or we're listening to Albertans? You're not. You're not.

This bill now, Mr. Speaker, is beyond debate about public health care. It's a debate about the arrogant use of political power. This is where the debate has gone, and Albertans understand that. They understand, and for the first time in a long time, perhaps in three decades, the veneer or the teflon is off the government of this province. You have been exposed by Bill 11. The symbolism of the two-inch thick hardwood doors and your separation from the people of Alberta will not be forgotten before the next election.

Now, this is an historic bill for another reason. It was mailed to every home in the province. Many people read this bill, and they made up their minds regardless of the propaganda campaign – the first stage, the second stage, and we're now in the third stage of the propaganda campaign, all paid for with taxpayers' dollars. Three million dollars would have purchased an MRI for the hospital in Fort McMurray. That $3 million would have been better spent; there's no doubt about that.

Everyone made an effort to read this bill. Unfortunately, even some hon. members of this Assembly, if they read it, misunderstood it, because they were confused. This is not about allowing over 12-hour stays, they claimed. Of course it is. Whenever you have a bill that allows a surgical centre to keep someone overnight, it is in reality a hospital.

We can hear all these remarks about how this bill prohibits this, how it prohibits that, but no one, Mr. Speaker, is believing the government members anymore. They can spend taxpayers' dollars and buy newspaper ads; they can buy television ads. It's not working. If all hon. members of this Assembly think that the crowd is going to disperse and forget about what they have seen in the last five months from this government, you are mistaken. You're going to have to have hardwood doors in front of public forums in the next provincial election. You're going to have to have security guards, because people are going to want to ask you questions. They're going to want to ask you: why did you use closure on this bill three times? Mr. Speaker, the people in Rocky Mountain House are just as concerned as the people in Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Dunvegan, I believe, spoke about the health care system and how concerned the government was and how Bill 11 was going to be able to fix it. Well, I'm afraid this government created the mess. The biggest argument this government had whenever they demolished a hospital in Calgary was who was going to get to push the plunger. This was the focal point of the discussion.

Now, we've created this shortage, and we thought we were going to create a lack of confidence in the public health care system, but essentially what we've done is created a lack of confidence in this government's ability to administer and manage a public health care system. Everywhere I go people say: Mr. MacDonald, Hughie, it's time for a change. Three decades in power: it's time for a change. It's time for a change in Calgary-Varsity. It's time for a change in Rocky Mountain House. It's time for a change in Edmonton-Whitemud. Mr. Speaker, it's simply time for a change.

It's also time for a change in St. Albert. Yesterday evening I had the pleasure of listening to the hon. member's comments regarding her public forum that she held. Present at this public forum was Donna Wilson, a professor of nursing from the university, Dr. Kevin Taft, and the Reverend Bruce Miller, I believe. She was talking about how she had to suffer – suffer was the word she used – through their remarks and their defence in the whole discussion around Bill 11.

I think for all hon. members in the House and particularly for nighttime reading for a number of government members, as the debate on this bill winds down and between now and the next election, they should read, as it becomes available in Hansard, the 10-point critique of Bill 11 that was developed and presented by Donna Wilson, professor of nursing. She goes on to discuss this bill, and I agree with her. She says:

The title of the bill is not accurate. The bill only focuses on where surgery can be done. Surgery is only one small part of a wide range of health care needs. And one of the biggest disappointments of this bill, despite what is said on page 4 . . . about queue jumping, is that Bill 11 does not stop worried Albertans from buying an MRI or any other diagnostic test, and then using the information from this private test to jump ahead of other Albertans who are waiting for health care.

Donna Wilson goes on. Her second point:

The preamble . . . indicates the importance of the Canada Health Act as a “foundation” for Alberta’s health system, but preambles are meaningless unless they are included in the actual bill. For instance, Bill 11 does not have a section that specifically says the Canada Health Act supersedes Bill 11. Bill 11 thus implies that only a “basic” foundation of health care will be publicly funded, and that private companies will be able to provide more than that basic amount. The Canadian health care system was never intended to be a system where only the basics were provided, instead it was intended to be a system where all medically necessary care would be provided without private charges.

Now, the Member for Calgary-Varsity can take this information – he still has time at the last minute to change his mind and do the right thing and say no to Bill 11. He can be with the crowd outside that says: kill the bill. He can improve his electoral chances. Perhaps after the next election he’ll be one of the ones left standing. He could be a leader yet, Mr. Speaker.

Now, professor of nursing Donna Wilson also had some comments about the private hospitals in Alberta and the so-called surgical facilities, which everyone but the government knows are really private hospitals. No one is buying their line, no one but themselves.

I find it quite odd, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 11 has turned into a reflection of the current government. When we finally do have this election and the government members as they campaign are not separated by hardwood doors, are not separated from Albertans, they’re going to realize what a mistake they have made. They have made a mistake.

Now, we look at what the College of Physicians and Surgeons has had to say about this bill. The hon. Member for Redwater said earlier, I think, that it seemed to him it was the narrow vested interests of unions that were against the bill. But we have to mention the College of Physicians and Surgeons. We have to remember various church groups, senior citizens, and former Conservative MLAs. We can’t forget them. I believe that when we get to the former Conservative MLAs, we stop and think as to why they would be opposed to Bill 11 and why they would put pen in hand and write letters to the editor. It is because they’re not locked behind closed doors. They’re not taking a guarded tunnel to and from work. They’re talking to people. They’re talking to people in grocery stores and gas stations, and they understand that Bill 11 is the wrong bill at the wrong time.

Donna Wilson goes on at great length in her critique of Bill 11. I only have a little time left, and I have a great deal to say, Mr. Speaker, so I’m going to offer to all hon. members of this House a copy of her critique. I think I’m going to e-mail one specifically to the hon. Member for St. Albert.

We all heard earlier the reasons for contracting out. We heard the greater-efficiency reason.

MR. BONNER: Bogus.

MR. MacDONALD: You bet it’s bogus. We heard the bricks and mortar argument. Bogus. We heard that it will relieve the pain and suffering of Albertans. Bogus. What has happened is Albertans have discovered who caused the pain and suffering to start with. The government. The veneer or the teflon has been removed.

That this can just be an experiment, that this is just an experiment: that’s another bogus argument. Totally bogus. Now – and this is the last one – there’s no two-tiered health care in Alberta. Totally bogus.

We look at the bill. We open it, and here we go. In section 2 is the two-tiered system. We’re looking at “a public hospital” or “an approved surgical facility.” That is two-tiered. That is two parallel streams.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, there is no cost-benefit analysis that’s ever been done to support the arguments of any of the hon. members from across the way, Mr. Speaker. This is flying by the seat of the government’s pants, so to speak. I have heard concerns expressed regarding costs, and these concerns relate to the provision of public health care. All Albertans have heard that, and they’re not buying the argument from the hon. Member for Dunvegan and the hon. Member for Redwater. They just don’t buy it. There is not a shred of evidence that private hospitals will stretch our tax dollars further in providing health services to Albertans. There’s no evidence. If there was a cost-benefit analysis, I’m sure the Premier would be proud to stand up in question period and table it, not only for the benefit of all hon. members but for the benefit of Albertans. That evidence is not there.

In fact, all the evidence that has come to light as this debate has progressed indicates just the opposite. Under Bill 11 more of our public health care money will be given to subsidize investor profits and pay for the higher overhead and the administration costs, and this in turn is going to mean less money available for hip replacements, for cataract removals.

This bill just doesn’t make sense, because it certainly doesn’t benefit the folks of Alberta, the couple that used to be referred to by the Premier himself as Martha and Henry from Rimbey. I’m expecting the letter from Martha and Henry from Rimbey in the Edmonton Journal any day, and they’re going to say that they’re disappointed in their Premier, that they’re disappointed in their government. They’re going to say: it’s time for a change. They’re going to encourage not only the citizens from Rimbey but from Breton, from Bentley, from Drayton Valley, from Rocky Mountain House, from Leslieville, from Caroline, from all over Alberta. They’re going to say that it’s time for a change because the government did not do the right thing.

The hon. Member for Redwater talked about this bill not being a Trojan horse, but this bill is a Trojan horse, and there’s another comparison that fits. Bill 11 is just like putting an untreated pine shake on your roof. The government is pushing Bill 11 just like it pushed the manufacture and use of pine shakes. The government’s backers stand to make big bucks off Bill 11.

I’m very disappointed, Mr. Speaker, that my time is up.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to have the opportunity to rise in the Legislature today to talk at third reading of Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act. This is a piece of legislation that is important for all Albertans and has attracted attention in my constituency. During the month of March I had the opportunity to meet with constituents of West Yellowhead at community meetings in Edson, Jasper, and Hinton. I heard from them in letters, telephone calls, and e-mails. These people had a number of concerns about the legislation and how it would affect them personally, their loved ones, and how it would affect their communities. They also told me about how much they appreciate and respect our public health care system. It is a belief that is dear to all Canadians. The residents of West Yellowhead also expressed their thoughts on other issues which, although outside the realm of Bill 11, are nonetheless relevant to the debate on health care.

Mr. Speaker, from one end of the constituency to the other people are asking about plans to recruit more doctors to rural areas. They want to know if they can continue to be looked after in their local hospitals, without having to travel far from home. Most of all, they want to know how Bill 11 will affect them. From the comments I received, it is very clear that Albertans believe in a publicly funded, publicly administered health care system. Many of the citizens of West Yellowhead also believe that our health care system does need attention and that changes are necessary.

Mr. Speaker, I admit that I have encountered opposition to Bill 11 as it was originally tabled, but I strongly believe that the amendments tabled by the Minister of Health and Wellness will go a long way to address these concerns. Time and time again I have assured the residents of West Yellowhead that Bill 11 bans extra billing and that it will not mean they will have to pay the next time they visit a doctor's office. All you will need is your Alberta health care card. I have and will continue to respond to all of those who ask.

One of the most urgent concerns, particularly by the seniors, is the ability to jump the line to get medical attention. By defining the rules on the purchase of enhanced services, many of these folks believe we are creating a two-tier system. These concerns are addressed by the amendment that strengthens the prohibition against anyone paying to jump the queue by making it also illegal to get faster access to an insured service through the purchase of enhanced product or service or an uninsured service. This is an important amendment.

Cataract services were one of the points most frequently mentioned where queue-jumping could take place. With the foldable lens now paid for by the Alberta health care system, as announced on April 11, people cannot use the system to move themselves to the head of the line or purchase extra as a way to get a standard procedure done.

Mr. Speaker, another issue raised was on the pressure to purchase enhanced or extra services, particularly at vulnerable times, when you or your loved one is a patient facing a medical procedure. I've heard from many people who felt that the sale of extra services is an affront to our public system and is motivated by private, for-profit medical organizations. I am pleased to read the amendment tabled to prohibit a public hospital, a surgical facility, or a physician from charging more than the product cost and a "reasonable allowance for administration" for the sale of enhanced medical goods or services in conjunction with provision of insured service. This effectively eliminates the profit motive.

In the provision of enhanced products this amendment strengthens the requirement already in the bill that patients have the enhanced product explained to them in writing before surgery, then signed . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members that have already spoken need not enter into the debate. At this time we have the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, who wants his turn, not those two members who are actively engaged in debating one another. Thank you.

West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

This effectively eliminates the profit motive in the provision of enhanced products. This amendment strengthens the requirement already in the bill, that patients will have enhanced products explained to them in writing before surgery, then sign approval of any enhanced goods they wish to purchase. They have the opportunity to change their mind.

Mr. Speaker, another comment that I heard loud and clear from West Yellowhead constituents was the need to open existing surgical and medical facilities before looking to contract with the private sector. I have checked with the WestView regional health authority and was told that all operating theatres are open and being utilized. Often the constituents are moved to Edmonton for procedures. These people are familiar with the valuable service that could be available if surgical facilities in the public system were open and available.

I believe that the amendments ensuring that the review of the efficient use of existing capacity in the public hospital be considered as part of the determination of whether we would benefit in contracting out a surgical procedure addressed these comments. This will require all health authorities to ensure that the existing capacity is efficiently used before contracting out surgical services. It means that investments made in the public health system will not stand idle while dollars are put to work in the private sector.

I heard at the meetings and through phone calls that people are concerned about medical professionals and doctors who have their feet in both the public and private systems. They are referring to doctors and medical administrators who operate and serve in the public health system yet have investment and interest in private surgical clinics. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is addressed by another amendment that strengthens conflict of interest regulations to ensure that provincial standards for physicians are maintained. Conflict of interest regulations for others working in the health system are also tightened. I am pleased to read that extra protection will be placed with an amendment to the Regional Health Authorities Act and to the Cancer Programs Act. Health care authorities will be required to adopt conflict of interest bylaws for board members, agents, senior officers, and employees of the authority. If the bylaws are not followed, the facility could be in jeopardy to the point of losing its designation.

Mr. Speaker, the last concern I'd like to put forth is with regards to NAFTA. There were a number of comments made by constituents that if Bill 11 becomes law, our health care programs all across Canada will be jeopardized, and it will open the door to American style, two-tiered health care system. A well-respected international business lawyer with experience in international law as well as having served on the Canada/U.S. NAFTA trade dispute panel has found that Alberta's and in fact Canada's health care is protected by several carve-outs in the NAFTA agreement. Furthermore, NAFTA obligations do not apply to provincial or state procurement of goods and services. Bill 11 does not alter delivery of public health care services in this province. All medically necessary procedures and services will continue to be delivered by the public system: one health care system where all citizens have equal access to services.

Outside the scope of Bill 11 the election of members of the regional health authorities was and continues to be the concern of citizens of West Yellowhead. I have continued to inform them that changes have been made in the area and that during the next municipal election the election of two-thirds of the regional health authorities will take place. This is an opportunity for Albertans to exercise their democratic right and elect representatives that will serve the interests of not only their communities but their regions as well.

Mr. Speaker, I heard from a gentleman in Edson who publicly stated that he read the legislation and couldn't find anything wrong with it. He felt that this bill had potential. He stated quite plainly that the government doesn't always run things well and that he didn't know if they do anything great but that this legislation had potential. The point, he said, was to save money and shorten waiting lists.

We have one public system. Let's use it. Ultimately, it's the consumers, the patients, the users, Albertans who use public health care systems that we must protect, and I believe Bill 11 does that.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, the Scottish writer, Thomas Carlyle, made an observation. Mr. Carlyle lived between 1795 and 1881, and he made an observation that I'm mindful of as we now get down to the waning hours on Bill 11. He made the observation that "man seldom, or rather never for a length of time and deliberately, rebels against anything that does not deserve rebelling against."

10:50

As I reflect on this and I hear such contradictory statements about this particular bill, I want to spend a couple of minutes making some observations. The first one I'd make is that we've heard some comment about whether closure has been invoked by the government, and this question that the previous question be now put that we're now debating: what does that mean? Let me say this: we don't have to go any further than Erskine May, the 22nd edition. It's one of the authorities we use in this Assembly.

If you go to page 410 – and the hon. Government House Leader can confirm this, and if I don't have it absolutely word-for-word accurate, I want him to stand up and set me straight. This is what I read in Erskine May. It says: "The 'previous question' may be used to produce the same effect as the closure." It's in chapter 19, and the heading is Methods of Curtailing Debate. It's sandwiched in between sections entitled The Ordinary Closure, page 407, and Allocation of Time Orders, page 410.

If the Government House Leader looks at page 410, he can be absolutely satisfied that what's happened on this third reading is indeed a form of closure, full stop.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Is the hon. Government House Leader rising on a point of order?

Point of Order
Questioning a Member

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the hon. member would accept a question.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member is reminded that you only have to say yes or no and that you don't have to give reasons.

MR. DICKSON: I would never refuse such a request. Of course.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on your question.

Debate Continued

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, my question is this. While Erskine

May is sometimes used in this House as a text of almost last resort, Beauchesne is much more pertinent, and 518 of Beauchesne says that "the House has adopted a number of procedures to limit debate, or to preclude the moving of amendments, and to provide for the wise management of its time." I'm wondering if the hon. member has read 518 in chapter 12 of Beauchesne, which is much more a text of this House.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I've read it, and I prefer the quote in Erskine May, thank you very much. I propose to proceed with my comments.

On April 4 of this year I had the privilege of being the seventh speaker at second reading on Bill 11. At that time, Mr. Speaker, I made the observation after hearing the six speakers previous to me, and I said:

Each one of those speakers has argued that this bill either is a wonderful thing, part of a well-intentioned experiment to make our health care system work better, or a very dangerous experiment that will prejudice our public health care system and, ultimately, patient care.

Well, in the intervening time – and the Minister of Justice will have to the minute the amount of time we've spent debating this bill – are we any clearer in terms of what we know about this bill?

We know a lot of things. You get insight in curious places and perhaps unexpected places. Last weekend I had the privilege of going to Banff. I listened to the Member for St. Albert, in fact, on May 4 tell us that there was going to be a very important conference in Banff, the annual conference of the Canadian Association of Statutory Human Rights Agencies. In fact, I attended that Sunday night and Monday afternoon. There were some 300 participants. Forty percent of them were from outside the province of Alberta, so from other provinces and Canada.

Do you know what the discussion was in the hallways and during the coffee breaks and at any time we weren't dealing with items on the agenda? Mr. Speaker, it was Bill 11. It was Canadians saying: why would you go there? There were people who could not understand why a provincial government in this country would be so misdirected, would be prepared to experiment in such a dangerous fashion with such a bedrock service delivery program in Canada.

It was interesting. These were not stupid people. These were people who run a host of agencies. There were university lecturers. There were people who know how to read a piece of legislation. I want to say to any member in this Assembly who suggests that Albertans who oppose Bill 11 are simply too stupid to be able to read a bill and understand it or not smart enough to look at what's going on around the world, to look at the failed experiments in Western Australia and New South Wales, to look at the places where it hasn't worked: that would be preposterous. These people absolutely could not believe it. They were fascinated as I attempted to describe the weak and transparent arguments that have been put forward to try and defend this bill. It was an interesting insight in terms of how people in other parts of Canada view our experiment.

Now, I've received a great deal of feedback from constituents, and I have been absolutely fascinated to hear member after member from the same city I'm from, from different Calgary constituencies, say: oh, you know, this is not a big deal; I've had a few people who phoned, and they just either didn't read the bill or don't understand it. I've heard a great number of attempts to rationalize, to minimize, to denigrate, in some cases, those citizens who have registered their concern.

Well, let me tell you my experience in Calgary-Buffalo. On my web site, www.garydickson.ab.ca, we put out a question for constituents. This is after people had received the bill. I said: do you support Bill 11? Overwhelmingly, the response was: absolutely no. I put out an annual report that I do every year to constituents. We produced, I think, 26,000 copies. We sent them through Canada Post to every door in Calgary-Buffalo and, the post office tells me, a few in Calgary-Fort because they mixed up one of the address codes. In that annual report I asked a series of questions, and not surprisingly, the first question was that I solicited the feedback from those Calgarians about how they felt about Bill 11. Now, this was post mail-out of the bill and post some of the multimillion dollar media campaign engineered by the government of the province of Alberta.

I must say again how disappointed I am that this province gives a budget of $8 million – $8 million – to the Public Affairs Bureau, which then turns around and uses that money on such a spurious campaign as we have seen to distort the truth of Bill 11, to propagate a series of myths. When the Member for St. Albert rose in this Assembly to talk about duplicity, referring to the opposition, I couldn't help but think that it is not the opposition that is spending millions of dollars to try and con Albertans. That's exactly what's going on, Mr. Speaker: trying to con Albertans. How do they do that? What they do is that they use mischievous titles. They offer explanatory notes that are misleading to the point of being wholly inaccurate.

Anyway, I digress. I was talking about some of the feedback I'm getting in Calgary. A lot of the feedback I've been getting is not just from Calgary-Buffalo but from the other 20 constituencies, or many of them. I've had the chance to go the Red & White Club, where Christine Burdett and the Leader of the Opposition and the Member for Calgary-Glenmore were talking about the bill. It taught me something else when I was in the Red & White Club in Calgary. Firstly, it's notable to see 800 angry Calgarians on any occasion on any issue in terms of what's happening in the Alberta Legislature. The other thing that was so interesting was that the thing that drew people to their feet was when somebody stood up and challenged the former Provincial Treasurer going to run the CRHA.

What also got people to their feet was when people talked about the refusal of this government to allow elections, as they had promised on March 11, 1997, to allow Albertans to vote for the people who are going to spend their 3 billion tax dollars going through the regional health authorities. What that brought home to me but is not apparent, I think, to all members from their comments is that the public debate has eclipsed Bill 11. We're no longer debating in this province what's in or what's not in Bill 11. Is there anybody who has not yet got it, Mr. Speaker? What has finally come home to roost is the boneheaded decision to blow up the General hospital, when two of those buildings are as modern as the Foothills hospital; the nonsensical proposition that you close the Holy Cross hospital after spending $32 million in renovations, and you offer it for sale for $4.5 million; the preposterous notion that we close the Grace hospital, which then reopens as a private facility. The Holy Cross hospital is now reopening as a private surgical facility.

People understand what's going on, and they don't like it. They are registering their concern. Yes, when people come here night after night after night and stand on the steps of their Legislative Assembly and register their concern and come to our constituency offices, it is true that they're not always talking about specifically what's in Bill 11. But you know something, Mr. Speaker? The message they're delivering is one that any of us ignore at our peril, because they're saying that the bloom is off the rose.

People are now starting to scrutinize this government's record of bad judgment, of poor decisions, of lack of planning. I understand that government members may not like that, but that's part of the reality, and I say good for Albertans that they're registering their concern, because I think for too long people have been prepared to give the government the benefit of the doubt. Mr. Speaker, I think Albertans, whether its at the rallies at McDougall Centre that have been happening night after night and afternoons or the people standing on the steps of this building, are registering in a most eloquent and the most powerful possible way that they're not prepared to give this government the benefit of the doubt any more, and I say good for them.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Lacombe-Stettler said something interesting today. She talked about fear mongering. You know, I thought to myself: what's fear mongering? I've listened to colleagues in this Assembly, people I have a great deal of respect for. I heard the Member for Calgary-Cross, who is a registered nurse. She has a well-deserved reputation as a very able legislator on Calgary city council. I mean, I can pick a number of people in the government who have come to such a different conclusion than I have in reading the bill, and I start to ask myself: how can it be that people who I respect in this Assembly have such a different view of it?

I end up coming back to a point I'd tried to make when I first spoke at second reading, and it's this. Bill 11 is so vague in so many different areas and there are so many decisions that are going to be made by a minister, that are going to be made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council through regulations that ultimately what you end up with is that the bill can be seen in a lot of different lights. It's a little bit like holding up a prism to a sunbeam. What you see as it comes through the prism – I guess we're looking through different filters, because some of those members who I respect on the government side who have argued that this bill is (a) innocuous or (b) a positive thing have gone as far as the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I found myself shaking my head when I heard her say: this is the miracle solution. Now, Mr. Speaker, even you will agree that that's an overreach which is astonishing in its breadth.

It comes down to this, Mr. Speaker. There are many people in this Assembly – all, I might add, on the government side – who are prepared to write the Minister of Health and Wellness a blank cheque, and they're prepared to write the Premier of this province a blank cheque, because ultimately he decides who is going to have that position of Health and Wellness. They have such a high degree of trust in the cabinet and their cabinet colleague, their government colleague, they have this amazing kind of confidence that he's always going to do the right thing.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I start from a very different point. I think governments live or fall on their record, not by what they say but by what they do. I look at the broken promise in terms of electing regional health authorities. I look at the absolute fiasco in terms of what happened with hospitals in the city of Calgary, the fact that right now we're about 250 to 300 acute hospital beds short in the city of Calgary. That's the best information I'm able to get from people that spend a lot of time worrying about those details.

Mr. Speaker, I think we look at that record, and some of us frankly don't trust this government to do anything other than create a host of opportunities for people who want to make dough at our expense. You know, as one of my constituents said to me: why would we as taxpayers pay the mortgage for a private health provider? That's exactly what Bill 11 allows. Why would we pay their mortgage? Could we possibly be that stupid?

Mr. Speaker, we've heard a lot about amendments. I heard the Member for West Yellowhead, if I heard him correctly, say that he was opposed to the bill when he first saw it. I appreciate his candour and I respect his candour if I heard him correctly. Then I heard him say that he'd seen the amendments and felt better. Well, I've gone over those 14 amendments, and let's see how much comfort we take from those. Section B dealt with queue-jumping.

MR. SAPERS: No, it didn't.

MR. DICKSON: Well, it was supposed to deal with queue-jumping.

One thing we know about the government members who have spoken is that they really read the marginal notes, and what's more, they believe the marginal notes. Now, Mr. Speaker, it may be just my natural cynicism, but I learned a long time ago that just because somebody writes something in a marginal note, it doesn't count for anything, because all the court looks at is what's in the text of the bill.

If you look at the so-called queue-jumping amendment, you will find two things. It only applies to an insured service. What that tells us is that the government decides by a simple regulation what's going to be an insured service and what is not. It doesn't cover one of the major problems, which is access to MRI and diagnostic services and that sort of thing.

You know, it does cause me to think, because I'm running out of time, if there's anything positive that's come from this whole experience. There have been some things. Does anybody think for a moment that we would have got those four MRI machines if it had not been for the public protest on this? Is there anybody in this province who thinks that foldable lenses would have been covered? Two days before the announcement, Mr. Garth Norris of Alberta Health was on CBC radio in Calgary, saying: you know, we can't cover foldable lenses because the evidence isn't clear; this is a medical decision, not a political decision; we're evaluating the evidence. Two days later the government comes out and announces that foldable lenses are now covered. That was a political decision. When the member for Redwater says that he thinks there's some politics creeping into this, he doesn't have to look any further than the coverage of foldable lenses.

As we go through the amendments, what effectively section C does is pave the way for private health entrepreneurs. If you want to set the rules and make it real attractive for people to invest in private health services, we've done that in section C.

Section E: what cold comfort we take from that. It means that everything rests on the shoulders of the Minister of Health and Wellness. If he's asleep at the switch, if he's not looking out for the interests of public health care, we all lose. We all lose.

Conflicts of interest, sections M and N. These amendments are laughable in their vacuousness. We're now going to have the prospect of 17 different standards of conflict of interest. You tell me, Mr. Speaker, why something would be a conflict of interest in Mistahia and exactly the same thing happening would not then be a conflict of interest in the Calgary regional health authority or the Chinook regional health authority or the Palliser regional health authority? Does anybody think that Albertans are that stupid?

I hear members stand up in this place and say: well, we're now happy because we've seen the amendment package and it deals with conflicts of interest. Well, folks, it does not deal with conflicts of interest. It doesn't deal with it. It's a great big zero.

So much to say and so little time. I wanted to go through some of the comments we've heard. The Member for Lacombe-Stettler tells us that doctors are experts, that it's a great thing that the college is going to make these decisions on what's going to be permitted overnight or not. Where was this member when the doctors said: Bill 40 stinks; we don't want to see that law brought into this province. The government said to doctors: we don't care what you say; we know better. Mr. Speaker, how is it that doctors' advice will be listened to sometimes and not at others?

Thank you very much.

11:10

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

MR. SHARIFF: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Oh, sorry. There's been a breach here on the part of the chair, and he apologizes. Would hon. members please give consent to revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have been joined during this debate by many special guests, and tonight I would like to recognize another person. We are joined tonight by Dean Margot Zorate, who is the Dean of Nursing at the University Peruana Cayetano Hedredia in Peru. She has been in this country for a mere 24 hours yet has found the time at nearly a quarter past 11 to come here and listen to the debate on privatization of our health care system. So we would like to recognize her this evening. I'd ask her to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 11

Health Care Protection Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

MR. SHARIFF: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. minister, you'll get your turn when you're recognized. If you've already spoken, then that ends it, doesn't it? We would appreciate whoever is starting it – it takes two to tango and we have six of them in here. We only have one member at a time standing and speaking, and those that are sitting are not speaking. That member is the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall. Let us hear him.

Debate Continued

MR. SHARIFF: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More than half a century ago the great Fakir who walked the halls of England in loincloth, the great Mahatma Gandhi, said: an error does not become truth by reason of multiplied propagation, nor does truth become error because nobody will see it.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to enter into this debate this evening at third reading of Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act. As many Albertans have correctly noticed, there has already been a great deal of debate on this issue, but so long as the Liberal and the ND oppositions keep up their campaign of misinformation, there needs to be people willing to set the record straight.

So much of the discussion to date has dealt with overnight stays in approved surgical facilities. It seems remarkable to me and to any other reasonable person that we work to fully utilize the wonders of modern medicine to treat as many Albertans as possible in the most efficient manner possible while at the same time freeing up valuable hospital space for more serious procedures that can only be done in public hospitals.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for change. Bill 11 capitalizes on opportunities that have become the realities of modern medicine. Who would have thought 20 years ago that even minor surgical procedures like those intended in Bill 11 would have progressed to the point where they are considered not only routine but unnecessary insofar as having them performed in a full-service public hospital? Twenty years ago these operations were considered to be major surgery, where recovery time was estimated in months and the risk to the patient was measurably higher. Now the minor surgeries that are involved in Bill 11 are being done at day-surgery clinics, where the patient is discharged in a fraction of the time with no serious risk to the patient. The overnight stay provision is merely an extension of services that can be performed in approved surgical facilities that require more than a 12-hour stay.

As we move into the 21st century, technological improvements will continue to reduce the impacts of surgery, potentially moving more procedures into the approved surgical clinic settings. In doing so, waiting lists will continually decrease, and as an added benefit the full-service public hospital will be able to further specialize and focus on major surgical procedures and, as such, will continually improve their efficiency. Mr. Speaker, that is what Bill 11 is all about: alleviating the pain and suffering that Albertans, indeed many Canadians, are experiencing with the status quo of Canadian health care.

This government is taking bold new steps to address pressures in health care by strengthening and sustaining the public health system that we all hold dear. Bill 11 accomplishes this by extending the sphere of the publicly funded health system to include approved surgical facilities through approved contracts with the regional health authorities. Even as we are about to take the first bold steps, the federal government and the federal Minister of Health resigned themselves to hollow criticism and empty promises. How frustrating it is, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation was brought forward in part by a request from the Hon. Allan Rock to close a serious legislative gap, only to be condemned for forward-thinking that improves our public health system while respecting all the terms and conditions found in the Canada Health Act.

The opponents of Bill 11 – the Liberals, the NDs, and the Friends of Medicare – advocate the status quo, and Albertans, indeed Canadians across the country, have repeatedly stated that the status quo is not acceptable. Mr. Speaker, our government was elected to find new solutions to old problems. That is what we have done in the past, and that is what we are doing here with Bill 11. This government wants to ensure that our public health system will be there for all Albertans in the 21st century and beyond. To ensure that future becomes reality, we have brought forward the Health Care Protection Act as one of the strengthening measures found in the six-point plan for health.

This evening I sincerely ask that the members across the floor who have argued, complained, fought, and resisted new solutions in health care every step of the way join us in support of a plan that means shorter waiting lists, better patient care, and decreased pain and suffering. Medicare is a system that we all value and cherish as Canadians. It works better when we work together to find solutions and improve it. My friends, this is the right thing to do. Let us be brave and pass this bill.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs.

11:20

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'm very pleased to speak to Bill 11 and add to the amount of hours we have debated this bill to date. There have been a lot of complaints about MLAs not having enough time to discuss, debate, and question Bill 11, otherwise known as the Health Care Protection Act. I just want to talk about some of those points because I think it's really important.

Let's see. Public policy regarding Bill 11 was released in November of 1999. Bill 11 was introduced on March 2. It was out for public debate for a month. Bill 11 was moved for second reading on April 4: 2,071 minutes, 34.52 hours, debating bill in House plus another 12.5 hours of question period time on Bill 11. Forty-seven hours total combined.

Second reading debate, Mr. Speaker: April 4, 5, 6, 10, 11, and 12. Committee of the Whole: April 12, 13, 17, 18, and 19. In second reading 1,158 minutes, or 19.30 hours; in Committee of the Whole on government amendments 913 minutes, or 15.22 hours; in Committee of the Whole on Liberal subamendment to A and N of government amendment 9.08 hours. Sixty-seven percent of time spent on government legislation this session has been spent on Bill 11.

The opposition has risen to speak to Bill 11 84 separate times. When we look at the total times spoken, the Liberals on the other levels, 77 times; the NDs, seven times. We all have one more opportunity to speak at third reading, which I'm very proud to stand for tonight, Mr. Speaker.

Another issue has been cuts to health, yet it is one of the least amounts cut in our budget. In fact, we have spent vast amounts of dollars . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Point of order, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Point of Order Questioning a Member

MR. MacDONALD: Beauchesne 333. Would the hon. member entertain a question?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member only has to say yes or no and does not have to give a reason.

MS CALAHASEN: No. Mr. Speaker, I have limited time, and I want to take my time to be able to argue the points that have been brought forward.

Debate Continued

MS CALAHASEN: In fact, Mr. Speaker, $5.6 billion to date we're spending on health care and still rising, up to $6 billion in the year 2000-2001, which translates to over $15 million a day on health care, and we still are doing more every year.

But health still plagues us, Mr. Speaker, and we need more dollars to be able to ensure that we take care of the needs of the constituents and all Albertans. I suppose that if we have limitless public dollars, medicine would do everything. Money is not limitless, and as Premier Roy Roma now stated in the ND country: if health costs continue to grow at the current rate in Saskatchewan, our Department of Health is going to absorb the entire provincial budget in 15 to 20 years.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is possible here also, and we still have not addressed the issues. We still have problems that plague us in health. We have some options. We could do nothing, which is not an option in my view and my constituents' view. We could totally ban the surgical clinics, 52 of which we would have to rule out, 30 of which the then health minister brought in on her own. And we could have a third option: we could ban private hospitals outright and tightly regulate and control surgical facilities so that they only operate when it is beneficial to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, that's the aim of Bill 11, and tonight I want to state my position as unequivocally as I have to my constituents as to why I support Bill 11. First of all, the constituent concerns which have been brought to my attention. One is the access to health care. We continue to have that problem in my constituency. You've got to realize that I have 90,000 square kilometers. We have two hospitals to be able to serve the 24,000 constituents I have. Access is always an issue, but we can't let that be a problem. We have to find different ways of being able to address the access issue, something which I think needs to be done in a comprehensive way.

MS CARLSON: When are you going to start?

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has spoken, as have a number of other members. People on this side have had an opportunity and either have taken advantage of it or not, but please let us hear hon. members out without all these little yip-yaps that are going on.

Hon. associate minister, if you would continue, hopefully without any interruption.

MS CALAHASEN: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. First of all, access to health care in my constituency. As I was saying, we've only got two hospitals that are able to serve the 24,000 constituents I have. We have 45 communities all over the constituency. We have, if we're lucky, at least eight hours to be able to access a hospital. That's a long way, Mr. Speaker. But in order for us to be able to improve access, we've done a number of things. I'm very proud of this, because it was the then minister of health, my colleague from Drumheller-Chinook, who was able to ensure that we had facilities that would be available to constituents in the northern communities, where we needed people to be able to access the facilities they could not otherwise access. It is an innovative way, something that constituents in my area have looked at to be able to deal with, in a better way, achieving access.

Mr. Speaker, paying for enhanced services or extra charges. This is an issue, mostly because there's been a lot of misinformation that has been given to them. When we're talking about paying for enhanced services or extra charges, the biggest issue people have come up to me with and said was: "Do we have to pay extra for all these services when we have already started in that area? We now pay for a lot of things when we go to the hospital. We're told that we have to pay for these extra services if we want to get some of the things we need." That came in, as my colleague from Calgary-Cross indicated, in an OC in I think 1992. That was brought in by our colleague at that time, the hon. minister of health, Mrs. Betkowski.

Mr. Speaker, when we're talking about extra charges, those are the kinds of things that people remember. They don't forget those. They look at what has already been established, and they're saying to us: "What can we do to make sure it doesn't go down that slippery slope that was started in 1992? How do we, then, contain those?"

Queue-jumping is a big issue. They're saying: "You know, we're not sure whether or not this is going to be able to be contained. We're really concerned about queue-jumping. Is there any way you can stop that? Is there any way this can be done so that it doesn't create problems for us who live in rural Alberta, who are so far away that sometimes we're forgotten when it comes to the line?" Mr. Speaker, they're always concerned about whether or not we can deal with this issue of queue-jumping. Such an important part in the bill was making sure that nobody can queue-jump.

Conflict of interest guidelines, Mr. Speaker. This was a concern from my constituents. They brought that as one of the issues, and we brought those ideas to the table, where we were then able to take care of some of the issues that were brought forward so that those changes could be brought in as amendments.

I commend my constituents for all the work they did and everything they brought forward. When they called, Mr. Speaker, when I asked them if they had read the bill, some of them said yes and some of them said no. Of those who said yes, the biggest question I asked was: how can we improve that bill so that you can be assured of public health care? They brought concerns forward and made some very good suggestions, and those are the suggestions that I think we'd like to continue to see as we are going through the bill. I want to commend them, during Committee of the Whole and through the whole time since November, for coming forward and making those suggestions.

You know what, Mr. Speaker? I received a few phone calls, not as many, I believe, as some in the urban areas. However, I did get, I would say, about 30 calls. That's a good number for my constituency. It's not as great as some of the other issues that I have to deal with. When we're talking about a little old lady who's 75 years old who needs a place to stay and has no home, that is the kind of call that I get. It takes precedence over some of these issues that are being brought forward.

When we're talking about those kinds of things, those are the kinds of things that hit home. Those are the kinds of things that people are concerned about in my constituency. Those are the areas that I begin to look at and say: how do I help those people? How do I make sure they get the house they require when we don't have those kinds of facilities available in those small remote communities? How do I ensure that they can fly out of a community that has no road, that has maybe no way of people getting out if somebody gets hurt in those communities? Those are the kinds of issues that we have to be able to look after.

I want to talk about waiting lists, Mr. Speaker. When I was just a young girl many years ago, I had a problem.

Many, many years ago, Mr. Speaker, I had a problem. I had a heart problem, and it was identified as a priority. In those years, some 29 years ago – that's a long time – it was identified as a priority that I had to go get open-heart surgery. Being a priority, I thought I'd be able to get in line and be able to get my heart surgery done as quickly as possible. Well, it took a year for me to be on that list when I was a priority. We have moved further away from those lists of a year, even getting better now. We have easier access to some of the facilities where we can have open-heart surgeries.

You know, when I think about that, within a week of my open-heart surgery I was allowed to go home up north, where there was very little availability of health care or even nearness to any hospital. I was allowed to go home after only six days. Think about that: 29 years ago – that's a long time ago – to be able to ensure that my heart was going to be okay if I left from here to go back to High Prairie, to be able to travel those miles and get there safely and then be safe in order to ensure that I didn't have any kind of problems with my heart surgery.

Those waiting lists are getting smaller. In fact, we are getting better. We are getting even better kinds of open-heart surgeries being done, even organ transplants, which were never thought of at that point. Mr. Speaker, those kinds of things are the kinds of areas that my constituents are concerned about. Whatever we can do, if we can alleviate any of the people in my area and ensure that they're on a waiting list that won't be a year long but shorter, and whatever it is that we're doing, that's the kind of thing they want to see.

That's the real meat of what we're talking about. Those are the kinds of things that I think we have to continue to fight for in health care so that it's flexible, so that it's accessible, so that the waiting lists are not going to be left forever and ever, but that we can reduce those waiting lists.

Mr. Speaker, whatever we do, we always have to remember rural Albertans. They don't have access to hospitals within 10 minutes or five minutes. We have access to hospitals, maybe eight hours, if we're lucky. If we can have planes come in, that's another issue. We have so few of those.

Mr. Speaker, northerners are hardy people, and they know that we have to find ways of looking at how we increase efficiency and reduce costs. They want to make sure that whatever we do, they have a way of getting access to hospitals. They believe that whatever we do, it's got to be intelligent. It's got to be sensitive to their issues, and it's got to be something that can redefine everything that has to happen in the health care system.

We did many things in the constituency of Lesser Slave Lake. The access is there. We're getting better. The people have better health care. We have now reduced the infant mortality rate, which was pretty high. We have now reduced even the mortality rate of the seniors we have. That has dropped to some degree. I know that as we continue to do what we've been doing, we'll continue to make sure that things get done.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 is a good bill. It does a number of things. My constituents want to know what those are. Firstly, it puts fences around those existing facilities that we have. Secondly, it will also ensure that we have rules and regulations for any of those private facilities that may want to come into our province. Thirdly, it will ensure that whatever we do, we'll continue to have access to health care and something that we can continue to maintain in a good way so we don't lose it by the costs that are spiraling, and that whatever we do in northern Alberta and in my constituency, they see themselves as being part of anything that has to happen that's innovative.

They've been very supportive, and I thank them for all their phone calls and the letters I've received. I know that the people who have been there have been very consistent in their messages that we have to do something, and we have to do something great.

The Slave Lake hospital was a big issue in 1988. In 1988 we had a flood. In 1988 we were promised a new hospital. You know, the then minister of health and I had quite an argument when it came to whether or not we were going to be getting a new hospital. She refused to give me a new hospital in Slave Lake, Mr. Speaker. That was a horrible, horrible thing for my constituents in Slave Lake, because we had fought very hard to make sure that hospital would be a priority. She refused. She refused to give me that hospital.

It was a very, very contentious issue with me, and it still continues to be a festering sore with my constituents in Slave Lake who have indicated that whatever happens, they remember these things. They won't forget that. I think that's something they will always remember, because it was a tough sell to try to see how I could even begin to let her see that rural Albertans also deserved a facility, that rural Albertans needed capital projects. It was very, very tough, and at the time I was very upset and very angry about that. But, you know, it's the best thing that has happened because now I can say that that's one thing I have going for me, that the people will never forget that. That was the most horrible thing that could've happened, the her inability to make a decision for me to have that hospital and refusing – refusing – to come to join me and be able to tell my constituents that she had said no to my hospital.

Mr. Speaker, that to me will never be forgotten, and I know my constituents won't forget that. You know, how do you support your fellow MLAs? Well, it really bodes well in my constituency when something like that happens. History follows people, and as they say: history is a set of lies agreed upon. Napoleon Bonaparte said that. I think the set of lies that has been brought forward is going to be very, very interesting as we move into the next election.

I just want to say a few words about the kind of threats we've been getting. It's continual threats. They wanted to talk about the bill, but, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's that continual threat of saying: you're not going to be there next time. I mean, those are the kind of things I've heard in the last 11 years since I've been here. I think those are the kind of areas that these people are going to have to live by as we go through. Threats don't bode well. Rural Albertans don't like threats. They like to see reality. They want to know what the plans are. What are the Liberals' plans for rural Alberta? What are the Liberals' plans for waiting lists? What are the Liberals' plans for making sure that whatever we do is going to sustain health care? We have to look at what their plans are. I don't see any.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very, very proud to be able to say tonight that I support Bill 11. It is a good bill.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to try and keep my comments down to about seven or eight minutes tonight because it's a timely debate. I'm pleased to not only have had the opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole but also to be able to speak in third reading here.

All across this country of ours there are similar discussions occurring at various levels of government in order to determine the best solutions to address the current crisis that Canadians are facing in the health care system. In other provinces the debate over health care and the operation of private surgical facilities has not nearly reached the magnitude that Alberta's has.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 shows that this government is firmly committed to protecting and improving access to the publicly funded system and to maintain the principles of the Canada Health Act. Our government has sought for three years to alleviate the pressure on the current system in this province through legislation governing surgical clinics, and with each year that passes, the imperativeness of finding a solution only becomes more pressing.

Our government has not allowed that pressure to sway it from its course of finding the best possible solution to alleviating the pressures on our current system. Our government has gone back to the drafters and examined the issues with the blue-ribbon panel and considered the practical application of proposed legislative measures. Bill 11 represents the culmination of that hard work. Bill 11 is a comprehensive piece of legislation to address the current crisis in our health care system. It shows that our government is committed to finding solutions while the opposition has shown its intention of hindering viable and progressive solutions to the challenges faced in our health care system.

Firstly, the amendments that were tabled and passed in this Assembly by all members of the government side tighten the prohibition on queue-jumping, making it illegal not only for persons to pay for faster service or to receive a payment to give faster service but also for a person to give faster access to insured service through the purchase of an enhanced product or service or through the purchase of an uninsured service. That's good news for my constituents, and it should be good news even for the ones that are philosophically opposed to Bill 11. It also states that the costs of enhanced medical services must be reasonable, and that's relief for my senior citizens when they know they're not going to have to pay any more. The amendments also specify that existing hospital space must be used effectively and efficiently and health authorities will have to consider efficient and effective use of existing capacities, and that makes sense to my constituents, Mr. Speaker.

In its amended form, Bill 11 will continue to alleviate waiting lists by providing viable options for regional health authorities to contract out certain services specified by the College of Physicians and Surgeons that can be done by surgical clinics under the umbrella of a publicly funded system while ensuring that these facilities are properly regulated under comprehensive legislation. Bill 11 has always been about options. It provides one more option for health authorities to consider when looking for the best way to deliver publicly funded health care. Funding for health care in the province will continue to be provided by the health authorities, who will then decide whether or not to contract out particular services in order to alleviate the pressures on the system.

Mr. Speaker, this brings me to the crux of why I wanted to speak tonight. Instead of reading letters, I have a letter sent to me today from – and I'm proud to table this, as a matter of fact – Teresa Welsch at St. Michael's separate school in Pincher Creek. It's an essay critiquing Bill 11. It was part of a class project. Each student was to write an essay on Bill 11 after they had thoroughly researched it. The article was submitted to the Pincher Creek Echo by the school, because they thought she had done a very, very good job in critiquing Bill 11. I'm just going to read the title: Bill 11 is a Necessary Step in Ensuring the Protection of the Public Health Care System in Alberta, and then I'll let members read for themselves the contents of this essay.

The publicly funded system will pay the entire cost of all procedures, making the system equal to all Albertans regardless of their level of income. Furthermore, additional facility fees will be illegal. To the senior citizens of my constituency, that is a relief.

Much has changed since the first real doctor arrived in southern Alberta, Mr. Speaker. That man was an officer, Officer Kitson, of the North West Mounted Police. What did he treat? Whooping cough, gangrene, TB, smallpox, the flu. Most of these things were stomach and respiratory problems. Another thing he had to contend with was the social diseases that were spread during the day. What was he issued with? A standard issue, basically a magic box of medical supplies, called a medicine chest, and he provided those services. Today all of the treatments Officer Kitson did are solved by pharmaceuticals. Later on, the barber in Fort Macleod used to pull teeth. Why? Because he was the one who had the tools. Today we have MRIs.

All Tommy Douglas wanted to do was make sure that everyone could get access to a doctor. He had a compassionate heart for the poor people of southwest Saskatchewan, and when the community responded to help poorer folks get medical attention when required, that's when Tommy Douglas got his idea of socialized medicine. The private doctors, the private facilities didn't like it at first, but they came onstream, and today we have MRIs.

I am confident that Tommy Douglas didn't envision what health care would look like in the year 2000, and I am confident that if he were here today, he would come up with something more than just the status quo, because he would be wise enough to think of the future and affordable access without the negativity the opposition brings us today.

Mr. Speaker, I've had bigger issues in my constituency. The wind power issue, the Westcastle development issue, the '95 flood all come to mind, with over 400 letters and hundreds of phone calls on each issue. Bill 11 has a total of 140 letters and calls coming into my constituency office, and, yes, that is significant. But I would not vote for something that was a threat to my mother, to my father, and to my family gaining access to the system, because we use the system too.

Bill 11 is not a threat. It is here for our protection. It represents a comprehensive piece of legislation that will provide options for dealing with current challenges in the health care system. It is a progressive step forward, as many of the steps that have been taken by our government have been. If our government had not been as determined to eliminate the deficit in 1993, this province would be in worse financial shape today than ever before. Instead, we moved ahead and proved to Albertans that our goals are long-term goals and that they are achievable.

The Health Care Protection Act is not a move to privatize health care or create a two-tier system, as the opposition has stated numerous times. It is an act to do exactly what it is titled to do: protect health care in Alberta. It does this by prohibiting private hospitals and putting in place a proper regulatory framework for the number of private clinics that are currently operating in the province while at the same time relieving the pressures that the current system faces. This is a progressive step, Mr. Speaker, and a necessary one to ensure the continued viability and sustainability of a single system for publicly funded health care in this province.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this evening and speak in support of Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act.

I'd like to thank all of the constituents who have taken time to participate in this debate, and certainly all those both in favour and those against. I think it's been very positive that we've had an opportunity to have a debate on health care in Alberta, and I certainly want to thank those who have taken that time to supply their comments to me.

We live in an exciting time, and for health care it is one of those times and ages that we probably couldn't pick a better era in which to live. There are more things being changed in health today as a result of the great advances in science and technology and options than ever imagined before. We live longer. There are more life-enhancing and -extending procedures. Science is developing exciting technologies, equipment, drugs, and treatments. All of these things are providing quite a challenge and change for how health will have to be continually delivered and thought of, how it can be delivered for the future. That's going to have to incorporate a chance for change, for inventiveness, for being able to react and adapt quickly to the advances in technology and models of delivery.

Our health care as it was developed in Canada was always developed around the idea that there would be the provision of services both by private providers and public. It never had been solely developed from day one over the past few decades that it would be just purely a public model. Our doctors and many of the health care providers have operated as independent private operators, whether they're in their own offices, clinics, surgical facilities, and even, for the most part, in many parts in our public hospitals. The bill does acknowledge this fact and addresses the regulation of those services.

I'm pleased to see that health, though some would throw out that this is the issue – it was never intended nor ever thought from its inception nor in its practice over the past few decades that the government would take over a monopoly on the provision of the services or a monopoly on the labour. We would allow and have always allowed for the private operation and provision of services. We have examples all around us in our existing system. We're asked: where is the evidence of its efficiency? Where is the evidence of its cost-effectiveness? It's happened over decades, ever since this model has been determined.

We have hundreds of clinics. We have over 50 surgical facilities and thousands of doctors who have operated and many other health providers who continue to provide another way, another option, and a quicker and more adaptable service to the public. We already see in our midst every day how effectively that actually works in our own system. To actually ignore and to say that this has been a destruction of health care is to totally ignore the fact of the service that all of these hardworking, dedicated, well-intentioned, and tremendous working professionals provide.

We have one of the best opportunities of provision of health in Canada. We speak of the problems, yet we live in one of the best areas. We can be pleased to see that the provision of health is at an extremely high standard, and we have to look for even a better standard. But to ignore the reality that the private sector has always had a role and should always continue to have a role in conjunction with the provision of the services is a critical element of how health has been developed in Canada. Certainly Alberta is no exception to that. I am pleased to see that Bill 11 is one small step in the acknowledgment of this fact. We continue to see that health in Canada, in Alberta will have the best provision of service in world for our public.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

In light of the time I would like to move adjournment of debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[At 11:52 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 10, 2000 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 00/05/10
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly a very honourable individual, Mr. Peter Felix, the consul general for Switzerland. He is seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. Accompanying him is Mr. Bruno Dobler, honorary consul of Switzerland here in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta and Switzerland have had a strong relationship for many years. Albertans of Swiss origin helped settle and develop our province, particularly our mountain parks. We are pleased to welcome many Swiss tourists each year. Alberta and Switzerland trade more than $64 million worth of products in an average year in areas ranging from raw materials to high-tech products. The visit is an excellent opportunity for us to build on this relationship by exploring new areas of co-operation and growth. I had the honour of hosting His Honour the consul general.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to present a petition from 679 Albertans from Calgary, Fort McMurray, Sherwood Park, Bon Accord, Tofield, Fort Saskatchewan, Mundare, Beaumont, Devon, and Edmonton urging this government "to stop promoting private health care and undermining [the] public health care [system]." With the petitions tabled today, we will be at 73,000 petitions opposed to this government's privatization plans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have petitions to table on behalf of 566 Albertans from all over. They are from Stony Plain, Gainford, Spruce Grove, Mayerthorpe, Winterburn, Seba Beach, Sherwood Park, Ryley, Edmonton, Whitecourt, Ardrossan, Carvel, Beaumont, Wetaskiwin, Morinville, Tofield, Leduc, and Alberta Beach. They are all requesting that this government "stop promoting private health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition today calling on the Legislature to introduce legislation which will require two people to be on duty in businesses after hours, after dark.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by 766 Albertans from Sherwood Park, Edmonton, Killam, Calgary, Onoway, Spruce Grove, Gunn, and St. Albert, all in opposition to a two-tier health care system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three petitions to table today. The first one is signed by 647 Albertans from Edmonton, Morinville, St. Albert, Calgary, Sherwood Park, Red Deer, Vegreville, Spruce Grove, Cold Lake, Sylvan Lake, Rimbey, Bonnyville, High Prairie, Didsbury, Beaumont, Bon Accord, and Ponoka. They are calling on this Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private for-profit health care, within the domain of medically required services, and to ban any existing for-profit operations that are conducting medically required surgical services, as paid for by the Government . . . through any Regional Health Authority.

The second one is signed by 58 Albertans from Athabasca and surrounding areas. This petition reads as follows, Mr. Speaker.

Whereas, a properly funded, public health care system is the most cost-effective way to deliver quality health services

And whereas, public health care is vital to ensure quality [health] care for all Albertans

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

The third one, Mr. Speaker, is signed by 319 Albertans opposed to Bill 11. They are from Calais, Valleyview, Red Deer, Grimshaw, Berwyn, Gibbons, Fort Saskatchewan, Spruce Grove, Camrose, Canyon Creek, Ardrossan, Sherwood Park, St. Albert, Duffield, Fort Saskatchewan, Fort McMurray, Morinville, Little Smoky, Sturgeon Lake, Crooked Creek, Fox Creek, Sunset House, DeBolt, and Peace River. This brings the total number of signatures on this petition to 22,244.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to present a petition signed by 45 individuals very concerned about mature women's health. A lot of them are from Brooks, Rolling Hills, and Tilley, Alberta. They're urging the Legislative Assembly to urge the government "to take an enlightened preventative approach" with newer and more effective medications and therapies around osteoporosis.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions to present to the Assembly today. The first is on behalf of a number of Calgarians. These individuals are asking the Assembly "to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald."

The second petition I have for the Assembly today is from 603 individuals from Vermilion, Marwayne, Bonnyville, Dewberry, Mannville, Wembley, Water Valley, Calgary, Flatbush, Cold Lake, Fort McMurray, Clandonald, Innisfree, Wainwright, and Elk Point. Mr. Speaker, this petition reads:

We, the undersigned citizens of Alberta, strongly oppose the privatization of health care services in Alberta. We do not wish to see for-profit services used in our health care because we believe that this will lead to a two-tier system. We call for funding to be restored by the Provincial Government to public health care to reduce the current long waiting lists.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition to present to the Assembly. It states:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

It is signed by a number of residents from Sherwood Park, Wildwood, and the city.

Thank you.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would ask that the petition I presented on Tuesday, May 9, signed by 172 Albertans requesting that the erosion of . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, it's only required to ask for the petition be read. The Clerk will do the work.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. I am asking that that petition be read and received.

THE CLERK:

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would ask that the petition I presented regarding the concerns about private health care be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to stop promoting private healthcare and undermining public healthcare.

1:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, sir. I'd ask that the petition I read into the record yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that the petition I put in yesterday with respect to public health care be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, wish that the petition I presented yesterday signed by 146 Albertans requesting that private health care be stopped be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented to the Legislative Assembly on Tuesday, May 9 regarding the divisive and disruptive labour dispute at the Calgary Herald be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned, petition the [Legislative] assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.

THE SPEAKER: Do you have a second, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar?

MR. MacDONALD: Sure, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented to the Legislative Assembly yesterday regarding public health care be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to protect, support, and enhance public health care in Alberta and to ban for-profit, private hospitals from receiving public dollars.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented yesterday, May 9, be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned, call upon the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta:

1. To immediately disallow any further development of the Spray Valley of Kananaskis Country, including those proposals currently under consideration;

2. To maintain Kananaskis Country in natural state that provides high quality wildlife habitat and nature-based recreational activities;
3. To create a Wildland Provincial Park which protects the whole of the undeveloped parts of the Kananaskis and Spray Valleys.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the petition I tabled yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, request that the petition I tabled yesterday now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd request that the petition standing on the Order Paper under my name concerning public health care now be read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, sir. I'd ask that the petition I had introduced yesterday, May 9, with respect to opposition to private health care might now be read and received, please.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I ask that the petition standing in my name on the Order Paper asking the government "to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care," which combined with the third party and ourselves brings the petitioners to 100,000 in this province . . .

THE SPEAKER: Please. Please have a chair. Clerk, do we have such a petition?

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. LANGEVIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask that the petition I presented yesterday on front licence plates be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to re-instate the front license plate on all vehicles registered in Alberta.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to table with the Assembly five copies of a letter to the editor of the Edmonton Journal. The letter was written by John Zaozirny, who is the former minister of energy, expressing his disappointment and puzzlement at some of the opposition to Bill 11, particularly the opposition of two former colleagues, Mr. Amerongen and Mr. King.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I wish first of all to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Alberta College of Optometrists for the year ended December 31, 1999. Five copies are provided.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table five copies of the complete executive summary of the pilot study Evaluation of Contracted Surgical Services completed November 12, 1998. It's from the Calgary regional health authority.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to explain that I realize this was purportedly tabled by the opposition earlier, but they somehow missed out a number of pages, and I wanted to table the entire report, including the conclusion.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table today a copy of a letter I received from a scholar in our city, Dr. Brigham Card. He identifies the Cardston medical contract in 1932 as actually the beginning of Canadian medicare.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would to table the required copies of the annual report of the Edmonton Community Lottery Board for 1999. This document provides a complete listing of all the grant recipients' proof for funding. My sincere thanks go for a job well done to the board members.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you. Only two tablings this afternoon, sir, both are opinion poll summaries. The first one is the summary for the month of April 2000 at www.garydickson.ab.ca. There were 2,251 hits, 90 percent opposed to Bill 11.

The second one is 567 hits from May 1 to May 9 at the same web site, 86 percent opposed to the overnight-stay provision in the 14 government amendments.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of a petition. The reason I didn't present this during petitions is that these petitioners faxed in their petitions instead of providing the originals. It is a petition in support of public health care in Alberta. It is signed by 677 residents of Alberta from Cochrane, Anzac, Clearwater, Fort Macleod, Pincher Creek, Edmonton, Calgary, Drumheller, Lac La Biche, Fort McMurray, Calmar, Morinville, Vegreville, Drayton Valley, Hinton, Lamont, Fort Saskatchewan, and Fairview. These undersigned citizens "petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care" in the province of Alberta.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a petition I received from third-year nursing students at the University of Calgary who are adamantly opposed to Bill 11. They include Maureen Firmston, Kim Gibb, Suzanne Champoux, Lisa McClelland, Lindsay Bauer, Agnes Antivolla, and Jen Langille. They've asked me to table it in the Assembly, which I am pleased to do on their behalf.

Secondly, I would like to table a petition signed by 160 seniors who are part of the Federal Superannuates National Association who have signed a petition which I'm pleased to table opposing Bill 11 and who were even more concerned after their detailed study of the legislation.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure today to table a set of letters. These letters are signed by 146 Albertans from Red Deer requesting in a different set of ways and in a number of different examples that they give that the government not promote private, for-profit health care.

1:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first is a petition which indicates opposition to Bill 11 and states that it "will have far reaching, destructive consequences for all of us."

The second is a FOIP request to the office of the Premier asking that the total numbers of the correspondence both in support of and against Bill 11 be provided.

The third tabling is the preliminary report of results of a questionnaire in Edmonton-Meadowlark, both the percentage and numeric breakdown, which indicated overwhelming opposition to private, for-profit health care.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. One is from a constituent of mine, Cecile Hansen, very much opposed to Bill 11.

The other is an article entitled U.S. Doctor Wails over Managed Care, that was sent to me by Mary-ellen Robinson. She states: "In the name of democracy and common sense I beg you to vote against Bill 11 . . . I pray that you will have the strength to vote against Bill 11."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a total of four tablings today. The first three are letters opposing Bill 11. The first letter is from Harold and Cheri Gerbrandt of Medicine Hat. The second is from Richard Beech of Sherwood Park. The third one is from Shirley Thomas of Red Deer.

Mr. Speaker, the fourth tabling is in the form of a petition. I couldn't table it because it doesn't have the disclaimer. I would like to table requisite copies of this petition and, with your permission, read the petition into the record. "We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the . . ."

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, if it's inappropriate for the Routine, there's no way of getting around it, so please table it, and let's move on.

DR. PANNU: Okay, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

This petition was circulated by the Sisters of Assumption and is signed by 235 Franco-Albertans opposed to the privatization of health care in Alberta. The petition is signed by residents of Plamondon, Lac La Biche, Grassland, St. Lina, and Boyle.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I'd table five copies of a photocopied petition from Edmonton, St. Albert, and Stony Plain signed by 30 citizens opposed to Bill 11.

The second tabling is a petition from 37 citizens in Gleichen and Wheatland county that lacks the privacy regulation and asks for the withdrawal of Bill 11.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a copy of a petition signed by 565 people from Bonnyville, Glendon, Ardmore, Frog Lake, Mallaig, Cold Lake, and La Corey opposed to Bill 11 and a two-tiered health care system.

I also have a second tabling. It is an article on the front page of the Western Catholic Reporter entitled Scrap Bill 11, says the Catholic Women's League.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is 35 letters to the Premier from residents of Canmore who are opposed to the Genesis proposal for the Spray Valley in Kananaskis Country.

The second is 47 more letters, Mr. Speaker, from people from southern Alberta, including Canmore, to the Premier urging him to scrap the development in Kananaskis Country and protect "this wonderful area as a designated Wildland Park."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have but one tabling today. It is from 150 Albertans from Red Deer, Alberta. They wish to register their opposition to "plans for privatization and for-profit hospitals in Alberta." They further say that they "cannot see how creating a for-profit health [care] system can benefit the taxpayers and voters of Alberta."

Thank you, sir.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition that was not in the proper form signed by 83 residents of Fort Macleod requesting “no special private clinic or special services” in public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table today a notice to all members of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts regarding the second meeting cancellation from the Minister of Learning and our lack of ability now to hold his department accountable.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling this afternoon, and that is a letter I've received from the Premier of Saskatchewan, Roy Romanow, regarding the shortage of health professionals not only in this province but across the country. Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 23 special guests from the northernmost part of the Little Bow constituency in Arrowwood school. Accompanying 18 students that have had a full two days visiting the science centre and the Provincial Museum yesterday as well as the Legislature here today are their teacher, Mrs. Rani Crawford, and their bus driver and teacher, Mr. Dean Truman, along with parent helpers Mrs. Darcy Oberholtzer, Mrs. Peggy Robinson, and Mrs. Linda Garside. They're in the members' gallery. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Resource Development.

DR. WEST: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly some students from the Marwayne Jubilee school. Marwayne is about 150 miles from here in the northeast. These are very intelligent students, great self-discipline. They were in my office earlier. They've been to the Space and Science Centre. They're going to have a tour here, and they're also going to get to go swimming in the city of Edmonton today, and then they're going back home. I would like to introduce with them Mr. Elgin Pawlak, teacher, and Mrs. Arlene Parker, teacher assistant. They're in the members' gallery. I would ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think the group from Rocky Mountain House is in the House yet, but I want to introduce the group to you. They will be coming in very shortly. There are 15 grade 10 students along with three teachers and two parents. I'd ask that the House give them the usual warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 13 students and their instructor from the continuing education annex. Their instructor, Ms Nancy Fanjoy, is accompanying them. I didn't get a chance to meet them earlier, but I ask members of the Assembly to please welcome them and give them the usual warm round of applause.

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you today on behalf of the Member for Red Deer-North 52 grade 10 students from Lindsay Thurber high school in Red Deer.

I want to note, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations went to Lindsay Thurber high school, as did the Member for Calgary-Lougheed. It's very likely that the Minister of Gaming, because he grew up in Red Deer, went to Lindsay Thurber. The minister of agriculture went to Lindsay Thurber, and the cousins of the minister from Calgary all went to Lindsay Thurber high school, and while the Minister of Learning went to Red Deer College and should've gone to Lindsay Thurber, he didn't. It's obviously an outstanding high school. It has a great impact on our province, and who knows what's going to come from this group of grade 10 students in the future.

I would ask them to rise, along with their teachers, Mr. Carl Malenfant and Mr. Rick Ramsfield, and receive the warm greetings of this Assembly.

2:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions to make today. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Alison Cameron, who will be my summer student this year – she has just completed her first year of nursing at the University of Alberta – and Heather Kuhl, who is a Grade 10 student doing a work experience project in my office. I would ask these two to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Voting on Bill 11

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're down to the eleventh hour and debate has been closed off, but a majority of Albertans are hoping that it's not too late for the Premier to take the whips off of his caucus and let his MLAs represent the wishes of their constituents on private health care. My question is: will the Premier finally change his mind and allow his MLAs a free vote on private health care?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have explained so many times in this Legislature that my caucus colleagues have the opportunity to vote freely on this particular matter. It was a caucus decision not directed by me – I purposely missed that caucus meeting – a caucus decision to unanimously support the government's position on Bill 11.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, if Bill 11 causes no harm and if it isn't going to be a threat to public health care in this province, why is this Premier so afraid to allow the free vote to occur?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm not afraid to have a free vote on this particular matter. There was a free vote in the caucus.

I know that it's very difficult for the leader of the Liberal opposition to understand a vote in caucus because when I was in caucus with her, Mr. Speaker, there wasn't such a thing as a vote. So I can understand why it's difficult for her to understand that we actually do have votes in our caucus. It was unheard of when she was a senior member of the caucus in the Getty government. They simply did not have votes.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, this is not a comment on free votes; it's a comment on freedom of speech. The chair will recognize the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to raise a question, and there should be a minimal amount of interjections or none. The chair will then recognize a representative of the government to respond, and there will be minimal or few interjections, if any at all. That's called freedom of speech.

The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, if the Premier can sign a membership pledge to support his former Treasurer in a leadership bid, why won't he sign a pledge for a free vote for Albertans on health care?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll explain again. There was a vote in the caucus, and it was a free vote. I wasn't there, but I'm sure that as many members of caucus as wanted to speak on this issue said their piece. At the end of the day, as I understand from the whip, the vote in caucus, something that is so foreign to the leader of the Liberal opposition, was unanimous to support the government's position.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Diagnostic Equipment

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Fairview hospital X-ray machine is 14 years old. Patients and staff of the Mistahia region are very concerned about receiving higher than recommended doses of radiation, as they should be. The faulty X-ray machine can emit radiation levels as high as 19 rad, almost double the provincially set standard of 10 rad. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier commit right now to the people of Mistahia and Alberta to provide regional health authorities with adequate budgets to buy and operate diagnostic equipment that is safe?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, indeed, that is in our six-point health plan, to make sure that we have all of our facilities equipped with up-to-date equipment.

Relative to the situation as it pertains specifically to the hospital in Fairview, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, if the information with respect to the possibility of radiation coming from an X-ray machine is valid, I would certainly expect that those in charge at the hospital would refer that to officials in the regional health authority and that that machine would not be used, period. That is what we would expect of any health authority in this province and those within it in terms of not endangering patient safety.

The other point, though, Mr. Speaker, is that we have in the budget that was tabled before this Legislature and approved significant additional dollars for capital equipment. We also added capital equipment in last year's budget, and the Mistahia regional health authority got their fair proportion. I assume that they would manage those resources and deal with this situation.

THE SPEAKER: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, they've been turned down for capital funding.

My second question is to the Premier. Is the Premier's underfunding of health authorities for modern diagnostic equipment part of his plan to artificially create a demand for private diagnostic services for Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Liberal opposition has not been paying attention. Just recently the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness announced the purchase of four new MRIs to go into hospitals, conventional hospitals, as we know them today. That's in addition to the MRIs that have already been slated for Lethbridge, Red Deer, Medicine Hat, and the Mistahia region in Grande Prairie.

The statement that the leader of the Liberal opposition made relative to there being no capital funding I don't think is a true statement. I'm sure the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness would be very happy to provide the leader of the Liberal opposition with the actual amounts that have been provided to the Mistahia health region for the purchase of capital equipment.

MR. JONSON: If I could just briefly supplement, Mr. Speaker, just possibly the questioner is not portraying this in the right way. There will may be a proposal for renovation in the capital project at the Fairview hospital which has not made its way up the priority list, but if they're honestly talking about an X-ray machine, we have additional capital dollars in the health care budget for the regional health authorities to set their priorities and purchase the needed equipment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the Premier. How can this Premier afford a $3 million communications campaign on private health care, yet he doesn't have the $400,000 the people of the Mistahia health care region need for a safe X-ray machine?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, not one single cent has been spent on a campaign to promote private health care. Yes, some money has been spent to explain to the public our intentions relative to a piece of legislation to protect the public health care system as we know it today and to abide by the principles of the Canada Health Act, something, by the way, that the Liberals voted against.

Relative to the situation in Fairview with respect to the X-ray machine, if there is an unsafe X-ray machine, then we will look after it. We'll look after it this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I have to ask the question: when did this leader of the Liberal opposition learn about this particular situation? Has she been keeping it under her hat, so to speak? Has she been keeping it under her hat? You know, why can't she act like Sheldon Chumir, who was an honourable person, or like Bettie Hewes, who is an honourable person? When they found out something that might cause danger to life, they would have the decency and the courtesy to go to the minister.

So their objective is to try to embarrass the government. They have no concern whatsoever over public safety. None whatsoever.

THE SPEAKER: Third main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Throughout the debate on private health care policy the Premier has ignored the voices and the concerns of Albertans. He's ignored their phone calls, their letters, their 100,000 petitions signed, their faxes, their e-mails. He's refused to answer the many Albertans who've gathered at the Legislature over the last few weeks. In fact, the Premier has left a trail of unanswered questions, and it is time to get some straight, truthful answers. My question is to the Premier. Where is the evidence to show that your health care policy won't be more expensive?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that's what the policy is all about. For the first time surgical clinics will have to demonstrate to the College of Physicians and Surgeons, to the regional health authorities, to the minister that efficiencies will result, that there will be cost savings, and that it will reduce waiting lists. And they voted against that.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, where is the evidence – evidence – that the health care policy isn't going to increase waiting lists?

MR. KLEIN: Well, maybe, Mr. Speaker, the evidence is contained in documents that have been hidden away for 15 years in the 150 boxes of documents that the leader of the Liberal opposition refuses to make available for the public. Maybe the evidence is contained there. We will never know.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, where is the evidence to show that the new health professionals being trained at public expense won't end up in private health care?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, this is something that will have to be determined between the RHA, the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and the minister. This legislation, the policy, is to enhance the protection of the public system as we know it today and to fully commit ourselves to the principles of the Canada Health Act.

What is happening right now? You know, the strange thing and I guess maybe the thing that's not totally honest about this on the part of the Liberal Party is that they're trying to create the impression that this is something new. Perhaps contained in those 150 boxes that have been secreted away is the information relative to the 30 clinics that the leader of the Liberal opposition allowed to be established and allowed to charge facility fees.

Surgical clinics are not new. They have been operating in this province for years and years. This leader of the Liberal opposition knows it because she allowed 30 of them to operate and charge facility fees. So it's not being honest to somehow imply that this is something new. This has been going on in this province for years.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Charles Camsell Hospital

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The likely passage of Bill 11 this evening is the latest example of a government hell-bent on privatizing what's left of Alberta's public health care system. Whether it's hospital services, laboratory services, home care services, or long-term care services, this is a government that places a higher priority on the well-being of corporations than on the well-being of citizens. My questions are to the Premier. Which private, for-profit health care interests does the government hope to reward by selling the Charles Camsell hospital in Edmonton?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm really not familiar with the details of a sale if indeed it is pending. I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, if I understand the hon. member's question, he's talking about the sale of a hospital. I would like to have that elaborated on. I'm not aware of the sale of any operating hospital.

DR. PANNU: My second question, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given the severe shortage of long-term care beds, why doesn't the government donate the Charles Camsell site to the publicly owned Capital Care Group instead of selling it to private hospitals or nursing home corporations?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that is really a decision that would have to be made by the RHA in consultation with the minister and certainly whatever committees or authorities have been established within the Capital regional health authority to address long-term care needs.

Relative to the specific question, perhaps the minister can answer.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it is helpful that the member has now finally identified the building. The Charles Camsell hospital was reduced in terms of its function some years ago, going back into, as I recall, the late '80s. It was eventually phased out and closed down because of the changing role of the hospital. It was, as I recall, operated in a contract relationship with the federal government for our First Nations people for a period of time, and then the service for those individuals was shifted and integrated more with the overall public health care system.

Mr. Speaker, I've not been in the building recently, but I have been through it, and it would require major, major renovations. I don't think that a long-term care proponent would necessarily regard it as a very great gift unless it was supplemented with quite a bit of additional capital money to bring it up to standard and to renovate it.

I'm sure those options are being considered by the capital health authority, but those are some of the background items that would have to be considered.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the Minister of Health and Wellness: what evidence, if any, does the government have that justifies its clear bias towards subsidizing the private, for-profit sector to build and operate long-term care beds as opposed to having those beds built and operated by regional health authorities directly?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've had for decades in this province, as I've said many times – but let's talk particularly about the long-term care area – a mixture of voluntary, private, and directly publicly run and built long-term care centres. We have, yes, as we did with the lodges across this province, provided a financing program whereby the private sector can get involved in building a long-term care centre and operating it just as a volunteer organization such as the Bethany Group can get involved in conducting or completing a capital project and having an operating contract. They've worked well across this province and provided good service, and that is what we're continuing to do.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Grain Transportation

MR. TRYNCHY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Transportation of grain to market for Alberta farmers has been very inefficient and has cost Alberta farmers millions of dollars more than it should. The Premier, the minister, and the Minister of Infrastructure have lobbied the federal government for changes. Today we hear of proposed legislation by the federal government to correct this. Can the minister outline the fundamental components of today's announcement and what it will mean for Alberta grain farmers?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for your guidance. I'll try to compress it as much as possible, but this is a major announcement for Alberta and particularly for Alberta farmers.

2:20

First of all, let me say that we didn't get everything we wanted, but it did move a long way toward implementing the Estey report and the recommendations that Arthur Kroeger made. The number one benefit to Alberta farmers that we will realize starting on August 1 of the new crop year is the revenue cap on the railways. There's going to be a cap established that is about $178 million less than the revenue would be on the movement of 30 million tonnes. That is a reduction of about 18 percent from where it would have been.

Now, we've got to be careful with the math, because the fact is that if you add in first that 4.5 percent increase that was announced some weeks ago, now it's being reduced by 18 percent. So really the true reduction from this current year's freight rates is about 13.5 percent, which means about $4.47 a tonne reduction. So with the amount of grain that is moving out of the province of Alberta, that will mean a direct reduction of about $45 million to $50 million that will stay in the pockets of Alberta farmers. It's important to recognize that this is an annual thing, and it's not tax dollars. Those are farmers' dollars, so it'll stay in their pockets.

The next component that is pretty important to mention is the fact that there's also the injection of $175 million of new money that will go to infrastructure where we have rail abandonment. Then there are some four or five other points, but we'll deal with those some other time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. TRYNCHY: Thank you. My supplementary to the minister. Mr. Minister, I appreciate what you just told us, but given that Alberta has called for moving the role of the Canadian Wheat Board to spout and this has not been fully implemented, does the government support the proposed legislation?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, yes, we did recommend that in fact the Wheat Board be moved to spout, but actually Kroeger had recommended that port would be good enough. We accept this. It's a move in the right direction.

I think that probably a couple of the other points that are even more important to Alberta than whether spout or terminal is the fact that the federal government has also committed to looking at the rail situation, the transportation situation, and by law they have to do a review under the Canadian Transportation Agency of the whole rail system starting July 1, 2000.

The minister has committed that in the first six months of that review he wants an answer back on things like open rail, tariffs, and that sort of thing. That could be extremely important to Alberta farmers, particularly in light of the one other component that they announced today, and that is that they will be accepting the 25 percent contract for movement to the terminals from the prairies.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. TRYNCHY: Thank you. That's a step in the right direction, Mr. Minister, but what effects will all these changes have on Alberta's domestic food processing and agricultural value-added industries? Will the funds flow through to Albertans?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, ultimately we believe and it's the position of the Alberta government that we need to move the Canadian Wheat Board out of the domestic market. Until that happens, we still are going to have a problem with some of the added value in the province, because there's an additional administrative cost that adds absolutely no value to the primary producers.

So that would be one of the things that we would be still hoping for, but I have to reiterate again that this is a step in the right direction. Certainly if the Canadian Wheat Board lives up to the rhetoric that they are producing today, then this will be an even better first step.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's return to the unanswered questions on private health care. Why does the Premier continue to allow queue-jumping with private MRIs in Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to MRIs, which are not under the jurisdiction of the Canada Health Act, if a perfectly healthy individual simply wants to have an examination, yes, that individual, as I understand it, can go to an MRI clinic and pay to have the procedure. But if a doctor suspects that there is something wrong with the individual and prescribes an MRI, then it is done under the publicly funded system.

I stand to be corrected, and I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness supplement.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, for a number of years, going back to the time of the Leader of the Opposition as minister, it has been possible for a person to pay for certain diagnostic services outside medical health care coverage because they did not require the services of a physician for the actual conducting of the test. That, yes, is happening today.

MRS. MacBETH: Point of order.

MR. JONSON: However, the government has been increasing in a major, major way the MRI capacity in this province. This is for machines that will operate within the public health care system for which there will be coverage, which will reduce waiting lists and will bring Alberta to a top ranking in this country in terms of the number of scans per thousand population.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, why does the Premier continue to hide public contracts for laboratory and diagnostic services in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, those contracts, as I understand it, are between the regional health authorities and the various diagnostic clinics.

Relative to the transparency and the openness of contracts as they relate to contracted surgeons, Mr. Speaker, that issue was addressed in Bill 11 as one of the amendments to strengthen the old provision of openness and transparency, but the Liberals voted against it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this Premier refuses to answer the legitimate questions that Albertans have posed, it confirms that by his actions this Premier has broken trust with the people of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: I was waiting for the question. It didn't come.

MR. JONSON: I can respond, Mr. Speaker. In terms of the openness of contracts, this is something that we need to be able to ensure will occur, and we need the legislation, Bill 11, to do it.

But I would like to point out that while the increased capacity is being put in place in Calgary, certain contracts have been made with private providers of MRI services. Some of the proponents of those contracts are well known to members of the opposition. The point here is that even though the legislation is not yet in place, I understand from the Calgary regional health authority that they are going to be publishing the details of the overall contracts for these three short-term times of service on the web site that they operate.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that with the goodwill there we're already moving in the direction of Bill 11.

Driver Licensing

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, my questions today are for the Minister of Infrastructure, who is also responsible for traffic safety. It's been about five or six years since this Legislature started discussing seriously graduated licensing. My first question to the minister is: what are the elements of the currently proposed graduated licensing program?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right. The graduated licensing program falls under the Traffic Safety Act, which was passed in the House last year. Before I talk about the elements of the graduated licensing program, I would just like to say that the graduated licence is a process that is intended to give drivers adequate on-road experience within certain conditions in a very controlled environment.

We are in the process now of beginning a round of public consultations with respect to the proposed program, and the discussion paper we are intending to send out to all Albertans and all of the stakeholders will be centred on a number of points. One of them will be a one-year learner period and a two-year probationary period for new drivers so they can get supervised experience in all season driving conditions, then a ban on new drivers operating a vehicle between midnight and 5 a.m. – now, this is just for the learner period, the one year – and also the number of passengers in the vehicle not exceeding the number of seat belts.

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would tell us what the implications will be with respect to beginning drivers, learning drivers when it comes to mixing alcohol and driving.

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, there will be zero tolerance, of course, for alcohol use while driving. This applies both to the learner and also to the adult that's with the learner in the car. Action will be taken against the driver, and it's important to accentuate again that it's not only the person in the learner status but also the driver that's there to advise the learner in terms of conditions and rules of the road. So both. If there's evidence of alcohol detected on either one, then we'll pursue it under the current law.

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, in some of the current newspaper articles the question that comes to mind is: under what circumstances might a second test be required with respect to earning your driver's licence?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, the graduated licence program will apply to all new drivers regardless of their age or where they come from. Anyone moving to Alberta from another country who has held a licence for less than two years will have to go through a graduated licence program to make sure that they know Alberta's rules of the road and especially have an opportunity to drive during all the seasons, and of course winter is most important. Our conditions are very different, as you know, from many parts of the world.

Now, experienced drivers from other countries may be asked to take a road test and a written test to ensure that they are familiar with Alberta's roads and conditions with the exception of those countries with which Alberta has reciprocal agreements. Germany, Japan, and Australia come to mind.

Mr. Speaker, this is all in the discussion document. It will go to all Albertans for their input.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Institute for Health Economics Report

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the minister confirm that the final draft of the government-funded report from the Institute of Health Economics is now complete?

MR. JONSON: I cannot confirm that at this moment, Mr. Speaker, but we are expecting it in short order.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, would it be possible that that could be released before we have to vote on Bill 11 tonight?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as was indicated earlier in terms of the preliminary findings of the institute, that report will be, I think, very similar to the one that was just tabled today on behalf of the Calgary regional health authority. It will point out certain advantages, certain examples which are very cost-effective and very acceptable in the private sector as well as those that are much stronger on the public side.

The point here is that – and it relates to Bill 11. One of the messages that I think will come out of that report in its conclusions is that there needs to be a thorough analysis of any particular proposal for the operation of a surgical clinic, Mr. Speaker, and that certain criteria have to be met. That's what Bill 11 is all about.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, it still would help if we could get to see it before we have the vote tonight.

Is there something in this report that's not going to support Bill 11?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, my reports and indications are no. In fact, it would be judged to be on the positive side as far as our case for Bill 11 is concerned.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Natural Gas Pricing

MR. SEVERTSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've received inquiries from several constituents about the variation in the price of natural gas. Sometimes the price that one household pays for natural gas varies by as much as 25 percent from the price that a neighbouring household pays even when the usage is basically the same if they are on a different utility system. Can the Minister of Resource Development tell the Assembly how the natural gas price varies across the province?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, the issue that the member has brought forward is often related to me from various areas of the province. We have 69 gas co-ops that deliver gas, some 24 municipally owned gas companies, and of course we have the five investor-owned gas companies in the province. So there is a great variance, and it's because of three or four different factors.

One of the main factors, of course, is that we have a fixed gas charge, a fixed delivery charge, a variable delivery charge, and sometimes a municipal fee. Now, these prices vary by utility, each one of these different ones, and they're all outlined on the bill. For example, the fixed delivery charges of the three biggest investor-owned utilities are similar, about $14 per month for ATCO south and AltaGas Utilities and $13.80 for ATCO north. There is a spread in the variable delivery charges. They range from $1.05 a gigajoule to $1.19 to $1.29 depending on which utility area you're in. There's also the variation and the cost of the natural gas. That varies from $3.33 per gigajoule at ATCO south to $4.26 at ATCO north and $4.34 at AltaGas.

Now, the other thing is that if you're sitting beside a rural gas co-op, they buy all of their gas, the 69 of them, through a thing called Gas Alberta. They bulk-buy the gas, and then they blend these with the operating costs as the cost of gas. So you can get rates varying from $2.75 in the Gem Gas Co-op to $4.73 in the Lobstick Gas Co-op, and it goes on and on.

So there is no way that a brother-in-law can compare from one district to another and come up with the same price.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. SEVERTSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the minister tell the Assembly why the prices vary so much?

DR. WEST: Well, what I explained the first time I got up was how the costs were made up. Now let's look at what varies some of these costs from one area to another. Let's look at some of the gas distribution costs. The age of the system of the older gas distributors costs less because they're more depreciated, and the newer systems cost more. Customer density: you can well imagine that in the city of Edmonton or in the city of Calgary the distances between customers and the density makes it cheaper to deliver those costs. There's cross-subsidization. In some utilities urban consumers subsidize deliveries in less populated areas, so you get variance that way. Then there's municipal franchise taxes. Some municipalities put on a franchise tax, and it's right on the bill.

The other cost variance relates to the gas itself. Remember that on gas contracts the price of gas can vary depending on when they've been signed and for how long. If some utilities have gas storage and are competing against somebody that has no storage, of course they can buy cheaper gas and hold it for six months, and it's reflected on their bill. Some of the companies also produce the gas, and of course they may have storage capacity and produce the gas and don't have to buy it off the spot market, and therefore it's cheaper.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. SEVERTSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These reasons for variance don't explain why the price of natural gas has increased across the board over the last year. Could the Minister of Resource Development explain why the prices have gone up?

DR. WEST: I know that the hon. member wants to ask this on behalf of his constituents, because we're all concerned here. The price of natural gas is going up. It's market driven. There is no disconnect now between pipeline capacity and the United States. When we had more gas than we had pipeline capacity, of course there was cheaper gas back in Alberta. Now with the Alliance pipeline and some of the new pipelines that have been built transborder, we are going to see a North American marketplace, and because of the uptake of natural gas in electrical generation and the conversion from oil in certain industries to gas utilization, we'll see the price go up.

One thing you should note is that Alberta still has the cheapest gas prices. Remember you pay the cost of gas. Let's look at April 24: in Canadian dollars Calgary was $3.96 a gigajoule; Vancouver, $3.88; Toronto, $4.56; Chicago, $4.45. Some say that they pay less for gas in the States because we're exporting. They pay more for gas in the United States.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Health Care Funding

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Rockyview hospital in Calgary has one CAT scan that handles 50 procedures a day when it was only meant to handle 20. Quite basically, they just need more equipment. Even Bud McCaig, chairman of the Calgary Health Trust, has said that the private sector is going to have to shoulder a heavier load when it comes to health care expenditures. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the government doing to ensure that all regions have a sustainable plan for providing equipment renewal? Or are they just going to be forced to rely on bottle drives next?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, a very significant additional amount of money is being provided for capital equipment across this province. It is recognized that the CAT scan, of course, is a very important diagnostic tool, and I'm sure that the Calgary health authority would give priority to diagnostic equipment which needs to be either replaced or added to in terms of capacity.

Mr. Speaker, we also have a special fund particularly for specialized, high-tech equipment that is allocated to health authorities out of our lottery fund, and our overall contributions, as I've said, to capital funding have been increasing rather significantly.

If I could, just for more details on it I would ask the Minister of Infrastructure to perhaps comment further on this.

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, the plan over the next three years is to continue consulting with regional health authorities in looking at those areas, not only replacing equipment that requires replacement because it's old and has served it usefulness but also in adapting new technologies.

A good example, Mr. Speaker, is of course the newly opened neonatal unit over at the Royal Alex with the digital transmission of all the diagnostic imaging. The specialists now at the Royal Alex can consult with specialists anywhere around the world, with those physicians that are on the same system that we have here in Edmonton. I would say that it is the first in Alberta, right here in Edmonton, to go on an electronic transmission system and, in fact, probably the first of its kind in Canada.

MS LEIBOVICI: As it now appears to be government policy that the private sector begin to shoulder a heavier load when it comes to health care expenditures, is the minister prepared to admit that the quality of health care delivery provided in the community is going to depend on its ability to fund-raise?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it is well demonstrated in our budget and in our overall business plan that this government is committed to adding significantly today and in the future, some 21 percent more money over the next three years, rising to well over $5 billion, comparing well with the expenditures of other provinces. So we're certainly investing in the public health care system of this province.

Mr. Speaker, the other point is that we are very grateful that there are health care foundations, people that want to add to and enhance the capability of our health care system. Those types of organizations have thankfully been there for decades. There's nothing new about this. They've bought equipment; they've bought furniture. They've enhanced the overall situation as far as conditions in hospitals and have done so for years.

MS LEIBOVICI: They're now funding essential services.

Is the underfunding of the Rockyview just another example of this government's attempt to create a demand for private facilities in this province?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I've had the opportunity to visit the Rockyview hospital twice in the fairly recent past, and it's my impression that it is a very, very busy hospital, running to capacity. I would certainly judge that to be the case. I visited with physicians. They're doing a tremendous amount of good work there. I've not had it drawn to my attention that the Rockyview hospital regards itself as being unfairly treated with respect to the overall Calgary regional health authority budget, although, yes, they would like to have an MRI, and that is, I guess, under consideration right now.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Property Taxes

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A constituent called my office raising a concern about our government refund policy on overassessment of property value. My constituent informed me that the story in the Calgary Herald indicates that our government has instituted a new policy that would cost Calgary property owners millions of dollars per year. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Why is the government instituting a new assessment refund policy that penalizes Calgary property owners?

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that we're not. The matter that the hon. member raises is related to the provincial hardship policy on the loss of assessment base. In the past the provincial policy was that a municipality that suffered a 5 percent or greater loss of its current year assessment base could apply for an education tax adjustment to their municipal requisition and be compensated for the loss of assessment. Beginning in the year . . . [interjection]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, just ignore and please proceed.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Beginning in the 2000 year, the policy changed, reducing the threshold from 5 percent to 2 percent for all municipalities within the province, not just one. Now instead of having to suffer a 5 percent loss on their assessment base before the refund is considered, the municipality can qualify for any loss, and collectively it amounts to 2 percent. That is the new base that has been set.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplement is also to the same minister. Given the minister's comment, how can the city of Calgary claim that they are being discriminated against by this new policy?

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Mr. Speaker, it appears that the city of Calgary is doing this policy in the context of property owner appeals rather than in the significant losses of overall assessments. The overall assessment loss provision was put in place to basically deal with municipalities. This was done in 1994 to deal with issues such as loss of elevators, for example, railroad branchline abandonment, and relocation of industry. That was the purpose of this particular program. This so-called hardship policy of 5 percent refund threshold was made available to all the municipalities within the province. The city of Calgary, it appears, had previously taken a wider view on this policy and used it to mitigate successful property tax appeals. Indeed, this was something that was used to pool provincial dollars to compensate for errors made by city assessors in the evaluation of assessment process.

Mr. Speaker, the city of Calgary and all other municipalities will still qualify for the refund in the amount of 2 percent where there is a total loss in the live assessment. The city, however, will have to be responsible for the first 2 percent in that loss.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Has the city of Calgary made application for a refund for 1999, and what is the amount of the refund they will qualify for?

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the city of Calgary has made applications for refunds in the past as they dealt with individual property assessment appeals. These refund requests have been responded to by the Department of Municipal Affairs as they have been received. For the year 1999, in answer to the question of the how much, a total of eight applications have been received, and to date the city has received an approximate amount of $8 million that has been refunded or will shortly be refunded.

There are two different issues involved here, Mr. Speaker, and I think it's very critical and important that there be a true identification of the issues. One is a hardship appeal process that deals with loss of assessment. The other is a process that deals with reassessment values. Ultimately we want to recognize that that phase was put in place for all municipalities. It is now set at 2 percent rather than 5 percent and will treat all municipalities within this province on an equal and fair basis.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now the chair will recognize the first of several individuals with respect to Recognitions, but before we get to that, please join me in wishing the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane a happy birthday.

DR. TAYLOR: How old is she?

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science is absolutely out of order. If he chooses to stand, he will stand there attentively, and he will echo no voice whatsoever, because where he is right now he totally has no status in this Assembly. None.

head: Statement by the Speaker

Private Member's Motion 511

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I'd like to draw your attention to the item Motions other than Government Motions found at page 6 of today's Order Paper. If I could draw your attention to this, please. Members will note under that item that Motion 511, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-West, has been amended, as is allowed under Standing Order 39(1).

The chair would like to note that the hon. member served notice well in advance of the four sitting day period stipulated in that Standing Order. However, due to some internal miscommunication, not the fault of the member, this notice did not appear on the Order Paper until today. While the notice falls slightly short of the four days' notice by several hours, the chair would ask for the indulgence of all the members regarding this matter so that we might proceed in its appropriate order in the number of days from now.

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE SPEAKER: Thank you very much.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, seven members today have indicated their desire to participate in Recognitions, so we'll proceed in this order: first of all, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Calgary Outriders Soccer Club

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary Outriders soccer club was formed in May 1999. The team will travel in the summer of 2000 to the Gothia Cup in Sweden and the Dana Cup in Denmark. These are recognized as the two top European youth tournaments. The girls are very excited about the prospect of traveling to Europe in July 2000, and I want to wish them the best of luck.

Mr. Speaker, the team members are head coach, Howard McGiffin; assistant coach, Tony Demassi; manager, Chris Phelan; assistant coach, Judy Grigg; trainer, Lesley Scullion. The players are Lois Bennett, Samantha Blood, Christie Buone, Stacey Deiere, Krista Demassi, Gillian Duffy, Kellie Fenton, Kyla Grigg, Stephanie and Michelle Hoogveld, Rachael Lovink, Carley Phelan, Kim Pyra, Diane Reid, my constituent, Michelle Rowe, Gleayne Saliba, Tayah Schreter-Gillespie, Katie Shaw, and Kate Sloan.

We wish them all the best of luck, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Edmonton Downtown Business Association

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand today to recognize the Edmonton Downtown Development Corporation. On May 5, 2000, they held their annual luncheon and awards. The recipients of the awards were the 104th Street Promenade, city of Edmonton; ArtsHab pilot project, Arts Habitat Association of Alberta; CIBC historic restoration and expansion, CIBC Developments; Donna at the Citadel, Donna Rumboldt; On Ninth, Westbank Projects; Railtown, Christenson Developments Ltd.; Stanley A. Milner Library expansion, Edmonton Public Libraries; Union Bank Inn expansion, Diane Kyle Buchanan.

The Downtown Business Association was established as a business revitalization zone in 1985. This year we celebrate the 15th year of their service. The Downtown Business Association is proud to have the responsibility to ensure economic growth and enhancement of all quality of life in the urban centre. The combination of the new and old ensures that we will continue to be a world-class city with a sense of community.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Nightingale Nights Celebration

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On May 12 more than 24,000 registered nurses in Alberta will recognize the 180th birthday of Ms Florence Nightingale. This special occasion will be honoured through a celebration of Nightingale Nights. The Alberta Registered Nurses Educational Trust will host five Nightingale Night dinners this Friday, to be held in Lethbridge, Calgary, Red Deer, Edmonton, and Grande Prairie. These events will raise funds for continuing nursing education.

Mrs. Betty Gourlay, chair of the Registered Nurses Educational Trust, said, and I quote: this is the inaugural community fund-raising event of the educational trust; we hope that the event promotes the positive roles that registered nurses have played in shaping our communities and their daily contributions that benefit the lives of Albertans.

I strongly agree with Mrs. Gourlay, Mr. Speaker, and I invite all members of this Assembly to join me in wishing the Alberta Registered Nurses Educational Trust the very best with their Nightingale Night celebration.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

International Chronic Fatigue Syndrome Day

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I rise to recognize May 12 as International Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Day, or Chronic Fatigue Syndrome Day. ME is a severe and disabling illness characterized by overwhelming fatigue, cognitive problems, and numerous other symptoms that can last for months, years, or decades, yet many are unaware of its impact. Statistics indicate that only one in four doctors can properly diagnose ME. It is also significant that in Alberta there is only one full-time clinic which treats ME, and the waiting list is more than 1,000. Hopefully ME Awareness Day will not only stimulate the awareness of the government, the public, and the professionals but also expedite the requirement for more funding for research, improved diagnostic techniques, training for doctors, treatments, and even, hopefully, a cure.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Youth Immigrants of Distinction Awards

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak in recognition of the recipients of youth immigrants of distinction awards, given out by the Calgary Immigrant Aid Society: Nilou Davoudi, Susan Doan, Samir Pradhan, Stephen Kung, and Casey Wang.

Their achievements and contributions to our society are amazing. For example, 13-year-old Nilou Davoudi came to Alberta from Iran when she was four. Besides academic achievement, she shows talent in piano, clarinet, landscape painting, writing essays and stories. She's also well known for her aboriginal beadwork art, that was part of an aboriginal artifacts exhibition in Calgary and Vancouver. Last year she was one of the Stampede parade princesses with her own creation of aboriginal headgear.

Susan Doan came from Vietnam when she was four. Nineteen years later she is a student at the Boston school of dental medicine. She was on the dean's list at UBC, a recipient of many awards in natural design engineering and rehabilitation sciences. She is also an award-winning pianist.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Norma Zopf

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Saturday, May 6, I attended the United Way labour appreciation night. One of the honourees at the event was Norma Zopf. I would like to extend to her my congratulations on her accomplishments.

Norma began her work career as a city of Edmonton employee and shop steward for her union, CUPE. She then joined Stats Canada and initiated a complete revamping of their health and safety committee. All the while being a dedicated mother and community activist, she managed to facilitate courses on women and aging in the workforce and is a cofounder of the Kaazba Foundation for the purpose of sending children with disabilities to camps, Disneyland, ranches, and farms.

Ms Zopf is truly deserving of the award presented to her by the United Way as she gives freely of her time and has a history of volunteering throughout her life.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1885 Calgary Town Hall

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, yesterday, Tuesday, May 9, 2000, I had the pleasure of participating in the grand opening of the 1885

Calgary Town Hall at Heritage Park Historical Village. The successful conclusion of this millennium town hall recreation project makes Calgary one of the few cities in Canada that can boast the existence of all of its city halls. The first mayor of Calgary, His Worship George Murdock, made a very special appearance as master of ceremonies and explained what was happening 115 years ago in the optimistic one-year-old prairie town of Calgary. Such things happen in Canada's premier living historical village.

Special thanks to all three levels of government, the Heritage Park staff and volunteers, the Heritage Park Foundation, and the numerous community business partners and individual donors without whom this project would not have been possible. Congratulations, Heritage Park, on ensuring that yet more of our western heritage comes to life.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Opposition House Leader, you'll deal with the point of order on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition?

MR. DICKSON: Yes.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

MS CALAHASEN: Madam Speaker, may we revert to Introduction of Guests prior to the other proceedings?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Yes. Before we deal with the point of order, I would ask for unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and to Members of the Legislative Assembly two very handsome men who are sitting in the members' gallery. They are two people who represent various groups. Their names are Gerald Auger, with the wonderful smile, and Chief Jerry Goodswimmer, who is also from Sturgeon Lake. I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On the point of order, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much. I raise this on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition. I'll come to the authorities in just a second, but the words and conduct that I rise on occurred during the fourth set of questions by the Leader of the Opposition to the Premier. [interjection] The fourth, for those who weren't counting.

Madam Speaker, the question was asked, and then the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development said from his seat: ask your brother. The Leader of the Opposition does indeed have a brother who is a physician and a radiologist. The implication of the intervention by the minister is that the leader's brother in some sense improperly benefited or was improperly advantaged by actions of the leader when she was health minister. Now, it's true that the leader's brother is outside this Assembly and it's true he was not named, but the Speaker dealt with a similar situation last Thursday, May 4, 2000, and that starts at page 1336 and goes on for four pages in Hansard.

The two submissions I'd make would be this. Firstly, I'd cite the Speaker's ruling at pages 1339 and 1340. At that time the Speaker required a formal, express, and extensive apology. I'd submit that no less full a remedy would be required here, because this was compounded by the subsequent reference by the Minister of Health and Wellness in terms of actions taken by the leader when she was then minister, once again the implication being somehow advantaging her brother the radiologist.

I'd refer to sessional paper 149/95, dated March 2, 1995, where the government answered Written Question 149 as follows: "Private MRI clinics were not in operation prior to May, 1993. Prior to this access to a MRI was through the publicly funded system in a hospital."

Now, I incorporate by way of authorities the references cited by the Government House Leader on May 4, 2000, at pages 1336, 1337: Erskine May; Beauchesne 64, page 19; page 52 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice – he did an excellent job in terms of reviewing the authorities – and also page 1337. I would add one, and it's Marleau and Montpetit, their House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 524:

Members are discouraged from referring by name to persons who are not Members of Parliament and who do not enjoy parliamentary immunity, except in extraordinary circumstances where the national interest . . .

Parenthetically, that would presumably be read provincial interest.

. . . calls for the naming of an individual. The Speaker has ruled that Members have a responsibility to protect the innocent, not only from outright slander but from any slur directly or indirectly implied, and has stressed that Members should avoid as much as possible mentioning by name people from outside the House who are unable to reply and defend themselves against innuendo.

The Speaker made it abundantly clear last Thursday that by implication, whether you mention the name or not – in that case it was a reference. Somebody said: you go down to the Ethics Commissioner's office and you can unearth the same information. Well, here it's even easier. There would only be one conceivable purpose for the minister of agriculture to have made that comment he did from his seat. I would ask that you require, Madam Speaker, at the very least the same kind of full, complete, and comprehensive apology that the Speaker required last Thursday. To do any less would suggest that we have one set of rules when it's a friend of the Premier involved and another set of rules when it's the relative or a close acquaintance of any other member of the Assembly. I don't believe for a moment that you would countenance that sort of a differential treatment.

Those are my observations, and that's my request. Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Madam Speaker, it is, I think, astonishing that the hon. Opposition House Leader would have the temerity to compare the events of last Thursday with the events of today.

The events of last Thursday, to refresh the memory of those in the House and those who read the record, dealt with a member of this House, a member who had been recognized to speak, asking a question and doing something in asking that question where there could be no other interpretation of the asking of the question than an attempt to besmirch the character and the trust and the integrity of a member of this Assembly. That's what the Speaker dealt with in his ruling at that time. [interjection] The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora doesn't have the courtesy to even listen to members speaking in the House.

Madam Speaker, that's what happened last Thursday. There was a serious breach of privilege in this House last Thursday when the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert rose on a question, asked a question which clearly had no other purpose than to besmirch the integrity of our Premier. If a member of this House or anyone else has a question about the dealings of people in this House or the dealings of people associated with people in this House, there's a process that's put in place by this House to deal with those questions. The Speaker at that time agreed with the representations I made, that because we consider that to be of utmost importance, when those sorts of questions come up, if they do, members should avail themselves of that process rather than raise questions inappropriately in the House. That's what happened last Thursday. The apology that was given – no, I'm not going to go there. Sorry.

To compare that to what happened today is absolutely inappropriate. What happened today is that there was a question on the floor by somebody who had been recognized about diagnostic imaging, and there was an answer being given about diagnostic imaging. If I recall the question correctly – and I don't have the Blues, but you perhaps do – there was a whole question of disclosure of information. When would that information be public?

I would suggest, although not having had the opportunity to discuss with the hon. minister whose comment is being called into question, a comment which was not on the record of the House until it was put on the record by the Opposition House Leader, a comment which may or may not, subject to checking, actually have been said – given that it might have been said, it can clearly be read into the context of the question and answer. The hon. opposition leader was asking for information about contracts, and the member was saying: ask your brother, because he's in that business. [interjections]

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, who again doesn't have the courtesy to listen to people in this House and gets emotional about these things rather than dealing with issues instead of personalities, raises the question about timing. The whole question of diagnostic imaging has been changing over time, and I'm not going to answer on behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness as to the time frames involved.

The point of order related specifically, as I understand it, to a comment made by someone who was not on the record. Quite frankly, I would agree with the member if he said that such comments ought not to be made. I know the Speaker would agree that we should not be shouting comments back and forth. The provocative nature of this House, being two swords' length apart from each other, and the emotional outbreaks that come from time to time, as has been exhibited clearly this afternoon during this point of order, sometimes provoke people to make comments. We ought not to make those comments.

There was no affront intended by that comment, I would suggest. There was no integrity questioned by that comment, I would suggest. That comment can be clearly read into the context of the question and answer at the time and was clearly not intended to impugn the integrity of any person either inside or outside this House.

MR. LUND: Well, Madam Speaker, this is about as ridiculous as it could get. If the hon. leader – and I don't know their family; I don't know her brother; I don't know her; I don't know their relationship – is so sensitive about whether her brother has a contract or not, if she's so sensitive about his operating a private MRI, then I am sorry that I even brought the issue up. I don't know whether they have that relationship. So if she has great difficulty with admitting that he has an MRI and has a contract, something that I don't know, then I wish that I hadn't touched that little nerve that caused the problem, if she is so sensitive about his operating a clinic in the province of Alberta.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks, Madam Speaker. I participated in the exchange that took place last Thursday that the Government House Leader was referring to and which was referenced by the Official Opposition House Leader. It's very fresh and very clear in my mind what transpired and what the judgment coming from the chair was and then what happened after that judgment.

I would say this. The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development only had one purpose in mind, clearly, when he made that interjection. For him to say that this issue is about the Leader of the Official Opposition is malicious. This is about his behaviour, Madam Speaker, and his words, his alone. He should have the ability to stand and clearly distance himself from those inappropriate comments and apologize without trying to slither out that it's somehow an issue about the Leader of the Official Opposition. So I would hope that you are not going to accept those words as an apology, because clearly they will not be acceptable.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I would say that that context wasn't in keeping with what is required, hon. member.

First off, I'm going to deal with two parts of this point of order. I was not in the chair at the time this was supposedly said and did not hear the interjection. However, Beauchesne 486(4) states that remarks not on the public record and not heard by the chair do not invite the intervention of the chair. I would however like to remind everyone, though, that members who do refer to people outside this House, outside the Assembly – it is inappropriate as they are not here and they do not have the opportunity to reply. So I would ask that you take that into consideration. There is a big difference between an interjection, a heckle, and something that is on the record, and as far as I can see, this isn't on the record.

The second part was the reference made in the answer by the Minister of Health and Wellness. I think this is more a point of clarification and not a point of order. Given the wording in the Blues and the tone and context in which these statements were made, this doesn't appear to be a point of order. It is not inappropriate for a minister to comment when a particular government policy commenced, and that in my estimation was what the Minister of Health and Wellness was doing.

I would ask that for the remainder of this afternoon and hopefully tonight we do try to keep the tone down and remember that we have to utilize decorum.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it's my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

head: Motions for Returns

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Proper notice having been given yesterday, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 33, 34, 35, 40, 44, 45, 48, and 49.

[Motion carried]

User Fees

M33. Mr. Sapers moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of documents prepared for Alberta Treasury by government departments between November 1, 1998, and April 30, 2000, evaluating the cost of service and revenues associated with user fees, licences, premiums, and charges levied by government departments.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This, as you know, has been a matter of some considerable discussion and interest to the people of Alberta ever since the Eurig decision ruled that user fees which collected revenues in excess of the cost of service were in fact taxes and any Legislature that had user fees of that nature was illegally assessing taxes against its citizens and a move must be made to correct that.

Now, we saw that there was a review undertaken in the province of Alberta as a result of the Eurig estate decision. I will say that it was interesting to me that the province of Alberta intervened in that decision, trying to protect the status quo in maintaining the imposition of user fees even though they very well may exceed the cost of service. Regardless of the province's intervention it failed, and of course the decision was made that these kinds of user fees are illegal taxes.

As events unfolded, the province asked the hon. Member for St. Albert to head a review, and what is being referred to as the O'Neill report was subsequently compiled. That report, we're told, resulted in some $60 million being trimmed off user fees. We know, for example, from comments made by the Minister of Government Services that there were some 94 fees in Alberta Registries, which in fact were illegal forms of taxation, which had to be rolled back. So they no doubt make up part of that $60 million. But the $60 million is literally a drop in the bucket, because the $60 million rolled back out of a total collected in excess of $1.3 billion is over 800 user fees that this government now expects its citizens to pay in addition to all of the forms of taxation that this government expects its citizens to contribute.

What we are asking for in this motion for a return is the evidence that shows that the government evaluated the costs of services so that we can make an independent judgment regarding whether or not this $60 million of rolled back or trimmed user fees is appropriate or if in fact there should be some further work in that area. So I would hope the government, in keeping with its often stated policy of being open and accountable, would respond in the affirmative to this motion for a return.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the Acting Provincial Treasurer I must reject this request. Of course, the fact is that there was no document prepared for Alberta Treasury during this period.

I must add, Madam Speaker, that the cuts that were made were as a result of the interim report of the Fees and Charges Review Committee.

MR. SAPERS: Well, it's very interesting that there was no document. As a matter of fact, we have information coming from the freedom of information and protection of privacy administrator for Alberta Treasury that there are documents that have been prepared relative to the cost of service between 1998 and April 3, 2000. I'm a little bit confused. We have documents from Alberta Treasury saying that there are documents, but they don't want to give them to Albertans, and now we have the minister on behalf of the Acting Treasurer saying that there aren't any documents.

I'd like to know which is the truth, and I'd like to know, if there was an error made, who was responsible for the error. Clearly, there has been work done by Treasury and work done, probably, in every department that collects user fees. I myself have written to every minister of Executive Council asking for information on their user-fee regime, and most departments complied quite willingly and sent back some information. So it is inconceivable that there aren't documents. The plausible explanation here is that the government wants to keep these documents a secret, and I would then suggest that the reason why they want to keep them a secret is because they reflect poorly on the government's actions subsequent to the compiling of that information.

Now, if the government doesn't want to take responsibility for doing the work or if the work was done poorly, that's one thing, but I would like to request that the minister on behalf of the Acting Treasurer on behalf of the Treasurer go back and review the correspondence record in this matter and as quickly as he possibly can come back to the House and explain the confusion between his statement that there are no documents and the information that we have from Alberta Treasury that in fact there are documents.

Maybe at that point, once that confusion is straightened out, the House will be in a better position to pass a vote on whether or not they would support the government's rejection of this very legitimate and very important information request.

[Motion for a Return 33 lost]

Single-rate Tax Plan

M34. Mr. Sapers moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of base case forecast tables and change in marginal tax rates by income class of taxpayers prepared by or for Alberta Treasury for the period January 1, 1999, to April 3, 2000, associated with the implementation of the government's 11 percent single-rate tax plan.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Of course, when this motion for a return was put on the Order Paper, the government's official position on their tax plan was to move to a single rate, or a flat tax, of 11 percent. The Acting Treasurer has subsequently tabled in question period and, I may add, quite inappropriately tabled at the wrong point in proceedings, some suggested amendments. So the government's tax plan, we believe, may now be to move to a flat tax of 10 and a half percent, but I would hope that this technicality would not be the basis of the government's rejection of this motion for a return.

Clearly, the intent of this motion for a return is to take a look at the homework done by the government when they came up with their very unfair flat tax plan, and if the government would like Albertans to believe that it is a fair flat tax plan, well, then they can help build their case by showing us this background information and this homework.

The important part of the motion for a return doesn't hinge around the percentage rate of the flat tax. The heart of the matter is the homework, and of course the model being used you could plug in any number. So while I acknowledge that the flat tax plan of the government may now be 10 and a half percent, the fact is that when this was put on the Order Paper, the government's stated intention and the bill that was before the House was in fact an 11 percent rate.

In any case, the issue is the same. We would like to see the evidence. We'd like to see the base case forecast tables and the change in the marginal tax rates, and we'd like to see it broken down by classes of taxpayers because then Albertans will have a much better idea on the true impact of this flat tax proposal and would no doubt agree with those critics of this flat tax that like every other flat tax this is an unfair one, which shifts the burden to the middle-income taxpayer in the province.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development on behalf of the Acting Treasurer.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the Acting Treasurer we must reject this motion for a return.

I think it's important to note that the personal income tax forecast resulting from the 11 percent single tax plan was included in the revenue tables in both Budget '99 and Budget 2000. In Budget 2000 the revenue table on page 40 shows the personal income tax forecast for the next three years: $4.7 billion in 2000-2001, $4.8 billion in 2001-2002, and $5.1 billion in 2002-2003.

Budget 2000 also includes the Alberta tax advantage chapter that details the whole tax plan, and since January 1, 1999, Treasury has not prepared any detailed calculations of changes in marginal tax rates by gross income of taxpayers. The marginal tax rate by income depends not only on the tax rate but also on all the credits and deductions claimed by the taxpayer. Under the new tax system the marginal tax rate on taxable income is pretty straightforward. It is 11 percent of taxable income. From that, the taxpayer then deducts the value of their nonrefundable credits, 11 percent of the basic and spousal exemptions of $11,620 and other credits. The only exception to the 11 percent value of credits is for charitable donations, where the credit is 11 percent on the first $200 donated and 12.75 percent on the rest. This dual rate maintains the same credit value as the existing system on donations over $200.

3:30

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to conclude debate.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, we seem to be witness to some interesting policy development. If I understood the minister speaking on behalf of the Acting Treasurer, who is here on behalf of the Treasurer, what he just read into the record was the suggestion that the government is not moving to lower the flat tax rate from 11 to 10.5 percent and is not increasing the personal exemption. His answer just confirmed that in fact the marginal rates will still be based on an 11 percent flat tax rate and at the previously announced personal exemption level.

Again, I'm very curious to know who's really speaking for tax policy in this province. It seems to change from day to day and from moment to moment. Albertans, I think, would like to know what this government has in mind for them. It should not be a game of Wheel of Fortune when it comes to predicting tax rates for the tax filers in this province. [interjection]

You know, I find it curious, Madam Speaker, that the hon. Government House Leader is now making interjections from his chair after admonishing me for interjecting while he was speaking. I guess I would just ask him to exhibit the same courtesy that he asked me to exhibit when he was speaking, and I know he will.

What I was saying is that I find it curious, again, that there would be no analysis done at these marginal rates, because without that kind of analysis being done, of course, it's very hard to substantiate the claims that the Premier and others have made in regard to which taxpayers are going to receive what kind of benefit. So if the analysis hasn't been done, then those claims that are being made by members of Executive Council are very suspect, and if the analysis has been done and we're being told it hasn't been done, well, that creates a problem of an entirely different nature; doesn't it, Madam Speaker?

In fact, if I look at December 21, 1999, correspondence from the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner regarding request for review 1658, I will learn and, Madam Speaker, so will you that there are "over 300 pages of responsive records" made to an information request of a similar nature. I quote from the summary table that was provided by the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. Pages 167 to 184 and pages 185 to 202 of that package include the "February base case forecast tables with tax plan" and the "February base case forecast tables without tax plan." So, again, we're being told that the work isn't being done, but under other circumstances we're told the work is being done. We're being told the rate might be one level; then we're being told the rate might be another level. Truly confusion.

I'm beginning to understand why the government is hesitant to share this information with Albertans. They clearly don't know what direction they're heading in, and it doesn't appear that one part of the department knows what another part is doing.

In any case, it's disappointing but not surprising, based on the confusion, that the government would reject this particular request for information. But, you know, the members of this House have the opportunity to hold the government accountable. I note that the members of the Executive Council would be easily outvoted by all of the private members in this House if, in fact, private members decided that what they wanted was to share this kind of very important information with Albertans as we enter into the next round of debate on their unfair flat tax plan.

[Motion for a Return 34 lost]

MR. SAPERS: It's nice to know my record won't be affected by today's voting, Madam Speaker.

Single-rate Tax Plan

M35. Mr. Sapers moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents estimating the revenue impact and economic offset prepared by or for Alberta Treasury for the period June 1, 1999, to April 3, 2000, associated with the implementation of the government's 11 percent single-rate tax plan.

MR. SAPERS: Madam Speaker, I'm forever optimistic, and I will hold my comments on this, thinking that perhaps I argued myself out of support. So I'll simply read the request into the record and throw myself at the mercy and understanding of the government and ask them to support this request.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development on behalf of the Acting Provincial Treasurer.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the Acting Treasurer I must reject this. The silly argument that we just heard and had to bear through – in Motion 34 he specifically asked for information related to the 11 percent single plan. That's what he asked for, and that's what it was.

Now, Madam Speaker, you know, I could simply use the reason that he just simply argued his way out of this Motion 35 by insisting on talking about a plan that the Acting Treasurer has signaled is going to be introduced into the discussion on Bill 18, because he's asking once again for information on the 11 percent flat tax rate. I will read the reasons why, beyond the fact that we should probably just use the fact that he obviously doesn't know what he's really asking for, because, as he claims now, he didn't want information about the 11 percent but wanted information about the 10.5 percent. Anyway, we'll give him this information, the reasons for our rejection, putting aside that argument that he just made.

Details on the elimination of the economic offset were contained in Budget '99. Page 14 of Budget 2000 provides updated estimates of the revenue impact and economic offset of the 11 percent tax rate plan. Albertans' taxes will have been cut by $852 million in the 2001 tax year relative to 1998 as a result of the tax plan at the 11 percent, Madam Speaker. Of course, that number will change and will go up considerably with the changes that the Provincial Treasurer has signaled will happen in the debate of Bill 18. This is partially offset by $181 million in additional revenue from stronger economic growth due to the tax plan, reducing the cost to the government to about $671 million.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair would have you duly note that your motion for a return does specifically talk about 11 percent.

MR. SAPERS: What would exactly be the point of the chair making that comment?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Because, hon. member, obviously the answer has to do with what you have requested and asked for.

MR. SAPERS: I read it into the record. I'm fully familiar with what I was asking for. Thank you for that clarification, Madam Speaker.

The government can't really have it both ways. The fact is that I was anticipating a rather shallow argument from the government suggesting that the motions for returns were somehow inappropriate because the government has moved past the 11 percent flat tax and has gone to this other rate. The motions for returns stand on the Order Paper and are very straightforward. My assumption is still that the work that was done was done in support of the 11 percent rate. It was subsequent to the federal budget, of course, that the provincial government in Alberta had to scramble because the federal government had provided a really substantive tax relief to Albertans, and in order for those Albertans not to be cheated out of that tax relief, the government had to go and remake its tax policy on the fly.

As I said in my earlier comments about Motion for a Return 34, the fact is that the homework, the background work, that would have to be done would still be done. The model would still be an equivalent model. I would say that in Motion for a Return 35 the important issue isn't the number that appears between the word "government's" and the word "single." The important issue is the rest of the motion for a return.

If the government has done this work – and you would expect that they would, of course, since it's such a major part of their platform, and we all know it's become such a major part of the former Treasurer's springboard into his dreams of leadership for another party at the national level – you would expect that that homework is there and that the government would be anxious to share their best case with Albertans. But for some reason known only to the government they're not anxious to share that information or that best case with Albertans, and perhaps it's because this flat tax is more about ideology than it is about good social policy.

The government makes all kinds of claims in its budget plan regarding the economic impact and, in fact, predicts an astronomical feedback based on its tax plan. It's a feedback that has not been supported in any experience anywhere on the globe. So this is a very important issue. I'm a little surprised that the government is treating it so lightly, particularly since they seem to be desperate to have some political lifeboat to cling to after the debacle with their private health care bill and the loss of trust and the loss of face that the government has suffered as a result of the way they're handling themselves regarding Bill 11. But, you know, I'm not going to pretend to be a strategist for the provincial government. I'll let them be the authors of their own doom.

The disturbing element of all of this, Madam Speaker, is that perhaps the government hasn't done any breakdown. Maybe they haven't prepared any information about the economic impact attributable to various parts of the tax plan. Maybe they have really been driven blindly by their ideology and have decided that they don't need to do any of the number-crunching because they're not going to be responsive to any queries or questions or criticism, that they'll have the same heads-down and damn the torpedoes attitude about their tax plan as they've had about other important pieces of legislation. That would be yet another indication of the level of arrogance which now surrounds government policymaking in Alberta.

This is a very reasonable request. The documents should be a matter of public record. We cannot accept that no work has been done within or on behalf of Treasury. You know, I can only ask once again that private members not be led by the hesitancy of Executive Council to come clean with Albertans. We still have an opportunity to do the right thing and to cast our votes in such a way as we can tell the government to provide the information being requested.

Maintenance Enforcement Technology

M40. Mrs. Sloan moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of the maintenance enforcement program, MEP, business process improvement strategy on systems and procedures that are in place to protect and update investments in technology.

MRS. SLOAN: Madam Speaker, the motion arose from repetitive mention of this strategy which was contained in the MLA review of maintenance enforcement and access. I would just like to read into the record specifically recommendations 37 and 38.

Recommendation 37 read: "MEP review the way it deals with information technology to ensure that proper systems and procedures are in place to protect and update its investments in technology." The action from the government within this review report was that "this is part of the business process improvement strategy."

Recommendation 38 read: "MEP ensure that its computer system accommodate the National Data Requirements when they become applicable." The action by government read:

This is part of the business process improvement strategy. An electronic interface to improve contact with Justice Canada on federal garnishees and licences is targeted for November 1998.

Further, Madam Speaker, recommendation 11 contained within the MLA review of maintenance enforcement read: "Alberta Justice consider the implementation of 'real time' technology in the MEP computer . . . to facilitate better and more timely service to clients." Again, the action by government read that it "is included in the redevelopment of mainframe technology projected in [the next] 3 years."

We have not had nor has the public had an opportunity to see the proposed MEP business process improvement strategy, and that is the essence of the question before this House this afternoon.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In the House in the past few weeks I've been happy to accept questions from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre with respect to the maintenance enforcement program. However, today I have to reject this question. But I want to put the rejection in a context. I will certainly be happy to provide information on an ongoing basis to the member relating to the business improvement process.

The problem with the question and accepting the question is that we are undertaking a review of the business processes to plan for replacement of the system, so in the context of the recommendations that the hon. member just read into the record now, we're a little behind in the process, but we are in the process now of developing a plan for the replacement of the maintenance enforcement tracking system.

The strategy to update the technology will be outlined in a document which is to be called the maintenance enforcement program business process review phase. The document has not yet been completed, so a copy of it cannot be provided. We anticipate that the maintenance enforcement program business process review phase, which I believe is the document and the information which the member wants, will be completed by the fall of 2000 or earlier, and subject to any considerations that may arise once I've reviewed that document, I would anticipate that I will be in a position to provide a copy of it to the member at that time.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to conclude debate.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We'll take those comments under advisement.

Special Waste Management Corporation

M44. Mr. Sapers moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of budget and financial reports for the period January 1, 1999, to April 5, 2000, as required pursuant to articles 9.7.1, 9.8.1, and 9.8.2 of the July 12, 1996, agreement between the government of Alberta, the Alberta Special Waste Management Corporation, Bovar Technology Ltd., Bovar Inc., Bovar (Swan Hills) Limited Partnership, 542936 Alberta Ltd., and Chem-Security (Alberta) Ltd.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We've gone down this road of the government's relationship with Bovar and the hundreds of millions of dollars that have been put at risk, if not wasted, and the government's moves to get out of this agreement for some time. This financial reporting information is part of the contract, and I think Albertans deserve to see it as part of the government's commitment to accountability and transparency in matters regarding the fiscal operations of the province of Alberta.

MR. MAR: Madam Speaker, I move that Motion for a Return 44 be rejected. This information has been requested previously through FOIP and was not released at that time due to privacy concerns related to harm of business interests, and I'm unable to release it at this time for the same reason.

MR. SAPERS: Well, that's unfortunate. I mean, I would submit that the harm has really been to the public interest, not to the private business interests, and it would seem to me that even the access to information legislation provides for a public interest override, so where the public interest will be served, those selfish third-party interests can be set aside. If the government was truly living up to its commitment about openness, it would accept this information request.

Special Waste Treatment Centre

M45. Mr. Sapers moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of studies, reports, memoranda, correspondence, and background documents prepared by or for the Department of Environment or sent to the Department of Environment for the period January 1, 1999, to April 5, 2000, relating to a change in ownership of the Alberta Special Waste Management Treatment Centre, Swan Hills, and the importation of hazardous waste from outside of Canada.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that Motion for a Return 45 be rejected. The information being requested by the hon. member is currently under FOIP review, and I am unable to release it until the decision has been made as to whether such a disclosure is harmful to business interests.

MR. SAPERS: Madam Speaker, I understand I have an opportunity to close debate.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Yes. Do you wish to conclude debate?

MR. SAPERS: Thank you.

The rejection doesn't surprise me, but once again it disappoints me. The Alberta special waste management facility in Swan Hills has already cost Alberta taxpayers about $440 million in terms of money invested, and recently there's been controversy regarding the reversal of a long-standing understanding that there would not be an importation of hazardous wastes from other jurisdictions. Of course, the government is now trying to do that to provide the feedstock, as it were, to this plant, which has never operated in an economical way.

If I look at the annual financial statement for Bovar in their annual report for 1999, there's one section of it that makes it very specific that the corporation has the right to transfer the treatment centre to the province at any time after December 31, 1998, for a nominal amount. That typically means for a dollar, Madam Speaker. So we're sort of on a hair trigger right now. Any day we could learn that as a result of some of the work that was done by the Government House Leader in his private life before politics or by the Minister of Economic Development in his previous responsibilities, having been asked by the Premier to negotiate the deal with Bovar, as a result of all of that history, at any moment the people of Alberta could have that Swan Hills plant back in their ownership and for the grand sum of maybe a single loonie.

Because of the history, because of the controversy surrounding not just the plant itself but this latest policy initiative to bring in hazardous waste from other jurisdictions, because of the dollar value and the volume of taxpayer money involved with all of this, I would expect that the provincial government would be anxious to show us copies of these studies and memoranda and correspondence regarding the potential transfer of ownership between the province of Alberta and the owners of the Special Waste Treatment Centre.

Again, all I can do is ask members of the Assembly to work with me in holding this government accountable. Private members, we have the opportunity to do what many people are in a state of disbelief about, and that is to have this government live up to its word when it comes to being open and accountable.

[Motion for a Return 45 lost]

Forest Protection Advisory Committee

M48. Mr. Dickson moved on behalf of Mr. White that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the minutes of each meeting of the Forest Protection Advisory Committee held in the calendar years 1998 and 1999.

MR. MAR: Madam Speaker, I will accept Motion for a Return 48.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to conclude debate?

MR. DICKSON: No. That's fine.

[Motion for a Return 48 carried]

Forest Management Science Council

M49. Mr. Dickson moved on behalf of Mr. White that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the meeting summaries and council reports of all the meetings of the Alberta Forest Management Science Council held from January 23, 1998, to April 13, 2000.

MR. DICKSON: Quickly, while that same spirit of co-operation seems to be so manifest in the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I regret to say that I must move that Motion for a Return 49 be rejected. I'm rejecting the motion for a return as the specific information that is requested in the form of meeting summaries and council reports was not in fact compiled for the Forest Management Science Council. However, a final statement of account for this council was submitted to me in June of last year, and I will table that statement of account now for the member's reference. I believe it includes all of the information that has been sought by the member opposite, including recommendations made by the council. So I've done my best to fulfill this request.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on behalf of Edmonton-Calder.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We appreciate what appear to be the best efforts of the minister. We'll review that material, and hopefully that will provide the information that my colleague was looking for.

Thank you very much.

Bill 206
School (Students' Code of Conduct)
Amendment Act, 2000

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to rise here in third reading of Bill 206, the School (Students' Code of Conduct) Amendment Act. I'm going to be brief in my comments. I do want to reiterate, though, what Bill 206 will do for students and for schools and for proper conduct, hopefully, in Alberta. I'm convinced that with the amendments passed in Committee of the Whole, the code of conduct that Bill 206 proposes will be an integral part in making our schools and our school environments safe and productive places for everyone.

As I have stated before, this legislation is not intended to solve all of our school problems, but it does put in place the minimum standards of behaviour and the consequences for violating them. I see a code of conduct being incorporated into an overall strategy in conjunction with positive policies like the Safe and Caring Schools initiative and the input that was put forward by the Task Force on Children at Risk in the task force document entitled Start Young, Start Now. Those two references will help to create a safer and more respectful learning environment, and Bill 206 is very, very close to doing a number of the initiatives that those policies put forward.

Madam Speaker, a code of conduct fosters an atmosphere of mutual respect in which everyone knows what is expected of them. As I have stated before, students have the right to a stable learning environment and a safe school, but also they have the responsibility of maintaining that environment by following the rules that they have helped establish and not rules that are established for them.

Madam Speaker, I have been asked by many people and particularly school principals and some school administrators: what happens if we already have a policy on student behaviour and it's working? I will repeat publicly in this House what I have said to them in private. I can assure you and I want to assure everybody in this Assembly that if a school has a policy on conduct and behaviour which is working well in their school and that has been derived through consultation with community stakeholders, by all means they keep it. The only thing this legislation will be asking them to do is make sure that that policy is in writing, if they already do not have it in writing. The purpose of Bill 206 is not to interfere where things are working well. It is to make sure that they are working well everywhere.

Madam Speaker, in reference to the concerns of the Alberta School Boards Association – many members here may have got a copy of some of their concerns about this bill – I think the amendments presented by my colleague from Calgary-Egmont dealt with them head-on. The main amendment to the bill broadens the legislation so that the prescription of behaviours included in the code of conduct are not so rigid. This allows schools to have some leeway in determining what will work best to provide a safe environment. I agree with the Alberta School Boards Association that schools and communities need the ability to create the code of conduct that will work best for them and the unique nature of each and every person in each and every school.

As well, Madam Speaker, the Alberta School Boards Association has said that there are not enough funds available for counseling and are worried about the counseling provision in Bill 206. I understand their concerns and I empathize with their concerns, but as we know, a private member's bill cannot be a money bill. Therefore, I can't ask for funds on this. I think the Alberta School Boards Association will be pleased to know that when it comes time to act on the task force recommendation, I will be an advocate that we should recognize that more funds be provided for counseling for our students where appropriate. This is a positive initiative coming down the road and will be something for school boards to address in the long term.

So with that, Madam Speaker, I would like to end my comments today by thanking every member in this House for listening to the debate and providing excellent feedback. I truly believe that the debate on Bill 206 and the amendments to it have made the legislation stronger, and I thank all of my colleagues in the Legislature for that.

I will finish by urging all of my colleagues to support this modest yet important initiative for Alberta schools and the students in our schools. Thank you.

Bill 208
Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2000

[Debate adjourned May 9: Mr. Wickman speaking]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Yes. Madam Speaker, in the remaining four minutes that I have to conclude my 20 minutes in speaking to the bill presented by the Leader of the Official Opposition, Bill 208, which is the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2000, I want to go to the report that was prepared by the Member for Lacombe-Stettler on December 19, 1998, called Gaming in Review. I just want to read one portion here that is boxed in. It's acknowledged as being said by the Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

We must have the political will to put in place good public policy, stringent regulatory controls and appropriate law enforcement measures – above strictly revenue generating considerations!

Now, those are some words of wisdom we should all heed.

We talk in terms of the revenue-generating considerations. That of course is the cash cow, the amounts of money that the machines and the other various forms of gambling spit out in this province. But that member, possibly the only member on the government side – at least, the others haven't come out publicly stating so – recognizes, as we do in the Liberal opposition, that there has to be political courage to put in place the proper policy controls and enforcement measures to ensure that gambling does not become an extremely negative influence on the community, which it does to a very, very large extent already.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Thus we have Bill 208, which has been brought forward because basically this caucus is saying that we are in agreement with the recommendations that are in the report entitled Gaming in Review, done by the Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Again, to kind of just sum up those particular recommendations, the main recommendations. We would see it proposing the establishment of a gaming secretariat to advise the minister on gaming policies. It would require that all gaming supplies purchased by the gaming commission be purchased by public tender. It would create an all-party standing committee on gaming to review the gaming act on a regular basis, to report on the separation of the administrative and enforcement functions of the commission, to review and report on funding police with lottery money to prevent and fight organized crime, to review and report on funding gambling addiction treatment with a legislated proportion of gambling revenues; in other words, some type of percentage, whatever, an allocation recognizing the total amounts of dollars that are being generated, which is now close to a billion dollars. Also, the requirement of municipal approval for new gaming operations or an expansion of existing gaming operations.

That last one, as I had said earlier in my comments, is recognition of the decision-making rights that municipalities have in matters that affect their community. They do have that right, which is bestowed upon them by the electors that choose to put them in place. At times the provincial government may regard itself as the mother government to the municipalities and at times feel that they know what's best for them, but the municipalities, by and large, know what's best for their particular community.

On that note, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I don't know really what to say. I think it's very interesting when the opposition takes a report, a government report, and puts it into a bill. I don't know whether that's a form of flattery. I suppose it is. It's a hard one to explain.

I do, for the sake of the record, want to clarify a few things. This report was done and submitted in December of 1998, which the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has indicated. This report was threefold. One section was certainly relevant to the work of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General at the time, and it looked at illegal gaming and criminal activity. The other part had to do with the distribution of lottery funds, and that went to the Minister of Community Development. The first part, that looked at the Ontario gaming model, went to the minister at that time responsible for gaming.

I spent close to a week in Ontario and met with several individuals that have spent a great deal of time on gaming and gaming issues. I think one of the things that I noted with interest and that I felt needed to be studied and looked at in Alberta was what Ontario had done as far as regulatory functions, separate from operating and separate from policy-making. They basically have split out in their organization chart a ministry that looks after the operation and policy, which is very different than the ministry that looks after the regulation. I heard some very, very good comments, not only from key stakeholders in the industry in Ontario but also from administration. I did meet with the two ministers responsible, and they said that it was working very, very well.

Part of Bill 208, as sponsored by the Leader of the Official Opposition, talks about several of the things that I did make reference to in my report. One was a gaming secretariat. A gaming secretariat is also utilized in Ontario and is responsible for providing leadership and looking at policy development and direction for implementing the government's gaming initiatives. They coordinate several aspects to do with the gaming operation through the Ontario Lottery Corporation and the Ontario Casino Corporation. They assess the ongoing performance of gaming activities. As well, I found one thing interesting. They have a team of individuals that work with the secretariat that basically was a liaison with communities.

Ontario is different in gaming because they have the three large casinos, that basically fall under the Ontario Lottery Corporation. One is at Niagara Falls, which is a beautiful casino overlooking the falls, one is at Windsor, and the other is in Orillia, Ontario. The requests for proposal are put out for managing these casinos. Actually, for two out of the three it is casino companies out of Las Vegas that look after the management of it. Over the last couple of years the Ontario government has looked at our model, the charity model, and decided to look at this in a number of communities. Now, if my memory serves me correctly, they sent out invitations to 44 communities in Ontario to see if they'd be interested in a community charitable model type of casino. Of the 44, only 18 communities were receptive to having that type of casino in their midst.

Getting back to this liaison group that works with the Ontario Gaming Secretariat, their job was to go out and meet with municipal officials, meet with the community at large to see if in fact this would work. I thought that was an interesting approach. But I have to say that since the time of this report, the Alberta government and the Ministry of Gaming have put in place the Gaming Research Institute. Now, I think we will have to wait and see exactly what comes forth from that institute. There is, I think, $1.5 million going to the operational side of the institute. There are a number of very respected individuals that will be serving on the gaming institute, and I think we will wait and see what the results are.

One thing I found very, very interesting – and basically it was the thrust of my trip – was the illegal gaming and the criminal activity. I do have to say that I was very, very impressed with what has happened in Ontario. Ontario is served by a provincial police force, the Ontario Provincial Police. In 1996 they only had in Ontario two full-time illegal-gaming enforcement units. Since then they have put in place the Ontario illegal-gaming enforcement unit, with its own location, its own members, and its own budget. They work with the Ontario minister of justice, and their budget is $4.7 million. These gentlemen – at the time I was there, they were all male officers – have spent a great deal of time and study to become very, very knowledgeable about illegal gaming and criminal activities. They're very knowledgeable on illegal video lottery terminals, common gaming houses and social clubs, bookmaking, pyramid schemes, slot fraud, Internet gaming, and of course the overall regulation and surveillance that goes into casinos.

The gentleman that heads this unit is a detective inspector by the name of Larry Moodie. Actually, a number of law enforcement agencies across Canada and the U.S. do send their people to Ontario – their office is in Barrie, Ontario – where Detective Inspector Larry Moodie and his admin staff put on training courses for other officers. They detailed for me several examples of illegal gaming machines and how they're moved about the province, how they track them down, what they confiscate, how it ends up after it goes to court. They talked about a number of illegal gaming houses and poker clubs that basically they have had to enter and close down and what happened as a result of some of these raids. So it was very, very interesting.

One thing that I should tell you about I found fascinating. At the casino at Niagara Falls there was a young slot technician that had worked there for a couple of years, and he had to maintain the machines. One day he announced to the casino manager that he wanted to turn himself in because he had taken $185,000 out of the coin-in, coin-out machines. The casino management and the law enforcement and the police that are in the casinos there were absolutely taken aback. To this day they cannot figure out how he did it. They do know he has sold his technique worldwide, but he turned himself in. One of the things that concerned these gentlemen greatly was that with all the new technology, with all the new product line that's available, this could well be the beginning of a new wave of sophisticated crime, one that's very hard to detect, because today they are still trying to figure out how this young fellow did it.

Globally another thing that they're working on – and they do have courses in this as well – is Internet gaming. They believe that global on-line gaming will be a $7 billion industry within the next two years. Here again, it is very, very difficult to track down in some areas what is going on that's legal, what is going on that's illegal, and they have one unit that works exclusively in that end.

Along with this report, I spent some time with a very, very fine gentleman from Alberta by the name of Sergeant Bob MacDonald, who basically works for K Division, RCMP. Sergeant Bob MacDonald, as far as law enforcement goes, is probably the most knowledgeable individual in this province. In fact, he spends considerable time yearly with Detective Inspector Larry Moodie, and they correspond and dialogue back and forth. Sergeant Bob MacDonald's position is with the RCMP, and about one-fifth of his position is dedicated to criminal activity related to gaming. Under the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, special operations, these are the people that enforce the regulations in Alberta. These are good people. They're multitalented.

I guess the one problem I have is that the responsibilities of these inspectors go far beyond gaming issues. They also go to liquor, tobacco, and fuel. They are good at what they do, but with the changes in technology and the criminals becoming much more sophisticated, both Sergeant Bob MacDonald and I are very, very worried. We hope that Alberta is not an accident looking for a place to happen. We would think it would be better, certainly with the increase we've seen over the last few years in gaming and casinos, if some of these inspectors were dedicated to the one function, which has to do with gaming, and were trained accordingly.

The third thing that I found interesting. Though I know that certainly AADAC is doing an excellent, excellent job and are contracting out to other organizations and are provided yearly with the required amount of money they ask for, one thing that Ontario does is tie their disbursement for addiction programs to the dollars generated, the overall revenue. So if the revenues go up, the dollars allocated to prevention and addiction also go up, because their theory is that if there are more dollars in revenue, obviously it means that more people are gambling, and more than likely there are more people with problems. So I thought that was interesting.

As well, as we move ahead in the next few years and probably see an expansion of gaming in Alberta, it is important that we look at another fact. It's mandatory in Ontario to make the casinos and the stakeholders, those involved in providing gaming and gaming product, take some responsibility for prevention and for prevention training courses and intervention training courses for staff. That's just a point to ponder.

Part of my recommendations, as a couple of members have suggested – I am not saying that we need to scrap everything in Alberta and look again. This report, which basically was an internal report, was meant to just point out some of the things that experts in some of these areas in other provinces were telling me. I don't think we need to reinvent the wheel to look at some areas. I think Alberta has been a leader in gaming. We were the first to utilize a gaming secretariat two or three years ago and the first to distribute lottery funds directly to communities and allow municipal taxpayers a say on VLTs. Because of what happened in Alberta with the municipality involvement, with public participation on VLTs, the province of Ontario does not have VLTs.

I would like to see us remain at the forefront. Something else has been said: each and every jurisdiction in Canada has gambling. Gambling, gaming, and betting are not going to go away. We have to continue as a province to ensure that good policy is put in place, that we respect those that possibly end up having a problem because of their involvement. We have to look at the industry's operation and management. I think that we need in this province to work with other jurisdictions so that we can learn and they, too, can learn from us as to what works and doesn't work.

I would like to see Alberta lead the way in this and try to have some type of national roundtable of various jurisdictions across Canada where they in fact could learn from each other. I know that a lot of provinces do talk back and forth. I know that a lot of them would like to just talk about small things that work, things that don't work, where they're going to, how they're going to deal with the expansion of gaming, the expansion of technology, and the expansion of computerization.

Also, the one thing I would like to see us look very seriously at is more of the law enforcement in Alberta having the knowledge and expertise to deal with the criminal side of operations. Criminals don't care what kind of casino it is. They just know it's a casino. There are a lot of things that can take place in that environment, and I think we need a police presence in our casinos as they get bigger.

One thing I have to say is that a great deal of the bill before this House is a result of this report that I did. One thing I didn't say, and I don't want to leave people with the impression that I did. It was not a recommendation of mine for a standing committee on gaming that would involve the entire Assembly. That is obviously a direction from the Leader of the Opposition and the caucus.

I am proud of this report. This report to date has gone out to over 200 individuals and jurisdictions all over Canada and North America. I've had a great deal of feedback from it. As a direct result of my time in Ontario, I do periodically hear from some of the people that I met in Ontario, and we do compare notes.

Anyway, I just wanted to clarify some of those things. I thank you for your indulgence.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd start off by saying that I think the Member for Lacombe-Stettler should indeed take it as a compliment that the work she had done and the report she had done now is reflected, at least in part, and was clearly a good part of the genesis of Bill 208, the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, and I salute the work she's done on that.

She and I haven't always been of one mind on this. I remember that shortly after being elected, it seems to me perhaps in 1994, there were a series of hearings that were taking place. It was in the early years, anyway, of my time here, in '94-95, and there was a set of hearings in which the Member for Lacombe-Stettler was involved. I remember they announced where they were going to sit and how long, and I remember they were coming to Calgary. I don't remember precisely, but it was for a very short time, and my office was hearing from a lot of people who wanted to make representations. So I remember that what I had done, along with my colleagues from Calgary-West and Calgary-North West, was rented a room at Fort Calgary and had invited people who had not been able to make submissions, Mr. Speaker, to be able to book a time with the government-sponsored committee, whatever it was called at the time, that there were three Liberal opposition MLAs who were interested in hearing their comments.

A good part of our motivation was in hoping that the government would then extend the number of days of hearing time in Calgary. I'm delighted to report that by the time that people finally came to see us, we must have spent I think one day and I'll bet we met with over 20 different organizations that had come forward with concerns. By the time they came to meet with myself and my then two colleagues, I think the government had then formally committed to having some additional days of hearings in Calgary, so I suppose our little exercise achieved what I had hoped it would.

I think certainly it's been since at least that time that the Member for Lacombe-Stettler has been involved in the issue and has acquired a kind of expertise that I'd expect nobody in the Assembly could come close to matching. In fact, I'd start off by quoting a comment that appears in the report entitled Gaming in Review from December 1998. The quote appears on page 39, and it is this:

We must have the political will to put in place good public policy, stringent regulatory controls and appropriate law enforcement measures – above strictly revenue generating considerations!

That was a quote from the Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

I think I agree with that. I am certainly no gaming expert. In fact, I have learned more about gaming and gambling in this province since I became an MLA in 1992 than I ever expected to. I was one of those Albertans who always figured that I work too darn hard for my money to enjoy gambling very much. Well, you know, I have relatives who find this is the greatest form of entertainment, and I respect that everybody is entitled to find their entertainment where they will.

I guess what has staggered me in my time as an MLA is the growth of this industry. I mean, I still have difficulty understanding it. I think it's over $700 million we see in the budget coming in every year for the last couple of years.

MR. STRANG: You've got to go to Vegas.

MR. DICKSON: Well, you know, Vegas is not my favourite place to visit, although I understand lots of my constituents probably enjoy going there. It's too hot to play tennis, so that wouldn't be my idea of a vacation.

Mr. Speaker, the thing that I find so staggering is the dollars involved. My experience on this, frankly, has been talking to community groups who are interested in the funding arrangements and the impact it has on what efforts they make to try and raise funds, whether it's for a figure skating club or some kind of an organization in Calgary, and also looking at it from the point of view of people who have had gambling problems.

My constituency office, Mr. Speaker – you may not know this – is in the same building as AADAC. One of the things that's been also a real education for me – people are often in for some of the various excellent programs provided by AADAC, and they may take the time to stop in to see the local MLA or to register a concern. So through that kind of chance encounter I think I've been able to understand dimensions of the problem, the gaming problem, at least on a very local basis, far beyond what I would have anticipated before I first got elected as an MLA.

Anyway, my point is that, as the Member for Lacombe-Stettler and the Leader of the Opposition and my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford said, gaming and gambling have become just a huge component in terms of this province, in terms of the way people live. This has a huge impact on sort of the cultural, social, recreational life. It certainly has a big impact on the provincial treasury.

I remember in 1994 running for the leadership of the provincial Liberal Party and going around with Adam Germain, who was an MLA for Fort McMurray. He had a great line that he used repeatedly. I don't remember all of it, but it was talking about where this government had taken us. It was something like: a liquor store on every corner; a VLT machine on every corner. He went through this litany of things, and you know, what struck me at the time – I mean, he was always, as you'll recall, Mr. Speaker, one of the most entertaining speakers that we've heard in the Assembly. But there was such an element of truth to that, and we've watched this proliferation of gaming opportunities in our communities. They come right into the neighbourhood pub, and they seem to be everywhere.

When the provincial government talked about where we were going to cap the number of VLT machines, they set what seemed to be an awfully high limit. Then we saw some plateauing of VLT machines and then a move into slot machines. All of this I think happened without what one might say would be a really strong public mandate. I think, from the VLT referendum we saw just a couple of years ago, it's an issue that has engaged Albertans like few other things we've dealt with in the Assembly.

In any event, my inclination is to support Bill 208. I think it goes some places where we have to go. I've certainly not had the benefit of studying in any detail what's happened in Ontario and to understand the full dimension of the problems here, but there are a couple of things I look for. One is some independence of governance of gaming from the government of the day, the opportunity to build some expertise. That's why I support section 5 and the notion of creating an Alberta gaming secretariat.

I think there's some real value – and indeed we've seen that with AADAC, for example. Part of AADAC's strength is that at least there's some degree of independence, maybe not a lot, from government, but there's an opportunity to develop some tremendous expertise in terms of problems in that particular area.

I think the notion of setting up a gaming secretariat to do the things identified in the proposed section 42.01(2), including advising “the Minister on matters relating to gaming” and “to foster awareness and to encourage public discussion on matters relating to” gaming addiction, organized crime and gaming, effects of gaming on children and families – I mean, those are all important issues, things that have to be properly addressed. As I look at it, I wish that the gaming secretariat were reporting to the Legislative Assembly and not just to a minister, because I think that's too limiting. I'm always nervous about appointing a government member to one of these things. I'm not persuaded that there are advantages to that in every case.

Here the suggestion is that you'd have an opposition member as well as a government member. Reasonable men and women may disagree on that, but I think the point is clearly that you would have representation from the general public and from other people who would have expertise in the area. I think that's particularly positive. With the notion of the secretariat there's a requirement in terms of the minimum number of times it must meet, and I think that's very positive.

The one matter that I know the Member for Lacombe-Stettler said that she had not recommended – and she was very clear on that – would be the proposed section 6, the standing committee on gaming. But it seems to me that that committee would provide for a degree of oversight. It would involve the Legislative Assembly in an appropriate way in terms of what's going on, how those processes are being handled and managed, and I think that would be a very positive thing.

If you go through the functions of the standing committee, one of the most important ones is holding public hearings, public meetings. Why is that important? Well, I just suggest that we all go back, in our not so distant memories, to the VLT referendum. I remember going to numerous functions in Calgary and hearing people like Jim Gray and some of the people who provide leadership around that. I remember Mr. Gray one time speaking to a group called the Knights of the Round Table in Calgary. It's a group of business-people, retired judges, newspaper editors, thoughtful people who come together a couple of times a month to talk about issues of public concern. Mr. Gray came and made a presentation, and I remember that one of the themes of his presentation was that, you know, Albertans didn't really vote for this.

I mean, this huge expansion of gaming in this province was never something that was the product of widespread input and consultation. It's interesting that a government that has spent so long consulting on so many other things – you know, there was no consultation when they rolled out the VLT machines in the first place, and then we saw this enormous expansion of VLT machines. That really was, you might view it, an executive decision. One would think that if we were going to do something that would have such a dramatic impact on the fabric of our families and our communities, you'd want to ensure a broader kind of consultation before you went down that road.

Now, Mr. Speaker, next to the Member for Lacombe-Stettler, you're probably the next best thing to an expert in this Assembly in terms of gaming. You've got a long and detailed history in terms of dealing with the very subject matter of this bill. You know, I regret that we lose your voice when we're dealing with this bill, because I expect that you'd have a lot of very important experiences to share with us and perspective and insight. It's one of those times that because you're in the chair and not able to participate in the debate, we regret that. We regret not having that expertise. In the meantime what we're going to have to do is that those of us who are not so knowledgeable are going to have to speak to this bill and react from our own experiences and our own notions and our own views of this.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to hear any compelling argument why we would be better off not to have an Alberta gaming secretariat. If there are those reasons, I hope somebody will tell me, and I think we can deal with those. There seem to be the two key elements: one, having the gaming secretariat, and then the second one, having the standing committee on gaming. I think the secretariat is the key part.

Mr. Speaker, I haven't discussed this with the Minister of Gaming – and he may have some very different views on it – but it seems to me that sometimes when you have a department that has some financial imperative, has some government sorts of imperative, they end up being too narrowly focused, so what happens is there isn't the kind of independence sometimes required to view some of these serious problems. I know we have here in the Assembly – I'm glad, and I hope we're going to see participation in the debate – the Legislature's one voice and member on AADAC. I know that colleague is here in the Assembly and probably could tell us a lot in terms of some of the issues that AADAC deals with in terms of problem gambling. Some of those people I talked about I see come into my office while they're waiting for some of the programs that AADAC offers at 11th Street and 11th Avenue in Calgary.

I think it's sometimes good to set up a degree of healthy tension between perhaps an organization such as an Alberta gaming secretariat and a provincial government and a provincial minister. I think it's good for ministers to be challenged, and I don't mean in a hostile way by a crowd on the street outside the minister's office. I mean by thoughtful people who spend time to develop expertise in an area and who then go to a minister who has the legislative responsibility, the ministerial responsibility and perhaps sort of challenge that minister to do some things that aren't being adequately addressed. The opposition tries as best we can for a few weeks in March when we're dealing with the provincial government budget. We're never sure whether the ministers take any of the advice they get from the opposition, but you know, we make that effort.

There are lots of people who aren't represented in this Assembly who have important things to say about gaming, and I don't think those voices routinely get to be heard. I think if you had a secretariat, the secretariat may end up challenging the Minister of Gaming to do better. It may be able to point out things where the government is letting the people of this province down. To me that would be a very worthwhile sort of experience.

The minister still ultimately controls the purse. The report comes to the minister and recommendations. The notion I like is that with the recommendations that come to the minister, the minister is required to put the recommendations before the Legislative Assembly, so you can see how this kind of constructive tension would be created. You would have a gaming secretariat that would have a modest degree of independence from the government of the day and would be able to formulate recommendations after broad-based public consultation. I mean, it's not dissimilar to the way AADAC works now. What would happen then is that those recommendations would come forward and be shared with the minister. As a courtesy the minister would see them first, but within three days a copy of those recommendations then would come before the Legislative Assembly, so it becomes a public document.

I want to thank the Leader of the Official Opposition for having the wisdom to anticipate that sometimes the Legislature doesn't sit in Alberta – actually that's more often the norm – and in that case the report then would have to be made public. That just makes excellent sense to me, that the report is not going to be buried away and is not something the minister would be able sit on for weeks or months, arguing that it still required some fine-tuning or whatever. The report is out there, and Albertans can read it and can deal with it.

Now, the other point I think I wanted to make – well, I'll have to make it at the committee stage. Hopefully the bill will get that far.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today to speak to Bill 208, the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, proposed by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. This bill seeks to revamp our existing procedures that relate to the administration of the gaming industry. It proposes to do that by forming a gaming secretariat and an all-party committee on gaming.

I'm not supporting this bill, Mr. Speaker, because it simply adds more layers and is redundant to our existing regulatory system of gaming. Our government has already laid down a framework for administering gaming in this province. That framework is one that includes extensive research, fair and impartial administration, and treatment of problem gambling.

As chair of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, I have some direct experience with an important function of the regulatory framework. I've had the opportunity to meet and work with outstanding experts and people who are part of an even greater organization. Each year AADAC handles more than 30,000 treatment admissions and 70,000 shelter admissions. In addition, more than 600,000 brochures and pamphlets are distributed to Albertans. I believe public information is one of the most important functions of AADAC. It is relevant to Bill 208 because public information is part of the mandate of the proposed gaming secretariat. I would suggest that AADAC is currently doing a commendable job in that regard, and problem gambling has certainly been part of those efforts.

It was 1994 when problem gambling was added to AADAC's mandate. Gambling has become a priority for the organization. A major part of that mandate and one that is also reflected in Bill 208 is the function of research. In 1998 AADAC completed a report on adult gambling and problem gambling in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, the findings of the report offer some interesting insights into gambling in Alberta. I'd like to point out that gambling has been in relative decline in recent years. The report indicates that this may be due to the awareness there is in our society about the problems related to gambling. There's also an indication that those experiencing gambling addiction often have exposure to gambling early in life. That means that preventing gambling addiction begins with the parents. AADAC endeavours to reach out to those parents and make them aware of issues relating to gambling.

AADAC has adopted a holistic approach to problem gambling. By recognizing that gambling problems often go hand in hand with drugs such as alcohol, AADAC is better able to treat the problem.

AADAC's research initiatives also help us to determine exactly what the extent of problem gambling is in Alberta. The 1998 study shows us that of the people who gamble in the province, 2 percent are pathological gamblers, the most severe category of gambling addiction. The good news is that between 1994 and 1998 there was an overall decrease in the number of problem and pathological gamblers in Alberta. While there is a decrease in problem gambling in the province, Albertans still love gaming. Nearly 83 percent of Albertans enjoy gambling activities of some kind, whether that is going to a fully licensed casino, the horse tracks in Edmonton or Calgary, or the bingo halls that are all over this province. However, in 1998 there were 23,000 fewer problem gamblers in the province than there were in 1994.

Mr. Speaker, gambling addiction can be devastating to those problem gamblers and their families. We all know that. But what we have found at AADAC is that problem gambling is treatable and it is preventable, given timely information and interventions. Our research indicates that when people are made aware of the warning signs, they are able to take control of their lives and avoid the pitfalls of problem gambling.

Mr. Speaker, AADAC is doing an exemplary job, I believe, of spreading awareness about the risks of gambling and researching the causes and effects. That's why I feel that Bill 208 should be defeated in this House. Organizations such as AADAC already meet the objectives put forward in Bill 208.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:50

MRS. SLOAN: Just a few brief comments this afternoon on Bill 208, Mr. Speaker. I think this bill's intentions are sound, and they certainly offer a contribution to taking this province to the next step, as was mentioned by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

I particularly like the Alberta gaming secretariat. We have had in the province in the past quite a number of reviews undertaken on critical issues. Just in a few short minutes I'd identify the MLA review on WCB, and we've had an MLA review on maintenance enforcement, child welfare, and children at risk. It would seem to me that in an area like gambling there needs to be an ongoing mechanism to monitor the perhaps positive and negative effects of such activity.

Under the purpose of the secretariat there are specifically highlighted a number of areas including the effects of gaming on children and families. We're in the process of reviewing our child welfare caseload at the moment. We have no idea of how many children in that caseload are there in part or wholly because of the fact that their parents are gamblers and have not been able to provide the basic necessities of life. It's these types of things, Mr. Speaker, that I think would be worth while pursuing.

We also do not have statistical information before us that talks about the number of suicides that arise in the province because of gambling addictions, yet in my own professional and personal circle I know of a provincial bureaucrat who committed suicide over gambling, and this year right here in the city of Edmonton within our Edmonton minor hockey association we lost a member who also committed suicide over gambling debts. So I have had at least two exposures to that, and I think the problem is much more systemic than those two examples suggest. But if you look at the statistics relative to deaths that are compiled by the Alberta Centre for Injury Control and Research, at least last year's didn't categorize gambling as a cause of death, and I think there should be perhaps a subcategory created that identifies that. If we don't start to do those things, Mr. Speaker, we're not really going to get to the root of the problem.

I respect the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler's comments relative to crime. I think that is an area where we've seen the province set up a whole strategic task force and unit to deal with Hell's Angels. We know Hell's Angels is linked to illegal gambling, gaming activities. But in a widespread context, why not have something like this secretariat that can monitor, anticipate, and plan for the development of criminal activity in this area?

I'm pleased this afternoon to support Bill 208, and I would anticipate there will be many other members of the Assembly that would do the same. I think there have been some reservations named about the standing committee, and certainly I see within the recommendations and functions of that committee some very worthwhile requirements. As an example, "the introduction of a policy requiring a proportion of revenues from the Commission . . . be used to support police services in preventing and fighting organized crime," and "the economic, social, regulatory, enforcement and addictive implications of Internet gaming." Internet gambling crime is predicted to increase substantially. Why not get ahead of that, Mr. Speaker, on a policy and planning standpoint? Why not have a committee that would be able to do that on a consecutive basis without being subject to turnover such as the roving committees that have been struck in the last little while to deal with other issues?

With those comments, I'm pleased to take my seat and again to voice my support for Bill 208.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung to close the debate.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to all of the Members of the Legislative Assembly who have spoken about this bill. I thank government members and members of the opposition who have added their perspective and their interest on this issue. I particularly appreciated the remarks by the Member for Lacombe-Stettler, whose work of course led to the excellent gaming review report on which Bill 208 has been based.

I think we know full well that this is an issue that needs to be addressed in Alberta, and some of the recommendations that are key to this legislation that were contained in the Member for Lacombe-Stettler's report are very important issues that need to be addressed. I know several of the members have said that they feel that what is being suggested in this bill is already covered by AADAC. As someone who has been a very strong supporter of AADAC's work in our province, I wish that were the case. In fact, I think AADAC is having difficulty struggling with alcohol and drug abuse issues, let alone gambling addictions, which of course take on the very same characteristics of any addiction.

This is not just a bill about addressing the issues of addiction, Mr. Speaker. This bill is also about issues of crime involved in gaming, of municipalities who see gaming establishments within their boundaries who have attempted to control those and have no mechanism by which that can happen. This bill answers some of those concerns. I also think it's important to say, particularly in closing the debate, that I certainly hope members of the government, as well as others, will carefully consider supporting this legislation.

It's certainly put forward on the basis of us as legislators collectively building on the need to address the issues of gaming that have become so prevalent in Alberta as well as in other provinces. The gaming secretariat, of course, is an opportunity to rise above any kind of partisan political debate and build a framework where legislators can start to enter into this discussion in order that we can provide the kind of control and the kind of leadership that I think Albertans expect from this Legislature.

By pulling together MLAs, one from the government and one from the Official Opposition, members of the general public, a representative of the RCMP, of the Alberta Gaming Research Institute, of AADAC, and of the Child and Family Services Secretariat, we would begin to address some of the very complex problems that arise out of gaming, which go far beyond just addiction, and certainly touch on, as the Member for Edmonton-Riverview so eloquently has stated and in fact has worked on, the issues affecting children and families. The opportunity for reviewing legislation through a filter of its impact on children and the things that we think are very important in terms of where we head in the future as a province are embodied within this suggested legislation.

5:00

Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Lacombe-Stettler indicated, the next frontier in gambling in this province is clearly going to be that on the Internet. Gambling on-line is a huge issue, and I think we need to come together as legislators to find a solution to that. Bill 208 is an opportunity for us to work together to do that.

There is no question, Mr. Speaker, that some form of legislative framework is needed to address this issue within our province. I'm hoping that members of the government will exercise their belief in finding a better solution and support the legislation. If the legislation comes forward in a different form or a different auspice but embodies these recommendations from the Member for Lacombe-Stettler's report, we will certainly work to support that.

I do think it's an issue that needs to be addressed, and I look forward to hearing how members feel about it.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:16 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 10, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/05/10

[The Speaker in the chair]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 11 Health Care Protection Act

Mr. Klapstein moved that pursuant to Standing Order 47 the previous question be now put.

[Adjourned debate May 9: Mr. Melchin]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is indeed a black day not only for Albertans and our precious health care system but also for democracy. The debate on Bill 11 has been controversial, emotional and continues to generate more and more opposition as not only Albertans but also Canadians become aware of it's contents.

This bill has been described by the Premier both as a groundbreaking bill in the delivery of health care which will alleviate Albertans' pain and suffering and also as a minor change that will have no impact on wait lists and Albertans' pain and suffering. Besides these contrary messages the Premier and various government members have accused the Official Opposition, unions, health care professionals, religious leaders, scholars, economists, and even their own constituents of being malicious, fraudulent, despicable, un-Albertan, whiners, left-wing nuts and of spreading misinformation and not capable of understanding the intent and the facts of Bill 11.

All these insults have been hurled at Albertans for daring to question the motives of a government that cannot answer the simple question: why? For six months we have been waiting for the answer to that question. Why do this Premier and his government members insist on bringing in a bill which sets the parameters for the introduction of private, for-profit health care in this province?

It is important for the Premier and his members to understand that the Official Opposition's and Albertans' objections are not based on speculation but on a solid understanding of what Bill 11 says and allows. Our objections are not based on conjecture but on solid evidence from around the world that two-tiered health care is more costly, less efficient, and contributes to poor patient outcomes.

As doctor Walley Temple, a renowned oncologist, stated:

Why would we want to experiment with another model, known to be expensive, unreliable, and a bigger gas guzzler?

Why would we want to replicate a problematic system, where there will be no turning back, and where the results will be measured in people's lives?

These are some of the whys this government can't or won't explain, nor could their $3 million advertising campaign buy the support of Albertans.

What's wrong with the bill? On behalf of the tens of thousands of Albertans who have written, faxed, phoned, e-mailed, signed petitions, and rallied, I will attempt one more time to explain some of the main concerns that have been expressed by Albertans from across this province.

First, I want to make it crystal clear that this government is ignoring the key recommendations of its own blue-ribbon panel on Bill 37, which was the predecessor to this bill. These recommendations said that the distinction between a hospital and a nonhospital procedure should be based on a recovery time of 12 hours and that any procedure requiring more than a 12-hour stay should be performed in a hospital not a stand-alone surgical facility, which is what this bill provides for.

In addition, the blue-ribbon panel said that should overnight surgeries be permitted in a surgical facility, that facility would in fact be a hospital. This panel further recommended that there was no need for stand-alone legislation, but what was needed were changes to the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act, the Hospitals Act, and the Medical Profession Act and that this was a response to overtures made by HRG to initiate overnight stays in its facility.

In drafting Bill 11, this government has in fact provided legislation which is unlike any other in Canada. It specifically allows for the provision of overnight stays in surgical facilities, otherwise known as private hospitals, the selling of enhanced services, the establishment of 17 different conflict of interest guidelines, and the guarantee of a profit to these private clinics. By now we all know that surgical facilities is just a code word used by this government to try to mask what they really are: private, for-profit hospitals.

Let me give you an example for those who are saying that it's not true, an example of how enhanced services delivered in these private, for-profit hospitals will extend their product lines, increase prices, and have the guaranteed profit. First, enhanced services are not uninsured services as we know them but are add-ons to medically necessary services. Up to now, when we have had to go to a doctor, we have never had to worry about what would be sold to us. Either it was medically necessary, so we needed it, or it was not. Now when Dr. X suggests that procedure Y is needed, we have to wonder: do we need it, or is it because of the profit motivation?

Recently we saw the government approve soft lenses for cataract surgeries. What the government is probably unaware of is that the next generation of enhanced services in the provision of cataract surgeries is going to be the offering of lenses that have a filter. These lenses are about $600 an eye, and those are out-of-pocket costs.

Remember, for-profit facilities means that the emphasis needs to be on extending product lines and increasing prices. Furthermore, the government has provided a guaranteed 12 percent profit as part of the administration fee to provide this enhanced service. Well, that's not a bad deal for the private sector, but I don't think and I know Albertans won't think it's a good deal for them.

There is another fact that hasn't received much discussion, and that is the fact that this bill sets up different standards of oversight for different types of surgical procedures. There are – and all the government members can check their bill – insured surgical services, uninsured inpatient surgical services, enhanced surgical services, and uninsured day surgical services. Now, if the government were truly sincere in its attempt to regulate surgical services being provided by the private sector, can someone tell me why all surgical services would not be treated in the same way?

The most frightening statement that the Premier and government members make is that there are no regulations currently in place regarding these surgical facilities. This statement ignores the fact that the Hospitals Act, the Regional Health Authorities Act, the Medical Profession Act have provisions to regulate and control these facilities. In fact I will read once more the provision in the Alberta Hospitals Act, section 62(a), that states – and you can all check that one as well – that the minister has the ability to make regulations relative to contracts with private hospitals. Can't be any clearer. And the College of Physicians and Surgeons has a document outlining the standards for nonhospital surgical facilities. In case the government members have not seen it, this is what it is: College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta Standards for Non-hospital Surgical Facilities. So to say that there are no standards in place and regulations in place is misleading.

So why do we need this bill? That is still a question that has not been answered. Why do we need a bill that promotes private, for-profit health care in this province, and what lies ahead for us?

For those of us who are pledged to fight for the protection, maintenance, and enhancement of our public health care system, Bill 11 signals the beginning of the fight. It is the call to arms to protect, again to quote Dr. Temple: "the sacred trust between the patient and physician. A trust that not only provides comfort but also healing." Albertans will remember the consultations on Bill 11. They will remember the information that is provided. But, more importantly, I believe what they will remember is the callous turning of this government's back on its citizens' concerns, and that is what will rest in people's minds.

The government has tried to calm troubled Albertans by saying that nothing major will happen when this bill becomes law. Well, those warm words are cold comfort to the people of Alberta who know this government's track record all too well. Give them an inch, and they will take a mile. With this bill in place if ever this government gets another mandate, the floodgates will be open to privatized, for-profit hospitals and the inevitable and irreversible decline of our public health care system. That is something Albertans can see on the horizon. That is what they don't trust, and that is what they will not tolerate.

As Drs. Woolhandler and Himmelstein have said:

Our main objection to investor-owned care is not that it wastes taxpayers' money, nor even that it causes modest decrements in quality. The most serious problem with such care is that it embodies a new value system that severs the communal roots and samaritan traditions of hospitals, makes doctors and nurses the instruments of investors, and views patients as commodities.

In fact, this government has often said that patients are consumers, that health care is a commodity.

In nonprofit settings, avarice vies with beneficence for the soul of medicine; investor ownership marks the triumph of greed. A fiscal conundrum constrains altruism on the part of not-for-profit hospitals. No money, no mission. With for-profit hospitals, the money is the mission; form follows profit.

Now, one of the reasons the government insists we need to have this option is in order to ensure that our health care costs are kept under control. In fact, we have seen that this is not the case and that the myth that has been created by this government that health care costs are out of control is easily disputed. Per capita health care costs in the last seven years had increased only $50 before the present provincial government cuts.

In Canada the costs haven't changed in 20 years and are only 8.9% of gross national product . . . The costs of our health care is $2500 per person and it provides us with 100% coverage. In Alberta we spend less than 8 other provinces and our hospital costs per capita are still the 7th lowest and 15% less than in 1992.

So the question is: where are the runaway costs?

Contrast this to the wealthiest nation in the world, the United States, where 2/3 of the population is insured but still pays 20% of the bill and 1/3 is undercovered or has no coverage at all. The US government spends $4000 per person to support this system and each American pays an additional $5400 out of his or her own pocket. Is this the system we want to adopt?

All peer-reviewed studies show that non-profit care is less expensive than for-profit care. The belief that for-profit minimizes cost and maximizes care is just not true. American economists calculate that if the money spent in the US was used in Canadian-style health care, there would be enough to cover all the health needs of their country.

Those were statements, again, made by Dr. Walley Temple.

For those of you who do not know who Dr. Walley Temple is, he is an oncologist who is the chief of surgical oncology at the Tom Baker Cancer Centre in Calgary, professor of surgery at the University of Calgary medical school, president of the World Federation of Surgical Oncology Societies, and editor in chief of the international Journal of Surgical Oncology. He is another expert who indicates to this government that their plan is the wrong way to go.

Though the government members may scoff, may laugh, may shake their heads in refusal of an undeniable fact, the reality is that when this bill is looked at word by word and clause by clause, it does exactly the opposite of what the government contends it does. The reason it does that is that it starts from the fundamental premise that for-profit health care is okay. When a piece of legislation is drafted and the fundamental basis on which it is drafted is wrong to begin with, the results are what we see here in Bill 11.

If in fact, again, the government members do not wish to believe that, all they need to do is go back to the recommendations of the Bill 37 blue-ribbon panel, which this government established, and look at what their recommendations were and ask the government executive, ask the minister of health, ask the Premier why in fact those recommendations were not followed. I think you will find the answer there. The answer is because those recommendations clearly outlined that for-profit health care does not have a role in Alberta. If in fact the government does wish to establish for-profit health care, what they then need to do is call it what it is, and that is: a surgical facility is a private hospital.

The Official Opposition believes that our health care system is too precious to entrust to market medicine. Not only do we believe that, but in fact the majority of Albertans believe that as well. Poll after poll after poll, even the government's own polls, indicated that that was true, that Albertans do not want to see for-profit health care in this province.

This government has one last chance. It has a chance to step back, to look at the facts, to hear what the concerns are of Albertans, and to make that bold move that they should have made months ago upon introduction of Bill 11, and that is to pull the bill. It is not too late to admit that there is an error in judgment. It is not too late to admit that there is a mistake. It is not too late, if it is one way of saving face for the government, to say: we will not proclaim the bill, but we will send the bill off to the other Premiers across Canada to look at it and see whether or not our bill meets the requirements of the Canada Health Act. It is not too late to do any of those steps, nor is it too late for the government to open those closed doors and at least, if nothing else, allow the public to have input on the many regulations that this bill still needs in order to enact it. In order to put the meat on the bones, regulations will have to be passed and put into place. Now would be an opportune time for the Premier to announce that there will be public hearings on the regulations, if in fact he does not have the guts, if I can call it that, to pull the bill.

The time has come to stop ignoring Albertans. The time has come to listen to their concerns. The time has come to look at the real facts that are presented by Bill 11. The time has come to recognize that Bill 11 opens the door to for-profit health care in this province. The time has come for this government to do the right thing, and the right thing is not to pass the bill. The right thing is to pull the bill and to know that this bill will not provide for the protection of public health in this province.

No, it is not a done deal. The reality is that the fight for public health care in this province is far from a done deal, and it is just beginning. So if the government will not do the right thing, Albertans will ensure that in the next election they will have in place a government that is committed to public health care and that will do the right thing for the concerns of Albertans in this province.

Thank you very much.

8:20

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Peace River. [interjections] I'm prepared to hear you, hon. Member for Peace River.

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this evening to rise and speak on behalf of Bill 11. At this point one has to wonder if there's anything about this bill that hasn't already been said. Certainly we've reached the point where everyone who has been interested has taken a position either for or against the bill, and what I plan on doing in the next few minutes is to outline the events as they unfolded in my constituency of Peace River during the course of the debate on the bill and in the past few months.

This is without doubt one of the most talked about issues in my seven years as an MLA. What intrigued me, however, was how the feedback began and then how it shifted as the bill was circulated and the facts were picked up. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I find it most refreshing that the general public is much more astute about what's going on than we often give them credit for. I found people looking for information, many looking for clarification and then making up their minds about what they want or what they don't want.

In February, Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 was really becoming quite a hot topic. Back then the feedback that I was getting was approximately 60 percent against and 40 percent for the bill. It was obvious that the opposition was based on the fear propaganda that was being circulated at the time. What's interesting or, should I say, sad is that all this information was being spread by the Liberal and the ND opposition and the Friends of Medicare before they ever saw one word of the bill in print. In other words, what they were saying was: it doesn't matter what's in the bill; we're not going to like it. That's how the smear campaign unfolded. They frightened many people unnecessarily, and in fact that's still going on.

You know, even before the bill was printed and mailed out, people were already calling and expressing doubt about what they were hearing, and I can say that they were right. After the bill was mailed out, what I really noticed was the astuteness of the people that were reading it and seeing what was in it. The tone of the calls was now starting to change. The people were starting to say things like: is that all Bill 11 is really about? From there until today the level of support has gradually shifted so that right now, according to all my contacts with my constituents, it stands at approximately two-thirds in favour. It's on this basis that I can stand here this evening and comfortably say that I must vote in favour of Bill 11.

I know that many constituents also expressed their opposition to the bill, and some are likely going to be disappointed in me. It's too bad that we cannot please everyone every time, but I've also learned a long time ago that we don't only get to make the easy decisions in here.

What does this bill mean to the constituents in the area that I represent and in many others like it? That's beside the fact that we as government, along with our regional health authorities, have an obligation to the citizens of this province to obtain the best value for the dollars that we spend on their behalf. I could almost stop there because that would describe the essence of Bill 11: to ensure that we get the best value for Albertans. If we are not good stewards of the finances and the operations of the province of Alberta on behalf of our citizens and our electors, then we have no business being in this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this one step further though. I want to give you a very practical example of how a patient from a small rural community could be a beneficiary of this bill. It's not likely that the smaller rural hospitals or their RHAs are going to be contracting out surgical services. They do, however, regularly send patients with serious, major medical problems to the larger hospitals, notably in Edmonton and Calgary, and all too often I hear from these patients or from their families that they've traveled to Edmonton for surgery only to be bumped because the operating room was needed for an emergency. So now they're back on the waiting list, and there is now the connection.

All types of surgery compete for the available time and space in the hospitals, everything from removing tonsils and appendix to bypasses and heart transplants. I just have to ask the question: if the operating rooms are being used to capacity, what's so wrong with contracting out some very minor procedures to relieve these pressures and to allow the very expensive facilities to be used for the more serious procedures and reduce those waiting lists as well? More than likely a contract would be with an existing day surgery clinic – many of them are around right now – that with only minor modification could be used for some overnight stays.

I could go on with more details on how this could work, but why does this have to be made so complicated? One of my constituents said a few weeks back after he had read the bill: this sure doesn't sound like rocket surgery. I'm not sure if he intended the pun, but he went on to say: well, what's so bad about it? It isn't, unless you're looking for the imaginary dark side to such an extent that you can't see the benefits in anything.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to work on several aspects of developing Bill 11, and I've had the opportunity to discuss it with hundreds of people, at meetings of all sizes, with many individuals in person and on the phone, through letters and through e-mails. I can't imagine a question that hasn't already been asked or a point of view that was not put forward. The amendments presented by the minister incorporate most of the feedback that we have received. Is it a perfect solution? We'd have to be pretty naive to expect that. In fact, I'd say that we have to keep looking for even more solutions to solve the pressures on our health care system. Is it a step in the right direction? A majority of my constituents think so, and I agree with them. That's why I voted for Bill 11 in the first two stages, and I'll vote for it again tonight in third reading.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased and proud to rise and speak to third reading of Bill 11. Every time I rise to speak, in fact every time I enter this Assembly, this building, I'm reminded of the awesome privilege that it is to be here to represent the people of Edmonton-Whitemud and the people of Alberta. When we talk about health care policy, an issue which is so close to every Albertan because every Albertan is affected by or served by the health care system at some time, we feel the debate to be intense. Bill 11 is no exception, and the responsibility and the privilege are even more pronounced.

Mr. Speaker, the most important aspect of Bill 11, in my view, has been the public debate. This has been almost a unique process. The process was started in November with a policy statement made by our Premier on television to all Albertans, and at that time he invited public discussion, public input, public debate. MLAs went out to constituencies and talked to Albertans about our health care policy, particularly about the policy relating to surgical facilities.

In Edmonton-Whitemud we circulated a newsletter to all constituents, enclosing the policy, and in January had a community focus meeting, which was very well attended, where I could get feedback directly face-to-face from constituents. As well, many meetings, phone calls, and e-mails took place.

The results of these discussions were brought back to the Minister of Health and Wellness, brought back to caucus not only by myself but by other MLAs who had done the same types of processes in their constituencies. Bill 11 was drafted with the benefit of that input, input from MLAs and government caucus from all around the province.

Mr. Speaker, I'd make particular reference to section 2 of the bill, inserting in the bill, which wasn't previously in the policy, the fact that major surgery must be done in public hospitals and that the definition of major surgery would be left to the College of Physicians and Surgeons. That's something the people of Alberta asked for when they were consulted by their MLAs. That's something that was drafted into the bill as a result of that consultation.

In section 5 of the bill we talk about enhanced services. Enhanced services weren't mentioned in the original policy. They were included in the bill because the Consumers' Association and Albertans said there needs to be protection for Albertans in the area of enhanced services, and that protection, Mr. Speaker, has been built into the bill. It's been built into the bill not to rule out the use of enhanced services in appropriate cases but to make sure that informed Albertans who are offered these services know what they're being offered, know whether they need them, and know whether they want to buy them.

The bill, with the benefit of that input from Albertans, was drafted and was tabled on March 2, and in an unprecedented step mailed to all Albertans for open and public discussion. Again, this MLA delivered material to every household in his riding, asking Albertans whether they'd received Bill 11, whether they'd read it and asking for feedback, and again hosted a community focus meeting in the constituency to get face-to-face feedback and again had many calls, letters, personal meetings, e-mail, so many in fact that not all of them have been answered, but they all will be answered.

The benefit of that input can be seen in the amendments to the bill, amendments that enhance the provisions relating to queue-jumping, that eliminate any opportunities for profit on enhanced goods and services, contrary to what the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has just said, requiring RHAs to consider the efficient use of existing capacity, clarifying the privative clause, requiring conflict of interest rules by RHAs and the College of Physicians and Surgeons to enhance existing common-law conflict of interest rules.

We've now had 47 hours of debate in the House. In addition, Mr. Speaker, we've also as members of the government caucus had an opportunity to spend many additional hours bringing back the views and concerns of our constituents and to have an open and thorough debate of the amendments as well as many other issues relating to health in the context of Bill 11. I only wish Albertans could have seen and heard that debate as well, because it's that type of debate, with all members working together to improve the bill based on input from constituents, which leads to constructive policymaking.

A very important aspect here is that while many Albertans will see that the government has dealt with their concerns in the bill and in the amendments to the bill, in some cases their concerns were not dealt with in the bill. Bill 11 was not designed to deal with all issues in health, but Albertans should rest assured that they have been heard by this member, by this caucus, by this government. In many cases, Mr. Speaker, those concerns were already being addressed by the Health and Wellness business plan. In other cases the highlighting of service concerns will impact directly on government decisions and decision-making as we move forward. In some cases concerns were based on broader issues relating to NAFTA, profit, and other issues, where we may have to respectfully agree to disagree.

I don't want to and I don't intend to diminish any Albertan's concerns. I would only say that this member and this government stand foursquare behind the public health care system. We will promote it. We will protect it. We will not diminish it. We will ensure that health care in Alberta continues to be there for Albertans, for our parents, for our children, when they need it and that services will continue to be enhanced and improved and that where there are problems – and yes, Mr. Speaker, there are problems – those problems will be addressed and are being addressed.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to deal briefly as well with the importance of the public debate, because this issue is larger than Bill 11. We've seen improvements in technology. We've seen improvements in drugs and drug protocols, in surgical techniques, in diagnostics. We've greatly increased the pressure on our public system. More can be done for many people than ever before, and more is being done in every area than ever before. This is due in large measure to the members of the health care professions who give yeoman service every day to help Albertans in need of medical help. It's also due to the good work of the many volunteers in Alberta who work hard to ensure that funds are available to enhance and improve the equipment and facilities available. And, of course, the government has made it a priority to ensure that we have the best equipment and facilities possible with the resources available, and those are considerable resources by any measure.

But one of the disappointing elements of the debate has been that every afternoon, every day I've sat here in the Assembly and listened to members of the opposition, the vast majority of whom come from the great city of Edmonton, rise in their place to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care. If you only listened to the Liberals, you would incorrectly assume that this government has not done one single thing for the city of Edmonton or the province to improve the provision of publicly funded health care and publicly administered health care. Well, Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth.

For the benefit of my constituents in Edmonton-Whitemud as well as all Edmontonians and all Albertans, I'd like to highlight some of the recent government initiatives that show that public health care has been improved in this city. Just last month my colleague the Minister of Health and Wellness announced that the Capital health authority will receive two new MRI units in addition to the three units already operating within the public system in Edmonton today.

MRIs are increasingly important in diagnosing a wide range of ailments, and rapid access to an MRI can often make the difference in whether or not a patient can be successfully treated. With the addition of four new MRIs in Edmonton and Calgary and the others already announced in Medicine Hat and Grande Prairie, Alberta will become the province in which publicly funded MRIs are most easily accessible. Over the past five years total MRI scans in Alberta have increased by 138 percent. The new MRI machines will guarantee that the total number of scans will increase further. Mr. Speaker, regardless of what the opposition says, Albertans who need an MRI will receive it quickly through the publicly funded system.

Mr. Speaker, in addition, Alberta Learning has created 26 postsecondary positions to train MRI technicians. [interjection] This announcement will ensure that new MRIs will always be staffed. The Member for Edmonton-Glenora says: what's this got to do with Bill 11? For the last 47 hours I've been listening to many of the opposition members on the other side saying that we don't deal with MRIs in Bill 11. So now I'm advising them why we don't deal with MRIs in Bill 11. Because we've already dealt with MRIs.

My constituents, Mr. Speaker, and all Edmontonians should also be aware of the new neonatal intensive care unit that recently opened at the Royal Alexandra hospital. The Minister of Infrastructure attended the opening, and I was pleased to be there as well. This $8.5 million unit will serve the needs of premature infants not just in Alberta but across western Canada. The new intensive care unit will be crucial in ensuring that infirm newborn Albertans are given every chance of survival.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on. Other health care initiatives in our city have made Edmonton the centre of excellence in public health care delivery. They include a world-class adult intensive care and burn unit at the University of Alberta hospital, renovations for the Stollery children's care centre at the University of Alberta hospital, a new emergency department . . . [interjection]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, the chair listened very attentively to the courtesy that was extended to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for 20 minutes. There were few, if any, interjections and certainly none that were heard above a murmur, and the chair would request the same degree of courtesy now to be afforded to the hon. Government House Leader.

8:40

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll soon be opening – this is the truth, and you should hear it – a new emergency department at the University of Alberta hospital. We have an upgraded Norwood continuing care facility. We have a new Northeast Edmonton community health facility and $16.5 million for new long-term care facilities provided through public/private partnerships. So when the opposition suggests that our government is promoting private health care at the expense of public health care, you only have to look at the city of Edmonton to see that they are wrong.

Bill 11 will not decrease the number of MRIs done in the public system. Will Bill 11 stop the training of new health care professionals at the Alberta universities? No. Will Bill 11 close down the neonatal intensive care unit at the Royal Alex? No. Will Bill 11 halt improvements to the emergency at the Children's intensive care centre at the U of A hospital? No.

Mr. Speaker, as an MLA for Edmonton and for Edmonton-Whitemud I am proud to meet with my constituents to discuss our government's record in health care. We have a proud past and a strong future to look forward to. Health care is an important public trust. This member, this government, and this Premier have demonstrated that the public health care system is our highest priority. Bill 11 is but one small part but an important part of a health care vision. We see healthy Albertans in a healthy Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to speak once again to Bill 11, the Alberta Health Care Protection Act. As has been pointed out, almost half a year ago I went on province-wide television to discuss a proposed new health policy for Alberta relating to the operation of surgical facilities, a policy which an Edmonton Journal editorial called a ringing declaration of what is effectively a bill of health care rights. At that time I laid out the five key principles behind that policy, principles that shaped the bill that was to follow. Those five key principles were very simple, very plain, and very straightforward.

The principles are these: all Albertans will have access to ensured medical services through the publicly funded system; no Albertans will pay for ensured medical services, and nobody will be able to pay to get faster service; regional health authorities will be responsible for all insured surgical services regardless of where they are delivered; private providers of insured services will be able to operate but only under contract to regional health authorities and only within the principles of the Canada Health Act; and health authorities will be allowed to contract with privately operated facilities for surgical services only if it will improve access and efficiency or reduce waiting lists.

Well, Mr. Speaker, very shortly those five key and wonderful principles will be enshrined into law. Those wonderful principles will be enshrined into law, and the Liberals and the NDs will oppose that. Very shortly there will be tight regulatory fences around surgical facilities, fences that weren't there before. Very shortly Bill 11 will be law, and this government will be moving on to deal with other issues in health care, other issues across government.

Mr. Speaker, getting from that television address to this day has been a very interesting process, to say the least. For me and for every member of the Assembly and for every Albertan it has been six months of seemingly uninterrupted debate and discussion, from the floor to the floors of hockey arenas, the food courts of shopping malls, the hallways of business, and of course as we see this evening, even as I speak, the steps of the Legislature. It's been interesting, and it's also been an exceptionally valuable process for this government and this province. I want to sincerely thank all of those who have been a part of it.

Mr. Speaker, whether people agree or disagree with the bill, their involvement has indicated that they care and care deeply about the future of health care in Alberta. As members of the opposition have pointed out and as our members of the government caucus have pointed out, they've cared enough to send letters and e-mails, to make phone calls, to attend public forums and so on. They cared enough to call my office or the offices of other members. Some of them cared enough to stand on the steps of the Legislature and wave placards, blow sirens, and clap cymbals.

I am keenly aware that many Albertans have been troubled by what they see as the long-term impact of Bill 11 on the future of medicare. Well, I want to tell Albertans today that this government has not turned a blind eye to those concerns. Our government has made every effort to ensure that this bill's impact will be a positive one. In coming months this government will do all it can to inspire your confidence in the strength of the health system and demonstrate that everything we do with health care is to improve the public system and the quality of health care that Albertans receive.

So, yes, it has been a valuable experience for all involved in many ways. For one thing, it led to an unprecedented set of initiatives by this government to bring Albertans into the discussion at each step of the legislative process. It gave Albertans, in an unprecedented move, the chance to see a bill developed, debated, and passed, a process many have never seen before. That process of seeing a law take shape began with my television address, as I pointed out, in November, which was followed by the release of a full policy statement. At the same time, phone lines were set up so that people could let us know what they thought of the policy. When the bill was introduced in the Legislature on March 2, it was also sent to every household in Alberta so that Albertans could read word for word the bill their elected legislators were about to debate. A web site was set up to serve as a source of constantly updated information about the bill and its progress through this Legislative Assembly.

When the bill began second reading debate, the first full night of debate was televised live across the province, the first time in the history of this Legislature that there's been a live televised process for an evening debate.

Albertans had the chance to hear all sides of the argument presented by members from all sides of the House. Throughout these six months MLAs have also been constantly speaking to their constituents about the bill. They've been speaking to their constituents in town hall meetings, on the street, in correspondence, and in one-to-one conversations. In short, Mr. Speaker, unprecedented steps were taken to involve all interested Albertans in the debate, and I consider that to have been a most valuable process.

The debate has been valuable for other reasons as well. It has helped to stimulate a much-needed national discussion about the future of the Canadian health care system.

Mr. Speaker, the easiest thing would have been to do nothing, to let the 52 surgical clinics operate as they're operating today, without rules or regulations surrounding the conditions of contract. Yes, some people said: "Why did you touch that third rail, that electrified third rail? Things were going along smoothly." Well, we had the courage as a government to not only talk about doing something in health care but to actually do it.

You know, Mr. Speaker, we hear all the talk and all the rhetoric. We hear people say that something needs to be done about waiting lists and rising costs and constantly growing demand. We hear the federal Minister of Health say that the status quo is not an option. But it's another thing to go beyond the hand-wringing and attempting to do something to fix these problems. Certainly Alberta's attempt has sparked a debate across Canada, and I don't think that spark will be extinguished until Canadians have been assured that their cherished system will not collapse due to neglect or reluctance to make necessary changes or run the risk of being, as I said, health care bankrupt in a few years down the road.

The debate has also been valuable because by being involved, Albertans and Canadians confronted some tough questions and provided this government with some solid ideas. Their input helped to shape Bill 11. Their input helped shape the amendments brought forward to strengthen the bill, and their input will continue to set the course for continuing improvements to the health system. It was Albertans' input that helped to generate the health policy announced last November. Albertans said that the government must do something to alleviate waiting lists and the attendant human suffering. Albertans said that health spending cannot continue to spiral upwards indefinitely, and they said that whatever is done, it must be done within the spirit of the Canada Health Act and within the umbrella of the publicly funded system.

Albertans do not want a two-tiered system where those with money can get faster or better service. They told us that in no uncertain terms. That initial input shaped Bill 11 and the five principles behind the bill that I mentioned earlier.

Subsequent input from Albertans helped shape the series of amendments that we introduced at the committee stage, amendments to eliminate the profiteering motive in the sale of enhanced services, to strengthen conflict-of-interest guidelines, and to eliminate the opportunity for queue-jumping for insured services through the sale of related noninsured services.

Mr. Speaker, the result is that upon passage and proclamation the Alberta Health Care Protection Act will be one of the strongest pieces of legislation in Canada to protect the Canadian health care system. And when people see that to be the truth, when they see that to be the fact, the sirens will stop howling.

The act gives regional health authorities the option to contract out minor surgical procedures if the College of Physicians and Surgeons approves of this procedure being performed outside of a hospital, if the surgical clinic is fully accredited, if the contract has a demonstrated cost effectiveness, if the authority is already using its own facilities at maximum efficiency, and if there is a demonstrated net benefit to the health system. If any one of these ifs aren't met, the contract will not go ahead. It's as simple as that, and that will be the law.

The act bans two-tiered health care. It imposes fines of up to $10,000 any time a patient is charged a user fee, facility fee, or any fee for an insured health service. The act prevents queue-jumping. The act ensures that all health services covered under medicare will be paid for by one source, the medicare system itself. Albertans, all you will need to get medically required services is your Alberta health care card. That's all you will need. Notwithstanding the fear mongering that has unfortunately led some Albertans to believe otherwise, no one – no one – will be denied needed health care in this province because of an inability to pay. If you have your health care card, it will be there for you. No one, Mr. Speaker.

As I've said on previous occasions, it's not a matter of trust, as the opposition has attempted to argue. Under this act it will be a matter of law. It will be the law, a law that they oppose, by the way, and a law that will not be subject to the whim of any elected official or bureaucrat or the political rhetoric that we see coming from the Liberal Party and the NDs.

The act requires that any enhanced services are fully explained to a patient in writing and before the surgery. It requires the patient to sign a written agreement to purchase any or no enhanced services, and it requires that patients have the option to change their mind if they want to. It also limits the price that can be charged for an enhanced service so that clinics or hospitals – by the way, this can take place in a hospital; this is not something that is exclusive to surgical clinics – will not be tempted to sell an enhanced service simply to make a profit. Mr. Speaker, those kinds of restrictions on the sale of enhanced services do not exist today. This act puts those restrictions in place, and I think Albertans should be very pleased with that.

In a nutshell, that's what this bill is all about. Mr. Speaker, during the course of this debate there has been a lot of discussion about things that this bill is not about. Certainly the Alberta Medical Association expressed concern about the shortage of physicians and other health professionals. For example, there have been questions about equity of access between rural and urban communities, especially for long-term care. There have been issues raised around the specter of certain services being deinsured. These are indeed important issues and they're important questions, without a doubt, but they are not germane to Bill 11. They are not part of the debate over the merits of this bill. They are being dealt with nonetheless.

In January the minister introduced a six-point plan to address health care issues including staffing levels, waiting lists, access to long-term care, and other situations on the minds of Albertans. Protecting the public system and regulating surgical facilities was one part of this plan. Bill 11 is one component, one component of this plan, and the passage of Bill 11 achieves that goal. The plan also includes improving access to health services through adequate funding and increasing the number of health professionals working in the system. That is going on now, as we speak.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I had a very productive, a very fruitful meeting with representatives of the Alberta Medical Association to seek their assistance in bringing these programs to fruition, and they've agreed to do that. We will continue to work with health care professionals to improve the management of the health system through innovation and efficiency. We will continue to enhance the quality of health services through reform of primary care delivery – twenty-six pilot projects are now under way – the purchase of new equipment and other measures; increasing the emphasis on wellness, health promotion, and disease prevention through steps such as immunization programs and helping people receive a wider range of care at home; fostering and welcoming new ideas for health care, innovation.

In the last few months, while the opposition and others have focused solely on Bill 11, this government has taken many, many steps toward achieving all six components of this plan. To name a few - and I know the hon. House leader mentioned some of them. We announced a funding increase of 21 percent over three years for health. We put in place a plan to hire 2,400 additional health professionals over three years, beginning this year. We added the foldable lens used in some cataract surgeries to the list of insured services. We completed a major review of our long-term care system, which will lead to substantive improvement in care for seniors and which has already led to increased funding for long-term care. Of course, much to the chagrin of the opposition Liberals because it was something that was so good, we announced the purchase of four additional public MRI units, which will give us the highest scan capacity per capita of any province in the country, and they didn't like it. These are just a few of the developments in health care over the last few months, and we know the work isn't done, Mr. Speaker.

Over the next few weeks the Health and Wellness minister will be making further announcements of initiatives aimed at achieving all the goals in the six-point plan. These announcements will further address issues such as long-term care, waiting lists, and equipment demands. They will further respond to Albertans' priorities for health care and further implement what Albertans have told us, what their expectations are with respect to health care delivery.

Included in these announcements will be the full membership of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, an advisory body I first announced back in January. The council, to be chaired by former Deputy Prime Minister Don Mazankowski, will provide government and all members of this caucus and all Albertans with informed advice and analysis on how to make the health system better. I look forward to receiving its input.

As well, soon the minister will meet with his provincial and federal counterparts from across Canada to continue the national review of the health system and how to improve it. [Disturbance in the gallery]

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order! Order! Order in the gallery!

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, please, please.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order! Order!

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, all of these initiatives are essential to sustaining our health system for the future.

As has been pointed out, no one in government pretends that Bill 11 is the magic solution to all of the issues facing the health system. No one in government has ever claimed that once the bill is passed, all the problems would be solved. Solving those problems will require the energies and goodwill of all Albertans. It will require honest, open, rational dialogue - honest, open, and rational dialogue. It will require the input of physicians, nurses, administrators, and other health care professionals. It will require the ideas and perspectives of all Albertans, and it will require that we as legislators stick to the issues and not turn the debate into political gamesmanship.

By and large, Mr. Speaker, the process worked. From the evening I took to the airwaves last November to this moment this evening, this government has thrown itself and its bill open to an unprecedented level of public scrutiny. The result is a piece of legislation that Albertans can be proud of. They contributed to its development every step of the way, and it reflects their pride in their health system and their earnest desire to sustain it.

It has been a very tough and very emotional battle. It has meant that my colleagues and I have taken a lot of criticism, some of it perhaps warranted, some of it not, a lot of it not. We've all been well reminded that any adjustments to health care are going to be diligently monitored and assessed by all Albertans.

That's why we'll continue to talk to Albertans about health care. We're not going to stop providing them with information, answering their questions, and pondering their ideas. We're not going to stop doing our very best to protect the public health system, a system which, I assure you, every member of this government values as highly as do all Albertans.

You know, an Alberta political scientist, Roger Gibbins actually, was recently quoted as saying that if we retracted this bill, that move could choke off a creative debate on what alternatives to health care we might consider around this country. I believe that to be true. If this government had said no to Bill 11, governments around the country might have looked at Alberta and said: "Well, that proves that it's too risky to attempt meaningful and positive reform of the health system. Let's just keep uttering platitudes. Let's just keep talking about it. Let's not do anything, and let's take the easy way out and just spend copious amounts of money, even if down the road that money has to be borrowed."

But we didn't say no. We said yes: yes to positive change, yes to a measured effort to make things better, yes to a creative response to a very real issue. And we will continue to say yes, Mr. Speaker. We will continue to do whatever we can to build a better public health system for Albertans of this new century.

We will not back down, we will not give up, and we will not lose faith that Albertans want us to make the tough decisions and take the measured steps that are necessary to achieve that goal we all share, and that is a better, stronger public health system for all Albertans.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Okay, hon. members. Just everybody cool it. We still have one more question to call, when there's attention.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, please. The people in the galleries will remain where they are. They will not approach the bars for fear of accident or anything else. The hon. members will stay on the floor and speak among themselves on the floor or outside. This is not a forum where you speak up.

I want something else in the next 10 minutes. There was an incident in this Assembly a little while ago. Unfortunately, an individual may have fallen down and hurt himself. When that melee was occurring, there were some remarks that the chair did not hear, but a number of members claim they heard them. The chair did not hear them. His attention was focused on some security matters. I want those hon. members who may have said something inappropriately to another hon. member to be big enough and approach that person to whom they directed those comments and apologize. There are 10 minutes in which to do it.

Thank you.

Bill 16

Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate April 3: Mr. Zwozdesky]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to make a few comments on Bill 16, the Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2000. I'll keep my comments relatively short.

I look at Bill 16, and to me the highlights of the bill bring into force the Condominium Property Amendment of 1996, which includes amendments for mandatory reserves, funds, and studies. There's a new section that allows condominium corporations to amend their condo plans. It clarifies voting rights for owners or mortgagees. Amounts of money held back in trust are now tied to the cost of completion. Another highlight, for me at least, is that it allows for condominiums to be built in phases.

Now, this is one of those bills where I'm sort of caught between the devil and the deep blue sea. I recognize the need to bring together a comprehensive revised condominium act, because in the former act, the existing act, there are a lot of shortcomings. There has been a great deal of work put into this bill. There's been consultation in certain directions and such. So like I say, on the one hand I can see merit in the bill; I can see rationale to have the bill approved. However, there is some hesitation on my part.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

When we look at consultation, we see consultation having taken place with the Canadian Condominium Institute, with the Alberta New Home Builders Association, with the Alberta new home warranty program. One of the things that strikes me, even in that consultation process, is that the bill seems to be pro development, pro property owner, property management company, whatever. In other words, support comes from those various organizations that are involved with development, involved with management of rental units or of condo units and so on and so forth.

However, the one organization that didn't appear to be part of the consultation process, at least not part of that committee that was struck, was the Condominium Advocate Association. They're a nonprofit organization providing free information and services to condominium owners throughout Alberta. They represent the individual condominium owners, not the property developers or those that may own a development and hold title to a number of units in one particular project or spread throughout that project or other projects. So that's one of the concerns I have.

Another concern I have is the question of consumer protection. Is there sufficient consumer protection for the condominium owner, or does the bill strictly pander to the developers? If it does, then that would be unfortunate. Even when I look at the consultation process, the owners seem to have been left out of it.

I look at enforcement, the enforcement of the bill. How is that enforcement going to take place? There always has been lack of enforcement, up to now, when we deal in terms of the existing condominium act.

We look at the provisions for a continual review of the legislation and requirements. Now, we see the existing act having been in place since – what? The last time it underwent major amendments was 1978. We saw the amendments come forward to that bill in 1996. We're now in the year 2000, so technically we're speaking of 22 years since we've had a comprehensive look, where we've seen major changes being done to a very, very important act that affects a lot of Albertans, a great deal of Albertans.

The lifting of the maximum penalties for violations of bylaws in the amendments in the amended act is of concern to me. The question of the language of the bill, whether it's user friendly or it's one of those technical bills that is very difficult to interpret, to read. And it is very difficult to read.

Now, when we look at section 11(b), this is one of those ones where I'm always a little skeptical when they say that the minister may authorize an association or organization to carry out any function or duty under this act. This would seem to give the minister the ability to bestow widespread powers in relation to this act to a particular organization. The enhanced regulation-making powers, the list of what can be done by regulation is increased in this bill. Whenever we talk in terms of increased regulation, of what can be done by regulation, of course it's of concern because it takes away from the authority and the legislative right of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I was involved in a condominium project a few years back with my son, who's an architect. We developed a project on the north side as a result of a competition he entered and won. The stipulation was that the winner had to build it. We actually had to condominiumize the project because of the three units and strike bylaws and set up a condominium association. With three units involved, there were some difficulties, so I saw some of the frustrations of the owners of those three units when they purchased them and formed the association and took over the association.

I can also understand why there are shortcomings in the existing 1978 act and why there had to be this comprehensive review. So that's basically in a nutshell why I use the expression: I'm caught between the devil and the deep blue sea.

Of course, we're at second reading stage now, which allows us, when it passes this stage, into committee stage and to bring forward amendments that may address some of the concerns. Hopefully, some of the amendments that may be forthcoming by members of either side of the House will enhance the act and make the act acceptable not only to the developers, the property owners, but also to the individual condominium owners. If that can be achieved, that's great.

I would hate to see this bill have to be delayed for further consultation, because of the period of time that has gone by. I'm saying that I'm agreeing with the minister, that I would hate to see that happen because of the four years that have now gone by since 1996. There may be a need for amendments, and when amendments come forward, I would hope that government would give them their full consideration, that the minister would review those amendments and take them very, very seriously.

On that note, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to conclude my remarks on second reading and speak again at committee stage.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak rather briefly this evening to Bill 16, the Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2000. I'd like to speak to the integrity of the intent of this act. What it does is it will bring into law what so many of my constituents who live in condominiums and who own them have been looking for by way of jurisdictional and organizational ability within law. Whenever any persons or families or individuals own common property, there needs to be that which is in their best interests, and that's what I believe Bill 16 does after great consultation with those who are involved in the organizations and the associations that have been formed to look after the best interests of those who own condominiums.

In particular, as a former realtor when I found anyone who was purchasing a condominium, one of the things I always said to them was, "Let us check out what the reserve fund is," so that they would know what was there for use for common property should major repairs need to be done to the facility, perhaps the roof or the siding or the doors to their respective units, and to the common property as well. Of course, a number of older properties which were designated as condominiums several years ago have either used up their reserve funds or have built, in essence, a strong reserve fund. Because of Bill 16 those who are on the boards for condominium associations will have the surety of knowing that they have laws and regulation within which they must operate.

I also want to speak to the merit that is mentioned here in Bill 16, the requirement that individuals who own respective units must also, whether they be the financial institution or whether they be the owners who perhaps do not reside in that but who subsequently rent it out, must be contacted and must be aware of all that is done that will legally impact upon the ownership and the common ownership of the whole property.

So this bill is needed. I have boards who run the condominium associations in my community who have said that we need the clear direction.

Certainly condominium complexes have grown in number incredibly over the last number of years, and they are growing because it is a lifestyle as well as a place in a unit which people choose to purchase. But with that come responsibilities and from that come the requests from individuals and groups and boards to say: we need clear direction. We need to have the rules and the regulations put in place whereby the boards of these associations can govern as they wish to do.

They have been operating as best they can, and I would like to pay tribute to the members of the condominium boards of the complexes in St. Albert, because I think they have done a very fine job of looking after the interests of the individual unit owners as well as the interests of the common good or the common property as it is legally called.

This bill is needed. It can't be put into law quickly enough from what I hear from those members of the boards of my condominium associations in St. Albert. I believe that it has addressed the concerns that they have raised. They have been working to the best of their ability without legislation or regulation in some of the more fine-tuned areas of governance of these issues.

I would urge us as an Assembly to advance this bill through the process as quickly as we can, not because we want to expedite our own proceedings and work here but because my constituents have said: we need this; we need to operate from a point of reference. The intention of this act is to give them clear direction as to how the assets are to be handled, what needs to be in place, and how those who are owners within the complexes wish to operate.

With those brief remarks, Mr. Speaker, I will close, but again I just want to say that Bill 16, when it also has its fine-tuned regulations, I believe will give better direction, clearer direction, and certainly provide purchasers, sellers, and board members with the ability to look after what we like to choose as a lifestyle for ourselves and for others.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak in support of Bill 16, the Condominium Property Act, 2000, at second reading. I should at the outset thank the Minister of Government Services and the officials in her department. A Mr. Wade, I believe. I had some last minute concerns. [interjections] Tim Wade? They were last minute concerns raised by a constituent, and they were most helpful in addressing those concerns and went the extra mile, I think, to alleviate that, and I thank her and her department. I really appreciate that help.

The need for the act, I think, is obvious to everyone who has condominium property in their constituency. Condominium ownership is still a fairly new thing. Historically in our province the legislation dates back to 1966 and then the work that was done in 1996 and the work that is before us in the current bill. It's because it's new that I think we're still trying to work out some of the problems that that kind of living arrangement and business arrangement give rise to.

Condominium ownership, of course, is an attractive living style for many Albertans. If you look at the sides of the river valley in this city, you can see the kind of appeal that condominium living has for individuals. They get spectacular views of the landscape, and they have security. Many of them have in-building security; some have camera security. There's the feeling that you can leave your property with some security that it won't be interfered with. For many individuals, some of whom are professionals, others who travel, others who have multiple residences, that's a very attractive feature of condominium living.

It's that living together, of course, that gives rise to some of the problems that Bill 16 addresses. It's not just residents who like and benefit from condominium-style arrangements. I have in my constituency a number of business condominiums, and they enjoy some of the same benefits as their residential counterparts: the security of having a number of businesses on site that can gather together to hire security services and to monitor the security of their property, the advantage of having a number of businesses on the same location and being able to attract customers and suppliers to that kind of an area. Again, the sharing of common facilities makes it an attractive arrangement for business. It's that grouping of businesses that gives rise to some of the problems that Bill 16 does address.

A very important driver behind this legislation is the kinds of problems that we faced in my own constituency. My first contact with condominium difficulties arose with business condominiums. A new development had a limited number of buyers initially, and those buyers found themselves on the hook for the entire property taxes of the complex before the rest of the complex had been sold. It was, to say the least, a rather devastating blow to some of those novice business owners to find themselves faced with that kind of an obligation and no way out of it in terms of their legal commitments.

I have one of the units where the problem of pine shakes, rotten shakes, has arisen, and again those people are deep into litigation at this point. Bill 16, I think, will help avoid that kind of necessity of people having to retreat to the law to have some of their problems solved.

But the most tragic, I think, happened just recently, Mr. Speaker. I had a call from a constituent who lives in a complex that because of construction difficulties has a mold problem. The problem is of such an extent that the health safety of the people living in the complex has been questioned, and in fact the building is being monitored by the health department.

The constituent that phoned me was really very distressed. She had worked hard and managed to put together a down payment for a condominium in the complex. She had taken out a large mortgage, and now she finds herself faced with repairs that are going to cost her more than what the unit is worth, and she's really, really distressed. Now, they've hired a lawyer to try to recover some of those costs from the developer, because there were, she alleges, some mistakes made in the construction phase.

It's those kinds of stories that I think give rise to the need for really good legislation in this area. That's why this bill is an important bill. It clarifies the kinds of roles and responsibilities of owners, of corporations, of condominium associations, and of developers. It has implications for the kinds of financial arrangements that are undertaken and put in place. I think it will do a great deal to ward off some of the complaints, some of the problems that owners of condominiums and developers and corporations and associations involved in those units face.

It seems to me that as we look at the bill, there are a number of principles. An important principle for me is that owners should have a voice in what happens to their units. That's really clarified, I think, in the bill in a number of places. It reinforces the principle that collectively owners should be able to make decisions on behalf of the unit in the best interests of the owners. It further supports the notion that any moneys handled by corporations or associations have to be handled responsibly and that there are some measures that have to be taken to protect the financial interests of those people involved in either ownership or development, selling or managing those facilities.

I think the very important principle and the very strength of it is that it provides the kind of protection and delineation and clarification of the rights and responsibilities of those people involved. It makes it very clear how developers are to behave, how owners, condominium associations, and even government will behave in the managing and the addressing of condominium problems. [interjections] Sorry; I've got a little competition from the whip, Mr. Speaker.

I think with those comments, I'll conclude my remarks and look forward to the movement of Bill 16 to Committee of the Whole, where we'll get a chance to look in more detail at some of the specific clauses of the bill.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to make some brief remarks this evening with respect to Bill 16. I recognize that this legislation coming forward has been the summation of, I guess, a long process of review.

MR. DICKSON: Ten years.

MRS. SLOAN: Ten years, in fact, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo points out.

We are aware of the working group that the minister put together in August of 1999, but I don't believe any members of the opposition were part of that working group, to my knowledge.

Certainly we have within our families and we certainly have within our constituencies a number of citizens who have interests in condominiums, and I would say that there is probably not a large majority of them that are completely familiar with what this legislation is proposing to do. As I looked at the attachments, that were graciously provided, there were a number I believe from the Alberta Home Builders' Association and also a letter of support from a Re/Max representative. Those interests in this legislation are very important, and I respect the support that they have provided with respect to Bill 16 and the time they took to put that in the form of a written letter to both government and opposition members.

I received a letter from the Condominium Advocate Association in which they outlined a number of concerns which I don't believe are addressed in Bill 16. They talked a bit about having been part of a group that was formed to review this, and they reached certain conclusions, I guess, if you will, relative to what this bill would contain. If my understanding is correct from the correspondence I've received, there are a number of issues that they don't feel have been embodied in the bill that should have been, and some of those areas are in the areas of things like board meetings and general meetings. They talked about in their correspondence that there are many condominiums where the developer investors are large rental pools, own a large number of condominium units, and at most you were lucky to have a 40 percent turnout at annual meetings. Well, in the nursing community sometimes we were happy if we had 10 percent, so I'd say 40 percent isn't too bad, nonetheless.

Their concern was really about the ability of a small group of shareholders in the condominiums being able to make resolutions – and I believe they're referred to as special resolutions – and what might happen. Certainly those concerns I think have to be taken with some degree of respect and caution by the government. I certainly think that our condominium population is going to grow as more of us release ourselves from the maintenance of a home and the lawns and all of the trappings that come with a fully functional home. So as legislators we have to think about what protections are in fact in place most certainly for the developers and most certainly for the real estate, but also equally important is to consider the interests of owners in the dialogue.

I have a concern that, as usual, we don't know what type of regulatory framework will accompany the bill, what types of things might be done in regulations or what the consultation process might be for the development of those regulations and whether or not the concerns as outlined by the Condominium Advocate Association relative to board meetings, relative to voting rights will be part of those regulations.

I was also sent a copy of a letter from Gordon McIntosh, which I'm assuming most MLAs received. The letter was addressed to the Premier, and it dealt specifically with the Condominium Property Act. Again, what Mr. McIntosh points out is that in fact when the final copy of the bill came out, he had a number of understandings that there would be certain sections specified, and they have not been. The concerns that he expressed related to the definition of common property, and I listened intently to the hon. Member for St. Albert speak in regards to that. I'm not certain, though, that those protections are contained within the legislation sufficiently.

As well, he raised concerns about section 6. The Condominium Advocate Association was seeking a statement describing all types of units . . . and the maximum number of units to be built upon the completion . . . [including] a provision which allows for amendments to the initial concept plan upon a special resolution of existing condominium owners . . . [and] a provision that would require a developer to provide some form of security.

He goes on to say:

Our association would like to reiterate that our 29-page report has raised a number of concerns that have not been addressed in any of the Amendment Acts. We are in the process of informing condominium owners, throughout the province, of this legislation and how it will impact them.

I find myself contemplating, just having voted on Bill 11 – we went to great lengths to inform Albertans about the implications of that bill, I would say from both sides of the House. While we didn't agree on the bill and what its intentions were, perhaps it's also a lesson that we should be raising the bar relative to some other types of legislation and truly informing – not to level any disrespect to the organizing bodies or developers or for condominium owners – getting down to the grassroot level and making these types of changes in legislation applicable to those people actually owning the units.

Those conclude my concerns at second reading, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to further debate on this bill.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services to close debate.

MRS. NELSON: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few brief comments, in particular, on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Bow, who is sponsoring this bill. She sponsored the bill originally four years ago, and the process to bring together a Condominium Property Act has been very, very long. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo reminded me that it's well over 10 years, the whole process of coming to this point.

When I became the Minister of Government Services responsible for this act not quite a year ago, one of the groups that was first in to see me was the group that was working on this act. I have to admit that at some point it almost seemed like there had been, when I reviewed their files, the Hatfields and the McCoys trying to come to resolution on things that it didn't seem should be that difficult. However, there were some very definite lines drawn in the sand, and people were not really prepared to budge one way or the other.

This was a group from the builders and from the owners and the stakeholder groups that got together, and the task that I assigned was: look, we've had three years of arguing back and forth; you have so many days and you're going to have to come to a resolution on the last few items. In fact, they did. They rolled up their sleeves, and they worked together and came to a resolution on the outstanding issues for them. They brought forward a recommendation to my office. I said: well, then, that's the recommendation we will put into the amendment to complete what we had started four years ago with the Condominium Property Act. So the process worked well. As I say, they rolled up their sleeves and parked their differences at the door and looked at how they could best put forward a comprehensive act.

Is it all there? I don't know that it ever will be. I think that as times change, Mr. Speaker, there will have to be further amendments, but up to this point I think that what we had in the amended act from '96 and what we're adding on here deals with the issues.

The gentleman that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview mentioned – we have been in contact with him. In fact, I have sent him three letters requesting that he come in and sit down and deal with the issues he identified in his letter, and that has not occurred as yet. Our door is open, and if he would like to come in and meet with us and go through those issues – I did share that with Edmonton-Mill Woods because he had also been in contact with him, and I actually gave him the letters that I'd sent to him inviting him to come into the office and go through those issues that he had raised in his letter. So if in fact he would like to do that, the offer is still there. He's more than welcome to come in and sit with my staff. My office door is open at any time.

So I think that we have dealt with the major issues that were outstanding between these two groups, Mr. Speaker, and we've come to a resolution that is acceptable to them.

Edmonton-Riverview also mentioned that opposition members weren't involved in this. Well, in fact, they were, because they received correspondence, the same as members on our side. This was a committee of stakeholder groups. There were not people from either side assigned to run this through other than to encourage the groups to come together for a resolution.

So on those few notes, I look forward to Committee of the Whole. Again, on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Bow I move second reading of Bill 16.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a second time]

Bill 15

Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2000

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any further comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to Bill 15? The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-North West I would like to introduce an amendment to Bill 15, and this is a result of some of the comments that came out of second reading by members opposite. We appreciate their comments. They were very well founded. I believe that the amendment has been distributed. This amendment is to section 2. It's amended by striking out the proposed section 42(2) and substituting the following: "A corporation may give financial assistance to any person for any purpose." In part B section 3 is struck out.

In section 2 of Bill 15, 42(2) states that a corporation may give financial assistance to any person for any purpose if it is in the best interest of the corporation to do so.

The inclusion of the phrase "if it is in the best interest of the corporation to do so" has been found to be problematic. Section 117 of the Business Corporations Act already places an onus on the directors and officers of a corporation to discharge their duties "with a view to the best interests of the corporation." This would include transactions made pursuant to section 42 of the act. The restatement of the best-interest requirements of section 42(2) could be interpreted to mean that there is a separate best-interest test from the one in section 117. This was never the intent of this section. To ensure that there's no ambiguity resulting from the revised section 42, an amendment has been proposed that will remove the phrase "if it is in the best interest of the corporation to do so" from Bill 15, section 2, 42(2). The revised section 42(2) is amended and will read: "A corporation may give financial assistance to any person for any purpose."

10:20

The second portion of the House amendment is in section 3. This section changed references in sections 113(3)(d), 113(5), 113(6)(a), and 113(8) from section 42 to 42(2). Section 113 establishes the liability directors and others face if their actions are contrary to specified requirements. Section 3 tied the specified requirements . . .

MR. DICKSON: Point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN: Calgary-Buffalo.

Point of Order Decorum

MR. DICKSON: I'm trying to listen to the minister, and I simply cannot hear because of the cacophony from the back two rows opposite.

THE CHAIRMAN: I wonder if we could learn to whisper. All of us. All hon. members. There was a group over here and over here and over there. We're not singling you out but together.

The hon. minister.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Section 3 tied the specific requirements of the "in the best interest" phrase to section 42(2) of this bill. With the amendment removing the "in the best interest" phrase, it is no longer necessary to make this change to the act. As a result, section 3 of Bill 15 is being removed.

The House amendment I have presented today will not change the nature of Bill 15. The bill removes impediments for Alberta business by eliminating unworkable solvency tests and replacing them with disclosure requirements. I would also like to emphasize that the removal of the phrase "if it is in the best interest of the corporation to do so" from section 42(2) of the bill does not mean that directors of the corporation can give financial assistance that is not in the best interest of the corporation. Section 117(1) requires directors and officers of a corporation to discharge their duties "honestly and in good faith with a view to the best interests of the corporation." That section now and in the future requires directors and officers to act in the best interests of the corporation. I'd like to move that amendment, Mr. Chairman.

I'd also again like to thank the members opposite for some of their suggestions during second reading, which helped identify this area. I do appreciate their support as we move this amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN: This amendment will be called amendment A1. Is it agreeable to deal with the two parts as one? Okay. Good.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to start by thanking the minister for her acknowledgment. You know, this is an example where the opposition plays a constructive role in terms of lawmaking. I wanted to thank my colleague who has been the critic on this bill and who I think has done a good job in terms of ensuring that the thing works. Ultimately, business corporations are a key unit in the economic development of this province, and it makes sense that their enabling legislation be effective and in fact be able to do the job.

I'd just acknowledge, as I look at the two amendments, that this has been the subject of I think three different discussion papers by the Alberta Law Reform Institute. You know, on the last bill that we looked at a moment ago, Bill 16, the Minister of Government Services was talking about a 10-year process to get the condominium legislation straightened away and four years since the last bill was passed. We've had some excellent reports that have been done by the Alberta Law Reform Institute, and I'm happy to see we're moving on those things to make this legislation more effective.

Now, I've got a couple of other comments that I think probably would go to the bill itself rather than the subamendment. I think I would say that the first amendment clearly does respond to a problem in the initial bill. I make the observation that it shows to me the importance of there being detailed scrutiny in this place of legislation. I know from time to time government members view the debate and the process in here as being pretty tedious, and granted, sometimes it is, but I think the House amendment we see in front of us is also a testament to the fact that some good work can be done here. It's incumbent on MLAs to read these things through and read them through carefully. After we deal with the amendment, I'll have a couple of other more general comments on the rest of the bill.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Government Services on amendment A1.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was negligent in not complimenting the Law Society and the Alberta Law Reform Institute for the work they have done in bringing this recommendation forward. Again, this was a stakeholder group driven process of consultation where they gathered people from within their own organizations but also from outside. They brought in the accounting people and the business people to look at this section and deal with it.

Again, it was a long process. When they came to see me in the early fall with the dilemma on this section 42, it was abundantly clear that all groups – the legal profession, the accounting profession, the financial institution group – had come together and decided that they needed to approach the government to make this change because of the difficulty and the costs of compliance that were attached to this kind of a process. I'll agree that there was a flaw, and I very much appreciated the work that they did with this. I did say that I would approach the Legislature to make that change. So I again would like to thank them for coming forward and giving us an opportunity to make a correction on this.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much. Now that we've got the House amendment out of the way, I want to make some more general observations about the rest of it. I was going to make the observation in terms of process. I think that our caucus has received some really useful input from the legal community in the province, from the Alberta Law Reform Institute, and from the chartered accountants of Alberta, the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta being the formal title. I'd like to at least thank Wayne Kauffman, the associate executive director, on behalf of the chartered accountants for the thorough and timely briefing he provided to this MLA and to members of my caucus. It has helped us to prepare for the bill.

I'd like to acknowledge that there have always been problems, it seems to me, around prohibited financial assistance by a corporation. It's one of those things that has challenged all provincial governments in this country. It had to do with the fact that there had been no adequate definition, no generally accepted definition of the realizable value of assets and then questions about what you'd include in with liabilities. Just so we're really clear, the net effect of all this was that you had accountants who were to give opinions on corporations. As anybody who is interested in buying a business knows, the two people you want at your left and right side – you want to make sure you've got a lawyer there, but you also have to have an accountant. To go in without a lawyer and an accountant would be like going into a tennis match without your tennis racket. You know, you need that kind of support.

I think that what was happening was that it was becoming an additional requirement if you were going to sell. Typically businesses are sold in one of two ways. Either you have a sale of assets, or you have a sale of shares. This isn't a problem with the sale of assets, but if you're in fact going to sell shares, then what would happen is that you'd have to have legal counsel. You could be spending thousands of dollars hiring legal counsel just to be able to satisfy the old solvency and assets test under section 42.

The net effect of all this is that it costs more for businesses in this province to carry on business under the old Business Corporations Act and to enter into transactions with the sale of shares. This should assist that and hopefully will ensure that we don't see those unwarranted additional transaction costs imposed on Alberta businesses.

[Mr. Herard in the chair]

I think the other thing I'd just like to say, which I think is very important, is about the 90-day disclosure. It used to be that you would have a requirement in terms of a year-end report. I've always thought that businesses are rarely bought and sold on sort of a year-end basis. More often a business is sold at either the high or low part of the particular business cycle of that business, so why wouldn't you require this kind of provision that if there's financial assistance given to a director or shareholder in a corporation, there should be that kind of disclosure within 90 days? Once again, it's one of those things. I think it's easy to look back and say: it makes such darn good sense; why are we just doing it now? It isn't fair to lay this necessarily at the feet of government. I think it's just that in the complex commercial world we live in, we always find ways of improving the process, and I think this bill goes some distance to doing that.

The other thing the disclosure requirement does, Mr. Chairman, is make it easier to be able to go to court. Ultimately, what will happen is that it'll be shareholders or in some cases directors having to police abuse by going to court to restrain improper actions by company directors. Now there's at least a facility to be able to do that with the bill that we have here in terms of looking at the specific sections.

The other point I wanted to make: I think I'd just say that it's timely that we do this now. There's a federal business corporations act, the Canada Business Corporations Act, that's currently under review, Mr. Chairman, at the national level. Ontario has recently introduced quite similar amendments to their Business Corporations Act, and Saskatchewan has already moved on it.

Once again, Mr. Chairman, I always marvel at the fact that a province like Saskatchewan, with such a small population, continues to show leadership in so many different ways. I'm no socialist, and I'm certainly no fan of NDP governments, but I must tell you: there's something about growing up or living in Saskatchewan that really imports a degree of creativity. In this province I see more leadership in so many different areas, and the credit cannot be claimed just because you happen to be born there. I mean, I'm not sure I'd go that far. I certainly wanted to make that observation, that Saskatchewan leads the way yet again.

The other point I'd just make is that we've had some other stakeholders I neglected to mention earlier, Mr. Chairman. That would be the Canadian Bankers Association, that have made a number of representations. I know the minister did, but I wanted to acknowledge it. Sometimes people make separate presentations to the opposition.

I've always found a strange thing on bills like this. When people go to make a presentation to the Calgary MLAs, for example, they're told by the Calgary government caucus: no, no; this is for government members only. Groups often tell me that they find it so strange. If they want to make a presentation, they'd like to talk to all of the people elected to represent an area like the city of Calgary.

In any event, I make that observation that people have made separate presentations to us. That's important because we have 83 MLAs in this House, and it's important that (a) all 83 MLAs be conversant with the issues and (b) hopefully supportive of the needs of industry.

The only other concern I might make is looking at 231(b) in terms of the specific provision. Let me just find it so I've got the exact text in front of me. This would be section 4. We have this provision that talks about who can make an application under this part, and I think it's wise to do it. We've identified the complainant for purposes of going to court to seek some redress. This is on page 4 of the bill. It can be "a registered holder or beneficial owner, or a former registered holder or beneficial owner, of a security," so that's obvious. Secondly, it can be a "director or an officer," past or present, or it can be a "creditor," at least in respect of the two elements identified on page 4, or it can be "any other person who, in the discretion of the Court, is a proper person to make an application."

I want to compliment the minister and her legislative drafter for putting in this last part. I know it's been in before. I've heard some suggestion that it should be narrower than it was in 231, and I'm glad that didn't happen; I'm glad we left that. You have to leave a discretionary power in the court to identify certain other people to be able to make the case. They still have to prove they have status. If they can do that, then they're in, so to speak.

Overall, in the grand scheme of things this certainly is never going to attract the attention of people interested in a bill like Bill 11, but for the commercial activity of this province, for many people this will be as significant a bill. We've had some good effort on both sides, and it's a credit to all MLAs that the bill moves forward to continue to make this a province where people can make a good living and an area that's receptive to the creative men and women who create businesses and buy and sell businesses and provide jobs and pay taxes.

Those are the comments that I wanted to make at this stage. I look forward to a speedy passage of Bill 15. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Bill 17
Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2000

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of observations I'd make. I had the chance to speak on this at second reading and indicated, or at least raised, some of the thoughts I had at that point.

In the grand scheme of things this is not the most consequential bill we're going to deal with in this Assembly. I think members recognize that and understand it. There are certainly a couple of observations I wanted to make. If you look at section 3, this is the provision in terms of changing it. Instead of providing for information about actions or prohibiting the collection of information about actions that have been barred by limitation periods, what we've now done is actually provided a six-year cutoff.

It's interesting. The Minister of Justice may appreciate the irony of this. We used to have in our Limitation of Actions Act always a consistent six years for civil debts, and we've moved away from that within the new limitations process and a new limitations statute. What we've done is gone back to that. I suppose it makes it easier because it's a date certain, but I wonder if the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake has considered how we deal with laches.

Laches is an equitable remedy that has the effect of operating like a limitation period except that it is not fixed in the limitations act. Nonetheless, it's a form of limitation. I'm just wondering why we don't address those kinds of actions where the law of equity would prevent somebody seeking a remedy. That could've been caught before. Query the old section 45(3)(b), where it says, "must not include the following information about an individual . . . because of the expiration of limitation periods." That may never have been intended to include laches. It may have never been part of the scheme. But as I think about it, equity is a pretty major factor in collections in this whole area.

The other day I claimed relief from forfeiture on some parking tickets. It was a private lot. You know, one of those lots that's not owned by a city. If you park on the lot and you stay longer than your two-hour ticket, they put a ticket on your windshield. What they then do is send you a note saying: that's 40 bucks. Now, that may be double what the city charges for that. I just make the observation that the position I take with those agencies is that they're entitled to fair compensation, but it's got to be related to what their cost is. Their cost, I can assure you, for issuing a notice is not double what the cost is of the city traffic officers. There's the power under the Judicature Act of the province of Alberta that allows relief from forfeiture.

So if these companies can score the extra money, I guess they can get away with it. You have to send in a cheque. I think you have to tender an amount. You can tender it in full accord and satisfaction, and if they accept it, then they can't take further steps, and if they don't accept it, at least you can argue, then, that you got an equitable remedy and they can't proceed further.

Anyway, we're not here to talk about my multiple parking tickets, but I just wanted to say that there's a reason why I think we may lose some of that with this amendment. You know, I think in the grand scheme of things it may not affect a lot of folks, it may not affect a lot of cases, but it's one of those things that certainly attracted my attention and perhaps the attention of other members. I hope the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake would offer some clarification around that in terms of whether laches is going to be caught by this provision.

Now, since I don't see him jumping to his feet yet, I just want to make another observation. One would have hoped that we would have picked up section 4 when we were debating the bill – when was it? Two years ago we dealt with Fair Trading. I think it was proclaimed on September 1, 1999. This is something that maybe we all have to take some responsibility for, that we didn't pick up this provision. The provision, of course, has to do with collection agencies. Never the most popular outfit.

I just make this observation while we're looking at it. One of the things I hear a lot about from constituents, Mr. Chairman, has to do with students who are in difficulty over student loans. This is an issue. One of our colleagues, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, has probably talked to a lot of students who had difficulty with collection agencies as a consequence of student loans. It's one of the concerns we have, and while we're going to open up the Fair Trading Act to deal with certain elements of the bill, it's curious to me that we haven't looked at some of the other problems that my colleague who's responsible for the whole Learning section is continually raising with me, some of those concerns about students being pressed in terms of collection difficulties and collection problems. I'm not sure we see anything in Bill 17 that's going to ameliorate that condition. If the critic for Learning has got any thoughts on that, I know he's going to be anxious to share them with us.

Anyway, those are the observations I wanted to make at this point on Bill 17, the Fair Trading Amendment Act. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a real pleasure to get up this evening and speak to the aspects of Bill 17 in committee. It's interesting to look at how this bill is now being modified, I guess, to more clearly define the relationship between how individuals work under the aspect of the ability to act as a reporting agency and provide information to the public in terms of the credit and personal report components. What we're in effect having now is a less defined method of determining who can be the agency that will in essence be providing for the ability to report by taking out "and" and replacing it with "or." In essence what we're doing is setting up two sets of criteria that will allow for a person or an individual to be designated as a reporting agency in the aspect of this act.

I guess the question that we have to think about and have to deal with, then, is: how do we go about determining whether or not the agency will still be fully responsible and fully credible with this new separated definition? It seems now that in fact what you've got are some agencies which can operate on their own by definition of their agreement with other agencies to share information. You have another set of agencies now which will be allowed to deal with reporting of credit materials just because they are identified within the regulations of the act. So, in essence, the one group will be able to operate outside those regulations by just having an agreement.

What we're going to see, then, is the potential for, say, credit card companies or businesses to get together and share credit information on a reciprocal basis in a nonprofit way, and we won't have any mechanism within the regulations to determine or to identify when and where that's happening, because there doesn't seem to be the case for reporting. We need to have that really clarified. That effectively deals with the issues there that we need to look at in terms of clarifying.

The amendment that is being put in place under section 45(3)(b) I think is quite adequate and quite well described here. What it does is provide for almost a period of nonclaim so that after six years they can no longer report the fact that a debt has been put into abeyance or a noncollection way. What we've got, then, is essentially – if both the creditor and the creditee have not taken any action to effectively bring to conclusion a debt that's outstanding after six years, then both of them probably have assumed that that debt is no longer functional, and probably it's best that it actually not be included in the credit reports because it's not being pursued. The person is obviously not being pursued for payments on it, so that's probably a good amendment.

So with those few comments, Mr. Chairman, I think you can count on my support for these amendments. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 15 and Bill 17.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MRS. O'NEILL: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: bills 15 and 17. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 18
Alberta Personal Income Tax Act

Ms Carlson moved that the motion for second reading be amended to read that Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly believes that as a result of the tax reduction measures announced in the 2000 federal budget, the bill would not ensure that all Alberta taxpayers receive a fair tax reduction.

[Adjourned debate May 2: Mr. Herard]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to continue speaking to Bill 18. The Leader of the Official Opposition says that her party mostly agrees with Alberta's new tax plan. She says that they agree with raising the basic and spousal . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: No.

MR. HERARD: Well, just wait a minute. She says that they agree with raising the basic and spousal exemptions, and I think that's good. She even agrees with unhooking from their cousins down east, which I think is good. You know, the tax preparation system today is so complex that I'm told that at least 75 percent of all Canadians employ a tax preparer to do their income tax. Now 75 percent of all Canadians have to go to accountants and to tax consultants to prepare their income tax because the system has gotten so far out of hand and is so complicated.

The opposition claims that a single rate makes the tax system regressive and that it puts more pressure on the so-called middle-income group. Well, I don't know, but I think the Member for Edmonton-Glenora should probably consult his own staff, because I understand that one of his staff members over the years has produced a document that's been accepted by most economists as an index of progressivity, and according to that index of progressivity, the new tax system that we are currently proposing is more progressive than the old one. So perhaps the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora could talk to his own staff members with respect to that.

They've said things like we're "serving the interests of a select few very wealthy taxpayers." In reality, the biggest tax break in percentage terms is for the 190,000 low-income Albertans who will have their taxes eliminated by the new tax system.

The opposition has also said things like, "I hope that the government will quickly rethink its position on this flat tax and will come to the conclusion that it's not fair [and] that it's an unequal distribution of benefits." As I just said, low-income Albertans will receive the biggest tax breaks, so if the opposition considers this to be unequal distribution of benefits and unfair, then that's really difficult to understand. The government believes in helping those that need it the most, and 190,000 Albertans will now pay no taxes.

And for the opposition to say that Bill 18 "destroys some of the parts of Canadian tax policy which have made this country one of the most desirable places in the world to live" I think is absurd. I highly doubt when most Canadians look at their pay stubs that they're thankful they pay such high taxes.

And the opposition must have their heads on backwards to think that these same taxes make this province "one of the most prosperous places in the world to live and do business." No. It is by lowering taxes, which is part of the Alberta advantage, that we have made this province distinctive.

Again, they say that Bill 18 punishes the middle class and rewards the very wealthy. I'm afraid I can't follow that logic. Everyone is getting a tax cut, including middle-income earners, so where is the pressure on this group? In fact, it is the current system that punishes those who work harder because the more you earn, the more you lose through your taxes.

If the opposition truly supports a progressive tax system, they should support Bill 18. You see, there are two ways to establish a progressive tax system. One way is to tax high-income earners at a very high level. The other way is to tax low-income earners at a very low level. That is progressive, and that's what we prefer in this province.

We've decided to take the most compassionate approach and not tax the lowest income earners at all. That's right. An additional 190,000 low-income Albertans will not pay any provincial taxes. Half of Alberta income tax payers won't pay Alberta income tax. However, they will still pay federal tax. To be fair, we've also included tax cuts for middle- and high-income earners. We think this is a far better approach than taxing high-income people out of this country.

Here's an example of how progressive our system will still be. A single rate of 10.5 percent would increase basic and spousal exemptions. A two-income, two-child family earning $40,000 will pay about $261 in provincial taxes, or .7 percent of their income. The same family at $100,000 will pay almost 23 times as much in income taxes, or 6 percent of their income. That family at $250,000 will pay about 83 times as much, or $21,615, in provincial income taxes, which is more than 8.5 percent of their income. The higher the income, the higher the percentage of income that will go to income tax. So I think that's an example that shows there is progressivity in this system.

Another example. Nearly 200,000 lower income Albertans will not pay a cent of provincial income tax. In fact, some families will be given money through the Alberta family employment tax credit. At the same time, a two-income family with two children earning $55,000 a year will get a 25 percent tax cut, and if that same family earned $100,000 a year, they would get a 12 percent tax cut.

Academics have studied the progressivity of a single-rate tax system and a multibracket system. When Dr. Robert Shapiro published his paper Why Fairness Matters: Progressive Versus Flat Taxes, he was director of economic studies at the Progressive Foundation and vice-president of the Progress Policy Institute. In fact, the opposition Treasury critic quoted Dr. Shapiro, although the hon. member must have misunderstood the doctor's meaning. Dr. Shapiro outlines three tests of tax reform: increased simplicity, increased economic activity, and increased equity. Alberta's new tax plan accomplishes all three of these.

There are formal ways of measuring what we mean when we say that a tax system is more progressive. Economists use complicated formulas in mathematics, but the matter ultimately comes down to comparing how much income tax low-income earners pay compared to high-income earners. The new Alberta tax system, particularly with its huge personal and spousal deductions, means massive tax cuts for those at the bottom of the income scale. In fact, their tax cut is so much larger than the cut for those at the top of the income scale that Bill 18 actually makes Alberta's tax system more progressive, not less.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, Bill 18 introduces a fairer, simpler tax system with a single rate, while maintaining progressivity through the amount of tax paid as a percentage of income.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure this evening to get up and speak to the amendment to Bill 18. When I spoke at second reading on this bill, I spent time talking about the aspects of flat single-rate taxes and progressive multiple-rate taxes and how those are related back to the issue of the relationship that exists between taxable income and those kinds of issues. The amendment we have on the floor tonight actually deals with the second component, I guess the public consumption part, of Bill 18 in the sense of the tax cut. What Bill 18 is doing is putting in place two significant changes to Alberta's tax collection process under the process of one act, in the sense that it is moving to a two-tiered tax system: the non tax-paying Albertan and the 10 percent or whatever percent of tax-paying Albertans that will be in the other group. What we end up with, then, is having that as a major structural change in the way we are going to be collecting our taxes.

Now, if we were to make that structural change at the same time that we in effect were going to collect for general revenue the exact same number of tax dollars, then what we would be doing is having this debate tonight on the context of what are the relevant merits of two different structures of our Alberta tax system: the two-tiered or two-rate structure versus what we have now, which is effectively a four-rate structure where we take our income tax off the no-tax payer and the three categories at the federal level. So that would in effect be the debate if that was all we were looking at, moving from an effective four-level tax structure down to a two-level: those that don't pay and those that do.

What we've got is in effect a two-tiered structure, as I said. The debate that is being addressed by this amendment is the overlying impact that occurs now, because within that structural debate we are also going to look at how the distribution of a tax cut will occur for Albertans. So the amendment effectively is saying that we should not deal with Bill 18 at this time because the way it is set up is not appropriate in delivering a reasonably fair distribution of that tax cut that is going to be the result of the structural tax change and the reduction in revenues collected by the tax system in conjunction with the introduction of that tax change.

We listened to the Member for Calgary-Egmont talk about the fact that we now in essence are going to have a much more progressive tax reduction system by implementing this. Yes, when you take some people off the tax roll, their tax goes from paying some tax to zero, which gives them a very large tax reduction, all the way from something to nothing. When you divide and do a percentage on that, you end up with, you know, a very large number, because you're trying to divide by a zero. In fact, we do in that way end up with the people who are going off the tax roll getting a very large structural change. But when we look at the people who are still going to be on the tax roll, start at that level and go through all the groups and all the income brackets that will subsequently be still paying taxes under this new structure, we see that in effect the people at the lower end of the scale of recipients of the tax structure change are not going to be getting the same equivalent tax reduction as the people at the upper end.

Mr. Speaker, that all goes back to the idea of how you define fairness and how you look at fairness in the context of this debate. When we're trying to change the relative burden of taxes, the fairness component becomes a debate about whether or not the revised structure in itself is fair, rather than whether or not the relative change in actual dollars in an individual's pocket is positive or negative. Everybody wants a tax cut, but if you get a tax cut of $100 compared to a tax cut that is a much larger amount based on a higher income, is it equally fair in the context of your total income and your total obligation in respect of your commitment to support society?

Mr. Speaker, the issue then becomes one of how we deal with trying to put in place a structural change that does what the Member for Calgary-Egmont suggested we should be looking at: trying to get a system that is simple, that is in effect equitable. This is where we have to look at the impact of this amendment, its challenge to the fairness of this act, and how we look at the relative responsibilities of each of us as Albertans to participate in a contribution to general revenue. Because as we participate in our economic system at a higher level of income, we also get a significantly larger degree of benefit from our social system, from our social structures, and from the general aspects of society than do people who are participating at the very lowest level of taxable income.

Effectively, the people at the lowest ends of our taxable income are getting their infrastructure, they're getting their health care, and they're getting their education. They don't fully participate in a lot of the other aspects of our society. So as we get higher incomes, we should be willing to allow that higher income to be taxed at a higher percentage rate, not a total tax rate taken in terms of a dollar measure. We should be willing and as a society accept the fact that people with a higher income should be willing to pay a proportionately higher but not a significantly higher percentage of tax.

Mr. Speaker, I am probably the first one in the group to admit that the brackets and the tax rates we've had in the past need to be reviewed and need to be altered. That, I think, every Albertan can recognize and most would support. But the idea of moving every individual in the province who is paying taxes, all the way from the person at the very bottom end of the income scale who just exceeds in income the basic exemption calculations up to the top executive/investor, all of the rest that are going to have an income – I don't even have a clue what might be a reasonable range for the top level of income for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I think all Albertans would recognize that as our income increases, we have, if nothing else, a social obligation to be willing to pay a higher percentage of our income in support of our social system and our social structure and society at large. So that's the issue that is being addressed when we start to look at how we have to define whether or not this bill provides us with fairness in the context of the changes in our tax structure. I guess what we want to do, then, is look at it from the perspective of how the changes we're talking about effectively represent economic activity, as the Member for Calgary-Egmont talked about, how it reflects the equity of the tax system and also how it in essence talks about the ease with which we can deal with taxes. As I said earlier in my previous debate, this system as outlined by Bill 18 is much simpler, much more responsive to our provincial wishes, and less likely to be taken off track, if you want to say that, by activities at the federal level.

So the decoupling part from the tax on tax again, I say, is a good move. The tax on income is the right way for us to go at this provincial level, and that in essence gives us both the simplicity of actual administration and the simplicity for Albertans to understand where we as a province are asking them to contribute the base income that we're asking them to contribute off of.

From that perspective, I think Bill 18 does effectively meet the criteria of simplifying our system, but it doesn't meet the criteria of adequately reflecting economic activity. As I said in my earlier debate, we have significant measures or quantities of income that are earned by persons at the upper income levels which are not reported on the base income taxable level in the federal forms. Until we in essence start to measure income as total income of an Albertan, then we have to make sure that the component of economic activity and the reflection of economic activity, the ability of an income to earn a reward for their efforts has been put in place. We have to do it by using a differential rate of taxation unless we're going to go and modify and complicate the reporting of incomes required by the federal government and develop our own new system of effectively measuring income.

I don't think we should justify or we can justify at a provincial level the complexity that would be required in our tax system, the administrative overhead that would be required for our tax system. So why don't we just leave it with the income measured by the federal government and recognize the fact that as we get to the higher income levels, we in essence want to use a higher percentage rate on measured income so that those persons are effectively contributing back to society in a measure that reflects their total income, not their measured income on the tax form?

That's why we should have a progressive step up for the groups at the higher level of income. In effect, a two-tiered system in taxation is not adequate when we have those that don't pay tax as one tier and everybody else being treated exactly equal. The people at the upper end of that scale effectively get more benefits from society, and they also get to have incomes that are not reported in the context of measurement at the federal level.

We should reflect on that. We should make sure society says: those persons should also contribute in a fair way.

So back to the amendment, Mr. Speaker, in the sense that when we want to look at that, we have to decide whether or not that structural change that we're putting in place through Bill 18 is appropriate, but we're also now saying that that structural change is going to be compounded in terms of the overall tax rebates.

As we go through that structural change, obviously if we're not going to tax on a percentage basis individuals at the upper income levels to the same extent or even to a modified extent or an extent above what we do at the lower levels, they are in essence going to get a much more significant tax reduction than will the individuals at the lower level of the current tax system. All the data that's been provided by the Provincial Treasurer originally and now the Acting Provincial Treasurer does show that. It does show that the benefits of the tax cut component within Bill 18 accrue mostly to the individuals who are at the upper levels of income.

Mr. Speaker, when we look at the concept of relative taxation in our province and relative taxation compared to other jurisdictions, Alberta has the advantage already of having one of the most advantageous tax systems in our economic sphere. That's Canada, North America, where our citizens can search out employment. The majority of the discrepancy in the tax for an Albertan versus an American or versus somewhere else in Canada – when it comes to the inside Canada comparison we, in essence, already have the most advantageous taxation system.

When we start to compare ourselves with the Americans, it's not our provincial taxation that creates the disadvantage and the disincentive for Albertans to stay here, Mr. Speaker. It's the federal taxation. Those numbers need to be revised. Those percentages that are used in calculating tax at the federal level need to be looked at, but we don't necessarily need to remove the total progressivity of it.

Mr. Speaker, it was quite interesting that when I was living in the U.S., the flat tax rate and the single tax rate was a debate down there, and all of a sudden it disappeared. I watched with fascination this week on TV as I saw Mr. Putin being sworn in as the new Premier of the Soviet Union. His only economic platform is to convert Russia into a single tax rate society. He wants to reintroduce the equality of everybody in terms of their obligations to society that was existent under the communist state. You know, he's going back to everybody being equal.

That creates no incentive to help society. That creates no incentive to recognize that as we make more money, we have a social obligation. We should have a willingness to support our society by contributing a smaller percentage increase in our income than the persons who are struggling at the lower levels of our tax structure. We already recognize that within a social system there are persons who have to have some benefit, and we allow them an exemption from taxation altogether.

So on those bases, Mr. Speaker, I hope we see a lot of people in this Legislature recognizing that we have to look at a further revision to the structure component that we're dealing with in Bill 18 so that when we do have a tax system that is functional in Alberta, that tax system will be fair, it will be equitable, and as we transfer from the current system to that new system, there's a degree of equity in the benefits received in terms of the tax reductions that are coming back to us as Albertans.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, everybody agrees with that and will support this amendment. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel compelled to enter into this debate. I intend to be brief, but I want to discuss this whole issue of a progressive tax system.

The Member from Lethbridge-East has spent some time talking about the lack of progressivity under this proposal for a single rate of taxation. I have to point out that this is a single rate of taxation in theory only. If there was no personal exemption, then it would be true that every taxpayer in Alberta would pay an identical amount of percentage of income for tax, and then it would not be a progressive system.

But what people overlook – and I've had many discussions with a number of my constituents over this issue – is the very significant increase in personal exemptions that go along with the implementation of this system. So I need to point out and all members need to understand that the 11 percent referred to in the bill now, to be amended, as indicated by the Provincial Treasurer, to 10 and a half percent when we get to committee stage on this bill, is not a single rate of taxation. It is, in fact, a maximum rate of taxation. Realistically, unless someone earns an infinite amount of income, no one will pay 10 and a half percent. Everyone will pay some percentage less than that, because everyone gets to deduct the personal exemption off their income before it starts.

Let me give some specific examples. We'll deal with a two-income family with different scenarios of income. If a two-income family with two children has total earnings in that family of $40,000, under the new plan they will pay about $261 in provincial income taxes, or .7 percent of their income. So the total tax on that $40,000 is .7 percent of their income. If the same family, same exemptions, same everything had total earnings of $100,000, they would pay 23 times as much income tax, or 6 percent of their income. If that same family earned $250,000, they would pay about 83 times as much tax, or $21,615 in provincial income taxes, which is a little more than eight and a half percent of total income.

So, Mr. Speaker, what I'm saying is that this is very much a progressive form of taxation. The more an individual or a family unit earns, the more they pay in taxes, and the maximum tax they will pay is 10 and a half percent. But in order to pay that 10 and a half percent, they would have to earn an astronomically high income. I haven't taken the time to figure it out, but it would be well in excess of a million dollars before they would be paying the 10 and a half percent or anything significantly less than that.

So let's not be fooled into thinking that this is a tax system whereby we have some taxpayers that pay nothing and all the rest of the taxpayers paying exactly the same amount. It's not that simple. In fact, if a taxpayer earns a thousand dollars more than their personal exemptions, they only pay tax on that last thousand dollars.

They don't pay any tax in the case of a two-person family where we've got approximately $26,000 in exemptions. If two people in a family earn $27,000, they don't pay 10 and a half percent on $27,000, because they're over that threshold. They only pay 10 and a half percent on $1,000.

So it is very much a progressive system. It is a system whereby because of the very significant increase in personal exemptions, the effective tax rate goes from zero to 10 and a half and everything in between. It is a single tax rate only from the point of view of determining the maximum tax rate. Everyone who earns less than an infinite amount of income pays somewhat less than 10 and half percent, and it decreases to the point where they pay zero.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

MRS. SLOAN: I regret to begin my debate on Bill 18 where I left off on Bill 11, but it would seem to me that some of the delusional tendencies that I saw in the debate in 11 have now carried over into 18. Most likely there will be need for further education within the government's own caucus relative to how this tax rate is going to apply.

In essence, what we're in the uncomfortable position of doing tonight is again having to amend a bill that is, in my opinion, an unsalvageable bill. The premise of Bill 18, to propose a flat tax, is in essence an experiment, another experiment which this government is resolved to press upon Albertans. They have absolutely no evidence, no indication, no proof that this is going to provide a stable tax environment and revenue environment for the province.

I spoke in second reading about the substantive cautions that the Auditor General made relative to the ministry and business plans. Just to refresh our memory, a section which I did not include is in section 3 of his report where he talks generally about his reservations. This is in the last fiscal year.

Section 19 of the Auditor General Act requires the Auditor General to provide details in his report of reservations of opinion in reports issued on financial statements.

As described in detail in Section 2, on page 265, I reserved my opinion on all 1999 Ministry and department financial statements because of significant departures from generally accepted accounting principles.

Further, my 1999 auditor's reports for the following contained reservations of opinions for the reasons described:

Excluded direct costs.

Put another way, what in fact did these ministries do? They did not enter on the ledger costs that had been incurred by the ministries.

- Fifteen Funds, Foundations and Provincial agencies including Alberta Social Housing Corporation, Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission and Alberta Dairy Control Board
- Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board
- Six Persons with Developmental Disabilities boards

Excluded direct costs and accuracy of contract costs

- Calgary Rocky View Child and Family Services Authority

Excluded direct costs, inventories, revenue and capital assets

- Michener Centre Facility Board

Expensing of capital assets

- Environmental Protection and Enhancement Fund

Valuation of donated artwork, which, granted, may not be as significant as some of the others identified.

Inappropriate disclosure of related party transactions

- Medicine Hat College . . .

Revenue that could not be audited for completeness

- Northland School Division . . .
- Lethbridge Community College Foundation . . .
- University of Alberta 1991 Foundation

The relevance of that, Mr. Speaker, is that in our last fiscal year we have this government, in essence, underestimating the cost of doing business in this province and then believing that members of this Assembly would support a proposal for a flat tax possibly reducing revenue to run programs. It seems to me they're fabricating the argument.

They're trying to create the picture that it doesn't cost as much to do business in this province anymore by not entering costs in the ledger, which the Auditor General has pointed out as an error and has made reservations about. On the other hand, on the revenue side they are saying: this is the flat tax structure that we propose, and it will be sufficient to fund the programs that are required by this province.

The further reality, Mr. Speaker, is that I don't believe this government really has done any type of assessment about what the needs of our future citizen population will be, what those needs will be relative to social programs, what they will need with respect to environmental concerns and addressment, what needs will be required to keep abreast with technology advancements. If in fact the government hasn't done an assessment about what the province might need in 10 or 20 years with a population that is much, much older than they are now, how do they propose to change our tax structure and bind us to that tax structure, thereby tying the hands of a future government in terms of its revenue side?

I think a lot about this. This is my assessment, not being a tax expert and by no means being an expert in provincial economies. This is really, Mr. Speaker, a lot about political upstaging. It's about Alberta wanting to be seen on the national stage as the front-runner in the race to go down the road, implement a tax structure – albeit perhaps we are in the best position to take the risk, because we have always been one of the wealthiest provinces and we've always had a significant cushion of resources because of oil and gas revenues. But that may not always be the case. Really, when it's just about maybe old boy competition, does it make good sense in the interests of citizens to impose a tax structure that really hasn't been proven to work anywhere else, hasn't been linked to a needs assessment of what types of provincial concerns and issues there will be in the future in this province and what revenue will be required to meet them?

What if we were to find ourselves someday, Mr. Speaker, actually needing the federal government? Now, I've always felt that we do need them, but I think there are many members on the government side of the House that don't really believe we need the federal government, that believe they can go about their business. They've got sufficient money, sufficient power to run the show. But what if someday we were in a position where we didn't find ourselves quite as comfortable as we find ourselves today on our revenue side and we actually needed to rely on some of the federal government tax revenue, like Newfoundland does, like New Brunswick does, like the Maritime provinces do?

Those provinces have done some amazing things with provincial revenues substantially less than our province's. Nonetheless, they are fundamentally committed to maintaining a healthy federal relationship because that reliance is there. I have seen far more goodwill come out of the eastern provinces towards building a stronger health care system and building stronger social programs than I have seen come out of this province in my term of office. That's regrettable, because we are in a position to be leaders in a whole variety of policy and program areas, but we choose – and maybe, Mr. Speaker, it is really a gender thing. I've heard the analysis offered before that men seem to have a preoccupation with money and it's the women that look after all the other trivial issues. But this really is just about money. It's not giving consideration to anything else.

Let's start with homelessness. We have had a government that has waxed on for at least the last 18 months about the critical nature of homelessness in this province. We have tremendous agencies out there that every day are taking people in: some people who are working and some people who are destitute. We've got good agencies in Calgary who have gone out on a limb and committed to expand their facilities. The Salvation Army is one, as is the drop-in centre. They're committing themselves to millions of dollars. I think between the two it's $22 million and $15 million combined, so you're looking at $37 million. Not a cent of provincial money is yet committed on that, Mr. Speaker. Not a cent.

Similarly, we see the provincial developmental disabilities boards. I've mentioned those arising out of the Auditor General's report, where the government had not accurately reflected the costs. Here we have an area where we've had the junior minister of health go about the province and conduct a review. We have seen a report released from that associate minister, and we've seen a number of recommendations, all of which require resources: human resources and accompanying fiscal resources. Now, where is the government proposing to find those resources? To date we haven't seen any committed, despite the fact that the minister has gone about and held meetings subsequent to his report release. There's no action plan. There's no implementation plan. There are no funding commitments.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, we had a children's summit last fall. At the time, I lauded the government for creating a report that contained many of the issues that people in the social services and child welfare areas had talked about needing to have addressed for some time. We will soon be within about three months of having another one. We still have not seen an action plan in that area. We still have not seen a commitment of resources. You know, I've had people in my office and I've had people in the field talk about the restraint in child welfare, in day care, and in SFI. We separate families. We take their children into temporary guardianship or permanent guardianship, fundamentally risking the family relationship and unit, Mr. Speaker. I hear directors out there talking about the fact that they don't have the resources to allow these families to have weekly visits. That causes me grave concern. Why is that? Because we have seen a consistent underfunding of these social program areas for consecutive fiscal years.

Also on the horizon we have a critical shortage of health care professionals that is estimated to continue to grow. We have no provincial action plan to deal with that issue. In fact, the government has . . . [Mr. Day entered the Chamber] Thank you very much for coming in to listen to my speech on Bill 18, Mr. Provincial Treasurer.

MR. SAPERS: Former.

MRS. SLOAN: The former Provincial Treasurer. Whatever the hon. member's ambitions might be, Mr. Speaker, there's relevance in being present in the Assembly for the debate on this bill, and there most certainly was relevance in being in the Assembly earlier this evening in the debate and vote on Bill 11.

Where I was at was on the discussion of how we have a huge public policy issue in the shortage of health care professionals and that we have an aging population and no plan to do anything about that. In fact, we compounded the shortage by the cuts that were made in the '93 to '96 period. Again, how could I in good conscience, as a member of the health care professions, stand and support a tax structure that is going to basically implement an experimental framework for revenue? I don't find myself in a position of being able to do that.

So there are, as I said, a whole raft of concerns about Bill 18. It is rooted more in politics and upstaging than in good common sense. Again, we see the opposition to this bill and the awareness of this bill rising within our citizens, and no doubt we will see, perhaps not to the same degree as with Bill 11, a substantive amount of feedback on this bill in the weeks to come. I certainly hope though, Mr. Speaker, that we have the good common sense in this Assembly to not place ourselves in a compromised position relative to tax revenues. I don't feel overly confident of that, because I certainly think we placed ourselves in a compromised position in the approval of a private health care tier in our province earlier this evening.

With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, and speaking in support of the amendment but in firm opposition to the bill before us, I will take my seat. Thank you.

MR. DAY: Just a few comments, Mr. Speaker. It's been exciting as I've been able to consult with Canadians from coast to coast and talk to them about a single rate of tax. The excitement is at a very high level that a government is finally recognizing that people, when they want to work harder or become more skilled and more educated, should not be punished at a higher rate because they want to move along and generate more revenue for themselves and for their families. So a single rate of tax is something that is really being looked at, in terms of Alberta, in a very positive way.

I can tell you the importance of Alberta proceeding with this. I know there's some reflection as to the federal position with the budget. As I understand it, the amendment has already been tabled related to moving – has it been tabled? [interjections] There's been a filing and an indication already that the government will be indeed moving from 11 percent to 10.5 percent. Mr. Speaker, that is the ongoing commitment, that this particular plan will continue to benefit Albertans.

From the way this is catching on across the country and the way, as I understand, that the Canadian Alliance is also proposing a single rate of tax at the federal level of 17 percent, this is absolutely in line and in unison and resonating with what is going to be happening. Of course, not too many months from now the greatly anticipated change, not just of the tax situation federally but in fact of the federal government, shows that Alberta is once again in the prime position to be dovetailing a single rate of tax here with the new federal Canadian Alliance government, which will also be bringing in a single rate of tax.

The economic effect of that on not just Alberta but in fact the entire nation is going to be profound. It's going to be very exciting, Mr. Speaker. It has just been such a delight to be right across this country, in every province, every other Canadian seeing Alberta as being a leader, and seeing Canada then moving to this incredibly sensitive jurisdictional approach to a single rate of tax for all of the citizens of Canada, the citizens of Alberta leading the way and the citizens of Canada joining in.

It's going to be an exciting time, and I'm extremely in support of this particular endeavour, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I'm actually quite delighted to have had the opportunity to follow the Member for Red Deer-North. In fact, a couple of observations as I get to my primary concern with the amendment we're dealing with.

The first one. I had occasion recently to go to Mount Royal College. My wife and I had a chance to see the Music Man, that was put on by a musical group. The thing I remember most was Robert Preston coming into a new town, and he's going to sell something he's very excited about. When I listen to the Member for Red Deer-North, you can almost hear the people in the musical saying: talk a lot, talk a lot, talk a lot. You almost want to sort of join in the chorus because you really feel like we've got Robert Preston right here in the Assembly.

AN HON. MEMBER: I can't hear you sing.

MR. DICKSON: I can't sing.

The point I was going to make, Mr. Speaker, is that despite all the salesmanship of the Member for Red Deer-North – and he certainly demonstrated his ability as a salesperson – Albertans are not going to be naive enough. They are not going to be duped by a bill that's passed off as a terrific kind of tax reform just because you lop some people off at the bottom end and just because we make a couple of changes. We've somehow sort of passed off tax cuts as part of this package.

Now, there is so much more I want to say, but I'm thinking that in view of the hour, Mr. Speaker, what I might do at this point is simply move to adjourn debate on Bill 18 and come back and pick this up perhaps tomorrow.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[At 11:50 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 11, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/05/11

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O God, grant that we the members of our province's Legislature may fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all our people. Guide our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly Lisa Bobbie Schreiber Hughes, U.S. consul general in Calgary. Mrs. Schreiber Hughes is leaving her post for a new position in Surinam, South America. It is certainly with a sense of sadness that we say farewell but also with a great appreciation for her dedicated hard work over the past three years strengthening Alberta/U.S. relations and for her assistance on many important issues. She has always carried out her duties with admirable skill, enthusiasm, and dedication, and she undoubtedly leaves many friends and associates in Alberta.

We wish her well as she moves on in her career to new challenges and ask that she always remember and keep a small part of her heart for this province and this country.

I would now ask, Mr. Speaker, that our honoured guest rise and receive the very traditional and very warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I'd present a petition signed by 153 citizens from Fort Saskatchewan, Edmonton, Sherwood Park, and St. Albert urging the government to increase funding of children in public and separate schools to a level that covers increased costs due to contract settlements, curriculum changes, technology, and aging schools.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition this afternoon on behalf of a number of Calgary citizens. This petition is concerning the Calgary Herald labour dispute. It reads, "We, the undersigned, petition the assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition signed by 200 citizens from Edmonton, Barrhead, Calgary, and Sherwood Park who are opposed to Bill 11, for a total of 22,452 Albertans' signatures on this petition opposed to Bill 11 presented by this one member of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the petition in my name about this government not promoting private health care and undermining public health care be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure this afternoon to ask that the petition I placed on the Order Paper yesterday regarding the promotion of private, for-profit health care in this province now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and with your permission ask that the petition I tabled on May 9 with regards to the government's promotion of private health care now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented to the Legislative Assembly on May 10 regarding the divisive and disruptive labour dispute at the Calgary Herald now be read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned, petition the [Legislative] assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented on Wednesday, May 10 on mature women's health be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Alberta Government to take an enlightened preventative approach and add the newer and more effective medications and therapies to the Alberta Drug List to ensure the health of an aging society.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I request that the three petitions opposing Bill 11 that I tabled yesterday now be read and received.
Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to . . . stop promoting private for-profit health care, within the domain of medically required services, and to ban any existing for-profit operations that are conducting medically required surgical services, as paid for by the Government of Alberta through any Regional Health Authority in the Province.

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 24
Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act, 2000

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act, 2000.

This act will add heritage rangeland as a new category of protected areas in the province of Alberta. It will also allow increased protection under the special places program. This House may be interested to know that to date 7,300 square kilometres have been protected under the special places program.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to table the requisite number of copies of a news release on Bill 24, which was just introduced.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a report with regard to wage enhancement for child care professionals in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got three tablings in the form of one e-mail letter from Kay and Ross Gould from the riding of Calgary-North West, who are opposed to the passage of Bill 11 and have some excellent questions for the Premier; one e-mail from Fiona Boulet from the riding of the Premier, Calgary-Elbow, who is opposed to Bill 11; and a petition signed by 19 Albertans from Grassland, Lac La Biche, Plamondon, St. Lina, Hylo, Atmore, and Boyle who are opposed to Bill 11.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I have a single tabling. This is a summary of 128 questions that were raised by Calgarians who met at McDougall Centre on May 3 in protest over Bill 11.

Thanks very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My tabling today is five copies of an analysis done on the tax-on-income proposals in eight provinces across Canada that are moving to that kind of a scheme. What it shows is that of every other province who has delinked and gone to tax on income, Alberta stands alone in its ideological commitment to a flat tax. All of the other provinces recognized the problems with that.

1:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of the only written document I have from a constituent supporting Bill 11.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling this afternoon, and that is a letter I've received from the Premier of Newfoundland regarding the shortage of health care professionals not only in his province and this province but across the country.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling this afternoon. It's a copy of a news release from the Friends of Medicare with the title It's Not Over.

Thank you very much.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. TRYNCHY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to invite some 150-plus visitors from the Whitecourt constituency. They consist of 140 grade 6 students from the Percy Baxter school. They're under the leadership of their teacher, Mr. Jim Ferguson. They're accompanied by Mrs. June Harrison-Leier, Ms Elizabeth Shen, Mr. Paul McKay, Mrs. Tammy Lee and teacher assistants Mrs. Lynne Wilson, Mrs. Pat Miles, Mrs. Stacey Perrin along with parents and helpers Mrs. Susan Jaddock, Mrs. Wendy Robertson, Mr. Richard Binkley, Mr. Grant Morton, Mrs. Cathy Hogue, Mrs. Cindy Requa, Mrs. Florance Eigler, and Mrs. Kim McMillan. They're seated, I believe, in both galleries. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm reception of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to do two introductions, but if I could put the second one on hold, they may be here in the House a little later. Still it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly five members of the 15-member aging population study steering committee, and that includes myself and the hon. Member for Leduc. These members have been committed to this study for the past 18 months, and they are in Edmonton today and tomorrow for a meeting on this study. From my left to my right: Carol Blyth of Calgary, Jean Graham from Rocky Mountain House, Noreen Mahoney from Calgary, Donald Jung from Calgary, and Nick Kutash, to my far right, from Willingdon. Before I ask the members to rise, I just want to say a little bit of information. Donald Jung used to take the Hon. Gary Mar to Sunday school. Would the guests please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly approximately 20 relatively new department employees and interns from Economic Development. Their visit has been co-ordinated by Mr. Chris Mack of the department. They are here today to get a better understanding of the relationship and impact their work in the department has with and on the activities of our elected officials. They are seated in both the members' and the public galleries. I ask that they rise and receive the warm traditional welcome from the members of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm privileged this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly my new staff assistant, who's been working in my office since the beginning of winter into January and February of this year, and also my summer student, who joined us at the beginning of May. Mr. Dan Kostka is a graduate of Mount Royal College, obviously a large and important institution in my constituency, and he is joined by his colleague Steven Gallagher. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mrs. Cheryl Zittlau. She is a member of the bargaining unit for AUPE and is here to have some discussions today along with the president of AUPE, Dan MacLennan. I would ask her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Peace River.

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to the members of this Assembly a constituent, Wendy Gummesen of Peace River. Also, on behalf of the Member for Dunvegan I would like to introduce Denise Simard-Zawacki of Girouxville. They are here, I would expect, as part of the same negotiating team that was just introduced. They are seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a constituent of Edmonton Centre. Dan MacLennan is the president of AUPE, and he's in the members' gallery. I would ask that he please rise and accept the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MS PAUL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you Pat Newel. Pat is an LPN and works at the Royal Alex hospital. Pat is also a constituent of Edmonton-Castle Downs. I would ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you a constituent from the progressive town of Pincher Creek and the breathtaking constituency of Livingstone-Macleod. Myrna Wright is in the city today, I would imagine, for some of the same bargaining talks that will be going on. I'd like her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Gloria Surridge. Gloria is a licensed practical nurse and is a constituent of Edmonton-Whitemud. She is seated in the public gallery, I believe. I'd like to ask Gloria to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly today two of my outstanding constituents seated in the members' gallery. Mr. Allen Gowler, as most members will remember, was the Associate Sergeant-at-Arms for many years here in the Legislative Assembly. He only recently retired after 18 years in that position. Mr. Gowler is accompanied by his very good friend, Mr. Bill Horchuk, who is celebrating his 75th birthday today. I would invite Mr. Gowler and Mr. Horchuk to stand as all members of this Assembly give them a very warm and traditional welcome.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the federal government has finally confirmed what the Official Opposition and Albertans knew all along: surgical facilities under Bill 11 are private hospitals, plain and simple. If it results in queue-jumping, two-tiered medicine, enhanced services, and its profits are subsidized by the Alberta taxpayers, it's a private hospital. Why did the minister of health mislead Albertans and avoid telling the truth that approved surgical facilities are in fact private hospitals?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the very important part of the federal minister's statement is what we have maintained all along, and that is that our legislation and our practice in this province is in compliance with the Canada Health Act. We are the first province in Canada that I know of to have made that statement clearly and up front in a piece of legislation. I think that is the very significant message that has come from the federal minister.

Now, with respect to definitions of hospitals in our legislation, Mr. Speaker, I would remind members across the way in particular that we have defined a private hospital in the legislation and banned such hospitals. With respect to full service hospitals versus specialized surgical clinics we have provided further definition in the legislation as to the nature of surgical operations in this province, which I think is very favourable. It goes beyond what Mr. Rock is saying. It is a clearer definition of the various types of services that are being provided.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, will this minister finally come clean and admit to Albertans what they have known all along: approved surgical facilities are private hospitals?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, we have, for instance, in this province right now the Gimbel eye clinic, which is an approved surgical facility. I do not think any Albertan thinks that's a hospital. That is not deemed to be a hospital by any person in this province.

As I've indicated, in the legislation we have banned private hospitals, we have defined them as such, and we have put a fence around that. We have full service hospitals, which are well understood in this province, and we have specialized surgical clinics.

THE SPEAKER: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Can the minister advise when the road signs are going to be changed to say Approved Surgical Facilities One Kilometre to the Right?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker . . . [interjections] Here again the opposition asks a question, she doesn't quite sit down, and then she's yapping back at me and doesn't even give me a chance to answer the question. So please listen, and I'll give you an answer.

Mr. Speaker, for the record, there is a very clear policy that the Department of Health and Wellness follows to determine which locations are hospitals and which locations are health centres. We always follow the current policy.

Thank you.

Bill 11 Regulations

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, everyone knows the devil is in the details, and this government has a tradition of bringing in shell bills and leaving the real substance of the regulations to be developed behind closed doors. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why won't the minister hold public hearings on the creation of regulations under Bill 11?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think it's important to note that Bill 11 is a very detailed, very comprehensive piece of legislation. In terms of holding, quote, public hearings or having consultation, the effort and the direction of government in this regard I think has been extremely thorough. It's been unprecedented in terms of the length of time that has been provided, with our policy statement well prior to Christmas of last year. We have put out the bill to every household in this province in its actual form. We have as a government caucus been at dozens and dozens of meetings with respect to this particular issue. Therefore, I think it is evident that the bill itself has had a great deal of background work being done.

Now, with respect to the limited number of regulations that are required, Mr. Speaker, we are going to work methodically on those. We are going to consult with the people that are directly affected by the specific rules that have to be set in legislation and followed through in regulations.

As I said, with respect to the matter of consultation with Albertans and letting them know very clearly what is in the bill as amended, we have been very, very much committed to doing that. Yes, we have spent a significant amount of money on it. They've objected to that consultation, in any case, including the act itself, so I don't know what they want.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister at least refer Bill 11 and its regulations to the Standing Committee on Law and Regulations so that Albertans, in fact the public, can have input into something that's going to affect them so directly?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think we have a good record of this. When we have regulations to develop out of legislation approved by this Assembly, in developing them we do meet and consult with the people who are affected by the regulations. That is the approach we will continue to take.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister confirm that Bill 11 and its regulations will be referred to the Premiers and the federal government to ensure that it doesn't violate the social union framework of which this province is a signatory?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the social union framework I'm not quite sure what the relevance of that is given that the health legislation is built upon the social union and is more specific and more detailed than the clauses in the social union agreement.

With respect to the regulations, as I've indicated before, certainly we will make the federal minister aware of the regulation development process and of the regulations, as we have very, very methodically and very, very thoroughly, and very, very frequently kept the federal minister apprized of the policy statement that we initially put out, of the legislation when it came and was tabled before this Assembly. As to the amendments that were posed in this Assembly, all of that has been transferred promptly to the federal minister.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Compliance with Canada Health Act

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 4, 1999, this government agreed to a framework to improve the social union for Canadians. Part of this framework, which the minister obviously doesn't know about, is to respect the principles of medicare and "offer to consult prior to implementing new social policies and programs that are likely to substantially [impact] other provincial governments." My first question is to the minister of intergovernmental affairs. Will the minister initiate the process to avoid a dispute with the other provinces and federal government and refer Bill 11 to the dispute resolution panel?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I think it's been well documented in this Legislature over and over again on a daily basis, an afternoon and evening basis for several weeks now that the consultation on this particular piece of legislation is far more extensive than any other piece of legislation in the history of this province, some 47 or 48 hours.

In regards to the social union framework, I found it interesting when I read all of Mr. Rock's statement, not just select pieces. I find it interesting that he states, "We will continue to work openly and transparently with all provinces, in accordance with our Social Union Framework commitments." I can tell you that as minister responsible for the framework, I certainly welcome that news.

MS LEIBOVICI: Well, then, given that the Premier has already indicated that he wishes to discuss Bill 11 with the other provincial Premiers and the federal government, is the minister now confirming that in fact she will refer to and use the mechanisms of the social union framework in order to ensure consistency in the interpretation of the Canada Health Act principles across this country? Is that what you just said?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is that Alberta had a strong commitment to the social union framework, the principles that all governments in Canada signed on to, and that we welcome the federal government showing their commitment to that same agreement that they signed on to. As minister I would certainly welcome the appearance of Mr. Rock at one of the meetings to discuss these issues.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Premier has outlined very clearly that he has asked the Prime Minister, that he has talked to other Premiers across the country and asked that we have a dialogue, asked that we look at the consistency of legislation. Alberta has said on a consistent basis, hour after hour, some 47, 48 hours, plus all of the hours in question period – I think at least 70 percent of the time has been spent on this issue by our rough calculations – that we uphold the principles of the Canada Health Act.

When I read Mr. Rock's statement, there was no indication, in my view, in this statement that we in any way contravene that act, which would be an item of interest under the social union framework. What he does say – and he really didn't have to say it because they've proven it before – is that if any fees are charged for services at a private surgical clinic, we'll be penalized dollar for dollar. We know that. That has been proven to the detriment of Albertans in the past.

Mr. Speaker, I also note that he is going to spend some several million plus dollars on some more people to make sure it's enforced. I guess all of us would prefer to see Mr. Rock support us in the restoration of the CHST back to 1994 levels and give the other $4.8 billion dollars to health care in this country. If the opposition want to help the people in this province, they could support that.

MS LEIBOVICI: Let's get back to the question. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: is he prepared to delay proclamation of Bill 11 until a finding of fact by the disputes resolution process has occurred on whether Bill 11 contravenes the principles of the Canada Health Act?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, the federal minister has indicated that the legislation does not violate the Canada Health Act, so I fail to see what dispute there is to be resolved with respect to that particular point.

As far as the federal minister's indication that he is putting additional resources, some $4 million as I understand it, into enforcement or surveillance across this country to provide consistency in the application of the principles of the Canada Health Act, as the previous answer indicated, we are certainly in agreement with that.

The Premier has said many times that he would want to see consistency in the application of the Canada Health Act across the country, and we are certainly committed to that as a government, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Enhanced Medical Services

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal Health minister has come around to finally recognizing what Albertans have known right from the start, which is that Bill 11 legalizes private, for-profit hospitals. He also expressed grave concern that queue-jumping will inevitably occur because patients will face direct fees for things like enhanced services and private and semiprivate rooms. My questions are to the minister of health. Why did the government refuse to listen to Albertans' concerns and ban outright direct patient charges for enhanced services?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Bill 11 legislation of this government is very forward thinking in terms of being the only province, I think, in Canada that has in legislation a ban on any type of charge for enhanced services as a way of being able to queue-jump or being forced to pay money for an insured service. That's in the legislation.

With respect to completely banning such charges, I think we should just reflect on the practicality of that. For years in this province it has been understood that there would be a choice available to a patient coming into a hospital if the capacity was there to pay extra for a private room. Surely we are not going to ban that. We do know, for instance, with respect to casts that there are perfectly good plaster casts in terms of aiding the recovery of a patient who's had a fracture. On the other hand, there's the fibreglass cast, which people may want to pay extra for because it is more convenient. The important thing is that, again, the legislation addresses this whole issue, makes it very clear, including there being penalties in the legislation, that one should not be forced into paying any type of extra fee for an insured service in a facility across this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Enhanced Medical Services

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now that the minister has admitted that he has failed to ban direct charges to patients, will he ensure public consultation in the development of regulations so that the for-profit hospitals do not charge Albertans exorbitant rates for enhanced services and private rooms?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I would draw the member's attention to the fact that there are very comprehensive sections of Bill 11 which deal with that very issue. One section sets out the procedure that must be followed with respect to even offering or making information available to a person with respect to enhanced services or appliances. Further, there is another section which refers to a ban in any way on a person being pressured into paying for some type of advancement in the queue or in the waiting list. Those things are in this legislation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister can tell Albertans how much Albertans will have to pay if the federal Liberals ever have the courage to withhold funds from Alberta because of the inevitable violations of the Canada Health Act under Bill 11 that Minister Rock has indicated might occur.

Speaker's Ruling Hypothetical Questions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, that certainly is in the area of speculation, and I have no idea how one can actually deal with that. If you want to give it a kick, go ahead, but pretty brief here.

Enhanced Medical Services

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make two comments. One is that the legislation deals very clearly with that concern. The other thing is that the hon. leader of the third party is asking me a question about something that we don't intend to let happen. He may hope that it will happen, but it is very hypothetical.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite the fact that the Minister of Health and Wellness has already explained to this Assembly and to all Albertans that Bill 11 will prevent patients from jumping the queue by purchasing enhanced goods and services beyond those medically necessary items paid for by the public health system, in today's statement the federal Minister of Health and also, I might add, as is evident by today's questions, the opposition here in our Legislature still seem unclear on how the act protects Albertans from queue-jumping in this and other manners. Could the Minister of Health and Wellness elaborate yet one more time on the protections against queue-jumping in Bill 11 in Alberta?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think it's important to indicate that all across this country there are enhanced goods and services that are available in the health care systems of the provinces. We have in our legislation actually outlined a set of procedures and requirements with respect to these enhanced goods and services. Bill 11 clearly states that the sale of such products to patients must be clearly explained to individuals, they must not be pressured into purchasing them, there must be an agreement to buy, and you cannot in any way be prevented from having your rightful place in any waiting list that might exist by virtue of offering to pay for these particular devices.

So the bill is very clear on preventing queue-jumping, Mr. Speaker, for any particular purpose or advantage that might come through purchasing one of these services or devices.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

2:10

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can Albertans and Mr. Rock expect to see further safeguards in this regard before the bill is proclaimed?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, there are right now in the legislation very strong safeguards in this regard, and of course there is – and I could have mentioned it attached to what I mentioned in answer to the previous question – a process for penalties or fines to be levied for violation of the legislation. So that is the overall situation. With respect to some specific details those will be developed in the regulation development process so that it is very clear and all contingencies are dealt with.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine-Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you. Given that the federal minister also appears to suggest in his statement today that with Bill 11 Alberta is investing public funds in private, for-profit facilities, could the minister explain in fact how public funds are being spent?

MR. JONSON: Well, the legislation is very clear and our policy statement is very clear. With respect to private surgical clinics and with respect to contracts for delivery of diagnostic services and with respect to maintenance contracts, in all cases we are looking at a contractual relationship between the government and the entity getting the contract, Mr. Speaker, where we are paying from public funds for a public service for Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Fees for Services in Private Surgical Facilities

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday Bill 11, the legislation that will open the door to private, for-profit health care, was passed. This morning the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness said on the radio that facility fees would not be part of the contracts between private surgical facilities, otherwise known as private, for-profit hospitals, and regional health authorities. He also stated that the federal Minister of Health was only concerned about insured services not enhanced services. My questions are to the associate minister of health. Will he confirm his statement of this morning that facility fees will not be part of the contract between regional health authorities and surgical facilities?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I was asked some questions with respect to some comments that the federal Health minister had made regarding the application of Bill 11 and when it would come in and so on. What was asked about here was with respect to facility fees, which we know were outlawed some time ago and are no longer allowed to be charged. That is the case, and that will be continued under Bill 11.

AN HON. MEMBER: That's not what you said.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Facility fees. Now, don't get mixed up like you sometimes do between facility fees and facility services. They're very clearly identified here.

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about Media Reports

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, please. It would be really helpful if comments were addressed through the chair.

The chair just about got up. Basically, Beauchesne 408(1)(b) says: "Should . . . not inquire whether statements made in a newspaper," meaning radio or the media, "are correct." So the chair was really hoping the associate minister, if he were to deal with the question, would basically deal with policy.

Fees for Services in Private Surgical Facilities

MS OLSEN: My second question on this issue: by his comments here is he saying that facility fees now are not part of the pricing scheme in contracts between the Calgary regional health authority and the private eye clinics and the MRI clinics? Is that what you're saying?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Let's be really clear here, Mr. Speaker, because I can see that they need some help. Here are the facts. When contracts are entered into between regional health authorities and providers of insured surgical services, what we are clearly paying for is a fee for service for that particular service that is enunciated in the contract. I think Bill 11 clarifies some of the guidelines surrounding that and makes it even firmer and makes it even tougher, but more importantly it standardizes that approach right across the province.

One thing that we were committed to doing is putting some fences around those guidelines and making sure that one area of the province is equally treated to another area of the province. We recognize that there were some disparities earlier on, and we have now moved to clean that up, and we will continue to make improvements of that nature as we move on.

MS OLSEN: My final question is to the associate minister of health. Please clarify for us right now if you can that the pricing scheme that exists right now in the contracts between the regional health authorities and the private eye clinics and the MRI clinics do not in any way cover any facility fees. Is that what you're telling us, Mr. Junior Minister?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, perhaps I should have a private chat with that member and take the full time that is required to explain this and maybe even show her some examples.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 is very clear in what is and what isn't allowed to be charged for. There will be some regulations developed that will clarify that even further, and we will involve the appropriate parties to make sure that they are clear.

What we are talking about here is the possibility as an option only of allowing certain procedures to be done on a fee-for-service basis. That is what we pay the doctors and the surgeons to do now, and that same procedure will continue.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Allan Rock, the federal Minister of Health, has stated some concerns about the government's proposals to protect the publicly funded and publicly administrated health care system. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: has the federal minister conveyed any of the concerns expressed to the government, and has there been a reply?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, we have been very careful and I think also prompt in making sure that the federal government and of course the minister of health federally are informed of the steps that we have gone through and the content, first of all, of our policy paper; secondly, of the initial bill; and thirdly, with respect to the amendments.

With respect to the recent statements from the federal minister he has responded by indicating that the legislation is in compliance with the Canada Health Act. He has some areas where he has indicated that he feels there is some potential, as I understand it, not just in this province, Mr. Speaker, but all across Canada, for there being nonconformity with the Canada Health Act, and he is evidently committing considerable additional resources to monitoring the situation across the country. We think that that is certainly appropriate. The Premier and myself as minister have indicated that we want the consistent application of the Canada Health Act across this country.

With respect to specifics such as the concern raised with respect to charges being made for additional services or devices, Mr. Speaker, that is something that is common across the country. I know of no province where that option is not available. Provided that it is conducted in a way which protects the individual patient from being pressured into paying for unnecessary costs or in some way gives a patient an advantage in terms of the promptness of treatment, that is also something that I think the federal minister should be reviewing all across Canada. In our legislation we've banned that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: hasn't the federal minister himself asked the Alberta government to pass legislation containing the very principles included in its proposal?

2:20

MR. JONSON: You know, one of the great ironies of this whole debate and particularly of many of the questions and attitudes of members across the way towards the legislation is that the legislation was brought in and passed in large part because the federal government had indicated that we should legislate in this area, and we have. The College of Physicians and Surgeons indicated that we had a need for comprehensive legislation with respect to the whole matter of protecting the public health care system, and we've responded to that. Our own very expert and very capable blue-ribbon panel made the same recommendation, Mr. Speaker. So we've had those messages provided to us. We have acted on them with very comprehensive and thorough legislation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

MRS. FORSYTH: That's it. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Do I take it the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora is next?

Fees for Services in Private Surgical Facilities (continued)

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness will confirm that contrary to what he just told the Assembly, the physicians, the doctors, the surgeons who work in the private clinics – let's just concentrate on the ophthalmology clinics in Calgary – get paid according to the fee guide that's been negotiated between the province and the AMA and that they don't get paid out of the contract. So that would be contrary to what the associate minister said. If he'd just confirm that.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me just read this to them, and maybe they'll get it. I'm going to quote out of section 4 of Bill 11. It's called Facility Services.

Where a person receives an insured surgical service at a designated surgical facility,

- (a) the operator of the surgical facility shall provide facility services to the person, and
- (b) no person shall charge or collect any amount in respect of the provision of facility services that is in addition to the amount that is payable for the facility services by the health authority under an agreement referred to in section 8.

Now, just to further elucidate here, part 5, Definitions, gives a very clear indication of what facility services are, and the facility services that are to be provided include such items as

- (i) standard ward accommodation, or a semi-private or private room . . .
- (ii) meals;
- (iii) necessary nursing services . . .
- (iv) laboratory, radiological and other diagnostic procedures . . .

Those are clarified, and they go on for several other examples.

Those are facility services, but we do not pay facility fees, and you're not allowed to charge for facility fees over and above. That's the bottom line. So let's be clear in understanding the difference between facility fees versus facility services. Okay?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you. I may have to have a private chat with that member, Mr. Speaker.

Would the associate minister please explain what exactly the Calgary regional health authority, for example, pays for in its contract with the private surgical facilities? If it's not facility fees, Mr. Minister, what are they paying for?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: The contracts pay for surgical fees in accordance with the guidelines that are laid out. Let me explain that to you. Okay? Mr. Speaker, there is a schedule of fees for different types of surgical procedures, surgical procedures that are done in public hospitals or surgical procedures that are done in private clinics. They follow a schedule of fees that is negotiated and agreed to and then paid out through the contract. It's very straightforward.

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Speaker, I'll keep trying.

Will the associate minister please inform the Assembly who it is that pays the facility fees, the overhead charge? If it's not the facility fees, maybe the associate minister can reflect back on why it was that the federal government fined the government of Alberta millions of dollars for violating the Canada Health Act. Could you tell us who pays those facility fees and if they're going to be a continuing feature of the contracts?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think Edmonton-Glenora's colleague to the left would really know this one well, and perhaps she'll have a private chat with that member.

I could explain again the difference between facility fees and facility services for the benefit of the Assembly, which I think for the most part everybody understands. There are agreements that are arrived at with the Alberta Medical Association that cover these aspects of surgical procedures, and they're paid out in accordance with the agreed-to fees. Out of those fees that the doctors receive, they cover their overhead.

The fact is that the member is trying to arrive at a difference between facility fees and facility services. Once again, facility fees are forbidden, verboten, and against the law in this province. They've learned that lesson and we have too as a result of other members on the other side.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Trans Canada Trail

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Landowners adjacent to the Trans Canada Trail continue to have serious concerns about the sincerity of Alberta Trailnet's attempts to resolve the issues that impact them. On the one hand, Alberta Trailnet has been conducting meetings with the adjacent landowners to hear their concerns, yet on the other hand it appears to the adjacent landowners that Alberta Trailnet is attempting to do an end run around addressing those concerns by asking this government to legislatively bypass dealing with them and the local authorities. My question to the Minister of Community Development: could the minister confirm that Alberta Trailnet is requesting that the 2,200 kilometres of Trans Canada Trail in Alberta be designated as a continuous transportation corridor such as highways, pipelines, and utility lines?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is correct. Alberta will have when it's completed the longest section of trail in Canada, some 2,200 kilometres that will in effect join the Beaufort Sea and the Pacific Ocean via trails all the way to the Atlantic. Currently there's a relay going on, I believe, in central Alberta with water coming from the Arctic Ocean.

With respect to the negotiations there have been some concerns by landowners that are adjacent to proposed parts of the trail. Some parts of the trail are on abandoned rail lines; some of it is proposed along the irrigation right-of-ways; some of it is proposed along public roads. So there are a variety of owners involved in it.

Yes, the member is correct. There has been a suggestion made that perhaps legislation should be looked at to designate a trail.

MR. MARZ: Once again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: could the minister assure my constituents that any proposals brought forward by his department regarding the Trans Canada Trail or Alberta Trailnet would not bypass or restrict any existing local authority control over land use on the issue of trails?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The role that Community Development is playing in this issue and continues to play is to ensure that the concerns of all the people with interests in the trail are met, both the proponents of the trail and the landowners adjacent to it. There are a variety of legislative changes that will have to be made. Certainly this department will not endorse any singular action that would infringe on the rights of either party.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. I believe the minister answered it in part, but I'd just like him to assure me that the concerns of the adjacent landowners, being the major stakeholders that they are, would be paramount and that they would have direct input into any proposed changes in the future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will continue to support all the efforts made by the people involved to resolve the adjacent landowner concerns along any parts of the trail throughout the province, and I'll continue to encourage full and I stress constructive dialogue between both sides in order that we can have all the stakeholders involved with a high degree of comfort and the trail designated and completed as soon as possible.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Inappropriate Health Care Billing

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Health and Wellness dismissed our very valid concerns of fraud in the health care industry. Now the annual report of the Alberta College of Optometrists notes that a member has been suspended because of his failure to “make restitution” to the Alberta health care insurance plan “for claims that were inappropriately billed.” All my questions this afternoon are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. In this instance, what action is the government taking to collect the money that is owed to Alberta taxpayers?

Thank you.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'd like to indicate that the health professionals across this province that claim for various costs and services I think have an exemplary record in terms of adhering to the rules and regulations and being fair in all of their dealings. Of course, where you have thousands of people involved, just as in any other walk of life there are regrettably occasional situations where a person is alleged to be and in due course in some cases proven to be improperly conducting him or herself regarding charging for services.

There are two avenues through which this is dealt with, Mr. Speaker. It is, I think, very consistently dealt with by the professional organizations as being unprofessional conduct, and the hon. member has referred to the action that is taken there. With respect to Alberta Health and Wellness we take the appropriate legal action to recover those moneys and to in some cases lay charges if that is indicated to be necessary.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness tell the House how many more instances of inappropriate billings are occurring under his ministry under his watch?

Thank you.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, this, as I've said, is a serious matter, one which is thankfully very, very infrequent. With respect to the number of cases that I have dealt with as minister, I would have to check the records. I know that there has been more than one certainly, and it is followed up through the proper legal channels. It is certainly a very, very minimal number, and I think that is a tribute to the people involved, to the agencies such as the various colleges and professional organizations that help monitor and enforce this matter. It is also, I think, a tribute to the work and the care and the checking that our own finance department does in Health and Wellness. We certainly do act upon cases that come forward where there may be allegations of illegal procedures.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question: what additional resources will the hon. minister commit to monitor and stop any more inappropriate billings to the Alberta health care insurance plan?

Thank you.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I guess it is perhaps the Liberal way. You have one alleged violation, and I suppose they'd spend a million dollars on it, you know, set up a special program, do a royal commission or something.

There is a procedure in place which we use. There are procedures in the professional organizations to follow through, Mr. Speaker.

The mechanisms for dealing with these situations are in place now under the budgets that we currently have for Alberta Health and Wellness and the funds that are in the purview of the professional organizations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Physician Remuneration in Private Surgical Facilities

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had some questions posed to me by my constituents in regard to this government's proposal to allow regional health authorities the option to contract some minor surgical services to private providers. My questions are all to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Could the minister tell this Assembly how doctors in these facilities would get paid? Would they be paid on a regular fee-for-service basis, or would they indeed be on salary to the facility?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, these physicians would be paid according to the agreement between Alberta Health and Wellness acting on behalf of the government of Alberta and the Alberta Medical Association. They would be paid on a fee-for-service basis in the majority of cases, or they might be paid on a flat fee or contract basis under one of our primary care innovation projects in the province. But they would be paid under the provisions of the AMA agreement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would physicians be able to work in both public hospitals and private facilities, and if so, would they not be in conflict of interest?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, physicians would be able to work in both venues. As I said, the overall method of payment would be the same; the rates would be the same for the procedures or services for diagnosis that were being provided. That is, I think, very clear in the legislation. It has been the case for years and years in this province with respect to the clinics that we've had existing for many years. People work in their own clinics, whether it is their own doctors' office or some more specialized service, and of course, if they then work in a hospital, they are paid according to the rates.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once more to the Minister of Health and Wellness: didn't Albertans say no to this kind of proposal in last year's health summit and in other forums? Why are you not complying with their wishes?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, with due respect I have to totally disagree with the hon. member's contention as far as the health summit is concerned. The health summit was, first of all, looking for action and leadership from Alberta Health and Wellness in terms of providing for innovation and change within the health care system. That specific issue with respect to a doctor being able to, for instance, function in his own clinic and charge for services there or in a private surgical clinic or in a hospital, the system that we have right now where they are all paid for their professional services through the Alberta Medical Association agreement was never in my view raised at the health care summit as being an issue.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Nursing Homes

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, section 32 of Bill 11 has removed nursing homes from the Hospitals Act. My questions are all to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Would the minister please give the reason for this change?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, nursing homes are provided for in the legislation of the province. Their status has not been changed. The rules and policies and legislation applying to them has not been changed. Since we do not deem nursing homes to be a, quote, hospital and Bill 11 deals with clinics and hospitals, it is not specifically dealt with in the legislation except in the definitions section. The way the legislation works is that it applies to surgical facilities, it applies to hospitals, and nursing homes still have the status they've always had.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Is the minister able to reassure that this change has nothing to do with future nursing homes being owned and operated in the private sector?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have a little news for the hon. member, and that is that in the nursing homes across this province we have had the presence for decades, as I've said, of three categories of ownership. You have nursing homes which are owned and are the property of the Crown, the government of Alberta. You have nursing homes which are owned and operated by voluntary organizations. The Bethany Group would be an excellent example, the Good Samaritans. That's been going on for decades. We also have nursing homes which are owned by the private sector. One of the well-known names is a company called Extencicare. As I've said many times in this Assembly in answer to other questions, the latter two categories operate under contracts to regional health authorities. Nothing has changed there, Mr. Speaker. It has worked well. You have different perspectives from those three ownership groups, which I think is healthy in the health care system and provides for good service.

2:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Given that the Protection for Persons in Care Act does not apply to private operators, could the minister explain what standards of care or what monitoring and evaluation he would be looking at setting up for more private operators?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the private nursing homes, the voluntary nursing homes, in addition to the directly government-owned nursing homes, as I recall, are all subject to review and inspection by the Health Facilities Review Committee, whichever category you happen to fall under. Also, I'll double check, but I think possibly the member across the way is in error in that the Protection for Persons in Care Act does apply to the whole spectrum of nursing homes. I've looked at hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of reports from the investigative wing of the protection for persons in care committee, and they must be really zealous, because they're certainly going beyond their mandate, if she's correct, in inspecting these places or charges that come up in those sites. So it just does not quite apply.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now we'll call upon the first of two hon. members to participate in Members' Statements today. Prior to doing that, could you all join with me in wishing the Minister of Infrastructure a happy birthday.

Is it also possible, hon. members, that we might revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the Calgary Aquabelles national synchronized swim team. As I was once a synchro mom myself – and I hate to say this – for 14 years as my daughter Kelly was in Aquabelles and eventually an Olympian, I'm very pleased to introduce these swimmers. They are competing at a national competition in Edmonton this weekend as some of the youngest competitors. I would like to mention their names: Marandda Bassaraba, Jordan Church, Andrea Merson, Heather Waldhauser, Madeline Babinec, Kate Millar, Sam LaRose, Caitlin Bowers; also, Billy Debney and Luke Millar, who are loyal supporters and brothers, Coach Jan Debney, whom I've known for many years, and chaperones and of course parents Shaun Bassaraba, Pat Babinec, and Andrea Fugeman-Millar. Would these guests please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly?

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Nursing Week

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week is National Nursing Week, an opportunity for all of us to pay tribute to the commitment and dedication of our excellent nurses throughout Alberta.

Albertans tell us that they have deep trust in their nurses, a testament to the high standard of care consistently provided by nurses to their patients. For many nurses the workload is great, the expectations are high, and the hours are long, but the efforts of our nurses are making a difference for the people who rely on the services and programs they provide. On behalf of all Albertans I want to thank nurses for their expertise and dedicated service to Albertans.

The purpose of the week is to increase public awareness of the pivotal role of nurses in our health system, to remind us how well nurses do their job and how they are making a real difference in the lives of Albertans. Our government recognizes the importance of nurses in our health system. Once again, additional resources are being directed to increasing frontline staffing. This will result in an additional 2,400 frontline workers over three years for emergency wards, acute care hospitals, long-term care, and home care. A significant proportion of these new frontline staff will be registered nurses. As well, Alberta Learning announced an additional 195 spaces in postsecondary institutions to train new nurses.

The health system is evolving, creating new and exciting opportunities for nurses. It also poses many challenges as registered nurses adapt and respond to demographic, technological, and service delivery changes. The future is bright for nurses, who have already contributed so much throughout Alberta and historically.

Initiated in 1985 National Nursing Week coincides with May 12, Florence Nightingale's birthday. A series of simultaneous birthday parties are being planned for Grande Prairie, Edmonton, Red Deer, Calgary, and Lethbridge at 6 p.m. on May 12 to mark Florence Nightingale's 180th birthday and International Nursing Week. Hundreds of registered nurses and community leaders are expected to attend these Nightingale Nights being held to raise money for continued nursing education.

I encourage all Albertans to attend an event in their community and to mark this important week by thanking the nurses they know for their dedicated work throughout the year.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Members' Comments during Bill 11 Protest

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past month Albertans denouncing Bill 11 have protested outside the Legislature, and last night that protest was brought inside. Spirited on perhaps by frustration, these individuals made their opposition known inside the public gallery. They were dealt with in a swift and, in my opinion, professional manner.

I have a fundamental problem with the actions last night of certain key members of this government, however, who only exacerbated the situation. In essence, the security staff was instructed to, quote, throw him over, unquote, while a protester hung over the railing from the public gallery. Mr. Speaker, the situation was already tense and this type of behaviour or comment from a minister of the Crown is unacceptable.

Let me make it perfectly clear. I do not condone inappropriate behaviour nor does my caucus, but I also don't condone ministers of the Crown urging the security staff of the Legislative Assembly to commit a criminal act. As Alberta Liberals we will continue to oppose the actions of this government on Bill 11. That is our job. But it is unacceptable for cabinet ministers to suggest that the Leader of the Official Opposition and her colleagues are somehow responsible for inciting this type of civil disobedience.

Mr. Speaker, I've been on the other side of protests and demonstrations, and I would suggest that these kinds of comments only hinder the actions of those responsible for keeping the House in order. It's apparent that this has been a tough session for everyone. It is important that we all pause to remember why we are here; that is, to represent our constituents, who place their faith and trust in us.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier said that once Bill 11 was passed, we would wake up the next day and the sun would be shining. Well, today we have yet to see the sun, and those ministers of the Crown who made those comments last night could perhaps remove that cloud by apologizing to the House for their actions.

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. After the kind of week we've had, that we're just finishing, I can't wait to hear what the government has in store by way of a sequel for next week. So pursuant to Standing Order 7(5) I'd ask the Deputy Government House Leader to advise us as to what business we might anticipate next week.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly can't wait to advise members of this Legislature what's going to happen next week. On Monday, May 15, in the afternoon we'll be dealing with second reading of bills 18 and 19 and as per the Order Paper. That evening we will be in Committee of the Whole relating to bills 3, 13, and 16, and second reading of bills 18, 19, 24, and as per the Order Paper.

Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 p.m., Mr. Speaker, we'll be dealing with second reading of Bill Pr. 3 and Committee of the Whole on bills Pr. 1, Pr. 3, Pr. 2, Pr. 4, Pr. 5, and hopefully third reading of bills Pr. 1, Pr. 3, Pr. 2, Pr. 4, and Pr. 5. We will also be addressing under Government Bills and Orders government Motion 18, the Auditor General's appointment. That evening we will be in Committee of the Whole addressing Bill 23 and in second reading of bills 20, 18, 19, and as per the Order Paper.

Wednesday evening we will be in Committee of the Whole, and that will be based on progress achieved on Tuesday in consultation with the opposition, and in third reading. All the bills will hopefully be addressed.

Thursday, May 18, under Government Bills and Orders, again Committee of the Whole, based on progress, and again third reading, based on progress.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a rare occasion, indeed, when I have a group of schoolchildren come all the way up from Calgary, but I do have a group today of 21 very bright and very quiet students. I think it may be the early hour that they had to get on the bus in order to get here today. They are here with their teacher, Mr. Way, and four parent helpers: Pat Robertson, Tony Lauinger, Keeley McMillan*, and Sherri Byron. I would like very much to be able to introduce them to you and through you to members of this Assembly, and I'd ask that they stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly – I believe she has arrived. She is a resident of 105th Avenue in Edmonton-Gold Bar, Susan Jossy. She has decided to come by and view firsthand the proceedings here at the Legislative Assembly. She is in the members' gallery. I would ask that she now rise, and if all hon. members could give her the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly, I would be grateful.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on a point of order.

*This spelling could not be verified at the time of publication.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that the opposition was so well behaved after the hon. Leader of the Opposition's first question, I withdraw the point of order.

head: Second Reading

Bill 18
Alberta Personal Income Tax Act

Ms Carlson moved that the motion for second reading be amended to read that Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly believes that as a result of the tax reduction measures announced in the 2000 federal budget, the bill would not ensure that all Alberta taxpayers receive a fair tax reduction.

[Adjourned debate May 10: Mr. Dickson]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to pick up hopefully where I left off last night. In speaking to the reasoned amendment that's currently before us, there are a number of comments I wanted to make.

It clearly is true, as Mackenzie King, a former Prime Minister of Canada, said in 1931: the promises of yesterday are the taxes of today. I've gone back to look at the hype around tax cuts in Alberta and the so-called flat tax, and I was going to make the observation, in speaking to the reasoned amendment, that the way the government does this is always a study. I think sometimes somebody ought to write a book called an anatomy of public policy development in the province of Alberta.

We have certain familiar modus operandi in terms of the way things are put forward. For example, in all of the hype around this, it's sort of a selective presentation by government of elements and then sort of an ignoring of those elements that send very different messages. For example, talking about truth in advertising, I go back to the news release that the government had brought out in connection with the budget. I go back and I look at these things and I see the boast of 132,000 people lopped off the tax rolls, but there's absolutely no mention of the elimination of the 8 percent high-income surtax and the $162 million connected with that. You look at the Budget Backgrounder that came out, and I'm sure all members still have one of these in their desks. This is the thing I've learned not to trust very much, Mr. Speaker, but I suspect there are some Albertans that may wander into a constituency office and pick this up, looking to find out what's going on.

It's interesting that the government will acknowledge: yes, we've eliminated the 8 percent surtax. But I think there are a lot of Albertans that don't understand that that really only applies to high-income filers. It's just a curious thing. As you go through the budget presentation, you see that what's touted are the things that are going to affect people in low-income situations, which of course is the great majority of Albertans – I shouldn't say the great majority; it's certainly going to affect a significant number of Albertans – but the benefits that are going to accrue to wealthy citizens there's almost no mention of.

As you go through this entire two-page news release, you'd think that the impetus to this bill was to provide some relief to the 132,000 poorest Albertans. You'd think that that was what this bill was all about, and you'd say: well, this is great. The Provincial Treasurer heard Desmond Tutu when he came to Alberta a year ago to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the universal declaration of rights and freedoms and all the wonderful speeches about trying to address poverty, that poverty continues to be one of the huge issues in this nation and the fact that too many children are living in poverty and low-income households. You'd think the government was responding to that and was animated to an overwhelming concern about that disparity between rich and poor in the province.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

But that's not what this bill is all about at all, and that's not what the government's tax reform package is about. If you strip away the benefit to the 132,000 low-income Albertans, what you find is that, yes, there are certainly some benefits there, but the people who ultimately really benefit from Bill 18 as it currently stands are really going to be that much smaller number of people who may see the end of the 8 percent high-income surtax.

The reason for the reasoned amendment is effectively that our Premier has now announced, after the budget announcement and after all of the hoopla and fanfare about the so-called flat-tax proposal, that we now have a de facto relinking of our provincial single-rate system to the federal system. So it's once again one of those things that speaks to a question of competence or lack of competence on the part of this provincial government to be able to manage its budget, to be able run the affairs of this wealthy and prosperous and exciting province.

What's crystal clear to me and I think to many Albertans and increasingly more Albertans, as they study this package and begin to understand that the emperor really has no clothes, is that this entire bill seems to have been little more than a vehicle prepared to showcase the leadership intentions of the former Provincial Treasurer. It does not speak to the real needs of real Albertans.

When you look at the numbers in this thing, those with incomes over $150,000 a year – that's 1 percent of taxpayers – get a 15 percent cut in provincial taxes; the 39 percent of taxpayers in the $30,000 to $70,000 income range will get only a 6 percent cut. I think, once again, it's sort of like Bill 11. If there was any positive thing coming from Bill 11, it was the orientation education of an awful lot of Albertans to the nuances and the complexities of our public health care system. Maybe at the end of Bill 18 we'll reflect back and say that the benefit of this is that we're able to have a widespread, hopefully public debate, and hopefully the government will allow that to happen. Hopefully we're not going to see any of the kind of nonsense we did around Bill 11, with limiting debate through closure or quasi-closure techniques. Maybe what we will be able to have is a debate, and we'll be able to talk about the value of a progressive tax system. The reality with the proposal we've got is that it doesn't live up to the hype. I mean, I think that's the thing that's becoming increasingly apparent to Albertans.

I know you're waiting anxiously, Mr. Speaker. In another two weeks I'm going to have the results of my web site poll from Albertans. I got, I think, about 2,300 responses to the first Bill 11 question and 576 responses to the second question in just two weeks. I can't wait to see the response to my current question on this. I hope the bill is still going to be around in two weeks so that I'm going to be able to share that with colleagues here in the Assembly.

As it stands now, even with dropping the rate to 10.5 percent, which isn't in the bill, of course, but which is touted by government, we're still going to have middle-income taxpayers in this province paying more. Under this proposal until 2004 Alberta taxpayers are still paying more, even if the rate is dropped as the government proposes. The problem is that Albertans are not able to get the maximum benefit of Paul Martin's federal income tax reforms.

I think there are more positive things that can be done if we want to do genuine tax reform. One of them certainly was ending bracket creep, but that is not necessarily a corollary to a flat tax, and the federal Finance minister has demonstrated that by eliminating bracket creep by simply indexing tax brackets. So a good move and one which I've heard even grudging acknowledgment from the provincial government about.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

I think what Albertans want to see is a flow through of federal rates. But it does point out sometimes how foolish it can be by having the provincial government engaged in what I describe as a political stunt in terms of rushing the budget up so it would come in a week after the throne speech for the sole reason of trying to beat the federal treasurer releasing his budget. At the end of the day we see that the cost of that is to hurt Albertans and cost more. As my colleague for Edmonton-Glenora pointed out in Hansard, May 2, 2000, everyone whose earnings are between $18,425 and $68,400 will be disadvantaged under Bill 18, would in fact have been better off before Bill 18 came into force.

Now, in the course of researching the bill and looking at it, there's just an excellent article I ran across that I encourage members to look at. It's called Why Fairness Matters: Progressive Versus Flat Taxes. It's authored by Dr. Robert J. Shapiro, April 1996. He's a Harvard University professor and a fellow of the U.S. National Bureau of Economic Research. He earned his doctorate at Harvard University, holds degrees from LSE, the London School of Economics, and the university of Chicago. So this is no lightweight. This is somebody who presumably knows what he's talking about, and while clearly even smart economists have biases, I think there's something in this article for all of us.

One of the things that I took from the article is the notion, again, that we sort of re-examine what our tax system is there for. What are the key elements we want to see? He identifies three goals: simplicity, growth, and equity. I mean, that makes sense to me. I don't know if there's anybody that has a contrary view of what they want to see their tax system serve, but those seem to me to be three important objectives. I'm just paraphrasing. I'm no economist. I did my best working my way through Dr. Shapiro's article and invite others to read it. They may have different takes on it, different perspectives.

What I took from Dr. Shapiro's thesis is this. Firstly, this whole business of tax reform is based on a pretty shaky foundation. I think what he points out is something that wouldn't maybe be part of what we might describe as conventional wisdom, but it's this. If you want higher growth – and I think that's really what we want to see in this province. We all want for our children and our grandchildren those high-skill, high-pay jobs. We want to make sure that when these pages finish their education, they're going to be able to go out and get those high-skill, high-pay jobs and all of the other young people in that age group.

What Dr. Shapiro points out is that the way you do that by a factor of six to eight times more is through investing firstly in worker skills, in employee skills. That is perhaps the most important thing we can do. This may be a statistic that the Minister of Innovation and Science is familiar with. The other thing you do is invest in technology innovation. In fact, doing either of those two things will pay you really six times more than what you're simply going to get by increasing straight business investment.

I don't have any commerce background, but I look at it in terms of: the flat tax shifts the burden from the owners of capital to wage earners. It's tough to square that. I mean, that's exactly what happens with a flat tax. It's tough to square that with notions of equity and growth. When I have a Harvard fellow telling me in his article that I cited earlier that we're going down the wrong road, it certainly makes me ask a lot more questions, questions that I haven't heard answers for. I'm hopeful that over the course of the debate on this referral amendment we're going to hear some of those answers, because it's not apparent in anything we've heard so far.

It might be worth while recognizing that in Canada we have a relatively free market. What that means is that there is a greater potential, a significantly greater upside to skilled, talented people to be able to prosper, and there are more opportunities for wealthy people to increase their wealth. So my thesis is that paying progressive taxes is but a kind of price for higher income citizens being able to benefit from those greater market opportunities.

Now, this is different from tax reduction. I mean, I want to pay lower taxes like everybody else. But you know something? That is actually quite a separate issue. Maybe it's once again that $8 million Public Affairs Bureau, that seems to play such a large role in the machinations of the current government, but what they're working hard to do – and I'm not sure how successful they will be, and maybe this side of the next provincial election we're not going to know that, Madam Speaker. What the Public Affairs Bureau has been trying to spin and trying to sell to Albertans: they've tried to make the notion of tax cuts seem to be the raison d'être for Bill 18. People who don't take the time to read the bill and do some of the research analysis, who don't have time to do that, may think that what this bill is all about is tax cuts, when really what it's about is something fundamentally different.

Let's be real clear about that. It can be couched as a tax cut, it can be advertised as a tax cut, but that's not what this is about at all. What it's about is a form of regressive . . . [Mr. Dickson's speaking time expired] You know, I've got some colleagues here who I bet do have some economics background. It can't be time up already, Madam Speaker. Well, I'll pick this up at the next stage.

Thank you very much.

3:10

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me to be able to get up and address the amendment presented by the opposition on Bill 18, an amendment that would effectively kill the bill if it were to be accepted.

I believe that Bill 18 is good news for all Albertans. I can only imagine the envy that other provinces feel as this debate is going on. A strong fiscal plan has given us the ability to introduce groundbreaking tax reform and tax cuts of over 20 percent. Yes, Madam Speaker, that's what I said: we will take 20 percent, or $1.3 billion, less from Albertans' bank accounts. Well, we'll do that if we can get past the amendment.

One thing we can all agree on in this Assembly is the benefit to low-income Albertans. Nearly 200,000 Albertans will be removed from the provincial tax rolls. Unfortunately, this only takes care of the provincial taxes. The federal bill still accounts for two-thirds of income tax. A recent article in the Calgary Herald said, a comment by Mr. Dale Orr, an economist with an economic think tank, with WEFA, Inc., a group that helped Finance Minister Paul Martin prepare his budget projections: personal income tax collections rose by 34 percent from 1994 primarily due to bracket creep. That was, he notes, well above the 24 percent growth in the economy over the same period of time.

However, there is no denying that low-income Albertans are winners with this bill. There is a little more difficulty in getting the opposition to acknowledge that middle-income earners are also winners with Bill 18, since they, too, will receive a tax break. I don't see how that makes them losers. I think the biggest problem that the critics have with a single tax rate is that high-income earners will also be winners in this scenario. I have a hard time understanding why anybody would oppose that. Just because someone earns more does not make them a bad person or any less worthy than any other Albertan. Why should they be punished for working hard, for going to school for years, for trying to improve their opportunities, or for taking risks, as so many Albertans do?

High taxes don't create any incentive to work that extra hour of overtime or take the course you need for a promotion. High taxes often deter people from bettering themselves at work because the more you earn the more the government takes in taxes. It is a fact that high taxes stifle individuals' enthusiasm. Contrary to the information the Alberta Teachers' Association recently sent out, Canada ranks 23rd out of 28 OECD countries; in other words, only five countries in the world tax personal income at a higher rate than Canada. Canadians pay approximately 40 percent more taxes than other OECD nations on average, and 20 percent higher than our neighbours, the United States.

We believe in encouraging creativity and enthusiasm in Alberta in a different way. We think government should get out of people's private lives and out of people's bank accounts. We think that if government backs off, then people will have more room to grow and more freedom to choose. Bill 18 will give Albertans that freedom. By removing tax brackets, Albertans will have the freedom to choose to work harder. They will also have the freedom to choose how they will spend the money that they will save on their tax bill. They won't be punished with higher taxes for getting a raise. There's nothing more discouraging for any of us than getting a raise and having it taxed away because your raise put you in a higher tax bracket.

Low taxes are not only good for individuals and families in Alberta; they are good for the economy. When individuals are allowed to grow, the economy grows with them. When individuals are feeling financially confident, the economy reflects that confidence.

The Liberal opposition has suggested that we can't afford the kind of tax cuts that we are giving and that is why they are trying to hoist this tax cut bill for Albertans. I think that the Liberals and the NDs are opposed to tax cuts because they know that if they ever were to form a government here in Alberta, the first thing they would have to do is put taxes up to cover the cost of all the spending that they would do. They like to dream with other people's dollars.

I think we can't afford to not have a tax cut. The $1.3 billion tax cut that we are returning to Albertans is affordable. Alberta Treasury estimates that the new tax plan will increase economic growth. The Budget 1999 appendix, Economic Impacts of Alberta Tax Review Committee Proposal, shows that five years after the tax plan is implemented, Alberta's gross domestic product is expected to be about 1 percent higher just from this tax cut, or $1.3 billion larger. Twenty thousand new jobs will be created, and an increasing economic activity will generate enough increased tax revenue to offset 40 percent of the direct cost of this tax cut. It's important to keep in mind that these numbers are based on the initial estimate of a $500 million tax reduction. Now that we have proposed a $1.3 billion tax cut for Albertans, the economic impacts will be much greater, and that is good news. It is good news for Alberta, and it is good news for all Albertans.

However, we need to keep in mind the purpose of this bill, which is to introduce tax reform and give every Albertan a tax cut. Do the Liberals really want to see those who are in the lowest tax bracket, let's say a young couple expecting their first child, struggling to make ends meet with a new baby in their future – they may be inclined to try to earn a little extra money to cover the additional costs of raising a family, but with the current system those extra hours push this family into the middle-income tax bracket with a higher rate. The only result is that one of them is away from home working longer hours without much financial gain. Bill 18 will end that kind of penalty. Even though the Liberals' amendment would hoist Bill 18, I honestly don't think the Liberals want to see this family struggle. Well, I don't think they do.

What about someone who's already in the middle-income tax bracket? What if he or she works hard and gets a raise? Is it all right to tax away that extra money he or she earns? Where does the opposition draw the line? Who do they choose to be the winners and the losers? Bill 18 will not punish these Albertans either.

Another example. An 82-year-old widower living in a seniors' lodge makes $12,000 per year in private pension income. He receives old age security. In 1999 that senior paid $335 in provincial income tax. In 2001 he will not pay any provincial income tax, and of course he will still receive the Alberta seniors' benefit.

Another example would be a married seniors couple having a total private pension income of $54,000 per year and both receiving old age security. Both are in good health and have not claimed any medical expenses. They can make a charitable donation of, say, $3,000, Madam Speaker. They will pay $513 less in provincial income tax in 2001 than they did in this year.

Madam Speaker, it is time for some real tax reform. It's time we stopped punishing hardworking Albertans by reducing any incentive to save, to work, and to invest, and it's time we let Albertans keep more of their money. It is time we recognized that for Alberta to keep some of our brightest young people from moving to places like the States, where there's a huge tax advantage, we have to be competitive. I have heard people complain about some of our doctors and our surgeons moving to the U.S.A., where they can in fact earn more money than they do here. This tax cut will help to alleviate some of that pressure.

I urge all members to vote against the Liberal amendment to hoist this bill. Let's get on with returning more of Albertans' hard-earned money to them. It is, after all, their money.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise in support of the amendment this afternoon because in fact the proposal for the flat tax that we see in front of us is anything but fair. One of the first things the Official Opposition would do when we become government is ensure that taxpayer dollars are not spent on private health care in this province and siphoned off to provide a profit for for-profit providers. So that would be the first thing we would do.

I find the concept interesting that if you earn $100,000 and you have to pay taxes, in fact you are being punished, but those who are earning $30,000, $40,000, or $50,000 are somehow lesser beings in the sight of this government and, in fact, do not deserve the same type of tax break that those in the upper earning levels deserve. I just want to give out some figures to show what the flat tax does to those middle-income earners.

If someone is earning $30,000, the amount of tax savings is $52.17. If they earn $30,424, it's $41.48. If they earn $40,000, the tax savings is $95.11. If they earn $50,000, the tax savings is $151.11. If you earn $100,000, however, you do get a tax saving, and that's $1,292.45. Now, Madam Speaker, is that fair?

In actual fact these figures are from a chartered accountant, Brad Severin. He indicates that, yes, 10.5 percent is marginally better than the 11 percent flat tax, but in actual fact he has found that the top income earners will benefit the most. So I find it rather insulting, Madam Speaker, that government members would indicate that those who are middle-income earners either don't work hard enough, aren't bright enough, or don't deserve a tax break in the equivalent amounts that someone at the higher income level is saving, and that in fact is what they have said over and over and over again.

The flat tax provides for a structural change in the tax system in this province and can in fact be seductive. Many years ago Pam Barrett of the New Democrats at that time indicated that Canada needed a flat tax system. It's interesting that Pam Barrett would have indicated that this is the way to go when we have a large number of right-wing think tanks that say that this is not the way to go.

You know, the parallels between Bill 11 and Bill 18 are just immense. Both bills are not based on fairness. Both are not based on evidence that there will be a benefit to the majority of individuals in this province. Both are not based on anything other than a belief that it is the right thing to do with no substantiation other than it's the right thing to do. Both have been policy-making by the seat of their pants, and both are going to be a burden on the middle-income earner. So what both bills do is promote inequities between the higher income earners and the middle-income earners in this province. You know what? The similarities even go further than that. Both bills have required amendments in this House, and we have yet to see the real amendment tabled by the Acting Treasurer in this House.

The reality is that if the government members were so interested in ensuring that middle-income earners received a tax break, especially those who stay at home, who have a parent who stays at home to care for the children, they would have supported the motion by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, Motion 506, that read:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to demonstrate its recognition of the contribution made by parents who stay at home to care for their children by providing support equal to that received by parents choosing other child care options.

That would have been a motion, Madam Speaker, that would have provided for a fairer tax break to that middle-income earner that the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View just spoke about. In fact, it is a motion that would have been supported by organizations such as Kids First, who have for years tried to provide to governments information about the discriminatory tax policies with regards to stay-at-home parents. Yet this government on the one hand says that they agree, but on the other hand their actions do not match their words.

What I find also interesting is that this unfairness has been seen by Albertans across this province. In fact, I tabled in this Legislative Assembly on April 17 a petition that had been signed by 571 students who had studied both Bill 18, the flat tax, and Bill 11. What they found was that these two bills would have an incredible impact on individuals' ways of life. This is what the petition said:

Bill 11 and 18 are currently being proposed that would affect both the health care system and also the tax [system] . . . we have been unable to attain any factual evidence to support the move to a privatized health care system.

Also, at that time it was an 11 percent flat tax rate.

By signing this petition, you are saying that if these two bills are passed and go into effect, then when you are able to vote you will not support the Conservative Party.

You know, students in this province are not fooled by the flat tax. Students in this province are not fooled by the government's protestation that there is no for-profit health care in this province. Students in this province are well aware of the impact that both of these bills are going to have on their lives.

I'd like to quote from another letter that indicates that the flat tax is a huge problem with regards to the middle-income earner. In fact, the Member for Calgary-Cross had read from this letter just a couple of days ago, so I'm sure she must have tabled it. It is a letter from Jake Kuiken, who is president of the Alberta Association of Registered Social Workers. What he indicates is that "the tax inequity created by Bill 11 will be even greater" with the introduction of an 11 percent – again, it was 11 percent at that time – flat tax next year.

Under the current tax system, Albertans who are better off pay their annual taxes at a somewhat higher rate than Albertans with an average or lower income.

The flat tax changes all that. All eligible Albertans will pay their taxes at the 11 percent rate. However, well-off Albertans who can afford an enhanced level of medical services will see their taxes reduced twice over.

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, a couple of things. We are dealing with a reasoned amendment, brought in by Edmonton-Ellerslie. The chair certainly recognizes that some latitude needs to be given. However, I would remind the hon. member that we are dealing with a reasoned amendment to Bill 18. Also, when you do read a letter, it should be tabled in the Assembly. I would ask for the remainder of the debate to please remember that we have before us a reasoned amendment and if we could talk about the necessity for that reasoned amendment within the debate.

MS LEBOVICI: Absolutely. The reasoned amendment indicates that . . . the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly believes that as a result of the tax reduction measures announced in the 2000 federal budget, the bill would not ensure that all Alberta taxpayers receive a fair tax reduction.

I am making the case, hopefully, that this flat tax does not provide for a fair tax reduction to all Albertans. As well, if the member had not tabled that particular letter from Mr. Kuiken, I will table the letter.

Thank you for keeping me on track as always.

MS LEBOVICI: The reality is that because the tax break is set up as a flat tax, what it in effect does is provide for a tax that is not fair to all Albertans.

Now, if I can just remind the Assembly as to why we're at the point that we are right now with regards to tax reform. [interjection] Okay, I'll stand back. I think it's my mike that's picking it up. I'm not screaming.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, through the chair. Are you having a problem with your mike?

MS LEBOVICI: I think so. I think the mike is amplifying my voice, so that's what the problem is.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: That does sound better.

MS LEBOVICI: Thank you. I don't need a lot of amplification, as most of the members know.

3:30

The basis of this tax reform, supposedly, is to provide a fairer tax to all Albertans, but as I indicated earlier, what I think we have is tax policy on the fly, because what we've seen over the last few months are different options being thrown out as trial balloons. I almost see it as the Treasurer at the time and the Premier's own version of a striptease with regards to tax reform in this province. In fact, what we're seeing is a lot of talk, very little action, and it may be satisfying for some but not for all.

If I can just go through a little bit of the scenario in terms of what has happened over the last number of months. On July 26 of 1999 the Premier mused about accelerating Alberta's single-rate tax system in 1999 and 2000 by increasing the basic personal and spousal exemptions. On November 23 of 1999 the Premier said that the government may lower the 9 cent per litre gasoline tax. Further on, two days later, the Premier mused about a gasoline tax rebate. Then on December 29, 1999, he further mused about providing Albertans with a $100 tax rebate. On January 7, 2000, the Treasurer at the time said that the government is considering a personal income tax cut in the year 2000; January 17, the government is considering a reduction of health care premiums. So a little bit seems to be thrown out at a time, but in fact all it was was teases.

On January 18, 2000, the Treasurer said that there would be a surplus and that the surplus would be used to pay down the debt rather than being used to provide tax cuts in the year 2000. On January 26 of 2000 the government's 18-cent reduction in the mill rate for the education property tax was announced, but it was a $22.50 tax cut for the average homeowner. On February 24 we had the reannouncement of the flat tax scheme for the eighth time since the 1999 provincial budget. On February 27, 2000, what the Treasurer at the time said, in terms of asking the federal government to cut taxes, which in fact they did, was: what we're saying is try it; you'll like it. I'm sure that was much to the surprise of the Treasurer at the time. Then we saw the Premier on March 14, 2000, say that he would bring in a law to ensure that Albertans will always have the lowest personal income taxes in Canada.

What we're seeing is that there's very little consideration that's been given, it would appear, to the actual impact of the flat tax on Albertans. It has been more, it seems, a rush to try and keep up with perhaps Ontario, to try and keep up with other jurisdictions across Canada who have also been rushing to provide tax cuts.

Now, is there anything wrong with providing a tax cut? Absolutely not. There is no one, I think, in this Assembly or outside this Assembly who would say that they would not like more money in their pocket. However, when Albertans are asked, "What are your priorities? Should the first thing on a government's mind be to cut taxes?" what they say is that the first thing on a government's mind should be health care, education, child poverty, crime and justice, environment. Tax cuts are not at the top of what Albertans' or Canadians' concerns are with regards to government priorities. What we have seen here over the last few months is a fixation on health care, but it's a fixation on private health care, and now what we see is a fixation on tax cuts.

Now, the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View had indicated that one of the reasons for the tax cuts is to ensure that the brain drain would not continue. I don't know if she's had a chance to look at the CGA Magazine that came out in May, so just a couple of days ago. What it indicates is that the taxes do not really have a huge effect on whether people decide to either leave Canada or to come back to Canada and that there are other issues that are more important, such as the high quality of life and the community and proximity to family and friends.

The other issue that's brought forward in this magazine is the fact that though most Canadians welcome tax relief, they're also upset by the way their dollars are being spent, and I would venture to say that the majority of Albertans in this province are very upset with the fact that over $3 million has been spent by this government in an advertising campaign to promote private, for-profit health care.

The other issue that is brought forward by this particular magazine is the climate in terms of competition between the United States and Canada and businesses and their tax regime. There's an interesting study that has recently been done that suggests that this viewpoint might be not quite correct as well. What was found was that U.S. companies faced tougher economic conditions than their Canadian counterparts. "We didn't really expect to find that," said one of the professors. "But that's how the data came out." So some of the almost myths that are being propagated by the government as to why the tax cut needs to be in a certain format, I believe, when you scratch below the surface, are not quite what they seem to be.

Actually, the Premier has called it Ralph-onomics or Steve-onomics. Perhaps it should have been called Stockwell-onomics. I'm not sure. But the reality is that it's an experiment. It's an experiment that has been shown by the figures to not bear out what in fact the result is that the government wishes it to be. So this amendment provides the opportunity for the government to look at Bill 18 – it doesn't kill the bill; it says that it should not now be read a second time – and ensure that the bill provides a fair tax reduction to all Albertans.

So what we are doing yet again is providing the opportunity for the government to take a deep breath, to look at what they are doing with regards to the flat tax, who they are affecting most seriously, to recognize that it is not punishment when you deal with a progressive tax system, that there should be rewards inherent for the middle-income group as well when they receive an increase in their salary or when they work overtime, that it should not be only those who earn $70,000 or $80,000 or $100,000 that should be rewarded for earning those salary levels.

Again, I think it is very insulting to say that someone who earns $40,000, who may move into a $50,000 tax bracket, should not, in fact, have the same percentage ability of tax savings as those in the higher income brackets. Why are they being punished by this government? That, in fact, is what occurs under the flat tax.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. [interjections] I can already hear that there are a number of members really anxious to get on the list and comment on this bill, so I look forward to when they're up to speak.

I am glad of the opportunity to rise at this point and speak in favour of the motion that "Bill 18 . . . be not now read a second time because the Assembly believes that as a result of the tax reduction measures announced in the 2000 federal budget, the bill would not ensure that all Alberta taxpayers receive a fair tax reduction." I think that there's merit in that.

I've listened with interest to those speakers that I've heard from the government side speaking in favour of Bill 18 and against this reasoned amendment. What I'm sensing is that this bill kind of dovetails into Bill 11, because I certainly see the same attitudes coming from members on the other side, and I question that. I would think that if it was a good idea and people really believed in it, they'd just get up and argue the case. But why they have to get up and say that members in the opposition have their "heads on backwards," which was the quote that we heard from Calgary-Egmont – and we had another gem from the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View, some other kind of disparaging comment. I always find it interesting, because, you know, people that really believe in what they're doing and have a good solid platform to bring forward just bring it forward. They don't have to try and defend it by taking personal attacks against members of the opposition or against anybody, in fact, that disagrees with them. So just an interesting comment as part of the give-and-take on this debate.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair would ask the hon. member to get on with the bill and the reasoned amendment, please.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much for your kind advice.

Now, I have a few reasons for supporting this reasoned amendment. Just let me stop here. I don't want anyone to misunderstand and believe that I am not in favour of a tax cut. Let me say that again. I have said that in the previous reading, and if the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View was able to supply me with the Hansard quotes showing members of the opposition actually saying that they did not believe that Albertans wanted a tax cut, I'd appreciate seeing that. She certainly made that comment, and none of my colleagues here have gotten up and said: no tax cuts for Albertans. So please be accurate in your statements.

If it's possible to give a tax cut, all things considered – when you look at balancing a budget, when you look at what the revenue is, when you look at what the expenses are, when you look at whether there's a deficit or a surplus, I think it's a great idea to give money back to people, and if it's possible to do that by way of a tax cut, then that's a wonderful opportunity and it benefits everyone. Do I think the proposal that the government has put forward at this point is the way to do it? No, I don't. That has been really brought into sharp focus because of the actions of the federal 2000 budget.

So if the current government believes that they'd like to spend $1.3 billion on a tax cut for Albertans, is this scheme that they're putting forward – I understand an amendment is to come forward reducing the 11 percent flat tax to a 10.5 percent flat tax. If that's the method that they choose, I disagree with it. I think there are fairer and more equitable ways in which to do that. I think this scheme does compromise fairness and equity. There's no question in my mind. There have been all kinds of statistics and percentages already put forward that do show that the people that benefit absolutely the most from this is a very small percentage of elite-income earners at the very top end who get the most tax reductions back. That's an interesting one too.

I look at how we came to be in this position. This government has been in power for 30 years. It's always interesting to me how they pretend that it wasn't them. Certainly, choices that this government made in the '80s led in fact to the debt and the deficit, and as a result of that, choices were made again by this government to establish things like the 8 percent high-income surtax and the .5 percent flat tax deficit reduction tax, so they did in fact go back to the people and work that debt off with money from the people.

The past Treasurer in his estimations of the budget – certainly in retrospect we can see this quite clearly – has had a tendency to estimate the revenue very low and the expenses very high. So there's a built-in, almost guaranteed surplus here, and now we're saying: okay; we want to give this surplus back by way of this 10.5 percent flat tax. I'm always interested to see how the immense marketing and Public Affairs' budget can be used to make all of this look like they're only responsible for the end point, which is giving the money back, but no recognition that they're the ones that caused it to be given out in the first place.

The moves that the federal government have made really brought what's being proposed and, I think, the failings in the flat tax scheme into very sharp focus in that one day what was being proposed here could be argued quite strongly and by the next day the moves that the federal government had made in their budget really skewed this flat tax scheme and showed it for what it was, I think.

It's interesting to me the number of members of the government that have been saying: this is a wonderful thing for families, and how could we speak against it because it benefits families so much. I have to say, you know, that in the going on four years – I'm in my fourth year now in this House – there were a lot of other things this government could have done if they really and honestly wanted to benefit families. There are still things that could be done by this government if they really wanted to benefit families.

My colleague has already mentioned Motion 506, that was moved by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. That's an excellent example, and the government votes it down. I mean, like flat. Nobody was even interested in contemplating supporting this. So when I see a good idea like this presented that's voted down flat by the government and then I see something like the flat tax coming in and the same excuse being used in reverse to promote it, it makes me think that this isn't about a tax cut so much. It's about implementing a long-term political ideology. It just so happens that at this point in time it's possible to have all the elements in place to do that. What do I mean by that?

Well, if you really as an ideology wanted to put a flat tax in place, if you really believed that was the best way to have things in the world, knowing, of course, that the higher income earners are going to benefit the most from that and it is absolutely going to decimate the low-income earners, how would you do that? I think what I'm seeing is that the first thing you do is call it something else. You don't talk about the fact that it's changing the whole system. You talk about it being a tax break.

Well, if you're going to talk about it being a tax break, then you'd better find the tax break. Sure enough that's been done, and we have the circumstances that allow for that at this very point in time. But then, oops, if you really look at it, what would happen is that the people on the lower end of the income scale would really be hammered. They would be paying a significant portion, and the effect on their lives, given that the costs of basics like rent and food and gas take a much larger chunk out of their available money, you're going to have to do something to sell it to people. So what do you do?

Well, why don't you just raise the personal exemption above, just above, the point where low-income earners show up on the scale as really getting nailed with this new scheme. That would help too, because the people that really have to buy into this new taxing scheme – because that's what this is; it's a taxing scheme – are the middle class. They're the ones that would most likely protest it or not be willing to go along with it or to question it. I think the government is smart enough to know that the middle class isn't going to buy this if they see that low-income earners are getting absolutely smashed by some sort of taxation system. So raising the personal exemption level to just above where low-income earners really get hammered also helps to sell this to the middle class. Then, as I said, you just keep telling people that this is the sale, that this isn't about changing your whole taxation system forevermore in your life, that really what it's about is a tax break, and you keep selling it on that sort of level.

There's an assumption here that there will always be an opportunity to keep lowering this rate. I would dearly hope that that is true, but what I've studied on the economics of Alberta and what people seem to admit is that Alberta has a very cyclical economic life. Nobody can figure out why we can't seem to hold it on an even keel all the time, but we can't. We rise and fall with alarming regularity over whatever that cycle is, 10 or 12 or 15 years or something. So what's happening here is that it's being sold with the idea that there'll always be a tax break, that that 11 percent, now 10.5 percent, is going to keep going down. Nobody ever talks about what happens when oil prices drop to five bucks a barrel and they're not able to get the oil and gas royalties, that typical downturn that Alberta always experiences.

Then those tax rates are going to have to go up, and certainly this government is no stranger to putting on surtaxes and raising income tax. When that happens, what is going to happen to that essential middle class that is really needed to sell this whole new taxation scheme, the ones that really have to buy this? I think at that time they would see themselves caught in a sort of pincer movement, and their taxes would just shoot up. It would be very, very difficult for people in the middle class.

So the idea of having a fair and equitable tax system is very important to me, and I don't see that in what's being proposed here. I'm more than happy to talk about tax cuts, but I don't think this is about tax cuts. I think this is about instituting a tax system that can and probably will really hurt the middle class and will advantage the very wealthy elite in our province and, depending on the vagaries of the day, may really disadvantage low-income earners, or they may be exempted out of it.

I'm also a believer in the progressive taxation system. I'll admit that up front. I believe in it. I think those who are more willing to and able to pay should pay a little more. I mean, percentagewise they have much more disposable income to do whatever they want with. Someone said to me, "Well, you know, Laurie, some people take their money and risk it to get into business ventures or perhaps even go back to university to get a different degree and go into a different field, and they shouldn't be penalized for risking that amount of money." That's true, but on the other hand they are also in a position where they can make enormous amounts of money out of that if they so choose.

I do believe in a progressive tax system, and that's not what I'm seeing here. It is inequitable. In treating everybody the same here, you very much disadvantage distinct sectors that are affected by this tax. I'm not in support of that. But would I like to see a tax break in an equitable tax system? You betcha. Absolutely. I'd be the first one in line.

It's interesting, actually, the way this proposed flat tax system would work when you look at the lower income, the middle income, and then the higher income. It sort of reminds me of that magicians' shell game where they have the walnut shells on the desk and you're supposed to figure out which one the pea is under. What always comes to mind when I listen to what's being proposed here is that somehow under the tiniest little shell is the biggest one of those foam-rubber balls, because it is the smallest percentage of people under this scheme that are getting the biggest prize back out of it. Again, I'll underline that it is a tax break now, and I think that's being used to sell a tax scheme, which is a different discussion than I've heard going on here.

I think I'd touched on this briefly before, but I just want to make the point again. I've heard a number of people speaking with great fervour and belief about how much this is going to be of benefit to the low income, but I have to admit that I see a certain amount of discovery, that it's become fashionable to stick up for the lower class and for the lower income earners. But I don't think that that really, truly is meant. I think, again, that it's being used as part of a sales job here, because there were a lot of other ways to benefit low-income earners that were possible within the powers that this government has than putting in this scheme, which, as I've said, could really hurt them.

At some point one of the members opposite said: this government wants to get out of people's lives. When I just very quickly look at some of the bills that have already gone through in this last year and look at bills like 202 or 212 or at child access enforcement, those are very definitely involved with the most intimate parts of people's lives and regulating them in a very serious way. So I'm having trouble accepting the argument that somehow this bill is getting out of regulating people's lives, because far too often I've seen this government more than willing to jump in and regulate or legislate the most intimate portions of people's lives.

I am in favour of this reasoned amendment. I think I would like to see a better tax plan, a fairer tax plan, a more equitable tax plan, but I'd also like to see a bit more co-operation between the provinces and the feds. Somehow this has turned into a . . . [interjection] I don't think I can use that word here in this Chamber.

MS LEIBOVICI: They've had a match?

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, yes, a match. Thank you. That's well put. I had an image of two little boys, but I'm trying to be delicate here and honour this House.

The truth is that there's only one taxpayer, and this idea that the provinces have all got to have their own system – are they doing that for valid philanthropic reasons? I'm beginning to think not. I'm beginning to think that this is about one individual or small group of individuals being able to say: I gave the tax cut. Because we were linked with the feds before, as we've seen and what this reasoned amendment is about, when the federal government did something, they got the credit for the tax cut because everybody else was just attached to them and it sort of flowed through.

Part of what's still bothering me about all of this is that the provinces – I'm talking about all the provinces – and the federal government don't seem to be able to put aside that testosterone-laden little battle and actually discuss what is the best tax system for people in Canada. I'm a Canadian. I pay Alberta taxes and I pay federal taxes and I pay municipal taxes as well, and I'd like to see a system that is better integrated and fairer to everybody. I, for one, as a taxpayer would like to see some better discussions around all of that and a little less of this match between boys.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I am very anxious to participate in the debate this afternoon on the amendment to Bill 18 as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. This is going to give all Albertans an opportunity to have a second look at Bill 18.

On the surface one would have to say: "Well, what's the matter? This bill is going to give everyone a tax cut." But we have to look at the fairness of the tax cuts that are proposed in Bill 18. It has been recognized in editorials in some of the major papers in the province and it has been talked about by various chartered accountants and other professionals that this is not the best way to pursue tax reform.

Now, it's interesting to note, Madam Speaker, the words of a gentleman who was the controller general of finances for Louis XIV.

His name is Jean-Baptiste Colbert, and his words – and I'm going to quote them – are relevant in this discussion around fair taxation and Bill 18. The quote is this: the art of taxation consists in so plucking the goose as to get the most feathers with the least hissing. Middle-income earners in this province, when they see the tax implications of Bill 18, are going to do some rather loud hissing. If the hon. members across the way think they heard protest with Bill 11, well, they're also going to hear from Albertans regarding the fairness of this flat-tax proposal.

We've all heard over the years – and this argument certainly goes back almost two decades. One book, for instance, that dealt with this from Stanford, the university in California, was Low Tax, Simple Tax, Flat Tax. The discussions around this book from the Stanford economists talked about how a flat-tax proposal or scheme would be a tremendous boon to the fortunate few, as I call them, or in this province the economic elite. A government must listen to all members of a society, not just the fortunate few.

Now, if we are to embrace a flat-tax policy or proposal, we have to give everyone the complete story. It has been discovered in other jurisdictions that politicians who have embraced this concept of flat tax have been less than candid about what the long-term effects of these taxes are. I believe that my colleague from Edmonton-Norwood in a few moments is going to also speak on that issue, and hopefully she's going to be able to convince all hon. members of this Assembly to support the amendment from the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, because there's no sense in rushing into this. Let's have a good look at this and let the Alberta public have a good look at this.

The irony in this province and with the originator, shall I say, of this idea is that the flat tax, Madam Speaker, is coming into political favour or is becoming fashionable in some political circles at a time when many other economists and accountants, as I said earlier, are having second thoughts about it and are doubting the credibility of this whole idea. Now, I think we will see an increase in the inequities across income groups in this province with the flat-tax proposal, and that's why I'm reluctant to support it at this time. Tax reduction and the prudent use of tax dollars is a policy that has to be addressed by everyone.

Later on in my remarks I'm going to caution all hon. members of this House about just exactly what can happen with our economy, an economy that's based on nonrenewable resources, and how delicate this is. We all know what happened in the mid-80s whenever resource revenue fell. We look at the full economic picture in this province, and we look at the middle-income earners. They want things for their families and for their community just like everyone else does. They want to see their economic future sound, and they want to see the economic future of their children sound as well. One of the easiest ways to do this, to build a good, solid economic foundation, is through education. Tuition fees are skyrocketing, and this is a burden that the middle-income individuals or families have to absorb. Is that reflected in this flat-tax proposal? I do not think so, Madam Speaker.

We have to now for a few moments consider how this bill came about. Some individuals have referred to it as making tax policy on the fly, but perhaps it had more to do with blind political ambition. I'm thinking back to the days of Richard Nixon, as the second term of the Nixon presidency crumbled and disintegrated. I'm looking at the second term of Premier Klein's government, and I'm also seeing similarities in this. We look, certainly, at the health legislation, and now we look at this flat-tax policy. It's obvious that the government has not done its homework by analyzing the effects of the 11 percent single rate, as it was proposed, on the various income classes and the family types as it relates to the impact of the federal government's tax measures once the provinces are delinked from the tax-on-tax system. That is to occur in the next fiscal year.

Now, why would I say that? Well, Madam Speaker, the government has had to amend this bill, Bill 18, in order to reduce the original 11 percent rate to 10.5 percent and increase the exemption level from $11,620 to $12,900. Now, as I debated a motion earlier in this session, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre brought it up about making a more balanced and fair playing field for stay-at-home parents regardless of whether it was the mother or the father. My motion was soundly defeated by hon. members of this Assembly, yet not a month later we're increasing that exemption level. That's not something that I disagree with. I think that has been a long time coming.

I believe it has something to do with the initiative that the hon. Member for Wainwright proposed earlier in this term. That is how policy is made. The hon. member put his motion forward. We all talked about it in this Assembly, and two and a half years later the Provincial Treasurer of the time increases the exemption. I think those events are related. At least, I hope they're related. I think that is how policy is made. Obviously this policy, as it was developed, was – shall I use the term? – a little delinquent, because it has to be changed so quickly.

Now, as I understand it, the argument that was made was that we had to ensure that taxpayers will receive the same benefits in 2004 under the 10.5 single-rate system as they would under the tax-on-tax system. Madam Speaker, we only need to look at the record over the past nine months to see that this government has been making tax policy on the fly. It has to do with personal ambition rather than prudent fiscal management of our tax revenue and the planning that is going to have to go on perhaps for not one decade but two decades in the future, when natural gas royalties and conventional crude oil royalties are going to be significantly depleted.

We look, Madam Speaker, at the current Provincial Treasurer and the tabling of this draft amendment to decrease the rate from 11 percent to 10.5 percent and to increase the exemptions. Now, it was stated that the Treasury Department projections were done over a three-year period, but we need to look at this on a longer term. The Premier later on stated, as the announcements of the amendments to Bill 18 were made, that the promise to flow through federal tax cuts to Alberta had to be kept. This contradicted, of course, the statements of the Acting Treasurer, and that is quite an interesting contradiction. For that reason and that reason alone we would have to support the amendment from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, because this amendment would allow them to get their story straight.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, we look at the total revenue. The total revenue of the province, Mr. Speaker, is going to be over $19 billion dollars, and this in the current fiscal plan. We look at the two largest sources of that revenue. It's personal income tax, which is close to 25 percent of the total revenue, and nonrenewable resource revenue, which is 21 percent. What would happen – and this is my concern – if we had a significant decline in the commodity prices of natural resources? If hon. members across the way can explain to all members of this House and all Albertans how they're planning on dealing with this if it would occur – I hope it does not. I had direct experience with this resource economy in the mid-80s, and I know how many businesses and I know how many individual families were hurt financially. Not only is prudent spending of our tax resources wise but also prudent planning into the future. This government has never demonstrated to me any ability to plan into the future.

Hon. members could say: why would the individual be concerned about this? Well, we look at their own revenue forecasts. For instance, resource revenue in the last fiscal year was estimated to be $4.3 billion. Now, two years down the road that same estimate is to be slightly more than $3 billion, so that's a significant decline. Tax revenue will grow with tax cuts: that's the argument that is being presented here. I'm not so sure about that. We look at investment income. In the same year, 1999-2000, it was forecast to be $1.6 billion, Mr. Speaker, and the target two years down the road is to be $1.3 billion. So there are some flags here, and I would caution hon. members across the way, in their excitement to promote Bill 18, that I do not believe there has been a prudent 10-year or 20-year plan on the implications of this flat tax.

Now, the other hon. members of the Assembly are quite aware of the former leader of the third party and her fascination with the flat-tax system. In January 1996 the former leader of the New Democrat Party said – and I quote – we need a flat-tax system in this country. The hon. member at the time went on to say that she was not promoting the policies of Bob Dole or Newt Gingrich but that we need a flat tax system. It's such a contradiction to what the current policy of the third party is. The third party seems to be wavering back and forth, Mr. Speaker. They certainly have some concerns about the flat tax and how it hammers away at middle-income earners.

They go on to state that Budget 2000 places a heavier tax load on the backs of working Albertans. They also say that there's a fairness of the tax system at stake – I'm not saying that I disagree with these statements, but there's a definite contradiction here – and that a flat tax will massively shift the tax burden to the middle class. Well, that's not what is talked about in this commentary, in this advocacy of a flat tax. Now, I don't know how far the discussions of the former Member for Edmonton-Highlands went with the former Provincial Treasurer, but obviously they had to have some discussions at some time because they both admire this flat tax system. It is amazing, when I think of it, that in the last couple of months this is a considerable shift. This is a real, philosophical shift, Mr. Speaker.

We talk about having fairness, not only for people that have modest incomes, people in the middle-income bracket – members of this party know that tax policy has to be not only for the fortunate few or the economic elite. Whenever you change tax policy, it has to benefit everyone.

It is unfortunate that I have to conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, because I have a lot more to say on this flat tax system. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to this motion that has been made on this bill. It reads that Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly believes that as a result of the tax reduction measures announced in the 2000 federal budget, the bill would not ensure that all Alberta taxpayers receive a fair tax reduction.

Once again in this Assembly we've had an announcement that puts the cart before the horse. It was like a big race, part of a leadership race maybe, that the then Treasurer had to leap up and start his campaign by saying: we're going to cut taxes. That's great. Everyone wants to pay less taxes. There's no doubt about that. But I don't think he had done all of his homework. It's like he had to put it in quickly before the federal budget came down, and then he had to undo it. He had to make this big announcement. Then when he realized that the federal changes to tax rates were fairer and addressed more people and certainly gave a better tax break to the middle income, it was like a big "Oops, I've done something wrong here." Supposedly there's going to be an amendment during Committee of the Whole. We think it was announced one question period. Right? You know, it's always hard to predict what's going to happen in Committee of the Whole. Then we're going to have that change. I would venture to say that not enough homework has been done on this.

I'm ready for a tax break. I think everyone is. [interjection] Absolutely. We see taxes: income taxes, property taxes, education taxes, business and corporation taxes, oil and gas royalties, stumpage fees, user fees. Now, user fees are a flat tax in a way, I'd say. There are a lot of different views on user fees as well. There are all kinds of user fees. We can look at fishing licences; that's a user fee now. We can look at drivers' licences; that's a user fee. There are different views on user fees. The summer is coming. Whoever will use the parks will pay a fee. People's views on user fees are interesting. Then we pay for licences at the municipal and the provincial and the federal levels. We've got the GST, brought in by a Conservative government. For the environment, we've even got tire taxes.

I think people feel that they are taxed quite enough. They are. They balance that out against: what am I paying my taxes for? Then they kind of say: well, if my tax dollars are being properly used, if they are being spent on public health care, if they're being spent on a good education system, if we get decent roads – and by the way, highway 794 is now highway 44. Just so members of the Assembly know that. It's not quite finished yet. It's got about two-thirds to go, but we're ever hopeful that another third will be done this summer. It's now highway 44. I suggested calling it Soetaert Way. That didn't happen, but it was a suggestion.

So back to the bill. You know, as long as we're getting value for our tax dollars, people can live with that. When they find out that certain things are being squandered or wasted or spent in a way the general public doesn't want or when they don't get the services they need or when suddenly they are paying out of pocket for something they thought their taxes covered, then that's when people get upset. So people get upset, and I think in a way that's been happening lately in the province of Alberta. People have felt: "What do you mean? I'm paying taxes and I have to pay for an MRI? What do you mean? I'm paying taxes and this service is going to be de-insured?" There's an unrest about that. If they pay taxes and they get the service, then people can live with that, but now if they don't get the service, they're thinking: well, why am I paying taxes?

Now we have an issue of a government coming out with a tax break, so that should make the general population happy. At first blush I thought: good; a tax break; that's wonderful. But is it a fair tax break? Is it going to give the middle income more of a burden or less of a burden? Because that's the majority of the population, middle income. I think it's good that the lower income will be taken right off. I think that's a very good part of this piece of legislation. I do. However, I think this will put the burden on the middle income, and eventually people are going to understand that.

If we look at this philosophy behind a flat tax, user fees are a product of a flat-tax philosophy. You know, you reduce the basic tax to the lowest possible level to accommodate the wishes of the wealthy. With this philosophy, if that is your philosophy, then user fees are going to end up being increased in order to make up the needed revenue. Now, this disenfranchises the poor even more. As user fees go up, that philosophy of a flat tax disenfranchises the poor even more because they end up paying a higher percentage of their income than wealthier people do.

A flat tax encourages people to only look at themselves, and I don't think society as a whole fits in with that philosophy. I think that philosophy of a flat tax, of user fees also ties in with private health care and private education, because it's kind of "I'm just looking at me and what it's going to do for me," instead of the collective good, instead of what it will do for society.

MS CARLSON: It's un-Canadian.

MRS. SOETAERT: It's interesting. It's un-Canadian. I heard a lot of that today, actually, at the base at Namao, which is now called Steele Barracks. It was renamed today. I heard a lot of concern about being Canadian. It was cold; it was very cold. Steele was a tough man, and we were tough out there in the wind as the Lieutenant Governor inspected every single troop that has ever lined up in that barracks, I'm sure – heaven bless her – and then the artillery and then the band. She even went through the band.

While we were there – and I know the Member for Redwater was there as well – I even got to borrow a coat from a sergeant major, so I felt quite important for a while and warmer. While there, many of the discussions were on being Canadian and what it means to be Canadian, and in that is how we feel as a society and what we value. I would say that most of us value fairness . . .

MS CARLSON: And taking care of each other.

MRS. SOETAERT: . . . and taking care of each other. Yes, we want to strive to do our best and work hard for our families and hopefully get some extras and enjoy some of the finer things in life. In fact, I think each generation wants more for their children. We do. Most of us live in bigger homes than what we were born in and have two or three vehicles as compared to maybe one family vehicle. Education we value for our children, and we're willing to strive so that our family does as well as it can.

In that view of our family doing as well as it can, I think we extend that to our community – I do – and our province, and when you're sitting in the Legislature, I think we always think provincially as our responsibility. That's why we're elected here. That, of course, makes us stronger Canadians, I believe.

So while at this wonderful renaming ceremony, many people were talking about what it means to be Canadian, because at that base there of course are people from all over Canada. Many concerns about what's happened with health care being un-Canadian and a real concern that that would happen in Alberta. The joy of talking to those people from all over Canada is that they loved living in Alberta. They just think it's such a wonderful province. I am so proud that we are, I think, one of the choice places that people from all over Canada choose to live because we have so much in this province. But a real concern was: why would we in this province change our values of public health care and focus on private? So that ties in to fairness in taxation and if we think that fairness and equity are going to be compromised with Bill 18.

I am in total support of a tax cut. I just think it has to be fair. If we are going to penalize the middle income by eventually more and more of the burden being on them, then we have not made this bill as fair as it can be. If we look at the distribution of tax cuts under a 10.5 percent single rate, it can't help but be skewed towards the 4 percent of tax filers earning above $100,000. They have the ability, and fortunately so, because of hard work, because of luck, because of opportunity, because of how they can land on their feet, because of skill in business, because of education. Because of many factors, there are people who are very wealthy in this province and have worked hard to get so. I have to say that the people in my constituency who understand this – because lots of people just know it's a tax break and that's great – are very concerned about it.

Even the very wealthy would say: "You know what? I am not afraid of saying that I can share more of my tax dollars with those who are less fortunate." [interjection] Right; I am my brother's keeper. And you know what? You can talk about how people aren't working hard enough, they don't do this, and they aren't making enough money. Maybe there are a few like that. There will always be a few like that. In any profession, in any way of life there are the odd people who just kind of slip along. But I would say that certainly in Alberta most people work very hard, are very industrious, love this province, want to make a go of it, want to own a house, want to own a car, and want to do well for their family. I would say that most people in this province are very industrious and proud to be able to work and proud to say, "I work here, and I do this."

So those in the very high income are concerned about this as well, those that think globally and have a real social conscience. I believe they are concerned about this, those 4 percent earning over $100,000, while the 39 percent of middle-income tax filers – now, that's 39 percent, almost 40 percent of tax filers. Almost half our population, almost 40 percent, between $30,000 and $70,000 who pay over 45 percent right now of the provincial personal income taxes in Alberta will receive smaller tax cuts as a percentage.

MS HALEY: That's not true.

MRS. SOETAERT: Well, it is true. But you know what? I do welcome the member from Three Hills-Airdrie . . .

MS HALEY: It's not Three Hills.

MRS. SOETAERT: It's not Three Hills anymore. That got changed. Sorry. Airdrie-Rocky View. My apologies.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We've got a couple of things going on here. For one thing, we have somebody on this side speaking to someone on that side, and then the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert begins a discussion with them.

Hon. members, the speaker included, if you talk through the chair and ignore these others, then we can get along a lot better. Hopefully others will take the opportunity to stand and speak when it's their turn. Otherwise, listen or do your work.

Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, through the chair.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you. Through the chair I apologize to Airdrie-Rocky View. I should know her proper name after all this time, so I apologize for that. Many people mix up mine, so I know what that's like. And I welcome other people to join the debate, after me of course. After me they can join in the debate; certainly not with me.

Debate Continued

MRS. SOETAERT: You know, I can't help but feel that this is just taking a little chunk and changing just a little chunk instead of proper tax reform. I have a feeling it's like a quick fix. We'll make people happy, we'll tell them they're getting a tax cut, and in the long run we haven't really reformed the whole tax system.

I don't claim to be an expert on this at all. It's what I've read. It's what I've listened to. In fact, I've only had about five calls to my office on this, and they're from people who understand the tax system very well. I've had comments from other people saying: well, it looks pretty good to me. I've said, "Yeah, if it's fair," because everybody appreciates getting money in their pocket, absolutely.

Those who truly understand the tax system and have done a great deal of work with it – in fact, I have an appointment with a gentleman next week to come into my office. He's going to talk about how he sees this affecting middle income, how he sees it affecting seniors on a fixed income. In fact, he actually worked in the Northwest Territories in the treasury department many years ago, so he comes with a real background of an understanding of the tax system. He has grave concerns about this, and because we've been so busy in here, I haven't had the opportunity to actually sit down and make some notes with him that I could bring back to this Legislature. So I in no way claim to be an expert on this, but I do claim to be trying to learn about it, and the more I learn about this, the more I see it as not the fairest tax reform that we could have.

I absolutely believe in a tax cut that is fair, but I don't see this in this piece of legislation. I don't see this as a fair tax cut. I see it as a great tax cut for the wealthy and eventually disadvantaging the middle class, which most of us fall into, which 39 percent of us fall into, so that's the average person in my constituency. I have to tell you that a lot of middle-income people I think at first blush say, "This is good," but they don't realize that eventually it's going to be a tax grab for the middle class. Those people who earn less than $70,000 in taxable income would receive a larger provincial tax cut under the current tax-on-tax system by the year 2004 if federal tax measures announced in this last federal budget are flowed through than they would under a 10.5 percent single-rate tax system. If the federal budget keeps going the way it is and we keep doing the flat-tax system, by the year 2004 the middle income is going to be disadvantaged.

So I would say that this hasn't been thought out. I would recommend that we have another go at it. I think we need a tax cut in place by January 1 next year. There are several solid suggestions out there, several people with a great deal of knowledge on taxing who are looking for real tax reform, not just a quick fix. I'm afraid this is like a simple quick fix, and it isn't going to do what people need.

I realize my time is almost at an end. I urge all members this weekend to maybe go to people in their community who really understand this and ask their opinion, because that's what I'm going to do. Truly, the focus has all been on Bill 11, and I want my constituents' feedback on this. I want them to give me their honest opinion. I want them to get some knowledge. I look forward to that opportunity to hear from them, people who are very involved in the tax system, and I hope other MLAs will too.

So with that, I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 18.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand and talk to our amendment that was put forward by Edmonton-Ellerslie. This is a very important bill, a very important direction to go, and I don't think anybody wants to see that we do not have a tax break. It seems to be the spin throughout the country. It started here. It seems to be flowing over, but it is a major concern. I do want to stress that we should be having something falling into line where it's more fair and equitable for all Albertans and not the fact that we're looking for a quick fix for a certain bracket and above.

You know, there are lots of questions of: why are we doing that? Why are we looking at only one thing? Dropping off the bottom end is fine because next to the fact that they do need a break, they don't pay taxes. So that's an easy one. That's an easy fix.

The next fix is how to show that you're going to give a tax break without giving very many dollars away. If you really stress the fact that between $30,000 and $80,000 is where the big numbers would have to come from, this is where this government would have to spend a major dollar.

The amendment that has been put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is to stop this at second reading and actually for the government to go back and do some major research. As I spoke to this bill before, I stressed that there are other alternatives instead of making policy on the fly. You know, we noticed that on May 4 the new Provincial Treasurer actually introduced a change, a revision to the original bill, reducing it from 11 percent down to 10.5. I did point out that I do believe in tax breaks but I didn't believe in the 11 percent. The 10.5 isn't a figure that I'd back to any degree either, because I believe that we're nonprogressive. We should be looking at something, looking at a number of alternatives. It is important there again that nobody takes any words out of context, with myself saying that tax breaks are not what we need.

[Mr. Herard in the chair]

Last year at a media golf tournament it was a ha-ha joke that Ed Gibbons' team was going to win a set of T-shirts and hats that said: tax me; I'm a Canadian. Well, when I went up to get it from the reporter from the Leg. bureau of the Herald, I just laughed and said: you're painting me with the same brush. I don't mind wearing that T-shirt, which I did for a number of months at the YMCA, and that actually created a lot of conversation. I gave the hat away to my father-in-law, who would love to wear that hat any day to the racetracks or anywhere. But the T-shirt did create a lot of conversation, and I was actually going to wear it in our caucus meeting the other day and create conversation there.

It is a major, major issue, and what I'd like to point out is that we're getting into the position where we have to come up with a tax break. We have to come up with alternatives of governing in here. So at second reading I'd like to point out that the comparable $1.33 billion tax reduction package under the current tax-on-tax system, consisting of elimination of the 8 percent surtax, which is $162 million, and the flat tax rate tax, which is $325 million, retaining the Alberta and selected tax reduction and the reduction of the basic federal tax-on-tax from the 44 to 36.5 percent, would result in a fairer and more equitable reduction in taxes for all Albertans, including significant tax cuts to the middle income.

Fairness and equality is what I really want to stress and why I think this amendment should be looked at and thought about by this government. The distribution of tax cuts under the 10.5 percent single rate is skewed toward the 4 percent of tax filers earning above $100,000, while 39 percent, the middle-income tax filers earning between $30,000 and $70,000, who pay over 45 percent of the provincial personal income taxes in Alberta, receive a smaller cut as a percentage of current PIT paid.

I want to stress that what we see in the bill is that the progressive nature of the tax system is eroded. All taxpayers, regardless of taxable income, pay the same 11 percent single rate. This is mitigated to some extent by the fact that some 190,000 Albertans are taken off the provincial tax rolls because of the increase in basic and spousal exemptions to $12,900. As I mentioned before, that's an easy item for this government to stress and spin, that they've dropped off the people at this income level, because it isn't adding up to a lot of dollars. The tax grab is actually at the middle income, Mr. Speaker. Taxpayers who earn less than $70,000 in taxable income would receive a larger provincial tax cut under the current tax-on-tax system by 2004, if federal tax measures announced in the 2000 federal budget are flowed through, than they would under a 10.5 percent single-rate system. This is due to the fact that distribution of the tax cuts under the 10.5 percent single rate is skewed toward those taxpayers earning over $100,000, as I mentioned before.

Higher Alberta margin rates for low- and middle-income earners. Assuming the elimination of .5 percent in the flat rate tax on January 1, 2001, taxpayers in the 17 percent bracket, which is up to $35,000, will have a higher marginal rate under the 10.5 single rate than under the tax-on-tax system in the 2004 tax year. Taxpayers in the middle-income bracket, between $35,001 to $70,000, then would have approximately the same margin rate under the 10.5 single rate as they would under the tax-on-tax system in the 2004 tax year. Meanwhile, taxpayers in the middle-income bracket, above $70,000, would have a significantly lower Alberta margin rate under the 10.5 percent single-rate tax than under the current tax-on-tax system. So it goes back to: really, why are we doing this?

Alberta will unhook from the federal system by levying the provincial tax on taxable income rather than on the basic federal tax this coming January 2001, Mr. Speaker. We actually have been playing around and tinkering, and we've got to a point: is 10.5 percent the proper amount? I would like to see other alternatives coming forward, and with the major flaws in the 10.5, it's my feeling that maybe there are other things. Maybe we can be looking at and actually going out and talking about the fact that we wouldn't spend a lot of dollars with the under $12,900, but we would have to spend a major amount of dollars when it came to that bracket between $35,000 and $70,000. Maybe the $70,000 should be $80,000, and maybe we should be talking of reducing the percentage from 10.5 percent down to somewhere in the high 9s or 10 and going the other way on the higher income. If we are only selecting those taxpayers in the province that are big funders to political campaigns and not looking at the overall item, that goes back to why I'm saying that this amendment is one that we should be actually looking at.

The plan to make single-rate income tax work by cutting taxes another $460 million a year on top of the $800 million already announced does not fit the provincial budget numbers, Mr. Speaker. The government is caught in its own trap, its own money trap. The spin that was supposed to be carrying on and maybe taking the heat off Bill 11 earlier kind of never did happen, because I believe the undercurrent of concern around Bill 11 actually has created everybody being boxed in, whether it's our side or the government side, and talking about one particular bill.

Now we're here, and we're looking at the fact that our economy is growing so fast that I don't believe the forecast for resources to keep booming actually blends into this. Alberta restricts its budget procedure with a variety of laws. One demands that the province run a surplus of at least $649 million in the 2001-2002 budget year and $656 million in 2002-2003. Now, by doing this, there are only so many dollars you can actually play with. So this is where the tinkering comes into place, and they're tinkering with figures that are going to fit in with what they've already forecasted. The new tax cut takes big surpluses out of the picture. The current projection would put the surplus at $446 million in 2001-2002 and $308 million in 2002-2003.

DR. WEST: Just bump what you've got.

MR. GIBBONS: Why not just lower it?

The government probably lowballed its revenue estimates. There would likely be enough cash around to cover the difference, but you know, I'm getting different comments coming across from the Treasurer. He's saying: just bump it. Well, I'm saying: let's break the wage brackets out on three different levels. You have the low, you have the high, and you have the middle. Let's make a sort of progressive flat tax on each level and forget the name "flat" because it isn't working, isn't selling. It's a spin that I actually even bought into until I started to look at the figures and delve into it.

Honest accounting and living up to the spirit of its own rules requires rewriting of the forecast, and that is rewriting of the budget that was actually set out prior to this minister. The lower tax rate will be announced within the next few days, or maybe the minister will actually talk about how he's going to change the budget that was put forward by the previous Treasurer. Even if the revenues stay up, there will only be enough money if the province keeps growing and resource prices hold.

Now, this goes back to why we need lower taxes, and this is in the scheme of everything that's been happening over the last years. If you drop the tax rate to a point where you're going to attract people, you're attracting industry, which is great. You're attracting people from all over the country, which is great. Now we have the apprenticeship bill in front of us, and we're behind the eight ball on the apprenticeship end. We have to get moving on something.

We seem to be in a catch-up. We're catching up for all the lack of planning that we've had over the last six years while we were playing the one-string guitar and paying down the debt for the last six years. Now we're seeing bills coming forward that should have come forward a long time ago. We wouldn't have been in this predicament. If oil and natural gas prices come in at about 7 to 8 percent lower than expected next year, the rest of the budget assumption produces a deficit, and then where are we going to be? Something would have to happen to give to the spending side. So when we get into pushing a particular line of taxes and the revenue that we totally have to fall back on is from natural gas and oil, then we're back into the loop where we were back in the '80s, when we had the peaks and the valleys.

Balanced-budget laws have turned Alberta finance planning into an artificial experiment, and we keep hearing that it is better to experiment than to plan. Well, I'd rather see the minister sit down and build a plan and, now that he is the new Treasurer, maybe take what was wrong before and actually produce a new budget. Here's another case where there's a lack of real concern, of really wanting to listen to where we want to go, because if you're going to do policy on the fly, it's no different than tinkering.

The government wants to introduce single-rate income tax, but to make the switch acceptable, it wants to make sure that everyone gets a tax cut. This can't be accomplished under the present tax system they're putting forward, and it's only if the government actually spins it out a different way. The actual fact is that working Albertans need this break. Myself, I've got three of my own children going into secondary schooling this coming fall, and that's major, major, so I would love to have a tax break. But I want to make sure that what we're going to set forward in this legislation is something that is going to honestly be true instead of being tinkered with year after year.

This is actually why the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie put this forward, Mr. Speaker. I hope the new minister is of the belief that he would really love to see this work and will make sure that this is going to sell, because if it doesn't sell, it's another bill that has gone faulty at this particular time. Sure, they can pass this bill, but it's only by numbers, and if it's not going to sell afterwards, then there's a major problem we have in this province.

The object of the original bill was to establish the rules and the procedures for the implementation and administration of Alberta's single-tax system, which, I really, really want to stress, are not the exact figures. So as I sit and let other people speak, Mr. Speaker, I only want to stress that I believe in a tax cut, but as I said before, I do not believe in 11 percent, and right now I do not believe in 10.5 percent. I do believe that we have to sit down and look at this amendment we've put forward and look at something that's going to build a system that makes Alberta better and makes everybody want to move to Alberta.

Alberta is a fantastic place, and every place we go – last year we went to Quebec for the parliamentary conference. It's nice to see, when you have six MLAs coming from Alberta, all of them sticking up for the fact that Alberta is a great province. I sat one night at a table of MLAs from Quebec, one being a Liberal member and the other one being of the government party, the Quebecois. In the conversation we had, they pointed out: what's it like coming from a have province? This was the sixth night that we were down there, and every night we had been treated very, very well. I looked at him and I said: "You know, if you were in Alberta, we would treat you very, very well. You wouldn't go back thinking that you weren't treated well, but we wouldn't be spending the money that you've spent on us in this past week." I wasn't insulting him. I was just challenging him to a conversation.

I said: what's it going to be like this coming fall when you have to really govern? They looked at me kind of quizzically, and I said: "Well, the fact is that you've been going around touting separation for so many years that that's your only platform. What's it going to be like this fall when all your unions start hitting you between the eyes?" They were actually quite concerned, which brought on more conversation around the fact that the only way they could get away from the fact of where they are, the way they govern, and the way they overspend on things in Quebec is the fact that other provinces, like ourselves, are have provinces.

Well, we are a have province. We do have the natural gas. We do have the oil. We have had a great run in the '90s, and hopefully the run is going to continue in the 2000s. But the fact is that any of us that were in the industry in the 1980s, construction of any kind, do not want those days coming back. The bottom fell out in 1982. Things started to build. By 1985 things came back. By 1988 the bottom fell out again.

These are the years we do not want. We want to build. We want to put proper bills forward, and whether it's the apprenticeship bill that has been put forward or other different items, we need good legislation to create a better province and have a legacy to look back on and say: see; I sat in the Legislature in those years when we built good bills.

There are good bills on the table in front of us that should be passed, and I hope we're going to be sitting long enough that they are going to be passed. I was very happy that Bill 15 went through last night into Committee of the Whole and that the condo bill went through, bills that are being thought about, taken back. The condo one is a prime example.

Thank you.

MS CALAHASEN: Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate on Bill 18.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[At 5:02 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 15, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/05/15

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. On this day let us be guided by Your eternal wisdom and confidence that You believe in all of us. Amen.

Hon. members, would you please remain standing now for the singing of our national anthem.

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a very special group of officials with us today representing provincial and municipal governments of Komi and Karelia and Novgorod Oblast in Russia. The delegation members are visiting Alberta under the Canadian International Development Agency's Canada/Russia parliamentary program. While in Alberta the delegation members are examining the Canadian model of federal/provincial relations in secondary education and health care as well as the roles and responsibilities of municipal governments. These visits and exchanges serve to increase our understanding of Russia as an important partner for Canada and for Alberta and will hopefully lead to greater co-operation in the future. I would like to take this opportunity to wish our visitors a very successful and memorable trip to Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask our honoured guests to please rise in your gallery and receive the very warm and hospitable welcome of this Legislature.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege today to stand and present a petition from 2,003 Albertans from Lethbridge, Calgary, Taber, Fort Macleod, Coleman, Airdrie, Magrath, Coaldale, Coalhurst, Medicine Hat, Cardston, and Raymond. This petition is asking for two people on shift during dark to daylight hours in businesses in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to present another petition today urging "the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care." This is from 131 residents of Calgary, Edmonton, Lethbridge, and Coaldale.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a petition signed by 72 Albertans opposed to privatization of health care. This brings the total number of signatures on this petition to 22,524 to date.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented to the Assembly last week be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented to the Legislative Assembly on May 11 regarding the disruptive and divisive labour dispute at the Calgary Herald be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We, the undersigned, petition the [Legislative] assembly to urge the government to use its legislative powers to help resolve the labour disputes at the Calgary Herald.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented last Thursday, May 11, now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the requisite number of copies, being eight, of my responses to written questions 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table the required copies of the Schedule of Oral and Maxillofacial Surgery Benefits from the Alberta health care insurance plan Schedule of Medical Benefits Procedures List. I'm tabling these documents in response to questions raised by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview on April 17, 2000.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. One is to the Minister of Economic Development asking him what activities have been suspended or canceled due to the murder, if you will, of a Canadian citizen in Vietnam as a result of an execution that occurred while the Canadian government was still negotiating.

Another one is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations asking what sanctions her department would be undertaking in relation to the same Canadian citizen who was executed while the Canadian government was still undertaking to deal with her issue.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies today of a ceremony we were at last Thursday, May 11 at the military base. It was the Steele barracks dedication ceremonies, and this is named after Major General Sir Samuel Benfield Steele.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to table five copies of a document entitled Bridging Downtown and Inner City. I had the privilege of attending the 30th annual general meeting of the Edmonton City Centre Church Corporation last Friday. They are celebrating their first 30 years of providing services to the city of Edmonton and particularly to the residents of the inner city. This document, which was prepared by Kathryn Ivany and Beckie Garber-Conrad, is a real testimonial to all of the hard work they have done.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and table a copy of the report A Summary of the Alberta Suicide Data: Suicide and Self Inflicted Injuries, which highlights the fact that "since 1993, suicide has been . . . the leading cause of injury death among Albertans" with over 2,000 taking their lives between 1993 and 1997.

My second tabling today is the required number of copies of the program and accompanying information about the Alberta registered nurses educational trust. I was pleased to participate in the Edmonton Nightingale gala on Friday evening and to assist in raising money for nursing education and research.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four different tablings today. The first one is a document from 1991 titled Your Views and Experiences Are Critical in the Development of New Environmental Regulations for Alberta, circulated by the then Minister of Environment, the present Premier. So we have those copies.

1:40

Mr. Speaker, I've got three letters. The first two are from Paulette Smith of Claresholm, and the second one is from Aileen Pelzer of Calgary, both of whom are opposed to the Genesis proposal for development of the Spray Lakes area of Kananaskis.

The last document is an e-mail from Jerry Smith of Medicine Hat, who is opposed to Bill 11.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, there were a number of hands that went up, and I'm not sure I got them all. Any additional members?

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I'm very happy to introduce to you and other members of the Legislature two friends of mine from Calgary and also fellow lawyers. They are Janice Bruni of Bruni & Company. For many years in her practice Janice has acted as an agent for Alberta Justice in child welfare matters and also acts on behalf of the directors of child welfare for three First Nations. She's accompanied by Judith Park, also a lawyer but devoting herself to full-time real estate. She's with Re/Max Central in Calgary. They're both in the members' gallery, and I'd like them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce 38 students from two grade 6 classes from Pope John XXIII school in Fort Saskatchewan. They're accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Vukovic and Mrs. McDonald. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Ms Melissa VanderLeek. Melissa is a home schooling student in grade 7 from Bon Accord. Her dad, Dave Linden, is the president of the press gallery. I would ask her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 43 students from Queen Street school in Spruce Grove. They're here with seven adults: their teachers, Mrs. Shannon McGann and Mr. Les Korn, and parent helpers Mrs. Edith Fehr, Mrs. Karina Beaudoin, Mrs. Barb Hawryluk, Mrs. Patricia Hamilton, and Mrs. Darlene Little. They're a great group of students who have had a good tour today, and I would ask all of them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. They are in both galleries.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, sir. It's a fine day in May when I have the distinct honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly 15 students from McArthur elementary school that are here for a School at the Legislature week, which is a wonderful opportunity for them to learn about what we do and precisely how it's done. They're here today with their teacher, Nellie Puim, and teacher assistant Terri Schlader, and the helper is Marie Callihoo. They're in the public gallery, sir, if they would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, sir.

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, I have the great pleasure of introducing to you and through you to members of this Assembly Twila Tayfel. Twila is a constituent of Calgary-McCall, a fourth year

University of Calgary anthropology student, who is going to be spending a great deal of time in our office in Calgary. I request Twila to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a good friend of mine from Fort Macleod, a longtime businessman from that community, and now chair of the Chinook health region, Mr. Frank Eden. Accompanying Mr. Eden today is the senior vice-president from the Chinook health authority, Pam Whitnack. They are in the city today for some meetings. They're seated in the members' gallery. I ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Economics has been often referred to as the dismissal science, and it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly someone who brings light to the dismissal science, and that's a professor of economics at the University of Calgary, Dr. Kenneth McKenzie. Dr. McKenzie's research focuses on all aspects of public finance with an emphasis on tax policy. He has won several prestigious awards for the research, including the Harry Johnson award for best article in The Canadian Journal of Economics in 1996 and with co-author Ron Kneebone will be awarded later this year the Douglas Purvis memorial prize for excellence in a Canadian policy publication. As Bismarck once said: those who like sausage and those who like public policy should not watch either being made. I would hope that Dr. MacKenzie has made good sausage out of the public policy works that he's done, and I would ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Edmonton-Highlands By-election

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The people of Edmonton-Highlands have been without a representative in this Assembly since February 2 of this year. Certainly we in the Official Opposition have heard from many of the residents of Edmonton-Highlands, in fact at their doors, about their clear opposition to Bill 11 of this Legislature. My questions are to the Premier. Why has the Premier been afraid to call a by-election in Edmonton-Highlands until he had slammed the door shut on Bill 11 debate?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, June 12 is hopefully going to be a good day for an election. It doesn't matter what issue is before this House or what issue is not before this House. An election is called when it's the right time to call an election. I could have waited until early September. This is two months earlier than the law requires us to call an election. I can't understand what the opposition leader is complaining about.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier explain to the people of Edmonton-Highlands why he felt their voices were unnecessary in the debate on Bill 11?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as we speak, the campaign has begun, and if there are constituents in Edmonton-Highlands who want to express a view to the Liberal candidate from Leduc or the ND candidate from city council or our candidate, I'm sure that they will express those views.

THE SPEAKER: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the Premier's admission in recent days that Bill 11 could result in higher costs and longer waiting lists, will the Premier come out to the Edmonton-Highlands constituency and debate with me his health policy before he signs a single contract for private operators?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this is not the leader of the Liberal opposition's by-election. This is not my by-election. This is not the leader of the third party's by-election. This by-election belongs to the candidates, and I look forward to their debate of that issue and all the other issues, particularly the issue of taxation, where the Liberals do not want to give 192,000 low-income Albertans a tax break. I would like to see them debate that.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Facilities Utilization

MRS. MacBETH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The current crisis in our public health care system was created by this government, which made its cuts without a plan. Even worse, in the eight years of this government's mandate there has been not a single accurate study on patient capacity in the health care system. In fact, this government admitted that there were no studies at all of patient capacity in the health care system in a letter to the MLA for Edmonton-Glenora in December of last year. My questions are to the Premier. How does the government propose to meet the requirements of their own Bill 11, section (8)(3), that requires full utilization of public facilities, before contracting out to private facilities when they don't have any measure of it?

1:50

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness answer that question, but relative to the preamble, the crisis was created by the leader of the Liberal opposition when she was minister of health. It was this government that had to clean it up and to do all the fundamental reforms, but the crisis was created by a person by the name of Nancy Betkowski when she was the minister of health.

As to the question I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, we are able to provide fairly comprehensive data, and if I recall correctly, such data was provided recently in a reply to a letter from a member of the opposition.

We are taking a very major initiative through our utilization commission to get very detailed, very accurate information about our health care system and to be able to project the needs of the health care system very thoroughly, Mr. Speaker. That is one of the areas of work that I think we're probably leading the country in in terms of that overall comprehensive look at utilization.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that the government has finally figured out that they need a patient utilization study after we've been arguing for it for years, will this Premier assure Albertans that no existing or new contracts will be signed until a full and accurate study of patient capacity has been completed and made public and shared with the people of this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, a bill that the Liberals voted against clearly indicates that before any contract is let and I would presume renewed, a number of things have to be shown. One, it has to be shown that the contract will be cost effective, that it will serve to reduce waiting lists, and a number of other conditions. I don't know why they would be so concerned now, because they voted against all those measures that would have to be taken.

THE SPEAKER: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see the Premier still has no answers.

What is the contingency plan to ensure that patients will not suffer if existing private contracts are canceled?

MR. KLEIN: Well, again, I'm somewhat bewildered, Mr. Speaker. Why would she be concerned about existing contracts when the leader of the Liberal opposition has expressed her overall and her global opposition to the whole notion of surgical clinics?

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Income Tax

MRS. MacBETH: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are looking forward to a provincial income tax cut. Certainly they need the money for new, higher utility rates, for school user fees, for fundraising, for higher property taxes, and for higher rents. We, of course, believe in tax cuts, but we believe in fair and sustainable tax cuts. Albertans are concerned that the people who will benefit from this government's tax policy changes are the same people who will benefit from this government's health privatization policy; namely, the very few with very high incomes. My first question is to the Premier. Will the Premier confirm that his tax policy means that 1 percent of Albertans with the highest income will get a 20 percent tax cut, while nearly 40 percent of Albertans in the middle-income category will see only a 13 percent tax cut? Will he confirm this?

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Hon. the Premier, before I call on you, I just want to remind all members that we do have an Order Paper, and up for debate on this Order Paper this afternoon for second reading is something called Bill 18. If we're going to use the question period again to continue to debate, this sort of violates all the rules that we have.

I'll recognize the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, relative to policy, first of all, there is no privatization policy in health. There is a protection of health care policy, which the Liberals voted against. They voted against protecting the publicly funded system as we know it today.

I look forward to observing the debate on Bill 18 and the taxation policy of this government. Speaking to the policy, Mr. Speaker, the policy, which again purports to become law, would take about 192,000 low-income Albertans off the tax rolls completely as it pertains to provincial income tax, and they're going to vote against it. Watch them.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier confirm that 1 percent of Albertans earning the highest incomes in this province will get an average tax reduction of nearly $1,100 while 40 percent of Albertans in the middle-income category will get an average tax saving of only $550?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer respond, but just before he does, there are so many matrixes involved with this particular situation that it all depends whether the person is single, whether the person is married, depends on the deductions as to how much money will remain in the individual's or the family's pocket.

I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer.

DR. WEST: Yes. I can confirm to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that the top 10 percent wage earners in this province pay 52 percent of all the tax in this province. If they believe over there that the progressivity of a tax system should penalize those aggressive people that started out at the lower incomes and worked themselves up, then they'd better state that to the people of Alberta emphatically.

The other thing I will point out is that they are misleading a bit of the people of Alberta by using total dollars when there are so many factors involved in the single-rate tax. They keep talking about the flat tax bill; it's actually a single rate of taxation. If you look at the categories and those percentages that they talk about, a single individual making $20,000 would receive a 38 percent tax cut, whereas a dual-income family making $100,000 will only see a 12 percent tax cut. A single individual making $55,000 will get a 12 percent tax cut. That's a single individual without any children and that. A single-parent family making $30,000 will see a whopping 276 percent tax cut. A single-income family making $55,000 will see a 41 percent tax cut, and a single senior making $20,000 will see a 62 percent tax cut.

I'm ashamed at where these people are trying to take this massive tax reduction in the province of Alberta.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, this question goes back to the Premier. Given that this government's cousins in Ontario's Queen's Park have rejected a flat tax, presumably because they realize it's unfair to middle-income earners and to working families, why does this government persist in pushing an unfair flat tax?

2:00

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, maybe in Ontario they're waiting to see what we do, because most of their fiscal reforms have all been a page out of our books. So I think that they'll see the flat tax. They'll watch it for a while, and they'll say: "Oh, my gosh, is that ever a good idea; is that ever working well. I think we'll do it too." I enjoy the competition with Ontario, particularly because they keep taking pages out of our books. They keep doing what we're doing relative to fiscal reform, and that's why Ontario and Alberta are the most economically vibrant provinces in Canada. And you know what? They're both Conservative provinces.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Bill 11 Regulations

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton-Highlands by-election will be the first opportunity Albertans have to express at the ballot box their frustration and anger with this government's health care privatization agenda. The government's heavy-handed approach is now extending to drafting regulations for Bill 11. Instead of doing a broad public consultation prior to finalizing regulations, the Minister of Health and Wellness said last week that there will only be closed-door consultations with a few affected stakeholders. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier confirm that in developing draft regulations for Bill 11, the government plans to consult only with regional health authorities, the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and private health care interests while excluding ordinary Albertans from the process?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the meat of this particular piece of legislation is in the legislation itself. As I understand it from the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, the regulations are in nature mechanical, and that is the mechanics of implementing the legislation.

I'll have him respond.

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, as the Premier has indicated, this is very specific and detailed legislation as legislation goes, and yes, in certain sections there will be regulations that need to be established. They deal with, for instance, the College of Physicians and Surgeons and their concerns and the need to make sure the legislation meshes with their bylaws and their policy and decision-making process. Certainly we are committed to discussing the development of the regulations with the College of Physicians and Surgeons. I could go down the list of the four or five other groups that are key to the development of these regulations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm puzzled as to why the Premier is refusing to allow the same kind of broad-based public consultations in developing Bill 11 regulations as he allowed nine years ago when he was Environment minister.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that's a very interesting question, and I'm very happy that the hon. leader of the third party would allude to the Alberta Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. The two pieces of legislation cannot be compared in any way, shape, or form. The environmental legislation that I had the pleasure to introduce and see through when I was minister of the environment involved the consolidation of nine different environmental acts, and those acts were highly regulatory. Unlike Bill 11 the acts set the framework, but really the meat was in the regulations.

In Bill 11 the meat is in the legislation, and the mechanics are in the regulations. So the two pieces of legislation and the regulations associated with them are totally and absolutely different. This is like comparing apples and oranges and grapes and bananas.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While Albertans think Bill 11 will irreversibly damage the health care system, why does the government no longer care to listen to the concerns of Albertans as evidenced by ramming Bill 11 through the Legislature and now the refusal to broadly consult on the drafting of regulations?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I take great exception to that statement, because what the hon. leader of the third party fails to recognize is that there are now 52 surgical clinics operating, as I've pointed out before, performing some 152 different procedures and some 20,000 procedures a year. That has not had the kind of effect on the health care system to which the hon. member alludes. This has been operating for some time.

I understand completely where this member is coming from. He would like to see and he has stated publicly – and the position is the same, I'm sure, as the Canadian Union of Public Employees and the Alberta Federation of Labour, who back the Friends of Medicare. Their position is quite clear. They would like to see the elimination completely of all surgical clinics, including the Morgentaler abortion clinics, and have those clinics put back over a three-year period into conventional full-scale public hospitals. That is their position, and I can understand why he would be concerned.

I don't think the majority of Albertans agree with that position. I don't think the majority of the medical profession agree with that position. As a matter of fact, the Alberta Medical Association has stated quite clearly that there will be always be contracting out. There is contracting out now, and there will always be contracting out. That of course is contrary to the position of the ND Party, and I accept that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Hearing Aid Implants

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A constituent of mine who has severe hearing loss attributed to childhood illness requires a bone-attached hearing aid, also known as the BAHA system. Even though he needs this implant to continue his employment effectively, he is looking at a wait of a year or more for an interview and possibly another two- or three-year wait for the implant if he is accepted. Dr. John Di Toppa is the only specialist qualified to do these implants provincewide and I understand, in fact, in western Canada. My questions are all to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Could the minister explain why Dr. Di Toppa is limited to 22 implants per year?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the bone-anchored hearing aid, or BAHA system, is a very new procedure. It involves a hearing aid being connected with a small titanium implant device, and that in turn adheres to bone behind the ear. This has been successful in restoring the hearing of individuals. It is still to some degree in, I guess you'd say, the experimental stage, but there has been a great deal of success. The priority currently for the program is children who have this condition, particularly those who are born with an incomplete ear canal or a congenital deformity.

Limited budget and limited capacity are involved here, Mr. Speaker. We're doing about 20 to 22 implant procedures per year, and over the life of the program thus far there have been about 150 people that have received the operation. We acknowledge that there are waiting lists, but there is a careful look taken at the priorities of individuals who come forward for the procedure, and the physicians manage the list accordingly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister say if he is planning a review of this 22 implant limit?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I understand the history of the program, we have increased the funding for it. It is a procedure which on average costs $18,000 per case. As I look at the years involved, tracing it back to 1998, there has been a modest increase in the number of procedures done each year, and I expect that in the coming year's budget there will be more procedures done, although I cannot indicate at this time that every single person that might want or qualify for this procedure will be covered.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell this Assembly if there is anything he can do to ensure that a replacement is trained to replace Dr. Di Toppa should he ever choose to leave his practice for whatever reason, leaving Albertans with no BAHA system specialists?

2:10

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, Dr. Di Toppa is, of course, a special specialized doctor. We're very fortunate to have him working in this province. We do, however, have vehicles in place for the recruitment of physicians. We work with the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the AMA but particularly the college through our overall physician resource plan in this province, the one through which we have been able to recruit doctors very successfully for rural areas and where also we've had considerable success in recruiting people for combined research and patient practices in our major centres. Certainly the structure, the mechanism is in place to go out when we have a need and endeavour to recruit specialists that are needed and in very limited supply.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

School Fund-raising

DR. MASSEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In an e-mail to the Premier a Calgary parent wrote in part:

My daughter recently came home with a letter from her school, attached to a Casino Volunteer Worker Application . . . At the bottom . . . was the following . . .

Prizes will be given to each student returning a completed application form from their parents!!

My questions are to the Premier. How widespread is the practice of bribing children to get parents involved in gambling to raise school funds?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as to how widespread it is, I really don't know. I don't believe that it is widespread.

Relative to the specific matter that was raised by the hon. member, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That kind of behaviour, that kind of issue from the school is completely intolerable, and if the hon. member will pass the name of the school and the child on to me, I will certainly take a look at it. I will also get the e-mail from the Premier and take a look at it, because that is not acceptable.

DR. MASSEY: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: when can Albertans expect to see an end to user fees, to fund-raising, and to casinos and to have their schools adequately funded?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to the fundamentals of education schools are adequately funded. We have a tremendous commitment in this province to education, both at the secondary level and at the public and primary level.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the nice to haves and the extras it has always been the custom of schools to enter into fund-raising campaigns.

Again, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I raised this exact issue with the Alberta School Boards Association back in the fall, and they assured me at that time that school fees, school fund-raising were also of concern to them. They essentially said: leave it to us; we will come forward with a plan that will stop this. I said that it is completely unacceptable for students in Alberta to fund-raise for textbooks. Consequently what you saw in the last budget was an 8.8 percent increase to the schools. To put that in comparison, the New Democrat government in Manitoba recently increased their budget for education by 4.5 percent. We are a good 4 and a half percent higher than that.

Mr. Speaker, fund-raising is something that I take seriously. I take the issue very seriously when parents are being told that they are fund-raising for textbooks, because that should not be happening at any school board in Alberta today.

DR. MASSEY: Mr. Speaker, my third question is to the Premier. In spite of the government's claims of adequate funding schools are increasingly turning to gambling. Why?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, basically schools are under a new governance system. We have throughout this province now school councils. Those kinds of decisions relative to raising funds for extracurricular activities are really the responsibility of the school councils. The change in governance was made so that parents and teachers and, yes, the students could have more of a say in how their school is run, particularly as it relates to the optional and the extracurricular activities.

I'll have, again, the hon. minister respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to echo what the Premier has said. When it comes to things such as uniforms for the football teams, when it comes to rock walls, when it comes to the extras that are out there, they can fund-raise for that if they so choose. When it comes to the basics of education, we do not expect, we do not condone parents fund-raising for that. That is our responsibility and a responsibility that we take seriously.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Auxiliary Nurses' Collective Bargaining

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the mediation between the Provincial Health Authorities of Alberta and the AUPE on auxiliary nursing adjourned last week. So my question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Could he tell us what is the status of the auxiliary nursing bargaining?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nursing bargaining is taking place. The parties involved in the collective bargaining process are the Provincial Health Authorities of Alberta – they represent 17 regional health authorities and eight voluntary organizations – and of course the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. AUPE represents in this particular case 6,700 licensed practical nurses, nursing attendants, and other auxiliary health care staff from across the province.

Yes, in fact the parties met last week with the mediator, and talks adjourned on May 11. Now, I understand that both parties are of course committed to the process, to continue to work with the mediator, and it's my understanding that the mediator will be contacting the parties to set additional dates.

MRS. O'NEILL: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how long have the parties actually been without a collective agreement?

MR. DUNFORD: The collective agreement expired on March 31 of the year 2000. Bargaining started on February 9, and a mediator was appointed to the dispute on March 17. The parties began meeting with the mediator on March 28. Now, the mediator's recommendations for settlement were rejected, and the parties returned to mediation, and I can provide the dates: April 25, 26, and 27. The mediator then proposed a break in the talks, and mediation resumed May 9, 10, and 11.

MRS. O'NEILL: Also, what role is your department playing, if any, in these negotiations?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, our focus is on continuing to support the parties by making mediation services available without the minister intervening. We believe the best solutions are those made by the parties themselves, and we encourage them to make every effort to resolve their issues at the bargaining table.

Workplace Health and Safety

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, today marks the first day of North American safety and health week, a reminder to all of us that workplace injuries and deaths are unacceptable and preventable. Alberta has already had 19 workplace fatalities in the first four months of 2000, a rate of approximately one per week. In 1998 there were only 34 workplace deaths, and this increased to 54 deaths in 1999. Can the Minister of Human Resources and Employment tell this House why the rate of workplace fatalities in Alberta has increased to approximately 59 percent when the size of the workforce has only increased by 11 percent?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, first of all, I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. I appreciate the fact that maybe the health issue might be behind us.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

MR. DUNFORD: No? Okay. Well, one can always hope.

THE SPEAKER: Actually it would be really helpful to address the comments through the chair, and then we'll have less debate.

MR. DUNFORD: Okay. All right. Thank you.

There's no question, Mr. Speaker, that we've started out in the year 2000 with a lot of activity in the workforce, and one of the unfortunate aspects of that has been an increase thus far this year in our workplace fatalities.

2:20

As minister I receive a report on each and every fatality that takes place. I, like members of my staff, look to see if there's any pattern. Is there something that we're overlooking? Is there some way in which to approach this? I have to say to the hon. member that certainly we need to extend our sympathy and our empathy to all of the families out there that have been affected by these workplace fatalities. We have a staff that is right at the work site investigating the particular circumstances of the fatality or the injury.

Thus far there are no apparent patterns that have started to evolve, and all we can do is continue to try to enforce as best we can the law and regulations that we have but also to ask everyone within the sound of my voice today to focus on not only their own individual safety but of course the safety of their fellow workers.

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, given this alarming trend of increasing workplace fatalities, will the Minister of Human Resources and Employment reallocate the $4 million a year the government currently spends to subsidize industry-sponsored safety associations to more rigorous enforcement of safety regulations?

MR. DUNFORD: No, I'm not prepared to make that reallocation at the present time. I'm a believer in education. I believe that the record in Alberta since the inception of the partnership program speaks for itself. Since 1992 we've had a steady decrease in the statistics as they relate to workplace incidents and workplace injury. We believe that education is the way to go. I look for our department to be educators, but certainly as a last resort we can be enforcers.

I don't want anyone out there to consider that we're not taking the situation seriously, but in terms of a full-scale policy change at this particular point in time, no, we're not going to do that.

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, given that one of the prime goals of unions is to help protect the health and safety of working men and women in Alberta, shouldn't this government be supporting unions instead of trying to break them?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, all I could say to the hon. member is that certainly I've been following the pattern that has been set by ministers responsible for labour before me in the sense that we try to provide as best we can a level playing field here in the province. As far as a jurisdiction, we think that in Alberta unions are free to collectively bargain. They're certainly free to offer advice to the government. I see the Alberta Federation of Labour, who I believe to be the chief spokesperson for the unions within our province, on a regular basis.

Certainly someone like myself who has a background in labour relations knows and appreciates the tremendous opportunities that unions can provide and have provided in our province as far as an exemplary labour relations climate. Alberta doesn't have to take second place to any jurisdiction within this country on the ability of employers and employees through the process of collective bargaining to sit down and resolve their particular issues, Mr. Speaker. This is a tremendous jurisdiction for labour relations, and all of us, including the hon. member, ought to be proud.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Alberta Children's Hospital

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's been a great deal of talk in Calgary about renovating the Alberta Children's hospital and perhaps even building a new facility. It's my understanding that a report on the status of the facility is due to be tabled this week. Could the Minister of Health and Wellness explain what is happening in regard to this facility?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am aware that for some time now there has been work going on in Calgary with respect to the redevelopment or possibly the rebuilding of the Children's hospital. There is, as I understand it, a foundation in place which is raising money to be complementary to this project when it goes forward.

As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of different alternatives being considered, and I'm sure they're covered in a comprehensive manner in the report. There's the alternative, as I understand it, of going to a new site, possibly near the existing Foothills hospital. There's the possibility of full development on the current site. There is the possibility of redevelopment on the current site and keeping part of the current building and adding on to it and enhancing it. Certainly there are considerations being given to partnering with the volunteer and the public sectors on some aspects of that particular project.

Mr. Speaker, the report, as I understand it, has come to conclusion, and I'm sure it will be something that, first of all, the supporters of the Children's hospital and the Calgary regional health authority will want to examine in considerable detail before it is presented any further.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister explain his ministry's process for dealing with any recommendations that may come forward from the report?

MR. JONSON: Well, this, Mr. Speaker, is certainly a major and very, very significant project, but we have a standard overall process that we use. When proposals come in for major capital projects, they go through a set of criteria. In other words, they're screened as to the need for the facility: are there waiting time situations; will this help the overall service throughout the region, if not through the whole province? Of course, the Children's hospital in Calgary serves the whole southern part of the province if not the entire province. So we do have a criteria scale that we run our projects against, and then we work from there in terms of allocating dollars when they're available.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister indicate when any decisions may be made as a result of the recommendations in this report?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to, first of all, take note that, as I understand it at least, this report has just been completed and will first of all have to be considered by the Calgary regional health authority. The Calgary regional health authority will have to decide on what their priority for this particular project is. I assume that when they do that, they will submit that along with their other capital priorities to us, and then we will make a decision accordingly.

I cannot, Mr. Speaker, at this particular time predict when a decision will be made at the provincial level. I expect, given that it is such an important project, that the Calgary board will want to carefully consider it, but they will certainly want to get it on to us as soon as possible.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Peter Lougheed Hospital

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgarians are concerned about 14 million tax dollars that have been spent on the new computer system at the Peter Lougheed hospital. Medical professionals have said that the system could compromise patient care, and in many cases professionals refuse to use the system. Health authority staff members are saying that the system is already obsolete, that the system is a dinosaur. That's their word, not mine. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness this afternoon. Why did the minister of health, the Minister of Government Services, the minister of science, and the chief information officer allow the unelected Calgary regional health authority to invest 14 million tax dollars in an obsolete computer operating system?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure that I would agree with the hon. member's assessment. I understand that there was an article in today's paper dealing with statements of this particular type. I would certainly take the topic as being a serious one, but I would certainly not from one newspaper article jump to the conclusion the member across the way has.

I think this needs to be reviewed. We'll certainly look into it and see what the issues are. I take it seriously in that regard, but I don't think it is fair at this point to just automatically agree with what is reported there.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, there were lots of sources for information on this problem.

I might follow up and ask the minister: why is the Calgary regional health authority apparently prepared to spend a further million dollars to try and at least partially fix the problem? Isn't this a case of simply throwing good money after bad?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I would fully expect that the regional health authority will look at that particular matter, but if we have a $14 million system and it needs to be upgraded, that is happening with electronic information systems all across this country. The technology, the capacity, the ability in this particular area of our networks is increasing every year, and I expect that systems all across North America are being upgraded every single year. The ratio of a million dollars in improvements to a $14 million investment is not unusual.

MR. DICKSON: Well, my final question to the Minister of Health and Wellness would be this: what will be the total cost, then, to taxpayers in this province to replace that system with one that is usable, that is safe, and that won't immediately be obsolete?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, as sometimes happens from across the way, they take different directions at the same time and in almost the same breath.

If in fact there is a problem with the system – and we will certainly follow up and check on this – or if it is as the first reference seems to indicate, a situation where the system needs to be upgraded at a cost allegedly of a million dollars, I expect that that would be the action the regional health authority will take. As far as I understand it, there is no conclusion that the system needs to be replaced.

In the member's first statement he indicated that that was the case. Now he's on to replacing it. So let's just back up. We'll have our staff have a look at the situation, find out what actually is going on, and I'm sure the Calgary regional health authority through their administration is already working hard on that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Sleep Apnea Treatment

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today has been brought to my attention by at least three constituents of mine within the last six months, and it's the issue in rural Alberta regarding the government's decision to fund continuous positive airway pressure machines for Albertans who suffer from sleep disorders. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. I wonder if he can tell us why the program is only available to people that live in Calgary and Edmonton.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the program with respect to the treatment of sleep apnea is a provincewide program. The treatment is not just available to those in Edmonton and Calgary. It is funded provincially under the provincewide services section of our budget, and we do have two centres, in Edmonton and Calgary. At this particular point in time this is sensible in terms of the strategic location of sites and the staffing and the various other items that go with the offering of this program.

However, Mr. Speaker, there is a proposal, a plan, as I understand it, in the Chinook region in Lethbridge whereby they are proposing to establish a centre there, and that is being given, as I understand it, serious consideration by the provincewide services committee that administers this and other provincewide programs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same Minister of Health and Wellness. Can he explain why the program is restricted to only level 1 sleep clinics?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, this decision in terms of the condition or the nature of the service that is to be provided is something, as I understand it, that has been very, very carefully considered. We are following not just national but international standards with respect to the treatment of sleep apnea. That is why only a certain stage or level of this particular condition is treated under this program with these sleep apnea devices. In this particular case I think what we're doing in Alberta is in keeping with other countries in the world let alone other provinces in Canada.

MR. COUTTS: My final supplemental to the same minister: can he tell us how much has been spent by government on this important program?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as I recall, the expenditure is I believe about $850,000 that is being spent right now with respect to the equipment for this particular program. There is a proposal I know to expand this particular program as the need shows itself in the province. It is a highly specialized program, one that of course is extremely important for the individuals involved. We will continue to try and provide the best level of care and keep operating with the high standards that it has had in the past.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, a few seconds from now we'll call on the first of seven members today to participate in Recognitions.

Before I call on the first member, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with a great deal of pleasure that I have the opportunity today to introduce a class of 16 students from Will Sinclair high school in Rocky Mountain House. They're accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Bob Walton, and a parent, Mr. Lloyd Hoetmer. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to recognize the remarkable achievement of Scott, a very courageous young man who until nine months ago was a chemically dependent adolescent. On Saturday, May 20, 2000, he will become the 131st graduate of the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre, or AARC, program.

When Scott entered the AARC program on August 30, 1999, at the age of 20, he was extremely dependent on alcohol and drugs and was a lonely, confused, angry young man, but Scott knew he needed help and has been committed to the recovery program at AARC and has moved through treatment at a rapid pace. He was willing to do the work to change and has chosen to live his life as an honest, principled man.

Scott is currently upgrading some of his grade 12 courses in order to apply to university. His attitude and work ethic in the AARC learning centre has been excellent. Dr. Dean Vause, executive director, concludes: Scott has gone from loser to leader; I have the utmost respect for him; I have also been impressed with his family's commitment.

I challenge all MLAs to learn more about the success of AARC and to support this nonprofit organization.

Scott, I wish you all the very best in the future. Congratulations. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Juvenile Arthritis Week

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I rise to recognize Juvenile Arthritis Week, which is from May 13 to May 19. Juvenile arthritis affects many children under the age of 16. The disease causes joint inflammation, a painful condition that can result in permanent joint damage. Many people think that it's a disease that strikes only the elderly. However, it can and does affect children. It may be a chronic condition. The symptoms may come and go from one day to the next or even the course of one day, and it may go into remission for years only to return again. The cause of juvenile arthritis is still unknown, and there are no fast or simple solutions.

The goal of Juvenile Arthritis Week is to bring about public awareness to this chronic illness and highlights the need for more research. Hopefully, a cure for this illness will be found in the near future.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Multiple Sclerosis

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The month of May has been proclaimed to promote awareness of multiple sclerosis, which is a lifelong autoimmune disease that affects the brain and spinal cord. MS is probably more prevalent in Alberta than anywhere else in the world. More than one in 500 people are affected, and up to 75 percent of those are women.

Today I'm pleased to recognize the work of Dr. Luanne Metz, who is a prominent University of Calgary neurologist. Dr. Metz was chosen as the only Canadian on the North American steering committee of an international study testing the effectiveness of the first oral medication for multiple sclerosis. This is very good news, and it's welcome because today all four existing medications for multiple sclerosis are taken by injection. Having the option of taking an oral medication will be less painful and far more convenient for patients.

I invite all members of the Assembly to wish Dr. Metz the greatest success in her work with the trial of this new medication as she brings hope to over 6,000 Albertans with multiple sclerosis.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Palliative Care Week

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week marked Palliative Care Week. Palliative care is a unique form of health care, developed to address the needs of those with terminal illness. This specialty focuses on the needs of the patient and the family when a cure for a life-threatening illness such as cancer or AIDS is no longer available.

A primary goal of palliative care is to improve the quality of a person's life as death approaches and to help patients and their families move toward this reality with comfort, reassurance, and strength. Palliative care is not focused on death. It's about specialized care for the living. Palliative care is at the cutting edge of the shift to home-based and community-empowered care, that is central to most health care reform taking place today. In fact, palliative care is critical if our society is to successfully reorient health towards the community.

Today, many terminally ill patients and their families want to be free from the frenzy of the acute care hospital, preferring instead their own home or the personalized setting of a hospice or palliative care unit. We must ensure that an appropriate infrastructure for provision of palliative care services outside the hospital is operational before this shift can take place.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Youth Immigrants of Distinction Awards

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to continue speaking on the recognition of recipients of youth immigrants of distinction awards, given out by the Calgary Immigrant Aid Society.

Samir Pradhan came to Alberta from India. Recently he was a recipient of the Alberta Great Kids award, among the 16 selected out of 380. He is an informal adviser to the Minister of Children's Services. He volunteers for many community-based organizations. He received many academic awards and trophies from school, science fairs, and Rotary clubs. When in grade nine last year, he created his own web page design company, CyberSpace Services.

Stephen Kung came to Alberta from Hong Kong when he was seven. Currently he's in grade 12, achieving marks in the top 5 percent while enjoying a high profile in track and field and football. He is also very active in many international and local community organizations.

Casey Wang came to Alberta from China in 1996 without any English language knowledge. She is now in grade 12. She is a self-taught achiever, and she is achieving 96 percent in her music class at the Royal Conservatory of Music.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Day of Compassion

MR. DICKSON: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Saturday, May 20, will be recognized as the Day of Compassion, a day dedicated to the treatment and understanding of Alzheimer's disease and other dementia.

Alzheimer's disease will be the biggest health challenges for the 21st century, according to the Alzheimer Association of Alberta. The cost of informal caregiving alone is estimated to be $5 billion. Over 15,000 Albertans are now affected by Alzheimer's disease, but this number is expected to swell to over 44,000 by 2010, and by 2031 there will be over 750,000 Canadians with Alzheimer's. It directly affects currently one in three Canadian families.

Barbara Biggs, the executive director of the Alzheimer Society of Calgary, had observed that the best way to predict the future is to create it. We've seen some encouraging recommendations in the long-term care review report and also some key findings from professors Fast and Keating at the University of Alberta, but it's going to be necessary to implement those recommendations, including the development of a provincewide plan for meeting the needs of people with Alzheimer's disease and other dementias.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Crime Prevention Awards

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to recognize two very special individuals from my constituency, Constable Laurel Kading from the Morinville RCMP detachment and Trevor Tychkowsky, a concerned citizen from Smoky Lake. These two individuals were selected as Alberta Justice crime prevention award 2000 recipients for excellence in the area of volunteer crime prevention. There were a total of 13 recipients from throughout Alberta. To all, hearty congratulations for your hard work and commitment in providing a valuable service to our communities.

Bill 18

Alberta Personal Income Tax Act

Ms Carlson moved that the motion for second reading be amended to read that Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly believes that as a result of the tax reduction measures announced in the 2000 federal budget, the bill would not ensure that all Alberta taxpayers receive a fair tax reduction.

[Adjourned debate May 11: Ms Calahasen]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to speak to the amendment, which would have us look for a second time at Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. I don't quite recall who it was, but there was a sage that said at one time that taxing is the art of plucking the most feathers from a goose with the least amount of hissing. It seems to me that the government with its proposal is going to have the taxpayers hissing at the government and the taxpayers hissing at each other. That's exactly what the impact of Bill 18 will be.

I can recall first hearing about the flat tax in this city when Peter Pocklington was running for the leadership of the Conservative Party. I believe that the flat tax proposal was part of his leadership platform. We also heard Forbes in the United States, an aspirant for the U.S. presidency, expound on the virtues of a flat tax. It makes one question: why would some of the richest people in our society be those that were promoting and favouring a flat tax? It raises a number of suspicions, and those suspicions, of course, are confirmed when you look at the distribution of the benefits that will come about if Bill 18 becomes law in the province.

Essentially, 4 percent of the tax filers in our province, earning over $100,000, will benefit. The 39 percent of the tax filers earning between $30,000 and $70,000, who pay nearly half of the provincial personal income taxes in the province, are going to benefit too but to a much lesser extent. It's this inequality, this unfairness that is at the heart of the objections to Bill 18 and why the opposition believes it's time to step back and take a second look at the proposal and to have the kind of discussion that we think the proposal warrants.

The notion of a flat tax, the simplicity of it, is one that's very beguiling, Mr. Speaker. I was on the Internet on the weekend, and on one of the sites they had published a poll that indicated that somewhere near 95 percent-plus of the respondents to that poll favoured a flat tax. The reasons that were given for that: the notion of it being fair was one that seemed to attract people, and it was simple. Well, that may be true but not the kind of flat tax that we have before us in this Legislature.

I want to talk for a few minutes about the issue of fairness. The Centre for Social Justice in October of 1998 put out a report entitled The Growing Gap: A report on growing inequality between the rich and poor in Canada. That report had a number of interesting observations selected for the kinds of conclusions that it reached. It was based on some fairly solid evidence. One of the things that struck me as I read it was the shape of the income, the shape of the Canadian workforce, and the shape of the taxpaying workforce in particular.

They made some rather telling comments. They indicated that "the top 10 CEOs in Canada each brought home more than $10 million last year." Now, you think of that: one executive earning $10 million, and the top 10 in Canada fit into that category. "On average, the top 100 CEOs saw a 56% increase in compensation last year." A 56 percent increase in their compensation. We look at wages on the other hand. "Wages are not keeping up with inflation. Many people have had their pay frozen during the 1990s." And "even unionized workers" find themselves in this position. In this city at this time the brewery workers are facing a proposal from the company that would, if the press reports are correct, see their wages rolled back 30 percent. That's quite a striking contrast, Mr. Speaker: the chief executive officers gaining 56 percent increases and workers being asked to take a 30 percent rollback. "Federal public servants have had one pay increase in the 1990s." Another indicator of the shape of that taxpaying labour force is that "welfare rates, welfare eligibility and/or shelter allowances have been reduced in almost every province since 1995."

I think one of the things that sort of profile indicates is the unfairness of actions and things that are going on now in the marketplace as a result of government financial policy, and we should pause and reflect before we take any action that adds to that inequality. Why would we want to do anything that would worsen what is already the case?

One of the interesting sidebars that the Centre for Social Justice has in its report is a sidebar entitled: Some people are worth more than others. They go on to indicate that most of us were fairly shocked when we found out that Bill Gates of Microsoft owns as much personally as 40 percent of the United States population. That's an astounding figure. The chief executive officer owns as much as 40 percent of the U.S. population. We dismiss that kind of information because, you know, it's south of the border, it's those Americans, and it couldn't happen here.

Quite the contrary. In Canada the owner of 68 North American newspapers, including the Globe and Mail, the Winnipeg Free Press and the Victoria Times-Colonist, at least until recently, in 1997, according to Forbes magazine, had a personal net worth of $14.4 billion. One individual, one Canadian, has a personal net worth that's the same size as the provincial budget. Imagine that.

They went on to indicate that how wealth is spread out among Canadians – and, again, that's what Bill 18 does, spread wealth among Canadians – is really quite interesting. In 1984 – and that's the most recent evidence. It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that we've stopped keeping track of wealth distribution in this country since 1984. That's the last report, and it's interesting that that's now being resumed. The net worth of all Canadians was estimated to be about $3 trillion in 1997. So the owner of that newspaper chain has a personal wealth that is more than the collective wealth of a third of Canadians. One individual personally has more money than is the wealth of a third of Canadians. They have Bill Gates in the United States, and we have our own Canadians with situations that are just as unequal.

DR. WEST: Point of order.

THE SPEAKER: A point of order. The hon. Acting Provincial Treasurer.

Point of Order Relevance

DR. WEST: Under Beauchesne 459, relevance. I keep hearing the name Bill Gates and the American system. What relevance does that have to Alberta, Canada? We're dealing with a bill that's being presented before this Assembly. I know there's a wide range of debate that can take place in second reading, but I wish they would stick to this country so that we can at least address the laws that we have here and not somewhere in the United States.

MR. DICKSON: Surely the short answer to this is: why would we be so narrowminded and so foolish in this Assembly to ignore evidence that comes from other jurisdictions? It would seem to me that the only responsible way of debating legislation is to draw lessons. Now, it may be that the government chose to ignore the lessons around Bill 11 from Australia and the United Kingdom and other places. That may be one of the reasons we had a flawed piece of legislation passed last week.

With respect, I'd like to hear more comparisons. I think it's completely and totally relevant that we look at what's happening in other jurisdictions. It would be perilous in the extreme for us to proceed blindly over the cliff. This isn't a buffalo jump we're witnessing. This is a debate about a major, fundamental change in our tax structure. That's what this reasoned amendment is about, and that's the debate I've been hearing.

I think the point of order is completely off base, Mr. Speaker, with respect.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, we do have a reasoned amendment before the House. That is what has been recognized. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has been given the floor, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods is making his contribution to the debate at hand. He has not restricted his examples, at least to the ear of the chair, to individuals living in another country. He certainly seemed to indicate that there was some individual in Canada who was equal to another individual in the United States, by way of an example. The chair would like to remind hon. members again that the proposal we have in front of us basically is for the reform of the taxation system, and the examples being utilized by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods basically deal with individuals who are taxed under a different proposal than the one before us.

The chair is going to listen very attentively to find the relevance because the chair surely appreciates that there will be relevance.

Debate Continued

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The case I was trying to make was that we need to pause and look at Bill 18 a second time because I believe that Bill 18 contributes to inequalities that already exist, and I was drawing on examples of inequalities elsewhere and in Canada and trying to use those examples. I would like to use further examples in terms of what's happened in our country and what's happened to families as a result of government fiscal policy and government taxing policy. I apologize to the minister if I was a little slow getting to the point.

I believe firmly and I think the evidence is rather clear that Bill 18 favours high-income earners at the expense of middle-income earners, and it shifts the tax burden from upper-income earners to middle-income earners. I think the evidence supporting that is very clear. When you take that proposal and layer it on top of conditions that already exist in the country, then I think Bill 18 is deserving of a second look.

If you look at the 85 percent of Canadian families, those people that are raising children under 18 – in 1973 the richest 10 percent of families with children under 18 made 21 times more than the poorest 10 percent of Canadian families. So here you have the top 10 percent with children under 18 and the bottom 10 percent with children under 18. That top group made 21 times more than that bottom group. In 1996 the richest 10 percent of families, that top group again, made 314 times more than the poorest 10 percent of Canadian families.

So you take that and you apply it to Alberta. Here you have a group of taxpayers already making hundreds of times more than the lowest taxpayers in the province, and they are going to be given additional benefits if Bill 18 becomes the law. I think that, Mr.

Speaker, should give us pause to take a second look at Bill 18.

If you look at 1973 across the country, 60 percent of families with children under 18 earned between $24,500 and $65,000. So 60 percent of the families sat in what was then considered the middle class. By 1996 that same group, that middle class, had shrunk, and only 44 percent of the families with dependent children made between $24,500 and $65,000. The middle class has already shrunk dramatically over the last 25 years, and Bill 18 contributes again to a burden on that middle class. I think that's wrong-minded government policy when that happens.

Most of the change that happened in the past 25 years has happened to the middle class. The earning equivalent of between $37,600 and $56,000 in 1973 accounted for 40 percent of the population. A generation later only 27 percent of the population found themselves in the middle. So there's been an attack on the middle class, and Bill 18 continues that attack, I believe, Mr. Speaker.

I think we need to look at the kinds of economic principles that Bill 18 seems to support. Again, it seems embedded in those old trickle-down policies which were so widely adopted abroad years ago. The argument goes that if you remove the restrictions on the already wealthy so that they can accumulate more wealth, then they'll make more investments and the wealth in itself will trickle down to those at the bottom. This is supposed to mean that more people will be working and everyone is going to be better off. Well, that kind of economic policy has been questioned, Mr. Speaker, and to have that sort of notion underlying the bill and used as the defence for greater benefits being given to high-income earners seems to be the height of unfairness.

I think there has to be a very deep and thoughtful look at the relationship between equity and economic growth. What happens when a society chooses to open the gap between the rich and the poor, and what is the impact on the economy? Again, we can look outside the borders of our own country and find examples of where that happens. We can also find examples of where that doesn't happen, where there is concern with equality, where there is concern that the gap between income groups is not widened but is in fact lessened.

I'd like to just finish, if I might, Mr. Speaker, with a couple of comments about the shape of the tax system across the country and the kind of context that is out there that Alberta changes will become part of. There's been a marked shift in who pays the bills in Canada from the corporate to the personal income tax, shifting the profile of tax revenues towards more regressive forms of taxation. I think everyone agrees that a flat tax is regressive. For example, corporate contributions to paying for Canada represented 25 percent of all federal revenue in 1955. In 1973 they were paying 17 percent, and in 1996 they accounted for only 12 percent of federal revenues. It's within that context that the changes to Alberta's taxing system are being considered.

So for those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I think we would be wise in this Legislature to pause and take a second look at it. I think that the government itself has to admit that it hadn't thought through the whole situation that carefully. They came out with 11 percent, and that was quickly changed to 10.5. I'm still waiting to see the kinds of predictions down the road to 2004, 2005, and 2007 in terms of its impact on Alberta and the kinds of revenues that will be secured from the taxing system. The whole exercise to this point seems to have been one that was hurriedly put in place and not that carefully thought through, and because of the great impact that it has for Albertans, I believe that the Legislature should support the amendment before the House.

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and support this amendment to Bill 18. It's a reasoned amendment, and I think it makes a lot of sense. Basically what the amendment is stating is that given the implications of the federal budget, this bill cannot ensure that Alberta taxpayers will receive a fair tax reduction. I think that's very true. I know that the Treasurer has adjusted his numbers now and dropped down the percentage points and moved up the exemptions, but it becomes a game. It's one government trying to out-tax-cut the other government, and that is not good for Albertans.

I want to make myself perfectly clear. This is a change in tax structure. It is not the only way that exists for this hon. Acting Treasurer to give Albertans a tax cut. It's a fundamental shift in the structure as it exists, and it's being touted as the only way to give tax relief. That's just simply not true.

I want to point out some of the issues I have with the notion of going to a flat tax. A tax structure should have three goals: simplicity, growth, and equity. The only thing that this government's flat tax structure will achieve is simplicity, and that's not good enough, Mr. Speaker. We need to have growth and equity along with that. The notion of putting more money into the pockets of Albertans is one that we all would like to see. However, this particular tax policy isn't going to do that. This is basically shifting the tax burden. That's what it's designed to do. It's certainly not accompanied by overall tax reform. It is one piece of the puzzle. When you start looking at changing structures piece by piece, they don't become systematic, so Albertans will not see the greatest overall effect of this by going to a flat tax.

It's also an ideology, and it's an ideology that is certainly bought into by some people on the very right side of political issues, but it's not one that has been adopted wholeheartedly by many other political parties, be it one group of Republicans in the U.S. – it certainly hasn't been adopted by the Democrats. It hasn't been adopted by the Conservative government in this country, certainly not by the Liberals. The only people we see actually looking at this as a potential tax reform is a party that's on the most extreme right side of politics in this country, and that would be the Canadian Alliance, or Reform Party. Now, given the meld in this Assembly across the other way, I guess that would fit. But is ideology a reason to make policy? No. Is it the best policy? No. It has to be for the collective good, and this particular tax policy is not for the collective good at all.

Also, in order to achieve the benefits of a flat tax, the taxes have to be kept low and the revenues have to be high. Well, we know the economy in this province. We know that even with the diversification that has occurred, the peak and the wave that we're riding right now is not going to last. At some point it's going to crash. Then I ask the question: is this flat tax structure going to be able to continue to exist for Albertans? No, not likely, not very likely at all. So that's another concern I have.

The whole issue of real income in this province and in the country in general. At the bottom end, the low end, we have seen the real income fall. In the middle we've seen a stalling, or a stagnation, of real income. The only growth we've seen is at the top end on the income scale in this country and in this province. My fear, Mr. Speaker, is that this type of flat tax will only increase the tax burdens that exist already. It will worsen the existing drift of greater economic disparity or equality in this province. What we see happening now, where we have that gap growing in the middle income, is not necessarily the answer, quite frankly, to bringing that gap closer. This will only serve to make that gap broader. So I think that's something we have to consider. A progressive tax system will do that.

There's no question about the issue of: should Canadians, should Albertans get a tax break? Yes, they should. But do we do that by creating this false structure, if you will, or should we be looking at an overall progressive change? That's not what we see here.

I want to talk about the issue of fairness. We've brought that up several times. My colleagues have brought that up, and I think that's something that's a big part of the system we have now. I'm going to quote a fellow. His name is Dr. Robert Shapiro. Dr. Shapiro is a professor at Harvard. He's been an economic policy adviser to the Clinton campaign, and he has some comments that I think are important to share in relation to the flat tax system. He states:

Fairness in the tax system matters because tax collection depends vitally on voluntary compliance. Paying taxes is also most [Canadians' in this case] chief point of contact with their government, and probably their closest approximation to a common civic experience. Yet, some analysts today dismiss equity issues and, with increasing boldness, insist that regardless of their effects on fairness, all tax cuts are desirable because government's right to tax is less than fully legitimate.

That would be an argument that I could see maybe this Treasurer buying into, you know, that governments don't have a right to tax. Well, if that's the case, then how do we continue in society and provide the services governments are supposed to provide, and how do we look after all of those people in society? That, Mr. Speaker, includes those people who are least able to look after themselves or at least need the government's assistance. That goes to all of those folks who live in poverty. Those folks aren't paying taxes, but they certainly rely on their government through a network of social programs to assist them. That's what governments should be doing. We should not be abandoning those folks who need our help most, and that's what I believe this government would like to do with this type of tax policy and, furthermore, reduce every single Albertan to an economic unit. Well, that's not what we expect from governments, and that's not where I would like to see this government or any government go.

Dr. Shapiro further states – and we'll all agree with this statement:

Without a doubt, most people don't enjoy paying taxes. But in an democracy like ours, people contribute private resources to provide the public goods they deem appropriate as a community, including helping those unable to make their way by themselves. . . . paying taxes embodies a civic relationship of mutual responsibility, and people's obligation to pay them is as legitimate as any other public duty.

So while we may not like paying taxes, we as citizens of a province and of a country do understand that the role of government is to provide for services and to help those who are less fortunate and need the government's help.

3:20

You know, Mr. Speaker, not long ago tax reductions were probably the number one issue, maybe not the number one issue but certainly in the top three, I believe, in terms of top-of-mind issues for Albertans and Canadians. Now we see that has moved dramatically closer to the bottom, if you will. It's not a top-of-mind issue, not like health care – and we've seen how that debate has unfolded in this province – and not like education. That's a top-of-mind issue for Albertans and Canadians. Homelessness trumps tax cuts because Albertans still believe and Canadians still believe that we have to look after those who are less fortunate, and our democratic system allows for that to happen.

If we look at where public opinion is, yes, we all like to see tax reductions. Yes, we need to look at the overall tax structure. We don't need to look at a flat tax, that is only a purported tax reduction. It becomes a tax-trumping game.

You know, let's face it. The federal government has far more taxes to reduce than does this government, and if you get into that game, this government will lose. We have to remember that Albertans still want a fiscally responsible government, and when you play that kind of game and you lose, you're going to find yourself in a little more trouble with the voters, in a little more trouble than you probably already are.

Progressive taxes are a reasonable price for high-income people to pay, and it's a reasonable price to have a civil society. I find it difficult to understand how the whole notion of a flat tax can be seen as anything but a windfall for the elite. We have a tax structure right now where Canadians essentially believe that people with similar total incomes pay similar amounts of taxes. Higher income people pay more, and the tax burden is shared. So everybody pays their portion of the tax burden based on what they earn. That, Mr. Speaker, is part of having a progressive, sound tax structure.

Now, if you want to talk about where we can make some changes in this province, some real tax changes, let's look at things like user fees, and let's look at things like the Alberta health care premium. That, in fact, is a tax. Let's look at what the government has been doing over a number of years. In fact, the Supreme Court of Canada's Eurig decision spoke to the very issue of user fees, premiums, and other fees and said, basically, that if you're collecting more than the cost of service, then you have to call it a tax. So this government has had to drop many of its fees, premiums, and user fees that are associated to some of the services in this province. That came out of a probate issue, but that falls right down the line.

I think that if you recall the earlier debate we had with the previous Treasurer, the wanna-be leader of a party, the absolute only reason that Treasurer undertook a review of the user fees was because of the Supreme Court decision. That is the absolute only reason. He was compelled to do that, and there was no other way out of it for him. So, you know, a few forced tax reductions there by the way of user fees and quite frankly . . .

MR. DUNFORD: How many did it voluntarily?

MS OLSEN: Well, you know, hon. minister from Lethbridge-West, you may think it was voluntary, and so be it. I quite frankly don't think it was voluntary. Without a Supreme Court of Canada decision it would not have happened in this province, and that's the way it is, Mr. Minister. Like it or not, you can stand up and say your piece on this if you wish, but that's the reality of it, and to say anything else is wrong, quite frankly.

Now, another issue, Mr. Speaker, that I'd like to bring forward is – and I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar spoke to this – the issue of the third party supporting a flat tax system. Indeed, there was an article by the previous leader of that party saying that Canada needs a flat tax system and absolutely she supported that notion. I find it very interesting that this is the party that suggests that they support the issues of poverty and they support the issues of lack of equality and those kinds of things, yet they feel that a flat tax system is something that people will benefit from.

Well, I'm not sure that's the case, and I think that probably their party members are glad they're going to be having a leadership race at some point, because it doesn't serve them well to be in support of the flat tax. I suppose they could use the argument: that was then, and this is now. But we haven't heard them use that argument, so it'll be interesting to see what happens down the road.

Mr. Speaker, I think I've made all the points that I'd intended to make. I absolutely support tax reductions for Albertans. That is a good thing, but I don't support the introduction of a flat tax. I think we need to do an intensive overall review of the tax structure, and I know that's occurred. I think one of the right-wing research groups has suggested, you know, a consumption tax. We've heard actually the Acting Treasurer and the former Treasurer or whatever his position is now – I'm not clear on that – talk about a sales tax.

I believe my time is coming to an end, and I'm sure I'll be able to speak again. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to the amendment on Bill 18 with a particular focus in mind, and that is the positive effect of this new and innovative tax policy on our families. Recently an international credit rating agency reported that the after-tax income of Canadians is the same as residents of Mississippi, the poorest state in the union.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Of the 28 countries that comprise the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, or the OECD, only five tax incomes at a higher rate than Canada. High levels of taxes not only affect the credit rating of a country or a province; they have a profound effect on the families that live and work and raise their children there. It is high personal income taxes that are far more damaging to our economy. For one reason, they reduce the overall standard of living for our families, and when the economy suffers, it is families at the bottom of the income scale who pay the highest price through job loss, lower wages, and lost or shrinking savings.

Another effect of our personal income tax regime is that it penalizes some families and rewards others. Families who choose to have one parent stay at home are taxed at a higher marginal rate than those with two earners who receive the same total family income. The single-rate tax system proposed by this government would not only reduce the overall tax burden for all families; it would also remove this discrimination in the tax system. This was identified as an issue by the Tax Review Committee in their final report.

Families with one income earner can claim the basic personal exemption, while families with two income earners can each claim the higher basic personal exemption. Not only are single-income families taxed at a higher marginal rate, but their exemptions are lower. Therefore, they are hit sooner and begin paying taxes at a lower level than dual-income families, leaving them with even less money in their pockets after they pay taxes. If two-income families claim a deduction for child care expenses, those two-income families are even further rewarded by the tax system. Mr. Speaker, these are powerful incentives when young families are facing the decision of whether or not one parent should stay at home with their children. This government believes that families should be left to make these decisions on their own without the tax system either rewarding them for both going to work or punishing them if they choose to have one parent stay at home.

So what do we propose? We'll start by treating everyone equally. Under this bill the basic exemption will be raised to $12,900 and the spousal exemption will be raised to $12,900. Not only will this end the discrimination between single- and dual-income families. It will also put more money into all families' pockets because of the larger increase in the exemptions. The basic exemption will be increased by $5,769 from $7,131, and the spousal exemption will be increased by $6,845 from $6,055. It will be more than doubled, Mr. Speaker. These greatly enhanced personal exemptions will assist those families most in the lower income brackets by putting more income in their pockets.

The tax system also discriminates against single-income families by levying many tax rates which push them up through the tax brackets faster than dual-income families. This is the much talked about bracket creep. Mr. Speaker, we are not only going to end the discrimination against single-income families by equalizing the basic and spousal exemptions. We are also going to end the bracket creep with our single rate of personal income tax.

The proposal of a single tax rate of 10.5 percent will result in lower taxes for all families. While both single- and dual-income families will see their taxes go down, single-income families, including single parents, will have their tax rates reduced by more. For example, a single-income family with two children earning $55,000 a year paid $3,349 in provincial taxes in 1999. A dual-income family with two children earning the same paid $2,479. That's a difference of $870. When our new system comes into place on January 1, 2001, the single-income family will pay $1,968, while the two-income family will pay $1,867. Both families will get a sizable tax break, and the difference in what they pay will be dramatically reduced, from $870 to about $100.

Single parents will also be big winners as they will be able to claim the spousal exemption for their first child. This will mean that a single-parent family making $30,000 a year will receive a 276 percent tax cut, and a single tax rate combined with greatly enhanced personal exemptions will assist most those at the lowest income range. In 2001 families with children who earn less than $33,500 will pay no provincial income tax whatsoever. This will take approximately 190,000 people off the provincial tax rolls, giving those families more money for food, clothing, and other family needs. We believe this is the way to treat families starting out in life: giving them a break and giving them a choice.

Our single-rate tax system will do something else. It will remove the massive disincentive to work, save, and invest, which is encouraged by the current tax system. Lower taxes will bring people into the workforce by making more entry-level jobs. This will help families, perhaps, who are bringing in a second income. It can also encourage some people to obtain these jobs if it can be demonstrated that they will make more money to take home in their pockets than if they were to receive government assistance. This will also remove the disincentive to work harder, get a raise, or work at a part-time job. Who of us hasn't heard: why should I work overtime when it will just put me in a higher tax bracket?

Mr. Speaker, families have dreams and plans for the future, and Albertans are prepared to plan and work to realize these dreams. These new tax cuts will help many families during the various stages of their lives: as they enter the workforce in their early years, when they have finished their education and perhaps have student loans to repay from jobs that are associated with building a career plan, through to the next stage when they are paying for their young children or when they have to incur child care expenses or the loss of one income, when they are trying to put more savings together for a mortgage, and when they have expenses like hockey, braces, and home renovations – at the very time they are trying to put more money into their family, we are taxing them more and more – and again as they get older, when they are trying to refinance to find a few more dollars each month to help put funding into their RRSP contribution, which they've had to put off while they raised their families. The goal is for discretionary dollars to be met with personal financial obligations. People are willing to put money aside to meet their own personal obligations, but our current tax regime inhibits that ability.

Remember that two-income family with the two children earning $55,000 that I talked about who will receive a 25 percent tax break? They will know where to put those extra dollars. And the single-income family with the two children earning $55,000 that I spoke about? They will have $1,376 more in their pockets as a result of our tax reforms. That family will know where to put that. They can spend it where their needs will best be met.

Mr. Speaker, our tax reform program will stimulate economic growth and create more and better jobs. This is good news for all Alberta families, and it will increase tax revenues, which will go toward government programs and services that Alberta families want and deserve. This tax reform measure is part of government's platform started in 1993 to reduce the size and shape of government, reduce the tax burden on Alberta families, and put that money where it best can be spent: into the hands of Albertans. That's $1.3 billion that Albertans will have to spend as they like, a choice of their own.

Since we turned the corner on this deficit, this province has been attracting incredible attention. In fact, we are writing the book with black ink. Still, Mr. Speaker, today taxes for Alberta's families have never been higher largely because of ever increasing federal government tax grabs over the past few years, and thanks largely to this government's responsible fiscal policies over the same few years, projected surpluses have never been bigger. We believe it is time to give some of this money back to the Alberta taxpayers and to eliminate the unequal treatment of families in the tax system.

Mr. Speaker, I am strongly in favour of this legislation, and therefore I will not be supporting this amendment. I look forward to voting on Bill 18.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to this amendment on second reading of Bill 18, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. I want to address the whole issue of the unfairness, which I think is really at the heart of the amendment that's been proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. The whole issue of fairness is one that we think is very much at issue in this debate. The government has tried very hard to make our belief in a progressive system of taxation and tax cuts within a progressive system of taxation as something other than what it is.

It would be interesting if we could hear the government, instead of just talk about the tax cut, which I think most people would say would be a welcome thing, talk about and address the much more fundamental issue of what's going on in Bill 18, which is a restructuring of the tax system away from a progressive income tax system towards a regressive one, where the greatest benefit, of course, falls on those with the highest income. Instead, we believe very strongly in tax cuts within a progressive income tax system. We believe in fair tax cuts, and it is for that reason that we believe that the tax cut as proposed by this government and the restructuring in flat tax needs to be delinked and addressed in a much fairer structure, which we would say was the progressive tax system structure.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it's perfectly all right for the government to agree with regressive tax. They have every right to do that and to argue that in the House, but I've heard very little argument on the debate on the bill so far with respect to the flat tax as opposed to a piece of the act, which of course the government brought in as well, which is the tax cut. So let me look at this whole issue of progressive versus regressive and to respect the government for wanting to propose regressive tax cuts and regressive taxation, but we believe in a progressive system for the reasons that I hope to address within the 20 minutes that are available to me.

There have been some excellent discussions. One of the very fine papers that we've quoted from on the opposition benches here is the Robert Shapiro paper. I think the argument for progressive taxation is a very sound one that has been made within an American context, but I think it's very applicable given the free trade and the opening up and globalization of our trade and the impact on markets under free trade.

In the paper Dr. Shapiro says:

Throughout this analysis, we maintain a clear preference for progressive taxation. In our view, progressive taxes are particularly appropriate for a society that cares about free markets. The more free markets there are, the larger the rewards people can secure by leveraging their talents, resources, or just good fortune. America's markets are generally more free than those in other advanced countries. The happy result is that Americans who start with more talent, resources, or luck than others can prosper more here than elsewhere, and to a greater degree than those who start with less. Progressive taxes are a reasonable price to pay for the privilege of prospering more in such free markets, and a way of limiting the burden on the vast majority who have relatively less to leverage. And this is especially so in the present period, when America's markets are producing growing economic inequality.

It is that issue of inequality that we think is so germane to the whole issue of unfairness of the flat tax. We know that the gap between rich and poor is growing in our nation as well as in North America. I think one of the very wonderful things, actually, that Canada has been able to achieve really since we started out as a country back in the mid-1800s was to take the collective wealth of our nation and use it to build systems of public education and public health care, which were available for all.

Under a progressive model of taxation someone who was in the middle-income level, say around the $50,000 mark, would not be able to purchase on their own, given everything else they have to purchase, the level of education and health care that we as a nation have committed to and that we as a province, or at least the province that I believe in, has always believed was very important. So when the province moves from a progressive tax structure to a regressive tax structure, that notion of sharing, of having those with a higher income pay not just a higher amount of tax but a higher portion of their income in tax, allows us to spread that wealth and to ensure that we are able to support the level of education and health care that I think all Canadians deserve, regardless of their ability to pay as an individual.

What we are seeing with the restructuring which the government has put in place with this flat tax proposal is that the biggest cut, at least in the marginal rates and in the impact on taxes, the greatest cut, the greatest benefit flows to those at the highest income level. We believe that certainly all Albertans should be able to benefit from the tax cut proposed by government. However, those at the highest level should certainly not benefit at a greater rate than those at the middle-income level, and we would like to see a larger tax cut proportionately on the middle-income group than on the higher. Is it a question of perspective on how we view fairness? Yes, absolutely, but we believe that the people in the middle-income group should have a better advantage under a tax cut than has been given to them by the proposal under Bill 18.

Secondly, I think we need to look at the whole issue of education and health costs, as I have mentioned. The need for us as a province and as a country, I would say, is to get on with some of the solid restructuring that is needed in certainly the health care system and probably the education system but that it be a restructuring that ensures that families in our province aren't worrying about whether or not they can afford to send their kids to postsecondary education, as we know is happening now, as tuition rates go up higher and higher and as government support for public education stays reduced at a level far less than was available in the past. It's interesting that part of the impact of those cuts is what has created the budget surplus in this province, and it is the reallocation of that service, now to the greatest benefit of those at the higher income level, which will in fact exacerbate the gap between rich and poor, which we are trying to improve upon or at least protect the middle-income earner rather than have them have the brunt and the off-loading of the tax cut being given at the high level not onto them.

We have spoken frequently about the need for a full tax review. This, of course, the restructuring and moving to the regressive tax system that the government is proposing, only touches upon the income tax, and the income tax is only one of the taxes paid by Albertans. We of course have the issue of property taxes and business taxes, which are of course levied on property, health care premiums, and many, many user fees substantially increased under the current government. Our view is that not only income tax needs to be looked at but the fees that people pay either through taxes or fees to cover off the services they are provided. Bill 18, of course, does not address that issue.

Instead, Bill 18 really is a full admission by government that the rich get richer and the burden is shifted onto that middle-income group. I think it's important to look at that middle-income group with the combined effect not only of bills 18 and 19 but also of Bill 11 and Bill 40. If we look at Bill 18, of course we know that Bill 18 gives the greatest reduction in the marginal tax rate to the highest income level group, the group that's paying a 29 percent rate on the federal marginal tax rates, the highest rate. Of course, the Alberta marginal tax rate, the 44 percent of provincial tax on the 29, means that individuals in that high-income group that are paying at the 29 percent level will have their marginal tax rates go from 12.76 percent down to now 10.5 percent.

That is very different than for those people in the middle-income tax group who are paying 26, then 25, then 24, then 23 percent, according to the tax cuts already instituted by the federal government. Their tax rate will either go down slightly or go up slightly as that progresses through the system. We believe, in fact, that that middle-income group, that group with the 26 percent moving down to 23 percent on the marginal tax rates, should get a better break under this tax cut than those at the 29 percent level, as this government is doing.

Let's look at who benefits to the greatest degree: certainly those at the low-income level. No argument on that. No argument with respect to raising the basic and the spousal exemption portions. Relatively little argument about delinking, if the government has made that decision with respect to the federal income tax and not to make it a tax on tax but a tax on income. Even if those are givens, even with that, the new tax on income can still be based on a more progressive model than this government is proposing and one that we would support as a much fairer tax cut than the one that's coming forward.
