

Province of Alberta

The 24th Legislature
Fourth Session

Alberta Hansard

February 17, 2000 to November 28, 2000
and Index

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, February 17, 2000 3:00 p.m.
 Date: 00/02/17
 THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order! All rise, please.

[The Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated January 26, 2000, summoning the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

THE CLERK: Please be seated.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Welcome. Would you please join me in the opening day prayer? Almighty God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Your guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments for the benefit of all Albertans. Amen.

Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Please join us in the language of your choice.

O Canada, our home and native land!
 True patriot love in all thy sons command.
 With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
 The True North strong and free!
 From far and wide, O Canada,
 We stand on guard for thee.
 God keep our land glorious and free!
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
 Please be seated.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, while we await the arrival of Her Honour, I thought I might take this opportunity to say a few words relevant to the history and role of the Office of Lieutenant Governor. The post of Lieutenant Governor was established by the British North America Act in March of 1867. This act united the provinces under a central government with each province retaining its own Legislature to preside over matters not under federal jurisdiction. In Alberta the Office of Lieutenant Governor came into existence when the federal government created the province of Alberta from the North-West Territories in 1905.

Since the Statute of Westminster of 1931 Canada has been a sovereign state but has chosen to remain a member of the Commonwealth. Her Majesty the Queen is head of the Commonwealth. The Lieutenant Governor is a representative of the Crown in our province. Over the years the Lieutenant Governor's role has gradually changed and is now focused primarily on her responsibilities as the sovereign's representative and chief executive officer of the province.

One of the most important responsibilities is to ensure that the province always has a Premier. If this office becomes vacant because of death or resignation, it is the Lieutenant Governor's responsibility to see that the post is filled. The Lieutenant Governor has the same responsibility if the government resigns following a defeat in the Legislature or an election. She summons, prorogues, and dissolves the Legislature and reads the Speech from the Throne at the opening of each session.

With the advice of the Premier she appoints and swears in members of the Executive Council, or cabinet, and is guided by their advice. The Lieutenant Governor gives royal assent to all measures and bills passed by the Legislative Assembly except on rare occasions when reservation is considered necessary. She also signs orders in council, proclamations, and many other official documents before they become law.

The Lieutenant Governor is host to members of the royal family and heads of state visiting the province. She is not involved in political activity, which permits her to represent Alberta at ceremonial and state occasions, and she is a patron to a wide variety of activities which contribute to the betterment of the lives of Albertans of all ages.

The Canadian Crown is a distinctive and essential part of Canada's heritage and character and thus a focus for national pride. It's an important symbol of unity, serving to bind Canadians together in their common ideals and aspirations. It is a visible proof of the vitality of our traditions.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

THE SPEAKER: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Lois E. Hole, CM, and Mr. Hole, their party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

head: Speech from the Throne

HER HONOUR: Pray be seated.

Fellow Albertans, it is my pleasure to welcome you to the Fourth Session of the 24th Alberta Legislature. I am honoured to speak to you today as Alberta's Lieutenant Governor, a role I accept with pride and a full appreciation of its time-honoured place in our cherished democratic system.

As Alberta and Canada welcome the new century, let me begin with a quotation from the first throne speech of the previous century and the first-ever presented in Alberta. It was delivered by Lieutenant Governor George Hedley Vicars Bulyea on March 15, 1906.

Our thanks are due to Divine Providence for the bountiful harvest with which we were blessed during the past year. Inasmuch as the fruits of the soil are at the basis of the material prosperity of any country, the glorious heritage to which the people of this Province have been called justifies a boundless confidence in the future.

With that eloquent endorsement of Alberta's potential so began the province's journey as a partner in Confederation. Today Albertans look back with tremendous pride at what they achieved through the 20th century and look forward with confidence to the challenges and opportunities of the new century.

We are honoured to have in this Assembly today an Albertan who was born in the year that first throne speech was delivered. Mrs. Mathilda Hirsch of Edmonton, seated with the Premier's guests, was born in Wetaskiwin. And, Mrs. Hirsch, I must say that Wetaskiwin is a lovely city; I've been there many times. She represents four generations of Albertans, men and women who weathered the storms of war and depression to bequeath to us and to our children a province well poised for growth and prosperity in the coming century. We thank Mrs. Hirsch and the many Albertans like her, some still with us, many not, who worked so hard throughout the 20th century so that the new century could offer such promise.

Also present today are 13 students of the class of 2000 along with their teacher, Mr. Jeff Larbalestier. These students, from the international baccalaureate program at Stratford campus of Jasper Place high school, will be Alberta's first graduates of the 21st century. They are beginning their journeys to adulthood in our province.

These students represent the generation that will continue the work of Mrs. Hirsch in the coming years. Among them lie the potential of today and the energies that will fuel tomorrow. These young Albertans along with their classmates and peers in high schools across the province inspire great confidence and hope for Alberta's new century.

Finally, I wish to introduce baby Micheal Tustin along with his parents, Theresa and Dwayne Tustin. Baby Micheal was born at the Grey Nuns hospital early on January 1, 2000, and is one of Alberta's millennium children. With baby Micheal and all those born in the opening months of the new century lies the potential of tomorrow. Every child born in Alberta is blessed with a birthright of Canadian citizenship in this province, a birthright of economic opportunity, personal freedom, clear choices, and safe communities. They in turn will grow into adults who will work to ensure that birthright endures for their children.

As this Legislative Assembly begins its first deliberations of the new century, the government reaffirms its commitment to maintaining this birthright for baby Micheal, for the class of 2000, for Mrs. Hirsch, and for all other citizens in this province who together turn potential into reality.

This birthright is based on certain values that have distinguished Alberta within Confederation since the time of Lieutenant Governor Bulyea. Albertans are confident, confident in their province, in their ability to succeed, and in the strength of their province. Albertans are entrepreneurial people who believe that citizens should have the freedom to pursue their goals. They also value innovation and are not afraid to take risks or try new ideas if the goal of these actions is worth while.

Self-reliance is another key value for Albertans. Albertans accept personal responsibility for their lives while recognizing that many of their neighbours sometimes need assistance, which they are happy to give. Albertans are also a spiritual people who embrace their faith with a quiet passion while respecting the faiths of others. Recognizing that their province is blessed with unmatched natural beauty, Albertans also place a high value on enjoying and protecting our natural environment.

It is these values, the values that have shaped almost a century of Alberta history, that will guide the province through the 21st century. It is also these values that shape the principles by which this government will govern over the next year and beyond. These principles are fiscal responsibility, which has become the basis of Albertans' confidence in the economy; innovation, which means making effective change that benefits the province; equity, which includes fairness for all citizens and respect for diversity of culture, age, gender, and other characteristics; and balance, especially balance between revenues and expenditures, saving and spending, and development and sustainability.

Today this government recommits itself to these principles and lays out a plan that is based on them. The plan, like Albertans themselves, is bold and forward looking. It respects the values of Albertans while recognizing that a new century holds new challenges and therefore requires new ideas to meet those challenges.

When Lieutenant Governor Bulyea spoke of Alberta's bountiful harvest, he spoke primarily of the province's agricultural strength. Today Alberta's harvest spreads beyond our expanse of farmlands. We reap the harvests of a vibrant energy sector, of an energetic retail and service sector, of a public service delivering health and education and other services, of a growing high-tech sector, and of a bustling international trade sector.

But just as in 1906 the harvest of plenty begins on Alberta farms. Agriculture will continue to be a cornerstone of our provincial economy. While making up 9 percent of Canada's population, Alberta accounts for 20 percent of the nation's primary agricultural production. One in every three jobs in Alberta depends on agriculture, from the farmer in the field to the person working at the supermarket.

The government recognizes that these are challenging times for agriculture, that this industry that holds together countless Alberta communities is at a crossroads. Some family farms are in jeopardy, and the ties that bound neighbours together in Lieutenant Governor Bulyea's time risk being severed. Our government will not stand idly by to let this happen. The family farm of a century ago is bound to undergo change, but the agricultural industry will remain vital to this province's prosperity.

As a result, the government has begun to develop a plan to ensure the long-term sustainability of this diverse industry. The recent agricultural leaders' workshop will lead to regional meetings throughout Alberta in March. The process will culminate in Ag Summit 2000, to be held on June 7 and 8. The government will continue to provide a responsive safety net package for farmers facing disaster. A review of Alberta's hail and crop insurance program will also be undertaken, resulting in a restructuring of risk management programs to better meet the needs of our producers.

We will also continue to work with the federal government to advance Alberta's interest in improved trade rules and market access for the industry. The focus is on expanding access for value-added products that use Alberta agricultural products as input. As Alberta has many farmers who depend on commodity exports, efforts to remove barriers and subsidies in the European Union and the United States will continue to be a priority.

In other areas of economic activity we also commit to maintaining a plentiful harvest. This spring the government starts work on implementing an updated economic strategy for Alberta. The strategy will help create an environment in which Albertans can build on the province's economic strengths by forging strong links among economy, innovation, learning, and quality of life. The strategy lays out a comprehensive plan for the future that focuses on competing in the global economy and maximizing the human talent and ingenuity of all Albertans.

Alberta's aboriginal peoples are key players in the province's economic future. Following consultation with First Nations and Metis leaders and organizations, industry, municipalities, and others, the government will release a new aboriginal policy framework. The framework will guide government in its relations with aboriginal peoples and create an environment in which aboriginal peoples can better participate in the Alberta advantage.

In the area of innovation and science the government recognizes that Alberta can and must be a leader in the areas of information and communications technology and leading-edge research. To that end, this year the government will work with its partners to connect communities across Alberta with high-speed, high-bandwidth Internet access. This will create enormous opportunities for all Albertans, regardless of where they live, to benefit from distance learning, electronic commerce, and better access to government services.

Legislation will be introduced to establish the Alberta heritage foundation for science and engineering research. This $500 million endowment fund will enhance research in the fields of science and engineering in Alberta and help the province maintain a leadership role in areas that will play crucial roles in the future of the province. It will encourage Alberta's brightest minds to stay here in Alberta and to recognize that Alberta is the place to be. For the Alberta of the 21st century it creates a legacy of excellence.

In addition, over $90 million will be allocated to support research initiatives in the areas of agriculture, bioscience, health, forestry, energy, and industry. From these funds the nationwide brain drain problem will be addressed by an allocation of approximately $18 million to continue supporting faculty at Alberta universities and research hospitals and a further $10 million to support the informatics circle of research excellence, which will attract communications and technology researchers to Alberta.

Attracting researchers is important to Alberta's economic success. Equally important is developing a well-trained and highly educated workforce right here so that Alberta's economy can respond effectively to changing market demand and industry needs. The government will continue to create a positive and stable labour climate that fosters one of the highest productivity rates and most impressive workplace safety records in Canada.

This government will also continue to help build a strong and skilled labour force through expanded programs to help youth entering the workforce get the training they need to find meaningful employment. Changes will be introduced to provide more flexibility in Alberta's apprenticeship and training system while maintaining the province's high industry standards.

Recognizing that a competitive tax regime is essential to economic growth, the government will continue to reform the provincial tax system. In this session legislation will be introduced to put into law Alberta's tax reform plan, including a phasing out of the remaining surtax, the elimination of the eroding effects of inflation on workers' salaries, a significant increase in personal exemptions, the removal of 132,000 Albertans from the provincial tax roll, and the move to a new 11 percent, single-rate provincial income tax all by January 1, 2001.

A comprehensive business tax review will be completed in the coming year. It will examine how business and corporate taxes can be reformed to enhance the Alberta advantage. Whether they be small family businesses or globally competing corporations, all forms of enterprise will be included. We will also conclude the review of provincial fees and charges and ensure that these fees and charges are reasonable and reflect the cost of the services provided.

In the area of nonrenewable resources the government will proceed with the orderly restructuring of the electricity industry. Deregulation and the introduction of retail choice in 2001 will create a competitive marketplace for new generation and retail services that will offer options to consumers and ensure that Albertans continue to benefit from a reliable power supply. Our government will work to ensure Albertans understand their options and rights in this new electricity marketplace so that they are well equipped to make informed choices when choices become available. A regulatory framework will be developed that focuses on consumer protection and awareness and a fair marketplace with a high standard of business conduct.

This year the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2000, will be introduced. The act will expand the current abandoned well program. It will enhance the Energy and Utilities Board's ability to manage site abandonment and reclamation in a responsible manner that ensures safety and protects the environment and the public purse.

The government is committed to ensuring Alberta's international marketing activities are globally competitive, co-ordinated, and focused on promoting continued economic growth and prosperity. Therefore, the government is developing an international strategy focused on building relationships with foreign governments, removing barriers to trade, and promoting investment, trade, and tourism in partnership with the private sector.

A significant opportunity to build global relationships will be Alberta's participation at the 2000 World Exposition in Hanover, Germany. The Alberta government will use the 2000 World Expo as a high-profile venue from which to launch its longer term European strategy. Alberta's Expo participation will focus on technology and innovation.

The people of Alberta work hard and with pride to reap the economic harvests that make Alberta strong. They know, however, that economic prosperity is not an end in itself. Albertans expect that the results of their commitment will be a good education system, quality health care, effective social programs, a clean environment, and safe, strong communities. The government will take action in each of these areas over the coming year.

Our government will work to make Alberta's education system a leader in Canada. It will introduce a new $3 million academic scholarship program that will benefit approximately 3,000 second-year postsecondary students and reward them for their hard work. The government will also increase student financial assistance levels and will continue to improve the student loan application process to make it easier for students and will work with students to enhance available information to help in planning for a postsecondary education. Our government will also expand the child health benefit to cover children of low-income postsecondary students.

A key area of emphasis will be on continuing a collaborative, flexible, and responsive learning system that encourages Albertans to be lifelong learners. The Minister of Learning will work with government's education partners on school and student improvement issues such as literacy and class size. As well, fund-raising in the primary and secondary school systems will be reviewed to ensure that students and parents are not fund-raising to meet the basic educational needs of their schools.

The government will work with institutions on enhancing access through technology and will work with partners to promote second language programs to help students participate in the global economy.

In the area of health and wellness a six-point plan will be implemented to keep Alberta's health system sustainable and effective in the face of mounting pressures. Alberta will continue to play a leadership role across Canada in working to strengthen the system and will renew its pledge to respect the principles of the Canada Health Act and maintain a single-tier, publicly funded health system that is accessible to all Albertans on an equitable basis. Legislation will be introduced to help protect and preserve the publicly funded health system by putting Alberta's commitment to the principles of the Canada Health Act into provincial law and enabling health authorities to pursue new, innovative ways of delivering publicly funded health services.

The government will implement the overall directions for enhancing continuing care resulting from the long-term care review, and it will also work with regional boards to follow up on the review of the persons with developmental disabilities program to strengthen support for Albertans with developmental disabilities.

Government will continue to focus on maintaining and improving the health of Albertans through prevention of illness and injury by expanding screening programs for breast and cervical cancer and by launching a new three-year immunization plan, and government will increase access to essential services by increasing frontline staff levels in the health system and by reducing waiting times for surgeries and diagnostic procedures.

We know that the harvest of prosperity is not always equally shared by all members of society. Therefore, programs to protect and assist those in need will continue to be a focus in the coming year. We will continue to support those who need assistance and help people ready and able to re-enter the workforce. The Human Resources and Employment minister's Employability Council will look at ways to ensure that all Albertans have the opportunity to contribute to the strength of the province.

To address the pressing problem of homelessness, the government will work with public and private partners to co-ordinate programs that provide access to affordable housing and shelter for those in need.

For children the government's emphasis will be on providing early support for children and families to promote healthy development. The government will respond to and act appropriately on recommendations from the Alberta Children's Forum and the Task Force on Children at Risk. The government will also address issues and needs of adolescents through the Youth Secretariat.

An external review of the factors leading to rising child welfare caseloads will be completed. In addition, the mandate of the office of the Children's Advocate will be reviewed to make sure the voices of vulnerable children and youth are heard. The government will continue to back its groundbreaking legislation to protect children involved in prostitution.

Government continues to focus resources on crime prevention so that communities in Alberta are safe. Continued support for policing, for the active pursuit and prosecution of organized crime, and for local crime prevention initiatives will help reduce the provincial rate of adult and youth crime. The government will continue to increase the efficiency of Alberta's courts, using mediation and other effective dispute resolution measures. The government will also review Alberta's Police Act and continue its work to improve access to the justice system for Albertans.

An important part of Alberta's communities is seniors, who today number about 300,000 and who are a vital part of all Alberta communities, contributing energy, wisdom, and time to the development of the province. The Alberta government will continue to provide support to seniors who need it. In the coming year the government will increase financial support to the Alberta seniors' benefit program so that cash benefits for clients reflect rising costs. Additional funding will also be provided for the special-needs assistance program, a highly successful initiative that has helped thousands of seniors deal with financial emergencies. The government will also complete its study of the impact of the aging population and will consider recommendations that will strengthen programs, services, and housing supports for seniors to enable them to live in security and dignity.

Recognizing the importance of heritage in communities, legislation will be introduced to return objects of religious importance to First Nations peoples. This repatriation legislation will ensure that First Nations communities have full ownership and responsibility for these spiritual artifacts.

Effective ties with other orders of government are important to the province and its communities. Over the next year we will work with municipalities across the province to strengthen our partnership with local governments. The government will work to improve service in its approach to provincial/municipal policies and programs and eliminate unnecessary overlap.

Our government will also work in partnership with other governments toward common goals. Alberta will continue to seek a strong, productive partnership with Ottawa and the provinces to address issues of national concern effectively. This partnership is essential to ensure that initiatives from the two levels of government complement each other rather than duplicate and that programs are responsive and accountable to the needs of Albertans and Canadians.

To improve the way government provides services to Albertans and communities, a wide range of services, products, and information will be made available through a one-window approach. This will enable Albertans to get what they need without having to know from which department to get it. It will also allow them to decide how they want to get it, whether over the counter, over the phone, or over the Internet.

The government will continue with its $900 million, three-year reinvestment in provincial infrastructure systems, ensuring that the province's roads are safe and meeting the needs of Albertans.

Albertans desire a clean, safe natural environment. The government will continue to show leadership in preserving and protecting Alberta's environment and, with it, Albertans' health and quality of life. The government will build on last year's consultations to address issues such as climate change, sustainable development, protection of endangered species, and parks policy. Through Climate Change Central the government will work with industry and communities to continue to develop practical strategies to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

As well, the government will monitor the status of species at risk in the province and develop management strategies to restore populations to sustainable levels. Alberta's diversity of wildlife and habitat are parts of a natural heritage that citizens want to protect and enjoy for the new century and beyond. The government will continue to strike a balance between preserving Alberta's natural heritage and sustaining its use as a contributor to outdoor recreation, nature appreciation, and development.

In conclusion, in this first year of the new century Albertans can expect to be blessed with a harvest as bountiful as that which ushered in Alberta's first year as a province in the 20th century. The values that characterized Alberta in Lieutenant Governor Bulyea's time still shape this province today, and they will continue to mold the government's agenda in all of its aspects.

As Alberta begins the 21st century, the government commits itself to doing all it can to nurture the province's bountiful harvest of prosperity, safety, and quality of life. At the same time, the government recognizes that Albertans achieve best when government does not erect barriers to their success. Therefore, the government pledges to stay out of people's lives when intervention would only be intrusion.

Alberta's new century begins with a recognition of the importance of the agricultural industry, a new economic plan, a renewed commitment to the Canada Health Act and the quality of health care for all Albertans, a strong and responsive education system, a sound fiscal plan and a commitment to lower taxes, and a variety of initiatives to strengthen communities and those who live in them.

This plan bodes well for Alberta. It is as bold as Albertans themselves. It is rooted in the soil of the province's rich past and will be nourished by the promise of the province's future.

To Mrs. Hirsch, to the class of 2000, to baby Micheal, and to all Albertans: the government promises to work with all of you to ensure that in the new century this province continues to write a history of greatness and a legacy of hope and promise for all of its citizens. We trust that our deliberations in this Assembly will continue to be for the common goal of achieving what is good for Alberta and that the citizens of this province here today will see fit to judge their harvest bountiful.

Now I leave you to the business of this session confident that as elected representatives you will in every way fulfill your responsibilities to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker and Members of the Legislative Assembly, I pray that the blessing of God may rest on your deliberations, just as it did on Alberta's first Assembly in March 1906.

God bless Alberta.

God bless Canada.

God save the Queen.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: All rise, please.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours, their party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

[The Mace was uncovered]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, while we await the return of the Premier to the Chamber, perhaps I might just make a few comments with respect to some of the traditional formalities that will occur in the next few minutes.

The first order of business will be the introduction of a bill by the Premier. Introduction of a bill asserts the right of the Assembly to deliberate and pass legislation, thus taking its business into its own hands. Introduction of a bill is the first of three reading stages a bill must pass through before it can become law. In addition to three readings, bills are also considered in more detail in a committee composed of all members.

Following introduction of the bill, I will table a copy of the Speech from the Throne to form part of the official records of the Assembly.

A series of motions will then be moved by the Premier and several ministers of Executive Council. The first will be a motion by the Premier that the Speech from the Throne be taken into consideration next Tuesday. That debate will be the main item of business for the consideration of the Assembly for the first week or so of this session.

The Deputy Government House Leader will then move that the Votes and Proceedings of the Assembly be printed. This document forms the official record of the proceedings in the Assembly and contains a summary of all actions or decisions by this House.

A series of motions will follow sponsored by the Government House Leader to appoint the Assembly's seven standing committees and their membership.

At the conclusion of its business the Government House Leader will move that the Assembly adjourn until Tuesday afternoon, Monday being Family Day, which is a statutory holiday in Alberta, the only province in Canada to celebrate such a special day.

As this is a ceremonial occasion as well, the Speaker will leave the Chamber in procession through the main doors of the Chamber. All members and guests will then exit and proceed down the grand staircase to be received by Their Honours the Hon. Lois Elsa Hole and the Hon. Ted Hole, the hon. Premier of the province of Alberta, and the hon. Mrs. Klein.

[The Premier returned to the Chamber]

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Mr. Premier.

Bill 1

Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Act

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 1, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Act. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, this bill puts into place a $500 million endowment to enhance science and engineering research in Alberta. Hopefully it will help to keep the brightest and keenest scientific minds right here in our province.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

head: Tablings

THE SPEAKER: I have the honour to table a copy of the speech graciously given by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

head: Motions

- (2) Law and Regulations,
- (3) Legislative Offices,
- (4) Private Bills,
- (5) Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing,
- (6) Public Accounts, and
- (7) Public Affairs.

[Motion carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I seek the Assembly's unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 49(1), providing for the establishment of a striking committee to prepare, recommend, and report a list of the members, chairmen, and deputy chairmen to comprise the Assembly's seven standing committees.

[Unanimous consent granted]

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, again I seek the Assembly's unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 38(1)(a) in order to move the motion appointing the chairmen, deputy chairmen, and members to comprise the Assembly's seven standing committees.

[Unanimous consent granted]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the following members be appointed to the Assembly's seven standing committees:

- (1) Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund: Mr. Trynchy, chairman; Mr. Doerksen, deputy chairman; Mr. Bonner; Ms Carlson; Mr. Clegg; Mr. Hierath; Mr. Lougheed; Mr. Shariff; and Mr. Stevens.

- (5) Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing: Mr. Stevens, chairman; Mr. Boutilier, deputy chairman; Mr. Cao; Mr. Clegg; Mr. Dickson; Mr. Ducharme; Mr. Fischer; Mrs. Forsyth; Mr. Gibbons; Mrs. Gordon; Mr. Hlady; Mr. Klapstein; Ms Kryczka; Ms Leibovici; Dr. Massey; Mr. Renner; Mr. Sapers; Mr. Severtson; Mr. Strang; Mr. Tannas; and Mrs. Tarchuk.
- (6) Public Accounts: Mr. White, chairman; Mr. Shariff, deputy chairman; Mr. Amery; Ms Blakeman; Mr. Cao; Mrs. Forsyth; Ms Graham; Mr. Herard; Mr. Johnson; Mr. Klapstein; Ms Kryczka; Mr. Lougheed; Dr. Nicol; Ms Olsen; Mrs. O'Neill; Dr. Pannu; and Mr. Yankowsky.
- (7) Public Affairs: Mr. Strang, chairman; Mr. Fischer, deputy chairman; and all members of the Assembly.

[Motion carried]

[At 4:03 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, February 22, 2000 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 00/02/22
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Please join me in the prayer, and at the conclusion of the prayer would you please remain standing.

Father, on this day of a new beginning we ask for Your guidance in the responsibility we have undertaken and Your help in fulfilling our duties. As Members of this Legislative Assembly may we faithfully serve all Albertans and, in serving them, serve You. Amen.

As is our custom, we pay tribute on our first day to former members of this Assembly who have passed on since the House last met.

Mr. Earl M. Hardy September 6, 1913, to January 15, 2000

THE SPEAKER: On this day we remember Earl Hardy, who passed away on January 15, 2000. Mr. Hardy was first elected to the Alberta Legislature in the general election of August 17, 1948, and served until June 17, 1963. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Bruce for the Social Credit governing party.

During his years in the Legislature Mr. Hardy served on the following committees: Select Standing Committee on Agriculture, Colonization, Immigration and Education, serving as chairman of this committee for the First Session of the 12th Legislature; the Select Standing Committee on Municipal Law, serving as chairman for the 13th and 14th Legislatures; the Standing Committee on Private Bills; the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Telephones and Irrigation; and the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

We are honoured by the presence of Earl Hardy's family in the Speaker's gallery today.

Anders Aalborg August 22, 1914, to February 13, 2000

THE SPEAKER: Today we also remember Anders Aalborg, who passed away on February 13, 2000. Mr. Aalborg was first elected to the Alberta Legislature in the general election of August 17, 1948, and served as MLA until August 30, 1971. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Alexandra for the Social Credit governing party.

During his years in the Legislature Mr. Aalborg served as Minister of Education from September 9, 1952, to July 30, 1964; as Provincial Treasurer from July 29, 1964, to September 9, 1971; as Minister of Railways and Telephones from July 13, 1967, to December 11, 1968. He also served on the following select standing committees: Agriculture, Colonization, Immigration and Education; Municipal Law; Private Bills; Railways, Telephones and Irrigation; Public Accounts; Public Affairs; Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing. He also served on the special committee reviewing workers' compensation.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of their families who shared the burdens of public office. Our prayers are with them.

In a moment of silent prayer I ask you to remember Earl Hardy and Anders Aalborg as you may have known them. Rest eternal grant unto them, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon them. Amen.

Please be seated.

Hon. members, the Legislative Assembly of Alberta was the first to proudly display the flags of the country's provincial and territorial flags in its Chamber. I would now like to continue building on our Assembly's firsts vis-a-vis our provincial and territorial counterparts by adding the singing of our national anthem on a limited basis to our daily routine. Would all those members in favour of granting unanimous consent to provide for the singing of our national anthem on the first day of each sessional week for the duration of the Fourth Session of 24th Legislature, to be sung immediately following the daily prayer, please say aye.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I would now invite you to stand, and I'd like to invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of the national anthem. Mr. Lorieau is in the Speaker's gallery. Please join us in the language of your choice.

O Canada, our home and native land!
 True patriot love in all thy sons command.
 With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
 The True North strong and free!
 From far and wide, O Canada,
 We stand on guard for thee.
 God keep our land glorious and free!
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to the Assembly on your behalf the family of the late former member Mr. Earl Hardy. We have the following members of the family: Inez Reil and Sharon Mason, daughters; Doug and Trish Hardy, son and daughter-in-law; Kim Pudlowski and Kerry Bednarski, granddaughters; Darren Mason, grandson; and Janine Bednarski, great-granddaughter. They are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to present a petition that states:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

One thousand and seventy-eight signatures by Edmonton area residents.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table petitions with 1,003 names on them from Edmonton, St. Albert, Ardrossan, Sherwood Park, and Stony Plain. In the petition the Albertans signing it ask for "the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition. It's signed by 1,027 people from Evansburg, Stettler, Two Hills, Edmonton, St. Albert, Morinville, Spruce Grove, Innisfail, Red Deer, Edson, and Onoway. This is the petition.

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce this afternoon a petition signed by 1,059 Albertans residing in Calgary and High River urging the Legislative Assembly to urge the government "to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

1:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to table a petition.

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Assembly to urge the government . . . to stop promoting private health care and undermining [our public system].

The signatories of this petition are from Edmonton, Stony Plain, Wabamun, Lloydminster, Drumheller, Hanna, Three Hills, Stettler, Morinville, Jasper, Wetaskiwin, Whitecourt, and St. Paul, bringing our total today to 5,188 Albertans. It's just the beginning; there are many more to come.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition signed by 111 Albertans. The petition reads as follows:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

These are 111 of thousands of other signatories on this petition.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) I will move that written questions and motions for returns appearing on tomorrow's Order Paper stand and retain their places.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on a Standing Order 40 application.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 40 I'll be asking for the unanimous consent of the Legislative Assembly to debate the motion which calls for banning private, for-profit hospitals in this province. I have copies for distribution.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 38(1) regarding notice to allow the introduction of Bill 202.

[Unanimous consent denied]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. DAY: Mr. Speaker, I am tabling the quarterly report, the budget report as required by the Government Accountability Act. This report shows that as far as we can determine now at the third-quarter, the government will be experiencing an unanticipated revenue increase of about 2 and a half billion dollars, a significant portion of that coming from the oil and gas sector and a very significant portion coming from increased personal taxes, which is more people working, more people paying taxes and at a lower rate. I will table that third-quarter report.

Along with it, I'll be tabling the Alberta heritage savings trust fund quarterly report, which shows that the investment earned, we think, by the end of this fiscal year will be $260 million higher than we had anticipated, showing the fund performing well. Of all the increased spending, the most significant portion is in the area of health.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings. First is six copies of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development's annual inspection report on university animal facilities for 1999.

The second is six copies of the Alberta Agricultural Products Marketing Council annual report for 1998-99, and six copies of the Alberta Surface Rights Board and Land Compensation Board annual report for the calendar year 1999.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to file eight copies of a Framework for Alberta's International Strategies. This framework was developed to guide the Alberta government's international policies and activities. One-third of Alberta's economic activity is now linked to exports, so this is a very important document for our government.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I wish to table with the Assembly five copies of the statement on the delivery of surgical services; in addition to that, five copies of a policy statement on surgical services, questions and answers; thirdly, five copies of the publication We are Listening: Here's What We've Heard as urged and responded to on behalf of Albertans; and finally, five copies of eight studies that support looking at alternatives in terms of the delivery of surgical services in health care systems. I would like to add that unlike some studies that are circulated, these have all been subject to peer review and are quality pieces of information.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a notice of motion pursuant to Standing Order 57(1) relating to subcommittees A, B, C, and D of Committee of Supply. I'm tabling it now so that all members will have notice of the proposed makeup of those committees.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to table copies of the letters I've sent to the great kids of Alberta who have been rewarded for their very hard work and commitment to their studies and their community and to congratulate those young Albertans and their families for the wonderful work they do in making sure that all kids are successful in our province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings to make. I wish to table five copies of Bill 201, the Medicare Enhancement Act. This bill would ban outright the establishment of private, for-profit hospitals in Alberta, which is what Albertans want.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a financial statement for the year '98-99 of HRG, Health Resources Group Inc., and this financial statement shows that HRG last year incurred $2.1 million in losses.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am tabling a letter from the Van Camps of Edmonton, who outline the deplorable treatment their young, handicapped son got in a local hospital as a result of lack of adequate staffing in the hospital system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling a sampling of several letters from individuals in Calgary and Sherwood Park asking the government why they are continuing to promote private health care. There's a series of letters from Mr. and Mrs. Gould and letters from Mr. Clarkson and from Ms Rose as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a flyer produced by the Edmonton Osteoporosis Support Group. This is giving information on the largely preventable disease of osteoporosis and contains contacts and other information.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I have copies of two letters I'd like to table with the Assembly. They're both from constituents. The first is from Miss Eleanor Goss, who informs me that based on information she's received from the United Church of Canada, private health care is not wanted or needed in Alberta.

The second piece of correspondence is also addressed to me from Mrs. Shupac in my constituency, who tells me to please do everything I can to speak up to preserve our health care system as we know it in Alberta and not to allow for privatization.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a brief letter that I've received from the Premier dated January 26. In it we were going to discuss the shortage of health care professionals across this province and across this country, and we will, hopefully this winter during the session.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to rise and table five copies about a health care debate that is being held in Edmonton-Riverview. Invited panelists include the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, Dr. Donna Wilson, Ms Wendy Armstrong, and Ms Wanda Cree. All panelists are confirmed except those representing government. Both the Premier and minister of health have declined to attend.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, pursuant to section 23(6) of the Conflicts of Interest Act I table with the Assembly the investigation report by the Ethics Commissioner into allegations involving the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, Mr. Howard Sapers, dated January 25, 2000. The report was distributed to members on January 26, 2000.

Pursuant again to section 23(6) of the Conflicts of Interest Act I table with the Assembly the investigation report by the Ethics Commissioner into allegations involving the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, Mrs. Janis Tarchuk, dated January 25, 2000. This report was distributed to members on January 26, 2000.

Pursuant to the Legislative Assembly Act I table with the Assembly five copies of the following Members' Services orders: 2/99, being constituency service amendment order 5, and 3/99, being transportation amendment order 3.

head: Introduction of Guests

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly, the first-ever Great Kids as appointed and selected by a judgment panel for the government of Alberta. They are seated in the members' gallery. I am going to ask them to stand as I read their names so that we can honour their contribution both to their families and to their community: Christopher Cromwell from Edmonton, Kayla Moody from Calgary, Michelle Shopland from Westlock, Ian Ullrich from Hinton, Tannis Boudreau from Saddle Lake First Nations community, Jordan Keenan from Calgary, Irfan Kherani from Edmonton, Jasmine Poitras-John from Bonnyville/Kehewin reserve, Danielle Bizon from Grassland, Terina Pare from Innisfail, Samir Pradhan from Calgary, Jeesan Chowdhury from Edmonton, Jacqueline Dueck from Ryley, Danny Lee from Calgary, Mandy Uglem from Bawlf. Edward Hofer from Westlock is not with us today. These young people were presented with the Premier's presentations yesterday in Calgary and join us today. Please join me in congratulating the Great Kids of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, if I might have permission to introduce some great parents of great kids also seated in the members' gallery. If they would all please rise, they should be applauded.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you four individuals seated in the members' gallery: first, Cheryl Christie, who effectively and efficiently manages my constituency office; she is joined by her mother-in-law, Judy Christie, who hails from Nanton, which is in the constituency of Highwood, as well, Chris Tannas, who is the esteemed wife of the hon. Member for Highwood, and Mary Tannas, the granddaughter who is shadowing and studying her grandfather, as well as his assistant, Phyllis, as part of a school project. Often it's a small world. Judy Christie and Chris Tannas graduated together in 1994, receiving their bachelor of nursing. I would ask the ladies to all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am very delighted to introduce some students from the Edmonton-McClung constituency. These are students from the Good Shepherd school, and there are 54 students in our gallery, accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Bertolini and Mr. Rob Madunicky. Parent Mrs. Esther Siry accompanies the group. I would ask them all to rise and receive a very warm welcome from this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four sets of introductions today, and all of the persons that I will be introducing have requested that I indicate to the House their total opposition to the legalization of private, for-profit hospitals in this province.

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to introduce two prominent Albertans, Dr. Eugene Egert and Mrs. Jean Egert. Dr. Egert is a former chair of the department of Germanic languages, University of Alberta. He taught at the University of Alberta for 29 years. Mrs. Jean Egert is a homemaker and actively involved with her church, school, and community. They are sitting in the public gallery. I'll ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, with your permission I'm pleased to introduce a group of five Edmontonians this afternoon. These are Bruni Beg, Joseph Mafe, Anna Schupak, Erna Taron, and Christel Trojan. I'll ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I take special pleasure in introducing Travers Sweatman, who is a resident of Edmonton-Strathcona, and he is here today to see us go into business for this spring session. I'll ask Mr. Sweatman to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Last but not least, Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of introducing Larry Derkach, who just retired after 24 years in a very responsible executive position with the Bissell Centre in Edmonton and is now one of the five contestants for the nomination for Edmonton-Highlands. He is accompanied by his son, Barry McTavish. They are both sitting in the members' gallery, and I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three very active Norwood volunteers: Audrey Proulx, Mike Granberg, and Bernice Caligiuri. They were responsible for getting over 40 pages of our health care petition signed and in for today. I would now ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a political science student at the University of Alberta. Her name is Jennifer Krauskopf. She worked in my office last summer, and she's here with a friend, I believe, but I've forgotten her name. I'll get that into the record later. I would ask them both to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

Great Kids Awards

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise today and read into the record a prepared statement about the Great Kids awards. Our children and youth are our greatest resource. They are also our greatest hope for the future. On Family Day 16 young people from throughout Alberta were presented with the Alberta government's first Great Kids awards. The Great Kids awards recognize young Albertans who are making a positive difference at home and in their communities. It honours young people who care about others and take the time to help them.

Three hundred and eighty nominations were received from communities ranging from all points of the province. We were surprised and pleased with this tremendous response to our new award program, and I must congratulate the nominators and the communities that took that initiative. It was difficult for our selection panel to judge and choose 16 recipients from the worthy individuals nominated. Both the number of nominations submitted and the quality of individuals nominated clearly illustrate the potential of youth in this great province. It's encouraging and uplifting. Our 16 Great Kids awards recipients represent the very best of the nominees.

Unfortunately, though, we hear often about children who do not do well. These 16 seated in the members' gallery are outstanding children. They are aware of their environment. They do well with their families, and they do everything possible to assist in their communities. These great kids indeed exemplify everything that's good about our province. They represent our very promising future.

To ensure that they participate in shaping this future, I've invited our Great Kids award recipients to act as informal advisors to me, to our government, to the Ministry of Children's Services through their newly received prizes of computers as donated by the corporate sponsors. They will provide us with their perspective and advice on issues relating to young people. With the generous support of the sponsors, IBM and AT&T Canada, we'll stay connected electronically. This communication will provide young Albertans with an opportunity to shape the work that we are doing on their behalf, and it will also give them a greater voice.

Mr. Speaker, providing young people with more opportunities to voice their thoughts is something every Albertan should do and was a recommendation in fact made by Albertans at the children's forum held last October. Through this initiative, the Great Kids awards, we can take steps toward this goal. Our hope lies in our young people, and these are 16 of the best.

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, the distinction of recognizing the achievements and contributions of Alberta's children is a most worthy initiative and one deserving commendation. I would join with the Premier and minister in welcoming our 16 distinguished great kids and their families to the Assembly to officially record and celebrate their accomplishments: dedicated and hardworking, academics and athletes, volunteers to a variety of special causes and charities, bilingual in languages of French, Spanish, and Cree, leaders at home, in their schools and in their communities. On behalf of Nancy MacBeth and all members of the Official Opposition it is a privilege to congratulate you, the 16 young men and women who are recipients of Alberta's first Great Kids awards.

Special congratulations, as well, to the parents, siblings, grandparents, teachers, and mentors who have contributed to the development and achievements of these fine Albertans. As we celebrate your success today, may we also as provincial policymakers commit ourselves to the enhancement of provincial programs and services that will enable all Alberta children, despite their immediate circumstances, to reach your heights.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In forum after forum across this province Albertans have come down to one question every single time. The question is: why? Why is this government trying to expand privatization in our public health care system when a revitalized public system will provide far greater benefit now and in the future? So in trying to get to the truth, we in the Official Opposition wrote to the government to ask for the government's policy, statements, anything, on private hospitals. What we got back was this document: censored information. Thirty blank pages when it comes to the whole issue, whited out, withholding information from Albertans. Now the Premier is sending out truth squads to spread the private health care propaganda. My question is to the Premier. What truth is the Premier hiding from Albertans in these 30 censored pages?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we're not trying to hide anything. If the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition wants the answer, it's in the policy statement, and if she wants a further answer, wait for the legislation. It will be mailed to her in addition to every other household in this province so we can engage the public in a reasonable, meaningful, sensible debate on this particular issue.

Mr. Speaker, if she wants the policy statement, all she has to do is ask for it. It's right there.

MRS. MacBETH: Not quite, Mr. Speaker. We asked for the policy statement, and we got 30 blank pages.

You know, interestingly, Mr. Speaker, the headings on these blank pages refer to private hospital policy when in fact we thought the Premier was talking about private clinics. So which is it? Is the truth somewhere in these blank pages that he's withholding from Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, if there's anyone listening there in the gallery, perhaps they can go and retrieve a copy of the policy statement, and I'd be glad to send it over. In the meantime, she can have this document. It answers most of the questions that the Liberals and the Friends of Medicare and everyone else want to ask.

As I pointed out, the legislation will be sent to every household in this province, and the people of this province will be able to decide what we are proposing in law. It's a very simple read, Mr. Speaker. The fundamentals of the legislation will be about eight pages, enough even for the Liberals to handle.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, it's interesting because we're talking about the privatization that's going on right now in this province, and my question is to the Premier. What truth is being hidden from Albertans in documents that we got from the freedom of information process? Blank pages, this government withholding information from the people of this province.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, we are not withholding any information. I have no idea about the documents to which the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition alludes, but maybe the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness can shed some light on this situation.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think that in our overall direction that we've taken in health care in this province – and that is to improve it, to innovate, to move ahead with the needed changes – we do have an initiative under way. We have published a policy statement on the delivery of surgical services, which we are consulting with Albertans on, and we are providing all possible information to them.

Mr. Speaker, if something has gone wrong with the hon. leader's mail service, I'd be happy if you'd allow me to give a copy to the page to take over to her.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the tradition of question period is that one person will be recognized to raise a question and another person will be recognized to respond. All this chit chat and going across the way really makes it difficult for the chair to hear the answer so that he can actually recognize an additional member at some point in time.

Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the document we're working from is one from the information services unit of this minister's department, sent to us on February 3, copies of which I'll table in the Assembly right now. This is from the minister's own department.

Getting back to the Premier, Mr. Speaker, I think this whole question is that it is the government's own policy documents that we're talking about with its 30 censored pages. Albertans are well aware that private health care is more expensive than public health care. We've tabled study after study to show that. Perhaps this is the page where that discussion takes place, the page that's being hidden from Albertans. Will the Premier tell the truth to Albertans as to what's really going on?

MR. KLEIN: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will tell the truth. That's why we are sending to every household in this province a copy of the legislation, and the people of this province will be able to judge for themselves. The legislation will be longer than eight pages, but as I say, the fundamentals of the legislation will be about eight pages in very understandable, easy language, language that even the Liberals can understand, and they might even support it.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, evidence shows that the waiting lists for hip replacements will in fact increase under a private/public mix system. Is this the blank page of the government's policy that will explain the truth to Albertans about what's really going to happen when he gets his privatization scheme through?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I just had delivered to me the policy statement on the delivery of surgical services. This is the policy statement. This is the framework and the foundation for the legislation that will be introduced perhaps in early or mid-March. I'll table this policy document, and if the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition hasn't read it . . . Again, it's only – what? – four pages.

It has charts, no pictures unfortunately, but you know, it's very simple reading.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can understand why the Premier won't debate me. It's because he doesn't have any information or anything to back up his contention.

Mr. Speaker, it's clear that the Consumers' Association of Canada, its own Alberta branch, shows that wait lists are longer, that it costs more, that care is poorer. Where's that in this statement? Perhaps it's on this blank page of the government's own documents requested through the freedom of information process.

MR. KLEIN: You know, in my political career that spans almost 20 years now, I have never looked forward with more enthusiasm to the time when this bill will be tabled so I can debate in this House in front of the television cameras this Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, with an independent referee like yourself, sir, to make sure that it's absolutely not stacked, that it's unbiased, that it's done in the most revered Chamber of this province, right here in the Legislative Assembly. I look forward to that debate, and I hope she does too.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, this Premier has been talking about his private health care legislation for three years. He's still making Albertans wait. He still hasn't brought it forward. In fact, he's getting one of his backbenchers to bring forward that legislation because he's too afraid to sponsor it in this Legislature. My question is: is this the page, the blank policy page, that shows the return to shareholders that they'll receive using Alberta taxpayer dollars to subsidize private hospitals? Is this the page that has that discussion? Is that the truth this Premier is withholding from Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: The truth is in the policy statement. The truth will be in the legislation. You know, Mr. Speaker, they don't want to consider the legislation, but I can let them in on a little bit of the legislation. I can't tell them totally, because they might even support it, and then we would know that there's something really wrong.

Mr. Speaker, fundamental to the legislation in the preamble – I'm going to share this. [interjection] No. This is Canadian. You know, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora said that I'm un-Canadian.

MR. SAPERS: No, I didn't.

MR. KLEIN: Yes, he did. Well, that's what I heard on the radio, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] Oh. Well, it was his voice. If it wasn't, it was his twin brother, you know.

Mr. Speaker, fundamental to the legislation is absolute adherence to the Canada Health Act, both the spirit of the law and the principles of the law. Now, if he doesn't agree with that, I would suggest that he is un-Canadian.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, the question was about taxpayer subsidies for private hospitals, and again this Premier refuses to give the truth to Albertans.

My question is: is this the page? Mr. Speaker, is this perhaps the page where the Premier identifies the list of his friends who might benefit from taxpayer subsidies to private care?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, she's holding up pieces of paper. I can hardly read the paper from here, never mind from across the way. You know, she alludes to a piece of paper. I don't know what that piece of paper is saying. [interjections] That's why I don't have laser treatment. I prefer to wear glasses. Then I can take them off, and I don't have to look at them.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I can believe why he doesn't want to face up to those who know full well that this government is back in the business of being in business, and the business is the promotion and the subsidization of private health care. Is this the page where they discuss their new business plans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this hon. member was part of the government that was in the business of being in business. She was part of the government that wanted to have magnesium plants and wanted to have NovAtels and wanted to have – you name it – I mean, everything from barbershops to butcher shops. She was all part of it. Right.

THE SPEAKER: Well, let's see if we can get some decorum in here. The hon. interim leader of the third party.

Health Resource Group Inc.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are getting increasingly angry over this government's reckless scheme to legalize private, for-profit hospitals. All of the credible and overwhelming evidence shows that for-profit hospitals cost more and deliver less, yet the Premier persists with this scheme to bail out a few well-connected Tories involved with HRG. The government's proposal for a for-profit hospitals bill should more accurately be called the HRG refinancing bill. My question is to the Premier. Why does this government say no to hundreds of thousands of Albertans who want an outright ban on private, for-profit hospitals while saying yes to funneling taxpayer dollars through HRG, which last year incurred an operating loss of $2.1 million?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, in one breath he's talking about for-profit health care, and then he's talking about an operation, a private operation, that lost a whole bunch of money. That's hardly for profit. You know, it sounds to me like it's a for-loss health care clinic.

Mr. Speaker, I will have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness explain the policy. This is not about promoting private health care. It is about protecting the publicly funded health care system and providing alternatives within the confines and the absolute strict parameters of the Canada Health Act.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta is pursuing the development of the best possible publicly funded, publicly administered health care system in Canada, and I think that was shown a few months ago by the selection by no less than Maclean's magazine of the Capital health authority as a leading health authority, a leading deliverer of service to Albertans in terms of health care compared to the rest of Canada. That particular type of achievement did not come about by sticking with the status quo. There was innovation. There was change. There were new approaches taken in the Capital health authority to improve the health care system, and if time permitted this afternoon, I could go through a number of areas with respect to certain types of surgeries and certain types of procedures where Edmontonians and Albertans are being better served than ever before.

We are looking here in our policy statement, Mr. Speaker, to control under the public health care system, publicly administered, adhering to the Canada Health Act, alternative methods of delivery and approaches to delivering services in an efficient manner, and we are looking at the potential for private surgical clinics.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans want to hear the truth, not claims and claims and claims. Why does the Premier make the outrageous claim that contracting with for-profit hospitals will save money when HRG's own documents show that its administration costs are three times higher than those in public hospitals?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know anything about the finances of HRG. As I understand it, this is a facility that contracts to WCB under federal legislation and also does uninsured services. It has nothing to do with the proposed policy. The proposed policy simply says that we will adhere to the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act and that we will protect the public health system at all costs but that we need to find better and more efficient and more effective ways of delivering services to ease pain and suffering. That's what it's all about.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the Premier's scheme how will the government guarantee that not one red cent of taxpayers' dollars will be used by HRG directly or indirectly to repay the $400,000 in accrued interest they racked up last year?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness answer this question, but I don't see how this government would be involved in any way, shape, or form with HRG. This is a private operation that contracts with WCB, I understand, with other insurance agencies and provides uninsured medical services that are purely elective. We have no involvement whatsoever. I stand to be corrected, but I'll have the hon. minister clarify, if he will.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems to be ignoring the fact that there is absolutely no guarantee that HRG or any other particular entity will obtain a contract or an arrangement with a regional health authority. That whole matter of looking at cost-effectiveness and benefits to the system will be very, very carefully examined. That is a very essential part of the policy statement, and it will be an essential part of the legislation we will be putting forward.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Senatorial Selection

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Alberta has had legislation in place since 1989 called the Senatorial Selection Act. The legislation allows Albertans to determine who should be appointed to the Senate to represent Alberta. In light of the recent resignation of Senator Ron Ghitler, could the minister please outline the process for Senate appointments?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, appointment to the Senate of Canada is made by Prime Minister Chretien in this instance. The Member for Airdrie-Rocky View, though, correctly outlined that this Legislature passed a Senate election act in 1989, and frankly the Prime Minister of the day appointed the choice of the people of this province, Mr. Waters, to be a Senator to represent this province. In 1998 again the people of this province chose two Senators-elect in the names of Bert Brown and Ted Morton, and it's worth noting that there was a very high voter turnout at that election process. They are certainly available to be appointed.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What could the minister do to encourage the Prime Minister to appoint my constituent, Bert Brown, the senatorial nominee who received 330,000 votes in the 1998 election, to the Senate?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, certainly we are encouraging the Prime Minister to do the right thing and appoint the persons that the people of this province have spoken out by going to the polls and voting for. In fact, the Premier has sent a letter to the Prime Minister, and he's recommending in that letter that Albertans desire to be represented in the Senate, to have recognized their own choice of an elected representative, and I guess that through this letter we are asking the Prime Minister to respect the wishes of Albertans and appoint one of these persons, Bert Brown, who was the first choice of the people of this province in 1998, to the Senate.

MS HALEY: My final question to the same minister: do you think that we will as Alberta continue to have elections for our Senate nominees?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, this government respects the wishes of the people that we serve, who are the citizens of this province. In 1989 the legislation was passed to elect a representative to the Senate. The people of this province continue to tell us that they want an elected Senate. In fact, they want a triple E Senate. They want an elected, effective Senate. This government will continue to respect the wishes of our constituents, and we'll continue to press the federal government and indeed other provinces in this country for Senate reform.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was hoping I would have a chance to further question the Premier, but in view of his having left the House, I'm going to put my question to the . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Referring to the Absence of a Member

THE SPEAKER: Before that point of order really comes up, it is totally against the traditions and the rules in our Assembly to make note of that. There are extenuating circumstances, many, many kinds of circumstances to see hon. members having to depart the House. This happens frequently, periodically. There are dozens of reasons, and there is no aspiration on anybody to be spelt out to anyone with respect to that matter. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition knows that.

MRS. MacBETH: I'll withdraw my comment, Mr. Speaker, and I will go to the Acting Premier with respect to this document, which obviously the government has been caught red-handed not having. I just wanted to quote the first paragraph, which is:

I am pleased to respond to your request for copies of significant records documenting the development of the policy on contracting out for insured and non-insured surgical services with private providers.

And this is what we get. These are the 30 censored pages. So I have questions to the Acting Premier on the whole question of subsidizing the private sector, which is what's going on with this government's policy, and subsidizing is an issue which Albertans cannot stand. So my question is: is this blank page the one that shows how many doctors and nurses will move from our public health care system to work in the Premier's private hospitals?

MR. DAY: I hope that the member is here on budget day, in two days, because there'll be a report on how many more doctors and how many more nurses are being hired in the system right here in Alberta, and it's very exciting news, Mr. Speaker.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Acting Premier obviously doesn't know this government's policy as enunciated in their own policy document, perhaps we can go here and ask how much more it is going to cost for those doctors and nurses to work in the Premier's private hospitals than it does to work in the public hospitals.

MR. JONSON: First of all, Mr. Speaker, using the physicians as an example, the physicians will be paid out of the same fee-for-service pool that all other doctors in the province are paid out of. So per service per qualified doctor the answer is that there will be no difference, no increase.

I'd like to just add, Mr. Speaker, that this question is kind of ironic. I do sympathize with the fact that the hon. leader seems to be somewhat concerned, but I can't help but think back to 1990, when the hon. Leader of the Opposition was minister of health. You know, it's really quite ironic that there is all this concern right now, by her at least, because there were 30 private nonhospital surgical centres approved by the College of Physicians and Surgeons at that time, and you know, they were charging facility fees. As I recall – and I was in the Legislature at that time – there was no particular concern raised about it. So I wonder just where the newfound concern about this is coming from.

MRS. MacBETH: In fact, Mr. Speaker, as the health minister I brought forward an ambulatory care policy, which was refused by your caucus.

Mr. Speaker, the question remains: how many of our physicians now in our medical schools at the U of A and the U of C and how many of the new doctors that are going to be provided for in the Provincial Treasurer's documents which are going to come out on Thursday are going to be moving over to the private sector? Another subsidy of the private sector by this government. You don't have an answer, do you?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have an answer, and I could take longer than I'll be allowed to, I'm sure, with the pleasure of the Assembly. First of all, Alberta has been very successful both in retaining physicians trained in this province – we have a higher rate of retention than in years previous – and also in attracting physicians from outside the province. Members of the Assembly would note that a short time ago we announced that we were recognizing the additional cost of having a larger physician force by adding some 15 millions of dollars to the AMA physician payment pool.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the possible contracting with a private provider for a designated surgical service, there will be, I'm sure, doctors working in those clinics that are very, very well qualified, as they are in clinics such as the Remington clinic in Calgary right now or dozens of other clinics in the province doing surgical services. The quality will be there. They will be paid for under the AMA fee-for-service pool, which we negotiate with physicians across the province. I'm sure that the hon. leader would not be wanting to say that doctors should not come to this province. We've certainly been successful as a system in attracting doctors, and we want to attract doctors where they are needed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Relay 2000, being sponsored by Alberta Trailnet, is a cross-country run being proposed in part along the northern part of the Little Bow constituency. In fact, the route is proposed to take in part of a major irrigation canal owned by Alberta Environment. My questions today firstly are to the Minister of Community Development. Mr. Minister, has your department approved or funded any part of Relay 2000?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the member points out, Relay 2000 is in fact a relay that started on February 14 in Tuktoyaktuk to bring water from the three oceans to a commemorative fountain in Ottawa. So you'll have vessels of water being brought forward from the Arctic, from the Pacific, and from the Atlantic to Ottawa. The intent of this activity is to focus attention on the Trans Canada Trail.

In direct answer to your question, there's no financial support from the province for this activity, and there are not any approvals required from the province, from Community Development, with respect to it.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary to the same minister: although there may not be a Fisheries' permit approval required from the federal government for the transference of water, will local landowners be involved in the routing for this Relay 2000?

MR. WOLOSHYN: I'm not too sure as to how much of an involvement that will be there except to say that the routing is intended to follow the proposed Trans Canada Trail, which is about 50 percent approved to this point.

With respect to your comment on the irrigation canal, my understanding is that the relay team, which will only be about six or eight people, would follow the service roads in the area as opposed to the canal, but that's just my understanding.

MR. McFARLAND: My final supplemental is to the Minister of Environment. Mr. Minister, has your department approved access and use of the Carseland/Bow main canal for Relay 2000?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is public land, and as such it is not required that there be a permit given unless it's a publicly advertised event. To this point the organizers of the event have not contacted the Department of Environment. If they wish to make it a publicly advertised event, I would encourage them to contact our department as soon as possible.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Wainwright.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier this afternoon stated that the answers to his private hospitals – and that's not surgical clinics, minister of health. You know, I wish the two of them would get it together. Either they're surgical clinics or they're private, for-profit hospitals. But, really, you should make up your minds. The Premier stated that the answers to his private hospitals are in the policy statement. What is interesting to note is that the public cannot see the real answers. There are a series of blank pages that we received under freedom of information that deal with focus groups that were held on October 21, 22, and 23 and also blank pages that deal with key points on private hospital policy. My questions are to the minister of health. Can the minister explain why the public can't see the real truth that's on these blank pages, the pages that deal with private hospitals policy? Thank you.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it appears that the hon. member across the way has been too concentrated on drawing blanks this afternoon, and she should have perhaps heard my tabling. I tabled a report on what we had heard, what the responses were with respect to our overall feedback on the policy statement. They were duly tabled with the Assembly.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the focus groups were paid for by taxpayer dollars, can the minister explain why these pages, key points, focus groups on private hospitals, are blank and why key pages on public focus groups conducted in Calgary, Lethbridge, and Edmonton to test the principles and government's proposals and statement on private hospitals which outline options, policy objectives, and recommended actions are blank as well?

MR. JONSON: I would just like to remind the hon. member, if I may, Mr. Speaker, through you – and I'll have to speak a little louder – that I did table the report on those consultations and what we'd heard from Albertans in the appropriate place on the Order Paper this afternoon.

MS LEIBOVICI: That tabling did not deal with these public focus groups.

The question is: if the truth on the private, for-profit hospitals is so obvious, why does the government need truth squads? Why do you need them?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think the goal of government as very clearly stated in all matters but certainly in this very important area of our policy statement is to get the correct information out to the public of this province, and as has frequently been communicated to us by the public of this province, very significantly and forcibly at the health summit, the public of this province wants the government to provide all necessary information on policy initiatives, on legislation. That is something that we are doing and we are doing in a major and thorough and accurate way with respect to this initiative.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Liquor Sales

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Gaming. One promise that was made when the liquor stores were privatized was that there would be no liquor sales in grocery stores. My constituents and my retail liquor store owners are concerned about recent reports promoting the sale of liquor in Alberta grocery stores. Could the minister indicate if the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission is currently looking at allowing the sale of liquor in the grocery stores?

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, the member probably got the question, as he started to frame the question, in talking with constituents when he went through Lindbergh, Alberta, a pretty darn nice little town, and the Paradise Valley general store. Those two stores are agencies actually, and they do sell liquor with their groceries. In fact, there are 60 locations now in Alberta that do sell liquor with their food. There are also more than 800 private liquor stores in Alberta today. I think it was about 250 in 1993. They sell over 14,000 products as opposed to 3,000 before privatization, with 2,400 full- and part-time employees versus 1,300 before privatization.

In fact, Alberta has some of the lowest prices in the country and well below preprivatization prices. Buying in some of these grocery stores in small communities where they're more than 15 kilometres from a liquor outlet – right now the policy of the government is that grocery stores can own and operate a liquor store, but in most cases any liquor operation must operate separate from the grocery store.

This model of privatization has worked. In fact, the major grocery chains have about 7 percent of the market. The next 23 percent of the market is characterized by large retailers, and the rest is made up of small entrepreneurs, the very backbone of all small business in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, right now there are no proposals nor anything before the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission with respect to any changes on where liquor is now sold and how it is sold throughout the province.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering if the minister currently is considering any changes to the private model for liquor stores.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, with any form of competition the market continually undergoes change. It undergoes pressure from those who want to sell more. There are changes in the type of business arrangements that are made. Again, we have not seen any specific proposals allowing the sale of liquor in any food store, but just as this government is committed to deregulation, is committed to be less intrusive, as the throne speech pointed out, we look for ways in which we can be out of the way of business in Alberta, out of everybody's way in business in Alberta, and let them proceed on a competitive model and maximize their profit. That will be maximized through optimum service to the consumer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Regional Health Authority Contracts

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Official Opposition asks this government questions about its plans to privatize hospitals and health care in this province. We get nonanswers. We use the freedom of information legislation, and we get back blank pages. Not only is this government hiding existing contracts with private health operators, but it wants to put hundreds of millions of dollars at risk through its scheme to subsidize private hospitals in this province. Now, my questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why don't contracts between regional health authorities and private providers meet the guidelines established by his very own department?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, on the overall matter of the policy statement, the information has been provided there. We have indicated in the course of the debate that when we have the legislation before the House, there will be provision there in terms of the openness of the information provided in contracts. That is part of our overall approach with respect to this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I would just say that within the next several days we will have legislation before this House, and we will be able to show in print, in black and white, what the actual legislation looks like in terms of our overall policy.

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Speaker, I'll table a copy of the February 18, 1998, letter from Alberta Executive Council, from the government, to RHAs specifying the contract requirements that aren't being met by his department and led the Auditor General to find that $517 million is not being disclosed in relation to contracts between voluntary and private operators and RHAs. So I will ask the minister one more time: will the Minister of Health and Wellness admit now that he is hiding the details of these contracts because they don't meet his department's own contract guidelines?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, now it has been revealed by the member across the way that they are referring to the reservations in the Auditor General's report. Alberta Health and Wellness takes those reservations and recommendations seriously, as always, from the Auditor General's department. We will be discussing with the Auditor General his concerns and rectifying that particular problem as much as possible.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'll try again. Will the Minister of Health and Wellness release to Albertans the examination of the benefits of the private service delivery contracts that are in place for each contract, will he release the contract risk assessments, and will he tell Albertans about the audit process that's in place, all pursuant to the government's existing policy? If he won't release that information to Albertans, why not? What are you hiding?

MR. JONSON: As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, as the Department of Health and Wellness we certainly wish to comply with the requirements of the Auditor General and proper accounting policies as they exist in this province. We will certainly be responding to the Auditor General's recommendations. After all, it is on record that we have accepted the recommendations of the Auditor General and are working with that office to provide additional accountability both through Alberta Health and Wellness and the regional health authorities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canada Health Act requires that all provinces insure medically necessary physicians' and hospital services. Regional health authorities must provide health services that are deemed essential or insured under the Canada Health Act. My questions today are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. My constituents are wondering why private MRI clinics owned and operated by independent radiologists are able to charge fees to patients which are not covered by the Alberta health care insurance plan.

MR. JONSON: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to preface the answer by indicating that the provision of expanded diagnostic services, in this case particularly MRI, magnetic resonance imaging, is a priority within our overall business plan. We have recently added in conjunction with the regional health authorities considerable capacity in terms of MRI services in, for instance, Lethbridge and Red Deer.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the direct answer to the question is that the interpretation that is taken by the federal government and by all provinces of Canada is that because the actual MRI procedure is conducted by nonphysicians, it is possible to regard this particular part of the MRI procedure, as opposed to the actual interpretation of the screen, to be an uninsured service, and therefore it is possible for it to be charged for.

So what you have in this province, yes, and in other provinces across Canada are MRI clinics in which the actual service for the running of the machine, if I could use that term, is charged for as a facility fee. It is in compliance with the rules which exist across the country. I would like to emphasize, though, Mr. Speaker, that the diagnostic assessment by the physician is paid for by the government through the Alberta medical fee-for-service pool.

MR. COUTTS: Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: what has Alberta been doing to make sure that more MRIs are available in public hospitals so that patients who need them do not have to pay?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, we have put several million dollars during the past number of years at an increasing rate into the very sophisticated, expensive diagnostic equipment, including MRIs. As I indicated, most recently an MRI clinic was established within the hospital in Lethbridge. One is installed but hasn't started up yet in Red Deer. There are plans in the works to have at some date not too much in the future an MRI service in Grande Prairie in the Mistahia region. I also understand that in addition to the ones that have been added recently in Edmonton, there is further capacity planned in Edmonton and Calgary. It is funded by Alberta Health through our capital allotments for equipment, but also we've been very fortunate in having a number of foundations contribute significantly to the capital costs as well.

MR. COUTTS: My third and final question, once more to the Minister of Health and Wellness: could the minister say if the government is taking other steps to improve waiting times for MRI exams?

MR. JONSON: I think, Mr. Speaker, that the thing I could just add is that, as I've indicated, the MRI capacity in the province has increased significantly and will, with the plans that are under way, increase significantly in the years ahead. The government overall is making a very significant contribution to improving our high-tech equipment and diagnostic ability in the health care system in this province, be it MRIs, CAT scans, or some of the other new and very, very effective equipment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the minister of health. What criteria were utilized by the government in the selection of the truth squads? The ability to read blank pages perhaps?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, that might be the member of the opposition's criteria. It's certainly not the criteria of government. We have in government many, many very capable representatives of the people of this province, and every single member of our caucus is prepared to discuss with their constituents, to provide correct information to their constituents to counter the misleading insinuations that come from across the way. I think that any member of caucus could serve on a committee which is going to be out there providing added information and communicating with Albertans and, most important, listening to their concerns and responding to them.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What policies will members of the truth squad speak from? Blank ones?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as one example – and I know I'm not supposed to, as the members across the way do, display objects. Nevertheless, I would just remind the hon. members across the way that I did file with the Assembly this afternoon a number of pieces of information which are public. They are there to inform Albertans.

Further, Mr. Speaker, our whole direction here, our priority is to make sure that information gets to Albertans in an accurate form, and when the legislation is available in this House, all members of this side of the House, the government side of the House, will certainly be communicating in a fair and accurate way with their constituents and all Albertans, including those in their constituencies.

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, where do Albertans find the truth when the truth squad's meeting schedule is blank and the minister of health and the Premier refuse to attend public debates on their own private health care policy? Where do Albertans find the truth?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, all members on the government benches of this Assembly are meeting with their constituents. Whether in coffee shops or in formal meetings, they are out there communicating with their constituents. Yes, they will certainly be putting a priority on communicating with their constituents, because their constituents, in fairness to them, should be able to get accurate information as well. Therefore, the government will be making a major effort to get that information to all Albertans.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I'll call on the first of three hon. members to participate in Members' Statements. Then we will proceed to, I believe, eight points of order, and then we will go to a Standing Order 40 submission.

Hon. members, prior to calling on the hon. Member for Calgary-East, I'm going to recognize the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations for a tabling that she advised me she wanted to do before, but in terms of all the paper I had with respect to all the purported points of order, I mislaid it.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the House. When I was answering a question earlier, I referred to a letter that the Premier had written to the Prime Minister, and in keeping with the practice of this House, I should have tabled at that time the appropriate number of copies. So I would do that at this time, and I thank you for that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Tara McDonald Murder

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with sadness that I rise today to speak about a senseless and sickening act that took place in my constituency on February 17 between 11 p.m. and midnight, when a young woman lost her life at the hands of a thief. It's hard to imagine that a human being would commit murder, rob a young woman of her life, her dreams, devastate a family, and disturb the whole community for a lousy $50.

Mr. Speaker, Tara Anne McDonald is described by her family as a gutsy, hardworking woman, and her customers thought her to be friendly and remember her as one who always wore a warm smile. She wanted to get ahead and had just been approved for a student loan. She wanted to upgrade and was going to go into a victims' assistant program, but it was she who became the victim when a punk with robbery on his mind stole her life and her dreams. The senseless murder outraged the whole community and planted fear and disgust in the minds and hearts of small business owners along the international avenue and in the community of Forest Lawn.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my constituents I strongly urge the Calgary city police to pursue every available avenue at their disposal to catch that murderer and place him behind bars. I also urge the minister of human resources to consider the possibility of amending the labour laws so that it be mandatory for at least two people to be working during night shifts and to call that amendment the Tara McDonald Amendment.

I would also like to recognize and thank the brave efforts displayed by two young men, 19-year-old Ryan Smith and 20-year-old Stephen Jelly, who tried to help and revive Tara during her final moments.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to express to Tara's family on behalf of the Assembly our deepest sorrow and condolences and assure them that our hearts and thoughts are with them during this very difficult time.

Thank you.

3:00

Friends of Medicare

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to acknowledge the Friends of Medicare, a broad-based coalition of Albertans who have joined together because of a deep belief in our public health care system. The group represents Albertans from all walks of life and from all over the province. We should all take notice when a large number of people band together to address an issue.

This grassroots uprising against the government's attack on medicare is instructive but also disturbing. A group whose stated goal is to preserve a single, comprehensive public health care system accessible to all citizens should not have to form anywhere in our country, where the benefits of medicare are obvious and where people overwhelmingly support the principle of public health care. That such a group has risen in Alberta shows just how out of touch this government has become with its citizens. It is interesting that in a province with a $4 billion surplus not enough resources can be found for public health care. Even worse, the government continues to push ahead with a privatization plan that goes against all available evidence, economic common sense, and simple logic. No wonder Albertans are banding together against their government.

I'm thankful, as all members of the opposition are, for the Friends of Medicare and look with pride on a group of Albertans who volunteer their time and resources to fight for what they believe in. The Official Opposition joins them in their fight to preserve medicare. This government will only privatize health care against the wishes of its own people, and if that occurs, Mr. Speaker, it will be a sad day not only for Alberta and Canada but for democracy.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

High River District Health Care Foundation

MR. TANNAS: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it's been said that great opportunities to help others seldom come but that small ones surround us all daily. The High River District Health Care Foundation enables people in the communities of Okotoks, High River, Nanton, Cayley, Longview, and Blackie to translate individual actions into great opportunities to help. I wish to share with you one set of opportunities to help that this foundation facilitated in the past year.

Early in 1999 Dr. Karin Verstraten, a Calgary ophthalmologist who had been consulting at the High River hospital for some years, approached the foundation with a proposal to establish a cataract clinic at the hospital. The foundation gave the proposal serious consideration and agreed to take on the task of raising the $80,000 needed for equipment. The call went out to the communities served by the High River hospital, and at the foundation's annual spring fund-raising banquet $25,000 was raised in one night. The area's Lions clubs raised 16 and a half thousand dollars locally, and they also obtained support from Lions International to bring their total to over $40,000. In only a few months, Mr. Speaker, the communities served by this hospital raised all the money, and the equipment was soon acquired and installed.

The first three patients had their cataracts removed in August of 1999, with postoperative care being given at the High River hospital as well. Mr. Speaker, the community takes ownership and pride in its hospital and demonstrates it through its collective generosity. It has provided a great opportunity to serve. The High River hospital currently has 29 acute care beds and 73 long-term care beds.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members, this is just one story of how a community of communities didn't just wait for their boat to come in but rowed out to meet it. Congratulations to the foundation, to the Lions clubs, to the Headwaters regional health authority, to the High River hospital, and a special congratulations to the communities who care about their hospital and do something about it. Well done.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, including the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, we now have to deal with what appears to be seven points of order. Recently I sent a memo to all Members of the Legislative Assembly advising that I would expect that when raising a point of order, the proper citations would be provided.

So, hon. Government House Leader, please proceed with your point of order number 1.

Point of Order Preambles

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I raised nine points of order today, and I believe that the Member for Edmonton-Glenora raised one, which would make 10. That's probably more points of order than I raised during the whole last session.

The first one, under Beauchesne 409 and 410, relates to the length of preambles, and perhaps with your concurrence I could relate that the seventh point of order also relates to the same question. It's important to raise these points of order on this first day of the session. You did send out a note to all members with respect to decorum in the House. You did indicate that we should pay particular attention to the rules of the House.

In my submission the Leader of the Opposition in all of her four questions, her three questions that she is accorded as Leader of the Official Opposition and then one question which she managed to get your eye for after that, thereby depriving other members of the House of the opportunity to raise questions – her first question was in the order of a speech. I didn't time it, but she certainly took longer than the one sentence which is referred to in Beauchesne 409(2), which reads:

The question must be brief. A preamble need not exceed one carefully drawn sentence. A long preamble on a long question takes an unfair share of time and provokes the same sort of reply. A supplementary question should [require] no preamble.

Beauchesne 409(1):

It must be a question, not an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation, nor debate.

I think if you review the Blues, anybody that was in the House today could see from the preamble to the first question that it was "an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation," and debate. It was certainly not brief. It was certainly not one sentence. It was certainly not concise.

Again, Beauchesne 410:

(7) Brevity both in questions and answers is of great importance.

(8) Preambles to questions should be brief and supplementary questions require no preambles.

I won't go on any further, Mr. Speaker, other than to ask that you admonish the Leader of the Opposition and all members of the House that preambles to questions use up time that is afforded members for the opportunity to ask questions important to their constituency. It's unfair to all members of the House, and it is inappropriate. It's a clear abuse of the rules and, quite frankly, an intended abuse of the rules. It should be stopped now.

I would make one other submission, Mr. Speaker, and that is that if that type of abuse of the rules prevails, then I would ask you to take points of order when they're raised so that one doesn't have to deal with 10 points of order in a row on the same type of question without any way of curtailing the flagrant abuse of the rules and abuse of the privileges of the members of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. Also referencing your February 11, 2000, letter setting out the authorities that would obtain during the spring session, I refer my friend across the way to clause 3(b), where the authorities that will be governing our proceedings are, firstly, Standing Orders, but secondly, "usages and precedents of the Assembly."

You, Mr. Speaker, in fact have dealt with this on February 25, 1998, at page 556 in Hansard. You said that the Leader of the Opposition would have some additional latitude. In fact, the question then was whether the leader was taking too long to ask her question. So I refer you to February 25, 1998.

More to the point, on February 17, 1999, when I raised a similar point of order against a series of questions asked by a government member, you pointed out to me, sir, that the issue was: if the issue is one of length, then the appropriate time to raise that is at the conclusion of the three questions, the original and the two supplementaries and responses. You admonished, sir, that sometimes the first question may be a little longer, that the other two may be shorter as a result.

I listened carefully. Now, I didn't have my stopwatch with me today. I left it in Calgary. My best recollection was that this took something like three and a half minutes, the entire exchange in terms of the leader's first three questions and the responses. So if in fact, then, we are using usages and precedents of the Assembly and if we rely on your instruction of February 17, 1999, at page 20 in Hansard and of February 25, then we would find that the entire exchange was within what you've indicated I think informally would be sort of the outside limit of a question-and-answer exchange.

Those are my observations on this particular point of order. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Thank you to both the Government House Leader and the Official Opposition House Leader for those comments with respect to it. Neither hon. member chose to quote from the House leaders' agreement for the 24th Legislature, dated the 30th day of April 1997, to which both have affixed their signatures. Well, the previous Opposition House Leader had affixed his signature to it, but it still has the same credibility in the eyes of the Speaker. The current Government House Leader had not affixed his signature to it, but the previous Government House Leader had affixed his signature to it, and in the eyes of the Speaker the same credibility applies.

So having one quoting from Beauchesne and the other one from previous statements, perhaps I could just quote for both House leaders what exactly they have agreed to do. Item (4) in that House leaders' agreement:

A member asking a question shall, in the discretion of the Speaker, be allowed a succinct preamble, a main question and two supplementary questions to which there shall be no preamble. Any member who, in the discretion of the Speaker, abuses the opportunity to give a preamble shall be called to order.

Now, that's what everybody agreed to.

I guess the chair has a choice: to either accept that if a House leader puts his signature to something, it has some validity or completely ignore anything that the House leaders provide to the Speaker. That's one option. As a matter of fact, in most parliaments that usually is the option. The Speaker governs the question period accordingly. Everybody comes in and sits down and then throws up their hands, and the Speaker recognizes eight or 10 or 12 at random. But we have evolved into a rather sophisticated situation here where in fact there's some consultation with House leaders and asking them to provide some guidance. One has to assume when one is in the chair that the House leaders have some credibility within their own caucuses, and if they affix their signature to a particular document, it must have some meaning.

Now, the chair also has to assume that the House leaders have some guidance that they provide to their caucuses and that in fact their caucus members even accept that guidance from time to time. You can't have it both ways. You can't quote for the chair one thing and then see the abuse the next day.

So having brought that to the attention of everyone, let's then look at the specifics of this first point of order. The specifics of this first point of order show that in terms of time approximately five minutes were used in the exchange of the three questions and the three responses, three questions by the Leader of the Official Opposition and three responses by the leader of the government. The total time frame in that was five minutes.

Secondly, in terms of the question at stake, if the note that I have in front of me from the Blues shows it correctly, there are actually seven sentences prior to the actual question. So one can say, quite frankly, that the preamble was long within the total time frame of management within the question period. We had 12 sets of questions today, which is slightly above the average, but that really is a reflection of two things. Periodically a certain member would have a short question, and periodically a certain responder would have a short answer.

Clearly, without any doubt, I really like the agreement that all three House leaders actually came to at one time, and I repeat it.

A member asking a question shall, in the discretion of the Speaker, be allowed a succinct preamble, a main question and two supplementary questions to which there shall be no preamble. Any member who, in the discretion of the Speaker, abuses the opportunity to give a preamble shall be called to order.

Now, I like that. As a matter of fact, I like that better than anything written in Beauchesne and anything written in any other order.

So could I ask all the House leaders to actually review what they had signed and perhaps have a discussion with their caucus members tomorrow? Perhaps we won't have this kind of point of order of today. But there is some merit in what was raised here, some merit in the response. Actually, the greatest merit came from the chair in reviewing the matter for the benefit of everyone.

Government House Leader, the second point of order.

Point of Order Exhibits

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A number of times throughout the last session and actually in the history of this parliament there has been reference to the use of exhibits and the inappropriateness of using exhibits. In particular, Beauchesne 501 and 502 speak to the question of using exhibits in the House. Beauchesne 501 states that "Speakers have consistently ruled that it is improper to produce exhibits of any sort in the Chamber." Beauchesne 502 also deals with the use of exhibits.

Actually a number of the points of order deal with this specific question. The Leader of the Opposition again flagrantly, I believe, and in conscious violation of the rules held up a document, about which she then purported to say: is this the document which sets out the policy; is this the blank page?

Mr. Speaker, that is a flagrant abuse of the rules, and it actually speaks to exactly why the rule is there. The rule is there so that you cannot grandstand before the cameras and show something – I mean, she could have been holding anything up – as an exhibit and say: is this what you're referring to? It's totally inappropriate. It's totally against the rules, and Beauchesne 501 rules it out of order. I would ask that you rule it out of order now and admonish members of the House not to bring exhibits into the House during question period or debate or at any other time.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I can't for the life of me imagine why the Government House Leader would be suggesting that we deprive the Premier of his one constant prop, which is a chunk of paper in one hand that he waves and refers to.

The point is this. For you to rule that a document, that a piece of paper is an exhibit within the meaning of Beauchesne 501 and 502, where they talk about "boxes of cereal," "samples of grain," "use of potatoes" – you know, political buttons and lapel pins don't constitute an exhibit. I refer you, sir, to the ruling you made on May 6, 1999, Hansard, page 1533, where you also address the question of exhibits. It seems to me that the authority is clear and logic would be equally compelling that you cannot hold – with respect, I'm suggesting that no one would be able to hold that a piece of paper, a document, particularly one that had been tabled moments before in this Assembly, would constitute an exhibit.

If you were to do that, sir, the first member of this Assembly that's going to be denuded, the first member that's not going to have something to wave around, is going to be the first minister of the province, and I don't think we'd want to deprive the Premier of that prop. I certainly wouldn't want to, because he relies on it mightily.

Thanks very much.

MR. HAVELOCK: I'll be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to remind you that at one time in the House, when the Premier was actually using a piece of paper or an exhibit, I believe you did rule that out of order previously or else asked him to table it. So I would ask that you again respect the arguments being made by my colleague.

I am, however, impressed that off the top of his head the hon. member is able to quote from May 1999, page one thousand five hundred and whatever. [interjection] I guess that's what he did all winter.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, this question about exhibits is always a rather interesting one, and Beauchesne 501 to 504 have some guidance for us. With respect to Beauchesne 501, to be reminded, it says:

Speakers have consistently ruled that it is improper to produce exhibits of any sort in the Chamber. Thus during the flag debate of 1964, the display of competing designs was prohibited. At other times boxes of cereal, detergent and milk powder have been ruled out of order.

This member has been here long enough to note that one time he was in this Assembly in fact when a member of Executive Council stood up and tabled a hamburger. The hamburger came from the cafeteria in this building. The member of Executive Council was making the strong suggestion that the food was inedible.

Beauchesne 502 says:

When a Member produced samples of grain in the House, the Speaker deprecated the practice, saying, "If we allowed Hon. Members to produce such exhibits, we would get ourselves involved in a position where perhaps all too often Hon. Members would want to table dead fish, herrings, or red herrings, damp grain or wild oats."

Beauchesne 503 says, "Members may be 'pun-ished' for the use of potatoes as exhibits."

Beauchesne 504: "Political buttons and similar lapel pins do not constitute an exhibit."

Those are basic guidelines, and we've had statements in this House as well.

Not too long ago, when there was a debate in the Canadian House of Commons, certain members had a flag, the flag of our nation, on their desks in the Canadian House of Commons. It was in a context in which one had to deal with it. There was a great big uproar. Then we had another hon. member, in this case a member of Executive Council, who came in and put a similar flag of his nation on his desk, hoping to get some attention. It was ignored, and it didn't happen again.

This thing about exhibits is really important, because in this case what we're talking about is a document that was tabled in this particular Assembly, a document that in essence came out of an office created by this Legislative Assembly. The freedom of information officer is an officer of this Assembly, created by this Assembly. I believe that the source of the document was a freedom of information request in response to a legal request under the laws of Alberta. An hon. member stood up and basically referred to a document that was obtained under legislation provided for by this Assembly, and the voted funds are paid for by this particular Assembly.

It would seem to me that there would be some authority provided to the document in question. One member may argue that that is an exhibit, but there has never been a case where documents, reports have been argued to be exhibits. On a daily basis some members will stand up with a piece of paper in their hand and purport it to be notes for them to raise in a question. Perhaps that's their prop. I don't know. It could be the legitimacy of the notes that they would use.

You know, at the highest level of all of this members would come in with nothing in front of them, and the highest degree would be that all members would be responding to questions and answers in a spontaneous way and debates would be given in a spontaneous way and all arguments would be provided in a spontaneous way. We've now evolved to the point where we've got laptop computers in front of us as assistance guides.

This chair has a great deal of difficulty knowing the veracity of a document that a member may respond and refer to. It is true that members of Executive Council oftentimes pick up documents and refer to them. It's also true that private members do the same thing. This chair has to assume that there is authenticity in a document that an hon. member is referring to at any time in this Assembly. If it were to come to pass that the document was a fabricated document, was a make-believe document, was a document that the member was suggesting had authenticity but was to be referred to later as having no authenticity, then that member would have committed a very serious breach of the ethics of this Assembly, because that member in essence would have lied to the Assembly. If that's what that member would have done, that would have been a very, very serious breach.

There is not much need to wave document, to wave prop, to wave exhibit, but it is done on a daily basis by hon. members. This chair will ask the question again, the same way he asked the question the last time. If it is the wish of this Assembly to proceed with no documents, then kindly advise the chair by way of the three House leaders at some time in the future. In the interim let's use some discretion with respect to the waving of documents and papers and make sure that they are authentic.

Third point of order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today in question period, in response to a question put by the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Premier made an allegation which I believe is offensive on several grounds. First I'll cite our own Standing Order 23(h) in terms of making an allegation against another member, and in a moment I'll refer to a couple of sections of Beauchesne.

The question put by the Leader of the Official Opposition had to do with government policy and waiting lists and costs of private surgical care, and in response quite gratuitously and unprovoked the Premier took it upon himself to lean across over his chair, gesture at this hon. member, in fact referred to me directly as the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, and make a statement, that he attributed to me, referring to the Premier as un-Canadian. Now, while the Premier may feel guilty about his patriotism, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that at no time did I say that the Premier was un-Canadian.

Now, I believe that the Premier, when I immediately reacted and said, "I did not," went on and said: yes, you did; I heard you on the radio. Mr. Speaker, now Beauchesne 409(10) makes reference to comments "made outside the House," and I believe that the Premier should be called to order on that point if no other.

Also, Beauchesne 408(2) says that "answers to questions should be as brief as possible, should deal with the matter raised, and should not provoke debate." Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think that the Leader of the Official Opposition asked the Premier whether he was Canadian or not or whether he felt that in my opinion I thought he was un-Canadian or not, so clearly the Premier also violated Beauchesne 408(2). Further, I will refer you to Beauchesne 417, which also says that "answers to questions should be as brief as possible, deal with the matter raised and should not provoke debate." Now, that's a slight retelling of the earlier point that I just made.

Now, what I did say, Mr. Speaker, just so it can be clear, is that the Premier, having been accused of being un-Canadian by some, seemed to wear that as a bit of a badge of honour. In fact, he talked about how others have called him un-Canadian and he's proud of it. He cited a couple of examples of his government's policies, and I said: that sounds to me like the Premier is a health care separatist, because he is doing something which is contrary to the will of the Canadian people, contrary to the social policy that is stated in this province, and contrary to a federal/provincial agreement to which this province is a signatory.

I'll also say that the Premier went on to aggrandize his statement by saying that he was going to reveal a little bit of upcoming legislation and how they were going to include some reference to the Canada Health Act in an upcoming bill. Well, words and deeds, Mr. Speaker. It was this Premier and his government that voted not once but twice against principles of the Canada Health Act, including an opportunity where this member, the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, actually put forward a private member's initiative to bind this government in legislation to the Canada Health Act. This government voted against it.

So I would ask you to call the Premier to order and ask him to withdraw that allegation.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, obviously that wasn't a point of order but an opportunity for the Member for Edmonton-Glenora to make a speech about a number of things. I'm not sure what the point was. If I had been in his position and had been making remarks of the nature that he agreed he made, I too would want to be getting up in the House and distancing myself from them, which is what he did very admirably. There's no point of order.

Beauchesne 409(10) indicates that "a question ought not to refer to a statement made outside the House by a Minister." Well, the Premier clearly wasn't asking a question and therefore wasn't referring in a question to anything outside the House, but what I find interesting is that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora then went on himself to refer to issues outside the House, therefore obviating his own argument.

Beauchesne 417 and brevity. I think you've dealt with the question of brevity. We raised the issue in an earlier point of order with respect to questions and answers, and I think you pointed out quite succinctly to the House that even though the preambles that the hon. Leader of the Opposition utilized in her questions were relatively long, we still managed to get 12 questions in, and that was presumably because of the brevity quite often of the answers.

THE SPEAKER: Well, as I understand this point of order, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora raised the point of order because he heard the leader of Executive Council refer to him as suggesting that he was un-Canadian. If I understand this point of order, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora was rising because he believed that the leader of the government said that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora had referred to him as un-Canadian – right? – and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora standing up and saying, "No, I did not refer to the hon. leader of the government as un-Canadian; I simply referred to him as a health care separatist," which didn't come up during the point of order. So would any other member like to participate in this particular discussion on this point of order so we have absolute clarity as to who referred to whom as un-Canadian?

Well, the chair heard both of the statements. The chair knows who referred to whom as un-Canadian on this matter, and the chair also heard publicly who referred to somebody else as a health care separatist. I don't listen to all the radio stations, so in terms of dealing with this point of order, I don't know if there was another radio station that in fact made these statements. I can only refer to the ones that I heard. The chair also knows that one has to accept the word of a member in this particular Assembly, and that's really the bottom line to this particular point of order. So in this case you get to accept everybody's word. But it only begets one point: if we focus on policies, we won't have these kinds of points of order. This is not a personal and personality business. This is a policy point of business.

As far as the other aspects with respect to the length of the questions and answers and everything else, we already covered that one. So let's try and get to the actual truth here.

Now, Government House Leader, point 4.

Point of Order

Imputing Motives

MR. HANCOCK: I will abandon a number of the other points of order because you've dealt with some of them, but I want to speak to point of order 4 because it again refers to the use by the Leader of the Official Opposition of exhibits during her questions. Again I would refer to Beauchesne 501 and 502.

With the greatest of respect to the Speaker and the comments you made earlier, there is a significant difference, in my humble submission, between a member using notes to raise a question or to make a speech, a member referring to a document and perhaps raising the document when referring to it so that people know what they're talking about, and somebody who uses an exhibit, which is under the dictionary definition: to exhibit something or to show it; to make a show of it. Which is clearly what the Leader of the Opposition was doing. In my humble opinion, it wasn't a document that she tabled that she was exhibiting during her questions but was indeed a "red herring" that she was showing the House.

MR. DICKSON: Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I thought you'd already addressed the question of documents. With respect, it seems like we're having a second kick at the cat.

I think, with all due respect, you've heard arguments in terms of the use of documents. I've offered my argument. You made your ruling, and I think it's entirely inappropriate for the Government House Leader to have at it. In law there's a principle called res judicata, that means that once the officer has made the decision, you don't come back to another judge to try and open the thing up and hope you get a more favourable ruling a couple of questions later. I'd hope you'd give that advice to the Government House Leader, that he's raised his argument once.

He has three or four other points of order. I hope he's not looking to retool his arguments and then recycle them before we get onto the regular business of the House. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The chair obviously, hon. member, has no idea what the context will be of any of these points of order, so the chair simply keeps notes. I do believe, though, that I have dealt with a similar point of order, that was raised a little earlier, with respect to the documents and the papers in front of us and did provide a statement with respect to veracity and authenticity and seriousness of the document that is being used.

Once again we'll repeat that if the hon. members would like to have the House free of documents, the hon. chair will deal with that, no difficulty whatsoever, in fact would think that would be the highest level of responsibility and responsiveness and preparedness by all. It might be quite an example to all the members of the world that follow this form of government. Oftentimes members of Her Majesty's government in Great Britain, including members of Executive Council, do sit on the front bench with nothing accompanying them, and it is a high form.

We seem to rely on that, but the bottom line is that we have to be careful in terms of what we use in front of us and how we use it so that it does not denigrate either the questioner or the responder with respect to that matter.

I do believe, according to my notes, hon. Government House Leader, that point 5 had to do with a statement one member made with respect to the absence of another member, and I interjected and immediately dealt with that one.

The next one. Hon. Government House Leader, I still have you on the list.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

MR. HANCOCK: I suggest that Mr. Speaker dealt with the question raised by the acting leader of the third party, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, in the preamble to his question, and I refer to Standing Orders 23(h) and (i): “makes allegations against another member,” and “imputes false or unavowed motives to another member.” In raising this point of order, I know the response that I’m going to get, but I want to raise the point of order in any case because it’s important. In the preamble to the question the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona made some very serious, unfounded, and inappropriate allegations about the motives of the government.

We’ve heard from you previously with respect to the question of 23(h) and (i) referring to motives of an individual member, but in this case in the way that the question was framed, improperly imputing the motives of the members of the government, I believe the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona went too far in suggesting inappropriate and improper motives of all members and impugned the integrity of all members of this side of the House in indicating that there was anything in terms of the motivation of members of this House and members of this government with respect to HRG or any private facility and any particular profit making or lack of profit making in that regard.

I would ask you to admonish the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that that is going too far, that that besmirches the character and reputation of all members of this House when those types of statements are made.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect, I would like to suggest that there is no point of order here. I certainly did not intend to and I think in my question didn’t impugn the character either of the leader of the government caucus or intend to attribute motives to any other member of this House.

The Premier in late ’99 launched a campaign publicly to support proposed legislation that would allow regional health authorities to contract with private, for-profit providers for surgical services requiring overnight stays, effectively creating private, for-profit hospitals in the public health care system. So my questions were directed to the Premier in terms of the consequences of the proposal that will lead to the preparation of a bill that will come before this House, certainly, Mr. Speaker, any questions that I raised about the possible ramifications, if this bill passes, for how it may affect HRG and its relations with the public health care system, something that’s clearly a matter of debate in this province.

All of us are trying to grapple with: what are the real implications of the proposal that the Premier has brought before us and the proposed legislation that he continues to repeat is going to be brought before this House very soon? My constituents are asking these questions. Albertans in general are asking these questions.

The intent of my asking these questions today was to draw attention to how this proposed legislation, if passed, will impact on the operations of and the relations between HRG and the regional health authorities. Officials of the Calgary regional health authority have publicly stated that they would encourage the development of such relationships between private, for-profit surgical facilities with overnight stay authorizations, which means that these for-profit hospitals will be authorized to deal with regional health authorities, starting with the Calgary health authority.

So, Mr. Speaker, I submit to you respectfully that there is no point of order here in the questions that I raised today. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I think it’s really important that again we just remind ourselves that personal comments don’t raise the level of what we’re doing in here. Let’s just stick to the facts.

Number two. The purpose of question period – and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona used this on several occasions. He used the word “debate.” That is not what question period is. Question period is not a debating environment. It offers an hon. member the opportunity to raise a question of urgency with respect to the government. We’re not here to debate. Now, having said that, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is not the only one to whom these words are directed. Certainly there are enough argumentative words. Because of the sensitivities of all of us, we may in a particular circumstance believe that a word may cause a response of a nature and a degree that we don’t really want.

So let’s deal with policy, policy, policy, policy. Ignore personality, personality, personality, personality. Brevity, succinctness, fewer preambles, shorter answers, no props and, wow, we can move on.

I think we’re up to number 7 now; are we, Government House Leader?

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of your last admonition about no props, brevity, succinct questions, no preambles, and keeping the personalities out of it and dealing with the policy issues, I think I’ll withdraw the remaining points of order as they dealt with lengthy preambles and inappropriate use of exhibits, being those documents which are inappropriately exhibited rather than utilized as documents.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, what I was giving out was a plea for co-operation from hon. members to deal with and apply to this. Now, we’ll see what happens tomorrow. We all know well that 10 minutes into it we will all have forgotten what we have done today, but if we’re reminded very often, things might just get to where we have to be.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on a Standing Order 40 application.

Private Hospitals

Dr. Pannu:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly, recognizing that the public health care system is the most cost-effective way to deliver quality health services, urges the government to ban private, for-profit hospitals in Alberta and provide the necessary funding to maintain the integrity of the public, universal health care system.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will speak to the urgency and the pressing necessity of this motion. In doing that, I must of course refer to some of the reasons, which may touch on the substance, but I'll try to limit my comments as much as I can to the two issues involved here.

This member in the House was denied the opportunity to change sponsorship of a private member's bill, Bill 201, which stood in the name of the former leader of the NDP in this House. The private member in whose name the bill stood resigned eight or so days after the deadline for changing sponsorships had passed. I made a request to you, and you, given the rules of the House, indicated to me that you had no powers to change the situation, that you could not change that sponsorship to my name. That was quite fine, Mr. Speaker.

Then following that, I requested from the two House leaders, my counterparts, the Government House Leader and the Official Opposition House Leader, their agreement to allow my name to replace the name of the sponsor of Bill 201 as it stood at the time. That agreement, or that consent, was also in practice denied. I haven't heard in writing. I wrote letters to both the Government House Leader and the Official Opposition House Leader last week. I have yet to receive a written reply from either of them. I could understand the Government House Leader denying it, but I am somewhat puzzled why I got the same response from the Liberal Party House leader, Mr. Speaker. It is because this House has been, in a sense, denied the opportunity to debate this bill, Bill 201, the Medicare Enhancement Act, that I rise here today to request that this House agree that the matter of banning private, for-profit hospitals be debated in this Assembly at this very moment.

It is an extremely urgent matter. Albertans are extremely concerned about this issue, Mr. Speaker. They are writing to me in the hundreds and hundreds, and by way of their letters, e-mails, phone calls they're calling on the members of this House to debate the issue here and now rather than depending on the so-called truth squads to relay the information.

So, Mr. Speaker, I conclude . . .

THE SPEAKER: Please, hon. member, urgency to the point.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, at noon today there was a citizens' vigil outside on the steps of the Legislature. Both I and the Leader of the Official Opposition addressed these citizens, who had gathered there on their own. They're not members of any organization. They came here spontaneously, again, to call on this House, all of us, by their presence outside the Legislature this noon to debate this matter in this House today, because today would have been the day that Bill 201 would have come up for debate. Albertans would have been informed. They would have heard the truth from every side as to whether or not banning private, for-profit hospitals is a good thing, and if you fail to do that, whether or not that will threaten the future of public health care in this province.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I conclude and hope other members of the House will want to speak on this matter.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, under Standing Order 40 there must be unanimous consent of the Legislative Assembly to debate this matter and waive the other routine of the afternoon.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 38(1) regarding notice to accommodate consideration of Motion other than Government Motion 501.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Service Learning Program for High School Students

501. Mrs. Gordon moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to incorporate as part of the high school curriculum a service learning program encouraging students to become involved in activities that promote and demonstrate good citizenship, community service, and personal responsibility.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Assembly. Over the last couple of weeks this motion, being the first motion that the entire Assembly will debate this session, has garnered a great deal of media attention, thereby generating a great deal of public reaction. I have welcomed these many and varied interviews as they have provided me with the opportunity to discuss at length examples, background, overall purpose, strengths, and yes, even weaknesses in relation to what is now before you under my signature as Motion 501. I have particularly enjoyed guesting on four lively talk radio programs, indeed an excellent medium, not only one that provides good exposure but an effective means to gauge public opinion. As such, I am pleased today, Mr. Speaker, that I can report to you and the Assembly that more callers favoured the concepts involved in Motion 501 than not.

You ask: what is it, hon. member, that you are seeking? I am asking for your support so that together we can urge the government, namely the Minister of Learning and his ministry, to incorporate as part of the high school curriculum a service learning program that encourages students to become involved in activities that promote and demonstrate good citizenship, community service, and personal responsibility.

My purpose relative to the community involvement requirement component is quite simply to encourage students to develop awareness and understanding of civic responsibility and of the role they can play and the contributions they can make in supporting and strengthening their own communities. Although this requirement will benefit communities, my primary purpose and our focus should be on the contribution made to the student's own development.

Service learning, a widely agreed upon definition by educators across the United States and likewise used today in many Canadian jurisdictions, is learning that utilizes a partnership-type approach whereby service projects are co-ordinated in collaboration with the student, school, and community.

In order for this initiative to be successful, I think a number of factors need to be contemplated. One, I am suggesting that a service learning program be established in secondary schools in the form of a curriculum option for credit, similar in nature to drama, industrial art, and other optional courses available to the student. For those seeking continuity, these courses should well be considered for inclusion as an option in all three grades: 10, 11, and 12. From a philosophical perspective, an oxymoron if you will, the program if made mandatory would defeat the purpose of encouraging youth to volunteer or donate their time and energy to the betterment of their community.

Two, community involvement activity should be allowed to take place in a variety of settings: businesses, not-for-profit organizations and agencies, and public-sector institutions, including, of course, hospitals, nursing homes, and senior citizens' lodges. Students themselves should be allowed to choose and make a choice regarding the community activity they wish to be involved in. Flexibility is key.

Three, as much as possible structured times should be provided during the school week for this activity, and follow-up reporting should take place as well. It is important that the young person think, talk, and write about what he or she did and saw during the actual service activity. Research has shown that reflection has some positive impact on the attitudes of participants concerning service learning. The best practice occurs when the participants have the opportunity to reflect both privately and publicly using many forms of communication.

As well, recognizing service efforts is very important in establishing a good service ethic amongst our young people. While reflection allows youth to show how they value their own efforts, celebration and recognition go a long way in showing them how others value their worthwhile work.

Some examples of some similar programs in other jurisdictions. Let's start right here in Edmonton. One of the requirements of the international baccalaureate middle years program at the Victoria School of Performing and Visual Arts for students enrolled in grades 6 to 9 is the compulsory requirement to complete a community service project or projects of their choosing. This is an in-house, individual school policy. Although there is a required time commitment at each grade level for completion of hours, the intent of the service is not simply to complete a prescribed quota as to time. This school recognizes that each of their students is unique and as such each has a unique situation. Thus, there is considerable flexibility allowed in expectations as to how, when best, and where this community service can be carried out.

Some of the volunteer placements partnered with this school include the Good Samaritan Society, the SPCA, St. John Ambulance, the Canadian Red Cross Society, the Provincial Museum of Alberta, the Bissell Centre, the Cross Cancer Institute, the YWCA of Edmonton, the Winnifred Stewart association, McCauley Senior Citizen's Lodge, and I could go on and on. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, a good cross section of solid, not-for-profit organizations and agencies willing and able to partner with Victoria school.

What are the students' views regarding the Victoria school service learning program? "I've learned that community service is a good way to prepare ourselves for our actual life," said one 13 year old. "It's kind of fun to do, and it seems like a real accomplishment once you get it done," said an 11 year old. "It gives you more of a sense of what you want to do. I want to be a lawyer, so I would try to do my community service accordingly," said a 12 year old.

Here is what one of the student's parents told me, and each and every one of you knows this parent, as it's Ashley Geddes, who works for the Edmonton Journal.

I am a parent of a grade 8 thirteen-year-old student at Victoria school in Edmonton who has participated for the past three years in a community service program which is a requirement of the international baccalaureate program. My son Daniel's experience with the community service activities has been extremely positive, and I highly recommend making the opportunity available to other students and families. Daniel has helped the SPCA by walking animals, picked up litter in the river valley, and provided assistance at a pre-school centre as part of the program. The first two years 30 hours of community service were required over the course of the year. That dropped to 22 hours this year with a heavier homework schedule. The community service program at Daniel's school is part of a holistic, big-picture approach to learning that provides a broader focus than just classroom activities. It allows students to develop work and leadership skills and to feel pride and connection with their community. I think the key to a successful program is to allow considerable flexibility, both in the type of activities that can be selected and in the number of work hours required.

In 1993 Maryland became the first state in the U.S. that required all public students to engage in service learning activities as a prerequisite for high school graduation. In Maryland schools students must complete 75 hours of student service that includes preparation, action, and reflection components, and at the discretion of the local school system that may begin during the middle years. In Maryland they have a locally devised program in student service that must be approved by the state superintendent of schools. Thus, all 24 school districts in Maryland have this program but have developed a program that's unique to their own needs, both academic and community needs. The graduation class of 1997 was the first impacted by the state of Maryland's mandate: 45,532 students, or 99.9 percent, graduated with their service learning requirement fulfilled. Only 49 students out of the total failed to graduate solely due to the student's failure to meet or fulfill the service learning graduation requirement.

In Canada Ontario has incorporated this program, and 40 hours of community service are required in order to graduate, in order to receive a diploma. This work in Ontario must be done outside of school hours, and a reporting process is in place. The province of Manitoba right now, just as I hope we will be, is looking at incorporating service learning, or community service, as an option available in their high school curriculum.

Before I close, I would like to read the following into Hansard. This particular testimonial was given to me by a parent, and the second one I will read is from a retired schoolteacher.

As a mother of two teenagers, I think that Mrs. Gordon's motion to introduce service learning into the high school curriculum is a positive step for both the student and the community. I think students involved will gain a sense of accomplishment and personal satisfaction – increasing their self esteem by doing something positive for others. I feel students will have greater exposure in seeking employment after graduation by volunteering in the community. I do believe that parents have a responsibility to [always] be an example to their children [and particularly as it relates] to community involvement and leadership, but unfortunately it is not always the case and sometimes it is not always possible.

A retired teacher wrote that the motion is an excellent idea because it will provide an opportunity for students to interact with others in the community. Sometimes we feel that teenagers are isolated within their own peer group, and this would give them a chance to make a difference, have an impact in their community, and feel valued. It would provide them with an opportunity to develop behaviors and attitudes that will [hopefully] continue through adulthood.

Although my area, the constituency of Lacombe-Stettler, and indeed all Alberta itself is known for its volunteer efforts and its volunteer component, there is always a definite need for more. Mr. Speaker, every community service club, organization, or agency will tell you that they need more help and will always welcome and appreciate it. This program could effectively fill in some of those gaps. Making it an option for students is the only way to proceed. Mandatory could only result in a half-hearted approach or effort. By making it an option, no one is forcing students to take part. Those participating will want to be there and will most certainly want to see results for themselves and their communities. This, then, will be a wholehearted approach.

These efforts in my estimation will prove very valuable to students. They will learn a great deal about themselves, about aspects of life, things necessary for young people that age, young people on the very verge of stepping out on their own, creating their own lives in their own communities, communities that they have been part and parcel of. Service learning will provide life experiences that schools alone may not be able to provide.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, our children are our greatest asset and Alberta's future. I would ask the support of all members of the Assembly in the passing of this motion.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak in support of Motion 501, as presented by the Member for Lacombe-Stettler. I have to admit that that support doesn't come without a number of questions being raised, and I would appreciate, hopefully sometime in the debate on the motion, some clarification.

One of the first problems that I think the motion presents as it's worded is a conceptual problem. That's when you take and put the notion of good citizenship, the notion of community service, and the notion of personal responsibility into one motion. I think traditionally in our province they have been treated, at least in the school systems, quite differently, so I think there needs to be some clarification. As the member spoke, she spoke about a service ethic and community involvement programs. I think we need to be clear – and I think the member added some clarity – on exactly what it is we're voting for.

Usually the context of a motion like this comes out of some particular circumstance, and I'm not sure I'm clear from the member what that circumstance was. Was it a community event? Was it some criticism of the present social studies program? That's often the case: it's the criticism of a program like the social studies program that results in this kind of a motion. Was it the result of voter turnout in a particular election? I think we have an opportunity here to learn from the mover exactly what prompted this motion to be before us. If it's put forward as a criticism of schools, which it often is, I think that if we look back historically, the attempts to promote and commit to civic education in schools has always been difficult.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

If you look, for instance, in this province at the current focus on schools, there's great attention being given to literacy, there's great attention being given to mathematics programs, and there is great attention being given to science programs. Civic education or citizenship education, whatever we want to call it, and community service programs are in pretty stiff competition, particularly when schools find themselves being rated in the local media based on students' performance on achievement and diploma exams. So the civic education, the citizenship education, has traditionally found itself – although people will say that they support it – always taking a backseat to other school programs, in particular programs that are labeled as being the basics.

I would really like to know where the motion is rooted. I think the member as she spoke has a particular concept or notion of civic education that she would have the province adopt, and I'm not sure it's a notion that is shared by all. There are some, for instance, that will argue that there's a wide range. Being a good citizen just means that you vote, and that's beginning and end of it. At the other end of that spectrum I think is where the member has placed herself. She believes that there has to be some active participation on behalf of the learner.

I was reminded, when the member made her comments, of a social studies program that we had in this province at the beginning of the '70s. The elementary program at that time I think was called experiences in decision-making, and the senior high school program was called responding to change. The goal of that program was to actively involve students in community affairs and making decisions, and part of that was an emphasis on values and value clarification. Those programs were not received wholeheartedly by the community, to put it mildly.

One of the things that happened was that a number of the projects put youngsters at odds with community values. I recall one group of youngsters participating in a survey of landfill projects in their community and community members being quite adamant that this wasn't the purview of schools, to send youngsters out on projects like that. The program was eventually watered down and phased out. So I think it's important that before we send out youngsters or involve youngsters in projects, the dimensions of those projects are understood by everyone.

I looked in preparation for this afternoon at the advice that's given to social studies teachers in a publication called CIVITAS. It's a publication by the National Council for the Social Studies, and if I could just quote the advice they give teachers.

It is not the proper role of the schools to indoctrinate students to participate but rather to develop competence and a democratic orientation that increase the likelihood of effective participation and self-government.

Further on:

Students should be introduced to a wide range of forms of participation and given experience in their use. But, the student's decision to participate in any given activity with any particular frequency must be a matter of individual choice.

I think the member addressed the problem, indicating that the courses would be optional, that students would have the choice of enrolling in the course, but of course once in the course, that option of being involved in a particular project could be lost. So I think the conception of citizenship that the member has put forward needs to be carefully examined before we go so far as to incorporate it into school programs.

As the member indicated, there are a number of opportunities now to do what this motion intends, and I mentioned the social studies program. There are numerous opportunities within that program for the kind of activity that the member has outlined, and I was pleased that she made mention of the international baccalaureate program. I had the privilege of being on the school board in Edmonton when that program was introduced and of having seen the Pearson College of the Pacific students in action, where the service program is a huge part of the focus. The students out there when I visited stopped studying at 2 o'clock every day and then spent the rest of the day in community service. They're noted for the program they have in terms of channel safety, rescuing boats in distress. They also had a huge project in Victoria, where they were helping handicapped children. So it is a program that has a huge opportunity for community service. However, I think its transfer to urban schools has not maintained that same focus, and I say that having just spoken to a number of high school students about the service component of the international baccalaureate program they're involved in.

The question has to be raised: do we need to put in courses, or can we take and modify and make stronger the opportunities that already are available in the curriculum as it now stands? The pressure on schools and on school curricula I think are really very intense. I had the privilege to see a list of courses that has been requested by various groups across the province, courses that the advocates proposed be introduced to schools, and the last time I saw that list, there were over 40 proposals for schools to take on new obligations and new courses. I think we have to be careful that we take advantage of the opportunities that already exist for this kind of information to be placed in our schools.

I'm not sure that there's much more I want to say, Mr. Speaker. I do support it, and I've raised some questions and some queries. I think we have to proceed carefully before we adopt this in schools, and I know that would be the case should this motion be passed, that there would be some pretty careful consideration in terms of how it was incorporated in our schools and in school programs.

I applaud the Member for Lacombe-Stettler for bringing it forward. As an old social studies teacher I couldn't be happier to see goals that are compatible with the goals of the social studies programs in the province being emphasized and gaining the kind of attention that she's been able to bring to this.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this afternoon to also offer my general support for Motion 501, sponsored by my colleague from Lacombe-Stettler. This motion urges the government to incorporate service learning as an optional course in Alberta's high school curriculum to encourage students to become involved in service learning projects and activities within their communities.

As a former teacher and administrator it is my view that the concept of service learning as proposed by this motion could be of great value to our students and communities. I, too, offer some cautions, as did the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. I certainly would not be in favour of any type of watered-down curriculum if this is what is meant by this motion. However, I see great opportunities to actually enhance the curriculum, and that's why I would be supportive.

Service learning in schools is not a new concept. A number of American communities and youth have benefited from the existence of service learning curriculums in their schools. This is certainly evidenced by the popularity of these programs. In fact, according to 1999 U.S. Department of Education statistics 57 percent of American students in grades 6 through 12 participated in some form of service learning.

Mr. Speaker, similar programs in a number of Canadian provinces are planned or are already in place at local levels. For example, as the Member for Lacombe-Stettler mentioned, Manitoba is in the process of establishing provincial guidelines that would introduce a service learning option for credit that would entrench service learning courses that are currently being offered and approved at the local level. In Saskatchewan life transitions 20 and 30 are optional courses which have an action component project for credit. These independent learning projects are school based and allow elements of service learning to be part of the action component.

In the province of Ontario the education curriculum goes a step further than that which is proposed in Motion 501 by requiring students to participate in service learning, designated as community involvement activities, in order to be eligible for high school graduation. The primary objectives of Ontario's program are similar to those proposed in Motion 501 in that both serve to instill young people with an awareness and understanding of their responsibilities and expectations as members of the community by making a difference through meaningful interaction and contribution. Mr. Speaker, Ontario's program involves a co-operative effort between school boards, principals, parents, students, and community organizations and receives no specified targeted funding.

I believe that the partnership opportunities involving the co-operative planning and programming between Ontario schools and communities also exists here in Alberta. The opportunity to combine citizenship and leadership learning through Alberta schools and partner those initiatives with that of community programs such as 4-H, the Rotary exchange program, recreation and arts, cadets, and other youth programs would serve to strengthen Alberta schools, community programs, and the community itself. While encouraging young people to actively choose to participate in community learning opportunities, the benefit of receiving credit for their efforts would elevate expectations of involvement and also heighten the value of the service.

Mr. Speaker, there is one notable and significant difference between the programs which I have mentioned and that which is proposed in Motion 501. The motion before us recommends that service learning be introduced as an optional course rather than as a mandatory requirement, as has already been mentioned. In view of the many curriculum demands, especially in terms of the core curriculum and the diversity of interests and talents of Alberta students, I agree with the motion's intent, that service learning courses be introduced on an optional basis.

This motion offers the opportunity to bridge a gap between curricular and extracurricular learning while providing for unified objectives. For example, we need better qualified coaching in our men's and women's community hockey programs. Through a service learning program a high school student interested in learning the art of coaching could co-ordinate practical aspects of learning by working with a minor hockey coach and team with theoretical aspects through a high school physical education course. In this way the learning experience in the physical education course could be enhanced, as with the learning experience in working with a minor hockey team. In this situation additional credits perhaps could be awarded. Through such co-operative ventures students with an interest and inclination would be able to enhance their education by choosing to perform service learning.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Motion 501 could fill a niche in our high school curriculum and perhaps complement other electives that currently exist, such as work experience, career internship programs, or special projects. Work experience, for example, is an optional course available through grades 10 to 12 which provides experiential learning activities under the co-operative supervision of both the teacher and employer. The student's personal development, career planning, and employability skills are enhanced through work experience participation. Work experience courses are components of an off-campus education program which provides students with the opportunity to apply themselves in a workplace setting in order to discover their career interests and aptitudes through work-related activities. Service learning courses could work in much the same way but with a different focus.

Career technology internship programs are another part of the present high school curriculum providing yet a different focus than work experience by entering students into the registered apprenticeship program. The focus of these courses is on preparing students for entry into trade, technology, and service careers through apprenticeship learning pathways.

Finally, high school students presently have the option of obtaining credits for an approved special project which is designed to recognize work undertaken by students on an individual or small group basis which satisfies two major conditions: firstly, that the students become involved in the selection, planning, and organization of their own program, and secondly, that the students pursue activities in which they have considerable interest or ability but which are not within the scope of the regular curriculum or the programs being offered in the school. This option provides students with the opportunity to supplement or enhance their education in areas in which they have considerable interest or aptitude.

So, as you can see, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta high school curriculum already addresses the value of real-life education that supplements the traditional curriculum with experiential learning. These existing programs alone do not specifically or completely meet the intentions and objectives of service learning. A service learning program will supplement and enhance existing programs, incorporating learning components outside the classroom. By making classroom learning more relevant and meaningful, by capitalizing on practical learning experiences in unique ways, students could choose an innovative approach that supplements textbooks and lectures. For example, in my own constituency the Big Valley Jamboree offers great marketing and promotional experience in a major entertainment event for students that may choose to be involved, or the Viking Cup international hockey tournament offers a unique opportunity for students interested in international relations and protocols. Surely such experiences could enhance learning experiences in such courses as social studies, music, and other courses. Furthermore, leadership and good citizenship skills acquired in the process would be of lasting benefit to the community.

Today's classroom extends well beyond its four walls. The greater community offers so many valuable learning experiences. Motion 501 encourages educators and students to find another avenue to expand the classroom, to tap into nearly limitless learning resources. In doing so, students would be encouraged to explore new horizons that would result in a more well-rounded student and a better community. By encouraging students, schools, and communities to work together as partners as Motion 501 does, Alberta students would have the opportunity to begin finding this balance early in their lives and learn how to maintain it throughout adulthood.

Mr. Speaker, service learning is about instilling a connection to the community and a recognition of the impact that individuals can make in bettering their communities and themselves. It's about encouraging and empowering students to learn positive values such as leadership, citizenship, and personal responsibility.

In thinking about the goals of service learning in schools, I noticed a similarity to the goals of Alberta's 4-H clubs. By combining the two, opportunities could be further extended to students to explore better ways of co-ordinating the leadership development of 4-H with academic courses in the school. By the way, I was in the 4-H club once, and I know what great programs they do have.

Another example, which my niece experienced, was her involvement with an organization called Up with People. Up with People offers talented youth the opportunity to entertain in the performing arts throughout the world for a period of a whole year. During that time, in addition to the group's performances, participants must complete a number of hours of community service in each city they visit while learning aspects related to the entertainment industry, making for an obvious service learning partnership with performing arts courses found in the education curriculum.

These examples illustrate the potential merit of service learning when curriculum and extracurricular opportunities meet. The inclusion of learning to do by doing raises classroom learning objectives to new heights. The student and the community are the beneficiaries. To me that's what service learning should be all about.

It is important, Mr. Speaker, that the learning opportunities which are included as part of a service learning program be carefully selected. Students should not be involved in activities that are of no real educational value to the community and especially the students themselves, nor should service learning be a substitute for paid employment. Service learning activities should be approved by the school in conjunction with the community stakeholders involved with the project, with the school ultimately deciding whether the project is substantial enough to assign the student credit upon its completion.

There should be clear guidelines established that qualify what is acceptable service learning activity relative to the merits of the student's proposal and its impact on the community and the student. It is then through the result of the student's participation that benefits are realized by community organizations and the community as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of discussion throughout North America about a graduation requirement for service learning rather than offering it as an optional program. It is clearly evident that what advocates of service requirements are trying to say is that service learning is rooted deeply in the mission of education and that it has the capacity to improve the well-being of our community and therefore our society. It seems to me that service learning is a better learning tool when it is available as an option for students who wish to explore and contribute to human interest causes beyond the classroom and not as a mandatory requirement compelling students to perform a requisite number of community service hours in order to graduate.

The inclusion of service learning in the high school curriculum will foster and develop within our youth important values. The move would encourage positive contributions that will improve the community's quality of life. At this stage, Mr. Speaker, the important consideration is to offer an opportunity to further motivate students to give of their time, their talents and efforts for the benefit of themselves and others. As an individual who gives of their time in learning, they will receive as they give.

I would ask that all members of the Assembly support this motion. I think it's a good motion, and I think it has great potential to enhance our curriculum. Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to speak to this motion this afternoon, a motion which raises many more questions for me than it answers at this stage, and I hope that we will have the opportunity throughout the debate to get some of those questions answered.

First, I would like to address the issue of its order on the Order Paper. It's interesting to see that a motion that deals with education that will require additional funding or additional reorganization of resources in the education system in terms of writing the curriculum, monitoring the programs, and seeing those programs actually completed comes before a motion that talks about this government's commitment to the five principles of the Canada Health Act. I wonder why that is, Mr. Speaker. Here we are in a province that is seen . . .

Speaker's Ruling Private Members' Business

THE SPEAKER: Okay, hon. member. Please. This is a private member's matter, and I have to clarify that, because I think integrity in this Assembly is right. Our rules allow all members to put their names in a hat. Their names are drawn, and the private member whose name is drawn has the motion or the bill that comes up. There is a suggestion, the second time today, that these are interferences by the government.

These are matters before the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, which is independent from the government. There is a prescribed procedure for this, a well-known public procedure. These are private members' matters, and there's no manipulation of the process. Any suggestion by any member that there is means that this Speaker, this chair, and those officers associated with him are being manipulated, and that can lead to a very serious matter. A very serious matter.

Now, the time frame for this matter has now been dealt with.

Transmittal of Estimates

MR. DAY: Mr. Speaker, I'm now tabling the '99-2000 supplementary estimates, No. 2. This follows the earlier tabling of the quarterly budget report, which serves as a revised consolidated fiscal plan. That, of course, is required by section 8 of the Government Accountability Act. In this regard I have received a message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor which I now transmit to you.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order!

THE SPEAKER: The Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary estimates of certain sums for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2000, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Haley moved:

That a humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

MS HALEY: Mr. Speaker, it's truly an honour for me today to rise in the Legislative Assembly and move acceptance of the Speech from the Throne. The speech presented by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor served to open the Fourth Session of the 24th Legislature. It is particularly special in light of the fact that it is the year 2000 and this is the first Speech from the Throne of the 21st century in this Assembly. When I was asked to move the motion on acceptance of the Speech from the Throne, I tried to reflect not only on our wonderful province and where we are today but also on what has been accomplished in Alberta in the 100 years, since the last turn of the century, and where Alberta might be going in the new 21st century. It's truly an exciting time, not just to be alive and not just to be an MLA but to live in this province and in this country, to have so many opportunities and possibilities spread out before us that no one could even have imagined 100 years ago.

Just pause for a second and consider what life was like 100 years ago without a few of the things that we take so for granted today. There were no televisions, no computers, no phones, and no plastic, to name just four things that we assume everyone has always had.

When we want to go somewhere today, we get into a car, on a bus, or we get into an airplane. Distances that would have been impossible to imagine traveling just 100 years ago can now be covered in minutes and hours. Did you know, Mr. Speaker, that the reason so many of our rural towns and villages are about 13 kilometres apart is because that was the distance a horse-drawn wagon could reasonably be expected to travel in one day?

While people with really creative imaginations in the horse-drawn wagon era might have been able to imagine that one day man would land on the moon or that space shuttles would routinely go up into space or that it would be possible to map the entire globe in just a little over a week, as the space shuttle Endeavour just did this past week, who could have imagined that it would be possible to have conversations with people from all over the world simply by sitting down in your home in front of a computer screen and a keyboard and hooking into something as simple as a phone line or cable? Because they didn't exist then. Who could have imagined that you could sit in the comfort of your home and do research at a library or university thousands of miles away from where you are? I'm guessing here, Mr. Speaker, that the reality of 100 years ago meant life was just a little more pragmatic than imagining those types of things.

Important elements to life such as light and heat were not provided at the flip of a switch. Grocery stores as we know them now did not exist. The general stores that were open would have been just as likely to have sold nails or hunting knives or shotgun shells as they were to sell sacks of flour or salt or bolts of cloth, and while there were doctors and there was some health care, there were no polio shots and no penicillin.

Life was very different 100 years ago than it is today. You had to be strong to survive here and they were, from the natives who had inhabited Alberta for thousands of years to the incredibly adventuresome and resilient settlers that came here. We have been born of such people, people that were not afraid of a challenge, people that built a very strong foundation for all of us that live here today.

A very wise person once wrote that the only thing constant in life is change. The past 100 years have provided change on such a massive scale that no one 100 years ago could have begun to imagine what Alberta would be like today, yet change is occurring at an even faster rate now than ever before. Our knowledge base is doubling at an unprecedented rate, and the challenge today is not just trying to keep up with the pace of change but also trying to plan ahead and manage that change.

How can one even begin to imagine what the future holds? I do know that 100 years ago I could not have had a job like the one I do today, and my gratitude is everlasting to the suffrage movement and the Famous Five, who fought for equality and won the Persons Case. It is in fact, Mr. Speaker, such a privilege for me as a woman to be here and be able to move a Speech from the Throne, the first one in this year 2000, the beginning of a brand-new century.

I am more than a bit in awe of how far we have come. It is also a privilege for me to represent the constituents of Airdrie-Rocky View in this Assembly. To me Airdrie-Rocky View has just a little bit of everything, everything that makes Alberta great. We have from the golden wheatfields to our beautiful rolling foothills to the beautiful vista of the majestic Rocky Mountains.

Airdrie-Rocky View is where the plains meet the mountains and where urban meets rural. We have strong rural communities, farms, and intensive livestock operations as well as over 1,100 businesses that range from major manufacturing to the small businesses of the fastest growing segment of our economy today. From the growing, thriving city of Airdrie to the towns and villages like Chestermere, Crossfield, Irricana, Beiseker, Langdon, Madden, Kathryn, Keoma, Delacour, and, of course, the part of the Bears paw area that is in my riding, all of which are located inside the rural municipal district of Rocky View, this constituency wraps around much of Calgary. And I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I totally love the diversity of this riding, just as I love the diversity of our great province.

As I thought about the past century here in Alberta, I recall the Chinese proverb which I believe is just as relevant to our province today as it was a hundred years ago. The proverb goes like this: if you want one year of prosperity, grow grain; if you want 10 years of prosperity, grow trees; if you want 100 years of prosperity, grow people. Mr. Speaker, these are exactly the things that Alberta has been doing for a century now, and what an incredible job she's done.

Alberta was founded on an agriculture base which remains solid to this day. Agriculture as an industry, however, is not without some problems, Mr. Speaker, and that is why we are so hopeful that the agriculture summit in June will help all of us at least start to address the issues that are negatively impacting this proud and important industry. Our natural resource sector, from coal to the tar sands, conventional oil and gas, as well as the forestry sector, has allowed Alberta to grow and be successful, but it is the people of Alberta who have made this province so strong, so vibrant, and so prosperous. It is truly amazing to think of how much has happened in Alberta in the past 100 years.

In 1900 the province that we know of as Alberta was still part of the North-West Territories. However, exciting things were already happening here five years before Alberta became a Canadian province. In 1900 the foundation of Alberta's economy was just being laid. Several key industries were being established, many of which are still the backbone of our economy today.

Agriculture industries such as grain farming, cattle, hog, sheep, and horse ranching as well as dairy production were beginning to thrive. In addition, timber, fishing, and mining industries were growing and attracting people to Alberta. It was in the early 1900s that the drilling for oil and gas first began here. These industries are what brought people to Alberta and continue to bring people to Alberta today.

This was a time in which the spirit and values of Albertans were being shaped, and it was from these early settlers and their families that the impetus for the Speech from the Throne was created. Our forefathers laid our foundations on characteristics such as confidence, entrepreneurship, innovation, self-reliance, and a love for our natural environment. But more importantly, Mr. Speaker, they passed on to us the belief in and love of family and community, and they are in fact the very foundation of our society today.

At the turn of the 20th century the population of what is now Alberta was growing rapidly, just as it is now with the turn of this century. In the 10 years between 1891 and 1901 the population of Alberta nearly tripled, from 25,277 people to 73,022 people. Even 100 years ago people were looking to Alberta for a better life for themselves and their families. They knew then, just as we know now, that Alberta is a place where hard work and perseverance will be rewarded.

Today Alberta is Canada's fastest growing province, a testament to the quality of life and standard of living that exists here. People and businesses from across Canada and around the world are moving to Alberta to experience the Alberta advantage and to enjoy the tremendous quality of life that Alberta has to offer. The population growth that we are experiencing in Alberta is clearly evident in Airdrie-Rocky View. There is no part of that constituency that is not growing at an incredible rate. Airdrie-Rocky View has about 4,300 square kilometres. It covers an area just a little bit smaller than Prince Edward Island. Prince Edward Island has about 110,000 people, and Airdrie-Rocky View has about 40,000, and we're gaining on them. No one is really sure of the exact population today as it's hard to track; the growth rate is so high.

While growth does create some problems such as pressure on our infrastructure system, such as roads, getting our schools built fast enough, and recruiting enough doctors, it also presents many opportunities, opportunities that make it very rewarding to work with such great people as we have elected to our municipal councils and our school boards. I would say that they are inspiring and stimulating challenges, Mr. Speaker, and in fact many people would say that they are enviable challenges for any government.

It is clear to me that the Speech from the Throne recognizes that Alberta is moving in the right direction as we face the challenges of the 21st century. It tells me that we are committed to the things that Albertans want and need from their government: quality and accessible health care delivered as efficiently and effectively as possible; a first-rate education system with excellent teachers and professors that rivals results achieved anywhere in the world; exceptional services for Alberta's children under a newly created department, a department that will strive to bring all government programs that impact children together to ensure that services are co-ordinated, and children's services will continue to evolve as communities on an individual basis will be able to get the programs they need tailored to what their specific community wants; a commitment to make the best senior's program in Canada even better. I think everyone in this Assembly is aware that many seniors from across Canada are in fact moving to Alberta, in part because we have the Alberta seniors' benefit program, and it is recognized as the best in Canada.

In terms of health care Alberta is taking the lead among Canadian provinces, as Alberta does on so many issues. The government will draw on the innovative spirit of Albertans in looking for better, more efficient ways of delivering health care services, and one of the results of an aging population is mounting pressure on our health care system. We're all aware that we have an aging baby boomer generation and that over the next 15 years our seniors population will double. Our system better be able to handle the increased demand that will be placed on it, and rather than waiting till it's too late, we are being proactive in looking for ways to make health care more accessible and sustainable for future generations.

It can be very important, Mr. Speaker, to occasionally look back at the origins of a specific program, and in light of the current discussion surrounding health care, I thought it might be interesting to just mention how we got here. The Medical Care Act of 1966 proposed an arrangement in which the federal government paid 50 percent of the national per capita cost of insured services. There were four provisions in the Act of 1966, and they were as follows. One, all services rendered by medical practitioners that are medically required must be covered. Two, provinces must operate the plan on a nonprofit basis by a provincial public authority. Three, plans must provide for insured services on uniform terms and conditions to all insurable residents of a province. Four, plans must be portable.

At that time the federal government estimated that the national average of medical care costs was $34 per person. Even then provinces were concerned about being able to fund and control the expected rising costs associated with the national plan. No one could have estimated the dramatic rise in cost that has occurred in the 34 years. Mr. Speaker, we went from spending $34 per person in 1966 to about $1,600 per person today. That's a 47-fold increase in 34 years. If that rate of increase were to continue for the next 34 years – and at this point we have no reason to believe the demand will decline or that the rate of increase will miraculously slow down, stop, or reverse itself. While we can hope that that might be the case, we have to be more prudent in that if we don't want to repeat the past, we should at least be aware of it.

So at a 47-fold increase, at that historical rate of increase, Mr. Speaker, it would mean that in the year 2034 Alberta would require $75,200 for every man, woman, and child in this province to cover health care costs as health care exists today. At that rate of $75,200 per person, in constant dollars with no consideration for inflationary pressures, even at today's population of 3 million we would need $225 billion to cover health care costs for Albertans. It should give us all a reason to pause and time for the Provincial Treasurer to calculate what rate of growth our provincial economy needs to grow at to handle that type of program expenditure, let alone what rate of income tax might be necessary to pay for it.

This might be a reasonable time to ask where the federal government is on the issue of payment. Of course, the federal government has dropped from the original 50 percent commitment to something resembling 13 percent today. More and more of our total responsibility for funding health care is falling on the shoulders of all the provinces and less and less on the federal government. I do, however, appreciate the federal minister's comments of last week that the health system in its current form is not sustainable. He is correct. So it is important for all of us to find new and innovative ways to look at health care delivery, to enhance delivery of service, to shorten waiting lists for diagnostic as well as surgical services.

As well, Mr. Speaker – and this is key to everything that we do today – we must ensure that our system is sustainable not just for our seniors of today but also for the baby boomer generation as they age and that it be here for today's and tomorrow's children. Changes to the Alberta health care system will be made with an unwavering commitment to the principles of the Canada Health Act. It is so very important that the government continue to be forward-looking in its delivery of health care so that in the future Albertans will continue to have access to the excellent services that we enjoy today. Sustainability, innovation, and not being afraid to try things will become even more important than it is today, and just as our forefathers were willing to try new approaches to old and new problems, so must we.

The future of Alberta of course depends on our children, and I am delighted that government will further enhance its commitment to education. From the throne speech I see a firm commitment to fundamental issues like literacy and class size. It is also encouraging to know that there will be continuing emphasis on programs to help students learn the skills that they need to participate in the global economy.

As Albertans our fiscal strength depends on our ability to export our goods and services. The global marketplace will continue to become more important to Alberta as technology enhances our ability to move goods and services at an ever increasing rate.

It is exciting to see that our postsecondary institutions will be focusing on knowledge-based and high-tech disciplines that will prepare Albertans to participate fully in the economy of the 21st century. I am also pleased about the new $3 million academic scholarship that will benefit 3,000 second year postsecondary students and will complement the Rutherford scholarship program by helping our university and college students get through the first years of their advanced education.

The Speech from the Throne also makes it clear that the Alberta advantage will be strengthened. While our dependence on oil and gas is lessened, it is still a major factor in determining our ability to deal with the needs of Albertans. The ability to enhance our infrastructure with onetime spending is a direct result of the volatility of oil and gas markets. One year ago oil was selling for $10 per barrel, and this week it is $29. As Professor Booth of the University of Alberta pointed out, Alberta has the most volatile economy in North America.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The ability to direct spending on a onetime basis as opposed to building it into the permanent program base is a key to the future stability of our province. With the net provincial debt eliminated and the gross debt declining, Alberta is poised to lead the country in tax reform. With the implementation of a single-rate income tax on January 1, 2001, all Albertans will be paying less income tax in the years to come, and 132,000 lower income Albertans will no longer be paying any provincial tax at all. Combine this with our newly announced business tax review and you can see that our goal is to ensure that Alberta is not only on the right path for the 21st century but that our commitment to retaining the Alberta advantage stays on track.

To assist Alberta in positioning itself for the future, my government has introduced Bill 1, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Act. The original $500 million, which we are all hopeful will grow to a billion over the next five years, will do for science and engineering research what the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research has done for that community, and that is to attract the brightest and the best to do their research here.

The original $300 million invested in the Alberta foundation for medical research has now grown to over $800 million and has spun off over 2 and a half billion dollars in medical research spending in Alberta over the past 20 years. The goal for the new foundation is to create exactly the same type of situation for science and engineering research in Alberta. The new foundation will attract some of the brightest minds not just from Alberta and Canada but from around the world. It will help us attract and retain the types of businesses that will make Alberta a leader in this century, a place where all are welcome, a place that will be as successful in the 21st century as we have been in the 20th, a place that we might all have difficulty imagining but a place that I hope our founding peoples of all backgrounds would be proud to call home.

I am proud to be an Albertan, Mr. Speaker. I am proud to have this opportunity to speak in this Assembly and move this Speech from the Throne.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the Lieutenant Governor for her eloquent reading of the Speech from the Throne to open the Fourth Session of the 24th Legislature of Alberta. I would also like to congratulate the Hon. Lois Hole on her recent appointment as the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta. I am sure that she, like all of us in this Legislative Assembly, is honored to represent the needs and interests of our community throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to stand here today representing the constituents of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan and second the motion put forward by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View to accept the Speech from the Throne. With the expressed views of my constituents in mind I am pleased to support the Speech from the Throne, its positive messages and overall direction for Alberta.

The constituency of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan is a microcosm of this great province. We have the special combination of rural farming areas, the urban centre of Fort Saskatchewan, the rural acreage developments, the heavy industrial sites where the petrochemical industry is established, as well as high-tech research.

Recorded history of the district is traced back to the visit of Anthony Henday in 1755, and then in 1795 Fort Edmonton was established close by. In 1874 the North-West Mounted Police made their trek across the prairies and after wintering in Fort Edmonton set out to build their second fort on the prairies. The first was built the previous year at Fort Macleod. There are several reasons why they chose to construct their permanent fort 20 miles downstream from Fort Edmonton. One was transportation. The lower banks would allow easier railway crossings than the steep, high bank in the Fort Edmonton area. Secondly, the farming potential was much greater in the fertile land surrounding the area. Third, there was an economic advantage because the lumber could be supplied more cheaply outside of Fort Edmonton by people such as the Lamoureux brothers just across the river from where Fort Saskatchewan exists today.

Similar economic advantages exist today, as the region is a hub of economic activity. In 1952 Sherritt Gordon Mines Limited established a multimillion dollar nickel refinery in Fort Saskatchewan. Over the succeeding years the region, including the northern portion of Strathcona county, experienced steady growth. Petrochemical industries and other industries started to move into the area, attracted by the availability of land, easy transportation access, salt deposits, an abundance of water, natural gas, and electricity, a skilled and dedicated workforce, and, more recently, a supply of petrochemical feedstocks like ethane.

The origin of the name Clover Bar is an interesting story and is also rooted in economic development. One of the earliest prospectors in the area was a fellow from Missouri who had been to the Caribou and California gold rushes and then came to Fort Edmonton to start panning for gold in an area east of the fort in the year 1860. For several years he worked the sandbar located between the current Clover Bar bridge and Fort Saskatchewan. The sandbar came to be known as Clover's bar, and eventually the whole district was called Clover Bar.

As I reflect on this Speech from the Throne, I think back to why I first decided to campaign for the position of MLA for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. I believe it is important to know what the constituents want the government to do and to represent those views at the caucus and committee tables.

I am often reminded by longtime residents of the constituency about two long-serving MLAs from Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. Mr. Floyd Baker was elected in 1935 and represented the region until 1967, when he was succeeded by Dr. Walter Buck, who served until 1989. These men were re-elected many times because they knew the people and knew what was important to them. Four years ago I determined that the principles of fiscal responsibility and social commitment were very important to me and to the people of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan and stood for election committed to uphold both of those principles. I am therefore pleased that this throne speech reflects those two themes. The Speech from the Throne gives a broad outline of the government's future plans. The statements it makes and the goals it sets reflect the government's priority and, most importantly, Albertans' priorities for the future. I am very encouraged by the Speech from the Throne because I believe it will lead Alberta confidently into the 21st century.

The throne speech begins by discussing agriculture and the important role it plays in our province. Agriculture is a part of our history; it's also a part of our future. I believe it's important that our government recognizes these are challenging times for agriculture and that we develop a plan to ensure its long-term sustainability. I am pleased the government is undertaking such a broad consultation in planning programs such as Ag Summit 2000. Agriculture was a major factor in the successful establishment of the fort on the Saskatchewan River and will be crucial for the success of Fort Saskatchewan-Clover Bar and the province in the future.

Mr. Speaker, jobs and the economy were identified in the Speech from the Throne as another priority. These are issues that are of great importance to my constituency, which is an essential part of Alberta's industrial heartland. The heartland region is more than 48,000 acres in size, designated for long-term heavy and medium industrial growth. It's already home to over 30 world-class companies.

The industrial heartland is a major player in Alberta's industrial sector. Agrium is one of the top North American fertilizer producers. The Westaim corporation is a research centre for advanced industrial materials with developments in batteries, ceramics, and the electronics industry. Sherritt International produces nickel and cobalt powder and briquets at its refinery. Dow Chemical houses numerous world-scale facilities within their Fort Saskatchewan site. The area is also part of an extensive pipeline corridor.

There are many reasons why Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan is home to so many world-class companies. For some of these companies it was the abundant natural resources of the area that attracted them. For others it was Alberta's economic strategy, especially our commitment to fiscal responsibility and a competitive tax regime. I'm pleased that the Speech from the Throne indicated that this aggressive approach to fiscal responsibility and balance will not waiver and in fact will be strengthened to ensure that we can continue to lead the way in Canada and compete in the global economy.

The people of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan have told me that they want low taxes, Mr. Speaker. While our taxes are already the lowest in Canada, they can and will be lower still. The move to a new 11 percent single-rate provincial income tax by January 1 of 2001 is a move my constituents support.

Mr. Speaker, I'm thankful that while we continue to be a leader in economic issues, our government is also maintaining its strong social commitment. Priority areas like health, education, social services, and infrastructure have been targeted for reinvestment, and our government will continue to work to make our programs the best in Canada.

As a former teacher and school administrator education is of particular interest to me. I was pleased to hear of the exciting programs being committed to by this government, programs like the Alberta initiative for school improvement that will enable us to address issues like literacy and class size. I know from the schools in my constituency that our international student programs have been very successful. We are well positioned to have the best school systems in the country.

In the area of health and wellness the Speech from the Throne speaks to the fact that Alberta will continue to play a leadership role across Canada in strengthening our publicly funded health care system while looking at ways to improve its delivery to Albertans. We will renew our pledge to uphold the principles of the Canada Health Act and maintain a single-tier, publicly funded health system that is accessible to all Albertans on an equitable basis and represents the level of excellence that Albertans demand.

I'm particularly pleased with this government's focus on prevention of illness and injury. Prevention of injury is something I feel strongly about. In 1997 accidental injury was a leading cause of death in Alberta for people under the age of 44. In that same year three Albertans lost their lives to injury every day. We must do all we can to reduce these appalling numbers.

Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to serve as the chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. It was appropriate from my perspective to hear in the Speech from the Throne that our government will continue to enhance and strengthen support for Albertans with developmental disabilities.

I'd like, too, at this time to introduce and acknowledge in the members' gallery Bryan Sandilands, a member of staff for the Premier's council, and Margaret MacCabe, a council member for the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities.

Initiatives like the Human Resources and Employment minister's Employability Council will look at ways to ensure that all Albertans have the opportunity to contribute to the strength of the province. These initiatives are of particular interest to me because they are part of a disability strategy that is being worked on by the Premier's council and the members of the disability community throughout Alberta.

There are four core areas that the disability community has said need to be looked at: full citizenship and the opportunity to fully participate, disability supports to live as independently as possible, financial supports to guarantee safety and growth, and the opportunity to contribute to Alberta's growth through employment. With the help of council members like Margaret McCabe, the Premier's council will look at these areas and make a difference for the disability community in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne our Lieutenant Governor stated that one of the principles of this government is equity, equity which includes fairness and respect for diversity of culture, age, and gender. As chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities I will continue to work with persons with developmental disabilities as well as all other persons with disabilities to promote and advocate fairness and respect for diversity of ability as well.

Mr. Speaker, it's been a great honour to rise today and second the motion to accept this Speech from the Throne. I am pleased the Lieutenant Governor expressed in her speech the government's commitment to continuing the policies of social commitment and fiscal responsibility, policies I embraced from the beginning of my candidacies, policies I know my constituents support, and policies that will guide us to a successful future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the privilege to rise and address Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor and the Speech from the Throne. I think at the outset I would like to say how refreshing it was to have our Lieutenant Governor, newly appointed, one week appointed Lieutenant Governor, read the speech in the Assembly.

I have known Her Honour Lois Hole for many years, first as a purchaser of house plants and gardening supplies from her very successful and important business in the St. Albert area, but more directly I knew Lois Hole when I was first appointed minister of education. She was at the time a trustee for the St. Albert separate school district. I can tell you that her commitment that she spoke of in the Speech from the Throne, her commitment to public education in our province is really second to none. Albertans truly have an advocate for public education in our Lieutenant Governor. Her words are the words of a woman of action, a woman who believes in the continuity of legislation, and in education, a woman who has served as the chancellor of our fine University of Alberta, and a woman who I am sure will be a wonderful Lieutenant Governor representing the people of this province.

Mr. Speaker, I thought there were some very excellently written sections in the throne speech. My compliments to the writers. I thought the review and the reminder to us all of the role played by the first government of Alberta, under the very astute premiership of the hon. Alexander Rutherford, of course the first Liberal government of Alberta - I thought it was very fitting to see the Progressive Conservative government return to some of the reminders of the seriousness with which the original government of Alberta dealt with the issues that affect Albertans.

I think it's important to add to the citation that was in the throne speech a reminder of some of the things that were established in Alberta under the Rutherford government: things like public health nursing were very much a part of that early government, and that tradition continues today; the Universities Act, the establishment of the University of Alberta as a very, very prime role that the Premier saw for his contribution to Alberta; the establishment of thousands of miles of railway to link Albertans to one another. The issues of uniting us with one another and uniting us with other Canadians are certainly some of the things where I think we can look back at that first government of Alberta and realize how precious the things are that were created with that earlier government, that first government, and how important it is for us as legislators to ensure that that vision for public health care, for public education, for linkages which join Albertans right across this province, rural and urban, men and women, north and south, Edmonton and Calgary, that the work that we do as legislators strengthens that fabric of our province. Certainly that is our intention in our actions as an Official Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, I as well would like to express my thanks for the privilege that it is to represent the people of Edmonton-McClung. The constituents of Edmonton-McClung are certainly working Alberta families, families who have their children in schools, in public schools. In fact, in the constituency of Edmonton-McClung we have 13 public schools made up of nine public and four separate schools. We have one private school. Without question, the issue that is the most sustaining concern and the issue which affects directly on a day-to-day basis the people of the constituency of Edmonton-McClung - clearly, education, public education, is a main goal.

Obviously, the issue of health care is one that is vitally important, and I wanted in this first installment of my remarks this afternoon, to be resumed this evening, to take some time to look at the issues of health care and particularly to fix upon the comment that is in the Speech from the Throne, the comment saying:

Legislation will be introduced to help protect and preserve the publicly funded health system by putting Alberta's commitment to the principles of the Canada Health Act into provincial law and enabling health authorities to pursue new, innovative ways of delivering publicly funded health services.

That's a wonderful statement, Mr. Speaker, a very, very fine statement, and when the Lieutenant Governor read the statement, I thought: jeeppers, maybe these guys are going to actually get it right; they are actually going to strengthen the public health care system.

Interestingly, following the Legislature session today and the activities or lack of activities in question period, certainly a lack of answers, it was interesting to see the Premier standing before his media conference talking about how he was defending private hospitals, how he was trying to distinguish them from privately run, extended term, overnight surgical facilities and trying to draw the distinction between the two. If it weren't so important to Albertans and to where this debate is going, it would have been quite comical. Unfortunately, it was very, very disturbing.

So I thought that I would look at some of the issues that I think need to be dealt with within this paragraph in the throne speech, the issue of new and innovative ways of publicly funded health services being delivered, and speak first of all to some of the things that we on the Official Opposition will be arguing for. The first one is to stop the creeping privatization which we have seen happening in this province since this government took over in 1992.

The creeping privatization can be quantified in the following way. When the government took over in 1992, the private sector as a portion of total spending, both private and public in Alberta, was at about the 22 percent level. I've referred to this before, Mr. Speaker. We now see that it's over 31 percent, and that 50 percent increase in the growth of private-sector involvement in health care is what causes concern to all of us. So when the government talks about legislation being introduced to help protect and preserve publicly funded health care, let's hope that the government comes forth with legislation which in our view has to be accomplished with a moratorium on the existing private health care facilities in order to give time for this Legislature to create the environment and the framework for the legislation that must exist, and then we can go on and lift the moratorium if that's one of the options but with a legislative framework in place.

The problem with the government's point of view, Mr. Speaker, identified not in this throne speech but identified at the Premier's news conference less than one hour and a half ago, is that the government is trying to say that they want to protect the Canada Health Act. Those are the words. But, at the same time, they want to expand the role of private hospitals. The thing is, Mr. Speaker, that they can't have it both ways. Their own news release of today's date says: "Evidence on both sides of public vs. the private hospitals question." As a very astute reporter from our legislative press gallery said: why is the government defending private hospitals in their own news releases if it's not part of their policy? Clearly it's part of the policy of this government.

So, Mr. Speaker, let's look at what we would like to do within the creeping privatization. Let's make sure that there is, in fact, a legislative framework of a similar nature to that which exists across the country in several of the provinces: Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, British Columbia, to some extent in Quebec. That is the legislation with respect to independent health facilities. You know, interestingly, there is not one of those pieces of legislation that allows private, for-profit services to be contracted out to private facilities for surgery that is an overnight stay. Not one of them does. In fact, they have incredible controls to ensure that that kind of thing doesn't happen.

This government needs to come forward with legislation which is going to allow Albertans to evaluate and control both the quantity and the quality of services that may be able to be delivered off-site of the hospital, outpatient services, ambulatory care, call it what you will, but should not extend to private hospitals for many, many reasons, which of course we have articulated in times past and will continue to do so.

So that's the first thing, Mr. Speaker. It's to stop the creeping privatization. That is what the legislation that's needed must do, not expand it. Albertans understand that too. Albertans understand the need for that control.

So what else needs to be done, Mr. Speaker? I think the second thing that needs to be done is to renew a commitment to public health care in this province. This government has chipped away at public health care in this province. It has now coming up to three times tried to bring this legislation into the Legislature. Twice it's been shot down by Albertans, who said: that's not the way we want to go. They've had their growth summit, which affirmed the value of the public health care system. They've had their own health summit. Now they have focus groups identified in government documents which they won't even share with Albertans, and their message is: trust us, we're going to be the protectors of public health care.

Mr. Speaker, is it any wonder Albertans are suspicious of this government given its record on public health care in this province? That's what the letters are saying. You know, I had the privilege over the last five days to read the letters that have come into my office with people expressing suspicion about this government and where it intends to go on health care. Before someone on the government benches says that that's not what's being said in those letters, I would remind them that a lot of them have been written originally to MLAs on the government side of the House and copied to me, a lot of them have been written to the Premier and copied to me, and a lot of them have been written to the minister of health or the associate minister of health and copied to me. The message that is coming through is a public that is very, very suspicious of this government when it comes to health care.

Mr. Speaker, let's look at some of the things that could happen within our reaffirmation of support for a public health care system. The first thing that I think needs to happen is to find a predictable, sustainable funding framework for health care in this province. That includes the federal and the provincial governments. Providing that framework will prevent the kind of thing that the health care system has gone through in the last seven years in this province.

Recall that health care spending in this province was at the most controlled level of any province in the country. Despite the rhetoric that came out of the provincial government, this was the province from '88 to '92 that had the best cost control record of all the provinces in Canada. So then what happened, Mr. Speaker? There was a plan. There was a plan in place to protect the public health care system, a plan that had the buy-in of health providers right across this province, a fiscal plan that was about the sustained value, the predictable funding formula for the next five years. That was what was there in the plan that was there for Albertans, Mr. Speaker, and Albertans bought into it.

Then this government came along. This provincial government came along, and it cut. It went from very level sustained spending to a cut. Well, we know, Mr. Speaker, that that cut was unsustainable. That cut was unsustainable. And what are they doing now? They've jacked it right back up again, and that's unsustainable, too. What the health care system needs in this province is a sustainable, predictable funding framework, and these guys blew it, and they know it.

What's the second thing that needs to be done to affirm and confirm our commitment as citizens and as a Legislature to public health care? Well, the second thing that needs to happen, Mr. Speaker, is to involve health providers in this province in the discussion and in the development of policy affecting that system, the very people, the physicians, the nurses, who were excluded from this government's work on health care with the term that they were special interest groups. Well, you bet they're special interest groups, Mr. Speaker, and their special interest is the preservation and the enhancement and the sustainability of our public health care system.

The third thing, Mr. Speaker, that needs to happen is, yes, innovation, innovation within the public health care system. I thought it was interesting to listen to the minister of health and the Premier today talk about innovation but forget to mention that the innovation that's needed – and in fact some very good examples are being carried out – is within the public system. This government seems to equate innovation with the private sector. Well, I don't. I stand on this side of the House, as I have always stood in this Legislature, saying that I'm very, very much a proponent and supporter of the private sector. I always have been. I see the private sector as the engine of growth for our economy, but what I don't see is the need for the taxpayers to subsidize the private sector.

So, Mr. Speaker, on the one hand we have the sole member of the New Democratic Party being a very solid supporter of banning private enterprise through the private hospital framework. I accept that. I accept that as something that he believes very firmly and continually has. In contrast this government has talked about being out of the business of being in business. That is a bunch of empty rhetoric, because we're now seeing that this government wants to provide taxpayer dollar subsidy to a market for the private sector that they couldn't make a profit in otherwise, and it is absolute baloney. We on this side of the House believe in the private sector, and we believe that it can stand on its own two feet, and we will do everything we can to ensure that happens.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, because I see the hour is moving along . . . [interjections] This is just the first installment. Don't worry. There's more.

Mr. Speaker, you know, the Premier has talked about the possibility of the Official Opposition supporting the legislation which the government is about to bring in. Well, I think that possibility does exist. I actually think that possibility exists if this government brings in legislation which is going to control the growth, control the quantity, and control the quality of some off-site services. If it's documented how that's going to be done, we might support that legislation. But if this government brings in the legislation – and the thing is that we don't know, of course, what the government's bringing in because they've talked out of both sides of their mouth. On the one hand, we see the Premier at his news conference saying: no, we're not going to have private hospitals. On the other hand, of course, as we know, the rhetoric is: we are going to have private, overnight, extended stay surgical facilities, but they're not private hospitals.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize the hour, but I just want to make recognition of some of the many things that have happened in our province since the Legislature has been out, in fact many of the things that have happened in our province since this government first tried to bring in private hospital legislation and was shot down by the people of this province. First of all, the government still has not brought forward any real solid analysis on the whole issue of where they wish to go with their privatization of hospitals. You know, I know they brought in their list of eight studies today, but it's interesting to note that five of those studies are from the Fraser Institute report, the report that was dubbed empty by Dr. Bob Evans, a very noted health economist right here in this city, actually, when he spoke to a conference on health care.

Interestingly, that conference on health care was addressed in the first instance by the minister of health. The junior minister of health was there as well, as well as several other MLAs. It was very interesting to note that following the minister's presentation, there was Dr. Bob Evans' presentation, and then there was a question period. Oh, and by the way, I didn't mention that Albertans had to pay $99 to attend this conference.

Anyway, at the end of that discussion, people came to the microphones to ask the minister of health if he would be willing to answer questions. Of course, he stood at the side of the room and shook his head and said no. The junior minister didn't answer any questions; he refused to answer any questions. Lo and behold, guess who answered the questions on the part of the government? The Member for Calgary-Glenmore. The good Member for Calgary-Glenmore. As I have said, he did yeoman's service, Mr. Speaker; he was dynamite. He was trying to tread that wonderful path: how do you describe what the difference is between a hospital and a private, overnight, extended stay surgical facility?

I compliment the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. I would also say – and I said this to the individual, but I'll repeat it here on the record. You know, I've never seen an MLA have to take the heat for cabinet ministers at a conference the way this member had to take it because the ministers wouldn't respond to the questions. I think, in fact, that he should be in the cabinet. He should at least be paid for the work he's doing. Anyway, just a little aside there, Mr. Speaker.

Okay. I could do a little more, I think, before the adjournment time. So, Mr. Speaker, let's go to another interesting report with respect to health care in this province, one that, by the way, was not on the government's list of reports and studies today, and that is the report by the Consumers' Association of Canada, Alberta branch, which did an incredible job of documenting what has happened with respect to cataract surgeries in this province and which needs to be put on the record in this Legislature, which I'm going to do.

I think it's important to look at what is happening across the province with respect to cataracts, because here we have in the bell jar in the province of Alberta a home-grown example of what happens when services are privatized. Yet this government ignores the report, doesn't talk about it, doesn't take the research and perhaps analyze it, perhaps answer for Albertans as to some of the things we could do. So let's just look at that study, just in case any of the members opposite haven't read their report. What the report says is something very, very disturbing.

First of all, it looks at the city of Calgary. The city of Calgary currently is doing 100 percent of its cataract surgeries in these clinics that are away from the general hospital site. One hundred percent, Mr. Speaker. Upgraded lenses in those facilities off the hospital site cost on average $450 to $750 and above that for an individual to pay. So when the Premier stands and holds up his little health care card and says, "You can take this and go to any facility in this province and get the health services you need," uh-uh, Mr. Speaker. If you want that upgraded lens in Calgary, you pay $450 and up for it. But let's look at something else. Not only is it more expensive – that's what private health care is; it's more expensive, the thing that they deny in question period. It's more expensive. It's also less efficient. What's the measure of that? The waiting list. The waiting lists in Calgary are from 16 to 24 weeks according to the Consumers' Association of Canada. So here we have a home-grown example: longer waiting lists, more expensive.

Now, if you happen to be somebody from the city of Edmonton and you want to have a cataract done, in fact in Edmonton you'll find that 80 percent of the cataract surgeries are done in the general hospitals; only 20 percent are done in the private clinics. So let's examine the efficiency measurement, the wait lists. Well, guess what? The wait lists in Edmonton are from five to eight weeks compared to 16 to 24 weeks. Okay? What about the cost of the upgraded lens? The cost is $250 in the Edmonton hospitals. It's available for $250 in the Edmonton area. Well, isn't that an amazing thing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in deference to my good colleague from Lethbridge, let's go to Lethbridge and examine what's happening down in Lethbridge. Well, in good old Lethbridge – and maybe the member for Lethbridge-West would like to take a note of this too – guess what? According to the Consumers' Association of Canada, 100 percent of cataract surgeries are done in the public hospital, and when you want the upgraded lenses, do we know how much they cost? I'll tell you how much they cost. They're provided in the public system. No charge. You take your health care card into Lethbridge, and you get the upgraded lens from the public system.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let's examine the efficiency measure, the wait list. Guess what the wait list is in Lethbridge. Four to seven weeks, one-quarter of the wait list in Calgary, where they're privately delivered. Let's see this government take that study, analyze it, and do the job they need to do to find the evidence that it won't work.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I could go on, as you've probably guessed, and I will beg leave to adjourn debate and return this evening. Thank you.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Title: Tuesday, February 22, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/02/22

[The Speaker in the chair]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

head: Consideration of Her Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Haley moved:

That an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 22: Mrs. MacBeth]

MRS. MacBETH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had just completed talking about the issue of cataract costs in Calgary with the private-sector model that is employed there and the fact that the wait lists there are three to four times that in the public sector and the costs are less. Those are important issues which are identified by the Consumers' Association of Canada, Alberta branch, and I think they are very good issues for this government to address as it talks about some of the reports that are available. Here, of course, is a homegrown example which needs to be examined, studied, and I was frankly surprised that the minister of health stood in his place today and didn't even acknowledge the study.

Moving from that, Mr. Speaker, onto another study which has come out using the Alberta example, and that is the one from the University of Alberta, Private Profit or Public Good: The Economics and Politics of the Privatization of Health Care in Alberta, written by Kevin Taft and Gillian Steward, an excellent review, an excellent case study of Alberta, and frankly a pretty excellent review of some of the literature. In fact, I know the government put out its list of eight studies today which have been questioned, all of them, in terms of their accuracy, in terms of their relevance. Certainly data from the '70s and '50s, while it may be helpful from a historical perspective, certainly doesn't help us as we look to 2000 and beyond and how we might build our health care system. I would simply recommend that the minister look at the bibliography if nothing else in the Private Profit or Public Good document and see the level and study of documents that are available on this issue of privatization.

Let me highlight just a couple. In a 1999 review The New England Journal of Medicine said: "For decades . . . no peer-reviewed study has found that for-profit hospitals are less expensive than" not-for-profit hospitals. Secondly, in 1997 from Health Affairs magazine, a very accepted journal of health economics, in North America at least, said: "Neither the historical data nor the limited current data suggest that for-profit hospitals can use the assets more efficiently than nonprofit hospitals." Thirdly, a 1986 study from the Institute of Medicine, American National Academy of Sciences, said:

Studies of hospitals provide no evidence to support the common belief that investor-owned organizations are less costly or more efficient than are not-for-profit organizations. With one exception all available studies that have controlled for many confounding factors . . . show the opposite to be true.

Very important information and studies, Mr. Speaker, which clearly point us in the direction of enhancing and sustaining our public health care system, not falling off the wagon and going onto the private health care system.

Mr. Speaker, just to close off this whole discussion on health care, I think it would be important to talk about the issues facing health care today. It was shocking to many of us who care a lot about mental health within our province to find that the words weren't even mentioned in this throne speech, a very, very big omission. We've seen in this province in the last week an alliance come together of mental health professionals, mental health caseworkers, community advocacy groups, in fact the largest coalition ever formed on the mental health front in Alberta, called Alliance Alberta, the Alliance for Mental Illness and Mental Health. This organization presented an excellent review and some major questions in terms of this government's directions when it comes to mental health.

I think it is very fitting to quote a physician, a psychiatrist, an acting president of the Medical Staff Association and Medical Advisory Committee of Alberta Hospital Edmonton, when he writes – and this was a letter to the editor, and one that I think is important to read into the record. Mr. Speaker, he says:

On behalf of 44 physicians at the Alberta Hospital Edmonton I must applaud the . . . coverage of the poorly thought-out use of taxpayers' money in the mental-health area.

He says:

I have worked with my patients in mental hospital "back wards" for most of my career and it is time that some money was spent in providing decent, humane, safe living conditions for severely ill patients. The expenditure of $95 million in one location – the health minister's riding – is, however, obscene.

I go on.

This is another example of the poor management and judgment that has plagued what passes for mental-health reform in this province. Last year this board managed to generate a deficit of $3.8 million as well.

It's about time the mental health system healed itself. This, the third board in five years, appears to be going the sorry way of its predecessors – failing to meet the real needs of the mentally ill in Alberta.

Agencies and health care staff on the front lines are becoming tired of covering for their mistakes, and families and patients are becoming tired of the constant fight for service.

The press coverage indicates Alberta Hospital Edmonton has also been allocated some money: $55 million? If so, it's news to me.

Of course I only work here and am only a doctor. Our medical staff has recently formally indicated their lack of confidence in the board and Alberta Hospital administration because of issues such as this, so I am not surprised.

Mr. Speaker, an indictment, an indictment of mental health issues, a model that is going to return to an institutional model as opposed to building the community model in mental health which is so feverishly needed in this province.

If you look at the mental health issue, you can find a model for improving health care in this province, and that is to reinforce the community side with some institutional care absolutely but to make sure that we have the supports built into the community side, which is exactly the same issue which needs to be addressed on the acute care side for physical health as well. Let's get on with the job.

Mr. Speaker, let me go on to the issue of education. I mentioned at the outset that the people of the Edmonton-McClung constituency were very concerned, and usually top of mind was the issue of education. My constituency represents a lot of people who have kids in schools. In fact, we have a lot of schools in our constituency, as I had mentioned, and if there's one issue that they talk about even more than health care, it's the issue of education.

Many of the ideas that were identified in the throne speech on basic education such as literacy, class size, reducing reliance on fund-raising by parents and students came in fact from this Official Opposition, and we are pleased that the government has at least acknowledged in their most recent throne speech the constructive recommendations that we have put forward. However, we are somewhat skeptical about whether the government's words will actually translate into good deeds in the area of basic education. The legacy of this government's actions in education over the past seven years is in fact an abdication of leadership, a promotion of privatization – again that theme – dismissing the concerns of parents and teachers and off-loading of costs onto parents through fund-raising.

So let's look at some of the results of this government's choices in education over the past few years. These are the targets, the goals that the government has identified. The percentage of parents who believe that their children have the knowledge and skills to get a job is 46 percent, Mr. Speaker. Less than half of our parents are confident that their children can get a job. If that's not disturbing, perhaps the government's target of 55 percent is even more disturbing. You know, if the goal of education is to build good citizens, which I think it is, part of that is to have those young people prepared to join the workforce, to advance their own education, to go beyond their capabilities, and to support them in that. The target is unacceptable, and government's missing the target is even more unacceptable.

Secondly, the number of parents who believe that their children are prepared to enter postsecondary education and training is 52 percent, just over half. The government's target is 75 percent. Mr. Speaker, that's a 23 percent difference between the target and the actual, an indictment of this government's performance.

Next, the rate of high school completion within six years of entering grade 9 is 70 percent. The government is setting a target of 75 percent, but in the seven years of this government's performance that measure has been in place, and the target of 75 percent has never, ever been reached. This government talks about Alberta being the leader in education in Canada, and that's just not good enough. We in the Official Opposition believe that a first priority of any provincial government has to be the improvement of public education, and their record is not acceptable.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans know that our class sizes are amongst the highest in the country, that classrooms with 30 children are not uncommon even in the early grades of K to 3, where the education level that is deemed to be the most appropriate is 17 kids per class. Our Official Opposition class survey found that of the total of 5,012 teachers in 245 communities who responded to our survey, only 19 percent of the kindergarten classes met or bettered the recommended target of 17 or fewer students. That's not good enough for our kids. This is simply not manageable, and with the integration of students with special education needs and the vast variances between children in terms of their background and life experiences, it just isn't good enough.

Mr. Speaker, obviously fund-raising and user-fee levels are too high. That's something the government has identified. However, we would like to see a major review done of the basic funding and the per pupil grants in this province, not just a review of fund-raising. Parents are fully aware of the kind of fund-raising that's going on, but what they want to see is the cause of that fund-raising, and a review of the basic grant per student is what needs to follow. This government missed it in its throne speech.

Mr. Speaker, we need a new vision. We need a new vision for basic education in a new century, and that's why we in the Official Opposition will be proposing the establishment of an Alberta citizens' commission on the future of education in our province. It hasn't been done since the late '60s, when the Social Credit actually put together a plan called the Worth report to look at the furtherance of education. We think it's a very important idea. We'll be bringing forward a motion, and we'll look forward to support from the government benches in terms of creating that commission.

This isn't a summit. This isn't the usual take a weekend off and go lock away with cabinet ministers and do a poll and do a focus group and do all those kinds of things. This is about involving professionals in education, educators, parents, superintendents, and Albertans in looking at the future of education and in looking at the overlie of how we will look at education into the future. We think it's a very excellent suggestion and one which we will look forward to hearing the government's response to.

I would be remiss if I forgot that area of education which seems to have been lost in the shuffle, the shuffle of the Ministry of Learning, and that is the whole issue of advanced education. Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of students that go to postsecondary education from the constituency of Edmonton-McClung, as there are from constituencies right across this province. From Fort McMurray to Taber, from Manning to Brooks, right across the province we have students in postsecondary education. But it's interesting to note that while the government did build the $3 million academic scholarship program and increase student financial assistance levels, they are really rather a mere tinkering on the margins and do little to address the fundamental issues of the rising tuition load and high debt load that our students are carrying.

Between 1995-96 and 1998-99 the average student loan debt has increased from $15,518 to $17,360, an increase of 12 percent, Mr. Speaker. Tuition fee revenues as a percentage of funding for credit institutions at the postsecondary level have increased from 14.9 percent in '93-94 to 21.3 percent, a 50 percent increase. In other words, the load for the cost of postsecondary education is being shifted onto our students and away from the provincial government that used to fund it in a different way. The average tuition fee in Alberta is now over $3,100 per student, one of the highest levels in Canada, unacceptable with a government that has a $4 billion surplus. In constant '98 dollars government grants per full-time equivalent student have fallen from nearly $2,500 in '92 to less than $2,000 in '99. Meanwhile, tuitions and fees per student have increased from about $1,800 per student in '92 to $3,000 per student in '99.

We believe that it's time for this government to implement a tuition freeze policy on all postsecondary institutions rather than continuing to off-load more of the costs onto our students. If this government truly believed in education, Mr. Speaker, they'd take our suggestion.

Let me move on, then, to another group, another issue, and that is the whole issue of municipal governments. I think it's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that in the throne speech there was a brief, brief reference to municipal governments and the repeat announcement of the infrastructure dollars that came in the springtime, and those were certainly welcome dollars, dollars that are needed within the municipal infrastructure area. However, again there's no plan, and what the throne speech did not mention was the need to find a new relationship between the province and the municipalities.

You know, as we become more global, as we are able to buy anything from financial services to a pair of new running shoes on the Internet, it's important to people that the communities in which they live are the communities where they relate with their families, their neighbourhoods. Those are the areas where we need to look at a new relationship between the province and the municipalities.

You know, this government since the early '70s, when it first took office in this province, has always had the view that the municipalities were the children of the province. In fact, a former deputy Premier of that government said back in the mid-70s that the municipalities are the children of the provincial government. Well, you know what? That wasn't just a slip of the tongue. That in fact is the policy of this government, and it's very evident by the way they have treated municipalities for the last almost 30 years, as a matter of fact, since they've been in power.

Our municipalities have been subjected to a financial squeeze by the provincial government. Not only were the grants to municipalities reduced, in fact cut in half, but the province has also taken over access to a major portion of the local property tax base. Let me simply say that between '92 and '98 the general and specific purpose grants from the Alberta government to municipalities declined by 48 percent, the second-highest level of decline of any province in this country. Meanwhile, the provincial education property tax burden on residential properties in Alberta has increased by 13 percent, or over $87 million, between '95 and '99. In case they missed it, Mr. Speaker, that's a tax increase. That means that property tax payers are paying more of the provincial education tax. They're gouging property taxpayers. So let's just make sure that the truth is out there.

Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General of Alberta made the following comments on the issue of infrastructure planning:

I believe the quality of the government's capital planning initiative is critical to managing these expenditures in a way that establishes an equilibrium between legitimate program requirements and funding provided. Proper planning will make the difference between a reactive mode . . .

which I think we can argue this province is in,

. . . which merely distributes allocated funds, and a predictive mode, which anticipates and justifies funding required.

What we believe is that we need a plan. We need to look at the role of municipalities, which has increased over the last decade, a role which now sees them involved in a major way in housing issues, issues for the homeless, off-loading of the property tax base, off-loading of the load on the welfare side. All of that off-loading has to be quantified. We have to look at a new relationship with our municipalities, and that's why we'll be bringing forward a bill in this session which uses, as an example, a sharing of the revenue between the provinces and the municipal governments.

It's not the only model that could be used, Mr. Speaker, but it is an option. At least it will get the discussion going. Instead of treating our municipalities like children, we will respect and regard the maturing of those municipalities and have a corresponding relationship with the provincial government.

MRS. MacBETH: We can have a great discussion on corporate pooling actually and the way these guys muffed it, but we'll just go on. It's resulted in a tax increase, pure and simple.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I would like to give colleagues on the other side of the House some opportunity to speak to this Speech from the Throne. Let me close by saying that we in the Official Opposition are going to be fighting for Alberta's working families, the people who are going to be affected by a flat tax, which of course shifts the burden of taxation onto that middle-income group. We're going to be fighting for those small businesses, which are a major, major part of the economic engine within our province, not even mentioned in this government's throne speech. We're going to be fighting for those people who believe in and need health care and public health care and always will. Finally, we're going to be fighting for those parents who worry whether or not their kids are going to be able to afford postsecondary education because tuition and debt load just keep going up.

Mr. Speaker, we believe in supporting Alberta's working families. We believe that there are major policy decisions that are benefiting the well-to-do in this province and which are having an impact on many, many people in Alberta. We look forward to the debate on this Speech from the Throne. We look forward to the budget. We look forward to reviewing the legislative program of this government.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you. It is an honour to rise this evening in response to the Speech from the Throne marking the commencement of the Fourth Session of the 24th Legislature of Alberta. At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to tell the constituents of St. Albert how proud and honoured I am to represent them in this Assembly. I wish to thank them once again for their confidence and their endorsement, and in this new millennium I renew my commitment to do my best on their behalf.

I would also like to congratulate personally my dear friend and outstanding constituent the Hon. Lois Hole on her recent appointment as Lieutenant Governor of Alberta. I am very pleased to be able to say that the first Lieutenant Governor of this province for the 21st century is from St. Albert.

As I reflect on the Speech from the Throne, it occurs to me that one of the prevailing themes is the importance of innovation. Throughout the speech I heard a willingness on the part of this government to adjust and respond to the changes facing us in the 21st century. I see a bold new plan for the future of Alberta, a plan that recognizes that a new century holds new challenges and requires new ideas to meet those challenges.

Albertans have always been a confident, self-reliant, adaptable people. These characteristics and values have shaped this government, its principles, and now its plans for the coming century. We have recognized that the status quo is not an option, and I believe that we are a government that is willing to make effective changes that will benefit this province.

The necessity of being a society that is willing to innovate and adapt echoes throughout the throne speech. In agriculture, for example, we have recognized that these are challenging times, and we will not stand by without doing everything possible to ensure the long-term sustainability of this strong and diversifying industry. Our plan to address and respond to the inevitable changes facing the family farm will culminate in Ag Summit 2000 in the month of June.

With respect to Albertans' jobs in the 21st century we know that it's inevitable that the workplace and indeed the workers must change and evolve if we are to remain competitive in the increasingly global economy. To that end we have an updated economic strategy for our province. I was especially pleased to hear that we will focus on maximizing the human talent and ingenuity of all Albertans. I strongly believe that Albertans, with their intelligence, respect for each other and the planet, their resourcefulness and dedication, are our economy's most valuable resource.

This government has also recognized that we have the chance to create a legacy of excellence in the areas of information and communication technology and leading-edge research. Initiatives such as connecting communities across Alberta with high-speed Internet access and programs like the Alberta foundation for science and engineering research ensure that we as a province are in a position to take the lead in an area that will be a significant part of every Albertan's future. We must be able to respond effectively to changing market demands and industry needs, and this government is clearly willing to be flexible and adapt to challenges in this new century.

Mr. Speaker, I am very excited about the creation of the Alberta heritage foundation for science and engineering research. This is an historic development that will commit $500 million to provide stable, long-term funding for research and development. We will be able to attract investment to our province and top researchers to our universities. Providing our young Albertan students with the chance to train with the best minds while using the best technology is the greatest gift we can give them and give our province's future.

If provincial finances permit, the endowment fund could reach $1 billion by our province's centennial in 2005. The fund is an investment in Alberta's strong science and engineering base at our universities and in the industrial sector. It is a vital part of the province's strategy to build our knowledge-based economy. This is a milestone. It's a testament to the fiscal accomplishments that this government has made during its mandate and is yet another example of the prosperity we enjoy as Albertans. It's also a recognition of how important research and innovation are to the future of this province.

Mr. Speaker, this government has also created the informatics circle of research excellence program, that provides grants of up to $1 million to fund researchers in information and communications technology at Alberta universities. This program aims both to attract other international talent and to retain Alberta's best. The Alberta science and research fund awarded Alberta universities and research institutions $22.3 million in 1999-2000. The fund will have an immediate impact on researchers and students, and they are long-term benefits for Albertans that are great causes for excitement. We will be a force to be reckoned with in the 21st century.

Alberta is already well positioned and Albertans are already working in the IT, or the information technology, world. This government is committed to creating an environment that supports and nurtures world-class research. Alberta has the best fibre optics and wireless communication network in Canada. We have the highest concentration of personal computers per capita in Canada. Alberta is a world-class centre for wireless research and development and production and is home to world-class research institutes including TRILabs and the Alberta Research Council.

Stable funding for research and development is critical for sustaining our prosperity in the new millennium. The global economy is increasingly knowledge based. It is very farsighted of this government to invest now in what will surely be the future of Alberta. This is a long-term investment in Alberta's future, in all of our futures.

Another example of our government's willingness to innovate and forge ahead as a leader in Canada is the reform of our provincial tax system. Of course, low taxes and a competitive regime are nothing new to this province, but the new 11 percent provincial income tax represents an unprecedented innovation for Canada. We will not be satisfied with the status quo. We will continue to strive to improve, and we will not be complacent.

Under this new tax system 132,000 Albertans will be removed from the provincial tax roll. There will be a significant increase in personal exemptions, and there will be equal spousal exemptions. Something I've always felt: unequal exemptions to be very unfair.

Our government has also had the largesse of interpretation stemming from the Eurig decision to request a full review of the government's direct fees and charges. The Speech from the Throne indicated that Albertans will benefit from this review.

In the area of education the Speech from the Throne tells us that we must have "a collaborative, flexible, and responsive learning system" that encourages continuous lifelong learning. We are constantly working to make Alberta's education system a leader in Canada, and we are constantly alert to the potential of each and every student in Alberta. We are prepared to tackle issues such as class size, literacy for all ages, fund-raising, second-language programs, and access to technology in our schools.

As a former educator, this government's education policies are particularly important to me. They are also very important to my constituents. I'm proud to say that St. Albert has a very well-educated population. Fifty four percent of our citizens have some form of postsecondary education, and half of those have attended university. Alberta as a whole is highly educated, with over 42 percent holding postsecondary degrees, diplomas, or certificates. A well-educated population is vital to our future success, and this government is committed to ensuring that we have the best education possible.

Another area of government responsibility that is of particular importance to my constituents is health. The Speech from the Throne illustrated this government's willingness to implement strategic initiatives in health and wellness. We have created a six-point plan to keep our health care sustainable, accessible, and effective in the face of mounting pressures. Alberta is willing to play a leadership role across Canada in working to strengthen the public health care system. Legislation will be introduced that will not only reaffirm and put our commitment to the principles of the Canada Health Act into provincial law, but it will also enable health authorities to pursue new, innovative ways of delivering publicly funded health services.

As we begin the 21st century, the ability to adjust to new demands on our existing system is one of the most important attributes of this government. Throughout the Speech from the Throne it was made quite clear that this government is willing and able to make the changes necessary to ensure long-term sustainability of everything from agriculture to health care.

As the Member of the Legislative Assembly for St. Albert, I would like to conclude by once again congratulating the Hon. Lois Hole on her appointment as Alberta's Lieutenant Governor and wish her much strength and success as well as peace and joy in her role, from all in her community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and respond to the Speech from the Throne. When I was elected in March 1997, I identified four priorities that would improve the lives of people living in Edmonton-Norwood, and I'd like to review these four priorities and issues in the context of this throne speech.

First of all, I know that school funding, Mr. Speaker, is an issue of importance for anyone living or teaching in my community. The Conservative government has refused to admit that class size was linked to student achievement. We Liberals made the case based on well-founded research. It seems now that the government at last is willing to change this picture for elementary schools. They've decided finally that the Liberals, educators, and parents were right: there just might be a link. But some things have not changed; any increase in school funding has strings attached. This is an issue, I might add, where school needs differ.

Let's talk about speech therapy. This issue has been brought up to me in my constituency. Some of my schools desperately need a speech therapist. Others don't. They have other needs they should be addressing, but because of the strings attached to the funding, that won't happen, Mr. Speaker. Whatever happened to board autonomy? We have democratically elected school boards, but they have no control over expenditures. They don't even have control over appointing their own superintendent.

Let's address another issue in education. Funding for public schools has only increased by about 6.5 percent overall from '94-95, but, Mr. Speaker, increases for private schools stand about 61.5 percent.

Let's revisit the democratically elected school boards. When I first began my career in the Legislature, I was only sure of one thing: I was elected by the constituents of Edmonton-Norwood to represent them in this Legislature. When public school trustees are elected, their constituents expect the trustee will be able to do the same. Not so. What we saw was a government who had the gall to fire a democratically elected school board in Calgary. Why, Mr. Speaker? I suspect it was because they didn't buy this government's mantra about education. I know the constituents of Edmonton-Norwood disapprove of this heavy-handed, antidemocratic muscle flexing by Mr. Klein and his truth squad.

Mr. Speaker, I know many of my constituents whose level of assistance is tied to the safety and security of their family. This should be an important issue for all of us, not just for me, not just for Alberta Liberals, but for everybody. I believe that cuts to welfare are one of the single most responsible causes for the increase in child welfare files. A 40 percent increase has occurred in these files while I have been in office. The government consistently denied and denies that their cuts are tied to the number of child welfare cases, but data from organizations such as the Edmonton Social Planning Council show otherwise. We understand now that the government has sheepishly retreated on this issue and has decided to, well, study it. This, friends, is not the Alberta advantage.

Another issue I want to talk about and that I brought up in 1997 was law enforcement. This is a serious concern for people who live in my neighbourhood. Policing across this province is woefully underfunded. The executive of the Edmonton Police Service and their counterparts in other cities are forever trying to balance the budget. The RCMP are running a deficit, and this forces them to pick and choose what crimes are more important than others to investigate. The provincial government has literally stolen, Mr. Speaker, stolen $33 million from police agencies in Alberta since 1993. Small communities like Fairview that were unlucky enough to have a murder occur in their own backyard can't even afford to conduct a proper investigation. This is from a government that has a surplus of about $3 billion. Law and order clearly is not a priority for this government. I would go so far as to state that Mr. Klein and his Conservatives are soft on crime.

Finally, health care. This is a big priority not just for the residents of Edmonton-Norwood but for all Albertans. I stated on April 21, 1997, that the community health model I see this government introducing calls forth images of a system that creeps noticeably closer to a private health care system. Today we as citizens of Alberta have the biggest battle in front of us. The Conservative government has said yes to private hospitals. In fact, this government doesn't care what Albertans want. You see, Mr. Speaker, it was by design that the Premier ensured that his friend and past Provincial Treasurer, Jim Dinning, was appointed as the chair of the Calgary health authority and that his friend and past adviser, Rod Love, was appointed to oversee communications with the Calgary health authority and that his friend and past deputy minister of the Premier's office, Jack Davis, was hired as CEO of the Calgary health authority.

The Wong brothers, otherwise known as a private corporation – who incidently, Mr. Speaker, are snuggled up with the Minister of Gaming in an online constituency picture. They're all kind of cozy there. They've purchased the Holy Cross hospital, and they purchased it at a fire sale price: $4.5 million. This was after this government renovated this with the use of taxpayers' money, and that cost over $30 million.

Now, why is all this such a big deal? Simple. These friends of Ralph Klein support private hospitals. Over 70 percent of Albertans stated that they did not have enough information to decide whether or not they could support private hospitals, but do you think Mr. Klein and his band of truth squad participants listened or care? No, and we'd all be fooling ourselves if we thought they did. See, Mr. Klein wants to tear apart the single most valued social program in this country in the same way Mr. Bouchard wants to tear apart Canada. We must ask ourselves why. Why would the Premier of the richest province in this country want to do this? Why would he want to endorse private hospitals? Who asked for private hospitals? Well, it wasn't the seniors, it wasn't the sick, it wasn't health care workers, and it wasn't the constituents of Edmonton-Norwood, nor was it the citizens of Alberta, Mr. Speaker.

This then begs the question of who will benefit. Well, it's not me, and it's not the residents of Edmonton-Norwood. It will be the private insurance companies, a few elite doctors, and quite likely a few friends of the Premier. The Premier is trying to pick a fight with Ottawa over this issue. This is the same Premier and government that fired nurses, closed hospitals, and blew up buildings, and now he wants to blame the federal government. This privatization concept is a home-grown issue created by Premier Klein. The Premier is on his own, however. He's like the groom left at the altar. No other Premier in this nation is prepared to walk down the aisle holding his hand.

The private hospital fight is not just about whether the Premier is breaking the law or not. It's not just about whether a titanium hip is better than a stainless steel hip. It's about what's good for all Albertans and what citizens of Alberta want, and they don't want private hospital facilities, Mr. Speaker.

The government's truth squad or propaganda machine will not be able to restore this government's vast credibility gaps with Albertans on public health care or education. I find it interesting, Mr. Speaker, when we talk about – and the Premier stated that he's got a bold new plan for a new century, yet he uses language that should never be used in this day and age. Let's not forget about the Canadians who fought for democracy in this country when language like "truth squads" was commonplace in Nazi Germany. Let's not forget about that.

As the MLA for Edmonton-Norwood I have promised my constituents to be their voice in the Legislature, and what they have asked me to ask the Premier is: what part of no, Mr. Premier, don't you understand?

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to be able to speak in this House today in support of the Speech from the Throne, to represent the views and priorities of my constituents. Along with the other members of the Legislature I would like to pay tribute to the Lieutenant Governor for her articulate delivery of the throne speech which opened the Fourth Session of the 24th Legislature of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the constituency I serve, Calgary-Fort, is a wonderful, diverse area of Calgary both in geography and demographics.

It is home to proud Calgarians of many different ages, ethnic ancestries, religions, and economic backgrounds. Indeed, I think Calgary-Fort is a true reflection of the diversity, spirit, and energy that exists in this province. The people of Calgary-Fort represent the high standards and sensible choices that are typical of the people of Alberta. We live in the best province in Canada and are determined that it should remain the best in the future.

There are many families in my constituency in which husband and wife are working hard in the workforce and others in which one parent has chosen to stay at home to raise the children. These families are hardworking and hold high standards and expectations for themselves, their children, and the officials they elect to represent them well. They demand government which listens to them and does not erect unnecessary barriers to individual pursuit and choices.

Mr. Speaker, I would like at the outset to express my full support for the themes and principles espoused in the Speech from the Throne. It is important that we work to strike the right balance. This emphasis on balance shows a responsible approach on the part of our government to properly manage and support all of our resources: economic, natural, and human. In planning for the next year and further into the future, we must ensure that we do not lose sight of either our fiscal responsibilities or the importance of Alberta's quality of life. I believe this government has kept both these fundamentals in mind by emphasizing careful reinvestment alongside lower taxes as we maintain a balanced budget.

In my remaining time I would like to touch on those areas discussed in the throne speech which have been of the greatest importance for my constituents: education, health care, services to seniors, and jobs and the economy. The throne speech emphasized the importance of our responsibility as a society to our children. Part of this fundamental goal is a continuing focus on providing the best education possible for our children and youth. The future of this province depends on having a well-trained and educated workforce. We must also allow our current workforce to adapt and learn throughout their careers. In this ever changing economy lifelong learning is a necessity, not a luxury.

Health care is the number one issue of importance to all Albertans. We must ensure an in-depth debate and discussion on the recent initiatives for surgical services. Albertans need to understand why this legislation is needed and that this government is dedicated to the principles of the Canada Health Act and the maintenance of a single tier, publicly paid health system that is accessible to all Albertans.

We need innovative approaches in delivering public services. The private sector can and does play an important role in complementing our publicly operated system. However, we have to make sure that any facility set up in Alberta is in the best interests of Albertans. I urge the government to ensure that any private surgical facility be closely monitored and that any contract with public health authorities be kept in line with the rate of return from the low-risk investment.

I believe one of the key functions of government is to get the most services out of the tax dollar. What I mean is effectiveness and efficiency. To me, Mr. Speaker, profit is a good thing. It is the energy that drives our social locomotive. What's bad is greed, the excessive monopoly profit enjoyed by individuals or professional groups at the expense of the general public.

On services to seniors, with the aging population and new medical advances that are creating more demands, we must prepare for the future and embrace new ideas. Our seniors are on fixed incomes, and with the cost of living rising, we need to look into the seniors benefits programs. I'm encouraged that the government initiative in this area has been proclaimed.

Alberta's ability to maintain quality education, health care, and other services depends on a strong, diversified, and growing economy. This is a practical reality as we look at the world. It is clear that Canada is moving away from its traditional resource and manufacturing economy, and we must embrace a new future, a future where the scarce resources are human talent and other intangibles such as entrepreneurialism and intellectual capital. I'm glad to see that this government is embracing this future.

A well-educated workforce will go a long way to helping to maintain Alberta's standard of living, but our workforce must be welcomed and embraced at home and not be slowly drained away to better opportunities in other locales. The entrepreneurial spirit that built this province must be maintained in this province for all Alberta to benefit.

The foundation for booming economic development is a strong physical infrastructure as well as a strong human resource. My constituency is a part of the fast-growing city of Calgary. There is a real need for infrastructure development to meet the growth of Calgary. In the Calgary-Fort constituency I can say that we have a beautiful park and river valley. We also have an expansive industrial park. Industrial development and the natural environment stay side by side in my constituency. Along with economic development, I'm encouraged with the government's commitment to preserving and protecting our natural environment beyond our generation.

Mr. Speaker, those are the thoughts and views representing my constituents. I will continue to represent my constituents' views and opinions in the coming months in our legislative session. I believe that the government has set the course leading Alberta into a bright future. Our children, our parents will have the best place to live, called Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to respond to the Speech from the Throne. When I was thinking about what I would say tonight – you know, it was in 1993 that I first got to respond to the Speech from the Throne, and I was nervous and thoughtful about some of the things that I hoped for Alberta. Some of those changes have happened, and some have not. So I intend to talk a bit about that tonight.

I would like to start, as well, by praising our new Lieutenant Governor. You know, such a woman with such a charitable heart, she must be a Liberal. Oh, some people don't like that, but it's the truth. We all, I think, respect our Lieutenant Governor for what she has given to our province and to our communities, and I think we all share that pride that she will be a wonderful Lieutenant Governor for our province.

The good people of my riding – St. Albert, Sturgeon, and Spruce Grove – are great people, and they feel free to call me on all kinds of issues. It was interesting that Friday in my office the phone never stopped ringing. All the concerns, with the exception of probably three phone calls, were about health care, a real concern that it's going to be privatized and that it will cost people money out of pocket aside from their tax dollars, aside from their extra health fees. This is going to be very expensive for people. A lot of calls from seniors. They said, "You know, my cataracts didn't bother me when I was 45, but I'm 70 now. My hips didn't bother me back then either, but they do now." So if you tie seniors and health care together, you've got quite an issue there. They're very, very concerned about the privatization that this government is going on.

It says: a bold, new step. Well, Franklin's expedition was bold too, and he got stranded and died in northern Canada. So we'd better watch how bold we get in our exploration of private health care, because that may well be the Achilles' heel that brings down this government. Certainly the way it's going, it will be. [interjection] "Aha," says someone. Are you even running again? Well, you're too afraid to run.

Mr. Speaker, I was also thinking about the first speech to the throne. At the time Laurence Decore was the leader of the Liberal Party, and he had a great vision for this province. Part of it was a strong public education system, and this government has undermined a strong public education. When I look at the class sizes around this province, they're far too large.

It was interesting. I was in a grade 1 classroom the other day, and I gained once again an amazing respect for certainly teachers of grade 1 students. When I thought of how they bring those little people to such a level in such a short time, it's amazing the work they do. It's amazing. If you have 16 children in that class or if you have 28, you get half as far with 28 as you do with 16. I'm looking forward to seeing what the budget's going to say about that and how it's going to address that, because that has been one of our platforms for a long time, that we have to reduce the class size in this province. Hopefully, they'll have listened.

You know, Laurence Decore also had a vision of parliamentary reform. Regretfully, that is not even mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. Does that happen when a government's been in for so long, that they don't think they need to have parliamentary reform? Does that happen? I remember one of the things that Laurence said: you know, when we're government . . . And it was a pity that he didn't make government. But he said: when we're government, we will accept ideas from the opposition; they have good bills and good ideas too. That's never happened in here. Parliamentary reform, free votes: I haven't seen it on that side of the House. [interjections] Woke them up. You know, Mr. Speaker, we have a long way to go when it comes to parliamentary reform.

One of the things I wanted to talk about is equity. One has to do with health care, and the other has to do with education. When you talk about equity in health care, it is not equitable across this province. Maybe that's the reality of living outside of Edmonton and Calgary, but I'm very concerned about the lack of equity in this province. I know of an example of a young man who was flown in from Fort McMurray to Edmonton for health care needs. As it ended up, he needed to be on IV therapy for six weeks, but he wasn't allowed to take the portable IV from the capital health authority up to Fort McMurray. Why not? Wonderful question. Because – you know what? – that piece of equipment would be crossing that boundary. That's why. [interjection] If you want me to document it for you, Member for St. Albert, I'll gladly give it to you.

Scott MacGregor is his name. He's a teacher in Fort McMurray, and he is my nephew. That's why I know that story. They didn't have one for him in Fort McMurray because somebody else was using it, somebody who probably needed it more than Scott. That's the reality of lack of equity across health boundaries.

You know, it's interesting. We talk about funding and fund-raising for education. Are we now going to ask parents to fund-raise for the DARE program? In St. Albert and Spruce Grove they are talking about not having the DARE program because there isn't enough funding. Now, we talk about prevention. We talk about police enforcement. We talk about jails. Here's a program that is educational and preventive. And what have we done? Underfunded it, and it's going to die. One of the best preventive programs that I've ever seen, that works wonderfully in our schools. We have policemen across the province giving this program. The students buy into it. I think every person in here has gone to a DARE grad and has praised the program and the kids, and here we sit, and there's no money for it. We are losing it in parts of St. Albert and parts of Spruce Grove and all around the province. So I'm very disappointed in that, and I'm hoping that can be addressed.

A couple of other things I just wanted to mention as I was going through the Speech from the Throne. I mentioned seniors. They're very worried. I think this cash benefit that has been talked about may work out to 10 bucks extra a month for them. Well, I'm sure they'll be grateful for 10 bucks more, but I don't know if that will give them a level of security.

Deregulation was mentioned in here, and you know that's going to be an interesting one, because we've once again put the cart before the horse here. We don't know if this is going to work, and we don't know if it's going to cost you and I more. This all got deregulated and changed without knowing that. Is there no way of doing that homework, or do we just boldly go without any homework? That seems to be the reality of that.

I see the infrastructure dollars, and of course I'm always supportive of that. Of course, a third of highway 794 is done in my riding. There are two-thirds more to go, which I'm sure will be part of the big plan. That's exciting for me.

Maybe I missed it – I don't know – but you know what? I don't think I saw the word "integrity" in here. Maybe that's because that's what's lacking right now in the way this province is governed. I don't see integrity in health care. I don't. If we had integrity in health care, there wouldn't be issues about boundaries. If we had integrity in education, there wouldn't be issues of fund-raising for essentials like books. [interjections] People are upset with the truth. Well, that's too bad. Maybe they'll have to send a truth squad out to Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert to check it out. You know what else? I found the truth squad comment very offensive too, and so did people in my riding. No wonder they couldn't put integrity in this speech, because it didn't apply to this government.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know if I've hit on everything I really wanted to tonight, but I think there are big concerns about health care and education.

The other thing is the hidden dollars in health care. You know, we talked about Bovar, MagCan, NovAtel, all those boondoggles this government got us into debt over, and here we go. In a couple of years we're going to discover what contracts were given out and what money we lost and that was mismanaged by private companies we subsidized with taxpayer dollars to provide health care. We can't get that information. It should bother the minister of energy that that information about where our tax dollars are going is not available. Maybe he knows about it. Maybe he knows, but certainly the general public doesn't, and that's one of the things they deserve to know. It's their money. I want to know where my tax dollars are being spent, and I think we deserve to know that with these health contracts.

DR. WEST: That's what we're asking the federal Liberals.

MRS. SOETAERT: Absolutely, absolutely. I was tempted to compare that same situation with the federal government to our health care contracts. The same analogy: can't get the information as to where and who they're giving our money to. So you know what? The same analogy. Thank you for giving me that comparison.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak. [interjections] They're comparing some of the ministers across the way to the Jane Stewarts of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, seriously, I have never had so many phone calls lately about health care concerns. Honestly, when I'm in schools, I hear lots of education concerns from parents but never such a cross-section of people concerned about what is happening in health care, what those private contracts are doing, and what is implied by truth squads going around the province. That's terribly, terribly offensive, and I would hope that we can get some truthful answers in this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to rise today to respond to the throne speech. On behalf of my Wainwright constituents, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate our new Lieutenant Governor and wish her all the best in her new post. The Hon. Lois Hole brings warmth and friendliness along with her great knowledge of our country to this historic position, and Albertans will be well served by her talents and her dedication.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened, I believe, to 18 throne speeches. Each speech has laid out a plan, and for the most part those plans have been followed. When I look back at those plans and the direction that our Progressive Conservative government has taken us, then I feel very proud and honoured to be part of it. Each year we have made huge improvements. Today we have a beautiful province that offers one of the highest if not the highest standard of living in the world, and that is for us, for our kids, and for our grandkids. That was the direct result of 29 years of very strong leadership and planning by our Conservative government. There is not one province in Canada that can match that success. So I think we should all remember that Alberta is the envy of many countries of the world, maybe all of them.

As the MLA for Wainwright, I am privileged to represent the views and the concerns of my constituents in this Assembly. My constituents have told me that our government is on the right path of balancing economic and social issues and continuing to set the standard for knowledge, quality, and excellence in Canada.

Coming from a mainly rural constituency, I feel that it is my job to represent the views of many families involved in farming and agriculture. As we strive to become leaders in the emerging information and knowledge-based global economy, we must remember that agriculture has been for a hundred years and still is the foundation of this province. I liked the government's commitment to agriculture in the throne speech. The agriculture summit is very positive.

In our fast-changing world we must continually change with new ideas. Our new technology and computerization are really changing the way that agriculture is doing business. The biggest change that computers and the Internet have given us is going to be in marketing, and I dearly hope it will open up the marketplace, allow more small businesses and mid-size businesses to compete against large companies and monopolies. Many have heard me say before that marketing is the very weak link in the production chain of agriculture.

We continually improve our genetics with new seed through research and development, at a big cost I might add. I know that sometimes today you can pay $6 or $7 for one pound of canola seed. For those of you that aren't farmers, you've got to have at least five, usually six or seven pounds per acre in order to put your seed in. We have new and better farming equipment and new and better practices, and certainly the machines and the new equipment are also very, very costly.

We also are very hopeful that our transportation and delivery system is improving, and it also is very costly. I think everyone notices that the elevators are disappearing around the country. Almost all of them will be gone in another year or two. Yes, we're replacing them with some throughput fast-flow loading systems, but most of the storage cost is back on the farmers, and that is a very substantial cost as well. So, then, what does happen to us? When we go to market our grain, we get less now than we got 40 years ago with all these costs. We have to have more competition in the marketplace to make it work properly. We don't have an aggressive enough marketplace anymore. Big business markets our mainstream products, and they do it now really without the fear of competition. Certainly you can say that about the grain and about the Wheat Board.

I was talking to a farmer the other day that had started out with two B train loads of grain to an elevator which was about 75 miles away. He sold $10,000 worth of grain, and by the time he got it from his throughput elevator out to the coast and loaded onto the boat, his cost was $2,950. It was a $10,000 value in the grain, so about a third or close to a third of it now goes for the cost of moving the grain.

One other thing that I see happening that I would like to see our government move into is with the total integration of some of these major companies now that are working with – I use meat for an example, where they've got hog farms. In the U.S. they've got some hog farms that are as big as all the production here in Alberta. They slaughter them and market them and do it all and control the price that way. I think we have to do something in this country to offset that, because it really is ripping apart our once free-flowing competitive system.

I think you can look at machine dealerships, the chemical and seed companies, for instance, with the monopolies that they have. They have those monopolies simply because we as governments – and I don't say that it's we as the Alberta government – give them patent protection and different protection through legislation that allows them to do this. I really believe that our government in the future is going to have to study this issue a lot. I know they're doing a lot of work with it now in the U.S., and I think we need to do that here. I hope the ag summit that is mentioned in the throne speech will bring out some of these issues.

We must get small business back into marketing, and we've got to find the niche markets so that we can move into the new things that are happening all the time. We're very slow at getting into that. I have to say that the [inaudible] harvesting is one of those markets that we need to get into. I'm sure our government will be looking at some of those types of marketing strategies for us.

The Speech from the Throne makes several references to the need for innovation, and I believe this government and this province are committed to making changes when needed. As Albertans we pride ourselves on the fact that we are not afraid of change. We've always been the most self-reliant yet forward-thinking province in Canada. Mr. Speaker, I was happy to see that in the new century we have not forgotten this. We are about to undertake a bold new tax strategy that will truly give the province the economic environment primed for prosperity. The new 11 percent single-rate income tax will be the envy of the country and maybe even the world when we get finished with that. It may be a little bit too early yet to tell, but I think that might help solve some of the problems I was talking about before.

As well, we are investing heavily in the area of research and high-tech. Initiatives like the heritage foundation for science and engineering research will ensure that Alberta remains one of the most information and knowledge based provinces in the country. This will also present us with the chance to leave a lasting legacy for our children who will be tomorrow's scientists and doctors.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention health care for just a minute. It does relate to not being afraid of change. I want to say to the many people that want to fear monger and talk about health care in such a negative way that every one of us in this House, including our opposition, dearly cherish our health care system. There isn't anyone in here that is trying to hurt it and upset it. All of us know that we're going to get old and we're going to use this system ourselves, so I think we need to work together on this health care and make it work for the betterment of all our people in this province.

With education I'm glad to hear that the throne speech is still keying in heavily on education. I know that in the Wainwright constituency we are doing some great, innovative things in education today, and I'm sure that you are in all the other areas as well. I'm very proud of some of our school divisions there who have upgraded our computer systems. We have a 5 to 1 ratio now and some of the latest technology. It's wonderful to go into those rooms and see how the students can adjust to that and to go into the shop classes, the industrial arts classes, and watch them use some of their equipment that is all computerized, whether it be sewing machines or routers or any kind of carpentry equipment that's computerized. It's just absolutely amazing, and we are going to be turning out some very, very excellent specialists in the near future.

I wanted to mention one other thing that this government believes strongly in, and that is our seniors. I know that there has been a shortage of long-term care beds. We've had a big influx of seniors from other provinces. We have a lot of people that are reaching that age, and we're keeping people alive a lot longer. We can be proud of those figures when you compare them to any other country in the world.

I would like to mention that our seniors in the Daysland community are putting in a beautiful new aging-in-place complex. People can buy their units. They can rent the units. Part of it is going to be assisted living, and it is going to be community owned and operated. They've got it more than half built already, and we are very proud of what they're doing there. They're going to keep their seniors in the community, where they would like to be.

The other thing that I wanted to mention – and the throne speech does mention this – is challenges facing children. To do this, our government has created many excellent programs aimed at improving children's health, education, and safety. I would like to comment that along with the great programs what our children really need are strong, strong families. It seems that we are seeing a rise in violence among young people and in many cases a lack of responsibility in these children. Mr. Speaker, accountability for your actions starts with the family. Parents need to be willing to take the responsibility of being a parent and instill in their children this basic concept.

I had the opportunity to be on the lifelong learning committee that the minister appointed us to and went to Fort McMurray. One of the things that came out loud and clear was that there was a big need to have some parenting courses to help parents advise kids and bring kids up so they are able to cope with the way things are today. With that comes respect and responsibility, and we as government can help in a big way if we can create the proper programs and give them the proper tools to work with.

To end, I would like to say that our government was elected for the past 29 years because we were not afraid to act against the status quo when the status quo wasn't working, and I'm happy we are embracing the change that is needed to ensure the long-term prosperity of Alberta. This throne speech and plan is the right one. This plan creates the blueprint for a century of unlimited success.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure this evening to get up and respond to the Speech from the Throne. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: I recognized the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

MRS. NELSON: He adjourned debate before the other speaker.

THE SPEAKER: No, he did not. He said thank you and sat down.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's quite an opportunity to review the things that were said in the context of the intention of the next year, the next millennium for Alberta, and it was quite appropriate, I think, that the government kind of couched this year's Speech from the Throne in the format and the theme that was presented in Alberta's original Speech from the Throne in March of 1906, when they talked about the prosperity and the bountiful resources of the province that we live in.

Mr. Speaker, we see that as we look across the province and look at the coming hundred years of our province. The homesteaders, the rural pioneers that established and moved in and settled most of rural Alberta, the wildcatters and roughnecks that went out and brought into the province our oil industry and our gas industry have really created that kind of province, along with all the entrepreneurs that started the businesses that are providing us with the support services to provide the opportunity for these agriculture- and mineral-based industries to really expand.

The focus that the Speech from the Throne takes is to look at: where do we go in the next hundred years, the next millennium? The idea is that the government is recognizing the fact that transition is accelerating. Change is becoming a greater part of what we have to deal with on a day-to-day basis, and they're providing some really good focus in this Speech from the Throne in the context of the need we have as a province to move into a knowledge-based, technologically driven economy away from the resource economies, and we have to look at that in the context of some of the programs that were suggested in terms of the initiatives the government is going to undertake.

On that basis, Mr. Speaker, I really wanted to compliment the government on the Alberta heritage foundation for science and engineering research. This is a real opportunity for our province over the next probably 10 or 15 or 20 years to achieve the status in the research area in science and engineering that the heritage medical research endowment fund has created and provided for us. Our medical research facilities in Calgary and Edmonton now are world renowned, providing some very, very exciting results in terms of new treatments and diagnostic procedures for medical needs and support for the medical community. So if we look at the opportunities now that we'll have with this science and engineering research endowment, what we'll have is a future that we can look to, you know, probably in 10, 15, 20 years, as I said.

I hope that no Albertan expects to see great things from this in the next two or three years, Mr. Speaker. These kinds of endowments and to develop that critical mass of research is a time-consuming, ongoing process, and we have to start thinking about this as being something that's going to be 10, 15, or 20 years down the road, when we'll achieve the worldwide reputation that we have in the areas of agriculture research and medical research. So that's the comment and the kind of focus I wanted to take on the transition that's implied in this Speech from the Throne.

The other issues that we want to deal with are more in the area of: how are we going to deal with the people part of it and how are we going to take Albertans and build them into that plan? As we look at it, I see that the government is committing now to provide more dollars in support of students, that what they'll be doing is trying to make sure students have some additional support with scholarships for second-year students in the advanced education areas. Identifying it as being important for the second-year students brings it out so that the college students that are in two-year programs also have access to this, but when you put it to the rest of that paragraph, there are implications there that they're going to "also increase student financial assistance levels and . . . continue to improve the student loan application process."

I think everybody will applaud the idea that they're going to try and improve the student loan application process, but when they're going to try and increase the financial assistance levels, what this does, even given the $3 million that's going into the scholarship program, is effectively recognize, by the government, that students as they go through their education process are going to get more and more in debt.

Mr. Speaker, that creates a real economic barrier to advanced education and to the possible participation of young Albertans in the future of our province in a way that would contribute to their potential, because they're looking at it and saying: our family doesn't have the resources to provide some assistance or full assistance to get an advanced education degree or diploma. So they have to make a decision based on can they or do they want to undertake a debt load that would give them the opportunity to get that education.

What we're seeing is that the government is creating essentially a different opportunity, and it kind of goes against one of the principles they talked about at the beginning of the speech when they were talking about one of the things that they wanted was equity, including fairness for all citizens in Alberta. Well, what they're doing is in essence creating an economic barrier for some of our young people to really get in and achieve their potential. So those are the comments that I wanted to make on that part of it.

We've heard a lot of discussion about the health care agenda, the proposals in health care, the privatization, the contracting out, the transition in our health care system. Mr. Speaker, I just want to put it on record that when the people in southern Alberta come to me and want explanations of what the government is proposing, their concerns boil down to two things. First of all, there's the philosophy of how our health care system should be run, the public system or private. This is the debate that they see. But the real issue and the real concern that most Albertans have, at least most of the constituents that approach me, is about the potential for these changes that are being talked about to create a two-tiered health care system in the province, where they don't see the equity of access being there for each of them, for their families or for their friends when they need the health care service. They're seeing again an economic issue developing where those with the economic opportunity can afford and will get a different level of health care in this province than the person who doesn't have the economic resources to access that private health care system.

So that's the real concern that they're expressing to me, and I guess what I can say on behalf of those constituents is that that's the issue we'll be looking for when the government introduces their legislation on the potential for contracting out, private hospitals, private health care. Whatever we want to call it and whatever the title the government's going to put to that bill, those are the kinds of criteria that we'll be looking at and judging that piece of legislation on. Does it maintain the equity of access and the economic opportunity and the prevention of that two-tiered system?

We go from there and look at the impact the proposals are going to have on the education system and on children, and we see that really again we're going to have to wait and see when the budget comes out exactly how these promises are going to be carried out so that we'll be able to say: yes, this is going to assist children; this is going to assist in the education system so that these children can reach that potential they have and have an opportunity to be part of the equitable treatment of all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, one thing I want to talk about in a little more depth, mostly because it falls into my critic area but also because from southern Alberta's perspective it's really an important issue, is the government's plan and proposals for agriculture. Again, as I said at the start, the whole Speech from the Throne is built around this area of, you know, the role of agriculture, the growing of our province. They try to make it appear that they're talking in the context of a farming focus.

There's a reference in there to the family farm as the basis of Alberta at the turn of the century, the last century when our province was getting started, but they also say that that family farm has to undergo change, and when we look at what the government has been trying to do in the agriculture community in the last five or six years, it's really difficult to focus on what the government perceives as that change.

Even when we talked to people who attended the initial planning session for the process that will lead up to the ag summit in the period of the 7th and 8th of June, there was a lot of discussion and a lot of hypothesizing about how we create – and the term that they're using on a number of occasions was an industrial agriculture, a commercial agriculture. So, in essence, that phrase that comes out from the people who were attending that planning workshop for the ag summit tends to give some indication that the concept of family farm, the community that's built around the family farm concept is not as integral to the government's vision for rural Alberta as a lot of Albertans and a lot of rural Albertans would like to see.

One of the things that we have to recognize is that the transition that goes on in rural Alberta is quite different from the transition we see in an urban area or some of our major centres in Alberta. You know, in rural Alberta when a farm family either decides to quit farming or is forced to quit farming for economic reasons, in most cases, unless they're retiring and intend to stay in the community, they pack up and move out of the community. Their land base is amalgamated into a joint farm or another farm operation in the community, and that community loses a family.

Now, in an urban area – Calgary, Edmonton, Lethbridge – when we see a small business fail or a small business owner decide, "I want out," and they leave with their equity, if there is any, they usually stay in the community. They either go into another business or they take employment. So they stay there. The community doesn't lose that family unit. In rural Alberta when that family unit leaves, that's one less family unit to support all the other services that are in that community: the school, church, service clubs, sports teams, all the other things that make a community.

As three or four or five of those families start to leave a community, we see a domino effect in the sense that those are families and incomes that are taken out of that community, and that causes the loss of a local grocery store, maybe a local service station, later on a farm machinery dealership, because the larger farms that have amalgamated with the small ones spend their dollars in a different way. As a larger farm they are still usually one family, so there's no more human resource to participate in the community even though they're farming and having the same turnover of agriculture expenditures and income.

So essentially the community has lost that core human component, the family component, not necessarily the turnaround dollars. The turnaround dollars are spent differently. They go into agriculture inputs. If there's a profit at the end of the year with that farm, it goes into reinvestment rather than into the expenditures families make in supporting that community. So what we see, then, is that this domino effect is essentially going to create a depopulation in rural Alberta unless we can support rural Alberta with some of the other initiatives that are necessary to facilitate the transition.

Mr. Speaker, one of the interesting things that was noted in here was the intent of the government to try and put high-speed, high-bandwidth Internet access across the province. Now, how are they going to make the decisions as to which communities get it and which don't? Is it going to be based on the viability of the community? If people are leaving that community in a rush, then what we're going to see is a situation where the community is collapsing on itself, and there won't be a core left that would make it a viable community to even justify the expenditure that would be necessary to kind of revitalize it, give it an alternative means of growth by having access to this high-speed Internet system.

So it's important that we look at some of the things that are going on. The government's talking about a review of crop insurance, sustaining the farm income disaster program, the income support program, and what we've got is kind of a piecemeal approach here. A lot of the farmers that I'm talking to are saying to me: "Ken, we don't find a crop insurance program works for us. We don't find the FIDP program works for us. Yet we seem to be in a cash flow crisis. We're having trouble making our payments." Mr. Speaker, it's quite easy to think about options where a combined crop insurance/farm income disaster program can be created where it rolls together and effectively becomes a farmer participatory program focusing around sustaining and maintaining income levels in a crisis situation, when there's a hailstorm, when there's a drought, when there's a world decline in prices.

Mr. Speaker, there wasn't very much in the Speech from the Throne indicating the government's direction they want to go in terms of trying to help create an environment for international trade in agriculture. They talk about going over and participating in the European World Expo, and here they want to focus on technology innovation. I don't know very much about that, but I know that Europe has a lot of opportunity for us to market some of our high quality, value-added food products, our agriculture technologies. Why are they not included in this list of things that we want to take to the World Expo? Now, maybe the agriculture component is not part of that. That's a question that we can search down later. But when you see that and we look at trying to promote the value-added components from our agriculture community, why isn't it included in that list?

Mr. Speaker, this is kind of the direction that I think we want to see the government going in more in terms of: let's have a comprehensive policy that recognizes where we're going to go in rural Alberta over the next 10 years. Are we going to be able to facilitate the transition from a smaller farm to a viable economic agriculture unit and create other opportunities for rural citizens to be there as well at a point when we don't have that loss of the human component in the community?

Mr. Speaker, I think that covers the issues that I wanted to address. There's a number of others that we'll be looking for. On that basis, I'd like to adjourn debate if it's possible.

THE SPEAKER: Actually, hon. member, your time for debate had expired, so I'll recognize the hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will follow the lead of the hon. member opposite and ask to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd better make sure I do this right. I don't want to be ruled out of order. I move that the House do now stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[At 9:42 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, February 23, 2000 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 00/02/23
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly executives from two very distinguished groups: the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties and the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association. Joining us from the AUMA are Mr. Lorne Olsvik, president; Mr. George Rogers, vice-president of cities; Mr. Ernie Patterson, vice-president of towns; Mr. Mike Senych, vice-president of villages and summer villages.

Joining us from the AAMDC is Mr. Jack Hayden, president; Mr. Bart Guyon, vice-president; Mr. Eugene Wauters, director of district 1; Mr. Pat James, director of district 2; Mrs. Phyllis Kobasiuk, director of district 3; Mr. Ben Boettcher, director of district 4; and Mr. Sid Hinton, director of district 5.

Both groups are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by 104 Albertans calling on this House "to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals" in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to present a petition signed by 251 individuals from Edmonton and area urging the Legislative Assembly "to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to submit a petition as well that requests the Legislative Assembly "to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition supporting public health care in Alberta. It states:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care. Two hundred names from Edmonton and area.
 Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise to present a petition on behalf of 254 Edmontonians "to urge the government to stop promoting private health care" and not undermine the public health care of Alberta.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request that the petition I tabled yesterday signed by 111 Albertans and asking this House to take legislative action to ban private, for-profit hospitals be read and received.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

THE SPEAKER: The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that my petition that was tabled yesterday in the House with 1,003 signatures from various parts of Alberta be received and read.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that the petition with respect to support for public health care that I introduced yesterday be now read and received, please.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the petition with my name on it in terms of stopping the promotion of private health care in Alberta that was introduced in the Legislature yesterday be read today in the Assembly.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask as well that the petition I presented yesterday in support of public health care be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 3
Statute Revision Act

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 3, being the Statute Revision Act.

The Statute Revision Act will allow for the provision of revised statutes of Alberta both now and on an ongoing basis.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Surveys Amendment Act, 2000

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce a bill being the Surveys Amendment Act, 2000, which will augment the definition of cadastral maps to satisfy the original intent of the Surveys Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Land Titles Amendment Act, 2000

MR. JACQUES: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 5, being the Land Titles Amendment Act, 2000.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 5 be placed on the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Marriage Amendment Act, 2000

MR. DOERKSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 202, the Marriage Amendment Act, 2000.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to file with the Assembly six copies of my response to Motion for a Return 182 as amended April 21, 1999.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table today six copies of the Alberta Opportunity Company 1998-99 annual report.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a letter which I sent this morning to the minister of health requesting that he disclose the pages that are blanked out in the document that I referred to and tabled yesterday with respect to the government's private hospital policy and of course noting that the information and the disclosure of the information can clearly be done within the public interest sections of the freedom of information act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of the minutes of the board of directors of the Health Resource Group, known as HRG, for two meetings, one held on March 25, 1999, and the second one on April 30, 1999, as well as the agenda for May 31, 1999.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a notice of a town hall meeting that the Member for Edmonton-Glenora and myself are co-hosting. It's entitled Private Hospitals in Alberta: Who Wants Them? As the Associate Minister of Health Wellness – my condolences go to him and his wife, Christine – will be unable to attend, we do hope that someone else from the government or from the truth squad will take up our invitation to attend that particular town hall.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in question period I referred to a document and had one copy of it to table. At this time I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of the correspondence between Jack Davis, who was then the Deputy Minister of Executive Council, to Peter Valentine, the Auditor General, regarding the government's 1998 accountability framework. Of course, it includes all of the items that are necessary for contract approval for contracting services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly four constituents that I just noticed as I came in this afternoon. Ken, Silvia, Rodney, and Sharla McFarland are here from Nobleford, Alberta, and we have more than the last name in common. Ken's great-grandfather and my great-grandfather homesteaded south of Pincher Creek in the Twin Butte area in 1898. His mother has been involved in local municipal politics with the MD of Pincher Creek. I think it's worthy to note that Ken's aunt was the first lady dean of recreation at the University of Alberta. I would ask that they rise in the gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a real pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a great group from Camilla school in Riviere Qui Barre in my riding. They are here with parent helpers Mrs. Maxine Brennan, Mr. Joe Dwyer, Mrs. Anne Brosda, and Mrs. Lori Tailleux. They are a great group of students. They had great questions for me. They are also here with their teachers, Mrs. Arlene Whitson, Ms Amanda Langford, and my personal favourite, Mr. Raymond Soetaert. He happens to be my husband. I would ask them to please all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three introductions today. With your permission I'd like to start with a very special school, students from which are visiting here today. That school is in my constituency, so it is my pleasure to introduce 17 grade 10 students from l'ecole Maurice-Lavallee school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Ms Catherine Deren.

Mr. Speaker, this school is a very special, very outstanding school. Let me just indicate a few of the great achievements of this school last year. One of her students, Marie Franz-Carriere*, was the proud winner of an essay contest in 1999 on being a Canadian. The school also won the junior high basketball championship in '99. It also won four prizes at the Kananaskis drama festival in 1999, and the last one, the school publishes La Griffé, the best student paper in western Canada.

The students are sitting in the members' gallery. I'll ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The second set of guests, Mr. Speaker, are the citizens opposed to the legalization of private, for-profit hospitals. They are Helen Achten, Mike and Trudy Aldridge, Larry Derkach, Anita Kamal, Therese Kracher, Euneke Lorberg, Cecily Mills, Olga Mattis, Blanche McKnight, Eva-Maria Nelson, and Bob Settle. I think they are seated on both sides of the House. I'll ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The last introduction, Mr. Speaker, with your permission, is Bill Kobluk, a retired high school teacher and a former NDP candidate in the city in the provincial election, and Dr. Julian Laychuk, professor emeritus, Russian and Germanic studies, University of Calgary and resident of Calgary-Foothills. I'll ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

MR. THURBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was sitting here doing a little bit of work, and I happened to notice that I had a constituent that snuck into your gallery. I would like to take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you to the members of the House my predecessor, Shirley Cripps, who was an MLA for that area before I was. I'd like, Shirley, for you to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure this afternoon to introduce some constituents of mine. They are Dr. MacDougall and Mrs. MacDougall. For those who don't know the MacDougalls, they are strong supporters of public education. Dr. MacDougall was the former chair of the Edmonton separate school board, and he also plays a mean bagpipe and looks great in a kilt. With them is a student from Korea, Mr. Taejin Jeong. If they could please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly our daughter Jacqueline, who is going to be heading to the University of Chile in Santiago to do a semester's study from the University of Alberta, and my husband, Jack. They are in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier denied Albertans answers to the questions when he was confronted with the truth within his own cabinet documents describing his private hospital policy. Now it appears that he's running away from even sponsoring his own private hospitals bill. My questions are to the Premier. Why is the Premier running away from sponsoring his own private hospitals legislation?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm not running away. As a matter of fact, I sponsored Bill 1, which was a very significant bill, to put $500 million into engineering and science research. That to me represents the future, whereas the official Leader of the Opposition wants to talk about the past. And she should.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, is the Premier standing in this Assembly and saying that he is going to sponsor his own private hospitals legislation or not? Tell the truth.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it's not private hospital legislation. I allude to Hansard yesterday, where the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition said:

The Premier has talked about the possibility of the Official Opposition supporting the legislation which the government is about to bring in. Well, I think that possibility does exist.

That's dangerous; right?

I actually think that possibility exists if this government brings in legislation which is going to control the growth, control the quantity, and control the quality of some off-site services. If it's documented how that's going to be done, we might support that legislation.

*This spelling could not be verified at the time of publication.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I say to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition: stay tuned.

MRS. MacBETH: So, Mr. Speaker, why is this Premier appointing truth squads when he censors access from Albertans to his own private hospital policy with its blank pages? Why does he need his truth squads?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the media – and the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was there – yesterday was an unfortunate use of words. It's now called the health information panel.

Mr. Speaker, basically we want to get the facts out, and we want to have a reasonable, rational discussion on this particular issue. It's very, very important.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, we want to get the facts out too, and it's interesting to look at the government's document with its blank pages. No facts, just blank pages, and for a document, frankly, that says so little, it says volumes about this government. This is from the document which we tabled yesterday, which of course is from the health information services of the department of health. Key Points: Focus Groups on Private Hospitals.

On October 21, 22 and 23 six focus groups involving approximately 65 Albertans were conducted in Edmonton, Calgary and Lethbridge (2 groups in each location) to discuss the proposed "policy statement" on the future role of private hospitals in Alberta. The main themes and issues raised in these focus groups were:

But that's where the censor stepped in, Mr. Speaker. The rest of it is just blank. So my questions are for the Premier. Did the focus groups tell this government that the words "private hospital" are unacceptable to Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Really, I have no idea, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't privy to the focus groups.

Relative to the specifics of the FOIP request, I'll have the hon. minister reply. [interjections]

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, yes, I would like certainly to reply. I think one of the very important points that should be made in this Legislature at this time . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Health and Wellness, please. The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness does have the floor, and the chair would like to hear the answer, and the only way the chair can hear the answer is if certain people zipped it.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think this Legislative Assembly, acting on behalf of the people of the province, debated long and thoroughly the establishment of our current Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy legislation, and it was a debate on that particular piece of legislation that was long and I think also thorough.

I think it is important, though, at this particular time, in response to the question from the Leader of the Opposition, to point out that on page 2346 of Hansard the Member for Rocky Mountain House moved third reading of Bill 18, as it was called at that time. There was a call to all members of the Assembly, and on final approval that bill passed unanimously. That means, I think, that it was a very constructive and a very rare time in the history of the Assembly when all people agreed upon a piece of legislation. Of course, any legislation passed in this Assembly is the law of the province and must be adhered to.

Mr. Speaker, I think that background is very important to the question, and that is that the Department of Health and Wellness adhered very rigorously and correctly to the rules that were established under the FOIP legislation and in filing the documentation the Leader of the Opposition is quoting from.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, what that gobbledygook just said was that the public interest of Albertans is to hide the truth from them.

The question is: did the focus groups tell the government that "private hospitals" was a term unacceptable to the people of this province?

MR. KLEIN: Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, the truth is in the bill, and the truth is in the law, and the law will say that the legislation will confirm Alberta's commitment to publicly funded health care and to the principles of the Canada Health Act. It will ban private hospitals. It will bring surgical facilities under the control of the public health system. It will give health authorities one more option for delivering services to relieve pain and suffering. Facilities will not be able to charge patients for medically necessary services. Queue jumping will be illegal, and we believe it's the right thing to do.

Now, all of those principles will be in the legislation, and I would think the Liberal opposition will support it.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, did the focus groups tell the government that if they called it a private, overnight extended-stay surgical facility, somehow they might be able to bluff their way through banning private hospital language? Is that what the focus groups told them?

MR. KLEIN: You know, it's a moot point. As we see this legislation through, Mr. Speaker, the proof will be in the legislation, which will go to every household and which will have as a matter of principle the banning of private hospitals, bringing surgical facilities under the control of the public health system. Health authorities have one more option for delivering services to relieve pain and suffering. Facilities will not be able to charge patients for medically necessary services. Queue jumping will be illegal. That's the bill.

THE SPEAKER: Third main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Premier has a choice. He can continue to duck and spin, or he can tell Albertans the truth. So my question is: isn't it true that a private, overnight stay, extended stay surgical facility is in truth a private hospital?

2:00

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, a hospital is a hospital. A surgical facility is a surgical facility.

This hon. member knows all about surgical facilities. In 1991 the Morgentaler clinic started up in Edmonton under her watch as the minister of health, Mr. Speaker. In 1992 the Kensington therapeutic abortion clinic started up under her watch; the Gimbel eye clinic in Edmonton, 1990. The Mitchell Eye Centre: well it started in 1969, but she didn't do anything to close it down. The Northern Alberta Eye Institute Inc., 1990, Edmonton; the Coronation Day Surgery Centre Ltd., under her watch; the Surgical Centres Inc., Foothills, 1990, under her watch; the Surgical Centres, Southland, under her watch; the Rockyview surgical centre; the Banff outpatient surgery centre, plastic surgery only, under her watch.

You know, what is she talking about? What is she talking about? Is she talking about the kinds of things that she allowed, promoted, and fostered during her watch as minister of health?

MRS. MacBETH: Duck and spin, Mr. Speaker, duck and spin. Not one of those is overnight stay.

Does this Premier mean to tell Albertans that they are going to be having major surgeries in a so-called clinic with no emergency and no intensive care backup? Is that what he's telling Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the legislation will be quite clear. The fundamentals related to the legislation will be based on the policy statement that has been released to all Albertans.

Relative to the intricacies of the legislation I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the legislation will be coming forward. I really find it very interesting that the opposition will probably have nothing to talk about once the legislation is in, because they're having a wide range of speculation about the legislation which goes far beyond the policy statement on which the legislation was built.

Nevertheless we are, yes, speaking in the legislation to the approval of surgical clinics and putting in place something which we have not had properly enshrined in legislation, Mr. Speaker: the rules and regulations with respect to the current surgical clinics, the cataract surgeries, the cancerous growth surgical facilities that are currently in place. We want to put in place what is a legislative gap right now, legislation to correct that in terms of regulation and governance.

And, yes, we intend to put in place legislation which will put clear direction, clear rules in place for surgical clinics providing overnight stays which deal with a particular area of health care, Mr. Speaker. We think there's a potential there for innovation and efficiency, and that will be judged by the regional health authorities.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, if this Premier seems so sure about what's going to be in his legislation and this minister of health seems so sure about what's going to be in this legislation, why is it taking so long for that legislation to come into this Assembly? [interjections]

MR. KLEIN: My colleagues have already provided the answer. This is day two.

THE SPEAKER: The interim leader of the third party.

Health Resource Group Inc.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has the floor.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier said in this House that the government is not involved with HRG in any way, shape, or form. The board minutes of HRG that I tabled in this House just today tell a very different story. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier confirm or deny that HRG has within the past year lobbied members of the Calgary caucus in pursuit of expanding its private, for-profit health care business?

MR. KLEIN: I have no idea. [interjections] No. I have no idea. I don't know. There are 64 of us.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier obviously has decided not to answer my first question. Let me try another one. If, as the Premier said yesterday, HRG is only doing uninsured and WCB services and denied any government involvement with WCB, why do HRG board minutes say that due to the shutdown of seven of the 14 operating rooms at the Peter Lougheed hospital during the summer of last year, "an agreement has been concluded at $275/hr. hour for the use of the surgery suites at HRG"?

MR. KLEIN: I have no idea, but I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it would probably be more than a year ago, but I have met with the Health Resource Group. I remember the content of the last meeting that I had with them. Yes, they had the idea that they felt they had a service to offer to the public health care system. I said that there's no way we could go ahead and we didn't intend to go ahead without having a proper framework in place with respect to governing these kinds of situations.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if in view of the minister of health's statement the Premier would like to retract his statement that he made to the House yesterday.

My last question . . .

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, no, I won't retract anything. As a matter of fact, when you talk about HRG lobbying and speaking to various members of caucus, I understand that they had the former leader of the ND opposition down for a daylong tour. When we had lunch, she told me that, and she said that there was nothing wrong with the facility but politically she had to oppose it. That was from Pam directly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Medically Required Services

MRS. LAING: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. Could the minister advise what action is being taken to address the concerns of Albertans that they will have to pay for medically necessary cataract surgery?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, we do not have, as has been identified to the Assembly before, the proper regulations and legislation in place to set definitive rules with respect to cataract surgeries offered in independent or private clinics. We do have a policy statement, however, which has to a large degree been adhered to at this particular point in time. The policy statement deals with individuals being able to access medically necessary cataract surgery through a private clinic provided that clinic has a contract with the regional health authority whereby the facility fee is paid under the contract and the doctor is paid under the AMA agreement. Therefore, there would be no cost to the individual for the medically required service of cataract surgery.

MRS. LAING: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental question is also to the same minister. If the publicly funded health system pays for cataract surgery, why are patients in some communities required to pay for the soft or foldable lenses while in other communities those lenses are provided free of charge?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the requirement is that there is a lens provided as a basic appliance I think it's called, and that is provided free of charge. It is what is deemed to be medically required. The hon. member is quite correct that there is some inconsistency across the province in terms of what certain physicians deem to be the type of appliance or the type of lens that they want to use and provide free of charge.

Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we have under way right now is contact with the College of Physicians and Surgeons to develop and to verify certain clinical practice guidelines so that there is a standard of appliances or of implants that is agreed to across the province, and when that standard is officially in place, Alberta Health and Wellness will make sure it applies consistently across the province.

MRS. LAING: My last question, Mr. Speaker, again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: what action is government going to take to protect Albertans from any unethical or illegal practices in terms of patients being pressured into paying for goods or services they don't really need?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, perhaps not in great detail but certainly implied in the code of ethics of physicians and other health care practitioners in this province, I think that this is not at all an appropriate practice. However, I would like to assure this Assembly that in the upcoming legislation with respect to the whole health care system and specifically the issues that have been discussed in question period today, this is perhaps an area which has not been given its proper priority, but we will be addressing that particular concern in that legislation to make sure there is equitable access and equitable treatment for medically required services and appliances across this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Freedom of Information

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to go back to the infamous document with the 30 whited-out pages. Now, as the Premier will recall from his 1993 flagship bill, when it comes to freedom of information, there are discretionary exceptions where a minister may allow information to be disclosed, and there are a few mandatory exceptions. With the 30 whited-out pages in all but four tiny cases the exception cited was a discretionary exception. So my question is to the Premier right now. Why is it, Mr. Premier, that your government, when it had the choice and was permitted by provincial law to release that information, chose not to? Why did you exercise that discretion, Mr. Premier?

MR. KLEIN: Well, first of all, I didn't exercise any discretion in this particular . . . [interjections] No, Mr. Speaker. The FOIP request did not come through my office. The FOIP request came from the Liberals, as I understand it, to the department of health. It had absolutely nothing to do with my department.

I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I beg your indulgence here. We in Alberta Health and Wellness take seriously the FOIP legislation.

We proceed according to its rules, and we did so in this particular case.

If I might, Mr. Speaker, I could refer the overall policy regarding FOIP and the legislation to the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: There are limited reasons for nondisclosure of information under FOIP, and certainly if the requester is really so concerned about the information and they've made the FOIP request, they always have the opportunity to appeal to the commissioner. They well know that, and certainly given how familiar the opposition is with the FOIP Act, I'm sure they know very well about the discretionary appeal that's there.

Certainly there is an opportunity to take it to the next level if indeed there is concern that the minister has been nondiscretionary in his release of the information. The FOIP Act has allowed for a very clear process to be followed, and ultimately I'm sure the hon. member is quite aware of that process, because he was an integral part of the discussions during the passage of the FOIP Act.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, this has all happened on that Premier's watch.

My follow-up question would be to the Premier again. Given, Mr. Speaker, that four times an exception was claimed, called a cabinet confidence, and given that a cabinet confidence falls away, disappears once the decision is made by cabinet, as it was when the policy statement was issued last November, why has this government refused to share that information with Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I take it that all of the officials in the Department of Health and Wellness complied with the principles and the law of the freedom of information legislation. This is a very interesting piece of legislation that was supported by the Liberal opposition, as the hon. minister pointed out.

You know, it's very, very strange. When we develop policy, there are certain things under FOIP that are confidential and that are privileged, and one of the strange things about it is that when the Liberals are developing policy, they don't share anything with anyone. They're unFOIPable. Right? They talk about open and honesty. They share absolutely nothing.

MR. DICKSON: The Liberals aren't dismantling our public health care system.

My final question to the Premier would be this: given that section 31 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act obligates "the head of a public body" – and that would include the Premier – to disclose information where there's "a risk of significant harm" to the public or where the information is "clearly in the public interest," why would this Premier not invoke the public interest override and share that information and share it now?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we will share all the information that is required under FOIP legislation.

Notwithstanding legislation that applies to the government, will this hon. member commit in this House today to share all the documents relevant to policy development as it relates to the Liberal party? Will he do that?

North American Free Trade Agreement

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, one of the common questions that I get on the policy for allowing regional health authorities to contract out health services has to do with the North American free trade agreement. My questions today are to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Will the minister advise the Assembly what provisions are contained in the North American free trade agreement with respect to health care?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, there has been an alarmist analysis of the dangers of NAFTA for Canadians and social programs for about 15 years. That's about when the negotiations commenced. I think it's time we actually dealt with the facts of what is in NAFTA, and I'll endeavour to do that for the hon. member today.

In fact, the provisions of NAFTA offer triple protection for our health care system. Number one, there is a NAFTA obligation to deal with national treatment, and while it generally treats American and Mexican service providers no less favourably than Canadians, it does not – and I repeat not – require Alberta to sign a contract with every service provider even if one is signed at some point.

Two, NAFTA obligations do not apply to provincial or state governments. They apply federally only. That means that provinces have the right and can discriminate on the basis of nationality for contracts for service provision.

Thirdly, and the most important one, Mr. Speaker – and this is the one the hon. member I think would want to relay to those who are concerned – there is a complete carve-out, or reservation, you may call it in their terminology, for the public health sector in NAFTA, and the Canadian government signed that reservation, ensured that that reservation was in place. [interjection]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, it seems that at least one member, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, wants to participate in a debate. I want to remind the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview that this is not a debate.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude very quickly on the carve-out. The carve-out does protect the Canadian social services sector as long as the services are established or maintained for a public purpose. Public purpose does not mean that the service must be entirely publicly provided, but it does mean that the public service that is provided is funded publicly to fit the carve-out. The issue on the carve-out is public access, not ownership. That is very clear in NAFTA.

One last thing I should point out on NAFTA, a point of interest. There has been no American interest, problem, or complaint on the Canadian social or health service issue since NAFTA came in.

Mr. Speaker, I will further, for the use of the hon. member and any other member, table a copy listing the reservations, the chapters they apply to, as well as the wording of the carve-out.

MR. DOERKSEN: Given that the carve-out applies to social services for a public purpose, when the regional health authorities contract out health services to private service providers, does this negate government control on health care providers?

MRS. McCLELLAN: No, Mr. Speaker. The policy document that was released last November is very clear. If the regional health authority contracted a service, it would be for a public purpose, and that would be to provide health services to the public. The most important element in this discussion is the purpose of the service and to whom it's provided, not the service provider. Public access is the determining element in this discussion.

MR. DOERKSEN: Okay. My last question is: does the carve-out clause relate primarily to public policy in health, or does it also provide opportunity to control foreign ownership interests?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, we want to be very clear: the carve-out covers the way we treat investors under both the investment and services chapters of NAFTA. Therefore, the province could, if it wished, control foreign ownership services under the provisions of those NAFTA chapters. It is within NAFTA and within our ability to do that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc.

Hip Replacement Surgery

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hip surgery is one of the procedures being considered for contracting out. My questions are to the Premier. Can the Premier explain why an operation of three to five hours will not require a facility with an emergency and ICU backup?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, the legislation will clearly define the rules and the parameters under which a regional health authority can contract. Fundamental to the legislation is that it must prove to be cost-efficient, it must prove to reduce waiting lists, and it must prove to alleviate pain and suffering. That's what it's all about.

Mr. Speaker, under the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition's watch abortion clinics were allowed: Morgentaler's in Edmonton and Kensington in Calgary. Eye cataract clinics were allowed: Gimbel, Mitchell, Northern Alberta Eye Institute Inc. Under the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition's watch as minister of health orthopaedics, dermatology, urology, ENT, plastic surgeries were allowed: the Coronation Day Surgery Centre, Surgical Centres Inc., Foothills; Surgical Centres Inc., Southland; Rockyview Surgical Centre; Banff outpatient surgery centre. I don't know if they had all of the, you know, ICU and trauma backups, but she allowed them all.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I know that this is only the second day on this, and I know there's lots of exuberance that comes about from being away from this Assembly for a day or two, but I also want to draw to the attention of hon. members all the rules governing question period. They're located in Beauchesne, and they go on and on and on. The questions should basically deal with matters of urgent situations. They don't ask for opinions.

What's so startling and interesting about this is that we're basically having a debate in question period about something that hasn't happened. [interjection] We don't know. The chair does not know if any legislation is going to come. There is no legislation, yet we're having a debate on legislation. [interjection] Well, the fact is that the chair does not know if there will be any legislation. So let's get on with a question of an urgent, important nature.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect, Mr. Premier, this is about hip operations, and it's important to seniors.

My second question is: why is there a cap on the amount of operating room time and the procedures that orthopedic surgeons can now perform?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I do not micromanage the system, but relative to the specific question I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is an allocation system operating in our major hospitals which do a number of the very serious types of surgery. For instance, from 1992-93 to the present time we've had an increase in organ and bone marrow transplants of 116 percent in terms of volume. Where we've had neurosurgery increase by 19 percent, where we've had very significant increases in orthopedic surgery, the number of hips, the number of knees, and so forth that are done, there does have to be the allocation of surgical time and resources. Therefore, there is a waiting list for orthopedic surgery that is longer than we would like, and various surgical treatments or procedures have to be prioritized.

Mr. Speaker, I do think it's important. This is a concern that we have as a government and one which we are addressing in successive years with more and more funds being directed to these surgeries. There is a greatly increased demand, and we are responding and doing more than ever before in this province in terms of those particular procedures.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. My final question is to the Premier, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier explain why the wait list for surgeries in Edmonton in the public system can be erased with the addition of $4.5 million to that public sector but can't in Calgary?

MR. KLEIN: Again, Mr. Speaker, this is a question that is specific to the Capital regional health authority. The hon. minister is probably more familiar with the situation than I am, and I'll have him respond.

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, in terms of both regional health authorities we have been in discussion with them. We are putting a priority on reducing waiting lists, and we will be increasing very significantly in the coming year the amount of funds committed to what are called provincewide services, which deal in the categories that the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods is mentioning.

I do repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the system is performing well in terms of increasing the volumes of such procedures, and if the member across the way has related this somehow to the proposed legislation and policy statement discussion, the system and approach is the same right now in both regional health authorities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Provincial Treasurer, and it has to do with the financial health of our province. I noticed in the third-quarter update that our revenues are up substantially this year, and the question arises again and again: did the government not anticipate this increase, or why did it not? I'd like to hear your answer for the record, sir.

MR. DAY: Well it's a good question that I guess I could partly answer by saying to the member, "Do you want to be a millionaire?" because the way to become a millionaire is to be able to anticipate where oil and gas prices are going. But it is a fair question.

I can say that about this time last year when we tabled our budget, we had finished a consultation process with major analysts and experts around the world, around Canada, and in this province, and based on their estimates, estimates that we work with in our department of resources and energy, we estimated that the price of oil for the year last year would be $13.50 for WTI. That's U.S. As a matter of fact, all other experts were right in that same range with us, even the Liberals. I'm not saying that they're experts, but they were right in there with us.

As it turned out, Mr. Speaker, as you know, about this time last year oil was about $12.60 a barrel, so when we said $13.50 some people accused us of being optimistic. We were just taking the expert analytical approach at the time. That's basically why we did not anticipate it. The rest of the world didn't anticipate it. The rest of the world is now dealing with oil at close to $30 a barrel.

To protect us from the times when we can't get it perfectly right, we set aside an economic cushion at the start of each year. We figure out what our overall revenues are going to be, we take 3 and a half percent of that, and we set it aside as an economic cushion just to protect us in case oil goes up or down or gas goes up or down.

I should just note quickly, Mr. Speaker, that the other area of unanticipated increase was the amount of personal income tax that came in last year: $646 million more than we had anticipated.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased that you mentioned personal income tax. You have mentioned repeatedly that personal income tax revenues are on the rise, and I thought we were reducing taxes in Alberta. Can you explain why this is happening?

MR. DAY: Well, quite right, Mr. Speaker. We have been consistently reducing tax rates in this province. Premier Klein says consistently that the only way taxes are going in Alberta is down, and the fact of the matter is that we have said consistently that when you reduce taxes, you will invigorate the economy and in fact create more opportunity, more jobs, more people working and paying taxes at a lower rate.

That's the wonderful thing that's been happening over the last few years in Alberta, and certainly last year was no exception: more jobs being created because of our policy of government backing out and creating the environment where people can move ahead, create their hopes and dreams. So, in fact, the member is correct. We took in last year more money in provincial income taxes than the year before, but that was because there were more people working at higher paying jobs, and all of those Albertans were paying a lower tax rate.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Provincial Treasurer. I understand from the fiscal update that we are putting money into the heritage savings trust fund, and I'd like to know why this decision was made.

MR. DAY: Another good question, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that when we talk to people around the province one of the things that continues to surprise us is that many Albertans still are not aware of the size of the heritage savings trust fund and how much income is being earned from that particular fund. As a matter of fact, something over $900 million is coming in from income interest from that fund.

We were able this last year, because income and revenue from all sources were beyond what we were expecting, to take some $230 million and put it into the fund to protect it against the effects of inflation. There's only been two other times since the early 1980s that the province has been able to do that. That's why it went in there, not because the fund is in trouble, but as a matter of fact because it's performing very well. Now it's made even more stable by us being able to protect it from the effects of inflation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier hid from further questions when he was confronted with the truth about the real agenda behind his private health policies. Now it appears that he's running away from even sponsoring his own private hospitals bill. My questions are to the Premier. Isn't it the truth, Mr. Premier, that you won't put your name to the government's private hospitals bill because you don't want to go down in history as a health care separatist, as a destroyer of medicare in Canada?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, a health care separatist. You know, I apologized for truth squad but a health care separatist? My gosh, the preamble to the legislation – and it will come; it will be there – will be absolute adherence to the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act. I mean, that's Canadian. That's not being . . . [interjection] Well, if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora doesn't want to support it, then he'll be un-Canadian. I'll be very much a Canadian, to support those fundamental principles and those policies of the Canada Health Act. That is fundamental to the legislation. If they don't want to support it, then they will be the health care separatists, not me. I'm a Canadian and proud of it, and I support the Canada Health Act.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

THE SPEAKER: I would hope that all members of this Assembly would continue to deal with policy, policy, policy and avoid . . . [interjection] The hon. Minister of Resource Development might just bear with us for a second. I would hope that all hon. members would focus on policy, policy, policy.

Name-calling has no place in this Assembly, none whatsoever. That includes "un-Canadian" and that includes "health care separatists" in the eyes of this chair.

MS OLSEN: Well, isn't it a truth that the Premier won't put his name to the government's private hospitals policy coming forward because he knows it's all about importing American two-tier health care to Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: It's not about that at all, Mr. Speaker. It's about protection of public health care as we know it today. That's what it's about.

MS OLSEN: Okay. Isn't it the truth that the Premier won't put his name to the government's private hospitals policy because he knows it will lead to massive delisting of health insurance services?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, the legislation has not, as you clearly pointed out, been introduced, but if the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness and his associate want me to put my name to that bill, the health protection act, that subscribes to the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act, I'll be glad to put my name to that bill.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Applied Science and Engineering Technologists

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For a change of pace my questions are all to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Given that Alberta has the highest percentage of certified technicians and technologists in the country per capita, will the government enact legislation to recognize the profession of applied science and engineering technology?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the question the member is calling for some legislation. I'd like to remind Mr. Speaker and other members of this Assembly that, in fact, we had brought in legislation at the last session. In that legislation we actually created a new category that would apply to experienced and professional technologists. It's under way as we speak, and we're gaining more experience with it. So far we've been receiving I think fairly positive feedback from those engineering technologists that are involved.

MR. MAGNUS: Mr. Speaker, given then that the government has overhauled or is in the process of overhauling professional legislation for many other fields, why is the government not considering unique legislation for applied science and engineering technologists?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, I think there are a couple of reasons, Mr. Speaker. For the first one I would revert to an earlier answer in the sense that we are currently getting experience with the recent change to legislation, but also I would want to indicate to the hon. member and to all members of this Assembly that it would be a simple thing and a simple matter for us if we had complete agreement by all stakeholders on how we should approach this situation. As we currently stand today, we do not have that total agreement.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once more to the same minister. Given that technologists feel that the public is forced to hire professional engineers for jobs that are better suited to them, current definitions of engineering prevent engineering technologists from providing services they feel they can provide to the public. Will the minister remove barriers to professional practice and allow independent practice by qualified technologists?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, we're not prepared at this moment in time, Mr. Speaker, to go that far. We of course fully support the professional associations that are here in the province. The hon. member is right. We've been working with a number of them on various aspects. In fact, legislation should be forthcoming later this session for the veterinarians. But I must urge the hon. member as best I can that being aware of the current situation, we would ask you to help us in any way you can in getting full support of this qualification from all stakeholders.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, today we'll have five hon. members who will be participating in Recognitions, and we'll begin the process in 30 seconds from now.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Black History Month

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I'd like to recognize the month of February as Black History Month. In Alberta events marking this occasion are co-ordinated by the local chapters of the National Black Coalition of Canada, the NBCCA. I was able to attend several events this year, including the opening ceremonies at Edmonton city hall and the Black Odyssey book launch and reading at the Stanley Milner Library. This event was co-ordinated and cosponsored by the Congress of Black Women and the Edmonton Public Library. I had a fabulous time at both events. The NBCCA puts on a great show for their opening: gospel singers, Movements dance company, steel drums. It was a joyous kick-off.

The book launch was equally great, with lots of Alberta history mixed in with readings of prose and poetry by Cheryl Foggo, Gwen Hooks, and Nigel Darbasie. Musical interludes were provided by music students Jorgianne Talbot and Allison Kwan. I learned a lot, and I had fun doing it.

Other events still to come include a discussion seminar on economic and social challenges on the 25th, a banquet and awards ceremony on the 26th, and a film festival on the 27th. I urge everyone to participate in these events. My congratulations to the National Black Coalition of Canada, Edmonton branch, for a successful event-packed month.

THE SPEAKER: The time limit for recognitions is one minute.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Bert Brown

MS HALEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pride that I rise today to recognize a constituent, a friend and a great Albertan. I'm speaking about Bert Brown, also known as Mr. Triple E. This man single-handedly got more votes in a senatorial election than did all the Alberta federal Liberal candidates in the last federal election. Thanks to the hard work and perseverance by Bert and the triple E committee, Albertans no longer accept the fact that the Canadian Senate needs to be a political dumping ground for patronage appointments. As Albertans we have said that it can be more. It can, if allowed, be used to reflect our beliefs and our values as Albertans.

We have said that the Senate must be in reality a place of sober second thought for legislation impacting Canada. That is the message that is being sent to Ottawa by our senatorial election. It is a message to our Prime Minister that we value democracy, and I hope that you will all join me in asking the Prime Minister to appoint our Senator, Bert Brown, to represent us, a man who has the backing of Albertans, a man who has earned the right to be there.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Dr. Marsha Hanen

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to recognize the appointment of Dr. Marsha Hanen as president of the Sheldon M. Chumir Foundation for Ethics and Leadership. Dr. Hanen brings to the role an impressive background: previously a PhD from Brandeis University in philosophy; academic positions at the University of Pennsylvania, Harvard, Brandeis, Dalhousie, and the University of Calgary; published extensively, including a recent paper on ethics. She has an honorary doctorate of law from York University in 1999.

The Sheldon M. Chumir Foundation for Ethics and Leadership was created from a bequest by Sheldon Chumir, 1940 to 1992, Rhodes scholar, lawyer, businessman, civil libertarian, and a Calgary-Buffalo MLA. Mr. Chumir believed that ethical values are fundamental to a healthy society, and he wished the foundation to operate so as to foster ethical actions in the practical world of government, business, and community. The foundation promotes community-minded action in public life by providing a forum for informed discussion of the ethical dimensions of public issues.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

2000 Alberta Winter Games

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to rise today to bring recognition to the successful and exciting 2000 Alberta Winter Games, the 13th Alberta Winter Games. For the past 24 years the Alberta Winter Games have provided young people with an opportunity to learn about commitment, hard work, leadership, and sportsmanship. These are valuable qualities and are a substantial part of growth and development in sports. Held February 17 to 20 in Strathcona county, Alberta's largest multisport and cultural event welcomed approximately 2,800 athletes and coaches to successfully showcase their athletic ability. An estimated 3,500 volunteers donated their time to organize and stage the games as well, making this event a community success.

Amateur sports systems in the province play an important role in the development of youth. Local, regional, and zone competitions prepare athletes for broader national and international competitions, and this year 665 individuals received medals. This is an outstanding accomplishment for our young athletes, and we're pleased with their hard work and determination. Let's recognize as members of this Assembly the fine athletes who took part in the 13th Alberta Winter Games.

Raging Grannies

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege today to recognize a very special group of seniors, better known as the Raging Grannies. The Raging Grannies are known and respected activists for many worthwhile causes and make their case in entertaining but effective ways. They can often be found out of doors on cold, blustery days raising citizens' awareness on issues of concern such as health care and poverty. They have very capably brought many issues to the attention of media and politicians. They are an engaging and learned group of women who very often go out of their way to assist others. These women are a most valued part of our community and worthy of our deepest respect. I salute them today for their unwavering commitment to public good.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Marriage Amendment Act, 2000

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to begin debate today on Bill 202, the Marriage Amendment Act, 2000. Bill 202 amends the current Marriage Act by adding a preamble, adding a definition, and indicates that the act operates notwithstanding the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The preamble makes three statements that underline the value of marriage as an institution within our society and recognizes that marriage between a man and a woman has a long-standing legal, philosophical, and religious tradition. It is curious that the existing Marriage Act is silent when it comes to defining marriage. It could be that both the definition and importance of marriage at that time were self-evident and that the drafters never imagined that marriage as an important institution in society would ever be challenged as to its worth or even as to its definition.

With the preamble added to the Marriage Act, the Legislature is making statements about its view of the value of marriage. I would like to read them into the record at this point.

Whereas marriage is an institution the maintenance of which in its purity the public is deeply interested in; and

Whereas marriage is the foundation of family and society, without which there would be neither civilization nor progress; and

Whereas marriage between a man and woman has from time immemorial been firmly grounded in our legal tradition, one that is itself a reflection of long standing philosophical and religious traditions.

The wording for the second statement of the preamble is taken from a quotation used by Mr. Justice Gonthier in the 1995 Miron versus Trudel case. In that case Justice Gonthier characterized the family as a foundation of society which, because of its important place in society, deserved the support of legislators.

The wording for the third statement of the preamble is taken from the statement of Justice La Forest in the Egan case, where he held that marriage has from time immemorial been firmly grounded in our legal tradition, one that is itself a reflection of long-standing philosophical and religious traditions. But its ultimate raison d'être transcends all of these and is firmly anchored in the biological and social realities that heterosexual couples have the unique ability to procreate, that most children are the product of these relationships, and that they are generally cared for and nurtured by those who live in that relationship. In this sense, marriage is by nature heterosexual. It would be possible to legally define marriage to include homosexual couples, but this would not change the biological and social realities that underlie the traditional marriage.

The religious tradition of marriage goes back to the account where the Creator made them male and female. He said: for this reason a man will leave his mother and father and be united to his wife, and the two will become one flesh; therefore, what God has joined together, let man not separate. The Creator's view of marriage indicates a complete commitment to the person you are marrying so that each person in the marriage gives of oneself for the benefit of the other. He often uses the marriage relationship as a symbol of His relationship to His people and of His faithfulness to them even when they rejected Him. However, because the religious significance of marriage is understood or at least recognized by members of this Legislature, I will not elaborate further on this aspect.

To make the argument that marriage is in fact more than just religious and philosophical tradition, I have gathered numerous empirical studies from the social science area which conclude that marriage is beneficial. I would like to table this afternoon a document that highlights 33 different research documents that I have used to demonstrate the social science research. The document I table itemizes some of the studies, articles, and references which I have reviewed that demonstrate empirical evidence on a number of indices that support the benefits of marriage not only for the wife and husband in that marriage but which also – and in my view more importantly – benefit the children of the marriage and, finally, benefit society as a whole.

Linda Waite of the University of Chicago wrote a paper in 1995 entitled Does Marriage Matter? Her objective was to pull all of the evidence together in order to inform the reader what their decision about marriage and family potentially means for them. She argues that marriage typically provides important and substantial benefits to individuals and, while not examined in the paper, important benefits to society as well. She notes in the area of healthy behaviour that research indicates that marriage promotes self-regulation of behaviour such as alcohol use, drug use, et cetera, resulting in less risk taking.

The benefit of marriage is a factor in mortality rates, likely due to healthy behaviours, emotional satisfaction, and a greater likelihood of material well-being.

In the area of sexual satisfaction the commitment of persons in marriage to each other brings a higher level of sexual satisfaction. Studies show that in the absence of this level of commitment, survey respondents indicate lower levels of sexual satisfaction compared to their married counterparts.

Yet for me the greatest benefit of marriage has to do with the benefits it provides to children. In a society that values its children as much as we say we do, how can we overlook the fact that on virtually every count children have the best chance of success and well-being when they are raised by their natural father and natural mother, who are committed to each other through marriage? It would seem to me that we promote best practices in medicine because it gives the best outcomes, that we promote best practices in taxation so that the economy remains vibrant, and so on. Government policies are put forward to obtain the best possible results over a whole range of measures. We should therefore also promote best practices in raising children.

Linda Waite in concluding her paper says that social scientists have a responsibility to weigh the evidence on the consequences of social behaviors . . . [and] an obligation to point out the benefits of marriage . . . [and] an obligation to make policy makers aware of the stakes when they pull policy levers.

Sociologist David Papineau, who has studied families extensively, made the following statement: social science research is almost never conclusive; there are always methodological difficulties and stones left unturned; yet in three decades of work as a social scientist, I know of few other bodies of data in which the weight of evidence is so decisively on one side of the issue; on the whole, for children two-parent families are preferable to single parents and stepfamilies.

Having dealt with the preamble, we move briefly to the addition of the definition in Bill 202 where marriage is defined as being "between a man and a woman." This reflects the intent and message of the preamble, which we have already discussed at length. The use of the notwithstanding clause is deliberate in the drafting of this bill. For a brief review on the history of the notwithstanding clause, I refer to the publication of the hon. Peter Lougheed's 1991 Merv Leitch lecture Why a Notwithstanding Clause? It was interesting to note that Mr. Lougheed and his government first introduced a notwithstanding clause in section 2 of the Alberta Bill of Rights in 1972, long before the Charter came into being.

Nine years after the Alberta Bill of Rights, in the debate over the Charter the western Premiers were arguing for the importance of the supremacy of parliament over the appointed judiciary. To appease both sides, Mr. Lougheed introduced the concept of the notwithstanding clause within the Charter of Rights, which of course is now reflected in section 33. He reinforced that position on November 21, 1983, in answer to questions put forth by Mr. Notley. His reply indicated that we, being the Premiers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, did not want to be in the position where public policy was determined by nonelected people. In other words, the Legislatures needed a clause where they could insert their will over the nonelected judiciary.

He goes on in his lecture to examine the concept of notwithstanding at some length and notes that while the Charter raises an unprecedented level of protection of rights and freedoms, it is acknowledged that democratic society at times requires the abrogation of these rights for important reasons.

He also noted that in 1983 the Alberta government declared in advance of a Supreme Court ruling precluding the right of hospital workers to strike that it would invoke the use of the notwithstanding clause if the legislation was deemed invalid.

Janet Hiebert, in her essay Wrestling with Rights, reviews the Charter's effect on legislative decision-making. She presents two different views, one being that the Legislatures use the Charter as a refuge to avoid, delay, or put off difficult and moral decisions. Others feel that judicial review works as a partner with parliament in constitutional interpretations. I think both views have validity and likely depend on the matter at hand.

I would encourage all members of the Legislature to read those two very informative articles.

Given the history and intentions of the notwithstanding clause, it is my view that the use of the notwithstanding clause is a legitimate and in fact instructive mechanism whereby Parliament and the Legislatures can assert their will in matters of important public policy.

Concerning the institution of marriage, the Alberta government has announced that its policy on marriage allows for marriage only between a man and a woman and that the government would oppose any legal challenges to this law, including, if available, use of the notwithstanding clause. The government further asserted that in the case of marriage, use of the notwithstanding clause would be exempt from a referendum. Bill 202, before you today, merely puts that policy into a legislative format and follows through on that commitment.

Some will argue that this bill in effect accomplishes very little since the provincial jurisdiction in this matter is limited to the solemnization of marriage. Others will argue that the provincial government has no role to play in these kinds of social matters. It is my view that governing involves the establishment of policies and legislation which provide the best possible good for the people it serves. I can think of no more important a role for government than to encourage marriage between a man and a woman as a platform from which to build the success of its families, of its children, and of its country.

As each member of this Legislature examines the concept of the bill and as you refer to the legal, philosophical, and religious tradition along with the evidence from social science research, I know you will vote in favour. More importantly, you know that this is a law written on the hearts of all men and women.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. Always an interesting challenge with the first bill that comes forward. Usually when bills come in, we have more of an opportunity to study and review them. It occurs to me that we'll have to try harder in the future to ensure that for the first couple of bills all members have a chance to see the text in sufficient time in advance.

Mr. Speaker, I guess one of the things that we start off with is trying to determine: what's the mischief that this bill would remedy, and what's the purpose of the bill? Our friend from Red Deer-South has fairly pointed out that with the division of powers in Canada there is a limited role for a provincial Legislature in terms of this. The question might be: is it simply to protect the sanctity of marriage, to preserve marriage, to refer solely and exclusively to a legal union between a man and a woman? If that's the goal, then that's a goal that Alberta Liberals support. I think it's a goal that most Albertans support.

I think that the words "marriage" and "spouse" – and I've said this before when we were talking about Bill 12 and the Insurance Act amendment – have centuries-old meanings. They've been invested with importance and meaning for a very, very long time. It's certainly not the part of this member nor I think of any of my colleagues to tell people now that they mean something different, that a marriage that we widely, clearly understand to be a union between a man and a woman is now going to be between two women or two men, whatever. You know, I think the issue is: is this legislation necessary? So let's sort of look and see what the peril is. In what fashion is marriage currently being threatened?

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity in another career before this one to practise a lot of family law, and from my firsthand experience I can tell you that people head towards marriage just as they did in my parents' generation. It's still seen as being a relationship that people want to be part of.

The definition of marriage comes from an 1866 British case that held that marriage is the union of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others. I still think that reflects the concerns of most Albertans, most academics, and the courts. The courts have upheld the constitutionality of that definition. You know, when we see this bill coming forward, is there currently a court decision that has ruled otherwise? Hardly.

The Ontario court, general division, recently upheld in the Layland and Beaulne case the definition of marriage. In that decision a majority of the court said: unions of persons of the same sex are not marriages because of the definition of marriage; I do not think the Charter has that effect. That is referring, of course, to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

In fact, on June 8, 1999, the House of Commons passed with an overwhelming majority a resolution sponsored by Eric Lowther, the Member of Parliament for Calgary Centre. The motion was to this effect:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is necessary, in light of public debate around recent court decisions, to state that marriage is and should remain the union of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others, and that Parliament will take all necessary steps within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada to preserve this definition of marriage in Canada.

I know of no jurisdiction in the world that defines marriage as being something other than one man and one woman. You know, even in Holland and Norway and Denmark, that recognize same-sex relationships, they still are very clear that that's something different than a marriage. In fact, the Norwegian government issued a 1994 statement that said that a same-sex relationship can never be the same as marriage, neither socially nor from a religious point of view. Registered partnerships [as they exist in Norway] do not replace or corrupt the heterosexual marriage, and the opportunity for homosexuals to register their partnerships . . .

As, I say parenthetically, they can in Holland and Norway.

. . . will not lead to more people opting for homosexual relationships other than marriage.

So if one surveys what's going on, I'm not sure that, as it appears our colleague for Red Deer-South apprehends, marriage is under some sort of assault, is in some kind of peril as a consequence of the Charter or action of courts and court decisions. If he knew of cases like that, I expect he would have been happy to marshal that as part of his argument. So let's recognize that that's sort of the context we're dealing with.

Now, if in fact my friend for Red Deer-South is concerned about protecting marriage from some sort of Charter challenge in the future, there's a much better way of doing it than to use the notwithstanding clause. That's the thing I have a problem with. I've stated my position in terms of protecting "marriage" and protecting "spouse."

Does not one recall the furor that ensued when the existing government in this province chose to invoke section 33 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to beat up on the victims of sexual sterilization? I think what that depth and intensity of public response taught us is that people value the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. They don't want to see those rights being suspended hastily by a Legislature.

So we have a couple of ways of protecting marriage if indeed it's under assault, and I don't accept that it is. I don't think there's empirical evidence to suggest that. One is to use the notwithstanding clause, and that's what our friend from Red Deer-South would have us do. But I'm going to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is a far better way of doing it, and I go back to what I'll call the Liberal alternative. When we debated Bill 12 last spring, we put forward this thesis, this proposition, that if you want to protect marriage, if you want to ensure that the word "spouse" continues to mean what we understand it to mean, let's make our legislation in this province Charter-proof.

You know, it's not really tough to do that. We put forward a proposal that would do something similar to what Ian McClelland, the Reform Member of Parliament, suggested, with a major change, which is to recognize that two adults should be able to enter into a contract. If they wish to live in a mutually supportive relationship, they should be able to enter into a contract where certain legal rights and responsibilities would ensue once they enter into that contract.

We developed that model, and one of our points in terms of trying to persuade members to support that Liberal proposal on Bill 12 was to say that this would absolutely make our legislation Charter-proof so that we'd never have to worry about a court under any circumstance coming along and changing it. What the courts are concerned about is not the meaning of a word as much as equality in terms of rights and privileges. If you can create an ability to be able to respect and recognize that two adult Albertans can enter into an arrangement in terms of how they're going to order their affairs and ensure that we let them do that and that we not by law tell them what kind of relationship they can enter into or what they can't, that's a far, far better way, in my respectful submission, in terms of addressing key issues of rights and remedies and responsibilities. That's, frankly, all that the courts are looking for.

I can't conceive of a court that wants to change the term "marriage" or change the term "spouse." The way we prevent that absolutely from happening is by being able to recognize that notion of a domestic partnership. Mr. McClelland from the Reform caucus would have two people have to go and register at a vital statistics office. The Liberal alternative is, I think, a more discreet and more effective one. It just means that two people enter into a simple contract. What could be more basic than that? We put forward that proposal in Bill 12. We said at the time that this could be readily adapted to deal with a host of statutes, and the government said: no, we're not interested. When the Insurance Amendment Act came in the fall of 1999, we put forward the Liberal proposal again, and the government wasn't interested then.

As I say, we have two very different options to I think achieve the end of our friend from Red Deer-South. If he wants to protect marriage and ensure that under no circumstance is that going to be redefined – I don't want to see it redefined; my colleagues don't want to see it redefined – why don't we make the legislation Charter-proof?

The notion of invoking section 33 of the Charter is one of those things – and I mean no disrespect to the sponsor of the bill – that as an approach is not a very creative one, Mr. Speaker. It's not a very creative one.

I think what it does is take what seems like an easy out, when what we're not doing is recognizing those other Albertans who aren't protected in a marriage relationship. This bill only deals with sort of part of the problem. It protects marriages, but it doesn't respect the fact that in the year 2000 – I have lots of constituents, and I'd challenge any member here to tell me that they don't have constituents living in a host of different kinds of relationships.

The Liberal proposal was not necessarily to tie it to a sexual relationship. Two adult people, two adult sisters living together ought to be able to agree by contract to have certain rights apply. You know, we can imagine different kinds of relationships like that. That's the reality in the year 2000. It's not all heterosexual or homosexual couples. I mean, in some respects that's a bit past. I think we've moved past that.

What Alberta Liberals would like to see – and I know that it's a private member's bill and I shouldn't be speaking so casually about Alberta Liberals, but this is the position I suspect some of my colleagues support. We have to find ways in our legislation to ensure that people are treated equally and that we respect their right to enter into different kinds of relationships.

You know, it was the Premier who practically brought tears to my eyes at the unveiling ceremony of the Famous Five historic monument just a block from city hall on 8th Avenue in Calgary. It was the Premier who said:

When we recall the efforts of the Famous Five we're also reminded that the considerable rights and freedoms we enjoy as citizens of this country are truly precious and worthy of our respect and protection.

I don't have my copy of the throne speech handy, but what I remember is that the Lieutenant Governor talked about some values that are essential, that are the basis for this province. One of the values was respect for differences and an ability for Albertans to be able to find ways to work together even though we're different. Maybe a poor paraphrase, but I'm sure, Mr. Speaker, you heard it in that throne speech.

I'm not sure, if we simply pass this bill with the heavy-handed approach to invoke the notwithstanding clause, that we're honouring the comments of the Lieutenant Governor. I'm not sure we're honouring the comments of the Premier, who spoke so eloquently at the Famous Five statue unveiling.

So, Mr. Speaker, I know there are others who want to participate in the debate, but I just find myself wondering why the government would sooner go down the road of using the notwithstanding clause when we've provided them with our meagre resources what I think is a pretty darned good proposal to make legislation Charter-proof. If in fact members of the government caucus who were animated by an interest in making the legislation Charter-proof – why wouldn't they be taking that sort of positive proposal, which addresses equal treatment yet protects marriage, protects spouse? This, I think, is frankly an inferior way of doing it.

You know, reasonable men and women can disagree over how to achieve the end. Our friend from Red Deer-South has his proposal, and some of the Liberal members in this House have suggested different ways. But clearly what we agree on is that marriage should not have its meaning changed. We agree on that. It's simply a question of what's the tool to be able to ensure that happens.

Mr. Speaker, I'd go on and say that when I saw some of the hysteria in the government ranks after the Vriend decision came out and remember that anxious week while the Premier of our province dithered and dallied and tried to decide whether we were going to accept the Vriend decision or not, there were a lot of people who expressed strong views. I got mail from the Canada Family Action Coalition. I got a host of letters and faxes and e-mail from some groups and some individuals. Pretty scary in terms of their focus on this. They wanted to see the notwithstanding clause trotted out, and they wanted to see the heavy artillery roll across the landscape of Alberta and basically bulldoze, mow down, run over anybody who didn't conform to their view of an appropriate relationship.

My concern with a bill like this – and I think it's well intended. I think our friend from Red Deer-South really is just trying to protect marriage. You know, it feeds some of those other kinds of notions that sound a little bit too prescriptive for a province as populous and diverse as we are. This is one of those times when I know, whether you lived in Ponoka or whether you lived in Calgary-Varsity or you lived in downtown Calgary, you recognize that there's a difference between populism and pluralism. We live in a pluralistic community, not a populist regime, and in a pluralistic community that means we have to design legislation and legislative regimes that recognize the differences that exist.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to be looking forward keenly to the debate that ensues. I'm going to be using all of my limited persuasive ability to try and convince my friend from Red Deer-South to make a couple of changes to his legislation that will still achieve what he said he wanted to achieve without dragging out the howitzer, section 33 of the Charter. Maybe we can work together to find ways to make Alberta legislation Charter-proof and ensure that marriage will continue to mean what the Member for Red Deer-South and the Member for Calgary-Buffalo both feel strongly it should be restricted to.

Those are my comments. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the minister responsible for the administration of the Marriage Act I am delighted to be able to participate in this private member's bill, and I would applaud the Member for Red Deer-South for bringing forward this amendment this year. The reason I say that is that I agree with him that in the definitions that are present in the Marriage Act, obviously one was missed, and that was: what is marriage? I do appreciate this amendment, as it's coming forward, that would fit into the preamble of the Marriage Act to clarify that position.

I imagine that at the time it was drafted and crafted and thought out, there was an automatic assumption, as he stated, as to what marriage was. I'm sure there was never any anticipation that that would be questioned down the road. This is an old act and one that isn't brought to the table often, and I do appreciate him bringing it forward.

I also appreciate the reason, I believe, why he has put in after section 1:

- 1.1 This Act operates notwithstanding
 - (a) the provisions of sections 2 and 7 to 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I think he put that in place because, I hope from the arguments that I'm going to present, it seems reasonable that people assumed it was there. So why not have it there and the question not revisited again down the road? It is set in Alberta Statutes and law and everyone knows it and it stays there without question or challenge.

I did a different type of research, Mr. Speaker, on this bill. I did some of the same. I looked at some of the questions that had been raised in other jurisdictions and some of the legal cases that had come forward in those jurisdictions to question what marriage was. But my research focused on a different angle. I talked to young people, teenagers, and asked them what they thought marriage was. I talked to cultural groups and asked them what they thought marriage was. I talked to spiritual groups and asked them what they thought marriage was. Then I brought all of these together to come up with some thoughts on what should or should not be in this bill. In fact, I have to say that, without fail, all three groups came to the conclusion that marriage was a relationship between a man and a woman, period. I can probably go through some of the studies in my research that will show how that has been the case for thousands of years. I appreciated the comments.

I went, of course, through the spiritual groups because marriage really came about, as was stated, either through a spiritual relationship or a cultural relationship or a combination of both. Marriage was something that was adopted by religious groups and cultural groups as a way of life. Some had it as a reason for living and being and others did not, but by and large all had the same purpose. It was a relationship between a man and a woman that could not be broken or amended. We know that in our society that isn't always the case.

I then looked at the reasons for a marriage to break down. Again, without fail, they almost all had the same reason, and they were very strict. I then compared it to our divorce laws in Canada and found that our divorce laws really had anticipated a lot of the cultural and spiritual reasons for marital breakdown but did not really promote that. I just wanted to read into the record a few of the responses on the reasons of some of the groups that I checked with. I had a very interesting chat on the cultural side with people from different ethnic backgrounds.

The Islamic community was very interesting because I didn't have an awareness of this, and I appreciated the openness and candidness that was brought forward when I asked what they thought of marriage. There are some very definitive passages from the Koran that relate to marriage and how marriage involves strictly the union of a man and a woman. I think it would serve members well if they in fact checked with it.

Friends of mine who are members of the Hindu faith and culture, the Ramian, also had some very definitive ideas on marriage and what was not only culturally acceptable but spiritually acceptable to their community.

I also talked with people from the Jewish community, and there are some very definite ideas in the Torah – I may be saying the name of some of these religious books wrong. The Torah very much dealt with the relationship of a marriage between a man and a woman and how very special that was to the Jewish faith, which I absolutely admire.

I then talked to people from the Buddhist faith and asked them about the relationship of marriage and the togetherness that it presented to the family in the whole. Again, Mr. Speaker, that relationship was special and between men and women.

I talked to people from the Mormon community and asked them what they felt about marriage and men and women being married spiritually and culturally. Again, the strength of that unit coming together was phenomenal.

I then talked to one of the priests of the Chinese Pentecostal diocese, in fact the fellow who was the head of it. He was kind enough to share some of the doctrines of the church and the community with me as well, which I wasn't aware of. I'm going through this because I found this very interesting and very informative. He sent me a passage on the positions and practices of the Pentecostal association which I think summarized, in essence, the basis for all of these groups' beliefs, spiritually and culturally, and how they came together.

3:30

I'd like to just put this in the record, Mr. Speaker, because I think it is a summary of what the definition of marriage really is. This is from the Pentecostal Assemblies of Canada. They say:

Marriage is a provision of God whereby a man and a woman enter into a lifelong relationship through a marriage ceremony which is recognized by the church and legally sanctioned by the state.

Marriage establishes a "one-flesh" relationship which goes beyond a physical union and is more than either a temporary relationship of convenience intended to provide personal pleasure or a contract which binds two people together in a legal partnership. Marriage establishes an emotional and spiritual oneness which enables both partners to respond to the spiritual, physical and social needs of the other . . .

Marriage is to be an exclusive relationship that is maintained in purity. It is intended by God to be a permanent relationship. It is a witness to the world of the relationship between Christ and His Church.

Marriage requires a commitment of love, perseverance and faith.

When I looked at this and asked people, whether they were of my own faith, of the Christian faith, in the Anglican church, whether it was in the Pentecostal church, whether it was through the Islam faith, the Muslim faith, the Buddhist faith, the Jewish faith, or the Hindu faith, they all came back to the same thing: the importance of the relationship spiritually between a man and a woman.

So when I look at this preamble, I think that all we are doing here, quite frankly, is what our society would want us to do. I asked the question in each case: is it important to have in the Marriage Act a definition of marriage? The answer from all groups was: yes, that is important. Was it important to have it protected by the notwithstanding clause so that it couldn't be challenged down the road? Yes, that was important. No one wanted to have challenges come forward when it wasn't necessary and it was the norm. So I supported this.

The interesting thing, though, Mr. Speaker, was the one group that I found that I think we need to carry this forward to were the young people. I have, as you know, a young family and quite often have a number of teenagers in my home. En route to a hockey game the other night I asked the group what marriage means to them? For the first time in the car there was dead silence. One of the friends, who is 17, said: that's a tough question. And I said: "Well, I hope you remember that when it comes time for you to enter into it, you think hard and long before you enter into the relationship. But can you give me an idea from your perspective as to what it is?"

Of the kids that were there, some said: well, you get married so you can have kids. Others said: you get married cause someone's your friend. Others said: you get married because you want to be with that person forever. Others said: well, marriage is passe. So there was a variety pack. They said: well, what really is marriage? So it gives an adult time to reflect on what is marriage.

To me marriage is probably the most important institution that you enter into. It should be lifelong; it isn't always. I think the hon. Member for Red Deer-South identified that there is an impact on marital breakdown and the lack of marriage with children. I've seen that firsthand, and I agree with him. It is devastating for children, but it's not something that can't be overcome. It's something that can be worked on. Why take that away from the children? Why not give them that solid stability within this act so it can't be changed, can't be worked on, can't be challenged? Put it in the act. I'm sure it should have been there from the very beginning. It was overlooked. Let's put it there and leave it there and leave it unchallengeable.

That's why I would support this bill, and I really commend the Member for Red Deer-South for bringing this forward. I know his commitment to family and marriage is very strong, and I agree with him wholeheartedly, as do the number of communities and cultural groups that I have checked with. They are all in favour of this and in fact were surprised that it wasn't already there. So I said that we would be bringing it forward and that hopefully the members of our Assembly will in fact endorse it. I told them we would be sending them copies of the Hansard to see the support, and they're looking forward to that.

Those are my few comments. I do support this, and I thank again the Member for Red Deer-South for bringing this forward.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in second reading on Bill 202, the Marriage Amendment Act, 2000. A couple of observations as I begin this. The first is that I'm impressed with the sincerity and the thoughtfulness and the depth of feeling and the research that the three speakers preceding me have brought to this debate, the informed language of this debate. It's very encouraging to see. Very thoughtful.

Secondly, I think it's important to note that attempting to debate a bill an hour after it was introduced, having barely seen the text of the bill, is an ongoing frustration for this member of the Assembly. I understand that the government members probably had more time to have a look at the text than other members of the Assembly, but I wanted to make that point.

This bill has really three parts. One is a preamble, the second is a definition, and the third is a mechanism or a process to sort of enforce it. It's dealing with the issue of the definition of marriage, but I think it touches on a number of other areas, and a couple of things have come to mind. I've been jotting down notes as I've listened to others debate it.

There's been some talk of rights. I'd like to mention that I think there's this idea of a bucket of rights, that there's a limited number of rights in the world, the idea that if rights are given to one group, somehow this subtracts them from another group, that somehow rights are finite in themselves. I'd like to dispute that. I fundamentally disagree with that. Let me give you an example of that, because I have found in my experience that when rights are given – and I'm not even specifically speaking here about marriage or non-marriage but about the idea of the rights that we have here.

For example, the rights of the physically disabled. We had a number of adjustments and remedies that we put in place to accommodate persons with disabilities. These were rights that were conferred upon a specific group of people. I think that those rights and accommodations, remedies, and responsibilities in fact benefited everyone. For example, we've got ramps that lead into buildings. You know who else uses those? Moms with strollers and people having difficulty with mobility problems for whatever reason. It isn't just people in wheelchairs or with walkers who take advantage of that. Other people who do not in fact have a physical disability were able to take advantage of it. Those easy-access doors is another example. You know who I see using them? The elderly. I see people with a temporary disability using them.

So we've had a little discussion as part of this debate about rights and conferring rights, and I think it's important to remember that they're not finite and that in some cases rights that were granted to one group of people have in fact enabled many others.

Similarly, the emancipation of women has allowed and encouraged much greater participation of fathers in the lives of their children in a much more intimate and on a daily basis, and I think that's been a good thing as well.

This bill is dealing with the meaning of marriage, and I think that's actually spelled out in here. I have to say that we'd heard a bit about this bill coming. I think it was announced by the member back in the fall. So I was able, like others who have spoken before me, to confer with various constituents of Edmonton-Centre. I have to say that I heard all kinds of things. You know, I have a large gay and lesbian community in Edmonton-Centre, and from members of this community I heard from people who really don't feel very strongly about having a gay and lesbian marriage. It really doesn't matter that much to them. I also heard from people to whom it matters a great deal, and they would like to have access to this.

From people outside of the gay and lesbian community I also heard the same thing. There are some people who care deeply about this. For them it is a sanctity, it is a solemn occasion, it means everything, and it should not be opened up or changed or corrupted. That was the kind of language that was used to me. So some people cared a great deal, and other people really didn't care very much about it. When questioned, they didn't seem to feel very strongly one way or another.

I know that there's a Canada-wide survey that's saying that there is in fact some support for the idea of not limiting formal marriage as defined by legislation to heterosexual couples. More importantly, in that survey what we did see was overwhelming support for remedies and benefits and responsibilities for other kinds of domestic relationships outside of marriage. That's where people were really interested, and I'd like to talk about that for a little bit. I've spoken before, certainly in the debate of Bill 12 and also in the debate we had on the Insurance Act in the fall of 1999, that I do recognize, as I've just said, that some of my constituents in Edmonton-Centre feel very strongly about this, and I have no wish to threaten that.

Certainly the Member for Calgary-Buffalo gave a number of examples of how the concept of marriage could be upheld or left alone. I'm of course referring specifically to the Liberal amendment, that has been offered on two occasions now, with Bill 12 in the spring of '99 and with the Insurance Act in the fall of '99, which really was offering the government a Charter-proof method of being able to offer and ensure remedies and benefits but also responsibilities for people that are in a domestic relationship without threatening or opening up the concept of legalized marriage that we have today, as established by legislation.

We should recognize – and some people have alluded to this already – that in Alberta people exist in many different kinds of relationships. You know, we have first-time married people, we have stepfamilies, we have blended families, we have single-parent families, and we have siblings living together in a long-term, dependent relationship. I always get a little uneasy if there appears to be any sort of drive to say: this is the one and only definition that is ever accepted, and everybody better be like this. I'm really uncomfortable with that because I recognize the diversity of what exists, and I think we need to deal with the diversity of what exists.

Once again, I don't need to stand up here and say that marriage should be threatened in any kind of way, but I do say that we need to deal with what is actually in front of us with the population. If that can be done in a way that leaves marriage alone and leaves those people that feel very strongly about it with their way of thinking, good. So be it.

So I once again encourage this Legislature to consider that opening, that inclusion of others with the Liberal proposal for the partnerships, which very simply was allowing for a contract to take place that would give coverage, would include specified relationships under the benefit of the law and with the remedies and responsibilities that came therein.

Certainly that is the one thing that I've heard the most around this issue. I hear about people who want to know about pension sharing, about property division, about insurance coverage, and about intestate law. Those are all issues that are affecting people's ability to take responsibility for themselves and to look after the loved ones in their family. The law as it stands right now is precluding that, and there are people that want to take that responsibility.

So I think it's important to work on that part that is doable, what is possible and is the right thing to do. It's clear to me from the research that I've done and the research that other members have done in their communities and in their constituencies that we have not reached a point of comfort on the idea of opening up the definition of marriage. There is a variety of opinion there. There is not an overwhelming direction that is being taken.

The third part of this bill – and this is the one that causes me the most concern – is the proposal that the notwithstanding clause be used to enforce this proposed definition of marriage, which quite clearly is saying that marriage would be between a man and a woman – that's it – and it would be enforced that way, that if there were any attempt to do anything else, the notwithstanding clause would come down like a guillotine and cut off any further debate or movement in the law.

I have spoken a number of times in this Assembly about my – it's much greater than discomfort. This is a repugnance about using that notwithstanding clause against any specific group of people. I really believe that is wrong, and I have great difficulty with it. I've noticed that this government does tend to like to narrow things, to get involved in people's intimate, personal lives, set the restrictions, and build that fence to enclose things very specifically. What is the purpose of law? It is to address an issue or a situation to offer a remedy, to confer a responsibility or an expectation of responsibility.

So I find it interesting how often this government wants to mold everyone into following the same dictate.

In Alberta I can remember that not many people approved of Quebec using the notwithstanding clause against the English speakers. In this case that was against a minority in that province. So why would it be okay, then, to use the notwithstanding clause in this instance? I don't think it is. I think that notwithstanding clause is there to be used only in very extraordinary circumstances, and I honestly do not feel that this is the extraordinary circumstance that that calls for.

I'm proud of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I'm proud of the Constitution in this country, and I'm proud of it particularly because it does protect the minorities from the tyranny of the majorities and also protects minorities from the tyranny of other minorities. That's important to who we are as Canadians, and it's important to who I am as an Albertan.

I don't personally believe that the use that's being suggested with this bill was part of an envisioned purpose in having the notwithstanding clause included in the Charter. So I cannot support that part of the bill and the using of the notwithstanding clause to enforce that. I just feel that is wrong. It's stepping beyond what is appropriate for us to be authorizing as a group of legislators and as leaders in the country.

I realize that my time is growing short. I know that others wish to address this issue, and I'm sure I'll have other opportunities to speak to this. It has been a very interesting discussion, and I look forward to what others will be bringing to the debate. Thank you for the opportunity.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Before we proceed, could I have unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce this afternoon three distinguished visitors that are here watching the proceedings in the Legislative Assembly. Earlier this month my family and myself along with the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness and a former colleague in the Legislative Assembly, Andrew Beniuk, had the occasion to celebrate the new year at the Vietnamese Buddhist temple. In the gallery this afternoon we have – and unfortunately I don't have your name written out here – the most reverend from the temple along with Hang Linh and Daniel Zierler* to watch the proceedings in the Legislative Assembly. I would like to welcome you all. The temple is a beautiful and special place that I encourage all Members in the Legislative Assembly to visit. So welcome and thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to speak in strong support of Bill 202, the Marriage Amendment Act, introduced by my hon. colleague from Red Deer-South. I think that the introduction of this bill and the debate around it underlines the importance of private members' bills and the opportunity to bring those bills forward and debate them in this Legislature, and I have always supported that process.

I have appreciated certainly the debate or the contributions, I might say, which is more to the point of this bill, because I think it has been contributions from first the member that introduced the bill and the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I'll have a couple of things that I just want to mention, and I probably will get some reaction either in the House or after or some illumination from the hon. member on a couple of points. I look forward to that, also to the comments from my colleague from Calgary-Foothills and the discussions that she had with the various communities in her area and, of course, the latest contribution from the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Most Albertans I believe understand marriage to be the voluntary union for life of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others. In fact, I think that's used in a number of ceremonies. I think in most marriages there is a mutual, sometimes tacit, sometimes intentionally deferred, sometimes unintentionally deferred, intent to have and to raise children. I think that this biological aspect essentially defines marriage as a heterosexual institution. In fact, in a survey of some thousand Canadians that was conducted I think by the Feedback Research Corporation in 1998, about 58 percent of those surveyed said that a family should be defined as a heterosexual pair, not simply as any pair or any group.

I think what's important in this discussion this afternoon is that this bill is about marriage. It's about the institution of marriage. It is not about benefits or the extension of benefits. Certainly in Canada marriage and divorce are a matter of federal jurisdiction. However, the solemnization and licensing of marriage are matters of provincial jurisdiction, and hence we should discuss those matters here today.

I believe that this bill protects the institution of marriage in Alberta as a fundamental building block of our society, and it will do that by protecting that institution and that activity for heterosexual couples. I believe on the question of who can marry whom that the Alberta government has been clear that it supports that concept, and I believe this government has made it clear that they would oppose any legal challenges to this status up to and including the use of the notwithstanding clause. Here I get into some risk with my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo on speaking to the use of that clause, and I want to spend just a bit of time on that.

Sometimes this clause is called a legislative override, and really what it does in my simplistic layman's thoughts is allow a provincial government to declare a law as in force even if the courts say that law is in violation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. There has been a notwithstanding clause in the Alberta Bill of Rights since its passage in 1972, and it was the first piece of legislation that was introduced, I believe, by the newly elected Lougheed administration at that time. I think what that did was recognize the role – and I think it's a key role – that we as legislators have to play. We're here at the wish of the people to develop policy for the people, and I think that this fundamental, democratic rule should not be undermined by an appointed judiciary. Hence the use of this notwithstanding clause would be an extraordinary legislative action in my opinion, and I believe that the use of it must be rare. I believe that very strongly. I think the use of the notwithstanding clause should be subjected to the closest scrutiny of the people of this province.

But what is equally clear to me is that marriage is so fundamental and that there is such societal consensus that the protection of this institution would not require a referendum. This bill I believe focuses on marriage, who can and cannot get a marriage licence. As I indicated before, this bill is not about benefits or the extension of benefits. I think that's the subject for another discussion.

Now, I read section 2 of the Alberta Bill of Rights, and it's written, as usual, in plain language, but I want to read it into the record.

Every law of Alberta shall, unless it is expressly declared by an Act of the Legislature that it operates notwithstanding the Alberta Bill of Rights, be so construed and applied as not to abrogate, abridge or infringe or to authorize the abrogation, abridgment or infringement of any of the rights or freedoms herein recognized and declared.

Also, section 33 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms contains the notwithstanding clause.

Now, I recall that its inclusion might be considered a compromise. I'm admitting something when I can recall some of this debate, but I recall that the Premiers – I believe it was Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Alberta – argued that a charter was not needed and that an elected parliament should prevail over an appointed judiciary. I believe that was the argument at the time. But as a compromise it was agreed to include a charter of rights with a notwithstanding clause to ensure that legislators and not the courts would determine matters of public policy. This argument is fundamental to my support for the use of that clause in Bill 202.

Some notable people, former Premier Lougheed, described the notwithstanding clause as a balance between two competing interpretations of our democratic system, and those two interpretations are a British historic tradition of parliamentary supremacy and the American tradition of judicially enforced constitutional rights. It has been used in prior times in Canada sparingly and rightly so, but I believe having that notwithstanding clause in our Charter is a Canadian compromise, and I support that. I believe it allows us to protect human rights but also leave legislators room to maintain important collective social arrangements like marriage. Do we as legislators have the final say on important social issues? I believe, as I said earlier, that we are elected by the people to develop policy for the people, and I think we would not be elected long if our policies did not reflect the values and the wishes of the people who elect us. I think that is a given.

I want to just read in – I think I have a moment – one other paragraph that Peter Lougheed included in his 1998 paper Why a Notwithstanding Clause. That was the title.

If an important socio-economic initiative is being obstructed by a Charter interpretation over which reasonable people of good will might disagree, then it may be legitimate for a legislature or Parliament to invoke the override.

Madam Speaker, in my view marriage is one such important socioeconomic initiative, not only for the man and woman undertaking it but also for the society in which we live. Albertans are reasonable people. They are people of goodwill. They are also generally agreed that marriage is between a man and a woman. That is something that is deep and fundamental to us in this province. For this reason and others that I've outlined I am supporting fully Bill 202 to help ensure that the institution of marriage is maintained in Alberta as the foundation of family and society. I urge all members to support this bill, to protect this longstanding legal and religious and cultural tradition from challenge under the Charter.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am delighted to take some opportunity today to rise and speak to Bill 202, the Marriage Amendment Act, 2000, to speak to a few issues actually, first as to why I feel that this act is important. I certainly fully support my colleague from Red Deer-South for the introduction of this act. I'd like to speak as to why this act is important. Also, then I would like to address a few issues more to do with the reasons for why in our society and in all societies traditionally marriage has been enshrined in law and in traditions throughout the world in time, those areas of the definition of family, the public contract, the privileged status of marriage versus the rights, the preferred choice of the citizens of nations, certainly the question of standards versus tolerance, and finally the notwithstanding clause.

With this act, just even this week I had a constituent call me, in light of maybe confusion, with regards to federal legislation being introduced or changes in family laws not necessarily related to marriage, but there is quite a bit of confusion amongst people today with what constitutes a marriage. Despite that the definition hasn't changed, that it is between a man and a woman, there still is a need to help reclarify and reinforce that policy. It's precisely because the definition of marriage is being challenged – and I would say not necessarily before the courts today but certainly in public debate – that people are trying to define or otherwise assess that they could have benefits totally like unto or that they would, if preferenced, have the full status of the definition of marriage to include different relationships. It's precisely because of all the debate in the public and the change in family law that it's important to reclarify the position of the government today.

Our act has been silent, surprisingly enough – and maybe not surprisingly, as others have said – in that it has not included the definition of marriage to mean between a man and a woman. Therefore, certainly to facilitate courts in the future, to facilitate those in the Legislatures of the province in the future, better to have it expressly stated than, given the context of today, where the debate does continue to be brought forward.

For some of my speech today I will refer to quotes that I've taken from a few different individuals: Bruce Hafen, from the World Congress of Families, a speech that he gave in Prague, Czechoslovakia, in March of '97. I'm going to refer to some articles of Lynn Wardle, a paper that he did on the critical analysis of the constitutional claims, and a couple of quotes from William Gairdner on a paper that he developed on the topic of democracy.

Family law can regulate family life by answering two very different questions. So we could say that the first question is: should the law define the kind of relationships and moral commitments that qualify to be protected as families? Secondly, should the state be allowed to intervene in ongoing family life? Recent family law has been saying no to the first question and yes to the second. Thus the trend in most countries today is towards letting people decide for themselves how and when to form and dissolve marriages and parent/child ties.

The law imposes few moral commitments on these laissez-faire relationships, but it then encourages broad state intrusion when trying to bandage the wounds among the personal casualties within the family anarchy it has created. By giving higher priority to personal convenience than to family obligation, this legal approach undermines the family members' entire sense of commitment in belonging to each other. I consider that this pattern, actually established in trend, is backwards, that family law should first exert its authority to define the family and what society expects of marriage partners, parents and children.

Then on the second question, law should limit state authority so that it intervenes only in cases of real abuse in formal families in order to nurture family members' long-term personal growth and stability.

A quote from Neal Maxwell said that we should concentrate on purifying the headwaters of family commitments rather than spending so much energy trying to control downstream pollution. We talk environmentally all the time today with respect to pollution in our streams and in our waters and talk about the treatment plants that we should put in place to ensure that our water quality is there. The same issue is probably more important today given the problems of today's family and the breakdown of many of our traditional families and the stability of the family unit. We ought to concentrate more on purifying the headwaters of what constitutes preparing people for defining the kinds of relationships and commitments that would be both privileged and protected as families.

The major change in family law has facilitated the change in marriage from being a permanent, familistic, social institution to a temporary contractual source of personal fulfillment. Unfortunately, when trouble comes, the party to a contractual marriage seeks happiness by walking away. They marry to obtain benefits and will stay only as long as they're receiving what they bargained for. But when trouble comes to a familistic marriage, the husband and wife work through it. They marry to give and to grow. Law cannot make people love each other, but it certainly can do much to encourage, more than it does now, our willingness even to obey the unenforceable. We need a legal model in which law unapologetically defines the family, marriage, and child/parent ties in a familistic entity that expresses community interests as well as individual needs. Then law should do all that it can to protect this formally structured family from premature intervention while encouraging spouses and parents to stay together when the trials of life do occur.

With respect to the definition of man and woman, the heterosexual dimension of the relationship is at the very core of what makes marriage a unique union and is the reason why marriage is so valuable to individuals and to society. The concept of marriage is founded on the fact that the union of two persons of different gender creates a relationship of unique potential strength and potential value to society. The essence of marriage is the integration of a universe of gender differences profound and subtle, biological and cultural, psychological and genetic associated with sexual identity. Thus the definition of marriage as a cross-gender union is not merely a matter of arbitrary definition or semantic word play; it is fundamental to the concept and nature of marriage itself. I suspect it's for those kinds of reasons that our acts in the past have not defined marriage. We have understood, whether explicitly or implicitly, that marriage does define the heterosexual element.

I would like to speak secondly with regards to the public contract that is and has always been part of marriage. When we look at marriage, it hasn't traditionally been a private contract but very much a public act involving three parties: the man, the woman, and society itself, represented by the state. We might ask even today: should government be involved in the role of sanctifying marriage at all? Why not leave it to the church or other organizations? Should government even have a part to play in the sanctifying of marriage?

I will simply say that the public and the government are a significant and fundamental part of what marriage in society and its benefits are about. It's not simply a private voluntary contract, but it's much more of a social institution whose privileged legal status derives from its social as well as individual benefits, and thus government does have at its core a responsibility to sanction and approve and see that it's a public contract. This attitude enforces a role of law in bridling human passions by establishing society's expectations about the commitments family members have one to another. Bridled love passionately nourishes families, while unbridled passion destroys families. Guests do come to a wedding for a reason.

Wendell Berry says that couples must not live for themselves alone; they must finally turn from their gaze at one another back toward the community. If they had only themselves to consider, one would need not marry, but they say their vows to the community as much as to one another, and the community gathers around them to hear and to wish them well on their behalf and on its own. Pledging themselves to one another until death, they are joined by this vow before the community as no law or contract could ever join them. If the community cannot protect this giving, it can protect nothing. Marriage joins them to one another, to forebears, to descendants, to the community, to Heaven and Earth. It is the fundamental connection without which nothing holds, and trust is its necessity.

It's precisely the public nature of marriage, society's great stake in the outcome and the offspring of each marriage, which distinguishes it from all other relationships and contracts. Marrying makes a public commitment that one accepts responsibility to the community and its values. Society itself must determine which relationships and commitments satisfy these social interests. For this reason, the law must enthrone lifelong, familistic, heterosexual marriage as a crucial element to both personal development and social stability.

Today much is asked with regards to rights and not necessarily easily, but arguments can always be advanced that rights should be part of different groups for a variety of reasons. Marriage was not enshrined necessarily because of a natural right but has always been part of an acknowledgment of the significant benefit that it is to society that it was granted special, privileged status. Law historically gave marriage a preferred position under inheritance tax, property laws, not only because marriage matters to the individual, but because it matters so much to society. To achieve this benefit, our laws have not only tolerated formal, heterosexual marriage; they have endorsed and sponsored it. It's precisely because of the privileged status that our laws form, not what one might argue with regards to rights but certainly because of the tremendous and most fundamental benefit that it plays to the stability of our society.

I'd like to also then speak a little bit about choice. We live very much in a country today where choice and the freedoms of our land have been enshrined. Maybe despite what some would define as the defining characteristic of our country – sometimes it is used as health – I would actually say that the defining characteristics of our country come from the freedoms and the liberties that we've enjoyed and that have provided the foundation for us to supply all that we might choose. It's literally these freedoms that have brought Canada to the greatness that it is.

The liberty that we enjoy is much more in place, though, because of our common-law traditions. We've had centuries of experience and a foundation of values through the common people in practising marriage. It hasn't been something that our society has invented. It has certainly been part of all societies, and this common-law tradition of ours has set great precedents in establishing customs, experience, and developing preferred practices. When we speak of changing or wanting to change anything like unto marriage or even family, we should not be too quick to ignore what common law has provided both in the foundation of law and in tradition and certainly in custom and practice. It's because of these that in our society we choose – it puts a binding force amongst the individuals; it puts a commitment to the man and the woman in marriage. It puts a commitment to ancestors, to descendants, and to neighbours. It's precisely because of common law and the freedoms we enjoy that the voluntary association willingly allows us to bridle our passions in light of the responsibilities that we bear for the good of society and certainly for our own selves.

When we speak of freedoms, it's not so much the freedom to do whatever we want, but it's the ability to bind ourselves by choice. In business we do it by contract; in family we do it by marriage. It's these binding commitments, not necessarily to be able to be both single and married, that allow us the choice of being able to go one path or the other and to bind ourselves to the commitments of that choice.

We also speak somewhat of wanting to be I would say tolerant of many viewpoints. I wouldn't and no one would be in favour of expressing viewpoints that would by discrimination harm another person, but certainly there is an issue of having to decide what are the standards of our society versus what are those acts that we tolerate. Most people intuitively recognize that if the law endorses everything it tolerates, we will eventually tolerate everything and endorse nothing except tolerance itself. I would say that even the simplest moral standards automatically invite judgment enforced by stigma and above all emphasize not the equality of persons and their behaviours but their subtle differences and distinctions.

Today we are informed that this is not in the democratic spirit, that we should not speak of standards but of a diversity of values. Indeed, the democratic equation now insists that because all values are chosen by people of equal worth and rights, all values must be equal in rank. To insist otherwise is to impose your values on mine. However, neither the family nor society as a whole can survive as moral communities without the multitude of positive discriminations in the form of rewards and stigma required to defend some common conception of the good, which is the ongoing job of society to elaborate and articulate.

So the question "Shall we have family at the centre of a good society?" hangs on our prior decision whether we want to encourage virtue in citizens, whether to argue for standards and the social hierarchy this entails or merely just personal values. Policy will naturally follow accordingly. It's not to mean that we don't tolerate, in the sense that we're compassionate toward the ideas and views of others, but it is of prime importance in law to establish what society views is of the good and to establish better practices for better outcomes. For this, all law will have to establish one set of standards or another.

In that regard, I bring you back to marriage; that is, marriage that has both by public contract, by privilege, by choice, by definition, and by intuition set the standard of what constitutes one man and one woman being married. When we try to then be sympathetic to others of other viewpoints and other forms of relationships to make them like unto marriage, it does not mean that tolerance is such that society in having to choose its standards should be changed but that certainly we would not harm those of other differing viewpoints.

I would also like to speak just a little bit with regards to the notwithstanding clause that's in here and whether this really adds to the powers that we might ask. It certainly is argued that the notwithstanding clause, in which sections it may apply, may not have the powers in the end to do what we might ask. As other members have suggested, there are no challenges before the courts at this time. However, the notwithstanding clause does put in place the express policy of the government with regards to letting the public know with clarity, and certainly those that might want to interpret for whatever reason, the express purpose and will of society with regards to marriage, that we do much more than just be silent on the matter.

I'm pleased that we take the approach to send the signals that this is an institution that needs work. It is an institution that has found more failure in recent decades than in past. It is an institution where if we put more time to headwaters, we might resolve further problems of pollution downstream. To this end, I support Bill 202.

Thank you.

MR. DAY: Madam Speaker, in the few minutes allotted to this discussion, I will try and briefly summarize what I think to be the position of my constituents on this, also a position which I share. In looking at the actual bill, I think I'm hearing support for that from some in the House on all sides of the political spectrum. Nobody can say that they want to not support marriage. From that there are concerns, however, that are flowing forward.

The reason marriage, of course, has always had a position of honour down through the centuries is because we in society have recognized that two people form a bond with the original intent, at least in most cases, of being for life – we know it doesn't always work out that way, but that's been the original intent, anyway, down through the ages – and then in that bond take on the responsibility of procreation, not just of procreation but in fact of raising, educating, making sure, and determining that the health and well-being of those children is secured and that they move on to be responsible members of society. That's a fairly comprehensive task, one that takes no small amount of resource – physical, emotional, spiritual, and financial, I might add – but one which human beings down through the centuries and the eons have said in the long run is probably worth it. At least that's the determination of most of us as parents, and I'm glad my parents felt it was a worthwhile exercise also.

In doing that, at different times in society different countries or jurisdictions have also accorded some benefit to that in a tangible financial way. It might be a tax benefit, or it might just be a place of honour in the village square, but there's always been something accorded to that very significant task of procreation and not just passing on the physical heredity of which we are a part but in fact passing on to civilization, one generation to another, that which makes a civilization strong.

Now, throughout time also there have been varying degrees of other types of adult relationships which people choose to become a part of. There have been varying degrees of tolerance for other types of relationships down through civilization, ranging from a lot of tolerance to very little tolerance. I think in today's society it can be safely said that there's a high degree of tolerance for people making other choices of partners, be it life partners or short-term partners or mid-term partners. I think there's a high degree of tolerance for people's choices. The question comes down to according the benefits that have normally been left for the heterosexual married relationship.

Here are two questions I think we have to face. Number one, Madam Speaker: when the majority of our citizens want the system as it is, do we have the mandate as legislators to change it without having our citizens being the ones to say in a very significant way that it should be changed? The second one is that there's no defining – and I know that some people are talking about other types of relationships. Leave the definition of marriage as it is. Most people agree with that, maybe even the Liberals here. Leave it as it is, but allow the tax-supported benefits of different types of relationships to be accrued to others.

There's a concern that's raised there. Number one, is it affordable that we can give tax support and that businesses would be forced to give financial support to a variety of other relationships? It does not just stop at a two person, same-sex relationship. There are many types of relationships that we face today that people make the choice of. We hear about them all the time. In my own constituency – and I've talked about this in the Legislature – I was asked by somebody who had two wives. He was from another country, but he had two wives, and he wanted me to lobby to change the law to accommodate that so there could be tax-supported benefits. I said: I'm sorry; I don't have a mandate from my citizens to do that.

The concern there is that if you take in all the variety of arrangements. I just read in a newspaper publication about two women, same sex, who had a surrogate husband/father provide the semen for the impregnation of one of them. Then they would raise the child, but the surrogate father would live with them, also with his female friend, and they would be a family in their definition. Now, if that's their choice, that is absolutely up to them in a tolerant society. But do we accrue tax-supported benefits to that?

That's the question that we have to answer before we move into changing definitions, and to simply pass more legislation which says that all other forms can be accommodated – I think we need this discussion. The concern is that we can't afford every other form imaginable. What about two men living together for years? They may not be in fact homosexual, just friends, but they have a commitment to stay together. Do we accrue to them tax benefits? How many and to what variety of forms?

Then the concern here – and I'm going as quickly as I can – is that if you allow a variety of other forms, eventually there will always be one relationship somewhere that's not included in the list. They will then challenge in legislation their ability to be funded, and if the challenge is lost in court and the courts say that everybody has to be funded, every relationship or none, then a government may well say: we can't afford it all, so even the marriage relationship as presently defined will no longer have any tax support. That is not a far-flung situation, because we have a challenge to the widow/widower pension that we have right now. What we're saying to widows and widowers who are over 55 is that if you are left at that age because of death . . .

MRS. McCLELLAN: You've got 10 minutes.

MR. DAY: How does that work?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Well, I just checked. Trust me. I don't want you to talk so fast. I can't keep up. My ears are getting lost.

MR. DAY: That present situation is now working its way through the system, and the challenge there is this, Madam Speaker. If somebody who is not a widow or not a widower but is over 55 feels that they, too, should have tax-supported benefits the same as a widow or widower and is successful in their challenge and should the courts determine that the government is discriminating and causes the government to write in the legislation to also accommodate everybody over 55 who's in a tough financial situation to be accorded that pension, the government of the day, possibly this one, might look at the financial implications of that and say: you know, we can't cover everybody, so we will cancel the widow/widower program. I'm saying that could be a possible outcome.

So there's where we have the concerns of those which are the majority, who feel that for centuries civilization and society has felt there should be some special benefit accorded to marriage as presently defined, the time-tested definition, and that moving away from that would actually result in these recognized places of benefit being dissolved either through court action or a variety of challenges.

It is not, Madam Speaker, a case of people who want to support the heterosexual definition being intolerant, being not loving, being disrespectful of other people's choices. It is plainly and simply a matter that we don't have the mandate, as I see it, from our citizens to change this centuries-old definition, nor do we have the mandate, without a full discussion, to stand up and say that we will set up a directory and every other kind of relationship that you can imagine can then qualify.

I know and I understand, for instance, that two males having a same-sex relationship is a definition that some people are wanting to be accommodated in terms of being recognized for tax-funded support. I appreciate that, but how can those two people, those two males in a same-sex relationship, let's say, turn and say to my constituent who has two wives and wants taxpayers' support for really a menage a trois, "No, you don't qualify."? What gives them that right to make that distinction? How could anybody in this House with two friends who are living together, have lived together for years and the only thing they haven't done is actually have sex, say to them, if you're moving beyond the present time-tested, centuries-old definition, "No, you don't qualify; you can't have taxpayer-supported benefits."? How can we make those distinctions once we begin to move beyond the present distinction which society is supporting?

I appreciate the fact that there's been good discussion on this today, and I do hope the message goes out that everybody here, certainly that I have listened to and had the opportunity to hear, has done this in a respectful manner and I think in a caring and loving and tolerant manner in saying that whatever choice people choose to make among adults, let them do that, and let them not be dishonoured for doing that. But when we get into changing the definitions and moving into legislation, it opens up ramifications and implications which need serious consideration. We can't simply move ahead and do these changes without a full understanding of what we're saying and what we're approving.

I appreciate the Member for Red Deer-South bringing this forward. It is interesting, in the venue in which we live and move and operate today, that when somebody talks about this type of thing, they do so at some risk and even face some levels of scorn. It's been a fascinating thing to watch, but I appreciate the fact that that hasn't happened in this Assembly today and that as we continue to speak about these things and as people continue to write and report about them, it not be done in the language of the pejorative but in the language of a serious discussion about something which has been beneficial to the human race for centuries and about which we should be very serious if we consider its alteration.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

[Two members rose]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I actually did see the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat first.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll keep my comments brief, so hopefully we can get to the hon. Minister of Justice shortly.

I as well just want to congratulate the Member for Red Deer-South for bringing this bill forward. I think that if it passes, it marks an important step in what this Legislature says about marriage, the importance of marriage to our society. You know and we all know as we move down this path that marriage is fundamentally important to children, children having a mother and dad in a relationship. I mean, you can talk to almost any schoolteacher and see in the schools the results of broken marriages, broken families, family decline. We see it in the court systems. We see it everywhere in our society.

What we need to do as a government and what all members of the Legislature need to do is to provide ways of supporting and strengthening families. I believe that a bill like this does exactly that. It takes the decision out of the hands of the court to arbitrarily say to Albertans that marriage consists of something different than a heterosexual couple. If that were to happen, then we have in this bill the notwithstanding clause, which certainly could be used and would be used in this case.

So I think it's very worth while. I think it points out again the strength of families. I think there's too much in our society that has broken down families, that places stress on families. I believe it's fundamental. I believe the family is fundamental to our society, fundamental to the strength of our society. If we do not have healthy families, we will not have a healthy society, and I think that is clear from everything that is happening in our society today. So I am pleased to be able to support this bill.

I once again congratulate the member for having the courage to bring this bill forward, and I hope that all members of this House stand and vote unanimously to support this bill.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to speak briefly as well to this bill just to explain to the House and to people why I think we should not be supporting the bill. First of all, I'd like to say that I endorse and agree with the principles set out in the preamble. I believe that marriage is a very, very important institution in our society and that marriage as a union between man and woman is something that doesn't need the force of legislative law to carry it forward. It's an institution, a religious institution. It's a faith institution. It's something that we take to ourselves without the government, either federal or provincial, intruding in our right to do so and intruding in our definition. It's very clear in the common law of this country, without any need of legislative sanction, that marriage is between man and woman.

The problem I have with this act really is threefold. First of all, the question of how you break up a marriage comes under federal law and federal jurisdiction. I have always been a very strong believer that Legislatures and Parliament should stick to their areas of jurisdiction. If there is a jurisdiction for defining marriage, I think that jurisdiction is very clearly in the federal House and not in the provincial House. So I would have to speak against this bill simply because bringing a definition of marriage into the provincial Marriage Act I think would offend that constitutional custom.

I'd also point out that the Marriage Act we have provincially is really sort of like criminal law. I hate to align marriage with criminal law, but it is in a way the right to legislate marriage. The right to legislate criminal law is federal; the operation of it is provincial. So we have a Marriage Act which provides for the giving of licences, the procedures in which we would create a civil marriage, and adding a definition of marriage into that act really has no force or effect. It doesn't do anything other than allow us to have this very important debate, which is, I think, necessary in society, to talk about what marriage is and what our fundamental values are. It doesn't do anything for the law. I think we have to be careful when we're bringing forward laws and regulations to do things which are meaningful in the context of the law.

I know that I'm quickly going to run out of time, so I'll just end by saying that the third concern I have with the act is the use of the notwithstanding clause. It's my firm belief that the notwithstanding clause should be used carefully and specifically because we're dealing with the concept of individual rights. I'm a firm believer that we are all as individuals born with rights. We have all the rights that might be accorded a person. I think that's a fundamental Conservative philosophy. Government by legislating intrudes on our rights as an individual, and it should only intrude on our rights as an individual when it's absolutely necessary for the better functioning of society.

We have developed institutions over time, religious institutions such as marriage, which are very, very important institutions. Those are things that we come to voluntarily as a matter of faith, as a matter of belief, and as a matter of how we see ourselves in a society. But governments should not be involved, in my view, in dealing with my rights as an individual, either giving me rights or purporting to give me rights, because I don't believe government can give anybody rights. I think we start with a full bundle of rights and certainly should not be involved in taking away rights. I hear some pounding from the opposition, but they won't like what I have to say next.

I believe that when you start to define rights that people have, you don't give people more rights. You actually detract from the rights they already have by putting definitions around them. So I'm very concerned about the operations of charters of rights and the corollary of that, the operations of notwithstanding clauses, and I don't think they should be used on a global basis. I think they should be used on a very specific basis and only when it's very clear that a fundamental concept that we want to protect for society's benefit is being challenged.

I'll go back to where I started. I believe fundamentally in the concept of marriage. I believe it goes without saying in legislation that marriage is between a man and a woman. I don't believe that adding this preamble, all the principles of which I agree fundamentally with, adding these principles to the Marriage Act adds anything to the written law of Alberta, because in fact the Marriage Act doesn't deal with the concept of marriage. It deals with the solemnization of marriage. It deals with the process and the forms. Adding the definition doesn't add anything to our law, because first of all the law again very clearly deals simply with the methods of solemnization. Dealing with the notwithstanding clause I think does something on a global basis which should be done more particularly and more specifically on a case-by-case basis.

For those reasons I would encourage people not to vote for this bill, even, in doing so, when we strongly stand in favour of the institution of marriage in our society.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South to close debate.

MR. DOERKSEN: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll just make a few comments in closing. I appreciate the work and the debate this afternoon and the various positions that have been taken. It's been a good discussion. I do also want to put on record and thank Jennifer Peterson for all her work and help on the research for this, and I wanted to make sure I noted that before I forgot.

With respect to the Justice minister's comments, it's always dangerous to disagree with a lawyer when you're not a lawyer. Also, referring to the case that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo referred to earlier, the Layland case, this was a provincial challenge on the basis of solemnization. So for the Justice minister to suggest that this would only apply to a federal jurisdiction – clearly it's not, because it was challenged under provincial legislation. While the ruling was upheld that the couple would not obtain a marriage licence in that case, there was a dissenting opinion which does reflect very much the mind-set that the definition of marriage is very much open to challenge in our court system. It hasn't happened yet, and the reason for the use of the notwithstanding clause at this point is to say at a time before that challenge takes place that we will put into legislation our policy that we have put forward to make it quite clear and to make a statement about the value that we place on marriage.

So, Madam Speaker, with that I will close my comments and assume we'll have more debate when it passes at second reading. Thank you.

Bill 204
Agricultural and Recreational Land
Ownership Amendment Act, 2000

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Bill 204 is the result of the thoughts and ideas of many Albertans. For many years people have expressed a concern over the future of our agricultural businesses, our rural communities, and our next generation of young Alberta farmers.

There appears to be three problems in the farm community today.

One is immediate, and that is the input costs and cash returns. The second, a medium-term problem, is the large land holdings in some of our municipalities and counties. The third is a long-term problem: what does the future look like, and who will hold our land? There is a real fear in rural Alberta that the land producing the primary product from a finite land resource base will be owned or controlled by a few very large operators or corporations. Bill 204 does not attempt to address the first concern. It does reflect the views expressed for many years about the mid- and long-term problems that many see on the horizon.

Let me begin, Madam Speaker, by making it very clear that this bill is not, as some media reports have portrayed, a thinly veiled disguise to attack one religious group. There is no attempt on my part to deny anyone anywhere in Alberta anytime the freedom to practise or worship in a religion of their choice.

I would like to thank those Albertans who have contacted my office supporting this bill and the concept of creating level fields of competition in the pursuit of agriculture. To date over 90 percent of the letters, phone calls, and faxes that I've received are in support of the bill.

Bill 204, the Agricultural and Recreational Land Ownership Amendment Act, 2000, would propose a reasonable restriction on the amount of deeded arable land that could be owned in any one of the 66 municipal districts or counties in Alberta. This ownership would be limited to 15 percent of the total arable acres in the municipality or county by any individual, by any corporation, or by any religious group. In my research for this bill individual or corporate ownership in any municipality did not exceed this 15 percent guideline. The intent of this legislation is to promote independent production by the family farm as we know it today, to promote small businesses in our noncity communities, not to hinder corporate operations, including religious groups.

It is a fact that the number of independent farms in Alberta has decreased over the past 40 years. Those independent farms have helped form the backbone of Alberta's economy and culture. Ever since the very early 1900s settlers from the U.S., England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, and those settlers from Europe moved to Alberta to create our communities. Without them our cities wouldn't exist today.

Farming has become more than a way of life. It's become a big business. The infrastructure, our schools, rural hospitals, post offices, stores, and dealerships rely on the farm. However, I feel we're at a crossroads, Madam Speaker. Consolidations of large land holdings in many parts of the province put these communities and services at risk. Many people have asked me if monopolies or oligopolies are just around the corner. Do we as legislators not have the duty to lay out the road map for our next generation? Free enterprise is a great idea and laudable. But in order to compete, don't the rules of competition have to be the same? I submit that today the starting line has already been moved ahead for the largest operators. Remember, the 15 percent restriction that this bill proposes would not limit the remaining 85 percent of the land that could be bought, sold, or owned by any individual or corporation.

Should we as legislators not be concerned about the potential for multinational companies to own everything from primary production to processing the final product? Do we endorse total ownership from gate to plate in communities that could ultimately be controlled by a handful of corporations? Would the consumer be the beneficiary of an oligopolistic system or of a monopoly? Is there justification to say that there can be reasonable controls on foreign ownership, as there exists today in the prairie provinces, Quebec, P.E.I., as well as the U.S. states, and to not have a reasonable control on Canadian or Alberta-based corporations?

We do compete in a global economy. That's true. However, we already select who those producers will be if they're non-Canadian. Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, Minnesota, and South Dakota already limit corporate ownership in some form or they regulate production. It would appear that they have reacted to the danger of a corporation controlling the primary source of their processed product well in advance.

May I offer for thought to you, Madam Speaker, and to my fellow colleagues in the Legislature some of the ideas that have been expressed to me from residents throughout Alberta. The first question was: will government respond before it's too late to state very clearly if their policies will protect this resource ownership? In light of a nonsubsidy era of free enterprise competition, will all legislators, regardless of political allegiances, let our next generation of rural communities, small businesses, and farms know they're important enough to be maintained and encouraged to continue? As I stated before, my statistical research showed no individual land holdings anywhere near the 15 percent restriction in Alberta. Similarly, although there are some large corporate farms involving equity shareholders across the province, it does not appear that these operations control anywhere near 15 percent of the arable land.

Madam Speaker, may I remind my colleagues that the average municipal district and county in the southern part of Alberta is composed of between 800,000 and one million acres. Fifteen percent of this land base, as proposed in Bill 204, equates to more than 200 sections of land. That's more than 800 quarter sections that could be controlled by any individual, any corporation, or any religious group. It is significant to note that of all of the individual operators and corporations that make up 53,000 farm operations today, there are 162 arms of one church that controls in excess of 1.6 million acres.

I believe it's important to discuss some facts with respect to religious groups. There are those who feel that anytime the subject is raised, it is based on a lack of understanding, a lack of tolerance. It would appear that those same people who demand tolerance and understanding are intolerant themselves when it comes to looking internally at the individual operation. Madam Speaker, Bill 204 would apply to every farming operation regardless of business status.

As I indicated before, there is only one church in Alberta today that approaches the 15 percent, and that's the Hutterian Brethren Church, which was incorporated by a special act of Parliament in 1951. This was and is still today an important act to recognize their freedom to worship, their freedom to be members of their church and follow through with their religion.

It's also important to note Justice Mahoney's comments in the decision Hutterian Brethren Church of Wilson versus the Queen:

Nothing in its objects expressly contemplates that corporation . . . that corporation being the church, Madam Speaker, . . . engaging in any business and, in particular, the business of farming.

There is a fundamental difference that should be remembered and is too often forgotten: religion and commercial farming are not one and the same. Currently in Alberta the Hutterian Brethren Church has 162 arms of the church incorporated as charitable, not-for-profit organizations. The same Justice Mahoney stated that these charitable, not-for-profit organizations, one, are not natural persons, nor does paying income tax affect the ability of an individual in this church to practise their religion; two,

In addition, the evidence establishes that the plaintiff's religious activities, as distinct from its commercial activities, are almost exclusively internal.

So contrary, Madam Speaker, to the method that this particular group incorporates under the Companies Act in Alberta, their sole purpose is to promote their religion for the general betterment of the general public community. The Chief Justice indicated that almost all their activities were "almost exclusively internal." Justice Pratte in the same decision made the observation that the evidence shows that the business of farming for profit – not not for profit but for profit – was the appellant's main activity and most of its resources were used to buy farmland and agricultural equipment.

Madam Speaker, I don't bring these comments to the Legislature to provoke members of this church. I do so to state for the record that unless my research is wrong, this is the only church, the only charitable, not-for-profit corporation in Alberta, that wants religious freedom but is also the single largest farming unit in Alberta, that is also approaching closer than any one of the other groups the 15 percent limitation in one of the 66 municipalities, that I propose in Bill 204.

Albertans question the fairness in this method of incorporation as truly being charitable, not for profit. If there's no advantage to setting up a religious commercial business operation in this manner, Madam Speaker, do we as legislators not have the obligation to encourage all farm operations and small business to similarly incorporate?

Madam Speaker, those of us who were raised and live in small communities shouldn't have to apologize for wanting to maintain the viability of our lifeblood. I will also submit that our independent producers in Alberta are the most efficient when it comes to a gross output per capita comparison. If every producer in Alberta was only producing enough food to sustain ourselves and our families, there would be hundreds and hundreds of thousands of producers. The fact is that every producer is responsible to provide abundant, low-return, quality, safe food for mankind throughout the world. We do so with pride and without referring to our individual, ethnic, cultural, or religious backgrounds. We practise as individual producers our own religious beliefs and cultural or ethnic practices without the benefit of special provisions in law or policy.

Education is an important component of our well-being and our communities as well. We have a public education system that includes the Catholic faith available to our young people. These students receive 100 percent provincial student funding across the board. Throughout the province we also have funding for supporters of private or independent schools. I'm sure that many of us have been in the independent schools and talked to people of the Christian faiths that have their own schools within the counties and MDs from which we come. Their supporters build their own schools, provide busing, power, utilities, and other amenities. These schools receive 60 percent of the public level of funding.

In recent years we have witnessed communities with public schools losing high school programs, junior high programs. We've also seen school grades combined in an attempt and an effort to maintain the public community schools as a service for our rural Albertans.

Ironically we also have a parallel private school system being funded at the 100 percent level on many of the 162 charitable, not-for-profit arms of the church. Is this, Madam Speaker, an attack on one religious group? I believe this is a concession above and beyond reason in today's society. As this particular organization continues to grow, we will witness further pressure on our smaller schools. We'll continue to see the erosion of small businesses in our communities. It goes without saying that it's not the fault of any one religious group, any one corporation, or any one large individual landholder. It is a fact that our farms, especially the farms that we've come to know and call family farms, aren't truly what they were 40 years ago. They have become larger, more efficient, and they're fighting to be sustained.

Will it continue to be equal opportunity for educational opportunity for Albertans or disproportionate funding levels for one unique single group of people whose children are for the most part removed from formal education on their 15th birthday? A reasonable limitation on land ownership would help support the preservation of educational facilities in Small Town, Alberta.

Madam Speaker, that was the text of a prepared statement that I had, but I also wanted to assure everyone here that the issue that I've heard from people from Caslan to Milk River, Alberta, and as recently as Arizona indicates the same thing: we shouldn't be afraid to make a statement in defence of our smaller communities, of our businesses. We should be concerned about the potential for large consolidation of land holdings. We should be concerned about the potential for the monopolies that seem to be waiting to take over.

As you know, we've got the livestock feeding capital of Canada in our riding. Madam Speaker, that livestock feeding capital is controlled by a few very large operators, but many of the people in the surrounding district are also fearful of the day that the large multinational corporations, the Cargills, the IBPs, take over the feeding industry in Alberta.

They're also concerned over the potential that we have now with potato production in Alberta. Accordingly, in Idaho, H.R. Simplot has virtual control on 75 percent of the land and the production of potatoes. P.E.I. has put in a type of legislation to protect the producers from being taken over by the large processing plants. So when I made a fair bit of reference to, Madam Speaker, in this case a religious group, it's by no means limited. It has to do with the preservation of our agricultural independence for production.

I believe, Madam Speaker, that people don't want to hear the terms our way of life, our cultural values, or our family farm, so I'm not going to dwell on those, but I will indicate that many of the constituents have been kind enough to express a very similar train of thought not just to myself but to some of my colleagues. I know it's a very uncomfortable position that I've taken, but I feel that as an MLA representing constituents, not just in our riding but across the province, who have been able or unable to bring the matter up for discussion anywhere that I'm aware of for the past number of years, it is also my duty to inform this Legislature and to make their wishes known, because if we continue to quietly put our heads in the sand and not discuss what people feel is a very, very long-term serious issue, then we won't have served the public well.

Madam Speaker, I know my biggest concern is the future generation and what this province will look like in the next generation or two. We've got many young people that would love to be able to farm, but they can't compete with the capital purchasing power of large corporate groups, and I guess that's part of free enterprise. But by the same token, when our average age on the farm is approaching 57 or 58 years of age, I don't think there's a great opportunity sitting there waiting for our young people to take that giant investment in competing on the world market with capital purchase prices that far outstrip the rate of return.

Madam Speaker, given the hour and the length of my speech already, I want to thank everyone for their kind consideration in listening to my comments. I want to assure everyone again that I only have the best interests of agriculture and rural communities at heart. I will say to the Hutterian Brethren Church of Canada that I am not after their operation. I am concerned as much about their children as I am about any other children.

I would like to move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:21 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, February 23, 2000 8:00 p.m.
Date: 00/02/23

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Please be seated. Before we begin tonight's deliberations, I wonder if we might get unanimous consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this evening on behalf of Pamela Paul, MLA for Edmonton-Castle Downs, and I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 16 visitors from the 180 Cumberland Scouts who are in the gallery. They are accompanied this evening by Mr. Ray Hamilton, Mr. Garry Erdmann, Mr. Harold Petrich, and Mr. Rick Morrison. They're also accompanied by one parent helper, Colin Hamilton. I would ask all scouts in the party and their leaders to please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Consideration of Her Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Haley moved:

That an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 22: Mrs. Nelson]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased this evening to have an opportunity to respond to the throne speech 2000, and I have to start by congratulating the speechwriter, the individual or individuals who crafted the speech that was delivered in this Chamber by the Lieutenant Governor. I think reaching into the past and using an agricultural metaphor was really an important reminder of our roots, and having read some of the material from that First Legislature of Alexander Rutherford and having looked at some of the election materials from that era, the Speech from the Throne rang true. I think it was also a tribute to the background of our recently appointed Lieutenant Governor.

In recent days we've heard two speeches from Lieutenant Governor Hole. In the first she very eloquently at some length expressed her passion and her concern for the young people of our province and in particular for education, and that's understandable given the Lieutenant Governor's background as a parent and as a long-term school trustee.

In the second, the speech where the content had been structured by the government, the reference to education is much briefer. In fact, in looking for the references to the K to 12 education system, there are but 10 lines, and even though the reference is brief, the items that are raised in the Speech from the Throne are very important. Two of them are extremely important.

Let me deal with the first, and that's the issue of class sizes. Last evening the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan and I attended Education Forum 2000 in Fort Saskatchewan. It was sponsored by the ACE parent group. ACE is a parent group dedicated to working at improving school conditions and in particular class size. After the panel members had made presentations, we heard from six schools, and again from each of those six schools we heard reference to class size.

We heard of a grade 1 class with 28 students. We heard of a grade 1/2 split class with 27 students. We heard of a grade 3 class in Win Ferguson school with a size of 32 students. Later in that evening when the microphones were opened for comment from the audience, we heard from a kindergarten teacher with a total of 52 kindergarten youngsters in her two classes. So throughout the evening from the schools and from the parents that spoke, the theme was the same: classes are too large, too large to do the kind of job that they felt needs to be done in working with their youngsters and making sure those youngsters reach their potential.

The information from those parents echoed what we found in an informal survey of class sizes that we conducted across the province. We sent a survey to 1,800 schools, and we are pleased that 5,201 teachers responded to that survey, sending us information about their class sizes. The interesting thing was that those responses came from 245 different communities across the province. So from north to south, east to west we had responses.

Because of the nature of the survey, the way it was done – all we did was fax out the survey to the schools and say: share this with the teachers on your staff, and fax it back to us – some may charge that all we got back were the responses from those teachers that had large classes. That may well be true. We wouldn't deny it. We have no evidence that that's not true. But having heard from 5,000 teachers from those various geographic locations, I have some confidence, when you couple that with the comments we heard from parents last night, the comments we've heard from parents at other forums, and the comments we've heard from the SOS petitioners, that the information we received accurately reflects the picture in terms of class sizes across the province.

We were primarily interested in three questions. We were interested in what percent of kindergarten through grade 3 classrooms have 17 students or fewer, what percent of grade 4 through grade 9 classes have 25 students or less, and, finally, what percent of junior and senior high school teachers have classes which total less than 80 students. So those were the three questions.

We chose those numbers – 17 for the primary grades, 25 for the intermediate grades, and 80 for the junior and senior high schools – because those are the standards used in part by the Pew Foundation and Education Week in the United States. Those are the standards that they use to rank American states and their effort in terms of class size.

It was interesting. Were we being ranked by the Pew Foundation on the basis of the results that we received, about 20 percent of our kindergarten children are in classes of 17 or fewer. So from our sample 80 percent of kindergarten children are attending classes that are larger than 17. In grade 1 the results were rather startling. Less than 5 percent of grade 1 children are in classrooms where the population is 17 or less, 95 percent of them in classrooms of greater than 17. In grade 2 about 6 percent of the sample were in classrooms of 17 or less, and in grade 3 only about 2 percent of students were housed in classes of 17 or less. For grades 4, 5, and 6, when you move up to 25 students as a standard, in grade 4 about 43 percent of the students were in classes of 25 or less, in grade 5 about 40 percent were in classes of 25 or less, and in grade 6 about 37 percent of them were in classes of 25 or fewer. When we heard from the junior high and high school teachers, only about 25 percent of them handled less than 80 students.

I think the usefulness of the survey is to give us a snapshot, if you will, of class sizes in the province. That's why when I saw the Speech from the Throne and class sizes were mentioned, I was delighted. We have to move past the position that was held by the previous minister of education – and I think the government has moved past that position – that class size didn't make a difference. We know now that it really does.

I think the early research in the '80s was somewhat inconclusive. Some of those early research studies were studies that were not done in controlled situations. There were not control groups that could be measured against experimental groups where class sizes were reduced and student achievement tracked. But that's no longer the case. We have some very good evidence from some very large studies south of the border that class size makes a difference. Students in class sizes of 17 and less in K to 3 in particular do better on achievement tests than do their counterparts who are in larger classes. We know it makes a difference in terms of how those students perform.

In 1985 Tennessee's project STAR, the student/teacher achievement ratio, was a four-year study that involved over 7,000 students each year in over 300 classrooms. It was an exceptionally well-designed study, and the results were positive for small classes year after year, kindergarten through 3rd grade, in all subjects, in all settings: rural, inner city, and suburban. The results were similar for both boys and girls. So it didn't matter which group they came from, what their gender was; they made the gains. The results were greater for those in smaller classes. The results were greater for children attending inner-city schools, and the benefits that they were able to track lasted through at least grade 7. So a very large study and one that has been matched by others elsewhere.

The SAGE study in Wisconsin in 1996 and '97 compared youngsters in small classes. They actually varied the classroom arrangements, one teacher to 15 students, two teachers with 30 students, and then four other different arrangements. They tried different configurations and then tested those youngsters on achievement scores to see what made the difference, and again the differences were attributed to class size.

So given that kind of research, the Americans have moved heavily into class size legislation. If you look at the reviews of class size legislation, you'll find that states like Arizona, California, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, New York, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Utah, and Wisconsin now have or are actively considering class size legislation, and that legislation varies in the way it's written. Others have moved to spending massive amounts of money. California began a massive class reduction program in 1996-97. In 1997-98 their program provided school districts with money to reduce class size to 20 students per teacher for 1.9 million children, and it required 18,000 new teachers. So south of the border they're taking class size reduction very, very seriously.

We don't know what Alberta is going to do. We've had it foreshadowed in the throne speech that something is going to be done. I'm not sure it's going to be as ambitious as the Californians; in fact, I'm quite sure it won't be. I hope that whatever we do, we learn from the things that have happened there.

One of the first things that I think we have to address is the whole business of standards. What is the class size that we would like to have for our young children in K to 3, 4 to 6, and in junior and senior high schools? I would urge that we adopt an independent measure, not one that's homegrown, that most people can have confidence in.

I'd also urge that we suggest some targets. Class size reduction is a very, very expensive proposition, and I think we would be well served to look at targets, much as we did in the early '70s, when the government of the day decided they wanted to move teacher education and accreditation from one year, as it was for most elementary schoolteachers, to four years. If you recall, at the time there was a great outcry that the province would never be able to afford it, that it was going to be too expensive. The target was set, and a year at a time the requirements before you could enter a classroom were increased until it arrived at the point where we are today, where a hundred percent of elementary school classroom teachers have at least one university degree, and many of them have two or more. So I think it's that target setting, as we've done in the past, that's an important first step.

I think that target setting allows the kind of planning to go on that hasn't occurred south of the border. They have run into an acute teacher shortage, and there are many teachers in classrooms now in California without teaching credentials. They've run into a space shortage. They created so many new classrooms they don't have the space to house those youngsters, and the pressure on building and infrastructure is really quite incredible. By setting targets, I think we could avoid that kind of difficulty.

I think it's also important, and I heard the Learning minister at a parent forum agree, first of all, that small class sizes K to 3 were very important, and I was delighted, as I think most parents there were, to hear him make that statement. But he followed it up with the observation, when someone asked where the money was going to come from, that that money might be taken from grade 4 to 12th grade classrooms by increasing sizes there and redirecting that money to primary grade classrooms. As parents last night at Fort Saskatchewan reminded us, that's not acceptable. Class sizes need to be reduced across the system.

Last session I had Bill 222, the class size reduction bill, on the Order Paper, and I was very excited about it, but the session was short. I wrote a note to the Minister of Learning suggesting that he might want to support Bill 222, and this is what I got back from the Minister, Mr. Speaker: "If it comes up this session you can count on my support!!" signed by the minister. I saved that note, because this session I have another class size bill, Bill 215. The targets are the same. The only difference is that it calls for full funding for kindergarten. I'm going to suggest to the minister that he might want to write me a similar note about 215, because I'm sure that it will be raised.

I would like to leave class size and briefly dwell on another issue that arose in the throne speech, and that was the reference to parent fund-raising. The previous minister of education was very dismissive of the concerns raised in this Chamber about parent fund-raising and constantly reassured us that that fund-raising was only being done for frills, for extras, and that it wasn't being done for essentials. Last night the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan and I heard again about parent fund-raising fatigue. Parents are tired of fund-raising. I think one of the fathers at that meeting expressed it very well. He said: how many chocolate almonds do I have to eat to keep our school running? It was greeted with applause from the 150 assembled parents who agreed with him. They also were very clear that they were not raising money for extras. They were raising money for basics.

So the reference to parent fund-raising in the Speech from the Throne I hope is not going to result in some regulations that will govern the behaviour of parents but will lead to some substantial funding of the underfunded K to 12 system so that parent fund-raising can again return to those extras that parents like to supply the children in the schools they work with.

The third thing and the thing that's missing is any kind of long-term plan. We see the two references to class size, to fund-raising, but what is missing is any kind of long-term planning for education, any long-term vision, and it's what's been missing since the very day we walked into the Chamber in 1993. I would commend to the government the efforts of the school boards, teachers, and the superintendents of the province and the school business officials in their A Vision and Agenda for Public Education. These people have taken the task of putting forward a vision seriously, and again I commend to the government this publication, because I think it points the way one might expect a responsible Department of Learning to move.

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As has been echoed in the Chamber, it is a privilege to speak on behalf of the government in response to the Speech from the Throne. A number of accolades have been given with respect to the content and the delivery and also, I think, for the promise of the future with the new Lieutenant Governor, who was sworn in a couple of weeks ago.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to focus a few of my comments on what I believe to be at the heart of the Speech from the Throne. It's not a question of a range of issues and items that are at random. It's not about 17 or 18 ministries. It's not about half a dozen task forces whose work comes to the fore at a formal time in our legislative work. This is about the fact that the government chooses to look at a range of issues with an integrated strategy, and I'm very pleased to see that we don't talk about fiscal reform at the expense of our children. We don't talk about higher education at the expense of agriculture. We are looking at the relationships of a healthy workforce. We are talking together about the impacts of a quality education system. We're talking about an economic strategy. Its focus is not simply on job creation but about market development, about international strategies, about where Canada and Alberta places themselves in the international marketplace.

In some of the highlights that the Lieutenant Governor spoke to, which are referenced early on in the speech, she uses about three or four key phrases. One is when she talks about Albertans in the sense of their confidence and the fact that they're an entrepreneurial group of people. That is not a quality that is exclusive to the wealthy. It's not something that is owned only by the young. It is a cross section across all ages, genders, and spectrums of our society. People are confident that if they apply themselves to where their tasks might be, be that education, be that in their seniors' centre, be that in communication on behalf of someone who's less fortunate, the goals and objectives they're trying to achieve will be met. They are entrepreneurial, and that's not seen as simply an economic strategy that people use. Entrepreneurial does have in it a context of innovation, people who are prepared to try and risk different strategies, so therefore I think we have to look at being entrepreneurial as a quality of our human nature and not something that's strictly looked at as an economic element.

The whole concept of self-reliance: you know, it's very interesting that we look at people who are in need and offer them the supports that are available both as a community and as individuals, but the concept of being self-reliant is also about how to access and find ways for our own situations to be improved upon and being resilient in the face of adversity, not necessarily adversity that is caused by someone else but even personal challenges that individuals take on.

We also make note of the fact that we are spiritual people, Mr. Speaker. I think the fact that this Legislature commences every day with a prayer and a hope that as governors of the province of Alberta we will be able to use the spiritual wisdom we have on behalf of our community is something that is worthy of note. I am very pleased to see that in the Speech from the Throne.

The whole concept of looking at our natural environment and some of the environmental and heritage issues that face us as a province. We are a young province, but some of our heritage dates back centuries, thousands of years. Whether you're talking about some of the forest landscape, whether you're talking about its rivers, whether you're talking about newly discovered mineral opportunities, we have incredible resources. There is a commitment within this province to protect those and use them to the advantage of all Albertans.

I think the reason those highlighted comments stand out for me as something worth noting is the fact that we are taking those qualities of individuals, qualities of our systems, qualities of our organizations and applying them on a broad base of policy development. We definitely do have a reputation and a responsibility to continue to lead this country on our fiscal responsibilities. We will be delivering a budget tomorrow that continues to landmark and showcase and identify for all of Canada what can be done when you have your fiscal house in order and the innovation that can come from having discretionary income, the opportunities that arise for individuals when they have resources for their own purpose and not for the needs of government.

The concept of equity: we have a recognition within our financial system and within our supply of programs and services that we have to be fair to all citizens and for all causes in a way that is consistent with the responsibilities we hold as a province. We have to recognize that gender and race and age, areas where your fiscal impact can be compromised or have a different advantage, is not something that we should neglect. We have to be attentive to it. When we look further on in the Speech from the Throne at some of the issues around support for our seniors, some of the support for education, which my colleague just spoke so passionately about, the equity of how we spend our funding and how we collect our funding is a component that should not be lost.

The fact that there has to be a balance between revenues and expenditures: you know, a statement the Premier has been making since he came into power in 1992 as the Premier is that the spending problem is something that we are responsible for and that managing our revenues is at best a situation, with Alberta and its energy resources, that can sometimes be a little bit sporadic but that when you have your spending under control, when you have your priorities in place, and when you have a process to balance the two, you are on track and you're not at risk of falling back into some of the past strategies that have been used.

I want to comment a little bit about the focus that was given to the agricultural community, and needless to say, coming from an urban riding one treads carefully when you start talking about farmers and agriculture, but I have been schooled. I have a few colleagues in the Legislature that remind me what my agricultural limitations might be.

I would like to suggest that what is recognized in the Speech from the Throne is not specifically limited to an agricultural philosophy that is about the prairies. It's not simply about the crop. It's not simply about whether or not the community can deliver on the promises they hope for with respect to their farming commodities. It has to do with the fact that there are real frustrations between this province and our other provincial trading partners with respect to barriers. We do have work to do across international marketing strategies. The value-added component of our agricultural product is integral to our integrated economic strategy. It's not simply about farming and about agriculture as much as it is about the future of the economy of this province and giving it the prominence that that deserves, whether it's the technology of the machinery and the equipment, whether it's the biotechnology with respect to different strains of grain and products that can be harvested, whether it has to do with trade barriers with the European Union. That is the range of issues our agricultural community expects us to speak toward and expects us to champion, and I'm quite excited about the fact that that holistic approach to our agricultural economy was featured and showcased so well in the Speech from the Throne.

Again, as I spoke at the beginning about this integrated strategy, I've had the privilege to do a little bit of work on behalf of the minister of economic development and tourism over the last several months, just completing the tourism destination review report. There is no doubt that in traveling around the province and meeting with the various regions and communities, marketing our tourism strategies, marketing our tourism products, and showcasing what we have to offer in Alberta are keen concerns for many of our communities. Whether it's the Chamber of Commerce, whether it's a local outfitter, whether it's our national parks and our ski organizations, we have a responsibility in our economic strategy to look at tourism in a comprehensive way, and it speaks similar to what I mentioned in agriculture.

It's not just about having visitors come to this province, though they come in droves and they love what they see. It's all about fair exchange rates. It's about having high-class and quality accommodations. It's about programs that they can become involved with. It's about the quality that their tax dollar is being spent on: programs and tourism opportunities. So I'm pleased that some of that tourism work is being recognized and given the showcase that it should in the Speech from the Throne. We are a beautiful province, and we have boundless opportunities when we collectively market that strategy well.

In addition to that, as the House is more than aware, I was recently named as chairman of the MLA liaison for the Alberta Film Commission and last week appointed to their board of directors. I'm delighted to have this opportunity to work on behalf of the film industry in liaising with the various departments within government and on international issues to recognize this emerging industry for all its potential. Again, it's bigger than just location shooting. It's about technology. It's about employment. It's about finance. It's about culture and development and those aspects, and I'm pleased the government continues to recognize this as an emerging issue and part of its overall economic strategy.

Some conversation has already been tabled in the House with respect to the endowment fund, the $500 million and that whole area of initiatives in biosciences, health, and forestry, to name just a few of the areas of technology and research that we'll be exploring. Alberta can be very proud of its track record with the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, that was put in place decades ago and which has returned on its investment significantly for Albertans from a cash point of view and helped to stabilize some of our financial picture.

More important than that is how it's given us the leg up on the biotech industry, on medical research, and carved out a name for Albertans, shared among its postsecondary institutions, shared among its leading teaching hospitals, shared among its colleagues who provide leadership in the areas of research. So we can only expect that a similar marketing strategy and the similar guidelines in this new area will return results for this province to the same extent if not greater.

What's very interesting in the Speech from the Throne is that if you follow it through, not only do we talk about the financial support for these research issues. What you get also is the sense of a recognition of our young people in the employment field, not simply as students but also as young people who are looking for creative ways to be employed, who have to take what they have learned through their education and transfer that into meaningful employment. So the competition for a good-quality employee who is well educated and has skills and assets that an organization can utilize is recognized in the expanded programs to help youth entering the workforce.

This is a very unique initiative to the province. It's been pilot-tested, as you may be aware, over the last couple of months in the larger centres. It's being expanded over the next few days in another announcement. We know that our young people are reaping the benefits of a quality education and an economic environment in which they can participate fully, and the good news about it is that the choices they're making about their employment are targeted and focused to meet their own needs. It's not the job creation model that comes out of Ottawa. It's very much focused on matching a young person's employment interests with the skill sets they have and supporting them to bridge those two issues if there is a gap.

We continue in our financial picture to review the cost of doing business in Alberta. There's no doubt that we have to remain competitive. That was one of the hallmarks of both our Premier and our Treasurer, that we will be the most competitive tax regime in the country. The fact that we have undertaken to review our business taxes to see the implications of that on our employment opportunities, on our market share, on our ability to attract head offices and corporate entities to the province is very important. The review of the provincial fees and charges is another way to look at the cost of doing business in the province and ensure that we continue to be competitive.

In addition to that, we are looking at the component of deregulation on a range of issues. It's consistent with what we've been doing since 1993: what the core business of government is, who should be doing it, and what regulation should be in place to ensure that whatever is provided in the private sector is well monitored and meets the expectations of Albertans on behalf of their government. I think that's an appropriate strategy to have in place, because deregulation is an option we have to move toward. We have different global initiatives, whether it's in energy, whether it's in electricity, whether it's in natural gas. We have a whole range of deregulatory components that have to be considered, and what you need from the government is an appropriate strategy and framework under which that can transpire and an appropriate oversight system so that as you move into that and as you implement, you are not off track.

So those are some of the initiatives that I find very, very important, that I want to highlight for a few minutes in this opportunity to speak to the Speech from the Throne.

I also have a few comments I want to make with respect to Alberta seniors in that they have definitely been a part of the Alberta advantage. They are contributors. They are supporters. They have, like every Albertan, carried the burden of the deficit reduction and debt elimination component. The ability to renew and review the issues that affect them as the aging population changes is something this government can be incredibly proud of. The seniors that I talked to and continue to receive information from have concerns not only about the quality of their health care but about their quality of life. Quite frankly, you can't separate the two.

There are so many other opportunities and options being made available to them that they need to have a comprehensive understanding of what this government is prepared to look at in terms of their needs: some of the work being done in the long-term care strategy, some of the work that's being done with respect to enhancing home care, the community supports and resources, the Alberta Seniors Games, some of the education communities that are developing. I have a large group at Viscount Bennett Centre in my community that is exploring opportunities for seniors, looking at family violence with respect to seniors.

When you look at issues with respect to fiscal dependency and how they will transfer wealth and a whole range of issues that seniors have asked us to look at in a comprehensive way, if any group of people will suffer if we do it in on a piecemeal basis, it would be seniors. So I'm pleased to see that they, too, are recognized specifically in the Speech from the Throne and that they are seen as being an integral part of our community and are quite prepared to assist us in shaping policy for the next generation of Albertans.

I want to just close my comments by making an observation with respect to the children at risk opportunities that are spoken to in the Speech from the Throne. Definitely, healthy families are at the core of our ability to be a healthy society. Some of those initiatives have been spoken to. The work that's been recently done with respect to the Children's Forum, the resiliency campaign through AADAC, some of the issues we're dealing with with respect to fetal alcohol syndrome and that whole early risk and early identification model will reap benefits. Those are not just financial benefits, although those will accrue, but the stability of our communities and of our society. When you have healthy children, it just goes without saying that you are building a very strong foundation.

In the work I have done on family violence, the unspoken tragedy of those domestic disputes deals with the fact that the children are the ones who have to witness and endure not only the horror of some of those circumstances but also the terrible uncertainty of being in shelters, having to flee, dependency on different adults for their economic support and support from an emotional point of view, and how damaged those children can be. Our programs must identify those children who are at risk and do everything possible to bring them in to some sense of normalcy. This is where the resiliency campaign that AADAC has undertaken has a very strong basis in research and support, because when given the needed support at a young age, some of these horrors that our young children have to endure can, fortunately, be turned around, and they can be brought into more productive and healthy lifestyles.

Mr. Speaker, I am very, very proud of the fact that we have a Speech from the Throne that addresses in a comprehensive way a range of issues meeting the needs of Albertans, that because of our monitoring of our financial situation we are able to deal holistically with a range of issues that Albertans expect us to. We are past the piecemeal stage of knee-jerk policy. We are looking at the impacts of the education system on a whole range of departments. We are looking at the success of science and technology across a whole range of sectors. We are looking at public policy. We're looking at deregulation to maximize what we can offer to our community. We have the support of Albertans to continue to proceed in that direction.

So in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would just encourage all members of the Legislature to share this document with their constituents. We get criticized some days that there is no plan, and I find that as kind of a shallow comment to make, because when you read the Speech from the Throne, you see the range of issues, the articulate way in which they are laid out, the expectations for implementation. That indeed is the plan, and it's a good one for Alberta.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to respond to the Speech from the Throne delivered on February 17 by Her Honour the Honourable Lois Hole, Lieutenant Governor, in the Fourth Session of the 24th Legislature.

It was a pleasure to see the new Lieutenant Governor take her seat and radiate dignity and a sense of compassion and affection that she certainly symbolizes for all of us. I want to compliment her for her readiness to accept this important public responsibility after having spent long years of her life in different public positions serving the people of Alberta.

I've known the Lieutenant Governor for many years. I got to know her even more closely over the last three years during our frequent meetings on a variety of occasions. I've been most impressed, and I think we're all very fortunate to have her in the position she occupies today.

Mr. Speaker, this certainly is a throne speech which presents a sort of framework or a restatement, if you wish, of this government's commitments to Albertans with respect to the values that it subscribes to, the values that guide its programs, and it certainly sets the stage for the deliberations of the new century for Alberta. Alberta will soon be 100 years old, and certainly at the turn of the century it's important to re-examine, revisit some of the basic fundamental values and principles that undergird our society, our programs, our government institutions, and our policies.

Mr. Speaker, the speech, well written as it is, is as significant in what it says as in what it doesn't say. The silences, the absences are as important as what's been stated quite clearly and well.

I find on page 2 that baby Micheal was ushered into this Assembly to show our commitment to the children of Alberta, baby Micheal being the millennium child and representative of Alberta's millennium children. The reference that is made there is to the birthright of baby Micheal and his cohorts to "economic opportunity, personal freedom, clear choices, and safe communities."

All well and good, Mr. Speaker, but baby Micheal and others of his age need economic security before they can have economic opportunity. They need strong and caring families before they can learn to exercise personal freedom. They need to have secure schools. They need to have secure guarantees of nutrition and other things that are needed for growth as children before they can exercise clear choices, and certainly safe communities are the context in which our children have the right to grow. That certainly is a precondition.

So the statement on birthrights in my view skips certain other important conditions and important guarantees that we as adults, that we as the government of this province, that we as the Legislature of this province need to give to our children. I find that those are missing here. What we find are sort of nice and pious announcements about economic opportunity and personal freedom and choice but nothing about the economic security that children can have only if their families have that, no guarantees of hot lunches for children who come to school every morning without being fed at home. I had hoped that at least in this new century, when we're trying to renew our commitment to our children, there would be some concrete indication of the way in which we will commit ourselves and our resources, which are available in abundance, to our children and particularly to those children who are in the greatest need. That, I find, is missing in this speech.

Mr. Speaker, again talking about the principles. The principles are very nicely stated here, but there is also a distinction that needs to be made between words and deeds. Any government, including this government, must be judged by not only what it says but what it does. That means its policies and its programs, and I'll come to those in a moment. The principles, the administration of the principles, will have to be judged in the course of the year to see how they translate into concrete policies, be those policies about education, about health, about hospitals, about seniors, about our children, about our environment, or about our economic and development policies in general.

Mr. Speaker, let me turn to these matters in some more concrete ways, but one or two other statements should preface those remarks. The throne speech in many ways is self-congratulatory in tone. There's not even a modest recognition of the problems we need to address in the area of health care: waiting lines, emergency room problems, and the general inability of the health care system to respond to the legitimate and pressing health needs of our population. It would have been nice if, along with some of the accomplishments and some of the statements about what we have achieved, there was some recognition that there are problems to be addressed so that we can then begin to have a public debate on how to address those problems.

There is a certain degree of smugness which seemed to pervade the pages of the throne speech. There's certainly a statement about our growing economy, increasing provincial revenues, but there is no commitment here, as I see it, to achieving a reasonably shared prosperity. The economy may be prosperous, but there have been lots of people who are poor. We know that persistent poverty, endemic poverty, is a major problem, a major challenge that we as Albertans must address together and not leave it to individuals who suffer from the conditions of poverty to be responsible all by themselves for their poverty. So there is this lack of commitment to reasonably shared prosperity as a provincial goal, and that's disappointing, Mr. Speaker, particularly in light of the health of the economy, the general wealth that's being created in the province. The problems are with its distribution, where this wealth ends up.

Turning to some specific themes, Mr. Speaker. The Speech from the Throne is not by and large a forward-looking document, despite all the feel-good rhetoric. The initiatives in the throne speech are throwbacks to the past bent on destroying the valuable social institutions Albertans have worked so hard to build. Public health care, public education, labour rights, and fair taxation: all are on the chopping block in this government's 21st century Alberta.

The government likes to brag about all the money being put back into health care. I urge the government not to waste this money on costly privatization experiments. There is a real danger that if this government proceeds with the legalization of private, for-profit hospitals and then authorizes the RHAs to contract out to these private, for-profit hospitals, this is precisely what will happen: we will waste public funds without achieving the results that we are promised will accrue to us if we move in this direction.

The evidence from Alberta and elsewhere is overwhelming. Private, for-profit hospitals cost more and deliver less. The government would get a bigger bang for its health care bucks if they went into public facilities rather than being drained away by those looking to profit from our health care system.

Here I want to very quickly draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the conclusions of an important report just released three weeks ago from the University of Alberta, from the Parkland Institute. The title of the report is Private Profit or Public Good. It poses certain questions related to the government's proposed initiative and comes up with the following answers.

1. Are private hospitals cheaper and more efficient than public ones? No. Almost invariably they are more expensive and less efficient.
2. Do market forces work with health care like they do with products such as food and consumer goods? No. Health care is widely regarded by economists as a case of 'market failure.'
3. Will for-profit health care raise costs to the public system? Yes. The inefficiencies, conflicts of interest, and other problems inevitable in for-profit medicine drive up the costs of the public system.
4. What effect will private hospitals and surgical clinics have on waiting lists? They will likely make them longer. Public health care systems are more efficient than private ones, and dollar for dollar, the more efficient system will have the shortest waiting lists. Increasing the flow of funds to the private system can actually lengthen waiting lists if those funds could otherwise have gone to the public system, because an efficient provider is being replaced by an inefficient one. Alberta's experience with cataract surgery confirms this

I could go on, but time is limited. Let me quickly move on to some other issues here.

If privatization were the way to go, the U.S. would have the least expensive health care system in the world. We all know the opposite is the case. The U.S. has by far the most expensive health care system in the world, with per capita health care costs 50 percent higher than those in any other western industrialized country. Does the U.S. at least have healthier citizens? The answer again is no. By every major health indicator, the U.S. ranks near the bottom of the heap among the industrialized countries. What the U.S. does have is the most unequal health care system, where access is determined by ability to pay and more than 40 million people, close to one and a half times the population of Canada, at any given time have no access to health care insurance. Will the government's scheme to legalize private, for-profit health care reduce waiting lists? Again the answer is a clear no.

A recent survey by the Consumers' Association of Canada, Alberta branch, has clearly shown this. They recently studied waiting lists for cataract surgery in Edmonton, Calgary, and Lethbridge. In Calgary the surgery is all done in private clinics, and the waiting times are the longest. The next longest waiting time is in Edmonton. Lethbridge, which has all cataract surgeries done in the public system, has the shortest waiting list. If the government scheme will cost more and won't reduce waiting times, why are we still pressing ahead? It's a good question and one that many Conservatives who value our public health care system are asking as well. The only explanation I can find is that they're caving in to the pressure from a few squeaky-wheel private business interests.

Earlier this week I made public information about the murky world of private, for-profit health care. The information shows two things: one, that these special interests are fierce lobbyists, and second, that the only way they can make a profit is by feeding off our public health care system.

What do we need? The New Democrats propose an outright ban on private, for-profit hospitals. Bill 201, which unfortunately didn't come before this House, was an attempt to do precisely that. I would invite Albertans to look at that bill to see that there is an alternative, a better alternative than the one that's being proposed from the government side. We haven't had them in the past, and we don't need them in the future.

The New Democrats also advocate an independent cost-benefit analysis of existing day surgery contracts. If, as expected, the study shows that contracting out day surgery costs more and delivers less, tighter controls would be imposed.

A progressive tax system is the hallmark of a civilized society, Mr. Speaker. The flat tax that the government is proposing to legislate during this session of the Legislative Assembly threatens this. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Sorry, hon. member. We appear to have several people who want to enter into debate on the Speech from the Throne, and we would invite them to take their turn. Right now it is the turn of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Debate Continued

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope you will give me an extra minute as a result of this interruption.

The government's proposed flat tax massively shifts the tax burden from the wealthy onto the middle class. The flat tax is an issue which has not received the scrutiny it deserves. The fact is that the only reason the government may be able to get away with it is because Alberta's fiscal good fortune has allowed the government to hide the regressive redistributed effects of the flat tax behind other tax cuts. The fact remains that those with yearly incomes above $100,000 will receive a financial windfall while middle-class earners will receive little or no benefit. A much fairer way of providing a comparable amount of tax relief would be to abolish costly and inefficient health care premiums. This would save every Alberta family, regardless of income, $816 dollars a year.

The Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, says that the government will improve financial assistance to postsecondary students. Providing a little bit of relief for student debt loads is a clear example of treating the symptoms rather than the underlying cause. The underlying cause is skyrocketing tuition fees guaranteed by this government. So what we need to do is roll back the tuition fees, change the base funding formula for the universities and colleges so that they get larger financial assistance from the government so that the universities and colleges can move to reduce tuition fees and roll them back.

Treating the symptoms rather than the underlying causes also applies to the children's initiatives from the throne speech. As I mentioned before, there are lots of children living in poverty. They need immediate action. Every year lost in poverty by a child is a year that cannot be recovered, and it does irreversible damage to that child. Therefore, we need immediate action, and nothing is promised in this throne speech.

It also fails the homeless. Instead of directing dollars to community agencies to build affordable housing, the government keeps looking for private-sector solutions in an area where there's a clear-cut case of market failure. The real estate market serves 80 percent of the housing market well but not the bottom 20 percent.

Without government leadership and involvement the ranks of Alberta's homeless will continue to grow.

The throne speech fails Alberta's environment, Mr. Speaker. There seems to be a clear retreat by this government on the environmental front. Bill 15 was withdrawn from the last sitting of the Legislature. There's no indication here that the government is willing to take any legislative measures to protect our special places and environmentally sensitive areas in the province or to do something about gas flaring, which is a major problem.

I will conclude, Mr. Speaker. Are there any positives in this throne speech? Yes, if you search hard enough for them. The legislation to set up the science and technology endowment seems positive and so is the legislation to return sacred artifacts to First Nations communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I intend to speak for a very brief time and address some of the concerns that have been mentioned by the hon. members speaking opposite, specifically the last speaker, from Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Speaker, within the throne speech there is a reference not only to the forum but to the task force for children at risk. There is a reference to the reviews that are under way for both the caseloads and also the other things that we are doing for children. Further, there are references, I know, from other colleagues about supports for children. Because so many times we think the sky is falling on the children of Alberta, I want to quote from the Canadian Council on Social Development, who have the following observations as they portray children and youth. They state in fact that "most children live in two-parent families," that "more than half of all Aboriginal people in Canada are children and youth," and that "more young Canadians live in families that speak a language other than English or French." They finally talk about what contributes to child and youth well-being.

Mr. Speaker, here is the point that I want to stress most of all. The best contributor to a child and to the welfare of youth, the best possible contributor is the parent. In fact, government, with their Children's Services ministry and with any other positive support mechanism, does not tend to take the place of a good parent.

"Family life is positive for most children" in Canada. "More families are having trouble balancing their work and family responsibilities." Herein, Mr. Speaker, from this quote, I would contend, lie some of the social difficulties we have today.

More youth are delaying leaving home . . .

Only one-third of Canadians say their financial situation has improved over the past two or three years . . .

Child poverty rates remain high not only in Alberta but elsewhere. In fact, if there's any consolation, over the last two years we have improved better than most other provinces in decreasing child poverty. However, it does remain on the incline.

Children and youth are safer from crime . . .

Fewer youth are killed in car crashes . . .

Dangerous chemicals in food, air and water still pose poorly measured risks to Canadian children.

So it's not all bright, Mr. Speaker, but clearly it's no worse in Alberta than it is in other places.

The majority of young teens feel safe [at home and] at school most of the time . . .

Public spending on education rose by about 3% between 1992 and 1996, but it fell as a proportion of gross nation product.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when you look at the record in Alberta in public education – and I remember when my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods and I were similarly involved as trustees.

We had probably quite a different environment than we have today, but the technological influences today, I think, have grown to provide even a more enhanced education than we had then.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, infant mortality rates continue to fall, and in Alberta we show the highest rate across Canada for breast-feeding, one of the positive indicators of healthy starts for children. While more teens are smoking and the risk of sexually transmitted diseases among teens is worrisome, throughout our review at the forum and also from the Task Force on Children at Risk, we are finding what seems to be true across Canada, that in fact youth crime rates are declining and more is being done by parents on behalf of their children, not only low-income parents but all parents.

Mr. Speaker, so much of what has been stated in this Assembly about children over the past two and a half years in my experience sounds as if Alberta is neglecting the children, but quite the opposite is true. In closing I want to just give credit to two models. The child help model in the city of Edmonton, developed by the local police, and the community conferencing model in the city of Calgary will, I think, gain great benefits by co-ordinating police, volunteers, medical personnel, directors of social services, mental health, and prosecutors together in assisting children.

Mr. Speaker, raising a child takes a village. It takes the commitment of parents, teachers, child welfare workers, and indeed the government. If we are to provide fully integrated teams with a community focus, we will lend our support, our advocacy to those groups, and I am very proud indeed of the references in the throne speech to what this government will do for children.

On that note, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 1

Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll start my comments by saying that knowledge is our most important renewable resource. Today as I proudly move second reading of Bill 1, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Act, this government, our government, my government . . .

MS HALEY: Mine too.

DR. TAYLOR: . . . and the member opposite's here too, makes a very clear statement to Albertans and to the rest of the country and indeed the rest of the world. I'm just going to take a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, because this really is a momentous occasion. We have to realize that this is Bill 1 in the new millennium, the first bill of a new millennium, the first bill of the year 2000.

Alberta is the home of innovation. Yes, we are the home of innovation, and that is because Albertans are not afraid of challenges. We embrace challenges. We do not see obstacles but opportunities. From my own personal experience—and I know other members were in business during the 1980s, and there were many challenges during the 1980s, but if we saw those, as we did in our own personal businesses, as opportunities, we survived. Others survived because they didn't see the glass half empty; they saw the glass half full.

Albertans are bold entrepreneurs. We are forward thinking, and we are innovative. This Bill 1 of the new millennium is another example of Alberta as a trendsetting province. Alberta is a national leader, Mr. Speaker, in policy and in good government, and I can tell you that we are the envy of other people across this country and across the world. In fact, once we announced what Bill 1 would be, once we announced the $500 million heritage foundation for science and engineering research, colleagues from universities were telling me that they had their colleagues from around North America phoning them and saying: "Is this really true? Is this really happening?" So we are the envy, Mr. Speaker.

With the launch of Bill 1 we embark as Albertans, as a government on another bold plan which will really launch Alberta into the forefront of global knowledge. It will launch us into the knowledge-based economy. What this does is build on our most important renewable resource, as I've said, which is knowledge, and knowledge is critical to our success in the new century.

Most certainly my caucus colleagues and I have worked hard to find ways to build on our strong foundation, to capitalize on the potential of the new millennium, to capitalize on the young people, provide opportunities for the young people in the province. To the Premier and to all my colleagues here I say sincerely: thank you for your support over this last period of time when we've been working on this.

Other individuals—and I want to mention just a few, and there are many of them. You know, you're not supposed to mention names, Mr. Speaker, and I know I'll probably miss a few, but I want to mention a few names that have been influential and have been a great help in developing this fund and also encouraging the government to make it Bill 1.

First of all is Dr. Bob Church. He's the chairman of the Alberta Science and Research Authority. He is a constituent of the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View and is a great supporter of the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View. Bob is truly a tireless champion of R and D in Alberta. Bob has been involved with science and research a long time. He's a former associate dean of medicine at the University of Calgary. He's a world-recognized figure in the area of medical research. He presently ranches just outside Airdrie—he's gone back to his roots—but is still intimately involved with science and research in this province. So to Bob I say thank you. I can tell you that he has been tremendously influential, influential on me. I respect Bob's advice. Bob, my cowboy hat is off to you. And for those of you who haven't seen me in a cowboy hat, I do wear one. You are going to have to come down to my constituency to see me wear my cowboy hat.

MS HALEY: I live for that, you know.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, I see members are saying that they live for it, so by all means come and join me.

Another person that has been influential in this process is Eric Newell, president of Syncrude. Of course, we all know Syncrude is a strong Alberta company which has directly benefited from Alberta's investment in R and D. He's also the chair of the board of governors of the University of Alberta. He recognized early on the merits of a foundation such as this. He was and continues to be a strong advocate, and I very much appreciate Eric's support and help in promoting this fund.

Adding to really a large group of people are some others: university presidents and vice-presidents Rod Fraser, Terry White, Howard Tennant, Roger Smith, Len Bruton, and Sheamus O'Shea.

I say thank you to all of them for pursuing a brighter future for Alberta's youth.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, there are others, and I won't mention – one I don't want to forget because he's sitting in the gallery is my executive assistant, Ken Faulkner. Ken has been very helpful and a tireless worker, and I know other ministers would desire an executive assistant such as this. I don't want to say too much in case they try and recruit him, but Ken has been very valuable and a very wise adviser.

To the rest of the people that have been involved in helping us promote this fund whose names I haven't mentioned, on behalf of my colleagues and all Albertans, on behalf of the youth of Alberta because they are the future of Alberta, I say thank you. In summary, Mr. Speaker, through their support and encouragement Bill 1 was born.

To fully appreciate the effects that Bill 1 will have on Alberta, I think we have to take a very brief look, Mr. Speaker, at the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, because Bill 1 and the Alberta heritage foundation for science and engineering research model AHFMR – somehow, Mr. Speaker, AHFMR sounds better than AHFSER. We've got to think of a better acronym. Perhaps it can be AFSEER. So I'll refer to AFSEER.

Now, I won't go into a detailed history of AHFMR, but I will read a letter from Mr. Al Libin, who is a former chair of AHFMR. He was the chair of AHFMR for 10 years. Al says in his letter:

When I was appointed the AHFMR Board Chairman in 1990, I recall my amazement at what the Foundation had accomplished in just 10 [previous] years. With the creation of AHFMR in 1980, it was possible for bright young scientists, both Alberta born and from around the globe, to realize their dreams and ideas with long-term Heritage support. In a very short time, Alberta could boast of a top-flight research community that was increasingly lauded in national and international research circles. When my tenure began, it was clear that Alberta had yet another natural resource that was, and is, envied throughout the nation: a superlative repository of scientific brainpower.

Our province truly has a presence as a centre of research excellence in the scientific world. That this has been achieved through AHFMR's direct and indirect contributions to biomedical and health research successes, many of which have resonated throughout the world, is for me, as outgoing chairman of AHFMR, a source of immense pride and satisfaction.

That's just a quote from Al's letter.

I have a number of other quotes I could read, but I just want to read one from Susan Jensen. She's the professor and chair, department of biological sciences at the University of Alberta. Susan says in her letter to the Premier:

I recognize and appreciate that a very large sum of money is involved, and that you could no doubt have won greater political rewards by spending it on more visible programs. It is a credit to your commitment to the long term well being of Alberta and of Albertans that you have chosen to spend the money in this way.

I think that summarizes for me what the fund is all about.

This fund, like the AHFMR fund, like our science and research fund, will leverage other dollars from outside, and it will create great scientific advancements. To mention just two from the AHFMR, I'm sure all of you remember that last summer we had Patrick Lee at the University of Calgary with his discovery of the reovirus, a virus that can eat cancer. Folks, this virus is going into human trials this year. Now, can you imagine that difference if this actually works in human trials. That we have a virus that can cure cancer, can you imagine what that means to the world? It's a huge accomplishment, a huge endeavour. That was funded by the AHFMR, and that's the kind of thing that will be funded by AFSEER.

One other example I'll mention is Dr. Lorne Tyrrell. Some of you may know Lorne. He's the dean of Medicine. Lorne has the first and only treatment, cure if you wish, for hepatitis B in the world. This product came on the market this year. It is a fascinating story to listen to Lorne talk about how he started with small research dollars. He had his parents on his parents' farm looking after the ducks he was using for research experiments, and Lorne and his wife and kids would go out to the farm every Saturday and clean duck cages. I mean, it is an amazing, fascinating story to listen to Lorne Tyrrell talk about this. You can see I'm getting excited about it, because I've listened to him. I'm excited about his story.

That research was accomplished through funding by AHFMR. Without AHFMR Lorne Tyrrell would not be in Alberta, the cure for hepatitis B would not be an Alberta cure, and Glaxo Wellcome, one of the biggest drug companies in the world, would not be in Alberta funding today Lorne Tyrrell's research and funding his research on hepatitis C. There is no cure for hepatitis C. Will Lorne discover it? I have absolute faith that he will. It'll take him some time but he will have a model, and there are some exciting things happening with hepatitis C. Once again, funding through AHFMR.

From 1996 to 1999 AHFMR funded $108,277,772 worth of research. Just think of that: in three years over $100 million funding for medical research. That's the kind of thing the science and engineering fund will talk about.

In fact, just today I was talking about this fund to a Globe and Mail reporter writing an article that she says will appear in the Globe probably this weekend, and when I explained some of the things we were thinking about as a government, the direction we were going as a government, her comment was, "Wow, I can't believe it." So we will be recognized as a leader in North America, Mr. Speaker, for the establishment of this fund.

In conclusion, there are just a couple of comments, and I'm going to read them again. One is, once again, Al Libin's comments. Al, as you know and I've already indicated, was the chairman of AHFMR for 10 years, and he said:

The growth in programs has been made possible by the parallel growth of the endowment. At March 31, 1999, the endowment from which grants and awards are made by AHFMR stood just below $1 billion. That endowment, and the more than $570 million invested in research excellence over the years . . .

Now, you'll remember, Mr. Speaker, that this fund started at $300 million. It is now worth a billion, and they've invested more than $570 million.

. . . exemplifies the sound stewardship of the Board of Trustees and the responsible investment management of Alberta Treasury. It is a perpetual resource for excellence in biomedical and health research in our province for our children and their children

And that's what this is about, a source of research excellence for my children, my grandchildren, your children, your grandchildren. That's what this is about.

I'd like to quote just for interest's sake as well from Hansard, November 9, 1979. This was when AHFMR was brought in. I think Premier Lougheed's comments are very valuable. In concluding his comments, he said:

Mr. Speaker and members of the Assembly, over the decades we've had a brain drain to the United States. I think we're changing a fair number of things in Canada. Certainly, that can get us into a number of other subjects as well, as to what we're changing.

The very same could be said today.

But one thing we are also starting to change is that whole concept of the brain drain to the United States. I think one of the very exciting possibilities I'll look back on, in terms of presenting this Bill to the Legislature, is that in a very clear and specific way it may reverse that, to the benefit of this country as well as to this province.

I believe that in medical research, Mr. Speaker – my comments now – we have a brain gain, and there's good evidence of that. I believe that once we do this fund, we will have a brain gain in science and engineering research.

Premier Lougheed goes on to say:

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to conclude with my final references to the Bill. I've said what it's not. It is not a supplementary funding for universities, it's not to displace voluntary fund-raising organization efforts, and it's not to supplement the traditional funding available to researchers in Canada from the Medical Research Council and other government departments.

But what it is is very significant. It will be a major supplement to Alberta in making this a brain centre in Canada. I believe it will attract young Albertans into lifetime research careers in science. It will provide both the continuity and security so necessary for those researchers, with the lack of interference from government or the Legislature. It [will] enhance the quality of life of people everywhere. And it will in time, I hope and I believe, make Alberta an outstanding medical research centre in the world.

And you know what, Mr. Speaker? Premier Lougheed was right. His predictions of 20 years ago have come true. Alberta is an outstanding medical research centre in the world. We will become an outstanding centre for research in science and engineering in the world because of this fund, because of the future vision of this government, because of the commitment to this.

As Professor Susan said in her letter, we could have spent money on "more visible programs", short-term programs that might have reaped more political gains. But this shows us, Mr. Speaker, the future. This shows us the commitment of my government, of Albertans' government, to our children, to our grandchildren, and it is absolutely essential for our future.

One further comment I'll read is from the Leader of the Opposition at the time, Mr. R. Clark, and I'm sure most of us know him. Once again, this is in Hansard, November 9, 1979.

Mr. Speaker, in taking part in the debate on second reading of Bill 62, The Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research Act, I want to say at the outset that it's the intention of my colleagues and me to support the Bill in second reading.

That was the opposition at the time. I trust the opposition at this time will be able to say exactly the same thing.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak to Bill 1, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Act. I listened with interest to the remarks of the minister, aware that at second reading we're expected to speak to the principles of the bill. Although he didn't speak to the principles of the bill, he spoke with such enthusiasm that it was hard not to gain a little bit of the kind of hard work and the kind of consideration that has gone into putting Bill 1 in place.

I'm pleased to speak in favour of Bill 1 and to speak for the critic for Innovation and Science, the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, and to speak for our caucus. We will certainly be pleased to support this bill. The critic's advice to me when he was talking about this evening's presentation was: let's pass it and let's pass it now, as quickly as it can be done. That doesn't mean that he doesn't have a small amendment that he would like to see put forward when the bill comes to committee, but certainly there's great enthusiasm on this side of the House for it.

I think that because it is an important bill, we have the obligation to look at the principles and to make sure that those principles are clear. Some of them of course are very self-evident from the text of the bill. One of the major principles, of course, is that the foundation will engage in a wide range of activities in supporting "a balanced long-term program of science and engineering research." That's very important: that it be balanced, that it be long-ranged, and that it focus on engineering research. That's a principle that I think is worth reiterating, because there are parts of the world where science research has been used by governments for ends that were not worthy of the human race. So the principle that this be balanced.

A further principle: that the new knowledge should improve our economy, our communities, and our environment. When you couple those two principles together, I think we have the assurance that the activities of this foundation are going to be those that all Albertans will be proud of and all Albertans and Canadians will benefit from.

The focus is rightfully on the discovery and the application of new knowledge. I've spoken before in the Chamber, and I know from the members, the personnel that the minister listed who have been involved in the creation of the fund and have given the minister advice, that there is a concern that between discovery and – basic research is not the word they use anymore; they don't use "basic research"; there's a new name for it – applied research, there's a balance and that all research, the kind of necessary research that has to go on that doesn't always have a gizmo in mind at the end of the project, those kinds of serendipitous things that happen in research are going to be allowed to happen under the auspices of this fund. So, again, an important principle is that it's going to focus on the discovery of the new and the applications so that they are separated out of knowledge.

The minister talked about the very successful Alberta heritage fund for medical research and that that model, that has been so very, very successful, is the model that is being used for science and engineering. Again, it assures us that the fund will be successful, that the heritage fund for medical research has set a precedent in the province for research and endowment funds.

Another principle is that the fund will be closely linked to our advanced education institutions and that it's not going to be used by the government in terms of funding of research, looking at the research of those institutions and cutting back or judging the kind of research money that they'll be given based on what is happening for this endowment fund. I think that's as it should be. This is a stand-alone, independent fund, but it's going to be rooted in our postsecondary institutions.

The principle that there shall be an international review panel of course is basic to quality research, and the manner in which that is set forth in the bill makes it abundantly clear how important this component of the research that's conducted will be. It's really the only guarantee of quality of research when we know that it's being overseen, being judged, being reviewed by the best minds in the world and that those minds are drawn from the international community.

A further principle is that the fund will publicly report. It's only as should be expected that there's going to be close monitoring and that there's going to be a very careful accounting of the activities of the fund. That's a principle that, again, all Albertans would expect.

There are a number of other principles that could be teased out of the bill, Mr. Speaker, but I think all in all we're delighted that the bill is here. I think our critic would like to take some credit because he has raised in budget debates in past years the need for funds such as this and was good enough to supply me copies of Hansard giving proof of that claim. But it doesn't really matter where the ideas came from. It's important that it's here and that it's in front of the Assembly and that it's going to have the wholehearted support of both sides of the House.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to adjourn debate on Bill 1.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Consideration of Her Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

[Adjourned debate February 23: Ms Evans]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It was interesting to me to see the government, through the agency of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor, hark back to the first Lieutenant Governor of the province and quote with apparent approval a statement that had been made by the first Liberal government of this province.

I always appreciate historical perspective, but actually I was thinking of going a little further back. I think we might sooner take instruction from Girolamo Savonarola. That's about 500 years earlier. Mr. Savonarola was the courageous man who more than 500 years ago challenged the vices and the excesses of Pope Alexander VI. Savonarola was a Dominican friar who distinguished himself for his eloquent critique of the government of the day. He ended up being burned at the stake in 1498 so paid the price of his convictions.

The reason I think of Mr. Savonarola is that earlier this year the mayor of Calgary, Al Duerr – and, I might mention, the most popular mayor the city has ever had – delivered at a downtown Rotary club . . . [interjections] The numbers, Mr. Speaker, speak for themselves. It may be that some from outside the city may think that someone else succeeded in winning with the biggest plurality of any mayor and may not realize that in fact Mr. Duerr holds that special acknowledgment.

I think my point, though, is this: when Mayor Duerr was delivering his state of the city speech to the downtown Rotary club earlier in 2000, he talked about something that I think hearkened back to the days of Mr. Savonarola. He talked about wanting Calgary to be an ethical city. I thought that was really interesting and really instructive because at a time when we're so focused on jobs and money and balanced budgets, how refreshing to have the mayor of one of the two largest cities in the province talk about the importance of striving to be an ethical community. In fact, I'd mentioned today that the Sheldon M. Chumir foundation has hired an executive director, Dr. Hanen. It's a foundation that's looking to heighten the focus on ethics in our communities and in public affairs.

So when I come to the throne speech, I guess I'm looking to find some resonance, something in this throne speech that Mr. Savonarola would have been impressed with. Is there even a faint echo of Mayor Duerr's call for an ethical community? To be fair to the government, we see some glimmers. On page 3 of the throne speech we see a reference to "equity, which includes fairness for all citizens and respect for diversity of culture, age, gender, and other characteristics." This is cited as being one of the governing principles of the province.

Ironically, the first two bills we deal with in the Legislative Assembly are Bill 202, one to invoke the notwithstanding clause, and Bill 204, a bill specifically targeted to Hutterite colonies in southern Alberta. One can say they're private members' bills, but when we see that that's the way we're starting out with the legislation we first look at, I have some problems with that.

Persons with developmental disabilities. You know, there's a large community of the most vulnerable men and women in this province, and what we find in the throne speech is that we're going to follow up on the review of the persons with developmental disabilities program to strengthen support for Albertans with developmental disabilities.

Has nobody cottoned on yet, Mr. Speaker, that the biggest part of the problem are the PDD boards? When the chairman of the Calgary PDD board left and there was some tension between Mr. Sparrow and the provincial PDD board and the Calgary PDD board, you know who advertised for the new chair of the Calgary board? It was the provincial board.

Mr. Speaker, we know the amount of money that has gone into the PDD boards. We know it certainly isn't going into the agencies and the services and the support for persons with developmental disabilities. It was disappointing. We not only have not seen the report that had been promised for the beginning of the year, but the Minister of Health and Wellness still has not stood up in this House and tabled that report, so that is a frustration.

We see a glimmer of an ethical consideration, I suppose. There's a reference to homelessness on page 9, and the suggestion is that "the government will work with public and private partners." I see that the Minister of Municipal Affairs was here speaking of this a moment ago. The difficulty is this. When this government talks about partnerships, Mr. Speaker, usually what it means is that we want somebody else to do the work and take the responsibility and put up the dough; the province will be there to pat you on the back. The federal government came along, and in no small measure due to the diligent work from the Member for Calgary-Bow, who has worked very diligently on the homeless situation in Calgary, the federal government has put a substantial amount of money available to deal with homelessness in the city of Calgary.

AN HON. MEMBER: Was that Jane Stewart?

MR. DICKSON: Oh ho. We have the Minister of Community Development, who didn't have the opportunity that the Member for Calgary-Bow and I did to go to McDougall Centre. The Hon. Claudette Bradshaw was there, and she was roundly applauded by the agencies, Mr. Minister, through the Speaker, that are providing services to the homeless people in Calgary. Now, the minister may think he knows better than the people representing CUPS and the Booth Centre and the Mustard Seed. Maybe the minister knows something those people don't, but they were delighted with the commitment of the federal government.

So what do we see here? We hear some talk about partnership, which, as I've suggested before, is usually fiscal off-loading. Where's the financial commitment from this province to address the number of homeless people in the city of Calgary?

You know, just the other day there was a little announcement in one of the Calgary daily newspapers, and it talked about yet another homeless person dying on the streets in Calgary. The Minister of Community Development may not know that last year we had about 12 people who died, 12 homeless people who died on the streets of downtown Calgary. I was disappointed to see an announcement of this other death just a matter of days ago. One person dying on the streets of this province is too many, and I'd want that minister to work as hard as his colleague from Calgary-Bow is to do something about it. Simply empty talk, Mr. Speaker, about working with private and public partners doesn't do it.

As June Callwood said when she was at the housing conference . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Face the chair.

MR. DICKSON: I can look anywhere I want as long as I'm directing my comments through the Speaker, Mr. Speaker.

I think that when June Callwood two years ago came to the housing conference in this city, she made the observation after hearing the Minister of Municipal Affairs that the private sector will provide low-cost affordable housing when pigs can fly. When pigs can fly, Mr. Speaker. I think June Callwood is absolutely bang on. I think she's right. What we look for in the throne speech is something more than simply vague talk about partnerships.

Mr. Speaker, the Children's Advocate. The Minister of Children's Services, formerly Municipal Affairs, has said that there's some good news going on, and we see that "the mandate of the office of the Children's Advocate will be reviewed to make sure the voices of vulnerable children and youth are heard." You know, where was this minister when the Dignity Foundation in this province held a conference two years ago off Macleod Trail in Calgary? They brought in the Children's Advocate from Saskatchewan and the Children's Advocate from British Columbia, and they told us what had to be done. What they told us was that we need a Children's Advocate office that's independent of the Legislative Assembly, much like the Ombudsman and the Auditor General. They told us that you need the Children's Advocate office to be able to do what the Saskatchewan office can do, which is investigate children in crisis whether they're in the care of the province or not. If you've got poor children in poor health, why does it matter that they're not a ward of the province, that it's not a child welfare file? Surely that should be the kind of thing this government is dealing with.

So I'm disappointed to see a review to make sure the voices are heard. I don't remember seeing one of those 20 Calgary MLAs or the minister at the Dignity Foundation meeting. I think my colleague from Edmonton-Norwood was at it. I know my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview was there. There was good advice. We don't have to have a review. What we need is a commitment to legislative change and a commitment to make the office of the Children's Advocate work, full stop.

Mr. Speaker, I see reference here to the Alberta seniors' benefit program. Well, I have a heck of a lot of senior constituents in Calgary-Buffalo, and the single message that they would want me, I think, to communicate to my government and their government is: let's address the cutoff thresholds. Instead of simply putting more money in the special-needs assistance fund, not necessarily a bad thing, surely the more fundamental kind of reworking that has to happen is re-evaluate what are unrealistic and unfair and punitive cutoffs.

Now, the minister of intergovernmental affairs I know knows what I'm talking about, because when she was Minister of Community Development, she met with those seniors' groups at the Kerby Centre and the Golden Age Club and the Renfrew Sixty Plus Club. She knows what those people told her, and I'm hoping that she carried that message back to cabinet. I'm sure she did, and unfortunately there's no indication of that in the throne speech, Mr. Speaker.

Surely the province that we build for baby Micheal Tustin has got to be something more than high-bandwidth Internet access. It has to be something more than a competitive tax regime, and it surely must be something more than new roads and infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, when I look for some of the other concerns that my constituents have, I think of the Broda report and the talk about what's coming from that. I also look and recognize that when it comes to standards, this province is probably one of the most poorly served provinces in all of Canada in terms of standards and regulations.

DR. WEST: That's a bunch of bunk.

MR. DICKSON: I'm looking forward to the debate later when we hear from the government defence. Mr. Speaker, I can't control the low outrage threshold of the minister of energy.

The concern I've got, Mr. Speaker, is that we have to address standards. We don't need more studies. Ontario has done a terrific job in terms of having some of the finest standards for nursing homes anywhere in Canada. We could replicate some of those in a flash, and we'd be vastly better served than we are right now.

In terms of homelessness there's still a concern. The biggest single issue throughout 1999 in Calgary-Buffalo was finding safe, affordable housing. The vacancy rate in Calgary forecast for 2000 is 2.3 percent, which is much better than 0.5 percent and 0.6 percent in 1996-1997. But, you know, we've got a real problem. In fact, there were 4,118 multifamily units started between October 1998 and October 1999. Only 234 units were slated for the rental market, and 142 of those were for a seniors' lodge project. Nobody is building affordable accommodation in downtown Calgary. It's a problem when I hear from people in Calgary-Varsity, from that seniors' complex just across from Market Mall. They're worried about it. They want to see that concern addressed in this throne speech by this government in this session.

Mr. Speaker, we see some talk here about efficiency of the courts, and this is always an area of particular interest to me. We're going to increase the efficiency of Alberta's courts. Maybe we could start with public legal education. You know, in this province the government provides virtually no support for public legal education. It comes from the Alberta Law Foundation, that the government has nothing to do with. I don't think a nickel comes from the Minister of Justice. I stand to be corrected on this, but I don't ever remember in any of the budget estimates where I asked what this province is doing in terms of empowering citizens to be able to use and access their own court system . . .

DR. WEST: Twenty-two million in legal aid, and you drew on the pot when you were in private business.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The hon. Minister of Resource Development is reminded that he'll have an opportunity.

DR. WEST: He asked the question.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Yes, and it's a rhetorical question, and you're not the Minister of Justice either.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, you know what's so frustrating? Before you worry about lawyers, if the Minister of Energy can appreciate it, if we empowered citizens by giving them more information about their legal processes, about their legal system, maybe they wouldn't always require a lawyer. Maybe citizens would be able to find remedies that they could utilize themselves. That's what we need in this province.

DR. WEST: Over 5,400 of them. Can't you get a job?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. Order. Hon. minister, perhaps you would like to go outside and have a coffee and regain your composure. Then we can hear the rest of this speech.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, that's one down and 34 more to go.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to carry on. I'm happy to see on page 5 that the Alberta government wants us to be a leader in information technology. Well, that's wonderful. I do and my constituents want to be as well, but why is it that while we want to be leaders in terms of technology, we are at the end of the line when it comes to protecting the privacy of citizens? You know, with Bill C-6 in front of the House of Commons currently, other provinces have said that this is going to have a big, big impact on every business in Canada. In B.C., Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Ontario they're holding public hearings. The government is going out and saying to citizens: as we embark on a high-tech program in each one of those jurisdictions, we want to involve citizens of those provinces to be current.

Well, I've been asking for three years, Mr. Speaker, when we're going to do something, and each time I'm told that we're doing some internal consultation, probably another one of those darn focus groups that's so easy to manage and so easy to control. We're not letting Albertans in, and that's what we have to do. So if we want those high-skilled, high-paid jobs from the kind of technological world our children are coming into, that means we've got to make investments, not only respecting privacy and building popular support for that technology but a huge investment in education.

The most positive thing in the throne speech is the $500 million endowment for research. I think that's an extremely positive item in the budget.

MR. JONSON: In the throne speech.

MR. DICKSON: In the throne speech. I'm sorry. Maybe there'll be some follow-up in the budget too, Minister of Health and Wellness.

But that's something I'm happy to applaud and encourage.

The other observation I'd make as my time runs out is that we're concluding our review of provincial fees and charges, and I still marvel – I absolutely marvel – at how the government can take something they've been forced to do kicking and screaming by the courts of this country and somehow turn it into a claim that this is some farsighted kind of revenue re-evaluation. The only reason this happened was because the Supreme Court in the Eurig decision left this province absolutely no alternative. There's a message there to the Minister of Justice through the Speaker that maybe we should try and for once get ahead of the locomotive. Maybe we should do a little better job in this province understanding the trends and issues that are coming and try to head them off instead of always reacting after the fact.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[At 9:55 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, February 24, 2000 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 00/02/24
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition that I would like to table. It's signed by 218 Albertans, and they are requesting:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition here signed by 542 people from Lethbridge, Coaldale, Taber, Barnwell, Daysland, Nanton, Canmore, and High River. They are petitioning the Legislative Assembly "to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by several hundred Albertans. The petition reads as follows:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to file a petition on behalf of 581 residents of southern Alberta from Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Coaldale, Hillcrest, Blairmore, Bellevue, Cardston, Pincher Creek, and Taber asking the Legislative Assembly "to urge the government to stop promoting private health care" and undermining the public health care system. This brings the total today to 1,385 submissions.

Thank you.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented to the Assembly on Tuesday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that the petition with respect to the support of public health care that I introduced yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to request that the petition I presented yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented yesterday in support of public health care be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request the reading and receiving of the petition that I presented yesterday in the Legislature.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request that the petition I tabled yesterday be now read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder and chairman of the Public Accounts Committee.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today and it's fitting just before the new budget that as chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I do hereby submit five copies of the report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts for the Third Session of the 24th Legislature.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of my responses to written questions 197, 198, 204, 211 through 217, 237 and motions for returns 200 through 203.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the triennial report on the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research. It's titled Progression and Excellence. It highlights the work of the HFMR and its substantial achievements over the last three years. It's my sincere hope that in just a few years we will have another report like this to be tabled from the Alberta heritage foundation for science and engineering research.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is from Ann Lockwood from Vermilion, who has sent a letter to all the Premiers across Canada requesting their help in stopping this Premier from privatizing our health care system.

The second is a report from New Zealand that indicates that the doctors want long waiting lists, that in fact what happens when you have private and public systems working side by side is that the public system ends up with longer waiting lists.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two sets of tablings. The first is a series of six letters from residents of Northern Alberta and Edmonton who have sent a letter to the Premier requesting him to protect the Little Smoky area in the northern part of the province.

The second set of tablings are letters from 10 Albertans who live in the Kananaskis area who are opposed to the Genesis land development there and make reference to a petition signed by 750 people in this province who would like the government to legally protect the entire Kananaskis County.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to file six copies of a letter that our Premier has written to the Prime Minister of Canada today voicing our concern about the fact that the Liberals in Ottawa are not treating farmers equitably across Canada.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. [interjections] The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a leaflet that's put out by the Friends of Medicare, and it states: Say No to Private, For-profit Hospitals.

The second tabling today, on budget day, Mr. Speaker, is an interesting, exhaustive article that appeared in the Construction Canada magazine in July of last year. It's called Pine Shakes: The Whole Rottin' Story.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and table five copies of a presentation recently made to the standing committee on health and safe communities by the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses. They recommended that the government consider the staffing issues relative to the privatization of health care and in hand shared statistics about the increase in safety concerns being reported by registered nurses in the province over the course of the last year.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is the appropriate number of copies of letters from Dr. Lue Russell, Gayle Lancaster, Madeleine Sabourin, and the Hansons expressing concerns with PDD funding in the province of Alberta.

The second are the appropriate number of copies of letters from Allan Bell, Paul Dornian, Richard Mercer, and Quenten Doolittle asking for more government support for the arts in Alberta.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three really special people I would like to introduce through you to the Assembly today. The first is a lady that runs my office here in this building. She's worked here for many years, over 10, 12 years, and I found out the other day she had never been introduced in this Assembly. She runs my office with an iron fist. Commonly referred to as "she who must be obeyed," I'd like to introduce Loretta Fontana.

Seated next to her is a young man that's come up from my constituency for today's budget. In addition to being my summer student since he started university four years ago – he's in fourth year poli-sci at the U of C now – he also works in my Airdrie office during the week on a part-time regular basis. We could not function without all of the assistance that we get from him, Mr. Jason Ennis.

The last person, Mr. Speaker, that I'd like to introduce is my caucus director, who has been working with me since last June, when I got the job as government caucus Whip, and that's Mr. Joel Palmer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Legislature Mr. Rob South, who is president of the students' union at the University of Calgary as well as acting chairman of the Council of Alberta University Students. The Minister of Gaming and I had the privilege of meeting with Rob at noon today, and we know he is here to listen with great interest to the budget. Rob is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that he rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you and to members of the Assembly Mr. Tom Ferguson from the town of Pincher Creek. Tom operates a very successful farm just outside of Pincher Creek, and in addition to those duties he had a distinguished service in public service as councillor and reeve of the MD of Pincher Creek, No. 9, for 20 some odd years, I believe. In addition to that he's also served on many community committees, particularly being very effective in his work with seniors on the Crest View lodge program in Pincher Creek. He's now continuing his public service, just being appointed as a member at large for southern Alberta on Mr. Treasurer's Alberta Tax Review Committee. He's here today for the budget debate, and I'd ask Tom, seated in the members' gallery, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: M. le President, je veux vous presenter et aux membres de l'Assemblée Legislative Mme Corinne Sangret et ses deux filles, Caroline et Rachelle Sangret, qui sont la famille de notre députée d'Edmonton-Norwood, Sue Olsen. Je demande aux membres de l'Assemblée de leur accorder le bon accueil de notre Assemblée.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce Mme Sangret and her two daughters, Rachelle and Caroline, who are the nieces of our Member for Edmonton-Norwood, Sue Olsen. I'd like to welcome them to our Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. SEVERTSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Ray Reckseidler. He's the mayor of the village of Delburne, and he's seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask Ray to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three separate introductions to make to you and through you to the members of this Assembly today. First, it's my pleasure to introduce Mimi Williams and Shannon Phillips. Both of them are graduate students in the department of political science at the University of Alberta. Mimi Williams is one of the seven contestants for the Edmonton-Highlands nomination. I'll ask them to rise and please stay standing.

The second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is of Ken Nixon, a senior whom I've come to respect over the years for his continued involvement in matters of public policy and social activism. He's also in the public gallery.

The last two are Mary Heacock and Malcolm Smith, who are here on this very important day to witness Alberta democracy at work.

I would ask all of them to rise and ask my colleagues to give them a warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you and to all members of the Legislature three court reporters who have recently been advised they will be replaced by digital tape recorders in the courtroom. Would Brenda Fusco, Nelia Stephens, and Carol Hnidan please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a student of the University of Alberta who is a very astute observer of the political process. Her name is Michelle Mungall. She is in the members' gallery, and she's accompanied by her grandmother, who looks anything but grandmother age, Vivian Mungall. I'd like to introduce both of them and ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly three guests that are in, I believe, the members' gallery. The first couple I'd like to introduce are Mr. and Mrs. Achilles, who are very active in terms of observing politics and being involved in important social issues, particularly the protection of universally accessible, comprehensive health care. I would ask them to rise and be welcomed by this Assembly.

Also in the gallery today is Mr. Con Duemler, who is a well-known Edmonton seniors' advocate and assistant to many of Alberta's seniors in terms of preparing taxes. I know he's well known to the former Minister of Community Development for some of his interventions. I'd ask Con to rise as well and be welcomed by the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure this afternoon to introduce some of the participants in a rally that's being held on a daily basis on the steps of the Legislative Assembly. They are members of the group Citizens Opposed to the Legalization of Private, For-profit Hospitals. I would like to welcome them to the proceedings in the Assembly. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House. They're on both sides, I think.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like elected officials and senior public servants the people of Alberta need the best information possible to make the best decisions. Albertans are being asked by this government to jeopardize our public health care system and endorse this government's plan to undermine medicare. I can think of no more important issue on which the citizens of our province require complete and timely information or, in short, on which they deserve the truth. My first question is to the Premier. Will the Premier reveal the 30 missing pages of the private hospital information for the citizens of Alberta, and if not, why not?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I understand that that was a FOIP request. There is a procedure. Relative to appeal, if the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition feels that she's not getting the information, then she can appeal the decision. I understand that a lot of the information that was excluded was information as it pertained to participants in focus groups, who were promised anonymity on the basis of their participation.

Relative to her other comment about undermining medicare, Mr.

Speaker, I would ask this hon. member if she agrees with Alberta's commitment to publicly funded health care and to the principles of the Canada Health Act. Does she believe in that? Does she believe in legislation that will ban private hospitals? Does she believe – and obviously she does because she okayed a whole bunch of private surgical clinics, so obviously she believes in it – in legislation that will bring surgical facilities under the control of the public health system. It will give health authorities one more option for delivering services.

Does she believe in this principle? Facilities will not be able to charge patients for medically necessary services. Does she believe in the principle that queue jumping will be illegal, that you can't jump the queue by paying more?

Mr. Speaker, I would think she would believe in all those principles. We do. That's not undermining health care. It's the right thing to do.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, is the Premier now telling the taxpayers of this province that they can't see the information they paid for?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there are procedures under FOIP. The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition knows that there are some items that by law and by the very nature of the FOIP legislation are excluded. If the hon. member wants that information, she can appeal to the Privacy Commissioner. That's the process.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier used tax dollars to pay for his propaganda research and he won't let the taxpayers see that research, will he at least tell Albertans how much it cost them to be kept in the dark?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I hardly think the use of citizens from a broad spectrum of Alberta society is a propaganda exercise. Now, what is a propaganda exercise is the malicious campaign of misinformation supported by taxpayers' dollars and being launched by the Liberal Party.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and his special backers want private hospitals. The health minister wants to cover up the private hospital research, and now the truth squad commander says that private hospital information should be released, but the Premier just ducks and spins. So just who is in charge of the private hospitals policy over there? Is it the Premier, the minister of health, the truth squad commander? Just who is it that's calling the shots?

MR. KLEIN: Well, interestingly enough we had a good discussion on this issue today at caucus, Mr. Speaker, and it was unanimous that all 64 of us are responsible for this legislation, and we're all behind it.

MRS. MacBETH: Okay. So now we know that the Premier said that he's in charge. Will he make sure that his name is on the bill when it comes forward in this Assembly?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, she is not listening. The Premier is not all 64 members of this caucus. This bill is the responsibility of the caucus collectively, and we speak with one voice on this legislation, because it is the right thing to do.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, my second supplementary is to the Associate Minister of Health and Wellness. Has his position now changed so that he now supports the continued cover-up of the private hospitals documents?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, there has never been any cover-up of any kind. That's number one. But I'll tell you what there has been. There's been a very pointed attack to obscure the truth and to misrepresent some of the truth by some members over there, and that's the fact.

Now, the other thing I'll just comment on is that I said yesterday – and I'll say it again here so everybody hears it, including members of the media – was that I would support the release of whatever information is able to be released under the rules. If you listen to the whole clip, you'll understand that, and if you'd like it in another language, I'd be happy to provide it in any one of five.

THE SPEAKER: Third main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Rod Love

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, that was too good. Okay.

Mr. Speaker, speaking of the spin doctors the Premier's old friend Ralph Love is – Rod Love, rather. Sorry. That was a Freudian slip. Rod Love. His old friend Rod Love is back in the news, and lately he's been spending his time rooting out Communists in, of all places, Canmore, Alberta. So can the Premier tell the people of this province exactly what is the role of the health communications consultant to the Calgary regional health authority, Rod Love, in brokering his private hospitals policy?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what Mr. Love's role is. I know he consults with the Calgary regional health authority on communications matters, but Rod Love is no longer part of my staff, is no longer part of my government, and I can't speak for what he's says or what he doesn't say.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, does the Premier share the position of his former aide that the people who stand for the public interests of a town council like Canmore are Communists?

MR. KLEIN: No, I don't share the view.

THE SPEAKER: The interim leader of the third party.

Health Resource Group Inc.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has been recognized.

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Three years ago Health Resource Group of Calgary lobbied the New Democrat caucus to seek our support for their attempts to open Alberta's first private, for-profit hospital. We told them an emphatic no and ended up getting sued for our position. HRG aggressively lobbied the Premier and the rest of his Calgary caucus, and before you can say two-tier health care, the government decided to come up with legislation giving HRG what they want. My question is to the Premier. Mr. Premier, did the government bow to HRG's aggressive lobbying because it lacks the courage to say no to those at HRG who have close personal connections to members of the government?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it is false, it is malicious for this hon. member to say that members of HRG aggressively lobbied me. I don't know the situation relative to other members of my caucus. The only lobbying that I know did take place was the lobbying of the two ND members, and I'm very happy that the hon. member at least admits that. But to say that I was lobbied by HRG is wrong, it is false, and I would ask that he apologize.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Did the Premier bow to HRG's aggressive lobbying because he was afraid of being sued by HRG and their private shareholders for saying no?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I haven't bowed to anything because I haven't been excessively lobbied. I have not been lobbied on this particular issue.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation that will be introduced very shortly in this House is called the health protection act. It's legislation that is being brought about so that the minister will have some control over private surgery clinics. Right now there is no legislation to control these clinics. Everything that we want to do we want to do within the parameters of the Canada Health Act, to uphold and adhere completely to all the principles of the Canada Health Act.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If this government can't say no to aggressive lobbying by a wanna-be private, for-profit hospital now, why would Albertans think this government will say no when private, for-profit hospitals aggressively lobby to award them juicy contracts for hip replacements?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again there's some assumptions there that are false, at least as they pertain to me. I have not been lobbied, excessively lobbied or lobbied in any way shape or form, relative to HRG. Yes, I'm familiar with the operation of the hospital insofar as they provide services, as I understand it, for WCB and some private insurance companies and uninsured services.

But this legislation is much, much, much broader than HRG. This legislation speaks to banning private hospitals. It speaks to bringing surgical facilities under the control of the public health system. It will give health authorities under very, very strict conditions one more option for delivering services under very strict conditions and under all the guidelines of the College of Physicians and Surgeons. It will absolutely prohibit facilities from charging patients for medically necessary services. The legislation will outlaw queue jumping. It will outlaw this notion that people can pay more to get faster service.

Mr. Speaker, I would think that even this hon. member will support the legislation once he sees it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Genesis Land Developers Corp.

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of Environment. Many constituents are raising numerous concerns about the proposed Genesis project up in Kananaskis Country. What they would like to know is why such a project in a very environmentally sensitive area like Spray Lakes is being allowed to go through a review process.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset that this government will never allow development that threatens an area's environmental integrity or wilderness character. The overriding principle in Kananaskis Country is the protection of the environment.

Now, as people are aware, in the past when developments have sought approval, there has been a very stringent environmental review and plenty of opportunity for public input. Mr. Speaker, as we are here at this very moment, we are gathering Albertans' views about development in the Spray Valley, information that will play a very vital role in the environmental review in determining whether this development is in the public interest.

Last December I ordered Genesis development corporation, the company proposing the Spray Lakes development, to combine the environmental impact assessments for their proposed helicat operation on Mount Sparrowhawk, the four-season resort, and also the downhill ski area at Tent Ridge. From an environmental perspective it only makes sense to look at the cumulative impacts of all three of these.

Mr. Speaker, finally, I'd have to say that there have been a great number of people who have commented on the environmental impact that this proposal would have, and that must be taken into account.

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also to the Minister of Environment. Can the minister assure me that the concerns of constituents and Albertans elsewhere are being considered?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I want to give that exact assurance to the hon. member that her constituents' concerns are being considered. Hundreds of responses have been given, not just from the hon. members constituents but from people from throughout the province of Alberta. I encourage those people to continue to have their comments brought forward through the hon. member, to the director of environmental assessments in the city of Edmonton here, to me, to the minister's office.

Albertans are expressing their views about Spray Lakes development proposals, and, Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat my assurance to this House and all Albertans that my overriding concern is the protection of Kananaskis Country's environment. I have heard many comments of concerned Albertans that there is a serious issue with respect to this. I have heard no comments in favour of this proposal.

User Fees

MR. SAPERS: The Premier has said that a user fee is not a tax, a fee for service is not a tax. He's also claimed that fees have been adjusted to reflect the cost of providing a service. Apparently, Mr. Speaker, he was wrong on both counts. In fact, hundreds of user fees in Alberta have been found to be illegal taxes, bilking Albertans out of millions and millions of dollars. My questions are to the Premier. When is the Premier going to return the $80 million in user fees he and his government have illegally collected from the pockets of Albertans since the October 1998 Supreme Court decision?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, that court decision was an Ontario court decision and had nothing to do with legislation or fees for services here in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, relative to our program as it relates to fees for services, that will be outlined in the budget presentation later this afternoon. The Provincial Treasurer has undertaken a complete review of all fees and services, has given Albertans assurances that fees will not go up but in many, many cases will come down.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. For the Premier's benefit I'll send over a copy of the intervention by the Attorney General of Alberta into the Supreme Court decision in the Eurig estates decision. So it's clear that Alberta felt it had a role and a concern in this regard. I will make a copy available.

If he can get on the right page, why has the Premier not been telling the truth to Albertans all these years about user fees when we know that at least 100 of these user fees are in fact illegal taxes?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. minister . . . [interjections] Oh, that's wishful thinking on his part, certainly not my part.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking a legal question, and I'll have the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General respond.

THE SPEAKER: Actually, hon. members, any question that asks for a legal opinion in this Assembly is prohibited under Beauchesne 411(1), 408(c).

MR. SAPERS: It was asking for a fact, for some truth. It wasn't asking for a legal opinion, Mr. Speaker.

I'll go on to my third question, because clearly the government doesn't want to answer the last question. Will the Premier agree to release the cost-of-service studies for each and every one of his more than 800 user fees, or is the only thing Albertans are going to receive for their tax money is more blank pages?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, there was a complete review done of all the fees for services, and that issue will be addressed in the budget presentation later this afternoon.

I do remind the hon. member that it was he who brought up the point of legality, not me. He did.

MR. HANCOCK: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I could supplement by saying that under the Eurig decision, which was referred to, which was an Ontario decision referring to an Ontario case, Alberta voluntarily came forward with the fees and regulations review act, voluntarily decided to review all of its fees, and voluntarily brought forward fee reductions for Albertans and for Albertans' benefits which will be reflected this afternoon in the budget.

MRS. GORDON: Yes, Albertans do want information on the whole health care delivery, but they want factual information, and as such I am seeking clarification on behalf of my constituents regarding the proposed policy on private clinics. They want to know the various players, the various roles, and how they are in regards to the proposed policy on private clinics. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What will be the role of the College of Physicians and Surgeons in this process, to this process? What is their involvement?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, under the policy statement that the hon. member is referring to, the role of the medical profession through the College of Physicians and Surgeons would continue to be very much as it is now. They would be responsible for the accreditation, licensing if you will, of the medical practitioners that would practice in a surgical clinic.

Further, Mr. Speaker, they would be responsible for accrediting, setting the standards, making sure they are met with respect to the nature of the facility, the supports that are available in that facility, the services that are provided, and all of the necessary plans to deal with any contingencies that might come up in the operation of the provision of that service.

So the College of Physicians and Surgeons would certainly, as they do today, play a very, very key role, a professional role as a professional association in doing this evaluation and providing for that accountability.

MRS. GORDON: What will be the role of the family physician in this process, and will they be sending patients directly to these private facilities?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, the same process would be in place as is the case today. I would advise and I'm sure all members of the Assembly understand that the referral process would of course be one which in almost all cases would start with the family physician, the local physician, the general practitioner. Those individuals at the front line would refer through to the specialists themselves cases that needed that specialization, that expertise that specialists provide. They would assess the case. They would look at the best method of treatment and follow right through. The proposed policy that we have before Albertans and before this Assembly does not in any way alter that relationship among professionals in the medical system.

MRS. GORDON: What will be the role of the regional health authorities and you as minister?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, under the policy the regional health authorities would be responsible for assessing any proposal that might come in for a specialized surgical clinic. They would be responsible, as the policy indicates, to look at the overall benefit of the particular proposal. First of all, of course, they would have to decide on whether there was a need. They would have to look at the overall benefit of the proposal. They would have to make sure, in consultation with the College of Physicians and Surgeons, that any facility, any equipment, any supports that were going to be provided were adequate for the maintenance of quality health care and the protection of the individual patient and the public interest.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Seismic Drilling Holes

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the annual meeting of the Surface Rights Federation yesterday I heard from landowners across Alberta who are upset because the government is failing to monitor and enforce rules to protect the land and water from oil and gas well drilling. With the drilling of seismic test wells even the rules are unsatisfactory, particularly as compliance with these rules is not monitored or enforced. All of my questions are to the Minister of Environment. When will the government do its job and ensure that all seismic holes are filled and capped as many landowners and municipalities have ongoing problems that are not resolved?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the Department of Environment has worked in collaboration with the department of energy on a number of different issues including approval processes and the issue of enforcement. I'd have to say as a general observation that the oil and gas industry has behaved very responsibly with respect to their access to the resource in the province of Alberta. There are, of course, exceptions to every rule. It is our intention to work very strongly, again in collaboration with the Department of Resource Development, in dealing with those operators within the oil and gas industry that are not operating within the rules.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, he hasn't answered the question. The people in Alberta want to know when this government is going to do their job to ensure that all seismic holes have been properly filled and capped. We have ongoing problems in many municipalities, like Rocky View and Foothills, who have been working on this issue for literally years.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the question has been asked and answered.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, given that the study on this issue in the Pine Lake area has taken so long and we've had absolutely no progress reports on what's happening there, will the government impose a ban on drilling seismic holes in ditches in the interim, as many people and many municipalities have asked him to do?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'll take the hon. member's question under advisement.

DR. WEST: Sometimes the opposition is very clever, because they lob the question in a direction where it shouldn't be handled. It should be handled right here. I'm responsible for the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, which has looked at this over the years with many people doing research on it; that is, the filling in of holes from seismic exploration. The jury is out. A lot of the geologists and those in the geoscience of seismic have studied this intensively and have not agreed on the issues that have been brought forth by the Surface Rights Board.

Furthermore, throughout North America and throughout Canada in every province there is research being done on this very issue as it relates to the various structures, the various formations that we drill through and the effect that seismic has as we go into the aquifers. I would say to the hon. member that this province is probably more responsible than anyone I know in the follow-up and the study and research on this issue.

One other thing. Last year the EUB, who looks after that, filed 22,000 applications in this province with only 22 appeals that actually went to hearing. I would say the track record in this province, looking at all of these issues, is excellent.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Special-needs Education

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In consulting with a number of teachers at various schools in and around my constituency recently, a number of concerns were brought forward to me regarding the program unit funding for students with special needs. My question today is for the Minister of Learning. Will the minister explain the present program unit funding formula relative to the qualifying criteria for students with special needs?

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Program unit funding, PUF, is available to children two and a half to six years of age. Its intent is to prepare children that have severe disabilities for grade 1, grade 2, grade 3, and on into school. These children are eligible for very close to $20,000 in funding. They must, however, have a severe disability, physical, mental, or deafness or blindness. As well, they must have an individualized plan tailor-made to that child. This is an excellent program that has been going on.

The other thing that I would say is that the handbook for program unit funding has been distributed to all school boards and is available through all school board offices.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary to the same minister: can the minister assure members of this Assembly that adequate staff and resources are available in Alberta schools to ensure that all students in integrated classrooms have the opportunity to reach their full learning potential?

DR. OBERG: I certainly can, Mr. Speaker. Today is budget day, and there will certainly be some announcements for children with severe special needs. I would ask the hon. member to wait and see what happens in the budget.

A couple of things I would say. Over the last summer I lifted the caps on special needs, on special education. A student health initiative was put in, which we anticipate will help the severe special-needs students considerably.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the resources are there. I feel that it's something we have to keep being very vigilant on, and we have to ensure that these students get the absolute best possible education in Alberta.

MR. MARZ: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The minister may have answered my third question, but just to be more specific, can he assure my constituents that these programs will be available in the future?

DR. OBERG: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, again, I would suggest to the hon. member to await this coming budget, and I think he will be very impressed and very happy.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing I would add to this is that this morning actually I returned from the Canada Council of Ministers of Education.

MRS. SLOAN: Was that in Mexico?

DR. OBERG: No, that is not Mexico. It was the Council of Ministers of Education of Canada. When I say Canada, usually it means Canada. That's C-A-N-A-D-A.

One of the very important issues that we discussed as ministers was the whole issue of special-needs funding, special-needs education, and we certainly agreed that this is an issue all across Canada and is something that really needed to be looked at.

We are establishing a task force with ministers from across Canada to take a look at the issues surrounding special-needs funding and actually look into it more. This is a task force from across Canada that I really feel will help us get to the bottom of special-needs funding in two ways, in both forms of prevention and better ways of teaching these children and better scholastic techniques.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Calgary Herald Strike

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The department of labour has disappeared, but the persistent troubles have not. Today there are over 200 employees entering the fourth month of their strike at the Calgary Herald. This is the second long, divisive strike that has occurred in the city of Calgary in recent memory. My first question this afternoon is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Given the disruption that this strike is having on the employees, what does the minister plan to do to resolve this long dispute?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, this strike has been gaining a lot of attention, perhaps because it's one of the media outlets. Certainly in terms of the history of labour disputes in this country and in this province it is something that no one wants to see particularly, but I would remind the hon. member that we as a department and as a government are doing the things that are proper under the legislation. We've been providing mediators. Mediators have been accessible to both parties and are there, of course, when needed.

This is a part of democracy. As the hon. member knows the employees have the right to bargain collectively. They've chosen to accept that right, and of course the employer is also free, then, to bargain collectively as well. The hope of all of us – and I hope it includes the member opposite – is that the two parties will come to a proper agreement.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Given that the government has intervened in the past to solve disputes, like with the Calgary public school board, why won't the minister consider binding arbitration to resolve this long strike?

MR. DUNFORD: No. The intervention that is being discussed by the hon. member, just so that we have the record clear, was a disputes inquiry board. The disputes inquiry board can be used. It's one of the tools that we have if there are misinterpretations or some misunderstanding about what the actual issues are. I don't think there's any misunderstanding in the dispute between the management of the Calgary Herald and the employees of the Calgary Herald. The positions have been clearly documented on both sides. Intervention at this time by the government would be extremely heavy-handed, and this minister is not about to do that.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is also to the same minister. Is the minister so nonchalant about this strike because he is on the side of management, the same management that his government has signed sweetheart secret deals with to give the Herald scoops on stories whenever they're not to speak to the opposition about those stories? Is that what you're about?

MR. DUNFORD: Name names, Hughie. You obviously went off the script, Hughie. Name names. This situation, sir, requires a response. If he has some information that he'd like to present me, we'll be glad to look at it. Other than that, it's just simply some grandstanding on the part of a very good hon. member.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Gun Control Legislation

MR. THURBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. The Supreme Court of Canada heard arguments this week on the registration of guns under Bill C-68, which passed in 1995. There are many, many law-abiding, peaceful gun owners in this province and in my constituency who are very opposed to this federal government encroachment into their lives. To the minister: what have Alberta and for that matter other provincial governments done to oppose this unnecessary intrusion into provincial rights?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, an important question, and there needs to be, I think, some clarification. Bill C-68 contains a number of things, one of which is the gun registry process, but others are amendments to the Criminal Code that strengthen provisions relating to the criminal use of firearms. Alberta supported the proper use of federal jurisdiction in proposing amendments to the Criminal Code and cracking down on the criminal use of firearms, but Alberta objects strenuously to federal intrusion in the area of provincial jurisdiction when it comes to property rights. The registering of guns is, in fact, a registering of a property right.

So Alberta took a reference case to the Court of Appeal. There was a split decision on the Court of Appeal, so we have appealed that to the Supreme Court of Canada, which, as the hon. member has correctly referenced, was heard on Monday and Tuesday. We oppose the federal government's intrusion into provincial jurisdiction, as Alberta always has opposed federal intrusion into provincial jurisdiction, and we oppose the colossal waste of money that the federal government has put into this in trying to control the property rights of Albertans.

Speaker's Ruling Sub Judice Rule

THE SPEAKER: Ordinarily, hon. members, the chair would intervene as the matter might properly be viewed as being sub judice. We certainly do have a situation here where there is a court review of a matter. But in this case, because of the uniqueness of the question, the only prejudice that might be given to this case would go to those who are intervening.

AN HON. MEMBER: Which is us.

THE SPEAKER: Correct.

MR. THURBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. What does Alberta propose as an alternative to this federal legislation, which is clearly not working?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not clear that we need to occupy this field, but if the Supreme Court were to rule that the federal legislation related to property rights and was unconstitutional, it may then be appropriate for Alberta to bring in legislation with respect to the licensing of firearms acquisition or the licensing of people who utilize firearms to make sure that there was proper training in place or that people who had criminal records, for example, didn't have access to firearms.

MR. THURBER: My final question, Mr. Speaker, is to the same minister. Could you please reassure these law-abiding, peaceful gun owners that any policy that may be put in place in Alberta will not reflect the attitude or the intent of Bill C-68?

MR. HANCOCK: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. First of all, we wouldn't bring in legislation without properly consulting Albertans about the nature and content of the legislation to be brought in. Secondly, we would be looking at the question. Quite frankly, all the people involved in this discussion, the responsible firearms association and others, have talked about the appropriate type of legislation in this area and the registration of firearms as proposed by the federal government being a colossal waste of money, money which could be better used fighting crimes if they did more to deal with the criminal use of firearms. We would not propose to waste resources in that manner.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Support for Voluntary Sector

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The report Building on Strength: Improving Governance and Accountability in Canada's Voluntary Sector prepared by the federal government was released a year ago, in February 1999. The voluntary sector has joined the public and private sectors, becoming the third pillar of modern society and providing many of the programs formerly offered by government, including providing shelter and food, support services for health and wellness, recreation, arts, youth, et cetera. My questions today are to the Minister of Community Development. Will the minister tell us what action he has taken on multiyear funding commitments, or does he perhaps not agree with this?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Well, I don't quite know where the hon. member's question is leading. Obviously, we are committed to funding the programs that we endorse, and we do it year to year, and normally they increase. So, quite frankly, if she'd like an answer, then I'd ask that the question be a little more specific.

MS BLAKEMAN: No. I think I got that answer.

To the same minister: what is the minister's response to recommendations on training, capacity for technology, and innovation in communications?

Speaker's Ruling Questions outside Government Responsibility

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, if I understand the preamble to the question, the hon. member raised it in the context of a report that was released by the federal government, which is clearly not a matter of administrative competence of this Assembly.

MS BLAKEMAN: If I might, there were specific recommendations to all governments included in the report, and I'm asking what the policy is that this government has on these areas.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, again, administrative competence in this Assembly deals with issues originating in this province, not elsewhere.

Now, if the hon. minister wants to take a shot at this, go for it.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Again to the same minister: could I ask what policy and plans the department has developed to take into account the costs of core operations, including staffing, volunteer training, board development needs, and information technology? What's the Alberta government policy on this?

MR. WOLOSHYN: I would seek, first of all, Mr. Speaker, a bit of clarification on the question. However, having said that, if the hon. member would be so kind as to be a little bit patient, she'll see that we have three-year business plans. The budget is going to be brought down today. All these questions as presented, if they pertain to our activities in government, will be answered very thoroughly and to the minutest detail that she might have in mind.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Fishing Closures

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are avid anglers. Yesterday the Minister of Environment announced numerous spring closures. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Why is it necessary to put closures in place?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, our fish populations are under a tremendous amount of sportfishing pressure. Just the other day I was meeting with one of the biologists in the Department of Environment who was talking about the number of lakes that fish are in in the province of Alberta. There are approximately 800 lakes in the province of Alberta that have fish, compared to over 90,000 lakes in Saskatchewan and over 250,000 lakes in the province of Ontario. There are 350,000 licensed anglers in the province of Alberta, which means that the pressure is at the rate of 400 anglers per lake in the province of Alberta. In Saskatchewan and in Ontario it's approximately two anglers per lake.

So, Mr. Speaker, this spring we are implementing a complete fishing closure on the majority of lakes and rivers and streams and canals within the parkland prairie zone and the northern boreal zone. These closures for the spring are being implemented to protect fish species during this very important spawning period.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary is also to the Minister of Environment. Why has it taken until now to put these management measures into place?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we've had a number of different types of management techniques that we've used to maintain the Alberta fishery. Because of the tremendous pressure on our fisheries in the province of Alberta we cannot have the same kinds of rules and management techniques as they have in places like Saskatchewan or Ontario. The closures are important to help protect species now so that sportfishing opportunities will continue in the future.

Historically we've used techniques like size limits, bait bans, closures on a lake-by-lake basis or on a species basis. These closures for spring are another management technique. They will provide a maximum benefit for a wide variety of species over a large area. Mr. Speaker, it will cause disruption to some of our sportsfishermen, but it is a minimal disruption so that over the long run we can continue to have this sportfishing as an important part of the recreational experience in the province.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary is to the same minister. Money from sportfishing is an important source of income for many of the people in my area. Anglers purchase fuel, use hotels, restaurants, and supplies and equipment. Will there be any major impact from the closure of these from an economic perspective?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, any impact should be minimal. The closures will last for approximately one month. They will be detailed in the 2000 Alberta Guide to Sportfishing Regulations. I think that people will understand and most Albertans will agree that the long-term benefits of having a healthy and sustainable sportfishing opportunity are worth a short seasonal closure during this important spawning season.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have expressed how important fishing is to them both as anglers and with respect to the economic impact on their communities. We're confident that these are good measures that are for the long-term health of the fisheries in the province of Alberta.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of three hon. members to participate.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Big Valley Jamboree

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to recognize that a wonderful event in my constituency, the Big Valley Jamboree, had its Festival 2000 kickoff today at Molson House. Since its arrival on the festival scene six years ago Big Valley Jamboree has earned the reputation as being one of North America's finest country music events. People gather at the Camrose recreational centre to experience four days filled with activities like listening to the best artists the country music world can offer, daily bull-riding events, lumberjack contests, and a trade show.

The Big Valley Jamboree is one of largest outdoor country music festivals held in North America. Sixty thousand fans gathered in Camrose last year for the August long weekend.

Today at Molson House this year's lineup was revealed, including such entertainers as Sawyer Brown, Tracy Lawrence, Patricia Conroy, Charlie Daniels, John Michael Montgomery, Lace, Danny Hooper, Dwight Yoakum, and many others.

What makes the Jamboree Canada's premier outdoor festival is that it is a family experience. Careful consideration was given to plan an event that would appeal to every age group. A family stage and separate family campground are available for those with young children, while the main stage and several festival events cater to an adult crowd.

This is a very important event to my constituents. Hundreds of participants from Camrose and the surrounding area come together to put on an event that has attracted fans from around the world. Many dedicated people including those of the Camrose Regional Exhibition and Panhandle Productions Ltd., the sponsors, have devoted countless hours of their time to make this weekend the wildly popular event that it has become. I'd like to thank them here today and congratulate them on their success.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Vietnamese and Chinese New Year

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to recognize and join in the celebration of the Vietnamese Tet and Chinese lunar New Year, observed earlier this month. The year 2000 is the year of the golden dragon, a very auspicious and special year under the Vietnamese and Chinese calendars.

Lunar New Year and Tet are celebrated as family affairs, a time for reunion and thanksgiving. Anyone who attended the Edmonton Viets society gathering at the Shaw Conference Centre in late January would agree with me that this was a family affair and a community celebration.

February 5 was the official lunar New Year for both Vietnamese and Chinese, and Tet also marks the beginning of spring. I always find the similarities between cultures interesting, and starting the new year with a clean slate, forgiving others, paying one's debts, and endeavouring to correct one's faults seems to be a universal approach to a new year. Events and celebrations have extended throughout February and are hosted by a variety of organizations.

I've mentioned before in this Assembly the great respect and value I have for the many people of Vietnamese and Chinese-Vietnamese heritage who live in my constituency of Edmonton-

Centre. Individuals and organizations provide many services and programs in the community as well as contributing overall to the safety and vibrancy of our neighbourhoods.

I'd like to mention a few of the many organizations and individuals who share their rich cultural heritage with us and who continue to work to improve the quality of all of our lives. The Edmonton Viets Association, Changing Together, the Hai (Quang) Ninh Community Association, the Vietnam Chinese Senior Citizens Club, Edmonton Chinatown Multicultural Centre Foundation, the Vietnam Time Magazine, Association of Professionals and Entrepreneurs from Vietnam, Indochina Chinese Senior Citizens Association of Edmonton, the United Calgary Chinese Association, Calgary Chinese Elderly Citizens' Association, and more than hundreds of others.

Thank you very much, and I wish everyone an auspicious year of health, happiness, and prosperity.

2005 Goodwill Games

MR. HLADY: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy and honoured to be able to stand and speak today about Calgary being awarded the 2005 Goodwill Games. This celebration will be a wonderful way to kick off the 100th anniversary of this great province that we all live in. At least $160 million in economic benefit to Calgary and Alberta is expected to be brought about because of the Goodwill Games coming to Calgary and Alberta.

The structure of the games will be about 10 days. Fifteen or more sports are yet to be decided. A lot of them are decided, with others to be added over the next six months. One thousand plus athletes will be competing. The unique structure of this allows for only invited athletes. Therefore, only the best in each sport will be representing their countries here from around the world.

Ted Turner from Time Warner Sports, Mark Lazarus from Time Warner Sports, and Mike Plant, the president of Goodwill Games, said that it was an easy decision to be able to pick Calgary and Alberta because of the wonderful legacy of infrastructure we have left over from the '88 Olympics.

The Goodwill Games committee in Calgary has six months now to finalize the plans. The unique format that was experienced, as an example, in 1998 in New York, where it was the summer games, allowed for figure skating to be a participant sport. The potential for that is to possibly see summer sports in the winter games in Calgary if we feel that's the best way to present and see things happen in Calgary. Questions for the committee now are to make sure that we know what facilities have to be upgraded, what the costs are, and if we can afford to make it happen with the private sector and with government.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Doug Mitchell, chair of the Goodwill Games committee, and the rest of the members of the committee for their many hours of time to bring the games to Calgary. I believe that over the next six months the committee will put together a proposal that will make 2005 the best Goodwill Games ever.

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 7(5) I'd invite the Government House Leader to apprise us of the activity we will be undertaking next week.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tempted just to say the budget, but I'll go through it.

Monday, February 28, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders the introduction of interim supply Bill 9; motion with respect to subcommittees A, B, C, and D to establish committee membership; response to the budget; address in reply to the Speech from the Throne; and day 1 of supplementary supply. Monday evening we can anticipate finishing what of the afternoon's business we haven't completed.

On February 29 at 4:30 p.m. interim supply Bill 9 for second reading and Community Development main estimates. On Tuesday at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders, subcommittees of supply: in the Assembly International and Intergovernmental Relations, committee B, day 1 of main estimates, and in room 512, subcommittee of supply, committee A on Gaming. Post 10 p.m., Community Development main estimates, address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, interim supply Bill 9, and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, March 1, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders, in the Assembly, subcommittee of supply, committee C, Government Services main estimates; in room 512, committee D, Economic Development main estimates. Post 10 p.m. in the Assembly address in reply to the Speech from the Throne; interim supply Bill 9, Committee of the Whole; and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, March 2, in the afternoon, under Government Bills and Orders, designated Committee of Supply as per the rules and interim supply Bill 9, third reading.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

MR. DICKSON: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I was standing under Standing Order 13(2) hoping for some clarification. The basis would be that in the exchange from my colleague from Edmonton-Centre there was a question about a federal report about volunteerism apparently with recommendations to other levels of government, and you intervened at that point, sir. My question is this. Just seconds before, we had seen a question about a piece of federal legislation, the federal gun control statute. I've always understood that questions had to be confined to matters within the legislative competence of the government of the province of Alberta, but I had not understood before the proposition that questions could only relate to matters that arise within the province. I'm wondering if I could get some assistance from you, sir, in understanding that ruling you made moments ago.

THE SPEAKER: Actually, hon. members, there was no ruling made several minutes ago.

What is really important in this House is that all members pay very, very careful attention to the questions that are being raised and, quite frankly, to pay as much attention to the answers being given. Oftentimes hon. members get up, raise their question, and members are chitchatting and talking to one another and there's a hum in here. One thing the chair does is listen very attentively. The chair even has access to an additional microphone in here so that he can listen to all of the words of all of the questions, and part of that attention to the question is to make sure that there's some connection between what is being raised in the preambles and the ultimate question.

There was an intervention with respect to the question from the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. Those questions, in terms of reflection by the chair, quite clearly had to do with the policy of the government of Alberta with respect to responses to certain things.

When the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre raised a question, the chair rose as much for clarification in the chair's own mind as it was for an intervention. There was no ruling that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre could not proceed with her questions. The chair simply said: I hope that I understand all of this. The chair also has had some experience sitting on the front bench in the past and knows full well that questions can go in different directions, so the chair has learned to keenly listen with his own ear to all of the words. In this case there was no intervention, but the chair does appreciate the request for clarification with respect to this.

Now, hon. members, I do believe, that being the case, I'm going to exercise an authority that the chair does have, that perhaps the chair should exercise a little more often. So as to allow proper time for the necessary preparations to be made prior to the Budget Address this afternoon, the House is now recessed until 4 p.m. today.

[The Assembly adjourned from 2:53 p.m. to 4 p.m.]

THE SPEAKER: I'm going to call you back to order.

The Hon. Provincial Treasurer.

Transmittal of Estimates

MR. DAY: Mr. Speaker, I have received certain messages from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order!

THE SPEAKER: The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2001, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province and of certain sums required from the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2001, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

head: Government Motions

MR. DAY: Mr. Speaker, I'm first tabling the government's consolidated fiscal and business plan, as required under section 4 of the Government Accountability Act. Budget 2000 also includes business plans for each ministry, which must be made public under section 13 of this act.

8. Mr. Day moved:

Be it resolved that the message of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2000-2001 estimates and business plans, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 8 carried]

9. Mr. Day moved:

Be it resolved that the message of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2000-2001 lottery fund estimates, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 9 carried]

MR. DAY: Mr. Speaker . . . [disturbance in the gallery] Let the record show that my grandson interrupted me, Mr. Speaker.

10. Mr. Day moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 58(2.1) the number of days that the Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2000-2001 lottery fund estimates shall be two days.

[Government Motion 10 carried]

11. Mr. Day moved:

Be it resolved that the message of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 1999-2000 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 11 carried]

12. Mr. Day moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 58(6) the number of days that the Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 1999-2000 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund shall be one day.

[Government Motion 12 carried]

13. Mr. Day moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly resolve itself into Committee of Supply, when called, to consider supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

[Government Motion 13 carried]

14. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, when called, to consider certain bills on the Order Paper.

[Government Motion 14 carried]

head: Budget Address

15. Mr. Day moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

MR. DAY: Mr. Speaker, Budget 2000 is the result of the thoughtful input of every government MLA seated here today, and it's input based on government MLAs following the instructions of our Premier, who above anyone else reminds us in a regular way that we need to listen to our bosses, our bosses being the people of Alberta. This budget is a budget from the people of Alberta. It's also the first budget to be tabled this century by any provincial or federal government. It's a first in that way, and we are told that it's also a first in terms of a number of things that are being accomplished or will be accomplished simultaneously with this budget.

This budget in a brief term will be reducing debt significantly, reducing taxes, increasing spending on priority areas like health, education, and people services. It will be freeing 132,000 low-income Albertans from having to pay any provincial income tax. It will be eliminating bracket creep, the first government to do that. It will be increasing by a quarter of a billion dollars the value of the heritage savings trust fund. It will be putting in place a half a billion dollar fund to encourage science and energy research and development in the province. Overall, Mr. Speaker, I think that's not a bad way to launch into the 21st century.

Now, we are told that we have been able to accomplish this, some people would suggest, by luck or windfall revenues. I want to address that momentarily and bring our attention back to 1985-1986 when of all the corporate revenue that we took in as a government, approximately 60 percent came from the oil and gas sector. As we close out the books for 1998, we see that all of the revenue which we took in from the oil and gas sector made up approximately 10 percent of corporate taxes.

There has been a huge broadening of the base of the economy here in Alberta. There has been a huge diversification. It has not been luck. It has not been goodwill. It has been hard work, Mr. Speaker. Our Premier has led this particular initiative, and the government policies based on caring but limited government, leading to unlimited opportunity, have caused Alberta to be the most people-friendly place, we believe, in which people can pursue their hopes and their dreams.

Mr. Speaker, Stephen Leacock once said that he believed in luck and that he also found that the harder he worked, the luckier he got. We've been working hard on the priorities of Albertans, and the results are here.

We would also like to bring attention to some changes – I call it an evolution of sorts – in the entire budget process. There's been an evolving transformation. Budget days used to be and still are in some jurisdictions and with some governments the result, the culmination, of a year of secret meetings. Then budget day would arrive and there would be a revelation, a revealing of shocks and surprises and hopefully good announcements. The expectation from government was that citizens would be thankful that we had planned their lives for the next year and also consider that we would be eminently wiser and would have been able to figure all of these things out. That has taken on a different change under the direction of Ralph Klein, Mr. Speaker.

We work very closely and MLAs work very closely with our partners throughout the year. Budget day is no longer an announcement. Those announcements used to be especially scary at election time, Mr. Speaker. I won't suggest this government necessarily, but governments generally would use an election year budget, if this were to be seen as one – but every year is an election year in Alberta – would use those times to announce all kinds of goodies, sugar-plums that had not yet even danced in the heads of the taxpayers, and it was presented in a way to make the government sweet enough to re-elect.

Mr. Speaker, under the direction of Ralph Klein we clearly operate with an understanding that we do not buy votes. We work hard to earn them. We work hard throughout the year with our partners – municipalities, regional health authorities, school boards, people in the business community – to develop the kinds of things that need to be done and need to be said and need to be directed. We take those priorities, build them into a budget, a budget that now has three-year business plans. We project three years into the future. We don't want to see surprises. There's always the inevitable that happens, but we have three-year business plans, which we then monitor on the short term every 90 days. Every quarter we report on the progress of spending and on revenues coming in.

Budget day should not be a day of surprises. It should be a day in which government accounts for where they think the revenues will be going and where they think the expenditures will be going in the year ahead, and that's what this is all about, working closely with our partners, Mr. Speaker.

As we look at other things that need to be done, as we move to a discussion on the spending areas of this budget – and there is spending in this budget very clearly – I would like to suggest that we may want to think of adjusting the language that we use when we talk about spending. We hear from critics from time to time, and it's good and positive to have critics there. It helps us to be even better and to respond. Sometimes the way some critics present spending is as if nothing is being spent at all in priority areas. It's as if everything is bleak and horrifying, and unknowing Albertans, vulnerable Albertans, are sometimes taken advantage of by the criticism. I think that just as we demand honesty in advertising, we need to demand honesty in criticizing. And when we look at spending, I would suggest that we put things in a better context. If we look at the areas of spending and if we're talking about spending increases, then we say to our citizens: what we're talking about is not more spending but even more spending. Even more spending. That puts it in context, Mr. Speaker.

As we look at that and consider the language of how we address this, sometimes I wonder if our critics fully understand from whence the money comes. There's a thought from time to time, as I hear some individuals, that there's a great vault in this building and in that vault are untold millions and billions of dollars and all that is required is that we go down to the basement and dig some money out of the vault and just pass it around or that there are bags of loonies on my desk or on somebody else's desk and that we toss those around.

Mr. Speaker, we need to have a clear picture of where the money comes from. The money comes from the people of Alberta. It's their money, it's their budget, and it's their security. That's what we're talking about. And every two weeks, as hardworking Albertans look at their paycheques, what happens is that we as government come up to them, albeit in an understanding way, and say: "We're from the government, and we're here to help you. We're here to help you carry that heavy load in your wallet and your purse. We're here to take some of your money from you." We say that every two weeks. In most cases Albertans recognize that some taxes need to be paid and that money has to come from them. But all the money comes from the people.

We need to remember that if we ask for even more spending, what we're saying to Albertans every two weeks is: "We need to take even more money from you. You're going to have to work even harder. From somewhere you're going to have to come up with more dollars." That's what we need to keep in mind as we talk about even more spending, and we are spending even more in some areas. We have tremendous growth in this province and tremendous pressures that come with that growth.

We are spending even more in the area of health. There are growth pressures that are coming from all sides in that particular area. With this budget we are not backing off the fact that we're seeing approximately just over a 9 percent increase in spending on health. That will increase to 21 percent over the three-year business plan. A 21 percent increase. Even more spending on health. We will be moving at the end of that three-year plan to the $6 billion mark in spending. That's a lot of money, Mr. Speaker.

It means very definite things will happen this year and in the next two years following this year. It means that 2,400 nurses and frontline workers will be hired. It means that 90 more doctors will be hired. It means that even more procedures will be done. Shorter waiting lines is the goal of some of that spending. Mr. Speaker, 5,950 heart procedures. That's an increase of some 600 heart procedures. And 1,430 dialysis procedures. That's an increase of about 140. We'll see 161 bone marrow transplants. These are real things happening to real people that we can provide for. A 10 percent increase in the number of liver transplants that will be done. A 16 percent increase in the number of heart transplants that will be done. Add to all of this, Mr. Speaker, untold numbers, thousands of joint replacements and then everything else that happens in the medical care system, hundreds of millions of dollars into infrastructure to build the hospitals, to do the renovations, to take care of the lodges, to do the extended care units and you can see how it's very easy to arrive at a spending of $17 million a day to operate this health care system. We think Albertans are worth that, and we're committing those dollars to that.

As we do that, we look back, though, with some caution, because we see that 22 percent of our budget was based on health care spending in 1980. We move to 1990: 26 percent of our budget on health care spending. As we finish out this three-year business plan, 33 percent of our budget will be spent on health care. I recently met with a minister of finance from another province. In their province they are looking at 40 percent of all the taxpayers' money being spent on health care.

Any government that cares as much about the principles of the Canada Health Act as we do must look to ways of seeing efficient services delivered in innovative ways so that we can keep the growing costs of health care to a manageable limit. This is not just an Alberta situation, Mr. Speaker. This is right across the country. I can tell you that many governments are afraid to even address the issue. This is a new century. We need to be bold and caring at the same time, and this government is addressing the issues. The reason other governments are sometimes paralyzed with fear to address the spending issues around health is because of the accusations that often are heaped upon you when you say that you are trying to do something to improve the system.

It almost saddens me to comment that some people would even reflect that this government is actually trying to destroy health care, in fact to destroy Canada. We hear incredible things. I would ask people as we enter this debate to think of us as legislators, if it's possible, as human beings, because we are, and when we're in the debate, to look at us as legislators. We have children. We have grandchildren. We have aging parents who are facing the increased cost of advanced care in their sunset years. Do people really think anybody in their right mind would want to destroy the health care system that is there for their children, for their grandchildren, and for their grandparents? Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that it's time to put away the political scalpels and to drop the name-calling and accusations and engage in positive, co-operative discussions on how services can be provided in a way that takes the cost increases away from every health care system in this country.

Here's what we're talking about, Mr. Speaker. We're talking about looking at approaches and solutions that will bring shorter lineups, better care, no cost to the consumer, and all within the Canada Health Act. We're talking about improving the health and life of Albertans. Anybody with solutions that don't meet those criteria need not apply, and we will guarantee that in legislation.

Mr. Speaker, we are doing even more in the area of learning and education. We have a huge increase in students in this province. We are looking at increases this year in education, in terms of a percentage increase in our spending, of 9 percent and stretching that to over 19 percent over the three-year period.

What does that mean in real terms? It means 2,200 new teachers and aides in the classroom. It means more money going to programs that will achieve higher levels of achievement: $66 million going to programs directly focused on achievement and progress and learning, $60 million for computers in the classroom this year. Sixty million dollars. That is very significant. We are concerned, Mr. Speaker, and we want to see our children moving into the global economy equipped to handle whatever they face.

It also means, as we broaden this out to the postsecondary area, that we'll be seeing a 9.2 percent increase in postsecondary spending, moving up to 16 percent. We will see 23,000 new spaces created in the postsecondary system. We will see assistance going to students who are faced with the weight of loans in order for them to be educated. This year we'll see a 22 percent increase in assistance to students. Mr. Speaker, by the end of the three-year plan we will see a 50 percent increase in assistance to students. We know that about half of the postsecondary student population in this province in fact do not access provincial student loans, but that means that half of the students do, and we're going to be there for them. We're going to be there as they move into the 21st century, and we don't apologize for that. We are excited about that.

Around the province people continue to move here in great numbers. We know that that puts huge pressure on infrastructure in our towns and in our cities. We had over 50,000 people again this year move into this province. Just think of it, Mr. Speaker, 50,000 people. That's like another city of Red Deer just coming right up out of the ground every year. It's a wonderful thought, but that brings with it some extra cost to government. We have said to our municipalities that with the growth rate that we are experiencing, a population growth rate that is twice what Ontario is growing, we are going to assist the municipalities to address those needs to the tune of $725 million this year in this budget. That's on top of the $1.1 billion that is presently being expended on infrastructure, and that's not just roads. That is water systems, that is schools, that is hospitals, and that is seniors' lodges, all of the areas of infrastructure which presently are dealing with the positive results of the Alberta advantage.

In agriculture we have seen across western Canada this year the results of several years in a row of low commodity prices and on a regional basis devastating weather conditions. We have seen our friends and neighbors and relatives in Saskatchewan and Manitoba going hat in hand to the federal government, asking for assistance, something that will help them with that. Mr. Speaker, we can't stand by and wait for the federal government to dither about this particular problem. We are stepping to the plate. In last year's budget and this year's we are expanding the abilities of the farm income disaster program to handle those pressures and disasters beyond the control of our farmers. These are global items that are beyond their control. As we negotiate at the world trade level, trying to bring down this whole issue of subsidies around the world and of tariffs on the agricultural side, as we work to do that, we will not – we will not – see our family farms moved to extinction. We will be there for them.

Murray McLaughlan sang a song, a tribute to farmers, some years ago. He said: thanks for the meal; here's a song that is real from a boy from the city to you. You know, that's a nice song, Mr. Speaker. That's a nice song, and I will resist the request to break into song at this particular moment, but I can tell you something. A song will not put diesel fuel into that tractor. A song will not buy the seed that needs to go into next year's crop. A song will not buy the silage that's needed over the year to feed the cattle and see them through the winter. We're doing far more than that, and we can say to our farm community a similar thing. We can say thanks for the meal; here's some help that is real from all over the province to you.

Mr. Speaker, our seniors, especially those on low and fixed incomes, have faced several years of slowly rising inflation and other costs. We feel it's time, that the Alberta advantage and the bold plans that we have for this century have given us the fiscal capacity to be able to address the need of low-income seniors, so we are announcing an increase in low-income seniors' benefits of 10 percent, which will assist our low-income and fixed-income seniors as they move through the years ahead. Those seniors have worked hard. They've served well. They continue to be generous. We will be there for them. We will also see an increase of 16 percent in a special program just dealing with special needs for seniors. That is important, and we are there for them.

As we look from one end of the age spectrum to the other, in terms of children's services there's the Alberta Children's Forum that took place this year, chaired by Colleen Klein. Through that forum and that process we have seen and been brought forward insights and recommendations on how to deal with some of the items that are being faced by children and families today. We know, Mr. Speaker, that as a Conservative government we cannot invade the area of family. We cannot intrude in that area, and we don't want to do things that would increase dependency. We want to foster independency. With the recommendations that are coming from this forum, there will be a 6 percent increase in our funding for Children's Services. That will extend to 16 percent over three years. Children are our future. We're going to be there for them.

Mr. Speaker, we have through the year addressed a number of other areas. On the question of the Canada pension plan people continue to ask us what we are doing in that particular area. I want to remind people and update them that Alberta has come forward with suggestions on how that plan could be improved, that if they were adopted across the country, the plan would be improved for all Canadians.

But we can't wait while these plans, these items that we have researched and that we believe have some real possibilities for improvement sit on a federal shelf and gather dust, so we have asked the other provinces and the federal government to join with us in a working committee, which we now have in place for six months, to explore the Alberta approach to pension plans and to proper funding and to open up opportunities especially for young people who are working and investing in that plan and to guarantee the seniors who are already in the plan that their benefits will be there. We're working with the federal government and the other provinces, but it's a two-track system, Mr. Speaker. At the end of that six months we'll evaluate whether there is progress and ability to move ahead, and we will continue at the request of citizens to look at the feasibility of an Alberta plan.

We are not saying, Mr. Speaker, that we are pulling out of the Canada pension plan. We are not making that comment. This is not a threat. It is saying that we are responsible for the pension dollars that our citizens invest. We want to make sure they're properly invested in the best way. We'll be there for them. We're exploring those possibilities.

As we look at the area of investment, we're excited that we can report that we have just completed adding $230 million, almost a quarter of a billion dollars, to the heritage savings trust fund. We have increased that fund. We will not allow inflation to erode it, and we will be there.

Interestingly, Mr. Speaker, that fund this year will earn in income for Albertans approximately the same amount of money we will take in from oil royalties. So here is this fund, that has been built up over the years from oil and gas royalties, now producing, the fund is producing, interest at the same rate that royalties are being produced in an annual way out of the ground. I think that's a firm platform of security for us in the 21st century.

We will continue to do even more to address debt and debt pay-down. We have just posted, as we move to the end of this budget year in which we are now, a record down payment on that particular debt, the remaining debt, $1.6 billion being put down on that debt. This will be the first time in 12 years that the interest costs of our debt will be less than $1 billion. We're moving in the right direction, Mr. Speaker.

The reason we focus on that is because we know that debt costs; it does not pay. As we move to debt reduction, we lower the interest cost and we lower the cost to the bankers, as it were, Mr. Speaker, the creditors around the world. As we move to paying that down, we will create savings that we can then apply to health and education and other areas.

In 1994 our debt servicing costs were $1.7 billion. This year as we move to under a billion dollars, that means we have three-quarters of a billion dollars of unborrowed money that we can be investing in health, education, agriculture, and the areas of people services. That is the track that we have been on. It's proven to be viable.

We do get questioned from time to time, Mr. Speaker, in terms of our ability to continue to pay down debt, and that brings into discussion the whole area of how we forecast. How do we know what revenues are going to be coming in in a given year? What will we put to debt, and what will we put into our various areas of program spending?

We are forecasting this year, in and after consultation with leading experts and analysts around the world, that the price of oil for the budget year, which will begin April 1 and extend to March 31, 2001, will average $19 a barrel. In a day when we're looking at close to $30 a barrel, I know some would say: you're budgeting too low; you should have that higher.

Mr. Speaker, we do our forecasting based on consultation with the analytical experts in the province, in the country, and internationally, and we were all together in our budgeting last year when we said that oil would be $13.50. This day one year ago we need to remember that oil was $12.61, and when we said $13.50 last year and put it in the budget, we were accused of being too optimistic. As you can see, we were low. Now we are saying, as closely as we can after consultation, that we see $19 oil; we see natural gas at a Canadian dollar price of $2.50. Those items, again, are developed in consultation with the industry.

The way we make sure that we will have cushions in place – because, as we know, Alberta more than any other province has fluctuating income streams. Income goes up and down more radically than any other province. When we have a good year like this year, we forget a year like 1998, not long ago. In 1998 the amount of revenue we took in from our oil and gas royalties was 1 and a half billion dollars less than we had taken in the year before, in 1997, and the economy did not shudder to a stop. We did not come screeching to a halt because of the expansion that we have in the economy, but people forget that.

We will not base our budgeting on the mountaintop peaks of the price of oil. We will budget carefully on what we think it will be. To protect us from a fluctuation as prices plunge downward or as they rocket skyward, every year we estimate what all of our revenues will be, we take 3 and a half percent of that estimate, and we set that money aside in case we have a fluctuation.

We do get criticized from time to time because of the fluctuating revenues, and can't we forecast closer? The whole world was wrong last year at $13.50. Maybe the whole world will be wrong this year, and we join most other experts in that $19 to $20 range.

I can tell you that our toughest critics, Mr. Speaker, are the credit rating agencies. Those people review every province's budget and the budget of every state and every sovereign territory, Standard and Poor's international credit rating agency being one. In their review of our budgeting, in the words of their own evaluation, they commend us for how we budget: the prudent fiscal management – this was in their latest review – and the fact that we take into account the variability of the income stream. They not only gave us credit for that; they gave us the best credit rating in the country for how we handle the dollars of the people of Alberta.

There are other dollars out there, Mr. Speaker, that we take as a government. It's in the whole area of fees and charges. Earlier this year there was a court decision in Ontario which looked at a particular fee that was being charged because the protest was being made that the fee being charged was in excess of the service being delivered. In the process of the court's determining that, they said to the Ontario government and they said to all governments: you can do one of two things. They didn't say that you have to get rid of the fee. They didn't say that you have to lower it. They said: you could protect the fee; you could bring it into legislation and protect it, or you can lower it.

So far every other government has rushed to protect those fees that were determined to be too high. Premier Ralph Klein said: "Why are we rushing to protect the government? Why don't we rush to protect the people?" That's what we're doing with our fees and charges review.

So, Mr. Speaker, we did a review, an analysis, a huge review of all the fees and charges that are being assessed in various government departments. We found out that in the majority of cases most of those fees and charges in fact do not cover the cost of the service or only approximately cover the cost, but there was an area in which those fees and charges were considerably higher than the cost of delivering the service. We did not and we are not going to protect those high fees. We are going to lower them.

It is in the whole area of what it takes to register related to estates and wills, related to house purchases, land and property registration, and business incorporation, all of those areas, Mr. Speaker. We are announcing that effective midnight tonight we will be reducing approximately 100 fees, and in that process we will be leaving $60 million in the pockets of Albertans. That's caring about taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, to give people an idea of which areas will be affected, for young home buyers, for instance, looking at a $150,000 home with a $140,000 mortgage, if you can get such a deal, before midnight tonight the fee, the charge that the government was allocating to those people to register that was some $365. We are lowering that by two-thirds, to $133. That's a significant saving for young home buyers.

We are also looking at the area of processing those probate letters related to wills and estates, something apparently we will all face at some time in our lives. For a modest estate value of $150,000, there has been an assessment of $600 to register the letters of probate with that. Six hundred dollars. We're lowering that to $300, Mr. Speaker.

In the area of business incorporation, it has cost $150 simply to incorporate. In a day when more and more people are becoming self-employed, when more and more people are becoming self-employed contractors and registering as such, we are lowering that fee from $150 to $50. We care about people, Mr. Speaker. We are going to see that this continues to be a vibrant economy here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the area of taxes is one in which I believe we see revealed the heart and nature of people when we get into a discussion on taxes. We are so pleased and excited that because of our fiscal situation we are able to accelerate and move up by an entire year a brand-new tax plan for Canada and definitely one that will be registered here in Alberta. When we asked Albertans about this, I believe Albertans revealed their heart and their nature when they responded in the area of taxes, because the first thing they said was that any tax changes had to be of immediate assistance to low-income families. We will make adjustments in this new tax system, which begins only 10 months from now, that will relieve some 132,000 low-income, hardworking Albertans from having to pay any income tax at all.

That was the first response from the heart of Albertans, who said: this should be the first thing that you do. Then we saw the heart and nature of Albertans when they said that the system needs to be fair. They pointed out to us that we were taxing in an inequitable way the earnings of either a one income earning family or a two income earning family, and they said: don't punish or reward; leave that choice to families. By moving the spousal exemption from $6,020 to $11,620, a 90 percent increase, we equalized that playing field, Mr. Speaker, and we make family choices. Family choices, not government choices.

Then people went on to say – Albertans revealed their heart and nature by saying that a tax system needs to be honest. One of the areas in which taxes have not been honest – and this is at all levels of government – is this whole area of bracket creep, whereby exemptions have not been indexed to inflation. As people's salaries have been inflated, for years those exemption levels have not moved up also. Government has quietly reached around with a hand into the back pockets of people and slipped those extra dollars out and made as if they took nothing. In fact, it has cost Albertans, it has cost Canadians millions of dollars.

We looked around in this area of bracket creep. We said: how do we fix it? We looked in the mirror. We realized that we were the creeps. We are going to fix it, Mr. Speaker. We are tying these exemptions to inflation. We will be the first province to put an end to bracket creep.

The final thing that Albertans said about a tax system, again I think revealing their own hearts, Mr. Speaker, is that a tax system needs to be understandable. It was a famous person who said: the hardest thing in the world to understand is the income tax system. That person was Albert Einstein. If he couldn't figure it out, I sure can't and most of the people I know can't. So we are simplifying the system. That is why as of January 1, 2001, we will be the first jurisdiction in Canada where people can take all of their deductions and refunds on the federal side, all of their deductions and refunds on the provincial side, and claim all of those. There will be a single amount left, a net income, and to that net income a single rate of 11 percent will be applied. Openness and understandability in the tax system.

Mr. Speaker, the results of everything that we've been doing for the last few years mean continued growth here in Alberta. We are projecting growth of between 4.5 and 4.8 percent in the economy this coming year. That is very aggressive, very significant growth. That means 48,000 new jobs, most of which will be in the private sector: high-paying, high-tech, value-added jobs, long-term opportunities for Albertans. That's the type of growth that we will continue to see in this province as a result of the steps that we have taken.

Mr. Speaker, we haven't got it all right. We haven't got it all figured out. We still make mistakes, and as we do and as we are informed of those, we will move to correct them. You've heard about a 9 percent increase to health and 9 percent to education and 21 percent over three years. The overall increase from last year to this year in this budget that we are tabling today is slightly over 2 percent. That's not bad management considering all that we have faced and the continual pressures that we face in an annual, monthly, and daily way.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that we are moving to a new era as we move boldly into this 21st century. I believe that we have a platform of security that has been built because of certain policies. It's policies that will cause an economy to grow or to retract. If it's small "l" liberal – and this is not partisan; I'm talking liberal philosophically. We have enough history, as we go back through the 20th century, to know that small "l" liberal philosophy which talks about government moving to heal all the ills of the world, which talks about the growth of government institutions and government programming in every area of life – we know and we found out in an experiential way in Canada that that leads to increasing deficit, eventual increasing debt, to debt loads that eventually crush the air of incentive out of the lungs of private and free citizens.

It's time to reverse that thinking. We have reversed that thinking for a number of years. A small "c" conservative approach philosophically, Mr. Speaker, is an approach that recognizes limited but caring government, an approach that has faith in communities, families, and individuals, that moves to true freedom. When we talk about 132,000 low-income people no longer paying provincial income tax, that's a whole new definition of freedom. That type of freedom will be enjoyed by all of our citizens as we move this way.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we are now moving to a new era where once almost unthought-of dreams are within our grasp. We have seen the rate at which we have paid down debt. I don't want to optimistically raise hopes, but we have seen the aggressive rate at which we have paid down debt. We have seen that we have been able to reduce taxes continually year to year, incrementally some years but exceedingly more in the year ahead. We have seen the heritage savings trust fund increase in value. We can see other revenue streams where investment is happening now coming into this province.

If we maintain prudent fiscal management, the day is coming soon – will it be 2005, in time for our birthday? I don't know, Mr. Speaker – when Albertans will be the first to be able to consider if we should even have provincial income taxes. They used to laugh at us in Alberta when we had those kinds of dreams. You know what's been happening every year under the Klein government? Every year we say that things can be accomplished. Every year many people say: you will never accomplish it. Every year it gets accomplished.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the history of the 20th century for Alberta has been an epic of challenge and triumph. I believe it's that kind of boldness that moves us into the 21st century, and I'm absolutely convinced, understanding the heart and nature of Albertans and understanding the energy that comes from their heart and soul, that if we continue to harness that, if we continue to allow that to thrive and move ahead, if we understand and allow that to be unleashed, then combined with the providence of God and an understanding of divine and human nature, the dreams we have for ourselves, for our children, for our grandchildren are attainable. That's where we're going, Mr. Speaker.

Good afternoon.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I suspect that we've heard enough hyperbole for one afternoon, so at this time I beg leave to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[At 4:52 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, February 28, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/02/28

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, after the prayer please remain standing.

On this day let us be guided by Your eternal wisdom and confidence that You believe in all of us. Amen.

Hon. members, I'm now going to invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Mr. Lorieau is in the Speaker's gallery.

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

Please be seated.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by 220 Albertans. They are asking the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a bill banning private, for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

This brings the number of petitions submitted so far to 653.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to present a petition signed by 258 people from Edmonton and the surrounding area urging the Legislative Assembly to "urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm also pleased today to rise and table petitions signed by 255 Edmontonians.

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining [the public health care system].

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition to the Legislative Assembly.

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

This petition has been signed by over 273 Edmontonians and brings the total today to a great number.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition supporting public health care in Alberta.

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care [in the province].

This is on behalf of 214 residents of Edmonton and area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition supporting public health care in Alberta.

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining [the public health care system].

This is signed by 252 Edmontonians and is the last of five petitions submitted today with the great number being a total of 1,252 for today.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I tabled the other day regarding private health care and public health care please be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Speaker, I would request that the petition which I presented in this Assembly on February 24 signed by hundreds of my constituents in protest of the government's plans to privatize health care now be read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now request that the petition I presented on February 24, last Thursday, signed by several hundred Albertans calling on the Assembly to ban private, for-profit hospitals be read and received now.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on a Standing Order 40 application.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I give notice now that immediately after the daily Routine I will move as follows:

Be it resolved that this Assembly affirm the importance of open access to reading material by recognizing February 27 to March 4, 2000, as Freedom to Read Week.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Bill 6
Special Payment Act

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill, being the Special Payment Act.

Mr. Speaker, this is enabling legislation to allow the Workers' Compensation Board and certain widows to enter into negotiations.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a first time]

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2000

MR. DAY: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 9, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2000. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. DAY: Mr. Speaker, in keeping with our commitment to open and accountable government, I'm happy to table today in accordance with the Legislative Assembly Act and the Conflicts of Interest Act the report of selected payments to members and former Members of the Legislative Assembly and persons directly associated with Members of the Legislative Assembly for the fiscal year ended March 31, '99.

It's also my pleasure to table on behalf of the government caucus a number of reports entitled Allowance and Travel Expenses for the 12 months ended March 31, '99. These reports are accompanied by copies of personal expense claims, copies of capital residence allowance claims, and copies of vehicle expense claims. I'm pleased to report that this is a comprehensive list of expenditures including all 12 months for the fiscal year ended March 31.

I'm also pleased to table the report on the general revenue fund, details of expenditure by payee, everything you always wanted to know about every dime of government spending, right here, and where it went. Unlike the federal government we keep track of our expenses, Mr. Speaker.

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table answers to Motion for a Return 205 regarding inventory of oil field wastes in Alberta.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to table five copies of the responses to Motion for a Return 207 and Motion for a Return 209, accepted on April 28, 1999.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table five copies of answers to questions asked regarding Alberta Health and Wellness supplementary estimates on December 1, 1999.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to table two reports. The first report is from Donna Wilson, who's a professor in the Faculty of Nursing, University of Alberta. It's entitled Regional Health Planning and Delivery in Alberta: A Basic Cost-Benefit Analysis in Response to a Health System Performance Issue as presented to the standing policy committee. What it indicates is that a cost-benefit analysis is required and a more in-depth appraisal of regionalization before the regional health authority boards assume responsibility associated with contracting out major surgery to for-profit firms, the same like the Treasurer. It is also concerned that the funds which were used to build and are now used to sustain a regional health system are not available for direct patient care.

The second study is a study by Kevin Taft and Gillian Steward which is entitled Private Profit or Public Good: The Economics and Politics of the Privatization of Health Care in Alberta. It indicates that for several decades and in various countries private, for-profit health care has been shown to consistently fall short of nonprofit and publicly provided health care and that when compared to publicly provided health care, private, for-profit health care typically costs more.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MS PAUL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Mr. Blyth Irvine, who is a constituent of Castle Downs. He has written the letter because he has experienced firsthand what the health care system is like in Britain, which includes both private and public health care, and he is in full support of the initiative that the government is taking on.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am tabling the appropriate number of copies of a speech by Dr. David Schindler. Dr. Schindler is the world's most distinguished freshwater ecologist and one of Canada's most honoured scientists. This is a speech he gave on February 9 of this year entitled The Urgent Need for Endangered Species Legislation in Canada, in which he criticizes the provincial government for their lack of effort in this regard.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a project description: Making Justice Accessible, women's access to legal services. The project is sponsored by Women Looking Forward, an organization in Calgary, and it's described here in their February 2000 newsletter, which is also filled with all kinds of other useful and necessary information.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a report concerning investigations conducted by the Ombudsman on injured workers, and it contains five recommendations on how they could be improved.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table five copies of the program on the investiture of lifesaving honours which were conducted today at Government House and presided over by the Hon. Lois Hole, Lieutenant Governor of Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings to make. The first one is copies of a letter that I've just had delivered to the Premier's office requesting the Premier to intervene on behalf of Leticia Cables, who'll be leaving the country tomorrow at 11:45 unless the deportation order is rescinded. So I have requested the Premier in writing to intervene as quickly as he can.

Mr. Speaker, my second set of tablings is three in one bunch. They deal with privatization of health care and the economics of contracting out public health services. The first tabling is the executive summary of the study by Kevin Taft and Gillian Steward, Private Profit or Public Good: The Economics and Politics of the Privatization of Health Care in Canada.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the keynote address delivered by Professor Robert Evans, professor of economics, the University of British Columbia. The title of the paper is The Role of Private and Public Health Care Delivery in Alberta. This paper was delivered at the health forum sponsored by the Alberta Congress Board.

The third set is consumer experience with contract surgery and private clinics in Alberta, a study done by the Consumers' Association of Canada, Alberta branch, and released just a little while ago.

Mr. Speaker, turning to the other tablings, there's a letter that I received from Dale Henkel of Trochu, Alberta, expressing his deep concern about the rising costs of fuel and the impact of it on farmers in this province.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, deals with the Spray Valley area development. Both Bonnie Nasim and the other writer – the name is here; I can't find it at the moment – are opposed to the development of Spray Valley and are asking the government to take action to stop that development.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. DAY: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table five copies of a report called Budget Highlights. It's done by Nesbitt Burns, as you know a very reputable financial firm, and it praises our moves to clear the net debt, pay down the remaining debt and gives positive words on ensuring that Albertans pay the lowest taxes. It also gives positive points for the government taking "a balanced approach in this . . . budget, offering up both tax reductions and increased social spending." I'll table those copies.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the chair would like to table five copies of a memorandum from the hon. Member for Red Deer-South requesting that Bill 202, the Marriage Amendment Act, 2000, be brought to the Committee of the Whole on Wednesday, March 1, 2000.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table today for the information of all members of the Legislative Assembly a press release from Georgia-Pacific dated August 18, 1997, in which they express a willingness to compensate homeowners for exterior hardboard siding which absorbed moisture and rotted prematurely in America.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a very large group of grade 6 students from Westlock, Alberta, which is in the constituency of Barrhead-Westlock. They are seated in both the members' and public galleries and are accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Dan McDonald, Mrs. Sue Chapotelle, and Mme Annette St. Arnaud. Also accompanying them are parents Mrs. Diane Tymchuk, Mrs. Tammy Graff, Mrs. Joanne Potts, Mr. David Nelson, Mr. Wes Latimer, Mrs. Colleen Marks, Mr. Erik Clausen, Mrs. Theresa Sterling, Mrs. Colleen Jackson, Mrs. Pat Towle, and Mrs. Florence Waldner. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the galleries today we have a number of guests who are here to observe the introduction of Bill 6. I would like to introduce various representatives of both the Disenfranchised Widows Action Group and the Workers' Compensation Board. Here representing the disenfranchised widows on the executive committee are Carolyn Berube, Shirley Fry, Val Benoit, Leta Schmaltz, Joan Snow, and Penny Frederiksen. Also from the Workers' Compensation Board is Doug Mah, their legal counsel. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of all the members of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an extreme pleasure this afternoon to rise and introduce to you a group of 24 grade 8 students from Gracefield, Quebec. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Dominique Dery, and parents Stephane Charbois, Marguerite Todd, and Debbie Patrick from Edmonton. These students are part of an exchange program with Laurier Heights school in the Edmonton-Riverview constituency. They arrived in Edmonton on February 23 and will return home March 1.

With your indulgence I would like to share with the Assembly some of the highlights of their visit. This is their first visit to western Canada. They have been to an Oilers/Bruins game, have spent a day at Laurier Heights school, have traveled to Jasper, to West Edmonton Mall, to Edmonton city hall, are touring the Legislature today, and will also be touring the Canadian Petroleum Interpretive Centre, and will go rock climbing at Vertically Inclined. I would like these students to rise and receive the most warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four members of the 189th Pathfinders from Silver Springs in Calgary. They are led by their leader, Lorna Stevens, and accompanied by Samantha Todd, Gillian Siddall, and Naomi Piovesan. They've been visiting a number of the sites in Edmonton for the past weekend and spent today touring the Legislature to observe the proceedings of the Legislature. They're in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of all members.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly 10 keen and inquisitive students of the Grant MacEwan College social work program. They are accompanied today by their instructor, Duane Massing, and I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm and traditional welcome of the Legislature. They're in the public gallery.

THE SPEAKER: The Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise today and introduce another member of the Disenfranchised Widows Action Group. A very keen observer of this particular Bill 6 that's coming forward is Pauline Knittle, who is here along with some friends. I'd her and her entourage to rise and take the warm blessings and reception of this House please.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly more members of the Disenfranchised Widows Action Group. I would like to introduce to you Muriel Johnson, Jeff Johnson, Mary Wasykiewicz, Walter Wasykiewicz. The husband of Pauline Knittle was not previously introduced: Werner Knittle. Those constituents are good friends of mine, and I'm very pleased to see them here for the introduction of this bill. Would they please stand and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly. They are in the members' gallery.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly Melissa Johnson, a graduate student in health promotion at the University of Alberta. Melissa also works at Canadian Blood Services and is a member of the Health Services Association of Alberta. She is seated in the public gallery. I'll ask Melissa to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly some other members of the Disenfranchised Widows Action Group. They are Colleen Korbisser, Bob Prest, Pat Dober, Evelyn Frericks, Margaret Leonard, Mary-Ann Charbonneau, Joyce Neve, Bernice Pagee, Iris Penner-Sumpka, Carol Ross, Nora Biggs, Irene Lagace and Mary MacKenzie. They are seated in the members' and the public gallery, and with your permission I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, as I call on the hon. Member for Fort McMurray, would you join with me in extending to him the best of happy birthdays today on his birthday.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you so much for that reminder, Mr. Speaker. I will ensure that you will be reminded on yours.

It's my pleasure today to introduce a constituent of the city of Fort McMurray, Mme Kjersti Powell. Kjersti presently is the chair of the Keyano College board of governors, where she has sat for the past six years, and she's also the immediate past chair for the provincial council of board chairs for the colleges and technical institutions. She's a senior manager of Syncrude Canada, which is responsible for workplace learning. I'd ask her to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of all legislators.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to further introduce more members of the Disenfranchised Widows Action Group that were forgotten in the earlier ones. They are Edmonton residents Mary and Ralph Dietz. If they'd please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Opted-out Physicians

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier advise Albertans what negotiations are occurring with the College of Physicians and Surgeons with regard to physicians opting out of the public health care system?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm not privy to any of those discussions. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness is, and I'll have him respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of any negotiations taking place with respect to that particular item. Certainly we do consult. We do have meetings periodically with the College of Physicians and Surgeons over issues of mutual concern. Actually, this sounds like something of a rhetorical question from the hon. Leader of the Opposition, because it is the Liberal Party which is advocating that physicians get out of the public health care system and practise privately.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, it's not rhetoric; it's draft policy guidelines of the College of Physicians and Surgeons on opting out, which I'm happy to table.

My second question, Mr. Speaker, is: can the Premier provide any information on how this process of opting out will work?

MR. KLEIN: Again, Mr. Speaker, this is a responsibility of the Department of Health and Wellness, and I'll have the appropriate minister respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, there has existed for some time under the provisions of the health insurance act in this province a set of steps or a process for a physician to opt out of the insurance program. I'm happy to report that to my knowledge there is only one physician in the province who has taken the formal steps of opting out under a procedure actually supported by legislation, which has been in existence for a long time.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is in fact a new process. So the question back to the Premier is: why has this opting out process been drafted before the legislation is introduced and without public input?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of any policy being drafted. Again, if the hon. minister has some knowledge, perhaps he can expound on it, if he has any knowledge.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated, there is a policy and set of steps that exist right now in the province – and it's in accordance with the rules and rulings under the Canada Health Act – that a physician may opt out of the health care insurance plan.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier explain what would happen in an emergency if an entire specialty had opted out of the health care system?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, that indeed is hypothetical, but relative to the policy, the minister has explained it once. If the hon. Leader of the Liberal Opposition doesn't understand it, perhaps he can explain it again.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated but don't mind at all repeating, under current legislation, under current provisions – and I think this is basically common to all the provinces of Canada – there is the right of a physician to move out of the coverage under the payments of the health care insurance plan. I think our record really in the province is exemplary in that at this point in time, as far as I'm aware, we have only one physician that has chosen to take that particular step.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, why was the public not informed that these negotiations were under way given the severe impact on physician services in this province?

MR. KLEIN: As I have said about – well, this would be the fourth time now. I don't know of any negotiations under way, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. minister has pointed out, only one person has preferred to opt out. I can't conceive of a whole group of doctors associated with one discipline in Edmonton or in this province opting out. It's beyond comprehension that that would ever happen.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, what would happen if a patient were seeing an opted-out physician, and they needed emergency or ICU care?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I stand to be corrected, but any individual, any person in this province who has to go to a hospital is entitled to go to the hospital and receive whatever procedure is necessary under Alberta health care.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

THE SPEAKER: Before calling on the Leader of the Official Opposition for the third main question, I'd just like to reiterate Beauchesne 409(3), which says:

The question ought to seek information and, therefore, cannot be based upon a hypothesis, cannot seek an opinion, either legal or otherwise, and must not suggest its own answer, be argumentative or make representations.

The hon. Leader of the Official of the Opposition.

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans still haven't seen the blank pages on the private hospital policy, so the question is: how can Albertans trust the government when it says that it's talking about private clinics, yet its own focus group documents say that they're talking about private hospitals?

MR. KLEIN: Well, my answer to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is wait and see what the legislation says. As a matter of fact, the hon. member has said before that she might even support this legislation, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm just going to give her a little hint. This is a quote from Hansard. She says:

The Premier has talked about the possibility of the Official Opposition supporting the legislation which the government is about to bring in. Well, I think that possibility does exist. I actually think that possibility exists if this government brings in legislation which is going to control the growth, control the quantity, and control the quality of some off-site services.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that's what a lot of the legislation is going to be about. I hope that the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition is going to be good to her word. I really do hope. I hope that she is going to be honest and truthful and not back down like she has on so many other issues. I hope she's going to be honest, and I hope she's going to be good to her word.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, how can Albertans trust a government that won't reveal the results of focus groups paid for by Albertans' own tax dollars?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, many of the comments offered by members of the focus groups were contained in the document We Are Listening: Here's What We've Heard. I'd be glad to table that document in the House. There are numerous quotes from members of the focus groups, but certainly those people participated in the focus groups on the condition of anonymity.

Relative to the freedom of information legislation the Liberals know what the legislation is all about. They use it more than any other body, so they know what it's all about. If they don't like what they get under the rules of FOIP, there is a course of appeal, and I would advise them to take it.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, this Premier has a choice, and he knows it. He says that he can't, and the truth is that he won't.

How can Albertans trust a government when they know their government is hiding the results of those focus groups?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the FOIP request came through the Department of Health and Wellness. [interjections] Well, it didn't come through my office. It came through the Department of Health and Wellness, and I will ask the hon. minister to respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the freedom of information and protection of privacy legislation was an important piece of legislation debated by this Assembly and ultimately supported unanimously. In it is outlined a process, a set of procedures, certain prohibitions. The hon. members across the way know that legislation. They supported it. We are providing information according to that legislation.

As the hon. Premier just mentioned, there is an avenue of appeal if they are not satisfied with some particular information that is provided or its nature, and we invite them to follow the appeal process.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. interim leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The provincial government has announced plans to send copies of its private, for-profit hospitals legislation to every household in Alberta any day now. The New Democrats have no problem with sending a copy of the legislation itself. However, Albertans would be better served if the householder contained balanced information about the pros and cons of government plans. My question is to the Premier. In the interests of Albertans receiving balanced information, will the government include in the householder a copy of the executive summary of a January 2000 study by the Consumers' Association of Canada which conclusively shows that Calgary's privatization of contract surgery has not reduced waiting times or saved money? If not, why not?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, that study is open to another study or lots of other studies that say quite the opposite. I mean, we can get involved in tabling study after study and study, one study disagreeing with another study.

Mr. Speaker, what we will be tabling is the proposed legislation. There is nothing more powerful. No study in the world is more powerful than a bill that is to become law. There is nothing more powerful than the law. That is what is going to be sent to every household in this province, a bill that proposes to become the law of this province. Nothing, not all the studies in the world, is more paramount, is more important than what this Legislature decides to do in bringing about the law of this province.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Premier agrees that balanced public debate is important on this bill, so I'll ask him again: in order to ensure that Albertans receive a balanced perspective on health care privatization, will the government include in the householder a copy of a study entitled The Role of Private and Public Health Care Delivery in Alberta, which was presented to the recent Alberta Congress Board health care forum by respected health economist Bob Evans?

MR. KLEIN: Here again the only thing that will be mailed out to Albertans is the proposed bill, an explanation, of course, of the various principles of the bill, Mr. Speaker, and again I stress that there is nothing more paramount than a bill that is proposed to become the law. We could mail out study after study after study, one study contradicting the other study. What matters is the bill.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, the bill is not, as the hon. member so falsely states, the private, for-profit health care bill. That is wrong. That is absolutely wrong. He has not told the truth in this Assembly by stating that that is going to be the name of the bill. He has not stated the truth. The title of the bill will be the health protection act.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I won't call the Premier to order on what he has just said, but I want to again challenge him. Why won't his government release to the public, along with its own householder, information they so desperately need in order to judge for themselves whether the government is telling the truth or not?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I give Albertans a tremendous amount of credit for intelligence, the ability to see through a bill that proposes to become law and decide for themselves whether it is the right thing to do. There is nothing preventing this member from duplicating and copying as many copies as he wants of all the studies he wants and mailing them out. I hope not at government expense, because it goes on and on and on. There are literally hundreds of studies out there on this particular issue. What we want to get out is the bill that proposes to become law relative to the delivery of health care services and the protection of the public health care system as we know it today. That's all we want to do.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. On Saturday I attended a public forum on health care in my constituency organized by the Alberta

Teachers' Association local. Also in attendance was the Leader of the Opposition, a representative of the New Democrats, along with a nursing representative. Anxious to hear Albertans' views, the Minister of Health and Wellness dropped in to the public forum just in time for the question and answer period. I asked the moderator if the minister could join me during the question and answer session. His participation was totally refused. For the record, Mr. Minister, are you willing and able to get out and talk to Albertans about the health care proposal under discussion, and if so, how do you plan to give Albertans accurate, current, factual information so Albertans in turn can decide on their own whether or not this is a sound proposal and policy?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, could I ask your indulgence to hear the question? I couldn't hear the question.

MRS. GORDON: For the record, Mr. Minister, are you willing and able to get out and talk to Albertans about the health care proposal under discussion, and if so, how do you plan to give Albertans accurate, current, factual information so Albertans in turn can decide on their own whether or not this is a sound proposal and policy?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as has been outlined in this Assembly prior to this, we have provided initially a policy statement which is available to all Albertans. That was some months ago actually. We have followed that up with such communications to the public of the province as the one which provides the results of our consultation to date, what we've heard about this particular policy paper. There are various other initiatives that have been taken.

As we move towards the very important aspect of debating the legislation in the House, Mr. Speaker, it is our plan, as the Premier has certainly well outlined, that every household in this province will be provided a copy of the bill so that they can read it and study it and judge for themselves. Certainly overall we are working through the media and through the printed word to provide information.

As far as attendance at meetings is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I have been going to meetings on this particular topic. Most recently I was out at Mundare speaking to a group of good people out there. I will continue to make myself available as much as possible.

MRS. GORDON: Again, my question is to the minister of health. What will be the role of the MLA health information panel in supporting communication efforts? Do you feel their work will be muzzled as well?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the health information panel will be a very, very important aspect of our overall communication program, both in terms of getting information out but even more importantly in listening to what Albertans have to say with respect to the legislation. The work of these teams will be very, very important to hear to bring back to government caucus the response to the legislation so we can proceed according to their views.

MRS. GORDON: Mr. Minister, what opportunity will there be for changes to the proposed legislation if it should not meet the priorities of Albertans once they've had a chance to look at, study it, and talk about it?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, we feel that we are developing sound legislation, but certainly legislation is subject to the will of the Assembly. Any amendments that may be made will be dealt with in this House of course, but they will be based on what government members hear in the extensive set of meetings and consultations and print material that is going to be out there for Albertans to respond to. Of course, if it should occur, we are always open to constructive views from across the way to help with the improvement of the legislation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc.

Regional Health Authority Contracts

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans cannot trust a Premier who appears to put the public health care of citizens after the private interests of the friends of government. Now, this presents a particular problem in the Calgary health region, which is now effectively run out of the Premier's own office. The Calgary regional health authority is paying out more than $250 million a year to private contractors, but when we ask, when Albertans ask for particulars of the contracts, we are flatly denied. My question is to the Premier this afternoon. How can Calgarians trust a government that has stubbornly refused to tell them how much of their public money is being diverted away from public health to private facilities owned by the Premier's backers?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I consider that question to be at least improper, certainly rude. I would like to know what clinics, you know, what private operations are being supported by my backers. Your boss's brother is involved in one of these. I don't think he's one of my backers. [interjections] Well, I don't know if he is or not.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the question of how Albertans can trust this Premier, I see in this House 64 Conservatives. There's a lot more of us than there is of them. And you know how that came about? It's because they trust us a lot more than they trust them.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, my follow-up question would be this: how can Calgarians trust a government that has set up no mechanism to screen, evaluate, and deal with conflicts of interest when the Calgary regional health authority pays out its $250 million in secret contract deals?

MR. KLEIN: Give me some specifics. Is he talking about the Bethany care centre, for instance? Is that one of them? I asked the question. Maybe the hon. member will answer the question. Is he talking about the Bethany care centre? Or is he talking about the Morgentaler therapeutic abortion centre? Right. That's one of them. You know, be quite specific. I'll ask the hon. member to be quite specific as to the clinics he's talking about.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Gimbel's maybe.

MR. KLEIN: Well, maybe Gimbel's, yes. Well, I will admit that Mr. Gimbel's daughter is on my board. Shameful, shameful. I mean, that can happen. I would think that he might have some people on his board who might, just might be involved in some kind of a private diagnostic operation.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Oh, I don't think so.

MR. KLEIN: Oh, no. No. He's that pure.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that this hon. member will support the legislation if he is indeed honourable. Right now the only legislation relative to those contracts is under FOIP. The legislation, without going into the details, purports to make those contracts much more open and transparent, and I hope that he'll support that.

MR. DICKSON: Long answer and totally nonresponsive.

So I'll go back and ask the Premier again: how can Albertans have any confidence in this government's ability to be fair when they've set up absolutely no mechanism to screen, identify, and deal with conflicts of interest when they're paying out that $250 million of public money?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, wait until the hon. member sees the legislation.

If he has instances right now of conflict of interest, table them. You know, don't do this by innuendo. I know that they're good at innuendo, because that's all they've got. I know they're good at innuendo, but if they have these examples, get them out there. Help us with this.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Federal Support for Agriculture

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the minister of agriculture. This government has engaged in significant dialogue with the federal government on the issue of farm income. We have made enhancements to our program, and the minister has been encouraging Ottawa to do the same through a number of meetings. The Premier wrote to the Prime Minister last month demanding federal action on reducing grain transportation costs. Despite this, the Prime Minister has announced a onetime payment to Saskatchewan and Manitoba farmers amounting to $240 million. So, Mr. Minister, the question is: why wasn't Alberta a part of this announcement?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, we don't understand how the federal Liberals came to the conclusion that hardship in farming stops at a provincial border. I must remind the hon. member that it is not only Alberta that's left out. There are some seven other agricultural provinces that are left out, and we find it extremely distasteful.

I know our Premier has on a number of occasions talked to the Prime Minister and brought it up at the ministers' meeting. Our Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations has discussed it with her counterparts. I have brought the issue up at three ag ministers' meetings. As a matter of fact, the last agricultural ministers' meeting was just on this issue. I've made three trips down to Ottawa and had private meetings with the federal minister of agriculture. In every one of those meetings we've said that we have farmers that are in just as much difficulty as those in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. We're not saying for a moment that the people in Saskatchewan and Manitoba don't need and deserve the money. However, we also need to have some recognition of the difficulty that our farmers are having, and we intend to push the issue.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: My understanding is that this aid is to cover the higher costs of grain transportation in the absence of the Western Grain Transportation Act. Do Alberta farmers not face higher grain transportation costs as well?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, the federal Liberals' excuse is about the most bogus thing that I could imagine. The fact is that in some 44 stations in Alberta the freight rate is higher than it is in Saskatchewan. So, in fact, to say that the freight is the problem is simply not the case.

It's very interesting when you look at what happened in the past.

Back in the late '80s, when the federal government was talking about paying out the Crow, there was just about $7 billion on the table. Saskatchewan and Manitoba were the two governments that objected to that payment. So what did we get? One point six billion dollars.

Really I think that to talk about transportation is just not true. As a matter of fact, since the Crow was paid out, freight rates for Alberta farmers have gone up 116 percent.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: What steps will the minister take to ensure that Alberta farmers are treated equally with those who just happen to live across a line on a map?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've been in contact with other provincial ministers, and we will continue that dialogue. We plan on going to Ottawa as soon as we can arrange some meetings. I was in Ottawa some two to three weeks ago, had the opportunity to meet with some eight federal ministers along with the Privy Council, the Prime Minister's office, and treasury.

There is one thing that the federal government could do that almost immediately would very much help the situation, and that's directly related to transportation. That's to accept the Estey/Kroeger report and get this thing moving, get the Wheat Board out of the management, the handling of grain and move forward.

Now, I was in Ottawa along with the Prairie Farm Commodity Coalition. This coalition represents some 90,000 producers across the prairie provinces, so it's not just an Alberta organization. We also had along with us a very progressive grain company, United Grain Growers, a company that's interested in the producer, not just their corporate structure. We recommended that the federal government get on with this. There's $200 million to $300 million available to farmers, not tax dollars, farmers' dollars, on a yearly basis if the system were changed. So that'll be one of our thrusts.

Another, of course, is to try to get the federal government to back off their fuel taxes. There's some $600 million going out of this province every year to the federal treasury, and we get nothing back.

MR. SMITH: How much?

MR. LUND: Zero. As a matter of fact, it's very interesting that in the most recent studies for every dollar we get out of the federal government, it costs us $1.40, and that does nothing for federalism.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to follow on that same line of questioning, but I'm really looking for the truthful situation behind this. You know, the other day the Premier cited the Prime Minister as saying that farmers expect their government to work together to find solutions. So my question is to the Premier. Why didn't the Premier or his minister of agriculture go to Ottawa with the Premiers of Manitoba and Saskatchewan last fall to make the case for Alberta farmers?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there's no doubt that Premiers Romanow and Doer went to Ottawa seeking something in excess of $1 billion in direct farm aid. I think the hon. minister has pointed out why we weren't there. We feel that, yes, if there is going to be money, then it should go to all provinces equally and not be singled out. If there is going to be money. The Prime Minister first indicated that there was going to be no money. Last week he phoned me and said that there was going to be some money. He didn't say that he was going to exclude Alberta or any other province.

We have stressed time and time again that the solution to this problem is not the Liberal solution, where they would just like to put their heads in the sand with their hand out. Our solution is to accept the recommendations of the Estey/Kroeger report and have the Canadian government develop a strong stance at the WTO table to get rid of all subsidies. There's a third component to this, and that is to allow dual marketing under the Canadian Wheat Board so that our farmers can add revenue to their products and contract directly. That's the solution.

MR. LUND: Since you brought up the trip that two other Premiers made, I want to tell you that in fact I was in Ottawa. I met with the federal minister of agriculture the night before those Premiers did. Consistently we have said that if there is more money – and as the Premier pointed out, consistently the Prime Minister and the federal minister have said that there is no more money, so we were working within the envelope of $1.1 billion. As a matter of fact, just before we made the changes to our FIDP program, I went to Ottawa and warned the federal government that we were going to make the changes and that if there was any new money, I wanted their 60 percent, because that's what the old formula is. So we will continue to push to get our share of the money.

MRS. SOETAERT: Given that the Premier wouldn't go to the table with the other Premiers, I want to know: will the Premier make it up to those farmers? Will he make up the amount that they would have received from the federal government had Alberta participated in the request to the federal government? It was at least $28 million.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, because of our responsible approach to the province's finances we were able to put in a hundred million dollar program, a program that was beyond the capability of the other provinces to put in to accommodate those farmers experiencing disastrous situations. We do not believe that it is appropriate simply to go to Ottawa and say: give us a billion dollars and bail us out.

I have sat down with the hon. minister and members of the Prairie Farm Commodity Coalition to develop a co-ordinated approach to this issue. This coalition represents, I believe, by and large the majority of the commodity producers in this province. Their position is our position, and that is that the way to solve this is to give a better overall deal to farmers relative to transportation costs, get the Wheat Board out of where it ought not to be involved, Mr. Speaker, and allow dual marketing. That will return literally hundreds of millions of dollars to the farmers. That is the solution.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question: how can we possibly trust a Premier who ignores hardworking Alberta farmers and refuses to go to Ottawa and fight on their behalf?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I find it so interesting that the Liberals would be talking about – the last time I heard a Liberal talk about anything to do with farming it was the late hon. Laurence Decore, who wondered how you could catch all the cows flatulating so that we could . . . [interjections] Well, I've never heard them talk about farm programs before, but this hon. minister has been working night and day with the farmers to find reasonable long-term solutions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans want more information about what the government proposes under its policy on the delivery of surgical services. There are certain groups in the province which claim that this government is introducing private, American style health care or some type of two-tier, for-profit design to erode our medicare as we know it. Now, many people in this province are given the impression that they will have to pay for medical services under this new policy. My question is to the minister of health. Will any Albertan have to pay from his or her own pocket to get health care under the government's new proposal?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it is very clear now and will be very clear in the legislation that individual Albertans and their families will not have to pay for medically insured, medically covered services. That will be enconced in the legislation.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you. My supplemental to the minister of health is: can the minister assure Albertans and this House that the rich won't be able to jump the queue and pay for faster services under this new proposal?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as we have indicated very clearly in our policy statement and we intend to follow-up very precisely in the legislation, the government is committed to ensuring that no one is allowed to queue-jump or to get faster treatment for insured services by virtue of their paying extra. That will not be allowed.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister is: what impact will this type of proposal have on recruiting and retaining physicians and health care professionals within this province?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the policy statement evolves into legislation, the legislation, I think, will provide a sound structure for health care professionals to practise in this province. It will remove the legislative gap that was identified some time ago which we were addressing with Bill 37. It was, of course, opposed by the hon. opposition. They did not like that legislative gap to be closed.

There will be a legislative framework which invites innovation and change and a new way of delivering services, albeit within the principles of the Canada Health Act and with no queue-jumping and no other discrepancies with respect to the Canada Health Act's application. I think it will provide us with a good structure. It will provide certainty and a good overall governance model in which physicians and nurses and LPNs and the whole health workforce can work cohesively.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Education Funding

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Wednesday, prior to tabling the budget last week, the government told Albertans that 2,200 teachers and teaching aides would be hired. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. How was the number 2,200 determined to be the appropriate number of teachers and needed teaching aides?

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is absolutely right. An example of 2,200 was given. If those dollars were used exclusively for hiring teachers, there would be around 2,200 teachers' aides and teachers that could potentially be hired.

In the budget, as the hon. member well knows, I gave the school boards flexibility in how they use that money. So, Mr. Speaker, they have the ability to use that money, to put that money where they feel the most important need is. Whether it's in the Northland school district or down south, the school boards have the flexibility to put it to the students' greatest needs.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given the promised action on class size, what kind of reductions can parents expect to see with this announcement?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, there are several areas in this budget where if class size can be decreased, as one of the things that I have already announced in the budget, which is the Alberta initiative for school improvement, I fully expect that a lot of the school boards will be using that $66 million per year, $170 million over the next three years, to decrease class size. With the 3 percent general grant that is also out there, they also have the ability to decrease class size.

The second part of the question that the hon. member asked was: where do I expect to see class size? Mr. Speaker, there has been research done in the States that shows that in K to 3 we should drop class size to 17 or lower. There are a lot of variables in that, but as a general rule that is the class size that I would like to aim for.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With contract settlements increasing by 3 percent over the next year and an additional 8,000 students, how will boards achieve class size reductions and provide parent relief from fund-raising with this?

DR. OBERG: When you look at the budget, there are two elements to the budget. First of all, there is a 3 percent general increase to the grant of this year. But, Mr. Speaker, more importantly, there's a full 8.8 percent increase that goes directly to the school boards that will go directly to the classroom.

The hon. member raises an interesting point, which is a point about enrollment, and indeed there have been comments in the media about these dollars not keeping up with enrollment and inflation. Mr. Speaker, interestingly, our enrollment increase in Alberta last year was just slightly over 1 percent, so despite the fact that we're seeing a lot of people coming into Alberta, the actual number of students is only going up around 1 percent. As I said before, the overall grant increase to the school boards was 8.8 percent versus 1 percent on the enrollment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Alberta Children's Hospital

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the Calgary Herald today there was an article outlining the possibility that the Shriners of North America could become involved in operating the Alberta Children's hospital, which is located in my constituency. One of the reasons that the Shriners were given for considering Alberta as an area of interest was the perceived very positive climate in this province. My question to the Minister of Health and Wellness is: could the minister advise whether or not there are plans at this time for the Shriners to begin operations in this province?

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister and hon. member, Beauchesne 408 clearly says that "such questions should . . . not inquire whether or not statements made in a newspaper are correct." Proceed with the second one. Perhaps you can phrase it differently.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that the development of the Alberta Children's hospital is under consideration either on its current site or possibly under operations on a new site, could the minister please advise this Assembly whether or not the Shriners will be involved in any of those discussions?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I am well aware that the redevelopment of the Children's hospital in Calgary by the Calgary regional health authority is at the top of their capital construction priority list. Further, I know that they are looking at the location. They're also looking at partnership arrangements, particularly with the Calgary health foundation, which will be providing a tremendous amount of financial support to enhance the actual building that is planned.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, a highly reputable organization such as the Shriners, who have had decades and decades of service to children all across the world, for that matter, but particularly in North America, would be welcomed in terms of discussions as to how the overall contribution of the Shriners and the regional health authority and the government could work together to have an even more world-class facility than we have now for children's care.

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the minister. With respect to the capital planning for the regional health authority, could the minister please advise the Assembly whether the Children's hospital will be able to meet the current and future needs of Calgary and southern Alberta children?

MR. JONSON: Well, the answer, Mr. Speaker, as I understand the overall plan: it certainly will.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Western Heritage Centre

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The scandal of the Western Heritage Centre in Cochrane continues. Despite the advice of the time pointing out the lack of support, the wildly optimistic business plans, and the failed fund-raising attempts, the government subsidized the building of this centre by over $5 million, and the government is now back in the business and has stepped in to take over ownership and operations of this Tory white elephant. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. What was the government decision-making process, the rationale for putting money in to build this centre in the first place?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Mr. Speaker, I think we should put some real, relevant facts on the table. First of all, there was a provincial commitment of some 5 million dollars. There was also a commitment and a payment of $2.5 million from the federal government. There was also a $5 million fund-raising venture, a very successful one, that was put forward by the society which ended up in the construction of a $12 million facility.

There was a bit of discussion around this particular facility, granted, back in 1990. One of the stipulations in the contract was that they would lease the land from the provincial government for some 99 years. Another stipulation, which I'm sure was anticipated, is that they would not come asking for operating dollars. Currently the group was having some difficulty. We had discussions over a year, and it was deemed that if the centre folded, the province would end up getting the centre returned to them in a good manner, without any liability or encumbrances. So we've chosen to take the centre back, as we would have no choice as per the agreement, but secondly and more importantly, Mr. Speaker, in order to ensure that the people of southern Alberta and that area continue with the fine program that was coming out of there, the operations and the cost of the operations stay with the society. So we only have the building that we're looking after.

MS BLAKEMAN: To the same minister: did the department ever request advice from the Auditor General in judging the feasibility of this project, either in the beginning or recently?

MR. WOLOSHYN: No, Mr. Speaker.

MS BLAKEMAN: To the same minister: since no additional funding for this project shows in the museum's budget, where will the money come from to subsidize this problem-plagued centre?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Mr. Speaker, I'm rather dismayed that the hon. member hasn't completed her research. As I indicated, the operations, the programming are still the responsibility of the centre. They will be funding it all. There isn't any Community Development money going in there. That building is now owned by Community Development, and as such and as it would be with the Provincial Museum, the Tyrrell Museum, and any other provincially owned buildings, the maintenance is looked after through Infrastructure.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of six hon. members to participate today.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

2:50 Provincial High School Wrestling Championships

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to recognize the hard work and dedication of the competitors and volunteers of the provincial high school wrestling championships, that took place in Wetaskiwin this past weekend. The sport of wrestling is one of the oldest and purest sport competitions. There is likely no greater test of strength, agility, speed, and discipline offered than through this sport of individual competition.

The Wetaskiwin composite high school did a great job of hosting this event, and it was a great success, with enthusiastic participants and spectators. I'd like to congratulate the Wetaskiwin team for winning the 3A boys event. I'd also like to recognize Wetaskiwin individual medalists Real Bouchard and Tyler Weaver, who each won silver; Josh Tarnasky, who won bronze; and Wade Clark, who took sixth.

The sport of wrestling has been with us for thousands of years, with its origins in ancient Greece. I'd like to thank the participants and organizers for continuing this proud sport tradition.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Scout/Guide Week

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to recognize this past Scout/Guide Week of February 20 to 27. Scouts Canada members participated in events across Canada in special camps, expeditions, mall displays, banquets, and church parades. Scouts Canada is the country's leading youth organization, which offers fun, safe, and exciting outdoor adventures for boys and girls ages five to 26. Scouting is based on three principles: duty to God, duty to others, duty to self.

I was honoured last Wednesday evening to be at the fourth Spruce Grove annual Lord Baden-Powell banquet. I was inspired by these young leaders who volunteer many hours in our community. I was impressed and entertained by the Beavers, Cubs, Scouts, Venturers, leaders, and parents of these dynamic children. I was honoured and humbled to have been invested by the group and to take the Scout oath, which is: "On my honour I promise to do my best, to do my duty to God and the Queen, to help other people at all times, and to carry out the Scout law." My heartfelt respect and admiration go to all of those involved in the Scout movement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Meningitis Immunization Campaign

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today will bring to a conclusion the Capital health authority's targeted meningitis immunization operation. The campaign began on February 14 for 15 to 19 year olds, and an expanded campaign for two to 14 year olds began in the Capital health authority's region on Wednesday, February 23, in response to an increased incidence in this age group and significant public concern. An 80 percent completion target for 15 to 19 year olds and two to 14 year olds is expected by the end of the campaign today.

On Saturday I had the opportunity to tour the operation at St. Albert Place with supervisor Joanne Rigby. It was a remarkably impressive sight of efficiency and caring. Today I'd like to commend Dr. Gerry Predy, under whose direction this entire operation took place. In addition, I applaud Marianne Stewart and her organization in staffing 9,000 additional nursing shifts.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask all members of the Legislature to join me in thanking everyone who made this a successful operation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Freedom to Read Week

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. February 27 to March 4 is Freedom to Read Week. A clenched fist slamming a book shut is the symbol adopted for this week, signifying the censorship of ideas. Censoring is what some citizens would have us do with ideas that are morally contrary or troublesome. Freedom to Read Week is a fight against such censorship.

The focus on reading this week reminds us that our democracy rests on a set of freedoms: the freedom of conscience and religion; the freedom of association; the freedom of thought, belief, opinion, and expression; and, important for this week, the freedom to access the thoughts and ideas of others. Supporting intellectual freedom in a democracy often puts citizens to the test. Certainly it is easy to defend the freedom to read when we are confronted with Shakespeare or Mark Twain. The test comes when we are forced to confront ideas that, although within the law, are deeply disturbing, offensive, or odious. As we go about our Freedom to Read Week activities, let's remember Voltaire's advice: I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Gold Cup Soccer Championship

MRS. BURGNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and recognize the Alberta-based Canadian national soccer team. This team, which plays and practises regularly at Edmonton's Commonwealth Stadium, made international news yesterday by upsetting Colombia, a World Cup soccer regular, in a 2-0 clinch in the first Gold Cup title. It is the premier championship event in soccer for the Americas. Before the historic winning of this tournament Canada was ranked only 85th internationally. However, with its three straight sudden death play-off wins over teams ranked well above it, it became 10th in the world and has won the berth in the prestigious Confederations Cup. As a result of this tremendous effort, Team Canada has risen to a 30th world ranking.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all dedicated soccer players and their parents and this community and the government of Alberta, which supports minor sports, which definitely has had a role to play in the development of this national team, and on behalf of the students and young people I know that play in the Calgary community, including my son David, I want to congratulate them for this prestigious and tremendous upset.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

THE SPEAKER: Now I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on a Standing Order 40.

Freedom to Read Week

Mr. Dickson:

Be it resolved that this Assembly affirm the importance of open access to reading material by recognizing February 27 to March 4, 2000, as Freedom to Read Week.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm standing with respect to the notice I'd given earlier. On the matter of urgent and pressing necessity, it's my respectful view, Mr. Speaker, that as elected leaders in this province it is not enough for one member to pay tribute. It's important that every elected leader in this province signal their support for it.

Three points I'd make in terms of pressing and/or urgent necessity. Firstly, the week is being celebrated this week. This is the appropriate time to do it, with events in Calgary and Edmonton and right across Canada. It affects many librarians, book publishers, booksellers, authors, poets, and Canadians everywhere who love to read.

The second point is that our minister responsible for this area had produced an information bulletin on February 25, 2000, and there's a serious error that has to be remedied. The notice refers to: "Our libraries provide equal access to people of any origin, age, race, religion, economic status or view." Since it's clear that the hon. Minister of Community Development completely misapprehends what Freedom to Read Week is about, it's important, Mr. Speaker, that we have a chance to debate that and signal that it's not about getting into the library, that it's about what books you can read and take out once you get through the doors.

The third thing is that we've had a series of problems, most recently at the Chapters bookstore in south Calgary, where books have been destroyed. We've had a situation where the Calgary Public Library has recently dealt with a controversial policy with respect to Internet access.

Mr. Speaker, I think these are all compelling reasons, with respect, why we should at least briefly debate this and then as elected leaders in this province register our support for this very important event. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, under a Standing Order 40 notification the proponent of it asks for unanimous consent, so I will now ask the question of the Assembly.

3:00

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'd call the Committee of Supply to order.

The chair will recognize the Opposition House Leader. Go ahead.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Madam Chairman. There are some housekeeping things we have to deal with. I understand one of them is for the opposition to designate the five departments pursuant to Standing Order 56(2)(a). Unless you tell me otherwise, I'm assuming that it's in order now for me to make that designation or at least to confirm written notice that's gone earlier to the Government House Leader. The departments that will be designated pursuant to that are Health and Wellness, Learning, Children's Services, Environment, and Human Resources and Employment. Those are the five departments being designated pursuant to Standing Order 56(2)(a). I think that's all you need from me at this point.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Thank you very much, Calgary-Buffalo.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I would regret to inform the Assembly that as of this moment there is not an all-party agreement governing the use of time in designated supply subcommittees, the Official Opposition wanting to make sure that we appropriately designate the third party in that one and the third party wanting to maintain its designation. However, we can continue under the ordinary rules of the House until such time as we are able to obtain an agreement.

The hon. Opposition House Leader has indicated to the Assembly which of the five departments it wishes to appear before designated subcommittees of supply, so I'm now pleased to table with the House a list of the members of those five subcommittees of supply for the information of members.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Do you have enough copies for each member of the Assembly?

MR. HANCOCK: I don't have enough for everybody here today, but I assume that that's been provided to the Clerk's table earlier.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Okay. We'll get some made.

MR. HANCOCK: We'll get them copied and circulated.

Also, Madam Chairman, on Tuesday of last week I tabled for all members in the House in the form of a tabling a copy of a notice of motion for the proposed membership and to establish the A, B, C, D committees. Since then there have been a couple of minor changes from both sides of the House incorporated into the motion, and I'd like to bring them to the committee's attention before moving the motion and reading it into the record.

On the government side, Mrs. O'Neill was on committee A and Mr. Klapstein on committee C, and those two have been reversed. On committee A Mr. Cao replaces Mr. Marz.

On the opposition side, on committee A Mr. Wickman replaces Dr. Massey, on committee B Dr. Massey replaces Mr. Dickson, and on committee D Mr. Sapers replaces Mr. Wickman.

Madam Chairman, I'd like now to move the A, B, C, D motion with those changes.

Subcommittees of Supply

Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that:

1. Pursuant to Standing Order 57(1) four subcommittees of the Committee of Supply be established by the Committee of Supply with the following names: subcommittee A, subcommittee B, subcommittee C, and subcommittee D.
2. The membership of the respective subcommittees be as follows:
 - Subcommittee A: Mrs. Gordon, chairman; Mr. Severtson, deputy chairman; Mr. Bonner; Mr. Boutillier; Mrs. Burgener; Mr. Cao; Mr. Cardinal; Mr. Ducharme; Mr. Dunford; Mr. Friedel; Mr. Hierath; Mr. Klapstein; Mr. Jacques; Mr. Johnson; Mr. Lougheed; Mr. Mar; Dr. Pannu; Mr. Sapers; Mr. Smith; and Mr. Wickman.
 - Subcommittee B: Mr. Tannas, chairman; Mrs. Laing, deputy chairman; Ms Blakeman; Ms Calahasen; Mr. Doerksen; Mrs. Forsyth; Mrs. Fritz; Ms Graham; Mr. Hancock; Ms Kryczka; Ms Leibovici; Dr. Massey; Mrs. McClellan; Mr. Melchin; Ms Olsen; Mrs. Sloan; Mrs. Soetaert; Mr. Stelmach; Mr. Stevens; Mrs. Tarchuk; Mr. Woloshyn; and Mr. Zwozdesky.
 - Subcommittee C: Mr. Tannas, chairman; Mr. Fischer, deputy chairman; Mr. Cao; Ms Evans; Mr. Gibbons; Mr. Jonson; Mr. Lund; Mr. MacDonald; Mr. McFarland; Mrs. Nelson; Dr. Nicol; Dr. Oberg; Mrs. O'Neill; Mr. Paszkowski; Mrs. Soetaert; Mr. Strang; Mr. Thurber; Mr. Trynchy; and Mr. Yankowsky.
 - Subcommittee D: Mrs. Gordon, chairman; Mr. Renner, deputy chairman; Mr. Amery; Mr. Broda; Ms Carlson; Mr. Coutts; Mr. Havelock; Mr. Herard; Mr. Hlady; Mr. Langevin; Mr. Magnus; Dr. Pannu; Ms Paul; Mr. Pham; Mr. Sapers; Mr. Shariff; Dr. Taylor; Dr. West; and Mr. White.
3. The following portions of the main estimates of expenditure for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2001, unless previously designated by the Leader of the Opposition to be considered by the designated supply subcommittees, be referred to the subcommittees for their reports to the Committee of Supply as follows:
 - Subcommittee A: Executive Council; Gaming; and the Provincial Treasurer.
 - Subcommittee B: Community Development; International and Intergovernmental Relations; Infrastructure; and Justice and Attorney General.
 - Subcommittee C: Agriculture, Food and Rural Development; Government Services; and Municipal Affairs.
 - Subcommittee D: Resource Development; Economic Development; and Innovation and Science.
4. When the Committee of Supply is called to consider the main estimates, it shall on the six calendar days after agreement on the motion establishing the subcommittees, excluding Thursdays designated by the Official Opposition, when main estimates are under consideration, resolve itself into two of the four subcommittees, both of which shall meet and report to the Committee of Supply.

MR. DICKSON: Madam Chairman, since this is a debatable motion, there are some things I wanted to say to it. You know, I'm struck every year when we create these A, B, C, D committees. I marvel at the fact that 83 intelligent, thoughtful, bright men and women from all over the province come together and have not been able to date to achieve a more satisfactory means of examining in this case about $19 billion in expenditure.

It's gainsaid, I think, that probably the single most important thing we do as elected representatives is to deliberate on the budget for the province of Alberta. It's not that I subscribe to the notion that money is everything. The reality in government is that money drives the programs and runs the programs. The concern is that provinces like Ontario have taken actually a Laurence Decore idea, which is to create powerful budget committees that have the power to bring in witnesses, that would meet six months before this time so that at the very time the Provincial Treasurer is starting to pull together the nuggets, the elements of his next year's budget, there would also be an all-powerful, all-party committee that would be sitting.

In the Ontario model that committee has powers to bring in witnesses, to examine things in detail. They wouldn't do all 17 government departments. They might choose six departments for a given year, and they would study them in depth. I think that Ontario has shown some great leadership there. It's vexing to my colleagues, I think to a man or a woman, that instead we're in these A, B, C, D committees. What's wrong with it? A couple of things, Madam Chairman.

You may not remember some of the concerns I raised last year about the A, B, C, D committees. I suspect that there are even some government members – maybe I could ask them to raise their hands now. Is there any government member that thinks we can do better than the A, B, C, D committees? Well, I understand they're a little bit sheepish, while the Government House Leader is here, to raise their hand, but we can maybe ask him to cover his eyes with his hands, and then we could ask everybody to indicate if they'd like to see a better way of doing it. [interjections] Well, my friend from Peace River and my friend from Cypress-Medicine Hat are quick to indicate in an indirect way – I think there's some sympathy to the point of view I'm expressing.

In any event, Madam Chairman, the process we have now brings no respect to our work as legislators. It brings no respect to this Chamber, and it does a huge disservice to the people of this province that the single most important job for their elected legislators to do is done in such a crummy, inefficient fashion. You know, maybe if you've got 64 members, it doesn't matter. You've got a dozen people to send upstairs to room 512 and a dozen to keep another committee going down here. The people I represent in Calgary-Buffalo may have interest in the committee upstairs in 512. They may have interest in the committee down here in the Chamber. We may be talking about seniors' issues up there. We may be talking about the advanced education portion of Learning down here.

I've tried. You know, Madam Chairman, I can be accused of not having enough imagination or just not running fast enough, but I've come down here and waited my turn to ask my question about advanced education, and I've just run as fast as my little legs would carry me upstairs to 512. You know what I find when I get there?

MRS. SOETAERT: It's over.

MR. DICKSON: Well, if it isn't over already, there's a long list of people who have been waiting there to ask their questions. [interjections]

You know, some helpful members have suggested that maybe there's a way to carve this up, but let me put it to you this way, through the chair. Ought it not to be a fundamental principle that an elected person who represents more than 30,000 constituents, that includes seniors and includes people at the high-income end and people at the low-income end and people who are new immigrants and people who are longtime Canadians and people who work in different industries – they're teachers and students and health care workers. Is it an unreasonable proposition to say that any single elected member should be able to offer commentary on the budget for any one of those departments? I think in fact it's a solid proposition that that should happen. That should be accommodated, and the budget process we're about to vote on doesn't allow that to happen.

I know from my side conversations . . .

DR. WEST: Madam Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Can you give me a moment, hon. member?

MR. DICKSON: Oh, certainly.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. minister.

Point of Order Questioning a Member

DR. WEST: Would the hon. member entertain a question in debate? It's 482 of Beauchesne.

MR. DICKSON: Of course I'd be happy to entertain a question from the esteemed minister.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Go ahead, Mr. Minister.

DR. WEST: Given that I've attended a lot of these debates in 512 as they relate to the budget and that many of the members from the loyal opposition just read out a long list of questions, never raising their heads, could the hon. member answer me this question? Is it true what has been told to me, that you just get the questions without doing research yourself and just read them out without any prior knowledge of what you're doing?

MR. DICKSON: The short answer to that, Madam Chairman, would be this. Either the minister has never been in a room when this member has been asking questions or he hasn't been paying careful attention. I'd say to this minister – and each member can speak for themselves. I attempt, with the limitations that I have as an individual, to do my own research, to reflect the views that I hear from my constituents.

DR. WEST: That wasn't my observation.

MR. DICKSON: Well, the minister may have a contrary view, but if he watches me carefully – I'm going to make a point, Madam Chairman, of trying to go into that minister's department, and he'll see me looking at him eyeball to eyeball. He'll see me reading questions, and I may be reading questions that I've received from Calgary-Buffalo constituents. I would expect this minister to accord those questions the very same respect that he accords any other question asked, and I would think that this minister would recognize that every single member of this Assembly should be respected in that very same way.

DR. WEST: I just asked the question. You don't have to be defensive.

MR. DICKSON: Well, in fact, Madam Chairman, I see some back skating. The hon. minister skates backwards beautifully, almost as elegantly as he skates forward and from his seat.

In any event, the point I'm making, Madam Chairman, is this. When these A, B, C, D subcommittees come up for a vote, I cannot vote for the committees because it is a process that has been demonstrated to be inadequate. It undermines the important work we do here. It undermines the quality of the representation that any of us provide. I'd make a special plea to those members – I see some of my friends from the Calgary government caucus are here, and I know they're always very involved in the budget process. I'd ask them to consider but for a moment being in my position and how they would manage.

You see, to somebody who isn't part of a standing policy committee, who isn't part of that caucus review – somebody may say that I'm lucky; I don't have to attend those meetings. The point is that those members have an opportunity and their constituents have an opportunity through their agency to be able to find out what's going on in the budget long before we see it brought in here. We have an independent member and we've certainly got some members in the Official Opposition caucus and we have a New Democrat member. I don't think any of us have that opportunity to attend those standing policy committees or government caucus meetings. We're denied that opportunity.

Now, Madam Chairman, I'm happy that I'm represented by an MLA with a distinguished background in accounting. I'm proud to be represented by an MLA who understands budget documents and the nuances and the notes that appear in the back of the statement. I would think, although I haven't specifically addressed this with my MLA, that he understands how important it is to adequate budget scrutiny that every member be able to deal with every single department and that nobody be denied the chance to both ask questions in 512 and ask questions here. Obviously we can't do it at the same time, but that opportunity ought to exist.

So I think I've talked about how Ontario does it better. I know that the Government House Leader has been sympathetic when I've gone on complaining about the frustration we experience, so I think there is some will to come up with a better system. All I can say, Madam Chairman, is that I have to hope this is the absolute last time, the last spring that we ever have to constitute A, B, C, D subcommittees. I hope we will have an opportunity to come up with a far, far better process.

Now, I know there are people anxious to do a throne speech. To members who are interested in pursuing my criticism or opposition criticism, I refer them to the debate in Hansard of March 15, 1999, starting at page 509 and continuing on, which goes through and in detail indicates concerns raised by my colleagues and myself. For all of those reasons I'm going to be voting against this motion and looking forward to the throne speech, that will be coming along.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Madam Chairman. Just a few brief comments about my concerns about this budget process. I think it's no surprise to people in here that I've often spoken about being in two places at once being physically impossible. We all represent thousands of people, and though the procedure of getting the budget where it is is unfair, that having been said, we have the opportunity in this Legislature to debate it or to discuss it or to ask questions. When we're divided up to be in two places at once, if I have a concern about libraries in my constituency and then a concern about the environment, I can't be at those two places at once, and I find that patently unfair.

I know I've said this since we started this process. I was hoping that this time an agreement could be made to change it. However, maybe because it's an election year, they're not going to do that.

Maybe it's not. Who knows? I would really appreciate an opportunity to change this process, that I know we've made suggestions to change.

There's one other thing about room 512, and I've said it every time I've been in that room. I always hope that the committees I'm on meet in here, because I detest that room. It is way too close for people who sometimes disagree on issues. If we respected the traditions of the Assembly, we should be two sword lengths apart, and we truly aren't in that room. So when looking at the process for another time and another place, could that be part of the considerations taken?

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are you ready to vote on the motion?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

AN HON. MEMBER: Waste more time.

MS BLAKEMAN: I disagree with the hon. member on the other side. I don't think debate is a waste of time. It's an interesting exchange of ideas and opinions in this Chamber, so I would like to do that despite the attempt at silencing from across the way.

This motion is about dividing all members of the Assembly into the four subcommittees of supply. When I try to explain to the constituents in Edmonton-Centre what has happened to the budget debate process and the scrutiny of the budget, they can't believe it. We by law are supposed to have 20 days of debate. Now, a day, if you ask most people, would be eight hours, 10 hours perhaps if we were being hopeful. But no. A day of debate in the Alberta Legislature is less than two hours, as generally spoken.

My colleagues have already mentioned being divided into committees so that in fact they're able to have one committee meet upstairs in room 512 and the second meet here in the Assembly Chamber, and that then counts as two days of debate, because there are two committees going on at the same time.

I, too, represent 35,000 people who have varied interests and would like me as their representative to be involved in as many different debates as is possible. We've already had some fairly vivid descriptions of trying to run up and down the stairs in order to get in line to ask questions, and I have spoken before about my extreme displeasure at only being able to capture 48 minutes of debate on the portfolio of Community Development, which has happened in the past.

So this motion to dissolve us into these four subcommittees of supply really does allow the government to telescope the time that the budget is being debated. Any member of the public who is interested in this and following it wants to know what's going on, and this shrinks the time that they can find out what was debated the previous day and be able to get their input through to their MLA and get it brought up. So I think that the very setup of it is precluding input from citizens to contribute to the debate.

I'd also like to point out that since the last time we were debating the budget, we now have several superministries, that have brought together a number of sectors that used to be separate entities. On top of the fact that we're divided in half and trying to debate these ministries in under two hours, we're now trying to debate superministries.

If you look, for example, at the Ministry of Learning, that used to be two separate entities: advanced education and education covering K to 12. What used to be two separate departments is now lumped into one possible time for debate. Or let's look at Human Resources and Employment, which is covering things from AISH and SFI, labour standards, consumer and corporate affairs. I mean, that used to be four different departments. All in one department, all to be debated in a two-hour time span. So I have a real problem with this.

Now, the minister of energy – and actually it's thanks to him that I'm debating; he engaged me so much that I had to rise to speak to it – was questioning something about opposition members just having a list of questions run off by somebody. Well, I can assure him that I run those lists of questions off myself because I'm interested in them and I'm following through on the questions that have been brought forward to me by the people that live in Edmonton-Centre. You bet I've got my head down racing through those questions, with only 20 minutes to get every possible question out on entire departments, which, as I've just described, could be a department that used to be four separate departments. [interjection] The Minister of Justice is going to get into this debate. I can see he's been inspired by what's happened so far. I'm looking forward to his input.

We now have a budget that is presented on a Thursday, and by the following Monday we are debating one of the departments under that budget. So it means that citizens in Alberta, boy, have got to be with their fingers right on the button in order to get hold of a copy of this document, go through it, get in touch with their MLA, and hopefully be able to transfer that information or those questions to them prior to the beginning of that debate on a Monday.

So I have a real problem with Standing Order 57(1), putting us into four different committees, because I think this is going against the principle of an open and free and democratic debate on this budget process. That's all the money that is spent on behalf of this government for everything that happens for Albertans. We are now debating two and three departments a night in all of these different committees and racing through it as fast as possible. I strongly disagree with this, and I will be voting against the motion.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:28 p.m.]

Designated Supply Subcommittees

Moved by Mr. Hancock:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 56(2) five designated supply subcommittees be established by the Committee of Supply with the following names: Children's Services, Environment, Health and Wellness, Human Resources and Employment, and Learning. Be it further resolved that the membership of those committees be as follows:

Children's Services: Mr. Melchin, chairman; Mr. Cao; Mr. Cardinal; Mr. Johnson; Ms Kryczka; Mrs. Laing; Mr. Lougheed; Mr. MacDonald; Dr. Massey; Ms Paul; Mr. Shariff; and Mrs. Sloan.

Environment: Mr. Hierath, chairman; Mr. Amery; Mr. Boutilier; Ms Carlson; Mr. Coutts; Mr. Ducharme; Mr. Langevin; Mr. Magnus; Dr. Pannu; Mrs. Sloan; Mr. Strang; and Mr. White.

Health and Wellness: Mrs. Tarchuk, chairman; Mr. Broda; Mr. Dickson; Mr. Doerksen; Mrs. Forsyth; Mrs. Fritz; Mr. Herard; Mr. Jacques; Ms Leibovici; Dr. Pannu; Mr. Pham; and Mrs. Sloan.

Human Resources and Employment: Mr. Friedel, chairman; Mr. Bonner; Mr. Ducharme; Mr. Gibbons; Mr. Klapstein; Mr. MacDonald; Mr. Marz; Mr. McFarland; Ms Paul; Mr. Renner; Mr. Thurber; and Mr. Yankowsky.

Learning: Mr. Stevens, chairman; Mrs. Burgener; Mr. Dickson; Mr. Fischer; Ms Graham; Mr. Hlady; Mr. Johnson; Dr. Massey; Mrs. O'Neill; Dr. Pannu; Mr. Severtson; and Mrs. Soetaert.

[Motion carried]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes. Madam Chairman, I would move that the committee rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions and reports the approval thereof. I wish to table for the official records of the Assembly copies of the resolutions agreed to by the Committee of Supply on this date proposing the establishment of four subcommittees of the Committee of Supply.

Madam Speaker, I wish to table for the official records of the Assembly copies of the resolutions agreed to by the Committee of Supply on this date proposing the establishment of designated subcommittees of the Committee of Supply.

I would also like to table copies of the letters tabled during the Committee of Supply this day for the official records of the Assembly, designating the five designated supply subcommittees by the Official Opposition.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Consideration of Her Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Haley moved:

That an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 23: Mr. Dickson]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand in this Assembly with a response to the Speech from the Throne. I'm very proud to be the representative from the Edmonton-Manning constituency in this Assembly. The Edmonton-Manning constituency is a diverse, urban/rural constituency made up of the maximum-security penitentiary, Alberta Hospital Edmonton, Evergreen mobile park, and the new Northeast health centre.

This was the first Speech from the Throne in the new millennium year 2000 delivered by Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, Lieutenant Governor of our province. What a wonderful Albertan to be chosen for this position. At every function that I have attended at which she has been a guest speaker over the past few years, I've been totally impressed. I haven't heard anything but admiration and praise.

Our province has a strong history since becoming a province in 1905. I have a strong history in this province, with all four sets of great-grandparents having settled in this province prior to it becoming a province.

Madam Speaker, this throne speech isn't about bold plans for the new century. It's a rehash left over from the past century. It's a rehash of announcements that have been made many times before, a rehash of the money that was announced and accounted for in previous budgets. We've heard the promises before: reduce class sizes, improve literacy, plans to ensure the sustainability of the agriculture sector, expand training programs for our youth, long-term care, preventative and community-based health, programs to alleviate housing shortages, reduce poverty and homelessness, and tax relief for Alberta. What's lacking from this government is the commitment to move forward and take action in these areas.

This is also a throne speech of omission. What we have received in the throne speech is the same old stopgap, trickle-down, pressure-point, crisis-reduction approach that this government has followed over the past seven years, with the spin over the past few years from this government: trust us. You know, Albertans are not buying into this anymore.

What are Albertans now thinking about the truth squads? What a mistake this was. I answered a couple of phone calls in my constituency last Friday from seniors who said that they have never voted for anybody but Socreds and the Progressive Conservatives over their voting years. They were very vocal that they went off to Europe to fight in the Second World War against a leader who spoke about pushing the truth squads. In the past few days the calls came in from seniors with concerns about health care and the fact that this government is actually mentioning seniors in their plan as if they weren't residents of this province.

The throne speech talks about increasing financial support to Alberta's seniors' benefit program to reflect rising costs. This is a positive step. It is a step that is long overdue. But, you know, Madam Speaker, 29 cents isn't a lot. Between 1992-93 and '96-97 this government took $132 million, or 12 percent, out of the seniors' programs in this province. They shredded seniors' reports and failed to adequately consult with seniors on major changes to seniors' programs. Wouldn't it be nice to provide our 320,000 seniors with a better sense of security and well-being for the future? I would hope that this government is finally realizing that many seniors, some in my constituency, are still on a fixed income.

Madam Speaker, the government is proposing to use Albertans' money to subsidize the profit margin of a few chosen friends while ignoring the needs of 2.9 million Albertans who live throughout this province and pay the bills. The government is back in the business of business subsidies. No government truth squad or propaganda machine will be able to restore this government's vast credibility gap with Albertans on public health and public education.

Health care. Despite the infusion of $2 billion since 1995, nothing seems to have changed. Waiting lists for joint replacement are unacceptable. Fewer nurses are employed, and long-term care replacements are stalled. Fewer beds are open. It's like pouring water into a jug with a hole in it. They keep on pouring, but the water keeps leaking out the bottom.

Where's the money going? The truth is that this government has systematically undermined the public health system and created the pain and suffering in order to promote the real agenda – and maybe it's their only agenda – American style health care. The government has opened up the spending taps of Albertans' money in order to siphon off the money to private health operators. They're admitting that private health care is expensive.

Now, mental health is one thing that is really a problem, the unfairness in the funding between the minister of health's and my constituency. The lack of planning for community caregivers versus the institutionalizing of mental health patients is disgraceful. It is shocking to many of us who care a lot about mental health within our province to find that the words weren't even mentioned in the throne speech. This is a huge omission.

We've seen in the last week that this province has come up with an alliance with mental health professionals, the mental health caseworkers community, and advocating groups; in fact, the largest coalition ever formed on the mental health front in Alberta and called Alliance Alberta, the Alliance of Mental Illness and Mental Health. The organization presented an excellent review of some of the major questions in terms of the government's direction as it comes to mental health.

Now, on the last few trips down into Red Deer it was very concerning that as of March 31 of this year we will be seeing the lack of dollars and any funding going to the Canadian mental association, and all of a sudden workers will be sent out from Ponoka. Isn't it funny? Maybe somebody is creating a kingdom down there.

You know, it's very concerning. Alberta health is very important in my constituency, and maybe the minister should come into my constituency, which has the largest mental hospital in the province, and start answering some phone calls. Workers in the community are what we need, not putting money into Ponoka.

We have a history of having very strong municipal and school board relations in our province with our provincial government. We have seen this deteriorate over the last few years. The quality of life within our communities is dependent on the availability of local infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, communities are the backbone of Alberta society. As Albertans we can take justifiable pride in the development of our provincial economy, for we are emerging as leaders among all Canadian provinces in the global economy. Yet while we may compete and prosper in the global economy, we live and work and raise our families in our local communities and neighbourhoods. Our global competitiveness is in the first instance dependent upon the quality of our local environment and the attractiveness of our family life in our towns and cities. Unless our communities are attractive to people, our province will falter. Today our communities face a number of serious challenges. We need leadership which will move us forward to this solution in partnership with local governments.

Mr. Speaker, municipally the quality of life within our communities is dependent on the availability of local infrastructure. Maintaining our infrastructure is critical to Alberta's future competitiveness, providing the means and adding value to the products and services we produce and sell both here in Canada and abroad. Infrastructure planning should and must be the core business function of the provincial government in close collaboration with our municipalities. The province likes to take the credit for the $4 billion surplus at the provincial level, but why do they refuse to take responsibility for the infrastructure deficit at the local level? Our municipalities have been subjected to a financial squeeze by the provincial government. Not only were the provincial grants to municipalities reduced; the province also took over access to a portion of the local property base.

Between 1992 and 1998 the general and specific purpose grants from the Alberta government to the municipalities declined by $402 million, or 48 percent, the second highest level of decline in any province in Canada. Meanwhile, the provincial education property burden on residential properties in Alberta increased by $87 million, or 13 percent, between 1995 and 1999. The Alberta government collected nearly 46 percent of real general property tax generated in the province in 1998, the third highest percentage among all Canadian provinces.

A constant mill rate which is under the market value assessment is one thing that we could be looking at. I would like to challenge the committee of three MLAs who are studying or should I say tinkering with the mill rate, tinkering with the capping of the education tax. Why don't they just freeze it at a level and then start building it and finding out where it's going to go from there and how in Alberta, as it is a vast province, the market value and education tax will work?

You know, Mr. Speaker, in the absence of leadership Alberta will not reach anywhere near its full potential. However, because of the downloading and offloading by the provincial government for the past seven years, municipalities face hidden infrastructure deficits which they have yet to solve. Our municipalities throughout Alberta deserve to have more than a three-sentence paragraph in the throne speech.

The sentence I like the best says "over the next year." Is this saying that the three-year plan they've been talking about over the last year has only been a spin and now we're back to the one year? We've seen a series of ad hoc measures implemented over the past several months. These measures don't reflect a cohesive view. We repeatedly hear that the present status quo is unsatisfactory. The AUMA and the AAMD and C have been strongly pushing for a five-year business plan. They also have been pushing for some recognition of the education tax and that the capping, like I said before, was just tinkering.

Mr. Speaker, instead of pointing fingers at other levels of government, the province needs to engage Albertans in a search for new solutions. It's time to acknowledge our local governments as full, mature partners in building Alberta. The old view of municipalities being the children of the province is out of touch with today's reality.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General of Alberta made the following comments on the issue of infrastructure planning.

I believe the quality of the government's capital planning initiative is critical to managing these expenditures in a way that establishes an equilibrium between legitimate program requirements and funding provided. Proper planning will make the difference between a reactive mode, which merely distributes allocated funds, and a predictive mode, which anticipates and justifies funding required.

This was in the Auditor General's report of 1998-99. The Official Opposition believes that Alberta needs a plan in place to ensure that our local governments have adequate access to resources needed to fulfill these responsibilities over the medium and long term.

You know, Mr. Speaker, these are the challenges. How do we move forward? In our view, we need a new partnership between the province and the local governments based upon respect, fairness, and farsighted views of our future. To accomplish this, we must do three things: develop a comprehensive provincial/municipal agreement or charter that sets out each player's roles, responsibilities, and resources; the second one, find the means to provide municipalities with primary access to the property tax and a long-term, stable, and progressive source of revenue – just think of what Bill 207 is talking about over the next few days; and create an environment in which municipalities are totally accountable to their taxpayers for all sources of revenue and expenses to meet their core responsibilities to engage in long-term planning.

Mr. Speaker, the government needs to move forward as a leader in developing a framework designed to treat local governments as equals, to improve the lines of accountability, and to respect local autonomy and decision-making, to increase co-operation, collaboration, and most importantly to provide stable and predictable funding to our local governments. Constitutional amendments recognized municipalities as our partner, the third level of government in Canada.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I've got a few points or questions to ask around municipalities and to put on the record. When faced with inevitable pressures of growth, can the city of Calgary or other municipalities across the province continue to rely on a system of provincial grants that has proven to be unstable and uncertain? Now, is there a better funding approach that would allow municipalities to meet their roles and more responsibilities? We believe that the time has come for serious consideration of revenue sharing as an alternative to the provincial grants. This is what our private member's Bill 207 is about, and I hope everybody takes note of this, because in other provinces, like Manitoba for example, municipalities are provided with a fixed percentage of personal and corporate income tax based on population. This was something that was brought in in a previous government which was a Conservative government. Tying in the transfers of civic sources of revenue, such as personal income tax, should reduce the fiscal vulnerability arising from the uncertainty over the future grants, particularly the onetime grant programs for infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, as we move on to looking at other things, municipal is very important, but one of the large ones – and we noticed this in our question period today – is agriculture. After watching the January 31, 2000, TV address, we were able to view the very nice scenic pictures of rural Alberta and our agriculture scene out there, to a degree of 20 percent of the total time on the TV address, paid for by our taxpayers of Alberta. But, you know, it said nothing that particular night. There was nothing said, no promises made to rural Alberta. Then when we were presented with the throne speech, which included 30 percent of the entire delivery talking about rural Alberta, there were no promises, no commitments, no plans for agriculture. Why didn't this government participate in the negotiations with the other provinces, for example Saskatchewan and Manitoba, when they were negotiating with the federals?

The rest of the story has been written in the past few days, Mr. Speaker, nontruths to Alberta's agriculture community. Will rural Alberta buy into this lack of commitment? Only a two-day agriculture summit to be held in June of 2000. I believe this is much too late. The $100,000 interest free loan is much too late, and is it going to where we need it in northern Alberta, the Peace country, and all the way down along the northeast part of Alberta?

You know, agriculture is a huge part of our history, a huge part of what we should be looking at. We should be fighting very strongly with whatever level of government we have to fight with. It is nice to see that there is being something in the review of hail and crop insurance program.

MRS. SOETAERT: We suggested it.

MR. GIBBONS: We did suggest it. Thank you, my hon. member here.

We support the need to develop a long-range plan that will ensure the sustainability of our agriculture sector and improve the trade rules and market access for industry. We need to continue to work with agriculture sectors to find innovative ways to add value to agriculture products, particularly in the area of agriculture processing. We also need to work with agriculture communities and commercial financial institutions to ensure that there is access to capital to facilitate farming financing and a new transmission of farmers short on loan collateral.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to stress to the government a quote: the time to plan properly is when times are good. Have we missed the fact that times are good in this province right now?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad for this time to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I had been talking to constituents in Edmonton-Centre prior to the throne speech, and I had some opportunity after, as well, to be able to test what people's reaction was and what they were looking to see out of the throne speech. Really what I'm about to speak on is the effect of the government policy on the constituents of Edmonton-Centre and as that is demonstrated to us through the throne speech. So a few different areas I want to focus on: the voluntary sector, health care, mental health, schools, seniors, postsecondary education, and then some other general notes that people gave me.

Interestingly, a lot of head offices for the larger nonprofits are in Edmonton-Centre. Well, not surprisingly; it's the downtown area. There are things like the CNIB, the Canadian Mental Health Association, the United Way. Lots of the large groups have their offices in Edmonton-Centre and are really good about sharing their perspectives with me, as well as a number of smaller ones. Azimuth Theatre is just around the corner from my office, and that's quite a small organization.

I had asked a question in the House at the end of last week about the voluntary sector. There has been a very thorough and thoughtful report put out by the federal government in which a number of recommendations are made. One of the points they make is that the voluntary sector is really now the third pillar of our society, joining the public sector, in other words government, and the private sector, and certainly I have seen that. As a taxpayer I'm very aware that it's one pocket that's generating all of these taxes. When the federal government downloads onto the province and the province onto the city, the city has nowhere else to download after that except onto these voluntary organizations, and they have taken up a tremendous load of programs and services that were previously offered by one level or another of government.

In the examination of whether these organizations are going to be able to sustain this kind of activity, one of the things that keeps coming up over and over again is capacity building, whether the organizations literally have the technical equipment and know-how to be able to keep up with all of this, and the answer is no. I gleaned through the paragraphs of the throne speech. I looked for an understanding of this, perhaps some assistance that might be coming. That assistance doesn't have to be financial. It can be done through advice, through partnerships, because one of the things that I think government should be doing is providing leadership.

In particular I'm thinking of a board member from a nonprofit organization that said: you know, Laurie, we look to government for leadership. This person was responsible for distributing fairly large amounts of money through one of the private corporations, and they said: well, you know, if government isn't putting money into the nonprofit sector, then we kind of get the hint that nobody is really interested. He felt very strongly that we needed to look to government to show the leadership in that sort of thing. So I'm looking to the government to be showing leadership in helping that voluntary sector be able to support the workload, the programs and services that they have taken on.

Another point that was raised to me under the heading of voluntary sector is the games. I understand how important games are to cities, to civic pride or provincial pride, to young people, the leadership skills they can learn, the teamwork plus all of the nutrition and wellness factors that are built into it, but I do notice something really interesting. I remember reading an article in which the emissary for the government was going off to put in the bid for the Goodwill Games and speaking of how our arts and cultural sector was going to be the clincher in getting the games here.

I found that in a couple of instances it's no longer enough to be providing the infrastructure, the support for athletic games, whatever kind of athletic games that is. There is an expectation now that for the other people who come to that and to be able to make it a wider, more interesting experience for people, there needs to be a cultural component. So I notice that in fact there is money going into the sports side of things, but having promoted the wonderful arts and cultural sector here, made it a part of the bid, there doesn't seem to be any additional funding going into the arts and cultural sector that indeed helped them clinch the bid, so to speak. I think the same could be said about the 2001 Championships in Athletics. So just a little reminder there.

I know it's convenient to just take pictures of the tens of thousands of people lined up on Gallagher Hill watching the Folk Festival and then use those pictures in wonderful brochures, but those activities do need support in order to exist enough in the first place to have the tens of thousands of people lined up on the hill.

MR. MacDONALD: We're talking about Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MS BLAKEMAN: I'm hearing from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, his pride in having the Edmonton Folk Festival in his riding, and indeed we're all proud of it.

I'd like to go on and talk about health care now. I know that a number of my colleagues have spoken eloquently on this issue, but I'd like to talk specifically about the issues that have been brought forward to my office and to me around this. One of the most serious is about home care waiting lists. I think there has been a deal broken, or at least people feel that they can't trust the government around this issue. When there was a plan – well, I guess the truth is there wasn't a plan. But when there were tremendous cuts in health care in the early '90s, the deal that was put forward at the time was: no problem; yes, you'd be out of the hospital in less than a day or very quickly, but home care would be there for you. Home care would be waiting as soon as you got home.

Well, now we're finding that home care in fact has waiting lists, and really it frightens people. Also, there is a distrust that is building about this government and anything that it says about health care. Here was something that was for sure a done deal, and it's not happening. We have certainly had to make phone calls in my constituency saying that this person has been sent home from the hospital after an operation and there's no family there. They are living alone. There is an isolation factor. We're really concerned and had to sort of advocate and wrestle with the distributors of that in order to get them faster home care.

A corollary to that issue of home care is housekeeping services. Often the services that home care in fact offers are very specific to individual personal care: to help someone get out of bed, to get dressed, perhaps to have a shower or a bath, to eat a meal. But a number of the people who are receiving home care in Edmonton-Centre want to be living in reasonably tidy surroundings, and it doesn't seem that the home care contract covers provision of housekeeping services. People just start to feel that there's something wrong when, you know, they can't get somebody to help them vacuum the floors or the rugs or wash or clean the bathroom. Especially for someone that's not feeling well, this becomes really important, and I think that's an area we need to look at. I am aware that in some cases – and they seem to be fairly restricted cases – minimal housekeeping can be arranged for, but this seems to be an increasing problem for the people in Edmonton-Centre, and I'm hearing more and more about it.

I have raised this point before, but I need to raise it again. With the waiting lists that have been created by the way the government has handled health care, one of the things I see is that people have to wait so long to get the surgery that in fact when they do get the surgery, they're so sick from all of the extra things that happen to someone when you're that sick for that long that they get the surgery and they die. So the operation was a success, but the patient died because they were just so sick from having waited that long. I've had that happen to three people that I know of in my constituency. There's something really wrong with the system when that happens. There are a lot of other things to be said about health care, but I'd like to move on and raise some other points.

Mental health. We estimate that mental health issues are underlying an estimated 80 percent of the cases that we work on in our constituency office. That's a large number. We find often that someone is obviously in distress, needs help, needs someone to go out and talk to them. They need to be able to see and talk to someone. They need counseling. They need someone to go and check, you know, go into their apartment to try and help them. Is there any food in the fridge? Are there any blankets on the bed? Has anybody been in to see this person or check on them in any way? Even in a downtown area with all those 35,000 people crammed into 20 square blocks, isolation is still a real factor there, and there's no one to refer to. Anywhere that we are able to try and send someone for counseling or for help, their lists are full up. They're jam-packed. Those are the nonprofit groups that are operating, some of the ones that I referred to earlier when I was talking about the voluntary sector taking on programs that government used to provide.

I'm increasingly concerned about this. We cannot find anyone to refer these people to for help, and once again it's a matter of not being able to trust the government anymore. There was a deinstitutionalization of mental health care patients into the community, and the community was willing to take that and welcomed the idea with open arms and worked hard to put structures in place, but that can only be overloaded so long until it can't support itself anymore, and I think that's the point we're at. So we have a long way to go in being able to properly support those people with mental health issues in our community who want to be independent.

I'm aware that we've been waiting for the PDD report, which I think was promised in December. We're now going into the 1st of March later this week. We've waited an awfully long time for this report. We need it. There needs to be much more prevention done around this issue and once again better support for the community organizations that are offering the programs and services. You just can't keep dumping these things on the voluntary sector and expecting that it's somehow free. It isn't. It's cost for the volunteers, and it does cost money to keep the doors open and the lights on.

Oh, there isn't enough time.

I'd like to talk about schools and education. I have been able to speak with some of the teachers and principals in my schools, and you're aware that all of the schools in Edmonton-Centre are classified as inner-city. They're very poor children, and the staff that are working in these schools are absolutely extraordinary in their dedication, their creativity, their initiative to provide everything they can to get these kids moving ahead in life. It is truly inspiring.

A couple of the points that were raised with me were about the Children's Forum report. Big disappointment there. There was no prioritizing that came out of it, no definitive action. As it was put to me: if there had been one statement, even one statement, that said that all schools could have hot lunch programs or that those would be established, that would have been a huge step forward, particularly valuable in the schools that I represent.

Another point. It's important that we don't lose sight of the funding for full-time kindergarten. One of the things that we were starting to see is that there are some private donor kindergartens – and that's a wonderful thing – where you have an individual who's a philanthropist and puts forward enough money so that someone can run a kindergarten in the area. That doesn't cover all the kindergartens that are in my riding or others' ridings. They kind of get left out. It's important to remember our commitment to that full-time funding for kindergarten.

I cannot repeat often enough how important prevention is for these schools and in all aspects: early prevention, early intervention, early intervention, early intervention. These children are perfectly capable of becoming successful, prosperous, contributing citizens, but they are starting this race from way back in the starting blocks, and they have got to get help to get them to the starting blocks so that they can run that equal race with everyone else. We have to be aware of that and to work hard on that.

Once again, mild and moderate special-needs funding is still needed. This has not been addressed fully. It's very difficult in my schools to get parent volunteers to fund-raise or even to come in and work in the schools. The parents of these children are working low-income parents. They are working at two or three minimum wage jobs, and each parent is working. They're working hard to keep their head above water and to be proud of what they're contributing. That doesn't leave them any time to be selling almonds door-to-door or Christmas cards or Christmas wrap or whatever else is expected. That's just not a possibility in these schools, and I think we're letting these kids down.

I have about three and a half minutes left and much more to say, so I'll go on to speak about seniors. I was very disappointed in what was brought forward in the budget and as manifest in what was put forward in the throne speech. Once again, immense distrust of this government. What is said and what is done are two very different things. We were hearing about a 10 percent increase for seniors.

Well, in one place I actually did find where it was a 10 percent increase for the Alberta seniors' benefit, which is, in fact, the truth. In other places it was this broad statement about a 10 percent increase for seniors. That simply wasn't true. That's a 10 percent increase for those seniors who are receiving the cash portion of the Alberta seniors' benefit, about 130,000 seniors in Alberta, of which the average is about $100 a month. So these people are now looking at an increase of $9 to $10, 29 cents a day. I'm sorry, but this is not going to address rents that have doubled. This is not going to address phone costs. It is not going to address increased utilities. This is not going to address the cost of gas for transportation or rising food costs. Twenty-nine cents a day is an insult, and I'd say that it was an insult if we didn't need the money so badly for these people. We'll be grateful for that 29 cents, but it's certainly not acceptable.

The special-needs benefit, which is the second part of that, to me demonstrates that the cuts this government made to programs and services that were accessed by seniors has truly had a terrible impact on our seniors in Alberta. That program has had a doubling of the subscription demand in this year, so I think seniors have used up all their savings. They've scrimped and saved and cut everything they can. They've borrowed from their family. They've done everything they can, and they've reached the point where there's no more meat left on that bone. There's no other place to get it from, and they've had to go cap in hand to this government saying: please can I get special-needs benefit money for a winter coat? A winter coat, winter boots.

MRS. SOETAERT: That's shameful. That's shameful. They laugh on that side. They think that's funny.

MS BLAKEMAN: I don't know why they would laugh. If they think it's funny that seniors have to go and beg for money for a winter coat, it's a sad situation in Alberta.

MR. DUNFORD: Tell the truth. Tell the truth.

MS BLAKEMAN: That is the truth, and I've got the casework to prove it. Those are the people that have come to me. I'm not going to stand here and make things up. What for? I've got enough cases to talk for days up here.

I think we need to look at funding of seniors' centres. That is a preventative measure, and a penny of prevention is worth millions of dollars in cure. If we're going to end up spending 1,200 bucks a day in an acute care bed for a senior who could have been participating in wellness sessions, in activities, in meals, breaking that isolation through a seniors' centre, I think we seriously need to look at funding seniors' centres. This is prevention. It's going to save us a lot of money down the road.

We also need to be looking at affordable housing for seniors and others, once again looking to the government to provide leadership in developing these policies, not just dumping it on some other sector.

I also want to talk about postsecondary students. I represent Grant MacEwan Community College, NorQuest, Alberta College – and I'm out of time. There's far too much to say.

If I can please adjourn this debate.

THE SPEAKER: I'm sorry. No, hon. member, you cannot. The time expired for your speaking.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: I'd move adjournment of debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Motions

Provincial Fiscal Policies

15. Mr. Day moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate February 24: Mr. Dickson]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be privileged to address the budget which was brought down in the Assembly last Thursday by the Provincial Treasurer, and I'm pleased to look at some of the issues in that budget that we think are important and perhaps some lost opportunities in that budget that, frankly, we were looking for as we proceeded through the debate. I know that the Provincial Treasurer spent a good deal of time practising the speech. He certainly had some interesting stunts around the speech, but I think there have been some issues of a pretty fundamental political nature that are perhaps some mistakes that this government made in that budget. We only had to listen to some of the people that feel they have lost touch with the government they elected as we listened to their comments and their concerns about the budget and the things the budget forgot to do.

You know, it's a pretty fundamental law of politics that you always respect that core group of people that support a political party, respect the people that have done all the legwork to get that party to where it is, and to ignore that group and the growing numbers of that group as it gets to close to its 30th year in power is one that presumably those people will have a chance to respond to when the next election comes around. So, Mr. Speaker, what I would like to do today is to identify some of those groups that feel that this government has lost touch with the things that they're saying, the things that matter to them, the people who put this government where it is.

I would like to start right off the bat with the whole issue of tax cuts, Mr. Speaker. Really, it's interesting to go back in the history of this government over its last eight years and realize that the only way that taxes have gone in Alberta over those eight years is up: $54 million from over 400 new or increased user fees between '92-93 and 2001-02, a $236 million increase in health care premium taxes between '92 and 2000, a $333 million increase from video lottery terminal taxes between '93 and 2003, $164 million in casino gaming terminal taxes between '93 and 2003, $204 billion in cumulative revenues collected from Albertans as a result of the provincial personal income tax bracket creep between '93 and 2000, and a $181 million increase in education property taxes between '92 and 2003. That's a total of $3.4 billion in tax increases by this government, undertaken or planned or promised by the Klein government between '92 and 2002. So who has the government lost touch with in this very, very important area?

Well, the government has lost touch with those hardworking Alberta families who were waiting for the announcement of a tax cut last Thursday, a tax cut that would have affected them directly. But, no, the tax cut announced last Thursday was the tax cut affecting only 25 percent of Alberta taxpayers, and that was with the elimination of the surtax on the 8 percent for the high-income level. Nothing for the hardworking families in terms of the tax cut they deserve, Mr. Speaker, deserve because of what they've been through over the past eight years with this government in terms of fees, taxes, and the impact of budget cuts on them all.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I said that the Provincial Treasurer had practised his lines, obviously, as he delivered that speech last Thursday. While the government talks and teases Albertans about tax cuts, in fact it hasn't come up with the results, and that's what people are saying, the people who feel this government has lost touch with them, those people in that middle group who are so essential to our family life, the working families within our province.

Let's look at the record, Mr. Speaker, over the last four months. We went back and looked at the teasing and the taunting that's been done to Albertans. On November 23 last year the Premier said that the government might lower the 9 cents per litre gasoline tax; that is, he might. He mused about that. On November 25, two days later, the Premier mused about a gasoline tax rebate. On December 29 the Premier talked about providing Albertans with a $100 rebate for everyone right across the province. On January 7 the Treasurer said that the government was considering a personal income tax cut in the year 2000. On January 17 the Treasurer said that the government was considering a reduction in health care premiums. On January 18 the Treasurer said that the surplus would be used to pay down the debt rather than being used to cut taxes in 2000.

Talk about tax policy-making on the fly, Mr. Speaker. That's why Albertans feel that this government has lost touch with them and the things that matter to them. So that's a pretty important part about the taxes. It's one that certainly the people phoning in to those radio shows are concerned about, that this government talks about tax cuts but not one that's affecting them this year.

Let's move on and look at education property taxes in this province. Why did the Premier and the Provincial Treasurer tell Albertans to expect substantial tax relief on their property taxes in the current fiscal year and then proceed to announce a property tax cut that amounts to about $31.50 for an average Calgary homeowner and $22.50 for an average homeowner in Edmonton? How can the Premier and the Provincial Treasurer call an 18-cent reduction in the education property mill rate a tax cut when the facts are that provincial revenues from education property tax imposed by the province will actually increase by $18 million in 2000 and 2001 and between now and 2003 education property taxes are projected to increase by $48 million? That's a tax increase, Mr. Speaker, plain and simple, no matter how their spin-and-duck tactics on communications try to say otherwise.

Mr. Speaker, let's move, then, to the flat tax. What have we seen so far on this 11 percent flat tax scheme? Well, in the first instance what we've seen is that it's been announced on 14 different occasions but still hasn't been delivered on. A $160 million tax cut that applies to only 25 percent of taxpayers through the elimination of the 8 percent tax, as I said earlier, is the only cut that is going to take effect this year. So, again, all about the spin and the ducking.

Let's look at that flat tax, Mr. Speaker. The middle 39 percent of Alberta tax filers, with an income category of between $30,000 and $70,000, will receive an average of a 9 percent cut in their provincial taxes under the Klein flat tax when in fact it comes in, if it comes in, but the top 1 percent of Alberta tax filers, in the income class of $150,000 and above, will receive a tax cut of 18 percent in their provincial taxes under the Klein flat tax. So who benefits, and who benefits the most? The people in that high-income level, interestingly the very people who are going to benefit from the federal government's action on tax cuts in this fiscal year, not the hardworking Alberta families that were waiting for some relief in this budget.

Let's look at the impact of the Klein flat tax on marginal rates, Mr. Speaker, a very interesting thing which the Provincial Treasurer doesn't like to talk about, but let's examine it. Marginal rates for the province are rates of tax that an individual pays on the last one dollar earned, as we all know. The marginal tax rate for taxpayers with taxable income in the low-income bracket – in other words, those paying 17 percent at the federal level, which comprises 52 percent of Alberta taxpayers – is higher under the Klein flat tax proposal than under the current tax system. In other words, that provincial marginal rate is currently 7.48 percent for those Albertans that are paying at the 17 percentile of the federal tax. That 7.48 has to go up to a marginal rate of 11 percent under the flat tax. There's no denying that the provincial marginal rate will go up for those least able to pay on the tax side.

Let's look at the marginal tax rate for taxpayers with taxable income in that middle-income bracket, Mr. Speaker, those that are paying at 26 percent. That's 35 percent of our taxpayers in this province, and it is essentially the same, interestingly, under the Klein flat tax as under the current tax system of tax on tax. In other words, it will go from, at the current rate, 11.44 percent to 11 percent.

But most interesting, Mr. Speaker, is to look at the marginal tax rates for that group at the high-income level, those paying at the 29 percent federal rate, which comprises only 13 percent of Alberta taxpayers. Under the new Klein flat tax proposal yet to come, the tax adjustment will be from 12.76 as a provincial marginal rate down to 11 percent.

So who benefits, Mr. Speaker? The high-income group benefits. The middle-income working Alberta families and those at the lower end either get a saw-off or they get a substantial increase in that provincial marginal rate. That's what's behind all of this, and that's something Albertans understand, and that's why they feel this government has lost touch with them.

Let me move on, Mr. Speaker, to municipalities, another group that feels that the provincial government has lost touch with them, perhaps because they've been in power for almost 30 years. But most recently, in the last eight years, municipalities through their municipal associations, like the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, have spoken out very strongly against this budget. Our communities are in fact the backbone of Alberta society. We work, we raise our families, and we live in our neighbourhoods within these communities, and the quality of life within our communities is very much dependent on the availability of local infrastructure. Maintaining our infrastructure is critical to Alberta's future competitiveness, providing a means of adding value to the products and the services that we produce and sell both here in Canada and abroad. Infrastructure should be and must be a core business function of a provincial government in close collaboration with our municipalities.

But let's look at what has happened, Mr. Speaker. This province announces close to a $4 billion surplus, but municipalities can't get the long-term predictable funding formula which they have been asking for year over year over year from this government. Between '92 and '98 general and specific purpose grants from Alberta government to municipalities declined by 48 percent, the second highest level of decline of any province in Canada. Meanwhile, of course, as we've noted, the provincial education property tax burden has risen by 13 percent between '95 and '99.

Mr. Speaker, we have seen a series of ad hoc measures implemented by the province over the past year: two announcements of onetime infrastructure funding, a 5 cent per litre fuel tax grant to the cities of Edmonton and Calgary, and in the budget the government announced the acceleration of this $475 million in funding for transportation in 2001. While these measures are both welcome and overdue, they do not reflect the realities of today, the need to create a stable, sustainable, long-term funding arrangement between the province and local governments to support a system of comprehensive infrastructure planning.

In its response to the provincial budget the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association made the following comments: "an increase in the infrastructure dollars for municipalities is welcome news, however, short term funding is no substitute for long term planning," and "the Government still has not addressed the need for long-term financial solutions," an indictment, Mr. Speaker, by the municipalities of this province.

Let's move on, then, to the Auditor General of Alberta, who made the following comments on this whole issue of infrastructure planning when he said that capital expenditures do not occur in isolation – they create a stream of subsequent operating costs that are often not fully recognized at the time of the original investment . . . I believe the quality of the government's capital planning initiative is critical to managing these expenditures in a way that establishes an equilibrium between legitimate program requirements and the funding provided. Proper planning will make the difference between a reactive mode, which merely distributes allocated funds, and a predictive mode, which anticipates and justifies funding required.

Even the Auditor General is trying to point the way for this government. He said at the end, "At present, there is not enough performance reporting to usefully assist in capital asset management."

Mr. Speaker, we in the Official Opposition believe that Alberta needs a plan to replace and ensure that our local governments have adequate access to the resources they need in order to carry out the responsibilities that have been downloaded by this government. To accomplish this, we believe we need a new partnership, a new vision between the province and local government based on respect, on fairness, and on a farsighted view of the future, not just dangling the carrot in front of the municipalities. The municipalities are saying: no, it's not good enough anymore; this government has forgotten us.

We believe we need to develop a comprehensive provincial/municipal agreement that sets out each player's roles, responsibilities, and resources, a commitment, Mr. Speaker, a long-term commitment, a respect for another level of government to say: this is what we need. We believe that we need to find a means to provide municipalities with primary access to the property tax base and long-term, stable, and progressive sources of revenue that will respect the importance of their role in the life of our province.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of that, we will be bringing forward a bill which will be an example of a way that we believe is this government's point of view when it comes to municipalities, of the municipalities being the children of the province, a view that was expressed back in the mid-70s, which this government is still following. That bill will consider a revenue-sharing alternative to the provincial grant model that this government depends on, the dangling carrot, and tying the transfers, as other provinces have done, to specific sources of revenue. A very small first step was made with the fuel tax for Edmonton and Calgary, but it is a small one, and it's one that needs to be built on for all municipalities in this province, not just the big cities.

In conclusion with the municipalities, Mr. Speaker, this is a provincial government that has lost touch with our local governments, with their aspirations, has forgotten the importance of a partnership role with our municipalities, a partnership that we in the Official Opposition believe is fundamental to getting on with in fact new ways, a new vision for the future in a new century.

Next, Mr. Speaker, I would like to go to the issue of education. In this sector of the budget the provincial government has lost touch with the parents, with the teachers, with the students in postsecondary education, has lost touch with the very people who depend on this government to be recognizing their needs, their responsibilities, and thanking them for the work they've done over the last several years while there have been cuts. Now infusions of cash, which I think the government thought particularly the basic education people might have responded to by saying: oh, thank you very much for all this new money.

But, you know, our parents, our teachers, our people involved and committed to public education in this province could see through the smoke screen, and they saw through the smoke screen in very short order. Out in the lobby of this Legislature, with the communications plan that the government set up – and it was actually very good. I thought the way we were able to talk to all of the groups at once in the foyer was actually very good. But what they were saying in that foyer when it came to basic education is that this is a government that gave dollars for student growth in population and inflation, but there's really nothing in the budget to address the primary concern of parents, and that is the basic per pupil funding, the dollars that need to be there for creating smaller classes in our province.

So Albertans are getting smarter than this government is, because they're starting to see through the government, reluctantly dragged kicking and screaming, throwing a bit of money at them. What they want, particularly in the area of education, is that those dollars are going to be sustainable, that they are going to be able to see some effect on classroom sizes. We even saw the lateral arabesque performed by the Minister of Learning today. When asked about the 2,200 new teachers that were going to be coming onstream – and I'm paraphrasing, Mr. Speaker – he said: oh, no, no; it's not really any 2,200 new teachers. He said: that's one example of what school boards might want to do. Gee, a whole different message.

Then compare that to attending education forums in this city, where 500 parents would be out at an education forum and the minister is standing up and saying, as he did today, that educators, even those in the States, are saying that 17 pupils in a classroom from K to 3 is the optimum number, and that's a really good thing. He let all those parents think he was actually going to do something about K to 3 and reduce the number of kids in those classes, but he didn't. He didn't, and now he's calling it something that some of the school boards might want to do.

You know what? I talked to principals who told me: "You know what I can do with the dollars I've received? I might be able to buy some of the textbooks I need. I can't hire another teacher. I'm going to have even bigger classes next year." So, you know, let's call a spade a spade.

Mr. Speaker, in terms of the future, we have been thinking very seriously about this issue of classroom sizes and always have. In fact, there was a motion in 1998 on classroom sizes, and of course we will be bringing forward another motion this year about targeting that 17 in the K to 3 level. Also, we have a plan that would say that there would be a full, tuition-free 475 hours of kindergarten, essential for an early foundation for our kids and an early detection of problems. Clearly that was a recommendation made in the Children's Forum, both the kindergarten and the class size, but of course there was nothing on that in this government's budget.

It's no wonder Albertans get frustrated when they hear their words, you know, thrown back at them by the Children's Forum report and then the opportunity to see real action on the part of the government is just ignored. They hear their words in the good PR message of the Children's Forum report, but when it comes to the action, things this government could do to put those things into play, it's not there, and Albertans are getting tired of it, Mr. Speaker.

We need a new vision for basic education into the new millennium. In fact, we need a new vision for the future of education in the new millennium. That's why we are going to be talking about a new commission to look at the future of education in Alberta, one that looks at early childhood learning, early detection of problems in learning, works with kids through the basic level, reduces those deficits in their own learning through the basic level, has them graduate from high school with strong opportunity to go into public institutions at the postsecondary level, to be good citizens, and then move on to the postsecondary level beyond. Regardless of all else, education has to be the first priority of any provincial government.

I do want to make some remarks as well about postsecondary education, Mr. Speaker. Postsecondary is another area that really feels they have been forgotten by this government. While there's the $3 million academic scholarship program, the $17 million for remission on student loans, and the $16 million to pay the risk premiums to banks, there is still showing that between '95-96 and '98-99 the average student debt load increased from $15,518 to $17,360, an increase of 12 percent for our students at the postsecondary level.

Tuition fees as revenue, as a percent of funding for credit programs, has increased from 14.9 percent in '93 to 21 percent in '98. In other words, with the cutbacks towards the postsecondary institutions, tuition is taking a larger and larger part in fund-raising for our postsecondary institutions. As a result, the average university tuition fee in Alberta is now over $3,100 per student, one of the highest levels in Canada. Shocking, appalling, Mr. Speaker, in a province that boasts of close to a $4 billion surplus.

Mr. Speaker, the whole issue of postsecondary education is a very big issue, and what this government has lost touch with are those families who see an ever increasing rise in tuition, those hardworking Alberta families who wonder whether or not they're going to be able to ensure that their kids go on to postsecondary education. What an indictment of this government and what a forgotten group, who will in fact be the source of our prosperity as we move into the next century.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move to the whole issue of health care. In no other area, I would say, has this government not only lost trust with the people of the province, but they have in fact broken the trust with the people in this province when it comes to health care. This is the government that inherited a cost-controlled health care system in this province when they took over in '92, this is the government that rapidly cut out close to 20 percent of that health care sector, and this is the same government that now, realizing the error of their ways, is throwing money back at health care, trying to buy back support from the people of this province. And you know what? Albertans aren't buying it.

I would like to challenge any of these MLAs to have been in the seat of their colleague from Lacombe-Stettler on Saturday while she tried to defend this government. It's no wonder she raised those questions in this Legislature today, Mr. Speaker, because she's got the heat coming from her constituents, people who say: will she resign? That's what they asked. Would she resign if this government, as we all know full well they are headed towards doing, rams through this legislation?

The truth is that Albertans do not trust this government when it comes to health care. It is so abundantly clear. If the government, instead of avoiding and ignoring what Albertans are saying, would go out there and listen to those people on the steps of the Legislature at noon today, if they would go to the forums right across this province and listen to what Albertans are saying, if they would read their own correspondence, they would see what Albertans are saying. Albertans are saying – you know what? After roundtables, after blue-ribbon panels, after growth summits, after health summits, after trying to introduce this legislation on two occasions, you know what, government? Albertans don't believe you. They don't believe them anymore. That's what they're facing, a credibility gap. It has nothing to do with communication.

You know, Mr. Speaker, they think they're so clever, because they're going to come in and try and fudge their way through the legislation, have something they think is innocuous. But you know what? They're not going to be able to do it. No matter what kind of legislation they bring in, Albertans know that their real agenda, whether it's expressed today or expressed the day after the next election, is the privatization of health care. They see it as the solution. We're going to stand up and fight for public health care, and we're going to do it through the next election.

Mr. Speaker, there are some things money can't buy. It can't buy trust, and it's what they're trying to do. This is the 16th separate funding announcement since September of '95, with nearly $2 billion thrown at the system they broke. This is day 1,611. Remember the Ralph Klein 90-day plan? There's no wonder Albertans don't trust this government. They don't trust this government to manage the health care system now. They don't trust this government, whatever kind of legislation they bring in. Albertans want to see the provincial government ensuring that public dollars are going to go to public health care. You know, people right across this province – it's amazing – understand, they know that the flow of dollars is from their pockets into a regional health authority and then diverted over to a private-sector operator. It is a subsidy of private operators. They are back in the business of being in business and back to paying taxpayers' dollars to subsidize it.

Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted to participate in this budget debate and to point out the number of ways that this government has lost touch with the people of this province because they've become arrogant, because they have forgotten that it's not their money, that it's Albertans' money. Albertans care about the future of this province. They care about their families, they care about their seniors, they care about their kids needing postsecondary education, and they care about their local municipalities, all those things that this government takes for granted. The day of reckoning is coming. A day will come soon when this government will finally understand what it is that Albertans are saying and what they care about and what they're feeling.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to participate in this debate. I look forward to hearing the ministers defend their own budgets, the gaps in their budgets. Certainly our caucus has been working hard over the weekend and will continue to do so as we challenge the ministers to support their budgets.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to address this budget.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and speak on Budget 2000. I note that the budget is presented in a very interesting way, as New Century: Bold Plans. I've been reading the budget documents very closely to find out what those plans are, how carefully thought through they are, and what the time span is over which they stretch. I don't plan to start coming to these conclusions right away, but one thing that seems to be a pattern from looking at the budget documents is clearly that the time span or the planning, if we can call it planning, seems to be done for a maximum of three years.

We're talking about the new century. We're talking about transforming this society, this society which is most highly educated, which enters the so-called information age, which therefore will be committed to providing opportunity across to young people, across income levels, opportunity they see as equal, not more opportunity for those who happen to be born into families with large incomes and limited and vanishing opportunity for those who are unfortunate enough to have parents with low incomes, unsteady jobs, or multiple jobs with very, very low wage rates attached to them.

Mr. Speaker, before I get to that, I think the overall impression that one can't help but get from reading the budget is that this may be the current Provincial Treasurer's last hurrah as Treasurer, that he may be getting ready to jump the provincial ship and try and move elsewhere. This is in a sense an agenda they would like to sell nationally in pursuit of his new dreams, and I wish him good luck on it. What kind of a legacy this Treasurer will leave for the province, for its children, for its seniors, for its educational institutions, for its teachers is a question that we all must ask, because the Treasurer holds the key to the available revenues, the resources of the province. How those resources are to be allocated to priorities clearly a government in power has to define, and hopefully those priorities should reflect the hopes and dreams and the needs of Albertans. If the Premier's plans to introduce a flat tax regime becomes a reality, I think the Treasurer's legacy will be one of a less fair and less compassionate Alberta.

I must also note that the budget presented in the first week of the sitting instead of the second or third week, which is a long-standing tradition, simply reflects the hurry that the Treasurer finds himself in. He wanted to presumably outwit and outsmart the federal budget and the Finance Minister in Ottawa, and then in his desire to do this, he left open the possibility that he'll have to make adjustments to the budget that he just presented a few days ago once the federal budget comes in. I was at the Premier's press conference this afternoon, and already we find that the Premier is now saying that he's going to throw an extra hundred million dollars into the health care budget, while their own budget hasn't quite dried up. So that tells you something about the sort of strange way in which the presentation of the provincial budget has a sequence in relation to the federal budget and the kind of problems that it inevitably creates.

The federal budget announced today is an interesting document in itself. The announcement in the federal budget means that the Alberta budget presented last week is already, as I said, out of date. So instead of waiting for the budget to come down so that the necessary adjustments to the provincial budget could be made, the government chose to let the Provincial Treasurer bring his budget down first for no other reason than to upstage the federal government and the federal Liberals.

There's no doubt, no question that the Treasurer's time in office has been marked by a strong economy thanks to the OPEC success in controlling the supply of oil internationally thereby raising the prices of oil sky-high. Gas prices have been high as well, so certainly he's hit a lucky stretch over the last few years. Since our economy is so energy centred, every other economic activity in the province reflects the sort of buoyant nature of the oil and gas markets at the moment. This good fortune has resulted in a sort of so-called embarrassment of riches flowing into the provincial Treasury for this government, which only until last year or two years ago were talking about: we can't afford this; we can't afford that.

The affordability was the mantra they were using. All of a sudden you find today that there's not any concern about affordability, but the Treasurer has been trying to play Santa Claus now to just about everyone. He has the flexibility of course to reduce taxes – the question is, "Who benefits from the tax reductions," and that, I'll come to in a moment – to address spending priorities while simultaneously paying down the debt.

What Albertans have to judge is the fairness of this government's approach in addressing these priorities: social, economic, educational, and others, as well as fiscal priorities. I respectfully submit to you, Madam Speaker, that this government's approach does not meet the test of fairness either.

Let me start with this government's wrongheaded flat tax. Stockwell Day's flat tax represents an unprecedented transfer of the provincial tax load from the wealthy onto the backs of middle-class Albertans. This unfair and complicated flat tax is nothing more than a handout to the wealthy paid for by working Albertans. The Provincial Treasurer claims that he will cut provincial income tax by an average of 15 percent next year. The key word here is "average," not that everyone will experience a 15 percent cut but an average.

What he fails to point out is the unfair distribution of these tax cuts. In fact, according to the government's own budget documents, some middle-income Albertans will actually face a tax increase due to the introduction of a flat tax. For example, the government's own documents show that a single person making $30,000 a year will actually face a tax increase of some $28. This simply isn't fair, but this government doesn't seem to be about fairness. It doesn't seem to be concerned about equality. It doesn't seem to be concerned about just and fair policies.

Meanwhile, for the second straight year the government has refused to calculate tax savings at income levels above $100,000. Albertans are curious and wonder why. Why is it, Madam Speaker, that the government wouldn't calculate tax savings at levels above $100,000 and show them in its own documents? Well, the answer is fairly clear. Because it would expose the flat tax for what it really is: massive tax breaks for those with incomes over $100,000 totaling thousands of dollars per year, nonexistent tax savings for the middle class, in some cases actual tax increases.

I'll point out one thing, Madam Speaker. Lower and middle-class Albertans would have been better off had they stayed linked to the federal tax brackets over the next five years rather than being subjected to the Provincial Treasurer's regressive flat tax. They would have at least some tax reductions, whereas under this government's flat tax some middle-income earners will actually see their taxes go up.

Instead of forcing Alberta families to pay for giant gifts to the wealthy, the New Democrats proposed – but the government wouldn't listen – that this government should eliminate health care premiums. With one stroke of the pen the government could put $816 annually in the pockets of every working family in Alberta while forgoing a comparable amount of revenue.

Health care premiums are the worst kind of flat tax, the most unfair flat tax that could be found anywhere. You pay the same $816 per year regardless of whether your family income is $20,000 a year or $200,000 a year. Health care premiums are also costly to administer and place an unfair burden on seniors and those employed in lower paying jobs without benefits. The cost of collecting defaulted premium payments in itself runs into several millions of dollars a year. No one benefits from it except the collection agencies and companies.

So it's a flat tax that's unfair. It's expensive to administer. It leads to wastage of public revenues in the collection from those who cannot pay. Yet this government wouldn't consider eliminating, scrapping, this unfair flat tax and thereby benefiting a large majority of Albertans, all Alberta families who now have to pay $816 a year regardless of their income levels.

I want to mention a couple of other items on the revenue side of the budget before proceeding to the expenditure side. One has to do with net profits from gambling, which are estimated to go up again to $838 million. This amount is $200 million more than the government estimates they will take in from conventional oil royalties. On a per capita basis the Alberta government extracts by far the highest amount of money from addicted gamblers of any Canadian province. The government has maxed out VLTs in bars and hotels. So what does it do? It allows a massive expansion of electronic slot machines in casinos. It introduces new forms of gambling like keno and high stakes poker. This government's gambling addiction is taking a growing toll on Alberta's families and communities.

The other revenue item that bears mentioning is the continuing giveaway called the Alberta royalty tax credit. This tax credit will cost the government an estimated $200 million next year. Can anyone recall why we still have this corporate welfare holdover from the 1980s? How can we justify singling out the oil and gas industry for special tax breaks not available to other economic sectors? How can we justify giving $200 million a year to the energy industry during a period of near record oil and gas prices and, by implication, near record, unprecedented corporate profits in this sector?

The fact is that this kind of corporate welfare can no longer be justified. The royalty tax credit should have been scrapped, but it has not been. I think Albertans are asking why this government feels itself so beholden to this particular economic sector, industrial sector, that it doesn't have the courage to save Albertans this $200 million a year, that those companies don't need, that cannot be justified, and that we can use to good effect to reduce the class size in a classroom or help our seniors pay their ever increasing costs, whether it be rental costs, whether they are utility costs, whether these are property taxes, so that seniors could live their last years in dignity in this province.

On the expenditure side of the budget, Madam Speaker, the government has followed through on previously announced increases for health care and education. While the general increase that's being indicated here is welcome, we need to look more closely at how these increases will be phased in and whether or not they'll be adequate to address the pressing needs caused by the government's own thoughtless policy over the last six or seven years.

The federal Finance minister also announced today a significant increase in transfers to the provinces for health and education. Will the government be adding the increased federal transfer to the health budget for next year? If so, where will these additions go? Will they go into private, for-profit hospitals and the hands of their owners, or will they be retained within our publicly funded hospitals, where we need to open new beds, where we need to decrease pressure on our frontline workers, and where we need to reduce the pressure in our emergency rooms?

The increased funding for health care announced in the budget should not be wasted on costly privatization experiments, Madam Speaker. Private, for-profit health care costs more and delivers less. The evidence of this fact, both in Alberta and worldwide, is overwhelming. The Premier is simply wrong when he says that there are studies on both sides of this question. There are not. Market medicine does not work. If privatization were the way to go in health care, the U.S. would have the lowest cost health care system in the world, but of course they don't. The U.S. spends about 50 percent more per capita on health care than any other western developed country, including Canada. Meanwhile, more than one and a half times the population of Canada in the U.S., close to 44 million Americans, are at any given time in any given year without health insurance and health coverage. Another 100 million Americans are underinsured.

While this government proposes to expand private, for-profit involvement in health care, other countries are moving in the opposite direction. Countries like Britain, Australia, New Zealand, and Singapore all made forays into market medicine during the past 15 years. In New Zealand right now the present government has abandoned the contracting-out policy because it miserably failed over the last 10 years. It has been reversing completely the trend that was set many years ago, but they're finding that once the genie is out of the bottle, it's very hard to get the genie back in. Governments that try to displace commercial interests face lawsuits and other obstacles. As a matter of fact, the New Zealand government is facing such expenditures right now.

Madam Speaker, there are some hon. members who want to take the floor, and I'd be very happy, if they so wanted, to give them priority here.

There is absolutely no jurisdiction, Madam Speaker, for the contracting out of major surgeries requiring inpatient care to private, for-profit hospitals. I see the hon. minister asking me to sit down. I guess he doesn't want to hear the truth. I'm not surprised about that, because they have truth squads out there trying to exterminate the truth, not listen to the truth.

The government scheme also overlooks the fact that hospital costs are declining compared to other areas of health expenditure. In 1975 45 cents out of every health care dollar went to hospitals.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I'm sorry, hon. member. Your time is up.

DR. PANNU: All right, Madam Speaker. If the time is up, I'll sit down.

Thank you.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Madam Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate on this issue.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

MR. HANCOCK: Madam Speaker, I move that we call it 5:30 and that when we reconvene at 8 p.m., we do so in Committee of Supply.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly agree with the motion by the hon. Government House Leader.

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? Carried. The Assembly stands adjourned until 8 this evening, when it will reconvene in Committee of Supply.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:20 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, February 28, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/02/28

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: For the benefit of all those in the gallery, I would like to explain that this is the informal part of the Legislature. It's called committee, and we're called Committee of Supply, where we go item by item. Hon. members do not necessarily sit in the places they've been assigned. They must speak in the places they are assigned, but they are free to take off their jackets and have a coffee and that kind of thing. So it's the informal session where you can get give and take going back and forth.

head: Supplementary Estimates 1999-2000 General Revenue Fund, No. 2

THE CHAIRMAN: We had some discussion as to which would be the first item. Is it agreed, House leaders, that we're going to start with Justice? You're agreed. Okay.

Justice and Attorney General

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Justice to lead off tonight's discussions.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes, I'm pleased to speak to the supplementary estimates with respect to the Department of Justice. The amount we're requesting from the Legislature tonight is, I believe, the sum of $5,700,000 as supplementary to Justice spending. That money is being used, quite succinctly, with respect to the court services area of our department and will be applied to the revitalization of some of the technology that we have, most specifically to revitalizing the courtroom recording technology to put in digital technology.

As a result of doing the upgrades to the technology, which needed to be upgraded in any event, Mr. Chairman, we will be in a position to record court proceedings through the new digital technology recording devices, which will eliminate in good part the need for manual court reporting. Now, I should say in making reference to this that the court reporters we have in this province and the court reporting that we have . . .

Chairman's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members of the committee, it is the informal part of the Legislature, but that doesn't cover lively discussions. I wonder if we can perhaps . . . [interjections] Are we disturbing you, hon. minister? If you have conversations that are going to be audible to other people that are at some distance from you, would you please do that outside, in the back, in one of the chambers at the side, so we can hear the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General explain why he needs this extra money?

Hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I was saying, the sum of $5.7 million is being requested from the Legislature in order to carry out a onetime revitalization project in Justice by allowing us, through the use of approximately $3 million of that, to replace the recording technology in our courtrooms across the province. As a result of replacing that recording technology with digital recording apparatus, it will be possible for us to provide transcripts through that process without the aid of manual court reporters.

We will be retaining some 16 court reporters nonetheless, because there's some concern about the transition to digital recording. So in the interim we'll be retaining 16 positions in Edmonton, Calgary, and perhaps in other locations throughout the province. It is our belief that while we're upgrading the technology, this will afford us an opportunity to redirect some of the resources of Justice to some of the frontline projects that were requested by the people of Alberta during the justice summit.

The total of $5.7 million that's being requested includes approximately $3 million for the new digital recording devices, and the remainder of it may be needed for the purposes of assisting those court reporters who will need to be relocated in the Department of Justice or, if they should so determine, to find other opportunities in the private sector or elsewhere in government. I want to be perfectly clear that this is not a downsizing initiative. We are not engaging in this initiative for the purpose of eliminating government employees. We are engaging in this initiative because, number one, it's absolutely necessary for us to improve courtroom technology. The recording technology we have in place right now is fast becoming out of date, and in doing so, it affords this opportunity to redirect some of the resources in the department so that we have more money available for community justice initiatives and other initiatives in the department.

We do want to make sure that we are very fair to all the employees in the department who are affected. They've provided good service to the people of Alberta and the province of Alberta, the government of Alberta. They are professionals. Some of them have been in position and providing court reporting services for a considerable number of years, some as many as 20 years with the government. So I want to assure this House, as I know you'd all want to know, that we have made sure all the people displaced by this refurbishing of the technology have been offered the opportunity to stay on with Justice in other positions. However, if they want to stay within their court reporting profession, we will assist them with packages to relocate into the private sector.

So that's the $5.7 million we're asking for. In the event that a large number of employees stay with the government, we may not need to utilize all the resources being requested, but we want to make sure we are in a position to be fair and equitable to all employees affected by this move and therefore are requesting the sum as set out in the supplementary estimates.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, I'd say that the hon. Minister of Justice quite misapprehends the concerns that exist around this. I've had the opportunity to practise in the courts of this province for some 22 years, long enough, I think, to understand the importance of quality court reporting. You know, I hear the minister say that the funding is to "improve courtroom technology." One might have thought the government would say that this will improve the quality of legal services, this would improve the quality of decisions, this will improve access, but no, it doesn't do that. What it's going to do is improve the technology.

The reality, Mr. Chairman, is this. We are going in a direction that perhaps is consistent with what this government has done in other areas. It's a government that always seems to be driven by providing services at the lowest possible cost, and quality be damned.

What we do know about the kind of digital recording technology, the road down which Alberta is now going to proceed, is that it has been tried in numerous other jurisdictions, and if you talk to the Canadian Bar Association – interesting that the Justice department did not talk to the Canadian Bar Association, the organization that represents lawyers in this province, to get feedback.

Shaun Dunnigan, the current president of the Canadian Bar Association, has written a letter to the Minister of Justice. I don't have it in hand, but it's three or four pages long. Mr. Dunnigan makes the point that there are very serious concerns about scrapping the former process of having actual court reporters in the room. He talks about the potential compromise of the quality of recording, and he talks about some of the delays and additional costs that will be part of particularly our civil justice system.

The minister talks about "some concern about the transition." The concern, hon. minister, through the chair, isn't with the transition; it's with the direction. The concern is that to shave a few dollars in this area – what's now going to happen is that instead of having a live court reporter in the room and when there's a problem, the judge or counsel can ask to have a particular exchange read back and you get that read-back opportunity almost immediately, we're not going to have that. We're going to have to rely on a recording.

The Minister of Justice surprises me. You know, we now have a Minister of Justice who has actually practised in the courts of this province. He knows how it works. He knows how it works in that room. When you have two or three people speaking over each other, if you have somebody whose first language is not English, it is often exceedingly unreliable to rely on a tape. We've seen this in provincial courts where they have gone with an electronic court reporting system. It's simply not as good.

So here's what will happen. My prediction is that what we're going to find is that those lawyers in civil trials involving two resource companies and perhaps tens of millions of dollars at stake are going to make sure – you bet, Mr. Chairman, that they're going to have court reporters in that room, because they want a record that's immediately accessible and they want to ensure that you have the higher quality of editing that goes along with having a live court reporter to take down that viva voce evidence, that testimony. People who don't have a lot of dough, Mr. Chairman, aren't going to have that opportunity, and so what you've done is created a two-tier justice system.

It's bad enough that we get on this road . . . Well, the Minister of Justice I can see is shaking his head and obviously disagreeing with what I'm saying, but I challenge the minister right now, this evening, to tell us what studies, what specific studies the Department of Justice in this province is relying on to show that this is going to mean an enhanced quality of judicial service in this province. What studies? If you look at what happened in Ontario, if you look at what happened in British Columbia – the lawyers in British Columbia want reporters back in the courtroom because they have experienced a sufficient number of problems with this fully automated system. They want to go back, but Alberta is going to proceed down this road.

We maybe have a parallel. We go down a road to private health care without a single scintilla of evidence, a single documented case that it's going to enhance the quality of health care. Now we're doing exactly the same thing when it comes to court reporting. We're going down a road where the evidence suggests that you may save a few dollars but you compromise the quality of the reporting that exists in those courtrooms.

So can the Minister of Justice tell us, if he wants the support of the Liberal opposition, what studies he's relying on that will show that the service will be at least of the same quality that we have right now and will not deteriorate? On what basis does he think the technology in the year 2000 is sufficiently sophisticated to be able to deal with the raft of problems that happened, as I said before, the two lawyers talking at the same time? A little bit like the Assembly sometimes, Mr. Chairman: you get more than one person speaking at a time even though they're not supposed to.

Those kinds of things happen, so it's not good enough that you shave a few dollars off the cost. If my constituents are going to have more difficulty getting justice in the civil court system of this province, this is a step backwards.

I want to know why there was no consultation with the Canadian Bar Association. I want to know why there was no consultation with the Law Society of Alberta before the decision was made. I'm not talking about some frantic chat after the decision was announced. I want to know what discussions there have been. I'm not talking about just the Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta. I want to know what discussions have taken place to involve the – what have we got, hon. Minister of Justice? – about 70 or 80 Queen's Bench judges in this province. I want to know what opportunity those justices of the Court of Queen's Bench who hear the trials in this province have had to sort of register their concerns.

Anyway, those are some of the concerns I've got. You know, I take the minister at his word. He wants to be fair to the employees, and I'm mindful of their concerns, but my primary concern is the quality of justice, access to justice, quality of court reporting in this province. I just hate to see us take a step backwards, and I hate to see a situation where litigants who don't have a lot of dough end up getting compromised court reporting services, because sure as guns when a couple of big oil companies are suing each other, they're going to have a live court reporter there. I think that what's good enough for those corporations is good enough for somebody in that wrongful dismissal trial or that breach-of-contract action or that tort claim.

Those are the concerns I've got. Our Justice critic, the Member for Edmonton-Norwood, chatted with me the other day. She's actually been able to do some research and has got quite a bit of interesting material around this that shows some of the problems with this direction we're going. So I think I've registered the concerns I have.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Justice.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. What we've heard from the Member for Calgary-Buffalo I think exemplifies a lot of the discussion that's happened around this, and that is that it's discussion relating to systems in other provinces, which have no bearing on the system we're going to bring in.

The specific references made to B.C. trying it out and wanting to go back – in fact B.C. does not have any of the digital recording equipment that I'm advised we're talking about. They don't have the state-of-the-art equipment that we're talking about. In fact, in terms of studies done or how this decision was arrived at, members of the Department of Justice did a site visit in Halifax, where digital court reporting is being utilized and I'm advised is being met with very favourable results, and also attended a number of court reporting conferences in the U.S. relating to digital court reporting.

This is not a new item. This is an item where the technology has improved and changed over the years. There's yet a new iteration of the technology, which is being utilized very effectively, I'm given to understand, in Halifax and other sites in the U.S. The technology is available. The utilization in B.C., as I say, is a different type of technology. They've had some good successes, but they've had some problems.

We do not expect, with the new technology that's being brought forward, to have those problems. I'm satisfied that it's been appropriately studied, that it can be implemented effectively. I'm just mindful of the fact that anytime you bring technology in, there are always the naysayers who say that it won't work, that we shouldn't try it, that we've got something tried and true.

I'd be the first to say that we have very good, high-quality court reporting services in this province. We want to have high-quality court reporting services in this province. We believe that using this technology, we'll be able to continue to have high-quality court reporting services in this province. Unfortunately, it will mean relocation of some of the people that have provided such good service to us over the years.

I've investigated the concerns that have been registered by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo and other concerns that have been brought to my attention, and I'm satisfied that the concerns that have been raised with respect to problems they've had in Ontario and B.C. relate to a different type of equipment and a different experiment.

So I would just assure the House that we have every intention of maintaining a high-quality legal service accessible to the public of Alberta. The hon. member will see, when we bring forward the justice statutes amendment act shortly in this session, that our commitment is to provide access to justice to people who can't afford it, to people who don't want or can't pay high fees to access justice. Those opportunities will be available through greater access to mediation, through greater access to the Provincial Court, in many other manners. This is just one other way in which we can best utilize the resources of the people of Alberta to provide as much service as we possibly can at as high a quality as we possibly can.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, of course my heart soared like an eagle when I heard the minister talk about the new justice statute coming in, but something he said concerned me considerably. If the technology coming into Alberta is not the same technology that, if not discredited, at least demonstrated its weaknesses in Ontario and British Columbia, will the minister particularize in what jurisdictions the technology that will be employed in this province has been used and used successfully? Will the minister make available a bibliography of the studies or experiments that have been done with the precise same technology, the one we're going to bring in here? I hope the minister isn't suggesting we use a brand-new technology that's not been sufficiently field-tested in some jurisdiction around the country.

So I ask for clarification by the minister. Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I guess I want to start where my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo left off because I saw that the minister was preparing a response, and this might make it easier. You get two for the price of one tonight, Mr. Minister.

This whole issue of a new but not tested technology does give me pause to think. You know, Mr. Chairman, there was a political party in this province that tried a brand-new electronic technology for a leadership vote, and I'm told there were some glitches in that system. It worked out okay in the end, but it was not a learning experience that I would want to wish on anyone.

So when I hear that we're going down this path not particularly because we want to downsize and not even necessarily in terms of cost saving but because we want to modernize, it makes me think: I want to meet the salesman or saleswoman that pitched this system to this government, because this was a salesperson of some considerable talent. What we've heard here tonight is that we're going to spend a few million bucks on a system that's unlike any other system, a system that is absolutely guaranteed to go right, like that old joke about the computerized recording message: nothing can go wrong, can go wrong, can go wrong. I guess I want to hear the minister's response to my colleague's query about where this technology is in place and what the track record is.

I'm interested to know some other things, too, like maintenance schedules and for how long the hardware and software is guaranteed and whether or not you are forced to sole source, or in other words a vendor-supplied maintenance regime, or whether public works, or whatever we're calling it these days, is going to be responsible for the maintenance of this system and upgrading. If we build new courthouses, what happens? How portable is this technology? Just a whole host of those kinds of issues which would suggest that some forethought and planning has gone into this, as I'm sure there has been.

Now, I also want to ask some questions about the court reporters that currently provide service to Alberta Justice. I heard the minister give some assurances that he was sensitive to the fact that these were valued employees. I can tell you from the few I've spoken to that they're not feeling particularly valued right now, Mr. Minister. So do your assurances of minimum disruption in the lives of these court reporters mean, in fact, that every person who is currently employed by the province of Alberta as a court reporter will be given the option of similar work at the same rate of pay without any disruption in career or benefits or standing, without any penalty to their future career growth, in the same geographic location, in the same city? Do your assurances go that far? I think if they do, that's terrific. If they don't, then that is a matter of some concern, particularly to those individuals and their families.

So please address the issues about what's going to happen with the court reporters but also put my mind at ease about this technology and where we can look at experience with this exact same technology. What are those down-the-road implications that I enumerated earlier in my comments?

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Justice.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Chairman, I don't know whether I should rise to answer questions or not because they obviously don't listen to the answers. I distinctly heard myself say that before making the decision to proceed with this, certain site visits were held, one of which was in Halifax, Nova Scotia, where digital court reporting is currently in place and being well received by the bar, the judiciary, and justice there. [interjection] The same type of equipment that we talked about now, yes.

With respect to acquisition of the equipment, there will be a request for proposal going out with respect to provision of the equipment, so we'll have to see when it comes back how many different suppliers might be interested in supplying. I can't tell you at this point in time whether it's one sole source of equipment.

Clearly the equipment is being utilized in a court in Canada. It has been viewed on site by Justice department officials before this decision was made as well as having attended conferences and, I believe, courts as well in the U.S. I can get further detail for the hon. members, should they desire it.

With respect to court reporters, I've made it perfectly clear that we will continue to employ anyone who wants to continue to be employed with the Department of Justice. Can we employ them in a similar job? Unfortunately, court reporting is a unique type of skill. It's a unique type of profession, so it's hard to relocate somebody into another job in Justice that's the same as or similar to court reporting. So there is a need for some retraining. There's a need for reclassification, but they will be kept at their same salaries. There should be no interruption in benefits. There should be no need to interrupt any of their prospects for the future with respect to their employment with the government. Can we employ them in a similar capacity? Unfortunately, no, because court reporting is a fairly unique area. However, we've given the choice to the court reporters.

MR. SAPERS: Same locale?

MR. HANCOCK: In the same locale, yes.

I can't guarantee that, but I've indicated to the department and to the court reporters that we will make every effort to ensure that there is a spot for them in Justice. If there's not a spot for them in Justice, there's a spot for them in government, and it's the choice of the reporter to determine whether they wish to leave government to continue to pursue their profession as a court reporter or for whatever other reason or to stay with the department and with government. I will be firm on that commitment.

This is not an intention of downsizing. This is really an opportunity to continue with quality court reporting while reallocating other resources into some of the areas where we can so desperately use them: in community conferencing, in restorative justice processes, providing access to the courts, providing better mediation services, quicker access to family and youth courts. All of those require resources. So when we have the opportunity for onetime funding to both upgrade the technology but also continue the quality of service and the level of service that we need to have and divert resources into other areas which will provide better access for Albertans to justice in this province, we have an obligation to do that.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Through you to the minister. I appreciate the clarification and the certainty with which you've made some guarantees to the personnel involved.

But I am now more confused than I was before about the equipment, the technology. I want to make sure that I heard you correctly, because I don't want to be the target of another scathing, sarcastic rejoinder. What I thought I heard the minister say just now was that an RFP, a request for proposal, will go out, seeing what vendors are out there who may be interested in providing this type of equipment. I just want to know: has a specific technology been decided upon or not? Digital recording doesn't really answer the question. There are all kinds of ways to digitally record audio. So what I want to know is: has the technology been decided upon or not?

I heard the minister talk about Halifax, but I didn't hear the minister directly answer the question: will it be the same equipment so that we know we've got some track record? If there is a software component involved, as I'm certain there is, who supplies the software? Is it, again, the same software as is being used in Halifax?

So it's not just a general question, Mr. Minister, about us going to go to digital recording and that Halifax has had some success with it. Are we using the exact same hardware and software, or are we going to be looking at a request for proposal inviting all who may be interested to provide tenders and then somebody in Justice is going to decide which one of these technologies, which I think the minister would have to admit may in fact be a new and untried technology, would be put into Alberta courtrooms?

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Chairman, now I'm confused. First there are concerns raised about sole sourcing and then wanting a specific direction. All I can do in response to the hon. member's question is to say this. First of all, we have to get the authority to spend money before we can spend it. Then we have to go out and source the equipment. I'm purposely not going to get into specific details with respect to the equipment here, nor would I want to. First of all, I don't micromanage the department to that extent, and secondly, this is a competitive process, and there are a number of suppliers, I'm given to understand, who can supply the appropriate technology, the appropriate equipment. I'm not going to get into details as to a specific piece of equipment or a specific piece of software, because it would interfere with our ability to go out and get the competitive process under way, which we're bound by law to do. So it's sort of betwixt and between.

I'd be happy to share as much information with the hon. member as soon as it's appropriate to do so, even after this process of supplementary supply is done, in order to assure both hon. members and anyone else that's interested that we're getting good-quality equipment that's got a track record. We're not being leading edge in this, but we are doing better than other provinces who have tried other forms of recording technology.

I'm satisfied that the technology is there. It's been used in application in courthouses. It's effective technology and can do the job to the satisfaction of the bar and the bench and to the satisfaction of litigants. But I'm not going to give chapter and verse tonight nor could I give chapter and verse tonight as to the type of equipment, the exact specifications of the equipment, the suppliers of the equipment, or those sorts of things, because that would really interfere with the competitive process. I'd be more than happy to share that information with anybody who requests it at the appropriate time.

THE CHAIRMAN: Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks. Well, you know, at the risk of further convincing the minister that I'm just a slow learner – in any case, let me put myself at that risk, Mr. Chairman. The words that the minister just shared with us convince me now that I have more concerns than I started with. Really this wasn't going to be the major thrust of my comments. I was more concerned about the men and women who have been providing public service to this province in the employment of Justice up to this point as court reporters.

You know, we have a minister who I think just told the committee that he really doesn't know what technology we're going to end up with, at what price, yet we're being asked to vote $3 million. We were told in the introductory comments that we know we're going to spend this $3 million well, because of this example in Halifax, but that we may not be using the same technology, the same equipment that's in place in Halifax. Because we're going to go to this competitive bidding process, we don't really know if the $3 million is too little, too much, or about right.

So we've got a minister who's come to us in supplementary supply with his best guess about a price tag for some equipment that we may buy from somebody to put into our courtrooms. I'm not satisfied that that represents the best way to do business. I would have expected the minister to come to the committee and be able to answer the simple question. "We've carefully looked at three or four different kinds of equipment. We've narrowed it down to a type. We've talked to some vendors. We have some cost estimates. We've looked at maintenance costs, at upgrading, at portability, and yes, here are the studies and the information and the material to back it up." Frankly, I think it's a little bit cavalier to say: well, I don't micromanage my department, so I can't give you that information.

You know, I have to account for this $3 million to my constituents. I know that it's a very small bit of the $4 billion surplus or the $17 billion budget, but it's still $3 million, Mr. Chairman. I guess I've come to expect more detail from this particular minister, who I think has done a pretty good job of coming to the committee when he's requested supply. So if there's more that he can tell us, I'd sure appreciate hearing it now before we're asked to vote on this expenditure.

THE CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the vote?

Agreed to:
Operating Expense $5,700,000

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

THE CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Health and Wellness

THE CHAIRMAN: We will call upon the hon. minister of health.

MR. JONSON: Good evening and thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to draw members' attention to pages 21 to 25 in their supplementary estimates book. As you can see, we do not have a large number of items to deal with at this particular time, so my remarks this evening will be fairly brief. In fact, Mr. Chairman, we have a single item to look at, and that's the supplementary estimate of $10,412,000 to provide for an unanticipated increase in the number of physicians and the services they deliver.

As hon. members may have heard last week, I announced that an additional $15 million would be provided to the medical services budget for 1999-2000 and the upcoming budget year. The increase, Mr. Chairman, will help pay for the approximately 80 additional full-time equivalent physicians who came to Alberta this fiscal year, bringing the total number of new full-time equivalent physicians to 170 this year. That, I think, is a very positive factor. It indicates that a significant number of physicians are finding Alberta an attractive area in which to work.

This funding that we are requesting approval for under the supplementary estimate is in addition to the already approved $910 million for the 1999-2000 medical services budget. This additional funding is in keeping with the findings of the Physician Resource Planning Committee's report setting out a direction for Alberta's physician workforce. The report sets the stage for physician resource planning by identifying the current number of physicians in Alberta and developing an understanding of the numbers of additional physicians that might be needed both now and in the future.

Mr. Chairman, although we're increasing the medical services budget by $15 million to pay for these new physicians, the supplementary estimate only shows an increase of $10.4 million because the balance will be absorbed within the ministry's overall allocation. As a result of changes in priorities, we've been able to realign the budget to meet the increased cost of part of this overall amount.

The final point that I would like to make, Mr. Chairman, is that we have worked with the physicians in administering jointly the overall physicians' agreement that we have right now with the AMA. While the whole management exercise is one of managing and keeping the expenditure on physician services within the budget allotment, it was recognized in the last round of bargaining that there should be some flexibility that can be applied when you have clearly a significant number of additional physicians that are needed here with respect to the increases in the population.

When there are a significant number of additional physicians, it has to be recognized that the agreement that we arrived at about a year and a half ago was in fact an agreement for the cohort, or the physicians that were in the province at that time. With the very positive development of more physicians practising in Alberta, to the tune of 170 individuals, it was only reasonable, in our view, that we work with the AMA to provide an additional amount of money to recognize that growth in the overall physician supply.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My understanding of the comments made by the minister is that this roughly $10.4 million will accommodate 80 new doctors within the system. [interjection] So 80 new ones on top of what was there previously.

THE CHAIRMAN: The committee and Hansard have had the benefit of the question, but since it was offered in an off-microphone way, I wonder if we could have the minister either give his reply or save it until the hon. member is finished with his series of questions.

Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The number of new doctors or new physicians we're talking about may seem substantial, but if we break it down and look at the various municipalities throughout Alberta and look at the difficulties in rural Alberta in terms of attracting doctors, even if we break it down on a per constituency basis, with 83 constituencies how many new physicians per constituency? When I look at the medical system – and unfortunately I've had the opportunity to see it firsthand – it was a real eye-opener in a lot of instances.

Family doctors, for instance. We tend to think that we go to them because we have a medical problem and that we're going to go to their office and that's the end of it. We know, for example, that if we have to get a blood test, going to a lab might take five minutes. You get your blood test; you're gone. But you can't go to the lab and get a blood test. You've got to go to the family doctor first.

When we talk in terms of the WCB and we talk in terms of injured workers, before WCB will approve an expenditure for a prescription, there has to be a letter from the family physician or a doctor stating that that is related to the original injury. We look at AISH applications. Doctors have to fill out those AISH applications and the CPP applications. I even found in the hospital that under Alberta health care if you stay in a private room for more than 30 days, before Alberta health care will cover the additional cost – and one is paying the premiums for that additional cost – a doctor has to send in a letter saying that, yes, the person was in there for whatever reason.

What I'm trying to say is that the demands on family doctors are very, very intense. My family doctor, for example, when I go to see him – and he's a fine gentleman – has a sign on the door that says: not accepting new patients. One of my questions I would ask the minister: is there any indication as to how many family doctors throughout Alberta are in that situation that they simply can't accommodate new patients? I commend the minister for recognizing that there is a shortage, that there is a need for these additional physicians, but I guess the question I'm asking: is that even going to be sufficient?

We know we are in the early days in the restructuring of the health care system, and we've got to remember that no matter how much you try and rebuild a health care system that really underwent a great deal of damage – let's face it – to rebuild that or attempt to rebuild it, pouring in more and more money, unless you have sufficient doctors in the province, to access that health care system becomes virtually impossible. You have to have a sufficient number of family doctors.

I hear from constituents waiting months and months and months, six months in some cases, to see a specialist. Of course, to see that specialist, you first have to go to your family doctor to get a referral. We know that in the early days when the restructuring first took place, many doctors left the province to look for greener grass south of the border. They felt that the working conditions were better. They felt that they were appreciated there, and of course their earning potential was somewhat greater as well.

One other question I would have for the minister. In the 11 years that I've been here, I've never understood why there is such a reluctance to attempt to sit down with the so-called foreign doctors who come here from other countries. They would just love to practise, and we have parts of rural Alberta that we know are dying for family doctors. Why is it impossible? Why haven't we been able to co-ordinate, assist these foreign doctors who are eager to learn, that are prepared to go to rural Alberta, where there's an extreme shortage of doctors, to provide their services there?

I don't know if the reluctance is at the college level. It could be argued, I guess, that in some cases the training may not be the same in their particular country as it is here, but I'm sure they're willing to train, take that additional training if they know that they can enter the system and that they can utilize their particular skills they brought with them. We read articles in newspapers all the time about specialists and family doctors that come over here and they're doing very, very manual-type jobs, jobs where they're earning a very, very low income, and they're not putting to use that special skill and talent they have that is much needed.

So I'd like to have the minister respond and tell us: does he feel totally comfortable that these additional positions are going to fill the bill, that we're not going to have a further shortage of doctors, that it's going to reduce the waiting list, particularly to see specialists, that it's going to mean that more family doctors can take down their signs saying "no more new patients"? The question of the foreign doctors being able to access the system and lend their skills and look at places like rural Alberta, possibly signing contracts to practise for two or three years, whatever: cannot that somehow be accommodated?

If those questions can be answered, Mr. Chairman, I'll be quite satisfied, up to a point, for tonight.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Chairman, I do not have a specific number, but there's not a large number of general practitioners who are not accepting new patients. I do acknowledge that there are certainly some that just have such a client base that they do not want to sacrifice quality by taking on more than they feel they can handle.

I think, though, that we should also recognize – and this is a fact that we have to face, Mr. Chairman – that there are a certain number of physicians who, for whatever reason, may wish to work part-time. They may want to take more than the usual breaks for family reasons or whatever. It's totally reasonable, you know, considering family circumstances, and that is a factor as well in some people limiting the number of patients they accept. So we do have to plan for that.

I'm not indicating here, as the recent physician supply report indicates, that the number of physicians here indicates that we've brought the number of physicians in Alberta up to an ideal level, but we have made progress in that direction in a quite significant way, both in terms of recruiting doctors for rural as well as for urban practice and some of the specialities.

The question was raised with respect to a topic which is not really dealt with in the estimates, but I would just comment briefly on it. There was a recent announcement, Mr. Chairman, from Alberta Health and Wellness to the effect that we were increasing the number of internships available at our two medical schools to 20 in this year and 40 in the following year. There is a portion of that number of internships that will be reserved for the first time – I don't know if it has ever been done in Alberta, but for the first time in my memory – for the foreign-trained physician. There's always been a bit of an unfair difference there, I think, in that training under the auspices of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons was recognized to a much greater degree here in Canada and in Alberta than that from other nations because there was always that connection to the British model of medical training, and the requirements to qualify, quote, here in Alberta were somewhat easier for someone coming from one of the Commonwealth countries. So that's why I think you see a very strong influx of South African doctors, for instance, into Alberta.

Finally, I think the overall direction, though, that Alberta Health and Wellness is taking that's really important here is that we are, through our innovation fund and other initiatives – in fact, there's a special fund as part of the AMA agreement for alternative methods of payment. We do need to look at more use of the primary care model of health care where a significant amount of the doctor's workload can be shared, often under the doctor's supervision but nevertheless shared in a primary care clinic where you involve other health practitioners: the physiotherapist, the dietician, the public health nurse. It's that which I think is one of our solutions here. Not the total solution – we are going to need more doctors – but it will certainly take the load off doctors in many of these very specific cases of treatment or care or advice that other practitioners can be involved in in a team type of approach.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to ask a couple of questions to the minister about this notion of 170 FTE doctors, because I heard the minister in his comments talk about the equivalent of 170 full-time docs or 170 doctors. He used both terms, and I'm just wondering whether we are in fact talking about 170 individuals practising medicine in this province now, over and above what we had at some previous time – and I think he said: new this year – or if it is in fact some calculation that we are now being told is a full-time equivalent. I'd be interested to know what Alberta Health is considering an FTE doctor, and does it vary by type of medical practice? It would seem to me that if we're talking about family practice medicine, that means one thing. If we're talking about a subspecialty like pediatric neurosurgery, that would mean something else entirely different.

The other comment I have. This is sort of a general comment, but it particularly struck me when I was reading the estimates for supplementary supply for Health. Because Health has been under so much scrutiny and because we've been on this topic of physician supply for many years and because the relationship between the government and the AMA is one that needs ongoing attention and care and feeding, I'm wondering why this $10 million – and now the minister said it's really $15 million, but they only need $10 million of new money – is being sought at this time. I mean, we're close to the end of the fiscal year; there are mechanisms within the AMA agreement in terms of making up for shortfalls, and the government is talking about its reinvestment into health care. Of course, that's going to be a debate for another day, but we're supposed to be working on rolling three-year business plans, and we're at the point where we are . . .

DR. WEST: By the time you get through talking, we'll already have spent it.

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Chairman, could you ask the minister of energy to hold his comments till he has the floor? Because it's really distracting to hear him sort of bubble up like that.

As I was saying, if we're dealing with three-year rolling business plans and then we see this kind of a figure come in, which is really not an overly large figure, it makes me wonder about the planning process. Cynically I could say: well, are we on three-month business plans, or are we on three-year business plans? So I would like some more clarity as to how the department got to this point where we're looking at an additional need for $10 million for professional services at this particular point in time. You know, it's a pretty interesting point in time in terms of not just the larger political issues around health care but also, of course, in terms of the budget cycle.

Finally, my question – and the minister may find this particularly provocative. I don't mean it to be. Of this additional $15 million, which is outside of the budgeted amount that was supposed to be based on the agreement between the AMA and the province of Alberta for the provision of professional services, I'm very interested to know how much of this additional money will be paid to physicians providing surgical services in private clinics.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Chairman, perhaps there's not a wish to understand here, but the fact of the matter is that we negotiate an agreement with the Alberta Medical Association on the basis of the overall workforce, if I could use that term, of physicians in the province at the time of our negotiations. We were also at that time making a major effort – for instance in our rural physician action plan, which is part of that agreement, and in our overall effort at our universities – to retain the physicians that are trained here, et cetera. We were making an overall effort in Alberta Health and Wellness to attract and keep more physicians in the workforce here in Alberta.

So rather than it being taken as a negative, I regard the fact that we have had that significant additional number of physicians locate here in the province of Alberta as a positive. Because we do not fund the physician pool in anticipation of having, say, 50, 150, or 170 more doctors when we negotiate the agreement, it was understood that if there was a significant increase in the doctors of this province, then we would have to look at a reasonable increase in their base budget, and that is what this is about, Mr. Chairman. That simply is what we're responding to, in good faith.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks. Mr. Minister, that wasn't particularly helpful. It's not that simple. You said 170 doctors. You said 170 FTEs. Which is it? I asked some specific questions about the planning process, and you didn't address that in your comments at all. I asked if you know how much of this additional $15 million was paid in terms of professional services for surgical services performed in private clinics, and you didn't address that either. Do you have answers to those questions?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Chairman, by far the bulk of these physicians are engaged in the public system in family practices or in specialist services in our major centres. I do not have a breakdown on the chance that four or five of the doctors might be working as pathologists in connection with one of our laboratory companies or something of that particular that have contracts in this system.

But as I've indicated over and over again – and the opposition seems to fail to want to recognize the truth or the reality of our system – you have a private component, people working across the health care system right now in various capacities providing service. Laboratory companies are one of the best examples, Mr. Chairman. One of the alternative payment plans in here is to provide a model for crediting doctors with the service they provide to long-term care centres, and I suppose one of those long-term care centres might be a privately-owned one. We have quite a number in the province, and they haven't done any harm so far.

If you want to bring in that particular element, Mr. Chairman, I do not have a specific number. I am quite confident, though, in saying that practically all of these new physicians in the province are working in rural areas. They're working in areas of high need within the public system.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Through you to the minister. You know, one of the wonderful differences between the committee process looking at supplementary supply and question period is that in this committee we do expect answers and we don't expect the same kind of offhanded treatment that happens when the cameras are on during question period.

Now, I didn't say anything about long-term care centres. I asked about surgical services, and unless the minister is telling me that surgeries now take place in long-term care, that would be information he should share with the House. So I will take from the minister's comments that he doesn't have any comments to enlighten the committee in terms of the planning process, to tell us why we got to this point in the budget cycle where we're asking for this money, that he doesn't know whether it's 170 positions or 170 full-time equivalents, that he won't share with us the calculation for FTEs, and that he doesn't know how much of the $15 million is going to be paid for surgical services in private clinics.

Now, those are some pretty specific questions. The minister should be able to say: I have the answers, I don't have the answers, or I'm willing to get you the answers. I'd like to hear one of those responses.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Chairman, in terms of the number of these new doctors that might just possibly be working in a, quote, private clinic, I do not know the number. I'm not aware of any, quite frankly, but I will get the number if there is one for the hon. member across the way.

In terms of the calculation for the 170 physicians, Mr. Chairman, this was worked out on an average basis with the Alberta Medical Association through their agreement. They know we have 170 new doctors. The joint committee which administers the agreement, which is made up of AMA representatives and members of Alberta Health and Wellness, sits down and looks at the average payment that is made per physician in a particular category in Alberta, and that's what the calculation is based on. Of course, we're not quite through the year yet. We would have to wait until next year to calculate the dollars and cents that any particular new physician had charged the plan. But I'm sure we'll be very, very close, because we do have the averages of the different types of doctors in the province, and that's what it's based on.

THE CHAIRMAN: Having considered the supplementary estimates No. 2 for 1999-2000 of the Department of Health and Wellness, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expenses $10,412,000

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? So ordered.

Environment

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to present a supplementary estimate for Environment in the amount of $6 million to cover the day-to-day operations of Climate Change Central. Projects initiated under Climate Change Central will go ahead with a firm commitment of cash and/or resources from all partners. At the climate change roundtable last spring Albertans asked for immediate partnership action to address climate change. The Premier responded with a commitment to creating Climate Change Central, and last November we formalized that commitment.

Climate Change Central is a partnership agency that will bring together industry, researchers, municipalities, concerned Albertans, and government to identify and guide our action as a province to reduce our greenhouse gas emissions. Bringing such different perspectives together will help us develop creative and visionary solutions to pursue our economic growth while reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

These two goals, economic growth and reduced emissions, come together in our new economic strategy. In that economic strategy this government makes a commitment to leadership in climate change. This commitment recognizes the impact climate change has on other engines of economic growth like our forestry industry, agriculture, and tourism, which, in turn, directly affect the opportunities we are able to create for Alberta's children.

Including climate change in our economic strategy also recognizes that we measure the province of Alberta and the Alberta advantage and our quality of life in more than just dollars. We measure it in clean air and water and the rich diversity of our land and wildlife.

Alberta's plant, aquatic, and animal life evolve under specific climatic conditions. A change in climate directly affects those natural resources. For example, a few extra degrees of summer heat can encourage the growth of aquatic organisms that can cause disease in fish and rob our waters and fish of precious oxygen. Rain delivers oxygen back into our waters, but in 1998 there was very little rain. That year fish losses to warm temperatures and lack of rain were serious enough to warrant an official department response.

The year 1998 was also our worst forest fire year ever, followed by the second worst in 1999. At the same time, farmers in northwestern Alberta faced drought. I already moved the start of the official fire season up by one month this year because of continuing dry conditions. It is too early to know if these situations are a temporary blip or the result of climate change, but we cannot wait to find out. We do not want to look back someday and wish that we had somehow started in 1999 or 2000.

Actually, while Climate Change Central is a new initiative, it builds on actions already taken. While the economic strategy makes a commitment to leadership, that commitment continues a leadership position that is already well established. We were the first provincial government to register an action plan with the national voluntary challenge and registry. That plan earned us a national award. In 1997 alone we reduced energy use in government-operated buildings by almost 7 percent, which is equivalent to approximately 26,000 tonnes of carbon dioxide emissions. By 1998 our government had reduced its greenhouse gas emissions from all sources by over 17 percent, below 1990 levels. That government effort plus a significant effort by Alberta industry is bringing down the growth rate of greenhouse gas emissions. In 1994 emissions grew by 4 percent. In 1995 emission growth was only 2.5 percent, and between 1996 and 1997 growth was only 1 percent. That same year our economy grew by 4 percent.

Alberta industry, led by the energy sector, is exporting its expertise and technologies in reducing greenhouse gas emissions around the world. Even the federal government acknowledged Alberta's national leadership in addressing climate change. At Alberta's climate change roundtable last spring the Hon. Ralph Goodale, federal Minister of Natural Resources Canada, said:

I want to pay a particular tribute to Alberta and Albertans. In a great many ways . . . you are leading the pack. You are making the greatest single effort. You are bringing the most intellectual capital to the table and you are making the biggest difference for the better.

Mr. Chairman, I think you will agree it is rare that the federal government achieves such insight into Alberta and rarer still that they express their support in such an ebullient way. We are achieving progress. We are learning to reduce our emissions and still pursue economic growth.

Climate Change Central recognizes that we need to do more and that we need to do it together. The reason lies in the challenge we face as Canada's energy capital. Alberta is working overtime to provide the world with cleaner burning fuels. More and more markets are choosing natural gas instead of coal or heavy oil fuel. This cuts emissions at the point of consumption, which is good news for our global climate, but it also moves some of those emissions up the pipeline to its source in Alberta. Our economy continues to grow in part by exporting the fuels that reduce emissions elsewhere, and in 10 years time, Mr. Chairman, our emissions could be 40 percent higher than they were in 1990.

Our efforts to reduce emissions so far show that we are reducing the link between our economic growth rate and emissions growth rate, but we do need to do more. We need to include new and innovative options for addressing climate change. For example, we may be able to capture emissions and store them in oil and gas reservoirs, where they may help increase our resource recovery. We're also looking at injecting carbon dioxide into deep coal beds, where it forces out methane that then can be used as a cleaner burning fuel.

One way to encourage this kind of innovation is to provide credits for new ways of doing things. Canada's joint ministers of environment and energy are working on how to address the issue of credits as part of a national action strategy for climate change. We also are working to ensure that international agreements recognize our contributions and abilities to reduce greenhouse gases, and that includes the Kyoto protocol itself. The protocol states an intention to reduce greenhouse gas emissions to 6 percent below what they were in 1990 and for Canada to achieve that by 2010. Canada signed the protocol in 1997, but we're not yet bound by it. The next step is ratification, but that is a national decision that could be some years off.

At international meetings called the Conference of the Parties, or COP for short, the world continues to negotiate issues like emission trading and carbon dioxide sinks which would factor in the amount of carbon dioxide that is absorbed by forests and agricultural soils. The next COP meeting, COP 6, is planned for late this year to finalize the details of the Kyoto protocol before ratification. I continue to negotiate with my fellow environment and energy ministers about just what Canada's ratification would mean to each province and territory. Those discussions will be on the agenda at the joint ministers' meeting in Vancouver at the end of March. In the meantime Alberta may not be bound by Kyoto, but we are bound by our own commitment to address climate change and reduce greenhouse gas emissions in Alberta. Climate Change Central will help us act on that commitment.

We established Climate Change Central as a partnership agency to identify and guide that action. The Premier is the executive chair. David Tuer, president and CEO of PanCanadian Petroleum Limited, has joined me as a co-chair. This executive is now working on appointing a board of directors from stakeholders, including environmental organizations, who can bring different perspectives to the table and help develop creative and visionary solutions. These will be people who are committed to action and to pursuing win/win solutions to our challenge of pursuing economic growth while reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

The first job of this board will be to develop a plan with performance measures to serve the interests of all sectors and encourage the participation of all Albertans, and it is this last point that is most essential. We will achieve success only if every Alberta business and industry and every Albertan who uses energy is a participant. Through Climate Change Central we will leverage that participation in cash and in kind.

If we meet the challenge, if we're able to lower greenhouse gas emissions while we build our economy, we will maintain and strengthen our own long-term competitiveness by protecting our natural resources and assets, by becoming more energy efficient at home, and by becoming more attractive for business. We can turn our leadership on climate change into an economic advantage as we market our expertise, new technologies and processes to the world, and that fits right into Alberta's new economic strategy and our vision for the future of this province.

The bottom line is that the return on investment on this $6 million is measured in terms of our economy but also our environment. Therefore, I ask for your vote to approve these supplementary estimates.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. You know, it's clear the Minister of Environment has thrown himself with his usual kind of enthusiasm into his new task. I have trouble purging from my mind a bit of your photograph. It was shortly after this minister had assumed his new portfolio. I have visions of the minister and the mayor of the city of Calgary in hip waders in a stream in northeast Calgary, and from the look of pure joy on his face one could tell that he had found a portfolio he was really excited about, and with the kind of enthusiasm he speaks in speaking to his department, that's abundantly manifest.

As somebody who is a bit of a concrete thinker, Mr. Chairman, I have to ask for some help. We heard considerable discussion about the Kyoto accord, about emission controls, about things going on around the world, about interprovincial negotiations, and so on, but at the end what I understood the minister to say – and I know very little about Climate Change Central – is that he and David Tuer are going to co-chair Climate Change Central, and they're going to find a board of directors, but that hasn't happened yet.

So I'm sitting here and thinking this, Mr. Chairman. We're dealing with supplementary estimates. That means this is stuff that can't wait until the next budget year. Here we are virtually a month away from the end of the current budget year and we have a request for $6 million going to Climate Change Central. The big gap for me is: what's going to happen between now and the end of March? Anything after the end of March presumably will get picked up in the budget for 2000-2001.

We heard reference to projects. Well, I guess what I'd want to know is: specifically what kinds of projects, how many projects? What's the total budget for Climate Change Central? As I understand it, this is one of the sort of private sector/public partnerships. I don't know what the budget of Climate Change Central is. I don't know what portion the $6 million represents of the whole. I don't know whether this is sort of seed money to get this thing started. If there's no board of directors, I don't know how there would be projects already started.

I want to be clear, Mr. Chairman, that I support efforts to control emissions. We've been a leader in energy production. I'd like Alberta to be a leader on this continent in terms of emission control. We've got incredibly talented engineers and a sophisticated petrochemical industry. There's no better place in Canada for us to do the pioneering and to provide that leadership, but the case in hand is why we need $6 million now that can't be addressed in the budget for 2000-2001. I'm assuming that Climate Change Central perhaps didn't even exist at the time the budget for 1999-2000 was done, but I have to know more information about the kinds of projects that are currently under way and I guess, in part, just why the $6 million is being sought by way of interim supply.

That's the thing I can't quite figure out, Mr. Chairman, and nothing in the minister's remarks made that any clearer for me. In fact, it made it even more puzzling, because virtually his entire presentation was prospective, in terms of what we intend to do and what may happen and so on. I have an expectation – and maybe I'm alone in this. Maybe I'm the only one in this Chamber that thinks this way, but I have this notion that for supplementary estimates we come in and these are things that – either we've hired more doctors than we've anticipated or we have an immediate expenditure that we have to deal with in this province that can't wait until the next budget year, that this is something that's happening right now. I didn't frankly hear anything – and maybe I wasn't listening closely enough or didn't understand some of the nuances in the minister's presentation, but I didn't get an answer to that question: what has to be done now that couldn't be done in the budget that we're going to be able to deal with in some considerable depth over the next four weeks?

I'm not necessarily opposed to supporting Climate Change Central. Climate Change Central makes sense, to try and do some collaborative effort with industry, the private sector and government. That's a perfectly appropriate place to put some public money to help that thing along, but I need some stronger sense of timing of expenditure and the number of projects and the kinds of projects and those sorts of things.

I have to know, Mr. Chairman – once again, maybe everybody else in the Assembly knows this: is this unique to Alberta? Does this operate outside the boundaries of the province of Alberta? Is it something that includes all of western Canada or all of Canada? Is this unique to Alberta? I don't know that. Fairly basic questions but they're the kinds of things that would be really helpful in terms of voting the $6 million.

Thank you very much.

MR. MAR: Mr. Chairman, I'm often impressed by the comments made by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, and his comments this evening are no exception. Perhaps the starting point is with respect to: is Climate Change Central unique to Alberta? While a national strategy dealing with the issue of climate change is being worked on with the federal government, individual provinces have also put together their plans, but I would have to say that an entity like Climate Change Central is unique to the province of Alberta. It is the reason why Minister Goodale and others from the federal government, including David Anderson, federal Minister of the Environment, have commented on Alberta's leadership role in the whole issue of climate change.

Mr. Chairman, to address the issue with respect to the timing, Climate Change Central will be incorporated as a not-for-profit corporation by the end of the month of March 2000, and a funding agreement will be put in place between the Department of Environment and Climate Change Central.

With respect to the issue raised by the hon. member on what this money is for, he is correct that the projects are prospective. This $6 million is not for project money. This $6 million is simply for the day-to-day operations of Climate Change Central in terms of administration for the next three years. So, Mr. Chairman, he is correct that the projects that have been discussed and that may come forward are not being funded out of the $6 million but, in fact, are prospective and have not yet been reviewed by the agency known as Climate Change Central.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the proposed supplementary estimates for the Department of Environment, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Yes.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense $6,000,000

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.

Community Development

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to introduce these requests for supplementary funding and to speak briefly to them. The first is income support for seniors under the special-needs assistance grants. I think every member in this Assembly has had some experience with constituents and the special-needs program. I think almost without exception members would agree that it is a good program, that it is proactive, and that it does address quite adequately those special needs seniors might encounter at any given point.

I recall when we were looking at this program. It was introduced by a previous minister. I asked the department officials exactly what would happen if a senior's furnace failed on December 21 at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and it was 40 below. They said, "Well, they would apply," and I said, "And then what?" "Well, it would be reviewed, and it would be answered." And I said: "You know that that's not acceptable. We have got to be able to respond immediately."

Coincidentally, after the changes were made that allowed that to happen, almost that very circumstance did happen. Officials made a point of calling me and saying: you know, Madam Minister, we had something so close to what you outlined to us, and we want you to know that within two hours that senior's furnace was in operation and their needs were met. That told me that while it may not be perfect, it certainly was a good step in the right direction to making sure that seniors had security of knowledge that if they had an emergency, it could be met.

I must give credit to the staff in this program in the regions, because they certainly have reacted. It is difficult to anticipate exactly what the costs will be in that area. I do think it is very important to support the additional funding that's required to meet those needs. I know that they are needs and that they are special needs and that those dollars are going to a very good cause.

What were some of the increased pressures? Well, we know that increased prices in property taxes, utilities, heating – these high costs have been an issue. So I am speaking in support of that and hope that members can support those additional dollars.

The Alberta Social Housing Corporation: I think the explanation speaks to itself. There are actually shortfalls in delayed sales of land and property.

Special purpose housing: this is really a cash management issue; it doesn't affect the bottom line. I would ask that the Assembly also approve a supplementary budget in that manner.

With those comments I would do my best to answer any questions members might have or ensure that the minister does answer them for members at a later time. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just have a few questions about the Community Development supplementary estimates. The minister answered partly the need for the increase in income support for seniors. And it is a good program. I've had some of my seniors well served by the program, so I appreciate it being there. I guess one of the questions is: will that amount be carried over into the next budget? Will it be increased by that amount? Was it the number of people applying, or was it just that the amount required was more than what was budgeted for in the first place?

I had a little bit more difficulty in tracking down the special purpose housing, and with some help from my colleague I found it in the Municipal Affairs section of the budget. Assistance to Alberta Social Housing Corporation there is $77,892,000. I heard the minister say that this was really a cash flow problem. This is in addition to the $77 million, I assume. I guess I have some questions about that. What are the reasons for the delay in the sales of those properties? Exactly what are the kinds of properties and land that are affected by the delays?

Is there a plan? I couldn't find a performance measure or a goal, and it may just be that I didn't locate it in the right place in the budget, Mr. Chairman. There's no sort of performance measure that I could find dealing with this particular item, and I wondered if it was because it wasn't appropriate to generate a performance measure for it, that it was something that doesn't lend itself to that kind of measurement. But there must be some sort of plan in terms of the disposal of properties and land, and I wondered what the measures are, if there any that exist. How will they determine whether or not they are doing as they are charged to do in the budget?

Under 5.0.6, the $1,470,000 loss. What kinds of alternatives were considered before that loss was taken? Where there some alternatives that were looked at? In terms of the properties, is that list made public, and exactly what kinds of properties are involved?

I think with those brief questions, Mr. Chairman, that concludes the questions I have on this portion of the estimates.

MRS. McCLELLAN: I will certainly get an answer to those questions. You are right that in my comment these are a cash management issue, from the information I have. Yes, this was transferred from Municipal Affairs to Community Development, so I am not in any position to give you the detail that you'd like in your answer. I will pass those requests on to the minister, and I know that he'll respond to you very quickly.

THE CHAIRMAN: After considering the proposed 1999-2000 supplementary estimates for the Department of Community Development, are you ready for the vote?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Thank you.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Capital Investment	$8,991,000
Nonbudgetary Disbursements	$1,470,000

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote be reported?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Having dealt with all of the votes necessary under the matters brought before the House for supplementary supply, I would move that the committee do now rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, supplementary supply estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2000, reports the approval of the following estimates, and requests leave to sit again.

Community Development: operating expense and capital investment, $8,991,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $1,470,000.

Environment: operating expense and capital investment, $6,000,000.

Health and Wellness: operating expense and capital investment, $10,412,000.

Justice: operating expense and capital investment, $5,700,000.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Consideration of Her Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Haley moved:

That an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 28: Mr. White]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I had the privilege of serving as chair of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta during the International Year of Older Persons last year, and I want to report to this Legislature on some achievements and highlights of the year. I would like to share some of the vision and inspiration that members of the council and I carried forward from the International Year of Older Persons. We look to the future confidently, knowing that there will be challenges, but there will also be opportunities.

First of all, I want to say that we appreciate the attention given to seniors in the throne speech. The presence of Mrs. Mathilda Hirsch as a guest of the Premier underlined the respect we all feel for the men and women who helped build our province. We also appreciate the Lieutenant Governor's words of thanks to

Mrs. Hirsch and the many Albertans like her, some still with us, many not, who worked so hard throughout the 20th century so that the new century could offer such promise.

We appreciate the fact that baby Micheal Tustin and members of the class of 2000 shared the spotlight with Mrs. Hirsch.

Alberta's seniors are justifiably proud of the legacy they pass on to Alberta's children and youth. Our seniors are also aware that they still have much to offer young Albertans as they prepare to take up the challenges and pursue the opportunities of the next century. Seniors, for example, look forward to Alberta's centennial year in 2005. They want to celebrate past achievements, of course, but they also want to help shape and define the future for the province, for their children and grandchildren, for themselves, and for the growing number of seniors who will come after them.

We will face unprecedented demographic pressures when the baby boom generation enters its senior years. The first baby boomers will turn 65 in 2011, just over a decade from now. By 2016 the number of seniors in Alberta will double, from around 300,000 today to 600,000. Our overall population will also increase, so the percentage of seniors in the total population will not rise quite so dramatically. It will go from around 10 percent to just over 11 percent and peak at around 14 percent soon after that. This impending demographic shift represents a clear and present challenge for Alberta, as it does all over North America.

We can take pride in the knowledge that the government of Alberta has anticipated this challenge for at least a decade. Alberta is a leader in research and programming for an aging population.

Our government has taken bold, decisive action to anticipate and prepare for what we might call the seniors boom. Community Development Minister Woloshyn is responding proactively, as did his predecessors as ministers responsible for seniors.

I am proud that I've been able to contribute as chair of the Seniors Advisory Council, as chair of the steering committee for the governmentwide study on the impact of the aging population, and as vice-chair of the Long-term Care Review Policy Advisory Committee. I'm grateful to have had those opportunities. My experience has helped me understand the challenges we face. It has also assured me that we have the will, the commitment, and the means to respond effectively and that we have the dedicated and knowledgeable departmental support to respond efficiently.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I would like to turn briefly from the real and significant challenges of a rapidly aging population to talk about the opportunities. Let me tell you something about today's seniors and the seniors-to-be in the baby boom generation. They are living longer as a group than their parents and grandparents. They are likely healthier, more independent, and better educated. They are energetic, motivated, accomplished, and capable people who possess a wealth of experience and an impressive diversity of capacities and abilities. At 65 most can look forward on average to 15 good, productive years. Alberta seniors embody the distinguishing Albertan values that were singled out in the throne speech. They are confident, entrepreneurial, innovative, self-reliant, spiritual, and environmentally aware. Our seniors are role models for future generations, or they can be if we work as hard at integrating them into our communities as we do at meeting the economic and social challenges they represent.

I have traveled all over Alberta, especially during the International Year of Older Persons. I have learned about Alberta seniors and a lot more from them. They command respect and attention not only for their years but also for the quality and diversity of their concerns and vision, their knowledge and experience, and their sense of humour. Our seniors are a tremendous resource, one that we may not appreciate or use to its potential. As we anticipate and prepare for an aging population, we must not focus too quickly and narrowly on the potential burdens on our resources. There are and will be costs, to be sure, but there are tremendous potential benefits if we can recognize and embrace them.

Some of our seniors will need long-term care, an issue that was addressed by the Broda committee in its meetings with Albertans and in its report to Health and Wellness Minister Jonson, but many of them will be able to spend all or most of their later years at home. They will be able, willing, and in many cases anxious to participate in community life and activities. When he released the Broda committee report last November, Minister Jonson said that we need to plan for a future where increasing numbers of seniors will have access to continuing care when they need it, and he noted that we need to create a culture that supports seniors living in their own homes and contributing to their families and communities as long as possible.

The report also stresses the need for healthy aging in supportive communities, a new generation of continuing care centres, and aggressive recruitment and training of health care professionals and providers. As I said earlier, I had the opportunity to serve on the Broda committee and help prepare the report. It indeed reflects the comments, priorities, and suggestions of health authorities, government departments, stakeholders, and Albertans.

I also had and still have the privilege of chairing the governmentwide study on the impact of the aging population. Community Development Minister Woloshyn asked us to first review current government programs and services. We then reported to Minister Woloshyn in June last year. The report presents 11 issues and makes 19 recommendations based on information gathered from government departments and agencies that provide services to seniors or who have an interest in seniors. The report was released in July last year with a request for public response to its recommendations.

Next was a series of 17 focus group consultations with nearly 700 Albertans throughout Alberta. The governmentwide study steering committee used the report, the public responses to the report, and the information from the focus groups to prepare the discussion guide for a symposium on aging held in Edmonton November 18 to 20 last year. Nearly 170 Albertans attended the symposium. They represented stakeholder groups and Alberta's constituencies. Constituency representatives, who were randomly selected, ranged in age from their late teens to their 80s. Symposium participants looked at a broad range of questions. They brought a variety of perspectives and offered valuable insight and inputs and helped develop a vision for the future of seniors' services and programs in Alberta. That vision is the central focus for our report that we will present to Minister Woloshyn this spring. Symposium participants asked us to consider the potential economic, social, and cultural impact of an aging population with special emphasis on education for health and wellness, healthy lifestyles, and responsible financial planning.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to a Member by Name

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Just a general reminder. We don't call the members by their names; we call them by their cabinet position or their constituency. Once is forgivable, but repeated times, we'll have to remind you.

MS KRYCZKA: My apologies.

MS KRYCZKA: They also emphasized the need for government to monitor services and programs for seniors and asked us to include all age groups in further discussions. Symposium participants also highlighted a need for supportive communities, communities that are safe and committed to the well-being of seniors, that support intergenerational interaction, and that include and integrate seniors.

Healthy aging was another important theme. Participants focused on active living, community involvement, and strong families. They recognized that we lay the foundations for healthy old age in childhood and support them with healthy lifestyles in our young and middle years. This led to suggestions for lifelong education and healthy lifestyle choices. I know many of the seniors' service organizations look forward to exploring opportunities for partnership in the new emphasis on lifelong learning offered by the Ministry of Learning and the minister.

Last year's restructuring of the government placed responsibility for seniors' housing under the Minister of Community Development. This change was part of a continuing initiative to consolidate seniors' programs under one roof. The consolidation initiative gets further support in the throne speech through the government's commitment to providing one-window access to all services and programs. The goal is improved access and efficiency for all Albertans, but I know it has special significance for seniors who may not be as mobile as they once were. The focus on crime prevention and policing will also please seniors. Personal safety, security, and protection from fraud and intimidation are major concerns, and seniors will be happy to see those concerns reflected in the throne speech.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to affirm on behalf of my colleagues on the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta that the throne speech is a positive, forward-looking document. It addresses important concerns and challenges, and it offers many opportunities for Alberta's seniors to live productive, satisfying lives in health, dignity, and respect. The Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta appreciates the fact that the government of Alberta will continue its commitment to supporting the independence and well-being of seniors through a wide range of income support, health, and housing programs worth more than $1 billion. This commitment was demonstrated when short-term support was announced by the Minister of Health and Wellness soon after he received the long-term review report in November 1999.

The overall government long-term plan for seniors will include long-term responses still to come from the minister of health and further responses to come from the Minister of Community Development to the report on the governmentwide study on the impact of the aging population that will go forward from the steering committee in the spring. Of course, the throne speech itself includes increases in the Alberta seniors' benefit program and a special-needs assistance for a seniors' program.

In closing, I would like to acknowledge the hard work and dedication of my colleagues on the Seniors Advisory Council and the governmentwide study on the impact of the aging population, thanking them for their contributions and support. I also want to thank the chair, the MLA for Redwater, and the Albertans who were members on the long-term care review committee for the opportunity to participate and contribute.

On behalf of my council and steering committee colleagues and the senior citizens of Alberta I would like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak on this occasion. I would also like to thank the Premier, the cabinet, my caucus colleagues, and the members of this Legislature for their continuing support for and attention to the needs and concerns of Alberta's senior citizens.

Thank you.

9:50

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me start off by saying that I would hope our in-house wanna-be Prime Minister watched Paul Martin's budget today. There was a bold, balanced document. I look at what the Treasurer here has presented in terms of tax reform, and I have some difficulty figuring out the so-called advantage it's going to be, particularly to a certain category of Albertans.

Certainly with the increase in the personal exemption we will see a number eliminated from the provincial tax roll totally. Then when we go to the next category, those that are taxed at that first level of 17 percent, we look at the existing system. The existing system is 44 percent.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Is this the budget?

MR. WICKMAN: This is throne speech. The budget was referred to in the throne speech.

Mr. Speaker, when we look at 44 percent of 17 percent, that to me is roughly 8 percent. Under the flat tax they're going to pay 11 percent. That's 3 percent more. Even with the increase in the personal exemption I'm not sure those people are going to get a break. The people that will get a break: if you're making $90,000, $100,000 a year, of course you're going to get a break.

MR. SAPERS: Jim Dinning is getting a tax break.

MR. WICKMAN: Oh, there's going to be a whole number of those people getting a tax break. So that I don't understand.

The second point I want to direct to the minister of human resources, and I would ask that he take note of this. I recognize that in the throne speech there was reference made to concern for persons with disabilities. As a result of that, we saw in the budget increases in two categories: one being the developmentally disabled, and secondly, those on AISH.

Now, the reference is made to expanding the AISH program. Yes, I recognize it is going to allow for the entry of an additional 650 recipients, but one thing that hasn't been addressed or referred to in the throne speech is the existing situation where the new legislation that was implemented put a $100,000 ceiling on the assets a recipient could have.

We have this situation, Mr. Speaker, to the minister, where a great number of the AISH recipients were forced to apply for CPP. Of course, if they got the CPP, let's say $600 a month, that was deducted from the AISH. That was considered earnings. Now, if they have, say, $40,000 locked away in RRSPs for their retirement, even though they roll that over, they don't touch it, they don't take any of that interest, just let it roll over like I do with mine, like I would venture to say most everybody in here does so it's there when we head to our retirement, it's deemed as earnings. Even though they don't touch it, it's deemed as earnings, and it puts them over that level that they become eligible for AISH. It forces them every year to cash in a certain amount of their RRSP. Mr. Speaker, to the minister, I didn't comprehend in the first piece of legislation that it was going to have that type of consequence to those individuals.

The second point I want to make. We talked in terms of education in the throne speech; education was one of the areas that was highlighted. There are a couple of points in education that really, really are a sore point with me. One is the numerous requests now that elementary students have to make of their parents and grandparents and neighbours in terms of fund-raising. We're talking in terms of asking little tots in grade 1 and grade 2 to go out there and raise funds for their schools. It's happening at the school my grandchildren go to. I'm sure it's happening to the school the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry's children go to. I'm sure it's happening through virtually every school in the province, where little tots are being asked to go out and hustle chocolate-covered almonds.

What I do, because I don't want to have to see my grandchildren go knocking door-to-door, hustling $2 boxes of chocolates, is buy them all and give them out. But not all the grandparents and parents can buy them all, so these little tots are forced to walk the streets carrying a box of chocolates. The bigger kids know they're carrying these chocolates and they're carrying money, and we hear at Halloween what happens. Well, the same situation can occur. I don't think, if we talk in terms of a good educational system, that we should be encouraging a system where we're asking little tots to go door to door to hustle $2 chocolate bars, and that is a direct result of a shortage of funding to education. We can talk in terms of the throne speech and the promises made in terms of expanding the educational base and such. It was fine.

Now, another area that was touched upon in the throne speech was postsecondary education. Postsecondary education is becoming more and more difficult for students to access. Student loans – and I realize there have been some reforms that were announced later in the budget. Nevertheless, the tuition fees have continued to rise, and the demand on student loans and the shortage of summer employment that pays sufficient wages to allow them to at least store a little bit makes it very, very difficult for potential postsecondary students to access the universities, the colleges, and the technical institutions.

One thing, Mr. Speaker, that is very, very dear to our hearts is the opportunities for our young people to develop the skills so they can go out on a global basis – we're not talking provincially; we're not talking nationally; we're talking now globally – and compete, to have the skills, to have the educational background so they can effectively compete. That has to be a concern to every parent, to every grandparent, to every legislator in this Assembly, and that has to be addressed.

Now the health care system, of course, was one of the main focuses in the throne speech. The best way to sum up the health care system to me, at least from my point of view, sort of in a nutshell, is that it's sort of like you take a car, you demolish it, and then you're going to rebuild that car part by part. We all know it's probably going to cost four times, six times, 10 times as much as the original automobile. That seems to have happened to the health care system, where a number of years ago it was virtually demolished. Now the government is attempting to rebuild it piece by piece by piece, and the cost continues to escalate, get higher and higher and higher, yet the quality of the health care system continues to deteriorate. There is more and more concern. We hear more and more about waiting lines. We still have the problems on occasion with ambulances driving around without an emergency room to take the patients to.

So health care is a problem, and how the government intends to fix that health care, what kind of plan they're going to have, I don't know. In my opinion, the answer is not to go in the direction the government appears to be going, and that is to sell the system to the private sector.

Earlier this afternoon one of the members stood up in the House and tabled a letter about a gentleman from Britain that participated in a dual system and praised that system. Well, I have heard from other people from Great Britain that have lived over there, that know that system, and they disagree. Just like in the United States, in terms of the health care system there, it is clearly a two-tier system, and for those who have the dollars, who can buy the insurance to insure that they have sufficient access to the health care system, it's fine for them. But for those that can't, it's a whole different story. We all know and hear of cases where Americans are bankrupted simply because they had to go in the hospital for a few days.

I don't want to see us leap to that type of system, and it appears the government is determined to get its foot in the door. We can talk about overnight stays in private hospitals, but what happens after that's allowed? Albertans come to their MLAs and say: "Look, I need hip surgery, but I'm going to have to wait six months. I can go into this private hospital, but they won't allow me because I have to be in for more than three nights." The pressure is going to be on the MLAs, the legislators, to increase that overnight stay to three overnight stays. Pretty soon we're going to end up with private hospitals that are there competing against the public system at a much greater cost and that tend to serve only a segment of the population. I really, really urge the government to heed the direction that they're heading.

DR. WEST: There are no private hospitals. No private hospitals.

MR. WICKMAN: The minister is shouting over, "No private hospitals." I'm talking about a foot in the door. Don't allow that foot in the door. If you get that foot in the door, that crack becomes wider and wider and wider until the door is totally open and it's a full-fledged system. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, you're all invited in the course of the debate on reply to the speech by Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor. You're all entitled to that, but the courtesy of the House and the practice of the House is that we have but one member speaking at a time. That member is, of course, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford at this moment.

Debate Continued

MR. WICKMAN: Two last points, Madam Minister. One to you. I appreciate and I'm sure seniors appreciate the additional funding in the special needs that was talked about earlier. There was reference made to seniors' programs and a 10 percent increase in such in the throne speech. It's welcomed. Some say that it's not sufficient. If it's not sufficient, I would hope government will address that to ensure our seniors are provided the dignified lifestyle that they've earned themselves, that they're entitled to by contributing to this province over a good number of years.

My very last point again to the minister of human resources. I would just urge him in his WCB review to allow for some opportunity other than just a questionnaire for interested Albertans, interested groups to actually make submissions as to what they feel is wrong, what can be corrected with the Workers' Compensation Board.

On that note, keeping within my 10 minutes as promised, I'll conclude.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments on the Speech from the Throne. First of all, I want to commend Her Honour on the very gracious manner in which she presented the speech which outlined the government's agenda for this session. I believe that drawing the relationship between the first Speech from the Throne, delivered many years ago, to the very young, the first baby born in the year 2000, to a lady who heard that first speech firsthand, to a young graduating class rather talks about the excitement I think we all feel of moving into a new century and a new opportunity to work together collectively to make this province, indeed, the absolute best place in this country and in the world to live and to raise our families. I think each and every Member of this Legislative Assembly shares that.

Mr. Speaker, the hour is late. I do wish to add some more comments at a later date, but at this time I would move adjournment for this evening.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

[At 10:05 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, February 29, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/02/29

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O God, grant that we the members of our province's Legislature may fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all of our people. Guide our deliberations this day and every day. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Klaus Glaremin, acting consul general, the Federal Republic of Germany. He's accompanied by Mr. Fritz Koenig, honorary consul of the Federal Republic of Germany based here in Edmonton.

Germany is a major international player with the third largest economy in the world. Alberta has been fortunate to have a very close trading relationship with Germany, fostered in part by the strong German-Canadian community in Alberta. There are over 530,000 Albertans of German heritage here in our province, making Germans the second largest ethnic group in Alberta. Germany is currently Alberta's ninth largest export market, with exports from Alberta to Germany totaling $164 million in 1998. Germany is also one of the top European investors in Alberta, particularly in our high technology, communications, and oil and gas sectors.

On behalf of Albertans I want to wish our honoured guests very productive and enjoyable work in our province, and I'd ask our honoured guests, seated in the Speaker's gallery, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to present a petition from 23 of my constituents opposing private health care and supporting a universal health care system. I am not only pleased to table this petition, but I support it. In fact, all of my colleagues and I are a hundred percent in favour of a publicly funded, publicly administered health care system. As the petition says: we want a universal health care system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, I really appreciate your enthusiasm for a petition, but please remember that I sent a letter to all members several days ago saying: let's proceed with some degree of hastiness with respect to several items. There's no need for editorial comments.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to present a petition on behalf of 140 Albertans from Cold Lake urging "the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to present a petition signed by 120 people living in the Cold Lake area, and they are asking "the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition signed by 140 people in the Cold Lake area, and they are urging this government "to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition signed by 237 residents of the Cold Lake area. That, I believe, brings the total from Cold Lake to 797 requesting that the government of Alberta "stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition to present to you and to the Members of the Legislative Assembly on behalf of 160 residents of Cold Lake, Alberta, another 160 residents, and that brings the grand total of what you've heard . . . [interjections] It does amount to a great number of people in that town that again "urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care," sir.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg permission to present a petition signed by 80 citizens in northeast Edmonton urging the government to increase funding of children in public and separate schools to a level that covers increased costs due to contract settlements, curriculum changes, technology, and aging schools. It was filed after the budget last week.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to present a petition signed by 75 people from north Edmonton. I attended and spoke at an Edmonton PAC meeting last week, and the organizers asked me to present this. This is urging the government to increase funding of children in public and separate schools to a level that covers increased costs due to contract settlements, curriculum changes, technology, and aging schools.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to present this petition signed by 220 Albertans who are asking this Assembly to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to have the petition now read and received that I introduced to the Legislative Assembly yesterday regarding defending public health care. Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would rise as well and ask that the petition I tabled yesterday in regards to support for public health care be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like the petition I presented yesterday to be now read back. Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I tabled yesterday be read and received today.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private, for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that the petition with respect to support of public health care that I introduced yesterday be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented yesterday supporting public health care, not this government's plan for private health care, now be read back.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The Associate Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that tomorrow I will be moving that both written questions and motions for returns that appear on tomorrow's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

head: Introduction of Bills

Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority Amendment Act, 2000

DR. TAYLOR: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to introduce Bill 7, the Alberta Science, Research and Technology Authority Amendment Act, 2000. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

The act consolidates all parts of the new Department of Innovation and Science under one piece of legislation and streamlines multiple acts into one.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

1:40

Bill 10

Securities Amendment Act, 2000

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 10, being the Securities Amendment Act, 2000.

The primary focus of this bill is to address the loss of powers arising from the recent conversion and merger of the Alberta and Vancouver stock exchanges to form the Canadian Venture Exchange Inc., or CDNx.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 10 be moved on to the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Bill 205

Emblems of Alberta (Alberta Dress Tartan) Amendment Act, 2000

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I request leave to introduce Bill 205, being the Emblems of Alberta (Alberta Dress Tartan) Amendment Act, 2000.

This bill proposes to add a second official tartan, a dress tartan, as an official emblem of Alberta that would complement the existing Alberta tartan.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Bill 206
School (Students' Code of Conduct)
Amendment Act, 2000

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 206, School (Students' Code of Conduct) Amendment Act, 2000.

This bill will instruct boards to develop and implement a written policy respecting student conduct.

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I have a number of tablings. First of all, I wish to table with the Assembly the report of the World Health Organization, the World Health Report for 1999, entitled Making a Difference, along with a news release outlining some of the key features of this report, which outlines the World Health Organization's position of supporting a role for the private sector in health care systems providing there is public finance and governance.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the College of Physical Therapists of Alberta for the year ended September 30, 1999.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table with the Assembly the final audited financial statement of the Calgary Health (Crown) Foundation for the period ended December 9, 1998.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table with the Assembly the final audited financial statement of the Health Region No. 6 (Crown) Foundation for the period ended December 9, 1998.

I am pleased to table with the Assembly the final audited financial statement of the Capital Health (Crown) Foundation for the year ended December 9, 1998.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Alberta Dental Association for the year ended December 31, 1998.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table the report of findings Waiting for Health Care and the Waiting for Health Care Technical and Statistical Appendix, prepared by Burke & Associates in conjunction with Ronald Wensel, professional corporation, and Harris McConnan, chartered accountants, an analysis of wait lists in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings here. These are copies of letters sent to the Premier by Albertans. The first one is by Professor Shirley Stinson. Shirley Stinson is a well-known scholar in Alberta, has done lots of work on health care, and she expresses grave concern about the proposed privatization of health care in Alberta.

The second letter is from Mr. Ron Clarkson, who experienced a serious delay in receiving a timely operation for his ruptured appendix. He also expresses grave concern that the policies pursued by this government will undermine public health care.

The third letter is to the Premier from Mary Jane Pedersen from Canmore expressing her opposition to the development in the Spray Valley area around Canmore.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MS PAUL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased this afternoon to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter I received from a constituent of Edmonton-Castle Downs, the Reverend G.E. Ingram. Reverend Ingram's letter reflects his support for the private member's bill, the Marriage Amendment Act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for the interest of the House this afternoon document numbered 001245 that I received from the Minister of Municipal Affairs concerning untreated pine shakes through a freedom of information request. This document is titled Response to Consumers, and it is blank.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of the Report of the Court Reporting/Recording Committee out of British Columbia.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and table correspondence relating to the Ombudsman's investigation into the Social Care Facilities Review Committee. The failure of the committee to investigate the death of Mr. Wayne Oles has been clearly established as an abdication of their legislated responsibility.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first one is copies of correspondence from the Leader of the Opposition to the Premier requesting that the government reverse its position and allow MLA expense claims to be accessible under the freedom of information act.

The second item is copies of expense claim forms for each member of the Alberta Liberal caucus, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I am pleased to today to table copies of a report entitled allowances and travel expenses for the 12 months ending March 31, 1999, as they relate to the Member for Barrhead-Westlock.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 59 bright, energetic grade 6 students from my hometown of Redwater. They are accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Kathleen Baker, Miss Dawn Parkinson, and parents Mrs. Crystal Hrycun, Mrs. Debbie Clark, Mrs. Wendy Fairweather, Mrs. Lorraine Harynuck, Mrs. Karen Ullman, and Ms Trish Swinton. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I'm happy to introduce to you and to other members of this Assembly Nola Bietz, who is here today representing CAPP, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. In addition to her association with CAPP many here will know Nola through other means. Nola used to work in the building as executive assistant to Jim Dinning in the mid- 80s. She is a long-time supporter of the PC party of Alberta, and in particular she is a supporter in my consistency of Calgary-Lougheed. In fact Nola was very instrumental in my presence here in that she was my campaign manager in the '97 election. If she hasn't already risen, I would ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. LANGEVIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of visitors from l'ecole Beausejour, which is a Francophone school in Plamondon. In the group we have 13 students from grades 10, 11, and 12. They are accompanied today by Mr. Andre Roy, who is the principal of the school; Mr. Claude Lamoureux, a teacher; Mr. Leo Piquette, the board chairman; Mr. Reed Gauthier, who is the president of l'ACFA; and also a parent, Mrs. Sylvie Walton. I would like to ask our visitors to rise and be recognized by the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly Mr. Skip Gordon, our Liberal candidate in the next election for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. He's in the public gallery. With your permission I'd like him to now stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Mr. Leo Piquette is also a former member of this Alberta Legislative Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Freedom to Read Week

MR. WOLOSZYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I rise today in recognition of the 16th annual Freedom to Read Week, being held February 27 through March 4. During this week Albertans are encouraged to visit their local public libraries and, more importantly, exercise their right to read. Initiated by the Book and Periodical Council in Ottawa in 1984, Freedom to Read Week celebrates access to information and freedom of expression in Canada and is celebrated nationwide.

Taking time to celebrate this week is of utmost importance in Alberta. Libraries mark Freedom to Read Week by setting up displays and holding special events such as public readings and book displays.

The Committee for Freedom of Expression of the Book and Periodical Council of Canada states that freedom to read is a precious heritage; it is part of a much larger heritage common to the human spirit which we call freedom of expression. As minister responsible for libraries in Alberta as well as for human rights I applaud this statement.

Libraries provide equal access to people of any origin, race, religion, economic status, or view. Albertans are fortunate to live in a country where this right is protected. In this province the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act ensures that all Albertans are offered equal opportunity to earn a living, find a home, and enjoy an array of services available to its citizens. This door of opportunity is open to all, and we can enter a world filled with information, opinions, and ideas. We can exercise our minds and discover the diversity of cultures and people that reside in our communities. It is up to all of us to experience lifelong learning and use the valuable tools available in our libraries in our journey of discovery.

In recognition of this event I invite all members of this Assembly to join me in supporting Freedom to Read Week.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to reply on behalf of the Official Opposition to the minister's statement. As I indicated in my recognition yesterday, the organizers have adopted a clenched fist slamming shut a book as a symbol for this week. The symbol focuses on censorship, on those forces in our society who, based on their personal and moral codes or ideas they find troubling, would deny others access to those ideas.

Recent discussion of material that some find odious on the Internet is a game putting citizens to the test. What do we do when we are forced to confront ideas that fall within the law but are deeply disturbing or offensive? Supporting intellectual freedom in our democracy is easy when we find it in the abstract. How we treat the Internet concerns will prove our commitment.

A first step would be clarification of the government's support for freedom to read. On February 25 we had a release from the Community Development minister indicating that the week has something to do with giving Albertans regardless of skin colour or creed access to libraries. Yesterday the government members denied unanimous consent to recognize the week, and today we have a ministerial statement asking all of us to support Freedom to Read Week. Maybe next year the Learning minister should be put in charge.

head: Oral Question Period

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, the Premier and the special interests that are backing him are waging a huge propaganda campaign with public money on a scale never before seen in this province to promote their privatization agenda. Albertans are paying for spin doctors when what we need are medical doctors. As the Premier has already refused on many occasions to release the costs of the focus groups, the subject of these blank pages, will he table today the full costs, the contracts, and the agencies used to promote his privatization scheme?

MR. KLEIN: First of all, Mr. Speaker, there are no special interest groups backing this legislation unless the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition is alluding to all 64 members of the Conservative caucus.

We want to do the right thing. I just got off a conference call with all the Premiers of this country and the three territorial leaders, all of whom agree that there needs to be a full restoration of the Canada health and social transfer for health care funding. The amount that will come to Alberta will fund our health care system for about six or maybe six and a half days, Mr. Speaker. All of the Premiers agree without question that the status quo is not acceptable, that meaningful changes must take place. None of the Premiers were critical of Alberta for taking some bold steps to alleviate pain and suffering and to shorten waiting lists.

Now, Mr. Speaker, relative to organized campaigns, relative to spin doctoring, I'm going to read from an e-mail. It's from Joan Swain. I think she's a Liberal researcher, and it was sent to the MLAs for Calgary-Buffalo, Edmonton-Glenora, Edmonton-Gold Bar, Edmonton-Whitemud, Edmonton-Calder, Edmonton-Ellerslie, Edmonton-Glengarry, Edmonton-McClung, Edmonton-Meadowlark, Edmonton-Mill Woods, Edmonton-Norwood, Edmonton-Rutherford, Edmonton-Manning, Edmonton-Centre, Lethbridge-East, and Edmonton-Riverview. It was entitled Health Petitions, and it reads:

Hi all. Just to let you know that as of today, we have 12,910 names on the petitions. If you have any more at your offices, please send them in . . . [as soon as possible]. We would . . .

[interjections] Wait a minute. Just a minute. The best is yet to come, Mr. Speaker. The best is yet to come.

We would like to have the presentation strategy finalized and it helps to know just how many we have, or [how many more we] can expect to receive.

Keep up the good work and keep them coming!

If that's not organized, what is?

2:00

THE SPEAKER: And it would be appropriate to have the document tabled as well.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I can understand why the Premier won't answer the question, but let's try it again. Will the Premier at least have the courtesy to tell taxpayers how much of their sweat-soaked loonies are being used to convince them that privatizing health care isn't wrong?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition to wait and see the legislation, and maybe she'll be true to her word that she might support this legislation. There is a possibility she will support this legislation because it contains everything that she has been asking for.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, the Premier doesn't have to shake his fist at me.

Isn't the real reason why this Premier refuses to . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, it works both ways.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, isn't the real reason this Premier refuses to release any details on the costs of his propaganda campaign that Albertans would be shocked to find out how much of their tax dollars are going towards dismantling public health care?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wasn't shaking my fist; I was making a point.

I just tabled clear evidence – clear evidence – of who is orchestrating a campaign. It is not this government. It is the Liberal Party orchestrating a campaign of malicious misinformation.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, let's try it again. Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, earlier today we tabled a report documenting how this government has undermined public health care and created longer waiting lists and increased stress and suffering, yet this Premier insists on spending public dollars to promote his privatization agenda rather than dealing with the health care needs of Albertans. I'll say it one more time: spin doctors won't cure our health care system and the problems this government has created. My questions are to the Premier. Given that four out of five of all physicians surveyed felt that the waiting times had increased during the term of this government, why should Albertans trust a Premier who ignores the evidence that private health care increases the wait lists?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition wait and see what the legislation says. I can give her a hint. It's all in the policy paper. Obviously she hasn't read it, but basically it sets in place some very stringent regulations relative to contracting to private surgical clinics. It also provides regional health authorities with some options to shorten waiting lists and to alleviate pain and suffering. That's what it's all about. I don't see how the Liberal Party could be opposed to something that is so basic and so fair.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are sick of waiting, and they are sick of this Premier's nonanswers. Given that three out of four physicians in our province believe that the number of patients awaiting health services has increased – increased – in the past four years, why should Albertans trust a Premier who keeps saying he has a plan when Albertans know that that plan is more and more and more privatization?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, private/public partnerships are nothing new in this province. Again, I would remind the hon. member that under her watch the Morgentaler clinic was started in Edmonton in 1991. Morgentaler clinic two was started in Calgary in 1992. The Gimbel clinic, 1983, was operating under her watch. Another clinic was established in Calgary in 1990. The Mitchell surgery centre, 1969, continued to operate. The Northern Alberta Eye Institute, 1990, was established under the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition's watch when she was the minister of health.

Relative to orthopaedics, dermatology, urology, plastic surgery, the Coronation Day Surgery Centre Ltd. was established in 1982 and allowed to operate. Surgical Centres Inc., Foothills, 1992, was established under her watch. Surgical Centres, Southland, Calgary, 1988, was probably established before her watch but was allowed to operate and continue under her watch. The Rockyview Surgical Centre, 1989, in Calgary was started under her watch. The Banff outpatient surgery centre, 1969, was allowed to operate.

If anyone knows about private surgical clinics, Mr. Speaker, this hon. leader of the Liberal opposition knows more about it than anyone else because she was responsible for bringing most of them about.

MRS. MacBETH: You know, Mr. Speaker, the Premier is right. I was the health minister of this province, but I didn't have a fine of $3.6 million from the federal government when I was minister.

Given that three out of four physicians in this study felt that the quality of health care available within their region had declined during the term of this government, why should Albertans believe a Premier who refuses to elect members to the regional health authorities and only appoints those who agree with his privatization scheme?

MR. KLEIN: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, elections will be held in conjunction with the next municipal elections, and two-thirds of the boards will be elected.

Relative to the comment of being fined, for 10 years facility fees were allowed. This leader of the Liberal opposition, when she was minister, did absolutely nothing to address the problem. We had to address the problem when the then federal minister, Ms Marleau, took it upon herself to interpret what we were doing to be in violation of the Canada Health Act. She did nothing, Mr. Speaker. This person who was minister of health did absolutely nothing to curtail that particular activity. We had to take the action.

I would also remind the hon. member, when she is talking about being fined $3.4 million, that under our watch we had to take a $3.4 billion structural deficit and turn that into surpluses year after year after year.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the chair did make a plea for some decorum prior to the initiation of that second set of questions. It did not improve, so perhaps it's now timely to just review what Beauchesne says about the question period. Let me take you to Beauchesne 409.

A brief question seeking information about an important matter of some urgency which falls within the administrative responsibility of the government or of the specific Minister to whom it is addressed, is in order.

- (1) It must be a question, not an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation, nor debate.
- (2) The question must be brief. A preamble need not exceed one carefully drawn sentence

There's no need for preambles on these supplementaries.

- (3) The question ought to seek information and, therefore, cannot be based upon a hypothesis, cannot seek an opinion, either legal or otherwise, and must not suggest its own answer, be argumentative or make representations.
- (4) It ought to be on an important matter, and not be frivolous.
- (5) The matter ought to be of some urgency.

There are additional items in number 409, but I want to just highlight a few from Beauchesne 410. It's been observed in the past that

- (1) Television has made a marked impact on Parliament and public perception thereof;
- (2) While some previous guidelines remain valid others have fallen into disuse . . .
- (3) Time is scarce.
- (4) In the view of the watching public, decorum is of importance.
- (5) The primary purpose of the Question Period is the seeking of information and calling the Government to account . . .
- (7) Brevity both in questions and answers is of great importance.
- (8) Preambles to questions should be brief and supplementary questions require no preambles . . .
- (9) Questions should not repeat questions already asked although this does not mean that other questions on the same point are out of order.

And I might go on.

This is important public time, hon. members. Decorum is important.

Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, your third main question.

Calgary Regional Health Authority

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, yesterday Albertans heard the head of the Calgary regional health authority, the former Provincial Treasurer, the Premier's handpicked lieutenant of Calgary, and the architect of the cuts say, and I quote: it's better to experiment than to plan. This is an incredible insult to Albertans who depend on public health care. My questions are to the Premier. Does the Premier agree with his former Provincial Treasurer now responsible for a budget of nearly a billion dollars of taxpayers money when he says that it's better to experiment than to plan?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I didn't hear those comments come out of the former Provincial Treasurer's mouth. I can tell you that the only plan I know of that he was the architect of was the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition's unsuccessful leadership campaign.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, Albertans see through this Premier's nonanswers.

Will the Premier fire his chosen chairman of the Calgary regional health authority given his reckless disregard for public health care?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I understand that the leader has some concern about Mr. Dinning being chair of an entity which has a $1 billion budget. Actually it's somewhat higher than that. I think that's something of a comedown financially from managing a $12 billion budget for the provincial government and for all Albertans and doing a very fine job of balancing it and moving this province towards a more sound financial footing.

Now, with respect to the speech that I understand the former hon. Provincial Treasurer, now chair of the CRHA, made, I think he is exhibiting leadership in the context of his duties in Calgary, Mr. Speaker. He, I think, has excellent qualifications to look at the future needs of the system down there from a positive perspective for health, and certainly I would not in any way consider recommending his dismissal. Certainly not. He's doing a fine job. I think the overall board down there is working hard to provide for the health needs of Albertans.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier admit, as his handpicked chairman has, that the Premier has no plan, just an experiment in privatizing that could end up destroying public health care?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is a plan, and it's a very bold and a very energetic plan. That plan will unfold when the legislation is tabled.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. interim leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Friends of Medicare chairperson, Christine Burdett, received a telephone call earlier today from a reporter from the National Post. The reporter claimed to have knowledge of the contents of the government's private, for-profit hospitals legislation. The reporter said that the legislation bans private hospitals. He also added that that would cause Friends of Medicare to reverse its position on the legislation. As the interview continued, it became clear that the legislation does not ban private, overnight patient stay facilities. My question is to the Premier. How can the government justify leaking the contents of its private, for-profit hospitals legislation to a Toronto-based, right-wing newspaper prior to introducing the legislation in this Assembly?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member saying that if the Toronto Star had phoned and asked the same question, it would be appropriate?

Well, Mr. Speaker, basically the foundation for the legislation is contained in the policy paper. I can assure the hon. member that that reporter, hopefully, and no other reporter has a copy of the legislation. If they do, I would like to find out who gave it to them.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, why is the government using all manner of questionable tricks, which most Albertans are sure to find insulting and offensive, in a desperate, last-ditch effort to persuade Albertans that contracting out of major surgeries requiring overnight patient stays should be legalized?

MR. HANCOCK: Point of order.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member to wait and see the legislation before commenting on it. At that time, he will have ample opportunity to debate any points that he might want to raise in this legislative Chamber. That is the time and the place, when the legislation is tabled, to debate the specific points that might or might not be there.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplementary to the Premier: if the government really wants to ban private hospitals, why don't they simply amend the Hospitals Act to require any procedure necessitating an overnight patient stay to be performed only in a public hospital?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this refers to a very specific act that is under the purview of the Department of Health and Wellness, and I'll ask the appropriate minister to respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member posing the question has read our policy document, he will note that we are proposing a much more comprehensive policy with respect to protecting publicly administered, publicly funded health care in this province than would be possible through simply making an amendment to the Hospitals Act. I can assure the hon. member – and he, I think, would be aware of that if he had read our policy document instead of whatever else it was he was reading. It will certainly address the overall plan that we have. Legislation will follow through from the policy paper according to what we've heard from Albertans. It will protect the public health care system, and it will have a number of prohibitions on such things as queue-jumping and being able to get preferential treatment because of the payment of money. Those kinds of protections will be built into the legislation.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Government House Leader, I did catch notice of your anticipated point of order that you want to raise. Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, you want to . . .

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to stand on a question of privilege pursuant to Standing Order 15(1) and reference specifically . . .

THE SPEAKER: You've given me notice. We'll deal with it later.

MR. DICKSON: Fine. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Federal Support for Agriculture

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Last week we heard that the federal government had announced a joint prairie farm disaster assistance program but restricted the benefits to only Manitoba and Saskatchewan, excluding Alberta. Agriculture has been hit very hard in my area in the past few years, and farmers are calling me to find out what's going on here and if the federal government is playing favourites. To me this looks a little bit like the middle finger salute that someone else in Ottawa was famous for a few years back. I'll make it short and sweet with just one question: can the minister of agriculture tell us just what is going on here, and can he do something about it?

MR. LUND: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. As I said yesterday, we haven't been able to figure out how it is that the Liberals feel that farmers across the country should not be treated equitably. We found out today that they have somehow figured out a magic formula using transportation costs, which certainly makes absolutely no sense.

As the hon. member that asked the question correctly indicated, in the Peace River country they have major transportation difficulties and costs. As a matter of fact, in the province of Alberta 44 stations have higher transportation costs than in Saskatchewan. Our costs since the Crow was bought out amount to an increase of about 116 percent. So we will be very anxious to see exactly how the calculations were done to figure out that in fact Alberta doesn't qualify.

We are going to be going down to Ottawa later today, and the objective will be to try to indicate to the federal minister that in fact there has to be equitable treatment of farmers across the country. I have consistently told him and his colleagues that we have situations in Alberta that are similar to Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

We are also going to be pressing that now is the opportunity for them to move ahead with the Estey/Kroeger report, because quite frankly there are several millions of dollars, estimates all the way up to 300 million of farmers' dollars, that have been wasted right today in the fact that the transportation system and the handling system are not efficient in this country. Those are dollars that we need to see coming back to the farmer. So we'll be pushing them to move. They have used the excuse in past times that it would disenfranchise Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Well, they have now paid a pile of money to those two provinces, so we should be able to move ahead.

We will also be questioning the role of the provincial ministers. We thought that co-operation was a proper way to operate within Confederation. So we will be questioning that at this point, because, as you know, the two ministers that ended up getting money walked out of the meeting. So we question how that works: how does that work for unity in the country? Those will be the objectives of the trip.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Education Funding

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the Wednesday before last week's budget the Treasurer promised Albertans that 2,200 new teachers and teaching aides would be hired. The 2,200 teachers and aides were part of a list that supposedly included more computers, severe disability funding, expanded early literacy programs, and increases in teachers' salaries. My question is to the Provincial Treasurer. Did the Treasury Department come up with the 2,200 teacher and aide figure, or was it supplied by the Minister of Learning?

MR. DAY: Mr. Speaker, all of the budget matters, as I clearly indicated even in my opening comments on the budget, are an entire product of input from all MLAs, not just the Treasurer, not just the Minister of Learning, but in fact from all government MLAs following consultations with school boards, regional health authorities, and business groups all over the province. The dollars that are allocated there definitely have that ability to hire that many teachers.

Now, the Minister of Learning has also been quite correct in saying that we want to respect the autonomy of those school boards. An individual school board may say: well, we're not going to hire 20 teachers; maybe we'll hire 18 and three teacher's aides. Those types of micro decisions are certainly left to the school boards, and we respect that.

The dollars are there that have the capacity to do that, and I would think it would be in that range by the time the business plan is completed. The member could tally it up and see if we were close or not.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the Treasurer: why did the Treasurer fail to tell Albertans that the list of education promises was a list from which boards would choose?

MR. DAY: Sorry. I think I just said that, along those lines. I thank him for echoing my remarks there, Mr. Speaker.

DR. MASSEY: Will the Provincial Treasurer set the record straight and tell Albertans exactly the number of teachers and aides that are in the budget and that they can count on being hired?

MR. DAY: I'll try it again, a little slower this time, Mr. Speaker. The budget is put together by all members and, in fact significantly on items to do with learning, by the Minister of Learning. The needs of all the school boards are taken into account, and then the money is allocated in such a way that those needs, should the school board so decide, can be met along those lines.

Now, should a school board have a different idea, they have the autonomy; the Minister of Learning wants to allow for that to flow. He may want to comment further on that.

We should also remember that the growth and the increase in spending actually goes beyond inflation and beyond student growth. So maximum flexibility is provided along those guidelines, Mr. Speaker.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The number 2,200 actually came from the calculation. When you take into account that the actual enrollment growth was calculated at around 1.4 percent, 1.4 percent of 550,000 is roughly in the area of 6,000 to 6,500. If you use an average of between 20 and 25, there are 300 students per year there, for a total of 900 teachers.

Mr. Speaker, the other place where there will be aides hired: there's a 15 percent increase in the special-needs funding. As we know, when it comes to special needs, we're anticipating a huge increase. There's a 10 percent increase for enrollment of kids with special needs, and we anticipate that there will be significant hirings there.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Treasurer is absolutely correct. This budget was about flexibility for the school boards. The school boards asked me for that flexibility. They wanted those dollars to be able to be put in the places they deemed absolutely necessary. We gave them that ability to do it.

Private Health Services

MRS. GORDON: Mr. Speaker, critics of the government's policy statement on the delivery of surgical services have stated that no studies or reports exist to support private-sector involvement in a publicly funded health care system. Using studies not directly relevant to Alberta's proposal, these critics repeatedly pontificate that no recognized authorities support even minor private-sector involvement in a public health care system. My questions are to the minister of health. Are there any major studies from acknowledged authorities to support Alberta's proposed policy to allow some surgeries to be contracted to private providers?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, certainly, as I think has been referenced in this Assembly, there are a number of studies, some reputable, some not, on both sides of this particular question. A couple of days ago I tabled in this Assembly . . . [interjections] The hon. people across the way want me to name them. I would invite them to read, you know, the names on top of the studies that I tabled a short time ago.

In addition to those studies, Mr. Speaker, that were very credible – they'd undergone peer review – I tabled today the 1999 report of the World Health Organization, which is a very prestigious organization. It's entitled Making a Difference, and it does lay out, I think, a very credible, documented, supported set of arguments pointing out that a health care system, provided it is publicly financed and publicly governed, can benefit from a degree of competition from new ideas, from innovation that could be provided by the private sector.

I would like just to conclude my answer by noting that the director general of the World Health Organization is Dr. Gro Harlem Brundtland, and she is supportive of the findings of the report. She's a very, very credible expert in the field of health care from the country of Norway.

MRS. GORDON: Again to the same minister: recognizing that you just said that they were credible, who exactly is the World Health Organization? Where are they from, and what do they do? My constituents want to know. [interjections]

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I have to remark that I find it rather incredible that the members across the way laugh at the title of the World Health Organization, which is an agency of the United Nations. The United Nations is one of the major, I think, accomplishments of the 20th and now 21st centuries in terms of co-operation and credibility among the nations of this world. So that, I guess, is reflective of their overall attitude.

The World Health Organization is noted for its work in terms of looking at the way of developing and improving health care systems across the world, certainly in the areas of disease control and immunization as well as in terms of managing and designing future health care systems.

MRS. GORDON: Could the minister please explain how this organization's report is relevant to and interacts with the Alberta proposal?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the report focuses on the pressures that are on government-run health care systems all across the world. It looks at the key factors that are involved in terms of improving and sustaining these particular health care systems, and of course it looks at the comparative effectiveness of them as they exist right now. It concludes in a general way – and I invite everybody to read the report – that the health care systems of the world that are run by governments would benefit from innovation, including very much so the competition, the different ideas that can be brought into a system to improve it for the years ahead, provided of course that government takes responsibility for regulation and for standards. That is something, of course, that we've said over and over again. We do it now, and we will certainly be doing it in our proposed legislation.

Income Tax

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Speaker, I think it's about time the government sent out their tax plan truth squads. I mean, if you were to listen to the Provincial Treasurer, you'd believe that he is responsible for $216 million worth of federal tax cuts. Will the Treasurer confirm that the federal government in fact will be making over 52 percent of the provincial personal income tax cuts in Alberta during the 2000 tax year?

MR. DAY: You know, that was quite a convoluted question. I might have to get it in writing from him. It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, how even when you try and do something nice and proper, the opposition still kind of gives you a hard time. I guess they think that's their role in life.

If people would observe yesterday, the Premier, in responding to the federal budget – this is to a different political party – actually made positive comments in some areas about the federal budget, and I made those comments, too. We give credit. I'm saying this live, here and on television. We give credit to Mr. Martin and the federal government for some of the good things in that budget. They listened, and they responded. We give credit for that. We're not taking all the credit for it.

Some people have suggested that Alberta, that the Klein government leading and setting the example affected the thinking. I don't know if it did or not, but I give them full credit for some of the good things they did in terms of reducing income taxes for all Canadians. Good for them.

MR. SAPERS: It's a simple question, Mr. Speaker, that could be answered with a yes or no. So I'll repeat it for the Treasurer. Will he confirm that in fact the federal government will be making $158 million, or 52 percent of the total personal provincial income tax cuts in Alberta, during the 2000 tax year? Yes or no?

MR. DAY: Mr. Speaker, we haven't run the numbers on that. I can tell you a couple of things that I can confirm, and I will. The average tax reduction for Albertans that will come into play because of the Alberta tax reform plan will be about 15 percent across the board. The average reduction for Albertans as a result of the federal cuts will be about a 6 percent reduction. So ours is more, but at 6 percent nobody is going to turn that away.

On the area of bracket creep I really want to commend the federal government and Mr. Martin, because as late as a week before his budget he was saying that the federal government would not move on eliminating bracket creep, and in fact he did. I want to congratulate him for that.

In terms of percentages, as the critic is asking, they will move up the basic exemption levels. The federal government will move those basic exemption levels upwards about 1.8 percent. That's better than nothing, and we appreciate that. Our exemption levels are moving up. The basic exemption level is moving up 70 percent, and the spousal exemption is moving upwards 90 percent. They're moving theirs up 1.8 percent. We'll take that. That's fine. More importantly, they also are eliminating bracket creep. We give them full credit and congratulations for that.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard of tax avoidance before but not tax question avoidance.

Mr. Treasurer, given that the federal government is able to direct 42 percent of its fiscal dividend or surplus to tax cuts, would you explain why, with your supposed leadership, Alberta is only directing 12 percent, only 12 percent, 30 percent less, of its fiscal dividend or surplus to tax cuts?

MR. DAY: Mr. Speaker, it's interesting to hear almost a tone of anger that we're reducing taxes. Next year the combination of the federal tax reduction and the provincial tax reduction for a family – now this is an approximation – in the middle-income range, say around $55,000, is going to be over a $1,000, and depending on the number of dependents and what refunds they have coming to them, an average middle-income person, because of what the provincial government has done and the federal government has done, could be up to $1,200, $1,300, $1,500. Just the provincial portion alone of the tax reduction on a family income of $50,000 is $907. Add to that $500 or $600 that the feds are putting through, and it's something like $1,500.

I'm congratulating the federal government. I'm congratulating Albertans for telling us to reduce ours. I don't think a $1,500 or even a $1,000 tax reduction for a middle-income family is something to be angry about. We're quite excited about it, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been some concerns raised by senior citizens that the government's policy statement on the delivery of surgical services signals a return to the days before public health care, when patients had to pay their own bills or buy expensive private insurance. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: can the minister assure Alberta seniors that they will not have to buy private insurance to pay for necessary health care?

MR. JONSON: Yes, certainly, Mr. Speaker.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the minister say what effects, if any, the proposed policy will have on seniors?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, we're going to take great pains in our preparation of the legislation to ensure that seniors do not have to pay for their medically required services. That is a firm commitment. In addition to that, I would just like to point out that beyond the area of medically insured services as they relate to hospitals and to doctors and all the other people that work in the health care system in the acute care area, this government is firmly committed to providing for a continuum of care, to working through the recommendations of the Broda report in terms of healthy aging, and to giving a priority to having the best possible health care system in place for our seniors and pioneers in this province.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again: does the government's policy mean that medically necessary services may be deinsured, forcing patients to pay for their own medical bills?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the policy statement is very clear and the legislation will be even more precise in that all medically required insured services through the requirements of the Canada Health Act – in Alberta, of course, we go way beyond the specific requirements for coverage under the Canada Health Act – will continue to be there for seniors, for middle-aged people, for children, for the population of this province. Yes, because the aging population are, of necessity, sometimes major users of the health care system, it is most important that those services be there for them. As shown by our recent budget commitments and also our firm commitment under the proposed legislation, we will make sure that the service is there for our seniors.

Child Welfare

MRS. SLOAN: Mr. Speaker, the regionalization of child welfare, like health care, has created unnecessary layers of bureaucracy, gaps, and inefficiency. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Can the minister tell the Assembly how file management is co-ordinated for child welfare files at the district, regional, and provincial levels of the department?

Thank you.

MS EVANS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member is aware, some of the most recent signings for child and family service authorities in the local area are even within this last year, and we are working very hard with those authorities to be sure that they're up and running, that their procedures are in order, that standards are in place, focusing primarily on the welfare of the child. A number of the things we have been doing over the past several months: working to alleviate problems affected by workload standards and making sure that the case and the review teams are managing properly.

On the very specific instance of files, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we are working with our partnering ministries in making sure that our record-keeping is in order, that we have a plan for the hundred-year retention of files for children. I'm very satisfied on our review prior to Y2K that the CWIS system and the backup to the CWIS system will guarantee that we have security of the files and that the files for children are fully protected.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is it department policy that duplicate files on all children receiving services from child welfare are held at district, regional, and provincial levels?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, for the precise detail of how the copies are held, I cannot account. However, I have met with a consultant that is doing a complete review of the files. I've identified some of the concerns I personally have relative not only to the protection of the files and the privacy and retention of the files, but I'd be very pleased to table any response relative to the file management within the department at the hon. member's pleasure.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you. What departmental process occurs if it is established that files are missing or incomplete?

MS EVANS: Again, Mr. Speaker, if this Assembly would so indulge, I would be pleased to bring the detail of that forward. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Grizzly Bears

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Hundreds of students at the Lawrence Grassi school in Canmore have communicated to this government in recent weeks their concerns regarding the future of grizzly bears. A well-known grizzly bear expert predicts a dangerous decline in grizzly populations in Kananaskis Country due to increased development and human activities. Would the minister please tell us what his department is doing to protect grizzly populations in Kananaskis Country from lethal contact between bears and humans?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I wish to say first of all that I share the concerns expressed by the students at Lawrence Grassi school, and I've read their letters. I'm also familiar with the work of Dr. Steven Herrero, the grizzly bear expert referred to by the hon. member in her question. I'd like to emphasize that the grizzly bear population is on the rise in the province of Alberta. A number of studies have been done throughout the province, including one in southwestern Alberta which dealt with DNA analysis, and it supports a population estimate of roughly 800 grizzly bears in the province, which is up from about 500 in 1987.

Mr. Speaker, my department is studying grizzly bear habitat in Kananaskis Country through support of the eastern slopes grizzly bear project, one of a number of different regional studies being done throughout the province. Our studies also show that human-induced mortality numbers of grizzly bears have been significantly reduced over the last 20 to 25 years.

In the Bow corridor, Mr. Speaker, we have taken a very proactive approach to managing human and bear conflicts. Our Bow region bear conflict prevention plan deals with the safety of people and the bears in Kananaskis Country. For example, when a grizzly bear is spotted on a public trail in Kananaskis Country, that trail is closed to the public. Our staff will then monitor the area to make sure that the bear has cleared off before the trail is reopened.

MRS. TARCHUK: Mr. Speaker, my second question is also to the Minister of Environment. Genesis Land Development Corp. currently has three development proposals in the Spray Lakes area of Kananaskis Country. These young constituents understand that this is prime grizzly bear habitat, and what they would like to know is: how does what we know about grizzly bears affect the proposed development in this area?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, before I proceed to an answer, I would refer hon. members to Hansard, issue 4 of this the Fourth Session of the 24th Legislature, where I addressed on page 93 a bit of background on the Genesis project. I said and I repeat again that the overriding principle in Kananaskis Country is the protection of the environment. The environmental impact assessment that I ordered for the proposed development of Genesis must take into account grizzly populations and the movements of those bears as part of a very stringent environmental review process.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, my department is gathering public input with respect to the terms of reference for the environmental impact assessment that Genesis would have to prepare should they decide to proceed with this project. I would encourage any Albertan with interest in the area to certainly come forward and provide their input. That information will ensure that a very comprehensive EIA is prepared.

MRS. TARCHUK: My final question is also to the Minister of Environment. These students are aware that a male grizzly bear will roam up to 1,200 square kilometres. What action is your department taking to ensure that bears roaming between federal and provincial jurisdictions continue to be protected?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize that while we do co-operate with other jurisdictions, our efforts are primarily focused on looking after grizzly bears that are found on provincial lands. This includes some of the regional management initiatives that I referred to earlier: the southwestern Alberta grizzly bear strategy, the eastern slopes grizzly bear project, the grizzly bear relocation project, the Foothills model forest grizzly bear research, and the boreal grizzly bear project. My department is working with the federal government to address jurisdictional issues involving grizzly bears in Kananaskis Country and Banff national park through the Canadian Rocky Mountain Grizzly Bear Planning Committee.

I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that we do place a great deal of emphasis on the protection of grizzly bears in the province of Alberta, and perhaps I'll conclude with this one note with respect to the Foothills model forest grizzly bear research that's being done. It is considered very much leading-edge research, so much so that recent presentations have been made by the Foothills model forest research in China because the Chinese authorities are interested in using the type of work being done in that research for the protection of panda bears in China.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of three members to participate in Members' Statements today.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Youth Connections Program

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past five years Alberta has consistently maintained one of the three lowest overall youth unemployment rates in Canada, but we want to do even better. We are succeeding thanks in great part to a valuable youth employment program called Youth Connections.

In 1997 Alberta launched Youth Connections as two pilot projects, Edmonton and Calgary, to help young people age 16 to 24 improve their employment prospects. From the very beginning the service has been a hit. Working in partnership with local business, educators, and community agencies, Youth Connections offers young people who are unemployed or underemployed a way to connect to a career planning service, labour market information, work experience training, and meaningful employment opportunities. At Youth Connections they can find one-on-one career counseling, group workshops on a variety of subjects, computers for resume development and Internet access, a resource library, an extensive employer network, and much more. When appropriate, youth are also encouraged and assisted to go back to school.

By the end of the second year of operation over 10,000 youth took advantage of services offered through Youth Connections. Following this initial success, the Alberta government doubled the funding for Youth Connections to $5 million to expand this unique employment service throughout the province, and expand they did. From the 13 new locations initially planned for this fiscal year, Youth Connections now helps young people in 20 additional sites from Grande Prairie to Lethbridge. By this summer young people from 32 communities throughout Alberta will have new opportunities to reach their full potential and share in the province's prosperity.

Youth Connections is a true success story. I would like to invite members of the Assembly to visit a Youth Connections site in their constituency and see what a fine job they are doing to give young Albertans a step-up in their careers and their lives.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Calgary Herald Strike

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The strike at the Herald, Calgary's oldest and largest daily, is poised to enter its fifth month. I would like to believe that any strike in the province would be a concern for the government, but when questioned a few weeks ago about the role of the government in the Herald dispute, all the minister in charge of stable labour relations could say was that he hadn't heard much about it. What a sad commentary on the importance this government places on stable labour relations.

Long and divisive job action is too common under the watch of this government. Calgary just finished a long, divisive, and occasionally violent strike at Dynamic Furniture and now faces yet another one at the Herald. During the Dynamic Furniture strike many workers expressed their frustration over the lack of leadership provided by government MLAs in Calgary to help resolve the dispute. The workers made their opinion known about how poorly the government handled the situation at the recent PC nomination in Calgary-McCall. The sitting MLA had to take the fall for an uninterested member in a government that places a low priority on stable labour relations.

So what should the role of the government be in the Calgary Herald strike, Mr. Speaker? Firstly, it should be informed and concerned. Secondly, it should preside over a labour relations framework that leads to a resolution, not to further confrontation. A perfect example of this would be binding arbitration on first contracts, and this is a change that the government refuses to make. Finally, the government should know when to intervene and when not to based on common sense, not on preference for one side of a dispute over another. Sadly, our government fails on all three counts, and the people who pay for this lack of concern are the people of Calgary who rely on the newspaper to keep them informed.

On behalf of the Official Opposition I'm hoping that a resolution to this dispute can be found fairly and quickly. I'm sure the current minister responsible does not want to be known as the Neville Chamberlain of Alberta labour relations.

Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Before calling on the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, hon. members, when this Assembly agreed to participate in these two unique processes, one called Recognitions and the other Members' Statements, several sessions ago there was one hon. member who was giving a member's statement and another member rose on a point of order. At that point in time the chair said that he really believed that the whole purpose of members' statements was to allow a member a free expression and did not recognize a petition for a point of order.

Inherent in that understanding by this chairman would be that discussion and statements made in members' statements might deal with policy and not deal with individuals. If members are going to make comments about other individuals, then methinks that the chair must rethink his statement of several years ago and perhaps see the need for points of order or points of privilege to arise out of members' statements. I just give that as a statement today, and some time and thought will be spent on this subject in the future.

Spray Lake Sawmills Ltd.

MRS. TARCHUK: Mr. Speaker, it's a great privilege for me to rise before the House today and recognize a business in the constituency of Banff-Cochrane that serves as a great example of progressive environmental stewardship and financial success. On February 23

Spray Lake Sawmills Ltd. of Cochrane was awarded the Premier's award of distinction as well as the EPCOR triple bottom-line award at the ninth annual Alberta business awards presentation in Calgary, hosted by the Alberta Chambers of Commerce.

The Premier's award of distinction is given to the organization which best embodies the Alberta advantage, exhibits overall outstanding achievement and leadership in Alberta, and demonstrates ongoing and consistent involvement in community events and organizations. The triple bottom-line award is given to a business that best demonstrates excellence in the areas of financial success, environmental commitment and achievement, and community involvement.

Spray Lake Sawmills has been part of the Alberta economy for over 50 years. The family-owned business is the largest employer in Cochrane and has maintained steady growth over the years. The company's primary objective is to ensure high levels of environmental performance and high levels of sustainability while recognizing other forest values and users. As part of its commitment to the environment Spray Lake Sawmills has over the past several years voluntarily embarked upon an extensive public consultation process that involved numerous stakeholders in developing harvest plans for the McLean Creek area of Kananaskis Country. Additionally, they are developing a range of unique wood by-products and have achieved virtually 100 percent utilization of the harvested timber.

Spray Lake Sawmills is a homegrown Cochrane success story and a provincial leader in the area of corporate citizenship. Please join me in congratulating the Mjolsness family and all Spray Lake Sawmills' employees for a job well done.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order Decorum

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising under Standing Order 23(j), which prohibits the use of "abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." I'm mindful of the fact that you had to intercede twice today to remind members of the House about decorum, about the fact that the public is watching, about the fact that the reputation of members of the House is at stake not just as individual members but as leaders in our community, as politicians, and as people who are elected here to represent this House.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona in his remarks – and I say that advisedly. It was supposed to be a short, succinct, brief preamble to a question, but it was indeed remarks. If I caught it correctly, he used, among other things, language like: all kinds of tricks. I'm using that simple phrase. There were other phrases around his question today, and there were other phrases around his question on previous days that I mentioned. It is inappropriate, in my submission, Mr. Speaker, to put in preambles of questions connotations of that nature which suggest that leaders of this province are up to trickery and deceit and those sorts of things.

It is quite appropriate for members opposite, including the interim leader of the New Democrat opposition, to raise questions about policy, to attack policy, to attack what the government is doing, even on occasion perhaps to provide constructive criticism, but it is quite inappropriate and improper, in my humble submission, to draw down all members of this House, including members of the opposition, to be raising questions of deceit, raising questions of trickery, using language of that nature which throws mud on us all and sticks to himself as well as to everybody else, when we're trying to raise the level of public confidence in their politicians and leaders both on the government side of the House and on the opposition side of the House.

I think that in the context of your admonition to the House today twice about decorum, there should be a further admonition with respect to the preamble to the hon. member's question.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on this point of order.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission, I would like to just draw attention to what I said. The hon. Government House Leader talks about the reputation of members, the reputation of leaders of this province, and makes a reference to words like "deceit," which were never used by me and never used in reference to the leaders of this province or the leaders of this government or members of this House.

The words that I used – I just want to put them on record again. I'm talking about the government, and governments are accountable. Governments are motivated agencies, organizations, because they are to achieve certain goals. So I can't see how questioning a government, holding a government to account for what it does leads to or constitutes either insulting or putting in doubt the reputation of leaders or the members of this House. Never once did I refer to a person in my question, Mr. Speaker. I did use the word "tricks." Tricks are techniques or means. This is the sense in which I used the word "tricks." It could be techniques; it could be means.

I'm wondering where the point of order lies. I certainly am most respectful of the dignity of this House and of each member of this House and their right to be able to speak freely on behalf of their constituents and on behalf of Albertans without insulting each other. I don't see the point of order in the hon. House leader's submission today, so I think there's no point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, several points today. The chair did have to rise and remind hon. members about decorum. Quite frankly, of all the questions that were raised in the question period today – and the chair was taking some liberty with the calculation of them: 25, 28, 32. Thirty-two questions in all were raised today, and I do believe that of all the 32 questions, only four actually fell within all the rules of question period. I think 28 of the 32 could have been ruled out.

Methodically as well that it's amazing how many hypothetical questions we have about a bill that has not been introduced, and what will happen if no bill is introduced? Secondly, then, the second series of questions is: if we didn't have a federal budget yesterday, what would the other questions have been? Quite frankly, other than the Member for Peace River and the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, I think that the other 28 questions out of 32 quite legitimately could have been ruled out at one time or another.

Part of what happened today has to do with tone, part of what happened today has to do with manner, and I suspect that part of what happened today has to do with decorum. There's absolutely no doubt whatsoever that if one takes a look at Beauchesne, the word "trickery" has been ruled unparliamentary for a great period of years, and that is not the best question that can be used. But it's also been ruled parliamentary as well, so it depends entirely on the kind of situation that you arrive at.

Now, in the question that was raised today, this was the question by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Speaker, why is the government using all manner of questionable tricks, which most Albertans are sure to find insulting and offensive, in a desperate, last-ditch effort to persuade Albertans that contracting out of major surgeries requiring overnight patient stays should be legalized?

Well, one would suspect that if we applied all the rules with respect to the tone of questions and not being argumentative and not asking for opinion, that question would have been ruled out right at the start and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona couldn't have asked his question because it would have violated certainly certain things in 409 and 410.

A lot of this is in reference to, again, the tone and the intent. It's quite clear that most of the Standing Orders that we have have to deal with individuals, allegations against another member, and in this case one does not appreciate the language overall that was used today in the Assembly. On the other hand, one also has to accept the word of an hon. member, and if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona makes the point that it was not his intent to insult anyone, that he was simply going after policy, well, then one has to accept that. But one would also say again: this was not our best day.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on a point of privilege.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I'd given notice before to preserve my right to make that argument. I've considered the matter further. I received some additional information and on reflection will not be proceeding with the question of privilege I'd given notice of before.

Thank you for the opportunity.

Bill 204

Agricultural and Recreational Land Ownership Amendment Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate February 23: Mr. McFarland]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. With respect to Bill 204, I might start off by saying this. If this bill was genuinely focused on a thoughtful proposal to deal with protecting the family farm in this province, we might well have had a useful, thoughtful debate about it, but this bill is not that kind of proposal. Make no mistake about it: this bill is focused almost exclusively on the Hutterian Brethren Church.

It was interesting that the sponsor of the bill started off by saying: you know, this is not an assault on freedom of religion, and this isn't focused on the Hutterite brethren. But the entire second reading speech by the sponsor is replete with references to Hutterite colonies and particularly to Hutterite colonies in southern Alberta. In fact, he said at page 72 in Hansard:

This is the only church, the only charitable, not-for-profit corporation in Alberta, that wants religious freedom but is also the single largest farming unit in Alberta, that is also approaching closer than any one of the other groups the 15 percent limitation.

The Member for Little Bow in his defence of this bill has made it crystal clear that this is specifically targeted to and against those Albertans living on a Hutterite colony.

You know, Mr. Speaker, one of the proudest moments, I think, for the Lougheed government when they were first elected was the repeal of the Communal Property Act in 1972. That act, of course, had provided formally that you couldn't increase the size of a colony without the consent of the Communal Property Board. Communal living was described in the words of Grant Notley on November 15, one of the two principal tenets of the Hutterian faith, and as a consequence the act . . .

1972, as

He was referring here to the Communal Property Act.

. . . whether by design or otherwise – conflicts with the principle of freedom of religion . . . [and] also offends the principle of freedom of association.

Now, it was interesting in the debate around the repeal of the Communal Property Act that Mr. Notley also noted a need for some form of rural land use controls, so there is clearly a case that can be made for talking about land use controls. In fact, I'll quote again from Mr. Notley, who spoke to the bill in 1972, where he said:

In the long run, it is my submission that the family farm is far more challenged by the threat of corporate farming, alien ownership of land or absentee ownership of land, than it is by the expansion of Hutterite colonies.

Mr. Speaker, it's instructive, and I encourage all members to look at the work that was done in this province around studying the impact of communal property and the Communal Property Board. The Department of Municipal Affairs' special advisory office put out a report entitled Communal Property in Alberta. What they did in this analysis was go through and debunk a lot of the myths that surround Hutterite colonies, and they dealt with some of the myths like: Hutterite colonies are not an economic asset to the province or to local communities; false. They dealt with the myth that Hutterite colonies are causing the demise of rural communities. False. They dealt with the myth that Hutterite colonies are crowding out other farmers. False. They dealt with myths such as Hutterites don't pay taxes, that they don't comply with the law, that they're not good citizens, and on and on and on.

I encourage members to read this item – it's in the Leg. Library downstairs – because it helps to give us some history around this thing, and it also helps to understand why I think it's so poisonous to start a debate around control of lands in this province by spicing your debate with reference to Hutterite colonies instead of focusing on corporate farms or absentee ownership and those kinds of things.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's also instructive if we look to some of the things said by the hon. Dave Russell when he moved second reading – this would be November 15, 1972 – to repeal the old Communal Property Act. I'll just paraphrase. He said that at that point the provincial government was bringing in the Alberta Bill of Rights, and he said quite frankly that if this government was serious about its legislation with respect to human rights and the rights of the individual, and the rights that we want to confirm in the legislation of Alberta affecting all Alberta citizens, that The Communal Properties Act, in its present form, had to be dealt with.

He goes on to say that the way it was to be dealt with was that it was to be eliminated.

He said further:

It became apparent that if a person believed in the Bill of Human Rights, then The Communal Properties Act had to be repealed and it was that simple.

The provincial Conservative government, the first Conservative government in Alberta, to its credit proceeded to do exactly that, to repeal the Communal Property Act, and it is a credit to each one of those men and women in the Legislative Assembly at that time that they did in fact repeal it.

What is frightening, I think, is that as we listen to the Member for Little Bow, it's as if that debate had never happened and he would take us right back to the days of communal property boards. So much for freedom of religion. So much for freedom of association.

Mr. Speaker, the other comments I might refer members to are some comments made, again, by the hon. Dave Russell in closing debate at second reading, and these were effectively some of the last words spoken around the old Communal Property Act. He was quoting from some of the reports – the report I'd mentioned earlier, that's in the library downstairs, and another one – and he said this.

"In 1770 Catherine the Great of Russia encouraged the Hutterites to come in and improve unsettled areas. In 1873 in the United States both government and railway officials pressured the Hutterites to move into the United States." Turning the page we find that the former premier Mr. Brownlee's government, "sensitive to the views of rural municipal organizations, urged the federal government to allow the Hutterites to immigrate. Due to the depressed conditions, local residents of southern Alberta wished to sell their land to the Hutterites; and moreover the fact that the colonies were self-sufficient made them an asset to municipal organizations.

We can go back. I have a keen interest in history, but I think when we deal with the bill that's in front of us, everybody ought to spend some time looking at the history on communal properties. I think that what it comes down to is this, Mr. Speaker. If we're going to deal with large corporate farms, if we're going to deal with alien landownership, let's deal with it from a starting point of respecting freedom of religion, respecting freedom of association, and let's make sure that the mischief we're going to deal with is appropriate and that the bill is appropriately targeted.

So I just come back to what I started out saying. I think it's fair to have a discussion about land ownership, although sometimes when I hear some of the comments from the Member for Little Bow, I sort of close my eyes and imagine we're back in the British Museum in London in 1916 beside Vladimir Ilyich Ulyanov, later known as Lenin. He would have thought this would be an excellent idea, this kind of state control of private ownership and this whole notion of having a bureaucracy deciding how big or how small farms are going to be and who can own farms. He would have felt right at home in 1917 participating and probably supporting the bill. I'm just trying to imagine in my mind the Member for Little Bow and Mr. Lenin sitting around the table in the British Museum and the conversation they might have had. But enough of that, Mr. Speaker.

I think my point is that I cannot support the bill, not because I don't think that there's a legitimate issue around it, but I have to find a way to distance myself, to dissociate myself as completely as possible from the observations and the remarks that were made by the Member for Little Bow. I've read the lessons that I think Alberta's supposed to have learned from that sorry experience with communal property. I've read the debates and I've read the recognition of Mr. Russell and that first Conservative government when they repealed it, and I don't want to go there again, Mr. Speaker. I'd urge all members to avoid the temptation to get into running roughshod over freedom of association or freedom of religion disguised as something else.

The next thing one might talk about is: well, we pass this bill, and then we'd better put in a notwithstanding clause because there's certainly going to be . . . [interjection] Well, we have our friend from Red Deer here who has some expertise in that area too. That suggestion may come, and I want to distance myself from any suggestion of the notwithstanding clause too. I'm not sure, when I hear the sentiments of the bill sponsor and what he's really focused on, namely Hutterite colonies, that any resulting legislation is going to pass Charter muster.

Mr. Speaker, I support the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I support freedom of religion. I support freedom of association. I accept as a legislator that we have to design laws that respect those fundamental principles and work around them, and I'm fearful that this private member's bill is taking us in a direction which is more about abrogating rights than it is about trying to deal with some of those legitimate questions in terms of land use planning.

Those are the comments that I wanted to make at this stage, Mr. Speaker. Thanks very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much for the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 204, the Agricultural and Recreational Land Ownership Amendment Act. The intent of this bill is to limit ownership of arable, cultivated land by any individual, corporation, or religious group to 15 percent of the total farmland in any municipality or county. The bill will help create a level playing field between Alberta farmers, corporations, and communal farming operations.

The Member for Little Bow has brought this bill forward because he and his constituents believe that all Albertans want to have fairness and a level playing field within the industry and a brighter future for their next generation. This issue is on the minds of many Albertans involved in some form of agriculture business.

This bill may well help solve some of the issues, but I believe that the issue is much bigger than landownership. This bill leads us into the discussion of monopolies, whether it be grain, machine agencies, chemicals, processing, Wheat Board control, as well as landownership. These all have a huge impact on the farmer and his ability to compete. His very viability is related to ownership of land.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that before we target limited landownership, we should certainly have some solutions to many of the problems that I mentioned that cause the increased landholdings. It's no secret that rural communities in Alberta are undergoing massive changes as we begin this new millennium. There are a variety of reasons for the rationalization, and many of them are out of this government's control. I'd like to mention just a few.

Elevators, that marked every village and town in the province, are disappearing and will nearly be all gone by the end of this year. They are being replaced by huge throughput facilities that are approximately 75 to 100 miles apart. Farmers are struggling against transportation issues involving marketing freedom and a bureaucratic federal government that seems unwilling to change. These items transfer $200 million to $300 million to $400 million a year back to the individual farmer.

Mr. Speaker, the cards are stacked and are forcing expansion by the producers. The product of our work, the commodities that we export, have been cheapened by backward socialist policies in Europe, causing surpluses in many of the world markets that we sell into. The Europeans swore after the war that they would never be hungry and short of food again, and they're prepared to subsidize accordingly. We have absolutely no control over what other countries do, so we have to find other ways to compete.

Mr. Speaker, it appears that global warming has also taken its toll. Battling these abnormal weather conditions has been a very difficult challenge. But monopolies are another big piece to the puzzle. There are only two major machine manufacturers left. Large combines and tractors now are costing up towards $300,000. Even small ones are up to $100,000 or more. Farmers are trying to buy those machines with $3 wheat. That's like three cups of coffee for a bushel of their wheat.

As the Member for Little Bow mentioned last week, total ownership from gate to plate leaves control in the hands of a few. The same is true for chemicals and fertilizers. Control of markets means control of prices. If the price of wheat were doubled, I wonder if there would be any more money left in the producer's pocket. Or would the input costs go up accordingly? Certainly the history in Europe has shown that the input costs go up accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, just for a minute I want to tell you a little bit of a story about monopolies. It was a university professor that started this going. Now, I don't know whether that means anything or not. It was about a cheap food policy in North America. As we developed bigger and better equipment and the prices stayed low, farmers kept buying out other farmers. They kept buying them out and the bigger machinery allowed them to do that until there were only a few left. Then one day there was a big drought in the southern part of North America, and one farmer, one producer, bought out the whole U.S. He had all this big equipment to operate it. That was the end of the cheap food policy. It not only did that. Inefficiency sets in when there's no competition, and there wasn't enough food produced. Now, I know this is a what-if story, but it shows the direction that we are taking in this country, and it's worldwide.

What I want to say is that we need to take a bigger view of this picture. I think we need to sit down and think about what we want our province to look like in the next 50 or hundred years, and once we do that, we can establish the policy that sets a framework for land use in our province. We need to develop a policy that will take us where we want to go in terms of landownership. As agricultural resources and markets for products are gradually owned and operated by corporations, the small, individual farmer slowly loses his ability to determine his own destiny.

Mr. Speaker, this issue is extremely complex. It's something that countries around the world are struggling with. We need to take a good look at some of the things the U.S. and Europe are doing and if they apply to our situation in Alberta. As was mentioned last week, some states do limit landownership. We need to find out how this is working, and we need to explore all of those types of options before we jump in and limit landownership. We have to study this problem and perhaps look for solutions that we haven't even considered before. By establishing a policy that addresses the use of land, we are one step closer to addressing the issues that face the agriculture industry in this province.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 only attempts to address a small portion of this issue. Is there a level playing field in the province now? In some ways I suspect not, but if the playing field isn't level, it should be addressed either through the regulations or the specific acts that address that concern but not through the Agricultural and Recreational Land Ownership Amendment Act. I'm convinced that large corporations or the Hutterian Brethren Church would be willing to sit down with government and work out any differences, if there are any.

The good news is that the world's population is growing. The day will come when farmland is the most valuable commodity this province has to offer, long after the conventional oil has been tapped, and the best way for us to capitalize on that is to ensure that the agriculture industry is strong and diverse. My constituents believe that the independent farmer is still a part of this mix. This would be a great topic of discussion for the upcoming agriculture summit, where we will have some of the brightest minds offering their input. I look forward with anticipation to that input.

We know that the agriculture industry is changing. Technology and new challenges are changing the way we do business. New technology enables us to do more with less. Vertical integration in the industry has found new efficiencies, revolutionizing the food production industry. We find ourselves at an interesting point in our history. On the one hand, technology is showing us the limitless possibilities there are in the agriculture industry. On the other, corporate . . .

Service Learning Program for High School Students

501. Mrs. Gordon moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to incorporate as part of the high school curriculum a service learning program encouraging students to become involved in activities that promote and demonstrate good citizenship, community service, and personal responsibility.

[Debate adjourned February 22: Ms Carlson speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and join in the debate on Motion 501 today. Service learning education has very positive goals and objectives. Its mandate to students is to aid in the development of young people into responsible citizens and contributing community members. By affording students the option of participating in meaningful service that is beneficial to themselves and to the greater community and reinforcing those lessons through academic preparation and structured reflection, students, parents, teachers, faculty, and the community can band together to provide young Albertans with tremendous opportunities to express themselves not just as members of society but as members of society who take ownership, responsibility, and pride in the contributions they offer.

Mr. Speaker, service learning is a new way to get back to basics. It is a learn-by-doing approach to the curriculum. Students enhance their education by getting real-life experiences in subjects they study while at the same time meeting community needs.

An effective service learning project is comprised of at least three components: preparation, action, and reflection. Preparing students with the knowledge and skills needed for service includes teaching students about their community and how to identify needs as well as providing them with the specific skills needed to perform the service activities. Preparation should include an explanation of why it is important to perform the service and what it means to be an active citizen.

Ideally, service learning should be used to teach curricular objectives, so preparation activities could be tied to classroom lessons. Some examples might include having a speaker come in to teach students about working with elderly residents in a nursing home before going to visit the site, having a representative from the United Way or a volunteer centre come and talk about the volunteer opportunities in the community, or performing a research assignment about the issue the service relates to.

Action is the second necessary component to service learning and is achieved by performing one or more of several activities. Some students are involved in direct-service activities, where students have face-to-face contact with the service recipient. Some examples might include tutoring, serving meals at a homeless shelter, or working with the elderly in a nursing home. Other students may perform indirect services without having face-to-face contact with recipients. This form of action usually channels resources to help alleviate a certain problem. Some examples include food and clothing drives, fund-raisers, and environmental projects.

Other students may choose to become involved in advocacy action by educating others about a particular issue, with the goal being to eliminate the cause of a particular problem. Letter campaigns, preparing and displaying posters, putting on plays, or developing educational material for others are examples of advocacy measures.

Mr. Speaker, the final component to a successful service learning program is reflection. During this phase students consider the impact that their service had on themselves and the community as well as what worked well and what could be changed to make the project better. Reflection might include a journal, having classroom discussions, or videotaping the project and reviewing and discussing it after.

Service learning is not the same as volunteerism. Volunteers engage in service for a variety of personal reasons. They do not link their service to academic studies, nor do they receive academic credit for their efforts. Service learning also differs from community service in that people become engaged in that activity for yet another variety of reasons. Community service is a broad term that can encompass a court-ordered stipend or traditional voluntary services. It also does not link to academic studies, which is a basic tenet of service learning programs.

Work study internship is also different from service learning in that the student interns frequently work at a nonprofit business to benefit the financial standing of that business. Students are not necessarily working to improve their communities through their internship experiences. However, as my colleague from Wetaskiwin-Camrose pointed out, there can be potential for overlap between work study initiatives, special project courses, and service learning. Students could engage themselves in service learning if through their internship, experiences, or special projects they work to improve the health or welfare of their community while linking their services to academic studies.

Mr. Speaker, the concept of learning through service is gaining momentum among educational stakeholders. The advocates of service learning believe that this method facilitates school improvement. The combination of classroom work and community service produces significant improvement in student attitudes, motivation, and achievement.

Service learning represents an innovative approach to youth involvement and meaningful learning through community service activities. The relevance and power of the method lie in the capacity of service learning to connect classroom learning to real-life situations. Students involved in service learning benefit in numerous ways. Their experiences contribute to personal growth, knowledge, skills, and values, focusing on citizenship and civic responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, the recently rekindled discussion on service learning has been fueled by recognizing a need to positively influence our current youth culture. Through service learning teachers and students would become energized through a unique educational process that encourages action to improve or enhance a real-life situation.

Action should be placed on the potential of youth, their strengths, participation, and capacity for making positive contributions. The involvement of youth in service learning activities can make a lasting difference by providing them a sense of purpose and motivating them to remain in school and learn. With the best interests of students in mind it is important to seek collaboration among the stakeholders and reach an agreement on how service learning can positively influence student development and student achievement.

Mr. Speaker, service learning aims to connect the personal and the intellectual to help students acquire knowledge that is useful in understanding the world by building critical-thinking capacities and perhaps leading students to ask fundamental questions about learning and about society while committing themselves to improve both. Service learning aims to prepare students who are lifelong learners to participate in the world. Service combined with learning adds value to each and transforms both.

So I would urge all members of this Assembly to support Motion 501, to encourage the building of new bridges between our educational system, our community, and the youth of our province.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure this afternoon to rise to speak to Motion 501, the incorporation of a service learning program in the high school curriculum. This motion was sponsored by the Member for Lacombe-Stettler, and I must say that I am generally in favour of this motion. It does require a close look at what this would do to our curriculum studies in schools. Before giving full support to this particular motion, I think that there are a number of questions and clarifications that are required.

In looking at clarification, I think that there are some terms that we have to look at very closely. What do we mean by "good citizenship, community service, and personal responsibility"? How would this course differ, for example, from what is happening in our CALM program now or in our social studies or even the component of our physical education 30 classes that requires most students in them to participate in some type of service learning? The Member for Lacombe-Stettler also spoke of the service ethic and the community involvement programs, and we would certainly want to have some more clarification on this particular point.

We do know right now that our education system, particularly education at the high school level, is quite restrictive, particularly on those students who are trying to graduate in the three-year program. If we put in another voluntary course, is this going to be another course that these students would not be able to fit into their schedules?

I think there are components of this course that are very, very beneficial, and it certainly would be a good balance to what is happening now in our schools, where we do have a tremendous amount of focus on math and science. I think this is proven by how well our students in Alberta do in these two disciplines, so I really do feel that this would be a great offset of those two programs and that if time permitted, it would not detract from the great strides that we've made in these two areas.

Edmonton-Glengarry, Mr. Speaker, is a constituency in northeast Edmonton, and Edmontonians will tell you that the northeast has long prided itself on the amount of community involvement by its citizens and the tremendous amount of volunteering that occurs in that community. By incorporating a course on service learning, we will put students in a situation where they will have quite a number of new experiences and, I'm certain, good experiences, but this will put pressure on our core programs.

When we look at schools, as well, we do realize that the schools themselves and the communities have a tremendous number of programs that our youth are currently involved in. I would hope to see some type of a situation here whereby these students could possibly get credit for the time that they do spend currently in the school programs, the community programs in place of volunteering. It might be that the number of hours required for volunteering in this course are written down to a certain degree because of this involvement. As well, those programs that do take place in the community and the school do not only involve participation by a student but also the volunteering of other students to serve as timekeepers, for example, during a basketball game or a statistician on a basketball team or whatever.

As well, we had a reference made in the last discussion on sports about how perhaps these students could get involved in increasing their capabilities and abilities in coaching different sports. As part of my background I have been quite involved in sports here in the province, and I must say that all of the sports that we presently have in Alberta have a requirement that coaches who wish to participate in the sport must take coaching levels. Certainly in all sports the performance of coaches has increased tremendously as a result. I would think that if these students were to get involved in these particular types of programs, it would certainly be a great initial step in seeing them get involved as adults as they get older.

Now, all students do have the option of taking this course, Mr. Speaker, but one of the drawbacks is that if they do choose to take this course, in reality it is a type of involuntary volunteerism.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, I hate once again to interrupt, but under Standing Order 8(4) the time allocation for this particular motion has now left us, and I must now put all questions, concluding the debate under consideration.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 501 lost]

Canada Health Act

502. Mr. Shariff moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to reaffirm its commitment to the five principles of the Canada Health Act and ensure that all provincial health care legislation continues to comply with these principles.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

MR. SHARIFF: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move Motion 502.

Mr. Speaker, public health care is part of the fabric of Alberta's culture, something very dear to all Albertans. Since the concept of publicly funded universal health care was developed over 30 years ago, it has become part of our identity as Canadians. Countless surveys have shown that when Canadians are asked to identify things that make them proud to be Canadians, public health care often tops the list. There is a comfort, a peace of mind that comes from knowing that when that day comes when we are most in need, our public health care system will give us the treatment we need. And when the crisis is over, Canadians don't receive a massive bill. Our public health care system means that we don't have to choose between what is good for our health and what is good for our bank accounts.

In 1984 Parliament unanimously passed the Canada Health Act. The Canada Health Act was intended to establish criteria and conditions for insured health services and extended health care services provided under provincial law that must be met before a full cash contribution may be made by the federal government. The act stipulates that the health care system must be publicly administered and operated on a nonprofit basis by a public authority. It stipulates that insured services must be comprehensive. It also says that the system must be universal, that all individuals are covered under the system. The act says that people must be covered no matter where and when they move within the country and that there are no charges for insured services. It seeks to maintain a universal level of quality across the country. It means that all Canadian citizens are guaranteed a certain level of quality and accessibility.

Along with this legislative commitment come the challenges of having to administer a massive system like public health care. It has become our province's single biggest expenditure. Of the $16.2 billion we spent in 1999, 30 percent went to health care. In the 2000-2001 fiscal year our government will spend $5.6 billion on health care. Mr. Speaker, health care spending has been difficult to control. A growing population and inflation have resulted in steadily increasing costs. It is not easy to meet the challenges of maintaining such an immense and valuable system.

Albertans expect a good public health system, and they deserve it. We are bombarded with stories about the latest misstep in our health system. Opposition members remind us constantly about people waiting too long for surgeries or MRIs, people getting sent from one hospital to another, people sitting too long waiting for treatment in emergency.

[Mr. Hlady in the chair]

What you don't hear often are the miracles that happen in the health system. Every day around 32 babies are born in Calgary hospitals, and that is just the beginning. There are immunizations and programs for young mothers. There's long-term and palliative care, and there are people, thousands of people – doctors, nurses, emergency workers, physiotherapists and rehab workers, administrators, technologists, home care workers – a variety of people working in community programs. It's business about people, and it works.

The challenges facing our health care system are growing. It is not unreasonable to imagine that one day more than half of our total spending will be dedicated to health care. That's why we need to continue to find new opportunities to maintain our commitment to the Canada Health Act. We should leave no stone unturned in our search for newer and better ways of doing things. We must explore new technologies and methodologies. We have to make the health care system flexible enough to change with the times and adapt to new circumstances.

The biggest challenge we face in helping to end the suffering of Albertans is our finite resources. Mr. Speaker, in a perfect world there would be no waiting lists for health care in this province. Every person in need would have their problem addressed immediately. If you tore a ligament in your knee, you'd have it fixed the next day. Unfortunately, this is not a perfect world. We don't have the resources to treat every problem immediately. We cannot ensure that revenues will always be as they are now. We cannot commit to building more hospitals and more clinics because we are not sure if our sons and daughters will have the resources to pay for them after we are gone.

So how do we address this problem? How do we reduce waiting lists and help people get on with their lives as fast as possible? Mr. Speaker, our government has developed a policy statement on the delivery of surgical services. This policy will give the health care system the flexibility to contract out certain surgical services to private medical practitioners. Under the system the RHAs will be able to grant contracts to Alberta entrepreneurs to complement the existing health system.

This proposal means that waiting lists can be reduced without the government having to build new buildings and infrastructure. It means the government does not bear the long-term cost of maintaining health care facilities. It gives health care operators the freedom to go out and find ways of treating those who need to be treated. This policy will help Alberta meet the commitments laid out in the Canada Health Act. The policy even adds another principle, excellence. That means that services offered in a private setting will be legally required to be of the highest quality.

We have asked Albertans how they feel about this policy, and 59 percent of respondents said that they supported this policy, which is surprising, considering the massive campaign of misinformation that is going on. When asked why they support the policy, 38 percent said that it was because they wanted shorter waiting lists. Of the people polled, 72 percent believed that contracting out services would reduce waiting lists, and that is what this all comes down to: do we want to have long waiting periods for treatment, or shall we try something new and innovative?

It is clear that there is a great deal of misinformation out there around this government's policy on health care. This is a perfect opportunity to express to Albertans our commitment to universal health care. Passing this motion sends a crystal clear signal to Albertans, opposition members, and the special interest groups who question our commitment to the Canada Health Act.

Special interest groups have continually spread misinformation about the proposed health care legislation. Albertans have seen an endless parade of television ads, press conferences, and so-called expert opinions. And I mean it when I say that it is a campaign of fear. We've all seen and heard how the lobbyists are going to seniors' centres and long-term care centres to supposedly educate them about this government's intentions. It's perhaps the cruelest of all tactics to go to the people who rely so heavily on the health care system and fill them with fear.

Mr. Speaker, I have to be honest here and say that I'm feeling like I'm experiencing deja vu. I feel like I'm having a terrible nightmare, that we've returned to 1993. In 1993-94, as our government fought to do what Albertans told us to do and eliminate the deficit, those who opposed us launched a victim of the week campaign to frighten Albertans into rejecting our reforms. They paraded the poor and infirm for all to see and branded us as evil tyrants. Over and over we heard that the sky was falling. The sick and the aged were told that our government was trying to take their care away. Look at us now. The sky has not fallen. Our health care system is still in place and is stronger and more efficient than it ever was. The sick and aged were used as pawns in this elaborate propaganda campaign and ultimately became real victims, victims of a cowardly tactic. The good news is that Albertans didn't buy it last time, and they aren't going to buy it this time.

Mr. Speaker, it is painfully clear to me that the status quo is not going to be effective in the not-too-distant future. This government has gone above and beyond the call of duty when it comes to the Canada Health Act. Let's talk about some of the things the Alberta system covers that are over and above those stipulated in the Canada Health Act. In addition to meeting the requirements set out in the Canada Health Act, the Alberta government has chosen to provide full or partial coverage for many other services, such as long-term care, home care, immunization programs for children, diagnostic services like CAT scans and MRIs, mental health services, extended health benefits for seniors and widows, respite care, palliative care, air ambulance, podiatry, physical therapy, speech pathology, and occupational therapy. The list goes on and on and on.

The point is that our government has been a reliable and responsible steward of the public health care system for decades. We will continue the tradition into the distant future. I'm proud to stand before the House and sponsor this motion. I'm hopeful that Albertans will see this as another sign that we are totally committed to maintaining universal public health care in Alberta. That commitment is solid throughout the entire government.

I also hope Albertans see the lobbyists and the special interest groups for what they really are, shameless alarmists with their own hidden agendas. Mr. Speaker, these lobbyists and special interest groups are looking out for their own well-being, desperately struggling for self-preservation, and like the dinosaurs they will ultimately lose their struggle, because the Alberta way is not to bury our head in the sand. The Alberta way is to meet problems head-on and find answers.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, this campaign of fear is not a new tactic. No, not at all. We have seen it all before. Albertans didn't buy it in 1994, and they aren't going to buy it now. The status quo could mean the end of publicly funded health care in Alberta. I invite all members of this Legislature to join me in reaffirming for all Albertans our commitment to the five principles of the Canada Health Act. Standing together and supporting this motion would be a reassuring gesture to concerned Albertans that we are not planning to privatize health care and that we are all in this together.

Mr. Speaker, the issue of health care is one that is dear to most Albertans. I think Members of this Legislative Assembly should be mindful that we are dealing with people: children, their parents, and the elderly. We must ensure that the people of Alberta know the truth about our government's intentions. If you agree that health care is facing a serious challenge, we should work together to find solutions aimed at preserving health care for coming generations. I urge members of this Assembly to put fear mongering aside in this debate and join us at the table and work towards positive change.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise this afternoon to address the motion that's been put forward with regards to the principles in the Canada Health Act. It's interesting to note that when the Official Opposition put that forward in legislation, members of the government stood en masse to reject the principles of the Canada Health Act. Here we are three years later, and all of a sudden it seems they have found the light.

It is also interesting to note that while we have the words that indicate there is a commitment to the Canada Health Act – and they are fine words indeed – about it being part of the fabric of our country and that the five principles are important to ensure that individuals who require health care do in fact receive the care that is needed, we have watched on this side in the Legislative Assembly, the Official Opposition's side, for seven years this government pushing the envelope with regard to those principles in the Canada Health Act to ensure that privatization is the end result of that pushing of the envelope.

We see it right now with regards to the provision of service of MRIs. We have seen a recent study with regards to cataract surgery done in Calgary that indicates that we in fact have a two-tiered system in Alberta. Those who can afford to pay may get a better lens than those who can't afford to pay and may get to jump the queue. We have seen that with the MRIs as well. So though it is all fine and dandy, Mr. Speaker, to say that this government – because my guess is that they will stand in full force and support the member's motion. In fact, while they will do that, there are other things that are happening in this province that indicate that there is not that support of the Canada Health Act in actual action.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I don't think this is a time to be coy with Albertans, and it is definitely not a time to hoodwink Albertans. They know what the truth is. They know intuitively that by allowing private, for-profit hospitals in this province, no matter what you call that, whether you call them overnight surgical facilities, whatever word you want to call them, that transgresses not only the spirit but the intent of the Canada Health Act and, in fact, also opens up the doors to NAFTA.

When you talk about victims of the week, you know, let me tell you about some of the victims of this government's health care plans, and these are just some of the victims that I've heard of within the last little while. This is a letter that I just got out of my mailbox today. It's from a gentleman in Granum, Alberta. He and his wife are retired seniors. He is 71 years of age. She needs cataract surgery on both of her eyes. She has been told that the earliest she can have that surgery is January 2001 and that it will then cost her $350 per eye to have lens surgery, but she still must wait another year. Her alternative is to go to Mexico, Mr. Speaker. The cost will be $1,400 per eye, which together with airfare and accommodation will total some $6,000. The eye centre in Calgary where she was examined told her that they could reduce the waiting time considerably but are restricted by the provincial government in the number of surgeries they are allowed to perform.

It further goes on to say:

I was a supporter for many years of Ralph Klein and the Conservative Party but no more and have canceled my membership. When I needed critical heart surgery I had to have it done in Vancouver because of the unbelievable waiting list in Calgary.

There is so much misleading information put out by the government and there is an old saying about fooling some of the people some of the time.

That's just one example.

There's another example, a phone call I got from a gentleman from Canmore who six weeks ago had broken his leg. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that he was sent to Edmonton, that he is now in the Glenrose? He's had two operations, he's still waiting for further surgery, and he has been in pain for six weeks.

There's the issue of the young teenager in Lethbridge who has been waiting months – months – for her surgery to occur, and as a result she may be missing out on a college soccer scholarship.

I have had calls in my office from people who are waiting for cancer treatment. On Friday I had a call from a constituent of mine whose father-in-law was at one of the hospitals here in Edmonton and was let out of ICU. There is no step-down in our major hospitals at this point, and you know what? They took him off the machines on Sunday; he died because there was no 24-hour care for him. And that's not the first instance of an issue that has occurred.

So do you want to stand up and say that you support the principles of the Canada Health Act? Well, you know what? Go right ahead and do it. But you know what? It's meaningless unless you start to put some of the actual reforms in place that were promised in 1993, when we stood on this side in this Legislative Assembly and said to you that if you do what you intend to do, this is going to be the result. At that point, the members of the government and the Premier and the Minister of Health of the time said that we were the ones fear mongering, that we were the ones that were representing the special interest groups, that we didn't know what we were talking about. You know what? If you go back to the Hansards of '93, '94, and '95, I guarantee you that exactly what we said would happen is happening right now. So why don't you do some research?

Speaking of which, I think the research that has been put forward to date has been research that has been faulty, that has come to conclusions – we did look at those eight studies, and it's interesting to note that five of those eight were in the Kevin Taft report.

I had a quick look at the WHO study that was submitted this afternoon, and the reality is that what that WHO study talks about is that if you are capital poor as a country, then you might want to look at private investors. I don't think, Mr. Speaker, that any organization in the world would consider Alberta capital poor. So again we have indication of how the government is trying to contort the argument, to make the argument one that sounds as if it's special interest groups, that sounds as if it is not based on fact, that sounds as if there is a malicious intent by the Official Opposition against reforming and changing our public health care system. Well, the only intent we have is to ensure that private, for-profit health care does not find a foothold in this province.

The letter that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona tabled this afternoon was from Shirley Stinson, and I believe that's gone to all Members of the Legislative Assembly. In it she expresses her grave concern and asks the question:

Do Alberta's Conservative MLAs realize that privatization is not only a non-solution but that if introduced, it would in practical terms be irreversible under the NAFTA agreement?

Premier Klein, I would urge you and your fellow MLAs to find solutions which uphold the principles and - the public good - of the Canada Health Act.

Now, it's easy for the members of the government to say that it's wrong. It's easy for the members of the government to say that we are fear mongering, but the reality is that I have had letters, very thoughtful letters, that have been copied to me, that have gone to the minister, that have gone to different members within this Legislative Assembly on the government side, and they have asked very thoughtful questions. The Gould's is one, a husband and wife who have written to various Members of the Legislative Assembly and the minister of health.

There is another gentleman – I just happen to have these here with me – a Mr. Doram, who has also written. You know, he keeps asking the same questions of the minister over and over again: show me your studies; tell me how for-profit hospitals can be more effective, can be more efficient.

DR. TAYLOR: Read Code Blue.

MS LEIBOVICI: I have read Code Blue.

One question that was asked by Mr. Gould just recently, on February 28, was: "Are you suggesting that the for-profit hospitals will only have contracts for the short term?"

MR. SMITH: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming on a point of order.

Point of Order Tabling a Cited Document

MR. SMITH: It's a point of order, Mr. Speaker, under Beauchesne.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Beauchesne or Standing Orders?

MR. SMITH: The member in quite an eloquent debate makes wonderful comments but refuses to table any of the documentation. So I'm simply pointing to the appropriate citation that requires that when she reads from documents, Mr. Speaker, she would be tabling the same, in fact tabling for the information of all the House so action can be taken on it. Under Standing Order 21.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Standing Order 21 or 23?

MR. SMITH: It was 21 actually. I was thinking of 23, and then I thought it wouldn't be quite as appropriate as 21.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Well, hon. member, 21 happens to be about closure, so I don't think that's quite the particular one that you were looking for, and based on that particular point, I don't think you really have a point on this particular case.

However, referring to 23, was there a particular sub under 23 that you were referring to?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, there is a citation that talks about the importance of tabling information which the member refers to and reads verbatim from. So it is simply that citation. I would ask that the member oblige the House and conduct herself in full accordance with the rules of the House.

4:10

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Well, thank you for that insightful thought. Unfortunately, I'm not sure exactly which point it is, so if you could come back with the specifics for me, we would be able to go forward.

If you'd like to continue, hon. member.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just put the minister's mind at ease. I have no problem in tabling these, and we'll get the appropriate tablings for you tomorrow. The reality is that you've all been copied on these, so you should know what I'm talking about. Actually, just to correct myself, you haven't been copied on each and every one of them, but you have been copied on the majority of them.

Debate Continued

MS LEIBOVICI: The one from Mr. Gould goes on to say:

As an investor I would be very reluctant to put my money into facilities, or sign a contract with an RHA, that would not provide for a reasonable guarantee of regular acceptable returns on my investment.

That to me doesn't sound as if we're protecting our Canada Health Act, if the government can't provide the answers to those questions.

[The Speaker in the chair]

That's just a sampling of some of the letters that I receive daily, and I know you receive them as well because most of them are on e-mail. What they are is they're pushed in somehow, and they go to everybody's e-mail. But I will, as I indicated, provide those copies for the minister and for the Assembly.

Now, I listened very carefully to the language from the member who put forward this particular motion. He talked about entrepreneurs in health care, and that, in fact, is one of the reasons that people do not trust the proposal that is put forward by this government. The majority of Albertans do not, I believe, think that health care is a commodity that's sold like a pair of shoes. They recognize and the member, having worked in the field of social services, should also recognize the fact that health care is a social good that cannot be measured in the same way as a pair of shoes. There are very distinct differences in what health care is, what the method is for measuring and for accounting for health care that is delivered in a province and in a country. In fact, that is what Albertans know and recognize.

Now, I've heard over and over again – and the member spoke about it today as well – that these special interest groups are just proliferating across the province and that in fact they are the ones that are indicating that the public health care system is under attack by this government, which is our position as the Official Opposition as well. What is interesting is that when you look at the magnitude and the number of people that are involved with regards to these so-called special interest groups and when you look at the magnitude of the government and the ability it has to spin-doctor, I don't think that's a fair comparison, and for the government to say "Poor me; pity me" I think is a real cry of desperation.

If, in fact, the argument that is being put forward here on a daily basis cannot be sustained by fact, cannot be supported by actual cases of where this has worked in the world, then that's what we should be talking about in this Legislative Assembly, not how the government feels attacked and this member feels attacked by the so-called special interest groups, and I think it's very important for the Members in this Legislative Assembly to realize that. In fact, the Speaker always reminds us of that as well, that every individual in this province has a right and that as an Albertan every individual has the right to join with a group and to put forward their opinions on an issue. So why go around labeling Albertans, your constituents, people that may or may not vote for you – maybe some of them have – as a special interest group? That I think is rude, to say the least.

Now, when we talk about accessibility, portability, the five elements of the Canada Health Act, what's interesting is that in this province today we don't have those five elements. What we have set up through the system of the regional health authorities in this province right now are 17 regions, and there was a presentation recently that was provided to the standing committee by Donna Wilson to talk about the structure of the regional health authorities. We have barriers within our health care system right now, barriers with regards to access to long-term care; barriers with regards to physiotherapy services; barriers with regards to operations, orthopedics; barriers with regards to dialysis treatment. The list goes on and on and on.

So when we talk about supporting the five principles of the Canada Health Act, I would think that support would extend to within the province itself, and what that would be is a clear indication to the minister of health that what he has to ensure is that there will be seamless boundaries between the 17 regions and the Mental Health Board and the Cancer Board – so in a sense 19 regional health authorities have been set up – so that we can ensure within our own province that the principles of the Canada Health Act are being met, and right now they're not.

The reality is that we've heard a lot of spin from the government with regards to protecting the principles of the Canada Health Act. As long as the bill allows for overnight stays in a facility that is not a public facility but is a for-profit facility, the reality is that that legislation is meaningless, that in fact what the government has set up is a method by which it can contravene the intent and the spirit of the Canada Health Act.

So, as I said, while we will all stand and vote in favour of the Canada Health Act, there are realities in this province that must be looked at, realities that we hear from our constituents within our constituencies each and every day, realities we know exist with the inequities within the regional health authorities at this point in time, and the reality that the bottom line is that if there is a for-profit hospital open within this province, it opens the doors on NAFTA and kills medicare as we know it today not only in this province but across Canada.

I would direct the members to look at the WHO report that the minister put forward today in the Legislative Assembly. It talks glowingly of the Canadian system and the Canada Health Act, but what it says is that for poor countries, they may want to look at privatizing. So why don't we look at what we're doing right?

If members are looking for ways to deal with fixing the hospital situation, I would suggest that the minister of technology, who was waving Code Blue at me earlier, might want to look at the Maclean's article from January 17, 2000, by Michael Decter, who has provided some solutions as to a plan to end the hospital crisis within the public health care system. It can be done, Mr. Speaker. What is required is a real will and commitment to not only support the principles of the Canada Health Act but also to enforce those principles and to ensure that our publicly funded health care system is sustained, maintained, and enhanced.

So thank you very much for this opportunity to shed some light on this discussion here and a perspective that I believe is one that provides a broader overview of what is happening in this government right now with regards to health care and the Canada Health Act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. SMITH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me real pleasure to join in debate, particularly after I felt the hon. member who just spoke wanted to support, will probably support, is convinced that she should support but comes through in such a manner it's hard to tell when a Liberal is being positive. So I'm going to assume that there's support there.

Mr. Speaker, I do want to speak to the motion with respect to endorsing the principles of the Canada Health Act, and I also want to bring to the attention of the House that it's interesting that it would come forward from the Member for Calgary-McCall, one who's not afraid to put minorities over majorities, one who's not afraid to put compassion over conflict, and one who is not afraid to put community over partisan politics. Mahatma Gandhi once said: be the change you would see in the world. I believe the Member for Calgary-McCall displays those types of values and, not only that, underscores the importance of this act to Canadians as well as to Albertans, and thank you for the opportunity to discuss it in this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, I also immediately, without reading from it, will table something that we are talking about, that being the Canada Health Act. I think that it's often a good piece of information, once you're debating something, to actually look at that information. So I am tabling copies of the Canada Health Act, that has a couple of interesting portions to it that I think all members could value from in looking at.

In the preamble, Mr. Speaker, it says that future improvements in health will require the cooperative partnership of governments, health professionals, voluntary organizations and individual Canadians.

In fact, if you were to take that one paragraph and undertake the discussion of the health care debate in the province of Alberta as it exists today, that's exactly what this government is doing. It's engaging the partnerships of governments, health professions, voluntary organizations, and individuals Canadians. It's quite interesting that it doesn't say anything about opposition parties in there, but – I don't know – maybe that was just an oversight in the drafting of the bill.

Also, the preamble of the Canada Health Act says that continued access to quality health care without financial or other barriers will be critical to maintaining and improving the health and well-being of Canadians.

This is one of the very, very few references in the Canada Health Act that references finance or references cash. In fact, Mr. Speaker, as we all know, a lot of things are not attainable, are not possible unless there is financial wherewithal.

If you look at the attempt in the federal budget yesterday and the success of the provincial budget last week, which looks clearly at going through the rapids of debt, deficit, at a country going broke and being able to regather the strength and the forces at the other side of the rapids of debt and deficit and then move on and be able to put financial wherewithal to a social program that benefits not only all Albertans but all Canadians, I think that speaks very highly to the motives behind the plan of the government.

But continually – continually – we hear tabling of complaint after complaint, problem after problem. We've clearly identified that the issue the government is looking at is one of access and reduced waiting lists. So rather than table the complaints, we would really expect the opposition to table solutions, to get on board the wagon to be able to start talking about how to build, how to construct, how to make $5.3 billion of health care money work like $6 billion of health care money or $6.5 billion of health care money. There's nothing in the Canada Health Act that says that we shall waste money. I couldn't find that anywhere in there.

I think there is a government responsibility to ensure that moneys in the health care system are used wisely, are used prudently, are used competitively, and are used in such a fashion as to maximize the utility of the five principles of the Canada Health Act: to maximize accessibility, maximize portability, maximize comprehensiveness. This is where it works in concert with other groups, other parts of society, and this government to make a better health care system in what is inarguably now the best province in the dominion and a province where people continue to look for improvement, where people continue to feel comfortable living and working on the edge, and putting a health care system through that delivers real value to Albertans.

I love the catchphrases: private, for-profit, two-tier, American style. [interjections] Where's your what? Sorry; I missed that one.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Where's your plan?

MR. SMITH: Where's your plan? Whatever.

Mr. Speaker, it's great that there are wonderful catchphrases in the lexicon of politics that talk about a health care system that spends $5.3 billion.

Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of doctors who work under private corporations. Private corporations are acceptable under the Income Tax Act, and it's a way people form a company in order to better distribute their profits and income, but there have to be profits. It would tell me, then, that if a doctor forms a private corporation, a professional corporation, a PC, he or she would in fact be in the health care system for the purposes of profit.

Not long ago I went over to the Royal Alexandra hospital. They had purchased through the lottery fund, the terrific fund that it is, I might add, an angiogram device that would allow them quick access to reading angiogram results as well as a less invasive procedure. This was sold to them by the Toshiba corporation of Canada, and because I had actually had some experience with Toshiba before, I asked the manager there for Toshiba: "Well, sir, is this the nonprofit arm of Toshiba corporation? Are you actually selling products to the medical system and making a profit?"

DR. OBERG: No. You're kidding.

MR. SMITH: It's true. There are actually purveyors of product, there are purveyors of services that are actually making profit in the medical system today as we see it; for example, people who vend X-ray machines, people who vend MRIs.

Let me just spend one more second on Toshiba. At one time Toshiba used to sell a VCR machine, a video recorder. It sold in the early '80s probably for $1,300 or $1,400. Now, when we go out today to buy those VCRs, we'll notice they're about $150 to $220. When there's been inflation and world financial changes and all the other events, why would that equipment now be worth $200 today? Same with cellular phones: $2,300 in the 1980s, $150 today. Would it perhaps be that the invisible hand of competition has officially allocated scarce resources? In fact, in many places inside and outside the medical marketplace there are records of innovation taking place through competition. When people go to the Alberta

Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, do they just get a grant for research? No, Mr. Speaker. They compete for a grant and for research.

So, in fact, competition works. Competition is there in the health care system today. In fact, if we go just to the preamble of the Canada Health Act, all we are doing is looking at future improvements in health in partnerships, and that's why I'm moving the question today, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: May I ask a question?

THE SPEAKER: Actually, hon. members, I hesitate to interrupt everyone, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

MR. SMITH: Oh, I just moved the question, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: There's no question. I would have recognized her.

MR. SMITH: No. To the vote.

THE SPEAKER: You weren't recognized.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'll call the committee to order.

Community Development

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I would call on the minister.

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Thanks very much, Madam Chairman.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question. Question.

MR. WOLOSHTYN: I see we're off to a good start this afternoon, Madam Chairman.

My opening comments will be a little lengthier than what I would like. There's a reason for it. In the recent restructuring of the government, a few changes were made which I think are appropriate to address. I'll start off by saying that I am very pleased to be here to present our business plan and budget for the year 2000-2001. It's been nine months since the changes and since I was appointed as Minister of Community Development, and quite frankly it's been a very interesting time.

One of the challenges faced when I assumed this portfolio was learning about the diversity of Community Development's programs. We have seniors, sports, recreation, arts, libraries, volunteers, historic sites, museums, cultural facilities, human rights, citizenship, status of women, and all of these programs are interwoven within the ministry. As part of the government's consolidation of programs and one-window access to programs and services, special purpose and seniors' housing was later added to the ministry, and that was last November. In addition, there are some 10 agencies and funds that are administered through the department.

As we all know, communities are the heart of our great province, and people – and I stress people – are the heart of Alberta's communities. The Treasurer stated in his budget speech last Thursday:

Last year total employment rose by [some] 2.8 percent, with almost 43,000 new jobs created in 1999. Our [provincial] employment rate averaged 94.2 percent, the second best among . . . the provinces. Our population grew by two percent and that was almost double Ontario's population growth.

With such an influx of new citizens, young and old, supporting our communities is now more important than ever, and Community Development will provide the necessary leadership. The best way to strengthen Alberta's people and its vibrant communities is to continue to support them with strong financial management, people-friendly taxation, and policies that help our economy grow and diversify. Responsible fiscal management has been the hallmark of the current government. The new budget will continue the strategies that have served us well: the balanced budgets, debt repayment, prudent revenue forecasts, affordable spending plans, and open and accountable government. Community Development will help to put these strategies into action by building innovative partnerships with co-operating societies, private-sector corporations, and community organizations. We'll also share resources, working to reduce duplication and costs and garner broad support for community initiatives.

That, fellow elected members on all sides of the House, is the general theme of our new business plan. It is evident in the new business plan and budget of Community Development that the government's goals are supported. Alberta Community Development's first budget of the new century focuses on building stronger communities and working with Albertans of all ages. The ministry is participating in a number of cross-government initiatives and other partnerships in the achievement of ministry goals, and it should be recognized that a number of ministry actions have an important collaborative component.

In particular, Community Development is committed to working in co-operation with ministries across government to ensure the success of broader government priorities such as the Alberta Corporate Service Centre initiative, corporate human resource development strategy, economic development strategy, and aboriginal policy initiative. In addition, the ministry will provide leadership for a seniors' policy, a key cross-government initiative which will enlist the collective efforts of a number of government departments to meet seniors' needs for the future.

As I stated earlier, the effects of this department span all ages, but Budget 2000 does provide special attention to the needs of low-income seniors. Alberta's seniors helped build the province, and it was their hard work, leadership, and vision that helped us achieve the prosperity we enjoy today. In their youth and later as parents and community builders their dedication to family and a solid work ethic served as a backbone for the values we hold as so important today.

Albertans believe in healthy aging, allowing our seniors to live as independently as possible in a safe and supportive environment. Due to a lack of financial resources, Albertans recognize that some seniors need our support and assistance. This year the budget for the Alberta seniors' cash benefit program will rise to $162 million, up from $141 million. Of these funds $146.3 million will provide financial assistance to approximately 130,000 low-income seniors through the Alberta seniors' benefit program. This program has been increased by $13.3 million, or approximately 10 percent. I'd like to point out that this successful program is income tested, and benefits are given out on a sliding scale. We anticipate that recipients will see on the average a $100 per year increase, and that could vary, obviously, depending upon the senior's income.

The other program offered is special-needs assistance for seniors, which provides financial assistance through lump sum cash payments to low-income seniors who are experiencing financial difficulties and are unable to meet basic needs, such as food, shelter, transportation, medical supplies, or personal hygiene. Approximately 6,000 low-income seniors who may experience financial difficulties will be assisted through the special-needs assistance for seniors program. The current average payment is some $2,700, and there is a maximum payment of $5,000 per year. Although the 1999-2000 budget was set at $8 million, the forecast indicated that some $15.6 million would be required. The 2000-2001 budget has been adjusted to $15.7 million to ensure that the necessary funds are available to run the program.

One of the most effective ways to understand the needs and concerns of our seniors is through the daily contact that staff have with the callers to the department's 1-800 information line. The line has received some 723,000 calls since it was introduced in 1994. It's anticipated that the 750,000th call should come through during the spring of 2000, and quite frankly I'd like to be there to take that particular call personally.

I'm proud to say that we do have one of the best income support programs in Canada for low-income seniors, but as new and aging seniors are attracted to Alberta for its quality of life, we will have to develop long-term strategies to deal with the impact of the aging population. The governmentwide study of the impact of the aging population will be completing its report this spring and along with report A will provide the government with recommendations for action. I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-West, who was the chair of the steering committee, and the Member for Leduc, the vice-chair, for their continuing commitment to this important project. As the population of our province grows and ages, the provincial government will continue to demonstrate its concern about the well-being of Alberta seniors, particularly those who are in need.

With respect to homelessness, I think this is where we can honestly say that this ministry is about communities. A community is a group of people who come together for a common cause and are ready to lend a helping hand to their neighbours. This government believes communities are the heart and soul of Alberta. We'll continue to work to ensure that those families and individuals who are most in need have access to temporary shelter and support services.

We are committing $3 million in new funding this year for programs to help us work on homelessness issues with our partners. This is in addition to the approximately $10 million in the Human Resources and Employment budget identified for operating emergency shelters. We understand that our strength lies in building partnerships with other levels of government, private and not-for-profit housing sectors, churches, and community-based organizations, and we certainly want to open the lines of communication there.

In addition, the Hon. Claudette Bradshaw, federal Minister of Labour, will be consulting with the province in regard to the federal government's recent announcement of new funding for homelessness programs. I would like to say that we're going to work with the federal government as best we can to ensure that the programs they come forward with are complementary and integrated with the efforts of the provincial government and our local communities and in support of our business plan goals. I've got the assurance from the minister that that will in fact happen as a result of a private meeting I held with her on her visit up here. Collectively I think we can work and we can make community-based decisions for the short term and find long-term solutions to address the underlying factors that contribute to homelessness.

With respect to historic sites, I've just mentioned three of the six new ongoing funding adjustments to our budgets. I'd like to briefly point out the remaining three along with onetime funding initiatives. Alberta has a rich natural and cultural heritage to preserve and appreciate, and the minister's network of 18 provincial historic sites, museums, and interpretive centres, as well as its cultural facilities in the Provincial Archives, are testimony to the value that Albertans place on this rich heritage.

This business plan includes steps to preserve the future of the ministry's heritage infrastructure, including a replacement facility for the Provincial Archives of Alberta. One million dollars has been added to the base budget to address the most urgent needs related to operating and maintaining the 18 historic sites, museums, and interpretive centres as well as the Provincial Archives. This is in addition to the $300,000 increase approved in budget '99 for this particular year of 2000-2001. In addition, 1 and a half million dollars in onetime spending has been allocated to replace audiovisual equipment used in exhibits at the province's heritage sites.

Although protecting valuable historic and cultural resources is our primary role, Alberta's 18 provincially owned historic sites and museums provide significant tourism and economic benefits to our province. In 1998-99 these sites attracted more than a million visitors, an increase of some 8.3 percent over the previous year.

The largest feature exhibition in the Provincial Museum's history will be the Jesus through the Centuries exhibition, which runs from October 7, 2000, to January 7, 2001. This world premiere event we hope will attract thousands of visitors from across Alberta, western Canada, and indeed the rest of North America. Jesus through the Centuries is the third in a series of five international exhibitions celebrating the millennium and illuminating human achievements.

Although five years in the future, preparations for the celebration of the 100th anniversary of Alberta becoming a province have begun, and $600,000 in onetime funding has been budgeted for planning the centennial celebrations.

With respect to human rights, the business plan will continue to focus on actions to foster equality and reduce discrimination, including educational initiatives to promote fairness and access and increased understanding of the growing diversity in the province. Strategies to ensure effective operation of the Human Rights and Citizenship Commission will continue to be implemented. In support of this, the base budget of the human rights and citizenship services branch will be increased by $300,000 to provide adequate funding to manage the anticipated volume of complaints received. This is in addition to the $100,000 increase approved in budget '99.

In support of the provincial active living strategy and the development of the country's Trans Canada Trail, Community Development has committed $1.1 million in onetime lottery funding to Alberta Trailnet. These funds will assist with Alberta's portion of the Trans Canada Trail development.

I'm sure some of the members have heard from their constituents both in support of and with concerns about the trail development. Trail issues are complex and touch many pieces of legislation, six or seven in all I believe. As people and landowners voice concerns over loss of privacy, trespassing, and liability, this department and this government are exploring options and legislation to reduce the potential liability of landowners adjacent to public-use trails as well as other concerns. We'll be looking at some legislative changes there, and I certainly would appreciate any kind of input from any members.

The 2001 championships have brought the eyes of the world on Edmonton, starting now, I guess, and culminating in the summer of 2001, when the 2001 World Championships in Athletics makes a first appearance in North America. This project was granted a total of $40 million over four years by the province, to be matched equally by the government of Canada and by the 2001 World Championships in Athletics organization committee. As part of our commitment the provincial government will provide $10 million in funding for this fiscal year, 2000-2001.

Volunteerism continues to play a significant role in contributing to the high quality of life Albertans value. By working together to achieve common goals, Alberta volunteers are creating stronger communities and a stronger province. According to a spring 1999 survey, 72 percent of all adult Albertans reported that they performed some volunteer work in the previous year. The ministry will continue its support of volunteers, including the co-ordination of provincial activities for the International Year of Volunteers in 2001.

Alberta volunteers are recognized for their valuable assistance in the delivery of important programs in the areas of health, arts, libraries, youth leadership, education, sport and recreation, the environment, seniors' services, children's services, and public safety. It will be our responsibility to bring government representatives and external partners together to work on the priority area of services for children and youth.

Grants and foundations. Albertans are proud of the diverse recreational, educational, social, cultural, and heritage programs and activities and recognize their contribution to the outstanding quality of life that we all enjoy. During this next fiscal year provincial, regional, and community-based organizations will have access to some $46.9 million in grants through Community Development's lottery-funded foundations and agencies: the Alberta Foundation for the Arts; the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation; the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation; the Wild Rose Foundation; and the human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism education fund.

The Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation. I'd like to bring your attention to changes in the funding for the foundation. At my request the chairman and the board of directors of the ASRPWF reviewed the foundation's quarterly grant program relative to other grant programs and made recommendations to eliminate duplication of funding to initiatives eligible for funding through other provincial government and lottery-funded agencies. As of April 1, 2000, projects eligible for and receiving funding through other provincial government funding agencies will no longer receive funding from the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation.

Capital projects I excluded from the grant program. The foundation, however, will still maintain a smaller grant program to meet the needs of applicants not covered by other funding agencies. A new grant program, a development initiatives program, was created with new criteria to fund projects that fall within the mandate of the ASRPWF Foundation. Updated guidelines are now available to the public. Applicants should be directed to look to other resources, such as a community lottery board or the CFEP, for capital projects that are no longer eligible under the grant program.

The new development initiatives program is a redistribution of the funds and eliminates funding duplication. In recent years communities have demonstrated their need for the program, and the reallocation of funds will allow the programs to continue. The elimination of duplicated funding frees up funds to maintain the municipal recreation/tourism areas program and to return a portion of the previous reduction to provincial sports and recreation associations. This will allow us to support the business plan efforts to provide financial . . . [Mr. Woloshyn's speaking time expired]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I hate to interrupt you, hon. minister, but you can get back up again. I'm sure you'll welcome the opportunity to hear the opposition, and then you can get back up again, hon. minister. [interjections] No, no. This is the call of the chair.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I will abide by your ruling, but I'd like to say that if there are questions that we can't or don't answer here, we'll take them down and respond to you in writing.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. minister, that was 55 seconds. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. I hope that the minister is enjoying his new ministry. It is all of our quality of life in Alberta, and I'm glad that he is inspired enough that he wants to continue on. I'll be looking forward to that.

Community development is quality of life in Alberta. It's as we attempt to achieve quality of life for some groups of people in Alberta, and it's also all of the activities and facilities that do offer us quality of life. [interjections]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We do allow a lot of latitude and leeway at this stage in committee, but could I please ask people to take their seats. Please. Please. We have to be seated. Go ahead, Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. So I'm pleased to start the debate on the estimates for the Department of Community Development. I do understand that there's an agreement to be able to continue this debate over past tonight. I think this is the first department that is debated, and that's not a long time to prepare for this since the budget was introduced last Thursday. So I look forward to continued debate on this, in particular because in the past the opposition has only been able to squeeze out 48 minutes in being able to comment on the department estimates. [interjection] That's correct. It was two people at 20 minutes apiece, and one person only got eight minutes.

This department covers seniors; women; multiculturalism; youth; volunteers; museums and archives; libraries; historical sites; amateur sports; games; recreation; arts and culture; the Francophone Secretariat; the Seniors Advisory Council; the human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism education fund; the Human Rights Commission; the Alberta Foundation for the Arts; the Alberta Sports, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation; the Historical Resources Foundation; and now also housing. So now we have 20 different areas. That's less than two and a half minutes per sector, so I'm pleased that there will be more debate on this area this time around.

Now, I note in the department summary – and for reference ease for the minister, that would be on page 86. I'm wondering about the accounting that's presented here. There have been at least two programs removed from underneath the auspices of the department between last year's budget presentation and this year's, that being AADAC and the community lottery boards, and at least one program added, the special purpose housing, but I do not see those changes reflected in here. I notice that under the special purpose housing there is a gross comparable figure from '98-99, when this wasn't even in the department. So I'd like the minister to give a reckoning that shows the total change in the department from last year to this, because there were the budget amounts for AADAC, which was about $33 million and has been taken out. Community lottery boards was about $51 million. It was taken out. None of that is reflected in this summary, and we have a new program of 82 and a half million dollars coming in with the special purpose housing.

Now, one of the first things I'd like to talk about is funding for libraries, which appears in two places, vote 2.1.2 and of course under the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. I am aware that there have been a number of members of library boards from across the province contacting their MLAs with their concern that the libraries are still being funded on a per capita basis based on 1997 population figures. Well, as is so often brought forward in this Legislature, we've had some significant population growth in certain areas of the province. I'm thinking of Calgary, Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, and I think even close to the minister's own home in Spruce Grove. I note that the province has gone to great measures to recognize that population growth in the areas of infrastructure and education taxes and other things but no increase in this per capita funding formula for libraries.

I'm asking the minister: when will the department create a policy to cope with the per capita funding needs of libraries and have it somehow attached to a more realistic or flexible figure rather than sticking it to a certain point in time? That doesn't seem to be working, and certainly libraries are hurting. I think that is connected to a question about the government's commitment to literacy if we are struggling so much with funding for libraries. So I've just touched briefly on that, and I hope we'll be able to come back to it later.

I'd like to talk a bit about women, which should be under vote 6, but that's hard to tell because the word never appears anywhere in the document nor is there any reference to women's policy and programs anymore. It's simply human rights and citizenship, and under the vote itself, the breakdown vote, once again it doesn't give any information about all of the sectors that have been captured under that. So specific to women, once again, exactly what programs does this government provide? In answer to that question, a few years ago I was told the Stepping Stones program, but please don't tell me that one again because that really isn't a program provision. It's an information kit. There's no staffing behind it. If you ask for that, they put it in the mail to you. You're on your own.

We no longer have an Alberta Advisory Council on Women's Issues, which was doing research and an analysis and gathering information on what was affecting women in the province. There doesn't seem to be any sign of the Women's Secretariat, which was doing policy and program work. I'm sure that the government is not trying to make women disappear. I wouldn't want to believe that of the minister, and I wouldn't want to believe the minister that the government doesn't believe in equality, so I am wondering what the rationale is here, seeing as there's no mention of it anywhere in this document. Is there a belief that women have somehow achieved parity of earnings or perhaps equal access to training dollars or entrepreneurial support or loans for small businesses?

I note in the excellent report, which has been tabled previously, called Fractured Voices: a report on the fairness business in Alberta, that over 50 percent of the 1993 human rights cases were based on gender-related issues. Those are all possible human rights issues that were brought before the Human Rights Commission. Over 50 percent of them were gender based. I am still looking for some kind of proof or tabling of reports or anything that the government could manage to bring forward that's showing that a gender analysis was being done of proposed legislation or changes in programs and services. I've seen nothing of that, but I'll ask again and see if anything can be brought forward. I'll raise a couple of examples that, without trying very hard, I found.

Sixty-four percent of the supports for independence recipients in southern Alberta are women, and a number of these are in rural centres outside of the major centres in that area. There are no transportation grants to travel to the mandatory training sessions in these larger centres, and there's no child care available either. A real catch-22 situation has been created here, which mostly affects women. Are they supposed to then leave their children unsupervised and somehow hitchhike or walk to get to these mandatory training sessions in order to achieve this? Why hasn't this been identified or dealt with? This first came to my attention, this whole situation, in the early '90s. It's come back to my attention. It's still existing. Why don't I see any comprehension of what's going on there?

I'm also wondering what the government is doing or what advice was given to the government. Or was there anyone in women's policy and programs that was giving advice regarding the termination of moneys by the Alberta Mental Health Board to the treatment group program for men who batter that was run by the central Alberta women's shelter? Was the effect of the cancellation of these moneys on women considered? I don't see anything that indicates that.

Once again I would ask for the rationale from the minister, seeing as women's policy and programs is supposed to be under this ministry, and despite the lack of proof I believe it's still there. Why are women's shelters located under Children's Services and not under women's policy and programs? I think it's much better suited to be under the division in Community Development rather than under Children's Services, so I'll ask that question again.

Once again, I hope to return to other questions on women's issues, but I will move on at this point to seniors, which is vote 4, services to seniors. I'll remind the minister of the programs that were cut or reduced since '92-93. The ones specifically that are gone included the Alberta assured income plan, the senior citizens' renters' assistance program, seniors' independent living, seniors' emergency medical alert program, the housing registry program, and the property tax reduction. Those are just a few of what was cut or reduced.

As the minister has alluded to, we have seen a doubling of demand on the special-needs assistance program in the current fiscal year; that is, '99-2000. The budget for next budget year 2000-2001 is indicating that volume increase and almost doubling of demand upon the programs. I don't think it's accurate to say that seniors are getting more money. In fact, the additional funds into this program are simply coping with the demand on it. I think there's a direct tie between those programs that I just talked about being cut and the fact that we have a doubling of demand by seniors on the special-needs benefit. It's certainly what I had been watching in the community but had not been able to find any proof, any statistical analysis on it that would indicate that seniors were suffering. They were saying to me: "I'm having a hard time. All of these cuts have cost me extra." And it varied between $1,500 and $6,000 a year. "I'm having to use my savings. I'm having to borrow money from friends and family. I've cut out a lot of things." But I wasn't seeing any sort of proof positive.

I think we've got the proof positive now. I think what's happened is that for a lot of lower middle-income seniors, the loss of those programs has really hurt them, and they're the ones that are sliding down the economic ladder towards, however you want to put it, disadvantaged, lower income, or poverty. The minister used another phrase, that I can't remember at the moment. Very, very interesting.

I am looking forward to what's going to come out of the government's response to the impact on aging study. As part of this, I've been thinking: well, what could the government be doing? I'm wondering why there is no funding of seniors' centres included under the budget. To me, that is a penny of prevention that is worth millions of dollars of cure. If we know that it's important to have an active lifestyle, if we know it's important to battle isolation with seniors, to get people out of their homes, to get them in fitness classes, to get them exposed to nutrition counseling and all kinds of other beneficial programs like that, plus just plain fun, frankly, then that is what these seniors' centres are doing. I have to give credit for stealing this idea from my local seniors' centre, West Edmonton Seniors, but there is a suggestion that $100 per senior participating in a seniors' centre per year would probably save us the $1,000 or $1,200 per day that we have to spend on acute care beds. I think it's worth considering that. I don't see it in the budget here, but perhaps the minister can elucidate.

I have just a couple of tablings here. I am sorry; they were in the middle of my notes. I should have tabled them earlier. One is a letter from constituents, a very thoughtful letter from Don Perdue, Velma Park, and Doreen Wood, just explaining how they are trying to live with dignity but finding it very difficult when their rent is increasing from $145 to $245 a month, a significant increase for them. They were inquiring about possible rent controls. But to me it's indicative of the problems that a number of seniors are having as they struggle with property taxes and rent increases, that in many cases have doubled. You're hard-pressed in downtown Edmonton to get a one-bedroom for under $550.

The second tabling that I have here is around the special-needs assistance program, and this is a copy of a flyer that someone received when they asked for the paperwork to apply for the fund. It just notes that there are restrictions now being placed on the special-needs assistance for seniors program. The program will fund one appliance in a benefit year, and they will no longer fund freezers at all. "Freezers will no longer be considered for funding," which is really interesting.

So not only do we have an increase on the demand there, but there are restrictions being placed on that program, and I do question cutting off the freezers because I know that when I have been struggling to economize, a freezer was my best friend. It allows you to buy food on sale or buy bulk food. If you can eat meat, then perhaps you can get a friend or a son-in-law that's out hunting game or perhaps ice fishing that can help you out with a hind quarter, that should last you through the winter. You can store a lot of food in those freezers. What you get out of the top of a little fridge just doesn't cut it. There is not a lot you can get in there if you are trying to save on food. So I do question that.

Now, the increase, as the minister pointed out, in the Alberta seniors' benefit will on average be around $100 a year, between $9 and $10 a month, 29 cents a day. That's the big increase that's being touted here. Finally, the minister is clarifying very properly that this is really only affecting the most disadvantaged seniors. I think some of the media that was out there previous to the budget release was indicating that all seniors in Alberta would get a 10 percent increase, and nothing could be further from the truth. Still, Mr. Minister, I have to say that 29 cents a day – I mean, telephone rents have gone up by $3. I've already talked about property taxes, rent, food. I'm sure every senior really appreciates that $9 or $10 a month, but it's not going to alleviate their suffering by very much.

Now, specific to West Edmonton Seniors in my riding, I know that the minister had been asked for assistance around their rent. This is a centre that is renting space in the General hospital. Their rent has increased from $342 plus their housekeeping costs in '98-99 to just over $1,000 for most of '99. As of January 1, 2000, their rent is up to $4,212 plus the housekeeping services. You know, here are these centres. We know they're doing good work, we know they're keeping seniors healthy, we know everything they're doing is right, and here they're going from $342 to $4,200 in rent payments. I do put in a plea with the minister for any assistance that can be rendered there. That makes it very difficult for them to keep going and offering services at a reasonable price.

I'm wondering if the interim ministry committee that's dealing with implementing legislation affecting seniors and investigating the protection for persons in care will be developing standards of care. It is one of the things that we are sadly lacking here. I know that the organization FAIRE has been very vocal in trying to bring that lack of standardization and criteria to everyone's attention here in this Assembly. I'm very aware that the day homes and boarding type of homes that are taking in seniors now are not covered under the protection of persons in care, and that really just affects institutional care.

I will have to continue with my many questions later. Thank you very much.

MR. SAPERS: Just 40 more seconds.

MS BLAKEMAN: Just 40 more seconds? Yeah. He got 40 more. I should get 40 more. I'll contain myself.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Thank you, Edmonton-Centre.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I'm happy to contribute my comments and questions this afternoon on the Community Development budget. Before I begin, I would just like to make a few comments about the budgetary process.

As usual, we find it a very unsatisfactory process. From the point of time when we get the budget and the budget information to the point of time when we start debating and then complete the debate on the budget, we don't have enough opportunity to get out to our constituents to review the budget with them and get their feedback. By the time we receive most of the feedback on the budget, these budgets have been voted on because of the tight time lines the government imposes on us.

Madam Chairman, I know there were some negotiations that started on this process this year only to be halted before any progress was made. Some of the ideas being brought forward in terms of why that was halted was that this is the last budget before an election, so there was no need to make any kinds of revisions. Well, Madam Chairman, that isn't good enough. Certainly people need to have a process in place whereby they can review the billions of dollars this government is spending and have adequate time to give their feedback and present it to all members in this Legislature so they can be properly debated before this massive budget is voted on.

My questions on Community Development today centre around the ministry core business plans. First of all, I would like to make the comment that I think the government doesn't do too bad a job in some areas of promoting community development and in some areas of preserving and protecting and presenting the unique natural, cultural, and historical resources. In some areas I think they do quite an appalling job. Certainly the dollars that are being spent don't support, I believe, the core business plans outlined here or the goals. Those particularly would be in terms of supporting the independence and well-being of seniors, which I will elaborate on; protecting human rights; and promoting fairness and access. I'm assuming that women's issues come in that area because it's . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Who can tell?

MS CARLSON: Yeah. Who can tell? There's no doubt about that. They seem to have been written out of the last couple of budgets of this government but are noticeably absent to any degree certainly in this budget. When I get to my comments on issues that are of particular importance to women, I will be addressing them under the human rights areas, because it seems that clearly fairness and access are not being supported for women at that level.

Then of course the huge topic in many parts of Alberta these days: supporting Alberta's special purpose housing needs. Whether we're talking about the homeless, the working poor who cannot find adequate housing, seniors who can't find adequate housing, or people with special needs, Madam Chairman, we have an appalling problem in this province, appalling not only because people can't find places to live but because this is supposed to be the richest province in this country and we cannot find places for our children and our seniors and those less advantaged than people who have got full-time, well-paying jobs. We can't provide housing for those people, and that's a real problem, as I see it.

Going to page 64 of the business plan, I'd like to talk about some of the achievements of the desired outcomes that the minister says his department will be measured by, and the first one there is "customer satisfaction with community development assistance provided." I want to know who it is they're asking in terms of satisfaction, and I'd like to see the questions, Madam Chairman, because the people that I talk to in the community certainly don't come in with a 98 percent satisfaction rating.

Some of the questions I'd like answered in this regard. Are those questionnaires going out in an anonymous fashion, or do the people answering them feel that their funding or their support from the ministry is somehow tied to how they answer the questions? Certainly if in fact the surveys are anonymous and there can be no clear tie between funding and their responses, then a 98 percent rate would be outstanding, but, Madam Chairman, I don't think that's the case here. It certainly isn't what I'm hearing from the community. So if the minister would be prepared to table not just the questions they ask in the satisfaction surveys but all of the conditions surrounding the asking of the questions, that would be very important, I think, for us to take a look at and to review. Then perhaps we'll have some suggestions on how that system can be improved.

The next item here is the "level of community volunteerism." It's interesting to think that the government can take credit for volunteerism in this province. I know that we have a very high participation in this province, particularly compared to other provinces, but I don't think it's because of any efforts made by this government, Madam Chairman. It seems to me that, particularly in education, parents and grandparents and relatives of schoolchildren have no choice in this particular climate but to volunteer in order to ensure that their children are getting the kind of support they need within the school system, and I would have to take a look at that in many other organizations. People volunteer for a number of reasons, but unfortunately as time goes on in this society, it seems that a lot of times they have to volunteer because they cannot afford the fees and the costs associated with having involvement in recreational, sports, or cultural activities or in basic education in this province.

So I am personally offended and I know that there are a number of my constituents who are also offended that this government should take credit for the level of volunteerism in this province. Once again, I'd like to know how they measure that particular target. I think it's a very nebulous kind of answer to be able to tie down.

Another question there is why, if they're saying that 72 percent of Albertans participate in volunteer activities, they only have a target of 55 percent addressed? Was there such a huge jump from the previous year of '97-98? If so, why is that, Madam Chairman? Did they try to nail down the answer to why there would have been a significant increase? I would think that a lot of that had to do with the necessary nonvoluntary volunteerism that's required in the school systems at this particular time.

The next achievement outcome is the "percentage of population participating in sports and recreation activities." They've got this listed at 79 percent, and "the target is to increase participation in these activities to 90%." Once again, let's have some details on this. How is the minister measuring it, and how are they going to get to a 90 percent participation level? It would seem that by the time people put in a workday, by the time they put in their nonvoluntary hours supporting programming both in a recreational capacity and in an educational capacity, there isn't a lot of time left over to participate in sports and recreational activities. Let's get some details on how they expect they can get up to the 90 percent level and find out exactly what is happening there.

The next achievable desired outcome here is "equitable access to public library services for all Albertans." I understand the concept of equitable in terms of not all communities in Alberta having access to libraries, but I am quite offended by the minister's statement that came out earlier this month when he talked about the concerns of access being based on skin colour or creed. I don't know what generation he's living in or what country, but it doesn't seem to be Alberta.

The problem in Alberta of access to libraries is the access for the books to get into the libraries. That's the problem here, and that's where we see the discrimination coming in. I've never seen anybody turned away from a library door anywhere in Alberta, but we have seen many, many instances of cases where books have been turned away from library doors. For the minister's information, that's the essence, the reason why we need a freedom to read profile in this province and why it is still very appalling to see government members deny unanimous consent to recognize this week.

Definitely it's an issue for all of us to be very concerned about. Freedom to read what you choose when you choose to read is an issue of fundamental access to democracy. So I am hoping that he is going to clarify why it is that he doesn't address the real issue there, which is access to books, not access based on colour or race. If he could give us that information.

Now, the target is 60 percent in terms of access, and they say that they're achieving 53 percent of Albertans having used a public library. Once again I'd like to know how they're counting that. I'm assuming that what they're doing is counting the number of memberships that people have to libraries. If that's the case, how are they counting family memberships and children who may have children's memberships to the library? There could be some double counting there. I think it's a very important piece of information for us to know in terms of people who are accessing libraries.

With the lack of increase in dollars – I say that's a decrease in dollars really, because they're not keeping up with inflation or any other kind of monetary aspects – how does this minister expect libraries to compete in a market that is becoming increasingly cluttered with other types of information flow? If libraries have to keep up with inflation in terms of their operating costs and staffing, in fact they're seeing a real decrease in the purchasing power to put books on the shelves. Let's have some information on that. I'm sure the minister is gathering that information. How does he expect these libraries to compete in the information flow given all the other access that people now have to get information from?

I'm particularly thinking of the Internet. It's got to be a direct competitor to public libraries. So where does he see this going, not just in the next 12 months, but surely they must be doing some studies in terms of the future viability of libraries in the next five to 10 years. If he's got any information on that, if he could table it and provide it to us, that would be very important.

Next on their list of achievements with desired outcomes is the "impact of support to arts and cultural industries." This is a very interesting one, Madam Chairman, and I continue to wonder why this is in Community Development and not in Economic Development, where it rightly belongs. We've seen . . .

MR. SMITH: What?

MS CARLSON: I'm sure the minister would like to address that.

There's no doubt that in the past arts and cultural industries, particularly film development at all levels, have been a major economic driver in this province. It should be recognized as such, and it should be then classified under Economic Development. If you want an industry to take off and be self-supporting, then you have to address it at all levels as a self-supporting industry, and that doesn't mean putting it into Community Development, where you expect to find not-for-profit kinds of ventures.

It's exactly that mind-set which I believe has led to the downfall of film development in this province. It wasn't that many years ago,

Madam Chairman – in fact it's certainly been in the years just preceding and since my having been elected – that the film industry in this province was a thriving industry. We were able to provide an industry that was, I think, second to none in Canada, and it looked like it was going to take off in a major way and provide serious employment for many people in this province.

Since that time, the government has mismanaged and bungled any kind of support they've given to this industry, and we've seen a number of other provinces move ahead of us by leaps and bounds in terms of the economic benefits they've received from this industry. I think particularly of B.C. when I speak to that, I think particularly of Manitoba, and I think particularly of Ontario. All those provinces, all those governments treated this industry as an industry, not as some little nonprofit venture that they would pat on the head and throw a little money at when they felt like it and pull the money and support back when they didn't feel like supporting it, Madam Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but under Standing Order 4(3) I must adjourn Committee of Supply until 8 this evening.

[The committee adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, February 29, 2000

8:00 p.m.

Date: 00/02/29

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: I would call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2000-2001

Community Development

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I understand that at 5:30 we were still in discussion on the estimates for Community Development. I would move that we adjourn debate on those estimates.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE CHAIRMAN: We are about to go into the two subcommittees, A and B, tonight, and A will go upstairs to room 512, where Hansard is awaiting you. So we invite those members of that committee to please go up there under the chairmanship of the Member for Lacombe-Stettler. We'll wait a moment and then we'll commence ourselves.

[The committee met as subcommittees A and B from 8:01 p.m. to 10 p.m.]

MR. SEVERTSON: Mr. Chairman, subcommittee A of the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions of the Department of Gaming, reports progress thereon, and requests leave to sit again.

THE CHAIRMAN: Does the committee concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? So ordered.

MRS. LAING: Mr. Chairman, subcommittee B of the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions of the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations, reports progress thereon, and requests leave to sit again.

THE CHAIRMAN: Does the committee concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of Supply rise and report progress on the estimates of International and Intergovernmental Relations, Gaming, and Community Development.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions of the Department of Gaming, subcommittee A, and the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations, subcommittee B, reports progress thereon, and requests leave to sit again. The Committee of Supply has also had under consideration certain resolutions of the Department of Community Development, reports progress thereon, and requests leave to sit again.

I would also like to table copies of all documents tabled in the Committee of Supply for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 9

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2000

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased on behalf of the Provincial Treasurer to move second reading of Bill 9, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2000.

Mr. Speaker, we're in the process now of considering the estimates under the budget for this new year commencing April 1. In order to ensure that there's appropriate time for due analysis and critique of budget and supply, it's necessary to bring in an interim supply act to ensure that the good programs of this government can be continued without interruption and with concern for any of the employees of government, who wish to and need to be paid, and in order to carry on in a seamless way the operations of government. Therefore, in the tradition of this Assembly when estimates are dealt with during the month of March with the possibility of us continuing into April before supply is finally voted, it is necessary to bring forward an interim supply bill.

In Bill 9 we're asking the Legislative Assembly to vote $13,953,000 for the operation of the Legislative Assembly and $2,750,403,000 for the operation of the government in addition to nonbudgetary disbursements and the lottery fund payments as noted and printed in the bill. I won't go into detail as to the sums set out for each department. It is sufficient to say, Mr. Speaker, that again in order to provide for the seamless operation of government while we continue the thorough debate of the estimates over the course of this next month, it would be in order for the House to vote interim supply.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 9 seeks the authority for granting interim supply. As the Government House Leader pointed out, it is because we're at that point in the budget process where if we don't give the government some money, it might not be able to pay its bills. It's probably destined that Bill 9 is going to pass, but it can't pass without some comment on the process.

We're talking about nearly $3 billion in this bill, Mr. Speaker: $14 million, give or take a few dollars, in operating expenses and capital investment for the Assembly; $2.75 billion in operating and capital for government ministries; another $28 million and change in nonbudgetary disbursements; and $158 million in payments to be made through the lottery fund.

Now, all of this money, this some 3 billion dollars, we're being asked to give the authority to spend in the next perhaps 60 days. There are 28 days provided the Assembly to discuss and debate the main estimates, Mr. Speaker, and if the Gaming estimates debate is any indication of how the rest of estimates debates are going to go, it'll be 28 days of questions posed and concerns raised and 28 days without answers and 28 days of rather offhanded responses, certainly nothing that passes for debate in a democratic system.

In any case, it's difficult to support an interim supply request at this time because we don't really know how the money spent will match the performance measures in the current business plans or in the proposed business plans. Keep in mind that the new business plans, of course, haven't been passed yet. Mr. Speaker, we don't know, for example, what outcomes and performance criteria are expected for this money for such issues as reducing waiting lists in the public health care system, opening up new hospital beds, reducing the waiting time for long-term care beds, reducing the pupil/teacher ratio, reducing the reliance on parent and student fundraising in our public schools, reducing classroom size, and improving the lives of Alberta's vulnerable citizens, whether they be those with mental health concerns, seniors, or children who are living with hunger and poverty.

Mr. Speaker, there have been many examples of where this government has been called to account for its lack of budget management. One of the areas that I'd like to bring to the Assembly's attention is the amount of unbudgeted spending brought in through supplementary supply. Now, I know sometimes it's easy to mistake the players without a score card here, because you've got interim supply and you have supply. With the amount of supplementary supply bills that this Assembly has had to deal with under the current Provincial Treasurer's watch – I'm tempted to say that it's 33 months and counting, but that would be wrong. I think it's 33 months and ending. Anyway, under this current Provincial Treasurer's watch we've seen no fewer than seven supplementary supply bills and then of course interim supply bills in every budget cycle as well, and then we have all the appropriation bills.

MR. HANCOCK: It used to be done by special warrant.

MR. SAPERS: Now, Mr. Speaker, I know it's not appropriate for me to respond to interjections made from another member when they're not officially recognized, but I can't help but comment on the fact that the Government House Leader and Minister of Justice for all of Alberta just said: well, we used to do it by special warrant. I don't know whether he's proud of that and whether that was a plea to go back to the old ways or not. You know, it's certainly sort of like picking which torture you like best. Do you want the electric prod, or do you want to be beaten with a chain?

The fact is that Alberta taxpayers can't really rely on the budget process very much, because we see all this unbudgeted spending and all of these last-minute requests for new appropriation. In fact, the Treasurer has now presided over $2.9 billion worth of unbudgeted spending in his 33 short months as Treasurer. So some may say that his reign of error is about to end.

Mr. Speaker, the Provincial Treasurer in previous times – and of course he's been much maligned. In this particular case let me say that he brought in only six supplementary supply bills during his entire four-year tenure as Treasurer, for a paltry $611 million. It pales in comparison to the nearly $3 billion that we've been faced with by this Treasurer. The honourable but much lamented Dick Johnston during his seven years as Provincial Treasurer brought in $2.1 billion in unbudgeted spending, but as I say, he took seven years to do that, more than twice as long as the current Treasurer.

Now, one of the problems with this government's performance has been their improper management of the budget and the budget process. I think it's clear to all Albertans now that the government wasn't able to manage the cuts properly, particularly in health care and education, and of course they're now scrambling to put money back into those programs. They want to be congratulated for that, but that's kind of like thanking somebody for cleaning up after they smash your windows.

They're not really effectively managing this reinvestment either, Mr. Speaker. I would have expected some more careful consideration of the budget cycle and timing so that we wouldn't be faced with such unbudgeted spending and such last-minute requests. Responsible fiscal management would require the establishment of several mechanisms within the budgeting process that not only protect the fiscal bottom line but also sustain investments in our society that contribute to health and to wellness and to a fiscal and social balance. It's too bad that in this regard the government's actions don't really match their words.

Let me for a minute just say, Mr. Speaker, that that's not just my sense of the way things are but in fact the Auditor General's sense of the way things are as well. I can quote from the Auditor General where he says in his last report:

In our review of the Ministry business plans in Budget 99, we found that over half the Ministries had at least one goal that did not have a performance measure associated with it. Overall, 24% of all the goals in Ministry business plans did not have a performance measure. In addition, in many business plans where performance measures were included, the linkage between the goals and the performance measures was not apparent.

Mr. Speaker, particularly troubling is that last phrase, that "the linkage between the goals and the performance measures was not apparent." So you have a government that's priding itself on being accountable, yet the mechanisms that they use to pin those claims on, these business plans and performance measures, seem to be not only inadequate but perhaps even misleading in that there isn't an apparent relationship between what they say, what they do, and what they've said that they've done.

Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General also said in his last report:

In Budget 99, core businesses are still defined variously in terms of goals, strategies, activities, or performance criteria. Strategies are sometimes defined as desired results rather than broad actions to achieve them. Goals are sometimes defined in terms of activities rather than end results.

So I say again that we'd like to get the story straight from this government before we can have any faith in their ability to both budget and be accountable for their budgetary decisions.

The Auditor General makes some other rather damning observations as well. He says, for example, that some performance measures are not measured on an annual basis. He comments that "few business plans discuss external factors that can effect performance." He also notes that in Ministry business plans, output and outcome measures are not always well defined, measurable, and clearly related to core business goals.

You know, if this was a group of managers that you or I were employing in our business, Mr. Speaker, I think with this kind of an audit we'd have to fire them. We certainly wouldn't be able to trust them, and if we allowed them back into the office and gave them the keys to the piggy bank again, I think we'd be watching them with every means of surveillance available.

It's quite clear that we need fundamental changes to the budget management process in Alberta in order to create certainty, predictability, stability, and sustainability for our local authorities, including municipalities, children's services authorities, school boards, and health authorities. Over the years Alberta Liberals have proposed a number of elements to improve the credibility and stability of the budget planning process, to sustain our core programs in health care, education, and other core services, and to ensure that there is a fiscal and human balance in both good times and bad. Some of these elements include amendments to require the government to table monthly budget updates so that all Albertans know where they stand on a regular basis, requiring an independent assessment of provincial revenues by an independent source, and comparing these forecasts with those of Alberta Treasury. These forecasts would then have to be tabled in the budget in subsequent monthly, not quarterly but monthly, budget updates.

On this point, Mr. Speaker, I'll say that I am flattered that the Provincial Treasurer now includes the Alberta Liberal caucus as one of those expert groups in his quarterly updates. I don't know whether you've had a chance to read the press releases, but when the Provincial Treasurer does his quarterly updates now, he actually indicates the Alberta Liberal forecasts and projections in terms of several fiscal and economic indicators to show where we stack up compared to all of the other experts that the province relies on. I know that the Provincial Treasurer has been relying on the advice that comes from this caucus, and it's just nice to see that publicly acknowledged in his press releases.

Mr. Speaker, establishing ministry performance measures and benchmarks for a variance between budgeted and actual revenues would certainly go a long way to quelling the suspicion I have that the government is not terribly serious about this kind of budget criteria, and it wouldn't even be new and uncharted territory if the government wanted to go down that path. All they have to do is look at the state of Minnesota's finance department. Of course I've given the Treasurer the references that he needs to see how other jurisdictions are able to accomplish this very important accountability measure.

In addition, Alberta Liberals have said that it should be required in the budget for the preparation of a fiscal strategy report with 10-year trends for major fiscal and economic indicators. Now, the federal government is currently using a five-year planning horizon, which still exceeds the province's three-year planning horizon. It was just recently that we saw this Provincial Treasurer wagging his finger and saying that the feds ought to follow Alberta's lead. Well, in this particular case I think it would be nice if the province of Alberta followed the leadership of the federal government and projected a planning forecast with a reasonably long horizon so that people could make their own determinations about whether the government is playing some kind of shell game with revenue and expenditure projections.

There are some other issues as well, Mr. Speaker. For example, the establishment of a fiscal stabilization fund, which would ensure that strategic investments undertaken in our health care and education systems are sustainable over the long term. This would help us deal with the volatility of our economy, and it would provide revenues to guide budgetary decisions or priorities, particularly on the program side of the ledger. The fiscal stabilization fund, which we've talked about at length in this Assembly, would introduce greater stability and certainty into the budget process in Alberta and allow us to sustain our core social programs, which are the backbone for our competitiveness.

Mr. Speaker, the fiscal stabilization fund would be a real entity. It wouldn't be this cushion that's built into the budget on this 3 percent or 3 and a half percent formula that they use now. It was said once in this Assembly that this Provincial Treasurer builds so many cushions into his budget it reminded him of a pool table in the St. Louis Hotel. I don't know whether all of those cushions being built in are a reasonable and prudent way of doing budgeting, but I do know this. In any business you want to try to accommodate downturns in revenue, and the way you can do that is by setting aside a protected fund with very strict guidelines around allocations. That's what a fiscal stabilization fund would be.

Now, on this issue of sustainability and stability, which I say are key to effective spending and tax reform, I'd like to say that Alberta Liberals have been calling for the establishment of a fund within the budget process itself. The stabilization fund would allow spending and revenue reduction commitments made, for example, under the Fiscal Responsibility Act to be sustained over the course of the entire fiscal plan and not just be changed by another act of the Legislature when it became politically expedient to do so. We already saw that when this government says we're going to respect the law, they mean only when it's convenient, Mr. Speaker. What this government does is variously either challenge something in the Supreme Court, try to bring in a bill with a notwithstanding clause, or just rewrite the law at whim. We've seen examples of all of that in recent times.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that I'm not questioning the need for the expenditures that are enumerated in Bill 9. What we question is a Treasurer who doesn't have the budget management and planning systems in place to anticipate at the start of the budget year what will be needed at the end of the budget year. We would never want to accuse this Treasurer or this government of playing politics with revenues and expenditures. That would be an easy and cheap shot, that I won't take, but remember that this is a government that talks about outcomes, yet it has missed more than 200 of its own outcome measures. So words and deeds. [interjections] I hear the taunts: "Out of how many?" and "Aim high."

Well, my question rhetorically back to those members, Mr. Speaker, would be: which ones should Albertans take seriously? Which ones of the performance measures should we take seriously and which ones are we saying to Albertans: "Oh well, we're only putting that in place because we think it looks good. It's for the optics."? Remember, so many issues of this government are simply a matter of optics and a communications plan.

Actually, you know, it surprises me that they're still continuing to say as a government that the reason Albertans don't like their private health care initiative is because it's a communications problem. Of course, those of us who have been listening to our constituents know that's not the case at all. It's because Albertans know exactly what this government is trying to do, and they don't want any part of it.

Mr. Speaker, what I'll say about Bill 9 – I'll finish off where I started. This bill will no doubt pass and money will be spent and Albertans won't really be any the wiser for how it was spent. We'll have yet another example of this government's inability to properly manage within the budget cycle. That distresses me, because while it may be insignificant to this government that they're wanting us to commit nearly $3 billion at this point in time, it's not insignificant to me. It's not insignificant to the neighbours and constituents of mine who just over this last weekend have filled out their tax forms and have been forced to submit to this government the .5 percent flat tax, for example, which was brought in as a deficit elimination tax. It's really quite galling to sit there and fill out on your form that you have to send in another $100 or $200 or $300 to the provincial government for deficit elimination when the government is bragging about its multibillion dollar surplus.

One specific question that I will ask and I would hope will be addressed at some point in the debate on Bill 9 is why it is that some government departments are asking for as little as 12 percent of their budget on an annual basis in this interim supply vote, but other departments are asking for as much as 46 percent. I note that the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations is with us in the Chamber, and her department in particular, Mr. Speaker, is asking for 46 percent of its budget allocation in this interim supply bill, nearly half a year's allocation, yet the Legislative Assembly request is only for 12 percent. While we're looking at that variance of between 12 and 46 percent, I'll note that the request period covers about 18 or 19 percent of the year on an annual basis. So you would expect that departments such as the Department of Community Development, which is only asking for 19 percent, would be really the benchmark, that it would make sense that you'd be looking for about 19 percent of your budget if you're looking at about 19 percent of the fiscal year.

So with those very few comments and concerns, Mr. Speaker, I'll pass the torch to another member of the Assembly.

MS CALAHASEN: Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I'll just take a few moments to address one topic at this time, the topic of seniors, and hopefully respond to some of the concerns raised. I understand the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre would like an opportunity to voice some more questions, which I'll be very pleased to give to her.

What I'd like to say, first of all, is that the accusations against my ministry of being somehow not compassionate with respect to its dealings with seniors I think are somewhat unfounded and unfair. As a matter of fact, I'd like to read a letter that I just happened to sign a few moments ago to a senior, whom I will through respect not name here, whose concern was brought to me via one of the member's colleagues. It goes on to say:

On January 24, 2000 . . . MLA for [such a place], contacted me on your behalf about your Alberta Seniors Benefit.

Each year, Alberta Seniors Benefit sends seniors a letter detailing the benefits they are eligible to receive and the information on which their eligibility is based. In these letters, seniors are asked to provide an update on any changes to this information. Changes to the benefits are then made retroactive to the date the most recent letter was sent out.

Due to the change in your address, it is possible you did not receive these letters since your move in April 1996. Therefore, you may not have known of the need to provide Alberta Seniors Benefit with updated information on your place of residence. On this basis, Alberta Seniors Benefit has agreed to provide you with benefits retroactive to May 1996.

You can expect to have these retroactive benefits included with your March 2000 payment from Alberta Seniors Benefit.

Thank you for giving me the opportunity to help you.

And that's signed by myself as minister.

That, Mr. Chairman, is certainly not the actions of a department or a minister of a government who does not have compassion for seniors. To give retroactivity on a program for four years I think is the right thing to do and probably quite unheard of.

With respect to some of the concerns on the special-needs program, I think it should be pointed out that the special-needs program is intended for that very purpose, and that is to help with things like shelter. I went through that in my talks earlier. We found – and I was a part of this decision – that perhaps it would be more prudent and better not to get into a replacement policy, if you will. Hence we shortened up the desire or the request, shall we say, for appliances. However, I must point out that whether it be a freezer, a stove, a washing machine, or whatever, we treat each case on an individual basis. Therefore if, as the member pointed out, there were a need and a desire for a particular senior to have a freezer, for example, that would accommodate, say, a person living in the country who has a large garden – although we don't condone outright applications from everybody for a freezer, if there were a need shown that that freezer would in fact help the living standard of that particular senior, we would grant it. If you have any of those particular situations, hon. member, I'd be more than willing and pleased if you would have them identify that to the staff at the department, who are very good at looking into these things. We certainly want to do through the program whatever we can within reason to assist these people and make their lives a little easier.

Now, there's been much discussion with respect to the Alberta seniors' benefit program. I'd like to set the record straight on how we compare with other provinces, because I think this would put what we're trying to do into a bit of perspective. For example, in income level for eligibility Alberta is the highest in Canada, the highest by a significant margin. I'll just go through what it is on a per couple basis. For example, Alberta seniors benefit consideration starts for couples in Alberta at less than $27,385 as income, B.C. is $19,000, Saskatchewan $19,000, Manitoba $18,500, Ontario $19,600. Northwest Territories, the closest one, is $25,400. Yukon is roughly $20,000. Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland: no program. Keep in mind that this is the situation that we have in a province that has the best tax regime in the country. So you have the best standard of living and the highest cutoff levels before the program is implemented.

If you look at the amount of support, Alberta also has – and I won't go through it all – the highest maximum monthly eligibility at $292 per month for a couple compared to $121 in B.C., $145 in Saskatchewan, and so on. Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland all have no program.

We could go on to health care premium subsidies. Only British Columbia and Alberta charge premiums, and we both do subsidies there, so that's equal up.

Special needs, one that we were just talking about. We have up to $5,000 a year for seniors who qualify. They would have to be on Alberta seniors' benefit to even be considered for qualification. Northwest Territories has additional assistance for seniors who are on social assistance, so it would be a similar kind of thing, and the Yukon has low-interest home repair loans. British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland: no program.

Dental, which is again one of the ones that we even help out under special needs. Again, Alberta, Northwest Territories, Yukon are the only ones that have some description of a program. All the other provinces have no program.

Optical. We have roughly $93 every three years for eyeglasses, similar to Manitoba. Northwest Territories, for example, has a pair of eyeglasses every two years, and in Yukon the lenses every two years with 50 bucks for frames. Again B.C., Saskatchewan, Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland: no program.

I'll leave it at that. There are a few others that I could go through, but I think I just made the point quite clearly – if the hon. member would like that information at some point, I'd be pleased to forward it – that in Alberta not only are we very generous in our interpretation of the rules to ensure that the seniors who are eligible receive retroactively even in some cases what they are entitled to, but we have the best seniors' benefit program for needy seniors in all of Canada. I think that is something that we can all on both side of the Assembly be very, very proud of.

As I indicate in my discussions with senior's groups, if you know of seniors who are in need, for heaven's sake, please put them in touch with people in the department, who I feel do a very, very fine job of dealing with this particular element of our society.

With that, I'll give up my place and let the member ask some more questions.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm keen to put more questions before the department. I'll just pick up where I left off. One of the strategies being put forward this year is around this interministry committee dealing with implementing the legislation affecting seniors and investigating protection for persons in care. I was asking about whether that would be including developing standards of care, and I mentioned the FAIRE group at the same time.

I was also asking about standards and criteria for care around the day homes and the boardinghouse type of homes and whether there'd be any legislation coming in this year to regulate the provision of services there. I hope there is, because that is an area where we really need to see some kind of regulation and standards of care.

I find the minister's point that the special-needs benefit program is flexible and that indeed if a senior were in need of one of these appliances that has now been restricted – I appreciate that. I certainly know that the staff in the department are excellent and work very hard, and it certainly wasn't me who was indicating that they don't have compassion. My question is: how are they supposed to know this? As much as I'd like to believe that every person duly reviews and scours the Hansard from every debate, I don't think it's true. So how are people supposed to know that these exceptions could be made or that it is still worth while asking for this if indeed they've gotten a slip of paper that says: you can't ask for it anymore?

I guess I have a problem with the idea that seniors need to be coming to their MLAs in order to be able to get full access to everything that's available in these programs. Of course, we're all here to serve our constituents, but I don't think it's appropriate that there's a situation where you have to know the tricks and be able to get through to the right people to access points. I certainly agree with the minister about the compassion and excellent work done by the people in the program.

I note that there's a transfer of moneys to Alberta Health for payment of health care premiums. I'm sorry I don't have the vote number for you. It's probably under vote 4. I'm wondering if there is an increase in this payment reflected in this budget and, if so, by how much. In other words, are there more people qualifying for this subsidy of full or partial payment of health care premiums? We certainly have seen the demand under the special-needs benefit increasing. Are we also seeing this increase under the section of Alberta senior's benefit that allows for the full or partial payment of health care premiums?

The lodge assistance grant. I know that this is an issue that the minister is familiar with, but it's one that's causing some concern. I've heard about it particularly in relation to Edmonton. One figure that I've heard is that Edmonton is losing $360,000 a year because the provincial funding for the senior citizens' lodges, I think it could be fairly said, discriminates against the larger cities. The funding formula that's in place right now is that the province will pay $3.60 per resident per day for those in the larger centres. The exceptions there are Calgary and Lethbridge, but for all of the other larger centres in the province that holds.

Now, the smaller and usually the rural lodges get $4.80 per person per day. I think this was developed with the idea that there were economies of scale for the larger lodges, and that may well be true, but we have larger organizations that are running these, and there is a definite discrimination factor here. I think it's affecting our ability certainly in Edmonton to be able to provide new facilities. I'm aware that the mayor from the city of Edmonton has contacted the minister asking for a correction in this inequity.

I think part of the issue around this is that we have more seniors in lodge-type care who are in fact older and more frail than perhaps the program originally envisioned, and therefore the lodges are having to provide care beyond what was originally expected of them. I'm asking whether there's been consideration in this budget year to increasing that allotment. If not, then is there any special consideration to be given to the Greater Edmonton Foundation: Housing for Seniors in the assistance they're looking for specific to a couple of the lodges that they're attempting to renovate or rebuild? There's quite a bit of material available on that. If the minister is in need of any of it or wants copies, I'm happy to help with that and provide it to him.

Moving on, I'm wondering if the minister can make a commitment as to when the government will be tabling their response to the impact of the aging population study. I know that he mentioned it in his opening remarks. I'm just looking for a specific date when we might expect a response from the government on that.

Before we leave seniors' issues, in a quick literature review of the issues that are being raised in the paper, in different reports and analyses that are being done, just a couple of things that I want to point out here. Alberta has had higher inflation than, I think, the rest of the country for a given period of time which was in the last year. That certainly affects seniors or anyone, in fact, on a fixed income. Things are costing more, and it's eating into their savings.

There are also a couple of times now when I've seen concerns raised around undernourishment of seniors. I'll very quickly refer back to the point I was making about funding for seniors' centres, in that often there is a hot lunch program or a once a week program that involves food and nutrition information or perhaps eating together, which at the very least is getting seniors out and getting at least one good meal into them, or perhaps teaching them better the skills and information they need on how to shop and cook for themselves. I'm really saddened to hear that there are seniors who have that kind of undernourishment if they can afford it. Then, of course, as we know, there are seniors who are struggling, particularly with the rent payments that we're looking at right now, and are using food money to pay for their rent and therefore are not eating properly.

We have some instances – and I have seen this in our office in Edmonton-Centre. Given the hot rental market, seniors are being asked to leave, with the appropriate notification I'm quick to add, to vacate apartments that are currently under a subsidy program. So they're uprooted, have to leave where they're living, and the apartments are not offered again at the subsidized rate, and that's expensive. As anyone here that's ever moved knows, even if you're going to somewhere not that far away, you've still got moving costs for the furniture plus any days you may be in between places and a number of other costs that are incurred there.

We've had a natural gas hike here in the last year, and that has certainly affected seniors. I'm sure we've all heard about that. I notice that Telus phone rates have gone up I think by $2 and then by another $2, and I think they just went up another $3 in January. Again, for someone on a fixed income that's significant money.

I do have a motion before the Assembly, Motion 519, which is asking that the costs of the telephone be included in the 30 percent of income that's paid by seniors for rent and utilities in subsidized apartments, because we've got basic phone rates that are now in the $23 to $25 range. When that's above and beyond what they're paying, this is getting to be a significant cost, and telephones are not an option for seniors. The medic alert help lines work through the phone lines, so you've got to have a phone to have one of those "I've fallen and I can't get up" medic alert systems. As well, it's an isolation-breaking factor. People keep in touch with their family and friends that way.

I have spoken before about the number of user fees which affect seniors. User fees are a regressive tax. Everybody pays for the service no matter what their income is, and I've had a number of seniors talk to me about that.

I also note that there was a Calgary regional health authority study on regional health in that area which turned up that one-quarter of their seniors, 25 percent, didn't have the money to eat properly, and I had referred to that earlier.

I also note that the cable TV rates have gone up. When I first heard this, you know, I viewed cable TV as an entertainment expense, and it was my choice as to whether I had it or not, and should we really be feeling sorry for people that couldn't have cable TV? But I have been educated in that. In fact, for anyone living in my constituency and I'm sure in a number of other ones, if you want to have any kind of television reception, you have to have cable. In downtown Edmonton you can't get any kind of reception, unless you're really fond of that sort of three-ghosting appearance on your television set, and you might get one station, but it's a pretty interesting thing to try and watch. It's been shown to me that really cable TV is pretty important to a lot of seniors. It's how they connect. It keeps their minds alert and active. It gives them some connection with the outside world when watching the news. Perhaps they even watch question period on Access television. That would be great. Nonetheless, there's another cost that's gone up by 6 percent.

Just very quickly there are a number of things that have gone up for seniors in the last year.

Just in closing on the seniors – although I do hope to get back to it – has the government considered the suggestion put forward by the Liberals of abolishing the health care premiums? As the minister pointed out, there are only two provinces that charge them. Certainly, if we were looking for a way to put money back in the pockets of seniors, there's a very effective way to do it, and it's certainly much needed when we look at all the other costs that have increased in their daily budgets.

[Mrs. Laing in the chair]

Now, moving on, tracking the FTEs in the department is an exercise in deciphering which, I will admit, is beyond me. They are now appearing as a straight one line. I would ask the minister for a breakdown of FTEs by each vote number and subvote number. I think we've got a total of six votes, and in some of the categories I think there are up to another six subcategories. I'd like to see exactly how those FTEs break down and also ask if the minister can supply an accounting of the changes in staffing for each area from last year to this year. One of things I've noted is that staff have been transferred around, and again I have not been able to track this through the documentation that's provided in the budget process. Sometimes I can find it in the public accounts process, but mostly it's just knowing people in a department and knowing where they came from and where they went to. I'd like to be able to get something on paper with that, so if the minister could be so kind.

Thirdly in that category, if I can get a comparison – and I know this is difficult because the department has been changed and sort of folded into itself and folded into itself quite a bit – on the FTEs as close as you can get with the vote numbers, comparing from, say, '93-94 to the year that we're in, '99-2000, that would be helpful. I'm asking if pension liabilities are reflected anywhere in the budget. Any anticipation of retirements?

Now, I'd like to move on to a couple of other issues. The performing arts stabilization fund. The government's commitment to that fund was to have been completed in the current fiscal year, '99-2000. I'm looking for confirmation that that indeed did happen and asking if there is any additional moneys going into the fund in the budget year under consideration, 2000-2001. If there is a new commitment, could we please get a description of that and copies of the agreement that's been made to put further money into that fund?

The Western Heritage Centre, which appears under vote 3.0.4. or 3.0.6. It's not quite clear in there where it would come. Now, I notice in the public accounts that despite previous ministers being on record saying that the government would not be supplying any additional funding to this organization, in fact in '98-99 Treasury did grant an additional $200,000 to the Western Heritage Centre. So I'm asking: what is the commitment to the Western Heritage Centre in this budget that we have under consideration? Was this figure included in the figures that I see before me? It keeps mentioning 18 of the historic sites, and the minister used the same 18 figure. Is the Western Heritage Centre now one of those 18? I don't think it is. So where is the money coming from to undertake the costs that have now been incurred by the government, and what, if any, other commitment has been reduced to offset that? If, indeed, there was an offset, what is it, and if not, does this mean that we can be expecting a supplementary supply request from the department before the end of the year? I'd also like a description of the operations of the restricted fund in the Western Heritage Centre fund. That would be helpful.

Oh, dear, I'm going to have to continue on once I take a little break here. I've got so much more to get through. No, I've got another minute. I'm going to use it.

Starting in on arts and culture then. I note that the goal and strategy is to achieve full participation in the cultural life of Alberta. As I have many times before, I'm of course advocating for government support and leadership for support of arts and culture in Alberta, and no matter how the numbers are presented, the truth is that the money in the arts and culture has remained stagnant since the late '80s. Certainly to anyone that's out there talking to the groups, the amount of money they're receiving has not increased. As I explained it last year, I think the pie is the same size and the pieces are getting cut smaller. Certainly, we've had professional staff that have been moved out of the branch, and I think that expertise is lost to the organization and lost to the public generally. We've had new projects brought into the portfolio and a bit of money came with them, and then that gets touted as an increase in the budget, but it isn't. That was money that came tagged to a specific project.

I'll make the point again that I see tourism and economic development and in some cases games who love to use the photos of the thousands of happy people at the Folk Festival or the Fringe or the Calgary Children's Festival or the Blueberry Bluegrass Festival or whatever, but I don't see any accompanying money to support this fine programming and these exciting performances that draw people in and makes for the great photo op which is then used by these groups.

I think I've reached the end of my time. I know the minister wants to say a few words, and then I'll be happy to get up and continue with my questions. Thank you very much.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I again will keep my comments relatively brief with the obligation that we'll answer most, if not all, of your questions later.

A couple of points I want to make. You have to appreciate that with respect to seniors' premiums some 130,000 seniors either pay little or no premium because they're on the seniors' benefit program. So that's one chunk there. They don't pay it. [interjection] The others, you have an interesting point. I'm sure that at some point we will be looking at this option also, but I will not make a commitment one way or the other, because quite frankly I can't.

You raised the Western Heritage Centre the other day in question period, and I thought I had made it clear, but I'll explain it again. We now own the building. The people look after the programming, so there is no money allocated in this budget for the Western Heritage Centre, period. The operation, the maintenance of the building is in the infrastructure budget, as it is with all the other facilities. You are correct. This is not one of the 18 facilities I'm referring to. So there is no skimming off of any kind of dollars to facilitate this particular group, and the programming is totally on their own hook. I'm sure it's going to get better as we go on, and it is excellent at this point in time also.

As much as I would like to, I will not commit to giving you the breakdown that you requested for the full-time equivalents going back to '92 or '93. That would be such an exercise in futility and research, if you will, for people on my staff that I don't feel it's warranted. However, I will give you, if you want, current ones by department within reason.

Just to give you an idea of what's happened. For example, we are getting five more in the human rights and citizenship division, working at the ground level to try to bring down the backlog there, which we are doing, as I understand, in that area, probably, again, the best in Canada for a time frame for getting the complaints turned around, and we want to, hopefully within the next reasonable period of time, get that shorter yet. So those are five new ones in that area.

We've got two people in sport and recreation volunteer services to meet a demand there, four in the cultural facilities and historical resources division, one in the cultural facilities for planning, and one in the housing services communication staff. As you can appreciate, seniors' housing, which we inherited as a ministry, brought in some 34 new bodies and special purpose housing, another 62 bodies, for some 96 more. I believe those numbers are quite accurate there, for a total in the ministry of 700 and some odd full-time equivalents, so a little over 700. To go back and go to year-to-year changes, I'm not prepared to do that, not that we're hiding anything. It's just simply an exercise that I think isn't really warranted.

You had comments on the lodge assistance grant. When that was brought forward, it was accepted universally by all as a good way, with the idea being that the operators in the major centres such as Edmonton and Calgary – and I believe Lethbridge is the third one that is affected by the lower rate. The understanding at the time it was brought in was that the economies of scale, for example the Greater Edmonton Foundation – I don't know off the top of my head, but they've got a considerable number of units. The feeling was that they could operate at a much lower rate of support, if you will, than the smaller lodges outside. That's why it was done. Are we reviewing it? Yes. Will it be changed? I don't know.

One of the concerns that we have is that this is operating dollars, and they have gone into lodge expansion programs with support through Infrastructure and some additions on their own. Part of the problem is that they're carrying mortgages, and that's being a squeeze which we have to look at. But I will not commit to changing anything in terms of the differences. I don't feel it's discrimination. I don't feel it's unfair. However, I do feel it warrants a review, and that's all I'll commit to, is looking at it, and I think you would be quite satisfied with that.

With respect to impact on aging. When am I going to respond to it? That report hasn't come to me yet, so it will be at some time after, and that's part B of a bigger report. Part A came out earlier in the year, and we will be looking at that in conjunction with other reports. As you can appreciate, we've had a couple of social housing ones, homeless reports. The Broda report was a very good one. Looking at the policies as they pertain to any particular segment of society we're dealing with, we have to look at them in a total and complete context instead of just factoring out one or the other. What I can assure you, however, is that when that report is submitted, it will be made available very quickly so that people who are interested will certainly know the content of it, and then where it goes from there remains to be seen.

Your observations on seniors' centres, especially the one in the General hospital, I'm cognizant of and, quite frankly, sympathetic. We are trying to somehow get that rent problem addressed. I don't know if we'll be able to or not; it's outside my jurisdiction. But I do agree with you that the seniors' centres are a very good operation. How we could or whether we should get funding to them I don't know. You may or may not be aware that over the years across the province there have been considerable CFEP dollars going into funding a lot of these centres in terms of the capital, especially in smaller communities. Although I'd like to, I can't commit and say that there's going to be an operating dollar going in there, but I do agree with you that they do a very, very good service to the seniors of the province overall.

Some of them operate – I can give you an example. For example, the Seba Beach seniors' centre actually has an operation that turns a surplus, which they give to charity throughout the area, without any kind of financial assistance from any level of government, period. They run a very successful thrift store. At some point if you're interested I can put you in contact with the people there to just see how they do it, and you can ask for yourself firsthand. That is one situation. It is not necessarily something that can happen right across the province. They're doing a very good thing there, and they're quite unique. I happen to know them on a very, very personal level, and I have nothing but respect for that particular group from Seba Beach. Like I say, they don't take any kinds of rent, nothing, and they do help out in the community quite generously.

With respect to seniors you had some reference to: how do they know what they're eligible for? I guess the best thing I can say to you is that obviously people on the staff are very, very, very good at dealing with them. In terms of conversations or whatever, in terms of dealing with their applications, they're pretty sharp at picking out if they may or may not need it. I would hope that the word spreads, and certainly we, through our program, if we find it necessary could go down the path of letting them know that in fact there are some variations. They're quite aware of it, quite frankly.

I don't really appreciate the comment made: how do they get to know if not through an MLA? I think that was a rather unfair, underhanded, and inappropriate comment because, quite simply, on special needs we get some 6,000 people, and the MLAs would be swamped overboard. All I'm saying to you is that there's a senior who went to one of your colleagues for assistance, and if a senior can't go to an MLA for assistance – and this was from across, if you will, one of your colleagues, not one of mine. I read you the letter of what we did for him just to give you an example that we're very open to access. I don't care where it comes from. If we see a senior in need who qualifies, we help, period.

That's something I want to encourage more, and it's not a political process in any way, shape, or form. I have a lot of confidence in all my colleagues in the House on both sides that when it comes to issues such as seniors, those are brought forward in good faith and not with political brownie points in mind, and I treat them accordingly. I think MLAs on a lot of issues, as you well know, being a seasoned veteran, are quite familiar that you can in fact do a lot of good for a lot of people in a lot of areas by helping them out through the system.

With respect to seniors who are malnourished, that is I hope – I very sincerely hope – a very small number. I would hope it is, and they're out there. This is where some of the special needs goes, for getting that kind of thing if they qualify. Also, some of it is management, some of it is home care, some of it is Meals on Wheels. Those are individual situations that hopefully as people who are involved identify, they help them through the process.

The other thing that was mentioned this afternoon was the whole area of women's issues. I'd like to point out that women's issues are a concern across government. Although I'm the minister responsible, many of the ministries have programs. You identified some of them yourself in the House and the various services, legislation that are of direct benefit to women as such. Within my own ministry we've not identified specifically dollars for policy analysis and support respecting women's issues per se, but these are done through the human rights and citizenship branch as a part of their overall responsibilities.

It is good enough, and the ministry staff do a good job in supporting me in my role as the minister responsible for women's issues. They provide consultation services to other ministries; for example, participating in interdepartmental committees dealing with matters of concern to women such as the People and Prosperity initiatives, the interdepartmental committee on family violence. Further community groups wishing to develop education programs that reduce discrimination against women and foster equality for women can apply for grants from the human rights, citizenship, and multicultural education fund.

Just to give you some examples of applications and funding provided in the last fiscal year, there is something called Changing Together: A Centre for Immigrant Women, which received $6,000 for a provincial conference to identify critical issues for immigrant women and planning strategies to address these issues. The Women's Economic and Business Solutions Society, or WEBSS, received $14,850 for a provincial conference entitled Rebuilding Strength, Dismantling Barriers. This conference will be held at Grant MacEwan College coming up on September 29 through October 1, 2000, and will focus on issues of community inclusion and equality for women with disabilities. Women in Scholarship, Engineering, Science and Technology, or WISEST, received $25,000 for a project entitled: if women ruled the Earth with men, what then? This project involves the production of a video and written guide based on the stories of the successes and challenges of 17 women in leadership roles.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The human rights and citizenship branch distributes education materials that are of particular interest to women; for example, an audiovisual resource on preventing gender discrimination, something that's of concern to all of us. In 2000-2001 the branch will also update and redistribute the women's organizations of Alberta directory, which has proven to be a very popular resource. A new initiative on women's history will be developed in 2000 as a millennium project. It's a booklet that will be produced and includes a time line of significant events and profiles of women important to Alberta's history. This project is part of a joint initiative by the federal, provincial, and territorial ministers responsible for the status of women. In addition, the ministry will continue to distribute resources such as a Stepping Stones role model, materials produced by the federal, provincial, and territorial ministers responsible for the status of women.

I should also mention the seniors' benefit program in my department. It's the best income support program for seniors in Canada, most of whom are women.

So, hon. member, when you say that this minister does not take that particular section of his portfolio seriously, you're absolutely wrong.

Thank you, and I'll yield the floor to you for some more.

MS BLAKEMAN: I think I would ask the minister to perhaps review the questions and the points I was raising by reviewing the Hansard. I think he'll see that the questions and points I wanted have not quite been answered by his lengthy and thorough response to me. I encourage him to review the Hansard.

I'd like to continue talking about arts and culture. I found an interesting quote here that I'd like to read into the record from Shirley L. Thomson, who is a former director of the National Gallery of Canada and currently a director on the Canada Council for the Arts. She's talking about why there's a need to provide public funding, and although she's talking about Canadian public funding, I think the argument serves just as well for Alberta. She says:

A major argument for public funding is one of scale. To support Canadian culture across a country as diverse as ours, and to take risks in fostering art at the leading and less-understood edge, you need funding agencies large enough to perform effectively and to distribute resources widely and wisely. They must be able both to spot talent and to do something about it. Their communication tools must reach the artists and the public who are the potential users, and they need a varied pool of staff and advisors on whose judgment and expertise they can call.

I think that's a nicely encapsulated view of what I would be looking to the minister's department and the AFA to be doing. I think I've already brought up some points that show that this vision is being eroded with the staff reductions we've had in that area. The understanding of the whole concept of development of arts and culture I think has fallen by the wayside in the last seven or eight years, and I'd encourage the minister to perhaps go back and look at some of the policy documents that existed in the late '80s and early '90s for inspiration there.

I note a government news release dated February 18, 2000 – oh, goodness, we're right up to speed here – that speaks in glowing terms of how much money the arts organizations are putting back into Alberta communities. Indeed, that is an important and valued part of what artistic organizations and artists bring to Alberta, an economic impact, but I think what they bring goes much further than that. One of the points that is raised is that arts organizations spend $127 million in their communities on materials, supplies, services, and salaries. I want to point out that that's money that stays in the community, and in many cases that's money that's brought either from outside the local community or from outside Alberta. So, in fact, it's new money coming into the Alberta economy, and it stays here. The supplies are purchased by the organizations, but the individual artists are also paying rent, buying food. That money stays in circulation here.

There is a significant volunteer role in the arts organizations, and I don't think we value that enough yet. What I'd like to ask the minister is: can he show me if there are any specific increases that are going directly to the organizations in this vote? I notice that the budget amount has gone up, it's gone down. Still, when I'm visiting the organizations themselves, they're not seeing an increase. I'm looking for the minister to show me specific increases where the money is ending up in the pockets or in the accounts of the organizations.

One small thing I came across that the minister might find interesting and I hope inspiring is the support for the Alberta film development program. We're in year two now and going into year three. I'm expecting that the minister is doing an evaluation. In fact I think I saw that in one of the strategies, that there would be an evaluation of that program. I just found it really interesting that in a document called the Practical Guide to Canada's Film, Television and Multi-Media Industry we have one paragraph about two inches long on the Alberta film development program, but when I look at the assistance that's given from other provinces to the film industry, we've got things like over a page of different programs that B.C. offers their film industry. We've got half a page from Manitoba. Ontario: almost two pages of programs and incentives that are offered. Even P.E.I., valiant little P.E.I., has more than half a page of programs that are offered. So perhaps that would be an inspiration to the minister to take a look at this.

I think the government learned its lesson and learned it the hard way on support of the film industry. Certainly we lost an awful lot of money out of this province, and we also dealt a fairly serious blow to the industry itself. I'm sure the minister is well aware of how many of our trained technicians – and I know that the minister for science, research, and information technology would join me in recognizing how important it is to keep the people that are trained in this knowledge-based business in our province. The estimates are that we lost I think about 75 percent of our technicians. In many cases these people also had highly specialized equipment that they took with them because they owned it, and now anyone trying to do that kind of business here has to woo these people back.

So, as I say, I think the government learned their lesson on that one. I encourage a very thorough review of the program, and I encourage them to seek out other ways to give support to this industry. It's a moneymaker, it's a tourism draw, and it's a renewable resource because it is knowledge-based.

I'll also note the number of letters that I've received CCed copies of from individuals. I think all of them but one or two were from individuals living in Calgary who were writing to their MLA asking for additional money – I think $8 million was the figure that was mentioned – from the government to funding into arts and cultural programming. I've been impressed by the number of people that felt they needed to write. As we know, lots of people think it, but they don't actually follow through with the impetus to send the letter, and to me that's a fairly strong indicator that, particularly in Calgary, people are looking to the government to give better support in funding for arts and culture.

Now, a number of miscellaneous points. The changes in funding to the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation. I'm a little concerned here that this is going to come at a very difficult time for the groups that are currently receiving operating funds through this foundation, and I'm wondering if the minister has planned a phase-in of the cuts. I suppose that's not strictly speaking an accurate description, but if they're being told they can no longer qualify under the program if they receive funding from any other source, it certainly would be a tremendous loss of revenue for those organizations. Was there a phase-in considered? If there wasn't, boy, I'll be asking you for one.

Part of my question is: have you included the Wild Rose Foundation in your list of other lottery-based granting agencies that are the exclusion criteria here. The Wild Rose Foundation is doing something totally different. They are funding the volunteer component. As you've heard me say on a number of occasions now, we have a huge sector under what could be called the voluntary or nonprofit or charitable sector here. It's one thing to be funding a recreation group like the naturalists' society or the orienteering club of Alberta or whomever with operating funds, but they may well have received moneys through the Wild Rose Foundation, which I know the minister is aware one can only apply for every couple of years, and there is a maximum amount to the grant, but it's specific to volunteer development.

I'll remind the minister again of the excellent report produced by the federal government in which they talk about the need for provincial and municipal governments coming in on capacity building. So I'm very concerned, and I'm looking for reassurance from the minister that the Wild Rose Foundation has not been included on the list, which would mean a group would get cut off from funding from Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife. Has there been a discussion or any criteria put in place for organizations that may face having to close their doors if they're not receiving this funding?

Certainly if there was a group that was getting operating funding through Alberta Sports, Recreation and Wildlife, to lose their operating funding grant and run their organization on the $20,000 from Wild Rose, which is for a very specific reason – and that is volunteer development. We will end up with organizations closing down. Has the department just said: "Yes, we have a criteria, and that's tough luck. Good-bye." Or are there any other provisions being put in place there?

I've asked the minister before; I'll ask him officially as part of this budget process. I'd like to know what the department's policy response is to the recommendations that have been made through the voluntary-sector report from the federal government: a number of recommendations in there about capacity building, about training for staff, training on information technology, purchase of equipment, training for volunteers, and the need to develop good recruitment, screening, and training programs there for volunteers.

The minister mentioned Trailnet, and I'm pleased to see there's support for that project. I know that one of the sticking points that would make everybody feel much happier about this, for those that do have a problem with it, is occupiers' liability legislation, which I have now seen come forward twice in this Legislature. What is the problem? What is holding this legislation up? I mean, certainly there's strong support for it from this side. Can we get on with this? Perhaps if there was some detail here about what the problem is, we could all work on this, because certainly that occupiers' liability legislation would be very helpful to get this wonderful program in line. I do understand there are people that have concerns about it, and I'd like to see those concerns addressed and people feeling comfortable with the project.

I note in the Auditor General's recommendation in the public accounts that there are recommendations on governance principles for appointments of individuals to agencies, boards, and commissions, and I'm wondering if the minister has developed criteria or is following the recommendation from the PAO staffing directive on proper recruitment of people to agencies, boards, and commissions.

A couple of other questions here. Historical sites. I'm wondering what the minister has planned for protection of the Rosedale site that's underneath the EPCOR Rosedale power plant. We know now that that was the site of Fort Augustus, one of the two Fort Edmontons, and also was a burial ground for the Blackfoot tribe. We look to the provincial government to be providing protection for this site. What exactly is the government doing? What protection will be forthcoming? How is the province working with the city on this? What is being put in place?

I note the planning money that's being put in for the 2005 Alberta anniversary celebration. I hope in this case that history repeats itself. In 1980, at the 75th anniversary, a fund was created, and from that fund was development of a number of projects which we value enormously today, such as the Street Performers Festival, the Fringe Festival, the Works visual arts festival, the jazz festival, Folk Festival, et cetera. So I do hope that will be coming.

There are a number of other sectors that I have not yet covered, and I understand there are other issues that we're trying to get through tonight. Other things that have not yet been covered include youth, volunteers, amateur sports, the Francophone Secretariat. By the way, earlier I had mentioned that there were some new programs moved into the department and some moved out, and the Francophone Secretariat is one of the new ones that's been moved in. I had been asking the minister for an accounting that showed moneys leaving and moneys coming back, and the Francophone Secretariat is one of the ones that's come in.

I know there are more issues that are coming on seniors. Additionally, we haven't talked about the human rights, citizenship and multiculturalism education fund or the Human Rights Commission. I think there's more that needs to be raised on the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, and I haven't even touched on the special housing that's now under the portfolio. Those are just a few of the things that have yet to be addressed in this portfolio. I point out once again that one evening or one go at this department is not enough, and anyone that has to be debating Human Resources and Employment now, given all that's in that superministry, has my condolences.

I'd like to go on now, and in the few minutes I have left I'd like to look at some of the concerns that have been raised about the Human Rights Commission. There have been a couple of literature reviews done recently or done within the last couple of years on the Human Rights Commission. We've certainly had it in existence long enough now to be able to be taking a good look at it, and there are a few things I want to raise there.

Some of the things I'm reading are saying that there's a need for increased public education about human rights complaints procedures. This is particularly true in rural areas. I think we also need to include aboriginal communities in that and other peoples or areas that have accessibility concerns. I think there also needs to be increased financial and personal support for complainants. Staff such as accessibility co-ordinators may be necessary. [an electronic device beeped]

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Aw.

MS BLAKEMAN: No, no, no. It's just mine. It's just my little reminder. Joy and happiness everyone. It's just a little reminder to help me come to a form of . . .

MRS. SOETAERT: Conclusion.

MS BLAKEMAN: No. There's no way I can conclude. I still have a number of other things to do.

I guess what I'll do now is ask that the debate be adjourned at this point so that we can resume on a different day to complete all the other questions I have around this department. Mr. Chairman, I would ask that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Chairman, I would move that the Committee of Supply now rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

11:30

MRS. LAING: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions of the Department of Community Development, reports progress thereon, and requests leave to sit again.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Second Reading

Bill 9
Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2000

[Adjourned debate February 29: Ms Calahasen]

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to have this opportunity to speak to Bill 9. Earlier this evening when the Government House Leader opened the discussions on Bill 9, he talked about it being necessary for us to have an appropriation bill at this particular stage so that the government could carry on the seamless operations of government in the event of debate carrying on into April. Well, it's laughable at the very least to think that when this government has only designated 15 days of discussion on the budget, we could somehow stretch that into more than a month of debate into April, which would somehow then impact the government operations in terms of dollars. It really is a joke and is something that is beyond the comprehension of any logical kind of review of the dollars we're talking about here.

Mr. Speaker, there is no way I can see that we could reasonably support this interim supply bill without some kind of explanation on how this new spending is going to contribute to meeting any of the defined outcomes and performance criteria in the government business plans. We have lots of outstanding issues in this province, things like waiting lists in the public health care system, opening up hospital beds in this public health care system. The Grey Nuns hospital, in my riding, is a relatively new hospital, and two complete floors of that hospital have never been opened up regardless of the number of red alerts we face in this city, regardless of the kinds of waiting lists we have in the health care system.

Reducing pupil/teacher ratio is very important, yet we don't see how that's addressed in this interim supply bill. I have a letter waiting to be tabled in my desk now from one of the local PACs in my riding that are very concerned about the pupil/teacher ratio and whether it is going to be addressed at all in this interim supply bill.

We have concerns with the auditing certification process of annual performance reports from this government, and they're not addressed in this interim supply bill. There's a lack of disclosure when we talk about supply votes. No doubt we've heard from both the Auditor General in this province and the Alberta Financial Review Commission, that recommends the separation of operating expenses and capital investments as a means of strengthening managerial accountability and evaluation of effectiveness of programs. This doesn't happen in supply bills, much to the detriment of disclosure for the government.

This government keeps telling Albertans that they have a plan to link expenditures to outcomes, but we see in this interim supply bill a request for 18.6 percent of the total expenses appropriated for the fiscal year. So how does that link expenditures to outcomes in any fashion at all?

We see really sporadic and disjointed requests for dollars in the departments here. With one month left of operations, we have a range of 12 percent to 40 percent funding requests of total budgets of the year. We had International and Intergovernmental Relations up for debate earlier this evening in terms of the next year's budget, yet in this interim supply bill they're asking for 46 percent of the total expenditures of the last year's budget. Where do these figures come from? How can they possibly reasonably match any of the performance measures with this kind of budgeting expenditure? It's hard to believe that they think this is justifiable.

Were these three-year business plans they talk about and the performance measurements to be really useful, to give any real indication of where the government is going, to see any kind of planning in place and any results-driven kinds of program and funding results, we wouldn't see an interim supply bill like this. We would see properly adjusted budgets on a regular and consistent basis coming forward from the Provincial Treasurer's department, but that isn't what happens, Mr. Speaker.

Any business and industry who operated on this kind of basis would have their CEOs and all their managerial staff turfed the very first time they came back and asked for money on this kind of basis. It's a complete lack of strategic planning at any level.

AN HON. MEMBER: It's a trust-me budget.

MS CARLSON: It's a trust-me budget. That's exactly right. The problem is that now Albertans aren't trusting this government anymore because they've just done this one too many times in all areas.

There is no matching of dollars with performance measures, with outcomes. It just doesn't happen here. Albertans expect to receive value for their tax dollars, and they're not seeing it when you see this kind of budgeting happening. It's budgets done by pulling numbers out of a hat. It's budgets done without being responsible in terms of the budget forecasts on the revenue side. There's no doubt that budget forecasting is a little tricky in the province when you've got oil and gas revenues and when we see the volatility in the market, but there is also no doubt that this government can do exactly what industry does at all times, and that's adjust their forecasts as appropriate.

At least it could be done quarterly, and sometimes the requirement would be for it to be done more often. But what does this government do? It doesn't do it at all. It makes lots of promises, comes back for interim supply budgets whenever they need to rather than being responsible in terms of how they do their forecasting or rather than being accountable to Albertans on how the money is spent.

There's no ability to scrutinize the dollars they're asking for now when we get less than an hour's debate on this particular bill before it passes second reading. There's no opportunity for me to go back through the departments that I'm responsible for, which would be Environment, where they're asking for a 28 percent increase, and International and Intergovernmental Relations, where they're asking for a 46 percent increase.

What are they going to do with those dollars in one month, Mr. Speaker? It looks to me like they're going on a spending spree. Why? Just to get rid of money that's in the department at that level? [interjection] Well, then answer the questions. Have the ministers stand up here and tell us what they're going to do with those dollars. That would be responsible. The irresponsible thing to do is to just come in and ask for this kind of money with 30 days left in the year. That is not good planning. It isn't good management. It isn't being accountable. It doesn't make any progress in meeting any of the identified goals. We don't see any clear and measurable terms coming forward here. There are no clear, set objectives. There are no effective strategies set. This is a complete lack of planning and is an act of irresponsible behaviour on behalf of a government that is talking about billion-dollar budgets.

So why is it, Mr. Speaker, that they aren't prepared to stand up and defend what they're asking for at this point in time? Why do we have to go through this process so many times every year with this government? Why can't they come through with requests that are detailed? Well, I hear lots of grumbling, Mr. Speaker, but I don't see too many people standing up here prepared to speak to this particular budget, and so they could do that. Let's see some accountability in terms of how the money is spent. That's what we're asking for. That's what Albertans are asking for. It's lots of money. They're happy to stand up here and talk about tax cuts that are going to be delivered over the next three years, but they're not prepared to stand up and be accountable for the moneys they're asking for at this time, which are literally millions of dollars and which reflect a huge percentage of this year's budget.

How are we going to see identified goals being met here or measure any of the progress? There is no mandate, no ability to do that, and we don't see the benchmarks or the targets attached to these dollars. Why is that? What is this government afraid of and what are they hiding from in terms of bringing in an interim supply budget asking for so many dollars at this particular point in time?

Mr. Speaker, these are issues that we have to address every single time they bring in one of these budgets like this, and it's a real problem. We recognize that funding is required in areas of public health and education and infrastructure, but when you have to address the serious issues that are outstanding around the lack of planning within the government's budgetary process, it is our responsibility as the Official Opposition in this province to stand up and criticize the technique by which this government gets to their end goal. We expect governments to be accountable. Certainly this one is not.

A main problem here is the improper management of the budget. Like we talked about, in industry this Treasurer would have been out a long time ago, because you need to be able to properly forecast the revenues and, just as necessary, match the expenses not only with the revenues but with whatever benchmarks have been set, whatever objectives have been set, and this is a government that cannot do it for one quarter, never mind for one year or three years or five years.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I hear lots of grumbling, but I don't see anybody on their feet prepared to defend this and prepared to tell us why we do not see prudent financial management and why we do not see fiscal responsibility from a government that talks about it all the time. Talk is cheap. What we need is action from this government. We need action from this government in terms of being fiscally responsible for their projecting and for their forecasting and for their budgeting, and they are not prepared to do it. They are prepared to try and spin master their way out of these issues, but they are not prepared to be accountable.

We've talked for a long time, Mr. Speaker, about lots of options they could be taking a look at in terms of balancing out the revenues and the expenses on the budgetary side. One of those is a fiscal stabilization fund which would take some of the surplus and ensure that strategic investments are undertaken to be able to flatten out the valleys and mountains.

AN HON. MEMBER: It's called the heritage fund.

MS CARLSON: Well, the minister likes to talk about the heritage savings trust fund, but in fact it's not used for that purpose at all. It wouldn't be a bad idea if they considered using it for that purpose.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, but in accordance with Standing Order 61(3) the chair is required to put the question to the House on the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a second time]

THE CHAIRMAN: I now call subcommittee B to order. The item we have before us is the estimates of the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations. I call upon the hon. minister to make a few comments.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be here this evening to present the estimates of International and Intergovernmental Relations. My intention is to give a brief overview and leave as much time as possible for debate.

The business plan and the budget for the department I think are clearly laid out in the documents that have been provided. I know that my colleagues are certainly familiar with them, and I'm sure the members of the opposition have had time to review them, so I'm not going to spend a lot of time on those.

I will mention briefly our three goals. Goal 1 is "to secure benefits for Alberta from strengthened international relations," goal 2 is "to secure benefits for Alberta as an equal partner in a revitalized, united Canada," and goal 3 is "to support Aboriginal people and governments in achieving self-reliance and enhanced well-being."

The key initiatives for the year ahead. Certainly our ministry will aggressively defend and promote Alberta's interests in our dealings with the federal government. We'll also focus on implementing our framework for international strategies, expanding trade, and strengthening relations between government and aboriginal people.

One of the things I wanted to take a minute to talk about tonight was managing federal/provincial relations, an area we have been discussing over the last few days in one way or another. One of the very important roles of this ministry is to manage and co-ordinate the relationships and relations between Alberta and the government of Canada to ensure that Alberta's provincial interests are addressed. Our responsibilities flow directly from the very federal nature of Canada. The Constitution assigns certain responsibilities to the federal government and certain responsibilities to the provinces. In my view, we need to pay a little attention to this because the federal system is not working or functioning as well as it should.

At a very recent conference on federalism, where I think 600 delegates from many countries in the world were attending, the Prime Minister referred to the diversity and the complexity of Canada, and he stated that within our federal system the idea of partnership is central to the federal government's approach to governing. However, recent actions by the federal government were inconsistent with this principle, and I'll just give you a couple of examples.

One was the unilateral announcement of a major initiative on homelessness. While the initiative is welcomed in this province because it is a serious concern, the concern is in the lack of provincial consultation even though the provinces are basically responsible for the delivery of programs. Even today, nearly three months later, we have no idea how this program will work. We don't know if the money is going to flow to municipalities or to individuals or how we can best integrate the federal initiative with Alberta's existing social policies and programs. This is not partnership nor is it an effective way to meet the needs of the homeless. All members in this Assembly know that there are a number of groups, particularly in our two major centres of Edmonton and Calgary, that are working very hard to address this issue, and I think we need a more effective way to partner with our federal government.

The latest example was just a few days ago when Ottawa struck a special deal with Manitoba and Saskatchewan, giving those two provinces an additional $240 million in federal aid. Ottawa did not provide support for Alberta farmers or other Canadian farmers. Despite Alberta's ongoing participation in multilateral discussions, we ended up with a bilateral deal. This clearly is not acceptable. All this time Alberta has been at the table working co-operatively for a national farm income assistance solution, and this was disregarded.

Federal agricultural policy must begin to meet the needs of Alberta producers. We need to change some federal policies to encourage value-added exports that will maximize producer returns in a global, competitive market. I'll be working with the minister of agriculture and my cabinet colleagues to promote longer term solutions to the problems faced by Alberta farmers.

More recently and maybe more of a disappointment, the federal government in yesterday's budget did not respond to the Premiers' unanimous call to restore funding to the Canada health and social transfer. Over the past six years the federal government has cut more than $20 billion from health and social programs. Every year Albertans and other Canadians send more money to Ottawa than it needs to run its own programs. That's why the federal government is able to project surpluses in excess of a hundred billion dollars, yet the federal government has ignored a unanimous call to place health and social funding on a sustainable basis. Instead, it has added $500 million a year to funding for the CHST in each of the next four years. Alberta's share will be about $50 million a year, enough to operate our health system for about three days. [interjection]

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, there's going to be lots of opportunity for you to ask all the questions you want rather than asking them now, when we then can't hear the minister speak.

MRS. McCLELLAN: We need co-operation and we need partnership in this important area. It's important to all Albertans, to all Canadians. This is not a partisan issue, and we must work together to look for solutions. Solutions are not comments that are attributed to a federal aide in saying that Alberta was wrong to provide extra support to health care in Calgary. This is not a positive action. What it really displays is how little they know about the growth in the city of Calgary over the past years and the stresses that have been put on the system there. It's really not up to federal government aides some 2,000 miles away to pass judgment on Alberta and Calgary's health policy. This is not partnership.

Asking the federal government for more money every year to address our increasing costs is also not the answer. We need to address the fundamental problem, the imbalance between provincial program responsibilities and federal financial resources. Provinces must have sustainable, long-term funding to meet their social responsibility. There is a need for sharing, co-operation, and fair play to meet the needs of Canadians. Over the next year my ministry will work with other ministries and I hope with all members in this Assembly to address these and other important federal/provincial issues.

We'll ensure that Alberta employs a consistent and co-ordinated approach to federal relations, including Alberta's participation in key intergovernmental forums like the annual Premiers' Conference and the Western Premiers' Conference.

I want to mention one other initiative, and that is the framework for Alberta's international strategies. The renaming of this ministry to International and Intergovernmental Relations reflects the government's intention to place a higher and greater emphasis on Alberta's international activities. We've just completed the development of a new framework for international strategies, which was tabled in the House I believe a week ago yesterday. It identifies three core businesses for Alberta and the international sphere. One is "building international relations," two is "removing trade and investment barriers", and three is "marketing trade, tourism, and investment."

This framework was developed to help guide the Alberta government's international policies and activities and to act as a foundation for new international strategies like the international marketing strategy, the twinning review, and the international education strategies. It's important for us as a province to think internationally when we're developing our policies and our business practices. This applies as much to government departments and businesses as it does to schools, organizations, and citizens.

We have been a very active international player for three decades. International missions strengthen Alberta's relations with other countries and help Alberta businesses profile their goods and services. Our consulting advice to foreign governments ranging from Russia and China to South Africa and Mexico helps improve their systems of government.

Twinning or special relationships between Alberta and other jurisdictions help the province to move beyond cultural and business barriers. This year marks the 20th anniversary of the twinning with Hokkaido in Japan. Our involvement in various international exchanges and initiatives, from the World Petroleum Congress to the 2001 World Championships in Athletics, are incredibly important to this province.

We will be working hard over the next year to expand trade. We'll work very closely with the federal government to ensure that Alberta's positions are reflected in trade policy negotiations. Trade and investment are very important to Alberta's economy. It's something we don't think about a lot, but one-third of our economic activity is linked to international markets, and one in three Albertans earns a living from international trade.

Since the introduction of the free trade agreement the value of Alberta's exports to the United States has more than tripled, growing from $9 billion to over $29 billion. Total Alberta exports to the world have almost tripled, from $13 billion to more than $34.5

billion. We are currently Canada's third largest exporter, only behind Ontario and Quebec and ahead of British Columbia. I think that is very significant for a province that is virtually landlocked, and you would consider that export might have just a bit more challenge from this position.

In international trade missions we're seeking increased access for our manufactured goods and services, particularly in the agricultural sector. International trade rules like those being discussed right now at the World Trade Organization are key to securing better conditions for our agricultural producers. I want to tell the members that even though the world trade talks in Seattle didn't result in a new round of negotiations, negotiations on agriculture and trade started again this month. Countries will be submitting proposals by September.

This year I take on the role of co-chair of the committee on internal trade. This is Canada's national body of ministers responsible for internal trade, and as provincial co-chair I will certainly press for new negotiations to remove additional interprovincial barriers to trade.

The other priority we have is with the aboriginal people, and at this time I would ask my colleague the hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs if she would like to make a few comments.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you very much, Madam Minister. As Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs one of my primary responsibilities is to be able to do one very important initiative within International and Intergovernmental Relations, and that's to do with the document that I have taken out on the road called Strengthening Relationships: The Government of Alberta's Proposed Aboriginal Policy Framework. Last fall we released a draft of the proposed aboriginal policy framework, and of course this was followed by a public consultation process around our framework document, which concluded at the end of January. We held over 50 meetings on the framework, with over 1,200 aboriginal and nonaboriginal Albertans attending, from First Nations, Métis, industry, and other interested bodies. In addition, we received 42 written submissions on the framework. Based on the feedback and the input we've received, the framework is being revised, and we will then validate this revision with our stakeholders at which time we will compile all the information again to ensure that what we heard is correct and what we heard will be reflective of the changes that we will have written and submitted to cabinet.

I don't think I have to go through the three goals of the framework. I've said that many times here, and I know that my critic out there knows the goals of the policy framework, so I don't think I need to reiterate those. However, I think it's really important for us to be able to know what it is we're trying to do. It's an exciting opportunity to build stronger relationships between the Alberta government and the aboriginal people in Alberta.

Of course, we have to do a number of things, Mr. Chairman. We have to put in place the necessary staff to implement this framework, and that additional staff will be allocated to Aboriginal Affairs to ensure that we are able to follow through on the various commitments to have action within the framework, because this framework is a cross-government initiative. This cross-government initiative certainly takes on a lot of different areas that need to be addressed. Of course, we'll have to make sure, whenever we're finished the consultation or rewriting, that it'll be reflected in everything we do in all government departments. So, Mr. Chairman, it's really an important part in terms of making sure that whatever we do, we do the right thing with this framework.

Another area of responsibility that I have, of course, is the Métis settlements. The continuation of funding to the Métis settlements is of primary concern and something that I think the Métis settlements want to see continue. We're certainly very pleased, along with the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, that we will continue to do that. I know that's something that needs to be continued in order for us to be able to ensure that the Métis settlements work on their legislation as well as continue their self-reliance perspective.

Another area, of course, is land claims. Land claims is an ongoing area where we want to ensure that whatever we do, we settle any of the outstanding land claims. We have people working on these, and as we complete the negotiations, we will then take them forward.

At this point I'd like to say that we are working on a lot of initiatives with aboriginal people. I'm very pleased to be a part of a government that has worked with aboriginal people in the way we have and to be able to ensure that whatever we do is going to continue to work towards self-reliance initiatives that will help the aboriginal community be able to get to their goals, which are self-sufficiency and self-reliance.

Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to speak to the budget of International and Intergovernmental Relations this evening. First of all, I would like to congratulate the staff of the department for the work they do. Certainly having worked with them on PNWER, the Pacific Northwest Economic Region all-party committee that works to facilitate north/south trade, I have seen people within the department work very hard and very diligently over a number of years now, and I think they do an excellent job there. In fact, it's such a good example of how an all-party committee can work effectively that I'm very surprised that this government doesn't undertake to apply that same model in other areas within this department and in fact within all departments, because I think it definitely facilitates a better understanding of what's going on in the province for all the people of the province and is one of the most effective ways of governing. So I would like to give a bouquet to the staff within the department.

My concerns with the department really have nothing to do with them. It certainly has to do with the mandate that they are given by this government and the mandate that this government continues to operate under, of which we had an example this evening in the first 10 minutes of the minister speaking, about fed bashing. I know, Mr. Chairman, that it's much easier to bash the feds than it is to actually directly address the issues that are outstanding in the province that they are responsible for. So before I get to my specific questions that I came with this evening, let's address a few of those issues. [interjection] I don't see how the minister could be hurt by this, Mr. Chairman. For maybe 11 minutes, not 10 minutes, she stood up here and bashed the feds on their lack of performance as opposed to talking about what they were doing.

In fact, it was interesting that her opening comments talked about defending Alberta's interests instead of promoting the mandate that is written down in their business plan, which is "advancing Alberta's interests." Two completely different perspectives that bring us to two completely different results in terms of benefits for the people of Alberta. I would suggest that going to the table in an effort to work out issues in a co-operative fashion is much more effective than being defensive and confrontational, which is the position we have seen not just the minister but the Premier take on numerous occasions and at the end of the day coming away with very little as a result of that.

Let's talk about two of those issues that she talked about, and those were health care and homelessness. In terms of the feds not anticipating the growth in the city of Calgary and they should have had a plan in place: well, whose problem is that first, Mr. Chairman? I would suggest that it is this department's problem first. They are closest to the issue. In fact, with so many members from the city of Calgary reporting to this ministry and to other ministries, certainly they should have been able to project the growth in the city of Calgary. They should have responsibly been putting a plan in place well ahead of the growth becoming a huge issue in health care and homelessness, as it has, and should have been lobbying the federal government many years ago in anticipation of the kind of growth rates if they felt that was where the money should come from. Not this after-the-fact kind of seat-of-the-pants planning that is effective for nobody, particularly those people requiring either health care or, in fact, homes to live in in a province where temperatures often fall below 30 below zero. So let's address the problem where it starts, and that's here in her backyard, not 2,000 kilometres away.

I know she also talked about agriculture. That's very interesting. We've seen that debate happen here in the Legislature so far this week, where now we hear the minister talking about unfair treatment by the federal government favouring Manitoba and Saskatchewan, when she knows very well that her own Premier refused to go to the table and talk to the Prime Minister about this very important issue for people in the agriculture sector in this province.

Then she goes on to talk about how value-added exports are the areas for growth in agriculture in this province. Yes, definitely, value-added exports are very important, but they are only one part of the total picture, the total problem we're facing in agriculture in this province right now, and this minister, who is responsible for overseeing the kind of development that happens in an integrated fashion across ministries, is refusing tonight to stand up and speak about what their government's role is going to be in ensuring that family farms are safe and secure in this province, that they have a viable future in this province. She talks about value-added exports only and about the lack of a federal response, when her own Premier will not go to the table and negotiate with the Prime Minister on essentially a very important issue.

He wasn't at the meetings, Mr. Chairman. That's well documented. It's not good enough to have the minister of agriculture there. We needed a contingency. We needed the Premier there. We needed this minister there.

MRS. SLOAN: He went to Spain.

MS CARLSON: He went to Spain. Well, we know where his priorities are, Mr. Chairman. They're not with the farmers of this province, and that's too bad.

Those farmers know this. They understand this. I have been at several meetings in the past couple of weeks talking to people from rural communities who are very upset at the lack of support they are getting from this government in this regard. It starts in this department and it starts with the Premier, and they're not doing their job.

Then the minister talked about the recent actions of the feds on their initiative on homelessness and why they don't feel like they're a partner in that process. Well, I would suggest to the minister that if she doesn't know how the program works, then she should be letting us know what she's doing to become a part of the process, and she should remember that she has a responsibility to the homeless in this province. Maybe the homeless don't vote, Mr. Chairman, but they are still people in this province who need to be represented and taken care of to the best of our abilities. This government will do well to remember that, because there are a lot of people who do vote who are watching that and who are seeing their consistent underperformance in that particular area.

Mr. Chairman, in the fall session we heard this minister talk about some negative reactions she had and I assume her government had to the World Trade Organization. I didn't hear her say anything in her opening comments this evening on the government's position in terms of what they're going to do there, so I would like her to highlight that, if she could. It would be important, I think, for us to know what's happening in the future in that particular area.

We've seen a change here in this budget in the direction of this ministry. It went through massive downsizing in the years since 1993, and now we see some significant cost increases being projected for the next year. In the area of international relations it looks to me like the increase is 69 percent, nearly 70 percent. We would like some specifics in terms of how those dollars are going to be spent. And why such a drastic increase? Such a drastic increase to me indicates underperformance in other years or a complete revision of the kind of policy they've been bringing forward. We would like to know which one of those situations is accurate and why she feels there's such a change required there.

In part in that are the full-time equivalent employment positions. Now, we know there's been a bit of a reshuffling within the department in terms of staffing in the recent past and they are projecting to go from 89 full-time equivalents to 100. What we'd like to know: of those budgetary increases, how much of that is going to go to staffing and how much of that is going to go to other costs, particularly travel costs? So if she could break down those costs in as detailed a fashion as possible, we would appreciate it.

We're also seeing a significant cost increase in the areas of trade policy, a 41.3 percent increase there, and that follows of course the announcement this government has made that they're going to be opening some trade offices. We know from past scrutiny that those offices have been primarily staffed by political appointments.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Wrong portfolio. They're not in mine.

MS CARLSON: They're not? Trade offices aren't in your portfolio? Okay.

Then can you give us details? [interjection] However, this ministry is advising in that area. We do know that. And part of those dollars is in the trade policy, so they must have been advising in terms of reopening those trade offices, and we want those details, thank you very much, Mr. Minister.

There's a lot of information that this department is passing on to the other department about those offices that we think government should . . . [interjection] I'm not saying that that isn't the right way for the department to operate. I'm saying that we want the detail. That's what I've asked for. It's a policy decision to reopen those offices and to staff them, and we want to know that Albertans are going to be getting their money's worth, because in fact there is a firm belief not just by us but by many Albertans that the people did not get their money's worth in years past. So what's changed? If we could have that information, we'd like to know.

We would assume that as a part of that process, as a part of this ministry's advising the department in that regard, they've done some long-term follow-up in terms of what worked and what didn't work in the past and in terms of projections for the future. I'm talking more than three-year business plans. I'm talking about: what are the expected gains in the five- to ten-year forecast? Because certainly businesses doing strategic planning would be looking at least that far ahead in the future, we would expect that with the kind of dollars this government is dedicating, they would be doing the same thing, Mr. Chairman.

Also, what kind of analysis has been done of the past missions that this ministry has been involved in? They list here as one of their strategies to "promote the Alberta Advantage to foreign governmental decision-makers by planning missions abroad," et cetera, et cetera. There have been lots of missions in the past. What kind of continuous follow-up is done for the past one, two, three, four, five years to see the net impact of those missions in the past on our economics and on our trade development now in the future? Definitely you would expect that some deals are signed on the spot when they go on these missions but certainly not all of them, I'm sure, Mr. Chairman.

We would expect that that seeding done then would produce some tangible results in the future. Well, we expect that also to be tracked because that would be responsible. The results of that tracking is what we're asking for in as much detail as the department has so that we can also look to measure and evaluate the effectiveness of these past missions. Then based on that tracking, we can project whether or not the reasons this minister is giving for more dollars and more trade offices is going to be justified. What's the cost/benefit trade-off there? If she could address that for me, I would certainly appreciate it.

The minister talked a little bit about working to improve the regulations between provincial borders, and that's very important. Every year in this department the minister says they're going to do that. We haven't seen the results, Mr. Chairman. There may be lots of results. However, it is still the number one concern I hear from businesses doing business within the boundaries of Canadian borders that it is still easier for them to send their goods south, stateside, than it is to B.C., Saskatchewan, or the other provinces.

We would like some detail in terms of the past couple of years as to how effective they've been in reducing the regulations – you must have a list; we'd just like a copy of the list – and also your top priorities for the next budget year in trying to address those issues. Certainly it's as significant to people who have businesses in this province as international trade is, and I think it certainly should be given a high priority to try and resolve those issues. We'd like to know what it is they're doing there and what the key areas are that they will be addressing.

The funding for international relations is so significant, being at nearly 70 percent, there must be new initiatives being undertaken there. If we could have a list of what those are, that would be very important to us.

I have some questions on NAFTA. It's interesting that we don't see anything addressed here in terms of opening comments. I couldn't specifically find it in the business plans. If it's here, perhaps the minister could direct me to the page it is on. I think there are a number of huge concerns outstanding right now with regard to NAFTA and the potential for private clinics in health care in this province. I'm sure this ministry is advising the minister of health and the Premier in terms of the impact on that. We think there may be some legal opinions on that, Mr. Chairman, and we would like to know what opinions you've received, what are outstanding, and how much money you've paid in that regard, if this is the department that pays for those opinions. Who initiates that process? So if the minister could give us some information on the policy on privatization and on the NAFTA implications with regard to health care.

I'm sure this ministry has been advising the Premier and the health ministry on how allowing private clinics or private hospitals in this province will impact the delivery of public health care. The Premier seems to be so convinced it will have no impact that I'm sure they're getting some very top-notch advice from this department. We would like to know what that advice is. If there are documents with regard to legal opinions, I would ask that they be listed and in fact tabled in the House.

I asked the minister for her opinion on what's happening with this government's relationship with the World Trade Organization. In addition to that, a complete update on what's happening there would be important for us, particularly as it's on the table for discussion again. If you could give us some information on that, that also would be important for us to have some information on.

When I look through these performance measures, we see that client satisfaction surveys are, as I understand it, interdepartmental surveys. If the information that I'm sure the minister will send to us in writing would include one of those surveys so we can see what the questions are and how they're filled out, that would be important to us.

The intermediate outcomes and the secondary indicators are the measures, but the way they're reported within the business plan seems a little vague. We would like some more information on these if possible and why they don't measure the long-term outcomes as well. Certainly there are projections that you can be doing there. I would have thought you'd have been running a long-term plan in addition to the three-year rolling plans. That would seem to make good strategic sense. Let's get some information on that.

Are you meeting your outcomes that you looked at more than five years ago? When I do a comparison between the years, it seems there is a bit of a deficiency there. Some of it may be due to the re-juggling we've seen over the years in terms of this department, but let's find out about it and put it on the table for dispute or discussion, as the case may be. It isn't just good enough to do the intermediary or the short-term outcomes. In fact, they're practically useless without fitting into a long-term strategic plan, and that's what we've seen has been the primary absence in planning by this government: the long-term strategic plan.

It's not good enough for this government just to think from election to election, Mr. Chairman, because the people of the province are going to be here regardless of whether we hold these seats or not. We have a commitment to the long-term viability of this province in all regards. This particular ministry plays an integral part in that delivery of long-term outcomes because they act as advisers to all the departments and are very close to the Premier on the issues of importance. So we particularly would like their core business services provided to be expanded to include that particular area that is now not apparent.

Thank you.

MRS. McCLELLAN: I'm going to try and give a few answers, because I am kind of shocked at some of the lack of understanding that this member, who has been in this Legislature for a while, has on some of the issues. I'm not being nasty. I am surprised, and it tells me that we're not doing a very good job of disseminating the information we have to that hon. member, particularly when a week ago yesterday Alberta's international strategic plan was tabled. The international marketing strategy from the Minister of Economic Development has been tabled. This is a long-term strategic plan. If you don't have a copy, I would be most pleased to ensure that you do have one.

MRS. SLOAN: Tell us why the Premier didn't hold a meeting.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Edmonton-Riverview, you know, I don't want to be rude, but you will get a turn. [interjections] Very annoying.

I'm kind of working backwards. Performance measures. One of the difficulties with performance measures, Mr. Chairman, is that many of the initiatives of this department, particularly in international strategies and on interprovincial and intergovernmental work, are long term, so the measurements we have do recognize that. On the short term, one of the ways we do have of addressing these is by surveys and polling, and I would be happy to pass on to the hon. member any information we have on those.

I also was surprised that she missed the comments on NAFTA. I did raise it. I gave the figures on NAFTA as to the Alberta experience. I tabled in the House the NAFTA carve-out on health. It is the government of Canada that negotiated that position, and the government of Canada is confident that the protection we have in NAFTA for the health sector is there. If they have an issue with that and want to raise that, they should raise it, should absolutely raise it with the Minister of Health and the minister of international relations, who is Mr. Pettigrew. In my discussions with Mr. Pettigrew on this area when we were in Seattle, he is completely confident that the government of Canada has negotiated a position there that completely protects our health industry. [interjections]

Mr. Chairman, it is difficult to overcome not only the noise but some of the lack of knowledge. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview just should know that it is the government of Canada's responsibility to negotiate those agreements, and we participate, as do all other provinces, in the development of the position. We'll work on a little education.

THE CHAIRMAN: The chairman would like to apologize to the subcommittee in that he should have made certain that each side honoured the other side in that when a member is standing and speaking, we don't heckle, that we allow them to get out their questions or get out their answers. So if we could respect that on both sides of the House, I think it would be helpful for the rest of the evening.

In continuance, hon. minister.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Chairman, I know that some of these strike a chord, but some of them are pretty important.

International missions and the follow-up. I would be happy to pass on to the hon. member in writing some detail on how the follow-up is carried out. Certainly this department is involved in Team Canada missions, in the Premier's participation in those, and in co-ordination of all international travel done from this province.

On trade policy, our relationship with trade offices. Yes, in keeping with the framework for international strategies, we have consulted on where the best strategic placements of trade offices are in the world.

WTO. I mentioned that the position Alberta has on WTO is the position of the government of Canada. We do have a difficulty with the protection of the supply-managed industry and state trading agencies. It's difficult to ask others to open their doors when we close ours. However, we have said that we will work with the government of Canada on that position as long as it doesn't jeopardize the producers and manufacturers in this province in accessing markets. I did say on the WTO that although it was unsuccessful in Seattle, negotiations have begun again. Talks have resumed, and submissions are to be in by September in those areas. We will continue to advance Alberta's position.

We have a social union framework, and I think the hon. member knows that. The agreement for the social union framework was signed by the federal government and all provinces and territories with the exception of the province of Quebec. It is a matter of faith that social programs are dealt with within that framework, and that is all we are asking for. The initiative on the homeless certainly is lacking in the spirit of the social union framework. I remind hon. members that this was signed by all levels of government, and in fact the Premier signed it with the Prime Minister at his invitation. These frameworks are serious. We take them seriously. We expect that any initiatives we have will be dealt with within that. They're not just something for when it suits you. It should be always. Then we all understand the rules, and that's all we're asking for.

Now, we could talk about agriculture. It does surprise me a little bit. If this hon. member or any other hon. member believes that the answer to the crisis in agriculture today is getting a few hundred million dollars from the feds for a bailout, I can tell you that is not going to solve the long-term problem. We have some things that will solve the long-term problem, and one is a change in domestic marketing. When we have to ship grain out of this province rather than value-added because we cannot sell it outside the Canadian Wheat Board, even on a domestic policy, it is a detriment to our producers in this province. That is one thing that we're asking.

The Canadian Wheat Board does an excellent job of international marketing of grain, and nobody is disputing that, but there is no reason a farmer in this province should have to go through an international marketing agency, which is what this should be, to, for example, value-add durum wheat to pasta. We ship tonnes of durum wheat to North Dakota, and periodically the North Dakota farmers get very upset because there's so much Alberta or western Canadian durum going down there. They forget how many millions and millions of dollars of processed pasta we're buying back. We're buying back a value-added product that should be value-added in this province, and unless we change some rules within Canada, it won't happen and can't happen.

The other thing that has to happen in agriculture is that we have got to change the transportation and marketing system. The Estey/Kroeger report, which was delivered to the federal government some months ago, has got to be implemented or we will continue to have difficulties.

The other side of it that's important is that, yes, we have to fight hard on international subsidies. Today the difference in subsidy level – and I'll just give you Canada, the U.S., and Europe on grain: approximately 9 percent in Canada, approximately 26 percent in the U.S., somewhere between 24 and 26 percent, and over 50 percent subsidy in Europe. I don't care how efficient the farmers are in this country, they cannot compete with that type of subsidy level, and until that is addressed, we are not going to have the answers. So there is no simple answer.

The immediate answer from the Saskatchewan farmers when the aid was delivered was: it isn't enough, and it isn't going to help. No, because it is not going to address the systemic problems that are causing the low commodity prices we face today.

I would challenge anyone in this country in this industry to tell me what the true value of a bushel of any type of grain that's sold on board is today. It is so distorted that I venture no one could tell us what the true value of a bushel of durum is or a bushel of red spring wheat. It is sad that when we are the top producer of red spring wheat in the country and the world, we're getting somewhere around $2.11 a bushel. For goodness' sake, a loaf of bread costs that much, and six cents of that is the wheat in it. This is shocking.

Instead of playing politics, we should all in this Legislative Assembly be standing up for our farmers, not saying: how many times did your Premier go to Ottawa? Our Premier discussed this issue with the Prime Minister the day before the announcement was made, and he was not aware that Alberta was not involved in this. That's the difficulty we have.

Our minister of agriculture is there today talking about these issues again. This is the fourth time. Are we making a mistake in dealing with the federal government in what I think is a fair way, in sitting down at the negotiating table and trying to deal with the real issues in agriculture, or should we just be saying: subsidize us further? We're saying that our farmers need some short-term help the same as everyone else. These difficulties don't end because of some imaginary line that is drawn between Saskatchewan and Alberta. In fact, as the minister pointed out, when you look at the transportation costs, there are some 44 points in Alberta that have higher transportation costs than Saskatchewan does.

You talk about transportation. When the first discussions on the Crow benefit were on the table, there was $8 billion that was available. Saskatchewan and Manitoba refused to discuss it. When the Liberal government took out the Crow benefit, there was $1.6 billion left. That's what it cost us.

It's time that we paid attention to some of these facts and we stood up for the farmers in this province and dealt with some of those very, very deep issues that are there. Until we do it, asking the federal government for money is not the answer. You can put your head in the sand and your hand out forever, but farmers will not survive on that type of policy. [interjections]

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. members. Hon. members. Hon. minister, we have a debate going on between the former minister of agriculture and the hon. critic. I wonder if we could contain that until the appropriate time, which is not now.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Chairman, I'm going to end with this. We have, I think, a good working relationship with our federal intergovernmental minister, the Hon. Stéphane Dion. I have addressed my concerns with him. We have been advancing Alberta's interests in agriculture. They weren't listened to and now, yes, we are defending them, and I will not apologize to anyone for defending the interests of Alberta farmers.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I guess I just want to reiterate some comments my colleague made before I move into the aboriginal component of this debate. It's unfortunate that the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations isn't sure – I think she construes negotiating and being at the table with standing up here and bashing the feds in a deconstructive way. You have to be constructive. You have to be able to go to the table, and you have to be able to negotiate. If you choose not to do that, then you're not going to get to first base, and that's what happened. That's what happened with the agricultural dough. The government didn't go to the table.

They put all their marbles or all their eggs, if you wish, into the Estey/Kroeger report, but that only solves half the problem for half the farmers in this province. It doesn't solve the big picture, because this is a divide and conquer issue. You've got some farmers for whom that might work well, and you've got others for whom it doesn't. So where's the big-picture plan from this government? Where's the larger plan set out so farmers can say: yeah, the government is doing the right thing, and yeah, we're not all going to win, but, you know, we can agree to disagree and come to some form of compromise at some point. We don't see that happening here.

The government doesn't support the Canadian Wheat Board but wants a new transportation system. It's quite incredible how this government continually uses this whole divide and conquer mentality. It's north, south; seniors, the young people; rich, poor. It's intellects versus those without an education. It's farmers in the north and farmers in the south.

I know that that Minister of Infrastructure over there thinks this is all very funny. I'm sure he does. He thinks this is all very funny by his laughter that he's putting out. But you know what? Albertans don't think it's funny, and they don't think it's the way to govern.

My understanding is that it's four cents the farmers are getting for that loaf of bread. Maybe the minister of laughing over there, the comedian, could help us out.

Anyway, we're going to move on to the aboriginal component of this discussion, and I know the hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs is going to be able to answer a number of my questions here. I'm going to start out and refer the minister to – she probably already knows these page numbers – page 204 in the apparent Bold Plans and certainly 292 and 293 in the lottery fund estimates. That's where I'll be drawing most of my questions from.

First of all, I'm wondering why the budget for the Métis Settlements Transition Commission is no longer funded through lotteries and the budget has been cut by 48.3 percent. I'm wondering if the minister could let us know whether or not this is a result of the phasing out of the transition commission. I noticed that one of the strategies is to phase out the transition commission as quickly as possible, so I'm wondering if that's what's happening there.

Also, we noticed that the budget for the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal isn't funded through general revenue, at least not in its entirety. So I'm just wondering if you can clarify where the rest of that money is coming from. Last year I think almost half of it was funded through lotteries, and I'm just wondering what kind of shift has occurred there.

Again, we see that the Métis settlements funding is no longer through lotteries and of course it's cut by 8.9 percent. I'm wondering why the cuts there, Madam Minister.

Maybe just to go back to the settlements transition commission, once this is phased out, what are the plans or are there plans to oversee what's going on with the settlements, or is that left to the general council? Maybe you could enlighten us as to what's going to happen there.

We were recently given the aboriginal policy framework, and that framework in my estimation did one thing. It looked like it was going to line up so that the government would be battling with the feds. I hope that's not the case. I hope this minister isn't going to get into that fed bashing, you know, like others. I can tell by the smile on her face that that's not going to happen, but I do need to know why there was such a huge emphasis in that policy framework on reserves when the responsibility that this government has on reserves is so limited. It's to do with the settlement claims and child welfare, if that's not contracted out.

That raised a lot of concern for me, because there are so many other issues that that framework should have encompassed. More focus on the Métis settlements would have been a much more acceptable framework and more focus on the Métis community in general in this province. Clearly that was brought up to me as an issue. I'm hoping that in the minister's reworking of that particular framework, we're going to see that change and we're going to see the focus where it should be, and that's on the issues the minister can deal with. We've talked long about those urban aboriginal issues, and that was not reflected in the original policy framework.

We saw a horrendous report come out from the Associate Minister of Forestry last year. He was tasked with bringing forward a report on aboriginal policing. We didn't see any of that addressed in the overall framework. Now, I understand there are tripartite agreements between Alberta Justice, federal Justice, and Aboriginal Affairs and, of course, the reserves, but we need to see some movement on those particular issues and concerns. I'm wondering where that's going to be dealt with. I don't see that at all here.

I'm wondering also with the aboriginal policy framework what will guarantee that government policies will be followed or that the policies that are set up and agreed to by the aboriginal community are going to be followed. What monitoring accountability will occur between departments to ensure that the interests of the aboriginal people are met, not the interests of government, but that the interests of the aboriginal people are protected? We need to see that happen. I don't see any of that in the framework, and I hope there's going to be something that's going to be identified.

What methods will the minister and the government use to change policy when it doesn't adhere to the policy framework? What if there's something outside that framework that should be included in the framework? How are you going to negotiate that and build that in? What government measures are being considered to determine aboriginal well-being and self-reliance? In fact, what is this government's definition of self-reliance? That I think is critical to the framework. I see it in the document that I have and in the strategies, but I don't see self-reliance defined anywhere.

I'm wondering how you can expect the aboriginal community to achieve self-reliance if they don't know what the government's definition of that is. That's something that's very important when you're putting out measurements and you're asking people to meet certain criteria and outcomes. I think that's something you can't overlook, and I think it needs some consideration in the overall policy framework.

I guess I'm going to refer back to the federal government. We've seen over the past, since I was elected in 1997 anyway, a number of issues arise on reserves, and there has been a role for the provincial government. That role is in justice, the role is in education, but we see the government run from those responsibilities. We don't see the government take control and say: "You know what? Those are our responsibilities. They're part of a broader framework that we operate by. They're part of a larger policy discussion that we've had and we implement across the province." We see the government run away from some of these issues, and then jurisdiction becomes a problem and you have divisiveness created. I would like to see the government step up to the plate when it comes to some of these issues and just say: "You know what? The jurisdiction issue isn't going to be a problem here. We're going to take on our responsibility." I'm wondering how that's going to change in the future. I don't see that identified here.

What methodology and sources will be used to acquire, prepare, and distribute aboriginal-specific data, or is it collected? I know from my work in the research unit with the Edmonton Police Service that nobody collects aboriginal-specific data, so how do we measure outcomes? How do we know how much money we're going to need? How do you propose a budget for the Métis community in the settlements when you're looking at other issues that are not on the settlements and not on the reserves? The urban aboriginal issue: how do you determine that? What action plan is there to promote cross-cultural awareness and understanding? You talk about it, but what's the plan? You say you're going to do it. The government identifies it as a need, but we don't see the action plan. Who's going to be the beneficiary of the cross-cultural awareness?

Maybe you could provide some example of how aboriginal communities are being helped to participate in local economic development. What are they doing? What's your role in that particular area? I know there was a great initiative, an initiative that I thought was very worthwhile anyway, out of AI-Pac. It's called ABCOR, and it's a project where the aboriginal community has developed more of a co-op program where they're going to be taking the lumber off one of the FMAs. They're going to take the trees down there, and that's a great initiative because it's going to bring revenue into some of the communities. That was an industry-generated initiative, and AI-Pac had to go through an awful lot of red tape in order to get the FMA that's going to be logged. In my view, I didn't see an overwhelming support for the initiative. They're going to a lot of work to try and work with some of these communities. What exactly is it that this government is doing that is helping to promote some of this economic development?

How is the success of programs measured within some of the companies you're dealing with? Let's talk about some of the larger industries, the oil and gas industry for instance. How do we know how successful some of their programs are? What is the involvement of the government in promoting aboriginal participation?

How has the department of aboriginal affairs assisted in the negotiation process between the department of family and social services and the First Nations for the provision of child welfare services? A very important issue. My colleague from Edmonton-Riverview will ask some more questions later and has just tremendous insight. It's something the government has not necessarily done a great job of. What measures are used to determine the success rate of these programs or any programs in the aboriginal communities?

What negotiations has the department undertaken to help alleviate the lack of approved adoptions of aboriginal children and of foster homes? I've had aboriginal foster parents in my office who have to fight red tape in order to be foster parents, who have to fight an awful uphill battle, with long investigations that have cost them personally a lot of money in order to clear their name from a specific allegation that the police weren't interested in at all, that was perceived to be a bogus complaint by the police. Child welfare and the police were never, ever interested in the issue that the children at risk response team were, yet the department put up so many roadblocks and very much soured these folks on their ability to foster parent or to want to be foster parents. How was that promoting the whole aboriginal foster parent program? I'm a little bit concerned about some of those initiatives.

What negotiations are being undertaken with the Métis Nation of Alberta to ensure the smooth transition for the next framework agreement? There was an awful lot of trouble signing that last agreement because this government decided they didn't want government-to-government negotiations. They don't see the Métis Nation as a government that oversees the 20,000 Métis people in this province, that delivers services to Métis people in this province, that has a role for Métis people in this province. I've had the discussion with this minister before on that particular issue, and I'm hoping that somewhere along the line this is not going to be a problem in the future and this government is very much going to recognize the role of the Métis Nation in this province.

I'm wondering if the minister can outline which aboriginal groups will be consulted to develop technical guidelines for traditional use studies. You talked about land claims in your opening comments, Madam Minister, but you just said that there were a lot of things happening. Well, a lot of things happening for the budget dollars here doesn't exactly enlighten Albertans as to really what's going on. So I'm hoping you can tell us how many claims are currently being negotiated and how close we are to closing off some of those. Which bands? Are the Lubicons going to be a forever issue, or are we going to get anywhere with that particular settlement?

What do you define as a timely manner? I think that's something this minister uses an awful lot, that things need to be done in a timely manner. What is a timely manner? If we talk about settling land claims and we look at the Lubicon issue, there's nothing timely about that at all, and we've got some folks out there who want to see some of these claims concluded.

I'd like to know if, or what, MOU has been signed between the Department of International and Intergovernmental Affairs and Justice to ensure that the aboriginal land claims litigation is managed properly. What are the expectations of each department?

I'm wondering if the minister can enlighten us as to what this government is going to do about the whole issue of governance and conflict of interest on the Métis settlements. I can tell you that my office gets calls weekly, and this has not been resolved. It's an issue that's outstanding, I think it's an issue this government has neglected to act on, and I expect to see an end to that very soon.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

MRS. McCLELLAN: I'm just going to deal with two points for the hon. member that fall within my responsibility.

The first thing I'll say, hon. member, is that protecting Alberta's interests is not fed bashing. We are interested in working in a partnership with our federal government. We have a framework to do it. All we ask is that everybody work within the framework.

The second one is on the Lubicon land claim, and I just wanted to bring you up to date on that. The land claim settlements are traditionally negotiated between the federal government and the particular Indian band in question. Alberta is usually invited to the table at some point in the negotiations and discussions over land and, in some cases, dollars.

In the case of the Lubicon claim, the Lubicon band has expressed interest that the negotiations be between them and the federal government. We were recently invited to the table, did begin to participate, and the Lubicon band themselves ceased those tripartite negotiations because they felt there were outstanding issues they had to deal with with the federal government.

So that's the status of that, and if people are calling your office about that, you might suggest they call the federal minister involved in that one. Certainly if you want to pass them on, we'd be happy to give you the updated information that we have on that land claim.

The other land claims I know the associate minister will discuss with you. I know she'll tell you that we have I think a commendable number, 11, that have been settled in the last 10 years, a record that I don't think is matched anywhere in Canada, and she'll probably talk with you about any outstanding ones that are on the table right now.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. There are a lot of questions, and I really appreciate the questions you're sending my way because I think it's really important for everybody to understand what Aboriginal Affairs is all about and what International and Intergovernmental Relations has been dealing with regarding aboriginal issues.

First of all, the questions you were asking regarding department programs in terms of the various dollars. You were talking about the lottery dollars. There is no lottery funding approved for this year; you are right in that sense. However, if you look at the operating expenses in program 1, there's been an increase, of course, of $4 million. If you look at the difference – I think it's program 1, yes – $1,983,200 for salary increases, $1.8 million was reallocated from the Métis settlements program to be used. For the $300,000 for international governance, $250,000 for international activities, $600,000 for aboriginal relations, $300,000 for Peigan negotiations, and of course the $300,000 for trade policy activities – that’s not within my area, but I think that sort of highlights what it is that you’re requesting relative to the changes in the dollars.

Regarding the phasing out of the Métis Settlements Transition Commission, our plan is to ensure that as the transition commission is phased out by 2002, responsibilities presently held by the commission will be devolved to the Métis Settlements General Council and the eight settlements. This is all part of the 17-year transition plan outlined in 1990, when the Métis settlements legislation was passed. You weren’t voted into the Legislature at the time, but it certainly was one of the greatest positives that had ever occurred regarding Métis settlements. That was something the Métis settlements negotiated. It was very, very important for us to be able to do that.

The funding to the Métis settlements in accordance with the Métis settlements accord is to decrease each year to the end of the agreement in 2007 as the settlements make the transition to self-reliance. The 48 percent decrease in the transition commission is part of this planned decrease.

The overall funding to settlements, including the commission, decreased by 8 percent this year; it’s true. I think when you look at the context of where we came from to where we are and where we want to go, as we start to phase out, it’s a very important step to make sure that whatever we do is going to be consistent with what we had intended to do.

There were a number of questions, and some of them I may not be able to answer, but I certainly will write to you relative to the questions. I’ll get as many as I can, and whatever I don’t get, I will ensure that we do answer them in some format to you.

There were questions relative to framework goal 3. You indicated: why are we looking at the federal responsibility? If you look at goal 3, Strengthening Relationships – and I know you have it – we are talking about clarifying roles and responsibilities. That goal actually is: “the Government of Alberta will . . . clarify its own roles and responsibilities with respect to Aboriginal people.” Within that context we also have to realize it’s not only the government of Alberta that has to do that. We have to make sure the federal government also clarifies its own roles and responsibilities relative to dealing with aboriginal communities, whether they’re First Nations or Métis.

We have to be able to work with the federal government in order for us to be able to continue to do this, but we also have to work with the First Nations and the Métis people to be able to ensure that if we are moving in that direction, each group definitely knows which order of government is responsible for provision of programs and services. That’s a very important part, a very, very important part. You’ve heard it; I’ve heard it. I think that no matter where we go, that’s what the aboriginal community has been saying for many years, and it’s time for us to be able to clarify that.

In terms of framework, why did we not focus on Métis settlements? What we were wanting to do was make sure that whatever we were doing in this, we would also deal with all the aboriginal community. You’re correct. It deals basically with a lot of emphasis on First Nations. Of course, you and I have discussed this. We will need to make some revisions in this regard, and you have written to me about that. I appreciate that information because that’s very important when we’re revising this document.

I have also received some very wonderful recommendations from the Métis Nation general council relative to what they would like to see. As you know, this is out for discussion, for consultation. It is to be able to get all the information so that we can make the necessary revisions in order for us to be able to ensure that whatever we’re going to put out is going to be palatable to all Albertans. So it is very, very important to remember that this is a draft document, but I appreciate any input you can give me any time we have any of the documents that are out for discussion.

There were questions on aboriginal policing. You indicated: why was it in the framework? The Minister of Justice is responsible for policing. However, that does not necessarily mean that we cannot be involved in terms of working with the Minister of Justice so that we have our views being recognized and programs and services will have an aboriginal component. That means, then, that we are involved at that point to be able to ensure that whatever comes out is going to be reflective of the aboriginal component. It does not mean that we take on those services or those programs. Our job is to advise and to be able to consult with the various departments so we can ensure that there is an aboriginal component attached to that.

That’s very, very important, because we don’t have enough people to be able to take on services. We don’t have enough people to take on any programs. What we have to do is be able to build a very strong network of aboriginal people. We can ensure that we provide the advice to the various ministries that are within our government, because those ministries are in a better position to be able to deliver those programs and services.

You also indicated: what guarantee will be followed in the accountability of government to the people? Well, when you look at the framework, in every one of the areas where we have the principles and commitments to action, we say: government business planning and reporting. We are making sure that whatever happens, the government of Alberta will recognize its responsibility to report to the public on progress made in achieving governmentwide goals on aboriginal well-being, self-reliance, or any of the goals we have in this document. Very, very important.

[Mrs. Laing in the chair]

When you’re talking about a cross-government initiative, it means we now have to be able to report anything that comes through, and we’re measured on that also. So it’s a very key component of whatever we do if it becomes a cross-government ministry initiative.

9:21

You were asking about what will be used to adhere to building on what we call the aboriginal government definition of self-reliance. Well, self-reliance differs with various groups, and self-reliance in our view is to make sure that whatever happens, we look at the issue of what we have to do to help aboriginal communities be able to at least build on the economic opportunities this province has and that they are part and parcel of that. They have to be part and parcel of the Alberta advantage, and that’s what we have to continue to ensure we can do. How we do that will be dependent on the aboriginal communities that are out there, to see how they can achieve that.

There are a variety of ways. You asked a number of questions relative to that, and those are really good questions. I have to give you credit for that, because I think those are exciting questions when you talk about what we can do. There are so many things we can do.

First of all, we have to look at capacity building. How do we build capacity within the aboriginal community so they can begin to take advantage of what we call the Alberta advantage? A number of ways. One is: what can we see in terms of skill development? What educational initiatives or training can we have in place to make sure that occurs? What can we look at within the community itself to be able to see what we need to help them build in their human resources and within the community and be able to access, whether it’s jobs or contracts or any kind of joint ventures they could see happening in the communities? We have a number of those.

Athabasca Tribal Council is one proposal that has worked very, very well. Of course, the federal government has been involved in that one. Industry has been involved, and the provincial government has been involved. As a province I believe we've put in something like $350,000 already from four different departments who have been involved with ATC. Very exciting times when we're talking about the initiatives and the economic opportunities that are available in that northern part of the province.

The aboriginal community has come forward, taken advantage of that, looked at what the possibilities are, and looked at what they can do in terms of capacity building. I see some great things starting to happen that will continue to happen because they have taken it upon themselves and worked with the community, industry, as well as having the federal government involved in this.

That's partnerships. How do we build on those partnerships? We've got a few other initiatives that I think are really key. We've got one with the chief in northern Alberta regarding the Assumption area and the tribal council there. They have been working with a variety of initiatives, and in one of the areas they have asked industry to be a part as well as for the federal and the provincial governments to come in. We are working with them to see how we can begin to build that capacity so they can also take advantage of what's occurring in that northern part of the province.

We have some in southern Alberta which are really key and, I believe, very positive when we're talking about some of the things that many times we overlook. We have to give credit to the aboriginal community and the First Nations in this respect, to the First Nations Resource Council that has been involved in some of the initiatives that have occurred in the southern part of Alberta. I can get really excited about some of these things, because I see that starting to happen. I know that those are the kinds of areas we want to continue to nurture, some of the areas where we want to ensure that partnerships continue to occur.

How we do that is very, very important. The way we want to do it is by continuing to do it the way we have in the past. Our job is to co-ordinate, to facilitate, to bring it forward, and to be able to ensure that the First Nations and any Métis people can continue to take advantage of this. I get really excited – I know she doesn't want me to get too excited about it – because it is something that I see we can continue to build on.

There were other areas where there were questions. There was a really interesting piece of information, I thought, when we were talking about capacity building. For First Nations to succeed in the development of oil and gas resources on reserves or in any part of the province or anywhere in Canada, it is important that First Nation members possess a qualified knowledge base, whether it's something to do with industry or it's something to do with any of the other types of educational capabilities that are there. I believe that First Nations need to be able to gain that broad knowledge base, and that's where we as aboriginal affairs can certainly help as we're moving forward by ensuring that whatever happens, there can be greater participation by First Nations in a meaningful way in order for them to be able to take advantage of whatever is available on the industry side.

You wanted to talk about the Métis Nation of Alberta and government-to-government negotiations not taking place. Well, the province of Alberta has consistently indicated that for government-to-government negotiations to occur, a government is recognized as having a land base. To have a land base means that we will then deal with you on a government-to-government perspective. That is the way we have dealt with every single group that we are working with, whether it's a First Nation or the Métis Settlements General Council. Métis settlements are land based. The First Nations are land based. We recognize them as government when we're dealing with them on a government-to-government basis. That's our policy, and it has not changed. We have to be able to work with something that is consistently related to something we have in the province, whether it's municipal districts or whether it's towns or whatever it is. But there has to be a land base attached to it.

Land claims. Another area of interest for me. We have had wonderful success in land claims, and I want to talk about that very, very briefly. Did you know that since 1986 we have had 11 treaty land entitlement claims settled in Alberta? That's an incredible amount. I think we deserve to get applause. Eleven are settled. Four are in negotiations. Five are under federal review. Six have been rejected, and eight are pending. So when you talk about that, my gosh, that is a lot.

Of course, this government of Alberta is committed to fulfilling its NRTA responsibilities through negotiation of settlements that are fair and equitable to all parties and in the best interests of all Albertans. I think we have a solid record for settling outstanding claims, and I'm very proud of the people who have taken control of that and our negotiators and especially the individual who has been responsible for treaty land claims. I'm very, very proud, because I'll tell you that without those guys, we wouldn't be where we are. I think we have a record across Canada when it comes to settling land claims.

In terms of aboriginal population and what information we're going to use, we have to be able to continue to use the census, based on anything to do with Canada's census. You wanted to know what we're going to use for numbers. Those are the kinds of numbers that we will use. Things to do with Canada's census, especially from 1996, are things we'll continue to use.

I know you have a lot of questions. I haven't been able to answer every single one of them, but I will sit down at this time to be able to allow you to ask more questions.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I have a number of issues to raise relative to this debate, so I will proceed. The first one relates to the matter of what the government's policy is relative to Métis settlements making political contributions when those contributions come from the settlement's bank account, not the individual's bank account. We'd appreciate a written response in regards to that question.

The second issue is federal system reform, and the minister of intergovernmental affairs talked at some length with respect to this and the need for what she perceives as the reform of the federal system. Well, I tend to have a little bit of a humorous and perhaps somewhat bent outlook on this process. I think that the government's plan for reform of the federal system includes the following three players. Firstly, we have Ralph running the provincial 2000 campaign. Alongside him we have the esteemed current Provincial Treasurer vying for the leadership of the CCRAP party, better known as the party that doesn't exist, and thirdly, late-breaking news, Steve West is going to vie for the vacant Senate seat. And reform will be achieved, Madam Chairman. It'll be done. We won't have . . .

9:31

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Excuse me, hon. member. We do not use individual names in this House. We use their titles, please.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Madam Chairman.

So we have the provincial scene tied up. We get Stockwell on the federal scene and Steve in the Senate . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Excuse me. I must remind you again. We do not use individual names. Thank you.

MRS. SLOAN: It would be the Provincial Treasurer, and the minister for energy and resources will be in the Senate, and it'll be achieved. There you go.

Let's actually talk about strengthening the federal system and our system of programs for Canadians and Albertans. I wonder, Madam Chairman, how we achieve that strength when we have a provincial government that claws back payments for programs like the children's benefit. We saw, when the federal government instituted that program for vulnerable children in this province, the department of family and social services claw the equal amount of money back from the provincial contributions to those same families. That, in my opinion, does not strengthen. It weakens our province and our families and our children.

Certainly that reality works against the philosophy that was espoused by the minister tonight. I don't know if there is a lot of communication between the ministers. Certainly the past minister of family and social services was the chair for the social unions negotiations, but somehow the right hand didn't know what the left hand was doing, because while they were taking the money from the federal government, the left hand was clawing an equal amount of money back.

I would like to talk about NAFTA, and perhaps for the minister's benefit I'd like to educate her a bit about the history relative to the signing of exemptions for NAFTA. There was a process for provincial governments to identify exemptions in NAFTA, that occurred in the '94-95 period. The Provincial Treasurer at the time, Mr. Jim Dinning – I need to verify that for the record – was in fact in a position to identify exemptions. He was lobbied, and in fact I wrote correspondence to him at that time seeking him to act on the province's behalf and identify exemptions. There was a December 31 deadline. The province abdicated any responsibility. They abdicated taking any initiative to do that.

In reality what happened was that the federal government came in and established the exemptions for social and health care areas. So let's be clear about NAFTA and about the exemptions and about the role this provincial government chose not to play in protecting our core public programs.

Which brings me to the whole component of the report that relates to the WTO and this government's involvement in the WTO negotiations. What is amazing to me – and this is perhaps the biggest deception of all – is that the government has been going along, attending these negotiations. Not only does the mass citizenry know virtually nothing about this. We as elected members in this Assembly know virtually nothing about it.

In the negotiations in Seattle the primary issue that was on the agenda was the expansion of the general agreement on trade and services, or GATS. There were a lot of interests obviously at play in that agenda. A significant player was the American Coalition of Service Industries, and particularly what they were targeting was the service sector, of which health care is a part. The service sector includes everything from telecommunications, transport, distribution, postal services, insurance, construction industry, environment, real estate, as well as tourism, entertainment industries of all sorts.

According to the World Trade Organization, services that fall within the scope of GATS cover no less than 160 separate sectors. Health care is included and in fact, Madam Chairman, is earmarked for commercialization and liberalization. Astonishingly, no public debate or discussion is going on, nothing mentioned in this report this evening about that fact.

Again, just a bit of history. When the original GATS agreement was signed in 1994, a very similar event took place. It was hurriedly ratified by the member states at the time. Very few of the elected representatives had any idea at all what they were approving. They were not given a list of the sectors affected by GATS, and really probably to this day most of them don't know how significant that agreement was in impacting the core public programs of their country.

So back on point. All affiliated sectors are targeted: hospital care and other services, ambulance services, care for the aged, even social benefits. Let's keep in mind that in this whole trade negotiation it's not about human need or the provision of services that is the primary priority but demand and economics and profit. This is so relevant to the provincial government's fixation and push towards privatization of health care as we are on the eve, at some point perhaps this week, of receiving the legislation which will enable them to establish a private tier.

Further on the WTO. One of the benefits that corporations involved in these negotiations expect to derive from the revision of GATS: number one, they have an interest in not getting a lot of this information public because that torpedoed the MAI. For that reason I think there has been heightened security around the negotiations, and this government has played a willing part. This government is polling, and they make such a big point about it. Public polling data. Well, what are you polling Albertans on? You haven't sent them any material on what's been on the agenda at the WTO. You haven't shared with them what the implications of the social union framework is. How do you expect the public to have an opinion when you haven't educated them about what your positions were, going in, how they were modified, and what the end agreements were?

I, quite frankly, as an elected representative have sat in this Assembly throughout the negotiation of the social union, and there has been diddly shared in this Assembly about what that social union framework entails. So, Madam Chairman, why spend taxpayers' dollars to poll them about issues that the government has done nothing to educate them on. If in fact I have somehow missed receiving it in my mailbox or haven't seen the press release or there's a report out there that I haven't had access to, which may very well be the case, because really a lot of the devil of this is in the details, then I'm hopeful the minister of intergovernmental affairs will be completely transparent and table in her response to these questions all the positions – going in, negotiated, and final – for the social union and all those positions that are being taken at the WTO negotiations.

Back on WTO and health care. There is a bit of a rock and a hard place scenario that's at work in this whole negotiation process. Governments have placed restrictions on the liberalization of some activities, but this has meant opening them up for liberalization in the long term.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

In other words, by seemingly protecting hospitals from corporate encroachment, governments by the same token have in effect issued corporations with a licence to take them over later on.

The WTO Council on Trade in Services has already developed a method to achieve this. Thus, under Article 1.3(c) of GATS, for a service to be considered to be under "government authority" and hence exempt from "liberalization," it is now argued that it "should be provided entirely free.” However, since most hospitals and clinics now charge patients or their insurance plans for certain treatments, “it seems unrealistic in such cases to argue for continued application of Article 13(c).” In other words, if a treatment is free for the patient, but paid for “by subsidies or other similar forms of financial advantages,” then not only must the sector be opened to competition, but the same “subsidies” should be offered to competing commercial suppliers.

That is the trap this government is leading us into with the privatization policy and impending legislation they’re about to propose.

Let me speak further about the horizontal approach that is also being proposed at the WTO. This means that if a particular measure is agreed to in one service sector, it is automatically applied as well to all others, including health. So, as in the agreement on telecommunications, if we have an agreement in that component of GATS to allow for basically wide open market involvement in telecommunications, the government is forced to apply the same principles in health care. That is absolutely true.

My reference this evening, Mr. Chairman, for citizens who are interested in this process: the article originally was written for The Ecologist magazine in Britain. The authors are Bertrand and Kalafatides, who are both quite renowned researchers.

I know it’s troublesome to have this kind of information coming forward, particularly when the government has not taken a leadership role in putting this out for public consumption in the first place. They certainly have had the opportunity.

Another issue in regards to WTO is the regulations.

“The WTO members are being asked to consider making reforms to their regulatory regimes.” National regulations . . . “should have four central attributes,” [they’re being told]: “adequacy, impartiality, least intrusiveness, and transparency.”

Needless to say, the agreement is not demanding that there be the same kind of transparency and openness with respect to corporate practices.

In any event, this government is being asked to modify regulations in this province that are adequate and impartial towards business interests, first and foremost. All the other issues relative to how they apply to the provision of health care, the adequacy of the services are secondary.

Let me conclude on the WTO and the social union by saying, Mr. Chairman, that there needs to be a great deal more information shared by the Alberta government as to what positions they’re taking, what the negotiations entail, and what the product of those negotiations is. I am completely confident that the minister will provide those to us in a written form at the conclusion of these debates.

I would like to also know, in that material, just exactly how much money we’ve spent on polling when it’s clear that the electorate, the citizens of this province have not had a great deal of information about these international negotiations.

When the minister spoke, again in the context of the international trade negotiations, about agriculture and the issues in agriculture, her passion and knowledge were clear to anyone that was listening. I respect her opinions, and I agree that we have huge, huge issues in agriculture to address if we want to preserve the rural way of life, the communities, and have some degree of control as legislators over the corporatization of agriculture. So in that respect, Mr. Chairman, I’m in agreement with the hon. minister, if she can take that bouquet.

I would like to see a greater degree of priority and emphasis placed on ensuring that the interests of Albertans are represented in the trade organizations and particularly as they relate to the service sectors. As well, if we’re preparing submissions for the WTO, the next round of negotiations – and they must be in by September of 2000 – I would ask the minister to make those ingoing positions public and have them provided perhaps as an appendix to this budget debate response.

Let me move now briefly to aboriginal affairs, the Métis settlements. There has been, particularly in the Métis settlements – and the hon. member from Edmonton-Norwood spoke about that – a decrease relative to the governance of Métis settlements. Now, maybe I’m wrong, but I don’t think we’ve completely achieved a functional governance structure there yet, so I’m wondering why our funding is decreasing.

I want to focus for a few moments on the interests of aboriginal children, both First Nations and Métis, and I would like to know what role the Ministry of Aboriginal Affairs has played with respect to planning in Alberta Health, Children’s Services, and Alberta Learning relative to the needs and interests of aboriginal children. We know that there is a higher percentage of disability in that population that has accompanying needs. We know the birthrate in those populations is also higher than the provincial average. We know infant mortality rates are higher in that population. We know teenage pregnancy rates are higher. So I would like to have the hon. minister provide what role she’s playing in addressing some of those health issues.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

MRS. McCLELLAN: I’d just like to deal with a couple of issues. I don’t mean this in any meanspirited way, but when you talk about the discussions with WTO and you talk about not knowing what Canada’s position was or what Alberta’s position was, I’m really surprised, because the government of Canada, who is the negotiator – I want the hon. member to understand this. The government of Alberta does not negotiate at the table at the WTO or at GATT. The government of Alberta does not negotiate at the table. The government of Canada is the negotiator. Yes, we are a part of the team. Yes, we were there. Yes, we supported Canada’s position.

At the time, Minister Pettigrew sent out an extensive news release on Canada’s position going into the WTO in this round, which was primarily on agriculture because that was the agreement from the Uruguay round. That was the primary subject. The other area was discussion of implementation difficulties for developing countries and moving on into the next round. We were there, and we were full participants. I give Minister Pettigrew full marks. He assured us that we would be fully a part of the consultation, the discussion, and a part of the team. We were briefed in the morning, and we were briefed in the evening, and I did do an interview from there. Both Minister Pettigrew and Minister Vanclief and the government of Alberta did put out a news release talking about what was achieved and what wasn’t at the suspension of those talks.

Now, I have a lot of faith in the government of Canada’s ability to negotiate a position for us in health. The government of Canada has consistently said in NAFTA, in GATT, and in WTO that health and social programs would be protected. Protection is actually there in NAFTA in three parts. Probably the main part is the one that I tabled in the House last week or earlier this week – I don’t recall; I think it was last week – which is the carve-out section.

If the member takes the time to read that and looks at the supporting documentation, she will understand that ownership is not the issue. The issue that is the determinant is if it’s publicly funded and if it’s for the public good. That’s the determinant, and that’s the safeguard. So if it’s publicly funded and it’s for the public good, it doesn’t matter about the actual ownership. That’s proven in the various private clinics that we have today offering insured services, which are not being challenged by any other country coming in and setting up clinics. We haven't had a challenge in NAFTA over the 10 years of the agreement. That tells me that something is working.

I was dismayed that the hon. member didn't have more confidence in the government of Canada as our negotiator and didn't have the faith that the government of Canada would be looking out for our best interests in those important social programs. I can tell the hon. member – to clarify this, I will be sending the minister tomorrow copies of this so that he can return some comment on it.

Mr. Chairman, this is an important issue for Canadians; it's an important issue for Albertans. It's important that the government of Canada's position on this is understood, that it's understood that Alberta is a part of that team and that we fully support the government of Canada's position on social programs.

The social union framework was signed a year ago this month, and if you haven't got the information yet, you're seriously behind. It's available from my office at any time should a request come in. I believe it's probably available on the Internet. To suggest that I should educate people, how patronizing. How patronizing, Mr. Chairman. The people in this province are intelligent, and when they want information, they ask and they get it. The social union framework is one year old in February.

Agriculture. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am passionate about it, as are many people on this side of the House. We will continue to press hard in that area to ensure that the interests of Alberta's farmers and agricultural producers are protected and advanced. If we don't make those changes, the industry that has been so important, has really been the backbone of this province's economy, stands to lose a great deal.

Mr. Chairman, we have a number of very good people who are part of the WTO negotiations that are beginning again now. I know that Minister Pettigrew and the other ministers that will be working with him will be very open with the Canadian people on our position in those areas, and we will be very open with the people in this province that we represent as to our participation and as to whether we support all those positions. We have made a commitment to our federal counterparts that we would be a part of the team, that we would be prepared to be a part of the negotiations at all times, and we'll continue that participation.

Mr. Chairman, I believe we've had a lot of information discussed tonight. I've always made a commitment to follow up in writing to members with any detail and questions that we didn't have time to deal with tonight.

I want to just take this time to thank the members from International and Intergovernmental Relations who are in the gallery: our deputy, Ron Hicks, and his staff that are here, Paul Whittaker and Kathryn, and of course Maureen from my office. As was indicated by all members of this House, I think they are good, hardworking staff, always ready to help, and I thank them for being here tonight.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would adjourn debate on these estimates.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations has moved that we adjourn debate on the estimates of her department at this time. All those in support of this motion, please say aye.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE CHAIRMAN: Those opposed, please say no.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I presume that was carried.

I would move that subcommittee B now report progress to the committee on the estimates of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Government House Leader has moved that we report the estimates of the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations to the committee. All those in support of this motion, please say aye.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE CHAIRMAN: Those opposed, please say no.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

THE CHAIRMAN: Carried.

[The subcommittee adjourned at 10 p.m.]

Title: Estimates of Gaming, Tuesday, February 29, 2000

Smith, Murray
Wickman, Percy

THE CHAIRMAN: Good evening. I'm going to call the committee to order.

Before we start, if we can possibly just establish a few ground rules. Basically we're here for, give or take, close to or a little bit over two hours. We can do it the same way that it's done in the Assembly and allow someone to speak for 20 minutes and then sort of back and forth. If you wish to make it less time so that more people can speak, that's all right with the chair. I'm at your discretion as to how you want to work this. Very quickly, is there any feedback at all? I don't want to take the time debating that.

I will have the minister lead off with his estimates.

MR. SMITH: Madam Chairman, alternate questions or you're going to call it as you see it?

THE CHAIRMAN: Well, I think we'll do it the same way we tend to do it in the Assembly, with alternate questions, if there are questions on both sides.

MR. SMITH: Great. Thanks.

THE CHAIRMAN: Go ahead, hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. It gives me great pleasure this evening to appear in Committee of Supply for the purpose of discussing for the first time in the history of Alberta and, I guess, for the first time in the history of Canada a business plan that covers gambling activities in Alberta as well as Alberta liquor revenues.

The real challenge of this department is being able to strike the right balance between choice and responsibility when it comes to gambling and when it comes to safe and responsible consumption of alcohol. I know that there may be the odd thrust into the Alberta lottery fund, but as members all know, there is an ample discussion time of two days, I believe, for those as well. However, if you do want to take time, we'll do the best we can with the tools we have. Of course, for anything that you need in terms of preparing for more information, you can visit our web site at www.gaming.gov.ab.ca.

So I look forward to an enjoyable two hours of listening to keen, incisive analysis of a business that generates $1.3 billion in revenue and has a bottom line of about $1.22 billion in net profit. Having said that, I will conclude my remarks, Madam Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: I'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who I believe is the Gaming critic.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I just have a very, very quick opening comment. Then I have a series of questions, and I would hope the minister can make note of the questions and sort of respond to them after I've had my opportunity to ask these questions. I understand that if I ask one question and wait for an answer, I would basically give up my turn, so I'm going to ask a series of questions. You might want to make note as I go through.

I just want to say that I recall one day the Premier saying that within five years Alberta could be a provincial tax-free province. I just hope that the reference wasn't being made that in five years from now we can be the northern Nevada, relying on gambling taxes rather than on any other form of personal income tax.

Now, I want to start off by looking at this review that the minister announced some time ago. The announcement was made, but those of us in opposition never got a copy of any terms of reference, so I'd like a copy of the terms of reference. I'd like to know what the terms of reference are all about and the time frame. I'm not certain about the time frame because it talked in terms of a review until next summer. Did it mean this coming summer or next summer, as per the next calendar year?

Furthermore, in the review my understanding is that there was no option provided for public hearings. I'd like to know why the minister doesn't pursue a similar process that we saw a number of years ago that you chaired, Madam Chairman, and that is sort of having a committee that went across the province, heard from organizations, heard from individuals, and as a result of that, a number of recommendations came forward that represented the feelings of Albertans and also represented the feelings of those groups that made presentations during those public hearings. I did have the opportunity to attend one or two of them.

My understanding of this particular review is that it's sort of in-house, that it doesn't allow for that, although there was reference made, according to one of the newspaper articles, that stakeholders would be consulted. Now, stakeholders I assume would refer to people like the hotel industry, nonprofit casinos, and so on and so forth but not the average, typical Albertan who goes there and gambles or the one that becomes addicted as a result of the accessibility of VLTs.

Some of the specifics when I look at the review. Will the review actually consider an option that seems to be very, very popular throughout the province, according to recent polls and polls that were even done during the plebiscite thing, the option of restricting gambling activities to the nonprofit casinos? That was not a question on the plebiscite. Now, the latest poll done in conjunction with a national poll indicated, if I recall correctly, that something like roughly 70 percent of Canadians in western Canada preferred that particular option of restricting gambling to nonprofit casinos. I think in Canada it was 67 percent, in western Canada 72 percent, and in Alberta something like 70 percent. That's always been my perception. If that question were asked of Albertans, 70 percent of Albertans would respond and say that as a compromise, as a viable option, as a viable alternative we would like to see the gambling activities restricted to nonprofit casinos. I'd like to know if the review is going to look at that particular option.

In this very same room here a number of months ago a number of the members that are here now along with myself and the minister and you, Madam Chairman, heard a presentation by the Hotel Association – maybe not the Hotel Association, maybe an offspring of the Hotel Association – that advocated the concept of mini casinos in conjunction with the hotels, with at least some of the hotels. I want to know if that particular concept has been pursued, if that's going to be part of the review. I would hope myself that it's not part of the review, that that idea has been chucked.

Also, we heard a great deal of requests, demands, whatever, from bingos that would like to see gambling activities expanded within the bingo halls to include various forms of electronic gambling. In other words, if we open the playing field up totally, I don't think there would be any end to how far those with a vested interest would want to push the availability of gambling in this province. I think we would, in fact, become another Nevada of the north. I would hope that the review doesn't consider things that were rumoured at one time such as the possibility of a Vegas-type casino in Banff to accommodate the tourists that come from outside of the province. I wouldn't want to see that go ahead.

While the review is on, my understanding is that all further expansion of gambling activities has been frozen. I assume that refers to the slot machines in the nonprofit casinos with the exception of that thousand or so that were put in at the last minute. When I look at the budget, the numbers reflect that we're not going to see a massive increase in the amounts of revenue achieved from the slot machines in the casinos.

Now, on addiction. When I look at the figures here, I see the $1.5 million designated to the research institute, and I'd like to know exactly where that is at right now. I do know one of the members on the board, Vic Justik. The former minister was accommodating enough to put him on at my request. Mr. Justik is himself an addicted gambler, who I'm sure Mr. Lougheed would be familiar with. He operated the Pots & Pans in Fort Saskatchewan before he became hooked on his own machine. He did make a presentation in conjunction with the Canadian foundation of gamblers here in this particular room as well.

Now, the $1.5 million is there. I see a figure for the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, $33,320,000. The way I read it, the '98-99 actual, which doesn't really make sense to me, is $3,048,000. I'm not sure why we have a jump from $3,048,000 to $33,320,000 going to AADAC. There must be a rationale to that. What portion of that is actually earmarked toward the addiction caused by gambling versus the use of alcohol? I think it's a figure of roughly $3.1 million, but I can't find it anywhere in the budget.

I wonder if the minister has ever looked at the concept that is used in Texas. In Texas they earmark 2 percent of all net gambling proceeds for addiction problems. As gambling expands, of course the availability of dollars expands for that particular problem, because the more that is gambled, traditionally the greater the addiction problem is going to be. In the dollars that go to AADAC or in the dollars that are earmarked specifically for gambling addiction, I'm not clear as to how that is split. I know the bulk of it goes to AADAC, but I believe some goes to the Canadian Foundation on Compulsive Gambling in Alberta and to a couple of other groups as well.

One more question on addiction. What types of steps is the ministry taking to try and discourage or prevent the growing gambling addiction that is occurring amongst young people? We see that happening just like we see the increasing numbers of young people becoming addicted to the use of tobacco, which is very disheartening. I believe the same situation is occurring with gambling, particularly in activities like pro sports and that.

Now, on the distribution of dollars, the gaming summit made it very, very clear. Their recommendation was that gambling proceeds should be used for community purposes, not public community purposes but community purposes. When I look through the budget, I guess the one that really sticks out like a sore thumb is where we have, if I recall correctly, a distribution of half a million dollars going to the international and intergovernmental tariffs department. I'm not sure if that's to accommodate the two new facilities they're talking about in Britain. I believe the other one was in Mexico or somewhere in South America. International marketing: $500,000.

We go through the whole budget and see the amounts of dollars that are transferred. I asked this question of the former minister, Steve West, last year. His own department had received $5 million at that time from the lottery fund. Health receives a great bulk of it, of course, Infrastructure receives a great bulk of it, and it goes on and on. To me those aren't community-based organizations. The dollars that go to CFEP are community based, but the ones that go to the lottery boards – and I looked at the distribution of the Edmonton lottery funds, for example. A great portion of those dollars, possibly even more than half of them, were turned around and funneled to other civic departments like the library, parks and recreation, and so on, areas that would traditionally be covered by tax dollars.

There are many organizations out there that had applied, like the Edmonton Telephone Historical Information Centre Foundation. They were turned down, a very viable organization. I believe that the Crystal Kids, that the Premier's dad is involved in, haven't received any dollars, but I may be wrong on this one.

MR. SMITH: They got $10,000.

MR. WICKMAN: They did receive some. Good that they received some. Those are the types of organizations that I see the gaming summit referring to when they talked in terms of dollars going to community-based organizations.

Now, the court actions. The Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo one has gone on now it must be almost three years. I think it will be three years this June, and those machines are still humming away. It's the same with the activities going on in Lacombe. There was an article in the Red Deer Advocate very recently where the advocates in Lacombe were questioning as to who is going to cover those legal costs that they incur as a result of the fight being put up by the hotel industry. The hotel industry, of course, has nothing to lose, because as they continue the court action, the dollars keep rolling in, more than sufficient dollars to cover the legal costs, but those that initiate the fight and the petitions and such don't have that. They can't dip into those VLT profits to cover their legal costs. Has the minister ever considered providing some of those lottery dollars to make for a more level playing field when it comes to the court actions?

The tendering process for the VLTs. I've always been not in the dark but not sure if all those machines are coming from Canada, from Alberta, or if the bulk of them still come from the United States, like they did originally.

My last point, which is also a part of the department but is overlooked, is the alcohol aspect of the ministry. Two questions come to mind here. One I call a threat to the small family liquor outlet that could be faced if the large stores – Superstore and IGA have been pushing for years for the right to sell liquor within their existing facilities, like we see in the United States. In Las Vegas it's very common. If you go into Lucky's, there's an area sectioned off which is for the availability of liquor.

Now, the disadvantage to the small guy is that the small guy can't afford to run loss leaders. If you go to the small guy, you buy liquor. If you go to Superstore, you buy groceries as well. So if they can entice the shopper in there by advertising rum and whiskey, whatever, at a much lower price, getting them in there to buy their groceries at the same time, of course they're going to do it. So I'd like to know: is there any consideration being given to allow the sale of alcoholic products in existing facilities that cater to the grocery industry?

My last question on the sale of alcohol. I've heard some concern being expressed again by the small guy that there may be special provisions set up to allow the bigger guys that may own a chain – like there's one that owns about six different outlets – to buy on a volume basis. Buying on a volume basis would allow them to buy the minimum that would be allowed to purchase a particular product, meaning that the small guy couldn't buy that product because he couldn't buy in that same volume. So those that own more than one outlet or a number of outlets could buy some type of specialty brands that you'd have to go there for and that you couldn't just go to the corner liquor outlet for. Of course, if you're going to go down to one particular liquor store to pick up some specialty bottle, you're probably going to turn around and buy all the alcohol you're going to buy at that particular one.

So those are the questions I'm going to ask for now. I would hope that the minister could respond to at least some of them and those that he can't respond to tonight I understand, and I wouldn't mind, like I did last year with the former minister, receiving responses in writing as time went on.

Thank you, Madam Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: Thank you, hon. member.

I will just remind members present that the lottery fund estimates will be discussed and voted on separately from the rest of the Department of Gaming. There is time set aside for that.

Hon. minister, do you wish to respond?

MR. SMITH: No. Go ahead. Let's continue, please.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay. I would also remind people that there is coffee and juice at the back.

Who would like to go next? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: I don't want to be greedy. Aren't there any questions from the government side?

THE CHAIRMAN: Go ahead, Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: All right. First of all, some questions about the performance measures in the business plan for your department, Mr. Minister. If I counted right, there are five, not a real ambitious start, I don't think. I'm just wondering whether you think you can capture all of the responsibilities of your department in the five measures that are proposed in the business plan.

Because of the change, I guess, in the organization of the department I note that many of the results and targets are to be announced. There are no comparative results because they weren't there in the past. That's fair enough. But a couple of them are specifically compliance measures with legislation and regulation, and that seems to me to be a little superficial or at least something that could be captured all in one performance measure. I guess Albertans would expect that your department would comply with existing legislation and regulations.

Do you want me to wait?

8:26

MR. SMITH: No. Keep going. I'm multitasking.

MR. SAPERS: I guess I have some suggestions for performance measures for the $1.3 billion in revenue and then all the expenses that are made as a result of what your department does, maybe some department measures around the net economic impact of gaming activity in Alberta. I've seen various estimates that range from 3 to 1 to 7 to 1 cost ratios in terms of social impacts of gaming activity in communities. I don't know which of that research is good or bad, but I'm certain that it would be of interest to you and the people in your department to figure out whether there's a real net benefit to communities for the billion dollars plus worth of gaming activity that takes place. I think developing a performance measure around that might be a prudent and responsible thing to do.

Also, what about volunteer involvement? There was a lot of controversy, you know, around some proposed changes to do with the utilization of volunteers in community-held bingos. Certainly there's lots of speculation. I don't know how many casinos you volunteer at, but every time I go to the ones that I volunteer at, people are telling me about all of the changes that are taking place. There's this sense that volunteers are being squeezed out of charitable casinos. I wouldn't mind seeing some performance measures or targets around volunteer utilization and involvement in gaming activities in the province.

My colleague mentioned the gaming research, and I do have some specific questions about the $1.5 million, but I'm wondering why there aren't any performance measures specific to that. What is the research going to be looking at? Is there a schedule of research? Obviously, you can't do all the research you'd want to do with that amount of money in one given year, so how are you setting priorities for that, and what are your expectations in terms of outcomes?

I'm also wondering why there are no performance measures that would take a look at the impact on other charitable activities. I know lots of fund-raisers that work for lots of organizations, and they tell me that they're in a real competitive environment and that their biggest competitors are scratch tickets and casinos and bingos, that a lot of disposable income that people have is being used up in that way, and it's making their task of raising money for their charitable organizations, whether they be religious or sports or cultural, a lot more difficult. So perhaps some attention being paid to some performance measures and targets around government policy and initiatives and how they impact on those charitable activities would be useful. I would certainly appreciate your comments on that.

When I take a look at your estimates directly, the first question I have is the gaming research, which is program 2. It's the same amount of money this year as last year, yet there's growth in gaming. I seem to recall some relationship being drawn between the amount of gaming activity and revenue generated and the amount of money that would be made available for research. Now, I may just be daydreaming – maybe that was just wishful thinking – but I do seem to recall your predecessor making some comment to that regard and that the first year's funding was really just to get things started. So I'd like you to tell me a little bit about the decision-making process that led to a status quo item for gaming research this year, considering that we're reaching brand-new heights in terms of the take that the government receives.

Some other questions. I know that we're going to be dealing with the lottery fund separately, Mr. Minister, but maybe you could just help me prepare for that debate by giving me your thoughts on these questions. Under other initiatives under Gaming I see that there's 11 and a half million dollars that's being allocated, and that's up from $3.6 million. That's a huge miscellaneous category, and it's a huge increase. I'm just wondering, with that much additional money being funneled into other initiatives, why it isn't broken out. Or are there really that many other miscellaneous initiatives that are of relatively small individual amounts? If that's the explanation, fine, but I'd like to know because it's – what? – an $8 million increase in the line item.

Perhaps this would be best in the lottery debates themselves, but I know that there's going to be a request coming for the 2005 Goodwill Games. Maybe the budget was printed too late to accommodate that. You had a hand in bringing that event to the city of Calgary. I'm wondering what your anticipation is for what budget year we may see whatever money that may be allocated, and I'm assuming it would come out of lotteries. If you could give us a hint as to what budget year you might expect that in.

Also, under Health and Wellness a number of questions, a number of concerns. I'll be brief, because again your answer may be to save that for the two days of lottery fund debates, but I hope not. In the Alberta wellness initiative we see a $4.7 million allocation being budgeted. Would that be ongoing? Because the Alberta wellness initiative is. Is that going to be the total funding?

The other question I have to me is a much more troubling issue. I see the $10.3 million being allocated for alternate compensation strategies. I take it that is money that will be used to pay professional fees to physicians for, you know, alternative remuneration situations, so those that are doing capitation or something else. So this is additional to the money that the Legislative Assembly will be asked to vote under Alberta Health and Wellness estimates for physician payments, which is going to be the better part of $800 million all by itself. So I'm wondering about this. Again, is this onetime? How does this fit in with the Health and Wellness estimates, and on what basis can Albertans be assured that any of these strategies, which are being test-driven right now, will have a chance of being continued if their funding is dependent on gaming revenue? It seems to me this is probably not the best use for lottery fund payments.

I think I'll leave my questions there for now. I have some supplemental questions, particularly in the area of performance measures, but I would like an answer to some of those preliminary ones before we continue.

Thanks.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Yeah. There are some more points I want to go through in the business plan here. We look at Core Businesses.

The Ministry of Gaming carries out its responsibilities through four core businesses:

1. Administer the Alberta Lottery Fund with full public disclosure, and continue to support communities and charitable organizations.

Further on we see Goal:

To ensure lottery funds support charitable, non-profit, public and community-based initiatives through effective administration of the Alberta Lottery Fund.

Now, "public" somehow became part of that recommendation that came out of the gaming summit, as I mentioned earlier, but "public" was not part of the initial recommendation. I guess I'm still curious. It makes it difficult if the minister is going to hold off answering any questions until the end. You know, I'm still curious as to when and why "public" was inserted into that recommendation.

We have as one of the key strategies, for example, "Use public consultation to obtain input on significant issues." Public consultation to me would involve going to more than the stakeholders, and as I pointed out earlier, in the existing review there was indication given that the public would in fact be consulted.

I'm also curious, Madam Chairman, about another aspect that has arisen over the last few months. There were discussions, as we're all aware, with the federal government about the possibility of providing financial assistance to hockey teams like the Edmonton Oilers and the Calgary Flames. I'm not sure, but I understand that there were even some discussions or some thought given to using lottery dollars as a bailout towards those teams. I'm not sure if those discussions ever went anyplace, because of course the federal minister kind of dropped that whole thing like a hot potato after two days of public outrage.

I don't blame the public, quite frankly, because the public has a difficult time trying to comprehend why players that are paid a million dollars a year, $8 million a year, whatever, should be part of an industry or part of a team where in fact tax dollars or lottery dollars, whatever, are requested to be used to bail them out or to subsidize them. This is always the fear, that those proceeds would then go just to enhance further the salaries of hockey players or the profits of the owners of those particular teams.

We also have here under Key Strategies on page 116:

Gaming will review policies on the disposition of Alberta Lottery Fund proceeds, to ensure funds are being allocated according to policy and intended use.

Now, I'm not sure if that's supposed to mean that Gaming will review policies. I would have thought that Gaming would have set the policies, you know, finalized the policies rather than the other way around. For the Gaming ministry to review the policies and then leave it up to the Gaming and Liquor Commission to finalize is sort of backwards to me. I would think that it would be the other way around, that the recommendations should come from the Gaming and Liquor Commission and be approved by the ministry, approved by the Legislative Assembly, and so on.

On the same page under Key Strategies:

The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission . . . will administer the Alberta Lottery Fund, including the transfer of lottery fund disbursements to other government ministries.

Okay. "Will administer the Alberta Lottery Fund." Don't they do more than just administer it? Isn't it the ministry involved with the caucus or the cabinet that decides exactly how those dollars are being spent in terms of how much will go for Infrastructure, how much will go for Health and Wellness, and so on? Again, that leaves the impression that the commission is doing a great deal more than the ministry. If the commission has all that power, why is there even a ministry to oversee it?

Another area, too, Madam Chairman. And it was you yourself who brought forward a report not too long ago, a few months back, about the same time that – oh, what's that foundation called from out west there? Is it the Fraser?

MR. SAPERS: Canada West Foundation?

MR. WICKMAN: Canada West, yeah. Canada West came out with similar recommendations, and those recommendations talked in terms of further public consultation before any expansion, about the beefed-up security and that. Nothing ever seemed to happen from that report. If you notice, on the legislative Order Paper there is a bill, Bill 208, that will advocate some of those recommendations, which I felt were quite frankly superb. I don't understand why they were ignored totally. At least from the public point of view it appears that they were ignored.

Then I go to the next page, 118, "Ensure the proceeds received from licensed gaming activities are only used for approved charitable or religious objectives or purposes." "Licensed gaming activities": I'm not sure if that's referring to the licensed gaming activities at the nonprofit casinos or if it's talking about any licensed gaming activity. If it's talking about any licensed gaming activity "only used for approved charitable or religious objectives or purposes," again there's no reference there to the dollars that are now being spent for public use. So there's a contradiction there, unless that applies just specifically to the nonprofit casinos. If that's the case, all the proceeds from those licensed gaming activities do not go to the nonprofit groups. My understanding is that 70 percent of the proceeds of the slot machines go into the government coffers, that they don't in fact go for these charitable or religious purposes. So either way you look at that particular one, there is a contradiction.

Also, on page 119, "Work with the Alberta Racing Corporation to determine the success of the racing renewal initiative." I have to admit that I do have one weakness when it comes to a sporting activity that is associated with gambling, and that's watching those horses run. I think that's one of the greatest sports going, whether you go out there to bet or not, just watching those horses come down that track towards the finish line. I recall I went out one afternoon to see Cam Allard's horse that was running in the United States. The only way I could see that race was to go out to the Northlands track and watch it on one of the big screens, because it was being brought in by pari-mutuel betting, or whatever it's called. Somebody phoned the Sun and accused me of being out there playing the slot machines, which I wasn't.

The racing industry has always been dear to my heart, and I recall the Premier even admitting at one time that he actually owned racehorses and that that was sort of one of his weaknesses, going out there and spending a bit too much money on the horses.

AN HON. MEMBER: That was Getty.

MR. WICKMAN: The current Premier also at one time owned a horse in Calgary, and he used to go out to the racetrack on a regular basis, according to one of his interviews he did with one of the newspapers. The former Premier too. In fact, I used to run across him quite often when I'd be out there watching the horse racing and watching some of his horses race.

The racing industry was in a great deal of trouble at one time, and I'm not sure now if it's a question of the racing industry still being somewhat in trouble and being subsidized by the slot machines that we see at Northlands, and I would imagine a similar amount at Stampede Park.

There have been some new initiatives taken that have helped the racing industry: the offtrack betting that we see at places like Billy Budd's. Again, another horse owned by Bob Giffin, Native Brass, I believe, was running in Toronto, and to see that horse race, I had to go to Billy Budd's to watch it on the screen. It was a joy to watch because that horse came charging in from the back of the pack and it just didn't quite make it. I didn't have any money on the horse. You didn't have to have any money on that horse just to watch it.

If the minister could sort of give an update as to what the state of the racing industry is, if the stakeholders are kind of satisfied that things are going well and if they've sort of gotten themselves out of the difficulties they had sometime ago. I'll stop for now and allow any other members that may have any comments or questions.

THE CHAIRMAN: The chair was allowing you a little leeway and latitude there, hon. member. I'm really glad you like horse racing. Have you got any tips?

MR. WICKMAN: It's all in the business plan.

THE CHAIRMAN: Who would like to go next? Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Well, I don't have quite the same passion when I talk about horse racing as my colleague, but I do have a question about the commission. I know that the Auditor General in the past has raised some concerns about the horse racing industry in this province. There's another question I was going to ask you about performance measures. I did note that one of your strategies is to work with the corporation to determine the success of the initiative, but I'm also wondering whether you'll have a moment to reflect on some of the concerns that have been raised in the past through audit.

I also wanted to look at the Gaming and Liquor Commission and ask, first of all, about the role of the commission when it comes to the enforcement of the Tobacco Tax Act. Again, there are no performance measures, and I'm just wondering what the relationship is with Alberta Justice and also the joint federal/provincial and the interprovincial initiatives in terms of smuggling and whether or not there is an updated working paper from Treasury that looks at the tax policy in terms of the illegal sale of tobacco products in this province, particularly those tobacco products that are brought here for resale in neighbouring provinces.

The other issue with the Gaming and Liquor Commission has to do with, I guess, its oversight role with private liquor stores and the stories I've been told by liquor store owners that have to do with large retailers being able to monopolize certain product lines and using the provincial warehouse, in fact, as their warehouse. They make a deal with the vendor to buy a huge quantity, it's shipped out to the warehouse, held there, and then the retailers are able to sort of draw off that inventory. I'm wondering whether or not you can tell me if that's just a fictional account from these small businesspeople or if in fact that's happening. If it is, does it concern you?

I've also been told by some of these same retailers that there's been some ongoing investigations to do with activities from some of the brewery agents that violate Alberta regulations in terms of providing incentives to retailers to hold certain products and sell certain products, not necessarily discount them but incentives in terms of product placement and ordering and those kinds of things. I'm wondering if you could update us there and also comment on why there are no specific performance measures that have to do with those regulatory and enforcement functions of the commission.

The next question I have has to do with – and this may give you an opportunity to quite rightly take some positive credit for things. I notice in the budget itself in terms of the minister's office and the deputy minister's office and business and management policies that all of the operating expenses under ministry support, in fact, are pretty much status quo. Now, is that because there's really been no change in terms of staffing and activities, or is it because of the leanness of the ministry? I guess I just would have expected to see some increases, considering the increased level of gaming activity in the province and the suggestion that there may even be more, whether it be the sports lottery that my colleague was referring to or some other activity. There aren't many government departments where we see year to year for support services that it's pretty much a maintenance budget, so I'm just curious as to how you got there.

MR. WICKMAN: Let me go specifically to the budget then. One of the questions that I'd really like to get answered tonight, that I'd asked earlier, even if the minister could tell me afterwards: the amount of money that is spent towards fighting addiction. I do have a media interview in the morning, and that would be very accommodating if you could give it to me, because it is absolutely nowhere in the budget other than that bulk figure.

In the Gaming budget on page 174, a few points. The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission—Lottery Operations: $54,639,000. On page 182, Ministry Income Statement, under the expense category Financial Assistance to Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission: $72,442,000. Now, for some reason those two figures don't jibe. I'm not sure if they're meant to jibe, and I'm not sure which figure is the actual figure. They don't jibe right on. Maybe they're not meant to jibe.

Also on page 174, the 2001 World Championships in Athletics, which we all support. People like Jack Agrios and Bob Steadward have to really, really be commended for the efforts they went to to bring those games here to Edmonton. The $10 million: I don't think anyone's going to begrudge that particular expenditure because of the legacy left behind. I was there for the Universiade Games. I was there for the Commonwealth Games. I was on city council. It did a great deal for the city, not only in terms of putting it in the international spotlight but in the legacy it left behind in sporting facilities.

Here we have the 2001 World Championships in Athletics, $10 million, but the previous year showed $19 million. I'm not sure what the $19 million would have been earmarked for. If I remember right, at the time that particular budget would have been prepared, the decision for the games would not have been made. I don't think the province would have fronted $19 million in terms of the bid that was made for the games and that the Premier went over, and rightfully so, to help advocate for. The thing he didn't do was adjourn the House for four days, which he should have, but that's beside the point. He did go over. He did do his job, just like you did when you went to Lake Placid, I believe, in promoting the Goodwill Games. That's expected of cabinet ministers and the Premier as long as those dollars are spent wisely. See we can be positive at times too.

Under Gaming on page 174 again, other initiatives, $11,525,000, a jump from last year's $3,671,000. Now, for a category as loose as other initiatives that's a great deal of money without some type of breakdown. What exactly is other initiatives referring to? Is it money that hasn't been earmarked, that's kind of a contingency fund?

Then I go to the next page, page 175, Health and Wellness, and I point out the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, $33 million, again a dramatic increase from a few years back.

The alternate compensation strategies under Health and Wellness, $10,350,000. I'm not familiar with that, and there's really no information on that. It sounds good: alternate compensation strategies. I don't know if that means to somehow compensate people for looking after themselves better thus preventing additional costs to the health care system.

We also see health care facilities under Infrastructure. There is no listing as to what facilities, unless that's going to come under the Infrastructure budget, which is quite possible. There is no listing as to what health care facilities that $120 million involves.

The same with the school facilities. I recall reading an article in the paper where in Edmonton one school in particular that was rated as the third on the list of priorities by the school board received something like $4 million for upgrades whereas the top one and the second one were overlooked. I know those are decisions made by another ministry. Nevertheless, they are in this particular budget, and I would assume the minister would have some knowledge of them.

I saw under Learning, $60 million, school technology upgrading. I would hope that we would see a good chunk of that $60 million going to places like NAIT and of course SAIT as well. That's a form of postsecondary education that — it's a system I went through as an adult student. I also went to university, but I found that what I learned at NAIT could be a lot more practical in terms of going out into the working world. There'll always be an increasing demand for facilities like NAIT and SAIT. They broaden their base in that they are even an educational benefit to some of the Third World countries. They share their knowledge.

Under Municipal Affairs, Municipal 2000 sponsorship, $12 million. Now, I should know what that one is, but I don't. I have no idea about $12 million being spent on Municipal 2000 sponsorship.

I don't know again, Mr. Minister, exactly what your intended process is here this evening. I would have anticipated that we would have had answers to some of these questions in case they provoked other questions.

MR. SMITH: Is that it?

MR. WICKMAN: For now.

MR. SMITH: For now, of course.

Well, Madam Chairman, it's just been such a frenetic level of activity from the opposition that it's been difficult to butt in and actually provide answers. In going through the keen questioning and some of the drifting that has taken part in following what probably was a pretty exciting horse race and also knowing that the opposition would want to dwell even more keenly on the Alberta lottery fund estimates. The lottery fund was published in the Edmonton Journal, published here, and of course is totally available on www.gaming.gov.ab.ca. The usual full transparency and accountability is extant in those information sources.

I will try to pick off some of the more salient questions that came through, Madam Chairman, that the member can use for his media interview tomorrow morning.

The amount that will be spent for gaming addiction through AADAC for this fiscal year is $3.4 million. The Alberta Gaming Research Council will spend $1.5 million through a tripartite agreement with the University of Lethbridge, the University of Alberta, and of course the University of Calgary. That money is to be spent on research into gaming, the socioeconomic impacts and addiction impacts. There are a number of different topics.

One of the things about the council and secondarily the institute is that it was established in order to be at arm's length from government so that it can have its usual objectivity, its usual level of fairness, and its usual level of transparency.

We will respond to the many comments, the many questions, which we will of course go through with a very fine-tooth comb and go into real detail.

The gaming licensing policy review will really, as has been published in the media and as I've talked about in prior days, focus very much on licensing. As the member knows as the critic for this portfolio for a number of years, policy has evolved. There have been a number of VLT plebiscites held throughout Alberta. There are numerous surveys by the Canada West Foundation and others that have focused on what is occurring with gambling activities in Alberta as well as in the prairie provinces and throughout Canada.

The recommendations from the summit continue to be guidelines, and I think the press release that was issued shortly after clears up both the transparency of the lotto fund and its collection and its discharge of funds.

With respect to the question on court action, this is the second court action, as members know. The previous court action died with the passage of Bill 36. It would be my hope that that case would be expedited and put through the system with the usual alacrity and dispatch of the justice system.

The issue of liquor in grocery stores has been put forward by a group in Calgary and subsequently had follow-up media coverage. There is no specific proposal in front of the AGLC or the ministry at this time with respect to changing any regulations allowing food and liquor to be sold in large and major chain stores. As the keen critic knows from doing his homework, there are over 60 agency stores in Alberta that do already sell liquor and food in places like Lindbergh, Alberta, and Paradise Valley and all the dream stops in Alberta that really add to the fabric of Alberta. Beiseker comes to mind, Heisler, all the spots. So they're out there; they're working. There seems to be a modest increase in alcohol sales primarily due to population growth. Revenues, of course, still reflect the reduction in revenue given to the beer industry in years previous.

As anyone knows, in a competitive market regulations are always evolving. Circumstances are changing. A market by its own definition is one of dynamic action. So as the Member for Edmonton-Glenora brought up earlier, we are looking at ways of either taking a regulation that is unenforceable and unprosecutable and eliminating it or beefing up staff and inspection in order to sustain the regulatory capability of the commission but certainly not to have a regulation on the books that is neither enforceable nor able to have the commission discharge their normal course of duties.

I know there are more questions, Madam Chairman, and I just see by the precipitous leaning of the chairs that people are on the edge of those chairs waiting for those. We will continue to collect data and continue to be able to respond.

Of course, the member knows that the bingo review commissions are out. They're being consolidated at the commission, and they will be dealt with in due course.

Also, the terms of reference and time frame for the licensing policy review will be forthcoming. Stakeholders in the gaming industry include all those who do gamble, who do have a proprietary interest or have an ability to profit from the industry, so we will be as inclusive as possible. We don't visualize at this period the chartering of the Dash aircraft and moving throughout 50 or 60 places in Alberta.

A great deal of work has been done, ably chaired by the chair here tonight. The report has even been referred to as the old Gordon report, the tired old Gordon report, and perhaps the ever evolving, tired old Gordon report. It might be the revival of the tired old Gordon report.

What we have here is a business question that needs to be addressed. There are a number of issues that need to be reflected on. We are taking that business responsibility on. We want to ensure that there is a sense of business discipline in the industry, that there is a sense of regulatory discipline in the industry.

I think it's important to correct for the record the term nonprofit casino. The casinos do make a profit. There is no government money inside a casino in Alberta. The commissions from slot machines, casino gaming terminals are noted. They're published; they're open. The charities split their income with the casinos. The government is not involved.

This charitable model, which continues to be well received by Albertans, combined with bingo, raised well in excess of $100 million for those charities over the past year. That charitable model is not intended to be changed. Volunteer participation continues to be welcome. Of course, because of the size and the growth in Alberta there continues to be growing amounts of charities as well.

Madam Chairman, in the interests of learning more about questions from the opposition and being able to respond to them as quickly as possible, I'll refrain from making further comments, and perhaps we can shed more light on even more introspective questions.

9:06

THE CHAIRMAN: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

I have had indication that Wetaskiwin-Camrose wishes to speak.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. Amongst the many comments that you've made relative to pages 174 and 175, I didn't hear any comments made about the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Foundation. I notice there that apparently this is the first year of a contribution to this foundation, which I believe was set up some time ago. I wonder if you could clarify for me if this indeed is a first-time contribution and if it's the intent that there would be yearly contributions to that particular foundation.

Just a little below that I notice federal nursing stations. I wonder if you could just clarify that. Is that a shared program, or what does this have to do with the federal government, if anything?

On the previous page under Gaming, community facility enhancement program, I notice $25 million there. I know that's part of the total CFEP program. I'm just wondering where the other I believe $50 million is. Maybe you could clarify that for me.

A little higher there, under Community Development, the Trans Canada Trail project. I know that's a new project, and the opening will be this summer, I believe, or this fall, whenever it is. I'm wondering if you could provide some more detail in terms of what that contribution to the trail project actually is.

My last comment, or question, relates to the Core Businesses on page 178. The second bullet says, "License, regulate and monitor liquor and gaming activities, as well as certain aspects of tobacco sales." Maybe you could just clarify for me that last part, "certain aspects of tobacco sales," just what that might include.

Madam Chairman, those are the only comments I really have.

MR. SMITH: The member clearly has by his great work in the Chamber indicated to us his concern over the consumption of tobacco by adolescents under the age of 18, and we applaud his work in doing that. I would be really invited to respond by saying that hundreds of millions of dollars will go into the enforcement equation so that we can go out and ticket those that are caught and prosecute them for smoking under 18, but unfortunately, Madam Chairman, I can't say that at this stage. But I do want to certainly recognize the contribution that the member has made in bringing forward the evils of smoking at a young age, and I think the attention that's being focused on it has been beneficial to all.

Many of the other questions the member talks about are related to the lotto fund, and as members of the opposition have also asked questions about the lotto fund, I am eager, eager, eager to respond to those in detail and in completeness, but I am reluctant, reluctant, reluctant to take time out from the valuable study of the ministry business plan and the ministry estimates themselves. So again watching everybody on that precipice of their chair, I might ask again that we would delay the response to the Alberta lottery fund questions until such time as it's dealt with under lottery fund estimates in the House.

THE CHAIRMAN: Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you. Mr. Minister, I asked some specific questions about performance measures in your business plans. Do you intend on answering those questions tonight?

MR. SMITH: I'll let him finish, and then I'll respond to them.

MR. SAPERS: Well, my response depends on yours, Mr. Minister, so I just want to know: are you going to answer those questions?

MR. SMITH: But if I respond, then you lose your turn. Doesn't he? So I was just kind of working on his behalf by not responding until after he's finished.

MR. SAPERS: I'll deal with the chair, Mr. Minister, if you answer my question.

THE CHAIRMAN: We have debate back and forth, hon. members.

MR. SAPERS: Well, it's committee. We can do as you allow.

THE CHAIRMAN: Well, why don't you ask some more questions? Then we will see if the hon. minister wishes to respond.

MR. SAPERS: I have to say that that's a bit unusual. Usually in committee that's exactly what we have, a to and fro. In fact, you've presided over many of those sessions, Madam Chairman.

MR. SMITH: Perhaps, Madam Chairman, I can help by responding to the hon. member's question, then going on to the next one. Perhaps.

THE CHAIRMAN: Probably that would be advisable.

MR. SAPERS: So "perhaps" is your answer.

MR. SMITH: Perhaps.

MR. SAPERS: I asked some specific questions about volunteers, research priorities, and economic impact of gaming on Alberta communities. Will you be answering those questions tonight?

MR. SMITH: Those are questions relating to the earlier question of performance measures with respect to specific activities in the community?

MR. SAPERS: Some of them were related to performance measures; some of them weren't.

MR. SMITH: Perhaps.

MR. SAPERS: How about the questions about the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission?

MR. SMITH: Many of those questions, Madam Chairman, we have already responded to as well. Of course, we also will be getting back in fuller and more complete detail in written form, as traditionally we have in estimates if I remember correctly. I would certainly indicate to the hon. member that absolutely no page will be left unturned, no question will be left unanswered. Every comment, no matter how minute, how detailed, how picayune, will be dealt with absolutely and fully in the spirit of disclosure and transparency, as have become the watchwords of this department.

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Minister, I'm not sure whether it impresses your colleagues or your staff to be so nonchalant and dismissive, but it doesn't impress me and it doesn't impress the people that elected me to represent their interests here. My concern is that once a year – well, we'll just have it recorded in Hansard, and you can read it. Once a year the department is expected to come and defend its estimates, and I expect that defence. I also expect that we get answers to questions before we're asked to vote on your department's estimates.

THE CHAIRMAN: Do you wish to go next, hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford?

MR. WICKMAN: Yes. There were some things that were raised as a result of the minister's remarks about trying to keep it within the Gaming ministry as opposed, say, to the lottery fund. When we look, it's under Gaming. Even in the index it's Gaming; it's all these different categories. I kind of hold that the ministry is ultimately responsible for any aspect of the Gaming and Liquor Commission, so anything that falls within any aspect of the lottery fund and the distribution of lotteries I think is fair game to be answered.

Now, we are into a new experience this year, because in the past, yes, we have had our two days of estimates for lotteries, and this is the first year, of course, that there's been a separate ministry for Gaming, so it becomes somewhat difficult to try and separate exactly what falls under Gaming versus what falls under the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission or lottery funds or however you want to call it. I think, Madam Chairman, you've been very, very fair in sort of allowing that discretion, because it is difficult to draw the line.

When I go through a budget like this, I do see some positives, and I want to just talk on a couple of the positives. One is the Wild Rose Foundation. I'm not sure how many of you have ever experienced the Wild Rose Foundation, but I've experienced it even in my former life involved with community groups. If we are going to have gambling proceeds in the province, that is one really, really good use. The current chairman, Krishan Joshee, has been chairman for some time, and most people around the table here I assume would know that he's done a very, very capable job. I've heard of many groups that have fallen between the cracks, that don't fall under any other program, which have gone to the Wild Rose Foundation and accessed dollars, and they've been appreciative of those dollars. So the Wild Rose Foundation works well, as do a number of the other foundations that may specialize in particular areas.

Another area that ended up being very, very satisfactory in the final outcome, although there were some real hurdles – of course, it was the former minister responsible – was the rigamarole with the bingo. The initial recommendation was made that a review committee was going to be established on bingo regulations. Meanwhile two weeks later it was announced that certain changes had already taken place even before that committee had met. We all heard the outcry from the various associations and individuals involved with bingos throughout the province, and there was a back flip done which should have been done at that particular time.

The committee, headed up by Sam Lieberman if I recall correctly, came out with I thought fantastic recommendations. We did have some difficulties with one or two of them: the one that allowed individuals under 18 to volunteer in certain types of bingo halls under certain limitations and such in terms of the amounts of revenue. I understand that in rural Alberta it's sort of a different situation than it is in urban Alberta. Nevertheless, that seems to have been accepted somewhat. There hasn't been a great deal of controversy over it. So the way that bingo was handled and the end result was very, very good.

Now, when we talk in terms of this current review that's going on, I'm not certain I have the same confidence. The minister has said that stakeholders will include those that gamble, but then on the other hand he sort of indicated that we're not going to have public hearings in the 60-some communities where you may have held them in the last go-round. I wouldn't mind, quite frankly, seeing a Judy Gordon report sequel. I think it would be good. I think it would freshen up in today's environment, which has changed considerably.

Anyhow, Madam Chairman, the minister's got to tell us how these stakeholders who do gamble are going to participate. Is it going to be like the WCB review committee, where a questionnaire is being drafted up, where those interested respond to a questionnaire they find on the Internet or they pick up at their MLA constituency office or wherever? That may not be sufficient. That may not give ample opportunity. It may not be necessary to go to 60 communities to do it, but again I would think there would be wisdom in a Judy Gordon report sequel, as I call it, Mr. Minister, to head off in that same direction again.

Now, the court action you referred to. When that bill was introduced by the former minister, we were contacted by legal firms for municipalities like Wood Buffalo and that, and they told us in no uncertain terms that that piece of legislation isn't going to fly, that it's not going to be upheld in the courts. Now, that decision still, of course, has not been made, and we can't prejudge the courts. I really hope they are wrong. I am getting concerned with the amount of time it is taking. I don't see anything in the papers about it anymore. I followed the Wood Buffalo newspaper and the Internet hoping I'd see an article up there as to what is happening.

I don't know exactly if there's a strategy to deliberately stall things and allow the dollars to come or if the lawyers representing the hotel operators have some strategy that they're quite comfortable with and that in the end result they're going to win. If that is the case, if that is the outcome, then we're going to have to, I guess, again look at some legislation. We do have to respect the wishes of those municipalities and those individuals who voted in those particular plebiscites.

The last point I want to make at this particular time. This should be of concern to many of the members sitting here, particularly those that represent rural communities. We did a study a couple of years back looking at the amount of dollars that were contributed to specific municipalities – for example, Drayton Valley and so on – the amounts of dollars that were being given directly to those municipalities as a result of lottery grants like the CFEP and so forth and so on. We compared that to the amounts of dollars that were being taken out of those communities as a result of the VLTs, and the ratios were as high as 7 to 1. In other words, for every dollar they received, they were losing $7 in the local economy.

I recall, Madam Chairman, one convention I went to. I believe it was the AUMA, or it may have been the AAMDC, but you were there. I recall quite a few of the delegates courting you and talking to you about VLTs and the concerns they had. I heard that in the hallways continuously, the drain that the VLTs were having in terms of the local economy and taking money out of the local economy, the money that was being shipped off to Edmonton that would otherwise be spent in that local economy. We know that in rural Alberta, particularly with the agriculture situation the way it is, just how difficult it is.

Again, Madam Chairman, I guess that reinforces to me the ultimate solution to this whole gambling situation we've gotten ourselves into over a number of years. I recognize that gambling isn't going to disappear. We have some form of gambling in virtually every province in Canada right now. We do have some form of gambling in every province throughout the country. Ontario has approached it somewhat differently. Ontario is developing the model where they're going to have, again, the charitable-type concept, shared of course with the government, where there will be designated casinos. Thunder Bay will have one. It's being built right now. Windsor already has one. You're not going to see all these machines in all the hotels and in the bars. Again, I think the ultimate answer is to follow that lead. I believe B.C. has a similar situation where in fact the municipalities have the right to veto the casinos in their particular communities.

I think here in Alberta we moved very, very fast with gambling. I was first elected in 1989. It was shortly after that that the then minister, Ken Kowalski, the current Speaker, introduced VLTs as a test in southern Alberta. Three or four years later he proudly talked in terms of how $25 million of gaming revenue, lottery revenues were going to go towards general revenue. This was after the CFEP program obligations and such. We look now at the amounts of dollars being transferred into general revenue that then is funneled to the various government departments. It has escalated. It is a big, big problem.

I commend the minister for having a review in place. I think that was the proper thing to do. Now it's a question of what comes out of that review: if it's just the status quo or a continuation of the expansion of gambling. It did frighten me somewhat when the Premier announced the Gaming ministry. That sort of sent the message to me that this was an industry unto itself, of more importance than elementary education, which was combined with advanced education.

Madam Chairman, those are some of the concerns I have. Alberta is very dear to me. I moved here from Ontario years and years ago, and I love Alberta. I don't want to see Alberta become a Las Vegas of the north. You know, there is a balance there that can be found, and that balance would take some boldness because it would turn off certain stakeholders. The hotel industry would not be happy at all about losing the VLTs. Many of them have argued that the VLTs are what keeps them going. Hotels were not originally built or purchased to become gambling centres. They were purchased for other reasons. As sympathetic as I may be to them, as I am to any business that struggles, I still don't see saying: okay, we're going to compensate by allowing you to have VLTs and have these hundreds of thousands of dollars a year rolling in. We don't do that for other industries, and I don't know why we should have to do it for the hotels.

Anyhow, I'll leave my comments at that point now because I know that other members are eager to speak on this.

THE CHAIRMAN: I certainly will allow for full involvement here or ample opportunity if anyone else wishes to ask some questions.

MR. SMITH: If I could just respond then, Madam Chairman, to a couple of the comments made by the member. Certainly we share common ground in our love for Alberta, whether you're from Ontario, as the member has pointed out, or were born and bred right here in Red Deer, Alberta. We do share this love for this province. We do share this feeling. Since 1993 there has been over $30 billion more worth of economic activity occurring in this province. There are 3 million people here now. One-third of the product is exported, over $33 billion. The GDP is fast approaching that of British Columbia's. We've generated enough economic activity to create another Saskatchewan, to create another Manitoba.

[Mr. Severtson in the chair]

This province is a success story. It's a success story because of what's happened in the private sector. It's a success story of people being able to work with a government that they're confident in. We'll continue to take those bold steps, as the member has pointed out, certainly the move to put a freeze on casino expansion until we were able to put ourselves in a better position to notice the evolution of gaming policy, that has changed over the years given the extra amount of research, given the extra amount of activity, given the growth of the province not only in this area but in other areas. In fact, the growth of the area has been so dramatic, Mr. Chairman, that the province's revenues from VLTs as a percentage of total revenues have actually decreased. There's growth in other areas of the market while there is not wild, unbridled growth in this particular market niche.

Of course, we work closely with the Hotel Association, which has always been a strong proponent of member interests, but also remembering that those hoteliers are resident in their own local communities. You would take a look at the progress reported by the group in Leduc, for example, that continue to recirculate some of their own revenues from their commissions in their community.

I think that loving this province is also committing to this province, and you find that citizens across this province will work hard. They work hard as volunteers. They work hard as individuals. We know that they put in more time per week than just about any other province in the dominion. We know that their average weekly earnings are exceeded only by that of Ontario, which is again a substantial move up from as low down as fourth in Canada over the last 10 years.

Of course, the department is very focused on ensuring compliance with a controlled substance such as alcohol, with ensuring that there's enforcement on serving intoxicated persons, serving minors, and the like. That's a very important part of our job. duties is one that I think the ministry does quite well.

So I'll continue on, Mr. Chairman, and look for more keen comments from those members who have pith and substance to add to the estimates discussion.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Okay.
Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a few questions. They relate to the gaming research. Earlier you went through the partners, which is the who. You spoke to some of the what, but I really didn't get a sense of what they're set up to study. If the past has been any indication of government policy, I don't recall reliance on any study whatsoever. At least it wasn't noted in any of the literature that has been published on the matter, and it certainly isn't noted on or close to gaming.gov.ab.ca.

I was wondering where one would find the results of this second year of operation now, some $3 million later, where we might find those results and whether in fact the government will be looking to that well-expended money, I suspect, on basic research on the psychology of gambling and all that falls from that, the addiction and the prevention of addiction. Putting the best light on gambling as a recreational activity has been the object of some exercise, of some research in the past, a great deal of it coming out of Nevada, of course.

Most recently there has been some very good study elsewhere, and I'm wondering what the relationship of that study is to this group and what reporting mechanisms they might have. Do they report by way of annual report? Do they report by way of production of material? All of those questions can be answered later, I suspect, because it's not the kind of information that I would expect the minister to happen to have at his fingertips.

On to another area that concerned me at the time: all the announcements of the community lottery board grants. Not the dissemination of those grants but the administration of those grants. I recall it was with a great deal of consternation that the communities had the grants. They were responsible for the administrative costs, and whether in fact they still are or are not is a question I'd like to have answered if I might.

In your remarks earlier, gambling by way of percentage in the overall income of the province of Alberta has in fact decreased. Well, you didn't cite the reasons for that, but judging from that which I see, the revenue has gone up. So all one can do is assume that the other revenues, which we know, have gone up considerably. So to use gambling revenue, to try to paint it in that light could be construed by some as being misleading. I would not do that at all though. This member would not do that at all.

Finally, this title of Other Initiatives. I, too, would like to see prior to the full debate of lottery funds some sort of answer, in that $8 million is a lot of loose change to have kicking around without any public accountability thus far. I've heard the minister talk over and over and over about the accountability of this government and the openness and the respect for those that generate these funds. Albertans would like to see those numbers. It's their money that's being expended, and I'm sure it will be forthcoming.

The last question I have is in the Resource Development area. I would assume that that program is now full and complete for the Department of Resource Development, but it can't just sort of end from $8 million expenditures down to nil. Are you expenditures now completed, and the department will have to carry on the maintenance of the software program? Is it totally and complete such that it was a failure? What's the story there?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your time, even though it might have been a little difficult to hear me over some of the din. The minister heard, I'm sure. He seemed to be listening as best I could tell.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Chairman, the minister always listens, and if he isn't available for quiet listening, he's certainly available for quiet reading afterwards.

The member's question with respect to the Gaming Research Council and the institute: they will be putting forth their own business plan at the institute level. They are a tripartite group of universities that will select the research projects and work in conjunction with the Gaming Research Council in quite an independent mode to be able to discharge the research undertakings.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Mr. Chairman, just my concluding comments, because we are getting on to a quarter to 10, and I assume we're going to go down to the general Assembly.

I appreciate the answers we have been given up to now, which are very, very limited. That doesn't concern me so much if the minister follows the same pattern as the former minister. The former minister provided me, within roughly two weeks, with written answers and, with the assistance of course of the officials of the ministry, provided a written response to every question I had asked and every question other members of this caucus had asked during the debate of the lottery estimates last year. This is the gaming estimates, but it's the same thing. I can understand that the minister is not in a position to answer every question that is asked tonight, but I would certainly appreciate – and I would like some assurances from the minister – that all the questions we asked tonight will be considered and responded to to the best of his ability.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Chairman, I'm more than prepared to give those assurances.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: There's nobody else on my list of speakers, so if there's nobody else, would somebody make a motion that we adjourn committee A.

MR. MAR: I so move.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We will adjourn and report to the Legislature. All in favour?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Okay. We're adjourned.

[The subcommittee adjourned at 9:40 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 1, 2000 1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/03/01
[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, on this special day Alberta's Legislative Assembly will hear first reading of the First Nations Sacred Ceremonial Objects Repatriation Act.

I would ask that you now join me in the prayer. Creator, we humbly ask Your guidance as we turn our thoughts to the legacy of First Nations sacred ceremonial traditions. Grant us vision so that these sacred ceremonial objects can once again play their role in the living traditions of First Nations people today, and grant us understanding so that we make wise choices for the future. Amen.

I want to give thanks to Dr. Jack Ives, the manager of archeology and ethnology at the Provincial Museum of Alberta for assistance with the words of the prayer today.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I introduce our distinguished guests, I would like to like to point out that you are an honorary chief of the Alexis First Nation with the name White Man with a Kind Heart.

Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a number of distinguished First Nations guests who have come to witness the introduction of a very significant piece of legislation entitled the First Nations Sacred Ceremonial Objects Repatriation Act.

Prior to entering the Legislature Chamber today, these guests were part of a First Nations ceremony in honour of this legislation. These distinguished guests are elders and chiefs representing three First Nations treaty areas in the aboriginal culture. Elders are highly respected as they provide their people with important counsel as to their traditional way of life.

Mr. Speaker, they are your special guests and are seated in your gallery. I would ask them to rise as I call out their names, and then once I've introduced them, I would ask all Members of this Legislative Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Frank Weaselhead, representing the Blood tribe; Martin Heavy Head, representing the Blood tribe; Leonard Bastien, representing the Peigan nation; Nelson Adams, representing the Paul band; Madge McCree, representing Swan River First Nation; Joe Willier, representing the Sucker Creek band; Harold Healy, representing the Blood tribe, and his wife, Joan; Mike Beaver, representing the Big Stone Cree nation; Kirby Bird, representing the Paul band; Allen Pard, representing the Peigan nation; Gabriel Meneen, representing the Tallcree band; Bennet Grey, representing the Whitefish Lake First Nation; Chief Wilson Bearhead, representing the Paul band; Chief Richard Davis, representing the Swan River First Nation: I would ask them to receive the warm welcome of this Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Forestry.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague Pearl and I, I'd like to say a few words in our own language today. [remarks in Cree]

I am honoured to be here along with our colleague Pearl Calahassen to participate in this most important ceremony. I thank our Premier and everyone that was involved in the development of this legislation. Thank you. [as submitted]

Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured also to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature Chief Harry GoodRunning, Sunchild reserve; Chief Darcy Dixon, Bears paw band; Chief Gerry Ermineskin, Ermineskin band; Chief Paul Chiniquay, Chiniki band; and other special guests representing treaties 6, 7, and 8 who are seated in the members' gallery. I thank them for being here on this special occasion of witnessing the introduction of a very significant piece of legislation and for being part of a native ceremony in honour of this legislation. I would ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, there are other members of First Nations here, and I would ask them to rise as well. Chief Alexis and others, please rise and receive the warm welcome.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

MR. DOERKSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table a petition today on behalf of the members for Lacombe-Stettler, Rocky Mountain House, Ponoka-Rimbey, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, Drumheller-Chinook, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, Red Deer-North, and Red Deer-South. The petition has 5,287 signatures and reads as follows.

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta reaffirm our support for the five basic principles upon which Medicare was built: accessibility, universality, portability, comprehensiveness and public administration. We urge the Government of Alberta to uphold the letter and spirit of these principles.

We also oppose two-tier health care and urge the government of Alberta to maintain an adequate system of public hospitals and to not permit the development of private hospitals in the province of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to present a petition on behalf of the hon. Member for Stony Plain. Three hundred and fifty-one parents in his riding wish to urge the Legislative Assembly to intervene on behalf of the students at Meridian Heights school to "have the Parkland school division No. 70 review and reconsider the decision to amalgamate the French Immersion program."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege of mine today to table a petition with 821 names on behalf of citizens from Lethbridge, Coleman, Blairmore, Fort Macleod, Milk River, Raymond, Coutts, and Taber asking the government to stop promoting private health care and to ensure that the public health care system is kept strong.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition signed by 395 people in the Grande Prairie, Beaverlodge, Fort McMurray, Wembley, and Anzac areas. They are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to “urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining the public health care system.”

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to table a petition signed by 242 Albertans. They are requesting that this Legislative Assembly pass a bill “banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.” This brings the total number today to 1,115 signatures on this petition.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to table a petition with over 1,000 signatures on it from the citizens of Edmonton-Gold Bar:

We the undersigned citizens petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

This petition has been gathered by many energetic seniors.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs.

Bill 2

First Nations Sacred Ceremonial Objects Repatriation Act

MS CALAHASEN: Mr. Speaker, otherwise known as the White Man with a Kind Heart, thank you very much. [remarks in Cree]

Mr. Speaker, I’m very proud and honoured to be asked by our Premier – I call him my chief – and supported by the elders of the aboriginal community and the leaders of the aboriginal community to rise today to move first reading of Bill 2, the First Nations Sacred Ceremonial Objects Repatriation Act.

I am very proud and thankful to the Creator for this opportunity to do the bidding requested of me. It’s up to us as aboriginal people that we do the right thing, from elders to leaders. This bill is giving back what is rightfully ours, but we need to ensure we have processes in place, for this is truly significant for our own survival. [as submitted]

Mr. Speaker, this act does three very important things. First, it establishes some basic principles that will enable Alberta to repatriate sacred ceremonial objects from government collections to First Nations communities.

Second, the act sets in motion a consultative process in which Alberta Community Development and Aboriginal Affairs will work with First Nations communities to learn how they would like to proceed with the treatment, loan, or repatriation of sacred ceremonial objects.

Finally, this legislation will amend the Glenbow-Alberta Institute Act so that 251 Blackfoot sacred ceremonial objects cared for by the Glenbow Museum can be repatriated to the Blood tribe, the Peigan nation, and the Siksika nation as per the Blackfoot agreement which was signed on January 14, 2000, at the Glenbow Museum.

Mr. Speaker, in this millennium, in the year 2000 we see a real change. This legislation is groundbreaking, the first anywhere in this country. I thank the Premier, who has led this province in ensuring that whatever happens the aboriginal people will get what is rightfully theirs. I think he deserves a big hand, and I would like to ask you, all our colleagues, to give him that hand. [applause] Colleagues, we should be very proud today, because as one elder said in Blackfoot when the repatriation was happening: when the pages of our bible are returned to us, aboriginal people can continue their healing and complete that healing, because when we take control of our own destiny by getting those pages back, only then will aboriginal people truly take their place in society.

I thank this Legislature, my colleagues, and especially my colleagues the Hon. Ralph Klein and Stan Woloshyn for all the work they did to ensure that whatever happens, we as aboriginal people can get back our sacred objects.

This is the first reading of Bill 2.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

Bill 12
Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2000

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 12, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2000. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

We have had occasion, Mr. Speaker, to discuss in Committee of Supply the details of the appropriation being requested. Suffice it to say for the purposes of introduction that it deals with supplementary supply to the departments of Community Development, Environment, Health and Wellness, and Justice.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to introduce a bill, but before I do, I want to congratulate the government on bringing forward Bill 2, the First Nations Sacred Ceremonial Objects Repatriation Act. We on the side of the Official Opposition look forward to working with the government to ensure a speedy passage.

Bill 207
Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing
Calculation Act

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to introduce a bill being the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Calculation Act.

This bill will put forward an option for consideration to move to more of a revenue-sharing model in our province as opposed to a children-of-the-province model with municipalities as has been too often the case.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 207 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Bill 208
Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2000

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce a bill being the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2000.

Mr. Speaker, this bill was prepared with a good deal of help and reflects the valuable work done by the Member for Lacombe-Stettler in terms of embodying some of those recommendations into legislation.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 208 read a first time]

Bill 209
Employment Standards (Parental Leave)
Amendment Act, 2000

MR. CAO: I beg leave to introduce Bill 209, Employment Standards (Parental Leave) Amendment Act, 2000.

[Motion carried; Bill 209 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Bill 210
Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2000

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2000.

The intent of Bill 210 is to give police officers increased legal authority in dealing with drivers whose blood alcohol content is within .05 to .08.

[Motion carried; Bill 210 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Bill 211
Alberta Taxpayer Bill of Rights

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce a bill being Bill 211, the Alberta Taxpayer Bill of Rights.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Taxpayer Bill of Rights will for the first time enshrine into law a set of principles for fair taxation and will prohibit the provincial government from raising the personal income tax, the flat tax as proposed, the fuel tax, the hotel room tax, the property tax, or any other prescribed tax of this government without first going to the people of this province and seeking specific permission. It's the first true taxpayer protection law that this province will enjoy, and I hope that colleagues on both sides of the Assembly will rush its passage.

[Motion carried; Bill 211 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Bill 212
Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism
Amendment Act, 2000

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If it's appropriate, I'd like to move on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview Bill 212, entitled the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2000.

[Motion carried; Bill 212 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Bill 213
Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2000

MR. HLADY: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills I'd like to introduce Bill 213, the Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2000.

[Motion carried; Bill 213 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Bill 214
Police (Special Constable Safety)
Amendment Act, 2000

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce a bill being Police (Special Constable Safety) Amendment Act, 2000.

This amendment act addresses specific safety issues relative to special constables.

[Motion carried; Bill 214 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Bill 215
School (Early Childhood Education)
Amendment Act, 2000

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the School (Early Childhood Education) Amendment Act, 2000.

Mr. Speaker, this bill would make kindergarten part of the formal education system, would invite school boards to set K to 3 class size targets of 17 students, and would require screening of children to identify those at risk.

[Motion carried; Bill 215 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Bill 216
Labour Statutes (Workers' Rights)
Amendment Act, 2000

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 216, known as Labour Statutes (Workers' Rights) Amendment Act, 2000.

Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill 216 is to extend the scope of labour statutes to commercial farms and ranches, provide prorated benefits to some part-time workers, enable the Labour Relations Board to facilitate first collective agreements, and make reinstatement provisions more meaningful for striking or locked-out workers.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 216 read a first time]

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to take the opportunity to join with my colleagues in the Legislature to congratulate the First Nations peoples on the introduction of Bill 2. I think it's indeed a historic bill and a historic day for the introduction of this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Bill 217
Public Highways Development Amendment Act, 2000

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Public Highways Development Amendment Act, 2000.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 217 will strengthen the ability of the Department of Infrastructure to deal expeditiously with nonconforming advertising along our provincial highways.

[Motion carried; Bill 217 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Bill 218
Insurance Statutes (Gender Premium Equity)
Amendment Act, 2000

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Insurance Statutes (Gender Premium Equity) Amendment Act, 2000.

The intent of the bill is to ensure that no insurer provides automobile insurance with a premium that discriminates on the basis of gender.

[Motion carried; Bill 218 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Bill 219
Blind Persons' Rights (Service Dogs)
Amendment Act, 2000

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Blind Persons' Rights (Service Dogs) Amendment Act, 2000.

It will amend the current Blind Persons' Rights Act to ensure that all persons with disabilities in Alberta will have the legal right to be accompanied by a service dog in public.

[Motion carried; Bill 219 read a first time]

2:00

Bill 220
Citizens' Initiative Act

MR. DUCHARME: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 220, being the Citizens' Initiative Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 220 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, today, in response to an hon. member's request yesterday, I provide five copies of the records management program which provides specific policies and procedures for the creation, handling, security and storage, and final disposition of child welfare records.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the annual reports for the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta for the period of April 1, 1998, to March 31, 1999; the Alberta Dental Association for the period of January 1, 1998, to December 31, 1998; the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association 1999 annual report; and the College of Chiropractors of Alberta annual report for the year ending March 31, 1999.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to be able to table this afternoon copies of the final report from the Calgary Multicultural Health Care Initiative entitled Building Bridges: Healthy Living for Calgary's Diverse Community.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for the information of members of the Assembly the document Auxiliary Nurses are Worth It: Because We Care. I received this document today on the AUPE information picket line at the University hospital.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of two separate documents. One is the Capital health region Royal Alexandra/Glenrose site information sheet on LPNs. The other is a sheet prepared by the AUPE regional office for the information pickets held today at various health facilities around the province. It's information regarding the offer to the LPNs which would see that they would receive 62 cents over three years. I leave both copies for the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the Chinook region health restructuring update from this February.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table requisite copies of only two of the dozens of letters that my office is receiving every day on the health care issue. The first letter is from Mr. Terry Darbyson from Vegreville. He wants me to add his name to the list of Albertans who are opposed to the proposal of allowing regional health authorities to enter into contractual arrangements with private, for-profit hospitals.

The second letter is from Robert Lawrence from Calgary expressing the same sentiments as Mr. Darbyson.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of the environmental protection security fund annual report for the year ending 31 March 1999 in accordance with the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first group that I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislative Assembly is 60 bright, young grade 6 students from St. Philip Catholic school. They're accompanied today by teachers Jerome Burghardt and Roger Millette as well as student teachers Carolyn Currie and Robert Hoppins and student helpers Mrs. Sevigny and Mrs. DelMastro. They're seated in the public gallery. With your permission I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Also, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly Jimmy Ragsdale. Jimmy is seated in the public gallery, Mr. Speaker, and with your permission I would ask that he now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 29 hardworking, conscientious students in grade 6 at Waverley elementary school located in the Kenilworth neighbourhood of Edmonton-Gold Bar. They are accompanied today by their teacher, Paula Tessaro, and by parent volunteers Mrs. Laurie Harnack, Mrs. Sherry Wesson, Mrs. Brenda Gaunt, and Mrs. Cindy Dwyer; and also student teacher Mrs. Jenni Rubuliak. They are in the members' gallery, and I would ask them now to please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Jo Davis, Dorothy Corney, Elkmar Schrag, Colleen Dennehy, Floyd Van Slyke, Shirley Thomas, Mary Nelson, Joan Hepburn, and Don Hepburn. They're here to witness the presentation of the petition and also to observe the proceedings of the House. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm greeting of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislature 16 talented grades 5 and 6 students from the Amisk school in the Wainwright constituency. They are accompanied by teacher Hilary Gray and parents Mrs. Carol Anholt, Mrs. Bev. Holte, and Mrs. Shelley Drever. They are studying government. They are excited about their field trip, and they're excited to observe the proceedings of this House, especially this special day for the First Nations. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

MRS. FORSYTH: You save the best for last, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce through you and to you two favourite constituents of mine, Heather and Neville Beck. Neville is celebrating his 60th birthday. I would ask Heather and Neville to rise and members to give them a warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: Well, then, hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you my dear friend who is visiting the Legislature, Mr. Harjit Rai. Mr. Rai is a very active member of the Sikh community, and he's also the recent past president of the southwest Sikh Society of Calgary. Mr. Rai is also a very strong Progressive Conservative, who I'm proud to say has been a hard-working member of my Calgary-Cross board for a number of years, on my executive. He's visiting today with his son-in-law Mr. Sekhon. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they both rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Members of the Assembly have often heard me speak of the exceptional people who live in Edmonton-Centre, and today I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly one of those constituents. Barry Bigelow has been very active in the community. I first met him when he was here as a volunteer judge for the CFB heritage fair, but he has also worked with me on a community strategy on youth crime. I would ask Mr. Bigelow to please rise and accept the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

MR. BOUTILIER: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the last person to introduce visitors today, it is my pleasure to welcome all gallery visitors here, specifically Ellen and Paul Laursen and their two children, Alicia and Brittany. They endured the tablings today and unfortunately have left, but for Hansard they are here today.

Thank you very much.

head: Oral Question Period

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, the goal of this Premier and the special interests backing him is to bring in two-tiered, privatized health care into Alberta. The government is pulling out all the stops to bring in the Premier's privatization scheme: truth squads, newspaper ads, TV ads, radio spots, mail-outs, polls, focus groups, and, tomorrow, their Trojan horse bill to destroy health care. My question is to the Premier. Is the message of his propaganda campaign based on the focus groups, and is that why his government will not let Albertans see the truth in his doctored document?

MR. KLEIN: All the information that was asked for and all the information that was released was in accordance completely with the rules of the freedom of information legislation. Mr. Speaker, there is a process. If they're not satisfied with what they receive, there is a course of appeal.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition that they know how to use FOIP legislation. They use it more than anyone else.

MR. DICKSON: Point of order.

MRS. MacBETH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Albertans deserve to see who and how much they are paying, will this Premier table with the bill tomorrow the costs, the contracts, and the agencies that he is using in promoting his private hospitals communications plan?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this is a piece of legislation that needs to be communicated and communicated properly. The Liberals have been spending taxpayer dollars to spread a lot of malicious misinformation. Other groups and organizations have been spending hundreds of thousands of dollars to spread untruths related to this particular piece of legislation, so we want to make sure that we take sufficient steps to ensure that Albertans are well informed about this legislation, even to the point of taking the unprecedented step of mailing the bill out to every Alberta household.

MRS. MacBETH: No, Mr. Speaker, we haven't been trying to convince Albertans of anything. We've been listening to them.

Mr. Speaker, will this Premier tell Albertans just how many seniors will have to have their hip replacements or their cataract surgeries delayed because he's spending their health money on fancy advertising agencies instead of on our public hospital system?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that's one of the problems: our delays that we're experiencing right now in the health care system, our waiting lists for certain elective surgery procedures.

Mr. Speaker, yes, we want to get the facts out there. We want to get facts out in an orderly, reasonable fashion. We want to engage Albertans in unemotional, reasonable debate on this particular issue, and we want to hear what Albertans say. All the information that we will be releasing pertaining to this bill, all of that information, is the bill itself and an explanation of the various components of the bill and what it will mean to Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, the real title – the real title – of tomorrow's bill is the private hospitals act, but the Premier and the special interests backing him just don't have the courage to tell Albertans the truth. Will this Premier admit that his Trojan horse bill tomorrow is a diversion and that his real agenda is contained in the communications plan hidden away in the Public Affairs Bureau?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we simply want to make sure that Albertans have the facts. The facts will be contained in the bill. That bill eventually and hopefully will become the law of this province. The title of the bill – and I can share this with the hon. member – is the health protection act. The health protection act. It is not a Trojan horse to shield anyone from anything. It is the health protection act, which has as its preamble absolute adherence to the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act and spells out loud and clear that all you will need to access the publicly funded health care system in this province is your health care card.

MRS. MacBETH: Well, Mr. Speaker, his wordsmiths have been working overtime.

Mr. Speaker, will this Premier admit that there's no plan to gather real public opinion or changes that Albertans may have in mind and that, once introduced, this bill is signed, sealed, and delivered for the special interests backing the Premier and his party?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to respond to that question by asking a question, and I would like this hon. member to do the honourable thing and stand up and say who these so-called special interest people are. Who are they? I would like to know. You know, she's very vague on this particular issue just as she has been very vague on the bill itself. With one breath she says that there's a possibility she will support the bill. Now she's calling it the private hospitals bill when it is indeed the health protection act. She accuses this government of orchestrating a campaign. Yes, there is a campaign to get the facts out.

Mr. Speaker, I tabled in the Legislature an e-mail sent by one of the Liberal staffers to all Liberal MLAs encouraging them to get out there with their petitions and with this and that and to orchestrate a campaign. It has been a campaign, as I've said before, a campaign not of the truth but a campaign of malicious information. They're so good at it.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, given that health is too important for the spin and the glitz and Albertans won't be bought with their own money, will this Premier simply stand up, look Albertans in the eye, cut the spin, and admit that his Trojan horse bill is filled with private hospitals?

MR. KLEIN: I will look Albertans in the eye and say to all Albertans: you will have the opportunity to see the bill and to read it for yourselves unfettered, Mr. Speaker, not with a bunch of political rhetoric, the kind that comes from the Liberal opposition, not filled with malicious information, the kind of misinformation that is being spread by the Liberal Party, but the facts as contained in the bill. There is nothing more paramount, as I've said before, than a bill to be tabled in this Legislature that purports to become the law of this land. This is not about the kind of malicious information that they're spreading. This is about getting the facts out there in a true and truthful and straightforward manner.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, Albertans don't trust the Premier's private hospitals bill. And you know why? It's because no matter what his wordsmiths have crafted, no matter what that bill says, his private agenda is to open the door to private hospitals in this province so that they can make a profit at the taxpayers' expense. My questions are to the Premier. What happens when an operation in a private hospital goes wrong, when there are complications or infection? What happens when there are things that that private hospital can't deal with?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, that is a good question. What happens now in an abortion clinic when something goes wrong? This hon. member knows all about therapeutic abortion clinics, because they were alive and well and actually a number of them were established under her watch. What happens? What I assume happens is that if something goes wrong, an ambulance is called, and the patient is then taken to a full-scale treatment hospital. That's what happens. [interjections] Well, I stand to be corrected. What happens now? Maybe the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness can respond. What happens now if something goes wrong in one of the 47 surgical clinics that are now operating? What happens? [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, would you carry on?

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, the Premier knows the answer. They go back to the public system.

My second question is: who pays when a person has to go back to a large public hospital because of the complications of major surgery that a private hospital can't handle?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, all procedures, minor, major – it doesn't matter what takes place in the health system today, all procedures, all treatments must conform with the standards and the guidelines and the very, very strict code of discipline set down by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. These are the people who know, not this hon. member. She is not a medical doctor and knows absolutely nothing about the health system as it pertains to the treatment of people, and I would add that she knows absolutely nothing about health policy.

MRS. MacBETH: As if.

Mr. Speaker, as this Premier may know, the state of California has just introduced legislation so that any complications in a private hospital are not allowed entrance to the public hospitals. Is that provision going to be in his private hospitals bill tomorrow?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the bill has yet to be tabled in this Legislature. I would advise the hon. members, as I advise everyone, to wait and see what the bill says. Surprise, surprise. She might even support it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night a CBC Calgary broadcast to a national audience revealed questionable practices taking place in existing Alberta day surgery clinics. The program suggested that some entrepreneurial doctors may be putting financial considerations ahead of the best interests of patients, yet the College of Physicians and Surgeons seems to be doing little or nothing about it. To the Premier: how can the government justify under its planned legislation going back to the dark ages by giving sole jurisdiction to the College of Physicians and Surgeons to accredit and monitor his proposed private, for-profit hospitals and excluding other health professions, such as nurses, from the process altogether?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I take exception to the use of the phrase "private, for-profit hospitals." Secondly, I take great exception to his assessment of the ability and the expertise of the medical experts who make up the college. He is saying that these people as medical experts are not qualified? Would they rather see Raj Pannu, you know, in charge of determining what is right medically than a team of well-qualified and highly respected doctors? I find that statement to be quite astounding, that he would presume that the College of Physicians and Surgeons, probably one of the most highly respected organizations of any jurisdiction in this country, is not capable of adjudicating what is right and what is wrong relative to the delivery of medical procedures. I think he should apologize.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Premier stops focusing on Raj Pannu and starts answering questions.

As revealed last night by CBC, why is this government failing to properly monitor existing private clinics like the Gimbel Eye Centre before legalizing private, for-profit hospitals to do major surgeries?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I didn't see all of the program. I saw part of the program. And I will have the hon. minister respond.

The CBC is one news outlet. The other day the hon. member alluded to the National Post as being that awful right-wing newspaper. Do I take it from his question that the only news outlet that he abides by and believes in is the CBC? Is that where he gets all his information? I'm sure it's totally and absolutely unbiased. [interjections] Right.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the case in question I listened to the elderly gentleman, and he said: I've got no complaints; I was quite happy with the treatment I got.

I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about Media Reports

THE SPEAKER: Well, first of all, hon. members, it seems to me that on several occasions now I've pointed out that the purpose of question period is not to verify something that was in some newspaper or some television program. I think I have access to something like 80 channels, and if the purpose of this question period in the province of Alberta is to verify everything that was said or not said on a particular program on a particular channel – the purpose of this is to deal with government policy, not to verify what was said on some TV program.

Private Health Services

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say that I do respect Sharon Basaraba, who is a noted Alberta journalist.

My last question, Mr. Speaker: how can the government justify letting the College of Physicians and Surgeons monitor wanna-be private, for-private hospitals when the college doesn't seem to have the resources or the will to properly monitor existing private day-surgery clinics like the Gimbel Eye Centre?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the college has the very grave responsibility of monitoring the quality of medical health care as it is delivered in this province and indeed as it is delivered in every jurisdiction across this country. All provinces have a College of Physicians and Surgeons. These are people who are experts in their field. They're medical practitioners. They know better than anyone else what is right and what is wrong with respect to the delivery of medical services.

I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

MR. JONSON: If I might, Mr. Speaker, the thing that's important to add to the Premier's answer is that we have contacted the College of Physicians and Surgeons with respect to this alleged situation. In terms of resources we have been working with the Heritage Foundation for Medical Research. They have been assembling information with respect to the ongoing evolution of the treatments of various eye conditions, and that information, which of course is out of a foundation supported by the government, will be provided to the college so that they will have the most up-to-date best scientific information available when they review this particular case. The college and the support of Alberta Health and Wellness is there to investigate, to follow-up on any alleged violations, if that's the proper term, of this type. There is a process in place handled by very credible people on the basis of very credible evidence.

THE SPEAKER: The Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

2:30 Housing for Victims of Family Violence

MS PAUL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While touring a number of women's shelters and speaking to social service agencies across the province over the last four months, the number one issue that has been continually brought to my attention is the difficulties families leaving shelters face with regard to reasonably priced housing. Social service payments are not sufficient to cover the costs to start up a new home in a decent accommodation. These families are being set up for financial failure. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. What will the government do to address the financial crisis these families face upon leaving the shelters?

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has taken a leading role in working with people who are looking for what one I believe would refer to as transitional housing. We have a concern that these families and individuals who are in need the most have access to what you might call basic shelter.

There's a whole variety of community service resources available to families and individuals who need assistance. Community Development doesn't necessarily run them all, and I would ask the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to address some of the financial assistance and support services that are available through his department.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We try to address the problem in two ways. We have direct services to families in shelters but also income assistance to families in need. Now, under the direct service, intake workers will regularly visit families in the shelters. Of course, we're dealing with these clients in our offices right across the province whether or not they are in a shelter. Through agencies, actually here in Edmonton, we also help women move from abusive situations or shelters into their new homes. We class this as one of the innovative programs that has come with the welfare reform of previous ministers, and we think it's a proper thing and a right thing to do.

Of course, the financial benefits: they may apply, then, for payments under supports for independence, or the SFI program. Also, we do provide assistance in housing. It is this situation, hon. member and other members here in the House, that you may find of interest. This is a time when we will actually provide a damage deposit, and that is to help the family that is being abused. If we can't get the perpetrator out of the house and the family then has to leave, we'll help them move into new accommodation.

MS PAUL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really wasn't talking about the abuser being taken out of the household. I was talking about financial crisis.

As these families are often financially forced to reside in substandard housing run by unscrupulous landlords, what will the government do to eradicate that problem?

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a few initiatives that are happening. I really hope that the unscrupulous landlord situation is not as widespread as some may think, but I don't really know.

What we've done to this point, we're again, if not the only province, one of the first provinces in Canada to come up with something called a government policy framework on homelessness, wherein we've defined the people. These would be the individuals who would come out of these situations, hon. member. We've put a definition on what we would consider to be folks who are homeless. These are basically individuals – children, youth, and families – who currently have no housing or are sheltered in emergency accommodations and will be out on the street at the end of the day, if you will. We do recognize that in order to address this particularly complex problem, there are a wide range of needs that these families face in moving out of shelters.

There has to be a continuum of housing facilities which could address this particular instance, and there have to be support services. We need transitional housing; we need special-needs initiatives. There are programs that the hon. minister of human resources has referred to that are in place. What we are doing also: the federal government in December announced some initiatives, and we're trying to work co-operatively with them so that we could in fact end up addressing some of the problems that may be faced by these folks.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. Third question.

MS PAUL: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. My third question was going to deal with new initiatives that the government is going to implement to address affordable second-stage housing. I would emphasize the words "new initiatives," because what is in place now is not working.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to say that the people who were paying attention to the estimates would have noted that we have $3 million a year over the next three years committed to supporting community-based initiatives to assist the homeless. That's a new program in there. As well, although the hon. member may say simply new programs, I think it's important to note that the department that I represent currently funds over 9,000 family and special-purpose housing units and provides grant funding to qualified applicants with an annual budget of 82 and a half million dollars. That is significant.

I'd also ask the Minister of Children's Services, who is in this area, to supplement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Private Health Services

MS LEBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's been said in here before, and I'll say it again: if it looks like a duck, walks like a duck, and quacks like a duck, it is a duck. The Premier said this afternoon that it's time to look at the facts, and here's one fact that we'd like to look at. The Premier's own handpicked blue-ribbon panel on Bill 37 said that a private health care facility or nonhospital surgical facility was in fact a private hospital. My questions are to the Premier. Can the Premier explain what the difference is now between a private, for-profit overnight surgical facility and a private, for-profit hospital?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again I would say to this hon. member: wait and see what the legislation says when it's tabled in the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I don't want to sound facetious on this particular matter, but if the hon. member wants to know what a hospital looks like, I would suggest that she go to the Royal Alex or University hospital or the Grey Nuns or Misericordia and see for herself what a hospital looks like. If she wants to know what a clinic looks like, I would suggest that maybe she go to the Morgentaler therapeutic abortion clinic or an eye surgery clinic, and she will see a clinic.

MS LEBOVICI: Will the Premier's spin campaign be clear and honest with Albertans and say that this government's legislation is going to allow contracting out with private, for-profit hospitals? It doesn't matter what you call them. An overnight clinic is a private, for-profit hospital.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, wait and see what the legislation says relative to this particular issue. They're so caught up in definitions that they tend to forget – well, maybe they don't tend to forget. Maybe they are deliberately ignoring what we want to achieve. What we want to achieve are very strict and stringent regulations relative to contracting out by regional health authorities and, at the same time, provide some options to alleviate pain and suffering. That's what it's all about.

MS LEBOVICI: Will the Premier admit that the only thing he wants to achieve is the allowance of private, for-profit hospitals in this province, and that what he needs is the propaganda machine to ensure that that product is sold in this province right now?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that is absolute nonsense. We want to do what is right in terms of addressing what has become not a provincial crisis but a national crisis relative to the delivery of health care and finding new and effective ways of delivering medically necessary services and still doing it within the publicly funded health care system as we know it today. That's what it's all about. Nothing more, nothing less.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Federal Transfer Payments

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans and indeed all Canadians were given the news in the federal budget this week that the federal government will be restoring or returning to the provinces some more money previously cut from the health and social transfer payments. The federal government claims it is restoring significant amounts of money to the provinces for health care. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Could the minister explain to this Assembly exactly how much the federal government has actually increased health transfers to the provinces?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the federal government did provide some increase in the health and social transfer provision in the budget. It was announced as being, as I recall, $2.5 billion over four years, and that will mean $1 billion in the first year and then $500 million in the next three years. Just to put it in context, that would be an amount of money that would provide for about six days of funding for the current Alberta health care system.

The point here though, Mr. Speaker, is that this is not by any means a restoration of the very, very significant reductions that were made by the federal government about the same time or shortly after they were endeavouring to balance their budget and took the pattern or example of Alberta. So while the money is welcome, it will amount to about $100 million for Alberta in the coming year when we get the money, which I think is June, and we will certainly apply it as wisely as possible within our health care system, education system, and social programs. That is the situation with respect to the federal budget.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is again to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Could you please explain how Alberta will spend this additional money allocated for health?

MR. JONSON: Well, as I've indicated, Mr. Speaker, we will give considerable thought to the best areas in which to apply the health care portion in the provincial budget to the Health and Wellness program. Certainly we've highlighted before this Assembly and for Albertans our six-point plan with respect to our priorities in health care. The area of reducing waiting lists, the area of providing for frontline staffing, and the area of healthy aging, long-term care, and associated services would be at least three, I think, of the top considerations that we would be looking at when we know exactly when the money is going to be available and under what terms.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

St. Michael's Long-term Care Centre

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Early last month the Chinook health region released an update for their business plan which would implement significant changes in the delivery of long-term care in Lethbridge. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Mr. Minister, why did you put a hold on the implementation of this long-term plan and create uncertainty for St. Mike's and the families who are expecting to move into that new facility in May?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member would recall and certainly people in southern Alberta and particularly in Lethbridge would recall that there was a major dialogue, to put it in its constructive sense, over the decision to build the St. Michael's long-term care centre. Alberta Health and Wellness – it was Alberta Health then – worked very diligently with the participants down there to bring that project into becoming an actual in-the-ground project and now a building about to be opened.

The point here, though, that I think has to be understood by folks in the south – and I'm sure they do – and by the Assembly is that the agreement that was arrived at at the time that project was approved was for a new 200-plus-bed long-term care centre with long-term care type services within it. Now, as we come into the new year and we're in the position of being able to open the actual physical structure, the regional health authority feels that they want to change the program for that particular building to assisted living and some other programs, Mr. Speaker.

This is quite a dramatic proposal. It's one that I've had my officials journey to Lethbridge to discuss. It was their advice to me that we should put it on hold and get more answers and look very carefully at the legislative requirements of making this rather dramatic change in the designation of a facility. Therefore, I did indicate to the regional health authority that any action of this particular type should be put on hold. We have asked them a number of questions. We've asked them for information. I and my officials will be visiting Lethbridge in the fairly near future to follow up on this.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental is to the same minister. The families want to know: what are the standards for the level of registered nurse, licensed practical nurse, and personal care attendant staffing that are required in assisted-living situations? Will their loved ones have RN support 24 hours a day?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, without wishing to alarm anybody in answering this question . . .

MRS. SLOAN: Don't worry; they're already alarmed.

MR. JONSON: I know you're alarmed already, but that's okay. I meant the people in Lethbridge.

Mr. Speaker, the assisted-living model or policy does not by definition provide for 24-hour care. Certainly there's the possibility that with creative thinking and planning there could be an assisted-living service established that would provide 24-hour attention to the residents. That's one thing that has to be looked at and examined. Long-term care, of course, by definition does provide the 24-hour coverage.

Then we have other matters to discuss with respect to the necessary staffing models and staffing ratios, which, as reported to me by my officials on the first visit, really need to be discussed more and clarified. So once again I have the same conclusion, and that is that we are aware of the situation, that we do want the best for the elderly people of the Chinook region, and we are following up on it with the health authority.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental, again to the Minister of Health and Wellness, is: will it cost the families more because of user fees or different room charges under the assisted-living model?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, there is in long-term care, because that is what we are making the comparison to, a standard formula, a standard rate, a maximum charge per day. In the assisted-living model services – health services, home care, Meals on Wheels, all those types of services – can vary depending upon the needs of the individual, in terms of the services required by the individual. Yes, there is the ability to vary the charges in assisted living according to the package of services being provided by the health system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been some claims made by some critics that the government's policy on delivery of surgical services will trigger certain clauses of the North American free trade agreement and will allow foreign corporations to take over the health care in this province. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Will the government proposal on the delivery of surgical services pose any difficulty under NAFTA?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I've spoken on this issue previously. I am confident that the government of Canada has negotiated under NAFTA a carve-out that protects public health in this province and in Canada. The policy statement does not provide American service providers with any automatic right to establish a clinic in Alberta. This is based strictly on a misreading of the NAFTA obligations. To try and clear that up and ensure that people had the information, I did table in the House about a week ago the actual reference with all of the sections referred to, and I invite hon. members to look at that.

It's interesting that NAFTA has been in place for 10 years, has proved to be a great benefit to this province, incidentally, and we have never had a challenge or a request under NAFTA, although private clinics have existed, funded by the public system, for many years. Mr. Speaker, I know that NAFTA does not challenge the government's sovereignty or ability to control who provides service in this province. I am confident, as I said, that the government of Canada has negotiated a protection, a triple protection really, with the primary protection under the carve-out, that protects the health delivery system that we have in this province, that we will continue to have, and that we have in this country.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. If we're protected under NAFTA, are there any concerns that the policy may leave us open to action by the World Trade Organization?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, some critics have given up on the NAFTA agreement. They've recognized that there is a carve-out, and now they're talking WTO. Let me tell you that there is no threat to Alberta's publicly funded health system posed by the World Trade Organization. First of all, the government of Canada, who is our negotiator, as I tried to explain last night, has made no commitments in health under the WTO or in the health services sector. Alberta has absolutely no obligations in the WTO in this area.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Some people are suggesting that if the private sector gets a foothold in Alberta, it will just be a matter of time before it expands into a two-tier health system. Will the government policy on delivery of surgical services open the door for large American care companies to move into Alberta?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, Albertans and their government won't let that happen. It's not what anyone wants, and it is certainly not what the policy statement that this government released last November indicates in any way. Under the policy statement as it's laid out, surgical clinics in this province would only be able to provide services if they were contracted by the regional health authorities. There will be limits in the legislation, and as the Premier indicated earlier today, the legislation will be in the House soon. I hope that some hon. members who have made some rather widespread statements on this will admit or at least suggest that they may have been mistaken when this legislation is here. [interjection] Well, I doubt it too.

Mr. Speaker, the policy statement that was laid out on the delivery of surgical services sets out the criteria that would need to be considered. It is not who owns the building that is important under NAFTA or under WTO or to Albertans. It is the service that is provided. It is that it is an insured service and that it is funded by the public system. That is why there is no threat under trade obligations. Interestingly enough, although there have been some 40-odd private surgical clinics in this province for years, set up some time ago, there has never been a challenge by the Americans to the NAFTA obligations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Health Services for Immigrants

MR. DICKSON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Each year 7,000 new immigrants move to the city of Calgary, but they're not likely to get access to our public health care system in a timely way if they can't speak English. An impressive coalition of health care providers, community agencies, ethnocultural groups in Calgary have now produced their final report on what's needed to improve access to health care services in the city of Calgary, and I tabled the report an hour ago. My question this afternoon is to the hon.

Premier. Why is it that access to health care by new Canadians is not even identified as an issue in the three-year business plan of the Department of Health and Wellness?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, our health care system in this country is universal, and it is accessible to all people who hold a health care card in Alberta. It's an Alberta health care card. I commend the organizations who are working with new Canadians to advise them as to how they access the health care system and to assist them in dealing with their difficulty with the English language, but again, I remind the hon. member that the Canada Health Act itself speaks to the fundamental principles of universality, accessibility, and comprehensiveness.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, why is it that access to health care by new Canadians in the city of Calgary has not been identified as an issue in the Calgary regional health authority three-year plan, in the People First 1999-2002 plan, in the highlights of health services delivery, or in that transition business plan? Why would that be?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to the business plan for the Department of Health and Wellness I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. JONSON: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I think it is well acknowledged that the government of Alberta has a more thorough business planning and reporting process on what the initiatives are in the health care system and other departments as compared to any other province. Nevertheless, in the Calgary health care system there is provision, particularly with respect to the acute care side of health care, for translation services, for supports when needed. I'm not saying, however, that they could not be improved, that they could not be expanded further.

The other thing of course, Mr. Speaker, is that we do have an education system in Calgary which recognizes the multicultural nature of the city and provides information, provides advice and knowledge to people on the operation of government generally but on the health care system in particular. Further to that, I think that in all locations, be it Toronto, Calgary, Edmonton, or a rural part of Alberta, you do have people who can speak the language of origin, and they are usually the first people that are looked to for a linkup with the health care system or the education system.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, my final question. Since I'm going to respectfully suggest that neither the Premier nor the health minister understands the urgency of this – and I go to the Minister of Health and Wellness specifically – how much longer are these Calgarians going to have to be denied timely access to public health care? When can we expect appropriate, targeted action?

MR. JONSON: If I might take the question, Mr. Premier.

First of all, these individuals are not being denied timely health care in Calgary. We fully appreciate the difficulty, the challenge perhaps to understanding the details of the health care system and whom to go to and when and so forth. We acknowledge that that can be worked on and improved, Mr. Speaker, but new Calgarians who are new Canadians are being cared for in Calgary.

3:00

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm advised by one of my colleagues in government who is closely associated with this project that indeed it is offered at the Peter Lougheed hospital in Calgary. It raises multicultural awareness to eliminate the language and cultural barriers that new Canadians face when accessing our health care system.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to point out that funding for this program was provided by the Human Rights Commission and the multicultural education fund advisory committee, and I would like to thank the hon. Minister of Community Development for expressing his concern and having his department deal with this situation in a very, very human way.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now we'll call upon the first of seven members today to participate.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Kevin Reid

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize Edson athlete Kevin Reid, a snowshoer who recently competed in the Canadian Special Olympics Winter Games in Ottawa. Kevin began snowshoeing three years ago and has been coached by an Edson and area Special Olympics club volunteer, Marlene Miller. His first competition was in Calgary last year at the Alberta Special Olympics Winter Games. As a member of Team Alberta, Kevin very successfully competed with approximately 100 athletes. He won gold in the 800-metre event and silver in the four by 100-metre relay and bronze in the 400-metre event. I would like all members of the Assembly to join me today in extending our congratulations and best wishes to this West Yellowhead Special Olympian, Kevin Reid.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Opponents of Private Hospitals

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize the thousands of individuals that this government has to date ignored, those who have written, e-mailed, phoned, attended forums, and signed petitions to tell this government not to proceed with its plan to allow private, for-profit hospitals. These citizens have spent considerable time and energy researching the government's proposal and have come to the conclusion that public health care must be protected from this government. These people are not part of any special-interest groups but are individual Albertans who cross political party lines to protect our public health care system.

As MLAs we have all taken an oath to represent to the best of our abilities the wishes of our constituents. It is not only this government's responsibility but also each MLA's responsibility to listen and care about what their constituents are saying. It's now time for this government to respect the wishes of Albertans to maintain and protect our health care system. We should thank all those Albertans who are fighting for our public health care system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

13th Alberta Winter Games

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm privileged to rise today to bring recognition to the 3,500 Albertans who came forward to share their time, energy, and ideas to make the 13th Alberta Winter Games another Alberta success story. The games, which were held in Strathcona county in February, saw an entire community unite in the spirit of volunteerism and help co-ordinate, plan, and implement the games from start to finish. Each volunteer played an important role in offering young, developing Alberta athletes an experience of a lifetime. From preparing meals to chaperoning athletes, each volunteer was an integral part in making the Alberta Winter Games a reality.

Volunteers are the backbone of such events as these, and I offer my compliments to the people of Strathcona county for a strong volunteer spirit. You have set a standard for other communities to follow. In recognition of their contribution to the 2000 Alberta Winter Games, I invite all members of the Assembly to join me in acknowledging the volunteers that helped make this event a success.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Ukrainian Bilingual Program

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At city hall today I joined a number of Members of the Legislative Assembly in helping to celebrate the Ukrainian bilingual program's 25th anniversary. This is a remarkable program in several aspects, and after a quarter of a century it is very appropriate for us to celebrate its success and to reflect on the unique characteristics of the program.

To appreciate the success of this program, we need to look no further than to the over 4,000 graduates, many of whom have taken on leadership roles in virtually every walk of life. What is particularly remarkable about the Ukrainian bilingual program is the integration of language skills training into the broader context of culture. In doing so, the richness of language and the richness of culture are fused into an integral view of life. With this enriched experience early in life it is no wonder that so many graduates have gone on to lives of success and fulfillment. Today over 1,000 children follow in the footsteps of these graduates.

Congratulations to all those involved, and may the Ukrainian bilingual program continue to grow and enrich the lives of our children and our province. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Sherran Dermott

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to recognize a member of the Wetaskiwin-Camrose constituency, Ms Sherran Dermott of Ohaton. Ms Dermott was presented with a national rescue award at the annual lifesaving investiture ceremony by Her Honour Lois Hole, the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, on Monday of this week.

Sherran acted with selfless heroism when she saved an eight-year-old boy from drowning in a swimming pool filled with melted snow. She crawled through a hole in the fence surrounding the pool and jumped in without consideration for her own safety. Young Stewart Kerr was very lucky someone like Sherran was close at hand, or the situation might have had a tragic end.

For Sherran Dermott's selfless and heroic deed I would like to honour her today. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Roy Hassan Jamha

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the many tireless contributions of a great Albertan, the late Roy Hassan Jamha. Roy was born on April 15, 1923, and passed away on February 20, 2000, at the age of 76. Roy was a warm and compassionate person working for the betterment of the poor and disadvantaged until the day he died. He was a major force in the CCF, the New Democratic Party, and Alberta's labour movement. He was a

New Democrat candidate in provincial and federal elections.

Roy's personal integrity, his dedication to his fellow human beings, his commitment to social change grounded in the values of social justice and fairness, and his practical idealism earned him deep respect among Albertans. Mr. Speaker, I wish to salute Roy's life and work, his many contributions to Alberta and Canada, and wish to convey on behalf of everyone in this House our condolences and sympathies to Roy's wife, Alice, and to his son and daughter-in-law, Douglas and Bonnie.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

St. David's Day

MRS. LAING: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today, March 1, is St. David's Day. St. David is the patron saint of Wales. People of Welsh ancestry around the world celebrate this special day. The Welsh people have a great gift in the field of music. Several special instruments come from the Welsh tradition, including the lyre, the harp, and a form of the bagpipes. Wales is noted for the beautiful music of their world-famous choirs.

St. David, or Dewi Sant, as he is known in the Welsh language, was a Celtic monk, abbot, and bishop who lived in the sixth century. He was the archbishop of Wales and one of the early saints who helped spread Christianity among the pagan Celtic tribes of western Britain. There are many stories regarding St. David's life. It's said that he once raised a youth from the dead. It's claimed that he lived for over a hundred years and died around 589 AD. His last words to his followers included: be joyful and keep your faith and your creed; do the little things that you've seen me do and have heard about. "Do the little things" is now a well-known and treasured phrase in Wales and has proven to be an inspiration to many.

I ask the Assembly to join me today in wishing the hon. Minister of Government Services and Mrs. Grace Ballard and all other Albertans of Welsh ancestry a very special St. David's Day.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on a point of order.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

MR. DICKSON: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd cite as my authority Standing Order 23(1). I've always understood in the time that I've been a member of the Assembly that it's been a clear practice that when somebody stands up to say something that's not true or accurate and has been corrected, then they don't persist in republishing the matter that's inaccurate. That's certainly been my experience.

Now, what I refer to here is that in the exchange of the first set of questions with the Premier, he persisted in suggesting that the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act prevents him from sharing the information that was blanked out on the document. He talked about it on February 23. On February 24 he said: we're protecting the anonymity of focus group participants. He said it again on February 28.

Most recently, on February 22, there was some material that was brought to his attention to show that in fact the only three exceptions claimed are sections 21, 23, 26. Sections 23 and 26 are discretionary exceptions, "advice from officials" and "privileged information," and were used some 56 times. The only mandatory exception was section 21(1), used only three times. So out of all of the more than 50 blanked-out pages, they were discretionary exceptions, which meant that the minister or the head of the public body is perfectly able to share that information. His hands are not tied, as the Premier indicates.

I know that the Premier takes pride in his flagship bill. I know he would want to not persist in republishing something that is just plain wrong, so I wanted to raise that as gently as I could, Mr. Speaker, and ensure that this inaccuracy is not further republished.

Thanks very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be very brief. There is no point of order. The simple point the Premier is trying to make when he refers to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act is that this government has complied with the provisions of the act, whether the government has exercised its discretion in disclosing information or not. We are bound by the terms of the act. We have acted in accordance with the terms of the act, and what the Premier is saying is entirely accurate. Therefore, there is no point of order.

In any event, this is a question of interpretation with respect to how the act applies to certain provisions. The Premier's perspective is consistent with this government's, and that is that we have complied with the provisions of the act.

THE SPEAKER: Well, this important debate on what the freedom of information act is all about is really quite timely at this point in the afternoon.

The Blues say the following. This is the response from the leader of the government.

Mr. Speaker, all the information that was asked for and all the information that was released was in accordance completely with the rules of the freedom of information legislation. Mr. Speaker, there is a process. If they're not satisfied with what they receive, there is a course of appeal. I would remind the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition that they know how to use FLIP legislation. They use it more than anyone else.

I've listened very attentively, and it seems to me that in essence it was a point of clarification. Much of this had to do with the discretionary versus the mandatory association with respect to it. I'll view this as another one of those many, many points of clarification that we seem to have.

Heaven forbid that one day there might even be an introduction of a piece of legislation in this House so that we'll actually have a reason for question period. We'll have something to talk about.

Bill 204
Agricultural and Recreational Land
Ownership Amendment Act, 2000

[Debate adjourned February 29: Mr. Fischer speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We find ourselves at an interesting point in our history. On one hand, technology is showing us the limited possibilities there are in the agriculture industry, and on the other, corporate amalgamation and global economics are a harsh reality of this new century. So we're at a crossroads where a direction and a plan for the agriculture industry must be chosen, and that direction and plan must include a competitive opportunity in the world marketplace. Until some of this puzzle is solved, I would hesitate to limit expansion and take away one of the main tools used for the survival of both big and small producers. I look forward to the wisdom of the ag summit in June.

I wish to compliment the Member for Little Bow for bringing Bill 204 forward, because it's a serious issue for every member in this House and for all Albertans.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. LANGEVIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to talk about an issue that's important to Alberta's agricultural community. I would like to commend the Member for Little Bow for making many of the members of this House aware of the importance of this issue to Alberta farmers. I would also like to commend the sponsoring member for the intent of the bill: to help the small, independent farming operation in this province.

The objective is to preserve the family farm in Alberta, something I think we would all like to see. In the past few decades we have seen a decline across Canada in the number of family farm operations. The global economy and unpredictable weather conditions have taken their toll on the viability of independent family farms in this province. Adding to the condition, large corporate enterprise and communal farm operations have been able to outcompete the family farm by employing economies of scale in their own operation.

While in the global economy production efficiencies bred by competition are desirable, in rural Alberta this trend can lead to depopulation. What often results is a migration from rural areas to urban centres. This adds pressure to roads and infrastructure within the urban centres. In addition, Mr. Speaker, agricultural land is monopolized by a few multinationals and corporate farming enterprises to the exclusion of all others. Bill 204 attempts to address the issue by preventing this from happening.

The Alberta government recently released its economic development strategy, Get Ready Alberta. The strategy builds on the province's strength and sets bold targets for moving forward in science, research, education, and competing in the global marketplace, making Alberta the best place in the world to live and to work. We need to be ready to respond to trends in the global economy, where virtually anyone can market their products and expertise around the world and move quickly to get the best return for their investment and the dollars involved.

One of our goals is that Alberta internationally be recognized as a good place to invest and do business and that Alberta business compete and succeed in the global marketplace. The Alberta government is continuing to maintain a competitive tax advantage in the province and to promote a positive business climate that attracts investment. This is the reason that Bill 204 raises such an important and timely issue.

Agriculture is a major sector of growth and employment in our economy, and we must maintain this sector as a viable and productive part of the Alberta advantage. We do this by making sure that our production techniques are the best in the world, that our producers are efficient, and that agriculture remains a viable and productive industry in the province. We need to thoroughly address the issue of landownership in this province and to continue the viability and sustainability of the family farm. This issue is ideally suited to the upcoming ag summit, and I'm hopeful that the organizers will make it a priority to ensure that landownership is on the agenda.

I'd like to commend the Member for Little Bow for being bold enough to bring up an issue that can be so easily misunderstood. Our family farms are important here in Alberta, and we need to address the issues surrounding their preservation. A healthy agriculture industry means a healthy province. In addition, Alberta's farm industry is important to the whole country. Farm production is Alberta's largest renewable resource-based industry.

In 1998, the primary sector generated $6.4 billion in farm cash receipts. This represents 21.7 percent of Canada's primary agricultural output. Alberta averaged 20 percent of Canada's primary output between 1989 and 1993. Secondary agricultural processing, including the food and beverage processing industry, is Alberta's largest manufacturing sector. Shipments set a new record for output in 1998 at $7.5 billion in sales. Alberta now accounts for over 12 percent of Canadian food and beverage shipments, up from the 10 percent in the previous period of '89 to '93. As outlined in the 2000 budget, agrifood business offers significant potential for expansion ahead. This industry could grow to $20 billion in value-added shipments and to $10 billion in farm cash receipts by the year 2010.

One of the expressed goals of the ministry of agriculture is the "increased diversity of commodities, products and services." I imagine that one way of achieving this goal is to create an environment where the small farms, the family farm operators can continue to survive and thrive in this province. That is the intention of Bill 204, to help level the playing field for small farm operators. Consolidation of landholdings in the hands of fewer farm operators diminishes the diversity of Alberta's agricultural production.

Limiting landownership to 15 percent of any municipality would prevent huge regional monopolies. The idea of having massive foreign ownership of our agricultural production is a big concern to myself and to my constituents. We live in an era of globalism, and as such we relinquish some of our sovereignty at the whims of the global market. As we develop policies that set our course in the future, globalism is an issue that we must be mindful of. We have to be there to capitalize on the opportunity it brings as well as defend against the threats to our rich farm traditions.

As others have mentioned in this House, we are at a unique point in our history in this province. The most recent budget set the stage for unprecedented growth and prosperity in this province. The people of Alberta are now seeing a tremendous reward that comes from sound fiscal policies and good government. Our debt is being paid off, and our tax burden is being reduced. We have a growing high-tech industry, the oil sands development is giving a boost to every aspect of our economy, and we're leading the provinces in overall employment. Our agriculture industry is not faring nearly as well as other key industries. There are a number of reasons why some of our farmers are struggling, perhaps too many to discuss in this debate.

Mr. Speaker, the upcoming agriculture summit should prove to be a great forum to discuss the issue of landownership in the province of Alberta. I'm hopeful that we can get some good discussion going about the issue and try to build some consensus. At the very least, consolidation of landownership should be recognized as a major challenge facing the farming industry in this province, especially the family farm.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Assembly for the opportunity to rise today and speak to Bill 204, sponsored by the Member for Little Bow. It's no secret to anyone in the Legislature today that Alberta's rural communities are in crisis. Of course there are a variety of reasons: one of these reasons was identified by the minister this week as he headed to Ottawa; we've seen a decline in the family farm; we've seen a decline in their commodity prices; and a number of other reasons.

The cards are stacked today against the Alberta farmer. The product of their work, the quantities we export have been cheapened by government policies in Europe. Large multinational corporations are creating a vertically integrated system of agricultural production, that squeezes out the independent farmers. Corporate farms also use competitive advantages to acquire land and slowly form regional monopolies that, again, squeeze out the family farm. If anyone wants to take a look at this, just look in various states in the U.S.

Alberta farmers are struggling against transportation issues and a bureaucratic federal government that seems unwilling to change. Add to this the challenge of struggling against the whims of Mother Nature and the world's economic climate, and you get a pretty clear picture of the tremendous challenge facing Alberta farmers today.

Mr. Speaker, I realize we can't do a great deal about what other countries are doing or what Mother Nature does. However, we do have control over the laws regarding the land, and Bill 204 attempts to address some of these concerns. What is the cost of inaction? What will happen should this government decide to not do anything to help create an environment where the much-talked-about Alberta advantage is available to farmers in the farming community?

Thankfully, Mr. Speaker, our government is listening. Unlike other governments, we aren't asking the farmers to chase to Ottawa themselves to ask for support. We have acted, as identified by the minister being down there today. Members like the hon. Member for Little Bow are doing a good job of ensuring that this government remembers those who have helped build this province. This Member for Little Bow also helps remind the members of the Assembly of the importance of farming and family farms. It's taken a lot of courage for this member to come forward with this proposal and withstand the barrage of criticism and personal attacks that have been flung his way.

I have constituents that are supportive of the hon. member's bill, and as such I have an obligation to speak to their concerns. This is not an easy issue to address. It's not an easy issue to talk about. It's not an easy issue to go public with, but it is a concern to many farmers, especially in this day and age. I really appreciate the hon. member's attempt to bring his concerns, his constituents' concerns to the floor of this Assembly.

What I have learned from some of my constituents is that they have great concerns with multinationals buying up land and property in my community and in my constituency. Landownership is a very, very important part of farming. That being said, limiting landownership may not be the best solution at this time, but it is something that we need to talk about. It is one of the problems facing the independent farmer in this province, although right now the independent farmer has many, many problems.

I think we need to take a good, long, hard look at this problem and try to flesh out a more comprehensive approach to solving the problems in rural communities. The trend today, Mr. Speaker, toward integrated farming is one that threatens our existing agricultural industry. Integrated American companies as well as European companies come to Alberta and have the ability to buy tracts of land and limitless cattle. When corporations come to this province and set up shop, it's very hard to say what the end result will be. One result that is of great concern to some of my constituents is that these corporations tend to control price. When a million dollar outfit comes in with all the buying power they have, someone is going to lose. As agricultural resources and the market for agricultural products are gradually owned and operated by corporations, the small independent slowly loses his ability to determine his own destiny. He is now at the mercy of the larger corporation.

3:30

This issue, Mr. Speaker, is very complex. It's something that many countries around the world have struggled with and are struggling with. We need to take a good look at some of the things done in the U.S. and Europe and see if they apply to our situation in Alberta. We need to have an open mind. We need to explore all options. Before we jump in and limit landownership, we have to study this problem, talk to those who have seen what has happened firsthand, and look for solutions.

By establishing a policy that addresses the issue of land use, we would be one step closer to addressing the issues that face the agricultural industry as a whole. It's clear that this issue and others facing the agriculture community must be explored. It's absolutely essential that we put our best minds together and try to come up with a comprehensive plan to help address the needs of rural Alberta before it's too late.

Mr. Speaker, the coming agriculture summit is an ideal place to explore options for a comprehensive land-use policy, if needed, in this province. It would be a great medium for exchanging information and collecting information from all the stakeholders in the agriculture community. We could see in what part of the province this is a problem. I strongly believe this issue should be on the agenda of the agriculture summit. I believe that those are the people in the know, the people in the business, and the ones that should be talking about it. The more people we get involved in this discussion, the better the outcome. That's why I'm glad that I've had the opportunity to speak on behalf of some of my constituents and bring this issue before the House today. Most of my constituents who have phoned and identified that this is a problem and asked me to speak up regarding the hon. member's bill have been hog producers.

I think we need to have the debate, and I think industry has got to be part of the debate. In the end we might see that we can make a difference with some co-operation and some collaboration among stakeholders, that being the farm community.

I believe that our province's farmland may be one of our most precious resources in years to come. That's why it's so very, very important that we be good stewards of the land to ensure that young Albertans, young farmers will have the opportunity to benefit from this great resource. If we invest time and effort into trying to formulate a policy that is fair, that is equitable, and that has involved consultation with key stakeholders, our farmland could be protected for future generations, and as a result we will enjoy a huge return on that investment.

The world's population is growing every day. The day will come when farmland is the most valuable commodity this province has to offer. This being said, that is so very, very true in some countries around the world. Farmland is indeed at a premium, and very few anymore can farm. We want to ensure that farmland stays a valuable commodity. This province has to ensure that.

Our farmland needs to be here long after the conventional oil has been tapped and a number of other resources. The best way for us to capitalize on this, to ensure that the agriculture industry is strong and diverse, that the independent farmer is still part of the mix – we must have a discussion regarding land. We must ensure that the independent farm operation can remain viable in the future. The independent farm operation, farming families, and farm communities basically make up a large, large part of rural Alberta.

The agriculture industry is changing. New technologies and new challenges are changing the way we do things. New technology enables us to do more with less. Vertical integrations in the industry have found new efficiencies and are revolutionizing the food production industry. We find ourselves at an interesting point in our history on many fronts. On the one hand, technology is showing us the limitless possibilities that can be done and can be seen and can be considered in the agriculture industry. On the other hand, the very heart of agriculture, the land, could be up for grabs and for stakes. It's a huge reality that must be talked about as we enter this new century. I have no idea, Mr. Speaker and hon. members, what would be the outcome of these talks, but I think it's time we have them.

So we're at a point where we can make a stand and choose the direction that the agriculture industry in the province will take. I strongly believe we should make good on this opportunity because it well could affect everyone in this province for a long time to come.

I stand behind the hon. member but suggest that the principles involved in his bill go to the agriculture summit, where the agricultural community can discuss and debate the merits accordingly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to address Bill 204, the Agricultural and Recreational Land Ownership Amendment Act, in second reading. As an MLA for a rural community I would like to thank the hon. Member for Little Bow for bringing forward an interesting concept to try and address a very important issue today for all rural members, indeed for all members of this Assembly, as well as for our agricultural community and our rural communities' viability in general.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the agricultural communities of our province and of Canada are at a crossroads. Every day farmers, particularly grain farmers, face many real and severe problems, problems stemming from fluctuating commodity prices, inclement weather, high input costs, and regular commodity transportation. It's not easy to remain on a farm these days. With our cities booming as a result of unprecedented economic growth and new and exciting job opportunities for many Albertans, it is very tempting for many young people in smaller communities to leave their rural roots and uncertain futures behind them for new lives in the city. I have seen it happen in my constituency too many times. Although I applaud and encourage my friends to take advantage of the many opportunities that await them in the city, it is always sad to see families that have been your neighbours for generations leave.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Many of the farmers that have chosen to stay have had to take drastic steps to continue to earn a living. Many have sold off their assets, including their land and their equipment, just to stay afloat. Others have had to diversify their farm operations to include ranching or other agriculture-related opportunities such as trucking, greenhouse operations, llama, elk, and buffalo ranching. Some others still go into country vacations and bed-and-breakfasts or tourism initiatives. Still, entire farm families have had to take second jobs in nearby towns and cities or contract out their services to other farmers in the area. Thankfully, this diversification has helped some, but it has hurt others as well. Many farmers have gone deeper into debt in an effort to get out of the red.

Mr. Speaker, people commonly refer to this phenomenon that rural communities are experiencing as the farm crisis. However, I'm not sure if that statement is entirely accurate, because one out of every three jobs in Alberta today is dependent on the agriculture sector. From the farmer in the field to the person working in the supermarket in downtown Calgary, Red Deer, or Edmonton, the so-called farm crisis affects everyone.

However, I'm not sure if the full extent of the problem is really appreciated by Canadians as a whole. While more than 1 million Canadians derive their living from fertile land, we have yet to be able to engage in a full-scale debate on the value of the food production in our province and the value of rural communities and farmers as they support their local service community.

So, Mr. Speaker, I commend the hon. Member for Little Bow for raising this important issue. Bill 204 may be one way to solve the current problems farmers in Alberta face. The debate may involve the principles of Bill 204, but it may and should extend itself into something more positive, maybe right-to-farm legislation.

As a Conservative and, more importantly, as an Albertan I recognize the right that each and every Alberta resident has to own property. Mr. Speaker, the right to own property and to make a living at that property is a fundamental belief and guiding principle of our government. Any legislation that seeks to limit the right of an Albertan to own his or her own property might send the wrong message not only to entrepreneurs who see Alberta as a prime location to set up a business but to any Albertan who sees our government as a defender of the rights of individuals and property.

Limiting the ownership of land also poses other problems. As I mentioned earlier, in our current agricultural economic climate the only way to survive as a farmer is to increase the size of your operation. If we close off the only avenue farmers have to build a viable operation, what does that say about our government's commitment to farmers? I want to point out that our government has been a leader in our country for farmer-friendly policies for some time now. Programs like the farm income disaster program and the crop insurance program administered by the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation have supplemented the incomes of farmers suffering disastrous income declines as a result of low commodity prices or weather-related crop damage. But any farmer will tell you – and they have told me in my constituency – that the last thing he or she wants to do is earn their living through annual government handouts. Moreover these policies, while necessary, cannot begin to solve the real farming problem in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, farmers and ranchers as primary producers are price takers, not price makers. Farmers in my constituency continually raise the issue of commodity prices as the number one reason why they're having problems making ends meet. Many of them continually single out the Canadian Wheat Board as a major hindrance to their well-being. This out-of-date monopoly has put tremendous pressure on grain farmers of Alberta, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba by forcing them to sell at a price the Wheat Board sets. Oddly, while farmers in Ontario and Quebec are able to operate their own provincial marketing boards or don't participate in one at all, Ottawa maintains strict control over the marketing of wheat in western Canada. The farmers have said to me: give me the opportunity to market my product at a fair price, and things will get better; I will get out of your way.

Farmers also face problems dealing with the increased costs of running a farm. Every year new and better fertilizers, seed, fuel, feed for animals, parts and upkeep for machinery, and maintenance for buildings have to be covered by decreasing profits from the sale of goods. It is important to recognize, Mr. Speaker, that farmers really know how difficult it is to keep their input costs from rising.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure all the farmers in Alberta that their provincial government is very concerned about the real problems and the farm prices, and we're acting on their concerns. This spring our government is holding Ag Summit 2000. Ag summit is a broad-based consultation of all participants in the agriculture sector to address industry concerns and find ways to strengthen our agriculture sector. Many MLAs will be holding consultations and meetings in their constituencies and will be reporting their findings to an ag summit wrap-up in June. I have already solicited opinions from the many farmers in my constituency, and I certainly invite additional input from my constituents. Our government will also continue to lobby for the reduction and the elimination of trade barriers that hurt Alberta farmers; in other words, make the market available to them at lower costs.

As we enter the new millennium and near the centennial of our great province, it is important to recognize the important role that farming has played in Alberta's development. Farming is part of our history, but it is also a part of our future. I share with my colleague for Little Bow the desire to find a long-term solution for our agriculture industry. We must do it with the co-operation of the farming and ranching communities, and I hope that the farming and ranching community of Livingstone-Macleod will be part of that.

Bill 204 is one way to go, but there are others, and a greater discussion should take place. I hope we can work together on all and any solutions that will benefit Alberta farmers.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 204, the Agricultural and Recreational Land Ownership Amendment Act, sponsored by the Member for Little Bow. This statute actually falls under the responsibility of the ministry that I've been put in charge of in conjunction with the foreign ownership of land regulations.

Mr. Speaker, I'd first of all like to thank our members who have risen in this House to speak to this bill. They have done a tremendous job articulating some of the important issues that are there for rural Albertans. While they may be issues that directly affect rural Albertans, they actually directly affect all Albertans because agriculture and our rural communities are the lifeblood of this province and have been from day one.

The issue of landownership is a very important issue for all of us to review as Albertans, and I would like to agree with the Member for Wainwright when he suggested that we need to develop a long-term policy that sets the course for Alberta's agriculture industry for the next 50 to 100 years. The reality today is that the farm operations are getting bigger, and the traditional methods of transportation, distribution, and marketing of agricultural products are slowly fading away. Change is happening.

Bill 204 speaks for many Albertans who are worried that our farmlands are being monopolized, and the bill has served the very good purpose of bringing the dialogue and discussion into this Legislature. I believe it's long overdue.

However, I must say that the objective of the Agricultural and Recreational Land Ownership Act itself is to limit the acquisition of nonurban lands, both cultivated and noncultivated, by foreigners and foreign entities. I believe that the objective of Bill 204 appears to limit the taking, acquisition, or holding of cultivated land by both foreigners and Canadian citizens. So I think we have a bit of a conflict between the objectives of the two acts: one, the original act, and the other, the amendment of the act. Once we get into the area of foreign ownership, we have other statutes that must be brought into the arena of dialogue before we can move forward.

I agree with the hon. members who have spoken before me, Mr. Speaker. I think that dialogue must take place, and there's a tremendous opportunity with the upcoming agriculture summit to draw the players together and sit down and talk about this issue, talk about it as Albertans. Where do we want to go? What do we want to see happen with our very precious lands? How is it going to fit into the agriculture of the future? Keeping in mind that this is the lifeblood of our province, our agricultural community, I would ask the organizers of that summit to seriously look at making that dialogue and discussion a part of that summit process so that we can hear from the grass roots, so we can hear from the people of Alberta to find out what they truly believe is important for the future in agriculture.

Because of some of the concerns I've raised, because of the dialogue that I think is necessary, and because I believe there has to be more work done on the bill, Mr. Speaker, I would like to put forward an amendment to the bill. I gather the amendment is being circulated.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Let's just take a moment.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe the amendment has been circulated to all hon. members, but I will read it into the record. I'd like to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 204, Agricultural and Recreational Land Ownership Amendment Act, 2000, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 204, Agricultural and Recreational Land Ownership Amendment Act, 2000, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

3:50

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: This is what's known as a hoist amendment, and it'll be called amendment A1.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: On the amendment only, because I had spoken at second reading on the bill. I'd just like to say, Mr. Speaker, how disappointed I am to see this amendment brought in at this time. We heard all of these excellent speeches that have been spoken, at least on the face of it, with great passion and great conviction, and dollars to doughnuts when it comes time to vote, we're going to see each one of those speakers line up to support this.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment should be defeated. I think we should deal with this bill on its merits. I would expect that all of those people in rural Alberta that we've been hearing from about those concerns and those issues would want to see matters addressed and dealt with squarely in this Chamber. This is supposed to be a place for determination and decisions, not a place for waffling, indecision, and buck-passing. When I see this kind of amendment, that's exactly what it is.

I didn't share the view, for example, of the Member for Lacombe-Stettler, but I respected the conviction in her speech. When I heard the comments of the mover of the amendment, up to the point she moved it, I thought she obviously believes very strongly about what she says, but the reason proffered for the amendment is shamelessly transparent, Mr. Speaker. There's no good reason to do it other than political reasons that we can speculate about, but my suggestion to all members is that we defeat this and get on with the debate.

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, on the amendment.

MRS. GORDON: On the amendment. I don't know, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Do you know what assumption does? I stood up in this Assembly talking on behalf of my constituents, many of whom are hog producers that are very, very concerned about landownership. However, they are the people in the know. They are the experts. They are the farming community. I think it is a wonderful, wonderful idea that we hoist this bill so that the Agriculture Summit 2000 with all of the stakeholders present can deal with this issue. They are the experts. They are the experts. I don't like it when someone assumes what my intentions are, because my intentions were good.

Those people that have talked to me want to have the debate take place. I don't think this is the best arena. The best arena is where the people in the know will be, and that's at the agriculture summit this year, the new millennium, where a number of issues will be discussed, one being exactly what happened with the federal government this week, to bypass Alberta but give dollars to Saskatchewan and Manitoba. This is one more thing that the farming community wants to talk about. They don't want me to talk about it without their input. I want their input looked at and talked about at the agriculture summit.

I support this amendment.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod on the amendment.

MR. COUTTS: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to speak to the amendment. We're getting a sense from the opposition that this is a delay for some obvious reasons. It's too bad that we didn't hear too much on this bill coming from the Official Opposition other than one speaker. A number of speakers from this side of the House have stood up for their rural communities and pointed out the problems that we do have in the farming industry today. Not only did they show their support for the hon. member and his concern for what's happening with land use today; they also gave a number of instances of solutions, solutions that came only from this side of the House and absolutely no solutions from the other side of the House.

Now, some of these solutions should be discussed, definitely discussed, at the agriculture summit – this hoist would allow that type of conversation to happen – by the industry players that are going to be at the agriculture summit. I'm hoping that those industry players take a look at the Hansard and take a look at some of the solutions and at some of the problems that were pointed out by members from our side of the House, members that are really, really concerned about rural Alberta, about the viability of our small communities in rural Alberta, and take a look at the people that stood up in the debate on this Bill 204 and made those kinds of suggestions happen. They didn't happen from the opposition's side. They only happened from the government's side.

So, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of the Assembly, particularly the Conservative members, to stand up for this bill and to stand up for rural Alberta and to stand up for farmers and the agricultural industry that has some difficulties but is so viable in this province today. Stand up for farmers.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: I'll be pleased to stand up for farmers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several remarks to make with respect to the hoist motion this afternoon, and I will speak with some authority, having had a rural upbringing and being the daughter of a farmer. The problem this government finds itself in is that it has not got the political courage to confront the issues facing farmers and our rural communities today. I would ask you: how many agriculture summits, consultations, meetings has this government conducted in its term of office? How many times have we gone around this province?

Do you know what I would say this afternoon, Mr. Speaker? Farmers are sick and tired of telling their elected representatives about their problems. They want the leadership in their government to take on the issues that they are facing every day, whether they're facing it in the fields, in the bank manager's office, or at their kitchen table when they see their operations going down the drain.

The reality is that we don't have the leadership in this House, in this government to do it, and that is exhibited by the fact that we're going to hold another summit on the issue and that we're going to hoist a bill. I may not have agreed with its intent or the arguments made to support it, but at least it brought it to the floor of the Legislature to debate, and that is not something we've seen from the cabinet of this government. This is a bill that was sponsored by a private member.

The reality is that that issue about food production becoming corporately controlled or the majority of our rural land being held by corporations is not going to go away and it's not going to get smaller while we sit around a summit table. That issue has been growing for years, and regrettably we have not seen the initiative, the courage, the leadership in this province to take it on.

Now, there are all kinds of implications. We see monopolies, and it's not just monopolies in hog producing. Fertilizer, the additive companies, the companies that have an interest in modification and genetic manipulation – it is huge, and every day that we sit here or we sit in a summit somewhere else those companies have their act together and are strategizing about how they might further their market share in our agricultural communities.

Mr. Speaker, I don't agree with the hoist motion. I may not have agreed with the primary arguments made for the bill, and quite frankly I believe the type of framework we should have been looking at in this province for our rural communities needed to be much, much broader than what this bill proposed. But that would have taken government initiative, and this government has not had the ability, for whatever reason, to do that.

Now, this is the challenge that I put before the members of this Assembly. We have to answer the question: what do we value more? The future of our rural communities or our political future? It is the root of that question that's causing the immobility, if you will, the paralysis within this Legislature. We're too concerned about what? It doesn't matter what your partisan position is. This can apply to any member regardless of their political affiliation. If you value your political affiliation more than you value the strength and spirit of our rural communities or our urban communities, we will find ourselves paralyzed to challenge it.

Now, we had a very lively discussion last night about WTO, NAFTA, and all the trade agreements. This government has been going to those negotiations along with the federal government, and agriculture is impacted by those agreements along with all of the big service sectors. Health care is impacted. Agriculture is impacted. Telecommunications is impacted. Resources is impacted. We don't see information being shared by this government on those negotiations and the commitments being made at those tables. There are proposals and submissions being prepared now by staff in intergovernmental affairs in an advisory capacity to the negotiations that are going to commence in September. We have not had a discussion about that in this Assembly.

To hoist a bill, in my opinion – I mean, you should call it a hot potato motion, because really what it is is just a mechanism to try and toss it somewhere else. Toss it out to the back. The reality is that we need to talk in this province and in this Legislature about the health implications of food production and landownership. That's why I'm speaking against the hoist. We need to speak about the health implications of food production becoming corporately controlled and landownership predominately being corporately owned. We need to talk about the municipal implications and the regulatory implications. We need to talk about community impacts and the impacts to the schools, businesses, and hospitals in those communities, the environmental impacts and, perhaps least of all, Mr. Speaker, the electoral and population impacts when you see rural communities dying because family-based or single-operator-based farms cannot compete.

So I oppose the motion, and I look forward to the day when there will be some political leadership in this province to actually bring forward a comprehensive plan for the future of our rural communities in Alberta.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the sponsor of the bill I have a couple of comments that I would like to make. The first is to thank those that stood up and spoke on behalf of their constituents in support of the bill.

The second thing that I would like to make reference to in speaking to the hoist motion is that as the sponsor I do endorse and support the whole idea of this discussion taking place in a forum that's more comfortable to the constituents who have the most interest, a vested interest, the most investment and who would feel far more comfortable making their views known in a surrounding that's more amenable to those kinds of discussions rather than here in a political forum, where there always seem to be reasons why you can't do something.

Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate the comments that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview made. I do. I understand her background, and I, too, am in awe that people aren't more concerned about the future of small communities. I would like to remind her that the preface of the bill when I started wasn't about the immediate farm crisis, the immediate cash flow. I agree that that is an issue, but I was looking at the long-term solution. I think people have to be comfortable in a bigger forum, those that are involved, to be able to freely speak their comments, make their views known without having fears of repercussions from the media. Some of the negative comments that came back to me during interviews reflected basically the very same issue that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo brought up, and I don't want this discussion to focus strictly around the one-issue item that Calgary-Buffalo referred to.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Minister of Government Services for making the suggestion that this be referred to the ag summit so that there's a bigger discussion undertaken by all parties involved. I would really like to take this opportunity to encourage every one of those constituents throughout Alberta, whether they have indicated to us that they're in support or not, to go to the ag summit if this is where it's going, make their views known. It can be a very fruitful debate, I'm sure.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

MR. JACQUES: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the amendment. I noticed that you gave great latitude to some of the members who were speaking to the amendment, and I was not going to until I heard the remarks from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I'm very concerned with regard to the comments that were made regarding the amendment on the basis – first of all, she made kind of a very distinct difference between the, quote, private members within this Legislature and, quote, the government and somehow was trying to make a connection between the reasoned amendment and the government action.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to note that she listed a long list of issues which should be debated concerning the whole issue around agriculture and our rural communities and said on the one hand that she was not prepared to support the amendment but on the other hand was calling for action to deal with some of the very litany of issues that she identified. Then she said that the summit in some way was not a forum for particularly the agricultural community to discuss those issues that she has identified pursuant to and including the very issue that the member brought up with regard to Bill 204. I mean, there's a complete contradiction in terms of the rationale that was put forward: on the one hand to say that an agricultural summit is not a place to deal with it and on the other hand to support a conclusion on her behalf that the bill should be defeated to begin with. It's a roundabout way. It would be interesting to see those notes in a rural community and the interpretation that might be applied to them.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I just want to offer my support to this excellent reasoned amendment. Thank you.

MR. PASZKOWSKI: Mr. Speaker, I too want to speak in support of this amendment. I quite frankly am a little shocked that anyone would suggest that solutions can be better developed within this particular building than they can be within the community itself. It seems to me that we as government have been very involved in the consultative process with any industry before we do any constructive changes, and in this particular case denying the agricultural community the opportunity for input, denying the opportunity that's coming forward as far as the development of this summit is concerned I think would be very, very tardy on behalf of our government and irresponsible.

I can reflect back to the year 1992, when there was the last agriculture summit. There was a statement made that this government has had a lot of agriculture summits. The last one was in 1992, and at that time it was evident that the whole structure of agriculture was going to have to change. The agricultural community met and came forward with some very dramatic recommendations, recommendations that had never been heard of before, as to process of agriculture, and indeed ultimately those changes were implemented.

Today in this very year, the year 2000, the Alberta agricultural industry has a growth factor of 4 percent, which in troubled times is a fairly significant number. When we look at our neighbour whose growth factor is something like minus 46 percent and another neighbour whose growth factor this coming year was minus 24 percent, it seems to me that the agricultural industry made some very good decisions back in 1992 that allowed this industry to continue to grow in Alberta in a very organized manner.

We can refer to the decision that was just made – and the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler just made that reference too – a decision that indeed was just made excluding Alberta Agriculture from the disaster program that supposedly is going to be funded by the federal government. There was no consultation. There was no discussion with the agricultural community. It was a decision that was made in a building such as this by elected officials such as this, and it's very, very unfortunate. The ultimate discussion has to go back to the agricultural community, and that's what the amendment is allowing for, and consequently we really want to respect this amendment and what it stands for.

I want to make reference also to the very recent discussions regarding the GMO products. When I was involved with the Canola Council back in the late '70s and early '80s, when indeed the discussion was taking place, there were concerns raised about the industry and the dangers of insecticides and pesticides. At that time, there was a decision made about how we were going to deal with the threats of insecticides and pesticides on our food. Ultimately, the decision was made to work with genetically modified product. In a meeting in Montreal about a month ago there was a decision made that each country can make their own decision regarding GMO products, a wonderful, wonderful trade barrier that we're now going to have to deal with, a trade barrier that's going to affect agriculture in a very negative way for the productive countries that we have, which include Canada, and it's very, very unfortunate.

I think that under the circumstances the agricultural community can make the right decisions. I have the fullest faith in our agricultural community that they will make the right decisions. I strongly believe that the agricultural community should have the right to participate and to make that decision. To deny that opportunity, as is suggested, is not the way that this government operates.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Ready for the question.

I would just remind the hon. minister that it is a private member's public bill, not a government bill.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion carried]

THE CHAIRMAN: I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 202

Marriage Amendment Act, 2000

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any comments, questions, amendments to be offered with regard to this bill? I'll call upon the hon. Member for Red Deer-South. No?

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to have this opportunity to discuss some of the issues related to Bill 202. I was somewhat disappointed that the rules of the House are such that I never had an opportunity to contribute my comments during second reading of this bill. As you well know, because it's a private member's bill there is a limited amount of time available for members to debate a bill, and the time had expired before I had an opportunity to voice my comments. So I'm going to take this opportunity in the committee stage of the bill to discuss, perhaps, some of which should have been brought up in second reading, but I ask the indulgence of the chair in that matter.

Mr. Chairman, I support the principle of this bill. As a matter of fact, it's a matter of record. One only needs to check Hansard to note that I voted in support of this bill at second reading because I do support the principle of this bill. The purpose, as I understand it, is to ensure that we protect the institution of marriage in the province of Alberta and that the institution of marriage, as it is now, continues well into the future to be a union between a man and a woman. To that, I doff my cap to the Member for Red Deer-South because I support him. I believe him to be an honourable member. I support the principle which he is trying to achieve by the introduction of this bill.

That being said, Mr. Chairman, I do now recognize that I see some deficiencies in the bill, because I don't think that this bill will in fact achieve what it is that the member is trying to achieve. The bill will, as I see it – and let me preface my remarks by saying that I am not a lawyer, so some of the legal intricacies, particularly when it gets into the whole issue of constitutional law, are certainly beyond my expertise. But I do see myself to be a somewhat logical individual, so the argument that I would like to bring forward is based probably more on logic than it is on law.

I don't think the bill in its present form can achieve what the member is hoping to achieve. The reason I say that is that when you look at the bill – and I've spent a good deal of time thinking about this bill. The preamble that's added to the Alberta Marriage Act I have absolutely no objection to. I think it does in fact reinforce what the member is trying to accomplish through this bill, but the definition that is included in the act, adding a definition of marriage to the Alberta Marriage Act – the bill reads, in fact, that “‘marriage’ means a marriage between a man and a woman.” Well, to me that's akin to defining “horse” as a horse with four legs. How can you define something using the same word as you're trying to define?

Mr. Chairman, with the greatest respect to the member, I suspect that the reason the member has used this wording in the bill is because he himself recognized the constitutional difficulties that would come about if we in fact tried to define marriage in provincial legislation because, as has already been pointed out by the Minister of Justice, the institution of marriage falls under federal jurisdiction. The Alberta Marriage Act, which we are here to amend today, does not deal with the institution of marriage; it deals with the regulation of marriage. The reference to marriage that is contained repeatedly within the Marriage Act is using the definition that comes from federal legislation. So how can we in the Legislature of Alberta purport to be able to bring something about that is clearly under the jurisdiction of the federal government?

The other concern I have is that the member then goes on in this bill to introduce the notwithstanding clause. The member says that notwithstanding the provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Constitution Act, this bill will operate. Well, again I applaud the member for bringing this forward. I certainly support what it is that he's trying to do, but, again with the greatest respect, my logic would indicate that it doesn't do us any good to pass legislation in this House that is notwithstanding the Charter of Rights. Presumably the member is trying to protect against a decision that might or might not happen at the court level, but to put pre-emptive action in place not knowing what that decision is doesn't make a whole lot of sense to me. If, for example, the federal government were to change their definition of marriage in the federal legislation, this bill would do absolutely nothing to protect the institution of marriage in Alberta because we would be using their changed definition.

Frankly, I don't think this bill accomplishes what it sets out to do. I think the bill is somewhat meaningless, and for that reason I have been giving a lot of thought to whether or not we should support this bill. The fact of the matter is that this is and ends up being very much a feel-good bill. Every one of us can go back to our constituents and say: I voted for a bill that is going to protect the institution of marriage and ensure that marriage is recognized in the province of Alberta as a union between a man and a woman, but the fact of the matter is that it doesn't do that. Logic would indicate that it doesn't do that. It certainly sends a signal that that is the intent of this Legislature, but frankly that has been a stated policy of the government for quite some time. The Premier as much as a year ago indicated that the government would protect the institution of marriage between a man and a woman and would do so if there were any threat to that basic principle, but until we know what the threat is, Mr. Chairman, I think it's impossible for us to deal with it pre-emptively.

So I have a dilemma on my hands. I can go back to my constituents and tell them I supported a bill that purports to do something which I don't believe it actually does, or I can go back to my constituents and say that I voted against a bill that purports to protect the institution of marriage and ensure that it remains something between a man and a woman. That puts me in a very difficult position, because by voting against this bill, in no way does it mean that I do not support the principle of the bill.

In fact, I did vote for the principle of the bill, but I feel it necessary for me to vote against this bill not because I don't support the principle but because I truly don't believe that the bill will accomplish what it sets out to do. I don't think this is the right way to deal with this issue, and for that reason, Mr. Chairman, I am going to find myself voting against the bill at committee stage, not because I don't agree with the bill but because I don't believe the bill will accomplish what the member wants to accomplish.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Good afternoon. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise this afternoon and speak to Bill 202 at committee. I think the intentions of the hon. member that sponsored the bill are respectful and supportable. It's an interesting proposal, if you will, for us in this Assembly to create some type of legislative framework around how marriages might be defined or applied in Alberta, and preparing for the debate on this bill got me to thinking about a whole variety of different ways that marriages are defined not only in Canada but in all the different cultures that are now part of our Canadian culture.

The institution of marriage can be enacted in a variety of different ways. In some cultures it's not arranged by the two parties that are to be married. It's arranged by elders or by parents. Considerations might be given to the father's social standing, political standing, the size of the dowry, the age of the bride, the ability of the bride to conceive, all of these different things. In our country the institution of marriage, as has been referenced in earlier debate on this bill at second reading, is a legalized institution between two people. But if we think about marriage strictly in a psychological or emotional context, Mr. Chairman, marriage is recognizing an emotion that exists between two people, that emotion predominately being the emotion of love.

I found it of interest in reading the debate offered by the sponsoring member and by previous members in the Assembly that the acknowledgment of the part that emotion plays in initiating marriage was never mentioned. Even the word, if I read the debates thoroughly, I don't believe was mentioned. Well, if the sponsor doesn't believe that love is an emotion, then maybe he can share with the Assembly what it actually is. In any event, I would suggest that love is the tie that binds marriages, and for the most part when you hear people talk about why their marriages didn't work, they will speak about the fact that they don't love one another anymore, that they haven't been able to resolve their differences, et cetera, et cetera.

We're faced with a reality in this country and in this province where approximately half of our traditional marriages are ending in divorce. That's not a statistic that any of us, I would suggest, is particularly happy about, but it's also not a statistic that we're in a position to do a great deal about.

I thought it might be of interest or of use to look to the Scriptures, particularly with respect to how they define love as being the underpinning or the initiating component of marriage. I'm going to cite from 1 Corinthians 13 this afternoon.

Love is very patient and kind, never jealous or envious, never boastful or proud, never haughty or selfish or rude. Love does not demand its own way. It is not irritable or touchy. It does not hold grudges and will hardly even notice when others do it wrong.

This particular citation, Mr. Chairman, is often read at marriage ceremonies, and that is why I believe it's particularly relevant.

If you love someone, you will be loyal . . . no matter what the cost. You will always believe . . . always expect the best . . . and always stand your ground.

All the special gifts and powers from God will someday come to an end, but love goes on forever. Someday prophecy and speaking in unknown languages and special knowledge – these gifts will disappear.

Now we know so little, even with our special gifts, and the preaching of those most gifted is still so poor.

That's a significant piece of the scriptures: "the preaching of those most gifted is still so poor."

But when we have been made perfect and complete, then the need for these inadequate special gifts will come to end, and they will disappear.

Now, one of the things that's interesting in this definition, Mr. Chairman, is that it doesn't restrict the application of love. It doesn't say that it can only be applied to a particular gender, and I think that's one of the roots of what we're attempting to debate in the context of Bill 202, that somehow the legal ability to have your love for someone recognized should only be accessible in certain circumstances. In referencing how love is defined and how it's enacted, the Scriptures don't place those restrictions on its applications.

I also took note of the statements made by the Minister of Justice, the MLA for Edmonton-Whitemud, and wanted to reference them yet another time during our debate this afternoon. He basically had three issues or three problems with the bill. The first one was that in fact the bill was redundant because this is a matter of federal jurisdiction. He indicated that he'd always been a very strong believer that Legislatures and Parliaments should stick to their areas of jurisdiction, and I think that's relevant advice this afternoon.

He cited an additional concern relative to the use of the notwithstanding clause. That is something that we've had cause to debate in this Legislature previously, Mr. Chairman, the infatuation, if you will, of this government for using that clause to get them out of political binds. We saw the attempt made with the sterilization bill to do that, to use the notwithstanding clause to get them out of a political bind. The Minister of Justice reminded his caucus colleagues with the statement that the notwithstanding clause should be used carefully and specifically because we're dealing with the concept of individual rights. I'm a firm believer that we are all as individuals born with rights. We have all the rights that might be accorded a person.

He cited it as a fundamental Conservative philosophy. Well, in a democratic society I would hope that it is the majority's philosophy in the elected House.

Mr. Chairman, we have a bill before us. As I said at the onset, I think the intent is well meaning, but as it's formulated, it is somewhat irrelevant and technically could not even be able to be applied legally.

I read the sponsoring member's remarks with respect to all of the social literature that exists relative to families. I don't think anyone this afternoon is disputing those findings, but the reality is that engaging the Legislature in this type of action is not feasible and doesn't accomplish the intent that the hon. member was seeking.

That is not just something that applies to the issue of how marriages are defined. There are many issues. We spoke about the complexity of the issues in agriculture and the fact that we have not been able to effectively engage the Legislature in acting on those matters, Mr. Chairman.

The other whole difficulty with this type of proposal is that I tend to be very action orientated, and I don't see that making this type of legislated definition, if you will, would really contribute to strengthening our families, whether they be, as we might traditionally define them, heterosexual relationships or those families that are comprised of a homosexual relationship. This bill is not going to technically offer any strength to the environment our families exist in.

We have problems of family dysfunction. There's no disputing that in this province. They're rooted in alcohol, rooted in divorce, rooted in violence, and much of that has to do with the parents encountering those same types of problems in their childhood and not having the mechanisms, the programs, the counseling, the supports to address it. So they go on to marry and to have children, and the same types of problems exhibit themselves in the next generation. I would like to see us debate a bill that would do something to address some of those root issues. With due respect to the sponsoring member, this type of proposal is just not going to do it.

I suppose it's one of those things where it can be said that it looks good on paper, but in terms of meaning it doesn't have a lot of application. Certainly, though, there are those who would feel some sense of additional security to know that the Legislature had in fact debated and potentially passed this type of bill, but do we exist as a Legislature to debate and enact bills of symbolism? Well, I suppose you could say that in effect we are, because later today or perhaps tomorrow we're going to be debating a bill about the emblems of Alberta, and there's no question that symbolism is important.

At this particular point in time, given the other issues that are on the legislative agenda – the private health care proposal, the impending legislation, the crisis in agriculture – these kinds of initiatives don't really offer a great deal in terms of resolution of those problems. Somehow, Mr. Chairman, while they may serve some isolated purposes, they're not going to change the face of public policy or public programs, and that's primarily where my opposition to Bill 202 rests. It's symbolic. It satisfies a certain desire or need within perhaps the sponsoring member's constituency and certainly other constituencies in the province, but it will not serve to act and address the issues that are eroding marriages in this province. That's really what I'm more orientated to look for in this Assembly and in future debates in this House.

With those remarks I will take my seat. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Peace-River.

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to first of all offer my support for Bill 202 and take a moment to express the importance of the institution of marriage to both individual Albertans and to our society as a whole.

First of all, I want to say that I believe it's a duty and a responsibility of legislators to be mindful of the values of our greater communities when we make decisions in here. If it does nothing else, Mr. Chairman, this bill reminds us of that responsibility. I think all too often we misinterpret the pressures of special interest groups as general public sentiment simply because they're vocal. In reality, I believe that decisions made this way often just water down meaningful community values. I think sometimes we have to look beyond political correctness and stand up for what we believe is right.

Mr. Chairman, this bill gives us the opportunity to do just that, to stand up for the values of the traditional family and to recognize that the vast majority of our constituents feel the same way. It is one thing to be tolerant of those who have different values than we do – and we should be tolerant – but it is another to allow majority wishes to destroy long-accepted values.

Since the beginning of modern society a marriage describes the commitment of a man and a woman to each other. This doesn't mean that there cannot be other types of commitments or other kinds of arrangements, but I believe it's fair to say that if it is another kind of arrangement, then it should be called by another name. There's probably all kinds of evidence out there that proves that children benefit most from living in an environment with both a mother and a father. I believe this is as nature provided, and we don't even have to get into the religious or the community value thing there, but it doesn't mean that every situation involving a traditional family works out perfectly either. In fact, very few things do, and most people in here I'm sure can attest to that.

The perfection or the workability or the other alternatives are not what are in question. Again, I believe these may describe other situations, but they shouldn't have any bearing on the definition that we're talking about. There have also been some suggestions that this bill might have little effect if the federal government changes its legislation. Since the advent of the Charter, Canada has witnessed the confusion between political and moral liberties, with the Supreme Court frequently equating moral liberty with political liberty. Whether we risk federal legislation overriding our decision or not, I think this is a good opportunity for us to take a stand on what we believe, and also it's an opportunity for us to speak for our communities and their values.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to speak for and to vote for Bill 202, and I encourage others in this Assembly to do the same.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak on Bill 202, which I find a rather offensive piece of legislation that passes the test of neither legality nor morality. First of all, Bill 202 represents an unacceptable intrusion in the jurisdiction of the federal government. Under the Constitution of Canada legislative power over marriage and divorce rests with the federal government, not the provinces. The Alberta government historically has insisted that the federal government respect the Constitution and not make intrusions into areas that are within the provincial jurisdiction. If Alberta's call for the federal government to respect provincial jurisdiction is to have any credibility, this Legislature should not be passing legislation that is within the purview of the federal government and federal government alone.

I note that the Minister of Justice has, albeit courageously, opposed Bill 202 because he, too, believes that it represents an unwarranted intrusion into matters properly within the jurisdiction of the federal government and federal Parliament. I wonder where the minister of intergovernmental relations stands on the issue of jurisdiction. Has she consulted with her federal counterpart? The likelihood that Bill 202 intrudes upon the jurisdiction of the federal government should be sufficient reason to defeat this bill at the committee stage.

The second reason that Bill 202 should be defeated is the provocative way in which it invokes the use of the notwithstanding clause to shield it from the challenges on human rights grounds. This overlooks the fact that the courts could strike down this bill on the grounds that it offends the division of powers under the Constitution Act. If this were to take place, the bill could not even be saved by the use of the notwithstanding clause. The fact that Bill 202 sailed through second reading in this Legislature last week shows that this government and the government caucus have learned nothing from the public uproar following the introduction of Bill 26 two years ago.

Under Bill 26 the government attempted to use the notwithstanding clause to limit the lawsuits by victims of forced sterilization. Apparently the roar of Albertans did not help them to learn from the past as we are presented with Bill 202, the Marriage Amendment Act. There are those in the cabinet who have the Premier's ear who believe that this step will close the door forever to same-sex marriages. One would really hope that this very destructive and offensive bill is not being put forward to placate and pacify a few. Indeed, it would offend many, many Albertans to a terrible degree, and this time their roar will be definite.

This government on this issue of the equality of those in more than same-sex relationships likes to talk about doors and fences. Instead of shutting doors and building fences, this Assembly should be opening doors and building bridges.

On Wednesday, March 11, 1998, the Premier responded to questions in this House about the use of the notwithstanding clause by saying that "if the notwithstanding clause is ever contemplated, [again] indeed, there will be a tremendous amount of open and honest and public discussion" before it is invoked. He also said that the government would give the use of the notwithstanding provision much more serious thought because "the seriousness and the power of this particular clause became [crystal] clear" to his caucus. Where, then, does the Premier stand on the issue of the notwithstanding clause in section 1.1 of Bill 202? Where is the open and honest discussion on its use before this bill is allowed to become law?

To add insult to injury, this bill is being proposed at a time when the government has failed to address the need to bring provincial legislation into compliance with the May 1999 Supreme Court decision in M. versus H. The federal government, along with most Canadian provinces, are moving rapidly to ensure that those involved in same-sex relationships have equal legal status to opposite common couples. What is Alberta doing? Unfortunately we are moving in the opposite direction by making amendments to legislation like the Domestic Relations Act to entrench discrimination against same-sex couples. This is wrong.

The New Democrats have recommended the following in the past and remind the House of these yet again. Same-sex couples should be given the same legal status as opposite-sex couples living in a common-law relationship.

Discrimination against same-sex couples in Alberta statutes should be eliminated. The Employment Pension Plans Act should be amended to provide spouses in same-sex relationships with the same pension benefits as are currently available to heterosexual couples. The Alberta government should move immediately on the nondiscriminatory basis to make any necessary changes to extend employment benefits to the same-sex partners of its employees. Legislation, regulation, and policies governing the adoption and fostering of children should be changed to eliminate discrimination against same-sex couples.

Adding further insult to injury is the bill's preamble, that states that without marriage "there would be neither civilization nor progress." To me there is no civilization without all members of society being granted equal rights and obligations. Does this bill mean that same-sex couples seeking the legal recognition of marriage are not part of civilization and, further, are only second-class citizens? Does seeking the legal recognition of marriage disqualify them as Canadians? The denial of these rights to use such words as natural, moral, normal, traditional, proper is an insult to Albertans. To use the notwithstanding clause on this issue is damaging to our democracy. Many gay and lesbian adults are in marriage-like relationships. Many, including many of my constituents and many who are my friends and colleagues, subscribe to a life-long commitment despite the lack of legal recognition of their relationships.

I just want to add, Mr. Chairman, that I myself have been married to my wife for the last 40 years. We just celebrated our 40th anniversary last week. I know where I stand on this issue, but I have no reason to take away the rights of other Albertans who want to make different choices. Beyond the usual discrimination of having to remain invisible, threats of violence, or lost jobs, they now have Bill 202 wishing to further strip them of their rights as Albertans, as Canadians, and as human beings.

To this point in time those involved in same-sex relationships have focused on ensuring that they have the same legal status as common-law couples of the opposite sex. As a society we have to face the question of public recognition of these relationships in the same way that the relationships of opposite-sex couples are publicly recognized through marriage. When that time comes, I hope we'll be able to address this with understanding, compassion, and generosity.

To conclude, Mr. Chairman, New Democrats both federally and provincially have long opposed discrimination and affirmed the importance of basic human rights. New Democrats believe there is no justifiable reason to discriminate against persons with same-sex orientation and to exclude them from equal rights and obligations imposed by law. Everyone has the right to be judged on the integrity of their character and beliefs, not on the basis of personal characteristics, including their sexual orientation. Efforts to ensure the legal equality of persons with same-sex orientation are no different than earlier efforts to ensure the equality of women and to end discrimination based on race or other characteristics.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have listened with considerable interest to the variety of perspectives and commentary that we've heard with respect to the bill in front of us. I just wanted to start off by summing up the position that I had set out at second reading and then proceed to move an amendment, which I think is being distributed to members.

MR. DOERKSEN: You haven't moved it yet?

MR. DICKSON: No, I haven't moved it yet. The enthusiasm of the sponsor of the bill is remarkable, Mr. Chairman. I thought maybe he was seconding the comments I was making as I spoke, and I'd appreciate that as well.

Mr. Chairman, in any event, the concern that we have had – certainly I know from talking to members of my caucus that I think there's a very strong sense that we understand that marriage means one man and one woman, and we respect that. We don't think it's our job as legislators to start going around telling people that now "husband and wife" is going to mean something different or "spouse" is going to mean something different or that "marriage" should mean something different. What we have focused on always and consistently has been that it's about the nature of the legal relationship. It's about the equality in terms of rights and remedies.

That's what we've tried to establish, and that's why we developed the model we did that we put forward last spring, that we advanced to be used in Bill 12, the Domestic Relations Amendment Act. We also proffered it to be used in terms of the Insurance Statutes Amendment Act, and we've talked about the employee benefits act as well. It's all been cases where you could take that model, so what we say is that you don't have to change the definition of "marriage." What you ought to do is be able to recognize that two adult Albertans should be able to enter into a relationship, a long-term, mutually supportive relationship. They should be able by a simple agreement to ensure that certain legal remedies and rights accrue to that relationship. That continues to be my position.

You know, I've sat here carefully, and I'm not sure I've heard anybody challenge the value of marriage as an institution or its historical roots and historical underpinnings in any way. I've heard a lot of concern around the notwithstanding clause, and that's section 5 in the bill.

I'd just go back and say that, you know, the notwithstanding clause, section 33 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, is the big gun. It's the howitzer. Before you bring it out, you want to make sure you really see the enemy over the hill. In fact, this is in the bill for – it's a prophylactic use. I mean, this is to head something off that may or may not happen.

You'll remember, Mr. Chairman, that I and I think some others and I think the Minister of Justice pointed out that the definition of marriage is not currently – there's no court opinion anywhere in Canada that I'm aware of, no court opinion that says marriage should be anything other than what the Member for Red Deer-South and the Member for Calgary-Buffalo think it is. There's no imminent threat, and I am adamant in my conviction that you don't pull a howitzer out of the garage, that you don't bring out that extraordinary remedy to deprive men and women of rights unless it's absolutely essential. The threat can't be an apprehended, vague threat. It has to be an immediate, imminent threat. That does not exist now, and nothing that the Member for Red Deer-South has said suggests, in my view, that that threat is here.

Mr. Chairman, I think that while virtually everybody who has spoken to it agrees with section 2 and section 4, there's a lot of concern and discomfort around section 5. I disassociate myself with the comments of the Minister of Justice, with his concerns about the use of the notwithstanding clause.

So with that and not wanting to keep our colleague from Red Deer on tenterhooks any longer, I formally move the amendment that "Bill 202 be amended by striking out section 5." That's the section that deals with the notwithstanding clause, and that's the most offensive part of the bill. I know that there are other members who want to make comments on it. I've moved the amendment, and I may have some other commentary before we ultimately vote on my amendment.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: For the benefit of the committee, this will be called amendment A1.

We have a point of order. The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Point of Order Admissibility of Amendments

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Chairman, I wish to draw your attention to Beauchesne 689, where it states:

(1) A committee is bound by the decision of the House, given on second reading, in favour of the principle of the bill, and should not, therefore, amend the bill in a manner destructive of this principle.

Under 698 it says that "an amendment which is out of order on any of the following grounds cannot be put from the chair." I read subsection (5). It says:

An amendment which is equivalent to a negative of the bill, or which would reverse the principle of the bill as agreed to at second reading stage is not admissible.

I would further like to refer you to Erskine May. The best I can do there is page 491 where it talks about “inadmissible amendments.” It says that “the question on an amendment which is out of order on any of the following grounds cannot be proposed from the Chair.” Subsection (5) there says:

An amendment which is equivalent to a negative of the bill, or which would reverse the principle of the bill as agreed to on the second reading, is not admissible.

I want to read the next sentence because this is important with respect to the bill before us:

Where the scope of a bill is very restricted, the extent to which it may be amended at all may thus be severely limited.

Mr. Chairman, I guess the challenge I have to you is to argue that in fact this amendment strikes down the principle of the bill. I would like to make that case, because the bill itself is a very simple bill. It's very short. It was quite clear in second reading and even listening to the debate that we've just heard that the notwithstanding clause as a protection of the definition of marriage is an integral part of the bill before us today. Hence, the particular amendment before us would in effect change the entire principle of the bill.

In reviewing the speeches, in my opening I used the comment that “the use of the notwithstanding clause is deliberate in the drafting of this bill.” The Member for Calgary-Buffalo spent probably two-thirds of his time referencing the notwithstanding clause. The Minister of Government Services affirmed the agreement to the use of the notwithstanding clause in her speech. The Member for Edmonton-Centre also spoke to the notwithstanding clause. The Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations devoted almost her entire speech to the notwithstanding clause, and the Minister of Innovation and Science referenced it as well, as did the Minister of Justice. So, Mr. Chairman, in view of the mind of the Assembly at second reading, I don't think that you can put forth an argument that suggests that the House did not understand the concept of the bill, the definition, and the fact that it was being protected by the use of the notwithstanding clause in the Charter.

I can go on, Mr. Chairman, if you want, to continue to prove my case, because a lot of the comments that have come up have said that this isn't within the jurisdiction of the provincial government. So on the one hand they want to have their cake and eat it too. They want to argue both sides against the middle.

If you look at “Is marriage under attack,” I refer to the case that the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo referred to, the Layland case, where the applicants, who were both male and cohabiting in a sexual relationship, applied for a marriage licence. They argued that the limitation preventing the same sex from marrying violated their equality rights under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Now, the court held that the application should be dismissed, but the point I want to make is the dissenting opinion, because there were two judges in favour and a dissenting judge, which clearly pointed out that there is an accepted currency among individuals, judges in this case, that suggests in fact that restricting marriage to heterosexual couples infringes on the applicants' Charter rights.

I think that if you read that case and you read through those comments, it is my view that in fact the definition of marriage is subject to a Charter challenge. It's not before the courts right now, but we're putting it in as a pre-emptive kind of arrangement.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would ask that you rule the amendment out of order.

THE CHAIRMAN: On the point of order, Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: Perhaps the chair might do a little intervening. We're running out of time, not in terms of what's allowed at this stage but in time in view of the hour. Because this is private members' public bills committee stage, we might stop at 27 minutes past, regardless of where we're at, so that we can rise and report progress and get the report in. Is that agreeable?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay.

With that in mind, then, Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Chairman, a couple of observations. The first one is that this bill, in my respectful opinion, has two elements to it. It has a single substantive element, and it has a procedural element, but the two are actually quite separate.

The substantive amendment is one which defines marriage, and on the substantive amendment, as I suggested before, I think everybody agrees. I have heard no disagreement. I agree that marriage means a husband and a wife, a man and a woman. So if you had to say what the bill is about, I'd say that the substantive part is the definition of what constitutes a marriage.

Now, there's a procedural thing that is tagged on, which is section 5, but the use of the notwithstanding clause is a process issue. It's not a substantive issue. The whole purpose of the notwithstanding clause reference is to give effect and try and protect the substantive part. Now, I can't achieve . . . Mr. Chairman, I normally wouldn't worry about your attention so much, but because it's a point of order, I want to make sure you're with me.

I was saying that my point is that the substantive part of the bill is to define marriage and ensure that it is a man and a woman. Why would I want to vote against that part? I support that substantive part of the bill. What I have a problem with is the procedural element in the bill, and that's section 5.

You can take the procedural element out. If my amendment were to be successful, Mr. Chairman, we would still be left with what I wanted.

AN HON. MEMBER: Citation.

MR. DICKSON: I'm responding to a point of order. It's not typical for the responder to have to cite authority, hon. member.

Mr. Chairman, the proposition I'd make is this. I cannot achieve the same thing by voting against the bill, and the reason is this. I want to declare my support for marriage being one man and one woman. That's the substantive part of the bill. There are people who are confusing – the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and perhaps the mover from Red Deer-South are running together the procedural element and the substantive element, but they're wholly collateral. The bill could stand quite nicely on its own if there were no section 5, and the argument, in fact, from the Minister of Justice, this member, some others is that section 5 isn't needed. It's not required. It's wholly severable.

This is described, Mr. Chairman, as the Marriage Amendment Act, not as the notwithstanding act. It's the Marriage Amendment Act, and that's the substantive part that I support. I don't want to be denied my chance to be able to support the substantive part just because I don't like the procedural part. I think they're wholly collateral. I don't disagree with the authorities, but I'd just say that they're wholly inapplicable on the facts here.

The last thing I'd say is that the member raising the point of order has made much of what's been said. Well, the determination of whether an amendment is appropriate has nothing to do with what people say in debate. You have to determine whether the amendment is appropriate within the four corners of the bill in front of us, and looking at that, I think the analysis I've offered before is accurate and determinative.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN: Any other comments on the point of order?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.

THE CHAIRMAN: There's not a question. There's a point of order for the chair to rule on. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has moved an amendment today, amendment A-1, to Bill 202 which would strike out section 5 of this bill, the portion of the bill which is the notwithstanding clause. The sponsor of the bill, the hon. Member for Red Deer-South, who has raised the point of order, of course objects on the grounds that the amendment runs contrary to the principle of the bill. The chair would like to thank both hon. members who participated in this debate for their submissions.

There is not really any argument about the general principles that are to be applied, as has been pointed out. Reference can be found in Erskine May and in Beauchesne. In Erskine May—hon. member, one reason we had a little trouble finding it is that you have a different edition than we have. We have the more up to date and had to find it in other pages.

Anyway, on page 526 Erskine May states that an amendment which is the negative of the bill, or which would reverse the principle of the bill as agreed to on the second reading, is not admissible.

The chair would further note a similar reference in Griffith and Ryle's book Parliament: Functions, Practices and Procedures at page 232, where they say of amendments that might conflict with the principles of the bill as agreed to on second reading: they "often pose thorny problems for the chairman of a committee on a controversial bill."

In this case, it seems clear to the chair that the proposed amendment does not constitute a negative to the bill. On the thorny issue of whether the proposed amendment runs contrary to the principle of the bill, it seems to the chair that the principle might be found in the previous sections of the bill about the definition of marriage. The notwithstanding clause, although a very significant and important clause, does not in any way affect the definition of marriage so far as the bill is concerned.

The notwithstanding clause serves to insulate the bill from certain constitutional challenges. If this section could not be amended, it might set an unfortunate precedent in limiting amendments. In cases like this, it would seem that the best option is to leave it to this committee whether or not to ultimately accept or reject the amendment.

As Beauchesne states in paragraph 688:

The function of a committee on a bill is to go through the text . . . with a view to making such amendments in it as may seem likely to render it more generally acceptable.

In this case the chair rules that the amendment proposed would not be destructive of the principle and may proceed. Whether it be adopted or not is up to this committee. The committee will decide the merits of this amendment.

MR. DICKSON: I'd like to adjourn debate at this time, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee do now rise and report progress.

[Motion to report progress on Bill 202 carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. HERARD: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on Bill 202. I wish to table all copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and that we reconvene this evening at 8 o'clock in Committee of Supply.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader has moved that we now adjourn until 8 this evening and that when we meet this evening, we do so in Committee of Supply. All those in support of this motion, please say aye.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Those opposed, please say no.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Carried. Accordingly the House stands adjourned until 8 this evening in Committee of Supply.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:27 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 1, 2000
Date: 00/03/01

8:00 p.m.

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call the committee to order. This evening we're dividing into two committees, C and D. Committee D will be upstairs in room 512, and C will be here in the Assembly. So I'd invite all those members of committee D to proceed to 512, and we'll see you about 10 o'clock. The remainder will be here for a few minutes.

[The Committee of Supply met as subcommittees C and D from 8:01 p.m. to 10:12 p.m.]

MRS. GORDON: Subcommittee D reports progress on the Department of Economic Development.

THE CHAIRMAN: Does the committee concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. FISCHER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Subcommittee C of the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions of the Department of Government Services, reports progress thereon, and requests leave to sit again.

THE CHAIRMAN: Again, does the committee concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Opposed? So ordered.
Hon. Minister of Government Services, would you rise and report progress?

MRS. NELSON: Didn't I already do that?

THE CHAIRMAN: No, no. Okay. Hon. members, we were in subcommittees. We had a subcommittee upstairs and a subcommittee down here. When the other one arrived down here, then the two subcommittees separately reported to the whole committee. Now we must report to the Assembly.

MRS. NELSON: Oh. Well, in that case, Mr. Chairman, I move that we rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MRS. GORDON: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions of the Department of Government Services under subcommittee C and the Department of Economic Development under subcommittee D, reports progress thereon, and requests leave to sit again.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: So ordered.

head: Consideration of Her Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Haley moved:

That an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 28: Mrs. McClellan]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a real privilege, as always, to stand and respond to the Speech from the Throne, particularly on this occasion, as it was read by our new Lieutenant Governor. As we opened the Fourth Session of this 24th Legislature, it was a pleasure to hear Her Honour Lois Hole read the Speech from the Throne. I offer my most sincere congratulations to Her Honour on her recent appointment as the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta. She's an absolute delightful addition, I believe, to this Legislative Assembly. She's thoughtful, she has an understanding of the needs of this Assembly, and she brings those needs and the interests of Albertans to this Assembly. As she goes throughout Alberta our constituents will experience those same kinds of vibrations from her and the positiveness with which she approaches everything she does not only for herself and Albertans but also for this great province.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

Madam Speaker, with the express views of my constituents from Livingstone-Macleod in mind I am pleased to support this Speech from the Throne and the overall direction this government is giving to Albertans. My constituency has a large population of seniors, and as a result health care and particularly long-term care are really important issues to my constituents. I am pleased the Speech from the Throne also indicated that these are important areas to be talking about with Albertans. In particular my constituents are pleased that the government will implement an overall direction for enhancing continuing care, resulting from the long-term care review. The government's commitment to the continued security of home care and long-term care programs in the province is something that encourages my constituents and reaffirms their faith in the balanced approach to policy so characteristic of this government.

10:20

Along with that, Madam Speaker, my constituents recognize that many nurses in the health care profession work very, very hard, and more personnel coming into the workplace will be important to them and welcome to them and also the people they serve. The government's commitment to increasing access to essential services by increasing the number of frontline staff in the health system will work to alleviate the pressure on many of our valued nurses.

In addition, the recent budget speech also discussed this issue, outlining the government's specific commitment to hiring some 2,400 nurses in the province to assist in just this area. These are welcome initiatives to my constituents, particularly when we look at two of my hospitals that have occupancies of well over 100 percent. The pressure and the stress that is put on those acute care beds is certainly going to welcome some of this relief.

I would also like to acknowledge the progress this government has made in addressing the pressing issues surrounding the provision of public health care while at the same time maintaining a strong and vital commitment to the Canada Health Act. Madam Speaker, this government will be introducing legislation that will help to protect and preserve the publicly funded health care system by doing two things. First, it will legislate Alberta's commitment to the principles of the Canada Health Act by reaffirming the priority of a universal health care system for all Albertans. Secondly, it will enable the regional health authorities in this province to look at new and innovative ways of delivering publicly funded health care services. This is a very progressive step and one that is vital to our continued standard of excellence in health care services. I believe the steps the government is taking to reduce waiting times and increasing access to essential services are fundamental to the continued viability of health care within every province in this country.

While there has been some opposition to the progressive and necessary nature of these ideas, I believe this opposition is only because change is a process and is more often than not a gradual process. Furthermore, opposition to free trade in the mid-1980s dissipated once the benefits of free trade began to be realized and the preoccupation of governments with deficit spending in the early 1990s also disappeared, even among those on the more socialist side of the political spectrum. So in the early part of the 21st century this government is taking the initiative to be innovative in the area of health care in order to ensure that the future viability and sustainability of our precious publicly funded health care system remains intact. As in so many other areas Alberta is again setting the pace of change in public policy, and I think this is a good thing.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

We need only look at the Alberta government's track record on deficit reduction to see the benefits of forward-looking government policies to all Albertans. My constituents are very pleased at the deficit reduction that has occurred so far and continue to support the government's efforts in making sure our debt will be paid down so that our children and our grandchildren will not have this burden to pay off.

I was also pleased to see the initiative this government has taken with respect to education. The projected injection of funding into education will ultimately impact the lives of many Albertans and particularly the younger members of our population. Our young people are so important to this province, and no amount of funding could ever put a price on the value of our future generations. That said, this government has conscientiously and tenaciously shown diligence in ensuring that the future of Alberta is preserved for the next generation.

Mr. Speaker, this government has been a good steward of the fiscal resources of this province and has steadfastly maintained its course in reducing the debt and bringing spending under control while at the same time remaining committed to a good education system, a quality health care system, effective social programs, a clean environment, and safe, strong communities. The government has also shown a commitment to ensuring that Alberta's primary and secondary schools are not fund-raising to meet the basic education needs of their schools. The fiscally conservative approach of this government is an example to school boards of the importance of diligently reviewing expenses and striving to remain within achievable budgetary limits.

Mr. Speaker, people want schools more effective and more responsive to the changing needs of society. I have already proposed a private member's bill this session that will respond to a need in our society by addressing violence in schools and stipulating a code of conduct for our students. The bill will provide a mechanism for dealing with dangerous activities in our schools in order to protect our students from things like physical violence, sexual assault, possession of narcotics, and possession of dangerous weapons.

This government has also indicated the importance of our young people by introducing a new $3 million scholarship program that will benefit approximately 3,000 postsecondary students and by increasing student financial assistance levels. This is an issue that has come to me many times in my visits to high schools in my constituency. Young people are worried about their ability to make financial commitments, long-term financial commitments, to postsecondary education.

In addition, Bill 1, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Act, creates a $500 million endowment fund that will establish and support a balanced and long-term approach to science and engineering research in the province. The objective of this fund is to foster innovation and scientific research within the province and to support science and engineering research facilities in Alberta.

This endowment fund is something that is important to our smaller universities like the University of Lethbridge. It adds a new dimension to the small university by providing increased opportunities for research dollars to attract scientists and professors from various fields of expertise, by positively influencing our students and further enhancing their educational experience. This is something that young people in my constituency look forward to and something they have mentioned to me on many occasions: how they can benefit from research and get close to the brains that we can import into this province to help with our research.

Mr. Speaker, that's what this government is all about: innovation, progress, being willing to change when required to rather than being the last out of the gate. This government has consistently shown its tenacity and determination to be responsive rather than reactive to change; in other words, always being out front. This change includes the changing nature of the global economy and staying competitive, the changing fiscal realities of governments, and the presently evolving role of public policy. The Alberta government has sought to address these issues as the need arises rather than when the crisis hits years after the initial signs of needed change were indicated. This government has done this despite opposition and despite distortions of the truth spread by those with special interests. In the end, this government has consistently shown Albertans that it has chosen the right path and that they have chosen the right leadership.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEBOVICI: Thank you. It's with great pleasure that I rise this evening to address the throne speech as well. I've had the great pleasure as the MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark to address the Speech from the Throne seven times in the last seven years, so I have the ability to look back at what has happened within this Legislative Assembly in providing for the needs of my constituents.

What I found interesting in this year's throne speech was that the Premier thanked seniors and the Premier seemed to indicate that history mattered to him, but in actual fact what we see happening is that history may well repeat itself when we look at moving from a publicly funded health care system to a privately funded one. That is the history that no one in this province wants to see repeated and that in actual fact the majority of individuals in my constituency have indicated they do not want to see. The calls to my constituency office have been from individuals who traditionally have not phoned their MLA, have not phoned the minister of health, have not phoned the Premier. That so-called silent majority are the individuals who are now picking up the phone and who are saying: no, we don't want this; we don't like the direction the government is taking, and in actual fact we don't trust what is being said to us.

These are the same constituents, Mr. Speaker, who know what language can do to an institution, to a health care institution in their own community. The Misericordia hospital is an integral part of Meadowlark. In the cutbacks in 1993 and 1994 and I believe up to '95 and '96, the Misericordia hospital became the Misericordia community health centre. In fact, some major parts of that hospital were taken out, so the community was not served and continues not to be served in the manner that they and the surrounding areas – Stony Plain, Spruce Grove, Westlock; the list goes on – deserve to be served. In actual fact, it now has become again a hospital. So it is strange, perhaps, how language dictates what happens, and we will see that tomorrow most likely, when even though we're going to be told that a surgical clinic is nothing to be fearful of, we know that that is a private hospital and Albertans know that it is a private hospital. So what we have seen in our constituency are some real effects on health care and some real diminishing service with regards to our health care needs, and constituents do not forget that easily.

I have also in the last three to four months taken the opportunity to visit with each and every school in my constituency to find out what the impact has been of the education cutbacks. I have had the opportunity to meet with the administrators, to meet with the teachers, to meet with the PACs. I have three schools left, Mr. Speaker, and then I plan to file a report in this Legislative Assembly on behalf of the schools.

I have one charter school, I have two high schools, I have two junior high schools, and I have a number of separate and public schools. What I have found has been enlightening, and I'm sure if other members took the time to do that as well – and perhaps they have – they will know and will have found out the same things I have found out with regards to the needs in our education system, and quite frankly the budget does not address those needs. Those needs are that parents have to stop fund-raising for essentials, for books. Those needs are with regards to the special-needs children in our schools, the ones that maybe don't merit the severe coding, where they do get some dollars for special aids but are expected to be integrated into full classrooms and are not having their needs met.

There's the reality of the infrastructure and the fact that the schools are aging and cannot accommodate the new technology this government expects the schools to have. I was at a school just the other night where the analogy was made that it's the same as plugging in your microwave and a toaster at the same time: the circuits just go bonkers. In actual fact, that is what happens in some of the schools where the infrastructure cannot accommodate the new technology.

The reality is that in our schools if there's a concern about violence, there is a lack of school counselors, there's a lack of access to social workers, psychologists, and other individuals who can help in dealing with those children who require help.

What in actual fact I see in my constituency is that the seniors have been carrying a larger and larger burden over the years as their out-of-pocket costs have increased with regards to providing their health care needs, with regards to providing their home care needs. This downloading of costs onto individuals has not been ignored by constituents in my riding, and in fact they know they are paying more out of pocket now than they did in 1993. As well, we are having more people falling through the cracks as a result of that.

What individuals in Edmonton-Meadowlark I believe would like to see from this government is a strong commitment to community and community spirit, a commitment to the concept of the health determinants, because in fact that is one of the key ways of ensuring that our health care costs will be diminished. That is, to look at the issues of poverty, to look at the issues of housing, to look at the issues of nutrition of our youth. These are some of the health determinants that must be considered and must be addressed with vision by a government, and what they would like to see is that their interests are considered.

I have heard in the last two and a half weeks since the session started a lot about the special interests. This government seems to think that anyone who disagrees with them is a special interest, and we have had those special interests named in the past by this government over the last seven years. Those special interests have been the unions. Those special interests have been the nurses. Those special interests have been the doctors. Those special interests have been the seniors. These are just some of the groups this government considers as special interests. Well, I'd like to put on the record that those are not special interests, that I would rather see the special interests of the majority in this province served and served in a way that shows they are respected and do not have the scorn of the government, as opposed to seeing the special interests of a minority, which is what this government at this point has come to represent, Mr. Speaker. As the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark I will, as long as my constituents decide to invest me with the honour of representing them, be sure that I will represent the majority of my constituents and not the special interests of a few.

Thank you, and I'd move to adjourn debate.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member just adjourned debate, or she was attempting to.

Bill 9

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2000

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me once again great pleasure to pain at least one member across the way with my lightning-quick wit and his attentive manner.

Members, I rise to speak both in favour and agin this particular bill in that it doesn't show any new direction. It doesn't do anything one would expect of a minibudget, as it were, and it certainly leaves a lot to be desired. I did in the last two days have cause to have some better feelings, perhaps, for a little more co-operative effort in this Chamber in that this morning I had the pleasure of chairing the Public Accounts Committee, where a great deal of co-operation and information sharing goes on all the time. I just had the experience of some two hours in Room 512 in a committee where a member of the Executive Council of this government served up a good informational session, a very, very good exchange of ideas. Whether they were government members' questions or backbenchers' questions, they certainly were forthcoming.

By comparison, the difficulty with this particular bill is that we don't see the same cordiality. We don't seem to have any kind of input whatsoever. It's presented as a fait accompli. There is no reasonable debate from the other side at all. There's no new direction.

With the assembled members here I'd like to touch first on some forestry policy that is not covered, some energy policy that should be covered in this debate, and then on to perhaps some decrying of the poor state of education and the lack of support of postsecondary students in this province. Then I'll perhaps have time left over to chastise the government for their method of finance or nonfinance of municipalities and seniors and, finally, tie it up with a little discussion on democracy.

First of all, let's deal with the forestry industry. We have with us tonight a member of Executive Council – and thank goodness for that – who has the promotion of the forest industry, and a former member of Executive Council who was formerly in charge of this particular portfolio. First, I'd like to say that there is a very good report published by the Senate of this great nation of ours that got very little coverage around about but certainly was read by this member and some other members. There are three critical points that it points out that are in error, particularly in Alberta. It centres around the longevity of a contract between the province and a harvester of fibre. It's called the forest management agreement, an FMA. Those forest management agreements have far too short a tenure. I hesitate to propose a longer tenure, because if that was the only change in the FMAs, it certainly wouldn't be adequate. What they could and should do is provide for exactly that, the forest management and one harvester, but it does it in such a short lump that all the forest manager can do is take the harvest and not replant to see it to completion and to be able to manage that forest. So you do want to extend that period that you have given a corporate entity the rights that fall from that contract and all the responsibilities.

Currently, with the relatively short period, a short period being sometimes 15 years – but in tree growth that is at best one-quarter of the growth and probably more like one-tenth of the period of time it takes to regrow that forest. So what you have emphasized here in a shorter agreement is the responsibility just to harvest, not the responsibility to replant and to tend and care for it until reharvesting again, and therein lies part of the difficulty.

Now, I said earlier that if that was the only thing you did on a change of agreement, that would not be adequate. Certainly what you have to do too, like this government says that they do with every policy, is have performance measures. They measure the performance, and then there's some renegotiation. Those measurements of performance have to be made public. It has to be done in public. The disclosure in this particular matter is absolutely necessary for that scrutiny, the same way that this democracy is supposed to run by having the members of the press be able to access that which we say and publicize it and having a record of Hansard so that those words of wisdom or fateful errors can be published. Those things must be done.

There's another area that creates some difficulty with a very short tenure for a forest management agreement and/or a quota. What it does do is put all those firms, those harvesters of that fibre and therefore generators of sustained economic activity in our province, right under the thumb of the government. It may not be overt. It may not be seen easily, but it certainly is felt. Those companies cannot speak, and they don't speak to the press easily unless it's very, very well managed. They don't speak to the opposition unless it's managed.

MR. DICKSON: Are they muzzled?

MR. WHITE: In fact, yes, they are muzzled. They are muzzled simply because the economic clout the government has over these firms is so great that big firms like Al-Pac and Daishowa say very, very little about anything. They are by structure intimidated, and it simply is not good in the industry. It really is a negative, particularly for the owners of the resource, we who are here and the people of Alberta. It does nothing, nothing.

I'd like to move on. Time's awasting. Actually I didn't keep time of it.

AN HON. MEMBER: You've got lots of time, Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: I'd like to deal with the energy policy and particularly the lack of debate of energy policy, which could be really engaging in a province like this. There are so many people that know a great deal about the industry and have opinions on it, that are expressed now and again in this Chamber. But never does any debate occur.

I'll deal firstly with the depleting resources – the rate of depletion is rather rapid – and that's conventional crude. This resource is owned – by and large all the resources below the surface geology of this province are owned by the people in Alberta, yet there is no debate as to the rate of depletion, absolutely none. We draw off perhaps 600 million this year, and that's a good year economically because the price happens to draw right now, but that's depleting and diminishing. Yes, it's being replaced and ably replaced by another resource, but there isn't debate on whether we should be rushing out and depleting that or not. There isn't any debate in this Legislature as to how the oil industry is to be maintained in this province through this complete next century. Certainly the conventional oil cannot be done.

I'd like to move on to synthetic crude, another area of absolutely no debate. It was presented as a fait accompli. That was the new royalty rate negotiations, that in this member's view didn't turn out that badly. Around the margins I could and would have changed some, but I wasn't at the negotiating table. I didn't hear any debate in public on the rate of depletion of that asset versus any cost inputs that were required by the province of Alberta. Now, there were some pretty fundamental elements that you'd think we'd want to speak of. Do you want to overhear an economy? Do you want to grow one part of the economy in the province of Alberta over another? Then there are so many other things . . .

DR. WEST: You should ask the Parkland Institute to help you.

MR. WHITE: The minister of resource depletion wants to get into this debate rather badly. If he'll listen to the text of my debate, that's what I am trying to do, encourage debate, but debate off the record is of no assistance whatever. We've been admonished a number of times by this chairman to speak in turn and add to the debate if a minister wants, but this minister does not seem to be predisposed at all to add to the debate. He merely hurls comments across the way.

DR. WEST: It's to keep you on your toes, Lance.

MR. WHITE: I am that. Thank you, sir.

Continuing on here. Synthetic crude this year, partially because of a marked change in the royalty rate, without debate again, has gone from some $43 million to $384 million. To me that would indicate that the planning for this particular resource depletion is not reasonable. It is reasonable to expect that the reduction of the asset at this level would be reported in this manner, but certainly it would be wise for those that negotiate these arrangements to share a little more with the owners of the resource through the public forum, which is this forum. Now, no one would expect it to be completely open and transparent, but it would be nice to have the philosophical elements of it presented here and argued and discussed. Granted, the opposition would have little influence if the arguments were put well, but in this forum if the opportunity is there, then the arguments will rise to it, I'm sure.

Moving on to electricity. Electricity is probably the area that bothers this member the most. You'll remember that the bill of 1995 garnered, I think, about six hours of debate in total, and the bill of 1998 left this House under closure with less than an hour and a half of debate. Now, that is clearly not the way to pass policy in this province. You recognize that in 1994, before any of this deregulation experiment was spoken of, this province had a stable rate, a favourable rate of power. We had adequate reserves. We had a privatized system mostly. We had two major generators generating better than 80 percent of the total energy consumption in this province – they were completely privately run and held corporations in the province of Alberta – and at that time we had one quasi-clone corporation. It was owned by the city of Edmonton.

The system worked, and in my barber's terms, it weren't broke. It was working. What needed fixing? To date we haven't had that discussion. We haven't heard where the hue and cry came from to require moving from that system to another system. We don't know what that system will look like as yet because the power purchase arrangement auction has not been held, and we don't know what the outcome of that will be.

In that time we had virtually zero construction of conventional base load generation in this province, yet we've had substantial growth in virtually every other sector of the economy in this province. It's getting to the point now where it's going to be one of the limiting factors in infrastructure. You can hardly prevail upon a corporate entity in another part of the country or the world to come to Alberta to produce goods or any kind of product when electricity is lacking. That's getting close to being what the case is.

Now, you'll hear an argument that there has been a substantial addition of energy production in this province by way of cogeneration, and that's true, but in order to have cogeneration occur the cogenerator must have use of excess heat. Well, actually you can generate the heat for plant heat. You need plant heat, so you need some process heat in the plant, and then you can produce electricity for the plant and sell off the rest.

Well, those opportunities have been taken up mostly in this province now. They haven't been constructed or aren't in construction, and we're topping out rather rapidly. We're getting painfully close to a crisis here in a province that has untold energy resources. It's absurd that we're getting to this point.

Now, if one were to turn the clock back to '94, and the government were contemplating this move to a deregulated market, you'd look at the market and say: well, the market dominance of one entity is potentially a problem. So you'd go through, and due diligence would say that you really go through the steps to decide whether you can design some kind of system to have a much more open market, a free market if you will, and whether it can be defined. We have spent five years trying to define that to try to limit the market dominance of one player.

At that point it should have been decided whether an invited divestiture or an assisted divestiture of assets of TransAlta Utilities would have been contemplated and whether you would or wouldn't do that, but there was no debate on that subject, absolutely none. We heard none of it. We've heard none of it to date. Yet the experts will tell you that that would have been a guarantee that we would have had probably two, maybe three or four years ago a market that was operating almost totally and completely without the massive regulation we have now that has the system of designed PPAs and, failing that, some kind of forced market contract of some description. We would have had a decision that could have been put in place at that time.

Now, the current minister was not minister at that date, so he cannot be chastised for that. [Mr. White's speaking time expired] Twenty minutes?

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes, it is really 20 minutes.

[The clauses of Bill 9 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIRMAN: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee do now rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 9.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

[At 11:04 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Title: Estimates of Government Services, Wednesday, March 1, 2000

THE CHAIRMAN: In subcommittee C this evening for our consideration we have the estimates for the Department of Government Services, and I would invite the hon. minister to begin this evening's deliberations on Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to present to you the first business plan and estimates for the Ministry of Government Services. As you know, Government Services is a new ministry formed during last May's government reorganization. At that time we were given a mandate to streamline and simplify Albertans' access to government.

The ministry assumed the responsibility for Alberta registries and consumer services, and we also took on the responsibility for the Regulatory Review Secretariat. In the past 10 months since the reorganization we have been busy mapping out where we want to take this new department and how we intend to get there. The three-year business plan and estimates before you tonight will serve as our guide.

The key focus of this business plan is on service excellence. This area holds significant challenges and opportunities to provide better, more streamlined, and more unified services to Albertans. To this end we have begun working with government, stakeholders, and businesses to "provide a secure, high-quality, and innovative gateway to a wide range of . . . services," including registry, licensing, consumer, and other related services.

As you can see from our mission statement, the ministry's government and program development roles will also remain important in ongoing activities throughout the business planning period. That means we will continue to "facilitate, support, and . . . regulate and strictly enforce high standards of consumer protection and business practice," as we have in the past. We will also "support the Regulatory Review Secretariat in its mandate to reduce regulatory red tape and complexity."

Shortly we will be implementing a new departmental structure that is in keeping with our mandate to provide a simple, streamlined point of access to service. As an example, we will combine our registry's call centre and our new consumer information call centre into one so that citizens wanting information on either of these two programs will only have to make one call. This new structure will ensure greater co-ordination within the ministry in how we provide services to Albertans, respond to issues, and plan for the future.

When he created the Ministry of Government Services, Premier Klein gave it a mandate to improve Albertans' access through one window to services of government. That has become our first goal, as identified in the ministry business plan: "a common portal ('gateway') so Albertans receive the services they [actually] deserve." Together with the Department of Innovation and Science we have already set out to accomplish this goal. Over the past few months our two ministries have been working with seven other departments to examine how we can better serve Albertans by making it easier to access government information, services, and products.

The purpose of this exercise is to come up with a business plan for delivering all the various services of all these distinct departments through one entry point or window. That way, Mr. Chairman, Albertans will not have to know which department is responsible for which service in order to get access to that service. Instead, they will be able to go to one web site or to one service counter or to one call centre to get everything they need. You will be hearing more about this initiative as the project progresses over the next few months.

You will note in the estimates that the budget for Government Services has been increased over last year's budget by about $2.2 million, to $49.8 million. Approximately $500,000 of this increase is for our operating expenditures dedicated to the one-window project. Another $500,000 is for the capital investment to support the next phase in the development of the one-window project. The rest of the increase, about $1.2 million, is to cover an increase in the salary component of the budget due to an increase in our employee compensation plan.

Mr. Chairman, our second goal, as identified in the business plan, is also related to service: "excellence in service development, delivery and accessibility." Registry services are perhaps the most familiar part of our ministry to all Albertans, as all Albertans at some time or another require them. Through our network of registry agents people can obtain drivers' licences and vehicle registrations, conduct land title searches, register births and deaths or security interests on personal property, or form corporations. Altogether Albertans conducted more than 12 million registry transactions last year, about half of them through the registry agent network. Generally speaking, they like the service they're getting, with more than 90 percent saying they're satisfied or very satisfied. That's a vote of confidence for this system.

Yet we want to build on that success in the years to come. One of the biggest challenges facing us in this regard is the need to redevelop three of our five registry systems. These three systems – the motor vehicle registry, the land titles registry, and the personal property registry – were developed using 1980s technology. Today they're tired and old and slow. They've served us well, but they're reaching full capacity. All three systems must be redeveloped if we are going to be able to continue to provide Albertans with the superior services they have come to expect, so we must start now.

We will plan and reinvest to restructure our IT systems, pursuing partnerships with the public and private sectors to help defray what will be rather significant costs. We also want to continue to provide better and more accessible registry and consumer information services to our clients through our call centres. The strategy for this, as I mentioned earlier, will include combining the various call centres we operate in a single, more efficient call centre.

The budget required for service delivery is estimated to be about $32 million. This is identified in the estimates as program 3, registries and services to consumers. From this budget we will provide support for the registry agent network and to our Alberta on-line customers. We will maintain our registry databases and equipment. We will provide land titles registration, the one service that is still delivered directly by the ministry, and we will respond to inquiries related to our registry services and inquiries and complaints respecting business and consumer issues.

Mr. Chairman, our third goal is “a fair and effective marketplace in Alberta with a high standard of business conduct.” Over the next year we will build on the momentum of the Fair Trading Act, which came into effect last September 1. It’s one of the toughest consumer protection laws in Canada, and I have given instructions that it will be strictly enforced. We will also continue to work and consult with stakeholders to develop new and amend existing legislation or regulations to respond to emerging issues.

One in particular I wish to focus on is the creation in the very near future of a regulation that will govern direct marketers of electricity. This will help ensure consumer protection and a level playing field for business when the electrical industry is deregulated next January 1. The estimates show a budget of $11.3 million for this division. This is the estimated amount required to support not only our regulatory and enforcement activities but also our planning, strategic, and business support activities. These expenses are broken down in the estimates under program 2, regulatory and strategic services.

Our fourth goal, Mr. Chairman, as identified in the business plan, is “a streamlined, effective, and relevant regulatory environment.” This goal speaks primarily to the work of the Regulatory Review Secretariat, which is chaired by Wayne Jacques, the MLA for Grande Prairie-Wapiti. The secretariat will continue to work with government departments on the governmentwide initiative to reduce, simplify, and eliminate regulations.

Program 1 outlines our budget estimates for ministry supports, which includes our Regulatory Review Secretariat. In addition to the secretariat, the $6.3 million budgeted for this area also supports my office and that of the deputy minister as well as our portion of the various support services we share with Municipal Affairs. These shared services include human resources, finance and administration, information technology, legal services, and communications.

You will notice under program 1 estimates that there has been an increase in the budgets of both the deputy minister’s office and the Regulatory Review Secretariat. The original budget for the deputy minister’s office, transferred from the former department of public works, supply, and services, was barely enough to cover the salaries of the three staff. So an additional $32,000 has been made available to cover supplies and services and to support the operations of this office as well as anticipated increases in salaries to be paid to the public service employees. Likewise, the modest $16,000 increase in the budget of the Regulatory Review Secretariat was added to allow for the payment for the staff and anticipated salary increases in that secretariat.

On the revenue side of the equation I’d like to draw your attention to one figure, the bottom line. We are estimating revenue to drop dramatically over last year’s estimates, from $283 million to $236 million. Normally, Mr. Chairman, this might be considered bad news, but in this context it is not. This reduction is due to our government’s decision to reduce fees so that they are more in line with the cost of delivering the service, and that’s good news. It’s good news for Albertans because they are the benefactors of the reduction.

As detailed in the budget documents tabled by the Treasurer, we have reduced and in some cases eliminated fees related to land titles, personal property, and corporate registry services. For example . . .

MS OLSEN: Don’t forget to say why it happened, that it was because the Supreme Court said so. [interjections]

MRS. NELSON: Have you finished now?

Mr. Chairman, before I was so rudely interrupted by the members opposite, I was in the final stages of my deliberation here, so I will just complete it.

THE CHAIRMAN: Not only was there interruption on the one side; there was equal interruption on the other side. We would hope that both sides could refrain from adding comments until you’re recognized and able to stand and speak.

Madam Minister, if you could continue.

MRS. NELSON: An example of the reduction of fees, Mr. Chairman, is that the filing of a corporate annual return now has no costs attached to it, and another example would be the reduction from $365 to $133 in the case of registering land title transactions in the purchase of a home.

These reductions were made in response to the recommendations of an interim report on fees and charges by the review committee chaired by Mary O’Neill, the MLA for St. Albert. This was a result of the Eurig case from Ontario that was tested in the courts. Alberta, I might say, is the only province in this country to have followed through on the review of fees and charges. All other jurisdictions . . . [interjections] If the hon. member opposite would just for five seconds button it, I could finish this off.

All other provinces have moved their own legislation to ratify the fees and the overcharging that they had. This government is the only one to make the reductions, and this is from the interim report.

The total cost of this reduction in revenue for my ministry alone is $55 million, which will go back to Albertans. In fact, Mr. Chairman, most of these are fees that are collected through our registry system, and I’m able to report that as of the day after the budget most of our registries had already started the process of reducing the fee structure at the local level. We will be monitoring that to ensure that these dollars do go back to Albertans. So we are clearly giving back.

This next year, Mr. Chairman, will be a challenging year for this ministry. Not only will we continue to strive to provide Albertans with the services that they deserve and the protection that they need, but we will be looking at better ways to connect Albertans to government services using technology and any other tool that we can find. Our gateway project will be the first in this country to allow Albertans to actually phone one place and get answers to their questions. In fact, they’ll actually have someone that will pick up the phone and say, “How may I help you?” instead of getting a number to push or voice mail that doesn’t provide any service whatsoever. I’m looking forward to this project because I think it’s long overdue, and I hope all hon. members in this Legislature will be supportive of it.

The revamping also, Mr. Chairman, of our systems that are quite old. I hope that hon. members will be supportive of our project to revamp our three systems that desperately need it. If we are going to continue to provide the service level that we have been providing to Albertans, we are going to have to revamp these systems because they have reached capacity. If we don’t do something with them, we will not be able to offer that service, so we must do it. We must get started now so that we can prepare for the day when they no longer can do the job and we will be able to say that we have a new system in place.

Those are my opening comments, Mr. Chairman. I look forward to questions from the members in the Assembly. I will make the commitment that if I don't have all of the answers tonight or don't get them to you, I will do as I have done in the past. I will make sure I have them back to the members of the Assembly, to the committee very quickly, and I think I've shown in the past that that has been usually within a 10-day time frame to answer questions, depending on the volume. So I welcome questions.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's interesting going through the budget of the Ministry of Government Services, considering that this is the first budget out and the first ministry of its kind. I go through the goals. I'm going to start with a different number and read goal 3, "a fair and effective marketplace in Alberta with a high standard." Then I hear the minister say that it's one window, working with seven different departments to make things better for Alberta.

I'd just like to start off by saying that I remember my first bill in this House, an omnibus bill on registries, and that was back in the spring of 1997. Then there was Bill 16 and bills 9 and 10. Of the things that we pointed out at that particular time, a couple of cases have come back and haunted the department. One was an employee that wanted to find out about a Suburban car to buy, a few things like that. So we have to be careful. As you say, things have to be monitored.

The major announcement this year was the reduction in a number of service fees. This is really in response to a Supreme Court case in Ontario and a decision that required user fees to be in line with the cost of services being provided. As I started to go through all these different things and looked at $60 million in reductions in the user fees and charges announced in the budget, it proves once and for all that the Premier and his government broke the promise. And it isn't just this Premier. That goes back to 1964. It is a broken promise not to increase the tax burden on Albertans, and it is about 73 times that it actually happened.

Now, for the minister's information, on one of the questions she can go back and check with the department. When we FOIPed to get some information on registries and so on, I got 12 pages of this: the figures on one side blanked out all the way through. This is another item. You know, we get slammed in here about FOIPing, but the fact is that this is the only way we can actually find out information. I believe that even with the study being done or being looked at by the Member for St. Albert, I probably would ask the question to the new minister: how many of these are taxes versus user fees? In one of your answers tonight you can state probably yes or no: will you give any information back to us except for what has been FOIPed and whited out on these particular sheets?

Looking at user fees and registries since 1964, under land titles in 1964 and 1965 – and I know that was a Socred government – they collected $2,465,772 versus $49,993,000 in 1997-98 under this present government, one heck of a big jump. Personal properties went from $104,686 in '74-75 up to $11,198,000 last year. Motor vehicles: same thing; $36 million in 1974 versus almost $185 million this past year. You know, these figures are astronomical.

As I read through, under goal 4 it states: "a streamlined, effective, and relevant regulatory environment." It also states, as I'm reading the mission statement, that there's going to be lots of follow-up, yearly follow-up and so on. I wonder if people that would actually be going in to register for something are going to realize that there is going to be this follow-up. Are they going to give their permission? Are they going to be blindsided if they get a phone call two weeks later, a month later on this follow-up? What is the follow-up actually for? If it's for the ministry, if it's following up on whether there is any wrongdoing, I totally agree with it.

Regarding performance measures for customer satisfaction, how will the consumer be selected for contact? This is going back to what I'm asking. Are most people going to be called back after two weeks or a month, or is it going to be random? Will they be advised that they may be contacted at a later date for follow-up on this initial point of contact? If the survey is contracted out, how will the minister deal with a consumer who does not want a private contractor to know they have contacted the ministry with a particular question? What if many of the consumers do not give their names and numbers? How will these be followed up? Will the yearly survey only look at consumers who contact the minister's office? Will there be an information campaign encouraging people to contact the ministry for advice and information? Which point of contact will be included in this survey?

One that's really striking is: what would the minister consider an effective measure to replace the ineffective status reports and three-year achievement statistics? Will the minister consider establishing a new measure?

Going through the highlights for 2000-2001: "development of a 'one window to government services' initiative." That is fine and dandy, but how many people actually own electronic systems in Alberta? That is, how many are on the Net, and how many of those actually know how to do it? I'm noticing that there are lots of references here to electronics and electronic systems. Will more resources be added in areas if the 95 percent target is not reached?

Madam Minister, the only way user fees and charges have gone in Alberta over the past seven years is up. Between '92-93 and the present, 1999-2000, user fees and premiums and charges increased by $290 million, or 28 percent. You say that you're reducing that by $60 million. In referring to the $290 million that it has gone up, I'm still wondering whether it's going down.

I look at some of the figures in here and how greatly they have fallen, and that's anywhere from 33 percent in some cases to 90 percent in other cases. There are some cases where you're having it for life. That hasn't changed, and I understand that totally. You take a look at this, and it's not hard to see where you can come up with savings all the way through. I'm wondering why it can't be higher than the $60 million in just looking at the way these ratios have changed.

You get a lot of cases. You've got the certificate of incorporation and the certificate of continuance under section 181 of the Business Corporations Act. They have dropped from $300 to $100. Those are the old government fees and the new government fees. The certificate of revival: $300 to $100. The certificate of continuance under section 261 of the Business Corporations Act: $300 to $100. Under a search for each corporation, you have areas like $10 plus $1 per page down to $5 for the whole file, if I understand the whole file by the word "file." A printed search for each corporation: $10 to $1. That's astronomical. We've got a 90 percent change in that particular item.

Will the minister please provide actual costs of services prior to the reduction in fees and since the reduction in fees for the following fees under the Alberta companies regulations: certificate of incorporation, certificate of amendment, certificate of restoration? In most cases there's a 50 percent difference, in other cases 60 percent. The printed search for each corporation: $10 to $1.

Will the minister please provide an actual cost of service prior to the reduction of fees and since reduction in fees for the following fee reductions under the Co-operative Associations Act? Here are cases where we're falling: certificate of amalgamation, from $300 to $100; certificate of revival, from $300 to $100; certificate of status, from $25 to $5. These are nice figure changes for Alberta's economy and for people's money to stay in their own pockets. When they are dealing with a provincial government, these should show Albertans that there is a major change in take-home money or money that has stayed in their pockets.

Will the minister please provide the actual costs of service prior to reduction in fees and since the reduction in fees for the following fee reductions under the Partnership Act? This particular one is a major case of dropping: filing a certificate of limited partnership, from $150 down to $50; filing a notice of amendment certificate, from $50 to $15. In most cases I can go on. As I went through and put this together, there was a considerable difference, and I'm appreciative of that.

Can the minister please provide an actual cost of service prior to the reduction of fees and since the reduction of fees for the following reductions under the Cemetery Companies Act: the certificate of incorporation, from $50 in the old government fees down to $10 in the new? This goes back to another bill that I believe we had last spring. This is very reasonable and timely to help people in the case of death and so on.

How many user fees in the Alberta registries are direct or indirect taxes? That is my number one question.

What about the DAOs? Where's the preliminary report from Treasury that the Treasurer promised? This goes back to the fact that if there is a study by the Member for St. Albert, we also hear rumours that it'll be buried in the Treasury Board and not actually see the light of day.

MRS. NELSON: Wrong.

MR. GIBBONS: Wrong? Good. I'll wait for the minister's answer on that one, but these are rumours that have been coming out from different sources we do have.

Mandatory preparation of impact analysis statements on all proposed new or increased user fees and charges. This is right around tax cuts.

[Mr. Fischer in the chair]

Mr. Chairman, I could be going on for quite a while, but I'll just sit down and let some of my other members jump up and ask a few questions. I know that one particular question wants to be asked around these particular fees.

8:31

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Madam Minister.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I thought I'd respond to the hon. member's questions as much as I can, and it may help some of the others. He talked about comparing costs of 1964 and 1965 to 1997 and 1998. A lot of us were still in early school, so things have changed dramatically in that time frame. In fact, some of us were really in early school. Earnings and costs were substantially different in 1964 and '65 compared to 1997-98, so there is an anticipation that costs would go up. I mean, I think that back then you could probably still buy a decent house for about $30,000 in Calgary, a really nice house, and today you're looking at $150,000 or more. Things become relative, so the relationship between 30 some odd years or 40 years back is a little bit different, and things would anticipate it.

Now, insofar as the hon. member asking about customer satisfaction and surveying and trying to see if in fact the services that are being presented through the various outlets are meeting the satisfaction levels that are expected by the consumers, i.e. Albertans. There are a number of ways you can do that, through card surveying at the outlet site itself or through random telephone surveys, which are quite often used. But one thing that's kind of unique about registries is that almost every Albertan visits them at some time or another throughout the year for one type of application or another.

You get people who visit those on a regular basis – and one is shaking her head. You never get a driver's licence or a licence plate, ticket, or anything like that? You have no reason to go there? A lot of people do go in. So we can do surveying, and actually the surveying that we've had, quite frankly, has been extremely successful. It's important for us to know that there's customer satisfaction, because if changes have to be made through our agreement with the registry agents, we would move forward to do that.

The other thing is we keep track, and for the hon. member's own riding of Edmonton-Manning we have a log on all of the calls that come in, for everybody, so he gets an idea. Through our call centre we keep track of this so that we can see if there are trends and complaints, and from September 1 of 1999 we had people from the constituency of Edmonton-Manning phoning and talking to us about the natural gas direct marketers, concerns with that, and we dealt with those. We had a lot of people from that riding talk about how they can access courts and other agencies, so we were able to give direction and send people to the right places to get the right information. We had people that were having contractual disputes that phoned in and wanted to know how they could deal with those things. We had people that talked to us about time-shares. We had people that talked about evictions. We keep track of this, and we do this on a geographical basis.

This tracking system is fairly well perfected now. I think it's an interesting thing for members of this Assembly to be able to call and ask: what kind of calls are coming in from my constituency? Now, we probably won't do this more than once or twice a year because it's quite time consuming to run it off, but it's interesting. It gives you an idea of some of the different issues that are in different jurisdictions and different locations, and then we as an Assembly can deal with those issues. So the tracking system is working because we're able to identify some of the areas.

Housing inquiries were another concern that came out of that riding, along with residential tenancy issues. They all come through the information call centre, and we're able to deal with them with a real live person answering a question and giving information. They deserve to have that information, and they need to know it right now. These are issue-based calls that they want information on. Most of it is probably straight information, and they're not too sure where to go to get it.

I'd say to hon. members that if you ever want to have a frustration, go to the telephone book. In Calgary it's the blue pages and I think it's probably the blue pages in Edmonton as well that list government offices, the three levels of government. None of them are different.

We did a little test. We weren't picking on anybody. We truly were not. We went off-site, and we made 50 random phone calls to numbers that are listed there for various and sundry delivery points. Most of them had the voice-activated response. You phone in. You have a question; you want an answer. It says: if you want this, push 1; if you want that, push 2. You go all the way up to 9, and you can't remember what 1 to 5 were, and you're frustrated. And then you get another one where actually you get voice mail: "I'm sorry; I'm not in the office right now," or "I'm on the phone. Please leave your number, and I'll get back to you," or "Push zero and somebody will come on," and you maybe then get their voice mail, "I'm sorry; I'm not at my desk now," and it goes on and on. We had calls that were transferred five times and no voice. No voice at all. Or it says, "Leave your name and number, and I'll get back to you." Well, when? In an hour? Four hours? Three days later? Are you supposed to stand by your phone and wait for that call to come? That to me is not service.

By having this call centre and the ability for Albertans to be able to phone and actually have someone pick up the phone and our being able to track that – I think Albertans deserve that. I think it's rude to have these voice mails on. I think it's inconsistent with offering a service. To me that's a disservice. I'd rather no one answer the phone than to have one of those things come on, quite frankly.

The hon. member also talked about the fees and the changes to them. I'm going to go back again. Alberta is the only province that reacted to the Supreme Court challenge from the Ontario Eurig case. We're the only one that did. I have to say, as much as the hon. member opposite is giggling her little head off over there, that my department worked like slaves last summer and fall to go through the fees that are attached. They went through 94 different fee structures, in fact more than that. But they found that 94 of the fees that were charged through to Albertans were beyond the cost recovery amount. That's what prompted the reduction. Alberta voluntarily agreed to follow the process. Nobody was forced to do that, but Alberta said: let's set the trend; let's do this. Other jurisdictions have swept it under the carpet and run it into their legislation. We did not. We chose to look at them, to look and see what was cost recovery, what in fact were the costs attached to charging those fees and those services, and that's what came out in this budget.

Now, when you're going to provide a service, naturally there's a cost attached to that, Mr. Chairman. While this was a budget document, I think it's important. This may be trivial to the members opposite, but in our office it is not. People worked to do this and to back up the costs that were justifiable for all of these different fees and charges. There are not very many governments that actually have a process or a service that they provide where there's no charge at all – no charge at all – not even a nickel.

When you look under the Business Corporations Act, filing an annual return prior to this review cost $10. Today there is no charge. A certificate of dissolution was $50. Today there is no charge. Appointment of a receiver was $20. Today there is no charge. Printing and searching each corporation used to be $10. Now it is $1. We brought these costs down to the bare minimum to recover our costs, and that's what's in this report. If you go to the Alberta companies regulations, again filing an annual return was $8. Now it's no charge.

I would challenge the members opposite to find another government that has come forward with a plan like this that has actually taken the cost out. Most governments will try to justify why they don't have to do it. They'll build some fictitious amount to put in there. We actually followed through on the commitment that the Premier and the Treasurer made last spring that we would do this job and we would go forward.

I think it's frivolous and unacceptable to myself after I know how hard this department worked with this committee chaired by the Member for St. Albert to do the job, and I think it's unfair for the members opposite to make fun of this and to belittle something that is actually quite serious. I know that Albertans will receive the benefit of $55 million going back to them. Most governments increase costs. This one is reducing them.

Those are my comments, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Edmonton-Manning, please.

MR. GIBBONS: I was already there.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'm sorry.
Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Well, there's an enthusiastic crowd waiting to respond to the minister. We're having to arm wrestle each other for the opportunity to get up.

You know, I have to admire this minister's absolutely rock-solid, unshakable belief in what she is doing. It is an admirable quality.

MRS. NELSON: I'm a believer.

MS BLAKEMAN: You are.

Now, the system of faith and belief is based on different things, and sometimes there's a factual variance in them. While I admire the minister's unshakable belief that this government has out of the goodness of their heart done something of great benefit to the population, the truth is that the Eurig decision said that you must reduce these fees or be able to justify that this is the cost of the service. I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood is positively chafing at the bit to address that particular section of the minister's comments, so having stated that very briefly, I will go on to my questions.

This is an interesting portfolio, and despite the best efforts of the minister to explain it, I have a couple of questions about the goals and the setup for this. The first goal is "a common portal ('gateway') so Albertans receive the services they deserve." The minister was talking about best practices, and I notice that's part of one of the strategies that's in here. My questions are: can the minister provide examples of other systems like this, even close to this, even partly what they're trying to do, that exist in other places? I'm just wondering how well this idea in fact works and if there were any examples the government was able to look at to see what worked and what didn't.

One of my concerns about this system – and I have seen this sort of kick in in some other similar but also different systems – is the idea of homogenization. When you were able to phone, let's say, a government department in the old days, you got someone who worked in that department every day. They knew the ins and outs of what was going on. They knew the specifics of the problem. They may have even heard of a similar issue or problem that had been raised before. They knew how to work their way through the system and who to phone in their own department and go, "You know, I've got somebody on the phone, and they're asking about this thing," and it's not very common or perhaps there's a slightly different twist on it that isn't that usual.

One of my concerns about this one-stop shopping is that it gets so generic that you are unable to get the specifics of the information you're looking for. You've got a call centre; you've got a great big barn of a place with 100 or 200 or 300 people sitting in there with their little StarSet telephones on answering the questions, and they don't actually work in the department. They don't know all the ins and outs of this. They've been given a sort of manual that says: if they're asking about this, give them this information. That's why I'm asking you: has the minister been able to find examples of a system like this that is working well or even parts of a system like this that is working well? That's my concern.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

I'll give you a related example, for instance. It's about phoning for pension information. They've now got a cross-Canada system federally, and the strangest things happen here because it's hooked up so that wherever you phone – and this works geographically. If you phone from a certain area of the country, you automatically get sent to a certain call centre in a given region. So if by some reason, and in this case bad luck, you initiated or had your pension or worked most of your life in Winnipeg and you're now retired to Vancouver or Victoria – that's more likely – when you phone Canada pension, you get directed or channeled to the B.C. version of it. Well, I'm sorry; they don't have your file, they don't know how to find your file, and in fact they cannot phone nor can you phone the Winnipeg version of things. So everything gets homogenized and put into this great big melting pot that comes down to some kind of brown goo. You don't get any specific information and any substance.

So I'm not criticizing the system. I'm asking here for what kind of research you did, and can you pull examples for me? Did they do it in New Zealand or India or anyplace else where they've been able to address some of these problems and conquer some of the problems we know happen already?

The minister spoke about testing, and I'm wondering. Many years ago I had a job as a 411 operator in Calgary, and our calls used to be monitored. They were automatically pulled out of the lineup, and someone would be listening in. Now I notice – I phoned something the other day, and as I waited, listening to the Muzak and tapping my foot, there was a little electronic voice that came on and said, "Your call may be monitored to ensure quality service," which I think is the same system. The calls get pulled out of the electronic lineup and drop into the monitoring cycle, and someone listens in, one presumes to make sure that the service provider is answering the problems accurately and has treated the customer with respect and that sort of thing.

So I'm just wondering: what's the testing system that you're looking at? Is it one of those electronic pull-offs that I'm describing here? I know that with the telephone company, they actually used to post the results. They would post a transcript of a telephone conversation once a week, I think, and you sort of had to pass by this bulletin board in the coffee room and look and see. It didn't identify who the operator was, but you could read the conversation and figure out if it was your call and you'd made the mistake. It was almost like the way they do baseball games. There's an error, and there's a mistake. No, I'm using the wrong terms. In baseball you can make a small mistake and a big mistake, and that's how they were doing it there. One of them's an error and the other's a . . . Okay; no baseball fans here. Right. Anyway, I'm wondering about that.

The second goal, "excellence in service development, delivery and accessibility." Now, the minister and I had worked together to address concerns that were raised by a small business operator in my constituency, and I'm looking at "consult with the survey community and other key stakeholders to identify improvements for the digital plan registration process." I'm hoping this is still going to be happy news for my small business operator.

MRS. NELSON: It's still going to be.

MS BLAKEMAN: Okay. Good. The minister can respond to me about that.

The minister had said something about this goal being "excellence," and then in describing it at a later point the minister had talked about, you know, number one here was the bottom line. I often find that there is in fact a conflict or there's a competition; you can end up with competing factors between excellence and the bottom line. Those two things don't always work hand in hand in partnership very well. So how is the minister planning on addressing this? Because if you're going to shoot for excellence, in many cases that's excellence at any cost. You deliver absolutely the best service, but that does cost money. On the other hand, if you're going for bottom line, you don't usually get excellence. You have competing factors here, and I'm wondering how the minister foresees overcoming that conflict, the almost polarities in those two objectives.

Once again I'm wondering about the privacy issues around the registries. I know that the minister is interested in doing surveys, and in our never ending struggle to protect the personal privacy of people, we know we've had issues around the registries. I'm assuming that the department has continued the work started when the registry section was under Municipal Affairs to try and address those privacy problems that showed up and where people's privacy was being contravened.

I guess the other question is how has that survey, you know, when people walk in – the minister was talking about how lots of people or most people go into the registries to renew their driver's licence or their registration. I try really hard not to, to renew my registration. They do send me a little notice in the mail, and if I get right on it, I can send my cheque and all it costs me is 46 cents. I never have to go anywhere. To me, if I end up in a registry, it means that I haven't done my bookkeeping or my bill paying very well, and I'm now behind and I'm late. The thought of running into a registry to get my snowmobiles and my car reregistered or renewed and then getting nailed for a survey by some helpful young person standing there . . . I don't know about the time allotment that's really been required there. So I'm wondering: what is the minister foreseeing around these surveys?

I get so excited when I make my notes, Madam Minister, that I have trouble later reading them. [interjection] No. It's just that my handwriting is so bad. Okay. On to the next one.

It's really interesting when I look at the number of ministries that have now been sort of torn apart and then put back together in different configurations in this government. I have noted a couple of times that in some instances we're now dealing with superministries. I don't know that that's appropriate to say about Government Services. I don't know that it's become a superministry, but it certainly has taken a number of very clear divisions or branches that were in other places and pulled them together here. I have to say, as a member of the Public Accounts Committee, that it's getting hard to follow an audit trail on this. I believe, from what I've seen in the way the numbers are presented in this ministry's budget, that there is a recognition that these entities existed before somewhere else and that that is reflecting itself.

I'm just underlining that, I guess, more than anything else because in some of the other departments that's not true. The way the statements are presented, it's as though everything was always there, but it wasn't. And if you're trying to follow an audit trail, if you're trying to follow comparisons on behalf of the public, that gets really difficult when things have come from other places and there's no reckoning of that. So as a general observation to government, I think that should be followed to be better reflecting that things have come from somewhere else or have gone to somewhere else and have been pulled out of a department.

Around the user fees, when does that kick in, Madam Minister? I just did the renewal on my two snowmobiles and my car. Once again, how is the administrative fee different if it's an administrative fee on renewing registration on vehicles? Why is there a difference? I think I paid 40 bucks a snowmobile and 50-something dollars, $58, for the car. If this is an administrative service, there should be no difference between the snowmobile and the car. Yeah, they're bigger vehicles, sure, but as far as administrative processing there shouldn't be a difference there. I just renewed this. My renewal date is the end of March, and like a good citizen I of course have already renewed and paid for that well in advance. So I'm just wondering when that is going to kick in, because it sure didn't affect me this year.

Under goal 3, "a fair and effective marketplace . . . with a high standard of business conduct," I notice there's a strategy to - continue to work and consult with key stakeholders to review and amend current legislation [under the]

 - Co-operative Associations Act
 - Charitable Fund-Raising Act and Regulations
 - Residential Tenancies Act and Regulations.

Now, the last two were of great interest to me, of course, because I come from the charitable sector and I still represent a number of them in my shadow portfolio of Community Development. So I'm asking what changes are anticipated by the minister to the Charitable Fund-raising Act and also what changes are anticipated to the regulations. Of course, being a representative of the downtown area, I have an extraordinary number of people that live in rental apartments, and the Residential Tenancies Act is an oft-used piece of legislation in my office. So I'm looking again for what sorts of changes are being contemplated there.

The person on the phone. You know, the minister spoke passionately of her belief in having a live person answer the phone. I just find it interesting that we've gone from always having a live person answering the phone to, in cost cutting and supposed efficiencies, electronic systems where almost everybody is on some sort of electronic voice mail. Now we're going back to having real people answer the phone again. I remember that Toffler, I think it was, in a futuristic book coined the phrase high tech, high touch, in which when the world got high tech enough, people would really crave the high touch, which is much more of the human contact and kind of warm, fuzzy feelings. So I'm interested that we've sort of come back to that again.

I don't think it's a bad thing in this particular department to have a human being answering the phone, but I loop back to the point I was making earlier. Is this person really going to know all the ins and outs and intricacies of everything that's happening in all the things they're covering? I suspect there's going to be a problem there, so how do you handle it? Do you end up with sort of experts that are there, and the intake worker can send them over to your expert on the Residential Tenancies Act that's sitting in the call centre and that person takes over the phone call? Or what's anticipated there?

Key performance measures. I've become a convert to these key performance measurements, and I'm really interested in the development of strong key performance measures and measuring the outcomes and the development of all that because I think if used well it can be a very valuable process. But I've seen a number of times in this government where I think I could fairly and rightly accuse them of tailoring the performance measurement to fit whatever the department was doing at the time.

I have some questions about what's being set out here. In the first performance measure/indicator "three separate groups of Registry customers are surveyed for customer satisfaction." Could we get a bit more specific on that? What are we measuring here: satisfaction with the time in which they were served, or how long it took to answer the phone or someone to come to the counter? Are we measuring how long it took to process their application? What's the satisfaction? Is it with the efficiency of how it was handled? Because things can be handled instantly but they can be done wrong, you know. So are we balancing that? Are we looking for customer satisfaction in the cost? Now, those are three very different areas, so what is the key performance measurement here?

Then we've got the "percentage of investigations which are successful." Successful how? Successful in that they were accurate, or successful in that they were completed? Isn't what is of more interest in better service for the department dealing with the ones that weren't successful? Why weren't they as successful? What went wrong? If these are the key performance measures, I would ask the minister to review this again, because I don't think they're going to be very helpful in actually giving the ministry information on how to analyze and evaluate what they're doing. Because, again, investigation . . .

Oh, I can't be finished with my time.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre raised the gateway project, because this is my pet project right now. I'm really excited about the project, because I think it's long overdue. It came as a result of a number of frustrations, quite frankly, that I experienced and constituents experienced in getting information from government. You're quite right with some of the cautions that you brought forward as to not having it – you used the term homogenized, and you're quite right. People don't want to have the handoff. If they take the effort and they take the time to make the phone call, they want the answer to the question, and they want information that is usable. They don't want something they can pick up off a newsstand. They want accurate information, or why would they make the call in the first place? It's quite often, I've found, that when you phone not necessarily government offices but someone and ask for information, they treat you like an idiot for asking the question in the first place. That's not acceptable. That's not service. To me that is pushing someone off to the side as if they should never have made the call in the first place.

So when we started looking at this – and my deputy will know – when I was in my other ministry, I banned the use of voice mail during the day. I thought it was unacceptable for the shareholder, Albertans, to phone a government office and not get someone answering the phone. After hours that's fair game, but if you're going to work for the shareholder who is the voter, who pays the bills, pays the taxes, then you darn well work for them during office hours or you call forward to someone else, if you have to leave your office, to pick up the phone. But to phone an office and have someone say, "I'm sorry, I'm not at my desk right now" or "I'm on the phone," well, couldn't the phone just have been busy? Or don't answer it; do nothing. But to have something like that come on during office hours I think is inconsiderate, it's rude, and it's lack of service.

I find the same with the banking system. I get fed up with never getting any information. They treat you as if you're an idiot. If you don't deposit with them, they don't exist, but all of a sudden it's reversed.

So service to me has been something that has been lacking and we've let slip. In a number of areas we've let service slip and we've forgotten who the customer is or who the client is or who the shareholder is or who's paying the bills. We've taken a different approach.

Now, you're right. We're back to recognizing what is important, what must be delivered. Naturally, you have a very valid point. The Department of Government Services cannot be the expert for all ministries. We would never expect to be nor do we want to be; (a) we don't have the background, and (b) we don't have the staff to do it. So the way you link this, the key to this, is that you have each department – it's like a spoke – provide the person who answers the questions that would have done it all along but on a direct basis.

My ministry cannot possibly answer questions in health or over in Infrastructure. We don't have the depth of the policy background for that ministry to give the answer to the call coming in. So instead of the call going to that department, they're linked into the central call centre and the person from their ministry will answer the call. The backup of the detail, if it's more personal, detailed, and long-term, if that person can't take the call, flips immediately to their policy person, not to my department person. We're not in a position to take those calls, but through the central call centre we have that link in. It's like a spoke of the person from that department and that department and that department is tied right in. I don't even have to physically move them into the department location. I can link them electronically into the call centre so that when the call comes in, if it's general information, it can be answered. If it's Infrastructure, boom, the person is on the phone. If it's detailed, on a personal basis, which needs long-term attention, then it goes to the policy person where it should go the first time, and that department person would say which one will handle it. You can't expect my department to be able to do that, but we can have that link with a voice right now, and it's fast.

Through CD disc with data information on: where do I get a health care card? A lot of the calls are general information: how do I get this form; where do I go for that? That can all be put on our CDs.

In fact, our call centre that we opened in the summertime to start this off – now, they'll never let me do this again. I went over and manned the phones one afternoon, and they pretty much fired me. Calls came in from all over, and I got to answer some of the calls. I know at one point I had a call come in that was from one of the northern communities and had to do with a rent-to-purchase situation. This young lady had gone into a rent-to-purchase situation in a mobile home park, and I took the call. I thought, well, that sounds great. But after three days she had been evicted. So, of course, I said: "Well, what did you do in three days? You can't do something that bad in three days," which wasn't what I was supposed to say. Anyway, she told me she'd moved the boyfriend in, and I said, "Oh, well, is there a rule that says he can't be there?" Well, apparently he'd been kicked out. I simply said, "Is he worth it?" She said no. I said: "Then you've answered your own question. Throw him out and stay in the park and that's it." I got accused of being Dr. Laura, so they don't let me answer the phones anymore, which is probably a wise choice. Anyway, she was delighted with the answer, because she came up with it herself. But it works. Now they don't let me on the phones anymore, and I was only allowed on for one day.

But it was the ability of these people to call from all over the province to one number and have somebody pick the phone up, somebody to help them with that information. Now, we had a couple of calls come in that required a lot of in-depth work with them because there was a legal consideration there, so they had to go to the next person behind me that had that kind of information.

You asked us: where did we dream this up? Well, we looked at other systems, quite frankly. We looked at the centre link system from Australia that had some components that worked well, but it really didn't do the job that I thought we should be looking at. The whole job. I mean, the components are great. We looked at the Ontario system. We looked at the New Brunswick system and Manitoba's, and they had parts, but this new concept we are putting in in Alberta is a concept that's coming from here that is combining a whole lot of ideas into one component.

Now, we've had a research project going on for the last few months in co-operation with Innovation and Science to see – because one of the things you want to do is: you have to find out what you have already. What kind of hardware do we have, what do we have for availability of resources, et cetera, in departments. You don't want to run out and spend a gazillion dollars on a bunch of hardware on a system that may or may not work. We had to find out: what do we have? Where can we go? What's the cost factor? Can this link occur? Is there a willingness and a readiness within ministries to in fact do that? And sometimes the answer is no. Turf protection.

So you're breaking down barriers. You're breaking through tradition and trying to break those walls down. Some don't like it; others think it's great. You're going through those stages which are sometimes like running the bases and dragging a hairy to get it done, but it is coming together. I think we will have this project in place this next while, and our research project should be complete this month, my deputy says. It'd better, now you're committed, Roger. It'd better be done this month. That will give us the hard core on what the links are and the capabilities of doing that.

I think, quite frankly, that in talking to people, people don't like being treated as if they don't count. They want to have service. I know I do. I get fed up with the idea that I don't matter to these groups when you phone some place. I've phoned all three levels of government, and I think, quite frankly, that it's an abysmal effort. I don't know why people would bother because they don't get anywhere. I've phoned banks, stores – I get so fed up. I refuse to work with answering machines. I just think they're absolutely rude.

MR. DICKSON: Now you know how the opposition feels.

MRS. NELSON: Well, phone your own office. Actually take the time and phone your own office. Find out if anybody answers your constituency office. Find out. It's a rude awakening, folks. People deserve better than that, so hopefully this project will do it, and I think you'll be pleased with the results. I'm quite excited about it because it's something different, and it's not a copy. The others didn't quite do the job.

I wanted to say that the hon. member mentioned also some of the things . . . [interjection] You're right. This department is a linkage between a whole bunch of things that have come together, and we've tried to provide a tracking system as to where they came from. Sometimes it's a little overwhelming with the number of statutes that are in the ministry or under our jurisdiction. Some of them were a little difficult to understand.

I just thought very quickly, Mr. Chairman, that I'd just read these names in so people know what we have, because under Alberta Registries there's the Agricultural and Recreational Land Ownership Act. We've dealt with that today. There's the Business Corporations Act, the Cemeteries Act, the Change of Name Act, the Dower Act, the Companies Act, the Garagemen's Lien Act, the Land Titles Act, the Law of Property Act, the Marriage Act, the Partnership Act, the Personal Property Security Act, the Possessory Liens Act, the Religious Societies' Land Act, the Societies Act, the Vital Statistics Act, the Warehousemen's Lien Act, the Woodmen's Lien Act.

Under consumer services there's the Cemeteries Act, the Charitable Fund-raising Act, the Condominium Property Act, the Co-operative Associations Act, the Debtors' Assistance Act, the Fair Trading Act, which is the new one that combines seven acts into one, the Franchises Act, the Funeral Services Act, the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act, the Real Estate Act, and the Residential Tenancies Act. So, Mr. Chairman, there's a lot. There are 29 statutes in this ministry, which is a lot of variety in one ministry. It is busy, and it has drawn things from all over.

The other thing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre commented on was the protection of privacy with registries. You're bang on. Under our Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy legislation we are obligated as a government to ensure that certain elements of privacy protection are there for Albertans. Now, since being in this ministry, I've had people phone and say: oh, well, just print me everything you have. Yeah, in a pig's eye. Not is the answer; you're not going to get it. There is a law in this province that says no, so we have to make sure. That's why we're still involved with our registries and our vital statistics and our land titles information. There's information in there that is just not going to be made available, and there's no debate or discussion.

We often get people phoning saying: well, give it to us and we'll look after it for you. Well, that's great. Thanks for the offer, but it's not happening because it would be against the law. We are not allowed to give that information out, so it's not going to happen. In our arrangement with our registries it's very clear. It's very clear in the partnership agreement we have with registry agents what can or cannot occur.

So your comments are very well taken, and I appreciate them, because you're on the same path and agree with what it is we are doing, and . . .

MS BLAKEMAN: Careful. That's a bit of a leap.

MRS. NELSON: I beg your pardon. [interjection] Well, I think what you've said is actually the way we – I look at your riding with the calls that have come in, and you're right. You have some keen interest.

Residential tenancy acts are important to you, and hopefully as we track calls, we'll be able with this new system – we've been testing a lot of stuff on this – to say to you: "Member for Edmonton-Centre, here are some of the issues in your area. Let's compare them to the next riding, not to pick or choose or anything else, and see if there's a trend developing." Lets try and use that information effectively.

You know, when I looked at my own riding, I found that the people that had called in from Calgary-Foothills had different concerns, and that's probably because of the location of the riding and the demographics within that riding. So it's an interesting trend.

See, we try to track by postal code, and as we get more information, it will be, I think, something we can all use. My intention would be, then, to send these to everyone so you can have an idea of what's there, not just this side of the House or that side but everyone. We haven't quite got it down to a science yet, but I think this information could be valuable. If you want to use it, go ahead. If you don't, that's up to you. Our system is allowing us to do that, and we're tracking it.

Now, I have a note here from my deputy on the Charitable Fund-raising Act, but if I could read his writing I'd be absolutely dangerous. So could somebody else tell me what we're doing with that act right now, because I can't read his writing. I'll get back to you on that one.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks Mr. Chairman. I have a number of questions for the minister, and I'm going to be going back and forth between the business plan and the budget.

The first item I'd draw the minister's attention to is on page 132 in the business plan, bullet three: "Adapt and implement new information access standards for all services provided by AGS so that they reflect fair business practices." Mr. Chairman, I know what fair information practices are that have their genesis in the OECD privacy guidelines. I don't know what "fair business practices" have to do with information access standards. I don't know if that's a misnomer. What I'd like is an explanation. I don't know what this means. There is huge interest worldwide, Europe and Quebec and other Canadian provinces, about fair information practices that underlie Bill C-6 at the federal level and other things, so I'm really not clear where the minister is going.

It then leads me into the second question I have for the minister. Mr. Samoil may have moved on, but he ran a thing called the chief information council. This was a very high-powered group of men, some of the most senior men in the government of the province of Alberta, that looked at information management, at how to sell information, at how to be able to take advantage of technology and market information that was within the possession of the government of the province of Alberta.

To me there's a really puzzling thing, and maybe my question should be directed to Mr. Elzinga or whoever was responsible for the creation of the new departments. What I need from the minister is an understanding of what protocols, formal or informal, what understandings, formal or informal, exist to differentiate what the FOIP office in the Department of Municipal Affairs does, what the information management component of Government Services does, and what the chief information officer and the chief information council do. Madam Minister, through the chair, there are huge areas of overlap just looking at the plan here.

I've looked through the material from the chief information council, and I certainly study the material that comes through the FOIP section of the Department of Municipal Affairs, and I can tell you that there's lots of overlap. I know that you don't want duplication. So I'd like to see what the protocols are, what the boundaries, divisions, what those lines are to ensure that we don't have three different government offices falling over each other, all busying themselves dealing with government information. That would undermine the very thesis the minister is putting forward in terms of why her department exists and what its purpose is.

Related to that, I refer the minister to the budget, page 198. We have a number of things there. The first bullet under Mission: "Provide a secure, high-quality, and innovative gateway to a wide range of government services, including consumer information." Then if you look under Business Plan Goals and Major Strategies, page 198, second bullet: "Continue to streamline . . . access to government information through 'one-window access.'" I mean, one-window access always sounds great, but if we look at what's going on here, what's clear is that we're once again duplicating services.

You see, if I were designing department organization – and I'm not. But if I were in Mr. Elzinga's position or whoever came up with the plan, I would have moved FOIP. I would have moved FOIP into Government Services, because it's absolutely consistent with all these other things you're doing. The minister feigns cardiac arrest. She doesn't know how much fun FOIP is.

The point I'm making, Mr. Chairman, is that I would think we'd cluster activities where they appropriately fit together, and the division, Madam Minister – well, you asked for it; you've got it. You want information management; you want one-stop shopping, Madam Minister through the chair, then take it all. Take it all. Don't take components 1, 3, and 5 and leave 2 and 4 for somebody else to deal with. That undermines the whole thesis of your department's mission.

I'm looking for some clarification in terms of why FOIP is orphaned. We're doing all these other things with information management and government information and access and one-stop shopping. There's a basic lack of logic in that. This minister can't reorganize the departments, but she can certainly tell me how she's worked out an efficient way to be able to ensure that there isn't a gap between the different services and how that fits together.

Let me bridge to the next item. It's one of privacy issues, an issue that's a keen concern of mine. I refer the minister to her business plan. On page 128, the second bullet from the bottom, Madam Minister, you talk about one of your challenges being dealing with "consumer and privacy protection." On page 129, the fourth bullet from the top, there's "the need to respect both the right to access . . . records and the protection of privacy in the execution of the Ministry's activities." Then we go to the budget book, page 198, and lo and behold, there we see reference again in the last bullet to "current consumer issues."

Well, one big consumer issue is privacy protection. The minister must have heard that. Everybody I know who's worked at the consumer affairs department, in whatever incarnation it's been, will tell you that one of the things people raise as a concern is privacy issues. So what I have to understand is what's being done in that respect.

Then that takes me to a pet issue of mine, and that is: why is it, Madam Minister, that when it comes to Bill C-6 in the federal Parliament, which is going to regulate electronic commerce in this province for every business in this province, the government in this province hasn't done what Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Ontario and, I think, Manitoba have all done? They've had public hearings to allow business people, to allow consumers to find out what the heck is going on in terms of legislation around protecting consumer information, privacy information, and what the impact is going to be of Bill C-6.

I remember telling her, although this minister may not, when she was doing, I think, Economic Development, about the European Union privacy code. You weren't familiar with it, but to your credit you had checked up on it, and you got some information on it. Well, it surfaces again, Madam Minister, in your new portfolio.

I have to say that there's been an abject lack of leadership on the part of your government in terms of informing and involving Albertans in this issue and in this debate. I want to challenge the minister. What is this minister going to do in terms of providing leadership, in terms of alerting Albertans and Alberta businesses and Alberta consumers about some of the trends and some of the issues and the impact of that federal legislation and what the Alberta response is going to be to that?

Madam Minister, you haven't addressed that in your comments. You haven't addressed it in your business plan or in the budget, but I'd sure like to know. I'll challenge her to undertake those same public hearings that other provinces have so people find out what's going on. We have legislation that only deals with the public sector, and that's a gap that's got to be remedied.

Now, the minister has teased us tonight by talking about what's going on in the constituency of Edmonton-Manning. She's talked about what's going on in the constituency there. I hope she's going to share with me the range of concerns in Calgary-Buffalo. My guess is that residential tenancies, safe, affordable housing, is the number one issue in my constituency. That's what I determine from my constituency office. I'd like to know if the minister has something different.

I'm going to ask you specifically. Madam Minister, you've told us that you've gone to a lot of trouble to prepare the information on a constituency basis. Would you tell me why you have done that? We've just finished watching Jane Stewart being grilled for two weeks in the House of Commons . . .

MS HALEY: A loss of millions.

MR. DICKSON: No, no. It's not about the loss of money. [interjections] If you'd let me finish developing . . . [interjections] Okay. Well, don't jump to conclusion, then, before you have all the information.

Madam Chairman, the issue is this. What the federal government has been asked is: why do you collect information on a constituency basis? I mean, why wouldn't you do it on a city basis or on a region basis or northwest Calgary, northeast Calgary, southwest or southeast Calgary? Would the minister share with us on what basis she's decided to collect information about calls on a constituency basis. I'd be interested in that.

I'd like to ask the minister not just what concerns have been raised in my constituency, but I'm interested in knowing about all 21 Calgary constituencies. I expect my colleagues would like to see what's going on in terms of Edmonton. I would think, Madam Minister, that you would want to share that information, particularly because it's been such a big project in your department. So I'll speak for my colleagues; I can't speak for the government members. I think my colleagues would like to see that information broken down on a constituency basis. I think we'd also like to see, Madam Minister, your protocols for how you respect sections 37 and 38 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. There are some strictures, some constraints in terms of the use of personal information, and perhaps the minister could just tell us what protocols have been developed to deal with that.

Moving on. The other item, page 133 in the business plan, has to do with residential tenancies, and I come back and say that the number one issue in Calgary-Buffalo is finding safe, affordable housing, a huge, huge issue. Even though there's a little relaxation in terms of the vacancy situation, it's still really tight. Now, I remember when the forerunner of your department, the Department of Municipal Affairs I think it was, had undertaken a review of the Residential Tenancies Act with a view to legislative change. There were public hearings, Madam Minister, in Calgary. I went to a couple of them. There were proposals to make some changes. And then it died. It absolutely died. Whether it's the Calgary Apartment Association, whether it's tenants in Calgary-Buffalo, whether it's people in any other part of the province, I think they'd like to know what's going on with residential tenancies.

We have, arguably, the weakest tenancy protection of any jurisdiction in Canada. I challenge you to tell me what province has a weaker piece of legislation. I'd like to know in terms of rent increases, in terms of condominiumization. Madam Minister, you know Calgary as well as I do. You know that conversions of apartments to condominiums is widespread. Nobody is building low-cost housing, multiple-family housing.

We're talking about displaced seniors. We're talking about displaced new Canadians. We're talking about displaced low-income people. This issue of homelessness may not be your task and your agenda, but residential tenancies plays a huge part. We're doing a better job in Alberta looking after people who are absolutely on the street. We're not doing a very good job – in fact, I'd say that in the high-rent areas like Calgary, Brooks, Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, we're doing a lousy job in terms of allowing people to stay in apartments. There are a lot of people in this province who are that one rent cheque or one rent increase away from the street. I've not seen very much leadership from the provincial government on this issue, Madam Minister.

You tease us by saying on page 199 of the budget book: "Continue to work and consult with key stakeholders to review and amend current legislation," and part of that is the "Residential Tenancies Act and Regulations." Madam Minister, I'm a key stakeholder. I represent the constituency that has the highest density of any of the 83 constituencies in Alberta. My colleague for Edmonton-Centre challenges me and talks about the number of renters she represents. Something like 92 percent of my constituents are renters. Nobody has asked me to be involved in changes to the Residential Tenancies Act. More importantly, nobody has asked my constituents. So maybe it's time. The key stakeholders here, Madam Minister, are those seniors' organizations, groups of tenants, consumer associations. It isn't just the apartment owners; it's not just the apartment managers.

So you might particularize for me: who are the key stakeholders that you're working with now? What changes are you contemplating to the Residential Tenancies Act? Are you going back to the proposal that had been proposed I think it was four years ago, and that was to abolish the Landlord and Tenant Advisory Board in the city of Calgary, its Edmonton counterpart, and replace it with an industry-run thing? Now, that was torpedoed. That was stillborn. But when I see this vague note here with no backup particulars, I wonder whether that issue has been resurrected and whether we're going to see some change there.

Madam Minister, there is lots of concern in terms of speedy access. The provision is now for people to go to the small claims division of Provincial Court when they want to sue their landlord or a landlord wants to sue their tenant. We've got some major delays here. It's not just the statute; it's the processes available to tenants and landlords. I'd like to know what initiative you're taking, what leadership you're providing in terms of trying to find solutions, how you're working with the Minister of Justice, maybe the Minister of Municipal Affairs to co-ordinate those things. I haven't heard you address any of those things, and I hope I'll get some response before it comes time to vote on this.

Finally, let me turn to my other favourite issue: regulations. You talk about the regulations secretariat. Lord knows, my friend from Peace River is a hardworking MLA, and he's been, you know, slaving away trying to reduce the number of regulations. Full kudos to him. But if you want to aggressively reduce those 700 to 800 regulations that each year are proclaimed in this province, you're never going to do it until you have a body strong enough to challenge ministers and deputy ministers who trot out all the regulations, all the laws that they'd like to make in their empires, until you embrace what virtually every other jurisdiction in North America does, which is some all-party oversight of subordinate lawmaking.

I'm going to challenge you, Madam Minister, because you're a minister with a reputation for not being intimidated by departments and bureaucrats and past precedent. I like to challenge any minister who's as bold as you have been and as fearless as you have been to have a look at . . . [interjections] Well, I'm quite genuine. I've watched this minister in the eight years I've been an MLA, and she's brought that approach to every department she's been responsible for.

I'm going to challenge her to take some of the good suggestions she's heard from the opposition in terms of regulation management. We can do, you know, as good a job as the Member for Peace River has done. We have the evidence that we can do much better. You don't have to look any further than the FOIP regulation that came in in August, September of 1997 that took a whole bunch of statutes and just by regulation took them out of FOIP for a couple of years, and then another regulation came along. You know, there were weak claims. The Information and Privacy Commissioner was consulted about that. He was critical about some of the decisions that had been made. So we can do a lot better in that respect.

I look forward to working with the minister on those matters, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Again I'll try and answer some of the questions. I was quite pleased with the inquiry from the Member for Calgary-Buffalo as to the co-ordination of the IT projects. His comments are quite valid. In the past you saw departments operating as silos, or in isolation, without co-ordinated planning on IT development. That's been a flaw, I think, of most large bureaucracies, that there isn't a co-ordinated planning process to make sure there isn't duplication, overlap, all the things we've all talked about. But when push comes to shove, it's how you eliminate that kind of duplication from continuing to occur and from actually being enhanced. Because when we talk about high tech, it's always easy to say, "We're off to the races, and we're going to replace everything" in isolation as a department instead of as the whole.

That's why the chief information officer's position becomes absolutely critical in the whole scheme of things. IT plans by department under this restructured program all have to be flowed through the IT chief information officer and through Innovation and Science as the co-ordinating department to make sure that in fact you don't have that duplication and overlap, so that you have co-ordination, so that actually equipment or programs that are purchased today might even be compatible between departments so that they can actually communicate with each other instead of being islands on their own, or in isolation or silos, or whatever the acronym may be for the various departments.

That's not easy, because you know that anytime you make a change, you cause stress and aggression within the system, but as a government we've said that that is the way it's going to be. I sit on the Treasury Board, as you know. I've been there since 1992. When a department comes forward with an IT plan, which everybody has – everybody has an IT plan – the first question that comes up is: what has the chief information officer's program done in review and approval and co-ordination on it? If you haven't hit that, go back to square one, start over, and come through the process, because as you've pointed out, these systems are expensive, and if they're not co-ordinated, you'll never accomplish your goal or your mission.

It's a difficult task, and it's quite amazing how they can go off and create almost lives of their own if left in isolation. A department of a government is no more than a division of a large corporation. There has to be the overall upper-level plan, but the divisions or departments have to fit into that schematic, and they have to be co-ordinated and all going forward.

That's a difficult task. It's a change of attitude, a change of thought, and quite frankly that's not always an easy sell. You talked about me being, I guess, bold in some ways, and that's right, but the expectation of justification is there, because – again, I'll go back to the comments from Edmonton-Centre—the shareholder is paying the bill, so there has to be an accountability level back to that shareholder, whether it's through IT development, new schematics, regulatory review.

I was most impressed with your comments on regulations. Governments have a tendency to take the book and add, but they don't take anything out. When you put the new one in, you don't take the old one out, and it just goes on and on. That's why, through the regulatory review process that we have, for a new regulation to go into place, it must go through the secretariat, and there's a template that tells you whether it's acceptable or not.

But the key in there is that there has to be a sunset clause. On most regulations coming forward there has to be a sunset clause, which forces review of the existing regulation or it drops off the table and dies. That helps keep the regulation current so that the book doesn't keep building, as happens. I love all my department people and bureaucracy, but sometimes you think people stay up nights thinking of regulations to put in place for the sake of having regulations, and you don't want that. So you've got to put this in place so that that drop-dead date occurs for everything that you possibly can. It drops off the table; it's gone.

Review process is difficult, and it's been a bugbear of mine from the time I was elected that governments put regulation on regulation on regulation, which nobody half the time can understand or interpret anyway. It's costly, it's time-consuming, it's cumbersome, and it's frustrating. So the process of regulatory review through the secretariat is quite fierce, quite frankly, and I think you'll see this year that the hon. member will have more ability on that.

I was a little disappointed. I am not looking at logs for any purpose other than information. I don't have to do this. I mean, I can trash this tomorrow. If you guys don't want the information, say so, and that's the end of that, and it's an exercise we won't be doing. If you'd like the information and if you find it helpful, great; we'll produce it. If not, say so, and our people can do other things. They've got lots of things they can do with their time. They don't need to do this. This isn't an exercise that does anything politically other than provide information. It's data. That's all. [interjection] Well, I'll you what. We just trashed it. It won't be done again, so the instruction is now that we won't be providing that. It's all gone. You don't need that. But if you want it by northern, if you want it by southern, we can do that. We can provide that information. In Calgary we have different issues than in Edmonton, and it's reasonable to look at that. I like to see where information data is going.

MR. DICKSON: We would too.

MRS. NELSON: Well, I offered it, but if you don't want it, that's fine. You don't have to have it.

Now, you asked me what the best business practices and fair information practices are. I think that under the Fair Trading Act there are elements there that are pretty self-explanatory. I think that act is working well. I think that with the co-operation of the number of entities that feed into that Fair Trading Act that is giving us best practices within the province. Where needed there has to be disclosure of information. Sometimes it's voluntary; sometimes it's legislated. There has to be enough information so people know what they're getting into.

The hon. member talked about—what was the other thing? Just a minute. I was just looking for the last one that you asked me about. Oh, I know. I wanted to go back to Edmonton-Centre on performance measures, and I didn't get to you on those. This is a new ministry. We were trying to develop some base performance measures. I believe in exact performance measures. I don't believe in taking the global or what I call external performance measures and saying that they're my ministry's performance measures, because they're not.

MS BLAKEMAN: It's not useful.

MRS. NELSON: Well, you can include that as an external indicator of successes and how we might fit into that, but we certainly don't create that, so I look at exact ones within our ministry. I call them internal performance measures, what we in fact can exactly do and perform to reach goals, not the external side. We've struggled with that somewhat. We haven't maybe got them as specific as we will, but I think next year's process will give us an ability as to how we can have more specific internal measures. So they aren't as specific as they might be in this business plan, but I think we need that year on the reorganization and on our system development to be able to provide you with more specifics on the performance measures. We're trying to come back with that, and we know there have to be some improvement areas there. I think, Mr. Chairman, one of the hon. members wants to speak.

We will keep you going on that. As we go through this next year in building our business plan and enhancing that, we should have more specific measures in there. It was a good comment, but I don't believe in fabricating performance measures and relying upon external factors as a measurement of performance of a government department. That to me is not reality, so we will be dealing with reality throughout this year's planning process and restructuring model. So I think next year you'll see a little tighter set of performance measures in our business plan.

MS BLAKEMAN: I'd rather see them now.

MRS. NELSON: I don't blame you. I would too, but because of the restructuring model we're going through, they are a little more general than any of us would probably really want, but they'll get tighter as we go on. Our main objective was to have customer satisfaction, and that was the one thing we would be able to measure through surveying, but we'll come up with some more key performance measures.

Oh, Bill C-6. That was another thing. That's an important bill, and you were right. You did mention that to me. When I chaired the ministers of consumer affairs meeting in the fall, in November I believe it was, in Banff, we raised the issue of Bill C-6 with Minister Manley from the federal government. Well, we all know electronic commerce is going to occur and going to be one of the key methods of doing business and trading in communications for the future. There are some concerns there from the consumer protection side and from the business protection side as to what safeguards are going to be coming into play prior to the full indoctrination of the e-commerce.

MR. DICKSON: We could do our own.

MRS. NELSON: You're quite right.

There was an example in the United States about three weeks ago where actually the FBI got involved with intrusion into the e-mail system, and that sends a signal and the signal is: people be careful. Be careful what you're doing until you know about the safeguards that are in place.

As ministers from across Canada—we compared notes from coast to coast with the other ministers—we said that the message is: what can we put in place to build in those safeguards now?

MR. DICKSON: Provincial legislation.

MRS. NELSON: Well, provincial legislation saying thou shalt be a good person and not do bad things on e-commerce doesn't quite frankly cut it. There has to be more than that. There has to be some concrete protection built in the system. I mean, I can send a message out and say: everybody be nice and friendly and good. Well, fine, but that isn't necessarily going to provide the concrete protection that needs to go into the system to make sure those safeguards are in place.

Some of the things I've found from this ministry quite frankly are shocking. Individuals will go on a system and put their Visa number on a system without any protection on it and then wonder when something goes wrong. Well, you go: "Hello. Wake up." You're putting your credit card number on a system that's going all over to a gazillion people, and you have no ability to know where it's going.

People buying off a system. I had a friend of mine who bought their truck off the Internet. Did he even see it? No. "Well, how do you know it's even going to run?" "I bought it off the Internet." Well, hello. Wake up. A little bit of common sense has to come into this as well.

But how do you put some of those connections in place or the consumer protection that we've had manually into now an automated system? There's been such a promotion of this, but where are the safeguards? Those concerns are very valid, and C-6 is an issue for us. I say that e-commerce is the way of the future, but what are the consumer protection issues? That's what we asked Mr. Manley to work with the provinces on so that we could have a coast-to-coast mechanism of doing consumer protection. We have an ability through the CanShare program to be able to compare bad actions or bad business practices coast to coast. Why would we not be able to put in place a consumer protection process so we could protect consumers coast to coast?

MR. DICKSON: You could do public hearings too.

MRS. NELSON: Well, public hearings might be one way of doing it, Member for Calgary-Buffalo, but I think we need to have something technologywise that we can present at that hearing to provide that kind of protection for the system. I heard people say that at one point you could block some of the information on the Internet, like pornographic information, from your children. Well, that lasts about 20 minutes. The kids are too smart today. They can go in and break the code, and they're into it like right now. We can't because our generation didn't learn how to do that, but the younger generation can sure do it, in about 20 minutes, because they're experts at it.

We have to be ahead of the game here and build some of those tools in place and make sure we also make consumers aware of some of the pitfalls of getting involved in this because it's the thing to do. Well, the thing to do can be a very costly venture, so we have to put warnings out, consumer alerts out, and make sure that when we move forward on this, we do it the right way.

I have to say that the response from the federal government to our suggestion on C-6 was not that warm. It was not that inviting for the provinces to have an ability to join together. In fact, they were a little annoyed that we shied on the side of caution, but I do think we have to stand firm, and we as Alberta were able to get the other provinces onside and alert them to the caution, and they agreed with our position. We didn't get the feds onside, but that's not unusual, so we will have to work in spite of it to come up with some kind of plan. It's a good caution, and I appreciate you being onside with the concern that's there, because I do share that with you.

Again, on Bill C-6. We have worked actually with the other ministries – federal and intergovernmental affairs, Municipal Affairs, Treasury, Economic Development, and Justice – on the concept of Bill C-6, and we have all taken a message to our counterparts with the federal government and other provinces to say that we have to work on this. So there is cross-government support to err on the side of caution to make sure we don't go out in front on this bill and leave people in jeopardy, because it would be very easy to do. So we have to be careful as to what we do, but I think it's incumbent upon all of us, quite frankly, to also get the message out to people: please, don't just jump on there and give every bit of information you have. There has to be almost a consumer watch. You know, we can put all kinds of rules and regulations in place, but you can't protect people from themselves. You can only give the best advice and the best framework possible, but they have to exercise their own caution and their own restraint from getting involved in some of these things.

Again on the regulatory process. We need to review these regulations and make sure they're co-ordinated. Our secretariat is working. This is a full secretariat now, and they do a very good job looking at every regulation that comes forward. We will keep pushing that, because the objective is to reduce regulations, cut the cost of compliance for people coming to do business with government, and to streamline the process. Your points are well taken. I appreciate them, and if there's a better methodology or process, we're open to some suggestions and we can look at doing that.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I guess I've answered all the questions I can tonight.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to bring a couple of things to the attention of the minister. I wanted to just maybe make the comment that if she's got some people who are really good at regulations in her department, they're going to need those people when they bring in the health bill tomorrow. They're going to need lots of regulations, good regulations. So you keep those people working, Madam Minister, and I'm sure we'll come up with some good regulations for tomorrow.

I wanted to draw the minister back to this whole user fee argument. I'm glad user fees are down, but I guess I'm surprised at the minister and her comments. There's an awful lot of chest thumping in relation to this. I sit back and I want to, if I can, just remind the minister that although there is a reduction in these user fees, some 73 user fees I believe . . .

MRS. NELSON: Ninety-four.

MS OLSEN: Ninety-four. Let's just reflect back on some of the comments made by the Premier, and let's think about why we're here.

First of all, Madam Minister, you can pound your chest and say: yeah, we did it; Alberta was the first. But you know what? I have a factum here that's been tabled in the Legislature in fact a couple of times. It's the factum of the intervenor, the Attorney General of Alberta, and really what the Attorney General of Alberta was doing was intervening and supporting the position of the Ontario government that user fees should be allowed. Right?

What the questions were – and I'm doing this in relation to this user fee discussion, because I think it's an important part of it.

There were two points of issue, and one was:

Is the probate fee, which was imposed by Ontario Regulation 293/92, which was made under s.5 of the Administration of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990 . . . invalid on the ground that it is an indirect tax that is outside the legislative authority of the province of Ontario under s.92(2) of the Constitution Act, 1867?

The second issue, Madam Minister, that this whole user fee notion was constructed on was:

Is the probate fee, which was imposed by Ontario Regulation 293/92, which was made under s.5 of the Administration of Justice Act . . . invalid on the ground that it was imposed by a body other than the Legislature of Ontario in contravention of s.90 (incorporating by reference ss.53 and 54) of the Constitution Act, 1867?

I want to draw the minister's attention to what the factum says and what it supports. So really what the government's position was:

On the first question, The Attorney General of Alberta, Intervenor, submits that the probate fee is not invalid as it is a charge in relation to a valid regulatory scheme and as such, is not an indirect tax. In the alternative, it is a fee for service and not an indirect tax.

That's the Alberta factum, Madam Minister.

On the second question the province of Alberta suggested that there has been no contravention of section 90 of the Constitution Act. So it's great to thump your chest, but let's not try to fool everybody and say that you guys were here and this government brought in and reduced these taxes for the sake of Albertans.

Let's talk about that tax reduction. It's somewhere in the area of a 6 cents per day tax cut for the average Albertan, so let's not cloud this issue. Yes, user fees had to go down. You guys put them up, and they had to go down, and you were forced to put them down. In fact, Madam Minister, on the user fee issue the Premier said in Hansard on February 14, 1995, that quite simply these adjustments are to bring user fees in line with the cost of providing the services.

. . . I would say that user fees have been brought in line with the cost of providing the services.

That's from the Premier in 1995. So your government, Madam Minister, has said: hey, you know, this is the cost of service. Wrong, wrong, definitely wrong, and we see that in these charts that you've put out.

The Premier also said again in Hansard, on February 15, 1995, that "a fee for service . . . is not a tax. It is not a tax." Guess what the Supreme Court of Canada said? If you don't bring it down to cover cost of service, then you need to bring it to the floor of the Legislature and call it a tax. But this government couldn't do that because they've been telling Albertans that the user fees are not a tax, and in fact the courts ruled differently.

The Premier says again, on March 4, 1996, in Hansard, that "fees were adjusted . . . to reflect the cost of providing the services." So, Madam Minister, we're getting a lot of chest thumping, and maybe what the government should have done is put their tail between their legs and run the other way.

The other thing I find interesting, Madam Minister, is that between the time of the Eurig estate decision and February 24, 2000, the Klein government collected $80 million in additional user fees and charges from Albertans. Instead of freezing those charges, you still collected $80 million knowing – knowing – that they were taxes or that those fees exceeded the cost of service.

So, Madam Minister, don't pound that chest too hard, because it's just not the way it is. What you say, Madam Minister, and what has been done are two different things. I think that's very important to bring to this debate, because there are a lot of things that aren't quite true.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to get in two more questions to the minister. Madam Minister, how is the phone system, the one phone call, one-stop shopping – I'm going to deal with the fact that people are human. You will have noticed this in your constituency office. When people phone up, they usually don't have the analysis to go: my problem is X, and I want to know Y. They phone up and start this story about how the cat ate their canary because the birdcage was on the windowsill, and it fell off because the window was open because the landlord had the heat up too high. It's a 20-minute story before you can dig out the fact that they didn't get their pension cheque that week and they're unhappy with their accommodations as a result. So how is the system set up to deal with human frailty? Question number one.

Question number two. As an MLA in this Assembly I would assume that I would be aware of the phone number, the wonderful, magical phone number that will get me access to your new system here, and I don't. Is there some sort of publicity campaign that's going to go around about this? Will the new number be coming out in bold print in the blue pages in the front of the major phone books? How are people supposed to know about this? I mean, I'm glad that I'm in the Assembly tonight and I heard of this. You know how often I have hoped that people would read the Hansard, and that way citizens in Alberta would be able to find out about this wonderful new program, but how else are they supposed to hear about that?

So that's the two questions I had. I understand that the minister doesn't have time to respond, and I'm happy to receive the response in writing. Thank you very much for the opportunity.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question. Question.

10:11

THE CHAIRMAN: There is no question in subcommittee. What you can do is rise and report progress to the committee.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Chairman, I move that we rise and report progress.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay. The hon. Minister of Government Services has moved that subcommittee C rise and report progress to the committee. All those in support of the motion to rise and report progress, please say aye.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE CHAIRMAN: Those opposed, please say no.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

THE CHAIRMAN: Carried.

[The subcommittee adjourned at 10:12 p.m.]

Title: Estimates of Economic Development, Wednesday, March 1, 2000

THE CHAIRMAN: I'd call the meeting to order again tonight. We're going over the main estimates for the Department of Economic Development. We have approximately two hours, give or take a little bit either side of 10 o'clock, so I think we'll start with the minister for an overview.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, Madam Chairman. It is certainly my privilege to submit for your review and approval the 2000-2001 estimates for the Ministry of Economic Development, which include the department, the Alberta Economic Development Authority, the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council, and Travel Alberta. Today I will briefly report on the state of Alberta's economy and the ministry's plans to continue to foster a positive business climate that is conducive to job creation, growth, and investment in our province. In 1999 our real gross domestic product increased by an estimated 2.8 percent. For this year we are again forecasting strong economic growth with employment expected to increase by 47,000 private-sector jobs. We anticipate the sectors that will lead such growth are the resource-based industries including oil and gas, forestry, and agriculture, as well as further along the value chain into petrochemicals, food processing, and wood fibre. Expansion into new economy industries such as advanced technology and information and communication will also play a large role, Madam Chairman.

Turning to the ministry, our department facilitates economic growth in the province by assessing and monitoring Alberta's business climate to ensure that it remains positive and competitive. It's mission is to promote Alberta's continuing prosperity, and it achieves this through three core businesses: strategic leadership for economic development policy and planning, market development and investment attraction, and tourism marketing and development. The department has three key goals related to these core businesses, being "Alberta has a vibrant and versatile economy," "Alberta's businesses, communities and industry sectors are globally competitive," and "Alberta is a globally competitive tourism destination." But, Madam Chairman, we cannot achieve these goals in isolation; rather we will continue to facilitate economic growth in Alberta through our expanded partnerships with the Alberta Economic Development Authority, the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council, the Travel Alberta Secretariat, business and industry associations, and other provincial governments and departments.

A critical part of our direction, Madam Chairman, is the government of Alberta's new economic strategy released on February 8, which builds on Alberta's strong forecasts and includes a number of targets for our centennial year, 2005. It was developed in collaboration with my colleagues, a number of government departments, the Alberta Economic Development Authority, and the Alberta science and research authority. Entitled Get Ready Alberta: Strengthening the Alberta Advantage, it focuses on our economy's strengths by setting targets to position our province as a leading competitor in the global marketplace.

As part of the strategy, Alberta Economic Development will play a significant role in creating an environment within the province that will by 2005 create 295,000 new private-sector jobs, an increase of almost 20 percent; expand manufactured, value-added products and services as a proportion of Alberta's overall economy; increase Alberta's value-added exports to $26 billion, up from approximately $15 billion today; increase tourism revenues to $6 billion from the current level of $4 billion and partner with Alberta's tourism industry to deliver marketing programs and support services; maintain a competitive tax advantage and promotion of a positive business climate that stimulates and attracts investment activity; and develop and promote international trade and market opportunities. In addition to the province's new economic strategy, Alberta Economic Development will implement two new initiatives aimed at refining Alberta's presence in the global marketplace. The Alberta international marketing strategy and the Alberta international representation review were based on collaboration with the Alberta Economic Development Authority, various industry stakeholders, and a number of government departments. These strategies recognize government's role as a facilitator and are based on two realities. One, government has an important role in developing and promoting provincial interests internationally, and two, government should identify opportunities for Alberta businesses by focusing on regions and sectors that promise the greatest return.

The first of these two strategies, the Alberta international marketing strategy, emphasizes that in order for Alberta to succeed in the global marketplace, investment in trade activities must be competitive, co-ordinated, and targeted on promoting economic growth and prosperity. That means activities must be directed to make the most of our province's strengths. This is accomplished by identifying key geographic markets and priority sectors and highlighting marketing strategies to ensure that Albertans receive the best return on their investment. In conjunction with this, Madam Chairman, our role is to provide a range of services including market intelligence, market assistance, and opportunity identification. We will also monitor and assess trends for Alberta businesses.

The Alberta international representation review is the second strategy aimed at refining Alberta's presence in the global marketplace. In early 1999 a review process to evaluate Alberta's international representation network concluded that we must be involved internationally and continue to seek global opportunities but that we require a more global presence. This new strategy responds to that report. It is based on significant industry consultation and reflects industry's needs and expectations as they relate to international marketing. It also reflects a different approach to international representation.

[Mr. Renner in the chair]

Alberta's international offices will continue to have a trade and investment focus, as opposed to a protocol function. The managing directors who lead the offices are qualified strategic trade and investment professionals, and we are constantly examining cost-effective ways of establishing our offices, including collocating where it makes sense, and any changes to those offices will be accommodated within existing budgets. More importantly, Mr. Chairman, we will develop performance measurement processes for Alberta's international offices and evaluate them to ensure all our international marketing efforts are functioning effectively. No new offices will be opened before these measures are in place and such evaluation concluded.

Concerning tourism, Mr. Chairman, this industry is critical to Alberta's economic prosperity, generating over $4 billion annually. Through Travel Alberta we are aggressively positioning our province both at home and abroad to ensure that we remain a top-of-mind vacation destination. To do so, the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council is currently reviewing the performance of this year's strategic tourism marketing plan. Further, a new three-year plan, 2000-2003, should be approved soon.

With respect to the current plan, Mr. Chairman, it focuses on geomarketing in the Americas, proposing the largest campaign in 10 years: Alberta, a multimedia destination awareness campaign aimed at Albertans and Europe, Asia Pacific, where we collaborated with the Canadian Tourism Commission in the U.K. and German markets and launched a new initiative in Japan with two leading travel agencies. The initial results are encouraging, and we will be releasing information relating to such initiatives in the near future. Now I'd like to turn more specifically to the estimates we will be voting on. I'll be very brief. The budget for the department is $51,236,000. That's gross expense. As you are aware, the revised role of this ministry is solely that of the lead sales and marketing arm for the government. That means the ministry is no longer responsible for the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, the Alberta Opportunity Company, and the Alberta lottery fund. The ministry does, however, as mentioned earlier, continue to work with the Alberta Economic Development Authority and the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council to carry out its role.

The first program, ministry support services, is responsible for the offices of the minister, whose budget, I might add, has been reduced by $85,000, and the deputy minister, finance and administration, co-ordination and support for the Alberta Economic Development Authority and its subcommittees, and funding for the standing policy committee on economic sustainability. The total budget for that part of the department is $5,112,000.

Our second program, marketing and business development, includes policy and knowledge management, investment and trade, and industry and regional development. Its total budget is $29,189,000.

Our third program is Tourism, which includes marketing support services and development, and it has a total budget of $16,935,000. Mr. Chairman, that concludes my opening remarks on the estimates of the Ministry of Economic Development. I am certainly now available to answer any questions the members of this committee may have, and I also undertake to review Hansard and respond promptly to any questions I may be unable to address this evening. Thank you for your attention.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Minister. Before I open the floor to members who wish to address this budget, let me just remind everyone that this room is somewhat more informal than our normal location downstairs. It's not necessary to rise when you speak, but the rest of the decorum we would normally acknowledge in the Assembly downstairs should be shown in this room. So I would ask everyone to keep that in mind as we progress through the evening.

Hon. minister.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes, Mr. Chairman. If I could for the members, I'd like to perhaps suggest a way we could proceed. When I was Minister of Justice and I went through this process, what quite often happened, in particular with members of the opposition, is that they would ask two or three questions, I would try and respond at that time, and then they would go back to more questions, as opposed to, for example, simply listing their questions for 20 minutes and then me trying to respond. I found that created a much less formal atmosphere. We were able to generate a good dialogue, and we were able to respond to questions.

Now, that's just a suggestion. I'll try my best, but of course if anyone here wishes to simply chat for 20 minutes and have me try and respond, that certainly is their option.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: That certainly is possible, but as I said, the rules are the same as downstairs. Members are entitled to speak for 20 minutes, and there's nothing the chair can do if they choose to do so. You've made an offer, and I offer that option to any of the members who choose to participate in the discussion.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Minister, it's good to be in and review your budget this evening. It's interesting to note some of the things you said in terms of how your economic development strategy and some of the other things you've talked about this evening pull together. The focus on the international and the expansion of our markets is a much better idea than a lot of the other aspects that have been involved.

I guess what I'd like to do is take you up on your offer of just dealing with one or two questions, get you to answer them, and after I've done three or four, we'll move to somebody else, if that fits fine.

You talked about the idea that you wanted a target of great growth, a very optimistic level of growth in the value-added production from Alberta, up, I think you said, from 15 to 26. As part of your strategy and as part of the way you've looked at how to achieve that, how are you working with some of the other departments like Infrastructure in terms of getting the impact that may be put on the infrastructure of our province in order to facilitate that?

In that same connection, you know, we've had a lot of debate this past year in terms of transportation: what's happening to the railways, rail line abandonment. Are you looking at those kinds of things, as well, as you look at the location and the potential in-province regional development pockets that could exist, the critical masses that could develop for regional development within the province?

MR. HAVELOCK: A good point, hon. member. We have established what's called the Council of Economic Development Ministers, and on that council are the ministers of Infrastructure, Resource Development, Agriculture, Innovation and Science, and a couple of others. We actually work closely together in trying to identify economic issues as they arise. You rightly point out that infrastructure is critical, because for us to be able to grow, we need to have the infrastructure in place. So we ensure that that minister has certainly a significant say in any initiatives we're undertaking.

In putting together the new economic strategy, the Get Ready document, we worked with I believe nine other departments in trying to determine what their priorities were up to the centennial year of 2005. So we've tried to, again, reflect a cross-departmental approach.

As concerns regional economic development, I did speak to – I may not have the name correct – the association of regional development organizations some months ago and really encouraged them to work together with us. There are some regions in our province which, quite frankly, while the province is growing and the economy is growing, haven't benefited as strongly as other regions. So we are trying to work with some of those areas with respect to, for example, potential tourism development, industries that may well be better suited for those particular areas. Finally, when we're out there selling the Alberta advantage, hon. member, we're selling the province and we aren't selling a particular region. However, of course if a business identifies a particular area or location it may wish to move to, then we do all we can to facilitate that.

DR. NICOL: In that line, has your trade office . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, I want to do everything I possibly can to facilitate the discussion, but we do have to have a record of speakers, so I would ask that you be recognized by the chairman so that at least we have a record for Hansard purposes if nothing else. It might make things just a little bit easier. The member indicated that he wanted to ask about three or four questions. Why don't you ask all three or four questions and let the minister answer. We'll do them in lots of about three or four, just so we're not back and forth. Is that okay?

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, I don't know. I mean, unless it creates some confusion for you, you can interject when I'm finished.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: There is no difficulty, Mr. Minister, as long as it's okay with all members, but normally the chair would not recognize the same speaker three times in a row.

MR. HAVELOCK: Right. But the hon. member is kindly giving me, I guess, a portion of his 20 minutes in which to respond and create the dialogue. Perhaps I'd ask that when the hon. member started speaking, his 20 minutes started, and I happened to be chewing up part of it answering his questions.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Well, if that's acceptable to the member, that's fine with the chair. We were keeping stop time here.

DR. NICOL: I would suggest we run the full 20 minutes while we're having our dialogue and then somebody else can have it however they want to structure their 20 minutes.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: That is perfectly acceptable to the chair, and I would be more than pleased to accommodate. So I will advise when your 20 minutes have elapsed then. Is that okay?

DR. NICOL: If you would, please.

MR. HAVELOCK: Please deduct the 10 minutes we spent arguing about how we were going to do this.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: That's fine. If we're going to go with that, you and the minister have the floor until your 20 minutes is up.

DR. NICOL: Okay.

When we talked about the structuring, you said that you didn't want to try and promote one part of the province at the expense of the other, that you were working on a full let's promote Alberta, yet the magnet of the critical mass that exists in some of our major cities now provides us the information and the infrastructure that's necessary for business. Some of the other areas that want to focus on something different, like some of our agricultural communities that want to diversify, need the information support, the product support, the contact support they don't have because of the critical mass that's in some of our larger cities. What are you doing to try and facilitate the opportunity for small communities to attract small to medium-sized businesses to their area rather than having them all kind of fall in around the big cities?

8:26

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, I can't give you, I guess, a specific list of strategies where I could say, "Here's what we do for the smaller communities as opposed to the larger communities." Our primary role is to try and educate companies about the overall advantages we offer in this province: the infrastructure, a highly qualified workforce, a competitive tax advantage, for example. Those are just three of the things we have.

We may well, if we feel there is a particular area – I'll use the West Yellowhead area as a good example. The coal industry is there. Now, it's been reported that the coal industry is facing some challenges. Well, what we are doing is we've taken it upon ourselves to study the long-term viability of the industry as it's presently structured. We are also working with that community regarding some other initiatives they could look at, in particular with respect to tourism, for example. We do not have a strategy or a list that states, "Here's stuff we can do for smaller communities, and here's stuff we can do for larger communities." Unless I haven't seen that yet, I don't believe we have something like that.

There are some very specific initiatives we have undertaken, for example e-commerce, where we are holding a number of seminars throughout the province and are trying to encourage all businesses, large or small, to become much more involved in that particular sector. The economic strategy also refers to putting a wide bandwidth capability throughout the province. That will allow all communities to basically tie in and allow, for example, a business in Okotoks to do business directly with someone in Japan. So there are some specific initiatives laid out in our economic strategy. Again, we take an approach of: let's try and help the entire province.

Tourism is a good example. Our national parks generate about 20 percent of our revenue. What we want to do is take advantage of the draw which the national parks provide from an international perspective and try and draw tourists to visit the rest of the province. That's why we established the tourism destination regions. That's why we have the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council in place, why we have the new plan. We're very aggressively working with operators throughout the province.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Minister. Just following up on that, one of the things we note quite often in talking with small companies, small businesses – new businesses, I guess, is a better term than small businesses – is that the shortage of venture capital seems to restrict a number of the companies. The minister of science and technology has talked about this on a couple of occasions as well. When an innovation is trying to be commercialized, there seem to be better opportunities in other areas where the venture capital is more accessible. Is there a strategy in the province to do something about venture capital access, supply? The establishment of the new Canadian Venture Exchange in Calgary is a good move in that direction. It's going to give us a local contact point, but that only works for a certain kind of financing. Are there strategies, then, that deal with increasing the access to and supply of venture capital?

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, let's chat briefly first about small business generally. I mentioned the e-commerce initiative. Also there is a review of business tax that's presently ongoing, and a number of small businesses, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, for example, have suggested that the corporate tax rate should be lowered and also that thresholds should be increased. I know that's being examined.

As concerns the issue of access to capital, I'm getting mixed messages from the industry. It depends on the sector you're speaking with at any given time. I've referred the issue of access to capital to the Alberta Economic Development Authority for them to do an overall review and come back to me and tell the government, one, whether there is a problem and, secondly, if there is a problem, what solutions they would suggest we move forward with.

You talk about the high-tech innovation sector. What's interesting right now when you're out there trying to raise dollars is that there's a great deal of activity with smaller high-tech companies generating equity. In fact, a number of the companies in the oil and gas sectors are pointing out right now that they aren't able to compete for those dollars because a 20 to 25 percent rate of return just isn't good enough based on what investors are getting from a number of the high-tech companies. I was in fact having dinner with a representative from Iran the other evening, and we were talking about this very issue, that it's very difficult not only on a national and local level but on an international level to generate investment in that area. But we're looking at access to capital.

With respect to the particular sector you mention, I do work very closely with my colleague the Minister of Innovation and Science. In fact, we have a rather unique structure between our two departments in that we actually share, I believe, 10 or 11 employees.

DR. TAYLOR: Do we share their salary?

MR. HAVELOCK: I do believe we share their salary, but if we don't – I guess your budget is bigger.

Yes, we're sharing the resources of those individuals. The Innovation and Science minister is primarily responsible for the initial research and development. Where we become involved is with the next step, with respect to commercialization. The recent fund that was announced, the $500 million endowment, I think will help significantly in generating some additional research. We've set some targets in our economic strategy, creating I think 35,000 new jobs in the high-tech sector. I think it was last year that we created an additional 1,000 spaces in that particular industry in postsecondary education.

So we're trying to do some things. Part of our challenge – and the federal government did address it partially through their amendments to the stock options, for example, and the reducing of personal income taxes – is that it's very difficult for us to keep our young graduates. They're going south. While the federal government did make some moves in that area, I think they need to do more, because we'll continue to lose them because we just can't compete.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: One more question. There should be time for it.

DR. NICOL: I'll cede to someone else now if I can get a chance later.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: You betcha. I'll put you on the list. The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I only have one question. I'll take about a minute for it, and you can have the other 19 to respond to it. Your department spends $51.236 million. I'm going to take the part of a taxpayer here, and I'm going to ask you to explain to me out of programs 1, 2, and 3 what makes you sure those dollars are well spent in your department. What kinds of measurements do you have on what good it does to spend these dollars in your programs? I'll be anxiously awaiting your response.

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, you didn't take a minute, and I won't take 19.

What I'd like to do is direct your attention, hon. member, to our business plan, and that would be pages 84 through to 89. One of the challenges I discussed very early on with my deputy minister when I was first appointed. We reviewed the business plan, and we felt we had to look at the issue of performance measurement. We have tried to develop some new measures from, one, the macroperspective; in other words, outcome indicators which reflect performance of the economy. However, it's very difficult to track whatever we're doing directly to the impact that we're having on the economy. Nevertheless, we need to measure that. Secondly, we've also generated what are called output indicators, and those better measure what the department is doing and what impact we hope the department is having.

I have asked the department, though, to develop further performance measures. That was a question that was asked, I believe, when we went through the business planning process. In fact, it was asked by the Member for Calgary-Montrose, if I'm not mistaken. I appreciate the question in that sometimes it's difficult to say, "Well, here's what we did, and here's the impact it had," because it is difficult to link. A good example is the international offices which we've established. We are in the process of developing very specific performance measures to determine what impact, if any, those offices are having with respect to any international trade and/or investment which occurs in the province. We've tried to list some generally in the business plan. Obviously, it's easier to measure the macro ones, the economic ones, as we've outlined, as opposed to: if the department does this, what happens?

Another good example. In the strategic tourism marketing plan we are going to be coming forward with some of the initial results. For example, one measure is our success in leveraging dollars whether or not the private sector is participating with us in programs. I'm happy to see that it's been reasonably successful thus far, and I'll be coming forward with some numbers in the near future. Through that plan we will also be evaluating certain projects along the way to determine what, if any, impact they have had and also to determine the bottom line, whether the dollars have been appropriately spent.

So, hon. member, I'm very sensitive to the issue of performance measurement. We have a way to go in the business plan. The department is well aware that we have a way to go, and they are working hard on that. We did make some changes to the plan when we were first put into the ministry, but we recognize there is more to do.

MR. HERARD: This is, I guess, a second question. With respect to the international offices, my bias says that life is a series of relationships and that if you don't have those relationships, then you're not anywhere with respect to that marketplace. I'd like to hear from you with respect to what you've learned from perhaps the eastern economies, whether or not relationships are even more important in those jurisdictions than they are in North America.

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, in North America we do have an advantage in that, obviously, we are within North America and our largest trading partner happens to be directly across the border. So we are able to maintain good relationships and direct contact with that trading partner while not having to maintain a significant permanent presence within the United States. There are two ways in which you can generally establish and develop and promote investment and trade on an international basis. One is to have specific trade missions which are targeted to particular countries and/or sectors, which are generally led by the Premier and/or Team Canada missions.

The other way is to have direct contact through a permanent presence within a particular country. We do have some offices. In particular you mentioned the Far East and Asia. We have one in Korea, Hong Kong, Beijing, and Tokyo. We also have one in Taiwan, although during my recent swing through Asia I wasn't able to visit Taiwan because of the devastation caused by the earthquake at that time.

I can tell you unequivocally that when you're dealing with the Asian community, it has to be face to face. On numerous occasions those businesses presently actively involved in pursuing relationships and partnerships with Asian countries appreciate government involvement because so many of those markets and economies are presently regulated by government, and therefore face-to-face government contact is expected. Also, sometimes they need our assistance in getting around a bit of the red tape and meeting with the right people.

I'll use Korea as a good example. We are very aggressively pursuing some investment in the resource sector from that particular country. I spent time with a government representative, and that representative indicated that they had recommended to their private sector, their chaebols, that they should seriously consider an investment in the oil and gas sector. So there you have a government being very active, very proactive in suggesting to the private sector what industries and what sectors they should be looking at.

In China it's just as critical. Their market is just beginning to open up to western companies. It's a very bureaucratic process. It's a very lengthy process. You need to establish a level of trust prior to companies being able to do business there, or alternatively you need to have a highly specialized product and go after a particular niche market. Some of our businesses have been successful in that regard, but they still have used our support and needed our support in opening some of those doors. So it depends on the market you're looking at.

Europe is a market that we haven't focused on for a few years. We did have some international presence there, and we closed those offices down in '95, if I'm not mistaken, but the European Union is now, I believe, the world's second largest economy, just behind the United States. It is again a highly regulated market, and if we wish to make some inroads in that market, we will need to establish a presence there and start to work directly with those within the union and try and build those relationships in assisting companies.

I will say that while we can assist the big companies, the international companies, the majors, they aren't the ones that really need our assistance. While we can assist, for example, Nortel in establishing some relationships in China, they do have significant resources available to them, and they do a pretty good job on their own, but they do tend to use us when they feel we can help. But it's the medium and smaller companies which need that assistance, and quite frankly for us it's the medium and smaller companies where we want to see some growth, and that's where we feel we have some significant upside. So it depends on the market, it depends on the sector you're going after, and it depends on how long we've actually been in the market or out of the market.

MR. HERARD: Thank you very much. Those are my questions.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks, Madam Chairman. I had a couple of questions, one about the performance indicators that you have. You classed them as outcome indicators and output indicators, and the output indicators are the ones that refer specifically to the actions within your department. I have some difficulty understanding how your department can be held responsible for the performance of, say, the manufacturing service industry investment and agrifood exports. It seems those are global things that are affected by either the actions of other provinces, the entire country, or international markets. I think the information is needed, and certainly your department would act on that information, but I'm not sure I understand why it's here as a performance indicator and how you can in any way be held accountable.

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, hon. member, I believe you're looking at page 86, goal 2.

DR. MASSEY: Yes.

MR. HAVELOCK: The first and second indicators. Those actually relate to the economy as a whole. Those aren't the output indicators. The output indicators are the ones that we try and specifically measure what our department is doing, what it has done, and what impact it has had.

But being blunt, we are the primary sales and marketing arm for the government of Alberta, and if we aren't held accountable for economic performance, who in government should be held accountable? It is really our job to get out there and promote. It's our job to attract investment. It's our job to assist International and Intergovernmental Relations in removing trade barriers, for example, and to allow in the area of agriculture more value-added product. I'm quite comfortable being held accountable, but again the difficulty is that sometimes you can't directly link a department action or initiative to the actual performance measure. So you, hon. member, are underscoring the difficulty that the measures present, but I still think we should be held accountable for the overall economic performance.

DR. MASSEY: If you look at the new business increase and the drop of 10 percent in new businesses that's in chart 4 on page 87, again I go back and say: how can you hold your department responsible for that decrease in new business? What use is it here in a business plan? Again, I think it's extremely valuable information, but in terms of judging the performance of the department – and I know these are under development too, that you're still working on them.

MR. HAVELOCK: A lot of these also, hon. member, have been used for a number of years. Again, we did put in some that are specific. Perhaps one of the better ones is measure 5 on page 87. That's where we're evaluating how competitive we are with respect to certain areas in comparison to other jurisdictions, and we do have a good deal of control over those; for example, payroll tax, capital tax, things of that nature. I appreciate what you're saying; nevertheless, I'm still comfortable as the lead sales and marketing arm for the province taking some responsibility as to whether or not we've assisted businesses in growing through our overall Alberta Advantage.

DR. MASSEY: Okay. If I can just continue with one of the output indicators on the top of page 86, "utilization of department's website and publications." There seems to be massive use of the web site. Is there any breakdown of who's using that, whether these are national or international, or are these kids firing into the department because they've got a report on economic development and they need information? Is there any analysis of that?

MR. HAVELOCK: I'm being told that, yes, we can give you that. We do have that type of information available, so we'll certainly provide that. I don't, hon. member, have that with me.

DR. MASSEY: Can I go to the opening of the offices? I remember when there was much fanfare about them being closed, and the argument put forth by the government at that time was that it was a waste of money, that it wasn't money well spent. What's changed?

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, in my opening remarks I tried to indicate how we are approaching these offices a little differently than they have been in the past. They will not focus on protocol functions. We are staffing them with people who have training in the investment and trade areas, so we are making them much more business focused. We are collocating where we can. As I indicated, until we conduct an extensive performance measure of those offices, we won't open any new offices. I will use as a good example – I don't believe we've made it public yet, although we might be shortly. We've just completed hiring an individual for the China/Alberta petroleum initiative that's located in Beijing, and we went through a very rigorous process. In the past part of the reason I think these offices have attracted some criticism is because of the manner in which the appointments may have been made or who was appointed. We're certainly getting away from that.

We also need to understand and appreciate that, again, if we want to be a player in Europe, for example, the world's second largest economy, we do need some presence there, but we won't establish that presence unless and until I'm satisfied that where we're presently located is providing a net benefit to the Alberta taxpayer.

So hopefully, hon. member, based on what I've said, you'll feel some degree of comfort that it's a different way of doing business. It's not the way these offices used to be run. I have to give credit to hon. Minister Dr. West and also to ministers Nelson and Smith, who made a lot of the tough decisions regarding those offices. Now we're at a stage where we can go forward and evaluate and determine how they're operated.

DR. MASSEY: How are the appointments made?

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, with respect to the CAPC appointment, I believe we advertised internally to government first, and then I think there was an open competition on a national basis.

UNIDENTIFIED SPEAKER: Yes.

MR. HAVELOCK: So did we do the internal first?

UNIDENTIFIED SPEAKER: Yes.

MR. HAVELOCK: Okay. So we went internally first, and then we advertised nationally. Unless there's a good reason to do otherwise, that's the way I certainly intend on making the other appointments.

DR. MASSEY: You touched on co-operating with other jurisdictions. Has there been any attempt to do this with other provinces, to co-operate in terms of those?

MR. HAVELOCK: You mean with respect to collocation, for example? Where we have the most success in collocation is in Canadian embassies, and quite often the sectors we want to focus on or the particular markets we want to go after do not coincide with British Columbia or Ontario or some of the other provinces. We do try and co-ordinate as best we can, but at this stage I will say we operate relatively independently. In Korea I believe we're the only province that has a presence in that country. In Japan I believe Quebec has an office. The Quebec offices are interesting. A lot of their focus is on political activity as opposed to investment and trade activity, and I won't go into the reasons why they go that way. But at this stage there's not a lot of co-ordination because the provinces quite often have differing needs.

What I will say, though, is that we do some co-ordination and working together. As a recent example, I was in Lethbridge, where we announced that Lethbridge would be hosting a particular conference regarding the tourism industry where we actually team up with British Columbia, and we have tourism operators from around the world – Europe in particular, Asia Pacific, and the United States – coming to visit. We've packaged a number of opportunities with British Columbia where tourists can come and see not only one province but two. So we do try and work together where it makes sense.

DR. MASSEY: Just related to that – and you've touched on it briefly – the money in the budget for the World's Fair.

MR. HAVELOCK: Which page are you on, hon. member?

DR. MASSEY: Hannover 2000 on page 123. It's under Highlights for 2000-2001. I'm in the budget, Jon.

MR. HAVELOCK: If I can find it here – well, ask your question.

DR. MASSEY: Having been to a couple of them, in Seville and Vancouver, is there information in terms of the payoff? I'm aware of what you said: face-to-face contact when you're in China, and when you're in the Far East, Middle East, certainly face to face. You could hold all the fairs you wanted on the street and you still wouldn't end up with a business deal. Is there information on how much payoff you get from that kind of . . .

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, you can't, unfortunately, measure the payoff until you've participated.

DR. MASSEY: But we've been in others.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes, but this is our first – I guess generally speaking this will be the major initiative which re-establishes a presence for us in Europe. What we did recently was restructure the department to try and set up some pods or areas within the department that focused on certain sectors or countries. We have worked very closely with the private sector to ensure that there are private-sector dollars being brought to the table. I think we're looking at about a million dollars that the private sector has brought in. If you'll give me a moment, I might be able to find it.

I believe the targeted budget is $2 million: $1.4 million from the public sector, $600,000 from the private sector. We're contributing a million dollars. So we've tried to make this a bit of a unique approach, but what we are going to do after the fair is continue to evaluate what impact this particular initiative had as opposed to just saying: yes, we were there; it was great; we have a few contacts; let's follow up on them.

There's also a lot of work being done prior to Hanover. We've sent a number of individuals over to Germany to lay the groundwork to ensure that our experience there is useful, that we focus on the information and technology side and create some good contacts with European countries but primarily with Germany, which is one of the countries we are focusing on. But, hon. member, once our participation is complete and we've performed an evaluation, we'll certainly make the results of that evaluation public.

DR. MASSEY: Just one last comment. The tourism indicators from previous budgets. What's happened to those indicators? Are they all dropped?

MR. HAVELOCK: The best measure we have of what we're doing in tourism is found in the strategic tourism marketing plan which the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council – I sure wish they'd shorten the names of these things – is putting together. In fact, they're revising their plan as we speak. I will have some initial results being made public in the near future with respect to leveraging in some of the programs which we've initiated over the past year.

I just saw a couple of quarterly reports come forward, hon. member, and we're going to try and put that information in a format which is easily understood and communicable because right now it's quite technical. Our main measure is that relating to growing the industry, as we've pointed out in our economic strategy, from approximately $4.2 billion to $6 billion, but we have a number of specific measures, and we'll be looking at specific projects over the next year. Again, we'll be happy to provide that information as it becomes available, but I'd encourage you to take a look at the tourism marketing plan. Again, as we move forward, I'll get you further information on what we're doing.

In fact, I hope within about a month or so to be releasing some information regarding leveraging and some initial results.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks.

THE CHAIRMAN: Next I have Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Madam Chairman. It's certainly an honour to be here today to be able to participate with the Minister of Economic Development. You know, there are many pieces to this economy, and I think it's wonderful that we can have an open and frank discussion at a table like this.

Innovation and Science is a department that you work closely with, and I've been fortunate to be able to work with the minister there as well. In regards to the technology industry, we're trying to make this become a bigger part of our economy. I know that both you and he have certainly spent a lot of time and have identified that this is certainly a future area of economic growth and an industry which really covers so many other industries in the opportunities of making it grow and be successful.

It also has the jobs that we've identified that our students coming out of universities want to have the opportunities to get into. It has the high-paying jobs that are going to be there. It's also an area we've seen as a potential brain drain that has led to the loss of a lot of the people we've trained at our universities and postsecondary institutions who have then moved on to other places outside our country and outside our province.

I've been working with the minister as well in my role as chair of technology commercialization. We've been really working on how we attract the capital, and I know you addressed that in your remarks at the beginning. How do we make it happen, and how do we facilitate this happening without, obviously, us getting back into business? We don't want to do that. That's not the role of government. But what we do know is that the area of the type of capital that needs to come here is probably the precommercialization capital, and that's the hardest capital to attract.

Down in Silicon Valley as it was developing, it was really defence dollars, which was billions upon billions of dollars that were put in by the U.S. government, that created Silicon Valley in the early stages. What that did is it allowed for the catalyst ability for an industry to develop and grow and make a wonderful thing happen. You saw IBM down in North Carolina and the research triangle that developed down there, but lots of money came in to create and make that sort of thing happen.

We haven't had that same natural ability happen here in Alberta, and we've wanted it to happen. We've also had some other things working against us. We've had a very good market. Because of the oil and gas sector here in Alberta, we've had the financial markets very into and understanding the development and the need for the capital to develop oil and gas. But if you have a technology deal that you want to develop here in Alberta, with all the best people and everything here, those technology people have had to take their ideas to Toronto, take them to New York and go and sell their ideas there, because the capital here doesn't understand what it takes and means to develop inside the technology industry. They don't know what it means.

The financial analysts in Alberta understand oil and gas, but they don't understand technology. Because of that, to see deals like Wi-Lan, an Alberta company, a 10-year overnight success, be successful here, they had to go to Toronto to raise the money. This is a huge piece of what we need to do to be successful, and we haven't developed those kinds of concepts.

I think what I've been able to gather over the last couple of years working with the minister and the department is to see that it's really probably a combination of Economic Development, Innovation and Science, as well as Learning to be able to produce the people so that we have specialists here in Alberta who can say that this is good and this is a good investment, to be able to make it so that the people here understand this is a wise investment and they should invest in technology.

With regards to precommercialization capital, that is a huge piece of it. We have high-risk investors here in Alberta who've invested in oil and gas wells that have gone down 15,000-plus feet, and that's high-risk capital, you betcha. It's high-risk capital and it's wonderful, but they don't understand that maybe even safer investments might be opportunities in technology because they don't understand it. The precommercialization capital is often a longer term investment. It's not the time it takes to drill down, you know. So it's an understanding, it's an education process of our public.

Before I go on to the other areas, I was wondering if you wanted to expand on that and say how Economic Development . . . [interjection] I've got 20 minutes. I'm doing my best, okay? So if you'd like to expand on that and say how Economic Development makes that sort of thing work and work in with Innovation and Science and education.

MR. HAVELOCK: I don't know how I could expand on that, hon. member, because you said it all. We're working closely, though, with the Minister of Innovation and Science with respect to the precommercialization area, the investment area. I will make it clear, though, that I personally don't support the buying of jobs, much like a number of other provinces do where they try and attract investment through direct subsidies, and that's one of the reasons why we've been successful. We will continue to push for enhanced tax advantages, again the high quality of life.

What is also critical, though, is access to a highly educated workforce, and we need to ensure that there are sufficient inducements to keep that workforce in Alberta. I discussed that a little earlier regarding, for example, the personal tax situation.

Access to capital: I mentioned that we've referred that to AEDA to take a look at. Again what's interesting is that you're talking about most financial analysts in Alberta being familiar with the oil and gas sector yet not the high-tech sector. But I'm starting to hear quite the reverse, in that the oil and gas sector right now is having some difficulty in raising equity because the rate of return that I mentioned earlier, the 20 to 25 percent, is not sufficient compared to what people are generating in the knowledge-based industries.

What can we do? Well, I think we can learn from, for example, Colorado Springs, where I believe their population went from 65,000 to three-quarters of a million. It was primarily based on trying to attract and build a high-tech sector. I hope that's accurate. If not, I know the Minister of Innovation and Science will correct me on that. What I'd be quite prepared to do is provide to the committee a list of some of the specific initiatives that we are pursuing with respect to high tech. A lot of them will be coming out of the minister's office, Innovation and Science. I think we've demonstrated we're serious, though, in growing this because of the targets we've set out in our economic strategy and also, as I mentioned earlier, the $500 million endowment, which hopefully will generate some activity.

Having said that, our industry is actually quite strong. We have one of the stronger sectors in the country. We have ARC, which is a leading research institute that assists in that regard. We have over 2,000 electronics and software companies in Alberta doing business at this point in time. We have some excellent technology with respect to biotechnology, environmental technology, oil and gas technology. What we tend to forget is that our oil and gas expertise is part of our knowledge-based industry and we're able to sell that. We have some excellent technology in the forestry products area and also in agriculture. We're out there pushing those particular technologies, and they should continue to grow. I would personally like to see us create, not a duplicate of Silicon Valley – I think we have a good start on how we can build that particular sector, the knowledge-based sector. It's a primary focus of our economic strategy. I'll get for the committee a list of specific initiatives, and I'll work with the Minister of Innovation and Science to provide that because a lot of them are generated out of his department.

MR. HLADY: Great. Thank you.

I think there's a lot happening. It's going to be interesting to watch the rollout over the next couple of years as we see all these things happening. There are those good stories happening. I think in the past maybe the department in parts had done some elephant hunting, looking for some big leverage points to make some things happen, but it's nice to see this level and getting to the grass roots and connecting the jobs that the people are looking for, making it happen at the precommercialization level. If we can do that, we're going to see so many new companies formed and so forth that it will become a major part of our economy.

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, it is actually a reasonably major part of our economy at this point in time, but it has to grow because we want to ensure that we don't have such a heavy reliance on the commodity-based sector.

MR. HLADY: Good. Thank you.

I'd like to touch on the tourism industry a little bit. I know that there are strategies going on along that line. We've identified it, I believe, and it's sitting somewhere around the fourth largest industry in the province. It's a great industry, and we see so many things happening. There are so many dynamics going around as we hear them in dealing with everything from Kananaskis Country to the size of the national parks that sit here and the restrictions that have been put on the national parks that are inside Alberta from Ottawa. It's a very frustrating thing to have to deal with that, I would think, from the tourism industry's point of view and to try and say: how do we make it a bigger, better thing? Obviously they're in direct competition with other areas, be it Whistler in B.C. or whatever, that are able to grow and make things happen, yet they're not able to grow and compete at the levels that certainly are wanted.

Being able to keep the balance between the environmental strengths that are out there that are saying, "We don't want to see anything happen," and on the other side you see the industry saying, "We need this much to be able to be more competitive and make things happen." What are you doing, and how do you help to facilitate this?

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, you've touched on an area that's critical with respect to tourism development in the province. The national parks, as I indicated earlier, account for about 20 percent of our total tourism revenues. Yes, the federal government has been looking at some initiatives which would severely restrict any further growth in the Banff area, and while Jasper would have some ability to grow, that will be curtailed in the future, as will the Waterton parks area.

For us, one, we have to get to the table first. In the past we have not been what I would call proactive in pursuing a national parks strategy. We need to keep in mind, too, that the national parks in Alberta comprise about 60 percent of the national parks in the country. So for us it's important to continue to use the national parks to attract tourists, but it's also important for Canada. Typically you'll have, for example, some tourists coming over from Asia. They will spend time in Vancouver. They will spend time in Banff and/or Jasper, and then they'll move on to Niagara Falls. Unless we ensure that we have the services available to satisfy the needs of those tourists, the industry will be significantly impacted, because there's so much spin-off.

The other thing we need to do – as you curtail development in, for example, Banff national park or Kananaskis, for that matter, there are some opportunities for the adjacent areas. Canmore, for example, will likely experience some pressure in the future, because as the services in Banff and/or Kananaskis are curtailed and yet people want to visit those particular area, they will have the opportunity to service those needs through accommodation, through restaurants, et cetera.

So we are presently working on a national parks strategy. I have discussed it with some of my colleagues through the departments that are impacted, obviously the Minister of Environment, because we certainly don't want to do anything to jeopardize why people visit the national parks. It's all well and good, for example, to want to see development, but if the development impacts the reason people are visiting the national park, then it's not good development. So it's a very fine balance that we have to ensure we maintain, but we're cognizant of the problem.

Just recently I wrote to the federal minister asking to allow us to see some of their initial work with respect to some of the initiatives they're pursuing. I haven't received a response yet, but hopefully they'll let us become involved, because we want to be involved in the process.

MR. HLADY: Thank you.

Staying with tourism, you know, there's been a bit of debate out in the industry around the concept of the hotel tax and how that plays into funding and so forth. I don't know if you have some concepts in regards to what you'd like to talk about around that.

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, thank you so very, very much for that question.

DR. TAYLOR: Refer it to your officials.

MR. HAVELOCK: No. Actually, I'd like to answer this.

The hotel tax generates around $45 million annually. I will say that it was a tax which was initially brought in because of the deficit that we were facing. It was specifically brought in to offset the deficit. The deficit has been eliminated, so the question becomes: should the tax remain or not?

This has been an issue that's been discussed widely within the industry. There are those – for example, the Alberta Hotel Association – advocating for the elimination of the tax. There are others within the tourism sector who want the tax to remain, but they would like us to dedicate the tax revenues directly to tourism marketing. There are still others who are suggesting: all right; get rid of the tax, but then allow municipalities to fill the void by being able to generate a tax locally to assist in promoting their particular jurisdiction and also to participate in some of the programs which we undertake through Travel Alberta, for example.

The issue has been referred to the business tax review. I won't disclose at this time what my preference is. I would like the process to work its way through. At some stage, though, I will likely indicate my bias, because eventually I would like to have some impact on the decision.

I would like to also point out that the decision on the level of funding that we provide to the tourism sector with respect to marketing has nothing to do with the hotel tax. We have a budget in tourism of approximately $16 million a year. As I indicated, the tax generates about $45 million a year. Since day one – and I think the hon. member for Fort Macleod would agree. Livingstone-Macleod. Sorry. But I know how to spell Macleod.

I think the member would agree that when I was first appointed, the one message I took out there consistently was: if you want to make the case for additional spending on tourism marketing, make it separate and apart from the tax, because the two are independent. I know that the industry is, as we speak, preparing a case to look at additional investment in tourism marketing. Again, as I indicated earlier, the initial results on leveraging are encouraging. Some of our initial results in our programs are encouraging, and if it makes sense to increase and enhance that spending, well, that's something we of course need to debate both around our caucus table and publicly through the budget process.

MR. HLADY: I won't expand on that at this time, but I appreciate your comments. I think they're very insightful.

I'd like to go back to the trade offices a little bit as well, if I could, Mr. Minister. You know, there were some good comments that you made in your opening comments and obviously some great questions from around the table. Everyone understands and knows the history to a certain level. Accountability is obviously going to define whether this is successful or not. How do we show that these are successful? What are the defining points? How do we show that they have been successful in creating trade, business opportunities, and so forth for Alberta companies going out there? How do we create that connection in making that happen? I think that's crucial. I'm sure you're still in process, but if you have any comments in regards to that right now, I'd be interested in hearing a little bit more detail.

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, as I indicated earlier, we are in the process of developing performance measures for those offices. I can't tell you what form those performance measures will take, although I don't want to simply measure activity. We need to measure results. So we'll just unfortunately have to wait and see what the department comes forward with, although I would expect that we will have something for consideration at the standing policy committee within two to three months. Is that fair? If anyone around this table has any ideas as to how we should be measuring the performance, I invite you to submit those to us for consideration.

Part of the difficulty we're going to be faced with – and I'll use my trip to Korea as a good example. As I indicated earlier, we're aggressively pursuing, hopefully, some investment in the oil sands by some Korean companies. I did meet with some representatives from Korean companies. I would not be able to measure the impact that those visits had on those companies if they decide to invest. I couldn't sit there and say: yes, they came because I happened to spend time with this particular individual. So measuring performance is going to be a little difficult. Nevertheless, I need to be able to demonstrate and our government needs to be able to demonstrate to the taxpayer that they are receiving value for their money.

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. minister, if we are going to stick to the 20 minutes . . . [interjection] Well, I think he can finish. I'm just telling him maybe he can finish quickly.

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, I must be tired, because I lost my train of thought again, Madam Chairman, so I'm finished.

THE CHAIRMAN: I didn't want to have that hold on you, hon. minister.

Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I would like to turn your attention to program 3, tourism.

MR. HAVELOCK: What page are you on, hon. member?

MR. WHITE: Page 120 in the budget book. In-Alberta marketing programs I see was sustained at about $2 million annually. As I recall, it's only the last couple of years that that has been going on, and it goes on for a number more.

Two questions come to mind. One, is it going to be sustaining such that there is a plan in place to market Alberta to Albertans as a tourist destination? In my personal view, it has been marketed in the past very poorly, particularly from sort of Airdrie south. That area of the province doesn't seem to know what this area of the province knows, particularly around St. Paul, Bonnyville, all of that northeast and right across the north and out west. It doesn't seem to know how beautiful the place is and what it has to offer. We've always missed this opportunity to market. I'm hoping that it's sustaining and it will be successful.

I should add that most of those I'm aware of who are in the north part of our province do know what the south has to offer. I'm talking south of Pincher and west of Pincher and out in the Cypress Hills. Up here it seems to have been marketed better, or it just happened. I don't know how it occurred, but it occurs to me that is the case. There are other areas in that same budget area of a sustained Alberta image promotion. I'm not sure how that relates to foreign representatives and an international marketing campaign of some $6 million. I don't know what the difference is, quite frankly, and I guess I need a little definition of that.

The other question that does come to mind on all of these areas is that if they are well-thought-out plans, then they need to be sustained. You need that much longer term vision than, quite frankly, I've seen with the last two ministers, perhaps three, and I'm hoping that there will be that sustained plan to market Alberta both inside and outside Alberta.

The image bank and web site. It seems that funding has ceased in the current budget we're in now and is nonexistent in the subsequent year. That would mean to me that either it was declared a failure and all the activities were curtailed or it's determined successful. If that's the case, then it really should have some periodic reassessment and some maintenance. You don't go from some $300,000 to nil in maintenance of an image bank and web site. They all require some sustenance now and then.

Perhaps I'll stop there. Those are all the questions and observations I have on this particular page.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you, hon. member. Let me talk briefly about the in-Alberta/regional marketing campaign. I'd really recommend to you, again, getting ahold of this document and going through it if you haven't already. If you have, great. We can even get you the expanded version, which I think is about 140 pages or something.

MR. WHITE: Is it on the web site?

MR. HAVELOCK: I'm sure it's on the web site. Is it?

AN HON. MEMBER: No.

MR. HAVELOCK: No. We'll give you a hard copy then.

Will this campaign be sustained? Well, the bottom line is, hon. member, that with any expenditure we make, if it can be demonstrated that it generates positive results and benefit, then my position would be, yes, it should be sustained. We need to keep in mind, I think, in fairness to the ministers who have preceded me with respect to this portfolio – you will recall that in '93, when we were all elected, we were faced with a very significant deficit and some financial issues, and I say "we" because of course there are 83 of us and we were all representing Albertans, albeit not necessarily in the same way. So the focus at that time was to really concentrate on getting the financial house in order, to evaluate departments to determine whether or not they were of the right size, whether we had the right people, et cetera.

This particular department has undergone significant change. I think we have about 200 FTEs now, whereas I think in '93 there were about 800. That's a significant reduction and re-evaluation, but I'm happy to say that we have excellent people left. We have a very good department, and we are going in the right direction.

One of the areas that we are focusing on and trying to build is tourism. I can't take credit for the strategic tourism marketing plan because much of the work was done by the previous minister prior to my moving over to this portfolio, but my commitment is certainly to continue to evaluate the dollars as they're spent. We recognize that we should continue with an in-resident program. This past year, for example, we had a brochure produced outlining a lot of the activities in the Edmonton area, and we distributed that, I think, through northern Alberta, if I'm not mistaken. That was to try and attract people from that sector to Edmonton. I know the mountain parks and also Calgary did something similar, and that was with government support also.

I will take under advisement your comment: have we done as good a job in assisting northern Alberta to market themselves to southern Alberta? We'll take a look at that, although I hasten to add that the number one tourist attraction in the province is West Edmonton Mall. That seems to have a lot of positive spin-offs for Edmonton and region. Fort McMurray, for example, is becoming quite successful in marketing the aurora borealis to visitors from Asia. They have something called a midnight experience, although I won't go into a lot of the details as to what that might be, but I think it's looking at the lights during the evening.

You're making some good comments. Yes, Albertans travel a lot and they travel through this province a lot, but I don't believe we've done as effective a job in encouraging Albertans to see their own province. Certainly we're focusing on that.

Now you mention the Alberta image promotion. That's 3.0.5.

MR. WHITE: Is there a difference between 3.0.5 and 3.0.3? I didn't understand the significance.

MR. HAVELOCK: The international marketing campaign, again, is outlined in this document. That's the marketing strategy to get Alberta out there and in front of the international community. The brand image is really trying to develop a recognizable image that would be folded into the international and all of our marketing strategies. So it is separate and apart, but it is linked. So through the brand image hopefully we can come up with a logo or something that we can get out there and basically will be easily recognized as Alberta in trying to promote all the positive things that Alberta has to offer. So it was a budget separate and apart.

We don't have the brand image at this time, hon. member. It's quite difficult actually to come up with a brand image that captures all that Alberta is, because you have the mountain region, you have the northern region, you have the eastern region. They all have different experiences to offer. How do you come up with one brand that basically sells all of that? That's been part of our challenge. Once we come up with that, though, we'll roll it into the international marketing strategy. We will be announcing something having to do with our America strategy in the next week to 10 days, and we'll be more than happy to provide you with a lot of the marketing materials associated with that, but it doesn't have the specific brand associated with it yet because we haven't developed it. Does that explain the difference?

MR. WHITE: Image bank: failure, success, continuity.

MR. HAVELOCK: Vote 3.0.9?

MR. WHITE: Right.

MR. HAVELOCK: Now, my understanding is that we had a number of images out there and we needed the budget to actually acquire those images, so we do have a rather significant image bank at this time. But it is a good point that you raise. Any image bank needs maintenance. It needs to be purged periodically and/or supplemented, so certainly we'll take into account the fact that we should evaluate this on an annual basis to determine whether or not our image bank really needs some updating. If it does, then of course we'll incorporate that in the budget.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, sir.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you.

MR. WHITE: A personal area of interest that I see from the business plan in goal 2 is a geographic target, and that's Mexico. I understand there is an MOU that has been signed and executed by the state of Jalisco in Mexico. It would go from what was then FIGA to this department now. What is being done in the area? Is it an active area, or is it an area that needs some more work?

MR. HAVELOCK: It's an area that we want to focus on, not only Jalisco but Mexico generally. If you look at our international marketing strategy, we've tried to identify in here our priority markets with respect to both investment and trade. I'd refer you to page 4 of the summary document, the highlights, where we've listed Mexico as a group A, which is really a primary market that we want to get into and work closely with companies in trying to expand our presence and our trade. Now, if you managed to follow a little bit of the media on this particular issue a little while ago regarding the international marketing strategy, we were looking at the possibility of establishing a presence in Mexico, a mid-level presence, to facilitate developing the trade relations, because this is a priority market for us. But as I indicated earlier, before that's done, we need to develop performance measures and evaluate our existing offices to see whether it makes sense or not.

I also want to emphasize, though, for those of you who've known me for the past few years, that I don't simply sit around inventing ways to spend money. Rather, any moves that we make with respect to international marketing presence will be in response to what industry is telling us they need and want. When we looked at our international presence based on a KPMG study, it indicated, as I stated earlier, that we do need to have a presence but we need to have a more balanced presence. One of the areas that that study indicated we should look seriously at was the Mexican region.

So we are going to focus on that. We're just getting started on it. We've again been sending some department officials down there to lay some groundwork. We have had an individual down in the Jalisco region for some time, and they were funded through the department of agriculture because there's a lot of agricultural trade going on. Through the government reorganization we inherited or, rather, had all of those involved in those types of functions moved over to our department, so it now falls within our purview. We are maintaining that presence at this time, but it is focused on agriculture, and again, we're evaluating how we can expand that focus.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, sir. Now, if you turn to page 88 in the Bold Plans budget book, the indicators about the business plans section. Being an engineer, I deal with a lot of numbers, and the numbers didn't quite jibe. I get totally different percentage growth numbers. I assume that the growth is total growth. I do one number to the other, and the first number that I have any data for, instead of 9.5 percent, I get 10.8.

Now, I recognize that the numbers are aggregate numbers at the bottom, the $3.7 billion and the $4.1 billion, but it occurs to me that if these numbers are to be used in any outcome measurement, then they really do have to be relatively accurate to track something. The data has very little significance. If you use the common mathematical tool that says that the numbers are insignificant, you can't take 9.5. You know, it can't even be close. Then I look in the ministry document, page 125. The same numbers are repeated through there as though they're target and fact, and they are highly specific.

So I suggest that when you do this a number of times, you have either a mathematician or someone look at it a little closer for some numbers that are significant and accurate. I don't want to be that critical, but when you say you're highly sensitive to outcome and outcome indicators and then I see that the numbers that are produced have very little significance in comparison to one another, it concerns me somewhat.

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, hon. member, I'm assuming you're looking – if you go from $3.7 billion to $4.1 billion, that would be a $4 million increase, and that should equate to over a 10 percent rate of growth. Is that what you're suggesting?

MR. WHITE: Yes, $0.4 billion, over $3.7 million or $3.8 million.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yes, over 10 percent. I'll be honest with you: I didn't crunch the percentages when I went through this. We'll certainly take a look at those, and if there are any wrong, I know that one of 200 people I have on staff will certainly make sure they're corrected.

MR. WHITE: That's all I have right at the moment. There are others who do wish to speak, I'm sure.

THE CHAIRMAN: Thank you, Edmonton-Calder.
Calgary-Montrose.

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Madam Chairman. Mr. Minister, ever since I was elected in 1993, I have always had the question: if the Department of Economic Development were shut down completely tomorrow, what would happen to the province? Not that I'm not valuing the great job your department is doing, that is the dilemma I have had for many years. The performance measure for your department is certainly very, very difficult to put in place, because our economy is doing extremely well. It has outperformed all the other provinces in the country. Definitely you are doing something right. I don't know to what extent your department can get credit for that.

In my mind I think that in a perfect world I would like to see the Department of Economic Development assume three major functions. The first one is that there should be a think tank to develop policy to help boost the economy. It can make recommendations to the government regarding taxation, human resource training, all the things the economy needs to perform well in the future. Of course, if you do that, then you almost become a superdepartment that will do the job for many other departments, because we are living in a world that is so complicated and everything is tied to the economy.

The second role is that I think the Economic Development Department should be able to forecast the global economy. If it can forecast that economy to a certain degree of accuracy, then we can be better prepared for the future. If the department can do that, that is worth all the money the taxpayers can spend on your department. Again, if you can predict the future of the economy, then maybe most of the staff can make millions of dollars overnight.

The last important role, which I have been thinking we have lately shied away from, is to open doors for Alberta business outside our province. That is the area where I think we can make a real impact and we can measure the success of your department. On that topic, I want to venture into the area of foreign trade offices. For many Albertans the term "foreign trade office" is taboo because of the experience we had in the past when many of the foreign trade offices were perceived as patronage appointments, as not doing their jobs, and as not providing the kind of support a business community needs. The great expense associated with those offices created a bad taste for Albertans and many Canadians also.

There are many parts of the world today that still rely a lot on government when it comes to economic policy. China, for example: I don't think any company can go in there and make any important contacts and sign any meaningful contract without the support of the government. The government over there, whether it's provincial or federal, will not talk to a private company unless it has some kind of protection and some kind of association with a level of government, be it federal or provincial.

I have had the opportunity to travel quite a bit and visit quite a few Canadian embassies overseas. One thing I think we can learn from the province of Quebec is that compared to all the other provinces in Canada, Quebec is probably the most successful province in utilizing our embassy. I can bet you that if you walk into any Canadian embassy overseas, there's a good chance you will find a Quebec bureaucrat working with the Canadian embassy, trying to promote that province and trying to get as many business opportunities for our province as possible.

Of course, the relationship it has with the federal government plays an important role in that, too, because many of the diplomats who work overseas are bilingual by requirement and therefore many of them are Quebecers. That inheritance, that built-in relationship somehow helps the relationship between the embassy and the Quebec bureaucrats who work overseas. Somehow we have to build that kind of relationship. We have to pay attention to recruiting people who can be bilingual, locating them overseas. People have to have the mentality of getting things going rather than the bureaucrat who sits behind a table and doesn't take action when it is needed.

A good way to measure the success of a trade office or a foreign presence is that we should measure the percentage of market share in trading and investment in that particular jurisdiction. For example, if we put a trade office in Beijing this year, then we should look at what is the percentage of trade in that country that we are taking today and then compare that percentage a year from now. We have to look at this as a competition between us and the world, and if we can get the bigger market share, then we should be okay.

Mr. Minister, I think we should take more action. We shouldn't shy away from the idea that we have to spend money in order to make money. There is no doubt that in many parts of the world we have to have a presence. If you look at our growth and our production, our GDP, we are a significant player in the Canadian economy, but when you go overseas, we have a very humble presence. Many countries do not even know that Alberta exists within Canada. When they talk about Canada, they know Quebec, they know Toronto and maybe Vancouver, B.C. That's about it.

I think we have a lot to offer to the world if we can come out with the kind of performance measures I just mentioned earlier. We should put in place a pilot project. We shouldn't put in a trade office immediately. What we should do is put it in on a trial basis, just like a contract when you go and work for an employer. You don't get appointed for five years immediately; you get a trial period for about a year to see how you perform. If the performance exceeds the target we set out, then we can increase the presence or add additional resources to it. I think if we approach it that way, then Albertans will support us in this area.

Also, with the member of the opposition party here, I also would ask that they take this consideration seriously and try to work with us in that approach. I think it's very easy to score political points when you attack foreign trade offices. The reality is that as our economy grows and as the global market becomes more integrated, the choice to become a major player in the global economy requires the ability to be able to find trading partners with other countries outside Canada. If we cannot find trading partners, if we cannot find new markets for Alberta products, then sooner or later we will be left behind. This is not a matter of theory; it is a life-and-death issue for our economy.

I want to touch on another area that is equally important and that I mentioned earlier, and that is the process we put in place to develop economic policy, the policy that can impact the economy. We are different from many Third World countries in that the economy doesn't listen to the government to a certain degree and it goes its own way. However, for the last seven years I haven't seen a co-ordinated effort from the federal government to develop a national policy to deal with the economy.

Our philosophy is also very simple nowadays in that we just stay out of the business of doing business and let the economy take care of itself. I think it is a good policy. However, in some areas, for example the high-tech industry, we have taken some action to invest in that sector of the economy because we realized that that sector will be the future of Alberta and the future of the world. If we don't have the kind of proper investment, if we don't have the good policy, then we will miss out on the opportunities.

Today I think there are many other areas we can look at, too, because the baby boomers moving into retirement age could have a significant impact on our economy. It could have a huge impact on the entire network of social support that the government designed, and up to now I haven't seen a huge effort from any level of government in Canada to seriously think about how to deal with that issue in the future.

Another area we have not been very active in is the area of dealing with the new Canadians. Canada is a multicultural country. We receive and we welcome thousands of new immigrants every year to Canada, and we've welcomed thousands of them to Alberta. These people come with a wealth of experience and knowledge, and up to now I haven't seen a co-ordinated effort from the federal government and the provincial government to maximize the talents and the knowledge of these people. Many of them become underemployed in our economy, and I think that is a big waste of resources for us. I am looking forward to the day we have some kind of policy that can help them through the transition period, help them achieve the maximum potential they have. Some of that, you know, is related to other departments like the human resources department, but who will take the lead; right?

If you look at it from the economic point of view, that all these decisions we make today will impact the economy in the future, then, yes, it becomes your department that will have to initiate these actions.

MR. HAVELOCK: Do you want me to answer some? I'll go as quickly as I can. You reiterated a comment you made, I remember, when we first discussed the department during our initial business planning process, regarding: how do you evaluate the department? If you disappeared tomorrow, would there be a problem? That type of approach. I can't sit here and tell you: if we disappeared tomorrow, would the economy stop growing? No. However, I think in the long run it would have an impact, and that's what economic strategy and development is all about. It's putting together a long-term strategy as to the direction we should be going. That's what the department is focusing on with, for example, the Get Ready Alberta process, the long-term strategic tourism marketing plan we've created, the new international marketing strategy. That's where I think we really have a role to play.

You indicated three areas that we should be primarily involved in, the think tank being the first. Well, we really do a lot of that at this stage, and the three documents I just outlined for you are a result of those within the department working with other departments and with the private sector to generate new ideas, a new direction and strategies as to how we can grow the province. So I completely agree with you. That's one of the things we try and do.

Forecasting and the global economy. That, again, falls into the think tank. We are constantly monitoring what's going on throughout the world. We do produce through our department our own forecasts. We work closely with Treasury as to what they're doing, and we are trying to follow the trends and determine where we should be putting our resources. So, again, I agree with you, but I think we do some of that right now.

The third thing you talked about, the foreign offices. You mentioned that in the past they've had a bad name. I agree, and part of our challenge is trying to ensure that we get the full story out. Now, it doesn't help getting the story out when documents within the department make their way to the public prior to us even having a reasonable discussion on what the documents contain. Then sometimes the issue gets away from you, and you're dealing, quite frankly, at a disadvantage in trying to explain what the documents are all about. Once we were able to come forward with what we were intending to do, the issue really disappeared, and the explanation was that we are going to develop performance measures, that we're going to measure how the offices are performing, and that we won't expand until we've completed that process.

Again, part of the challenge for us is in convincing people that we need to have an international presence. It is important, and I think we can win that discussion by, again, ensuring that those located in our international offices have trade and investment expertise, that they aren't performing a protocol function. I'll use Mr. Brad Klak in Tokyo, Japan, as an example. He's completely fluent in Japanese. We have our Beijing representative, Ms Choi. I believe she speaks Cantonese, if I'm not mistaken. The fellow we're appointing to CAPC also speaks a particular dialect of Chinese. So I agree with you that we need to get people who have some background, who understand the language, who can work with the local communities.

Why do we need to do that? Well, you yourself indicated how important exports are to this province. We spend about $7 million a year on our international representation strategy, yet exports count for $34 billion worth of activity in this province. It supports 500,000 jobs directly. So we're getting a reasonable rate of return on what we're doing.

We have not done a good job as a government, I think, in explaining to Albertans how important exports are to this province. I believe it was the president of Grant MacEwan who indicated to me the other day that he was discussing the very issue of exports with an audience which he considered to be reasonably well educated, and he asked them how much of our GDP they felt was dependent on exports. They said about less than 10 percent, yet it's about 35 percent. These were people who should know and who are professionals. So that's part of the challenge we need to take up.

You mentioned measuring a percentage of market share in trade and investment. That's a good suggestion, and I know my department officials are going to take that into consideration. Putting someone in place for a year, for example, pursuant to contract – my personal and initial reaction, hon. member, is that probably a year isn't long enough because it sometimes takes a long time to develop a relationship, so you might not see any measurable results for quite some time. It's the same with tourism marketing. We could be out there spending dollars now, yet you probably won't see a return for a couple of years.

A co-ordinated effort with respect to development of economic policy on a national basis. I agree that there hasn't been a co-ordinated effort. I would suggest, though, that the present federal government and federal governments of the past actually have implemented policies which are not conducive to developing an overall national economic policy because of the way that grants and subsidies work, for example, with particular regions. So in a way we're actually working against ourselves, although I'm encouraged by some of the moves the federal government made with respect to its recent budget on the tax side and on the stock option side. I think that will be of some assistance.

You mentioned new Canadians. Well, interestingly enough, I think it was about 10 days ago I actually had something presented to me by the department regarding . . .

THE CHAIRMAN: Hon. minister, I hesitate to interrupt you, but that particular 20-minute segment is up, and we have had indication that there is one more question coming.

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, I want to finish my answer. It'll take 30 seconds. Would you let me do that?

MR. PHAM: Please.

MR. HAVELOCK: Thank you. Regarding new Canadians, I just had presented to me by the department some of the changes the federal government is suggesting with respect to immigration policy, and we will be responding to their suggestions in the very near future. You're right; we do in our department have an interest in immigration policy. We want to attract people to this province who actually can become contributing members of our society and contribute to the economy generally. So we are working in that area, although it's very preliminary, and at this stage I can't tell you what we're up to.

MR. PHAM: Not only that, but we have to have a plan to help them when they are here too. We can select the best people, but when we bring them here, they lack the network of support.

THE CHAIRMAN: Calgary-Montrose, we do have to sort of follow what we set out in the beginning here. Lethbridge-East has indicated that he does have one final question.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Madam Chairman. Mr. Minister, as we were looking through the performance indicators and that, in a lot of the new literature that's coming out now talking about economic growth, especially when you start talking about issues like the Alberta advantage attracting business to our area, they deal with issues that are not just monetary measures but issues of health care, education, income distribution, and the availability of appropriately trained labour forces. Are you at any point in time planning to put some of those kinds of indicators into your business plan so that we can have a little bit of an idea how you as the chair of the council of ministers are kind of bringing together some mechanism to measure the interrelationship and the joint activity between your department and the – what do you want to call them? – support departments that are under you as the chairman of the Council of Economic Development Ministers?

I would just like to have you think about that and deal with it, and I hope that in the future at some point in time we can see some of those kinds of measures in the performance indicators for the department.

MR. HAVELOCK: Well, I think that's a very good point. Again, we aren't simply concerned with the pure economic indicators, as you indicate. We are concerned also with the quality of life, with ensuring that we have a highly educated workforce, for example. So we will take a look at some of those. Now, some of those concepts may be captured in the measure where we're comparing ourselves to other jurisdictions on those 16 points that are listed in the document, but we'll certainly take that into consideration.

Also, Madam Chairman, just very briefly, I'd like to provide a little bit of additional information to the hon. member's questions regarding 3.0.9 and also the numbers that we were talking about regarding the percentages on page 88 of the business plan. I am advised that the image bank and web site were onetime development costs, and actually the maintenance of these is provided for in 3.0.5, Alberta image promotion. So I just learned something tonight, and you did too.

MR. WHITE: I was sure it was somewhere.

MR. HAVELOCK: Yeah.

The Member for Edmonton-Calder also raised the issue of the percentages on the bottom of page 88. I am advised that the numbers aren't in error. They're a function of rounding off large numbers, but we can give you a detailed work-up on that. I'm glad to hear that they were reasonably accurate. They are because of rounding off, but we'll give you more information.

MR. WHITE: Terrific. Thank you kindly, sir.

DR. NICOL: Madam Chairman, with that, I'd like to move that we adjourn back to the Assembly.

THE CHAIRMAN: Okay. The committee must rise and report when we return to the Assembly.

Before we close, the chairman and the deputy chairman would both, I think, like to thank you very much for the decorum in here tonight. I think it was exceptional. I am very, very impressed with the dialogue back and forth, and we had a number of members on both sides able to ask questions.

Mr. Minister, thank you for your co-operation. I think it was a good session tonight.

DR. NICOL: Don't we have to vote?

THE CHAIRMAN: Oh, yes, we have to vote. All those in favour of rising and reporting?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIRMAN: Thank you.

[The subcommittee adjourned at 10:01 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, March 2, 2000

1:30 p.m.

Date: 00/03/02

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Though we as legislators of this great province and its people are taken from the common people and selected by You to be architects of our history, give us wisdom and understanding to do Your will in all we do. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand here with great pride today to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly two very special guests who are sitting in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon. They are Ray Martin, former MLA and former Leader of the Official Opposition in this House, and his wife, Cheryl Matheson. I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my pleasure to present a petition signed by 108 individuals from Calgary who state:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition to present to the Assembly that states:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

That was signed by 135 Calgarians.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon on behalf of 117 citizens from Calgary to submit a petition asking the Legislative Assembly "to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining" the public health care system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise on this sad day in the Legislature to table 131 petitions signed by Calgarians urging the Legislative Assembly "to urge the government to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure this afternoon to rise and present a petition which requests the Legislative Assembly "to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care." They are from 127 Calgarians. That brings the total today, once all of the presenters have presented, to 1,141 individuals.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition on behalf of 640 Albertans primarily from the constituency of Edmonton-Glengarry urging the government to "stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table today a petition signed by 235 Albertans, and this brings the total number of signatories to 1,350. The petitioners are calling on this Assembly "to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Reading and Receiving Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to have the 1,000-signature petition that I presented to the Assembly yesterday read and received, please.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would rise to request that the petition I presented yesterday now be read and received.

Thank you.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the petition I presented yesterday concerning public health care and the concern about it being undermined by this government be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned citizens of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to stop promoting private health care and undermining public health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I tabled yesterday be read and received now.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of the province of Alberta hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to pass a Bill banning private for-profit hospitals in Alberta so that the integrity of the public, universal health care system may be maintained.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request that the petition I presented yesterday on behalf of the hon. Member for Stony Plain be now read and received.

THE CLERK:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, to urge the Government to intervene on the parents' behalf to have the Parkland School Division No. 70 review and reconsider the decision to amalgamate the French Immersion program.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. DICKSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to give notice right now that I will be bringing an application for a declaration. There has been a contempt of this Legislative Assembly. This, sir, relates to what happened at noon today when the Leader of the Official Opposition was denied access to a private briefing with respect to a bill that had been given notice on the Order Paper and that had not yet received first reading. In fact, the Leader of the Official Opposition was physically restrained, physically assaulted . . .

THE SPEAKER: You're giving notice.

MR. DICKSON: Very well, sir. I'll deal with it later.
Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 11
Health Care Protection Act

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I am very pleased to be able to introduce a bill being the Health Care Protection Act, 2000.

This proposed legislation, which is a very important item, is designed to provide protection to the public health care system of this province by filling a legislative gap, to put into law our commitment as a government to the adherence to the principles of the Canada Health Act, and further, Mr. Speaker, to put in place the proper legislative structure to regulate and control and of course prohibit private hospitals. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members had better retain their places when the Speaker is in the chair and he's standing; otherwise, there will be a contempt.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a first time]

1:40

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to table with the Assembly the required number of copies of Alberta Infrastructure's three-year primary highway construction and rehabilitation program, including the north/south trade corridor projects, covering the years 2000, 2001-02, and 2003.

Now, Mr. Speaker, also included are copies of the secondary highway construction and rehab program and construction of public roads and bridges for the years 2000-2001 to '01-02, and the proposed 2000-2001 estimates for seniors' lodges, health care facilities, and water management infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, each MLA will be receiving information related to the project listed that applies to their individual constituency with respect to the listing of primary and secondary highway projects. Those MLAs whose constituencies are within a city will receive information relating to the entire city.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today with the appropriate number of copies. First, from Andre and Myra Morin from the city of St. Albert, who are opposed to and disagree with the proposal to expand private health care, and, secondly, from Dorothy Barclay from Spruce Grove, who likewise is very, very much opposed to what the government is doing in allowing overnight stays.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have three tablings. The first is from Sakaw school, from the chairperson on behalf of the parent council in my riding, who is very concerned about the underfunding of education, in particular classroom sizes. I will be reading the contents of this letter into the record later on in budget debate.

The second tabling is a letter to the Premier from Roland Teape, who is very concerned about what's happening in Environment and makes some recommendations for the Premier with regard to the Minister of Environment.

The third tabling is copies of petitions signed by 102 people who live in the constituency of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. Mr. Speaker, these people are very concerned about gas wells that are going into the area that they live in, and they are equally concerned that their MLA was not prepared to table this petition in the Legislature.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table a letter of invitation from the minister of health to attend a briefing on Bill 11, the Health Care Protection Act, today over the noon hour, the same briefing that I was physically stopped from entering.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Point of order.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Actually, hon. members, it being Thursday, Thursday always seems to be that day before a weekend, and sometimes there's some youthful exuberance displayed by hon. members in the Assembly, but let's get on with the Routine.

The chair has recognized the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MS OLSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first one is entitled The Fifth National Court Technology Conference, September '97, the Technology-augmented Court Record.

The second one is entitled Making the Record: Court Reporting and Technology, An Analysis of the Issues, March 4, 1992.

The third one is Depositions and Accuracy: A Report of The Justice Research Institute.

The fourth one, Mr. Speaker, is also in relation to digital audio recording: information on suitability for use in courtrooms. It was compiled by LegalVoice, Inc. in New Jersey, again a report on digital court communication.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to table five copies of a letter from a concerned Albertan — and it's addressed to the Environment minister — stating her opposition to the Natural Heritage Act.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MRS. SLOAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and table five copies of Clear Answers: The Economics and Politics of For-Profit Medicine by Kevin Taft and Gillian Steward. The book holds the truth about this government's deceptive mismanagement of the public health care system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. These are further to comments that I was making during the Community Development debates on Tuesday. The first set of tablings is copies of letters from Robert Bardston of Medicine Hat, Cheryl Cooney of Red Deer, and Laurie Leier and John Pauls, both of Calgary, who have written to their MLAs urging the government to increase funding to the arts by $8 million.

The second set of tablings — and this is further to a discussion on women's policy and programs. I'm providing the front page and the masthead page of three publications by Canadian Woman Studies: Women and Education, Women in Science and Technology, and Immigrant and Refugee Women.

My final tabling is five copies of over 50 cards signed and collected by members of the Edmonton Raging Grannies. They are asking to save medicare and health care for people, not for profit.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters to table today. These people specifically phoned and asked me to table these in the Legislature. Though I have several more, these two phoned this week and said: please table it this week. They are from Valerie Braiden in St. Albert and Mrs. Cindy Milton in Spruce Grove. They are expressing their concerns about private, for-profit health care and the direction this government is taking.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got 11 different tablings to make today, and with your permission I'd like to put the names of the writers of the letters on record. The first one is a letter from William and Cathy Reid and family of Cochrane.

The second one is from Jim Culver of Lethbridge. The third one is from C.H. Dyke, a retired person from Calgary. The fourth one is from Colleen and Lou Lindblad. The fifth one is from Doug and Janet Friebel of Edmonton. The sixth one is from Joan Bowes from Sherwood Park. The seventh one from Mary Trumpener from Edmonton. The next one is from Joanne Clelland from Edmonton as well. The next one, Mr. Speaker, is from Thea Paap from Edmonton. The second last one is from Peace River and is from Terry Dashcavich. The last one, Mr. Speaker, is from Evelyn Henderson from Edmonton. They are appalled at the decision of this government to bring in private, for-profit hospitals in the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings with your permission, and I'll go as quickly as I can. I have, first of all, the appropriate number of copies of a letter from my colleague the MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark to the Minister of Health and Wellness dated today requesting that the minister not just investigate the Gimbel Eye Centre for a potential breach of law concerning queue-jumping but that the investigation be expanded to other private eye clinics, not only in Calgary but in Edmonton, and also to initiate the investigation in regard to MRI clinics.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I have copies of correspondence, first addressed to the Premier from Mr. Floyd Haynes requesting that he do nothing to jeopardize Alberta's precious public health care system, and a similar letter to the Minister of Health and Wellness from Mr. Floyd Haynes, in my constituency.

Mr. Speaker, I have copies of the executive summary and of the entire text of a very informative report that was released to day by Dr. Richard Plain, a PhD in economics. The title is An Economic Overview from a Public Interest Perspective: The Privatization and the Commercialization of Public Hospital Based Medical Services Within the Province of Alberta. That's the title. Basically he finds a flaw with the notion that somehow the public good can be served by privatization of our health care system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter sent by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. The first one is to the Hon. Halvar Jonson, Minister of Health and Wellness, dated February 29th: "On a daily basis my colleagues and I receive phone calls, faxes and e-mails regarding the Twelve Principles of the Alberta Approach to health care."

The second one, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of a letter sent to the Hon. Allan Rock, Minister of Health for Canada: "On a daily basis, my colleagues and I receive phone calls, faxes and e-mails regarding the Twelve Principles of the Alberta Approach to health care." This is dated February 29 from our Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your indulgence I have here 2,500 cards signed by Albertans calling on the Premier to stop the legalization of private, for-profit hospitals. There are too many cards to table five copies of each. I would like to send the 2,500 cards across the way to the Premier's desk.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. WHITE: Thank you, sir. I have three tablings today. The first is from a resident of Alberta from Red Deer-North, and he's concerned about the Genesis land development in the Spray Valley region. He calls the development a "monstrosity," and he urges "you," being the department, "to recommend that this area be added to the present Peter Lougheed Provincial Park."

The second tabling is from Dr. Peter Petrik of the city of Edmonton, and he wishes to express his profound concern regarding the Genesis proposal of development for major recreation facilities in Spray Valley.

The third is from a long-time resident, actually born and raised in Banff, and she now lives in Kanata, Ontario. She expresses concern about the proposal of Genesis Land Development for a four-season development complex and heli/cat ski operation at the head of Spray Lakes in Kananaskis valley. She's not categorically against the parks development per se but just very concerned about limiting the goal of this development and the scope of this development.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Associate Minister of Aboriginal Affairs.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very, very pleased to introduce to you and to the Members of the Legislative Assembly some very excited young individuals. They're from my constituency of Lesser Slave Lake, from High Prairie, from St. Andrew's school. It's rare that we see schools come to the Legislature, because it's so far away, but I'm excited that they're here today, and I know they are. They are in the members' gallery. There are 47 visitors. The teachers that accompany these young people are Terry Smith and Leanne Kowalchuk and parent helpers Mary Lou McCue, Tina Kennedy, Cathy Hewko, Mary Wakaluk, Anna Belyan, Lucy Dufour, Verna Wittigo, Diane Perry, John Zahara, and Hanna Harasymchuk, from Ukraine. There are 35 students. I ask all of the people from High Prairie, St. Andrew's, to stand up and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Resource Development.

DR. WEST: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly 50 individuals from the School of Hope. The School of Hope is a virtual and blended program and is also connected to the Vermilion home school program. They are part and parcel of 2,400 students across this province from all the constituencies in the province of Alberta. They have come here today with hope, I guess, that we would demonstrate to them good conduct in the demonstration of democracy, and I trust that we learn something from the name of their school.

I'd also like to introduce with the students some of their teachers: Mrs. Helen Prediger, Mrs. Lorraine Person, and Mrs. Monica Poland. With them also are parents and helpers Mrs. Laura Haerberle, Mrs. Irene Nichol, Mrs. Debbie Farkash, Mr. Brent Clark and Mrs. Camille Clark, Mrs. Bonnie Dyck, and Mr. and Mrs. Frans Feyter. They are also accompanied by Mr. Sylvestro Chiacchia and Mrs. Harvena Chiacchia and Mr. Bruce Jackson. They're in the members' gallery. I would ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. LANGEVIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a visiting family from St. Paul. The family does home schooling. The parents are Mr. and Mrs. Ken and Paulette Ralstin, and they have with them their four children: Sara, Jeremy, Jason, and Natalie. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would like to ask them to stand and be welcomed by the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce a public school board trustee with the Fort McMurray school district, Mr. Glenn Doonanco. He's joined here today with his lovely wife, Louise, and their children, Danielle and Chantel. They're in the members' gallery. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of all the legislators here today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MS PAUL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very delighted and pleased today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly seven Cub Scouts from the 97th Dunluce Cubs from the constituency of Edmonton-Castle Downs. They are here today to witness what's happening and transpiring in the Legislative Assembly. They are here with their leader, Mrs. Tammy Kucy. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of Highwood, Andrea Fugeman Miller. She has served as the co-chair of Windsong regional child and family services authority. Andrea is located in the members' gallery. I ask her now to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several guests today. First of all, I'd like to introduce two gentlemen that I've only just recently met. I believe that they're seated in the members' gallery. Mr. Peter Labant from St. Paul, with Intercontinental Granite, is visiting us today, and Mr. David Wall from here in the city with Aircom Industries is also here. They've made it into the public gallery. They're already standing, so I'd ask all members to join me in welcoming them.

Mr. Speaker, also seated — and this time I know they're in the members' gallery because I can feel their look, and they're here on some serious business today. I'd like to introduce Bernice and Gerry Cassidy. They're visiting from my constituency. They are keen observers of politics. They give me sage advice, and they're here to help hold the government accountable for its privatization of health care. I'd ask them to stand and be recognized.

Sitting with Mr. and Mrs. Cassidy, Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce through you and to all members of the Assembly Mr.

Kevan Rhead, who from time to time will call me with some sharp reminders of what my obligations are in terms of serving the public interest. I'd ask him to stand and also receive the warm welcome from all members of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, one final set of guests that are here today: Des and Helen Achilles, who are no strangers to any member, I don't believe, of this Assembly. They make their views known on a whole variety of issues. They are here today as well to join with many Albertans in making sure that this government doesn't push ahead with its privatization of health care plans. I would ask Des and Helen to please rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Chamber.

2:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several guests to introduce today. I was going to introduce them all at once, but one person will be introduced after the first group is introduced, and you and my colleagues will know why that is the case in a moment.

All of these people that I'm going to introduce are opposed to the legalization of private, for-profit hospitals. They are Pritam Khullar; Shirley Edgar; Judith Golec; Irene Payne; Dr. Eugene Falkenberg; Margaret Falkenberg, both from Lethbridge; Brian Staples; Clare Botsford; Arlene Chapman, who is one of the six very high quality candidates running for the nomination in Edmonton-Highlands for the New Democrats; Lawrence Johnson, also a candidate for nomination in Highlands; Deanna Shorten and Regina Parker, with Poverty in Action; Doug Tomlinson; Evelyn Tomlinson; and Hana Razga, who is the constituency office manager for Edmonton-Highlands. I'll ask all of these individuals to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction is of a person that has been my companion for the last 40 years. That happens to be my wife, Swinder Pannu. Swinder and I celebrated our 40th wedding anniversary on the 28th of February. I'll ask her to now stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a very special day for me. A number of guests have arrived and are in the gallery, so with your indulgence I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly, first of all, Julie Lloyd. Julie is a constituent and a lawyer and has been heading up the very good work of Equal=Alberta. I'm proud to count Julie as a friend as well. If I could ask Julie to please rise and accept the welcome of the House.

Secondly, I am always pleased when members of the arts community join us in question period, and I am really delighted that Ron Jenkins has joined us in the public gallery today. Ron is an actor and a director in Edmonton, a very innovative fellow, known for his gritty pieces and realistic presentations, and some will no doubt remember the plays that he did in an autobody shop and a back alley. Ron is the newly appointed artistic director of Workshop West theatre. Congratulations, Ron. I'd ask you to please rise and accept the warm and traditional welcome of the House.

I just have two more sets. There are two constituents who have come today to express their concerns about private health care. Roger Wowk is a frequent caller and dispenser of advice to myself and the constituency staff, and we appreciate his interest and his guidance. Joan Dobek is a very active senior in the constituency and gathered a number of signatures on the health care petitions. Now, I'm not sure which gallery they're in or indeed if they're here now or will be shortly, but if they are, would they please rise and accept the warm welcome of the House.

Finally, I'd like to introduce Dr. Phil Kreisel. Dr. Kreisel is an entrepreneur and the owner of Matrix Research, and I'm sure many remember his father, Henry Kreisel. With Dr. Kreisel is Joanne Janzen, and that's the marvelous Joanne who runs my office and makes it all happen. I'd ask them to both please rise and accept the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to this Assembly an ex-Edmontonian whom I know many in this House would know and who is now living in Calgary and is a constituent of mine in Calgary-West. Ron Liepert is in the members' gallery. Would Ron please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured to introduce some parents from the l'ecole Meridian Heights school in Stony Plain. Their presence here indicates their support for their children and their children's education. I'd ask them to rise as I call their names and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly: Marian Kyle, Tim Summers, Ilona Jackson, Barb Girouard, Carol Harris, Trish Haryett, Joan Weitzel, Debbie Henwood, Shelly Novlesky, Kathy Colliou, Cheryl Pronovost, Catherine Yamada, Mark Nickel, Helga Medford, and Wayne Jackson. Give them a warm welcome, please.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a very active worker in the constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek. We are joined today by Guy Ouellette, who is the president of the Liberal association there and who is currently organizing a very actively contested nomination, which will be very lively, and will present to us an excellent candidate at the end of the day. We would ask Mr. Ouellette to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MRS. SOETAERT: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly one of our caucus support staff. She organizes our petitions. She gets calls from all over Alberta and e-mails all of us, and will e-mail anyone else that would like. Her name is Joan Swain. Her e-mail address is jswain@assembly.ab.ca, and she welcomes all of you. She'll help you organize your petitions as well. So please stand, Joan, and receive our welcome.

THE SPEAKER: Well, I think that now everyone in the galleries has been introduced save one person, and that's a former member of this Legislative Assembly, Mr. Peter Sekulic.

head: Oral Question Period

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, the choice is very clear. On the one hand, you have the people of Alberta and the Official Opposition, and on the other side you have the Premier and his government, who are fronting for the special interests pushing for his whole privatization scheme. The Premier promised in his 90-day plan to fix public health care. That was over 1,614 days ago. Albertans trusted this Premier to do that. Today he has given up. He has bowed to the special interests, and he's betrayed the trust of Albertans by bringing in private hospitals legislation. A broken promise to fix public health care, a massive spin campaign, stonewalling Albertans with his secret private hospitals agenda and focus groups: Albertans just don't trust this Premier anymore. Why doesn't this Premier just level with Albertans and admit that this bill is a Trojan horse, that his real agenda – his real agenda – is to allow private hospitals right across Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is no Trojan horse other than the one the Liberals tried to bring into the television room today.

Mr. Speaker, when the leader of the Liberal opposition alluded to the opposition Liberals and the Friends of Medicare and CUPE, she forgot the NDs. The NDs have been very aggressive in this too. I mean, let's be fair.

Quite simply, the message contained in the bill is quite clear. The legislation confirms Alberta's commitment to publicly funded health care and to the principles of the Canada Health Act. Mr. Speaker, if the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition is opposed to that, stand up and say so now so that all Albertans will know where she stands. It will ban private hospitals. If the leader of the Liberal opposition is opposed to that, stand up and say so now. Say so now. Queue-jumping will be illegal. If the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition is opposed to that, stand up and say so now.

To answer the question, this has absolutely nothing to do with special interest groups, and I don't know what she's talking about. Mr. Speaker, this hon. member has alluded to special interest groups, oh, four or five or six times in this Legislative Assembly. She has never stood up to say who these special interest groups are. She has never stood up to say who they might be connected with, what their professions might be, in what discipline of our health service they might be operating. She makes these very vague generalizations relative to special interest groups. She does not have the courage to stand up and say who they are. Perhaps if she won't in the Legislature, maybe she'll go outside and name them.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I'm going to call on the Leader of the Official Opposition to continue . . .

[Disturbance in the gallery]

THE SERGEANT AT ARMS: Order. Order. Order in the gallery. You're not part of the proceedings. Order in the gallery. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members. Hon. members, this is a parliament, and the people who have arrived here have been elected in the province of Alberta. I have no difficulty whatsoever in reading from the book again, but I'm just going to give one precis: decorum is important. There are basic rules about questions, and there are basic rules about answers. We started this first question at 8 minutes after 2. That's nearly six minutes. That's way too long. Succinct questions, succinct answers, and decorum is all important. All important.

Private Health Services

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, is this Premier saying that 5,000 citizens from Grande Prairie, 5,200 citizens from Red Deer, and over 10,000 other Albertans who have signed petitions are guilty of malicious misinformation?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if they have been reading the information that has been sent out by the Liberals, they have indeed been reading malicious misinformation, because what they have been saying simply is not true.

Mr. Speaker, the truth is in the bill. The truth is in the bill. We will be sending that bill out on Monday to every household in the province. We will be sending this bill out to every household in the province.

I know that that doesn't sit well with the leader of the Liberal opposition. She doesn't believe in bills that purport to become the law of this province, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, she was saying on a radio program today: it's hard for an average citizen to read legislation. In other words, what she is saying to Albertans is: you're not smart enough, Albertans, to read legislation. That's what this hon. member is saying, and that's what she thinks of Albertans.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, will this Premier explain why he is putting the well-being of special interests ahead of the well-being of the people of this province?

MR. KLEIN: Again, Mr. Speaker, that is not the case, but I would ask this hon. member to do the honourable thing and stand up and cite all of these special interest groups, to whom they are connected, what their particular interest is. If she won't do it in this House, maybe she will do the honourable thing and do it outside the House so that these special interest groups, whomever they might be, can learn for themselves who they might be.

MRS. MacBETH: First the truth squads, next a bombardment of Albertans' homes with a blitzkrieg of this Premier's propaganda and spin to promote his Trojan horse private hospitals bill, yet the Premier will not show Albertans the research that his whole spin campaign is based upon. Why doesn't the Premier admit that the real plan to bring in private hospitals is in these blanked-out pages?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I remember very well when the leader of the Liberal opposition was a member of Executive Council. During her tenure as minister of education and as minister of health I'm sure that she introduced a number of bills. Now she calls legislation propaganda. What was it when she was on Executive Council? We didn't call her legislation propaganda. Even the ND opposition at that time didn't call a bill of the House propaganda. They had the decency of understanding what a bill is.

A bill is absolutely paramount. It is the instrument for reasoned debate in this Legislative Assembly, and it is the instrument that purports to become law. That is not propaganda. What is propaganda is the kinds of ads that the Liberals have been running, the orchestrated campaign to gain signatures on a petition based on malicious misinformation. That's what propaganda is all about.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are seeing through this Premier.

Is the reason the Premier won't show Albertans their own documents because the focus groups told him that Albertans don't want his private hospitals?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 is the document of Albertans. This is the document that will go to all households in this province. This bill is the culmination of one of the most intensive public consultation processes ever undertaken by this government. This is the culmination of the involvement of Albertans: those in favour, those opposed, and those who simply want more information.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, if they weren't in trouble, they wouldn't need their propaganda campaign.

Is the reason the Premier won't show Albertans their own document because it tests the language and the spin that are most effective in fooling Albertans about private hospitals?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, obviously the leader of the Liberal opposition, in her endeavour to out-stunt the stunt people even in Hollywood, has not taken time to read the bill. She has not taken time, obviously, to read the bill, because the bill quite clearly states that it will ban private hospitals. What could be clearer than that?

2:20

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, this bill isn't worth the paper it was printed on. In fact, the best thing Albertans can do with it is to throw it in their recycle bin and have the propaganda package along with it and ship it off to the Premier's special waste treatment plant in Swan Hills. That is how toxic this plan is for public health care. This is the mechanism to set up American styled health care in this province. The bill says that insured hospital services can only be provided in "a public hospital" or in "an approved surgical facility." Will the Premier admit that "approved surgical facility" is the new code word for private hospitals?

MR. KLEIN: Two points, Mr. Speaker. The leader of the Liberal opposition should know what a surgical facility is all about. I mean, there were 37 of them operating under her watch and approved by the minister of that particular time.

Mr. Speaker, the other point: when I was in this Legislature as minister of the environment and this hon. member was minister of health, she had nothing but praise for the special waste treatment plant at Swan Hills.

MRS. MacBETH: Approved surgical facility: is that the language that his focus groups told him were the most acceptable in selling private hospitals in his spin campaign?

MR. KLEIN: No spin campaign here, Mr. Speaker. The only spin doctors sitting in this Legislative Assembly are right there in the Liberal caucus and to some degree in the ND caucus. Well, what's left of it.

Mr. Speaker, this is a bill. This is a very important document. This is the most important document that this Legislative Assembly can receive and consider, and to refer to this as propaganda is absolutely shameful. I point out again that this is the result of one of the most intensive public consultation exercises in the history of this province and certainly of this Legislative Assembly.

We're now waiting to hear even further from Albertans as to what they think about this legislation. Mr. Speaker, what 3 million Albertans think about this legislation is far more important to me than the biased, emotional, untruthful kind of rhetoric that is coming out of the mouths of the Liberal Party.

MRS. MacBETH: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier get out from under the dome? Will he quit hiding behind his propaganda machine? Will he meet me face to face in front of Albertans to discuss health care in this province? Why would he want to run away from that opportunity? I'll answer Albertans' questions. Will he?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I hate to say it, but the last time I met the leader of the Liberal opposition face to face, she didn't like the outcome at all.

I have given an undertaking to debate the bill in front of live television in this Legislative Assembly when it reaches second reading stage. There is no better place, Mr. Speaker, with you, sir, as the referee to debate a bill. That's where a bill should be debated, not in Liberal orchestrated or ND orchestrated town hall meetings but in the Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. interim leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After being subjected for months and months to tax-paid propaganda by this government, Albertans have learned today to their horror that Bill 11 is nothing but enabling legislation that will throw the door wide open to private, for-profit hospitals. The real agenda behind Bill 11 has not changed since this Premier took office. The agenda is to privatize our much-loved public health care system. This is the clear conclusion of the latest study on this issue released today by Dr. Richard Plain, a well-respected health care economist from the University of Alberta. My questions are to the Premier. Why is the government relying on a slick public relations campaign to sell the bill when in fact it should be heeding and respecting solid evidence which clearly shows that 37 hospital corporations like HRG will deliver surgical services at a much higher cost than large public hospitals such as the Foothills or the Rockyview?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, do I take it from that that this hon. member is also questioning the ability of Albertans to read a bill and understand a bill?

There are a multitude of reports on this particular issue. We have read those reports. We have received those reports. We have heard all sides of this issue. On the basis of what we've heard – and it's in a document, Mr. Speaker. Everyone has the document. On the basis of what we have heard, this bill was prepared, sir.

Albertans once again will have another opportunity to examine the bill. There is no rhetoric in this bill. There is no emotion in this bill. This bill is fact. This bill is an intention of what this government proposes to do in terms of enacting law. That is not public relations, Mr. Speaker. That is parliamentary procedure. That's all it is.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, there's certainly no emotion worth respecting in this bill. You're right.

How does the Premier expect Albertans to believe that Bill 11 won't allow queue-jumping when such queue-jumping is taking place as I speak at private MRI clinics in Edmonton and Calgary?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, the bill is here for the consideration of this Legislature because we want it to become law. Quite clearly in the bill it says that there will be no queue-jumping. Now, if the hon. member is opposed to the bill, then I would take it that he's in favour of queue-jumping, because the bill, once it becomes law, says that there will be no queue-jumping. We expect people in this province to obey the law.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Isn't Bill 11 just a blank cheque designed to bail out private business interests like those at HRG who aren't able to make a profit without dipping into the taxpayer's pocket?

MR. KLEIN: No, it's not a blank cheque, Mr. Speaker. There are all kinds of rules and regulations associated with this bill relative to the ability of regional health authorities to contract out. If the hon. member wants a little bit of a clinic on the bill, I'm sure the hon. minister will be glad to give him one.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

2:30 Federal Support for Agriculture

MR. JACQUES: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Outrage is a mild word to describe the reaction of the farmers in my constituency and indeed throughout Alberta with regard to the financial penalty that the Liberal federal government is imposing on Alberta grain producers by unilaterally excluding Alberta farmers from the assistance program announced a week ago today. This Liberal decision is at its best the height of ignorance and at its worst an obscene form of political penalty. All of my questions are to the minister responsible for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Given your meeting yesterday with the federal Liberal minister of agriculture, would you please advise Alberta farmers of the rationale put forward by the Liberal government to exclude Alberta farmers from this program?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, to suggest that there was ever any rational thinking that went into this decision I think would be a real stretch. Quite frankly, it looks to me like the whole thing was cooked up between the Prime Minister and one minister, Mr. Goodale. I believe that Mr. Goodale is trying to shovel some money into some farmer's pockets because his empire is crumbling, that empire being the Canadian Wheat Board. I believe he's very, very anxious to try to get some money into their pockets so that they will support the Wheat Board.

I mean, the Wheat Board is out there telling farmers now that the price of grain is going to go up. Well, they're the only people doing any analysis in the world that are suggesting that grain prices are going to go up much in the foreseeable future. The surpluses that are out there are high enough that you'd have to see a major catastrophe in one of the countries that produces grain in order for that to happen.

It's a very difficult one to figure out, and while we had reasonable meetings yesterday, I don't see any rationale behind it.

MR. JACQUES: Mr. Minister, how did the facts that are faced today by Alberta farmers compare with the so-called lack of rationale or reasons put forward by the government yesterday in your meeting?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, there were two ways they were trying to rationalize this thing. Quite frankly, I believe what's happened is that the sums of money arrived, they were dispersed, and now the minister of agriculture is left with a number of people with computers and calculators trying to figure out how can they rationalize that it goes to two provinces and not to a province like Alberta.

So they use things like the fact that the areas that were flooded last year weren't covered under the emergency disaster services because they were insured losses. They use rationale that the freight rates have gone up more in Saskatchewan and Manitoba since the buyout of the western grain transportation, and they're using a figure of $18.

When you look at the facts, the fact is that we had as many acres that did not produce last year in Alberta as in Saskatchewan, and the farmers in our province that didn't get a crop had input costs. Many of those farmers in Manitoba did not have. The issue of the $18:

well, the fact is that the average increase in Alberta since the buyout of the Crow is $17.10. Through using their calculations, they tell me that only 4 percent of ours have gone up that much. How could it possibly be that only 4 percent are above $18 when in fact the average is $17.10? So the rationale just doesn't work.

MR. JACQUES: Mr. Minister, are you prepared to give serious consideration to an Alberta go-it-alone program which would represent the approximate 60 million to 70 million dollar cost to Alberta that we would otherwise have paid out had the federal program been applied to Alberta?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, back in October, before we announced the changes to the farm income disaster program and the disaster loan program, we praised the federal government on the fact that we were going to make these changes, and we expected that we would get our 60 percent in that program. We haven't got anything to this point. We're still working on it. We intend to keep on. Believe me, we will and we are looking at the disaster situations in this province, and we will be addressing those.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had a chance to read the bill, and quite frankly what I have to say to the Premier is: three strikes and you're out. The reality is that this Premier is playing Russian roulette with our public health care system by having the College of Physicians and Surgeons, whose role is to approve clinical standards, now through bylaw approve commercial enterprises, those approved surgical facilities that are really code for mini private, for-profit hospitals. My questions are to the Premier. When the Premier's bill talks about insured services and "enhanced medical goods or services," isn't he really talking about establishing a list of core services, minimum standards that will push Albertans to the private sector?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, quite the opposite. Quite the opposite. The bill quite specifically alludes to very stringent rules and regulations under which private surgical clinics must operate.

Relative to the involvement of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, this is absolutely necessary, and I will have the hon. minister explain why.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the hon. member does not see the College of Physicians and Surgeons in terms of its true importance in assessing the quality of services, the capability, for instance, of surgical services and authorizing, accrediting those parts of the health care system. I think they are by far the most expert and most credible group in the province to deal with that part of the approval of hospitals or surgical facilities in terms of standards and safety and the betterment of patient treatment. That I think is a very important part of the legislation. It is in there very clearly.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I would invite the hon. member to read the rest of the bill. There are other provisions there with respect to a process, the criteria involved, and the ultimate approval by the minister of the particular facility contract. So there are many protections in this piece of legislation.

MS LEIBOVICI: Asking the college to do your dirty work.

As the Premier has indicated a commitment to the Canada Health Act, can the Premier tell us today: if there's a conflict between this legislation, your Bill 11, and the Canada Health Act, which act prevails? Where is that clause in the act?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, quite simply the Canada Health Act prevails, and that's why, sir, we have taken the unprecedented move of sending this bill to the federal Minister of Health for his comments. If the Liberals have any influence whatsoever in Ottawa, I would urge them to ask Mr. Rock to get us his response as quickly as possible. We've kept the federal government involved in this process every step of the way.

MS LEIBOVICI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, if the Premier has nothing to hide from either the federal Minister of Health or the Members of this Legislative Assembly or the members of the public, where are the regulations that you have promised us for the last few weeks?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as many of the regulations as possible are contained in this bill. [interjections] If they don't want to hear the answer, I'll sit down. Okay? [interjections] Well, they don't want to hear the answer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Gasoline Prices

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Representing Calgary-Fort constituents, I would like to bring forth their real daily concern. I believe this is also a concern across Alberta. It is the gasoline price. Many hardworking Albertans such as factory workers, office workers, farmers, taxicab drivers, truck drivers, and many Alberta companies depend on transportation to make their living. The rising cost of gasoline is getting to an intolerable level. My question is to the Minister of Resource Development. Could the minister explain why gasoline prices are so high?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, this is probably one of the biggest questions I am asked right now. Every time a commodity price moves at the speed this one has in the last year, one that is used by so many people in their daily lives, it is shocking. Now, what happened was that a year ago in January the average price of oil was $12 a barrel in the province of Alberta, about $12.21. It fluctuated in and around the $12 mark. Today it's $30 and pushing $31. Well, what happens is that the price does track the price of a barrel of oil, about a 1 cent per dollar rise.

If you looked at the price of gasoline a year ago – and our memories are very short – you would have seen in January '99 that Edmonton was at 42.9, Calgary was at 46.9, and the average for the province was 44.9 or 45 cents. Today we are looking at roughly 62.9 or 63 cents in the province of Alberta. The price of oil has gone up $18 a barrel, from that $12 to the $30. It tracks 1 cent per dollar for a barrel of oil, which would be 18 cents, which added to 45 would make it 63 cents.

That doesn't help the people that have to pay this, and we would hope that as OPEC looks at world supply – and they've recently made a decision to increase production – they would produce another 2 million barrels a day. They have said that they're going to look at this. This will then put a downward pressure on the price per barrel of oil.

So, yes, the margins haven't changed a lot for the retailer. The markups haven't changed, as the bureau just did an investigation, but the price of a barrel of oil has gone up. Remember that $30 a barrel American is $45 a barrel Canadian.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is also to the Minister of Resource Development. What role does government play in gasoline pricing?

DR. WEST: Mr. Speaker, that is the other question that should be answered to the people of Alberta. Tax is 40 to 45 percent of a litre of gasoline. We have a fixed one, 9 cents a litre. It didn't move at all when the price of gas went up to 62 cents from 44 cents a year ago. It stays at 9 cents a litre. Now, the federal government, too, has a tax, that is 10 cents a litre, but they also have the GST. The GST on that gallon of gas at 45 cents a year ago was 2 and a half cents. Today, at 63 cents, 7 percent is put on the 63 cents, which brings the federal tax another nearly 4 and a half cents higher. So today the federal government is taking close to 14-plus cents a litre and gets an advantage as the price of gasoline goes up.

MR. CAO: My second supplementary question is also to the same minister. The provincial and the federal taxes make up a big chunk of the gasoline price, so do these added costs translate into any benefit to Alberta?

DR. WEST: The tragedy of the whole gasoline story is that we take the taxes from this litre of fuel to put into roads in the province of Alberta. We take the licence plates and we take this 9 cents a litre and we put it into the roads. It only covers about half of what we're spending on roads today. The federal government takes it, about $5 billion – and it's mounting now. If you take the GST on gasoline plus their tax, they take over $5 billion today, and last year, until this recent budget, they've only put about $200 million back into roads.

When the truckers and the people of Canada say, "Why are we paying so much on this gasoline?" they should ask the federal government if they would move some of that money back into infrastructure in the province or, if they're not going to, to make a consideration to lower their tax or freeze the GST on a litre of fuel.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Private Health Services

MR. SAPERS: Mr. Speaker, this Premier calling private hospitals approved surgical facilities in this bill is just like the American military calling dead civilians collateral damage.

MR. HAVELOCK: Point of order.

MR. SAPERS: Given that this Premier has said that it's all in the bill, when I look at the bill, I see that it says that the services that will be provided at these so-called approved surgical facilities depends on bylaws made under the Medical Profession Act. Well, isn't it true, Mr. Premier, that in fact today there are no bylaws that define major surgical services, so this bill is really nothing more than an illusion of protection?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't think he has read the bill. Really I don't think he has, because it says, "No person shall operate a private hospital in Alberta." That is clear. Even this member can understand that. He should be able to.

Secondly, it says, "No person shall provide a surgical service in Alberta," whether it's a therapeutic abortion, a cataract surgery, whatever. I'm reading from the bill, Mr. Speaker: "No person shall provide a surgical service in Alberta except in . . . a public hospital." If he wants to know what a public hospital looks like, I would suggest that he could be excused right now and go down and have a look at the Royal Alex or the University hospital, to go over to Grey Nuns or over to Misericordia. If he doesn't know what a hospital looks like, maybe he'll take the time now and go and see what one looks like. Or in "an approved surgical facility." It says – and here is the answer to the question – "No person shall provide a major surgical service, as described in the by-laws under the Medical Profession Act, in Alberta except in a public hospital."

If he needs further explanation I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I think the House should be reminded, particularly the Liberal opposition, that some months ago when this issue was before the Assembly for discussion in question period, it was well noted at that time that there was a legislative gap or a weakness in the system in terms of our ability to regulate these surgical clinics.

The College of Physicians and Surgeons had done work. It had considerable discussion on the development of the bylaws that would govern the quality and standards and accreditation of surgical clinics. However, some members of the House may recall that the college was reluctant to move forward with that without there being the proper legislative framework in legislation on the other side, in terms of the government's responsibility. So, Mr. Speaker, I think it's very much on record that the college is interested in this area. They are concerned about making sure that there are the standards, that there is the quality. They certainly are aware of the issue and have done some work on it.

MR. SAPERS: So the truth is that there are no bylaws. You know, Mr. Speaker, they say that we should read the bill. Maybe the Premier should read his own legislation.

Now, given that the Premier has said in this Chamber and elsewhere that this is just an experiment and that if it fails, somehow we can go back, if that's true, Mr. Premier, where in this bill is the mechanism to go back? Where's the sunset clause? Where's the ability to go back?

MR. KLEIN: Will the hon. member quote the Hansard where purportedly I made those comments? I did not make those comments. I would ask the hon. member because he used a quote. He said that I made those statements in this House, the statement that this is an experiment. Will he cite the authority? Will he cite the Hansard in which I said that, Mr. Speaker, or withdraw it?

MR. SAPERS: I'll find it, and I'll be happy to cite it, Mr. Speaker. I'll get it to you. Why don't you answer the question? Why don't you answer the question? Why don't you answer the question?

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

THE SPEAKER: Whoa. Sit down, please. Whoa. Thursday afternoon.

Well, we had a debate going on again, and we have certain rules about debating in the question period. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, you asked three times why he didn't answer the question. I presume that was the question? Well, then it was a preamble, which is outlawed.

MR. SAPERS: I withdraw the preamble.

THE SPEAKER: So we can move on now?

MR. SAPERS: To my next question.

THE SPEAKER: Well, what was all that filler in there, all of which violated every rule?

Please proceed with your third question, with no preamble, to the point.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier has said that he'll be open and transparent and given that the legislation is supposed to be the whole truth and nothing but the truth, perhaps the Premier will explain why there are 20 different elements in this bill that will require secret, behind-closed-door lawmaking. Why is it that so many elements of this bill require regulations?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there are several regulations that provide for the protection of the public health system as we know it today.

Relative to the specifics of the bill, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, this very important bill has actually in overall terms very few regulatory sections. The very important parts of the bill are there in the text. I'm sure the opposition is somewhat concerned about that because it's not to their advantage, but it is certainly to the advantage of Albertans. You have it very clearly stated: there shall be no private hospitals. I could go through the rest of the text of the legislation pointing out where we have addressed the major issues in this whole area. I would invite them to continue to read the bill and understand it before they make judgments on how many regulations will be required.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Registry Fees

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the hon. Minister of Government Services. We've all heard that the fees that Alberta registries charge for certain services have been greatly reduced, by some $55 million. These fees fall under land titles, personal property and corporate registries. Motor vehicle registry fees make up the lion's share of these fees that Alberta registries collect, yet none of the fees are being reduced. Can the minister explain why it is that motor vehicle registry fees are not included among the fee reductions?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to respond to this as this was an item that was in the budget that our Treasurer brought down just a few days ago.

I want to say at the beginning that based on the Ontario case where the court ordered the Ontario government to review its fees and charges, Alberta was the only province that proceeded voluntarily to go through an extensive review of its fees and charges. In the case of Government Services, we have put in the budget a reduction of 94 various fees and charges that are under our responsibility. The Department of Justice also had some fee reductions in that budget document. This came about as a complete review and cost analysis of every fee that was charged through this department, and that was headed up by the Member for St. Albert. She was in charge of the fees review committee.

In regard to the particular fee structure for motor vehicles, it was determined through this review process that those fees were appropriate. It's recognized that those fees benefit the people who are on the highways because those fees are dedicated to enforcement and to improvement of the provincial roads. So the fees were appropriate as they were being charged, and that is why there is not a reduction on those particular fees, albeit other fees in fact were reduced.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental to the same minister. I understand that private registry agents are responsible for delivering personal property and corporate registry services and are allowed to charge service fees over and above that fee set by government. What assurances do Albertans have that the reductions that have been announced will be passed on to them?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, when the province made the decision, led by our government, to make a change in how we deliver services insofar as registries and motor vehicle licensing, et cetera, and all those functions that were attached to the motor vehicle branches a number of years ago, we entered into a partnership arrangement to have that frontline delivery contracted out. Quite frankly, it's been extremely successful. People can now go in and get a driver's licence or a car licence plate without having to take a day off work and are treated very well in the registries.

We are under a partnership contract with the registry agents, and when we make a decision to reduce the government side of the fee structure, then we send an instruction out to the registry agents and instruct them to reduce that fee to Albertans. I'm able to report that in the first review we did immediately after the budget was filed, most of our registry agents had already put the reduced fees in place.

We did make the commitment that we would be monitoring our registry agents, some 228 in the province of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that they continue to pass on the savings of the almost 94 fee structures to Albertans so that they benefit from the $54 million that was coming out of the revenue base for the Department of Government Services. This benefit is moving forward. We monitor these fees on a continual basis, and we will continue to do so.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That begs another question. Since we've heard about the total amount, about $55 million, and even about how much these fees were reduced, my question is: how was each figure arrived at?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, we have gone through extensive analysis of the fees that were in place to determine what costs were appropriate. We have a cost recovery mechanism on the delivery of these services through Government Services. Each fee was looked at as to what the cost of the program was. We took all of our costs and factored them in, and that was the fee that was charged. A number of those fees, I can say, have been eliminated entirely, and for some of them, people can access information with no charge whatsoever.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I'm going to call on the first of three hon. members to participate in Members' Statements today, but before we do that, please join me in congratulating the hon. Member for Little Bow on an election anniversary in the next day or two.

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

3:00

Medicine Hat Hospital MRI Unit

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to draw to your attention and to the attention of all members, in particular the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, an important decision that was recently announced by the Palliser regional health authority. That decision was to proceed with planning and preparation for the acquisition and operation of an MRI unit in the Medicine Hat regional hospital. The board has authorized local foundations within the Palliser health region to begin fund-raising. There will also be a subsequent request for appropriate capital funding from Alberta Health and Wellness. At the same time the board indicated that it will be in a position to incorporate annual operating costs into its budget in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, the medical staff within the region have been calling for an MRI for a number of years, and the general public in south-eastern Alberta have seen MRIs funded for Lethbridge, Red Deer, and Grande Prairie. The reasons stated by the minister that Medicine Hat was not included in last year's announcements was that the PRHA had not identified it as a priority. Over time the number of MRI scans required has increased, and the RHA budget has grown. The board has been monitoring the situation and has determined that circumstances are now such that they can give MRI acquisition the priority designation it requires.

MRI acquisition is not something that can be taken lightly. The board is to be commended for waiting until both demand and financial viability were reached before proceeding with plans to acquire an MRI.

Today I am pleased to rise in my place and indicate to you, Mr. Speaker, that this project has my full support. I want to assure the people of southeastern Alberta that I am committed to work with the Minister of Health and Wellness and the Minister of Infrastructure to ensure that MRI funding is provided to Medicine Hat in a timely and equitable manner. The people of Medicine Hat and southeastern Alberta deserve no less.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Defenders of Health Care System

MR. WICKMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to speak about those Albertans that are attempting to preserve a high-quality, public health care system, the hundreds, the thousands. First, the unsung heroes. The unsung heroes are those who organize forums, those who organize petitions, those who go door to door, those who sign the petitions; in other words, the grass roots of Alberta, that are spread throughout the province.

Then of course there are those that felt the brunt of the health care cuts and the restructuring: the health caregivers, the overworked nurses, the overworked doctors, the other medical staff in the medical facilities, and of course paramedic drivers, who sometimes drive around with a patient in the back with no emergency room to take them to.

Then there are those high-profile individuals who tend to speak out more; Kevin Taft, for example. His recent book, Clear Answers, highly recommended reading, was co-written by another Albertan, Gillian Steward from Calgary, who has fought to preserve the health care system for years. We have Donna Wilson from the Faculty of Nursing at the University of Alberta. We have Wendy Armstrong from the Alberta chapter of the Consumers' Association. We have Christine Burdette, who gives of herself steadily, representing the Friends of Medicare; all those others associated with the Friends of Medicare; and Dr. Richard Plain, who presented another one of his studies. These are the Albertans that are fighting to preserve a high-quality public health care system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Public/Private Sector Health Partnerships

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to talk about the significance of health care partnerships and innovative approaches and the bottom-line benefit to receivers of service, to Albertans, for whom the partnerships were created in the first place. It seems to me that in recent weeks during the political debate around legislation to further improve delivery of our health care system, many have chosen to ignore why changes are even being considered. Recent media coverage has focused on the negative speculation loudly voiced by opposition colleagues rather than on covering wonderful new initiatives in the health system, which are only possible because of partnerships and which are designed to better serve the needs of citizens of the community.

Last Friday I attended the grand opening of the innovative Carewest Signal Pointe Alzheimer's centre in my constituency of Calgary-West. The pride of over 200 people was evident as our Health and Wellness minister congratulated Carewest on the unique centre, designed to better serve the needs of 48 full-time residents from the Calgary community who have moderate to severe Alzheimer's. Also, community support services include six respite care beds, a day program for dementia people living at home, and a resource centre for home caregivers as 60 percent of people with dementia are cared for at home. This wonderful centre, including equipment and furnishings, has been funded through a partnership between Carewest, the provincial government, and the private sector.

Monday I attended the opening of the Family Caregiver Centre in Calgary, which is a true partnership between Scotiabank and the Calgary Health Trust. Caregiving is gaining increasing recognition as one desirable way for society to cope with the impact of our aging population. I agreed to be honorary chair as I totally support living at one's home as long as possible with the help of necessary supports.

We are talking about the future, Mr. Speaker, our future, and the fact that Alberta's senior population of 300,000 will double to 600,000 by 2016. I'm very proud to say that innovative partnerships in health care are providing very positive encouragement to the challenges we face in the future.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MR. DICKSON: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's that wonderful time of the week when I'm entitled to ask the Government House Leader if he would preview the legislation and activity we might contemplate for next week.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, March 6, under Government Bills and Orders for second reading, if not already dealt with: Bill 1, Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Act; Bill 2, First Nations Sacred Ceremonial Objects Repatriation Act; Bill 3, Statute Revision Act; Bill 4, Surveys Amendment Act; Bill 5, Land Titles Amendment Act; if there's time, government motions 5, 6, and 7, being the spring, Easter, and sessional adjournment motions; and as per the Order Paper.

Monday at 8 p.m. of course under Government Bills and Orders we will be convening in Committee of Supply to deal with the main estimates of the Provincial Treasurer in subcommittee A and Justice and Attorney General in subcommittee B. Providing there's time, we will deal with the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, Bill 12, and as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, March 7, at 4:30 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders, government motions 5, 6, and 7, the spring, Easter, and sessional adjournment motions, if they haven't been previously disposed of; and as per the Order Paper. On Tuesday at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of Supply: in the Assembly, subcommittee C, Agriculture, Food and Rural Development main estimates; in room 512, subcommittee D, Innovation and Science main estimates. Thereafter, Committee of the Whole, Bill 12, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2000; and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, March 8, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders: in the Assembly, committee A, Executive Council main estimates; in room 512, committee B, Infrastructure main estimates. Thereafter third reading of Bill 12, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2000, and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, March 9, under Government Bills and Orders, such estimates as may be designated by the Official Opposition on Monday; and as per the Order Paper based on progress Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I have notice that today there will be an hon. member rising on a notice of contempt, which will require some explanation, and four notices of points of order, which we will now deal with.

Before we begin, I would just like to quote one line from Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, the sixth edition. The authors, Fraser, Dawson and Holtby, say: "Television has made a marked impact on Parliament and public perception thereof." How different it is at 10 minutes after 3 than it was a few minutes before. Amazing. It's too bad that 3 million citizens can't see the way we really do most of our work.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on a major point. Hon. member, before you begin, I'm not sure what a point of contempt is, so please quote from the Standing Orders, and if you're dealing with a point of privilege, it's Standing Order 15. This chairman would view contempt in the same regards as privilege, not a lightly taken matter.

Privilege

Contempt of the Assembly

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, let me say first that the last time I remember this Assembly dealing with a question of contempt was when I raised it – I think it was a year ago – in connection with the health summit, and there was some considerable discussion then in terms of process. I wanted to give the earliest possible notice, so that's why there's been no written notice to you.

The concern is this. The authority I'm relying on is principally Erskine May, page 108. I'd just cite the general authority.

Generally speaking, any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence.

The basis of the claim is this, Mr. Speaker. These are the facts as I understand them. This afternoon at 12:15 the Premier's office and the Minister of Health and Wellness arranged for a preview of Bill 11 in the media room downstairs in this building, and at 1 o'clock the Premier was to join that group and preview and answer questions with respect to Bill 11. Now, those people entitled to attend or invited to attend were apparently members of the media gallery here in the Assembly. This happened after the bill had been put on notice and appeared on the Order Paper and we'd received confirmation of notice and before the bill had received first reading.

The Leader of the Official Opposition attended at the media room with this member. When she entered the doors of the media room, a young woman, an employee of the government – and I think it serves little purpose to embarrass the individual woman. I take it she was acting on instructions of the Premier, the Minister of Health and Wellness, or the chair of this meeting, the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. This young woman came up, told Mrs. MacBeth that she could not enter the room. Physically, in terms of the Criminal Code, in my view, it would be an assault, because without the consent of Mrs. MacBeth she applied – it was a physical application of force. I witnessed it. Mrs. MacBeth was told to leave. The Member for Calgary-Glenmore, who was chairing the meeting, advised Mrs. MacBeth that she had to leave.

My concern is this, Mr. Speaker. We have seen with budgets that there are lockups where a member of the opposition or a researcher is entitled to go into the lockup to preview a budget before it's been entered. I am not aware, at least in my time in the Assembly, that a public bill ever has been exposed to a private group for review before the bill comes into this Assembly and is given first reading.

The thrust of my argument is that what you have is an affront to every single member in this Assembly. We are the only people who represent the 3 million people in this province. It is our job. It's not some selected group of reporters or media people. There clearly have been multiple briefings, technical briefings after a bill has been given first reading and MLAs have been exposed to it and had a chance to see it.

In terms of the remedy I'm looking for, the proposition is this. It is not to have my friend for Calgary-Glenmore or the Minister of Health and Wellness or the Premier carted off in handcuffs. What I want to resolve is whether it is permissible for a public bill to be shared with a select group of Albertans privately invited in designate by a member of Executive Council. That the Leader of the Opposition would be denied access to that briefing, that this member would be denied access to that briefing clearly, in my respectful view, obstructs and impedes us in doing our job.

More importantly, it draws enormous disrespect to the role that each of us plays. What's the point in attaching any significance to first reading of any public bill if the government has gone and previewed the darn thing and shared it with groups of Albertans beforehand? We then become nothing more than a rubber-stamping facility of minor importance. So much for all of the tradition and history of the British parliamentary system.

So, Mr. Speaker, those are the facts, as I understand them. As I say, I have the name of the woman that pushed the Leader of the Opposition, but as I say, the principal concern is that you had at least two elected members in this province denied access not to a private office but to a media room, that customarily all MLAs have access to and utilize on a regular basis.

I know of no precedent for this, Mr. Speaker. You've been here a lot longer than I have, and you may have seen this practice happen before. I've always been advised, as long as I've been here, that first reading of a bill is a very special occasion. I've had ministers of the Crown tell me multiple times that they could not share with me the text of the bill. They could tell me a little bit about what was in it, but they couldn't share the text because that had to wait for first reading of the bill. Now, if the rules have changed and all that tradition has gone out the window, Mr. Speaker, would you, please, tell us that? I'd like to have that instruction and information.

You might also look at Erskine May, pages 108 and 117. I'm not going to take your time to cite that. There is some interesting reference that's somewhat collateral, but I found in Beauchesne, debates October 30, 1969, in the House of Commons, pages 269 and 270 – and it's been clear, Mr. Speaker, that for a minister to make a ministerial statement outside the House would not offend the practices of the House in making announcements, ministerial statements, communications to the public. That's perfectly in order. But this is something very special, very different. It's clearly different qualitatively than a Budget Address and details of the budget. We're talking about a bill.

I'd just conclude, Mr. Speaker, with this observation. I put forward this proposition, that once a bill is put on notice on the Order Paper, as this one was, in effect all of this Legislative Assembly has a proprietary interest in that bill, and it's no longer the plaything of a particular bill sponsor. If it's going to be shared and there are going to be technical briefings, let them happen after it's been introduced in this Assembly and every single member has had a chance to see it.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There seem to be two issues that have been raised by the hon. Opposition House Leader, and I think the two are essentially the same.

The first, relative to access by the Leader of the Opposition and the Opposition House Leader to a meeting which was being held with respect to a technical briefing relating to the bill. In particular, there was an allegation of an assault. My understanding of the situation, although I admit I was not there, is somewhat different than was reported. In fact, my understanding is that there was a door closed by one of the parties in question, and perhaps the assault could have gone the other way. However, that's extraneous.

What's important today is the question of whether or not the privileges of the members were breached. I would note – and I'll file with the House copies of letters, one addressed to Nancy MacBeth, Leader of the Official Opposition.

3:20

AN HON. MEMBER: It's already been tabled.

MR. HANCOCK: Has it been tabled this afternoon? Okay. I understand it was tabled.

There was a similar letter to the interim leader of the third party inviting them to an opportunity for a technical briefing on the details of the bill. It said:

Please contact my office if you or other members of your Caucus would be interested in such a briefing and we can arrange a mutually convenient time.

It's my understanding that they did not avail themselves of the opportunity for that briefing. They didn't call and ask for that briefing, instead showed up at a different meeting to which other people had been invited for a technical briefing on the details of the bill.

So I think it's quite inappropriate for them to raise the question on the basis of being denied the opportunity for a technical briefing on the bill. In fact they were invited to a briefing. They were not invited to the one they chose to attend. I understand that it was not the member in charge of that meeting who decided that in fact the two members in question could not attend that meeting but the media representatives that were there. The media representatives that were there were asked if they wanted those members to be allowed to sit in the meeting. It was their meeting, and they indicated that they did not. So that was communicated to them.

Members of the opposition were not denied the opportunity to have the same technical briefing as the media in this particular situation.

Now, the second portion of that, the question of the preview of a bill. This government is renowned for its consultation with Albertans. It's renowned for asking Albertans. In fact, the content of this bill is no secret. The surgical services policy was put out in November. It was published. There was a television address. There's been continuous discussion about the policy, as there should be. Since that time the content has been discussed in this House since we opened the House. The Premier has answered questions on almost a daily basis, has indicated to the House that the bill would ban private hospitals, that the bill would ban queue-jumping, went through a litany of what was going to be in the bill. So there was no secret in the bill.

I can assure the House that no media was given a copy of the bill that was presented in this House. They may have had access to the content of that bill, but they were not provided a copy of Bill 11 in its published form. The interests of the House have been preserved; the interests of the members of the House have been preserved.

I might also say, Mr. Speaker, that today is an interesting day. Knowing that Bill 11 – no, I can't say that because I don't know if they knew that Bill 11 was coming. On Monday the Official Opposition designated this afternoon to hear and deal with the estimates of the Premier, and this thus necessitated his presence in the House this afternoon to deal with those estimates. So when they say that the technical briefing could happen after, they know full well that they've arranged for that not to be the case and that the Premier would have to be in the House this afternoon. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Government House Leader, please. Thank you.

Hon. members, the chair was quite happy to go along with life the way it was until he was given notice of an order of a motion of contempt. The chair's indicated that he views this as very, very serious, so the chair will hear the arguments, and if we're here until 5:30 hearing the arguments, so be it.

If an hon. member wants to raise this kind of question, then this chair will not deal with it until he has afforded himself every opportunity to get all the information with respect to it. At this point in time he's not sure what we're even talking about. We've got some discussions. Standing Order 15(4) says, "If the member whose conduct is called into question is not present" – well, I'm not sure who that is – "the matter shall be . . ." et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

So I'm listening very attentively. This was raised.

Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that I have much more to say in light of what you've said. Clearly the provisions of Standing Order 15 haven't been dealt with. No member's conduct has been called into question. I dealt with some of the substantive matters as to the issues raised in terms of what happened at a meeting earlier in the day, but I'm not sure I know exactly what contempt is being called into question here.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, I invite you to come back to assist me with respect to this. I clearly am reading Erskine May. I've looked at Erskine May. If some member's conduct is being called into question, it is very important we deal with that. That member should be named, and one will have to get all the other information.

Now, I gather that the comments you made about, quote, assault are not pertinent. Please help me with that one as well.

MR. DICKSON: Mr. Speaker, I was in this fix. I wanted to raise it as quickly as possible so as not to prejudice the claim. I would be happy to prepare a detailed written submission in fact with affidavits from those who were present to be able to particularize precisely what happened. I can identify those government employees who were involved. I'd mentioned that the Member for Calgary-Glenmore was apparently chairing the meeting. That was my observation. I would like the opportunity to be able to put together the kind of detailed material that obviously I haven't been able to now.

I've given notice of it, and the province now understands the basis of the claim. I'd be happy to particularize it because it is a serious matter, and I'd like to be able to marshal the authorities and put the facts before you in a way that I think is indisputable. I'd appreciate that opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, this is a matter that we will return to in this Assembly at the conclusion of question period on Monday, and the arguments will be raised in this Assembly to be heard by all members. If in fact there is a point of privilege, it will in essence be all members who will judge.

The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan on a point of order.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Orders 23(h) and (i): making allegations against another member and imputing false or unavowed motives to another member. As you'll recall, during the tablings the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie tabled a document and made some comments prior to tabling it. The statement that I heard towards the end of her comments was something to the effect that I would not file on behalf of the residents of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan the document that she was tabling at that time.

Mr. Speaker, I would expect more from an elected member, because I would expect it's an elected member's responsibility to verify and fully portray the truth of statements in this Legislature. Never did that member speak to me about the possibility of filing this and that she would have to do it on my behalf or on behalf of the residents of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

It may be a true statement that some people in Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan thought I may not file that petition, but I think, rather, that it's an attempt to diminish the efforts of another member to represent their constituency. In fact, I met with concerned residents of the Brookville area last evening discussing this gas well issue.

This, Mr. Speaker, is similar to schoolyard behaviour that was exhibited during my former career, in which sometimes children would hope to spread rumours to somehow perhaps break up friendships and have some perceived personal gain. These allegations were perhaps just repeated by the member, but the member has the responsibility not to repeat unfounded, unsubstantiated, unvalidated, and untrue allegations.

3:30

Mr. Speaker, if you're reading the Blues, you'll notice that the Blues state: "102 people who live in the constituency of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan." I have before me the tabling; 102 signatures are on this tabling. The residents primarily are from Edmonton, Westlock, Devon, Morinville, St. Albert, Sangudo, Fort McMurray, and the adjacent constituency of Sherwood Park. In fact, five residents of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan have signed this petition. It clearly says that. The addresses are clearly here.

Mr. Speaker, in light of these allegations, I would ask for a retraction and an apology. This current situation is such that slanderous statements can be made on TV in full view of all the residents of Alberta who wish to view question period during the afternoon and have the opportunity to see a person make these allegations but not to see somebody defend them before this Legislature. In fact, 3 million people in the province had access to that viewing, and this afternoon a few colleagues and even fewer opposition members are here to hear my statement regarding this.

Mr. Speaker, in reference to your comments earlier about things being on TV, I would ask that you would consider that points of order be raised immediately upon them being voiced during question period and during tablings so that we can properly defend ourselves against false allegations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MR. DICKSON: On the point of order. The customs are clear in this Assembly that we take the word of an hon. member. I hear what he says, that in fact he had been prepared to table those petitions. Clearly, on behalf of my colleague I'm certainly prepared to accept his word.

The advice I had received from my colleague was that she'd met with some 70-odd people and had been advised that this member would not present the petition. So that we can be clear and so it's on the record, the member says that it's inaccurate, and I accept his word. I regret and would apologize for anything that may attach to the member that's contrary to what he's told us in the last few moments.

There's little else I can add, Mr. Speaker. Those are my comments.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, on this point. The chair did move his body when he heard the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie this afternoon make the following comment, and she addressed it to the Speaker:

Mr. Speaker, these people are very concerned about gas wells that are going into the area that they live in, and they are equally concerned that their MLA was not prepared to table this petition in the Legislature.

There was movement rather quickly with that. It was several minutes later, I believe because there was some activity and noise in the House, that the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan did rise and want to deal with the point of order. The administration that we've followed thus far is that hon. members are invited to rise on a point of order but not express what the point of order is, so the chair is in no position to really understand what the point might be at a given time. The chair certainly had anticipated that the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan would be rising on this.

The hon. members here have heard the explanation of the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan and have also heard comments from the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, including what the chair heard was an apology. I hope that the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan will accept that. I also hope that all members of this particular Assembly will garner something from this.

We deal with policy. Every time an hon. member decides to deal with personality, that hon. member gets into a deeper hole and a deeper hole and a deeper hole. One day soon some hon. member will be so deep into the hole that that hon. member will not be able to extricate himself or herself and there will be a point of privilege and it will go to a special committee. The hon. member should read what the penalties associated with it are.

This is the highest court in the province of Alberta. The people of this province expect a great deal more from us, and we should not have to deal with stuff like this on a day-to-day basis.

We have another point of order from the Leader of the Official Opposition.

MR. DICKSON: I'd withdraw that further point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Then a further point of order from the Deputy Government House Leader.

Government House Leader.

Point of Order Insulting Language

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On his behalf. I believe the point of order was raised under 23(j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." The specific reference which he has given me was language used by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora where he used the words in comparing provisions of the bill to "calling dead civilians collateral damage."

Now, we're not talking here about prohibited words in the House, but we are talking again about what you've admonished the House on a number of times, the protocol and the respect with which people hold us in regard in terms of what we do in this House. We do have to be wary of inflammatory or insulting language, language that goes to an extreme, and in this case, I would suggest, an unacceptable extreme. That was the reference on which the Deputy Government House Leader rose on a point of order.

I think it's appropriate and I think it would be appropriate again to admonish the Member for Edmonton-Glenora and all members of the House that we are here to discuss issues in a civilized manner and that it is inappropriate to take language to the extreme, as was done this afternoon in using that quotation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on this point.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to make three points initially. The first point is that what we do in this Chamber often can be summed up as a battle of words. I think I've heard you say that that's what we do here, that instead of shooting bullets back and forth, we use language and we use words.

Mr. Speaker, the second point that I'm going to make is that what's truly offensive to this member is reading a government bill that's trying to sell an idea which I think is so contrary to the public good that it should never see the light of day. So when I see a government that uses its entire weight and its entire treasury to try to market an idea, to try to call it something else than what it is, to be untruthful about what the intent is, then I will use strong language to draw the parallel. When this government tries to pull the wool over the eyes of Albertans by saying that a private hospital is an approved surgical facility, I will use very strong language at every opportunity to point out just how deceitful that is.

The third point that I'll make, Mr. Speaker, is that the reference is a reference that's not unique in terms of trying to draw to the attention of people an extreme contradiction, or oxymoron. When the government of the United States set about its plans to deal with the language of communicating to the American people its policies, there are some well-documented examples, and “calling dead civilians collateral damage” is only one of several. Perhaps in debate I’ll have an opportunity to use some of the other comparisons and metaphors as we proceed with Bill 11.

MR. DICKSON: Briefly, on this point of order, Mr. Speaker. I was just going to make an observation. I remember after the budget speech I suggested, in adjourning debate, that we’d heard enough hyperbole for one afternoon. It’s fair to say that question period is very much about hyperbole, and I think you would be in an impossible situation to start policing one particular expression and ignore, then, the requirement in the Standing Orders and in Beauchesne that answers in question period should not provoke debate.

That’s what I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Any other hon. member on this important point of order? Well, we’re going to deal with it though.

The Blues clearly show that one hon. member used the expression referring to “dead civilians [as] collateral damage.” It’s true that there’s nothing in our legacy of expressions used in this House that would deem that this would be unparliamentary, but it’s also true that the rules basically say that we should not use language of a nature likely to cause disorder and not to use inflammatory arguments. It’s also true, as members have said so often this afternoon on these points of order, that there is no debate during question period. I’m going to say that again: there is no debate during question period. I’m going to say it once again: there is no debate during question period.

This book called Beauchesne’s Parliamentary Rules & Forms, and there are many others, clearly points out what question period is all about. In the excitement here of coming up to day 7 or day 8 of this session, virtually all questions that have been raised from day one should have been ruled out of order and could have been ruled out of order. Virtually all questions today should have been or could have been ruled out of order.

What are we going to do now that there’s a bill before us? What are you going to start doing Monday? Are you going to debate the bill, ask questions about the bill in question period? Everybody’s going to try and probably going to end up doing it, because that seems to be the mood.

I guess it’s something like a hockey game. If they both want to hit each other over the head and bash their skulls in and go ahead and do it, the referee will let it happen until members decide that there are no players left and only the referee is standing. In this case methinks there are 64 versus 17, so we think that there are more troops left over by the end of the battle than the 16 or 17.

The referee is sort of here to protect everybody and wants to protect everybody. But I would really, really ask. I don’t want to stand up here in these gowns like somebody in a pulpit with a book in his hand saying that this is what you’re doing on a day-to-day basis. This is the Assembly of members. The purpose is to seek information. I mean, I’ve already made the statement about television. Isn’t it amazing when there are no television cameras on? Isn’t this amazing? We could sing and whistle. In fact, some of you even like one another now. Amazing how different it was a couple of hours ago.

I know it’s a plea on my part, and I’m going to make it again and again. Could we use less inflammatory language in the questions and in the responses? Could we get personalities out of this? Could we deal with the substance, the issue? The place is called Alberta. It’s not America; it’s not the world, something, something. Alberta. The issue is very clear. That’s what we ask questions on, and we’ll have ample opportunity for debate, by the way, in second reading, ample opportunity.

I’m not sure. Are there any more points of order for this afternoon?

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 9

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2000

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the hon. Provincial Treasurer.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my honour to move for third reading Bill 9, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2000.

We’ve had occasion to deal with this bill already in second reading, of course, and Committee of the Whole. I won’t take the time of the House to say any more to it as it is an interim supply bill, a bill which will afford the government the opportunity to continue in its good work over the course of the period of time after March 31 and until this House sees fit to vote supply under the normal bills of supply under the budget and the process that we’re currently under.

I would commend to the House Bill 9 and ask for support.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. We’ve had an opportunity to discuss some of the faults with Bill 9 and this ongoing, repeated request for interim supply. I won’t repeat some of those arguments, but I will make some statements about our concerns that have to do with the lack of disclosure within supply votes.

I will note that both the Auditor General and the Alberta Financial Review Commission have recommended to the government the separation of operating expenses and capital investments as a means of strengthening managerial accountability. It would also strengthen the opportunities for evaluating the effectiveness of programs and program expenditures. However, despite that advice the government in Bill 9 has collapsed once again operating expenses and capital expenses into a single vote.

I’ll say that that troubles me deeply because we continually hear the government through its Executive Council members talking about transparency and openness and accountability. In fact, when the Minister of Gaming was presenting and defending his estimates just the other day – Madam Speaker, I believe you were presiding over that meeting – I didn’t count, I lost count, but several times during those debates he talked about: in keeping with this government’s openness, this and something else may happen. Well, here we have a situation where, contrary to any measures of openness and accountability, we see something collapsed together, that can only obscure clarity and can only hide transparency.

Now, a brief history lesson might be in order, Madam Speaker. Before the passage of the Deficit Elimination Act in May of 1993, the practice of appropriating supply and interim supply was to include a program-by-program breakdown of each supply vote. Now, what that means is that, for example, if you were to look at the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act of 1992, there would be separate listings for both capital and operating. This program-by-program breakdown gave the Legislative Assembly and in fact all taxpayers some assurances that the proper amount of funding, as was set out in the estimates, was being allocated to each program within a department. It didn't allow for any sloppiness or slushiness in how those allocations, first, were going to be made and, secondly, accounted for.

Providing a global figure for each department under the interim supply vote, as requested under this bill, without a breakdown by program and subprogram I believe shows this government's utter contempt for accountability. I think it also shows that they have contempt for their very own words regarding fiscal responsibility. I would request that this government seriously consider going back to the earlier form of presenting interim supply and appropriation requests, that being breaking it down by capital and operating and by program and subprogram.

In the interests of ensuring openness, accountability, and transparency and imposing rigorous fiscal discipline, that the Premier and the Provincial Treasurer and other members of government claim and often refer to, it is necessary to ask all ministers during appropriation on interim supply to provide a breakdown of the interim supply by individual program within each department and then relate that appropriation by individual program to the performance and outcome targets established in the business plan.

Madam Speaker, I won't take the time of the Assembly at this point to go back over all of the difficulties we've had with business plans, the fact that there is very little agreement department by department, that there is little consistency in how outcome measures are presented. Some outcome measures don't seem to be related to some programs. Some programs don't seem to have outcome measures, and all of those other things. I won't repeat all of that. Suffice to say that yet again we see a missing link in this chain of accountability. As is so often the case with this government, you have words and you have deeds, and the legacy of the government of course is the growing gap between.

So with those concerns on the record about Bill 9, I will end my comments and will ask with all sincerity that the government, please, reconsider the presentation of interim supply votes so that Albertans can be given some real assurances about accountability.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a third time]

head: Committee of Supply

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I'll call the Committee of Supply to Order.

head: Main Estimates 2000-2001

Executive Council

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I would call on the hon. Premier to lead off the debate.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman and hon. members. I'm pleased to appear before this committee in my capacity as minister responsible for Executive Council to discuss the three-year business plan and, of course, the estimates. Executive Council's main programs include the office of the Premier/general administration, which provides support to cabinet; the office of the deputy minister; and the office of the Lieutenant Governor. Executive Council also includes the protocol office, which formerly was with the department of international and intergovernmental affairs; the Public Affairs Bureau, which is responsible for providing two-way communications with Albertans about government programs and services; and the Alberta Corporate Service Centre, which is a new program that will consolidate and provide administrative services to ministries so that they can focus on the delivery of programs and services to Albertans.

Members of the committee will note a new budget item for the new Alberta Corporate Service Centre. The centre will also generate revenue by charging back its costs to ministries, and this will result in no net spending increase.

Madam Chairman, I would like now to discuss some of the programs detailed in this year's business plan, beginning with Executive Council. The role of Executive Council is to co-ordinate the Alberta government's overall direction and to set a broad agenda for government ministries to follow. That overall direction is focused on achieving the vision statement at the front of the government of Alberta's business plan. It states that this government is committed to achieving "a vibrant and prosperous province where Albertans enjoy a superior quality of life and are confident about the future for themselves and their children," and I'm pleased to say that Alberta is well on its way to achieving that vision.

Notwithstanding the criticisms of the opposition Liberals and the NDs, this government has made remarkable strides over the past six years. This province is the envy of other jurisdictions in this country and is renowned worldwide for the steps it has taken to overcome a $3.4 billion structural deficit, to turn that around, Madam Chairman, to something in the neighbourhood of a $3 billion to $4 billion surplus. Over the years we have done a $30 billion turnaround in this province. Through that exercise, we have still managed to maintain the most competitive tax regime in the country. We have still been able to dedicate ourselves to the priority areas of Albertans, like health and education, and we have made remarkable progress in addressing the pay-down of the debt.

It has been the balanced approach, and it has been a very successful approach. Most importantly, most Albertans understand that. Most Albertans understand and respect that kind of record. I would suggest the only Albertans who don't understand it and can't accept it, because it is a success, are members of the opposition Liberals. So new and carefully targeted plans to ensure Albertans enjoy the best possible future were detailed in my recent televised address, in the new Lieutenant Governor's inaugural Speech from the Throne, and in the Provincial Treasurer's recent budget speech.

By the way, I would allude to the report from Nesbitt Burns. I'm sure there will be other reports from other financial analysts in this province, but the Nesbitt Burns report was particularly telling. It simply said, "Another Day in Paradise."

With overall direction from Executive Council this government is committing itself to creating bold plans for Alberta in this new century. Those plans include a continued commitment to careful fiscal management so that we can continue to pay down debt, so that we can continue to increase government efficiency and redirect more taxpayers' dollars back to programs and services for Albertans; forward-thinking and much-needed tax reforms which have been accelerated from their original schedule to give Albertans real tax relief sooner rather than later; carefully targeted spending on Albertans' priorities, including a 21 percent increase in health spending and a 19 percent increase in education spending over the next three years; and innovative new strategies to ensure that Albertans can continue to meet the challenges of the knowledge-driven global economy.

That, Madam Chairman, is a very brief summary of the overall agenda established by this government for the first years of the new century. It is an agenda that reflects this government's commitment to providing Albertans with every possible advantage in the 21st century. It is an agenda that reflects the economic realities of the new global economy. Most importantly, it is an agenda that speaks to the priorities of the people we're here to serve.

Turning now to the portion of the business plan that deals with the Public Affairs Bureau, I would like to highlight a number of programs that are closely tied to the needs and priorities of Albertans. First, I'd like to mention a new program that is just completing its first year of operation. It's called Alberta Connects, and it's a program that provides Albertans with an opportunity for effective two-way communications with the government.

You know, Madam Chairman, the people of this province have consistently told us that the most important thing they want from their government is for us to listen and respond to their comments and questions, to reflect their priorities. In fact, when you ask Albertans what good government means, listening is at the very top of the list. Listening. Alberta Connects meets that need. It provides the people of this province with clear facts so that they can form their own opinions about how they want their government to handle various issues, and the best example of that exercise will start on Monday. That's when the bill, in an unprecedented step, will be mailed to every Albertan in this province, to every household in this province to see what they think about the legislation, to put aside all the political rhetoric and, as I have termed it, malicious misinformation that is being spread by the Liberals and the NDs, to let the people decide.

Madam Chairman, that is important. Albertans told us without a doubt that the one thing they want on this bill and on any other issue of importance or priority to them is information, and that's exactly what they're going to get: unemotional, unfettered information. Let's hear from Albertans. Let's hear from Albertans, and let's appeal to the Liberals to give Albertans a chance. Give Albertans a chance.

Alberta Connects meets the need. It is one of the vehicles, one of the tools to allow Albertans to communicate directly with their government. It provides the people of the province with clear facts so that they can form their own opinions about how they want their government to handle various issues. Alberta Connects offers Albertans fast, convenient, and direct access to the information they need through interactive Internet connections, newspaper and television information, and toll-free phone lines. These services provide Albertans with important information and updates on government programs, initiatives, and recent announcements as well as opportunities to provide government with their comments and questions.

So the government will continue to respond to the needs of the people we serve by continuing to expand on the variety of electronic-based communications operations, opportunities for Albertans. Examples of progress in this area include the virtual forum and moderated on-line discussion groups created as part of last year's Children's Forum. Another example can be found in the real-time Internet broadcast of my most recent televised address which was offered to Albertans in addition to the television format.

Finally under the Public Affairs Bureau, Queen's Printer bookstore staff are working together with Alberta Justice to create a new product called the Revised Statutes of Alberta 2000, or RSA. This is a considerable undertaking as it involves producing the first full revision of the statutes since the 1980s.

AN HON. MEMBER: Whew.

MR. KLEIN: So in the spring of next year when the revision is complete, the legal and business communities will have access to a much-needed and valuable legislative resource.

I heard a whew from the Liberals. I take that to mean big deal. Well, it is a big deal, Madam Chairman, to the legal and business communities of this province. If they do not think it is a big deal, then stand up at some point and say so.

Members of the committee will notice a spending increase under the Public Affairs Bureau to fund the Revised Statutes of Alberta project, and I would ask you to also note that the increases in spending are offset by corresponding increases in revenue due to projected sales of the revised statutes product.

Madam Chairman, I would now like to turn the committee's attention to the protocol office. This is a new addition to Executive Council since we last met, and I think it warrants an introduction. Except for the recent past the protocol office has been located within Executive Council for most of its 30 years of existence, and most recently it was, as I pointed out, with the Department of International and Intergovernmental Affairs.

The protocol office looks after four main areas on behalf of the government as a whole. First, it plans, conducts, and co-ordinates cross-government participation in the meetings, round tables, and various other events connected to the many visits our province receives each year from senior international government officials. Recent examples include visits from the Premier of the People's Republic of China last April, the Governor of Jalisco last year, which is a sister state of ours in Mexico, and Ukraine's minister of health last August.

The office is also responsible for planning and conducting domestic ceremonial events such as the recent installation ceremony for Alberta's new Lieutenant Governor, the recent opening of session, and other events such as the government's annual Remembrance Day ceremonies.

Thirdly, the office answers some 1,500 to 2,000 telephone and written inquiries it receives each year from community groups, individuals, and companies. These questions involve a wide range of protocol questions that come up when planning an official or ceremonial event involving the government or foreign officials.

Finally, the protocol staff are responsible for managing the operation of Government House here in Edmonton. These duties include co-ordinating the facility's use among all government departments, the Premier's office, the office of the Lieutenant Governor, and so on. In all, more than 200 events are held at Government House each year.

I would like to conclude my remarks with some information about another new program that has been added to Executive Council's business plan, and that is the Alberta Corporate Service Centre. This shared service centre is designed to increase government efficiency in areas like finance, human resources, information technology, and general administration while freeing up more resources for frontline services to Albertans. Services delivered by the centre will focus on cross-government transactional functions and services like accounts payable, payroll, and mail services. More strategic ministry-specific elements, such as budgeting and forecasting, will stay within individual government ministries.

It's important to note that the idea of shared services is not uncharted territory. Many public- and private-sector organizations both here in Canada and abroad use various shared services models. In fact, some 20 percent of Fortune 500 companies have moved to shared service delivery. Examples of organizations that have successfully made the move to shared services include the government of Ontario, the government of Manitoba, and right here the city of Edmonton. We've seen from these examples that a shared service approach can result in savings and increased efficiency as well as proven value for customers.

The government business plan states that the centre will work to establish key priorities by April 2000 and to consolidate 80 percent of transactional administrative services by the end of this year. The centre has also established goals to achieve a 5 percent savings in its first year and a 20 percent savings over three years. Those savings, Madam Chairman, will then be directed back toward providing frontline services for Albertans. It's expected that most of the 20 percent savings will be achieved by reducing duplication and overlap of services rather than by reducing numbers of employees.

However, even if you assume that moving to shared services will result in fewer government positions, the actual number of people affected would be about 95 per year over three years. The overall impact across government would be minimal, especially when you consider that government normally loses some 5 percent of staff to attrition every year and that staff in these areas will have ample opportunity to apply for positions that open up through attrition. We have been communicating with government staff as the process unfolds and will continue to ensure that any staff affected by the move to a shared services model receive timely information updates. Government has also committed to maximizing employment opportunities available to any staff affected by the move.

So, Madam Chairman, that concludes my introductory remarks on Executive Council's business plan for 2000 through 2003. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I want to start off by thanking the Premier for rearranging his schedule so he could join with us this afternoon, and I'm glad that the Premier was wide-ranging in his comments, because that'll give us an opportunity to explore the many themes and direction of government.

The Premier started off by saying that he was here to discuss the three-year business plan and estimates of Executive Council, of which he is the minister responsible, and then he went on to provide us with some other information. I want to focus on a couple of things initially and ask the Premier to comment on them, but first I want to talk about the Revised Statutes of Alberta project, RSA 2000.

When the Premier was introducing the project to the Assembly just now, he made reference that he heard a whew, I believe he said, coming from the benches of the Official Opposition. I can assure the Premier that that was a yelp of appreciation for the project. As a matter of fact, if he had looked up from his notes for a minute, he would have seen me giving a thumbs-up to the Minister of Justice, and I think the Minister of Justice, knowing him as I do, will attest to that. We think it's important – and of course that's a theme we explored today in question period – for all Albertans to be able to have access to all legislation and all regulations and all statutes so that they can reach their own conclusions.

The Premier talked as well about this unprecedented mail-out of Bill 11 to every Alberta household, saying that he wants all Albertans to read it for themselves. He made the usual rhetorical comments about malicious misinformation and the role of the opposition parties, and we'll come back to the theme of malicious misinformation and the role of the government in just a minute.

I do want to say that I am one hundred percent behind the Premier mailing out Bill 11 to every household in this province. While it's sort of like a Hail Mary pass in the dying seconds of a football game – and, you know, I think everybody sees that it's that sort of desperation that's driving the government to do this. I'm glad, because the one thing I hear from Albertans, from my own constituents, from other men and women that I talk to from across this province, is that there is a lack of understanding about why the government wants to go down this crazy path of privatizing health care. They will get a chance to read the bill, and they'll see for themselves the loopholes that you could drive a private surgical facility through. That's exactly what they will discover. So I want to thank the Premier because as a member of the opposition, whose responsibility is to hold this government accountable for only pursuing the public good, it makes my job tremendously more easy that every Albertan will have access with their morning coffee to this ill-conceived legislation. It's destined to go the way of its brother legislation, Bill 37, and the son of Bill 37.

MR. KLEIN: Don't bet on it.

MR. SAPERS: The Premier is taunting, "Don't bet on it." Well, I do trust Albertans, unlike the Premier, and I will bet that they are going to rise up against this legislation and they're going to tell this government to put this legislation where it belongs, which is in the trash heap. So thank you for doing that, Mr. Premier. It makes my job easier.

Now, on to some other comments that the Premier made. I'd like to ask the Premier if he would comment on this. He mentioned the tax plan of the provincial government, I think under the category of bold new plans. I'm sure that's a phrase we're going to hear lots of leading up to the next election. I can see it now: bold new plans. Maybe we could just shorten it to BNP – and we'll all know what the Premier is talking about – so that he can just say: oh, well, it's BNP. Then, you know, it'll shorten the debate up a little bit. But in the realm of BNP he mentioned these bold plans for taxation.

Mr. Premier, I wonder if you will comment on why it is that the federal government in unveiling its tax plans for Canadians was able to dedicate 42 percent of its surplus, of its economic and fiscal dividend, to tax reduction and tax relief, yet the province of Alberta, which I would argue is in perhaps even better financial shape than the federal Treasury, was only able to dedicate 12 percent of its surplus to the same end. If you're going to talk about balance, maybe you will talk about why that seems to be so much out of balance, particularly given that in the spending estimates and the revenue projections for the government we still see a tremendous lowballing of the resource revenue which we expect to receive. In my calculations, Mr. Premier, it's a good $600 million or $700 million short just in terms of oil and gas. So if you simply used that reality-based forecasting for your revenue side, I think you and your government could in fact have been bold when it came to tax reduction.

We'll also of course, Mr. Premier, be looking forward to your comments on the 11 percent flat tax and how it is going to unfairly impact low-income earners and middle-income earners and in particular, because of the bold initiatives of the federal government, how it is that you're going to try to justify your flat tax, which will actually create higher levels of taxation for many Alberta taxpayers.

Now, Mr. Premier, you also mentioned the role of the protocol office, and I was particularly interested in your references to Government House. I very proudly represent the constituency of Edmonton-Glenora, and of course, as you know, every time you visit Government House, you visit the heart of my constituency. Thanks for bringing all that business into my part of town.

You talk about the 200 events that happen at Government House. You know, it has always sort of surprised me that as the MLA for the area I have been denied, actually, using Government House for functions. I'd just like you to tell me what the policy coming out of Executive Council is, seeing as it's responsible for the protocol office, for the utilization of Government House. How is it booked? What events are allowed in? What events are excluded, and what's the role of the local MLA, regardless of political affiliation, in terms of hosting events at Government House? I'd be curious to hear the policy articulated on that.

Now, Madam Chairman, through you to the Premier I have some specific questions regarding the business plan of Executive Council. As the Premier probably knows from earlier discussions that we've had and that I've had with members of his cabinet, I have a particular interest in performance measures, so I will direct the Premier's attention to the performance measures in Executive Council. If I count correctly, there are five, the fifth one being a brand-new one dealing with maintenance of revenue.

Let me start with this brand-new one, because I was kind of excited to see that. What it says is, "It compares authorized revenue projections with the results actually achieved." What we're going to see is that in every year that the measure accounts for, the actual and the target are different and – surprise, surprise, surprise – for every year the actual revenue achieved is higher.

Now, I may be missing something here, and I'll hope that the Premier will tell me what it is that I'm missing, because I know he's not shy of telling me what it is that I don't know. Maybe he will tell me why it is that there's now a performance measure that's going to measure the error of government forecasting. I mean, it's been the assertion of the Official Opposition for some time that this government purposely lowballs forecast revenue so that it can alternately argue either that the cupboard is bare and that's why we have to cut back and tighten the belt, or it can say: well, we've got a dividend, and we're going to put it into core programs and services. Of course, what that says to taxpayers is: we're going to pick your pocket for as much revenue as we can, we're going to hoard it for a while, and then as we get dangerously close to elections, we'll start talking about election plans. I'm amazed, frankly, that the government would actually create a performance measure that tries to somehow quantify this kind of shell game. I notice that the forecasts aren't included for the years 2000 through to 2003, just the targets.

Now, if we flip that around, the target is actually the forecast in the Treasury business plan. So when I say shell game, I use that phrase quite on purpose, because you have the Executive Council showing a target number for revenue which is in fact a forecast in a different business plan of a different part of government. I'm very curious about this new performance measure, and I hope the Premier will have a chance to tell us about it.

Now, if I look at the other performance measures, we have "Public Satisfaction with Government Information." The target is that 75 percent of people who ask for information will be satisfied. I'm glad to see that it's actually been set above the actual, but what worries me is that since 1995 the actual hasn't really gone up. It was 69 percent satisfaction in '95, went down to 66 percent in '96, stayed at 66 percent in '97, climbed back up to 69 percent for 1998-99, and now we're going to see that three-quarters of Albertans will actually be satisfied with information. Will the Premier tell us what specific strategies he is going to put in place to ensure that there is this growth in public satisfaction with government information, seeing as he has been singularly unsuccessful in getting it up to the target over the last four years?

I'd also like to question the public satisfaction with RITE and Queen's Printer bookstores measure. It relates to "the satisfaction levels of Albertans using the RITE Telephone System to access government and obtain information." What I'm wondering about is:

why isn't there also a measure here that has to do with other means of accessing government information? The Premier did go to some length to tell us about these new electronic means of contact as well as the consultations, and I think he made reference to this latest propaganda piece: we're going to tell you what we heard or what we think you said or whatever it is that this health document is going to be called that's going to be mailed out. Why aren't there satisfaction measures that also look at satisfaction with accessibility through the Internet, the feedback obtained through roundtable and consultation processes? I mean, this is after all the government that talks about and prides itself on consultation. You know, this government has never met an issue that it didn't think it could meet with a roundtable or a summit, so I would expect to see some measures of satisfaction on those things as well.

Specifically, Mr. Premier, what I'm talking about is satisfaction measures dealing with electronic access to government information and also feedback measures on satisfaction with things like the First Circle consultation on children or the health summit or the justice summit or so many of the other initiatives that you talk about but that we don't actually see honest, third-party, quantifiable, measurable results on.

The next performance measure is, of course, "Government Client Satisfaction," which is the measure of "satisfaction levels with the communications services provided by the Public Affairs Bureau." What I see there is that there's about a 90 percent, give or take a point or two, target and achieved result. This one has always amused me, because these are the people who I'm assuming your government leaks things to – those would be the clients – and then you're going to ask them if they're happy about I guess the relationship or the quality of information. So it's government client satisfaction levels with communications services. Unless, of course, it's the internal measure, which is: what kinds of services does PAB provide to other government departments?

Again, I wonder who it is that fills out the responses on these surveys. Maybe what the Premier could do is tell us how these client satisfaction measurements are achieved. Maybe he'd even be so bold, in keeping with his theme, as to bring the surveys into the Assembly and table them for us so we could see the actual instruments that are used to come up with these measurements, because of course the measurements are just sort of out there, like the claim that we're not going to try to destroy public health care. They're just sort of out there. They're not really attached to anything concrete.

The last, of course, is "Customer Satisfaction with Products," and I see that there's again a very high achievement here, 98 percent. Congratulations, but I just wish I understood what it meant. It says, again, that this is a new measure that's related to the revised goal of delivering products and services that allow us to meet or exceed revenue projections and customer needs. It rates the satisfaction . . . of Queen's Printer Bookstore customers with the products available.

Well, is that simply a duplication of the public satisfaction measure that's up above? If it's different, how is it different? Again, Mr. Premier, it would sure be helpful to see who it is that you collect information from. I mean, if you only ask one person and they say, "Yeah, I'm about 98 percent satisfied," is that how the measure gets into the business plan? I think some more explanation would be in order.

Of course, it would be nice if all of the performance measures were consistent throughout all of the business plans and then the reporting on all the performance measures was consistent, because, you know, presentation is important in terms of understanding continuity of services across government, and it also helps us move year to year and see whether things are truly improving or not.

Perhaps of most interest when it comes to the business plans, Mr. Premier, are performance measures that aren't in the business plan, and I'd like to give you some advice as to what I believe might be helpful performance measures for you to include.

One might be a measure of correspondence satisfaction with Executive Council or the Premier's office: volume of letters received, how they're responded to, what kind of feedback you're getting from those clients. I say this, Mr. Premier, not to create work or give the impression that you don't respond to letters and cards. I also am fully aware of the volume that must come through your office because I know what comes through my office, and I can only extrapolate from what I get to what you may receive.

Some of the feedback I get, Mr. Premier, is, "I never hear back, or when I do, they're rude," or "I get a form letter, and it wasn't even on the issue that I wrote about," those kinds of things. So if I'm getting that kind of feedback, I'm certain that you're getting that kind of feedback. I'm equally certain that you would want to know about it and do something about it so you may be able to report to Albertans that in fact you're serious about responding to the kinds of written inquiries they provide to you, and you may want to develop a performance measure to capture that.

The second thing that you may want to do, Mr. Premier, is to have a performance measure dealing with compliance with freedom of information and protection of privacy applications. After all, it wasn't that long ago that your office was found in breach of the law governing freedom of information.

You look puzzled, Mr. Premier. It had to do with the response from your office that you in fact had no documents relating to the West Edmonton Mall refinancing in the possession of Executive Council. Of course, we all know that that wasn't the case, and when the Privacy Commissioner was called in to investigate the lack of responsiveness from Executive Council, he wrote a report which in fact found that your office was in breach of the law but then suggested that there may be some reasons that had to do with lack of staff, lack of training, or perhaps even Christmas schedules. So that record has been made available to you in the past.

So my question is: why do you not have a performance measure here that would indicate your office's compliance with FOIP? How many requests come into your office? How many are dealt with within the allocated time frames? How many are appealed? How many appeals are upheld? How many are denied? How many in the first instance are responded to, et cetera?

Thirdly, you may want to have a performance measure on the government's defence of public institutions, maybe some measure of support for things like our justice system, our public health care system, our education system, et cetera, because of course many Albertans have expressed to me their concern that there seems to be an erosion of public institutions.

Now, most interestingly what I would like to see is a performance measure of a truth and accuracy scale on the work of the PAB. I'll tell you why that is, Madam Chairman. It's because I'm looking at a newspaper ad that was in the Edmonton Examiner on February 18, 2000, and it goes on to talk about many things that at one point may be law. It's a newspaper ad of the government of Alberta. It's a full page, and it talks about things like "the . . . Government is taking firm action on tax reform," and it talks about things that will be put into place. But, of course, all of this hasn't become law yet, Mr. Premier, so this is very misleading. You're telling Albertans in this ad that these are in fact the facts, that these are things that are happening, and it's all before the Assembly. It hasn't been voted on, and who knows, Mr. Premier? You might be convinced that some of your initiatives are wrong, just like Bill 26 was wrong and Bill 37 was wrong.

You know, the other thing is that there is some very malicious – what is the phrase you use? Malicious and misleading information? Well, there's some very malicious and misleading information right here in this ad published by the government where the province of Alberta claims that the federal government only contributes 13 cents of every dollar for health care. Well, Mr. Premier, that's not true. You know very well that there are two components. One component is tax points; the other is cash. It doesn't make any distinction . . . [Mr. Saper's speaking time expired]

Oh, unanimous consent to continue.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Time has expired.

I would ask for unanimous consent of the committee to revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Okay. First, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. It gives me a great deal of pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all Members in the Legislative Assembly visitors from the Thompson colony in Fort Macleod, which is in southern Alberta. They are Bill and Ruth Tschetter. They are seated in the public gallery, and with your permission I'd ask that they now stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I understand the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has an introduction as well.

MR. GIBBONS: Thank you. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a teacher from McNally high school on the south side. He taught one of my sons. His name is Roger Bartsch. He's up in the public gallery. I'd like the chairman to allow that he stand and ask, with permission, that we warmly welcome him to the House.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: And one more. The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two people that were briefly introduced before with the delegation from the School of Hope, but I'd also like to introduce to the Assembly Frans and Steina Feyter and their sons who are accompanying them today. Frans is the owner of Frans Feyter Construction, structural truss systems, in Fort Macleod, and his wife, Steina, is involved in many groups and activities in Fort Macleod and district. They have with them today their youngest son, George, who is a student at Emmanuel Christian school in Monarch, a very impressionable young man, and of course their other son, Lorne, was introduced earlier today. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. Premier, the chairman would ask for your direction. Do you wish to – yes, you do.

MR. KLEIN: I don't mind responding, Madam Chairman.

Madam Chairman, relative to the reduction in transfer grants for the Canada health and social transfer to which the hon. member alludes, by suggesting that we're misleading the Alberta public, he is also suggesting that every Premier and every territorial leader in this country is also misleading their people, because we are all agreed on this particular issue. So he is placing in doubt the word of all the treasury departments of all the provinces in this country, including Liberal governments. [interjections] Well, maybe this hon. member will stand up and tell the Alberta public how good of a deal we're getting from the federal government.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. Premier, the hon. member has risen on a point of order.

Point of Order
Allegations against a Member

MR. SAPERS: Thank you, Madam Chairman. Standing Order 23(h),(i), and (j). I believe the Premier made allegations because he said "this hon. member" and he pointed at me. I think it's clear and let the record show that he was referring to the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, that I was calling into question the veracity of the Premiers outside of Alberta, and I never used those words. I never said that the Premiers outside of Alberta were misleading the Alberta public. I only said that there was one government that was misleading the citizens of this province, and that's the government of Alberta under this Premier.

Now, if the Premier wants to put words in my mouth, I guess he can. That's his right. He can try to twist anything he wants. But the fact is that I'm talking about this government, and frankly what other governments tell their citizens is not my concern. I wasn't elected to represent anyone but the electors in Edmonton-Glenora.

So my point is simply this. The government of Alberta has used taxpayers' money to buy an ad that was in for at least one day in one local newspaper in Edmonton that says that only 13 cents of federal contributions – in fact, I'll read it. "For every dollar spent on health care in Alberta, the province contributes 87 cents while the federal government pays less than 13 cents."

Now, in fact there are two elements to the Canada health and social transfer, a cash element and a tax . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: On the point of order. This is on the point of order.

MR. SAPERS: Yes, this is on the point. Absolutely. This Premier wants to try to twist my words. He can sit here and listen to the truth.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, I think you actually have made your point, and now you are basically debating this. I mean, a point of order should be short, to the fact, succinct, and not a speech.

MR. SAPERS: Madam Chairman, you're absolutely right. I'll submit that there's no point of order, and I'll debate with the Premier any time this point when it's appropriate to debate it.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Well, it's a good thing that you withdrew the point of order because the chair . . .

MR. SAPERS: No, I didn't withdraw it. I said that there's no point of order. That was my submission.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The chair was going to say that what there is here is a difference of opinion.

MR. KLEIN: Do we still have a point of order?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Go ahead, hon. Premier. Continue.

MR. KLEIN: Madam Chairman, the facts speak for themselves. We are now paying 87 percent of the cost of health care in this province. What we have said is that while every other provincial jurisdiction in this country has restored money in a very significant manner to health care and to education and to advanced education, the only level of government that hasn't made a significant restoration to these priority areas is the federal government.

That is the point that we're trying to make, and I would think that if the hon. member wants to put his political skills to use, then he should be talking to his friends in Ottawa, his Liberal friends in Ottawa, to encourage them to do as Premier Bouchard has asked all the Premiers to do and has on our behalf written a letter to the Prime Minister saying that we need to sit down with the Prime Minister as Premiers to discuss this issue and to discuss the very insignificant amount that is now flowing through CHST to health care in particular and to a lesser degree to advanced education. Every single Premier in this country agrees that the funding is absolutely inadequate. It has gone down and down and down, and there has not been anywhere near full restoration of CHST funding for health and welfare. That is the point.

MR. SAPERS: Well, because it's wrong.

MR. KLEIN: It is not wrong, Madam Chairman.

There were a number of questions that were asked. One pertained to the use of Government House. Now, this is about my – what? – eighth or ninth time in estimates. First of all, I will have to remind the Liberals that they are not government, thank God. Government House is Government House, and there is a protocol, Madam Chairman. The use of this facility is allocated on the basis of seniority in terms of government business. Government business, not opposition business. They are not the government. Government House is for government business.

MR. SAPERS: What about elected representatives?

MR. KLEIN: Madam Chairman, they have never come to the realization that they are not government. They have been sitting in the opposition for so long that perhaps they're dreaming about being government, but they are not government.

There is an allocation on the basis of seniority. This begins with the Lieutenant Governor's office. The Premier's office follows. Ministers and their offices follow, then deputy ministers, government committees, and the caucus of government. Of government. Government decides how Government House is to be used, and it is not to be used by members of the opposition, although we put it out to charitable organizations and people who want to do good in the community. We think that's the right thing to do, and that's why we don't give it out to the Liberals.

Oh, I'm sorry. I have some other answers.

MR. SAPERS: No. You sat down.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, do you want to hear the answers to the questions?

4:40

MR. KLEIN: I do recognize and appreciate the comments that were made by the FOIP Commissioner relative to another question that was asked by the hon. member. The FOIP Commissioner also said that it was – and I have to paraphrase this – not a serious breach. It was not a serious breach. But in light of what the FOIP Commissioner reported to my office, I am pleased to inform the hon. member of the opposition that the office of Executive Council first of all attaches a great deal of importance to FOIP requests. We do get a lot in government, and I can tell you, Madam Chairman, that most of them come from the Liberal opposition.

You know, FOIP was set up to really accommodate the general public, and it was never set up to be used as a political tool by the opposition at their whim and at great expense, by the way, to the taxpayer. Nonetheless, the FOIP Commissioner examines every request. All the ministries examine every request. We do attach importance to FOIP requests, so much so, Madam Chairman, that we have now appointed a FOIP co-ordinator within Executive Council. We used to let all of the ministries look after the various FOIP requests, and it will be the task of that individual to handle any requests for government information as expeditiously as possible. So we have taken the FOIP Commissioner's advice and have appointed a FOIP co-ordinator within Executive Council, and hopefully in the future we can accommodate the hon. member and his colleagues in a much more expeditious manner.

The client satisfaction question, the target of 90 percent and the actual of 89 percent. Well, that's pretty darn close to me. If I'm trying to achieve 90 percent and I achieve 89 percent, I think that's pretty darn good.

How is it done? Basically, surveys were sent to more than 500 clients in government departments, and this measure relates to client satisfaction with communications services provided by the bureau staff to the various government departments. Eighty-nine percent out of a target of 90 I think is – well, it's more than a pass. It's about as close to perfect as you can get.

A question was why the federal government dedicated 42 percent to tax relief while Alberta only dedicates 12 percent to tax relief, that this appears to be out of balance. Madam Chairman, this province, first of all, has been hailed across the country – and I allude again to Nesbitt Burns – for its groundbreaking actions on taxes. There have been significant tax reductions in the past. We do now have the lowest overall taxes in Canada, and we intend to keep it that way.

You know, I would like to quote from an article, and it's from a person from Hythe, Alberta, just west of Grande Prairie. It says:

Quit whining, Albertans! Everyone is carping at the Klein government complaining about everything from health care to fault-finding in this realistic provincial budget.

Worst of all, no one seems to realize and be grateful to be living in the foremost province in Canada, resulting in good part from the planning of this government.

Now, this is the important part. This is the important part, and the hon. member may have read recently about people in Fort St. John and Dawson Creek petitioning the Alberta government to join this province because they want to get rid of the kind of socialism that has become so prevalent within the Liberal Party of Alberta. They want to get away from that kind of thing. [interjections] No. These people outsocialism the NDs for sure. You know, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona should be watching out for himself. These guys are really, really creeping in there.

Anyway, she says:

My husband and I recently moved to Alberta from British Columbia to take advantage of the many benefits which Alberta offers and because the future is actually being planned for. This must be the only province which has a government that actually plans for the future; for example . . .

And I was going to mention that in my remarks.

. . . the $500-million endowment fund for science and engineering research.

That is planning for the future. She goes on to say:

Even before this budget, Alberta offers: lower provincial taxes, no provincial sales tax, reasonable and competitive (private) insurance for vehicles and homes, good health care – yes, much better than in B.C., lots of jobs, plus strong and healthy conditions for businesses and investment. And there is more. Try living in any of the other provinces for one year, particularly your western neighbour, and you'll come back happily and humbly to Alberta.

Just as with children and their relationship with responsible parents, it's time for the "children" of Alberta to quite whining and start appreciating what you have.

I think what it exemplifies mostly is not the children – our children are very, very bright – but the whiners of Alberta, to start appreciating what you have. And that is from Diane Schuller from Hythe, Alberta, who just moved here from British Columbia to take in the Alberta advantage.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. Premier, the table would request that you table that document. Would that be fine?

MR. KLEIN: Oh, fine.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. SAPERS: For real?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: For real.

MR. SAPERS: Oh, good. I'm so happy that the Premier found one newspaper article that supports him, and I'm so happy that he found one letter to read out in the Assembly that supports him, because I was thinking he would be feeling very, very lonely and very, very under siege because of the thousands and thousands and thousands of letters that he's received, that I've received, that we've all received that don't share those sentiments. So good on the Premier for finding that one example. You know, that shows that he searched, that he worked really hard, so that's good.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. member, if the chair were to close her eyes here and really think about all of this, it sounds to me like it's question period. I thought that we were dealing with the estimates for Executive Council. Can we get back on track, please.

MR. SAPERS: Madam Chairman, you know I will always heel to your command, and I know that the Premier will too, but having allowed him to read that into the record, then obviously I have the right to respond.

Now, the Premier talked about the protocol for Government House, and I'd like to ask him a further question about that, because as he went through the list of priorities and took the opportunity to try to be clever and be dismissive and to say that the Liberals will be this and the Liberals won't be that – it's nice to know that we weigh so heavily on his mind.

The issue here, Madam Chairman, is this. Way down on that list of priorities of who may or who may not be allowed to book Government House, he got to where he said members of the government caucus, and he made a big deal out of the fact that they were in the government caucus. Maybe all of the private members, like yourself, Madam Chairman, who are not in cabinet, would like to think of themselves as members of Executive Council, and maybe every one of those backbenchers there had those daydreams of being a cabinet minister. In fact, "government" is defined by those members of Executive Council.

So really what we have in the Assembly are two kinds of members: members of government – i.e. cabinet ministers, members of Executive Council – and the rest of us mere mortals are private members. Given that the protocol says that private members, as I take it, because that's what the Premier just said, can use Government House, then I would assume that's all private members. Now, I will take it, Madam Chairman, that those private members, particularly those who think they can park anywhere, would believe that they should come first on the list of who can use Government House, but certainly the policy would have to expand to include all private members. So I'll look forward to the opportunity of going to a reception, perhaps hosted by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, in Government House, and he'll get on that priority list because that's what the Premier just said. Unless, of course, he has now deputized everybody and made them all members of Executive Council, i.e. government. So he maybe ought to get his story straight.

Let me get back to the government's misrepresentation of the truth in paid advertisement, paid for with taxpayers' dollars, and his point about the Canada health and social transfer. Federal transfers to the province of Alberta are going to be $2.7 billion, $2.8 billion next year. The Premier would have us believe that it's only going to be about $1.3 billion. It's $2.7 billion or $2.8 billion. [interjection] No. This year, Mr. Premier, actually, because you have to factor in, to be fair, tax points and cash. In fact, $1.4 billion is coming in in tax points. So the real number is 25 cents of every health care dollar in Alberta comes from the federal government.

Now, this is where I will join in common cause with the Premier. Any time he wants to accompany me when I meet with members of the federal government, I'd be happy to have him come along so that he can join in common cause with members of the Official Opposition in appropriately lobbying the federal government, instead of taking cheap political shots at them, to increase its support for these priority areas such as postsecondary education and public health care. I'd be happy to do that because I'm not satisfied that a 25 percent contribution is enough from the federal government. I'd like to see more, and I'd like to see the Premier being helpful in pursuing that instead of playing politics with the health care of Albertans. But I do say that if we're going to spend taxpayer's money on advertisements, Madam Chairman, they at least ought to tell the truth.

The other thing that I'd like to know about these advertisements, Madam Chairman, is exactly what the point was of putting out these advertisements and spending all of this money if, in fact, they weren't going to be factual. There are several examples in this one ad where claims are made that cannot be supported in truth. In fact, many of these initiatives have not yet become the law of this province. So if he's not willing to stand and apologize for this abuse of taxpayer's money, maybe the least the Premier will do, with his tail tucked between his legs, is go back to the Public Affairs Bureau and tell them to only put out fact when they're advertising a report to Albertans.

MR. KLEIN: Madam Chairman, they are facts. They are facts, and they're facts that have been agreed upon by all the Premiers of all the provinces in this country. This hon. member will hopefully never be in the position to attend a Premiers' Conference or to even be a representative of a government that attends a Premiers' Conference. But if he could sit in and hear the concerns being expressed about the lack of money that is now flowing through the Canada health and social transfer and the general agreement on the figure, that generally funding has decreased to the point where they, the feds, are now paying about 13 percent in real dollars toward health and advanced education in particular, then I think he might be more convinced that all the treasuries and all the treasurers and all the officials who work in the treasury departments of all the provinces in this country can't be wrong.

But, you know, this hon. member thinks that he's so right all the time and that everyone else is wrong. He must think that 70 percent of Albertans are wrong when they voted for this government, Madam Chairman. [interjections] No, they aren't. They are right. They know what they're doing. They know what they're doing.

MRS. McCLELLAN: You touched a raw spot.

MR. KLEIN: Oh, I touched a raw spot, I guess. Well, there were enough to elect 64 of us, Madam Chairman. Right. You know, there are a lot more of us than there are of them, and that was through the will of Albertans. That's because we have been open, we have been honest, we have been accessible, we listen to people, and we don't go out there with malicious misinformation.

MR. SAPERS: Yes, you do. You even pay for it out of the taxpayers' money.

MR. KLEIN: Madam Chairman, if this hon. member wants to talk about advertisements, I would like to get an advertisement that was put in the paper by the leader of the Liberal opposition, and that will be the proof of the pudding that indeed the misinformation out there is in fact malicious and at taxpayers' expense.

Of course, Madam Chairman, these people are not FOIPable. They do not have to be accountable. Here this hon. member asked for the use of Government House, and they aren't accountable for anything. They aren't FOIPable. They don't have to share anything. They have nothing to share, absolutely nothing to share other than misinformation. They are not FOIPable. They are not subject to the rules of government, yet they want to have all the privileges of government. They have never been elected to be the government, yet they want all the privileges of government. They are members of the opposition. They are not government.

MS OLSEN: What's your point?

MR. KLEIN: The point is that you are not government, thank God.

Madam Chairman, I'll put the question. If, God forbid, they ever became the government . . .

MRS. McCLELLAN: Oh, no. Don't even think it.

MR. KLEIN: No, no. I wouldn't even contemplate that.

. . . would they allow us to go over to Government House and hang around while they have their caucus and, you know, participate in the business of government? I think not. Not if they act like Liberal parties in any other jurisdiction in this country. I think not. So let's not try to bamboozle the people.

You see, Madam Chairman, they can make any statement they want and they don't have to be accountable. That is the difference between the opposition and government. We have to be accountable, and we are.

Madam Chairman, just to demonstrate and to illustrate how little knowledge this hon. member has as to how government works and the volume of mail that I have to answer – lately there's been a lot of mail. There's been a lot of mail, and yes, it has been on the health care issue, and yes, I answer every letter. But clearly three-quarters of those letters are in response to cards, mail-in cards where people don't have to put down their thoughts and their ideas or think about it. These were cards that were sent out by CUPE. I would suspect they were form letters. Many, many, many of them were form letters that were taken right out of the ads of the Friends of Medicare.

5:00

MR. SAPERS: It does work. Advertising works.

MR. KLEIN: Advertising obviously does work, and I would imagine many of the letters were spurred on by the false and malicious advertising that was put in the papers by the Liberal Party at taxpayers' expense.

So, yes, I sit down, and I personally sign every one of those letters, and I don't use one of those machines, Madam Chairman. So questioned why we did not have a performance measure on correspondence satisfaction: the office of the Premier receives approximately 18,000 pieces of correspondence per year, and every piece of correspondence we receive receives a reply. The only time that we did not send out individual replies was during the week of the Vriend decision being read into the Alberta human rights act. We simply could not handle the volume of mail. It was absolutely horrendous, and I had to make a statement that there would be no reply, that we would do the right thing and we would accept that ruling.

MS OLSEN: You weren't quite sure what to say on that one.

MR. KLEIN: We did the right thing. Do you not think we did the right thing? Do you not think? [interjections] Well, then, thank you.

The office of the Premier receives approximately 18,000 pieces of correspondence per year, all of which receive a response either from myself, the director of operations, the director of scheduling. Some are detailed responses and some are general and some are redirected to ministers and MLAs for a more detailed response. But 18,000 pieces of correspondence.

Yes, we're getting a lot of letters on health care. I do pay attention to the letters, but I also pay attention to what generates the correspondence. Does a mail-out and an organized campaign by the Canadian Union of Public Employees? Is that one of the generators? Does an advertising campaign and an orchestrated petition campaign by the Liberals generate a lot of correspondence? Yes, it does. Does a very organized, orchestrated, and expensive campaign by the Friends of Medicare generate a lot of correspondence? Yes, it does, and that happens from time to time.

As a matter of fact, I'm starting to get a tremendous amount of correspondence on the Genesis development in Kananaskis Country, a matter of great concern. There was a tremendous amount of correspondence when the federal minister in charge of industrial development, I believe, Mr. Manley, announced that he was going to give $20 million to the NHL, a tremendous amount of mail on that issue saying, "Don't you dare put in any taxpayers' dollars." So it depends, really, on what the issue is as to how much mail I will get on a particular issue, but certainly I'm getting a lot of mail on health care.

First of all, we asked for it. We asked for it when we put out the policy statement. We said for people to respond. Then we were getting some reasonable letters, pro and con and people who simply wanted more information. But as the Friends of Medicare and CUPE and the Liberals started to crank up their ad campaigns, now

I'm getting, you know, a lot of angry letters, but I would suggest that most of those letters are based on false information going out, and for that the Liberals should be ashamed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on a point of order.

Point of Order Clarification

MR. SAPERS: Yeah, I'm just wondering if the Premier would back that statement up, that most of these letters are based on false information. Is he saying that Albertans can't think for themselves and that when he gets a letter condemning a government initiative, it can't be because they honestly disagree with the government, but it's because they just can't figure it out? Is that what the Premier just said? Back it up.

MR. KLEIN: That is what this member is saying. He is saying that Albertans can't think for themselves, because he opposes and he has some awful words for the bill. We're saying let Albertans decide for themselves what the bill says.

Madam Chairman, when I talk about misleading and malicious advertising, I would suggest that this ad was put in at taxpayers' expense, obviously out of the Liberals' communications budget. I don't know. We can't FOIP them to find out. You know, we can't apply the freedom of information legislation to find out.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. Premier . . .

MR. KLEIN: But Nancy MacBeth here, the Leader of the Official Opposition, says your public health care is at risk. [interjections] That simply is not true. That is false and . . . [interjections]

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Hon. Premier, the chair has to deal with the point of order. [interjections] Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, I am dealing with your point of order.

I think what we've seen here is very great differences of opinion. Also, what I see here is a great deal of debate, and we are sort of veering off from what is before us in Executive Council, so possibly we can get back into the mainstream. I know other members have indicated in this House they wish to speak, and maybe we can deal with the main estimates that are before us.

MR. KLEIN: Can I finish answering the question, Madam Chairman?

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Well, we were just dealing with the point of order, so the hon. Premier does have time left in his allocation.

Debate Continued

MR. KLEIN: Well, Madam Chairman, we were talking about the correspondence that I receive and how some of that correspondence comes about. It covers a multitude of issues, literally hundreds of issues that we have to deal with as a government, but some are driven by campaigns. What I'm trying to point out is that the Liberals are part of a campaign.

When I say that the information is misinformation and it is malicious, I mean that. And, yes, that is the kind of thing that creates emotions amongst Albertans. That's the kind of thing that instills fear amongst Albertans, and naturally I get letters when the Leader of the Official Opposition says the Klein government wants to introduce two-tiered, American-style health care. That is false, that is wrong, and that is simply untrue. That is false and that is malicious.

They say it's not orchestrated. It says: join in the fight to save our public health system; call the Premier; call your MLA. Right. You say that that isn't orchestrated? Who's telling fibs in this House? Who's telling the fibs in this House? It's not this Premier and it's not the members of this caucus, Madam Chairman. It's the Liberals. Their campaign is a malicious one of misinformation.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont. [interjections] Folks, we have had a member from here. It is the hon. Premier's estimates we are talking about. I'm allowing a member over here to ask questions.

MR. HERARD: Madam Chairman, I was enjoying this so much that I really don't know if I should be focusing us back on the estimates, but I certainly look forward to the debate that'll take place in this Chamber next week.

Madam Chairman, I remember back in 1993 when I was elected, a few days after the election coming to the Assembly and looking around and finding that there were no computers. There were no wires. There was no wiring. There was no net, and I was wondering, after working with computers for so long, how we could get along without them. But we've made an awful lot of progress over the last number of years.

I notice that initiatives under the bureau's goal 2 focus extensively on technology. So I'd like to ask the Premier: how specifically has the Public Affairs Bureau used new technology such as the Internet to communicate with Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Madam Chairman, I do appreciate the question because it actually pertains to my estimates.

Like all segments of society the government certainly recognizes the growing importance Albertans place on using new technology such as the Internet. We also recognize that the importance of technology and innovation will continue to grow, not just here in Alberta but throughout the world. Indeed, that's why we put I believe it was $30 million — that's over and above the $500 million endowment — into ICT research through our universities. The global economy we now face is one that will be increasingly dominated by knowledge, technology, and innovation-based industries, and that incidentally is why this government continues to encourage and promote innovation here in Alberta.

I think we're already making great progress in this area, including the recent initiative I announced earlier, the $500 million endowment to create the Alberta heritage foundation for science and engineering, plus the $30 million we put in exclusively for ICT research. We're doing everything we can to make sure that current and future generations of Albertans are ready for the challenges and opportunities of the new global economy, and Albertans are certainly proving an interest in taking up those challenges.

As a matter of fact, there was a story on one of the television stations — I believe it was last night — and really, this is one of the very interesting challenges we have to face, and that is the capital requirements at the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology for ICT. There were people virtually lining up, as I understand it, since 3 o'clock the previous morning to register for courses in computer technology. That's an indication of the demand, but what's more encouraging is that officials from NAIT indicate that the take-up on graduates from ICT courses is about 94 percent. That is quite phenomenal. These are people who will have jobs perhaps even before they graduate.

So there's no doubt that Albertans are taking an interest, and as I'm sure hon. members are aware, our province already holds the distinction of being one of the most plugged-in provinces in the country. We have embraced new technologies like the Internet and now turn to them more and more for information and discussion. Our efforts to meet the demand for Internet-based communications continue to keep pace with Albertans' needs and interests.

For example, the Alberta Connects program has given Albertans more opportunities to ask questions or provide comments on a wide variety of topics, programs, and services through government of Alberta web sites. Albertans can also provide their comments through a web page as well as an e-mail address. A computer program routes each message to the appropriate ministry, and ministries work hard to reply to all comments within 72 hours. That's quite phenomenal. You know, it used to be about a 60- to 90-day turnaround for correspondence. Now we have the ability to make that turnaround, notwithstanding the literally thousands and thousands of pieces of correspondence we get, in 72 hours.

As I mentioned earlier, the Alberta Children's Forum is another area where communications technologies and the Internet were used extensively in our communication with Albertans. A web site was created to allow Albertans to participate in a virtual forum, essentially an on-line discussion group. This is not new. This is evolving technology. This is the way of the future. We now have head offices saying: we don't need to be in a single office; we can be anywhere in Canada, anywhere in North America, anywhere in the world and have a virtual head office.

Going back to the Children's Forum, this gave people who couldn't attend the forum in Edmonton a chance to participate in the discussion. Albertans also had the opportunity to register for the forum through the web site as well as submit comments or questions.

The Public Affairs Bureau also maintains the Alberta government web site and ensures that the most important government news is available on the home page as soon as it is released. The main Alberta government home page is merely the tip of the iceberg for Internet communications going across government. From the home page Albertans can access sites for every ministry, where they can find information, ask questions, or provide feedback about the programs and services that matter most to them. Madam Chairman, the one thing, as I pointed out earlier, that Albertans have told us they want their government to do is to keep in touch with them.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Madam Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon. I've been waiting anxiously to discuss in detail the budget of Executive Council. I believe in regards to the hour and the importance that Albertans are placing on the Public Affairs Bureau — you know, in the world of Edmonton-Gold Bar the truth squads always bring up people's dander, the hair on the back of the neck. Whenever we think of the words Public Affairs Bureau, we almost think of a controlled message. The hon. Premier earlier said: "bamboozle the people." It's almost like the whole idea of the Public Affairs Bureau is to control the message: this is what we want you to hear.

The Public Affairs Bureau supports the government in its ongoing dialogue with Albertans by providing communication and consulting services to all government ministries. Now, with this whole mail-out that's going on, I'm sure someone on the other side is going to be very busy over the weekend licking stamps, because we're going to send Bill 11 to every household in the province. There's definitely going to be overtime involved.

Will the Premier explain why the budget for the Public Affairs Bureau is increasing by $1.1 million, or almost 13 percent? That's from one year to the next. That's a significant increase, and if he could explain that in due time. If we run out of time today and he will do that by letter, well, that's fine.

Could the Premier also explain for the benefit of all Albertans, not just members of Executive Council or members of government but all Albertans, including opposition members, CUPE, everyone else that he mentioned before – vested interest groups I think were the words he used. What is the breakdown of the $8.8 million budget for the Public Affairs Bureau? How much is in salary and wages, travel expenses, advertising – now that's a big one – telephone and communications, data processing services, hosting – hosting: who would have thought? – and contracts to outside vendors. I would understand from that that there's perhaps going to be a bit of privatization here.

Alberta Corporate Service Centre. What do we have here? Eleven full-time equivalents or employees in that department? I have a number of questions for the Premier. The computer program that's going to be utilized: is that the PeopleSoft program? I would be very keen to find that out. Also, exactly what duties are these 11 individuals going to have? I know there are a lot of people, not only in the city but across the province, very concerned about this concept of shared corporate services. There are a lot of people who are presently employed by the government who would be anxious to know whether they're going to have a job or not and whether these 11 individuals are going to be detailing the layoffs as they come, if there are any layoffs.

I certainly hope there are going to be no layoffs in Alberta's public service. We need to stabilize the public service just like we need to stabilize the health care system, and the way to do that is by having stable labour relations.

Now Madam Chairman, will the Premier also provide a breakdown of the gross operating expenses of the Public Affairs Bureau by subprogram for 2001-2002 and 2002-2003? Also, for the Premier: what is the breakdown of the 128 full-time equivalents of the Public Affairs Bureau by subprogram: administrative services, communications services, communications technologies, Queen's Printer bookstores, publishing services, and of course the RITE telephone system?

Now, I can only assume that communications services is where all the letters are crafted and drafted, and I note that the letters coming from the Premier's office to the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar – even though the questions asked by letter to the Premier's office are different, the responses that my constituents are receiving back from the Premier's office are all the same. One of the responses – and I've noted this – is: while I'm Premier, we'll have no two-tiered health care system in this province. But what worries me is that the Premier is someday going to retire or maybe he's going to be voted out of office – you never know – and what is going to come after? This is what perplexes not only me, but actually it was brought to my attention, Madam Chairman, by constituents.

I also have another question for the Premier: what are the projected number of full-time equivalents or employees in the Public Affairs Bureau next year and the following year?

Also for the Premier: what steps will be taken by the Public Affairs Bureau during the three-year planning period to respond better to Albertans' requests for information about health care, education, infrastructure, and the fiscal direction the province is going to go in?

Will the Premier elaborate for all hon. members of the House on the goal of the Public Affairs Bureau to expand the use of "Internet technology to open two-way dialogues with Albertans, including moderated on-line discussion groups"? Perhaps there's an opening here for the truth squad. They could practise a little bit before they go out and meet members of the public. I understand that some of them now are reluctant. It's going to be what is described as a controlled event.

Now, for the hon. Premier as well: what steps will the Public Affairs Bureau be taking over the next three years to "further develop the navigation and design elements of the Alberta Government Internet Home Page to give Albertans improved information access and feedback options"? If in due time the hon. Premier could answer that question, I will be most anxious to receive the response.

Will the Premier elaborate on the goal of the Public Affairs Bureau to "look for opportunities to deliver communications support through 'clustered' services or shared resources among ministries"?

What types of in-house training programs is the hon. Premier's government planning, Madam Chairman, for employees of the Public Affairs Bureau over the next three years? Are these training programs going to be expanded for this truth squad or any further truth squad that is going to be implemented to facilitate the government's communications message?

Will the Premier elaborate on the plan of the Public Affairs Bureau to create "a human resource intranet for Bureau staff"?

Now, Madam Chairman, I realize that in light of the hour the Premier is not going to have a chance to respond. I would be anxious to receive a letter, one of the 18,000 I believe he said that he signs every year. I'm going to get one too.

In light of the hour, Madam Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Thank you.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Gordon in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions of Executive Council for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2001, reports progress thereon, and requests leave to sit again.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

[At 5:27 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Title: Estimates of Learning, Monday, March 6, 2000

Date: 00/03/06

8:03 a.m.

[Mr. Stevens in the chair]

Designated Supply Subcommittee – Learning

Stevens, Ron, Chairman
Burgener, Jocelyn
Dickson, Gary
Fischer, Butch

Graham, Marlene
Hlady, Mark
Johnson, LeRoy
Massey, Don

O'Neill, Mary
Pannu, Raj
Severtson, Gary
Soetaert, Colleen

THE CHAIRMAN: Good morning. I'd like to call the meeting of the subcommittee to order. There is a motion that I would like to read into the record.

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Orders 56 and 57 the designated supply subcommittee on Learning allocate the time for its consideration and debate of the 2000-2001 estimates of the Department of Learning as follows:

- (1) The time allocated for the subcommittee will be a maximum of three hours.
- (2) The minister responsible first addresses the subcommittee for a maximum of 20 minutes.
- (3) Official Opposition subcommittee members then have a maximum of two hours for questions and answers. Those members may allocate the time for questions among themselves as they see fit.
- (4) The ND Member for Edmonton-Strathcona then has a maximum of 15 minutes for questions and answers.
- (5) Government subcommittee members have the remainder.

Be it further resolved that in the event government subcommittee members do not exercise their right to utilize the remaining time, the chair shall call for a motion to conclude discussion of the estimates and to rise and report.

Be it further resolved that in order to conclude prior to four hours, as allocated under Standing Order 56(7), unanimous consent of this motion will be required.

I would invite someone to move the motion as read.

MR. JOHNSON: I so move.

THE CHAIRMAN: All in favour? Opposed? Seeing none opposed, the motion is carried unanimously. Thank you very much.

Mr. Minister.

DR. OBERG: Thanks, Ron. I won't use the full 20 minutes on my opening comments because I believe we'll probably get the majority of it out in the questioning.

Good morning. I have a few opening comments, and then I will entertain questions from the committee members. The estimates for Learning begin on page 329 of the 2000-2001 government and lottery fund estimates. The business plan starts on page 227 of the government's Budget 2000 document. These estimates are a further step to a vibrant and seamless education system in Alberta. They provide support to all Albertans for the achievement of lifelong learning.

In 2000-2001 Alberta Learning plans to increase base spending by over $371 million to $4.4 billion, or a 9.2 percent increase. This increase will ensure we are meeting the needs of students, whether they are attending a school or a postsecondary institution. Add to that mix $162 million of opted-out revenue, and you have a total of $4.6 billion in funding for learning in the province.

We want a learner-centred system, so this is a learner-centred budget. This budget will provide funding for school authorities to hire more teachers and teachers' aides according to their needs and increase the financial support for postsecondary students.

On page 334 of your estimates book operating support for basic education is increased by almost $214 million. This increase will ensure school jurisdictions receive the funding they require to operate their schools and provide a quality education to their students. All operating grants will increase by 3 percent so that the school boards can direct more money to the classroom, including meeting the needs of their students with severe disabilities. One hundred and ninety-five million dollars has been added to fund a 3 percent operating grant increase and the anticipated enrollment increase of about 1.8 percent, or almost 10,000 students. These 10,000 will join our current student population of 556,000.

Spending on programs for English as a Second Language and students with severe disabilities will increase by more than $18 million. This funding will accommodate the expected cost resulting from my announcement last year that lifted the caps on these programs. It will also accommodate enrollment increases expected in the 2000-2001 school year.

Funding to accommodate the new Alberta initiative for school improvement program, developed collaboratively among education stakeholders, will cost $38 million this fiscal year, and for the 2000-2001 school year $66 million will be available. This program allows school boards to implement initiatives like the stay-in-school program, early literacy or numeracy programs, or smaller class sizes for early grades.

Funding for early childhood services is increasing by $12.5 million to $114 million. This increase accommodates an expected increase of 15 percent in the number of children with severe disabilities served and also recognizes the higher operating expense experienced by ECS providers.

Private schools will receive $42 million in 2000-2001, an increase of $5 million. This continues the phase-in of the 1998 Private Schools Funding Task Force recommendations to increase per student funding to 60 percent of the public system's basic instruction grant. To ensure school boards can perform comprehensive planning to meet the technology needs of students, we have funded this planning for the next three years, $20 million per year in 2000-2001, totaling $60 million. This $60 million is up fronted this year.

Last but not least under the public and separate school support is the student health initiative. The 2000-2001 fiscal year will be the first full year of operation for this initiative. The initiative may be accessed by up to 73,000 students who have special health needs such as speech, language, or occupational therapy. Improving student health is a priority of this government and mine.

Page 336 details how the $858 million, an increase of $34 million in 2000-2001, will be spent on postsecondary institutions. I have targeted $95 million of funding, which includes an extra $28 million, to expand postsecondary enrollments and to enhance access to apprenticeship training, which will result in an increase of over 1,200 new entry spaces in nursing and health technology and ICT. These 1,200 new spaces and the 1,200 spaces we created in '99-2000 will now double the number of graduates in ICT programs. Funding increases through the performance envelope for universities, colleges, and technical institutions will average 3 percent.

I would like to direct your attention to page 337, our assistance to learners. The core tenet of our assistance remains that the cost of postsecondary education is a shared responsibility between students and their families and government. We have recognized the issues facing our students and have responded by increasing the financial assistance by $23 million to $125 million through loans, scholarships, bursaries, and maintaining, I believe, the most comprehensive remission program in the country. In fact, student assistance overall will enjoy the largest percentage increase in the entire budget of Learning: over $50 million in new benefits over the next three years, with the largest increase occurring this year.

Alberta loan assistance will now be available to undergraduate students wishing to study in other provinces of Canada. Graduate students will continue to have this option available to them. Loan remission is our key measure, designed to limit the amount of Alberta loan debt a student must repay. Loan remission payments will increase by $17 million to over $50 million by the end of the three-year business plan. This includes partnering with the federal government on a program to reduce debt after all other repayment efforts have failed. To ease the transition between school and work, the interest relief program has increased the period allowing graduates to suspend payments from 30 to 54 months.

Students will be able to earn $225 per month without affecting their level of provincial assistance. In addition, the scholarship exemption will be doubled to $1,600, ensuring students retain a greater share of their rewards for academic excellence. The number of students assisted is expected to rise by 10 percent over the next three years to about 50 percent annually.

To ensure the students we assist can meet the health and dental costs of their children, postsecondary students will now be eligible for the Alberta child health benefit.

I also recently announced a new $3 million scholarship program to recognize achievements of full-time postsecondary students who have completed their first year of studies. I expect 3,000 students will be rewarded $1,000 each.

Overall, the 2000-2001 budget and business plan highlight my commitment and this government's commitment to lifelong learning, facilitated by a seamless system that continues to be affordable for all Albertans.

Thank you. I'll now take some questions.

THE CHAIRMAN: Who would like to go first? Don.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks very much, and thank you, Mr. Minister, for the comments. Some good things have happened, I think, in special education. Allowing those students with severe disabilities, when they move, for the funding to be adjusted and not penalizing the boards that pick them up is a great move, and I think it's been recognized as such.

8:13

I want to start off with a couple of general questions and then maybe get your reaction to it. As I have visited school boards across the province and talked to parents, the issue of funding adequacy has been raised time and time again. If you look south of the border at the kind of lawsuits that are being put in place, where states are being sued by boards and boards are being sued by parents on the basis of providing inadequate funding, the search for a formula or a method of arriving at what is adequate funding goes on, all kinds of different resource-based models that they're exploring. I guess I'd like to know what the department is doing, if anything, in that area in terms of trying to come up with a base that we could – I mean, we talk each year about the percentage increases over the previous year and the millions that are going in, but it's never backed up since the cuts, that I can recall, with a rationale for why those dollars.

DR. OBERG: Sure, Don. First of all, I will not say to you that we have a completely logical reason why the dollar amount is X number of dollars. We are grappling with the same thing that's happening in the States, which is to come up with a justification for the amount of dollars we spend one way or the other, in all fairness, because it may be that when it comes to funding adequacy, we may actually be spending more than we need to, or we may be spending less than we need to. Consequently, we do funding based on last year's results, based on last year's budget, which at this moment in time is the only thing we have.

What I would like to see, Don, and one thing that we will be doing very shortly is looking at the whole outcome effort. I believe that when we do that and when we tie funding to outcomes, we may well have a better example of exactly what is the adequacy of the funding.

You commented about the boards down in the States being sued. I would hope that that doesn't happen here. I have, first of all, absolutely no idea – I'm not a lawyer, obviously – how they would ever come up with that. Maybe what we can do – and I certainly have no problems – is if they come up with a solution as to what is funding adequacy and they can describe it, then we will certainly look at it.

DR. MASSEY: There's nothing right now in the works in terms of a review of the funding?

DR. OBERG: Yes. That's what I was commenting on, Don. What will be coming out is a whole review on the outcome indicators, on the performance indicators, what mechanism we can use to measure school boards, what measures can be used, and this will be done by the five partners of education, the ASBA, the A TA, et cetera, et cetera. Plus the department will be sitting down and attempting to change how we fund the school system to fund on the outcome as opposed to the input. Right now, as you know, we fund on the input side of things and don't fund on the outcome side of things. So we are looking at that, and that will probably be announced within the next couple of weeks.

DR. MASSEY: Okay. So it is going to be a sort of formal setup, a structure for dealing with the problem.

DR. OBERG: Right. Just if I can, Don, on that. What will be happening: the first phase will be on performance indicators and outcomes; the second phase will be tying funding back to that.

DR. MASSEY: One of the sources that I check every year is the Pugh Foundation and Education Week's ranking of American states, and they use a much wider range of performance measures than we do in terms of making judgments not just about school boards but making judgments about the government; for instance, the government's fiscal effort, the percentage of the budget that goes into education versus other spending. Will it include that kind of broad look at performance measures, or will it just focus on school boards?

DR. OBERG: No. Everything will be in the mix, Don, and we're hoping this will be a major review of the funding system of schools. I believe it's time. It's been probably about five or six years. A lot of things have changed in that last five or six years. We'll see what happens. I'm not guaranteeing the results, but that doesn't mean we shouldn't go after it and attempt to find a better funding system.

DR. MASSEY: Will there be an attempt to gather some information based on what actually happens in schools? I was at Kirkness the night the budget had been announced, and the calculation there was that it would make a difference of about $32,000 if all the money flowed through right to their school and that they would still lose a teacher come September. I guess it's that sort of microlevel information that I hope will be part of this review, that you actually take some schools and run the numbers through to see what they look like when they're translated to classroom practice.

DR. OBERG: We're certainly going to attempt to do that. One of the problems we have with that though, Don, is that we don't control the amount of dollars that actually go down to the school. We control the amount of dollars that go to the school board. How the school board then distributes to the schools is in their realm. Some of the issues we've seen are that some school boards have chosen not to put the increases down to the schools and instead have sort of carved off pieces for technology, carved off pieces for this, carved off pieces for that, and that quite frankly is one of the issues we need to get at, their ability to do that. What they're doing, in essence, is taking it out of the classroom.

DR. MASSEY: I was with Rob Lougheed out at Fort Saskatchewan at a meeting there, and we had the same litany of school after school with the parents standing up saying: "This is what the difference is in our school, and we're still going to be fund-raising, selling chocolate almonds. We're still going to be in a difficult position. Class sizes won't change." We had information from, I think, about six different schools out there. I think that any kind of information would really be valuable. Even if boards are handling it differently, then, I think that would have to be part of it somehow or other.

DR. OBERG: I agree, Don. I'll give you my position on that. I have problems, quite frankly, when I show on paper and quite literally show that it goes into the classroom, in the broader sense, an 8.8 percent increase. That's what we're doing this year, 8.8 percent. Yet when I talk to the schools, they're saying they're only going to see minimal increases. This isn't like the HRDC in the federal government. I can actually target where those dollars are going, what those dollars are going to be used for, and it does come out to 8.8 percent.

DR. MASSEY: Then I guess the rejoinder would be that they're still catching up from the cuts, that they never really recovered, that there's inflation, and that they're facing 3 percent teacher contract increases. I guess it just points out the need for really being able to look at the local level and see what's happening in a sampling maybe of schools across the province.

DR. OBERG: Yeah. Absolutely. I certainly think it does.

The one point that you made, though, about the inflation. We've run those figures. We've actually run it for enrollment, and we've run it for inflationary pressures. We're up 5 percent on enrollment and inflation over the past five years. So it is increasing at a faster rate than inflation and enrollment.

DR. MASSEY: Have you gone back to '93, when the cuts were done? Is that information you could share with us?

DR. OBERG: Sure. Certainly.

DR. MASSEY: I'd appreciate having a look at that.

Linked with this is the whole business of governance and school boards. As you know, I think that the firing of the Calgary board sent a chill through the province in terms of school boards and school governance. We heard recently of the board out in Parkland having a meeting and, I guess, having questioned the motion that they had passed. There had been one dissenter. The board found itself in your office having that decision questioned. I wonder if you'd talk a little bit about your view of school boards and where you see them fitting in the future. It seems that in terms of their power, they've certainly had that curtailed. I haven't talked to a lot of them, maybe a dozen or so in the last couple of months, but certainly the feeling among some trustees is that they're very much under the gun and that their autonomy is certainly threatened. I guess I'd like to hear from you what you think.
